Plaintiff in Howsam v. Dean Witter Reynolds, Inc. (2002) 537 U.S. 79, 123 S. Ct. 588, 154 L. Ed. 2d 491 entered into a client service agreement with defendant which provided in part that all controversies concerning or arising from any account, any transaction, or the construction, performance or breach of any agreement between them would be determined by arbitration before any self-regulatory organization or exchange of which defendant was a member. The client service agreement also provided that plaintiff could select the arbitration forum. Plaintiff claimed defendant misrepresented the virtues of certain limited partnerships in which she invested between 1986 and 1994. In accordance with the customer service agreement, plaintiff chose the National Association of Securities Dealers (NASD) to arbitrate the dispute and executed a submission agreement which specified that the controversy was submitted for arbitration in accordance with NASD's Code of Arbitration Procedure. That code's § 10304 provides that no dispute is eligible for submission if six (6) years have elapsed from the occurrence or event giving rise to the dispute. After the submission agreement was signed, defendant sued to have the federal district court declare that the dispute was ineligible for arbitration because it was more than six years old and for an injunction prohibiting plaintiff from proceeding in arbitration. Thedistrict court dismissed the action on the ground that the NASD arbitrator, not the court, should interpret and apply the NASD time limit rule. The Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit reversed. The United States Supreme Court granted plaintiff's petition for certiorari because Courts of Appeals decisions on the issue were in conflict.

The United States Supreme Court reversed, holding that the arbitrator, not the court, should interpret and apply the NASD time limit rule. The Court began by stating the basic rule that the question whether the parties have submitted a particular dispute to arbitration, i.e., the question of arbitrability, is an issue for judicial determination unless the parties clearly and unmistakably provide otherwise. Certain questions or arbitrability, however, are for the arbitrator to decide. Those are sometimes referred to as procedural issues of arbitrability and include issues such as whether previous steps of a grievance procedure were completed, waiver, delay, and similar defenses to arbitrability. Following this precedent, the Court found that the applicability of the NASD time limit rule was a matter presumptively for the arbitrator, not for the judge (123 S. Ct. 588, 592-593) . In addition, the NASD arbitrators, comparatively more expert about the meaning of their own rule, are comparatively better able to interpret and to apply it. Thus, in the absence of any statement to the contrary in the arbitration agreement, the Court found it reasonable to infer that the parties intended the agreement to reflect that. The court concluded that the NASD's time limit rule fell within the class of gateway procedural disputes that do not present what its cases have called "questions of arbitrability" (123 S. Ct. 588, 593) .

Defendant also argued that the NASD Code's use of the term "ineligible" indicated the parties' intent for the time limit rule to be resolved by the court prior to arbitration. The Court disagreed, saying the parties to an arbitration contract would normally expect a forum-based decision maker to decide forum-specific procedural gateway matters. In addition, the Court noted that NASD Code § 10324 specifies that arbitrators are empowered to interpret and determine the applicability of all provisions under the NASD Code (123 S. Ct. 588, 593-594) .

Wagner Construction Co. v. Pacific Mechanical Corp. (2007) 41 Cal. 4th 19, 58 Cal. Rptr. 3d 434, 157 P.3d 1029 arose out of a dispute between a contractor and a subcontractor on a public works project. Their agreement provided for arbitration of any disputes arising out of the agreement. Plaintiff first sued defendant for sums owed under the subcontract in January, 1999. After that, both parties were sued for personal injuries relating to the construction. Plaintiff agreed to defend defendant's position in that action and dismissed the suit, for sums owed without prejudice, allegedly pursuant to an agreement between the parties under which the statute of limitations on plaintiff's claims would be tolled until the personal injury suit was resolved. Plaintiff did not allege that the agreement was in writing. Defendant denied there was any agreement. In July, 2004, after the personal injury action was resolved, plaintiff filed a new complaint for monies owed under the subcontract. Plaintiff demanded arbitration and, anticipating defendant's refusal, petitioned to compel arbitration. Defendant opposed the petition, claiming plaintiff had waived the right to arbitrate by failing to seek arbitration within the four-year limitation period of Code Civ. Proc. § 337 (or the three-year period of Code Civ. Proc. § 338 applicable to contracts for public works). The trial court denied the petition to compel arbitration on the basis that the statute of limitations had expired and there was no written tolling agreement. Plaintiff appealed, contending any statute of limitations defense was for the arbitrator, not the court, to decide. While the parties did not argue the waiver issue and the trial court had expressly declined to decide it, the Court of Appeal nevertheless cast its decision in those terms, and concluded that the trial court properly ruled that plaintiff had waived its right to arbitrate by failing to seek arbitration in a timely manner. The California Supreme Court granted plaintiff's petition for review.

The Supreme Court reversed, finding that a statute of limitations defense is for the arbitrator, not the court, to decide, and remanding for the trial court to conduct whatever additional factual and legal inquiries would be necessary to decide the issue of waiver (41 Cal. 4th 19, 24-25, 31) . Code Civ. Proc §§ 1281 and 1281.2 govern petitions to compel arbitration and provide that when the parties to an arbitrable controversy have agreed in writing to arbitrate it and one has refused, the court must grant a petition to compel arbitration absent an exception recognized by statute or judicial decision (41 Cal. 4th 19, 26) . That the statute of limitations has run on the underlying claims is not one of the legislatively or judicially recognized justifications for denying a petition to compel. Rather, the assertion that the statute of limitations has run is an affirmative defense that falls naturally within the plain language of the parties' broad agreement to submit the matter to arbitration. An order to arbitrate a controversy may not be refused on the ground that the petitioner's contentions lack substantive merit [Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c)] (41 Cal. 4th 19, 27) , although petitioner's waiver of the right to compel arbitration is a basis for refusing to order arbitration [Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c)]. A petitioner seeking to compel arbitration is not to invoking the jurisdiction of a judicial forum to litigate the merits of his or her underlying claim but is seeking an order that the respondent abide by a contract he or she signed. The Court discussed Freeman v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. (1975) 14 Cal. 3d 473, 477, 121 Cal. Rptr. 477, 535 P.2d 341 (Freeman, discussed at § 20.80[4][a]), misconstrued by respondent as having been decided on the basis of a statute of limitations (41 Cal. 4th 19, 28) . Freeman denied a petition to compel arbitration under Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(a) because the plaintiff had waived the right to arbitrate by failing to demand arbitration within the time period specifically allowed therefore by Ins. Code § 11580.2(i), which provided at that time that no cause of action would accrue to the insured under any policy or endorsement unless within one year from the date of the accident one of three conditions was satisfied, one of those conditions being the insured's institution of arbitration proceedings (41 Cal. 4th 19, 27) . Compliance with former Ins. Code § 11580.2(i) is a condition precedent to arbitration or any other right under the policy. Failure to act within that time limit constituted a waiver of the right to arbitrate, and that waiver may be determined by a court whose jurisdiction is invoked for that purpose of compelling arbitration (41 Cal. 4th 19, 27) . Freeman properly held that questions of waiver are for the court rather than the arbitrator to decide. Given this legislative mandate, the fact that arbitrators might decide waiver issues differently than courts is of no concern. On the other hand, neither Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2 nor any other statute permits a court to deny apetition to compel arbitration based on a party's assertion that the statute of limitations has run on the claims the parties agreed to arbitrate (41 Cal. 4th 19, 28) . Delay in demanding or seeking to compel arbitration can, indeed, justify denying a motion to compel, but the rules that enforce the requirements of timely demands and petitions have nothing to do with the statutes of limitation that create affirmative defenses to the underlying claims. A petition to compel arbitration must be brought within four years after the party to be compelled has refused to arbitrate [Code Civ. Proc. § 337]. A party to an agreement to arbitrate may not bring an action to compel specific performance of the arbitration provision until he or she can allege not only the existence of the agreement, but also that the opposing party refuses to arbitrate the controversy (41 Cal. 4th 19, 29) . A cause of action to compel arbitration does not accrue until one party has refused to arbitrate the controversy (41 Cal. 4th 19, 29) . Plaintiff's action to compel defendant to arbitrate could not have accrued until sometime after August 18, 2004, when plaintiff first demanded arbitration. Plaintiff's petition to compel, filed on August 20, was timely under the applicable statute of limitations. This does not mean that a party may postpone arbitration indefinitely by delaying the demand. A party may waive the right to compel arbitration by failing to demand arbitration within a time limit specified for that purpose in a statute in the contract. If the contract does not specify a time for demanding arbitration, a party must still demand arbitration within a reasonable time (41 Cal. 4th 19, 30) . Although plaintiff may have delayed unreasonably in seeking to compel arbitration, the trial court expressly declined to reach that issue because it erroneously concluded the statutes of limitations on barred plaintiff's claims (41 Cal. 4th 19, 30) . Nor did the trial court undertake the factual inquiry necessary to determine waiver. In the absence of any factual record, and because the trial court expressly declined to make a finding regarding waiver in its statement of decision, the Supreme Court could not infer a finding of waiver (41 Cal. 4th 19, 31). Thus, the Supreme Court remanded the case for further proceedings, during which the superior court could conduct whatever additional factual and legal inquiries would be necessary to decide the issue of waiver (41 Cal. 4th 19, 31).

[f] Under Federal Arbitration Act, Arbitrator, Not Court, Determines Waiver

9 U.S.C. § 3 provides that a district court, on being satisfied that the issue in controversy is arbitrable and on application of one of the parties, must stay the trial of the action until arbitration has been had in accordance with the terms of the agreement, providing the applicant for the stay is not in default in proceeding with arbitration.

The facts and procedural background of Howsam v. Dean Witter Reynolds, Inc. (2002) 537 U.S. 79, 123 S. Ct. 588, 154 L. Ed. 2d 491 , and the portions of the opinion consider which the private limitations period, are discussed at [e], above. In discussing gateway procedural issues in general, the Court mentioned waiver as one type of gateway issue, which the arbitrator--not the court--should decide (537 U.S. 79, 83-84) .

Defendant in Omar v. Ralphs Grocery Co. (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 955, 962-965 , terminated plaintiff's employment for allegedly making offensive comments to another employee. When plaintiff apologized and sought to be reinstated, defendant sent him a notice-of-dispute form, which he claimed he signed and hand-delivered to defendant's vice president of human resources on December 20, 2001. That form stated that plaintiff wanted to participate in mediation as soon as possible but that he did not understand what an arbitration was. Plaintiff signed and returned another dispute form on January 29, 2002, which stated it was to "initiate a complaint or request for dispute resolution under the company's policy against unlawful harassment and discrimination and/or dispute resolution procedure."

On May 2, 2002, defendant wrote to plaintiff advising him that it had determined his termination was proper and that he could either request mediation or demand final and binding arbitration. A copy of the arbitration agreement and request for mediation and arbitration forms were enclosed. The arbitration agreement provided that it was governed by the Federal Arbitration Act (9 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.; FAA), that the parties would select the arbitrator by mutual agreement, and that defendant would pay the arbitration fees "in all cases where required by law." Plaintiff signed the request for mediation form, which stated that if the complaint/dispute was not resolved through mediation, he understood that to pursue that matter further, he would have to submit the complaint/dispute to final and binding arbitration pursuant to defendant's policy. Plaintiff's attorney returned this form to defendant on May 10, 2002.

Having heard nothing further from defendant, October 9, 2002, plaintiff's attorney reiterated plaintiff's request for mediation. On October 11, 2002, defendant's in-house lawyer responded, saying that Ralphs had considered plaintiff's request for mediation and determined that the dispute was not appropriate for mediation, but that the dispute could be submitted to final and binding arbitration, and commencement of any other type of formal dispute resolution would be considered by defendant to be a repudiation of the arbitration agreement, for which defendant would seek summary judgment and to recover its damages. Plaintiff's attorney wrote defendant asking about the mechanics of the arbitration and to clarify whether defendant would pay all the costs of an arbitration. Defendant replied that the mechanics of arbitration were clearly spelled out in the arbitration agreement and enclosed another copy of the agreement. On November 12, 2002, plaintiff's attorney again asked defendant to clarify whether defendant was agreeing to pay the costs of arbitration and to advise of defendant's proposed method for choosing an arbitrator. Also on November 12, 2002, plaintiff served the complaint and demand for arbitration "subject to the Court's determination whether the claims are subject to an enforceable arbitration agreement."

Defendant filed a combined motion for summary judgment and to compel arbitration, requesting that the motion to compel be granted in the event summary judgment was denied. The trial court denied the motion for summary judgment on the grounds that four triable issues of material fact existed regarding the enforceability of the arbitration agreement: (1) whether plaintiff received the arbitration policy in September 1991 while working for defendant, (2) whether the arbitration policy was a contract of adhesion, (3) whether the arbitration policy was procedurally and substantively unconscionable, and (4) whether defendant waived the right to request or compel arbitration having given plaintiff the "royal run-around and delayed it so long." The court also denied the motion to compel arbitration, but did not specify its reasons. Defendant appealed only the denial of the motion to compel arbitration.

The court of appeal reversed and remanded, instructing the trial court to determine whether a valid arbitration agreement exists which covered the parties' disputes, and if so, to compel arbitration, leaving it for the arbitrator to decide any issue of waiver of the right to compel arbitration (118 Cal. App. 4th 955, 965) . The court of appeal first noted that the arbitration agreement was governed by the FAA, and that it would review de novo the legal question whether the FAA required the trial court to grant the motion to compel arbitration (118 Cal. App. 4th 955, 959) . The court discussed Howsam v. Dean Witter Reynolds, Inc. (2002) 537 U.S. 79, 83-84, 123 S. Ct. 588, 154 L. Ed. 2d 491 , and found that the trial court erred by not ruling on the gateway issue of arbitration. The trial court was required to decide whether there was an enforceable arbitration agreement between the parties (118 Cal. App. 4th 955, 961) . The court of appeal noted that the record below made no distinction between the "pre-dispute agreement to arbitrate" and the "post-dispute agreement to arbitrate" and agreed with defendant that even if the trial court were to find on remand that there had been no valid arbitration agreement between the parties while defendant was still employed, it still had to consider whether the post-dispute agreements--the notice of dispute form plaintiff signed on January 29, 2002, and the form requesting mediation form--were unenforceable. If the trial court were to find an enforceable arbitration agreement between the parties, it would then be obligated then determine the second gateway issue: whether plaintiff's claims are covered by the agreement (118 Cal. App. 4th 955, 961) .

Because the trial court's orders were ambiguous regarding whether the court had made a finding of waiver, the court of appeal addressed the issue. Appellant contended, and the court of appeal agreed, that if a matter is governed by the FAA, the arbitrator, not the court, determines any claim of waiver of the right to compel arbitration, citing Howsam v. Dean Witter Reynolds, Inc. (2002) 537 U.S. 79, 84, 123 S. Ct. 588, 154 L. Ed. 2d 491 , for the proposition that procedural questions which grow out of the dispute and bear on its final disposition are presumptively not for the judge, but for the arbitrator to decide, as are allegations of wavier and delay. Appellant and the court of appeal acknowledged one exception to this rule: if the claimed waiver is based on conduct related to the judicial process, the existence of waiver is a question for the court, even if the matter is governed by the FAA (118 Cal. App. 4th 955, 962-963) . Thus, the court of appeal concluded that the issue of waiver had to be determined by an arbitrator because all of plaintiff's waiver allegations involved non-litigation conduct (118 Cal. App. 4th 955, 964) . Although on appeal plaintiff claimed that defendant's filing an answer, moving for summary judgment, conducting discovery on the issue of arbitrability, rather than immediately filing a petition to compel arbitration, provided a basis for finding waiver, those grounds for waiver were not asserted in the trial court, and could not be considered on appeal (118 Cal. App. 4th 955, 964 n.1). The conduct before the court that was claimed as the basis for defendant's wavier of the right to compel arbitration was (1) unreasonable delay in proceeding under Ralph's dispute resolution program, (2) failure to satisfy a condition precedent by refusing to engage in mediation, (3) failure to confirm whether it would pay all costs associated with an arbitration, and (4) failure to work with plaintiff to select an arbitrator. The arbitration agreement addressed each of those issues, which the court of appeal found to involve contract interpretation and arbitration procedure, thus more properly determined by an arbitrator than by the court (118 Cal. App. 4th 955, 964) .

Plaintiff in Thorup v. Dean Witter Reynolds, Inc. (1986) 180 Cal. App. 3d 228 made an error in a customer's account, for which defendant reimbursed the customer, and then sought to recover the loss from plaintiff. When plaintiff refused, defendant fired him and sought arbitration under the employment agreement, a standardized form of NYSE employment agreement, to determine plaintiff's responsibility to make good the loss. Plaintiff responded to defendant's request for arbitration by requesting an extension of time to answer and filing suit for wrongful termination. Defendant raised arbitration as an affirmative defense, sought a stay of the court proceedings and an order compelling arbitration. The trial court denied the petition to compel arbitration on the ground that defendant's election to terminate plaintiff constituted a waiver of its right to arbitrate the termination dispute. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, finding there had been no waiver (180 Cal. App. 3d 228, 233) . Indisputably the employment contract involved commerce and was subject to the Federal Arbitration Act (FAA) (180 Cal. App. 3d 228, 233) . Although laches or prejudicial delay in requesting arbitration is itself an arbitrable issue, if the court decides that an arbitration agreement governs the controversy, the question of whether one party is in default under the arbitration agreement by reason of delay in requesting arbitration is solely a question for the arbitrator (180 Cal. App. 3d 228, 235) . However, a claim of waiver based on conduct related to the judicial process is a question for the court to decide (180 Cal. App. 3d 228, 234) .

Wagner Construction Co. v. Pacific Mechanical Corp. (2007) 41 Cal. 4th 19, 58 Cal. Rptr. 3d 434, 157 P.3d 1029 , is discussed at [e], above.

[g] Arbitrator, Not Court, Determines Arbitrability

Rodriguez v. Am. Techs., Inc. (2006) 136 Cal. App. 4th 1110 , was an action by insureds against several insurance companies, for breach of contract and breach of the duty of good faith and fair dealing, and against ATI, a remediation company hired by a defendant insurance company to perform remediation and repairs to the insured premises, for professional negligence. The contract between plaintiffs and ATI contained an arbitration provision that stated that pursuant to the Federal Arbitration Act (FAA), any controversy or claim arising out of or related to the agreement would be settled by arbitration in accordance with the Construction Industry Arbitration Rules of the American Arbitration Association currently in effect. Although the contract contained references to certain provisions of California law regarding ATI's lien rights, it contained no express choice-of-law provision designating California law generally, and the American Arbitration Association's Construction Industry Arbitration Rules are silent as to the procedure to be followed when related litigation involves third parties. ATI petitioned to compel arbitration and stay the judicial proceeding. Plaintiffs opposed the motion, claiming that Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c) was applicable to deny arbitration because the insurance companies were not subject toarbitration, that claims arising out of the same transaction or related transactions presented a possibility of conflicting rulings on a common issue of law or fact. ATI responded that the arbitration agreement was governed by the FAA, and therefore section 1281.2(c) did not apply. The court agreed with plaintiffs and denied the motion to compel arbitration. ATI appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, finding that the FAA did indeed govern and left the court no discretion to deny arbitration (136 Cal. App. 4th 1110, 1114, 1124-1125) . The portion of the opinion addressing that issue is discussed at [j], below. Plaintiffs also contended that two of their grievances fell outside the clause's scope--specifically their claims ATI offered to buy their home "as-is" and made a "low-ball" bid to perform new work. The contract's arbitration clause applies to claims "arising out of or related to" the agreement. Although the scope of an arbitration clause is generally a question for judicial determination, the parties may, by clear and unmistakable agreement, elect to have the arbitrator, rather than the court, decide which grievances are arbitrable. Here, the parties clearly and unmistakably agreed to have the arbitrator determine the scope of the arbitration clause. The contract mandated arbitration in accordance with the American Arbitration Association's Construction Industry Rules. Rule 8(a) of those rules specifies the "arbitrator shall have the power to rule on his or her own jurisdiction, including any objections with respect to the existence, scope or validity of the arbitration agreement." By incorporating rule 8(a) into their agreement, the parties clearly evidenced their intention to accord the arbitrator the authority to determine issues of arbitrability. Thus, any issues concerning the scope of the arbitration clause should be determined by the arbitrator in the arbitration proceeding (136 Cal. App. 4th 1110, 1123) .

Dream Theater, Inc. v. Dream Theater (2004) 124 Cal. App. 4th 547, 21 Cal. Rptr. 3d 322 , arose from the sale of a business. One of seller's principals was hired by buyer to run the business. Some months after the purchase, buyers learned that person had multiple sclerosis, which they believed negatively affected his ability to run the business. Buyers claimed that sellers knew about the illness and had a duty to disclose it to them before the purchase was consummated. Buyers claimed this failure caused them to suffer losses approaching $500,000. The purchase and sale contract contained comprehensive dispute resolution provisions and identified the parties' respective obligations to indemnify one another from any and all losses, including losses arising from either party's breach of the contract as well as those arising from third party claims. To assert a claim of loss, the claimant had to give an indemnification notice. If the other party did not contest the notice, the contract provided for the enforcement of the uncontested claim by way of stipulated judgment. The contract established a period of time to pursue settlement, and required for mandatory, final and binding arbitration after this settlement period elapsed. The contract specified that arbitration would be in accordance with the AAA Commercial Arbitration Rules. Under those rules, provide that the arbitrator had the power to rule on his or her own jurisdiction, including any objections with respect to the existence, scope or validity of the arbitration agreement. Buyers served sellers with an indemnification notice, stating their intent to offset their claimed losses by withholding any further payments on a line of credit, which buyers had assumed and sellers guaranteed. The lender eventually received that balance from sellers, who filed a lawsuit seeking to recover that amount and other damages. After sellers filed the lawsuit, buyers allegedly discovered another breach of the contract by sellers: their failure to disclose that the company's largest customer had given notice of termination of its contract with the company only days before the sale. Thus, buyers served sellers with a second indemnification notice asserting losses of approximately $1 million as a result of sellers' failure to disclose the loss of that business. Sellers contested this second indemnification notice; and buyers demanded arbitration of this dispute. Sellers obtained an ex parte order shortening time for the hearing of their motion for an order determining the arbitrability of the claim for damages arising from the alleged failure to disclose the loss of the largest customer's contract. The trial court found that the claim was not arbitrable and stayed the arbitration. Buyer's appealed.

The court of appeal reversed (124 Cal. App. 4th 547, 558) . The court found that (1) the parties' agreement determined whether the court or the arbitrator decides if the dispute is subject to arbitration, (2) because the parties' contract, incorporated into their agreement the AAA Commercial Arbitration Rules, which specify the arbitrator will decide arbitrability, it stated a clear and unmistakable agreement that the arbitrator would decide whether the dispute was subject to arbitration, and (3) nothing in the parties' agreement excluded from the arbitrator's jurisdiction the decision whether the dispute must be submitted to arbitration (124 Cal. App. 4th 547, 549) .

The court of appeal first noted that because the parties introduced no extrinsic evidence, the trial court's ruling regarding arbitrability was a conclusion of law, requiring the court of appeal to independently interpret the contract. The court discussed several United States Supreme Court cases, citing First Options of Chicago, Inc. v. Kaplan (1995) 514 U.S. 938, 944-945, 115 S. Ct. 1920, 131 L. Ed. 2d 985 , (discussed in Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.10[3][d]) for the propositions that when deciding whether the parties agreed to arbitrate a certain matter (including arbitrability), courts should apply ordinary state--law principles that govern the formation of contracts; that it should not be assumed the parties intended the arbitrator to decide whether their dispute was arbitrable unless there was clear and unmistakable evidence that they did so; and that if the agreement is silent or ambiguous on that question, the court and not the arbitrator should decide arbitrability so as not to force unwilling parties to arbitrate a matter they reasonably thought a judge, not an arbitrator, would decide (124 Cal. App. 4th 547, 552) .

After disagreeing with several of sellers' contentions as to the interpretation of the agreement, including the claim that the term indemnity, and therefore arbitration, applied only to third party liability (124 Cal. App. 4th 547, 555-556) , the court concluded that the parties' agreement to arbitrate according to the AAA Commercial Arbitration Rules was clear and unmistakable evidence of the intent that the arbitrator should decide whether a contested claim was arbitrable. If a contract provides for arbitration in conformance with rules that specify the arbitrator will decide the scope of his or her own jurisdiction, the parties' intent is clear and unmistakable, even without a recital in the contract that the arbitrator will decide any arbitrability dispute.At the time the appellate court rendered its decision, the parties continued to dispute what claims were arbitrable and what claims no longer presented live controversies. In addition to the claim regarding the failure to disclose the termination of the largest customer's contract, there remained sellers' complaint concerning buyers' offset of claimed damages arising from the manager's disability, which buyers contended sellers had waived by not contesting it pursuant to the dispute resolution provisions and claims under the related consulting agreement, which had no arbitration clause (124 Cal. App. 4th 547, 557) . Thus, the court ruled that on remand, the trial court should stay the entire action pending the arbitrator's determination of the scope of his or her jurisdiction to decide the various disputes among the parties (124 Cal. App. 4th 547, 557-558) .

Greenspan v. LADT, LLC (2010) 185 Cal. App. 4th 1413, 111 Cal. Rptr. 3d 468, affirmed the confirmation of an arbitration decision on a breach of contract claim. On the issue of whether the agreement gave the arbitrator the power to decide arbitrability of issues, the court stated that courts must not conclude that the parties agreed to arbitrate arbitrability unless there is clear and unmistakable evidence that they did so (185 Cal. App. 4th 1413, 2010 Cal. App. LEXIS 968 at 43, 45). However, when the parties have a contract that provides for arbitration of some issues, that a particular issue falls outside the scope of the provision calling for arbitration of arbitrability must be shown by clear evidence (185 Cal. App. 4th 1413, 2010 Cal. App. LEXIS 968 at 44) . When parties explicitly incorporate rules that empower an arbitrator to decide issues of arbitrability, the incorporation serves as clear and unmistakable evidence of the parties' intent to delegate such issues to the arbitrator (185 Cal. App. 4th 1413, 2010 Cal. App. LEXIS 968 at 49) . The arbitration agreement did not specify arbitrability, but called for the application of the Comprehensive Arbitration Rules & Procedures of the Judicial Arbitration and Mediation Service (JAMS). Rule 11(c) states, among other things, that jurisdictional and arbitrability disputes, including disputes over the existence, validity, interpretation, or scope of the agreement are to be submitted to and ruled on by the Arbitrator (185 Cal. App. 4th 1413, 2010 Cal. App. LEXIS 968 at 46) . Accordingly, the court held that the arbitrator properly determined the arbitrability of the issue of joint and several lliability (185 Cal. App. 4th 1413, 2010 Cal. App. LEXIS 968 at 50), which determination was not subject to merits review, where the agreement did not provide for it (185 Cal. App. 4th 1413, 2010 Cal. App. LEXIS 968 at 51). The portion of the decision on the relationship of the award to the agreement is discussed in Ch. 20C, Arbitration: Confirming, Correcting, or Vacating the Award, § 20C.91[3][c], below. The portion of the decision addressing the review of the timeliness of the arbitrator's award is covered in Ch. 20C, Arbitration: Confirming, Correcting, or Vacating the Award, § 20C.90[3][a], below. The portion of the decision covering whether the award should be vacated due to the arbitrator's failure to recuse himself is dealt with in Ch. 20C, Arbitration: Confirming, Correcting, and Vacating the Award, § 20C.80[3][g], below . The portion of the decision on whether the arbitrator was immune to the suit on which the request for disqualification was based is discussed in Ch. 20B, Arbitration: Selecting Arbitrators; Arbitral Immunity, § 20B.50[3][a], below.

[h] Federal Arbitration Act Is Not Offended When Arbitrator Allows Court to Determine Legality of Entire Contract

Hotels Nevada, LLC v. Bridge Banc, LLC (2005) 130 Cal. App. 4th 1431, 1437, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 903 arose out of a loan agreement between plaintiff and defendant. The agreement contained an arbitration clause which provided for arbitration in Los Angeles, California, in accordance with the laws of the State of California. Defendant filed a demand for arbitration, claiming plaintiff had breached the loan agreement. Plaintiff moved to stay the arbitration to allow a court to determine whether the contract was illegal and unenforceable, which plaintiff claimed it was, because defendant was not licensed in California or Nevada as a finance lender, a bank or trust company, a real estate broker, a mortgage company, broker or agent, or any other type of financial institution. The arbitrator granted the stay request, concluding that although he could decide the illegality issue, it would be more economical to allow a court to decide that question in the first instance. Plaintiff then commenced an action that sought, among other things, a declaration that the entire contract was illegal and void. Defendant petitioned to compel arbitration of all plaintiff's claims. The trial court denied the petition, finding that the issue of the legality of the contract was a question for it to decide, and scheduling a trial setting conference on the declaratory relief cause of action. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the order denying the petition to compel arbitration (130 Cal. App. 4th 1431, 1439) . The court of appeal framed the question before it as whether the Federal Arbitration Act (FAA) would be violated by permitting the trial court to decide the issue of contractual illegality (130 Cal. App. 4th 1431, 1434) . The parties' agreement was subject to the FAA. Plaintiff being a Nevada limited liability corporation operating in Las Vegas, Nevada, and defendant being a California limited liability corporation with its office in Los Angeles, the transaction was an interstate lending agreement, which is "a contract evidencing a transaction involving commerce" within the meaning of 9 U.S.C. § 2 (130 Cal. App. 4th 1431, 1434-1435) . Hence, the arbitration agreement was subject to the limited preemptive effect of the FAA. Even when the FAA applies, interpretation of an arbitration agreement is governed by state law principles. Under California law, ordinary rules of contract interpretation apply to arbitration agreements (130 Cal. App. 4th 1431, 1435) , and the question whether the contract as a whole is illegal is one for the court to decide (130 Cal. App. 4th 1431, 1436) . Code Civ. Proc. § 1281, which provides for arbitration of any controversy which arises out of a contract, does not contemplate arbitration of controversies arising out of contracts which are expressly declared by law to be illegal and against the public policy of California. Part of the issue of the existence of a valid contract for arbitration is the determination of whether the contract as a whole is illegal (130 Cal. App. 4th 1431, 1436-1437) . The arbitrator was charged with the obligation to enforce California law, which obligates the trial court to decide illegality issues when the entire contract is illegal. The arbitrator decided to allow the trial court to decide the issue of illegality. In this situation, there was no violation of the FAA. The court distinguished five things it was NOT deciding, including the issue of the legality of a single provision of a contract (130 Cal. App. 4th 1431, 1437) or whether it would come to the same conclusion if the illegality issue had not first been submitted to the arbitrator (130 Cal. App. 4th 1431, 1438) .

[i] Under Federal Arbitration Act, Arbitrator, Not Court, Determines Illegality

Preston v. Ferrer (2008)552U.S.346, 128 S. Ct. 978, 169 L. Ed. 2d 917 , arose out of a management contract between defendant as manager and plaintiff as personality. Defendant was an attorney and plaintiff was a retired Florida superior court judge who had a television program. Defendant initiated arbitration against plaintiff, seeking to recover fees. Plaintiff filed a motion to stay the arbitration with the arbitrator and also filed a petition to determine controversy with the Labor Commissioner (Commissioner) and a motion asking the Commissioner to stay the arbitration. The issue before the Commissioner was whether the contract was void. The Talent Agency Act (TAA; Lab. Code § 1700 et seq.) requires talent agents to procure a license from the Labor Commissioner. An unlicensed person's contract with an artist to provide the services of a talent agent is illegal and void. Courts may void the entire contract when talent agent services regulated by the TAA are inseparable from unregulated managerial services. Defendant moved to dismiss the petition with the Commissioner. The arbitrator denied plaintiff's motion to stay the arbitration, so plaintiff filed a complaint seeking a declaration that the dispute involving the validity of the contract was not subject to arbitration and an injunction restraining defendant from proceeding with the arbitration. Defendant moved the trial court to compel arbitration on the same day that the Commissioner denied defendant's motion to dismiss plaintiff's petition. The Commissioner also denied plaintiff's motion to stay the arbitration, on the grounds that the Labor Commissioner does not have the authority to stay arbitration proceedings. Plaintiff then filed a motion for preliminary injunction, attempting to restrain the defendant from proceeding with the arbitration unless and until the Commissioner determined that he had no further jurisdiction over the parties' dispute. Plaintiff also filed a motion for reconsideration with the arbitrator. The arbitrator granted the motion for reconsideration and stayed the arbitration pending disposition of the matter before the Commissioner. The trial court denied defendant's motion to compel arbitration, granted plaintiff's motion for a preliminary injunction, and stayed the action pending final resolution by the Commissioner. Defendant appealed from the trial court order. The court of appeal affirmed, finding that Lab. Code § 1700.44(a) vested exclusive original jurisdiction over the dispute in the Labor Commissioner. The California Supreme Court denied defendant's petition for review; and the United States Supreme Court granted certiorari to determine whether the Federal Arbitration Act (FAA; 9 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.) overrides a state law vesting initial adjudicatory authority in an administrative agency.

The United State Supreme Court held that when parties agree to arbitrate all disputes arising under their contract, questions concerning the validity of the entire contract are to be resolved by the arbitrator in the first instance, not by a federal or state court; and that state laws lodging primary jurisdiction in another forum, whether judicial or administrative, are superseded by the FAA (169 L. Ed. 2d 917, 923). The Court reversed and remanded for further proceedings consistent with its opinion (169 L. Ed. 2d 917, 931) . The Court said the dispositive issue was not whether the FAA preempts the TAA wholesale but simply who decides whether defendant acted as personal manager or as talent agent. The court discussed 9 U.S.C.§ 2, saying the question who should decide whether grounds exist at law or in equity to invalidate an arbitration agreement has been decided: attacks on the validity of an entire contract, as distinct from attacks aimed at the arbitration clause, are within the arbitrator's ken (169 L. Ed. 2d 917, 925) . The Court cited Buckeye Check Cashing, Inc. v. Cardenga (2006) 546 U.S. 440, 126 S. Ct. 1204, 163 L. Ed. 2d 1038 (Buckeye, discussed below) as the dispositive case when the matter is pending in a state court (169 L. Ed. 2d 917, 925-926) . The parties agreed that the matter was governed by the FAA. Further, plaintiff sought to invalidate the contract as a whole. He did not make any discrete challenge to the validity of the arbitration clause (169 L. Ed. 2d 917, 926) . The TAA allows the court or arbitrator to void the entire contract when talent agency services regulated by the TAA are inseparable from unregulated managerial services (169 L. Ed. 2d 917, 926) . The Court reiterated that the only question concerned the forum in which the dispute would be heard (169 L. Ed. 2d 917, 929) , and distinguished cases relied on by plaintiff (169 L. Ed. 2d 917, 929-931) .

Buckeye Check Cashing, Inc. v. Cardegna (2006) 546 U.S. 440, 126 S. Ct. 1204, 163 L. Ed. 2d 1038 involved deferred payment contracts challenged as usurious. The contracts contained arbitration clauses, which recited they were governed by the Federal Arbitration Act (FAA 9 U.S.C. § 1 et seq). Buckeye moved in Florida state court to compel arbitration. The Florida trial court denied the motion, finding it was to determine in the first instance whether the contracts were void for illegality. The Florida district court of appeal reversed, holding that because respondents did not challenge the arbitration provision itself, but instead claimed that the entire contract was void, the agreement to arbitrate was enforceable, and the question of the contract's legality should go to the arbitrator. The Florida Supreme Court reversed, again, stating that to enforce an agreement to arbitrate in a contract challenged as unlawful would breathe life into a contract that not only violated state law, but also was criminal in nature. The United States Supreme Court granted certiorari.

The Supreme Court reversed and remanded for further proceedings, holding that regardless of whether the challenge is brought in federal or state court, a challenge to the validity of the contract as a whole, and not specifically to the arbitration clause, must go to the arbitrator (126 S. Ct. 1204, 1211) . The Court first discussed the language of 9 U.S.C. § 2, which states that an agreement in writing to submit to arbitration an existing controversy arising out of that contract is valid, irrevocable, and enforceable, save on grounds as exist at law or in equity for the revocation of any contract (126 S. Ct. 1204, 1207-1208) . Challenges on those grounds can be to the arbitration clause or to the underlying agreement as a whole.

In Prima Paint Corp. v. Flood & Conklin Mfg. Co. (1967) 388 U.S. 395, 87 S. Ct. 1801, 18 L. Ed. 2d 1270 , the Court addressed the question of who decides these challenges in the context of fraud claims, and concluded that claims to the validity of the underlying contracts as a whole were to be decided by the arbitrator, not the court (126 S. Ct. 1204, 1208) . Prima Paint involved three holdings: first, that as a matter of substantive federal arbitration law, an arbitration provision is severable from the remainder of the contract; second, that unless the challenge is to the arbitration clause itself, the issue of the contract's validity is considered by the arbitrator in the first instance; and third, that this arbitration law applies in state as well as federal courts. Similarly, the Court decided in Southland Corp. v. Keating (1984) 465 U.S. 1, 4-5, 104 S. Ct. 852, 79 L. Ed. 2d 1 , that the enforceability of the arbitration agreement did not turn on a state legislature's judgment concerning the forum for enforcement of the state-law cause of action or the severability of the arbitration clause.

Respondents argued that 9 U.S.C. § 2, only applies when a contract exists and not to "contracts" which are void under state law. The Court would not read "contract" so narrowly. The word appears four times in 9 U.S.C. § 2. "Contract" as used this last time in 9 U.S.C. § 2 must include contracts that later prove to be void. Otherwise, the grounds for revocation would be limited to those that rendered a contract voidable--which would mean (implausibly) that an arbitration agreement could be challenged as voidable but not as void (126 S. Ct. 1204, 1209) . Because the sentence's final use of "contract" so obviously includes putative contracts, the Court chose not to read the same word earlier in the same sentence to have a more narrow meaning. Admittedly, this interpretation permits a court to enforce an arbitration agreement in a contract that the arbitrator later finds to be void. But it is equally true that respondents' approach permits a court to deny effect to an arbitration provision in a contract that the court later finds to be perfectly enforceable. The Court found Prima Paint's resolution of this conundrum--in favor of the separate enforceability of arbitration provisions--appropriate. Thus, regardless of whether the challenge is brought in federal or state court, a challenge to the validity of the contract as a whole, and not specifically to the arbitration clause, must be decided by the arbitrator (126 S. Ct. 1204, 1210) .

[j] Code of Civil Procedure Section 1281.2 Is Not Applicable to Deny Arbitration for Possible Conflicting Rulings

The facts and procedural background of Rodriguez v. American Technologies, Inc. (2006) 136 Cal. App. 4th 1110 , and the portion of the opinion addressing the arbitrator's authority to determine arbitrability and the scope of issues to be arbitrated is discussed at [g], above. The arbitration provision contained no express choice-of-law provision designating California law generally but stated that pursuant to theFederal Arbitration Act (FAA), any controversy or claim arising out of or related to the agreement would be settled by arbitration in accordance with the Construction Industry Arbitration Rules of the American Arbitration Association currently in effect. The court of appeal first discussed California law, noting that unlike the Federal Arbitration Act, Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c) gives the court discretion to stay arbitration when a party to an arbitration agreement is also a party to a pending court action with a third party, and there is a possibility of conflicting rulings on a common issue of law or fact (136 Cal. App. 4th 1110, 1115) . Under the FAA, the court's only option is to stay the court proceeding and compel the arbitration. The court cited Cronus Investments, Inc. v. Concierge Services (2005) 35 Cal. 4th 376, 394 , (Cronus; discussed in Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.11[3][b])] for the proposition that the parties to an arbitration agreement may expressly designate that any arbitration proceeding should move forward under the FAA's procedural provisions rather than under state procedural law, and concluded that the parties in this case did just that (136 Cal. App. 4th 1110, 1115-1121) . Although 9 U.S.C. §§ 3, 4, by their terms generally do not apply in state court (136 Cal. App. 4th 1110, 1120) , this contract specified that claims shall be arbitrated "pursuant to the FAA." The phrase "pursuant to the FAA" was broad and unconditional, unlike the Cronus clause, which deferred to the contract's California choice-of-law provision by invoking only "applicable" provisions of the FAA. Thus, there was no ambiguity regarding the parties' intent. They adopted the FAA--all of it--to govern their arbitration. The FAA controls, including section 3 which requires the court to stay the judicial proceeding and compel arbitration.

Thus, the court erred by denying ATI's motion to compel arbitration and stay the court proceeding as to plaintiffs and ATI. The court noted that although the contract did not invoke California arbitration law, that law remained applicable to the pending court action as to the defendant insurance companies, who were not subject to arbitration under the FAA. Thus, in order to avoid conflicting rulings, on remand the court may consider whether to exercise its discretion under section 1281.2(c) to stay the action as to the insurance companies pending the outcome of the arbitration. Alternatively, if any party to the court proceeding moved to stay the litigation pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.4, the court would have to order a stay, except to the extent that arbitrable issues are severable (136 Cal. App. 4th 1110, 1123) .

[k] Under Federal Arbitration Act, Court, Not Arbitrator, Determines Challenge that Arbitration Provisions Are Unconscionable

Nagrampa v. MailCoups, Inc. (9th Cir. 2006) 469 F.3d 1257 , concerned a franchise dispute. The franchise agreement required the parties to arbitrate any dispute arising out of or relating to the agreement in accordance with the rules of the American Arbitration Association (AAA). The arbitration provision further provided that the franchisor could obtain provisional remedies, including injunctions, to protect its service mark; that arbitration was to be conducted in Boston, Massachusetts; that the parties would share the costs of arbitration equally; and that each party would bear its own fees, and expenses. After two years of unprofitable operation of her franchise, franchisee unilaterally terminated the franchise agreement, claiming that franchisor had orally promised she would make a 41 percent profit. Franchisor claimed that franchisee owed it in excess of $80,000 in fees, and demanded arbitration in Los Angeles. Franchisee's attorney objected to the arbitration clause, specifically the requirement that the parties share the arbitration fees and requested that arbitration be conducted in Contra Costa County, where franchisee ran her operation. AAA notified the parties that arbitration would be conducted in Boston. Franchisee refused to arbitrate and filed an action in Contra Costa County Superior Court alleging six causes of action, including fraud and misrepresentation, and violations of the California Franchise Law, the Consumer Legal Remedies Act (Civ. Code § 1750 et seq.), the Unfair Competition Law (Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq.). Franchisee also challenged arbitration provision as unconscionable, unilateral, and alleged the franchise agreement was a contract of adhesion. Nowhere in the complaint did plaintiff seek to have the franchise agreement as a whole invalidated or declared unenforceable. MailCoups removed the matter to federal court on the basis of diversity jurisdiction and moved there to compel arbitration and to have the matter transferred to federal district court in Boston. Although the agreement provided it was governed by Massachusetts law, the parties and all courts involved proceeded on the assumption that California law governed. The district court addressed only whether the arbitration provision was substantively unconscionable and found that it was not and that contract issues were for the arbitrator to decide. It dismissed the action, permitting MailCoups to move in the district court for the district of Massachusetts to compel arbitration. Plaintiff appealed. A three-judge panel held that it need not reach the issue of substantive unconscionability because plaintiff had not carried her burden of proving the contract was a contract of adhesion and that procedural unconscionability was for the arbitrator to decide. That opinion was withdrawn, and an en banc hearing ensued.

The court of appeal reversed (469 F.3d 1257, 1294) , holding that when the complaint challenges the validity or enforceability of the agreement containing the arbitration provision, the question of whether the agreement, as a whole, is unconscionable must be referred to the arbitrator. When the crux of the complaint is not the invalidity of the contract as a whole, but rather the arbitration provision itself, then the federal courts must decide whether the arbitration provision is invalid and unenforceable under 9 U.S.C. § 2 (469 F.3d 1257, 1276-1277) . A court cannot shirk this obligation simply because controlling substantive state law requires the court to consider, in the course of analyzing the validity of the arbitration provision, the circumstances surrounding the making of the entire agreement. The arbitrability of a particular dispute is a threshold issue to be decided by the courts unless the parties clearly and unmistakably provide otherwise. In analyzing whether an arbitration agreement is valid and enforceable, generally applicable contract defenses, such as fraud, duress, or unconscionability, may be applied to invalidate arbitration agreements without contravening 9 U.S.C. § 2. The court discussed Buckeye Check Cashing, Inc. v. Cardegna (2002) 546 U.S. 440, 126 S. Ct. 1204, 163 L. Ed. 2d 1038 (Buckeye), beginning with its characterization of two types of challenges: those challenging specifically the validity of the agreement to arbitrate and those challenging the contract as a whole, either on a ground that directly affects the entire agreement or on theground that the illegality of one of the contract's provisions renders the whole contract invalid (469 F.3d 1257, 1267). Unless the challenge is to the arbitration clause itself, the issue of the contract's validity is considered by the arbitrator in the first instance (469 F.3d 1257, 1268) . The court relied on similar analyses in Prima Paint Corp. v. Flood & Conklin Mfg., Co. (1967) 388 U.S. 395, 403-404, 87 S. Ct 1801, 18 L. Ed 2d 1270 and Southland Corp. v. Keating (1984) 465 U.S. 1, 104 S. Ct. 852, 79 L. Ed. 2d 1 . Examining the complaint in this action, the majority found it clear that plaintiff sought to invalidate the arbitration agreement only on the basis of unconscionability. Although the complaint alleged that the contract was one of adhesion, that allegation was not a separate cause of action for which plaintiff sought independent relief, such as rescission or invalidation of the entire contract. Nor did that allegation, though necessary to establish unconscionability of the arbitration provision, serve as a ground that directly affected the entire agreement, unlike the usurious finance ground in Buckeye (469 F.3d 1257, 1270). When no claim threatens to invalidate or otherwise directly affect the entire contract, the federal court must decide claims attacking the validity of the arbitration provision, even if substantive state law requires an examination of the making of the entire contract as part of that analysis (469 F.3d 1257, 1271) . The court went on to discuss the law in other circuits, and found that, with the exception of the Eleventh Circuit, the law was the same: if the claim seek to invalidate the entire contract, then the federal court will send the dispute to arbitration (469 F.3d 1257, 1271-1277). If there are separate and independent claims specifically challenging enforcement of the arbitration provision, the federal court will consider the challenge to arbitrability of the dispute. While plaintiff argued that the arbitration provision was procedurally unconscionable because it was contained in a contract of adhesion, the complaint did not seek rescission or invalidation of the entire contract based on it being a contract of adhesion. The contract of adhesion argument may be addressed insofar as it bears on the question of procedural unconscionability of the arbitration provision (469 F.3d 1257, 1277). The court determined that plaintiff had not waived her right to challenge the arbitration provision by participating in arbitration (469 F.3d 1257, 1277-1280), and went on to consider whether the arbitration provision was unconscionable, finding that it was (469 F.3d 1257, 1280-1294) . The court concluded that while the district court properly undertook to decide whether the arbitration provision was valid and enforceable and properly relied on California law in its analysis, it erred by failing to analyze whether there was evidence of procedural unconscionability and to weigh both procedural and substantive unconscionability on a sliding scale. Thus, the district court erroneously found that the arbitration provision was valid and enforceable and improperly dismissed the action. The court reversed and remanded for further proceedings consistent with its opinion (469 F.3d 1257, 1294) .

Sanchez v. Western Pizza Enterprises, Inc. (2009) 172 Cal. App. 4th 154, 90 Cal. Rptr. 3d 818 , affirmed a trial court order finding a class arbitration waiver and other terms of the agreement unconscionable, and that the agreement therefore was unenforceable. The employer appealing the order contended that the arbitrator, rather than the trial court, had jurisdiction to determine whether the agreement was enforceable. The court relied on the rule that under California law as well as the Federal Arbitration Act, the question whether an arbitration agreement is unenforceable, in whole or in part, based on general contract law principles, is a question for the court to decide, rather than an arbitrator. This includes the determination whether an arbitration agreement is unconscionable or contrary to public policy. The proponent of arbitration of enforceability also argued that the agreement specifically authorized the arbitrator to decide the issue of enforceability. However, while not ruling that a clear authorization in the agreement would be enforceable, the court ruled that the agreement in the case, which stated only that the arbitrator had jurisdiction to decide '"any disputes over the interpretation or application of this Arbitration Agreement,'" did not authorize the arbitrator to determine the issue (172 Cal. App. 4th 154, 165-166) . The portion of the opinion and relevant facts dealing with the issue of whether the class action waiver was unenforceable as against public policy is discussed in Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.22[3][d]. The portions of the opinion addressing the procedural unconscionability of the arbitration agreement, the substantive unconscionability of the agreement, and the unenforceability of the agreement due to unconscionability are discussed, respectively, in Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.91[3][d], [e], and [k].

Bruni v. Didion (2008) 160 Cal. App. 4th 1272, 73 Cal. Rptr. 3d 395 , involved consolidated construction defect suits by 35 homeowners. Most of the homes came with an express limited warranty, which provided coverage, subject to sweeping exclusions, for the whole home for just one year, and for the electrical, plumbing and mechanical systems for just two years; after that, the only coverage it provided was for load-bearing elements, and then only if the damage to them made the home unsafe, unsanitary, or otherwise unlivable. Some versions of the warranty purported to relieve the builder of any liability except under the warranty. The warranty included arbitration provisions purporting to require the purchaser to arbitrate disputes arising from or related to not only the warranty, but also the home, the sale of the home, and the arbitration provisions themselves. When plaintiffs filed suit against the builders, alleging construction defects, the builders moved to compel arbitration. The trial court denied the motions, because it found that the agreement were unconscionable. Defendants appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed (160 Cal. App. 4th 1272, 1277, 1296) , finding the arbitration provisions unconscionable because they were contained in contracts of adhesion and they violated plaintiffs' reasonable expectations (160 Cal. App. 4th 1272, 1277) . Defendants raised five contentions, that (160 Cal. App. 4th 1272, 1276-1277) :

1. Pursuant to the arbitration provisions, the question of whether the arbitration provisions were unconscionable had to be decided by the arbitrator, not by the trial court.

2. Assuming the trial court was even allowed to consider whether the arbitration provisions were unconscionable, it had to consider them by themselves, not together with the overall warranty.

3. The arbitration provisions, when considered by themselves, were not unconscionable.

4. Even assuming some of the arbitration provisions were unconscionable, the trial court should have severed them and enforced the remaining arbitration provisions.

5. Even assuming the trial court could consider the overall warranty, the overall warranty was not unconscionable or otherwise unenforceable.

The court of appeal held that because plaintiffs were claiming that they never knowingly agreed to the arbitration provisions, the trial court, and not the arbitrator, had to resolve the unconscionability claim (160 Cal. App. 4th 1272, 1277) . Before compelling arbitration, the court must initially determine whether the parties agreed to arbitrate the dispute in question. That determination involves two considerations: (1) whether there is a valid agreement to arbitrate between the parties; and (2) whether the dispute in question falls within the scope of that arbitration agreement (160 Cal. App. 4th 1272, 1283) . When the Federal Arbitration Act (9 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.; FAA) applies, arbitration clauses are separable from the contracts in which they are embedded. Thus, an arbitration clause may be enforceable regardless of whether the contract surrounding it is enforceable. A challenge to the entire agreement is for the arbitrator to determine, while a court determines a challenge to the arbitration clause (160 Cal. App. 4th 1272, 1283) . One exception to this scheme is a claim that the party resisting arbitration never actually agreed to be bound to the entire contract (160 Cal. App. 4th 1272, 1284) . The trial court ruled that the contracts here were within the scope of the FAA; and plaintiffs did not challenge that finding. California has adopted the severability doctrine and made it applicable, as a matter of state law, even to contracts that do not fall under the FAA (160 Cal. App. 4th 1272, 1285) . Defendants contended that plaintiffs' unconscionability claim challenged the warranty as a whole, and hence, the trial court should have compelled arbitration without even considering unconscionability. Plaintiffs responded that, at least for purposes of the motion to compel arbitration, their unconscionability claims were directed solely at the arbitration provisions (160 Cal. App. 4th 1272, 1286) . The matter was further complicated by the fact that the arbitration provision and the Construction Arbitration Services (CAS) rules under which arbitration was to be conducted provided that any disputes concerning the interpretation or the enforceability of the arbitration agreement, including its revocability or voidability, the scope of arbitrable issues, and any defense based on waiver, estoppel or laches, would be decided by the arbitrator (160 Cal. App. 4th 1272, 1288) . The matter hinged on the precise nature of plaintiffs' claims. If plaintiffs admitted that they knowingly agreed to the arbitration provisions, they could be required to arbitrate an unconscionability claim. However, here plaintiffs were claiming that they never knowingly agreed to the arbitration provisions. Thus, the trial court, and not the arbitrator, had to resolve the unconscionability claim (160 Cal. App. 4th 1272, 1277, 1287, 1290) . The portions of the opinion addressing unconscionablity are discussed at § 20A.91[3][c] and [d].

Plaintiffs in Baker v. Osborne Development Corp. (2008) 159 Cal. App. 4th 884, 71 Cal. Rptr. 3d 854 , sued defendant and various of its subcontractors, alleging the homes they purchased from Osborne suffered from construction defects in design and workmanship, including, among other things, problems from soil movement; foundation deficiencies; plumbing leaks; stucco, window, and roof problems; finish problems relating to cabinets, floor tiles, and countertops; and problems with the framing and electrical, heating, plumbing, and ventilation systems. The complaint alleged causes of action for strict liability, breach of the implied warranty of merchantability, breach of the purchase agreement, negligence, and breach of warranty. Defendant moved to compel arbitration by some of the buyers based on a provision in a warranty administered by Home Buyers Warranty Corporation (HBW). Under the program, defendant Osborne, as the builder, enrolled new homes by paying HBW an enrollment fee and mailing to HBW a builder application for home enrollment (builder application) form signed by the homebuyer and the builder. The builder application stated that by signing where indicated, the buyer acknowledge that he or she had read the builder's copy of the warranty booklet, and consented to its terms, including the binding arbitration provision contained in it. After HBW accepted homes for enrollment in the warranty program, HBW issued warranty booklets to the homeowners. The HBW warranty booklet provided that all claims, disputes and controversies by or between the homeowner, the builder, the warranty insurer and/or HBW, relating to the warranty, the home, any defect in or to the home or the real property on which it was situated, would be submitted to arbitration. The arbitration agreement was to be deemed self-executing and any disputes concerning the interpretation or the enforceability of the arbitration agreement, including without limitation, its revocability or voidability for any cause, the scope of arbitrable issues, and any defense based on waiver, estoppel or laches, were to be decided by the arbitrator. Plaintiffs opposed the motion to compel arbitration. The trial court found that the arbitration agreement was substantively unconscionable because it was not mutual: there was no realistic circumstance in which the builder would be suing the buyer and bringing claims that would be required to be arbitrated under the terms of the agreement. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed (159 Cal. App. 4th 884, 887, 898) , finding that the trial court correctly ruled that the arbitration agreement was both procedurally and substantively unconscionable and therefore unenforceable (159 Cal. App. 4th 884, 897). The court of appeal began by noting that although the Federal Arbitration Act (FAA) governs the interpretation of arbitration clauses, California law governs whether an arbitration agreement has been formed in the first instance, and whether an arbitration agreement exists is an issue for judicial determination. In general, whether a particular dispute is arbitrable is a threshold issue to be decided by the court unless the parties clearly and unmistakably provided otherwise (159 Cal. App. 4th 884, 893) . The trial court found the arbitration agreement was ambiguous on the issue of whether arbitrability was to be determined by the arbitrator. The court of appeal, in its independent judgment, agreed because one provision of the arbitration agreement stated that issues of enforceability or voidability were to be decided by the arbitrator, while another provision indicated that the court might find a provision unenforceable (159 Cal. App. 4th 884, 893-894) . Thus, there was no "clear and unmistakable" direction that the arbitrator determine the issue of whether the arbitration agreement was enforceable (159 Cal. App. 4th 884, 894) . The portions of the opinion addressing unconscionablity is discussed at § 20A.91[3][c], [d], and [e].

Murphy v. Check 'N Go of California, Inc. (2007) 156 Cal. App. 4th 138, 67 Cal. Rptr. 3d 120 , involved a claim by an employee alleging that defendant misclassified its salaried retail managers as exempt employees under state labor laws. The suit asserts causes of action on behalf of the class of salaried retail managers for violation of Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq. and failure to pay or provide overtime compensation, accurate itemized wage statements, adequate meal and rest periods, and wages on termination, during the four years prior to the filing of the complaint. The parties' dispute resolution agreement included an arbitration provision which prohibited class and representative actions, stated that it covered "any assertion by you or us that this Agreement is substantively or procedurally unconscionable," and that it was governed by the Federal Arbitration Act. Defendant, an Ohio corporation licensed to do business in California, moved to compel arbitration. In opposing the motion, plaintiff submitted declarations by attorneys experienced in wage and hour cases attesting to the difficulty of prosecuting those cases individually, rather than as class actions. Because of the relatively small sums of money involved in individual cases, it was difficult for plaintiffs to find counsel, despite the availability of statutory attorneys' fees. The attorneys opined that class actions were the only effective way to redress wage and hour violations because businesses had no other real incentive to examine whether their practices complied with the law. As a matter of simple economics, a few individual settlements more than made up exponentially the savings from the decision to (mis)classify employees as exempt and pay them a fixed salary for 45, 50, 55 and or more hours per week. The employees who have no idea their rights are being violated or who can't find attorneys to take on their relatively small individual cases will continue to be exploited by working unpaid overtime hours. The trial court denied the motion to compel arbitration, finding that it had the power to rule on the unconscionability issues; that the parties' agreement was a contract of adhesion; that the class action waiver was substantively unconscionable, as was the provision for arbitration of unconscionability issues; and that the unconscionable terms would not be severed from the agreement. Defendant appealed, contesting all of those findings.

The court of appeal affirmed (156 Cal. App. 4th 138 , 142, 150), finding that the court was empowered to decide the unconscionability issue and that the class action waiver was unconscionable (156 Cal. App. 4th 138 , 142). The court began by noting that the question of arbitrability is for judicial determination unless the parties clearly and unmistakably provide otherwise (156 Cal. App. 4th 138 , 144). While the language of the agreement was clear, plaintiff's alleged assent to the provision was vitiated by the fact that it was set forth in a contract of adhesion, i.e., a standardized contract drafted by the stronger party and presented to the weaker party on a take-it-or-leave-it basis. The court inferred from the evidence that plaintiff reasonably expected that she was required to sign the contract as a condition of continued employment. Substantial evidence supported the trial court's determination that the agreement was a contract of adhesion, and thus procedurally unconscionable. A contract of adhesion, or provision in one, which does not fall within the reasonable expectations of the weaker party, will not be enforced against that party (156 Cal. App. 4th 138 , 144-145). Also, a contract provision, even if consistent with the reasonable expectations of the parties, will be denied enforcement if, considered in its context, it is unduly oppressive or unconscionable. The court of appeal found that both considerations were applicable: parties would not ordinarily expect that an arbitrator, rather than a court, would determine his or her own jurisdiction and the provision for the arbitrator to determine unconscionability was itself substantively unconscionable (156 Cal. App. 4th 138 , 145). Defendant argued for the first time on appeal that an arbitrator must determine theunconscionability issues because those arguments were directed against the agreement as a whole, not just the arbitration provision. Even if this argument was not waived by the failure to raise it below, the court of appeal concluded that it lacked merit. While plaintiff's claim of procedural unconscionability applied to the entire agreement, as a contract of adhesion, the claims of substantive unconscionability were all directed at the arbitration provision. The court agreed with the trial court's conclusion that it had the power to determine the unconscionability issues. (156 Cal. App. 4th 138 , 146). The portion of the opinion addressing the validity of the class action wavier is discussed in Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.91[3]

The facts and procedural background of Higgins v. Superior Court (Disney/ABC International Television, Inc.) (2006) 140 Cal. App. 4th 1238, 45 Cal. Rptr. 3d 293 , and the portion of the opinion addressing the general criteria of unconscionability are discussed at Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.91[3][g]. The trial court ruled, and the parties did not dispute, that the enforceability of the arbitration clause was governed by the Federal Arbitration Act (FAA) (140 Cal. App. 4th 1238, 1247). Under the FAA, a court may not consider a claim that an arbitration provision is unenforceable if it is a subterfuge for a challenge that the entire agreement (in which the arbitration clause is only a part) is unconscionable. That contention must be presented to the arbitrator (140 Cal. App. 4th 1238, 1249) . The court of appeal disagreed with the trial court's characterization of petitioners' attack as being against the entire agreement, noting that although there was language in the pleadings and papers that was ambiguous, a careful reading of petitioners' points made clear they sought to attack only the arbitration clause (140 Cal. App. 4th 1238, 1250-1251). Although the court of appeal could have remanded to permit the trial court to decide whether the arbitration provision was unconscionable, it chose to make that determination itself because the facts were uncontested, their review de novo, and the issue a matter of law (140 Cal. App. 4th 1238, 1251).

[l] Under Federal Arbitration Act, Court, Not Arbitrator, Determines Existence of Entire Contract

Plaintiff in Sanford v. Member Works, Inc. (9th Cir. 2007) 483 F.3d 956 alleged telemarketing violations of 39 U.S.C. § 3009, mailing unordered merchandise. The District Court compelled arbitration, though acknowledging plaintiff's contention that she was unaware that she had enrolled in the Essentials program, explaining that Sanford's challenges to the validity of the whole contract and not specifically the arbitration agreement was an issue for the arbitrator and not the Court to decide. The arbitrator found no contract had been formed; even if a script was read to Sanford, the basic requirements of offer and acceptance were not met. The arbitrator awarded Sanford $72 in damages plus $34.57 in interest and $21,209.28 in arbitration fees, offset by the $72 that Member Works had reimbursed plaintiff, but found for Member Works on Sanford's other claims. The award was confirmed, over Sanford's objections, and she appealed.

The Court of Appeals vacated the orders compelling arbitration and confirming the arbitration award and remanded the case to the district court to determine whether a contract was formed between Sanford and Member Works (483 F.3d 956, 964-965) . Member Works argued Sanford could not now challenge the order compelling arbitration because it was an appealable order and she had not appealed it earlier. The Court of Appeals disagreed, noting that under the Federal Arbitration Act, an order compelling arbitration that also dismisses the action without prejudice constitutes an appealable final decision, but an order, like the one in this case, that compels arbitration but only stays the action is not a final decision with respect to the arbitration. Thus, Sanford's appeal of that order was timely (483 F.3d 956, 960-962) .

As to the primary question, the Court of Appeal cited Three Valleys Municipal Water Dist. v. E.F. Hutton & Co. (9th Cir. 1991) 925 F.2d 1136, 1140-1141 (Three Valleys) for the correct federal law, that issues regarding the validity or enforcement of a putative contract mandating arbitration should be referred to an arbitrator, but challenges to the existence of a contract as a whole must be determined by the court prior to ordering arbitration (483 F.3d 956, 962) . The parties here did not dispute that Sanford challenged the existence of a contract with (483 F.3d 956, 962) , and therefore under Three Valleys the district court was required to rule upon the contract formation issue before compelling arbitration (483 F.3d 956, 964) .

[m] National Association of Security Dealers Class Arbitration Rule

Plaintiff in Clark v. First Union Securities, Inc. (2007) 153 Cal. App. 4th 1595, 64 Cal. Rptr. 3d 313 , worked for defendant as an investment consultant candidate. Plaintiff's position required him to hold a license from the National Association of Securities Dealers, Inc. (NASD) and to execute a Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) approved Uniform Application for Securities Industry Registration or Transfer Form U-4 (Form U-4). The Form U-4 contained an arbitration provision which required arbitration in accordance with the NASD Rules of Arbitration Procedure. The complaint alleged eight causes of action arising from plaintiff's employment, including violations of the Labor Code. The first six causes of action were personal to plaintiff. The seventh cause of action was brought by plaintiff individually and on behalf of others similarly situated for unfair business practices (Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200) and sought restoration of all sums wrongfully obtained by defendant as well as injunctive relief. The eighth cause of action was for declaratory relief. Defendant filed a motion to compel arbitration of all of causes of action, except for the injunctive and declaratory relief. The trial court granted the motion. Then the arbitrator ruled that in accordance with NASD Rule 10301(d), and renumbered effective April 16, 2007, as Rule 12204, that the putative class and class action causes of action were not eligible for arbitration. The arbitrator dismissed those causes of action. Thereafter, the trial court, on its own motion, reconsidered its first ruling and held that the putative class and class causes of action were to be heard in the trial court. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court first found that the trial court had inherent power to reconsider its prior ruling (153 Cal. App. 4th 1595, 1608-1609). The arbitrator's dismissal of the class claims was irrelevant. The question before the arbitrators was whether they could hear the two representative claims. Unlike other dismissals, the arbitrator's decision did not dispose of the two claims nor foreclose the trial court from considering them. The fact that the arbitrators did not remand thematter to the trial court did not alter that conclusion (153 Cal. App. 4th 1595, 1609) . Rule 10301(d) [see now Rule 12204] makes ineligible for arbitration class actions claims submitted as a class action and claims filed by members of a putative or certified class action if the claim is encompassed by a putative or certified class action filed in federal or state court, or is ordered by a court to an arbitral forum. Pursuant to Rule 10301(d)(2) [see now Rule 12204(c)] the arbitration panel may decide if a dispute is encompassed by a putative or certified class action. However, either party may elect instead to petition the court to resolve that issue. Petitions to the court must be filed within ten business days of receipt of notice that the Director of Arbitration is referring the dispute to a panel of arbitrators (153 Cal. App. 4th 1595, 1599-1600) . The court noted that Rule 10301(d) was adopted by the SEC in 1992. The public notice issued in connection with the approval of Rule 10301(d) stated that NASD and the SEC agreed that the judicial system had already developed the procedures to manage class action claims and that entertaining class claims through arbitration at the NASD would be difficult, duplicative and wasteful (153 Cal. App. 4th 1595, 1601-1602) . Defendant also argued that the arbitrator, not the court should decide the meaning and applicability of Rule 12204. The court of appeal distinguished the cases and NASD Rules relied on by defendant, saying that Rule 12204(d) is specific to putative and class claims and permits either the court or the arbitrators to decide if claims are encompassed by a putative or certified class action (153 Cal. App. 4th 1595, 1610-1611) . Both the court and the arbitrator have authority to make the determination of ineligibility.

[n] Parties' Agreement Gives Court Authority to Award Attorney's Fees for Petition to Compel Arbitration

Acosta v. Kerrigan (2007) 150 Cal. App. 4th 1124, 58 Cal. Rptr. 3d 865 , arose out of a lease agreement. The trial court initially denied defendants' motion to compel arbitration finding the arbitration clause unconscionable and that defendants had waived their right to arbitration. That ruling was reversed on appeal, and the trial court ordered the matter to arbitration. The lease agreement provided that should any party institute any legal action or administrative proceeding against the other by any method other than arbitration, the responding party would be entitled to recover from the initiating party all damages, costs, expenses, and attorneys' fees incurred as a result of that action. Defendants then moved for $140,000 in attorney's fees claiming their entitlement to those fees was immediate on successfully moving the case to arbitration and was enforceable whether or not they prevailed on the merits at the conclusion of the arbitration proceedings. Plaintiff opposed the attorney's fees request on the grounds that there is no authority permitting an interim fee award to be made before the conclusion of the arbitration and that fees should be subject to arbitration in the same manner other claims under the agreement. Plaintiff filed a motion to stay the fee proceedings under Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.4 until it could be determined whether the fee request was subject to arbitration. The trial court interpreted the agreement to allow a fee award before completion of the arbitration and before a prevailing party was identified at the arbitration and awarded defendants $60,000 in attorney fees incurred in connection with successfully compelling arbitration. In doing so, the trial court impliedly denied plaintiff's petition to compel the arbitration of the attorney's fees request. Later the court made that ruling explicit; and plaintiff appealed from both orders: the order grating attorney's fees and the order denying arbitration of the attorney's fees request.

The court of appeal affirmed, agreeing that under the terms of the parties' agreement an interim fee award was permissible and that the court was in the best position to determine that fee request (150 Cal. App. 4th 1124, 1125, 1133) . There was a dissent, arguing that the fee request should have been determined by the arbitrator (150 Cal. App. 4th 1124, 1133-1135). Given that the trial court must decide the petition to compel arbitration, the court of appeal believed the trial court also should decide the request for fees made in connection with that same petition (150 Cal. App. 4th 1124, 1130) . That request for attorney fees was so closely related to the hearing and decision of the petition to compel as to be reasonably considered an integral part of that proceeding which even under the contract is necessarily a judicial not an arbitral proceeding petition. Thus, despite the breadth of the contractual language allocating all issues to decision by an arbitrator, this particular fee award issue appears to fall within the only exception mentioned in the contract--a resort to the courts in order to resist the other party's attempt to avoid the arbitration clause (150 Cal. App. 4th 1124, 1131) . This conclusion is both consistent with the contract language and preferable as a matter of practical policy to allow the trial judge rather than an arbitrator to decide the fee award issue which is essentially a part of the proceeding on the petition to compel arbitration decided by that trial judge (150 Cal. App. 4th 1124, 1131) . The court discussed other cases dealing with interim fee awards, both under statutes, but noted that it could see no reason why petitioner should have to wait until the end of the case to recover fees he is entitled to by virtue of prevailing on a specific motion, likening the situation to one who is successful in making a discovery motion (150 Cal. App. 4th 1124, 1132) . Petitioner was entitled to an interim attorney fee award because he already has prevailed on an independent proceeding contemplated in the contract. The court noted that even the dissent agreed with the conclusion that an interim fee award is permissible under the terms of the parties' agreement (150 Cal. App. 4th 1124, 1132-1133) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20 ARBITRATION: COMPELLING
PART II. FORMS
A. General Principles Related to Compelling Arbitration

2-20 California Points & Authorities § 20.11

§ 20.11 Supporting [Petition to Compel Arbitration and] Motion to Stay Related Action

[1] FORM

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA,
COUNTY OF _____

_____ [name],	)	NO. _____
Plaintiff and Respondent,	)	MEMORANDUM IN SUPPORT OF [PETITION TO COMPEL ARBITRATION AND] MOTION TO STAY ACTION
vs.	)
_____ [name],	)	Date: _____
Defendant and Petitioner.	)	Time: _____
	)	Location: _____
	)	[Judge: _____]
	)	Date Action Filed: _____
		[Trial Date: _____]

_____

PETITIONER, AS A PARTY TO AN ARBITRATION AGREEMENT, IS ENTITLED TO [AN ORDER COMPELLING ARBITRATION BECAUSE RESPONDENT HAS REFUSED TO ARBITRATE A CONTROVERSY UNDER THE AGREEMENT, AND TO] AN ORDER STAYING THIS ACTION UNTIL THE PETITION TO COMPEL ARBITRATION IS DETERMINED AND, IF ORDERED, ARBITRATION IS COMPLETED.

[EITHER, if application for arbitration is pending]

A. Action to Be Stayed Until Arbitrability Determined and Arbitration Had. If an application has been made to a court [of competent jurisdiction, whether or not in California] for an order to arbitrate a controversy, the court in which the _____ [action or proceeding] is pending in which such controversy is an issue, on motion of a party therein, shall stay the _____ [action or proceeding] until the application is determined, and if arbitration is ordered, until arbitration is had, or such earlier time as the court specifies (Code Civ. Proc. § 1284.1; see Hayworth v. City of Oakland (1982) 129 Cal. App. 3d 723, 729, 181 Cal. Rptr. 214). [Code of Civil Procedure Section 1281.4 is clear and unambiguous: it requires that the trial court stay an action pending before it while an application to arbitrate the subject matter of the action is pending in a court of competent jurisdiction. There is no specific or implied exception contained within Section 1281.4 to preclude its application for dilatory action by a party seeking to arbitrate the matter. Relief based on a claim of delay, as well as any substantive arguments relating to whether arbitration is appropriate under the facts presented, should be presented to the court entertaining the application to arbitrate (Twentieth Century Fox Film Corp. v. Superior Court (2000) 79 Cal. App. 4th 188, 192, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 896)].

[OR, if arbitration has already been ordered]

A. Action to Be Stayed Until Arbitration Had. If arbitration of a controversy has been ordered [by a court of competent jurisdiction, whether or not in California], the court in which the _____ [action or proceeding] is pending in which such controversy is an issue, on motion of a party therein, shall stay the _____ [action or proceeding] until arbitration has taken place, or such earlier time as the court specifies. A single overlapping issue is sufficient to require imposition of a stay (Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.4; see Heritage Provider Network, Inc. v. Superior Court (Eastland Medical Group) (2008) 158 Cal. App. 4th 1146, 1152-1153, 70 Cal. Rptr. 3d 645 ; Los Angeles Police Protective League v. City of Los Angeles (1985) 163 Cal. App. 3d 1141, 1148-1149, 209 Cal. Rptr. 890).

[CONTINUE]

[Optional] B. Venue for Motion to Stay Action Relating to Issue That Is Arbitrable Under Private Agreement. A motion for stay of action pending arbitration must be filed in the court where the action is pending (Code Civ. Proc. § 1292.8).

[Optional] C. Severance of Arbitrable Controversy. If the issue which is the controversy subject to arbitration is severable, the stay may be with respect to that issue only (Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.4).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for _____ [party's status and name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of a motion to stay a pending action that relates to the arbitrable controversy and is best combined with a petition to compel arbitration. If the motion to stay a related action or proceeding is combined with a petition to compel arbitration, they may be supported by the same memorandum. In that case counsel should combine this form with the memorandum at § 20.10, and as many other related memoranda as are applicable to the particular situation.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form, and in the other forms combined with this form, with the facts of his or her case. In particular, argument should stress the similarity of issues before both forums and suggest how the prior determination of such issues in arbitration will expedite the judicial proceeding afterward.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by referencesto the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a form of a motion to stay an action related to an arbitrable controversy that may be supported by this memorandum, and for a notice of hearing on that motion, as see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 32, Contractual Arbitration: Agreements and Compelling Arbitration (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For a form of memorandum to combine with this form when the motion seeking the stay is made by a person who is not a party to the arbitration, see § 20.12.

For additional memoranda to combine with this form, regarding other matters that the petition may need to address, see §§ 20.10, 20.12-20.14, 20.20 et seq., 20.30 et seq., 20.40 et seq., 20.60 et seq., and 20.80 et seq.

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Action to Be Stayed Until Arbitrability Determined and Arbitration Had

Although the facts on which the alternative writ in Twentieth Century Fox Film Corp. v. Superior Court (2000) 79 Cal. App. 4th 188, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 896 , was issued changed before the final decision on the petition, and thus resulted in dismissal of the petition as moot, and dissolution of the writ, the case is discussed here because the court of appeal did ascertain that the respondent court acted in excess of its authority by denying the motion for stay (79 Cal. App. 4th 188, 190, 192-193) . Real party in interest filed an action in respondent court against petitioner for damages for sexual harassment and discrimination in violation of California Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA; Gov. Code § 12940 (h) and (i)). Petitioner filed a petition in federal district court seeking to compel arbitration based on a collective bargaining agreement (CBA) with the union in which real party was a member. Then, petitioner moved in the state court action to stay that action pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.4 pending resolution of the federal action. Respondent court denied the motion on the ground that real party's union could not, by the terms of the CBA, bind her to arbitrate statutory claims. Petitioner challenged that ruling by filing a petition for alternative and peremptory writ of mandate.

The court of appeal issued a temporary stay and alternative writ compelling respondent court to either set aside its order and enter a new order granting the stay, or show cause why a peremptory writ of mandate should not issue. The trial court reasoned that Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.4 does not authorize a trial court to deny a stay based on the merits of the application to compel arbitration pending in another court, or, as was claimed in real party's opposition to the motion for stay, because the party who seeks the stay and has filed the application for arbitration is dilatory in obtaining a hearing on the application for arbitration pending in the other court (79 Cal. App. 4th 188, 191) . Discussing the second paragraph of Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.4, the court of appeal said that the statute is clear and unambiguous: it requires that the trial court stay an action pending before it while an application to arbitrate the subject matter of the action is pending in a court of competent jurisdiction. There is no specific or implied exception contained within the statute to preclude its application for dilatory action by a party seeking to arbitrate the matter. Relief based on a claim of delay, as well as any substantive arguments relating to whether arbitration is appropriate under the facts presented, should be presented to the court entertaining the application to arbitrate (79 Cal. App. 4th 188, 192) . Nevertheless, being informed at oral argument that the federal court had denied the petition to compel arbitration, the court of appeal dissolved the alternative writ and temporary stay and dismissed the petition as moot (79 Cal. App. 4th 188, 193) .

In Hayworth v. City of Oakland (1982) 129 Cal. App. 3d 723, 181 Cal. Rptr. 214 , the court of appeal noted that a defendant sued over a dispute, which defendant contends is subject to arbitration, may elect to demur or to move for summary judgment on the ground plaintiff has failed to exhaust arbitration remedies or to move for a stay of proceedings pending arbitration if defendant also moves to compel arbitration (129 Cal. App. 3d 723, 729) .

[b] Action to Be Stayed Until Arbitration Had

Petitioner in Heritage Provider Network, Inc. v. Superior Court (Eastland Medical Group) (2008) 158 Cal. App. 4th 1146, 70 Cal. Rptr. 3d 645 , sought to purchase real party, but negotiations failed. Real party sued petitioner, two related medical groups, Regal Medical Group, Inc. (Regal), and West Covina Plan IPA, Inc. (Covina), and four individual physicians who had terminated their relationship with real party and entered into agreements with petitioner. The complaint alleged causes of action for breach of contract against the medical groups and the doctors, and for inducing breach of contract and improper disclosure of confidential information and trade secrets against the medical groups. After the physicians successfully moved tocompel arbitration of real party's breach of contract claims, the trial court denied petitioner's and Regal's motion to stay the litigation notwithstanding its finding that similar issues were involved in the arbitration and court proceedings. Heritage and Regal sought a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to vacate its order denying their motion for a stay and to issue a new order granting a stay of the litigation until the arbitration was complete.

The court of appeal issued the writ directing the superior court to vacate its order denying the motion to stay the court action pending conclusion of the arbitration proceedings and to enter a new order granting the motion, finding that Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.4 mandates a stay of judicial proceedings pending completion of the arbitration in these circumstances (158 Cal. App. 4th 1146, 1149, 1155) . The court of appeal set forth Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.4 and said that any party to a judicial proceeding is entitled to a stay of those proceedings whenever (1) the arbitration of a controversy has been ordered, and (2) that controversy is also an issue involved in the pending judicial action. The purpose of the statutory stay is to protect the jurisdiction of the arbitrator by preserving the status quo until arbitration is resolved. In the absence of a stay, the continuation of the proceedings in the trial court disrupts the arbitration proceedings and can render them ineffective. Here, the trial court was mistaken in its belief one overlapping issue was insufficient to justify imposition of a stay (158 Cal. App. 4th 1146, 1152) . A single overlapping issue is sufficient to require imposition of a stay (158 Cal. App. 4th 1146, 1152-1153) . The trial court found the controversy between real party and the physicians ordered to arbitration shared at least one issue with real party's claims against Heritage and Regal. It denied the stay not because there was no finding of any overlap but because the trial court erroneously believed it had discretion to deny the stay if it concluded there were not enough similar issues (158 Cal. App. 4th 1146, 1153) . The court discussed the overlapping claims. In its cause of action for intentional interference with contractual relations, real party alleged Heritage and Regal induced the physicians to breach their agreements by terminating them without 90 days' notice and by disclosing real party's confidential information. One ground for real party's breach of contract claim against the physicians was that they wrongfully solicited real party's health plan members. Whether the physicians did so was also asserted as one aspect of the wrongful conduct underlying real party's claim for intentional interference with prospective business advantage alleged against Heritage and Regal. Also, the claim for unfair competition in violation of Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 rested on allegations that Heritage and Regal induced breach of contract by physicians by persuading them to unlawfully solicit real party's health plan members for the purpose of obtaining a competitive advantage over real party (158 Cal. App. 4th 1146, 1153-1154) .

Los Angeles Police Protective League v. City of Los Angeles (1985) 163 Cal. App. 3d 1141, 209 Cal. Rptr. 890 , arose from administrative mandamus proceedings instituted by a police officer regarding a provision of the memorandum of understanding between plaintiff, a bargaining agent for police officers, and the city. Subsequently, plaintiff filed a petition in superior court to compel arbitration. The trial court denied the petition because, among other grounds, relief was available under the mandamus proceedings.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that, pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.4, any party to the administrative mandamus proceedings is entitled to a stay of proceedings until arbitration is had in accordance with an order compelling arbitration. The purpose of the provision is to promote the expeditious and efficient settlement of disputes and eliminate multiplicity of actions (163 Cal. App. 3d 1141, 1148-1149) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20 ARBITRATION: COMPELLING
PART II. FORMS
A. General Principles Related to Compelling Arbitration

2-20 California Points & Authorities § 20.12

§ 20.12 Party Staying Action for Arbitration Need Not Be Party to Arbitration

[1] FORM

MOVING PARTY, AS A PARTY TO THIS _____ [ACTION or PROCEEDING] INVOLVING A CONTROVERSY AS TO WHICH ARBITRATION HAS BEEN _____ [APPLIED FOR or ORDERED], IS ENTITLED TO AN ORDER STAYING THIS _____ [ACTION or PROCEEDING] UNTIL [THE APPLICATION IS DETERMINED, AND IF ARBITRATION IS ORDERED, AND] ARBITRATION HAS TAKEN PLACE.

A. Party Staying Action for Arbitration Is Not Required to Be Party to Arbitration. A party moving to stay proceedings until a court-ordered arbitration has taken place is not required also to be a party to that arbitration (see Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.4) so long as the same issue is involved in both the arbitration and the proceeding, and its determination in arbitration may serve to simplify the pending action or prevent multiple litigation of issues (Federal Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1998) 60 Cal. App. 4th 1370, 1374-1375, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 164 ; Marcus v. Superior Court (1977) 75 Cal. App. 3d 204, 209, 211-212, 141 Cal. Rptr. 890).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form is designed to be combined with the memorandum at § 20.11 and submitted in support of a motion to stay a pending action that relates to the arbitrable controversy when the person seeking to have the action stayed is not a party to the arbitration.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form, and in the other forms combined with this form, with the facts of his or her case. For example, argument should note the similarity of issues before both forums and suggest how the prior determination of such issues in arbitration will expedite the judicial proceeding afterward.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filedunverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a form of a motion to stay an action related to an arbitrable controversy that may be supported by this memorandum, and for a notice of hearing on that motion, as see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 32, Contractual Arbitration: Agreements and Compelling Arbitration (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Party Staying Action for Arbitration Is Not Required to Be Party to Arbitration

Federal Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1998) 60 Cal. App. 4th 1370, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 164 , was an action by an unpaid subcontractor on a public works project against the primary contractor and its sureties. The contractor moved to compel arbitration and to stay the action pursuant to an agreement between the contractor and the subcontractor that required arbitration of any disputes between them. The court ordered arbitration of the dispute between the contractor and the subcontractor and stayed the action as to the contractor. Plaintiff filed a first amended complaint and served the sureties with requests for discovery. The sureties moved for a stay, but the trial court denied their request. They petitioned for writ of mandate, contending that the stay was mandatory because plaintiff's claim on the bond involved an issue to be decided in the arbitration proceeding.

The court of appeal granted the writ, finding that the trial court should have granted the stay as to the sureties (60 Cal. App. 4th 1370, 1375-1376) . Plaintiff contended that the elements of his claim against the contractor differed from the elements of his claims against the sureties, but provided no facts to suggest that his claim against the sureties was truly independent of the matter in arbitration. The court set forth Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.4 and said that the resolution of dispute between plaintiff and the contractor in arbitration would adjudge "an issue involved in" the action against the sureties (60 Cal. App. 4th 1370, 1374-1375) . Without the stay, the arbitration proceedings would be rendered ineffective and plaintiff would be able to ignore the arbitration agreement. The court said its decision did not deny plaintiff the right to a direct action against the sureties [see Civ. Code § 3248(c)], but merely delayed the action (60 Cal. App. 4th 1370, 1375) .

Marcus v. Superior Court (1977) 75 Cal. App. 3d 204, 141 Cal. Rptr. 890 , involved a franchisee who alleged that the franchisor corporation had fraudulently induced him to enter the contract. The franchisee joined several individual defendants for whom the corporation was allegedly the alter ego. The corporate defendant successfully petitioned to compel arbitration, as provided for under the franchise agreement, and to stay the action against itself. The individual defendants' motion to stay the action against them was denied by the trial court. Although the court of appeal originally denied those defendants' petition for mandate, the Supreme Court, after hearing, retransferred the proceeding to the intermediate court with instructions to issue an alternative writ.

The court of appeal issued a writ of mandate commanding the trial court to stay the action against the individual defendants. It noted that Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.4 allows for any party to an action or proceeding to move for a stay thereof until an arbitration that has been ordered by a court, and that is a controversy also at issue in the judicial proceeding, has taken place. The court observed that this provision included any party to the judicial proceeding, whether or not that person also was a party to the arbitration (75 Cal. App. 3d 204, 209) . There is no requirement that the arbitrable controversy is one that will have a collateral estoppel effect with respect to the parties seeking to stay the action. While it is true that a favorable judgment for the plaintiff in the action would not prevent the litigation of the same questions involved in the arbitration with respect to the individual defendants, the plaintiff would be limited by any determination in arbitration that the corporate defendant was not liable because he was attempting to hold the individuals liable for the tort allegedly committed by the corporation. Thus, it appeared a stay might well simplify the pending action or prevent multiple litigation of issues in line with obvious purposes of the relevant statute (75 Cal. App. 3d 204, 211-212) .

The plaintiff also raised concerns that the stay of his action against the individual defendants might, because they were not parties to the arbitration, allow expiration of the five-year period of limitations prescribed by former Code Civ. Proc. § 583(b) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 583.310] for bringing a case to trial. The court responded that because of the stay being ordered, it would be impossible or impracticable for plaintiff to proceed to trial, and therefore such time period would be excluded from the period for bringing the case to trial (75 Cal. App. 3d 204, 212-213) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20 ARBITRATION: COMPELLING
PART II. FORMS
A. General Principles Related to Compelling Arbitration

2-20 California Points & Authorities § 20.13

§ 20.13 Supporting Petition to Consolidate Separate Contractual Arbitrations

[1] FORM

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA,
COUNTY OF _____

	)
	)	NO. _____
_____ [name],	)	MEMORANDUM IN SUPPORT OF PETITION TO Petitioner,	)	CONSOLIDATE SEPARATE ARBITRATION
vs.	)	PROCEEDINGS
_____ [name],	)	Date: _____
Respondent.	)	Time: _____
	)	Location: _____
	)	[Judge: _____]
	)	Date Action Filed: _____
		[Trial Date: _____]

_____

PETITIONER, AS A PARTY TO AN ARBITRATION PROCEEDING THAT MAY BE AFFECTED BY A SEPARATE ARBITRATION ARISING FROM THE SAME TRANSACTION OR SERIES OF TRANSACTIONS INVOLVING ONE OF THE PARTIES TO THE INSTANT PROCEEDING, IS ENTITLED TO AN ORDER CONSOLIDATING THE PROCEEDINGS BECAUSE THERE _____ [IS or ARE] COMMON ISSUE(S) OF _____ [LAW or FACT or LAW AND FACT] CREATING THE POSSIBILITY OF CONFLICTING RULINGS.

A. Venue for Petition Filed After Commencement of Arbitration. Except as otherwise provided in this article, any petition made after the commencement [or completion] of arbitration shall be filed in a court having jurisdiction in the county where the arbitration is being [or has been] held, or, if not held exclusively in any one county of California, or if held outside California, then the petition shall be filed as provided in Section 1292 (Code Civ. Proc. § 1292.2).

[OR]

A. Under Federal Arbitration Act, Arbitrator Determines Whether to Consolidate Separate Arbitrations. If the arbitration agreements are silent as to consolidation[, even if they contain a California choice of law clause], and if the dispute is governed by the Federal Arbitration Act, the arbitrator, not the court, determines whether to consolidate separate arbitrations (Yuen v. Superior Court (Gemstar--TV Guide International, Inc.) (2004) 121 Cal. App. 4th 1133).

B. Possibility of Conflicting Rulings on Common Issues of Law or Fact Exists. A court may order the consolidation of separate arbitration proceedings on petition of a party to an arbitration agreement when (1) separate arbitration agreements or proceedings exist between the same parties, or one party is a party to a separate arbitration agreement or proceeding with a third party; (2) the disputes arise from the same transaction or series of related transactions; and (3) a common issue or issues of law or fact create the possibility of conflicting rulings by more than one arbitrator or panel of arbitrators (Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.3; Garden Grove Community Church v. Pittsburgh-Des Moines Steel Co. (1983) 140 Cal. App. 3d 251, 264, 191 Cal. Rptr. 15).

C. No Substantial Right or Obligation Will Be Impaired. When the requirements for consolidation contained in Section 1281.3 of the Code of Civil Procedure are met, there is no reason to deny consolidation unless it would impair a substantial right or obligation of a party under the contract (Garden Grove Community Church v. Pittsburgh-Des Moines Steel Co. (1983) 140 Cal. App. 3d 251, 264, 191 Cal. Rptr. 15).

[Optional] D. Consolidated Arbitration Must Be by Three-Arbitrator Panel. A three-arbitrator panel minimizes the risk of factual or legal errors, which are subject to only limited judicial review. Thus, a three-arbitrator panel is such a substantial contractual right, that when one arbitration agreement involved in a consolidated arbitration provides for a three-arbitrator panel, the court must order the consolidated arbitration by a three-arbitrator panel (Parker v. McCaw (2005) 125 Cal. App. 4th 1494, 1505-1509, 24 Cal. Rptr. 3d 55).

[Optional] E. Effect of Clause Prohibiting Consolidation. Like a clause in an arbitration agreement prohibiting classwide arbitration, a prohibition on consolidation of arbitrations may be unconscionable, and thus, void and unenforceable. The determination of unconscionability is for the court to make. The court has both the duty and the discretion to make that determination (Independent Assn. of Mailbox Center Owners, Inc. v. Superior Court (Mail Boxes Etc., USA, Inc.) (2005) 133 Cal. App. 4th 396, 408-410, 34 Cal. Rptr. 3d 659).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for _____ [party's status and name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of a petition to consolidate separate arbitration proceedings that have common issues of law or fact that could lead to conflicting decisions if allowed to be decided in separate proceedings. Note, however, that the provisions for consolidation of separate arbitration proceedings do not apply to agreements to arbitrate disputes concerning the professional negligence of a health care provider made pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1295 [Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.3]. In addition, if the matter is governed by the Federal Arbitration Act, the arbitrator, not the court, decides whether the arbitrations should be consolidated, after the court has determined whether there are binding arbitration agreements that encompass the particular disputes. Thus, the second (alternative) Paragraph A may be used to oppose a court's determination of consolidation or may be used in a petition or other request to the arbitrator or arbitration panel to seek consolidation. Although the court of appeal which decided the authority cited in alternative Paragraph A opined that the AmericanArbitration Association's Supplementary Rules for Class Arbitration provided an administrative mechanism by which the AAA could consider a consolidation issue, counsel should check with the arbitrator or arbitration provider organization involved to determine their current practice with respect to requests for consolidation. Optional Paragraph D is for use when one of the arbitration agreements requires arbitration before a three-arbitrator panel and the other provides for only a single arbitrator.

Optional Paragraph E is for use when to challenge as unconscionable a provision in an arbitration that prohibits consolidation, classwide arbitration, or "group arbitrations." Counsel may wish to combine this with Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.91, Optional Paragraph I, containing the seminal authority on unconscionable class arbitration waivers in consumer contracts.

If the arbitrations sought to be combined are contractual arbitration of an uninsured motorist claim and judicial arbitration of related third party claims, counsel may use this form, which relies on Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.3, and combine it with the form at § 20.14[1], which also relies on Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.3, or may use the form at § 20.15, which relies on Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c). The authority for the form at § 20.14[1] has been questioned in dicta by Mercury Insurance Group v. Superior Court (1998) 19 Cal. 4th 332, 351-352, 79 Cal. Rptr. 2d 308, 965 P.2d 1178 , as discussed at §§ 20.14[2][a] and 20.15[3][a].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, the argument should show that the disputes arose from the same transaction or, if they arose from separate transactions, that the transactions constituted a series of related transactions. The commonality of the legal or factual issues should also be pointed out, along with the potential for conflict if the disputes are resolved separately and inconsistently.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a form of a petition to consolidate separate arbitration proceedings that may be supported by the foregoing memorandum, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 32, Contractual Arbitration: Agreements and

Compelling Arbitration (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Venue for Petition Filed After Commencement of Arbitration

Code Civ. Proc. § 1292 is set forth in § 20.10[1], Paragraph B.

[b] Under Federal Arbitration Act, Arbitrator Determines Whether to Consolidate Separate Arbitrations

Yuen v. Superior Court (Gemstar--TV Guide International, Inc.) (2004) 121 Cal. App. 4th 1133 , involved separate arbitrations by two employees under restructuring agreements with the same employer/surviving entity (real party). The contracts contained a California choice-of-law provision with an equally broad arbitration clause stating that all disputes relating to the contract should be submitted to arbitration. The complaints were substantially similar; and real party asked the arbitration panel to consolidate the arbitrations. The arbitration panel, which was under the auspices of the American Arbitration Association (AAA) determined it did not have authority to consolidate the arbitrations; and the plaintiffs would not agree to consolidation. Real party moved the court for consolidation in accordance with Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.3. The arbitration agreements specified that any action thereunder would be governed by California law. Respondent court granted the motion finding that the facts alleged in the demands for arbitration were virtually identical, many of the same witnesses would testify in both proceedings, counsel were the same in both proceedings, separate arbitrations would be costly, would involve duplicative witnesses, and might result in conflicting rulings by the respective AAA arbitration panels. As to whether Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.3 applied, neither party cited or discussed Green Tree Financial Corp. v. Bazzle (2003) 539 U.S. 444, 123 S. Ct. 2402, 156 L. Ed. 2d 414 (Green Tree) [see Ch. 20C, Arbitration: Confirming, Correcting, or Vacating the Award, § 20C.105[3][a]], and respondent court did not refer to Green Tree in its order granting the motion to consolidate. The court found that Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.3 did apply, based on Volt Information Sciences, Inc. v. Board of Trustees of Leland Stanford Junior University (1989) 489 U.S. 468, 109 S. Ct. 1248, 103 L. Ed. 2d 488 and earlier cases, which held that the Federal Arbitration Act (FAA) does not preclude a California court from applying California procedural statutes governing arbitration.

Plaintiffs challenged the trial court's ruling by writ of mandate, which the court of appeal granted (121 Cal. App. 4th 1133, 1139) , finding that Green Tree requires thatthe issue of consolidation be determined by the arbitrator (121 Cal. App. 4th 1133, 1138) . Under Green Tree, a court decides only the validity of the arbitration clause and its applicability to the underlying dispute between the parties. Other issues, including those concerning what kind of arbitration proceeding the parties have agreed to, are for the arbitrator to decide (121 Cal. App. 4th 1133, 1138) . Although the AAA declined to resolve the consolidation issue when requested by real party to do so, it thereafter recognized the impact of Green Tree, and adopted Supplementary Rules for Class Arbitration, effective October 8, 2003, which, according to the court of appeal, granted the arbitrator authority to determine consolidation or joinder of claims if the arbitration agreement is silent with respect to class claims [see http://www.adr.org., Rules, Supplementary Rules for Class Arbitration] (121 Cal. App. 4th 1133, 1138-1139) . Although these rules are specific to class arbitrations, and a request for consolidation may involve somewhat different considerations, the court determined that those rules nonetheless provide an administrative mechanism by which the AAA may consider the consolidation issue raised in the instant case. The court's decision stated that its vacating the order granting defendant's motion to consolidate the arbitrations was without prejudice to submitting the matter to the AAA (121 Cal. App. 4th 1133, 1139) .

[c] Possibility of Conflicting Rulings on Common Issues of Law or Fact Exists

In Garden Grove Community Church v. Pittsburgh-Des Moines Steel Co. (1983) 140 Cal. App. 3d 251, 191 Cal. Rptr. 15 , a dispute arose between the owner of a construction project and a party who contracted to do substantial construction work. The dispute involved the conduct of the project construction manager, the architect, who had separate contracts with the owner, and the structural engineer, a subcontractor of the architect. When the dispute went to arbitration, the owner sought to consolidate the various arbitrations engendered by the dispute, but the architect argued that the arbitration agreement provided that no other parties would be brought into arbitration without its consent. The trial court agreed and refused to order the architect to participate in a consolidated hearing.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that the proceedings should have been ordered consolidated. The court stated that binding arbitration is favored judicially and by public policy to promote judicial efficiency and to settle disputes quickly and fairly. The importance of obtaining consistent results in disputes involving identical facts and law strongly supports consolidating evidence taken in arbitrations, such as in this case (140 Cal. App. 3d 251, 263) . The court held that the three explicit requirements for applicability of Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.3 were facially met:

- Separate arbitration agreements ran between one party and each of the other parties to the coordinated arbitrations;

- The disputes arose from the same transactions or series of related transactions; and

- Common issues of law or fact created the possibility of conflicting rulings by more than one arbitrator or panel of arbitrators.

The court held that there was no reason to deny consolidation unless it would impair a substantial right or obligation of a party under the contract (140 Cal. App. 3d 251, 264) .

[d] No Substantial Right or Obligation Will Be Impaired

The facts and procedural background of Garden Grove Community Church v. Pittsburgh-Des Moines Steel Co. (1983) 140 Cal. App. 3d 251, 191 Cal. Rptr. 15 , are discussed under [b], above. In Garden Grove, the court of appeal reversed the trial court's denial of a petition by an owner of a construction project to consolidate separate arbitration proceedings involving the project manager and the architect pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.3. There was no reason to deny consolidation unless it would impair a substantial right or obligation of a party under the contract (140 Cal. App. 3d 251, 264) . The court held that the consolidation would not have the effect of adding parties to the architect's agreement to submit disputes to arbitration; the arbitrator could not grant relief against the architect in favor of the contractor, because there was no agreement between them that would be the basis for such relief (140 Cal. App. 3d 251, 265) . The consolidation would merely resolve all factual and legal issues in the same proceeding, to avoid any potentially conflicting findings that could lead to inconsistent results (140 Cal. App. 3d 251, 264-265) .

[e] Consolidated Arbitration Must Be by Three-Arbitrator Panel

Parker v. McCaw (2005) 125 Cal. App. 4th 1494, 24 Cal. Rptr. 3d 55 arose from two agreements between the same parties: an employment agreement and a stock incentive agreement. Both provided for arbitration by the American Arbitration Association (AAA), but the employment agreement provided for arbitration by a sole neutral arbitrator, while the stock incentive agreement provided for arbitration by a panel of three arbitrators. After plaintiff's employment was terminated and lengthy mediation was unsuccessful, plaintiff filed suit for severance pay under the employment agreement and for payments under the stock incentive agreement. Defendant filed a demand for arbitration with the AAA, setting forth claims of her own, asking that arbitration be before a panel of three arbitrators in accordance with the stock incentive agreement, and petitioned the court to compel arbitration under those terms. Plaintiff requested that defendants bear the cost of arbitration if the court decided to order arbitration by a three-arbitrator panel. The court ordered consolidated arbitrations under both agreements, but before a single arbitrator who was to assign fees. The arbitrator ruled for plaintiff and awarded $1.4 million in severance pay, $9.75 million under the stock incentive agreement, attorney's fees, and punitive damages. Plaintiff petitioned to confirm the award and defendants petitioned to vacate it. The trial court confirmed the award. Defendants appealed, challenging the consolidation, the award of punitive damages, and the use of a single arbitrator.

The court of appeal reversed the confirmation of the award as to the stock incentive agreement and any attorney's fees awarded thereunder (125 Cal. App. 4th 1494, 1509) , finding that the trial court erred in resolving the conflicting arbitration provisions in favor of a single arbitrator. The right to a three-arbitrator panel is a substantial contractual right. A three-arbitrator panel minimizes the risk of factual or legal error, which errors are subject to only limited judicial review. In addition, AAA'sCommercial Dispute resolution Procedures and Arbitration Rules provide for a three-arbitrator panel in all disputes involving $1 million or more unless the parties' contract provides otherwise (125 Cal. App. 4th 1494, 1506) . Defendants were not required to object to the use of a single arbitrator in the arbitration: the trial court had rules on the matter, and the arbitrator did not have jurisdiction to reverse that order. Nor were defendants required to challenge the single arbitrator order by writ. There was no requirement that the agreements be construed together, nor did the employment agreement prevail because it was executed after the stock incentive agreement. The trial court was also wrong in supposing that the unconscionability principles of Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Services, Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 100-111, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669 (discussed at § 20.23[3][a]) applied to the employment agreement. Plaintiff, who was an attorney, had the opportunity to negotiate the agreement, and did not assert any statutory claims. The agreement was neither generic nor standard (125 Cal. App. 4th 1494, 1507) .

[f] Effect of Clause Prohibiting Consolidation

Independent Assn. of Mailbox Center Owners, Inc. v. Superior Court (Mail Boxes Etc., USA, Inc.) (2005) 133 Cal. App. 4th 396, 34 Cal. Rptr. 3d 659 , arose from actions by franchisees against the franchisor (MBE) to challenge changes imposed in their store formats. Franchisees stated various common law claims as well as claims under the California Franchise Investment Law (Corp. Code § 31000 et seq.), the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code § 16700 et seq.), the Uniform Trade Secrets Act (Civ. Code § 3426 et seq.) and the Unfair Competition Law (Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq.). Some agreements were silent on the issues of consolidation and classwide arbitration and appointed the American Arbitration Association as arbitration administrator. Other agreements prohibited consolidation or classwide arbitration and appointed JAMS as arbitrator. AAA decided as an administrative matter not to consolidate the arbitrations. After the trial court ruled that arbitrations had to be conducted individually and not on a consolidated or classwide basis, the franchisees filed a writ of mandate challenging the order compelling arbitration, denial of consolidation, and related rulings denying or referring to the arbitrators their requests that all arbitral costs relating to their statutory claims be shifted to MBE.

The court of appeal denied the petition in part and granted it in part, (1) upholding the order compelling arbitration, but (2) vacating the order denying consolidation, (3) striking certain unconscionable portions of the arbitration clauses, (4) vacating the order referring the fee-shifting issues to the arbitrator, and (5) requiring the trial court to hold hearings as to allocation of fees. The court of appeal discussed the doctrine of unconscionability, and found these franchise agreements had characteristics of contracts of adhesion. Like a clause in an arbitration agreement prohibiting classwide arbitration [see Discover Bank v. Superior Court (Boehr) (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 148, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 76, 113 P.3d 1100 ; (Discover Bank), discussed in Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.91[3][i]], a prohibition on consolidation of arbitrations may be unconscionable, and thus, void and unenforceable. The determination of unconscionability is for the court to make. The trial court flatly rejected the contention that the franchise agreements were contracts of adhesion, and that, the court of appeal said, was substantively incorrect because it disregarded applicable law concerning adhesion contracts in the franchise context. The court had both the duty and the discretion to resolve conflicts between the two types of arbitration provisions involved. The trial court could exercise this discretion by denying consolidation of separate arbitration proceedings or by allowing consolidation only as to certain issues, leaving others to be resolved in separate arbitrations. But it was error for the trial court to hold the JAMS arbitration clauses controlled over the AAA arbitration clauses to the extent it prohibited group arbitration proceedings. It was also error to let AAA decide the matter as an administrative proceeding without at least referring the matter to an arbitrator. The franchisees made an adequate showing under Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.3 that there were common issues of law and fact and that group arbitration would be a preferred means of resolving them.

Whether the issue is decided by an arbitrator or the court, it should not be done as an administrative proceeding without at least referring the matter to an arbitrator.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20 ARBITRATION: COMPELLING
PART II. FORMS
A. General Principles Related to Compelling Arbitration

2-20 California Points & Authorities § 20.14

§ 20.14 Consolidating Contractual Arbitration of Uninsured Motorist Claims and Judicial Arbitration of Related Third-Party Claims

[1] FORM

THE COURT HAS DISCRETION TO ORDER COMBINED ARBITRATION OF UNINSURED MOTORIST CLAIMS AND THIRD-PARTY CLAIMS SUBJECT TO JUDICIAL ARBITRATION BECAUSE THE CLAIMS ARISE OUT OF THE SAME TRANSACTION AND NO ONE WILL BE PREJUDICED.

A. Consolidating Contractual Arbitration of Uninsured Motorist Claims and Judicial Arbitration of Related Third-Party Claims. When the requirements for consolidation contained in Section 1281.3 of the Code of Civil Procedure are met, and impairment of a substantial right or obligation of a party will not result, a court has discretion to order consolidated arbitration of uninsured motorist claims that are arbitrable under Insurance Code Section 11580.2(f) and third-party claims arising from the same incident that are subject to judicial arbitration under Section 1141.10 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure (Gordon v. G.R.O.U.P, Inc. (1996) 49 Cal. App. 4th 998, 1007, 56 Cal. Rptr. 2d 914 ; but see Mercury Insurance Group v. Superior Court (1998) 19 Cal. 4th 332, 351-352, 79 Cal. Rptr. 2d 308, 965 P.2d 1178 (dictum that consolidation of contractual and judicial arbitrations is not authorized and would be awkward)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be combined with the authorities in § 20.13 and submitted in support of a petition to consolidate, or "combine" arbitration of uninsured motorist claims pursuant to Ins. Code § 11580.2(f) and third-party claims arising from the same accident that are subject to judicial arbitration under Code Civ. Proc. § 1141.10 et seq. The primary authority for consolidation of contractual and judicial arbitrations, Gordon v. G.R.O.U.P, Inc. (1996) 49 Cal. App. 4th 998, 1005-1008, 56 Cal. Rptr. 2d 914 , has been questioned by the California Supreme Court, so counsel may prefer torely on Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2, and use the form at § 20.15[1], rather than use this form, which relies on Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.3. Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c) authorizes consolidation of contractual arbitration and related actions "for all purposes, including trial."

If the third-party claims are not subject to judicial arbitration but are the subject of a separate civil action and there is a common question of law or fact, for instance, if comparative fault between and an insured and an insured driver must be apportioned with respect to a single injury, counsel may petition for joinder of the civil action and the uninsured motorist arbitration pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c). For a form for use in that situation, see § 20.15.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, the argument should show that the claims arose from the same accident, that all parties will be represented in the arbitration, and that no party's substantial right or obligation will be impaired.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a form of a petition to consolidate separate arbitration proceedings that may be supported by the foregoing memorandum, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 32, Contractual Arbitration: Agreements and Compelling Arbitration (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Consolidating Contractual Arbitration of Uninsured Motorist Claims and Judicial Arbitration of Related Third-Party Claims

The accident in Gordon v. G.R.O.U.P., Inc. (1996) 49 Cal. App. 4th 998, 56 Cal. Rptr. 2d 914 , occurred when a van, owned by G.R.O.U.P., Inc. (GROUP) and driven by one of its employees, was struck by a stolen car as it exited a parking lot. The owner of the stolen car was uninsured. The driver of the stolen car fled the scene. The six passengers in the van as well as the driver, sustained injures and incurred medical damages and loss of wages. The passengers sued GROUP (for negligently hiring and supervising the driver), the driver of the van, the owner of the stolen vehicle, and the fleeing driver (as DOE). GROUP was either self-insured or insured by Paratransit. GROUP and its driver answered, denying liability, and cross-complained against the owner of the stolen car and DOE, for indemnity and property damage. The driver of the van also filed a separate cross-complaint against GROUP, the owner of the stolen vehicle, and Doe, for personal injury and property damage and for indemnity. This second cross-complaint was eventually dismissed and arbitrated separately as an uninsured motorist claim, resulting in an award for the driver of the van. The passengers' claims were arbitrable both as uninsured motorist claims under contractual arbitration, and because of the amounts involved, as third-party claims under Code Civ. Proc. § 1141.10 et seq., governing judicial arbitration. The trial court ordered a combined arbitration, which resulted in an award for the passengers under GROUP's uninsured motorist coverage, implicitly finding DOE wholly responsible. That award was confirmed, and GROUP's request for trial de novo was stricken as unauthorized. GROUP appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, finding that the trial court had authority to order the consolidation under Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.3. Both the specific criteria of Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.3, and the judicial policies underlying that provision (the efficient settling of private disputes, judicial economy, and the avoidance of contrary results) were satisfied in this case (49 Cal. App. 4th 998, 1006-1007) . There was no indication that any substantial right or obligation of appellants was injured by the consolidation. Appellants had notice of the combined arbitration and made no objection to the forum, the arbitrator, or any other aspect of the court-ordered arbitration. Thus, the court of appeal concluded that the order compelling the parties to participate in the combined arbitration was a proper exercise of the trial court's authority and discretion (49 Cal. App. 4th 998, 1007) .

With regard to appellants' contention that it was error to deny them a trial de novo, the court of appeal characterized this as an argument that the proper parties were not present at the arbitration, specifically that Paratransit would not be bound because it was not a party to the arbitration (49 Cal. App. 4th 998, 1008) . Even if Paratransit was GROUP's uninsured motorist insurer and was not present at the arbitration, attorneys for both GROUP and Paratransit had actual notice of the arbitration proceeding and a full and fair opportunity to present whatever defenses were available. Furthermore, appellants did not demonstrate any prejudice by the consolidation, and could not: if the uninsured motorist arbitration was conducted first, with the third-party claims beingstayed, the result would have been the same--the arbitrator's award on the uninsured motorist claims would have effectively barred any further litigation between or among the parties to the civil action (49 Cal. App. 4th 998, 1008-1010) .

The facts, procedural background, and primary holding of Mercury Insurance Group v. Superior Court (1998) 19 Cal. 4th 332, 79 Cal. Rptr. 2d 308, 965 P.2d 1178 , are discussed at § 20.15[3][a]. In concluding, the Court noted that because of the conclusion it reached, it was not required to, and did not, consider the propriety of the decision of the court of appeal insofar as it compelled "consolidated" contractual/judicial arbitration that would result in a decision that would be binding and final as to the uninsured motorist coverage issues, but not binding or final between the parties to the personal injury action. The Supreme Court questioned whether a trial court has authority to make such an order--as Gordon v. G.R.O.U.P, Inc. (1996) 49 Cal. App. 4th 998, 1005-1008, 56 Cal. Rptr. 2d 914 concluded that it does--and noted that Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.3, the purported source of authority for that Gordon ruling, appears only to authorize consolidation of separate contractual arbitration proceedings. The Court also noted that "consolidation" of contractual arbitration and judicial arbitration would, at best, be awkward, in light of their mutual exclusiveness and independence and their various differences (19 Cal. 4th 332, 351-352) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20 ARBITRATION: COMPELLING
PART II. FORMS
A. General Principles Related to Compelling Arbitration

2-20 California Points & Authorities § 20.15

§ 20.15 Supporting Petition to Compel Joinder of Contractual Arbitration [of Uninsured Motorist Claims] and Related Civil Action

[1] FORM

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA,
COUNTY OF _____

	)
	)	NO. _____
_____ [name],	)	MEMORANDUM IN SUPPORT OF PETITION TO Petitioner,	)	COMPEL JOINDER OF ARBITRATION PRO-
vs.	)	CEEDINGS AND RELATED CIVIL ACTION
_____ [name],	)	Date: _____
Respondent.	)	Time: _____
	)	Location: _____
	)	[Judge: _____]
	)	Date Action Filed: _____
		[Trial Date: _____]

_____

THE COURT HAS DISCRETION TO ORDER JOINDER OF ARBITRATION OF PETITIONER'S UNINSURED MOTORIST CLAIM AND THIS CIVIL ACTION BECAUSE _____ [specify common issue of law or fact, e.g., THEY BOTH CONTRIBUTED TO PETITIONER'S INJURIES] AND UNLESS THE ACTION AND THE ARBITRATION ARE JOINED, THERE IS A POSSIBILITY OF CONFLICTING RULINGS _____ [specify common issue of law or fact, e.g., WITH REGARD TO THE COMPARATIVE FAULT OF THE INSURED AND UNINSURED MOTORISTS].

A. Court to Order Arbitration Under Agreement. [See § 20.10[1], Paragraph A.]

B. Court's Discretion When Faced With Possibility of Conflicting Rulings. If a court determines that a party to an arbitration [agreement] is also a party to a pending court action or proceeding with a third party, arising out of the same transaction or series of transactions, and there is a possibility of conflicting rulings on a common issue of law or fact, the court may (Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c)):

(1) Refuse to enforce the arbitration agreement and may order intervention or joinder of all parties in a single action or proceeding.

(2) Order intervention or joinder as to all or only certain issues.

(3) Order arbitration among the parties who have agreed to arbitrate and stay the pending court action or special proceeding pending the outcome of the arbitration proceeding.

(4) Stay arbitration pending the outcome of the court action or special proceeding.

C. Court's Authority to Order Joinder When Faced With Possibility ofConflicting Rulings. If a court determines that a party to an arbitration [agreement], [even an uninsured motorist arbitration under Insurance Code Section 11580.2], is also a party to a pending court action or proceeding with a third party, arising out of the same transaction or series of transactions, and there is a possibility of conflicting rulings on a common issue of law or fact, the court may consolidate the contractual arbitration proceeding with the pending action for all purposes, including trial (Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c); Mercury Insurance Group v. Superior Court (1998) 19 Cal. 4th 332, 349-350, 79 Cal. Rptr. 2d 308, 965 P.2d 1178 ; Prudential Property & Casualty Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1995) 36 Cal. App. 4th 275, 278-279, 42 Cal. Rptr. 2d 227).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for _____ [party's status and name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of a petition for joinder of an arbitration proceeding and a court action or proceeding that have common issues of law or fact that could lead to conflicting decisions if allowed to be decided in separate forums. Note, however, that the provisions for joinder of arbitration proceedings and court actions are not applicable to agreements to arbitrate disputes concerning the professional negligence of a health care provider made pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1295 [Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c)].

If arbitration has not yet commenced, this form should be combined with the one at § 20.10.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, the argument should show that the claims arose from the same transaction or series of transactions, and that there is at least one common issue of law or fact that court be decided differently in different forums unless the court joins the proceedings.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [

see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a form of a petition to consolidate separate arbitration proceedings that may be supported by the foregoing memorandum, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 32, Contractual Arbitration: Agreements and Compelling Arbitration (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Court's Authority to Order Joinder When Faced With Possibility of Conflicting Rulings

Mercury Insurance Group v. Superior Court (1998) 19 Cal. 4th 332, 79 Cal. Rptr. 2d 308, 965 P.2d 1178 , arose from an accident involving plaintiffs/real parties (Woosters), a vehicle driven by an employee of Mountain Top, and a third vehicle that fled the scene. Woosters filed a personal injury action against Mountain Top, the employee, and, as DOE, the owner of the vehicle that fled, and made an uninsured motorist claim under their insurance policy with Mercury. Woosters demanded uninsured motorist arbitration; and a contractual arbitration proceeding was commenced. Woosters filed a motion to consolidate the personal injury action and the uninsured motorist arbitration "for all purposes," including trial, in order to avoid conflicting rulings on a common issue of law or fact. The trial court granted the motion, but did not decide to do so "as to trial." The trial court subsequently diverted the then-consolidated action to [non-binding] judicial arbitration, and a judicial arbitration hearing was scheduled. Then, Mercury filed a motion to separate non-binding [judicial] arbitration from binding [uninsured motorist] arbitration and objection to non-binding arbitration. The motion was denied, but in doing so, the trial court clarified that the consolidation of the contractual arbitration proceeding with the personal injury action was "for all purposes, including trial." Mercury petitioned for writ of mandate challenging the ruling on the motion. That was summarily denied. Then Mercury filed an appeal from the trial court's order. Rather than strain to find an appealable order, the court of appeal treated the matter as a petition for an extraordinary writ (19 Cal. 4th 332, 338-339) .

The court of appeal mandated the superior court to vacate its order and to make anew order requiring all parties to participate in a "consolidated" contractual/judicial arbitration proceeding that would result in a decision that would be binding and final between Mercury and plaintiffs as to the uninsured motorist coverage issues but would not be binding as between plaintiffs and defendants (19 Cal. 4th 332, 340) . Woosters petitioned for review, which the Supreme Court granted.

The Supreme Court reversed, and directed the court of appeals to affirm the order of the superior court denying Mercury's motion for separate judicial and contractual arbitrations (19 Cal. 4th 332, 340, 352) . The Supreme Court first discussed the purpose of the four laws involved: the financial responsibility law (Veh. Code § 16000 et seq.), uninsured motorist coverage law (Ins. Code § 11580.2), the contractual arbitration law (Code Civ. Proc. § 1280 et seq.), and the judicial arbitration law (Code Civ. Proc. § 1141.10 et seq.), and their interrelationship (19 Cal. 4th 332, 341-345) . The Court noted that, unsurprisingly, in light of their mutual exclusiveness and independence, the judicial arbitration law and the contractual arbitration law differ the one from the other in various features, which it went on to list (19 Cal. 4th 332, 344-345) . The Court then said that, contrary to the court of appeal's conclusion, there is no preemptive effect arising from any requirement under the uninsured motorist coverage law that, in the event of disagreement between the insurer and the insured, the issues whether the insured is entitled to recover damages, and if so, in what amount, may be resolved only by means of contractual arbitration, or at least only by means of some kind of "arbitration" resulting in a binding and final decision. There is no such effect and no such requirement (19 Cal. 4th 332, 347-348) . The Court further noted that Gordon v. G.R.O.U.P, Inc. (1996) 49 Cal. App. 4th 998, 1006, 56 Cal. Rptr. 2d 914 (discussed at § 20.14[3][a]) was not authority for any preemptive effect arising from the uninsured motorist coverage law because Gordon did not consider that issue (19 Cal. 4th 332, 348) . The Court went on to discuss Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c), and the options available to a court under that section, noting that there is a specific exception to the court's authority to allow joinder of contractual arbitration proceedings and court actions, but that is with respect to professional negligence of health care providers, not with respect to uninsured motorist coverage provisions (19 Cal. 4th 332, 347) . The so-called "right" to contractual arbitration of uninsured motorist coverage issues is only a contractual right. It may be lost in many ways: it may be "revoked" by rescission; it may be lost by waiver; and it may have to yield if there is an issue of law or fact common to the arbitration and a pending action or proceeding with a third party and there is a possibility of conflicting rulings thereon (19 Cal. 4th 332, 348) .

The Supreme Court concluded that the court of appeal erred in holding that the trial court's order denying Mercury's motion for separate judicial arbitration and contractual arbitration was erroneous as unauthorized. In denying that motion, the trial court consolidated the contractual arbitration proceeding with the pending action for all purposes, including trial. The trial court could reasonably have so consolidated in order to avoid conflicting rulings on a common issue of law or fact [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c)]. The contractual arbitration proceeding and the pending action arose "out of the same transaction" and "there [was] a possibility of conflicting rulings on a common issue of law or fact." There is no limitation imposed on the trial court's authority to consolidate in order to avoid conflicting rulings on a common issue of law or fact (19 Cal. 4th 332, 349-350) . Nor, as Mercury argued, was the trial court required to choose some other means to avoid conflicting rulings on a common issue of law or fact (19 Cal. 4th 332, 351) .

Because of the conclusion it reached, the Supreme Court did not have to consider the propriety of compelling "consolidated" contractual/judicial arbitration that would result in a decision that would be binding and final as to the uninsured motorist coverage issues, but not binding or final as to the other issues. Nevertheless, it did so (19 Cal. 4th 332, 351-352) . That portion of the opinion is discussed at § 20.14[3][a].

Prudential Property & Casualty Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1995) 36 Cal. App. 4th 275, 42 Cal. Rptr. 2d 227 , arose from two automobile accidents. Within four weeks, real parties' car was rear-ended by two different vehicles: one insured, the other uninsured. One real party, a jazz dancer, sustained back injuries substantial enough to hinder her career. Real parties filed an action against the insured driver and filed an uninsured motorist claim with their insurer, Prudential Property and Casualty Insurance Company. The uninsured motorist claim was in arbitration when, in order to avoid inconsistent rulings regarding the comparative fault of the two drivers, real parties petitioned the court for joinder of the arbitration proceeding and the civil action under Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c). The court ordered the joinder. Prudential sought a writ of mandate to set aside the order of joinder.

The court of appeal found the joinder proper and denied the writ. The court said that Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c) specifically gives the superior court authority to order joinder of an arbitration proceeding and a civil action to avoid the possibility of conflicting rulings. Prudential, however, insists that is not the case in uninsured motorist arbitration governed by Ins. Code § 11580.2(f) because that statute evidences a Legislative intent to provide for expeditious determination of disputes between insurer and insured. While the court of appeal agreed that was true, it perceived no legislative intent to abrogate the overarching power of the superior court to stay or join arbitration in its discretion under the various conditions set forth in Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c), including the potential of inconsistent rulings (36 Cal. App. 4th 275, 278-279) . The court of appeal concluded that the superior court had the power to order joinder of the arbitration with the civil action to protect real parties from the danger of inconsistent determinations (36 Cal. App. 4th 275, 279) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20 ARBITRATION: COMPELLING
PART II. FORMS
A. General Principles Related to Compelling Arbitration

2-20 California Points & Authorities §§ 20.16-20.19

[Reserved]

§§ 20.16[Reserved]

66 of 174 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20 ARBITRATION: COMPELLING
PART II. FORMS
A. General Principles Related to Compelling Arbitration

2-20 California Points & Authorities § 20.20

§ 20.20 Federal Preemption of Matters Involving Admiralty or Interstate Commerce

[1] FORM

THE COURT SHOULD COMPEL ARBITRATION BECAUSE THE GROUND ON WHICH RESPONDENT SEEKS TO AVOID ENFORCEMENT OF THE ARBITRATION CLAUSE IS PRE-EMPTED BY SECTION 2 OF THE FEDERAL ARBITRATION ACT.

A. Arbitration Clauses Are to Be Enforced. Section 2 of the Federal ArbitrationAct provides that "[a] written provision in any maritime transaction or a contract evidencing a transaction involving commerce to settle by arbitration a controversy thereafter arising out of such contract or transaction, or the refusal to perform the whole or any part thereof, or an agreement in writing to submit to arbitration an existing controversy arising out of such a contract, transaction, or refusal, shall be valid, irrevocable, and enforceable, save upon such grounds as exist at law or in equity for the revocation of any contract" (9 U.S.C. § 2).

B. Federal Substantive Law of Arbitrability. The federal substantive law of arbitrability expressed in Section 2 of the Federal Arbitration Act governs any arbitration agreement within the coverage of the Federal Arbitration Act, is enforceable in both state and federal courts, and preempts any state law to the contrary (Volt Information Sciences v. Board of Trustees (1989) 489 US 468, 476-477, 477 n.6, 109 S. Ct. 1248, 103 L Ed2d 488 ; Perry v. Thomas (1987) 482 U.S. 483, 489, 107 S. Ct. 2520, 96 L. Ed. 2d 426).

C. Section 2 of the Federal Arbitration Act Reaches to Full Extent of Congressional Power Under the Commerce Clause. The word "involving" commerce, as used in Section 2 of the Federal Arbitration Act, is equivalent to "affecting" commerce, and signals an intent to exercise Congress' commerce power to the full extent permitted by the Commerce Clause of the United States Constitution. The Federal Arbitration Act encompasses a wider range of transactions than those actually "in commerce", that is, within the flow of interstate commerce. Therefore, it is not necessary for any transaction to be attributable to interstate commerce, or to originated out-of-state, or to have a substantial effect on interstate commerce. The Commerce Clause power may be exercised in individual cases without showing any specific effect on interstate commerce if in the aggregate the economic activity in question represents a general practice subject to federal control. [Commercial lending is a general practice that has broad impact on the national economy and is heavily regulated by Congress] (Citizens Bank v. Alafabco, Inc. (2003) 539 U.S. 52, 123 S. Ct. 2037, 2040, 2041], 156 L. Ed. 2d 46 ; Allied-Bruce Terminix Cos. v. Dobson (1995) 513 U.S. 265, 273-277, 115 S. Ct. 834, 130 L. Ed. 2d 753 ; Perry v. Thomas (1987) 482 U.S. 483, 490, 107 S. Ct. 2520, 96 L. Ed. 2d 426).

D. Contemplation of Parties Not Relevant in Determining Whether Contract Is in Interstate Commerce. Section 2 of the Federal Arbitration Act applies to contracts that in fact involve interstate commerce. It is not relevant that the parties did not contemplate that the transaction would involve interstate commerce (Allied-Bruce Terminix Cos. v. Dobson (1995) 513 U.S. 265, 278-281, 115 S. Ct. 834, 130 L. Ed. 2d 753).

[Optional] E. Arbitration Clauses Must Be on Equal Footing With Other Contract Clauses. Under Section 2 of the Federal Arbitration Act, states may regulate contracts, including arbitration clauses, under general contract law principles and may invalidate an arbitration clause on such grounds as exist at law or in equity for the revocation of any contract. States may not, however, decide that a contract is fair enough to enforce all its basic terms (such as price, service, credit), but not fair enough to enforce its arbitration clause. The Act makes any such state policy unlawful, for that kind of policy would place arbitration clauses on an unequal footing, directly contrary to the Act's language and Congress' intent (Allied-Bruce Terminix Cos. v. Dobson (1995) 513 U.S. 265, 281, 115 S. Ct. 834, 130 L. Ed. 2d 753 ; Southland Corp. v. Keating (1984) 465 U.S. 1, 16, 104 S. Ct. 852, 79 L. Ed. 2d 1). Respondent seeks to avoid the arbitration clause in this case on a ground applicable only to arbitration clauses. _____ [Set forth the ground on which the respondent is relying to avoid the arbitration clause and show how it places arbitration clauses on unequal footing from other contract clauses].

[Optional] F. Employment Contracts Are Excluded Only for Transportation Workers. The exclusion from coverage by the Federal Arbitration Act of "contracts of employment of seamen, railroad employees, or any other class of workers engaged in foreign or interstate commerce" in Section 1 of the Federal Arbitration Act applies only to contracts of employees who actually work in interstate or foreign transportation. Other employment contracts involving interstate commerce are subject to the Act (Circuit City Stores, Inc. v. Adams (2001) 532 U.S. 105, 119-122, 121 S. Ct. 1302, 149 L. Ed. 2d 234).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of a petition to compel arbitration if counsel wishes the court to include in its order a finding that the arbitration is governed by the Federal Arbitration Act (9 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.). Optional Paragraph E is for use to attack a specific statute relied on by respondent that could only apply to an arbitration clause and which counsel believes is unenforceable as contrary to, and preempted by, the Federal Arbitration Act. For specific California statutes that have been held preempted by the Federal Arbitration Act, see § 20.22, and incorporate relevant authority from that form.

Optional Paragraph F is to refute any anticipated argument based on the former Ninth Circuit minority position that all contacts of employment are excluded from the coverage of the Federal Arbitration Act.

This form is not intended to be a complete memorandum, but must be combined with the form at § 20.10 and any others applicable to the particular situation.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, the argument should show that the dispute arose from a transaction involving interstate commerce and that the arbitration clause at issue is brought enough to encompass the type of claim involved.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, ofgrounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Memoranda

For an additional memorandum relating to arbitrability of federal securities claims, antitrust claims, and claims under the Age Discrimination in Employment Act (29 U.S.C. § 621 et seq.), see § 20.21.

For a memorandum addressing specific California statutes that have been held preempted by the Federal Arbitration Act, see § 20.22.

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[d] Opposing Memoranda

For authority asserting that the federal law of substantive arbitrability is not offended by refusal to compel arbitration on the ground of breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, see Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.185.

For authority asserting that the federal law of substantive arbitrability is not offended by refusal to compel arbitration on the ground of unconscionability, see Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.91.

For authority asserting that Health & Safety Code § 1363.1, governing disclosures of arbitration clauses in health care service plans, is not preempted by the Federal Arbitration Act, see Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.194.

For authority asserting that the Federal Arbitration Act does not preempt California's rule that an arbitration award cannot be reviewed for errors of law, see Ch. 20C, Arbitration: Confirming, Correcting, or Vacating the Award, § 20C.90.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Federal Substantive Law of Arbitrability

The facts and procedural background of Volt Information Sciences v. Board of Trustees (1989) 489 US 468, 109 S. Ct. 1248, 103 L Ed2d 488 , are discussed at Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.11[3][b]. In discussing the reach of the Federal Arbitration Act (FAA), the Supreme Court noted that the FAA contains no express preemptive provision, nor does it reflect a congressional intent to occupy the entire field of arbitration. However, state law may be preempted to the extent that it actually stands as an obstacle to the accomplishment and execution of the full purposes and objectives of Congress (489 U.S. 468, 476) . The goals and policies of the FAA are expressed in its substantive provisions, 9 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2, which establish a federal policy favoring arbitration and enforcement of agreements to arbitrate. 9 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2 are applicable in state courts (489 U.S. 468, 476-477, 477) .

Plaintiff in Perry v. Thomas (1987) 482 U.S. 483, 107 S. Ct. 2520, 96 L. Ed. 2d 426 , sued his former employer, an investment brokerage firm, and two of its employees for commissions on the sale of securities. Individual defendants sought to compel arbitration in superior court; the corporate defendant filed a similar petition in federal district court. The demands for arbitration were based on a provision in the Uniform Application for Securities Industry Registration form, in which plaintiff agreed to arbitrate any dispute with his employer in accordance with the by-laws of the organizations with which he registered. Those included the New York Stock Exchange, whose Rule 347 explicitly refers to disputes regarding employment. Plaintiff resisted arbitration on the basis of Lab. Code § 229, which authorized him to maintain an action for wages, defined to include commissions, despite the existence of an agreement to arbitrate. Plaintiff relied on Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc. v. Ware (1973) 414 U.S. 117, 94 S. Ct. 383, 38 L. Ed. 2d 348 , which sustained the validity of Lab. Code § 229 in the face of a challenge based on the Supremacy Clause of the U.S. Constitution. Both courts denied the motions to compel arbitration, believing they were bound by Ware, which referred to the Federal Arbitration Act in a footnote. The California Court of Appeal affirmed the superior court's decision; and the California Supreme Court denied appellants' petition for review. The United States Supreme Court accepted jurisdiction and reversed.

The United States Supreme Court noted that Section 2 of the FAA is a congressional declaration of a liberal policy favoring arbitration agreements, notwithstanding any state substantive or procedural policies to the contrary. The effect of Section 2 is to create a body of federal substantive law of arbitrability, applicable to any agreement within the coverage of the Act. This body of substantive law is enforceable in both state and federal courts (482 U.S. 483, 489) . The portion of the opinion addressing the preemption of Lab. Code § 229 is discussed at § 20.22[3][b].

[b] Section 2 of the Federal Arbitration Act Reaches to Full Extent of Congressional Power Under the Commerce Clause

Citizens Bank v. Alafabco, Inc. (2003) 539 U.S. 52, 123 S. Ct. 2037, 156 L. Ed. 2d 46 , began as an Alabama state court action involving a debt restructuring agreement between a bank and a fabrication and construction company. That agreement provided that all disputes, claims, or controversies would be arbitrated and that the Federal Arbitration Act (FAA) would apply to construction, interpretation, and enforcement of the arbitration provision. Defendant bank moved to compel arbitration. The circuit court ordered arbitration. The Supreme Court of Alabama reversed, finding that there was no showing that any part of the restructured debt was actually attributable to interstate transactions; that the funds comprising the debt originated out-of-state; orthat the restructured debt was inseparable from any out-of-state projects. Thus, there was insufficient nexus with interstate commerce to establish FAA coverage of the dispute. Defendant petitioned the United States Supreme Court for certiorari.

The United States Supreme Court granted the petition for certiorari, reversed, and remanded for further proceedings (123 S. Ct. 2037, 2041) . The term of art controlling the issue is a transaction or contract "evidencing a transaction involving commerce" [9 U.S.C. § 2]. That term and the term "affecting commerce" used in other contexts signal the broadest permissible exercise of Congress' Commerce Clause power. The FAA encompasses a wider range of transactions than those actually "in commerce", that is, within the flow of interstate commerce. Therefore, was not necessary to for any portion of the restructured debt to be attributable to interstate transactions, or that the loans originated out-of-state, or that the restructured debt was inseparable from any out-of-state projects. That evidence might be relevant if the FAA were restricted to transactions actually "in commerce" but it is not (123 S. Ct. 2037, 2040) . Nor is the FAA inapplicable because the individual debt-restructuring transactions, taken alone, did not have a "substantial effect on interstate commerce." The Commerce Clause power may be exercised in individual cases without showing any specific effect on interstate commerce if in the aggregate the economic activity in question--here commercial lending--represents a general practice subject to federal control. Additional indicia of the fact that this debt restructuring "involved (interstate) commerce" are the following (123 S. Ct. 2037, 2040-2041) :

- Plaintiff is engaged in business throughout the southeastern United States using substantial loans made to it by defendant bank that were renegotiated and redocumented in the debt-restructuring agreements. Alafabco used the proceeds of those loans in part to finance construction projects in North Carolina, Tennessee, and Alabama,

- The restructured debt was secured by all of Alafabco's business assets, including its inventory of goods assembled from out-of-state parts and raw materials.

- Commercial lending is a general practice that has broad impact on the national economy and is heavily regulated by Congress.

In Allied-Bruce Terminix Cos. v. Dobson (1995) 513 U.S. 265, 115 S. Ct. 834, 130 L. Ed. 2d 753 , plaintiff home buyers and cross claimant home sellers sued a franchisee and franchisor (defendants) for breach of a contract to protect a house from termites. The action was brought in Alabama state court. The contract included an arbitration clause, and the defendants asked for a stay to allow arbitration, pointing to Section 2 of the Federal Arbitration Act (9 U.S.C. § 2). The court denied the stay, and the Alabama Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the Act did not apply unless the parties contemplated substantial interstate activity and finding that the parties had contemplated a local transaction. The court therefore applied an Alabama statute making written predispute arbitration agreements invalid and unenforceable. The defendants obtained review in the United States Supreme Court.

The Court reversed. The court addressed the reach of 9 U.S.C. § 2, first focusing on the words "involving commerce," which were unique to this statute (513 U.S. 265, 273) . The Court held that this was broad language, equivalent to affecting commerce, which signals an intent to exercise Congress' commerce power to the full extent permitted by the Constitution (513 U.S. 265, 277) .

The facts and procedural background of Perry v. Thomas (1987) 482 U.S. 483, 107 S. Ct. 2520, 96 L. Ed. 2d 426 , are discussed at [a], above. In considering the reach of the FAA, the Court said that Congress' intent in enacting the FAA was to provide for enforcement of arbitration agreements within the full reach of the Commerce Clause (482 U.S. 483, 490) .

[c] Contemplation of Parties Not Relevant in Determining Whether Contract Is in Interstate Commerce

The facts and procedural background of Allied-Bruce Terminix Cos. v. Dobson (1995) 513 U.S. 265, 115 S. Ct. 834, 130 L. Ed. 2d 753 , are discussed under [b], above.

The United States Supreme Court noted that there were two ways of interpreting the phrase "evidencing a transaction" (involving commerce): the "commerce in fact" test and the "contemplation of the parties" test applied by the Alabama Supreme Court in this case. The Supreme Court rejected the latter test, and concluded that the commerce in fact test is more faithful to the statute than the contemplation of the parties test. Under the contemplation of the parties test, 9 U.S.C. § 2 applies only if the parties at the time of contracting contemplated substantial interstate activity. First, the Court said the contemplation of the parties test was too risky in terms of Congress' purpose in enacting the FAA: often the parties would not think about any possible interstate commerce connection when they made their agreement (513 U.S. 265, 278) . Second, the commerce in fact test is permitted by the language of 9 U.S.C. § 2 if "evidencing" is interpreted only as a connective word. That interpretation is consistent with earlier drafts of Section 2 which referred to "any contract or maritime transaction involving commerce." Members of Congress might have thought that "any contract" standing alone went beyond its constitutional authority (513 U.S. 265, 279) . Finally, the Court acknowledged amicus curiae contentions that the contemplation of the parties test was the only way to protect consumers asked to sign form business contracts. The Court agreed that Congress, in enacting the FAA, had the needs of consumers, as well as others, in mind, but was uncertain how the "objective" version of the contemplation test would help consumers. In any event, the Court said, Section 2 gives states a method for protecting consumers against unfair pressure to agree to a contract with an unwanted arbitration clause: they may regulate arbitration clauses under general contract law principles and invalidate an arbitration clause "upon such grounds as exist at law or in equity for the revocation of any contract." Thus, the Court held that Section 2 applies to contracts that in fact involve interstate commerce, regardless of the parties' contemplation (513 U.S. 265, 280-281) . Because the parties did not contest that the transaction at issue in fact involved interstate commerce (termite-treating and house-repairing material came from outside Alabama), the Court reversed denial of the stay to allow arbitration (513 U.S. 265, 282) .

[d] Arbitration Clauses Must Be on Equal Footing With Other Contract Clauses

The facts and procedural background of Allied-Bruce Terminix Cos. v. Dobson (1995) 513 U.S. 265, 115 S. Ct. 834, 130 L. Ed. 2d 753 , are discussed at [b], above.

Considering the impact of 9 U.S.C. § 2 on consumers, the United States Supreme Court noted that Section 2 gives states a method for protecting consumers against unfair pressure to agree to a contract with an unwanted arbitration provision in that states may apply general contract law principles to invalidate an arbitration clause on grounds applicable to the revocation of any contract. States may not, however, enforce the basic terms of a contract, such as price, service, and credit, while refusing to enforce its arbitration clause. The Act makes any such policy unlawful because it would place arbitration clauses on an unequal footing (513 U.S. 265, 281) .

Southland Corp. v. Keating (1984) 465 U.S. 1, 104 S. Ct. 852, 79 L. Ed. 2d 1 , is discussed at § 20.22[3][a]. In concluding that California's Corp. Code § 31512 was preempted by the Federal Arbitration Act, the Supreme Court noted that to allow a party to avoid the FAA by bringing a claim under the Franchise Investment Law in state court would encourage and reward forum-shopping and frustrate the intent of Congress to enact laws addressing matters "involving commerce." Such an intent would frustrate the stated purpose of the FAA to place "an arbitration agreement on the same footing as other contracts, where it belongs" (465 U.S. 1, 15-16) .

[e] Employment Contracts Are Excluded Only for Transportation Workers

Circuit City Stores, Inc. v. Adams (2001) 532 U.S. 105, 121 S. Ct. 1302, 149 L. Ed. 2d 234) arose out of plaintiff's dismissal from employment with defendant. Adams filed an employment discrimination lawsuit against Circuit City in state court, asserting claims under California's Fair Employment and Housing Act (Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.), and other claims based on general tort theories under California law. The application for employment plaintiff had signed provided: "I will settle any and all previously unasserted claims, disputes or controversies arising out of or relating to my application or candidacy for employment, employment and/or cessation of employment with Circuit City, exclusively by final and binding arbitration before a neutral Arbitrator. By way of example only, such claims include claims under federal, state, and local statutory or common law, such as the Age Discrimination in Employment Act, Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, as amended, including the amendments of the Civil Rights Act of 1991, the Americans with Disabilities Act, the law of contract and the law of tort." Circuit City filed suit in the United States District Court for the Northern District of California, seeking to enjoin the state-court action and to compel arbitration of Adam's claims pursuant to the Federal Arbitration Act (hereinafter "FAA," 9 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.). The order was granted. Adams appealed. The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals ruled in accordance with the minority position articulated in Craft v. Campbell Soup Co. (1999) 177 F.3d 1083 , that 9 U.S.C. §§ 1 and 2 exclude all employment contracts from the FAA. The U.S. Supreme Court granted certiorari to resolve the issue.

The U. S. Supreme Court ruled with the majority of federal circuit courts of appeal that only contracts of employment of transportation workers are excluded from the FAA's coverage (532 U.S. 105, 119) . All other employment contracts

"evidencing transactions involving commerce" (9 U.S.C. § 2) are governed by the FAA (532 U.S. 105, 119) . Thus, the matter was reversed and remanded for an order compelling arbitration (532 U.S. 105, 124) . The Court felt that Congress excluded seamen and railroad employees from the FAA to avoid unsettling established or developing statutory dispute resolution schemes covering those specific workers. The exclusion for other workers engaged in foreign or interstate transport serves to reserve for federal legislation employment contracts of others engaged in transportation. (532 U.S. 105, 121) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Federal Law of Substantive Arbitrability

See also Southland Corp. v. Keating (1984) 465 U.S. 1, 10-15, 104 S. Ct. 852, 79 L. Ed. 2d 1 , discussed at § 20.22[3][a].

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20 ARBITRATION: COMPELLING
PART II. FORMS
A. General Principles Related to Compelling Arbitration

2-20 California Points & Authorities § 20.21

§ 20.21 Federal Statutory Claims That Are Arbitrable Under the Federal Arbitration Act

[1] FORM

THE ARBITRATION AGREEMENT SIGNED BY RESPONDENT ENCOMPASSES CLAIMS UNDER _____ [specify, e.g., SHERMAN ACT] BECAUSE THE CONTRACT CONTAINING THE ARBITRATION AGREEMENT INVOLVES INTERSTATE COMMERCE AND THE FEDERAL SUBSTANTIVE LAW OF ARBITRABILITY PREVAILS.

A. Determining Arbitrability of Statutory Claims. The Federal Arbitration Act itself provides no basis for disfavoring agreements to arbitrate statutory claims by departing from the federal law of substantive arbitrability, which requires any doubts concerning the question of the scope of arbitrable issues to be resolved in favor of arbitration. Arbitration of a statutory claim in accordance with an agreement governed the Federal Arbitration Act is to be denied only when the text or legislative history of the statute on which the claim is based expresses a congressional intention to preclude waiver of judicial remedies for the statutory rights at issue (Gilmer v. Interstate/Johnson Lane (1991) 500 U.S. 20, 26, 35, 111 S. Ct. 1647, 114 L. Ed. 2d 26 ; Mitsubishi Motors v. Soler Chrysler-Plymouth (1985) 473 U.S. 614, 625-628, 105 S. Ct. 3346, 87 L. Ed. 2d 444).

[Optional] B. Arbitrability of Federal Securities Claims. Arbitration of federal securities claims, whether arising under the Securities Act of 1933 (15 U.S.C. §§ 77a-77aa) or the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. §§ 78a-78 ll), may be compelled under a predispute agreement that provides for arbitration in accordance with procedures that have been approved by the Securities and Exchange Commission (Rodriguez de Quijas v. Shearson/Am. Exp. (1989) 490 U.S. 477, 484-486, 109 S. Ct. 1917, 104 L. Ed. 2d 526 [Act of 1933]; Shearson/American Express, Inc. v. McMahon (1987) 482 U.S. 220, 233-238, 107 S. Ct. 2332, 96 L. Ed. 2d 185, 198-201 [Act of1934]; Elliot v. Albright (1989) 209 Cal. App. 3d 1028, 1036-1037, 257 Cal. Rptr. 762 [Act of 1933]).

[Optional] C. Arbitrability of Sherman Antitrust Claims. Antitrust claims arising under the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.) are arbitrable (Mitsubishi Motors v. Soler Chrysler-Plymouth (1985) 473 U.S. 614, 628-629, 640, 105 S. Ct. 3346, 87 L. Ed. 2d 444 ; Nghiem v. NEC Electronic, Inc. (9th Cir. 1994) 25 F.3d 1437, 1441-1442 .

[Optional] D. Arbitrability of Claims Under the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967. The Federal Arbitration Act and the policies it seeks to support do not bar arbitration of statutory claims in general, or claims arising under the Age Discrimination in Employment Act (29 U.S.C. § 621 et seq.) in particular (Gilmer v. Interstate/Johnson Lane (1991) 500 U.S. 20, 26-27, 35, 111 S. Ct. 1647, 114 L. Ed. 2d 26).

[Optional] E. Arbitrability of Claims Under the Fair Labor Standards Act. Claims for violations of the Fair Labor Standards Act (29 U.S.C. § 201 et seq.) are arbitrable under an arbitration agreement that provides for arbitration of any dispute between an employer and an employee in accordance with rules that specifically referred to disputes "arising out of the employment or termination of employment" (Kuehner v. Dickinson & Co. (9th Cir. 1996) 84 F.3d 316, 319-320) .

[Optional] F. Claims Under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act. Claims under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and 1991 (42 U.S.C. §§ 1981a, 2000e et seq.) are arbitrable (EEOC v. Luce, Forward, Hamilton & Scripps (9th Cir. 2003) 345 F.3d 742, 752-754 (rehearing en banc); see also Pub. L. No. 102-166, 105 Stat. 1071 § 118, published as Note to 42 U.S.C. § 1981).

[Optional] G. Arbitrability of Claims Under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO). Claims Under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO; 18 U.S.C. § 1961 et seq.) claims are arbitrable[, even under an agreement that prohibits an award of punitive, exemplary, or "extra-contractual damages," because RICO's treble-damages provision has been held by case law to be remedial. Thus, it is not clear that an arbitrator would construe the agreement's remedial limitations to deprive claimants of their statutory remedies] (PacifiCare Health Sys., Inc. v. Book (2003) 538 U.S. 401, 123 S. Ct. 1531, 1534-1536, 155 L. Ed. 2d 578 ; Shearson/American Express, Inc. v. McMahon (1987) 482 U.S. 220, 242, 107 S. Ct. 2332, 96 L. Ed. 2d 185 ; see 18 U.S.C. § 1964(c) (authorizing treble damages)).

[Optional] H. Burden of Proving That Cost of Arbitration Prevents Vindication of Statutory Rights. Under the Federal Arbitration Act, the fact that an agreement is silent as to who bears the costs of arbitration is not in itself enough to establish that the party seeking to invalidate the arbitration agreement will be burdened with costs so high as to prevent him or her from vindicating his or her statutory rights. The party resisting arbitration has the burden of showing the likelihood of incurring prohibitive costs (see Green Tree Financial Corp. v. Randolph (2000) 531 U.S. 79, 121 S. Ct. 513, 148 L. Ed. 2d 373, 382-383 (Court did not discuss what showing would be sufficient)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form is to be combined with the form at and submitted in support of a petition to compel arbitration of a claim under a federal statute. Paragraph A sets forth the general rule for determining whether a statutory claim is arbitrable. The optional paragraphs are for use to compel arbitration of a claim under any of those particular federal statutes or to establish that the party resisting arbitration must prove that the costs of arbitration would be prohibitive. Counsel may wish to incorporate authorities from the form at § 20.20[1], especially Paragraph B of that form, which sets forth the federal rule of substantive arbitrability.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, the argument should show that the dispute arose from a transaction involving interstate commerce and that the arbitration clause at issue is broad enough to encompass the type of claim involved.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Memoranda

For a memorandum relating generally to preemption by the Federal Arbitration Act (9 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.) and to the federal rule of substantive arbitrability, see § 20.20.

For a memorandum addressing specific California statutes that have been held preempted by the Federal Arbitration Act, see § 20.22.

For a form dealing in more specifics regarding arbitration of federal securities claims, see § 20.41.

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion andgeneral forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[d] Opposing Memoranda

For a memorandum relating to the requirement of a knowing waiver of a judicial forum before a plaintiff can be required to arbitrate a claim under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (§ 700 et seq.; 42 U.S.C. § 2000e et seq.), see Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.21.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Determining Arbitrability of Statutory Claims

The facts and procedural background of Gilmer v. Interstate/Johnson Lane (1991) 500 U.S. 20, 111 S. Ct. 1647, 114 L. Ed. 2d 26 , and the portion of the opinion addressing plaintiff/respondent's claims that arbitration is inconsistent with the framework and purposes of the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967 (29 U.S.C. § 621 et seq.) (ADEA) are discussed at [d], below. Although Gilmer conceded that nothing in the text or legislative history of the ADEA explicitly precluded arbitration (500 U.S. 20, 26) , the Supreme Court granted certiorari to resolve a conflict among the Courts of Appeal regarding ADEA claims (500 U.S. 20, 24) . Statutory claims may be arbitrated pursuant to an agreement enforceable under the Federal Arbitration Act (9 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.) (FAA) unless Congress evinced an intention to preclude a waiver of judicial remedies for the statutory rights at issue. Gilmer had the burden of showing that Congress intended to preclude waiver of a judicial forum for ADEA claims. If such an intention existed, it would be in the text of the ADEA, its legislative history, or an "inherent conflict" between arbitration and the ADEA's underlying purpose (500 U.S. 20, 26) .

The facts and procedural background of Mitsubishi Motors v. Soler Chrysler-Plymouth (1985) 473 U.S. 614, 105 S. Ct. 3346, 87 L. Ed. 2d 444 , are discussed at [c], below. An arbitration agreement may encompass claims arising out of statutes designed to protect a class to which the party resisting arbitration belongs. Nothing in the Federal Arbitration Act (9 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.) (FAA) implies a presumption against arbitration of statutory claims (473 U.S. 614, 625) . The federal law of substantive arbitrability applies with equal force to an arbitration agreement that raises a claim founded on statutory rights (473 U.S. 614, 626) . Courts should still consider whether an arbitration agreement resulted from the sort of fraud or overwhelming economic power that would provide grounds "for revocation of any contract." But absent such consideration, the FAA itself provides no basis for disfavoring agreements to arbitrate statutory claims by skewing the otherwise hospitable inquiry into arbitrability. It is the congressional intention expressed in the statute from which the claim arised on which the courts must rely to identify claims as to which agreements to arbitrate will be held unenforceable (473 U.S. 614, 627) . By agreeing to arbitrate a statutory claim, a party does not forego the substantive rights afforded by the statute but only submits to their resolution in an arbitral, rather than a judicial, forum. It trades the procedures and opportunity for review of the courtroom for the simplicity, informality, and expedition or arbitration. If Congress intended the substantive protection afforded by a given statute to include protection against waiver of the right to a judicial forum, that intention will be deducible from text or legislative history (473 U.S. 614, 628) . The portion of the opinion considering whether any such intent was manifest in the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.) is discussed at [c], below.

[b] Arbitrability of Federal Securities Claims

Plaintiffs in Rodriguez de Quijas v. Shearson/American Express, Inc. (1989) 490 U.S. 477, 109 S. Ct. 1917, 104 L. Ed. 2d 526 , sued to recover sums lost through defendant broker's alleged fraudulent and unauthorized transactions in their account. The complaint included state claims, claims under the Securities Act of 1933 (15 U.S.C. § 77 l(s)) and the Securities Exchange Act of 1934. The district court, relying on Wilko v. Swan (1953) 346 U.S. 427, 74 S. Ct. 182, 98 L. Ed. 168 , ordered arbitration of all claims except these under the Securities Act of 1933. The Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals reversed. The U.S. Supreme Court granted certiorari.

The U.S. Supreme Court noted that Scherk v. Alberto-Culver Co. (1974) 417 U.S. 506, 520, 94 S. Ct. 2449, 41 L. Ed. 2d 270 , allowed arbitration of securities claims in an international context, and said 15 U.S.C. § 77n, prohibiting waiver of compliance with any provision of the Securities Act of 1933, could be read to relate to substantive provisions, not the remedy provisions (490 U.S. 477, 479-480) . The Court noted that since Wilko, the distrust of arbitration has been replaced by a strong endorsement of the federal statutes favoring arbitration, and quoted Mitsubishi Motors v. Soler Chrysler-Plymouth (1985) 473 U.S. 614, 628, 105 S. Ct. 3346, 87 L. Ed. 2d 444 (discussed at [a], above and [c], below) (490 U.S. 477, 481) . The Court noted with favor its reasoning in Shearson/American Express, Inc. v. McMahon (1987) 482 U.S. 220, 231-234, 107 S. Ct. 2332, 96 L. Ed. 2d 185 (discussed below) with respect to claims under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (490 U.S. 477, 482-484) . It would be inappropriate to allow arbitration of claims under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 but not under the Securities Act of 1933, because the language of the Acts prohibiting waiver is the same [see 15 U.S.C. §§ 77v(a), 78aa] and because the Acts are interrelated components of the same federal regulatory scheme (490 U.S. 477, 484-485) . Resort to arbitration does not inherently undermine any of the substantive rights afforded to petitioners under the Securities Act (490 U.S. 477, 486) .

Plaintiff investors in Shearson/American Express, Inc. v. McMahon (1987) 482 U.S. 220, 107 S. Ct. 2332, 96 L. Ed. 2d 185 , sued their brokers for damages for violation of § 10(b) of the Securities Act of 1934 (the Act of 1934; 15 U.S.C. § 78j(b)), and Rule 10b-5 (17 C.F.R. § 240.10b-5) by engaging in fraudulent, excessive trading of plaintiffs' accounts and by making false statements and omitting material facts from advice given. The complaint also alleged a RICO claim, 18 U.S.C. 1962(c), and state law claims for breach of fiduciary duties and fraud (482 U.S. 220, 223) . Relying on an arbitration provision in the customer agreements that provided for arbitration to be conducted under the rules then in effect of the NASD, or the NYSE and/or the ASE, defendants moved to compel arbitration. The district court found that the agreements were not contracts of adhesion and ordered arbitration of the federal securities claims, but not the RICO claims. The Court of Appeals, relying on Wilko v. Swan (1953) 346 U.S. 427, 432-437, 74 S. Ct.

182, 98 L. Ed. 168 , reversed as to thesecurities claim, and affirmed as to the RICO claim (482 U.S. 220, 224) . The United States Supreme Court granted certiorari to resolve the conflict among the courts of appeal regarding Rule 10b-5 claims and RICO claims (482 U.S. 220, 225) .

The United States Supreme Court reversed. The Court first noted that the Act of 1934 did not address the arbitrability of § 10(b) claims and rejected plaintiffs' contention that enforcement of the arbitration provision would amount to a prohibited waiver of defendants' compliance obligations (482 U.S. 220, 227-228) . The Court then discussed Wilko and Scherk v. Alberto-Culver Co. (1974) 417 U.S. 506, 520, 94 S. Ct. 2449, 41 L. Ed. 2d 270 , saying that waiver of a judicial forum by an agreement to arbitrate would be unenforceable only when arbitration is inadequate to protect the substantive rights at issue (482 U.S. 220, 228-229) . The Securities and Exchange Commission's oversight authority has expanded greatly since 1953, when Wilko was decided. In the exercise of its current regulatory authority under § 19 of the Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. § 78s), the SEC has approved the arbitration procedures of the NYSE, the ASE, and the NASD. When, as in this case, the prescribed arbitration procedures are subject to the SEC's § 19 authority, the arbitration agreement does not effect a waiver of the protection of the Act of 1934, and is enforceable (482 U.S. 220, 233-238) .

Plaintiffs in Elliot v. Albright (1989) 209 Cal. App. 3d 1028, 257 Cal. Rptr. 762 , instituted suit against their securities brokers, alleging state and federal claims for excessive trading and mishandling of their accounts. All but the claim under the Securities Act of 1933 were ordered to be arbitrated. After the U.S. Supreme Court rendered its decision in Shearson/American Express, Inc. v. McMahon (1987) 482 U.S. 220, 231-234, 107 S. Ct. 2332, 96 L. Ed. 2d 185, 198-201 (discussed above), defendants moved to compel arbitration of those claims. The trial court denied the motion, and defendants appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. There was conflict in the lower federal courts regarding whether or not Shearson/American Express extended to require arbitrability of claims under the Securities Act of 1933 (209 Cal. App. 3d 1028, 1033-1034) ; and the U.S. Supreme Court had granted certiorari in Rodriguez de Quijas v. Shearson/Am. Exp. (1989) 490 U.S. 477, 109 S. Ct. 1917, 104 L. Ed. 2d 526 (discussed above) (209 Cal. App. 3d 1028, 1035) . Given the strong policy in favor of arbitrability, the fact that Wilko, was seriously undermined by Shearson/Amercian Express, and the fact that there was no rationale in the purpose, history, or language of either Act to justify holding 1933 Act claims nonarbitrable and 1934 Act claims arbitrable, the court held that claim under the 1933 Act had to be arbitrated (209 Cal. App. 3d 1028, 1035-1036) .

[c] Arbitrability of Sherman Antitrust Claims

Petitioner in Mitsubishi Motors Corp. v. Soler Chrysler-Plymouth, Inc. (1985) 473 U.S. 614, 105 S. Ct. 3346, 87 L. Ed. 2d 444 , was a Japanese corporation with its principal place of business in Tokyo. Respondent was a Puerto Rican corporation. They entered into a distributorship agreement and a sales procedure agreement which provided for arbitration of all disputes between the parties. Arbitration was to be held in Japan in accordance with the rules and regulations of the Japan Commercial Arbitration Association. Respondent was not selling as many vehicles as the agreement called for. Petitioner withheld shipments due to respondent under the agreement, filed an action in the district court in Puerto Rico, and petitioned for an order compelling arbitration before the Japanese Commercial Arbitration Association. The district court ordered arbitration of most of the claims involved, including the antitrust claims. The First Circuit Court of Appeals reversed the part of the order requiring arbitration of the antitrust claims. The United States Supreme Court granted certiorari.

The Supreme Court reversed the Court of Appeals with respect to the antitrust claims and held that they were arbitrable (473 U.S. 614, 640) . Neither the Sherman Act nor the Federal Arbitration Act made any explicit exception to arbitration of claims under the Sherman Act (473 U.S. 614, 628-629) . The Court of Appeals relied on American Safety Equipment Corp. v. J. P. Maguire & Co. (2nd Cir. 1968) 391 F.2d 821 , which the Supreme Court discussed, but concluded that concerns of international comity, respect for the capacities of foreign and transnational tribunals, and sensitivity to the need of the international commercial system for predictability in the resolution of disputes required enforcement of the arbitration agreement even though a contrary result would be forthcoming in a domestic situation (473 U.S. 614, 629-637) .

Plaintiff in Nghiem v. NEC Electronic, Inc. (9th Cir. 1994) 25 F.3d 1437 , was fired by defendant in June, 1990, and thereafter voluntarily submitted claims of wrongful termination, race discrimination, and antitrust violations to a problem resolution process outlined in defendant's company handbook. Step Four in that process was "final and binding arbitration." Plaintiff participated in the arbitration throughout the spring of 1991, but filed suit in state court on substantially the same issues in June, 1991. After the American Arbitration Association rendered a decision in favor of NEC on November 18, 1991, plaintiff requested a trial de novo and asserted that he was not bound by the arbitration. Meanwhile, NEC removed the state action to federal court and petitioned for confirmation of the arbitration award. The award was confirmed and plaintiff's case dismissed. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeals affirmed. Plaintiff contended that antitrust claims were not arbitrable, that the court was bound by American Safety Equipment Corp. v. J. P. Maguire & Co. (2nd Cir. 1968) 391 F.2d 821 , and Lake Communications, Inc. v. ICC Corp. (9th Cir. 1984) 738 F.2d 1473, 1479 , and that Mitsubishi Motors v. Soler Chrysler-Plymouth (1985) 473 U.S. 614, 105 S. Ct. 3346, 87 L. Ed. 2d 444 , was limited to international disputes. The court of appeals held that Mitsubishi was not restricted to the international context, in part because the Supreme Court had subsequently cited Mitsubishi for the general proposition that antitrust claims can be arbitrated [Gilmer v. Interstate/Johnson Lane (1991) 500 U.S. 20, 26-27, 111 S. Ct. 1647, 114 L. Ed. 2d 26] (25 F.3d 1437, 1441) . Also, Mitsubishi specifically refuted certain aspects of American Safety's analysis, including the theory that a private cause of action is fundamental to enforcing antitrust laws (25 F.3d 1437, 1442) . The court held that Mitsubishi had effectively overruled American Safety and its progeny, including Lake Communications. Thus, arbitrators are not precluded from deciding antitrust claims (25 F.3d 1437, 1442) .

[d] Arbitrability of Claims Under the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967

In Gilmer v. Interstate/Johnson Lane (1991) 500 U.S. 20, 111 S. Ct. 1647, 114 L. Ed. 2d 26 , respondent Gilmer's employment with defendant/petitioner was terminated when he was 62 years old. He filed an age discrimination charge with the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC) and then filed suit in federal district court. Defendant filed a petition to compel arbitration in accordance with the Uniform Application for Securities Industry Registration or Transfer, signed by Gilmer, which provided for arbitration of any dispute with his employer in accordance with the by-laws of the organizations with which he registered. Those included the New York Stock Exchange, whose Rule 347 explicitly refers to disputes regarding employment. The district court refused to compel arbitration, relying on Alexander v. Gardner-Denver Co. (1974) 415 U.S. 36, 94 S. Ct. 1011, 39 L. Ed. 2d 147 , which held that Congress intended to protect claimants under the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967 (29 U.S.C. § 621 et seq.) (ADEA) from waiver of a judicial forum. The Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit reversed. Because this created a conflict between districts, the United States Supreme Court granted certiorari, and affirmed the judgment of the Court of Appeals (500 U.S. 20, 23) .

Gilmer conceded that nothing in the text of the ADEA or its history explicitly precludes arbitration (500 U.S. 20, 26) ; however he advanced a host of other reasons why arbitration would be inconsistent with the framework and purposes of the ADEA. The Court was not persuaded by any of those arguments (500 U.S. 20, 28-33) , and distinguished Gardner-Denver, in which the issue was whether a discharged employee whose grievance had been arbitrated pursuant to a collective bargaining agreement could subsequently pursue a Title VII claim. In Gardner-Denver and progeny there was a distinction between the claims which the parties were contractually bound to arbitrate and the statutory claims which were no part of the arbitration agreements. None of those cases involved the Federal Arbitration Act (9 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.) (500 U.S. 20, 34-35) . The Court concluded that Gilmer had not shown that Congress, in enacting the ADEA, intended to preclude arbitration of claims under that Act (500 U.S. 20, 35) .

[e] Arbitrability of Claims Under the Fair Labor Standards Act

Plaintiff in Kuehner v. Dickinson & Co. (9th Cir. 1996) 84 F.3d 316 , sued defendant for violations of the Fair Labor Standards Act (29 U.S.C. § 201 et seq.) (FLSA) and for wrongful discharge. Plaintiff had signed the Uniform Application for Securities Industry Registration or Transfer (U-4), which provided for arbitration of any dispute that might arise "between me and my firm" that is required to be arbitrated under the rules, constitution, or by-laws of the [National Association of Securities Dealers (NASD)], as may be amended from time to time." The NASD rules were amended between the time plaintiff was fired (November 18, 1992) and the time she filed filed suit (November 17, 1993) to specifically include disputes "arising out of the employment or termination of employment of any associated person(s) with any member." That amendment was approved by the Securities and Exchange Commission. The district court granted defendant's motion to stay the action until after arbitration, finding that even the old NASD rules required arbitration. The district court certified its order for interlocutory appeal to the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeals affirmed. Plaintiff claimed that Congress had restricted enforcement of contracts to arbitrate FLSA claims by requiring a knowing waiver of the right to a judicial forum, but was unable to identify support for this contention in the text or legislative history of the FLSA. She relied on dicta in Barrentine v. Arkansas-Best Freight System (1981) 450 U.S. 728, 743, 101 S. Ct. 1437, 67 L. Ed. 2d 641 , which the court pointed out had been undermined by Gilmer v. Interstate/Johnson Lane (1991) 500 U.S. 20, 34 n.5, 35, 111 S. Ct. 1647, 114 L. Ed. 2d 26 , and was not decided under the Federal Arbitration Act (84 F.3d 316, 319-320) . The court of appeals concluded that plaintiff had not carried her burden of showing that when Congress enacted the FLSA it imposed a knowing waiver requirement similar to that which exists under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (§ 700 et seq.; 42 U.S.C. § 2000e et seq.), discussed in Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.21[3][a] (84 F.3d 316, 320) .

[f] Claims Under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act

EEOC v. Luce, Forward, Hamilton & Scripps (9th Cir. 2003) 345 F.3d 742 was the opinion on rehearing en banc of EEOC v. Luce, Forward, Hamilton & Scripps (9th Cir. 2003) 303 F.3d 994 . EEOC made a claim on behalf of David Lagatree, who as an application for employment with Luce, Forward, and refused to sign an agreement to arbitrate claims arising from his employment, including claims under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and 1991 (42 U.S.C. §§ 1981a, 2000e et seq.). Lagatree worked for Luce, Forward for two days while his refusal to sign the agreement was being discussed. Then he was fired. Lagatree sued in state court for wrongful termination and lost [Lagatree v. Luce, Forward, Hamilton & Scripps (1999) 74 Cal. App. 4th 1105, 88 Cal. Rptr. 2d 664 review denied 2000 Cal. LEXIS 262 (2000)] . Pursuant to his claim with them, the EEOC sued Luce, Forward for retaliation in violation of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. § 2000e-3), the Americans with Disabilities Act of 1990 ("ADA", 42 U.S.C. § 12203(b)), the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967 ("ADEA", 29 U.S.C. § 623(d)), and the Equal Pay Act of 1963 ("EPA", 29 U.S.C. § 215(a)(3)). EEOC sought make-whole relief for Lagatree and a permanent injunction forbidding Luce, Forward from requiring that employees sign arbitration agreements as a condition of employment. EEOC also sought injunctive relief requiring Luce Forward to hire Lagatree based on the theory that its refusal to do so constituted illegal retaliation. The district court refused to award make-whole relief and rejected EEOC's request for an injunction based on the ADA, the ADEA, or the EPA. However, believing itself bound by Duffield v. Robertson Stephens & Co. (9th Cir. 1998) 144 F.3d 1182 , cert. denied 525 U.S. 982, 119 S. Ct. 445, 142 L. Ed.2d 399 , the district court issued the injunction prohibiting Luce, Forward from requiring employees and applicants to arbitrate title VII claims. The district court did not expressly rule on the EEOC's retaliation theory, apparently considering it to be a subset of the question of monetary relief. Luce, Forward appealed.

The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals, on rehearing en banc, overruled Duffield reversed the district court's grant of injunctive relief, and remanded for the district court to address the retaliation theory (345 F.3d 742, 754) . The court of appeals noted that Alexander v. Gardner-Denver Co . (1974) 415 U.S. 36, 94 S. Ct. 1011, 39 L. Ed. 2d 147 , which held that a unionized employee's earlier exercise of the compulsory arbitration provision in a collective bargaining agreement did not preclude him from later pursuing a Title VII discrimination claim in a judicial forum, was specifically limited to the collective bargaining context [Gilmer v. Interstate/Johnson Lane (1991) 500 U.S. 20, 35, 111 S. Ct. 1647, 114 L. Ed. 2d 26] . Thus, in the post-Gilmer world, Duffield stood alone. The court began its reconsideration of Duffield by noting that its analysis in that case considered the Civl Rights Act of 1991's text, legislative history, and general purpose to discern whether Congress had evinced an intent to preclude waiver of judicial remedies for the statutory right at issue. That was a mistake. § 118 of the 1991 Act, passed into law six months after Gilmer, provides that "Where appropriate and to the extent authorized by law, the use of alternative means of dispute resolution, including ... arbitration, is encouraged to resolve disputes arising under the Acts or provisions of Federal law amended by this title." [Pub. L. No. 102-166, § 118, 105 Stat. 1071 (codified at Notes to 42 U.S.C. § 1981)]. Nothing in that text, the court concluded, presents any ambiguity suggesting that it may be intended to preclude compulsory arbitration (345 F.3d 742, 752) . Because the text of § 118 is unambiguous, the court was precluded from considering legislative history. In holding that an employer may require arbitration of Title VII claims, the court noted that the substantive rights found in the statute are not in any way diminished by holding that arbitration may be compelled, because only the forum--an arbitral rather than a judicial one--is affected, and plaintiff's rights may be as fully vindicated in the former as in the latter. As a result, and primarily because we find the language (345 F.3d 742, 753) .

[g] Arbitrability of Claims Under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO)

PacifiCare Health Sys., Inc. v. Book (2003) 538 U.S. 401, 123 S. Ct. 1531, 155 L. Ed.2d 578 , was an action by a group of physicians against managed-health-care organizations alleging that the defendants unlawfully failed to reimburse them for health-care services that they had provided to patients covered by defendants' health plans. They brought causes of action under various state and federal statutes, including the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO; 18 U.S.C. § 1961 et seq.), as well as claims for breach of contract, unjust enrichment, and in quantum meruit. Two defendants moved to compel arbitration. Plaintiffs opposed the motion on the ground that, because the arbitration provisions prohibit an award of punitive damages, they could not obtain meaningful relief in arbitration for their claims under the RICO statute, which authorizes treble damages [see 18 U.S.C. § 1964(c)]. The district court denied the motion to compel arbitration with respect to the RICO claims. Defendants appealed, contending that the issue of whether the remedial limitations rendered their arbitration agreements unenforceable was not a question of "arbitrability," and hence should have been decided by an arbitrator, rather than a court, in the first instance, and that even if this question was one of arbitrability, the remedial limitations did not require invalidation of their arbitration agreements. The Eleventh Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed. The United states Supreme Court granted certiorari.

The United States Supreme Court reversed, finding that it would be premature to address the questions posed at this interlocutory stage, i.e., before it was established what law the arbitrators would apply or that plaintiffs would receive diminished protection as a result (123 S. Ct. 1531, 1534) . Two of the four arbitration agreements at issue provided that "punitive damages shall not be awarded [in arbitration]." One provided that "the arbitrators ... have no authority to award any punitive or exemplary damages," and one provided that "the arbitrators ... have no authority to award extra contractual damages of any kind, including punitive or exemplary damages ..." The Court found that neither its precedents nor the ambiguous terms of the contracts made it clear that the arbitrator would be prohibited from awarding statutory treble damages, noting that cases have placed different statutory treble-damages provisions on different points along the spectrum between purely compensatory and strictly punitive awards. The Court cited Agency Holding Corp. v. Malley-Duff & Associates, Inc. (1987) 483 U.S. 143, 151, 107 S. Ct. 2759, 97 L. Ed. 2d 121 , for the proposition that RICO is designed to remedy economic injury by providing for the recovery of treble damages, costs, and attorney's fees and Shearson/American Express Inc. v. McMahon (1987) 482 U.S. 220, 241, 107 S. Ct. 2332, 96 L. Ed. 2d 185 , for the fact that RICO's treble-damages provision serves a "remedial function." Given the case law's treatment of statutory treble damages and the uncertainty surrounding the parties' intent with respect to the contractual term "punitive," the application of the disputed language to plaintiffs' RICO claims was in doubt (123 S. Ct. 1531, 1535) . Without knowing how the arbitrator would construe the remedial limitations, the questions whether they rendered the parties' agreements unenforceable and whether it was for courts or arbitrators to decide enforceability in the first instance were unusually abstract. Thus, the proper course was to compel arbitration (123 S. Ct. 1531, 1536) .

The facts and procedural background of Shearson/American Express, Inc. v. McMahon (1987) 482 U.S. 220, 107 S. Ct. 2332, 96 L. Ed. 2d 185 , and the portion of the opinion dealing with the arbitrability of federal securities claims is discussed at [b], above. In considering the arbitrability of RICO claims, the Court said that the special incentives necessary to encourage civil enforcement actions against organized crime do not support nonarbitrability of run-of-the-mill civil RICO claims brought against legitimate enterprises. The private attorney general role for the some RICO plaintiffs does not support a finding that there is an irreconcilable conflict between arbitration and enforcement of the RICO statute. The Court found no basis for concluding that Congress intended to prevent enforcement of agreements to arbitrate RICO claims. Plaintiffs may effectively vindicate their RICO claims in an arbitral forum. There is no inherent conflict between arbitration and the purposes underlying 18 U.S.C. § 1964(c). Moreover, nothing in RICO's text or legislative history otherwise demonstrates congressional intent to make an exception to the Federal Arbitration Act for RICO claims (482 U.S. 220, 242) .

[h] Burden of Proving That Cost of Arbitration Prevents Vindication of Statutory Rights

Green Tree Financial Corp. v. Randolph (2000) 531 U.S. 79, 121 S. Ct. 513, 148 L. Ed. 2d 373 involved claims under the federal Truth in Lending Act (15 U.S.C. § 1601 et seq., hereinafter "TILA"). The parties' agreement required arbitration but was silent as to who would bear the costs of arbitration. The trial court granted petitioner's motion to compel arbitration despite respondent's assertion that she lacked the resources to arbitrate and as a result, would have to forgo her claims against petitioners. The Eleventh Circuit Court of Appeal, however, agreed with respondent and determined that the arbitration agreement failed to provide minimum guarantees that respondent could vindicate her statutory rights under the TILA. The U.S. Supreme Court granted certiorari.

The U.S. Supreme Court reversed, finding that arbitration could proceed because the record was insufficient to show that the costs of arbitration would be so great as to prevent respondent from vindicating her statutory rights (148 L. Ed. 2d 373, 382-383) . Neither party contended that the TILA evinced a legislative intent to require a judicial forum for resolution of claims under it, so the Court made no ruling on that issue (148 L. Ed. 2d 373, 382) . The Court stated that a party who seeks to invalidate an arbitration agreement on the ground that arbitration would be prohibitively expensive bears the burden of showing the likelihood of incurring prohibitive costs. Respondent did not meet that burden. The Court said that it did not need to discuss how detailed the showing of prohibitive expense must be before the party seeking arbitration must come forward with contrary evidence, because in this case neither during discovery nor when the case was presented on the merits was there any timely showing at all on the point. (148 L. Ed. 2d 373, 382-383) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Determining Arbitrability of Statutory Claims

The facts and procedural background of Kuehner v. Dickinson & Co. (9th Cir. 1996) 84 F.3d 316 , and the portion of the opinion holding that Congress did not intend to preclude arbitration of claims under the Fair Labor Standards Act (29 U.S.C. § 201 et seq.) are discussed at [3][e], above. The Federal Arbitration Act (9 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.) (FAA) created a rule of contract construction favoring arbitration. Despite the FAA, contracts to arbitrate statutory claims are unenforceable if Congress intended to preclude waiver of the plaintiff's right to a judicial forum, although such congressional intent is seldom found. Plaintiff has the burden of proving that Congress restricted enforcement of contracts to arbitrate specific statutory claims by statements to that effect in the text or legislative history of the particular statute (84 F.3d 316, 319) .

See also Spellman v. Securities Annuities and Ins. Services, Inc. (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 452, 460-461, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 427 , discussed at § 20.22[3][d].

[b] Arbitrability of Federal Securities Claims

Leicht v. Bateman Eichler, Hill Richards, Inc. (9th Cir. 1988) 848 F.2d 130 , involved 10(b)-5 (15 U.S.C. § 78j(b)) claims under the Securities Act of 1934. Originally, plaintiffs, father and daughter, each signed an agreement to arbitrate claims against the broker. In November 1983, the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) declared that broker agreements that required customers to arbitrate were fraudulent, manipulative, and deceptive practices in and of themselves. In response to that ruling, defendant drafted and used a new form of customer agreement, which plaintiff father singed, but plaintiff daughter did not. That agreement provided that any controversy between the parties arising out of the agreement would be settled by arbitration, except that the customer was not required to arbitrate any dispute or controversy arising under federal securities laws. Plaintiffs filed a complaint alleging violations of 10(b) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78j(b)), and various related state law claims. The broker sought to stay the court proceedings and to compel arbitration. The district court granted the stay of proceedings and motion to compel arbitration on the state law claims, but not on the federal claims. After the Supreme Court's decision in Shearson/American Express, Inc. v. McMahon (1987) 482 U.S. 220, 233-238, 107 S. Ct. 2332, 96 L. Ed. 2d 185 (discussed at [3][b], above), the district court reconsidered its earlier order and vacated the part of its previous order that stayed the plaintiffs' federal securities claim. In addition, it dismissed the plaintiffs' action and compelled arbitration of the federal securities claim (848 F.2d 130, 131) . Plaintiffs appealed.

The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals reversed regarding the father and affirmed regarding the daughter (848 F.2d 130, 132) . The agreement the daughter signed contained no language suggesting a right to litigate federal securities claims (848 F.2d 130, 132, 134) . Defendant argued that the clause in the agreements signed by the father was never intended to take effect but was merely intended as a disclaimer of any liability under the SEC rule. The court found that argument unpersuasive (848 F.2d 130, 133-134) .

Badart v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith (9th Cir. 1987) 823 F. 2d 333 , was another case remanded by the Supreme Court to the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals for reconsideration in light of Shearson/American Express, Inc. v. McMahon (1987) 482 U.S. 220, 233-238, 107 S. Ct. 2332, 96 L. Ed. 2d 185 (discussed at [3][b], above). The case involved investors' claims under §§ 10b-5, 15, and 20(a) of the Securities Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. §§ 78j(b), 78o, 78t(a)). In the original decision, the district court and the court of appeals had refused to compel arbitration. On reconsideration, the court of appeals held that claims under §§ 15 and 20 of the Securities Act of 1934 were no different from claims under § 10(b) of the act, and thus reversed and remanded to compel arbitration of all claims (823 F. 2d 333).

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20 ARBITRATION: COMPELLING
PART II. FORMS
A. General Principles Related to Compelling Arbitration

2-20 California Points & Authorities § 20.22

§ 20.22 California Statutory Claims That Are Arbitrable Under the Federal Arbitration Act

[1] FORM

THE ARBITRATION AGREEMENT SIGNED BY RESPONDENT ENCOMPASSES CLAIMS UNDER _____ [specify, e.g., THE FRANCHISE INVESTMENT LAW] BECAUSE THE CONTRACT CONTAINING THE ARBITRATION AGREEMENT INVOLVES INTERSTATE COMMERCE AND THE FEDERAL SUBSTANTIVE LAW OF ARBITRABILITY PREVAILS.

[Optional] A. Federal Law Preempts Section 31512 of the Corporations Code (Franchise Investment Law). The Federal Arbitration Act (9 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.) preempts Corporations Code Section 31512 to the extent that an arbitration provision in a franchise agreement evidencing interstate commerce is enforceable and cannot be considered a prohibited waiver of the right to trial (Southland Corp. v. Keating (1984) 465 U.S. 1, 10-16, 104 S. Ct. 852, 79 L. Ed. 2d 1).

[Optional] B. Federal Law Preempts *Section 229 of the Labor Code. The Federal Arbitration Act (9 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.) preempts Labor Code Section 229, so that arbitration of a wage dispute may be compelled under a contract involving interstate commerce (Perry v. Thomas (1987) 482 U.S. 483, 491-492, 107 S. Ct. 2520, 96 L. Ed. 2d 426 ; Giuliano v. Inland Empire Personnel, Inc. (2007) 149 Cal. App. 4th 1276, 1284-1288, 58 Cal. Rptr. 3d 5).

[Optional] C. Arbitrability of Cartwright Antitrust Claims. Antitrust claims arising under the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code § 16700 et seq.) are arbitrable (Crown Homes, Inc. v. Landes (1994) 22 Cal. App. 4th 1273, 1276, 27 Cal. Rptr. 2d 827 ; see also Wolitarsky v. Blue Cross of California (1997) 53 Cal. App. 4th 338, 61 Cal. Rptr. 2d 629).

[Optional] D. Arbitrability of Claims Under the Fair Employment and Housing Act (Government Code Section 12900 et seq.). State statutory discrimination claims, including a claim for [wrongful termination due to] racial discrimination in violation of California's Fair Housing and Employment Act (Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.) may be compelled to be arbitrated in accordance with a contract involving interstate commerce (Spellman v. Securities Annuities & Ins. Services, Inc. (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 452, 460-465, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 427 ; see also Armendariz v.

Foundation Health Psychcare Services, Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 90-103, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669 (establishing minimum standards for vindication of FEHA rights in arbitration)).

[Optional] E. Arbitrability of Claims Under the Unruh Civil Rights Act (Civil Code Section 51 et seq.). Nothing in the Unruh Civil Rights Act (Civ. Code § 51 et seq.) prevents submission of claims under the Act to arbitration. Thus, if the terms of an arbitration agreement are broad enough to encompass claims under the Unruh Civil Rights Act, those claims may be compelled to be arbitrated (Wolitarsky v. Blue Cross of California (1997) 53 Cal. App. 4th 338, 345-349, 61 Cal. Rptr. 2d 629).

[Optional] F. Arbitrability of Damage Claims Under the Consumer Legal Remedies Act (Civil Code Section 1750 et seq.). Claims for damages under the Consumer Legal Remedies Act (CLRA; Civ. Code § 1750 et seq.) are arbitrable, at least to extent they are governed by Federal Arbitration Act; [however, CLRA claims for injunctive relief in which the plaintiff is acting as private attorney general, such as a claim seeking to enjoin deceptive business practices, are not arbitrable] (Broughton v. Cigna Healthplans of California (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 1066, 1072, 1079-1080, 1084, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 334, 988 P.2d 67). [Arbitrable damage claims include so-called equitable claims for restitution and/or disgorgement, as well as common law claims for unjust enrichment, whether sought in an individual action or a class action (Cruz v. PacifiCare Health Sys. (2003) 30 Cal. 4th 303, 320, 133 Cal. Rptr. 2d 58, 66 P.3d 1157)].

[Optional] G. Arbitrability of Damage Claims Under the Unfair Competition Law (Business and Professions Code Section 17200 et seq.). Damage claims under the Unfair Competition Law (Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq.), specifically so-called equitable claims for restitution and/or disgorgement, as well as common law claims for unjust enrichment, are arbitrable, whether sought in an in individual action or in a class action (Cruz v. PacifiCare Health Sys. (2003) 30 Cal. 4th 303, 320, 133 Cal. Rptr. 2d 58, 66 P.3d 1157).

[Optional] H. Arbitrability of Damage Claims Under the False Advertising Law (Business and Professions Code Section 17500 et seq.). Damage claims under the False Advertising Law (Bus. & Prof. Code § 17500 et seq.), including so-called equitable claims for restitution and/or disgorgement, as well as common law claims for unjust enrichment, are arbitrable, whether sought in an in individual action or in a class action (Cruz v. PacifiCare Health Sys. (2003) 30 Cal. 4th 303, 320, 133 Cal. Rptr. 2d 58, 66 P.3d 1157).

[Optional] I. Code of Civil Procedure Section 1298.7 Preempted by Federal Arbitration Act. Section 1298.7 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which would otherwise allow a purchaser to pursue a court action against a developer for construction and design defects despite having signed an arbitration agreement is preempted by the Federal Arbitration Act if the transaction involved interstate commerce. A purchaser in that situation can be compelled to arbitrate the construction or design defect claim (Shepard v. Edward Mackay Enterprises, Inc. (2007) 148 Cal. App. 4th 1092, 1095, 1100-1102, 56 Cal. Rptr. 3d 326 ; Basura v. U.S. Home Corp. (2002) 98 Cal. App. 4th 1205, 1212, 1214, 120 Cal. Rptr. 2d 328).

[Optional] J. Federal Law Preempts *Section 1298 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Section 1298 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which imposes format and initialing requirements on arbitration agreements relating to the purchase and sale of real estate that are not imposed on other agreements, is preempted by the Federal Arbitration Act if the transaction involves interstate commerce (Hedges v. Carrigan (2004) 117 Cal. App. 4th 578, 585-587, 11 Cal. Rptr. 3d 787).

[Optional] K. False Claims Act (Government Code Section 12650 et seq.) Claims Are Arbitrable. Despite the fact that Sections 12651 and 12652 of the Government Code refer to "a civil action" to recover penalties and damages and to assessments and findings by "the court," claims under the False Claims Act are arbitrable. Further, the arbitrator may award statutory penalties as a form of compensation if those penalties bear a rational relationship to the contract and the breach (County of Solano v. Lionsgate Corporation (2005) 126 Cal. App. 4th 741, 745, 747-749, 24 Cal. Rptr. 3d 362). Although False Claims Act penalties do serve a public purpose by deterring false claims by public works contractors, that public purpose may be merely incidental to the primary benefit of compensating the public entity for the expenses associated with the false claims. Thus, when the public entity's claims implicate no broad public remedy, there is no institutional advantage in a judicial forum that might preclude arbitration of False Claims Act charges (County of Solano v. Lionsgate Corporation (2005) 126 Cal. App. 4th 741, 749, 24 Cal. Rptr. 3d 362).

[Optional] L. Administrative Proceedings Pursuant to Labor Code Section1799.44(a) Are Preempted. State laws lodging primary jurisdiction in another forum, whether judicial or administrative, are superseded by the Federal Arbitration Act. Thus, Labor Code Section 1700.44(a), which purports to vest exclusive jurisdiction in the Labor Commissioner to determine application of the Talent Agency Act (TAA; Labor Code Section 1700 et seq.), is preempted by the Federal Arbitration Act; and an arbitrator should decide the legality of any contract arguably regulated by and voidable under the TAA (Preston v. Ferrer (2008)552U.S.346, 128 S. Ct. 978, 169 L. Ed. 2d 917, 923, 927-929) .

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

Any paragraph in this form that is relevant to petitioner's particular case may be submitted in support of a petition to compel arbitration of a claim under one of the California statutes addressed in the form. This form is not intended to be a complete memorandum, but is be combined with the form at § 20.10 and any others applicable to the particular situation [see, e.g., §§ 20.20, 20.21].

Note that the defendant in Wolitarsky v. Blue Cross of California (1997) 53 Cal. App. 4th 338, 61 Cal. Rptr. 2d 629 , cited in Paragraph E, did not rely on the Federal Arbitration Act.

Although Erickson v. Aetna Health Plans of Cal. (1999) 71 Cal. App. 4th 646, 652, 84 Cal. Rptr. 2d 76 (4th Dist., Div. 2) , found Health & Safety Code § 1363.1, which requires various disclosures regarding arbitration by health care service plans, to be preempted by the Federal Arbitration Act with respect to contracts involving interstate commerce, Smith v. PacifiCare Behavioral Health Plan of California, Inc. (2001) 93 Cal. App. 4th 139, 144, 162, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 140 (2nd Dist., Div. 3) (rev. den. S102718), has held otherwise. The Smith position is the basis of Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.96.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, argument should show that the dispute arose from a transaction involving interstate commerce and that the arbitration clause at issue is broad enough to encompass the type of claim involved.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement)].

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Memoranda

For memoranda relating generally to preemption by the Federal Arbitration Act (9 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.) and to the federal rule of substantive arbitrability, see § 20.20.

For authorities addressing specific federal statutes that have been held preempted by the Federal Arbitration Act, see § 20.21.

If counsel uses Optional Paragraph D., relating to the Fair Housing and Employment Act (Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.), counsel may wish to incorporate authorities from § 20.23, regarding the minimum standards necessary in arbitration to vindicate statutory rights under the FEHA.

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[d] Opposing Memoranda

For authority that may be used to oppose the authority in this form on the ground that the transaction or activity at issue does not involve interstate commerce, see Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.95[1], Paragraph B.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Federal Law Preempts Section 31512 of the Corporations Code (Franchise Investment Law)

Southland Corp. v. Keating (1984) 465 U.S. 1, 104 S. Ct. 852, 79 L. Ed. 2d 1 , involved consolidated actions by franchisees against their franchisor for fraud, misrepresentation, breach of contract, breach of fiduciary duty, and violation of the disclosure requirements of the California Franchise Investment Law (Corp. Code § 31000 et seq.). Defendant/franchisor sought to have the controversy arbitrated in accordance with provisions of the franchise agreement. The superior court granted the motion to compel arbitration with respect to all claims except those based on the Franchise Investment Law. The court took Corp. Code § 31512 to prohibit waiver of judicial consideration of claims under the Franchise Investment Law. The court of appeal reversed the superior court's refusal to compel arbitration of the claims based on the Franchise Investment Law. The California Supreme Court reversed the reversal, holding that Corp. Code § 31512 did indeed prohibit waiver of a provision of the Franchise Investment Law, including the right conferred therein to judicial resolution of claims under the Act and that Corp. Code § 31512 was not contrary to the FAA (9 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.) (FAA).

The United States Supreme Court invalidated Corp. Code § 31512 to the extent itbarred enforcement of the arbitration of claims under the Franchise Investment Law (465 U.S. 1, 16). In enacting Section 2 of the Federal Arbitration Act (9 U.S.C. § 2) Congress declared a federal policy favoring arbitration and withdrew the power of the states to require a judicial forum for the resolution of claims which the contracting parties had agreed to resolve by arbitration (465 U.S. 1, 10) . There are only two limitations to this mandate to enforce arbitration clauses (465 U.S. 1, 11) :

- They must be part of a maritime contract or a contract involving commerce, and
- Arbitration clauses may be revoked on grounds that exist for the revocation of any contract.

The Court saw nothing in the Act indicating that the broad principle of enforceability is subject to any additional limitations under state law (465 U.S. 1, 11) .

The FAA rests on Congressional authority to enact substantive rules under the Commerce Clause. The power to regulate is the power to prescribe rules by which commerce is to be governed (465 U.S. 1, 11) . To the Justices who thought that Congress intended the FAA to be a procedural statute, only governing actions in federal court, the majority said it was less likely that Congress intended to address the problem in terms limited only to federal courts than to the enact a body of substantive law that would bind both state and federal courts (465 U.S. 1, 13-15) . To allow a party to avoid the FAA by bringing a claim under the Franchise Investment Law in state court would encourage and reward forum-shopping and frustrate the intent of Congress to enact laws addressing matters "involving commerce." Such an intent would frustrate the stated purpose of the FAA to place an arbitration agreement on the same footing as other contracts, where it belongs (465 U.S. 1, 15-16) .

[b] Federal Law Preempts Section 229 of the Labor Code

The facts and procedural background of Perry v. Thomas (1987) 482 U.S. 483, 107 S. Ct. 2520, 96 L. Ed. 2d 426 , are discussed at § 20.20[3][a]. In explaining why it did not feel itself bound by Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc. v. Ware (1973) 414 U.S. 117, 94 S. Ct. 383, 38 L. Ed. 2d 348 , the Court said that the challenge in Ware had been based on the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, and that in examining the language and policies of that Act, the Ware court found no Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) rule or regulation that specified arbitration as a favored means of resolving employer-employee disputes or that revealed a necessity for nationwide uniformity of an exchange's housekeeping affairs. In addition, the fact that Rule 347 was outside the scope of the SEC's authority of review militated against finding a clear federal intent to require arbitration. In contrast, this challenge was based on the Federal Arbitration Act (9 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.) (FAA), which embodies Congress' intent to provide for enforcement of arbitration agreements within the full reach of the Commerce Clause (482 U.S. 483, 490) . This clear federal policy places Section 2 of the FAA (9 U.S.C. § 2) in unmistakable conflict with Lab. Code § 229. The oblique reference to the FAA in footnote 15 of Ware cannot be considered a definitive holding to the contrary (482 U.S. 483, 491) . Thus, Section 2 of the FAA (9 U.S.C. § 2) preempts Lab. Code § 229 (482 U.S. 483, 492) .

Giuliano v. Inland Empire Personnel, Inc. (2007) 149 Cal. App. 4th 1276, 58 Cal. Rptr. 3d 5 , involved claims for breach of employment contract, specifically a $5 million to $8 million profit-sharing bonus and a $500,000 severance payment. Employer sought to compel arbitration. The trial court denied arbitration on the grounds that: (1) the arbitration clause was vague and unintelligible as to which parties were bound by the agreement; (2) the Federal Arbitration Act did not preempt plaintiff's statutory wage claim because his employment contract did not involve interstate commerce; and (3) the arbitration clause was unconscionable and invalid under Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Services (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83 , 99 Cal. Rpt. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669 (Armendariz). The trial court denied defendant's motion for reconsideration, and defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed (149 Cal. App. 4th 1276, 1280, 1293) , finding first that the Lab. Code § 229 prohibition on arbitration of wage claims was preempted by the Federal Arbitration Act (9 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.) because defendant's business and plaintiff's duties for defendant involved interstate commerce (149 Cal. App. 4th 1276, 1284-1288) . Nor did the court find that it needed to apply the Armendariz criteria because this case did not involve unwaivable statutory claims for federally mandated overtime and minimum wage payments but a breach of contract claim for a multimillion-dollar bonus and severance payment (149 Cal. App. 4th 1276, 1289-1291) . The court found no merit in plaintiff's contention that the agreement was vague and unintelligible with respect to whether related entities were bound by the arbitration agreement. The employment agreement referred to "our Company's affiliated Empire entities" (149 Cal. App. 4th 1276, 1291) . Further, the agreement was not unconscionable because it did not provide for discovery, did not require a written award, and did not require defendant to pay arbitration related costs. Those are all requirements imposed by Armindariz, and as Armindariz did not apply, their lack was not procedurally unconscionable (149 Cal App. 4th 1276, 1292) .

[c] Arbitrability of Cartwright Antitrust Claims

In Crown Homes, Inc. v. Landes (1994) 22 Cal. App. 4th 1273, 27 Cal. Rptr. 2d 827 , mobile home park residents and corporate mobile home dealerships sued mobile home park owners and another mobile home dealer, alleging that the defendants violated state antitrust laws under the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code § 16700 et seq.). The trial court granted defendants' motion to compel and the arbitration was held. The defendants moved to confirm the award and plaintiffs moved to vacate it on the ground that the arbitrator exceeded his powers under California law and the arbitration agreement. The trial court granted the defendants' motion and denied the plaintiffs' motion. After the trial court entered judgment for the defendants, the plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The plaintiffs argued that the arbitration agreement in the park leases violated California law because it allowed the parties to agree to arbitrate an antitrust cause of action contrary to the decision of Bos Material Handling, Inc. v. Crown Controls Corp. (1982) 137 Cal. App. 3d 99, 109-111, 186 Cal. Rptr. 740 . Bos Material Handling had stated that it followed the mainstream of judicial thought and concluded that parties cannot agree privately to exclude antitrust issues under theCartwright Act from judicial scrutiny and determination. The Crown Homes court pointed out that the prevailing judicial thought to which Bos Material Handling referred was American Safety Equipment Corp. v. J.P. Maguire & Co. (2nd Cir. 1968) 391 F.2d 821 . The Crown Homes court reviewed subsequent developments and determined that American Safety and Bos Material Handling are no longer viable authority in light of later case law, beginning with the United States Supreme Court's rejection of American Safety's analysis in Mitsubishi Motors v. Soler Chrysler-Plymouth (1985) 473 U.S. 614, 628-629, 105 S. Ct. 3346, 87 L. Ed. 2d 444 , discussed at § 20.21[3][c] (22 Cal. App. 4th 1273, 1276-1277, 1283) .

The court noted that although Mitsubishi did not directly overrule American Safety, the opinion concluded that nothing in the federal antitrust laws prohibited parties from agreeing to arbitrate antitrust claims that arose out of international commercial transactions. Further, federal courts have interpreted Mitsubishi and its progeny to have eroded American Safety regarding domestic transactions and concluded that such antitrust claims are subject to arbitration (22 Cal. App. 4th 1273, 1278-1279) . Because the Cartwright Act is patterned after the federal Sherman Act (15 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.), federal cases interpreting the Sherman Act are applicable in construing the state law. In addition, there is nothing in the state arbitration statutes or the Cartwright Act that indicates that an antitrust claim is not arbitrable (22 Cal. App. 4th 1273, 1280) . Thus, the court held that the Cartwright Act claims are subject to arbitration (22 Cal. App. 4th 1273, 1283) . The court also held that the claims fell within the scope of the arbitration clause in the parties' lease agreement, which covered "all disputes" (22 Cal. App. 4th 1273, 1282-1283) .

Wolitarsky v. Blue Cross of California (1997) 53 Cal. App. 4th 338, 61 Cal. Rptr. 2d 629 , is discussed at [e], below. In disposing of the contention that plaintiff's Cartwright claim had to be determined in a judicial forum, the court of appeals merely cited Crown Homes and said that Cartwright claims are arbitrable (53 Cal. App. 4th 338, 345) .

[d] Arbitrability of Claims Under the Fair Employment and Housing Act (Government Code Section 12900 et seq.)

Spellman v. Securities Annuities & Ins. Services, Inc. (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 452, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 427 , involved a suit for wrongful termination due to racial discrimination in violation of California's Fair Housing and Employment Act (Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.). Defendant/former employer petitioned to compel arbitration pursuant to the employment contract, in which plaintiff agreed to abide by the rules of the National Association of Securities Dealers (NASD). Those rules require disputes between employee and employer to be arbitrated. In addition, plaintiff had executed a Uniform Application for Securities Industry Registration and Transfer Form (U-4) in which he agreed to arbitrate any dispute, claim or controversy that might arise between him and his firm, or any other person, that was required to be arbitrated by any of the organizations with which he was to register. He registered with the NASD. Defendant's petition was denied and defendant appealed.

The court of appeal concluded that plaintiff was bound to arbitrate his racial discrimination claim (8 Cal. App. 4th 452, 455, 465) . Defendant relied on Gilmer v. Interstate/Johnson Lane (1991) 500 U.S. 20, 111 S. Ct. 1647, 114 L. Ed. 2d 26 , which held, shortly after the appeal in this case was filed, that statutory claims for wrongful termination due to age discrimination are subject to arbitration under the terms of the U-4. The portion of the opinion discussing the incorporation of the NASD rules by reference in the agreements signed by plaintiff is set forth at § 20.31[3][a].

Plaintiff contended that his employment contract was not governed by the Federal Arbitration Act (FAA) because it was excluded by the language of 9 U.S.C. § 1: "nothing herein contained shall apply to contracts of employment of seamen, railroad employees, or any other class of workers engaged in foreign or interstate commerce." Gilmer did not address the scope of Section 1. The court of appeal followed Matter of Management Recruiters Intern. and Nebel (N.D. Ohio 1991) 765 F. Supp. 419 , which noted that four circuits limited the exception in Section 1 to employees involved in the actual movement of goods in interstate commerce. The court of appeal followed Nebel's holding that the FAA applies to non-union employment contracts in the securities industry (8 Cal. App. 4th 452, 460) .

With respect to arbitration of statutory claims, the court of appeal said that unless Congress has evinced an intention to preclude a waiver of judicial remedies for the statutory rights at issue, the strong federal policy favoring arbitration requires that statutory claims be arbitrated (8 Cal. App. 4th 452, 460-461) . Following Gilmer, disputes alleging violation of statutory prohibitions against discrimination in employment may be subject to arbitration if the arbitration agreement is governed by the FAA (8 Cal. App. 4th 452, 461) . Reliance on a state statutory antidiscrimination scheme, rather than on a federal Title VII claim [of the Civil Rights Act of 1964] (§ 700 et seq.; 42 U.S.C. § 2000e et seq.), discussed in Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.21[3][a], does not alter the analysis of enforceability under the FAA (8 Cal. App. 4th 452, 462) .

The NASD rules provide that any dispute, claim or controversy arising out of or in connection with the business of any member of the Association, between or among members, or between or among members and others is eligible for submission to arbitration (8 Cal. App. 4th 452, 463) . Plaintiff claimed his suit was based on discrimination, and not a business transaction per se, and therefore, his claim was not subject to arbitration. The court of appeal was not persuaded, and found the language of the NASD rules broad enough to encompass plaintiff's claim, which the court saw as involving significant aspects of plaintiff's employment and defendant's business, including denigration of job performance, withdrawal of accounts, constant monitoring of job performance, and setting impossible job performance goals (8 Cal. App. 4th 452, 464-465) .

Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Services, Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669 is discussed at § 20.23[3][a].

[e] Arbitrability of Claims Under the Unruh Civil Rights Act (Civil Code Section 51 et seq.)

Wolitarsky v. Blue Cross of California (1997) 53 Cal. App. 4th 338, 61 Cal. Rptr. 2d 629 , involved a challenge to a health insurance policy provision imposing anadditional $2,000 deductible for maternity benefits. The case involved an insurance policy written before Health & Safety Code § 1363.1 was enacted [see Stats. 1994, ch. 653]. Because Health & Safety Code § 1363.1 may have been invalidated by Allied-Bruce Terminix Cos. v. Dobson (1995) 513 U.S. 265, 281, 115 S. Ct. 834, 130 L. Ed. 2d 753 , discussed at § 20.20[3][b] and [i], Wolitarsky may also apply to cases involving policies facially governed by Health & Safety Code § 1363.1. Plaintiffs challenged the additional deductible as illegally discriminatory in violation of:

- The Unruh Civil Rights Act (Civ. Code § 51 et seq.);
- The Federal Pregnancy Discrimination Act (42 U.S.C. § 2000e et seq.);
- The California Fair Employment and Housing Act (Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.);
- The Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code § 16721.5); and

- Health & Safety Code § 1365.5.

Defendant petitioned to compel arbitration pursuant to the policy's arbitration provision. The trial court denied the petition on the ground that arbitration provision did not cover the various causes of action alleged. Defendant appealed.

Plaintiffs claimed that the Unruh Civil Rights Act gave them an independent right to sue for declaratory relief, specifically the language of then Civ. Code § 52(e) providing that: "the aggrieved parties shall not only possess a private right of action for violations, but also that such relief under the Act will be independent of any remedy or procedure available" (53 Cal. App. 4th 338, 345-346) . The court of appeal considered this a question of first impression. Defendant did not rely on the Federal Arbitration Act [see 9 U.S.C. § 2]. Neither plaintiffs nor the court of appeal could cite anything in the Unruh Civil Rights Act preventing submission of claims to arbitration. The court noted that claims under the Age Discrimination in Employment Act (29 U.S.C. § 621 et seq.) and under California's Fair Employment and Housing Act (Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.) are arbitrable [see Gilmer v. Interstate/Johnson Lane (1991) 500 U.S. 20, 26-27, 35, 111 S. Ct. 1647, 114 L. Ed. 2d 26 (discussed at § 20.21[3][c]); Spellman v. Securities Annuities & Ins. Services, Inc. (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 452, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 427 (discussed at [d], above)] (53 Cal. App. 4th 338, 346-347) , and concluded that there was nothing in the arbitration agreement to exclude an Unruh Civil Rights Act claim from arbitration (53 Cal. App. 4th 338, 348) .

Plaintiffs argued that the arbitration clause was not broad enough to encompass their civil rights claims. The clause stated that: "Any dispute between the Member and Blue Cross regarding the decision of Blue Cross must be submitted to binding arbitration if the amount in dispute exceeds the jurisdictional limits of the small claims court." The court of appeal found that the arbitration clause was broad enough to encompass civil rights claims and that the amount in controversy ($2,000 trebled pursuant to Civ. Code § 52 = $6,000) exceeded the $5,000 jurisdictional limit for small claims court (53 Cal. App. 4th 338, 348-349) .

The portion of the opinion addressing the arbitrability of the question of legality of the maternity deductible is discussed at § 20.44[3][a].

[f] Arbitrability of Damage Claims Under the Consumer Legal Remedies Act (Civil Code Section 1750 et seq.)

Broughton v. Cigna Healthplans of California (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 1066, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 334, 988 P.2d 67 , was an action by a minor (through his mother as guardian ad litem) and his mother for damages for medical malpractice for injuries caused at birth by, among other things, denial of a medically necessary cesarean delivery, and for damages for violation of the Consumer Legal Remedies Act (Civ. Code § 1750 et seq.) based on defendant's deceptive and misleading advertising with respect to the quality of medical services which would be provided under its health care plan. The second cause of action requested actual and punitive damages and attorneys' fees, as well as an order enjoining defendant's deceptive methods, acts, and practices. Defendant moved to compel arbitration based on a mandatory arbitration provision in its combined evidence of coverage and disclosure form. Plaintiffs opposed the motion on several grounds, including that Civ. Code § 1751 prohibited waiver of a judicial forum for determination of the cause of action under the CLRA. The trial court severed the causes of action, compelling arbitration of the medical malpractice cause of action, but not the cause of action under the CLRA. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's judgment, holding that because arbitrators may not issue permanent injunctions, arbitration is not an adequate forum for the resolution of CLRA claims. The Supreme Court granted review to decide whether CLRA claims are arbitrable.

The Supreme Court, with three members dissenting, affirmed in part and reversed in part, holding that the claim for damages under the CLRA was fully arbitrable (along with the medical malpractice claim) and should be severed from the injunctive relief claim (21 Cal. 4th 1066, 1072, 1088) , despite the inefficiency of separating the claims and despite the fact that the existence of the arbitration agreement and the application of the Federal Arbitration Act had not been established. The existence of the arbitration agreement and the application of the Federal Arbitration Act were to be determined on remand, and arbitration ordered if both were established, or, in the event it was determined that the FAA did not apply and California law did not require a different result (21 Cal. 4th 1066, 1087-1088) .

In considering whether there was an inherent conflict between arbitration and the CLRA, the Court pointed out that although Civ. Code § 1751 prohibits waiver of any protections of the Act, the remedies provided by the CLRA are not exclusive [Civ. Code § 1752] (21 Cal. 4th 1066, 1077) . Although the CLRA does not address the question of arbitrability directly, United States Supreme Court cases make clear that statutory claims for damages are fully arbitrable even if the action incidentally vindicates important public interests. Those cases consistently hold that abbreviated discovery, the fact that an arbitral award does not establish binding precedent, and a plaintiff's right to a jury trial do not render the arbitral forum inadequate. Nor does submission of statutory claims to arbitration waive the substantive rights afforded by the statute; the plaintiff is merely deemed to have agreed to submit his or her statutory claim to an arbitral, rather than a judicial, forum. Although the majority conceded that the CLRA could be interpreted to mean that the damages remedy under the CLRA isto be resolved solely in a judicial forum, they construed the CLRA as consistent with the FAA, thus holding that the CLRA permits arbitration of damages claims, at least to the extent the FAA governs the claim (21 Cal. 4th 1066, 1084) .

In support of the distinction between CLRA claims for damages and for injunctions, the Court relied in part on the fact that Civ. Code § 1782(a) requires a consumer to give notice 30 days before commencing an action under the CLRA for damages, and cannot maintain that action if appropriate repairs are made or other remedy given, but that no such requirement is imposed before commencement of an action seeking an injunction [see Civ. Code § 1782(c)]. This distinction indicated to the majority that informal methods of resolution are appropriate for CLRA claims for damages but compromise the public protective purpose of the statute when injunctive relief is sought (21 Cal. 4th 1066, 1084-1085) . The portion of the opinion addressing the nonarbitrability of CLRA claims for injunction is discussed in Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.43[3][a]. The portion of the opinion addressing a plaintiff's right to attorneys' fees in arbitration of a claim for damages under the CLRA is addressed in Ch. 20C, Arbitration: Confirming, Correcting, or Vacating the Award, § 20C.110[3][d].

Plaintiff in Cruz v. PacifiCare Health Sys. (2003) 30 Cal. 4th 303, 133 Cal. Rptr. 2d 58, 66 P.3d 1157 , filed an action against defendants alleging claims for unfair competition and false advertising in connection with PacifiCare's sale, marketing, and rendering of medical services. Plaintiff, an enrollee in one of the various health plans offered by PacifiCare, alleged that through its misleading and deceptive material representations and omissions, defendant employed a fraudulent, unlawful, and/or unfair scheme designed to induce persons to enroll in its health plans. Primarily, plaintiff claimed defendant misrepresented that its primary commitment was to maintain and improve the quality of health care provided, when in fact it aggressively implemented internal policies designed to discourage its primary care physicians from delivering medical services and to interfere with their medical judgment. Plaintiff set forth four causes of action, in his individual capacity and on behalf of the general public:

- False advertising in violation of Bus. & Prof. Code § 17500 et seq., for which he sought an order enjoining violations of Bus. & Prof. Code § 17500 and disgorgement of all defendants' ill-gotten gains and monies wrongfully acquired.

- Violations of various state statutes, which constituted an unfair, unlawful, or fraudulent business act or practice under the Unfair Competition Law (Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq.), that reduced the quality of medical services available to enrollees and decreased the value of their respective health plans. On this cause of action plaintiff also sought an order enjoining defendants' violations of Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 and requiring them to disgorge all ill-gotten gains and monies wrongfully acquired.

- Misrepresentations in violation of the Consumer Legal Remedies Act (Civ. Code § 1750 et seq.), for which he sought an order enjoining defendants' wrongful acts and practices and requiring defendants to make restitution of all monies paid to them.

- For unjust enrichment, because enrollees had received a lower quality of care than advertised and represented by defendant, for which plaintiff sough restitution, refund, or reimbursement of certain monies paid by or on behalf of enrollees, and disgorgement of the excessive and ill-gotten monies obtained by defendants as a result of the unlawful, fraudulent, or unfair business acts and practices and untrue and misleading advertisements.

Defendants moved to compel arbitration pursuant to several arbitration provisions in the subscriber agreement between defendant and plaintiff's employer, the arbitration provision in the enrollment form signed by plaintiff, and the arbitration provision in the member handbook provided to enrollees. Plaintiff resisted on several grounds, including that the arbitration provisions were unconscionable and that arbitration of the claims for injunctive relief was foreclosed by Broughton v. Cigna Healthplans (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 1066, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 334, 988 P.2d 67 (Broughton). The trial court agreed, also reasoning that the claims for disgorgement, restitution, and unjust enrichment were inarbitrable as essentially equitable remedies distinct from damages, and refused to compel arbitration. The court of appeal affirmed. Defendants sought review.

The California Supreme Court granted review. Defendant argued among other things, that Broughton was no longer valid law in view of the U.S. Supreme Court's decisions in Green Tree Financial Corp. v. Randolph (2000) 531 U.S. 79, 121 S. Ct. 513, 148 L. Ed. 2d 373 (Green Tree, discussed at § 20.21[3][f]) and Circuit City Stores, Inc. v. Adams (2001) 532 U.S. 105, 121 S. Ct. 1302, 149 L. Ed. 2d 234 (Circuit City, discussed at § 20.20[3][e]). The Supreme Court concluded that Broughton was still good law, and that it should be extended to claims for public injunctive relief under Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq. and under Bus. & Prof. Code § 17500 et seq, at least under the circumstances of this case (30 Cal. 4th 303, 315) , but not to statutory and common law claims for equitable monetary relief by restitution, disgorgement, and unjust enrichment (30 Cal. 4th 303, 320) .

Defendants contended that Green Tree and Circuit City made clear that only Congress, not state legislatures, can create exceptions to the Federal Arbitration Act's (FAA) requirement that arbitration agreements be enforced according to their terms, and that therefore state courts cannot hold that certain requests for public injunctive relief are inarbitrable (30 Cal. 4th 303, 311) . The Court disagreed, and after discussing its opinion in Broughton at length, said it continued to find valid the inherent conflict analysis it used in Broughton (30 Cal. 4th 303, 311-315) . Further, the Court said Circuit City had little if any bearing on its holding in Broughton and neither addressed the question whether public injunctions are arbitrable nor shed any light on the "inherently incompatible" exception to arbitrability (30 Cal. 4th 303, 315) . Green Tree did not address arbitration of public injunctive claims, but focused on the issue of cost sharing in the arbitration of federal statutory claims. Green Tree did not concern federal preemption of state arbitration claims, nor did its reiteration of Congress's strong pro-arbitration policy call Broughton into question. In sum, the Court said,nothing that is novel about Green Tree or Circuit City has any bearing on Broughton (30 Cal. 4th 303, 315) .

Considering the issue of whether restitutionary claims are arbitrable, the Court first reviewed its holding in Broughton that damages claims under the CLRA are arbitrable, notwithstanding that they vindicate important statutory rights (30 Cal. 4th 303, 317) . Damages, broadly defined, may include a restitutionary element. Thus, there is no reason why restitutionary claims, like CLRA claims for damages, should not be arbitrable (30 Cal. 4th 303, 318) . Nothing in Broughton's functional analysis suggests that the mere designation of restitution as an equitable remedy makes the request for that remedy inarbitrable. Moreover, although plaintiff argued that restitution under the UCL accomplishes a public purpose by deterring unlawful conduct, the same could be said of damages under the CLRA or under various federal statutes. The deterrent effect is incidental to the private benefits obtained by those bringing the restitutionary or damages action. The U.S. Supreme Court has made clear that these actions, notwithstanding the public benefit, are fully arbitrable under the FAA. While a class action may be primarily for the public benefit, that public benefit was only one of the factors the Court identified in Broughton as weighing against arbitrability. Another was the "institutional advantages" of the judicial forum over arbitration in the administration of a public injunction, which are not present in an action for restitution. A class action under the UCL would allow for disgorgement into a fluid recovery fund and distribution by various means. Establishment of such a fund and the distribution of its proceeds do not present the same order of institutional difficulty as does the maintenance of a permanent statewide injunction requiring judicial supervision (30 Cal. 4th 303, 318) . The Court agreed with Arriaga v. Cross Country Bank (S.D.Cal. 2001) 163 F. Supp. 2d 1189, 1197 (discussed in Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.43[3][a]) and cited it for the proposition that quoted unlike a public injunction, disgorgement of funds does not need to be continuously monitored because its object is limited in time and scope. Once the profits to be disgorged and the recipients of those funds are identified, there is no need for long term modification and correction necessitating judicial supervision. Therefore, disgorgement of funds is essentially the same as awarding money damages, and within the power of the arbitrators to award. There is no "inherent conflict" between this remedy and arbitration (30 Cal. 4th 303, 318) . The Court concluded that the claims for restitution and/or disgorgement, whether brought as an individual or as a class action, were arbitrable (30 Cal. 4th 303, 328) . By the same logic, the common law claim for unjust enrichment, which is essentially an action for restitution is also arbitrable (30 Cal. 4th 303, 320) . The Court also noted that when there is a severance of arbitrable from inarbitrable claims, the trial court has discretion to stay proceedings on the inarbitrable claims pending resolution of the arbitration [Code Civ. Proc., § 1281.4] (30 Cal. 4th 303, 320) .

Finally, the Court noted that other of plaintiff's arguments against enforcement of the arbitration provisions--that the claims were outside the scope of the arbitration agreement and because that the agreement was unconscionable--could be reasserted on remand (30 Cal. 4th 303, 321) .

[g] Arbitrability of Damage Claims Under the Unfair Competition Law (Business and Professions Code Section 17200 et seq.)

Cruz v. PacifiCare Health Sys. (2003) 30 Cal. 4th 303, 133 Cal. Rptr. 2d 58, 66 P.3d 1157 , is discussed at [f], above, except the portions of the opinion addressing injunctive relief, which are discussed at Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20.43[3][a], with regard to injunctive relief under the Consumer Legal Remedies Act (Civ. Code § 1750 et seq.) and at Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.44[3][a] with regard to injunctive relief under Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq. and Bus. & Prof. Code § 17500 et seq. For the most part, the Court considered the arbitrability of the restitiutionary damage claims together. The following remarks, however, pertained to the claims under the Unfair Competition Law (Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq.). The Court noted that the language authorizing restitution for misleading advertising practices under Bus. & Prof. Code § 17535 is virtually identical to the language authorizing restitution found in Bus. & Prof. Code § 17203 under the UCL. Both declare that a "court may make such orders or judgments" as "may be necessary to restore to any person in interest any money or property, real or personal, which may have been acquired by" the business practices made unlawful by the statute in question. Therefore, the Court assumed, at least on the issue of arbitrability, those sections should be construed the same way (30 Cal. 4th 303, 318) . The Court also noted that remedies under the UCL are limited. A UCL action is equitable in nature; and damages cannot be recovered. Prevailing plaintiffs are generally limited to injunctive relief and restitution. A order for restitution under the UCL compels the defendant to return money obtained through an unfair business practice to those persons in interest from whom the property was taken, that is, to persons who had an ownership interest in the property or those claiming through that person (30 Cal. 4th 303, 317) .

Amici curiae argued that EEOC v. Waffle House, Inc. (2002) 534 U.S. 279, 122 S. Ct. 754, 151 L. Ed. 2d 755 (Waffle House) renders all UCL claims inarbitrable. The majority in Waffle House held that the EEOC could sue employers not only to enjoin discriminatory employment practices, but also for victim-specific relief, such as reinstatement and back pay, even if the employee on whose behalf it was acting was a party to a binding arbitration agreement. The court reasoned that the EEOC was neither a party to the arbitration agreement nor a mere proxy for the employee on whose behalf the action was brought, but rather an agency charged by Congress with the vindication of the public interest (30 Cal. 4th 303, 319) . Amici curiae argued that a private attorney general action brought under Bus. & Prof. Code § 17024 is comparable to an action brought by the EEOC. Thus, no one acting in a private attorney general capacity should be bound by an arbitration agreement. Given the strong presumption in favor of enforcing arbitration agreements, the Court did not read Waffle House as permitting a party to an arbitration agreement to evade its contractual obligation to settle its own restitutionary claims through arbitration merely by acting as a representative on behalf of other similarly situated claimants (30 Cal. 4th 303, 320) .

[h] Arbitrability of Damage Claims Under the False Advertising Law (Business and Professions Code Section 17500 et seq.)

Cruz v. PacifiCare Health Sys. (2003) 30 Cal. 4th 303, 133 Cal. Rptr. 2d 58, 66 P.3d 1157 , is discussed at [f], above, except the portions of the opinion addressing inarbitrability of claims for public injunctive under Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq. and Bus. & Prof. Code § 17500 et seq., which are discussed at Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.43[3][a], For the most part, the Court considered the arbitrability of the restitiutionary damage claims under all three statutes--the Consumer Legal Remedies Act (Civ. Code § 1750 et seq.), Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq., and Bus. & Prof. Code § 17500 et seq.--together. That portion of the opinion is discussed at [f], above. Remarks about the claims under the Unfair Competition Law (Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq.), including the fact that the language authorizing restitution for misleading advertising practices under Bus. & Prof. Code § 17535 is virtually identical to the language authorizing restitution found in Bus. & Prof. Code § 17203, are discussed at [g], above.

[i] Code of Civil Procedure Section 1298.7 Preempted by Federal Arbitration Act

Code Civ. Proc. § 1298.7 that in the event an arbitration provision is included in a contract or agreement covered by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1298-1298.8, it shall not preclude or limit any right of action for bodily injury or wrongful death, or any right of action to which Section 337.1 or 337.15 is applicable.

Shepard v. Edward Mackay Enterprises, Inc. (2007) 148 Cal. App. 4th 1092, 56 Cal. Rptr. 3d 326 , involved construction and design defects in a home plaintiff purchased from defendant. Plaintiff alleged a leak from an underground plumbing pipe caused extensive damage to the home and its contents. The purchase agreement contained an arbitration clause, and defendant moved to compel arbitration. Plaintiff opposed the motion to compel arbitration on the authority of Code Civ. Proc. § 1298.7, and the trial court denied defendants' motion to compel arbitration, relying on Code Civ. Proc. § 1298.7 and concluding that the defendants' evidentiary showing failed to demonstrate that the transaction involved interstate commerce. Defendant appealed, and on appeal filed the declarations of five materials suppliers, all of which stated that they supplied materials which originated outside of California.

The court of appeal reversed, finding that the Federal Arbitration Act (FAA) has preempted Code Civ. Proc. § 1298.7 and that the defendants' evidence was sufficient to show that the transaction at issue involved interstate commerce (148 Cal. App. 4th 1092, 1095, 1101-1102) . The court of appeal first noted that although plaintiff had pleaded tort as well as contract claims, the arbitration clause was worded broadly enough to embrace both tort and contract claims as long as the claims were rooted in the relationship created by the contract (148 Cal. App. 4th 1092, 1096) . The FAA preempts conflicting state anti-arbitration law. Thus, the court considered the phrase "involving commerce" as used in 9 U.S.C. § 2, saying it is the functional equivalent of the term "affecting commerce," which is a term of art that signals the broadest permissible exercise of Congress' commerce clause power and encompasses more than activities within the flow of interstate commerce. Further, it is not necessary for the parties to have contemplated substantial interstate activity at the time they entered into the agreement for the transaction to be one "evidencing commerce." The United States Supreme Court has adopted a "commerce in fact" interpretation, meaning that the transaction must merely turn out, in fact, to have involved interstate commerce (148 Cal. App. 4th 1092, 1097) . There are three categories of activity that Congress may regulate under the commerce power: (1) the channels of interstate commerce, (2) the instrumentalities of interstate commerce and persons or things in interstate commerce, and (3) those activities having a substantial relation to interstate commerce. In fact, it is not necessary for the transaction to be actually in interstate commerce, as long as, in the aggregate the economic activity in question would represent a general practice subject to federal control, such a bank lending (148 Cal. App. 4th 109, 1098) . Only that general practice need bear on interstate commerce in a substantial way (148 Cal. App. 4th 1092, 1098-1099) . The court of appeal went on to discuss the three California cases that have considered this issue in the context of real estate purchases: Basura v. U.S. Home Corporation (2002) 98 Cal. App. 4th 1205, 120 Cal. Rptr. 2d 328 (Basura, discussed below); Hedges v. Carrigan (2004) 117 Cal. App. 4th 578, 11 Cal. Rptr. 3d 787 (Hedges, discussed at [j], below); and Woolls v. Superior Court (Turner) (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 197, 25 Cal. Rptr. 3d 426 (Woolls, discussed in Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.95[3][b], below) (148 Cal. App. 4th 1092, 1099-1100) . In Basura, the court found the contract involved interstate commerce because the construction project involved building materials and equipment which were manufactured and/or produced outside California; out-of-state design professionals, trade contractors, subcontractors and others; defendant communicated by interstate mail and telephone with out-of-state manufacturers, design professionals, trade contractors, subcontractors and their employees; and engaged in marketing and advertising activities throughout the country using interstate media. The Hedges court held in dicta that the contract was one which evidenced a transaction involving commerce because the transaction was financed through the Federal Housing Administration, and because the various copyrighted forms used by the parties could only be utilized by members of the National Association of Realtors (148 Cal. App. 4th 1092, 1099) . Woolls involved only the renovation of a single residence, not an entire development, such as was involved in Basura. Further, the Woolls court found that the contractor had not made any evidentiary showing that the transaction involved interstate commerce. The court said that this case did not involve either the channels or instrumentalities of interstate commerce, or persons or things in interstate commerce. Thus, the court had to determine whether the transaction involved an activity having a substantial relation to interstate commerce. According to the suppliers' declarations the carpet, vinyl flooring, doors and windows, hardware, trusses, and kitchen appliances were produced outside California (148 Cal. App. 4th 1092, 1100) . The number of building materials shown by defendants to have come from interstate commerce indicated this case was not one involving a merely trivial impact on interstate commerce. Plaintiff argued that the only building material that mattered was the carpet because that was the only component as issue in the case, but the court of appeal disagreed, noting it was not aware of any cases indicating the FAA preempts contrary state law only if the particular dispute is over interstate goods. On the contrary, the language 9 U.S.C. § 2 and United Sates Supreme Court cases indicated the pertinent question is whether the contract evidences a transaction involving interstate commerce, not whether the dispute arises from the particular part of the transaction involving interstate commerce. Finally, the court of appeal disagreed with the trial court's finding regarding the declarations and found instead that the declarations stated that certain materials provided by the declarant were manufactured outside California. These were evidentiary facts based on the declarant's personal knowledge and were sufficient to support a finding on the ultimate legal issue of whether the transaction involved interstate commerce. The court concluded that defendants had met their burden of demonstrating that this transaction substantially affected interstate commerce. Thus, the FAA preempted Code Civ. Proc. § 1298.7 (148 Cal. App. 4th 1092, 1101) .

Basura v. U.S. Home Corp. (2002) 98 Cal. App. 4th 1205, 120 Cal. Rptr. 2d 328 , was an action by some 60 homeowners against the builder/developer for construction defects, including cracked foundation slabs. Plaintiffs initially filed suit in federal court, but dismissed that action pursuant to a tolling and cooperation agreement whereby the parties attempted to mediate their dispute, but to no avail. Each conveyance was in accordance with a form sales agreement, Paragraph 14 of which provided for arbitration. Home petitioned stay the proceeding and to compel arbitration of plaintiffs' claims. Plaintiffs opposed arbitration on the ground that Code Civ. Proc. § 1298.7 permits a purchaser to pursue a construction defect case in court even if the purchaser signed an agreement to convey real property containing an arbitration clause. Plaintiffs further argued that the Federal Arbitration Act does not preempt section 1298.7 because the subject real estate purchase agreements did not involve interstate commerce. Home filed reply declarations to establish the agreements in fact involved interstate commerce. The petition to compel arbitration was denied. Home Appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. Courts may not invalidate arbitration agreements under state laws applicable only to arbitration provisions. Code Civ. Proc. § 1298.7 is a state law applicable only to arbitration agreements (98 Cal. App. 4th 1205, 1212) . The court of appeal reviewed the evidence establishing that the construction of the homes involved the receipt and use of building materials and equipment which were manufactured and/or produced in states outside California, including Nevada, Arizona, Connecticut, Indiana, South Carolina, Pennsylvania, Michigan, Tennessee and Georgia, and which were shipped to the job site in Palmdale. Further, Home contracted with out-of-state design professionals, trade contractors, subcontractors and others, communicated with them by interstate mail and telephone, and engaged in marketing and advertising activities throughout the country using interstate media. These facts compelled the conclusion that the agreements between Home and plaintiffs involved interstate commerce. Therefore, the agreements were governed by the FAA. and Code Civ. Proc. § 1298.7 could not be used by plaintiffs to avoid the arbitration (98 Cal. App. 4th 1205, 1214) .

[j] Federal Law Preempts Section 1298 of the Code of Civil Procedure

Hedges v. Carrigan (2004) 117 Cal. App. 4th 578, 587, 11 Cal. Rptr. 3d 787 , was an action by a real estate purchaser against the sellers and both brokers based on failure to disclose several defects in the residence. One of the defendants, plaintiff's broker, petitioned to compel arbitration in accordance with the residential purchase agreement. The agreement provided that the arbitration provision would be excluded if all parties did not initial it. Defendants did not initial it. The trial court denied the motion to compel arbitration. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that because defendants had not initialed the arbitration provision, it was not enforceable against plaintiffs (117 Cal. App. 4th 578, 587) . Although unnecessary to its holding, and over a dissent, the majority opinion considered the effect of the Federal Arbitration Act and determined that because Code Civ. Proc. § 1298 does not apply to contracts generally, but only to arbitration clauses, it could not be judicially construed to invalidate the arbitration clause at issue (117 Cal. App. 4th 578, 585) . The court found the transaction involved interstate commerce because it was financed by an FHA loan (117 Cal. App. 4th 578, 586-587) .

[k] False Claims Act (Government Code Section 12650 et seq.) Claims Are Arbitrable

County of Solano v. Lionsgate Corporation (2005) 126 Cal. App. 4th 741, 24 Cal. Rptr. 3d 362 arose from a contract for replacement of a bridge. The contract incorporated Caltrans Standard Specifications, including an arbitration clause that required arbitration of any claims, defined as demands for monetary compensation or damages, arising under or related to performance of the contract, pursuant to Public Contract Code § 10240 et seq. and related regulations. As allowed by Code Civ. Proc. § 1296, the arbitration clause also provided that the arbitration decision be decided in accordance with the applicable law, be supported by substantial evidence, and contain the basis for the decision, findings of fact, and conclusions of law. The County filed a complaint in arbitration, charging Lionsgate with breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, fraud, and numerous False Claims Act (Gov. Code § 12650 et seq.) violations, and sought a total of $531,783.46 in damages and penalties. Lionsgate objected to the arbitration, contending the contract did not authorize arbitration of False Claims Act causes of action. The arbitrator overruled the objection, and after hearing found Lionsgate's false claims in connection with the bridge contract had caused the County to incur substantial investigative and administrative costs, which, however, were not recoverable as damages. The arbitrator limited the County's recovery to civil penalties under the False Claims Act. The arbitrator also found that Lionsgate had breached the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, but with no resulting damages, and that Lionsgate had not committed fraud due to the absence of detrimental reliance on the County's part. The award was for the County for $210,000 in False Claims Act penalties, offset by a $2,000 award to Lionsgate on its cross-complaint. The County then submitted a petition for $690,247.15 in attorney fees and $32,094.55 in costs. The arbitrator awarded the County $500,000 in attorney fees and $32,094.55 in costs under Public Contract Code § 10240.13 as well as prejudgment interest on the net $208,000 recovery, running from the date the findings and conclusions were filed. The trial court confirmed the arbitration award, and denied Lionsgate's motion for a new trial. Lionsgate appealed, contending the arbitratorlacked the authority to rule on charges made by the County under the False Claims Act, improperly awarded prejudgment interest and attorney fees, and misinterpreted certain conduct by Lionsgate as amounting to false claims.

The court of appeal mostly affirmed, holding that the arbitrator properly considered the County's False Claims Act charges, but that the County was not entitled to prejudgment interest until after entry of the final arbitration award (126 Cal. App. 4th 741, 745) . Lionsgate's primary argument was based on Gov. Code, §§ 12651, 12652, which refer to "a civil action" to recover penalties and damages under the False Claims Act and to assessments and findings by "the court." The court of appeal disagreed, noting that it is well settled that statutory claims are not inarbitrable merely because the statute in question refers to actions in court and cited three such cases (126 Cal. App. 4th 741, 747) :

- Cruz v. PacifiCare Health Systems, Inc. (2003) 30 Cal. 4th 303, 317-320, 133 Cal. Rptr. 2d 58, 66 P.3d 1157 , which considered Bus. & Prof. Code § 17204 ("shall be prosecuted exclusively in a court of competent jurisdiction");

- Broughton v. Cigna Healthplans (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 1066, 1082, 1085, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 334, 988 P.2d 67 , which considered actions under the Consumers Legal Remedies Act, Civ. Code § 1780(c) of which formerly specified that actions must be filed in "any court ... having jurisdiction of the subject matter;" and

- Crown Homes, Inc. v. Landes (1994) 22 Cal. App. 4th 1273, 1283, 27 Cal. Rptr. 2d 827 , which held that statutory antitrust claims under the Cartwright Act are subject to arbitration, despite language in Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16750(a) that contemplates civil actions "in any court having jurisdiction."

Lionsgate further argued that it never agreed to arbitrate claims for civil penalties under the False Claims Act, although Lionsgate had never requested severance of the penalty claims. The arbitrator's findings and conclusions clearly indicated that the award was designed not simply to penalize Lionsgate, but to compensate the County for administrative expenses the arbitrator believed were not recoverable as "damages." The imposition of penalties as a form of compensation was within the arbitrator's authority: nothing in the parties' contract limited the remedies available to the arbitrator, and the penalties bore a rational relationship to the contract and the breach (126 Cal. App. 4th 741, 748) . Thus, the court did not need to decide whether a purely punitive assessment of monetary penalties under the False Claims Act would have been beyond the scope of the arbitration clause (126 Cal. App. 4th 741, 749) .

The court considered two issues not raised by Lionsgate: (1) whether there was an inherent conflict between a statutory remedy and arbitration and (2) whether a judicial forum would have significant institutional advantages over arbitration in the administration of a remedy, as is often the case with claims for injunctive relief on behalf of the public. As to the first, the court found that nothing in this case militated against arbitration of False Claims Act charges. Although False Claims Act penalties do serve a public purpose by deterring false claims by public works contractors, in this case that public purpose was merely incidental to the primary benefit of compensating the County for the expenses associated with the submission of false claims. As to the second issue, the court found that the County's claims implicated no broad public remedy. Thus, there was no institutional advantage in a judicial forum that might preclude arbitration of the False Claims Act charges (126 Cal. App. 4th 741, 749) .

The facts and procedural background of Preston v. Ferrer (2008)552U.S.346, 128 S. Ct. 978, 169 L. Ed. 2d 917 , and the portion of the opinion addressing whether a court or an arbitrator should determine the legality of the underlying contract are discussed at § 20.10[3][i]. With respect to the preemption issue, the Court held that state laws lodging primary jurisdiction in another forum, whether judicial or administrative, are superseded by the Federal Arbitration Act (FAA; 9 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.) (169 L. Ed. 2d 917, 923) . The Court discussed the Talent Agency Act (TAA; Lab. Code § 1700 et seq.), specifically Lab. Code § 1700.45, which permits arbitration in lieu of proceeding before the Labor Commissioner if an arbitration provision in a contract between a talent agency and an artist both provides for reasonable notice to the Labor Commissioner of the time and place of all arbitration hearings and gives the Commissioner the right to attend all arbitration hearings. This demonstrates that there is no inherent conflict between the TAA and arbitration as a dispute resolution mechanism. However, procedural prescriptions of the TAA conflict with the FAA in two basic respects: first, the TAA [see Lab. Code § 1700.44(a)] grants the Labor Commissioner exclusive jurisdiction to decide an issue that the parties agreed to arbitrate; and second, the TAA imposes prerequisites to enforcement of an arbitration agreement that are not applicable to contracts generally [see Lab. Code § 1700.45] (169 L. Ed. 2d 917, 927) . Also, requiring initial reference of the dispute to the Labor Commissioner would hinder speedy resolution of the controversy, thus frustrating the FAA's prime objective that arbitration agreements allow parties to achieve streamlined proceedings and expeditious results (169 L. Ed. 2d 917, 928) . The Court disapproved the distinction between judicial and administrative proceedings drawn by plaintiff and adopted by the appeals court. When parties agree to arbitrate all questions arising under a contract, the FAA supersedes state laws lodging primary jurisdiction in another forum, whether judicial or administrative (169 L. Ed. 2d 917, 929) .

69 of 174 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20 ARBITRATION: COMPELLING
PART II. FORMS
A. General Principles Related to Compelling Arbitration

2-20 California Points & Authorities § 20.23

§ 20.23 Arbitration Agreement Provides, or Can Be Interpreted to Provide, Minimum Requirements for Vindication of Unwaivable Statutory or Common Law Rights

[1] FORM

ARBITRATION OF RESPONDENT'S _____ [specify nature of claim, e.g., CLAIMS UNDER CALIFORNIA'S FAIR EMPLOYMENT AND HOUSING ACT] SHOULD BE COMPELLED BECAUSE THE ARBITRATION PROCEDURES [CAN BE IMPLIED TO] PROVIDE SUFFICIENT SAFEGUARDS TO ALLOW RESPONDENT TO VINDICATE HIS/HER RIGHTS UNDER _____ [STATUTE or CAUSE OF ACTION].

A. Requirements for Arbitration of Unwaivable Statutory or Common Law Right. Claims based on unwaivable rights, such as state statutory discrimination claims, including a claim for wrongful termination due to discrimination on the basisof sexual orientation, under California's Fair Housing and Employment Act (Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.) may be compelled to be arbitrated in accordance with an arbitration agreement[, even a mandatory agreement required as a condition of employment], that provides the following safeguards to allow vindication of plaintiff's statutory rights (Little v. Auto Stiegler, Inc. (2003) 29 Cal. 4th 1064, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 892, 63 P.3d 979 ; Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Services, Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 90-103, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669 ; Fitz v. NCR Corp. (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 702, 712-713, 13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 88 ; Abramson v. Juniper Networks, Inc. (2004) 115 Cal. App. 4th 638, 652-654, 9 Cal. Rptr. 3d 422 ; Fittante v. Palm Springs Motors, Inc. (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 719-720, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 659 ; accord Craig v. Brown & Root, Inc. (2000) 84 Cal. App. 4th 416, 422-423, 100 Cal. Rptr. 2d. 818 ; see also Camargo v. California Portland Cement Company (2001) 86 Cal. App. 4th 995, 103 Cal. Rptr. 2d 841):

1. Neutrality of the arbitrator,

2. Adequate discovery,

3. No limitation on the arbitrator's authority to award all types of relief authorized by the statute,

4. A written decision that will permit a limited form of judicial review, and

5. Limitations on the costs of arbitration.

[Optional] B. Implied Agreement to Adequate Discovery. Whether or not the claim at issue is one for personal injury, which would allow for discovery in accordance with Code of Civil Procedure Section 1283.05, when the parties agree to arbitrate statutory claims[, such as a claim under the California Fair Employment and Housing Act (Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.)], they also implicitly agree, absent express language to the contrary, to whatever procedures are necessary to vindicate that claim. Thus, plaintiff is entitled to discovery sufficient to adequately arbitrate the statutory claim, including access to essential documents and witnesses, as determined by the arbitrator(s) and subject to limited judicial review pursuant to Code of Civil Procedure section 1286.2. Therefore, lack of discovery is not grounds for holding this claim inarbitrable (Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Services, Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 104-106, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669).

[Optional] C. Agreement Interpreted to Require Findings and Conclusions in Award. For judicial review of an arbitration award sufficient to vindicate a claimant's statutory rights under the Fair Employment and Housing Act (Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.) to be accomplished, an arbitrator in a FEHA case must issue a written arbitration decision that will reveal, however briefly, the essential findings and conclusions on which the award is based. While those written findings and conclusions are not required under the California Arbitration Act (Code Civ. Proc. § 1283.4), nothing in the present arbitration agreement precludes written findings, and to the extent it applies to FEHA claims the agreement must be interpreted to provide for those findings (Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Services, Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 107, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669 ; cf. Fittante v. Palm Springs Motors, Inc. (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 722, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 659 (finding requirement of written award would be satisfied by compliance with Code Civ. Proc. § 1283.4).

[Optional] D. Agreement Interpreted to Require Employer to Pay Forum Costs of Arbitration. A mandatory employment arbitration agreement that contains within its scope the arbitration of claims _____ [specify nature of claim, e.g., under the Fair Employment and Housing Act (Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.)], but is silent on the matter of who pays the costs of arbitration, impliedly obliges the employer to pay all types of costs that are unique to arbitration. Accordingly, the arbitration agreement in the present case impliedly requires that the employer bear the arbitration forum costs[, such as the arbitrator's fees, the administrative fee, any filing fee, room rental, and court reporter's fees]. The absence of specific provisions on arbitration costs therefore does not provide grounds for denying the enforcement of this arbitration agreement, but the order compelling arbitration should specify that the employer pay all types of costs that are unique to arbitration. [Nothing in the Federal Arbitration Act or federal cases prohibits this cost-shifting] (Little v. Auto Stiegler, Inc. (2003) 29 Cal. 4th 1064, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 892, 63 P.3d 979 ; Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Services, Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 107-108, 110-111, 113, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669 ; Fittante v. Palm Springs Motors, Inc. (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 659 ; cf. Abramson v. Juniper Networks, Inc. (2004) 115 Cal. App. 4th 638, 654, 661, 668, 9 Cal. Rptr. 3d 422 (court cannot impose implied agreement in face of contrary terms of express agreement)].

[Optional] E. Armendariz May Be Applied Retroactively. Under settled principles of retroactivity, because Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Services, Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669 decided an unresolved issue pursued by parties, representing opposing points of view, who were determined to obtain a final decision on the matter from the highest court of this state, that decision may be applied retroactively (Blake v. Ecker (2001) 93 Cal. App. 4th 728, 733, 741, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 422).

[Optional] F. *Armendariz Minimum Requirements Apply to Tameny Claims. An employee who is required by agreement to arbitrate a claim against his or her employer that he or she was demoted or terminated for a reason contrary to public policy is entitled to have that arbitration conducted in accordance with the minimum requirements set forth in Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Services, Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6

P.3d 669 [, including the requirement that the employer bear all costs unique to the arbitral forum] (Little v. Auto Stiegler, Inc. (2003) 29 Cal. 4th 1064, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 892, 63 P.3d 979 ; Abramson v. Juniper Networks, Inc. (2004) 115 Cal. App. 4th 638, 653, 660-661, 9 Cal. Rptr. 3d 422 ; see Tameny v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 167, 178, 164 Cal. Rptr. 839, 610 P.2d 1330 (establishing cause of action for termination of employment for reason that is contrary to public policy)).

[Optional] G. Armendariz Minimum Requirements Apply to Claims Under Labor Code Section 970. An employee who is required by agreement to arbitrate under Section 970 of the Labor Code is entitled to have that arbitration conducted in accordance with the minimum requirements set forth in Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Services, Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d669 [, including the requirement that the employer bear all costs unique to the arbitral forum] (Fittante v. Palm Springs Motors, Inc. (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 719-720, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 659).

[Optional] H. Consumer Legal Remedies Act Provides for Unwaivable Rights. The Consumer Legal Remedies Act (Civ. Code § 1750 et seq.) is a consumer protection statute enacted for a public purpose and provides certain unwaivable rights. Thus, a consumer faced with an arbitration provision in attempting to vindicate his or her rights under the Consumer Legal Remedies Act, may contest the arbitration provision on the basis that it contravenes public rights, a defense which is a generally available contract defense, and thus not preempted by the Federal Arbitration Act (Gutierrez v. Autowest, Inc. (2004) 114 Cal. App. 4th 77, 95, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 267).

[Optional] I. Vehicle Leasing Act Provides for Unwaivable Rights. The Vehicle Leasing Act (Civ. Code § 2987.5 et seq.) is a consumer protection statute enacted for a public purpose and provides certain unwaivable rights. Thus, a consumer faced with an arbitration provision in attempting to vindicate his or her rights under the Consumer Legal Remedies Act, may contest the arbitration provision on the basis that it contravenes public rights, a defense which is a generally available contract defense, and thus not preempted by the Federal Arbitration Act (Gutierrez v. Autowest, Inc. (2004) 114 Cal. App. 4th 77, 95, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 267).

[Optional] J. Arbitral Costs to Vindicate Rights Under Consumer Protection Statute. When the consumer sues under a state consumer protection statute providing for unwaivable rights, the court should not shift all arbitral costs to the nonconsumer party, but should imply an agreement that unaffordable fees will not be allocated to the consumer at any in point in the arbitration process. The determination of what is affordable must be made on a case by case basis, with the consumer bearing the burden of proof as to what he or she cannot afford (Gutierrez v. Autowest (2004) 114 Cal. App. 4th 77, 83, 96-99, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 267).

[Optional] K. Little May Be Applied Retroactively. Little v. Auto Stiegler, Inc. (2003) 29 Cal. 4th 1064, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 892, 63 P.3d 979* , which determined that the minimum safeguards for vindication of unwaivable statutory rights should also be required of an arbitration agreement under which one seeks to establish a so-called Tameny claim for wrongful termination in violation of public policy may be given retroactive effect because that decision did not disturb a settled rule of law (Abramson v. Juniper Networks, Inc. (2004) 115 Cal. App. 4th 638, 660-661, 9 Cal. Rptr. 3d 422 ; see Tameny v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 167, 178, 164 Cal. Rptr. 839, 610 P.2d 1330).

[Optional] L. Armendariz Minimum Requirements Apply to Claims Under Franchise Investment Act. The franchise context is similar enough to mandatory employee/employer arbitration that the minimum safeguards first imposed in Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Services, Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669 apply to franchisees' claims under the California Franchise Investment Law (Corp. Code § 31000 et seq.) (Independent Assn. of Mailbox Center Owners, Inc. v. Superior Court (Mail Boxes Etc., USA, Inc.) (2005) 133 Cal. App. 4th 396, 416, 34 Cal. Rptr. 3d 659 (only fee-shifting was at issue)).

[Optional] M. Armendariz Minimum Requirements Apply to Claims Under Cartwright Act. The franchise context is similar enough to mandatory employee/employer arbitration that the minimum safeguards first imposed by Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Services, Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669 apply to franchisees' claims under the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code § 16700 et seq.) (Independent Assn. of Mailbox Center Owners, Inc. v. Superior Court (Mail Boxes Etc., USA, Inc.) (2005) 133 Cal. App. 4th 396, 416, 34 Cal. Rptr. 3d 659 (only fee-shifting was at issue)).

[Optional] N. Armendariz Minimum Requirements Apply to Claims Under Uniform Trade Secrets Act. The franchise context is similar enough to mandatory employee/employer arbitration that the minimum safeguards first imposed in Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Services, Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669 apply to franchisees' claims under the Uniform Trade Secrets Act (Civ. Code § 3426 et seq.) (Independent Assn. of Mailbox Center Owners, Inc. v. Superior Court (Mail Boxes Etc., USA, Inc.) (2005) 133 Cal. App. 4th 396, 416, 34 Cal. Rptr. 3d 659 (only fee-shifting was at issue)).

[Optional] O. Armendariz Minimum Requirements Apply to Claims Under Unfair Competition Law. The franchise context is similar enough to mandatory employee/employer arbitration that the minimum safeguards first imposed by Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Services, Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669 apply to franchisees' claims under the Unfair Competition Law (Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq.) (Independent Assn. of Mailbox Center Owners, Inc. v. Superior Court (Mail Boxes Etc., USA, Inc.) (2005) 133 Cal. App. 4th 396, 416, 34 Cal. Rptr. 3d 659 (only fee shifting was at issue)).

[Optional] P. Court Must Make Initial Fee-Shifting Determination Even if Arbitrator Has Authority to Allocate Arbitral Fees and Costs. When unwaivable statutory rights are involved that affect the public interest, and not just the claimant personally, it is not enough that the rules under which the arbitration will be conducted allow the arbitrator to make an appropriate allocation of arbitral costs and fees. The trial court must conduct proceedings before ordering arbitration to determine if any fee-shifting order is necessary at that point to allow the claimant to go forward in arbitration to vindicate those statutory rights (Independent Assn. of Mailbox Center Owners, Inc. v. Superior Court (Mail Boxes Etc., USA, Inc.) (2005) 133 Cal. App. 4th 396, 416-417, 34 Cal. Rptr. 3d 659).

[Optional] Q. Armendariz Minimum Requirements Apply to Claims Under Ralph Civil Rights Act. The one-way provision allowing attorney-fee awards only to plaintiffs in the Ralph Civil Rights Act, Civ. Code, § 51.7, is an unwaivable statutory right and renders the award of attorney fees in this case invalid to the same extent as an award of inappropriate arbitral expenses (D.C. v. Harvard-Westlake Sch. (2009) 176 Cal. App. 4th 836, 866, 98 Cal. Rptr. 3d 300).

[Optional] R. Armendariz Minimum Requirements Apply to Claims Under Tom Bane Civil Rights Act. The one-way provision allowing attorney-fee awards only to plaintiffs in the Tom Bane Civil Rights Act, Civ. Code, § 52.1, is an unwaivable statutory right and renders the award of attorney fees in this case invalid to the same extent as an award of inappropriate arbitral expenses (D.C. v. Harvard-Westlake Sch. (2009) 176 Cal. App. 4th 836, 866, 98 Cal. Rptr. 3d 300).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of a petition to compel arbitration of a claim under an unwaivable statutory or common law right when the arbitration agreement at issue provides for the safeguards listed in Paragraph A. These safeguards or minimum requirements were first established in a case involving a claim under California's Fair Employment and Housing Act (Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.), and have been explicitly extended to claims under Lab. Code § 970 (misrepresentation inducing employee to move to accept employment) (Optional Paragraph G) and to the common law cause ofaction for termination of employment for a reason contrary to public policy (Optional Paragraph F). Nevertheless, the authorities also speak in terms of unwaivable rights, whatever their source. If the requirement with respect to discovery, an award that includes findings and conclusions, or imposition of forum costs on the petitioner is not expressly provided by the agreement, counsel should stipulate to them and/or include the relevant optional paragraph providing for those safeguards to be implied based on the agreement to arbitrate. The bracketed language at the end of optional Paragraph D regarding the federal law and cases is from Little v. Auto Stiegler, Inc. (2003) 29 Cal. 4th 1064, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 892, 63 P.3d 979 (discussed at [3][d], below) and should be used if counsel expects a challenge based on the Federal Arbitration Act or cases interpreting the FAA. Optional Paragraphs H and I are for use if rights are sought to be vindicated under either the Consumer Legal Remedies Act or the Vehicle Leasing Act. Optional Paragraph J addresses the cost-shifting mechanism to be applied in a consumer case. This form is not intended to be a complete memorandum, but is to be combined with the form at § 20.10 and any others applicable to the particular situation [see, e.g., §§ 20.20, 20.21].

Optional Paragraphs L through O are for use to support the contention that claims under those statutes are subject to the minimum Armendariz requirements. Optional Paragraph P is for use to support the contention that an immediate hearing regarding allocation of arbitral fees and expenses is necessary to allow the claimant to go forward in arbitration to vindicate unwaivable statutory claims. It will be most useful when the claimant must pay a large fee in order to initiate the arbitration process.

Note that Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Services, Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669 was decided at a time when the issue of whether the Federal Arbitration Act applied to employment contracts, with respect to which the Ninth Circuit maintained the minority position that it does not [see Craft v. Campbell Soup Co. (9th Cir. 1998) 177 F.3d 1083] , and was before the 2001 United States Supreme Court case of Circuit City Stores, Inc. v. Adams (2001) 532 U.S. 105, 121 S. Ct. 1302, 149 L. Ed. 2d 234 which has abrogated the Ninth Circuit position. As discussed at [3][a], below, Armendariz avoided the issue by determining the primary issue under the California Arbitration Act (Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Services, Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 97-98, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669) although Little v. Auto Stiegler, Inc. (2003) 29 Cal. 4th 1064, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 892, 63 P.3d 979 (discussed at [3][a] and [d], below) did consider arguments based on the Federal Arbitration Act and cases interpreting it).

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, argument should show that the arbitration clause at issue is broad enough to encompass FEHA claims and should specify the provisions that establish the required safeguards, or at least to not prohibit interpreting the agreement to imply the necessary safeguards.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement)].

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Memoranda

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

For forms regarding claims by employees whose employment was terminated for a reason contrary to public policy, see Ch. 100, Employer and Employee: Wrongful Termination and Discipline .

[d] Opposing Memoranda

For a form to oppose this one and establish that arbitration of claims involving unwaivable rights cannot be compelled because the particular arbitration agreement does not contain the safeguards necessary to vindicate those rights, see Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.22.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Requirements for Arbitration of Unwaivable Statutory or Common Law Right

Plaintiff in Little v. Auto Stiegler, Inc. (2003) 29 Cal. 4th 1064, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 892, 63 P.3d 979 , sued his former employer for tortious demotion in violation of public policy; tortious termination in violation of public policy; breach of an implied contract of continued employment; and breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, claiming defendant had first demoted him, and then terminated his employment, for investigating and reporting warranty fraud. In the first three causes of action, plaintiff sought compensatory and punitive damages. Defendant moved to compel arbitration pursuant to an arbitration provision, the primary provision of which are set out two paragraphs below. That motion was granted. After Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Services, Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669 was decided, plaintiff sought reconsideration; and the trial court denied arbitration, in part because the arbitration agreement required plaintiff to share the costs. The court of appeal reversed, finding that Armendariz did not apply to nonstatutory claims, thatthe arbitration provision was not unconscionable, and further, that under Green Tree Financial Corp. v. Randolph (2000) 531 U.S. 79, 121 S. Ct. 513, 148 L. Ed. 2d 373 , silence as to who would bear the costs of arbitration was not a basis for invalidating the agreement. The California Supreme Court granted review.

The Supreme Court affirmed in part and reversed in part, and case remanded with instructions. The Supreme Court considered four issues:

- Was the provision for review of an arbitration award of more than $50,000 by a second arbitrator, unconscionable? (The entire Court held it was.)

- Should the unconscionable arbitral review provision be severed? (The entire Court held it should.)

- Do the Armendariz minimum requirements for arbitration of unwaivable statutory claims apply also to claims, such as in this case, by an employee who alleges he or she was terminated in violation of public policy? (The Court held by a four-to-three margin that those minimum requirements were applicable.)

- Must the requirement, imposed by Armendariz, that an employer imposing mandatory arbitration on the employee pay all costs unique to arbitration be reconsidered and revised in light of Green Tree? (The Court decided by the same four-to-three margin that revision was not necessary.)

Only the last third issue is discussed here. The portion of the opinion considering the unconscionability of the arbitral

review provision is discussed at Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.91. The portion of the opinion considering severance of the arbitral review provision is discussed at § 20.86[3][a]. The portion of the opinion considering the imposition of all arbitral costs on the employer is discussed at [d], below. The arbitration provision stated in relevant part that any disputes between the parties, (including claims of discrimination and harassment) whether based on tort, contract, statutory, or equitable law, be submitted to and determined exclusively by binding arbitration under the Federal Arbitration Act (FAA), in conformity with the procedures of the California Arbitration Act (Code Civ. Proc. § 1280 et seq., including section 1283.05 and all of the act's other mandatory and permissive rights to discovery); provided, however, that: In addition to requirements imposed by law, any arbitrator must be a retired California Superior Court Judge and subject to disqualification on the same grounds as would apply to a judge of a superior court. To the extent applicable in civil actions in California courts, the following were to be applied and observed: all rules of pleading, all rules of evidence, all rights to resolution of the dispute by means of resolution by means of motions for summary judgment, judgment on the pleadings, and judgment under Code Civ. Proc. § 631.8. Resolution of the dispute had to be based solely on the law governing the claims and defenses pleaded, and the arbitrator could not invoke any basis other than controlling law, including but not limited to, notions of "just cause." Awards exceeding $50,000.00 had to include the arbitrator's written reasoned opinion and, at either party's written request within 20 days after issuance of the award, could be subject to reversal and remand, modification, or reduction following review of the record and arguments of the parties by a second arbitrator who had to proceed according to the law and procedures applicable to appellate review by the California Court of Appeal of a civil judgment following court trial.

The Supreme Court referred to plaintiff's claims of demotion and termination of employment contrary to public policy as "Tameny claims," noting that Tameny v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 167, 178, 164 Cal. Rptr. 839, 610 P.2d 1330 first impinged an employer's power to terminate employees at will by imposing the condition that employment not be terminated for a reason that is contrary to public policy (29 Cal. 4th 1064, 1083-1084) . Plaintiff argued that his Tameny claims were subject to the minimum requirements set out in Armendariz, which considered claims under the Fair Employment and Housing Act (Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.). The Supreme Court agreed, and recited those minimum requirements as follows (29 Cal. 4th 1064, 1084) :

- The arbitration agreement may not limit the damages normally available under the statute;
- There must be discovery sufficient to arbitrate the statutory claim adequately;
- There must be a written arbitration decision and judicial review sufficient to ensure the arbitrators comply with the requirements of the statute; and
- The employer must pay all types of costs that are unique to arbitration.

Those requirements were founded on the premise that certain statutory rights are unwaivable (29 Cal. 4th 1064, 1084) . This unwaivability derives from Civ. Code §§ 1668, 3513 (29 Cal. 4th 1064, 1084-1085) . Tameny claims are almost by definition unwaivable (29 Cal. 4th 1064, 1085) . The basis for such a claim must be public in that it affects society at large rather than the individual. Thus, a legitimate Tameny claim is designed to protect a public interest and therefore cannot be contravened by a private agreement. Accordingly, because an employer cannot ask the employee to waive Tameny claims, it also cannot impose on the arbitration of those claims burdens or procedural shortcomings that would preclude their vindication. Thus, the Armendariz requirements are as appropriate to the arbitration of Tameny claims as to unwaivable statutory claims (29 Cal. 4th 1064, 1086) .

The Court then discussed at length Brown v. Wheat First Securities, Inc. (D.C. Cir. 2001) 257 F.3d 821 (Brown), which came to a contrary conclusion with respect to a claim for termination in violation of public policy under District of Columbia law than did Cole v. Burns Int'l Sec. Servs. (D.C. Cir. 1997) 105 F.3d 1465 , (Cole), a case on which Armendariz relied, and which set forth requirements for arbitrating claims under title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 similar to the Armendariz requirements [See Armendariz discussion below and at [d], below]. Brown decided that those requirements should be limited to federal statutory claims, not state tort claims derived from common law, such as a Tameny claim. In deciding not to extend Cole statutory claims, the Brown court believed any other result would be inconsistent with the FAA (29 Cal. 4th 1064, 1089) . Four of the California Supreme Court Justices disagreed with Brown, at least insofar as it would preclude extension of the Armendariz requirements to Tameny claims. The majority felt the underlying rationale, in both Cole and Gilmer v. Interstate/Johnson Lane Corp. (1991) 500 U.S. 20, 26, 111 S. Ct. 1647, 114 L. Ed. 2d26 (by agreeing to arbitrate a statutory claim, one does not forgo the substantive rights afforded by the statute; Gilmer, considered by both Armendariz and Brown and discussed at § 20.21[3][a] and [d]) would apply equally to nonstatutory public rights. Those justices also believed Brown's position that only federal statutory rights could be subject to Cole's requirements, because any attempt to place conditions on arbitration based on state law would be preempted by the FAA, was incorrect because the FAA recognizes that an arbitration agreement is unenforceable on grounds that exist at law or equity for the revocation of any contract [see 9 U.S.C. § 2] (29 Cal. 4th 1064, 1090) . One such ground for refusing to enforce a contractual term is that it would force a party to forgo unwaivable public rights. The Court noted application of this rule to an employment contract that required the employee to waive claims for asbestos exposure (29 Cal. 4th 1064, 1091) .

The Court stated that the Armendariz requirements are applications of general state law contract principles regarding the unwaivability of public rights to the context of arbitration, and thus, are not preempted by the FAA. Further, under this logic, there is no need to distinguish between unwaivable statutory rights and unwaivable rights derived from common law (29 Cal. 4th 1064, 1092) . The object of the Armendariz requirements, is not to compel adjudication in place of arbitration, but to ensure minimum standards of fairness in arbitration so that employees subject to mandatory arbitration agreements can vindicate their public rights in an arbitral forum (29 Cal. 4th 1064, 1093) . After some discussion of the issue of costs [see [d], below], the Court concluded that the Armendariz requirements should be applied to an employee seeking to arbitrate a Tameny claim (29 Cal. 4th 1064, 1076-1077) . Those requirements include the availability of damages, including punitive damages; discovery sufficient to arbitrate the Tameny claim adequately; a written arbitration decision and judicial review sufficient to ensure that arbitrators have complied with the law respecting the claims, and allocation of arbitration costs so they will not unduly burden the employee. The Court found the agreement here sufficient, except as cost-sharing (29 Cal. 4th 1064, 1077) .

Plaintiffs in Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Services, Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669 , had been required, as a condition of their employment, to sign an arbitration agreement that provided their claims of wrongful termination, but no claims of the employer/defendant, would be submitted to binding arbitration pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1280 et seq. In that arbitration, their remedies were limited to recovery of a sum equal to the wages that would have been earned from the date of any discharge until the date of the arbitration award; they were not entitled to any other remedy, at law or in equity, including reinstatement and/or injunctive relief. Plaintiffs alleged a cause of action for violation of the Fair Employment and Housing Act ("FEHA" Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.) and three additional causes of action for wrongful termination based on tort and contract theories of recovery. The complaint sought general damages, punitive damages, injunctive relief, and the recovery of attorney fees and costs of suit. Defendant moved to compel arbitration. Plaintiffs claimed the arbitration agreement was unconscionable. The trial court agreed. Defendant appealed. The court of appeal reversed, finding that although the contract was one of adhesion and that the damages provision was unconscionable and contrary to public policy, the rest of the arbitration agreement should be enforced. The Supreme Court granted review.

The Supreme Court agreed with the trial court, reversed the court of appeal decision, and remanded to the court of appeal with directions to affirm the judgment of the trial court (24 Cal. 4th 83, 127) . The Supreme Court concluded that FEHA claims are in fact arbitrable if the arbitration permits an employee to vindicate his or her statutory rights. Such vindication, at a minimum, requires neutrality of the arbitrator, the provision of adequate discovery, a written decision that will permit a limited form of judicial review, and limitations on the costs of arbitration (24 Cal. 4th 83, 90-91) . The Court found several provisions of the arbitration agreement to be unconscionable, because they failed to meet the minimum requirements, because the arbitration agreement was not bilateral, and because the damages limitation that was contrary to public policy. Further, the unconscionable provisions rendered the entire arbitration agreement unenforceable (24 Cal. 4th 83, 91) .

First, the Court found Duffield v. Robertson Stephens & Co. (9th Cir. 1998) 144 F.3d 1182 , which held that the Civil Rights Act of 1991 (Pub. L. No. 102-166, 105 Stat. 1071, prohibits the enforcement of mandatory employment agreements to arbitrate claims under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, or equivalent state antidiscrimination statutes, such as the FEHA, to be unpersuasive and concluded that nothing in the 1991 Act prohibits mandatory employment arbitration agreements that encompass state and federal antidiscrimination claims (24 Cal. 4th 83, 93-96) . Then, the Court stated that it need not decide the issue of whether the Federal Arbitration Act applies to employment contracts (24 Cal. 4th 83, 97) . The Ninth Circuit in Craft v. Campbell Soup Co. (9th Cir. 1998) 177 F.3d 1083 , has held that the FAA does not apply to employment contracts. That minority position was, at the time of the Armendariz decision, before the United States Supreme Court, but has since been overruled (see Circuit City Stores, Inc. v. Adams (2001) 532 U.S. 105, 121 S. Ct. 1302, 149 L. Ed. 2d 234). However, because, the California Arbitration Act ("CAA"), specifically Code Civ. Proc. § 1280(a), defines the term "agreement," to include "agreements between employers and employees or between their respective representatives," and because the general reasons for refusing to enforce an arbitration agreement would be the same under the FAA or the CAA, the Court proceeded with its analysis (24 Cal. 4th 83, 97-98) . The Court found nothing in the language or the legislative history of the FEHA to suggest it was intended to prohibit arbitration, nor did the Court find any inherent conflict between FEHA's important protections against discrimination and arbitration (24 Cal. 4th 83, 98) .

The Court discussed Cole v. Burns Int'l Sec. Servs. (D.C. Cir., 1997) 105 F.3d 1465, 1482 , which set forth five requirements of a mandatory arbitration agreement to vindicate the employee's statutory rights under Title VII. The agreement is enforceable if it "(1) provides for neutral arbitrators, (2) provides for more than minimal discovery, (3) requires a written award, (4) provides for all of the types of relief that would otherwise be available in court, and (5) does not require employees to pay either unreasonable costs or any arbitrators' fees or expenses as a condition of access to thearbitration forum" (24 Cal. 4th 83, 101-102) . The Court said that the neutrality of the arbitrator was not at issue in this case, but that the arbitration agreement failed to measure up to the Cole requirements in all other respects (24 Cal. 4th 83, 103) .

The Court discussed each element individually; the damages limitation was contrary to public policy and unlawful (24 Cal. 4th 83, 103-104) .

Without deciding whether the employees in this case were entitled to the full range of discovery provided in Code Civ. Proc. § 1283.05, the Court said they were at least entitled to discovery sufficient to adequately arbitrate their statutory claim, including access to essential documents and witnesses, as determined by the arbitrator(s) and subject to limited judicial review pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1286.2. The Court also held that the employer, by agreeing to arbitrate the FEHA claim, had already impliedly consented to sufficient discovery. Therefore, lack of discovery was not grounds for holding the FEHA claim inarbitrable (24 Cal. 4th 83, 104-106) .

As to the written award element, the Court limited its holding to require the arbitrator to issue a written arbitration decision that will reveal, however briefly, the essential findings and conclusions on which the award is based. While written findings and conclusions are not required under the CAA [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1283.4], nothing in the present arbitration agreement precluded such written findings, and to the extent it applies to FEHA claims, the agreement must be interpreted to provide for those findings. In all other respects, the employees' claim that they are unable to vindicate their FEHA rights because of inadequate judicial review of an arbitration award was premature (24 Cal. 4th 83, 106-107) .

As to the element of costs, the Court said that for arbitration to be an adequate substitute for litigation of FEHA claims, employees cannot be compelled to resolve their antidiscrimination claims in a forum in which they must pay for what is the equivalent of the judge's time and the rental of the courtroom. FEHA implicitly prohibits such costs; and the default provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 1284.2 do not displace that prohibition. Therefore, a mandatory employment arbitration agreement that requires arbitration of FEHA claims impliedly obliges the employer to pay all types of costs that are unique to arbitration; and the absence of specific provisions on arbitration costs would not be grounds for denying the enforcement of an arbitration agreement (24 Cal. 4th 83, 107-113) .

Plaintiff in Fitz v. NCR Corp. (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 702, 13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 88 , sued her former employer for damages for breach of contract, breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, age discrimination in violation of the Fair Housing and Employment Act (FEHA; Gov. Code § 12940 et seq.) fraud, and violation of pubic policy. Defendant moved compel arbitration in accordance with its dispute resolution policy. The motion was denied, primarily because the policy did not allow for adequate discovery and required employees to arbitrate wrongful termination claims while exempting NCR from having to arbitrate its claims against employees. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed (118 Cal. App. 4th 702, 708) . The court noted that a mandatory arbitration agreement in the context of an employee's public rights must meet the following minimum requirements (118 Cal. App. 4th 702, 712-713) :

- More than minimal discovery;
- A written award;
- It must permit all types of relief that would be available in court;
- No additional costs for the employee beyond what the employee would incur if he or she were bringing the claim in court; and
- Neutral arbitrators.

The portion of the opinion addressing the inadequacy of the discovery provision is discussed at Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.122[3][c].

Plaintiff in Abramson v. Juniper Networks, Inc. (2004) 115 Cal. App. 4th 638, 655, 9 Cal. Rptr. 3d 422 , sued his former employer for damages for breach of contract, wrongful termination, fraud, misrepresentation (misrepresentations and false promises, which induced plaintiff to leave his prior employer and join defendant), termination of employment in violation of public policy, unfair competition, and defamation, and for a declaration that the arbitration provision in his employment contract was unconscionable and unenforceable. The trial court ordered the parties to arbitration. The parties disagreed about who should pay the fees to initiate arbitration: in accordance with Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Servs., Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669 (Armendariz), plaintiff claimed that defendant should pay the entire fee; defendant claimed that in accordance with the contract, each party should pay half of the fee. The American Arbitration Association (AAA) refused to act without payment. Plaintiff sought to be allowed to litigate the matter, but the trial court disagreed, saying Armendariz was not applicable because plaintiff had made no claim under the Fair Housing and Employment Act (FEHA; Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.). Plaintiff advanced $4,250--half of the initial fee, but could not pay the second bill, for an additional $6,450. Based on plaintiff's failure to make further payments, AAA terminated the arbitration proceedings. Defendant then moved for summary judgment on the ground that plaintiff had failed to exhaust his arbitration remedies. Summary judgment was granted and judgment entered thereon. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding the arbitration agreement unconscionable and unenforceable in its entirety (115 Cal. App. 4th 638, 668) . The court of appeal first noted that, contrary to defendant's contention, the validity of the arbitration agreement was within the proper scope of review (115 Cal. App. 4th 638, 648-649) . The next step in the analysis, the court said, was to determine the nature of the claims involved--whether they implicated public or private rights--because different enforceability standards apply to different types of claims. If unwaivable public rights are involved (whether statutory or non-statutory), the arbitration agreement must satisfy the minimum requirements set forth in Armendariz (115 Cal. App. 4th 638, 652, 652-654) :

- The agreement must provide for adequate discovery;
- It must require a written decision allowing limited judicial review;
- The agreement must permit the types of relief that would be available in court;
- It must limit the employee's forum costs; and
- As with all contractual arbitration, an agreement to arbitrate a public policy claim must provide for a neutral arbitrator.

Plaintiff in Fittante v. Palm Springs Motors, Inc. (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 659 , quit a job in Beverly Hills job and moved his family to the desert on the strength of the defendant/employer's representations of plentiful work of the specialized kind that plaintiff performed. Those representations proved false, but plaintiff stayed on the job, at a reduced income, because he "had very little choice financially." After almost two years, defendant terminated plaintiff's employment, allegedly because plaintiff had defrauded a vehicle repair customer. Plaintiff sued employer for fraud in the inducement, defamation, and wrongful termination in violation of public policy under Lab. Code § 970 (fraudulently inducing an employee to move to take employment). Defendant petitioned to compel arbitration based on an arbitration agreement in the employment application. The trial court granted the petition and stayed the action pending resolution by binding arbitration. Plaintiff then sought a clarifying order that the employer should be required to bear the entire cost of the arbitrator's fees because, although the arbitration agreement was silent on the matter, the action included a statutory rights claim. The trial court denied the motion to require the employer to pay the arbitrator's fees and dismissed plaintiff's action with prejudice. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. Plaintiff argued that the arbitration agreement was too vague to be valid or enforceable and that it constituted an unconscionable adhesion contract. The court of appeal concluded that the arbitration agreement was not unlawfully vague, that it was an adhesion contract, but except as to the "appeal" provision, which was severable, was not unconscionable, and that because of a claim based on unwaivable statutory rights under Lab. Code § 970, the employer had to bear the cost of the arbitrator's fees (105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 710, 714-715) . Defendant claimed the requirements imposed by Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Services, Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669 (hereinafter Armendariz, discussed above) were not applicable here, because Armendariz applied only to claims under the Fair Employment and Housing Act (Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.) (105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 717) . Those requirements mandate the following minimum procedural requirements. The arbitration agreement must do all of the following (105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 717, 720-721) :

- Provide for neutral arbitrators,
- Provides for more than minimal discovery,
- Require a written award,
- Provides for all of the types of relief that would otherwise be available in court, and
- Not require employees to pay either unreasonable costs or any arbitrators' fees or expenses as a condition of access to the arbitration forum.

The court of appeal acknowledged that although some statutory rights may be waived, others are deemed unwaivable, specifically statutory rights established for a public reason cannot be waived or otherwise contravened by a private agreement (105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 717-718) . The court found that Lab. Code § 970 was enacted "for a public reason," and to vindicate a public policy. Although its original purpose was to protect migrant workers from the abuses by unscrupulous employers and potential employers, the language of the statute is by no means restricted to agricultural laborers, and has been properly applied to other kinds of employment. The court of appeal noted that an employee's rights under Lab. Code § 970 had previously been held unwaivable in Mercuro v. Superior Court (2002) 96 Cal. App. 4th 167, 116 Cal. Rptr. 2d 671 (discussed in Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.91[3][c], arbitration agreement found unconscionable and unenforceable) (105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 719) . Consequently, an employee's statutory rights under Lab. Code § 970 are subject to Armendariz analysis. That is, any mandatory arbitration of employee grievances must be capable of vindicating the statutory right protected by Lab. Code § 970 (105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 719-720) . After consideration of plaintiff's claims of unconscionability and severance of the unconscionable appeal provision, discussed at Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.91[3][e] and § 20.86[3][a], respectively, the court of appeal reversed and remanded with directions that the order for arbitration be modified to indicate that the employer must pay the costs of arbitration, and that the appeal clause of the arbitration agreement not be enforced (105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 727) .

The court of appeal found the agreement here passed muster under Armendariz (105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 720) :

- The agreement incorporated the arbitration rules of the Federal Arbitration Act, and the procedures of the California Arbitration Act, each of which requires neutral arbitrators. Further, the agreement provided that any arbitrator selected be a retired California superior court judge, thus trained and well-versed in the precepts and practices of neutral decision-making (105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 721) .

- By virtue of stating that arbitration be conducted in conformity with the procedures of the California Arbitration Act (Code Civ. Proc. § 1280 et seq., including section 1283.05 and all other rights to discovery), the agreement provided for more than minimal discovery (105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 721-722) .

- By virtue of incorporating Code Civ. Proc. § 1283.4, the arbitration agreement required a written award (105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 722) .

- The agreement implicitly complies with the requirement under Armendariz that all types of relief otherwise available in court be afforded to vindicate plaintiff's statutory rights (105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 722-723) .

- Although the court of appeal acknowledged the sticking point was the Armendariz requirement that the employee not be required to bear unreasonable costs or to pay arbitrators' fees as a condition of access to the arbitral forum, and found that the trial court erred in ordering otherwise (105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 723) ; it concluded that because the agreement itself was silent on thepayment of arbitration fees, and Code Civ. Proc. § 1284.2 (fees to be shared pro rata unless agreement provides otherwise), is a default provision which must yield to a more specific legislative intent, the agreement could be construed consistent with the dictates of Armendariz (105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 728-729) .

The facts and procedural background of Craig v. Brown & Root, Inc. (2000) 84 Cal. App. 4th 416, 100 Cal. Rptr. 2d. 818 , are discussed at § 20.10[3][a]. Turning to plaintiff's contention that the arbitration agreement was unconscionable, the court said that Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Services, Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 91, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669 held that mandatory employment arbitration agreements are enforceable if the arbitration permits the employees to vindicate their statutory rights; that is, if the arbitration meets certain minimum requirements, including neutrality of the arbitrator, the provision of adequate discovery, a written decision that will permit a limited form of judicial review, and limitations on the costs of arbitration. The court concluded that defendant's arbitration program meets those requirements (84 Cal. App. 4th 416, 422-423) :

- It provides for a neutral arbitrator.

- The cost to the employee is a mere $50, substantially less than the filing fee for a superior court action. The balance is paid by defendant. Those employees who choose to have a lawyer involved in the process can receive up to $2,500 from defendant for that purpose.

- Adequate discovery is available (apparently by virtue of the implied agreement set forth in Armendariz).

- All remedies (punitive damages, attorney's fees, injunctive relief, and so on) that would be available in court are available in the arbitration. The arbitration brochure stated: "If you win, you can be awarded anything you might seek through a court of law."

- The arbitrator is required to issue a written award that is subject to judicial review.

- All claims must be arbitrated.

Plaintiff in Camargo v. California Portland Cement Company (2001) 86 Cal. App. 4th 995, 103 Cal. Rptr. 2d 841 submitted her grievances based on sex discrimination and sexual harassment to arbitration pursuant to a collective bargaining agreement that required arbitration of any dispute, difference, or grievance between the company and an employee. Although the CBA stated that employer would not discharge or discriminate against any employee because of that employee's race, color, religion, age, sex, or national origin, it did not cite or refer to any federal or state anti-discrimination statute. The arbitrator ruled against plaintiff and the award was confirmed in federal district court. Plaintiff then sued in state court alleging, among others, claims for sex discrimination and sexual harassment under California's Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA; Gov. Code § 12940(h) and (i)). Defendants demurred, contending that the FEHA claims were collaterally estopped by the arbitration award. The trial court sustained the demurrer. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, finding that the record before them did not show that the arbitration was conducted pursuant to procedures that allowed for the full litigation and fair adjudication of the FEHA claims (86 Cal. App. 4th 995, 999, 1018-1019, 1021) .

[b] Implied Agreement to Adequate Discovery

Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Services, Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669 , is discussed at [a], above.

[c] Agreement Interpreted to Require Findings and Conclusions in Award

Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Services, Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669 , is discussed at [a], above.

Fittante v. Palm Springs Motors, Inc. (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 659 , is discussed at [a], above.

[d] Agreement Interpreted to Require Employer to Pay Forum Costs of Arbitration

The facts and procedural background of Little v. Auto Stiegler, Inc. (2003) 29 Cal. 4th 1064, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 892, 63 P.3d 979 , and the portion of the opinion considering the application of the Armendariz minimum requirements in general to a Tameny claim are discussed at [a], above. Specifically, with regard to arbitration costs, the principle that arbitration costs may prevent arbitration claimants from pursuing their public rights effectively would apply with equal force to Tameny claims as to FEHA claims or to federal statutory claims. Nothing in the FAA prevents states from controlling arbitration costs imposed by adhesive contracts so that the remedy of prosecuting state statutory or common law public rights through arbitration is not rendered illusory (29 Cal. 4th 1064, 1093) .

Nothing in the United States Supreme Court case law lead the majority to believe that a state requirement shifting arbitration costs in mandatory employment agreements to the employer pursuant to established state law contract doctrine violates the FAA (29 Cal. 4th 1064, 1094) . As in Armendariz, the majority found Code Civ. Proc. § 1284.2 (which provides that each party bear a pro rata share of costs unless the agreement provides otherwise) no bar to imposing proportionally greater costs on the employer (29 Cal. 4th 1064, 1094-1095) . Thus, an agreement to arbitrate a claim of wrongful termination contrary to public policy must be interpreted to include implicitly an agreement to proportion costs in a manner that is reasonable for the employee/claimant in order to prevent the de facto waiver of unwaivable rights (29 Cal. 4th 1064, 1095-1096) .

With respect to the arbitration agreement's silence on the issue of costs, plaintiff contended such silence rendered the agreement unenforceable, while defendant contended that the Armendariz's cost-shifting rule had been supplanted by the United States Supreme Court decision in Green Tree, discussed at § 20.21[3][f] (29 Cal. 4th1064, 1094-1095) . The majority of the Court disagreed with both contentions. Certainly, silence on the issue of costs would not be grounds for denying enforcement of the agreement, but would instead require the employer to bear the costs unique to arbitral forum (29 Cal. 4th 1064, 1095) . The Court discussed Green Tree and cases interpreting it, mostly in the employment context (29 Cal. 4th 1064, 1095) , and came to the conclusion that while Green Tree and Armendariz agree on two fundamental tenets: that silence about costs in an arbitration agreement is not grounds for denying a motion to compel arbitration, and that arbitration costs can present significant barriers to the vindication of statutory rights, there might be significant differences between the two cases. Although Green Tree did not elaborate on the kinds of cost sharing arrangements that would be unenforceable, dicta in Green Tree, and several federal cases interpreting it, suggested that federal law requires only that employers not impose "prohibitively expensive" arbitration costs on the employee, and that determination of whether such costs have been imposed are to be made on a case-by-case basis.

Armendariz, on the other hand, categorically imposes costs unique to arbitration on employers when unwaivable rights pursuant to a mandatory employment arbitration agreement are at stake (29 Cal. 4th 1064, 1095) . The Court reiterated its finding that Armendariz's cost-shifting requirements were not preempted by the FAA; nor was it a barrier to the enforcement of arbitration agreements, nor did it improperly disfavor arbitration in comparison to other contract clauses. Rather, it was derived from state contract law principles regarding the unwaivability of certain public rights in the context of a contract of adhesion (29 Cal. 4th 1064, 1095) . Further, the Court noted it had rejected the case-by-case approach to apportionment of costs in Armendariz because the individualized consideration of an employee's ability to pay arbitration costs would further complicate the case-by-case calculation of prohibitive expense (29 Cal. 4th 1064, 1095) . Similarly, Armendariz considered and rejected the notion that there was an advantage to apportioning arbitration costs at the conclusion of the arbitration rather than at the outset, believing that postarbitration apportionment would create a sense of risk and uncertainty among employees that could discourage the arbitration of meritorious claims (29 Cal. 4th 1064, 1095) . The majority saw no reason to reevaluate these conclusions in light of Green Tree and its progeny (29 Cal. 4th 1064, 1095) . The majority concluded that it did not believe that the FAA required state courts to adopt precisely the same means as federal courts to ensure that the vindication of public rights would not be stymied by burdensome arbitration costs, and continued to believe that Armendariz represents the soundest approach to the problem of arbitration costs in the context of mandatory employment arbitration. On remand the Court directed the trial court to require the employer to pay all types of costs that are unique to arbitration (29 Cal. 4th 1064, 1095) .

Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Services, Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669 , is discussed at [a], above. In the beginning of its discussion of the costs issue, the Court again referred to Cole v.

Burns Int'l Sec. Servs. (D.C. Cir., 1997) 105 F.3d 1465, 1484 , and noted that Cole considered the following fees that an employee might be obliged to pay: arbitrators' fees ranging from $500 to $1,000 per day or more, a $500 filing fee, and administrative fees of $150 per day, in addition to room rental and court reporter fees (24 Cal. 4th 83, 107-108) . The Court further noted its decision in California Teachers Assn. v. State of Cal. (1999) 20 Cal. 4th 327, 355-356, 84 Cal. Rptr. 2d 425, 975 P.2d 622 as precedent for requiring the other party to pay administrative costs to vindicate statutory rights and as confirming the principle that statutory or constitutional rights may be transgressed as much by the imposition of undue costs as by outright denial (24 Cal. 4th 83, 109) .

The facts and procedural background of Abramson v. Juniper Networks, Inc. (2004) 115 Cal. App. 4th 638, 9 Cal. Rptr. 3d 422 , are discussed at [a], above. The portion of the opinion refusing to imply an agreement that employer pay all arbitral costs is discussed in Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.122[3][a].

[e] Armendariz May Be Applied Retroactively

Plaintiff in Blake v. Ecker (2001) 93 Cal. App. 4th 728, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 422 , worked for defendant. She claimed sexual harassment and that despite her complaints her harasser, rather than she, was allowed to remain employed, while she was fired, on April 28, 1998. On September 10, 1998, she filed her complaint, which contained six causes of action, including one for violation of the Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA; Gov. Code, § 12940 et seq.). Her complaint also included a demand for a jury trial, but her employment agreement contained an arbitration clause. Defendants moved to compel arbitration. Plaintiff argued the FEHA claim was not subject to arbitration. The motion to compel arbitration was granted on December 3, 1998, and plaintiff's action was ordered stayed pending the arbitration. The next day, December 4, 1998, the Court of Appeal issued its decision in a case entitled Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Services, Inc., which held that an employer-imposed contractual agreement for arbitration was enforceable, even if it lacked a mutuality of remedies. On March 9, 1999, the California Supreme Court granted review.

While Armendariz was pending before the Supreme Court, neither party took any action to initiate the arbitration proceedings ordered by the trial court. On August 24, 2000, the Supreme Court handed down its decision in Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Services, Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669 . On October 26, 2000, defendants filed a motion with the trial court to dismiss plaintiff's complaint for failure to prosecute pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. §§ 583.410 and 583.420 and former Cal Rules of Ct., Rules 372 and 373 [see now Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 3.1340 and 3.1342], arguing that plaintiff had never sought to commence the arbitration, that more than two years had elapsed since plaintiff had commenced the action, and that they had been prejudiced by the delay. Plaintiff filed a motion for an order vacating the prior order compelling arbitration and staying the action, arguing (1) that at the time the motion to compel was heard (Dec. 2, 1998), there was a split of authority on the validity of employment arbitration agreements, (2) that Armendariz resolved the issue, (3) and that in accordance with that decision, her arbitration agreement was unenforceable. Therefore, plaintiff contended, the trial court should vacate its original order compelling arbitration and lift the stay of proceedings so that her action could go forward. The motions were heard on the same day. The trial court granted the motion to dismiss and refused to consider plaintiff's motion considering itmoot, given the dismissal. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, concluding that once the trial court granted defendants' motion to compel arbitration, it no longer had jurisdiction to hear or rule on defendants' motion to dismiss (93 Cal. App. 4th 728, 733) . That portion of the opinion is discussed in Ch. 20D, Arbitration: Dismissing, § 20D.20[3][a]. Because the trial court should have ruled on plaintiff's motion to vacate the prior order to compel arbitration in light of the Supreme Court's then recent decision in Armendariz, the court of appeal also considered, and held that, Armendariz must be applied retroactively (93 Cal. App. 4th 728, 733) . The court of appeal noted that on remand, the critical question before the trial court will be whether Armendariz applies to make the parties' arbitration agreement unenforceable. The first issue as to the applicability of Armendariz is retroactivity. For the guidance of the trial court, and in the interests of judicial economy, the court of appeal chose to shall resolve that issue of law. The court noted that the general rule is that judicial decisions are given retroactive effect, although courts sometimes make an exception to this general rule when the decision changed a settled rule on which the parties had relied. But when a court is merely deciding a legal question, not changing a previously settled rule, there is no reason not to apply a judicial decision to a pending case. While a court might decide not to apply a new Supreme Court decision that overrules an appellate court decision that predated an arbitration, it would be much more likely to deny retroactive application to a Supreme Court decision that overruled an earlier Supreme Court decision (93 Cal. App. 4th 728, 740) . It would be even more likely to deny retroactive effect to a decision that disapproved of a long-standing and widespread practice expressly approved by a near-unanimous body of lower court authorities (93 Cal. App. 4th 728, 740-741) . Here, however, there was no "settled rule" as to whether, and under what circumstances, an employer/employee arbitration agreement was enforceable, nor was the enforcement of such agreements, regardless of their terms, something that had become " 'a long-standing and widespread practice expressly approved by a near-unanimous body of lower court authorities.' " Rather, this was an unresolved issue pursued by parties, representing opposing points of view, who were determined to obtain a final decision on the matter from the highest court of this state. The decision in Armendariz was the result of this legal battle. Thus, under settled principles, Armandariz may be applied retroactively (93 Cal. App. 4th 728, 741) .

[f] Armendariz Minimum Requirements Apply to Tameny Claims

Little v. Auto Stiegler, Inc. (2003) 29 Cal. 4th 1064, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 892, 63 P.3d 979 , is discussed at [a], above.

Tameny v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 167, 164 Cal. Rptr. 839, 610 P.2d 1330 , is discussed in Ch. 100, Employer and Employee: Wrongful Termination .

The facts and procedural background of Abramson v. Juniper Networks, Inc. (2004) 115 Cal. App. 4th 638, 9 Cal. Rptr. 3d 422 , are discussed at [a], above. The portion of the opinion addressing application of the Armendariz standards to Tameny claims is set forth at [k], below.

[g] Armendariz Minimum Requirements Apply to Claims Under Labor Code Section 970

Fittante v. Palm Springs Motors, Inc. (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 659 , is discussed at [a], above.

[h] Consumer Legal Remedies Act Provides for Unwaivable Rights

Plaintiffs in Gutierrez v. Autowest, Inc. (2004) 114 Cal. App. 4th 77, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 267 , responded to an advertisement by defendant and entered into a vehicle lease. The terms of the lease were different form the terms advertised, and plaintiffs, believing they were the victims of a "bait and switch," sued, for themselves and for others similarly situated, for damages for fraud, negligent misrepresentation, violations of the Vehicle Leasing Act (Civ. Code § 2987.5 et seq.; "VLA"), the Unfair Competition Law (Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq.), the Consumer Legal Remedies Act (Civ. Code § 1750 et seq.; "CLRA"), and the false advertising law (Bus. & Prof. Code § 17500 et seq.). Though plaintiffs did not know it, the lease agreement required arbitration in accordance with the rules of the American Arbitration Association. Defendant moved to compel arbitration. Plaintiffs resisted arbitration on the ground that they could not afford to pay the initial arbitration fees, estimated to be $8,000. The trial court found the cost provision was not severable and denied the petition to compel arbitration. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed and remanded with directions to the trial court to reconsider the severance of the provision requiring a fee to initiate the arbitration process in accordance with the rules it discussed (114 Cal. App. 4th 77, 86-87, 101) . The court of appeal considered itself faced with two issues: whether the cost provision was unconscionable and whether the arbitration clause constituted a private agreement impairing the exercise of unwaivable statutory rights enacted for a public purpose. The court of appeal found the agreement both procedurally and substantively unconscionable. Substantive unconscionability resulted from the requirement that plaintiffs pay substantial fees to initiate arbitration without any method for them to obtain waiver of costs in excess of their ability to pay. Consumers seeking to vindicate unwaivable statutory claims are entitled to protection from the imposition of unreasonable forum costs (114 Cal. App. 4th 77, 86) . While consumers seeking to vindicate unwaivable statutory claims cannot shift all arbitral costs to the nonconsumer party, the agreement cannot impose forum costs in excess of the consumer's ability to pay (114 Cal. App. 4th 77, 86-87) . The arbitration agreement imposed two classes of fees: those that had to be paid before any hearing was held and those imposed only after an arbitrator had exercised discretion to allocate them to a party (114 Cal. App. 4th 77, 90) . The portion of the opinion considering severability is discussed at § 20.86[3][a]. The court cited Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Services, Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 100-101, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669 (Armendariz) in addressing the defense of impairing unwaivable statutory rights, but did not discuss any of the Armendariz criteria except costs (114 Cal. App. 4th 77, 94-95) , perhaps because in its consideration of unconscionability, the court found plaintiffs had waived any instances of substantive unconscionability other than the cost provision by not raising them in the trial court (114 Cal. App. 4th 77, 93) . The court found that both the CLRA and theVLA were consumer protection statutes enacted for a public purpose and providing certain unwaivable rights. Thus, a consumer faced with an arbitration provision in attempting to vindicate his or her rights under those statutes may contest the arbitration provision on the basis that it contravenes public rights, a defense which is a generally available contract defense, and thus not preempted by the Federal Arbitration Act (114 Cal. App. 4th 77, 95) .

[i] Vehicle Leasing Act Provides for Unwaivable Rights

Gutierrez v. Autowest, Inc. (2004) 114 Cal. App. 4th 77, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 267 , is discussed in [h], above.

[j] Arbitral Costs to Vindicate Rights Under Consumer Protection Statute

The facts and procedural background of Gutierrez v. Autowest, Inc. (2004) 114 Cal. App. 4th 77, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 267 , are discussed in [h], above.

The court of appeal decided that it would imply in the arbitration clause an agreement that unaffordable fees will not be allocated to the consumer at any point in the arbitration process (114 Cal. App. 4th 77, 83) . The court of appeal noted that the Armendariz approach to the costs issue, which is to shift unique arbitral costs totally to the other party, has only been applied in the employer-employee context, and was unwilling to apply that approach in a consumer case (114 Cal. App. 4th 77, 96-97) . The court of appeal said in a consumer case, the consumer's ability to pay has to be decided on a case by case basis, with the consumer bearing the burden of proof. Code Civ. Proc. § 1284.3(b), while not dispositive, and only applicable to indigents, provides direction (114 Cal. App. 4th 77, 97) . Noting that unaffordable fees the consumer must pay to initiate the process of arbitration of unwaivable rights are unconscionable, the court of appeal instructed the trial court to consider severing the provision requiring the consumer to post the administrative fee and enforce the remainder of the agreement (114 Cal. App. 4th 77, 98-99) . The arbitrator's fees alone in this case would average $2,500 per day. Although the AAA's own rules allow the arbitrator to allocate costs and expenses "as appropriate," the court of appeal suggested implying an agreement that unaffordable fees would not be allocated to the consumer (114 Cal. App. 4th 77, 99) . The court of appeal said if costs were allocated at the time of the award, the arbitrator would know the magnitude of those costs, the size of the award, what the consumers could afford, and whether there were other class members who could share the costs. The cost allocation could be reviewed on a petition to vacate or confirm the award. Although perhaps in excess of the review allowed by the California statutes governing review of an arbitration awards, the court of appeal felt sure this extended review was contemplated by both California and federal cases (114 Cal. App. 4th 77, 100) .

[k] Little May Be Applied Retroactively

The facts and procedural background of Abramson v. Juniper Networks, Inc. (2004) 115 Cal. App. 4th 638, 9 Cal. Rptr. 3d 422 , are discussed at [a], above. Little v. Auto Stiegler, Inc. (2003) 29 Cal. 4th 1064, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 892, 63 P.3d 979 (Little) was decided after the trial court in this case had granted summary judgment. Like Little, this case involved a Tameny claim for wrongful termination in violation of public policy (115 Cal. App. 4th 638, 653 ; Tameny v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 167, 178, 164 Cal. Rptr. 839, 610 P.2d 1330). Generally, a judicial decision is given retroactive effect unless that decision changed a settled rule on which the parties had relied. Because Little did not disturb a settled rule, the court of appeal failed to see any reason not to retroactively apply Little to this case (115 Cal. App. 4th 638, 660) . In fact, the court of appeal noted that the trial court itself acknowledged the law in this area was uncertain at the time summary judgment had been granted, given that Little was then pending in the Supreme Court. Noting that Armendariz had been applied retroactively, the court decided that Little also should be applied retroactively, thus making the Armendariz minimum requirements applicable to this case (115 Cal. App. 4th 638, 653, 660-661) .

[l] Armendariz Minimum Requirements Apply to Claims Under Franchise Investment Act

The facts and procedural background of Independent Assn. of Mailbox Center Owners, Inc. v. Superior Court (Mail Boxes Etc., USA, Inc.) (2005) 133 Cal. App. 4th 396, 34 Cal. Rptr. 3d 659 , and the portion of the opinion considering consolidation of the arbitrations is discussed at § 20.13[3][f]. The portion of the opinion addressing the limitations on statutory remedies awardable by the arbitrator is discussed at Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.91[3][l]. The trial court refused to allocate the costs of arbitration, finding that the franchisees had failed to show it would be impossible for them to afford arbitration. Franchisees claimed this was error under Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Services, Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669 (Armendariz), discussed at § 20.23[3][a]. The court had previously, noted and stated again that the franchisee/franchisor situation was similar to the employer/employee situation in that the franchisees' livelihoods were involved and they had relatively less bargaining power. To qualify as a claim that will justify a cost-shifting order, a statutory right must be involved, and that right must invoke substantive and procedural rights not just for the benefit of the individual claimant, but also for public purposes. The court discussed various statutes which have been held to warrant fee-shifting orders and Boghos v. Certain Underwriters of Lloyd's of London (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 495, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 787, 115 P.3d 68 , in which the California Supreme Court refused to extend the Armendariz safeguards to insurance disputes involving either breach of contract claims or claims for breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing. The court of appeal concluded that the franchisees claims under the California Franchise Investment Law (Corp. Code § 31000 et seq.), the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code § 16700 et seq.), the Uniform Trade Secrets Act (Civ. Code § 3426 et seq.) and the Unfair Competition Law (Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq.) affected the public interest and thus appeared to fall all or in part within the rules of Armendariz, while noting that there could be no fee-shifting with respect to the franchisees' common law claims for breach of contract, interference with contractual rights and prospective economic advantage, or defamation. Although AAA Rule R-43 gave the arbitrator authority to assess and apportion fees as he or she found appropriate, the court of appeal said that at this point in the proceedings, thefranchisees had made a prima facie showing that some of their statutory claims were the type that is entitled to an advance fee allocation ruling, before the arbitration proceedings take place, to the extent that fee allocation would be necessary to enable them to vindicate those statutory rights. The record was insufficient for the court of appeal to make the allocation, so it instructed the trial court to conduct further proceedings regarding the requests for fee-shifting to determine what fee allocations, in any, were necessary to enable the franchisees to go forward in arbitration to vindicate any unwaivable statutory claims that affect the public interest and were not personal to the franchisees.

[m] Armendariz Minimum Requirements Apply to Claims Under Cartwright Act

Independent Assn. of Mailbox Center Owners, Inc. v. Superior Court (Mail Boxes Etc., USA, Inc.) (2005) 133 Cal. App. 4th 396, 34 Cal. Rptr. 3d 659 , is discussed at § 20.23[3][l].

[n] Armendariz Minimum Requirements Apply to Claims Under Uniform Trade Secrets Act

Independent Assn. of Mailbox Center Owners, Inc. v. Superior Court (Mail Boxes Etc., USA, Inc.) (2005) 133 Cal. App. 4th 396, 34 Cal. Rptr. 3d 659 , is discussed at § 20.23[3][l].

[o] Armendariz Minimum Requirements Apply to Claims Under Unfair Competition Law

Independent Assn. of Mailbox Center Owners, Inc. v. Superior Court (Mail Boxes Etc., USA, Inc.) (2005) 133 Cal. App. 4th 396, 34 Cal. Rptr. 3d 659 , is discussed at § 20.23[3][l].

[p] Court Must Make Initial Fee-Shifting Determination Even if Arbitrator Has Authority to Allocate Arbitral Fees and Costs

Independent Assn. of Mailbox Center Owners, Inc. v. Superior Court (Mail Boxes Etc., USA, Inc.) (2005) 133 Cal. App. 4th 396, 34 Cal. Rptr. 3d 659 , is discussed at § 20.23[3][l].

[q] Armendariz Minimum Requirements Apply to Claims Under Ralph Civil Rights Act

In D.C. v. Harvard-Westlake Sch. (2009) 176 Cal. App. 4th 836, 865-866, 98 Cal. Rptr. 3d 300 , plaintiffs, a student and his parents, sued defendant private school, alleging it was liable for death threats the student received from classmates who misperceived his sexual orientation. All of plaintiffs' claims were ordered arbitrated. The arbitrator found in favor of the school and awarded it more than $ 521,000 in arbitral expenses and attorney fees. The trial court affirmed the award and the court of appeals reversed (176 Cal. App. 4th 836, 869) . The court of appeals noted that the claims were brought under the Ralph Civil Rights Act, Civ. Code, § 51.7, and the Tom Bane Civil Rights Act, Civ. Code, § 52.1, both of which expressly provide that a court may award attorney fees only to the plaintiff (176 Cal. App. 4th 836, 864) . Citing the rule in Armendariz (see discussion in [a], above) condemning the imposition of inappropriate arbitral expenses because they would deter the pursuit of unwaivable statutory rights, the court ruled that the claimant cannot be required by agreement to pay for the cost of the arbitration of hate-crime claims under the Ralph Civil Rights Act, Civ. Code § 51.7, and the Tom Bane Civil Rights Act, Civ. Code, § 52.1, because the right to not pay costs under each Act is a nonwaivable statutory right (176 Cal. App. 4th 836, 866) .

[r] Armendariz Minimum Requirements Apply to Claims Under Tom Bane Rights Act

D.C. v. Harvard-Westlake Sch. (2009) 176 Cal. App. 4th 836, 98 Cal. Rptr. 3d 300 , is discussed in [q], above.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20 ARBITRATION: COMPELLING
PART II. FORMS
A. General Principles Related to Compelling Arbitration

2-20 California Points & Authorities §§ 20.24-20.29

[Reserved]

§§ 20.24[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20 ARBITRATION: COMPELLING
PART II. FORMS
A. General Principles Related to Compelling Arbitration

2-20 California Points & Authorities § 20.30

§ 20.30 General State Law Contract Principles

[1] FORM

THE COURT SHOULD APPLY GENERAL STATE LAW CONTRACT PRINCIPLES IN DETERMINING WHETHER THE PARTIES AGREED TO ARBITRATE THIS CONTROVERSY.

A. General State Law Contract Principles Govern. When deciding whether the parties have agreed to arbitrate a certain issue[, including arbitrability], courts generally should apply ordinary state law principles that govern the formation of contracts (First Options of Chicago, Inc. v. Kaplan (1995) 514 U.S. 938, 115 S. Ct. 1920, 131 L. Ed. 2d 985, 993 ; Sanchez v. Western Pizza Enterprises, Inc. (2009) 172 Cal. App. 4th 154, 165-166, 90 Cal. Rptr. 3d 818 ; Banner Entertainment, Inc. v. Superior Court (1998) 62 Cal. App. 4th 348, 356-357, 72 Cal. Rptr. 2d 598 ; City of Vista v. Sutro & Co. (1997) 52 Cal. App. 4th 401, 407, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 488).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used in support of a petition to compel arbitration to make the point that in determining the enforceability and scope of an arbitration agreement, even one governed by the Federal Arbitration Act (9 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.), the court should apply general state law contract principles. This form may be combined with authority from § 20.31 et seq. addressing any specific rule of contract construction that may be involved in petitioner's particular case.

This form is not intended as a complete memorandum, but should be combined with the memoranda in § 20.10 and any others applicable to the particular situation.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, the argument should include and specify any particular state law principle counsel feels is necessary to the desired outcome and should specify the contract language to which that principle is applicable.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement)].

Affidavits or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5] are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For legal background, research guides, checklists, and forms relating to general contract principles, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

For memoranda relating to general contract principles, see Ch. 50, Contracts .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

For memoranda regarding general contract principles that are more likely to aid in resisting arbitration, see Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] General State Law Contract Principles Govern

First Options of Chicago, Inc. v. Kaplan (1995) 514 U.S. 938, 115 S. Ct. 1920, 131 L. Ed. 2d 985 , originated from an arbitration concerning a debt owed by MK Investments, Inc. (MKI), and allegedly by its principal, Manual Kaplan, and his wife Carol, to petitioner. First Options was clearing broker for MKI, which lost $1.5 million in 1987 and signed a workout agreement with an arbitration clause. Kaplans did not. In 1989, when MKI lost another $1.5 million, First Options took control of MKI, liquidated certain of its assets, demanded immediate payment of the entire MKI debt, and insisted that Kaplans personally pay any deficiency. When that demand went unsatisfied, MKI initiated arbitration before a panel of the Philadelphia Stock Exchange. Kaplans filed written objections with the panel, denying their agreement was arbitrable. The panel decided it had power to rule and did so in favor of First Options, against MKI and the Kaplans. Kaplans asked the district court to vacate the award. First Options asked the district court to confirm the award. The district court confirmed the award, but the Third Circuit Court of Appeals reversed as to the Kaplans, holding their dispute with First Options was not arbitrable. The Supreme Court granted certiorari.

The Supreme Court affirmed the decision of the Third Circuit Court of Appeals, concluding that, because Kaplans did not clearly agree to submit the question of arbitrability to arbitration, the Court of Appeals was correct in finding that the arbitrability of the Kaplan/First Options dispute was subject to independent review by the court. The matter turned on how a court should decide whether the parties agreed to submit the arbitrability issue to arbitration and the standard for review of that decision. When deciding whether the parties have agreed to arbitrate a certain issue, (including arbitrability), courts generally should apply ordinary state law principles that govern the formation of contracts, in this case the law of the state where Kaplans objected to arbitrability (131 L. Ed. 2d 985, 993) .

Sanchez v. Western Pizza Enterprises, Inc. (2009) 172 Cal. App. 4th 154, 90 Cal. Rptr. 3d 818 , affirmed a trial court order finding a class arbitration waiver and other terms of the agreement unconscionable, and that the agreement therefore was unenforceable. In resolving the contention that the arbitrator, rather than the trial court, had jurisdiction to determine whether the agreement was enforceable, the court relied on the rule that under California law as well as the Federal Arbitration Act, enforceability of arbitration agreements is limited by the same general contract law principles governing the enforceability of any contract (172 Cal. App. 4th 154, 165-166) . The proponent of arbitration of enforceability also argued that the agreement specifically authorized the arbitrator to decide the issue of enforceability. However, while not ruling that a clear authorization in the agreement would be enforceable, the court ruled that the agreement in the case, which stated only that the arbitrator had jurisdiction to decide '"any disputes over the interpretation or application of this Arbitration Agreement,'" did not authorize the arbitrator to determine the issue (172 Cal. App. 4th 154, 166). The portion of the opinion and relevant facts dealing with the issue of whether the class action waiver was unenforceable as against public policy is discussed in Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.22[3][d], below. The portions of the opinion addressing the procedural unconscionability of the arbitration agreement, the substantive unconscionability of the agreement, and the unenforceability of the agreement due to unconscionability are discussed, respectively, in Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.91[3][d], [e], and [k].

Banner Entertainment, Inc. v. Superior Court (1998) 62 Cal. App. 4th 348, 72 Cal. Rptr. 2d 598 , arose out of negotiations for defendant to act as exclusive sales agent for plaintiff's films in countries outside the United States and Canada. Draft agreements were exchanged by the parties. Those agreements provided, in relevant part: "this agreement when signed by the parties hereto will constitute a legal and binding obligation of the parties. [P] Please acknowledge your approval of the foregoing terms by signing a copy of this letter in the space indicated below." Plaintiff never signed the agreement and eventually notified defendant by telephone and by letter that it was terminating their agreement. The letter stated that the parties had not reached agreement on material terms. Defendant filed a demand for arbitration. Plaintiff filed the action and brought a motion to determine the non-arbitrability of the claims defendant had submitted for arbitration. Defendant filed a cross-motion to compel arbitration of all disputes arising out of the relationship. The trial court ordered arbitration; and plaintiff filed a writ of mandate seeking to have the order to arbitrate vacated.

The court of appeal granted the writ directing the trial court to vacate its order granting defendant's petition to compel arbitration, finding that there was no evidence of an agreement to arbitrate (62 Cal. App. 4th 348, 357, 361-362) . The court discussed the procedure for determining the existence of an agreement to arbitrate, including the fact that the determination whether there is an enforceable arbitration agreement is based on state law principles related to the formation, revocation and enforcement of contracts (62 Cal. App. 4th 348, 356-357) . California law is clear that there is no contract until there has been a meeting of the minds on all material points (62 Cal. App. 4th 348, 357-358) . The portion of the opinion discussing the lack of evidence to support the existence of an arbitration agreement is discussed at Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, §§ 20A.10[3][a] and 20A.32[3][a].

City of Vista v. Sutro & Co. (1997) 52 Cal. App. 4th 401, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 488 , involved a dispute between a city and two investment brokerage firms. The contracts at issue had been signed on behalf of the city by its finance director and included arbitration provisions. The general resolution adopted by the city council made no mention of arbitration, but authorized the finance director to "sign warrants, transfers, or invest funds, and sell, assign, and transfer securities, and take other actions deemed necessary to properly administer the funds of the City of Vista." The superior court denied defendants' petition to compel arbitration on the ground that the finance director lacked express authority to enter into any contract containing and arbitration clause. Defendants appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court of appeal began its analysis by noting that whether the parties formed a valid agreement to arbitrate is determined under general California contract law. The record before it lacked substantial evidence to support the conclusion that no arbitration agreement was formed under principles of general California contract law (52 Cal. App. 4th 401, 407) .

The court of appeals noted that it has long been recognized that a city may agree to arbitrate any matter which could be the subject of a civil suit. Implicit in the city's power to contract is the power to agree to binding arbitration. A municipal official duly authorized to enter into contracts on the city's behalf has implicit power to agree to arbitrate (52 Cal. App. 4th 401, 408) . Interpretation of the municipal resolution was a question of law with regard to which the court was bound to give effect to the language's usual and ordinary meaning. The court concluded that the resolution unambiguously authorized the finance director to enter into client agreements with defendant brokerages because the resolution specifically found that for purposes of expeditious completion of certain investment transactions, investment firms dealing with the city would require written authorization of the city officials' authority toperform actions necessary for proper administration of the city's funds. That express authority necessarily included the power to perform acts incidental to investing the city funds, such as opening brokerage accounts by executing client agreements (52 Cal. App. 4th 401, 409) . Implicit in that express authority to contract with investment firms was the power to agree to arbitration provisions. The resolution's silence on the matter of arbitration did not indicate that the authority to agree to arbitration was not conferred on the finance director (52 Cal. App. 4th 401, 410) .

The court also found the city's contention that entering into an arbitration agreement constituted an impermissible waiver of its right to jury trial to be without merit, relying on the holding in Madden v. Kaiser Foundation Hospitals (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 699, 713-714, 131 Cal. Rptr. 882, 552 P.2d 1178 , discussed at § 20.61[3][a], that a predispute arbitration agreement does not raise any constitutional issue involving waiver of jury trial (52 Cal. App. 4th 401, 411) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20 ARBITRATION: COMPELLING
PART II. FORMS
A. General Principles Related to Compelling Arbitration

2-20 California Points & Authorities § 20.31

§ 20.31 Incorporation by Reference

[1] FORM

[EITHER]

_____ [Name] IS BOUND BY THE ARBITRATION CLAUSE IN THE _____ [identify contract containing text of arbitration clause] BECAUSE THAT CLAUSE WAS VALIDLY INCORPORATED BY REFERENCE IN THE _____ [identify contract from which the dispute arises].

[OR]

_____ [Name] IS BOUND BY THE ARBITRATION RULES IN THE _____ [identify arbitration provider rules] BECAUSE THOSE RULES WERE VALIDLY INCORPORATED BY REFERENCE IN THE _____ [identify contract from which the dispute arises].

[CONTINUE]

A. Incorporation by Reference. A contract may validly incorporate by reference the terms of another document if the reference is clear and unequivocal and the terms of the incorporated document are known, or easily available to, the contracting parties (Wolschlager v. Fidelity National Title Ins. Co. (2003) 111 Cal. App. 4th 784, 790-792, 4 Cal. Rptr. 3d. 179 ; Slaught v. Bencomo Roofing Co. (1994) 25 Cal. App. 4th 744, 748, 30 Cal. Rptr. 2d 618 ; Spellman v. Securities Annuities & Ins. Services, Inc. (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 452, 457, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 427).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used in support of a petition to compel arbitration to make the point that in determining the enforceability and scope of an arbitration agreement, even one governed by the Federal Arbitration Act, the court should apply general state law contract principles, specifically the doctrine of incorporation by reference.

This form is not intended as a complete memorandum, but should be combined with the memoranda in §§ 20.10, 20.30, and any others applicable to the particular situation.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, the counsel should trace the language of the arbitration agreement, particularly language incorporating rules of any organization whose rules provide for arbitration.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For legal background, research guides, checklists and forms relating to general contract principles, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch.140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

For memoranda relating to general contract principles, see Ch. 50, Contracts .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

For a memorandum opposing this one, see Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.31.

For memoranda regarding general contract principles that are more likely to aid in resisting arbitration, see Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.30, et seq.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Incorporation by Reference

Wolschlager v. Fidelity National Title Ins. Co. (2003) 111 Cal. App. 4th 784, 4 Cal. Rptr. 3d. 179 , involved a claim under a title insurance policy. The preliminary title report made no mention of arbitration or the fact that there would be an arbitration requirement in the final title policy. Instead it included an exhibit which contained selected portions of the proposed policy to be issued, but not the arbitration clause, and instructed that "Copies of the policy forms should be read. They are available from the office which issued this Report." Eventually, the policy was issued and plaintiff filed a claim. By the time plaintiff filed the claim, plaintiff was in possession of the entire policy, including the arbitration provision. Plaintiff was represented by counsel initially during the claims process and plaintiff's counsel admitted knowing about the arbitration clause since the time plaintiff first provided him with a copy of the policy. Defendant denied the claim, without mentioning plaintiff's right to arbitrate, but advised plaintiff of his right to seek redress with the Department of Insurance. Plaintiff filed a lawsuit. Defendant answered without demanding arbitration or raising arbitration as an affirmative defense. Defendant did not demand arbitration until plaintiff served his first discovery. The petition to compel arbitration was denied. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, finding that the arbitration clause was properly incorporated by reference (111 Cal. App. 4th 784, 787, 792-793) . Although defendant contended that the only actual contract between the parties was the policy itself and the preliminary report nothing more than an offer, the court of appeal said insured's approval and acceptance of the conditions set forth in the preliminary report created a binding contract based on the terms set forth in that report and any materials incorporated therein by reference. Therefore, whether plaintiff was bound by an arbitration clause depends directly on whether that term was set forth in the preliminary report or incorporated therein by reference. It was undisputed that the preliminary report did not itself contain an arbitration clause; thus, the critical question was whether the arbitration clause was sufficiently incorporated into the preliminary title report (111 Cal. App. 4th 784, 790) . For the terms of another document to be incorporated into the document executed by the parties the reference must be clear and unequivocal, the reference must be called to the attention of the other party and that party must consent to it. Further, the terms of the incorporated document must be known or easily available to the contracting parties. Here, the preliminary report referred to the policy a number of times and instructed that "Copies of the Policy forms should be read. They are available from the office which issued this Report." The report also listed the form of policy of title insurance contemplated by the report as C.L.T.A. Coverage Policy 1990. Thus, incorporation was both clear and unequivocal. There was no substantive dispute that plaintiff did not actually know about the arbitration clause. Even if plaintiff did not know about the arbitration clause, the policy with the clause was easily available to him. Nothing further was needed to bind the plaintiff (111 Cal. App. 4th 784, 791) .

Slaught v. Bencomo Roofing Co. (1994) 25 Cal. App. 4th 744, 30 Cal. Rptr. 2d 618 , involved a construction dispute. Plaintiff had been hired by owner to construct 58 single family dwellings on owner's property. Their contract called for arbitration of any disputes arising out of the work in accordance with the Construction Industry Rules of the American Arbitration Association. Defendant was a subcontractor of plaintiff. Their agreement had its own arbitration clause, which followed different rules than the primary contract, but also had a provision entitled "Assumption of Principal Contract," which provided in part that subcontractor was bound by all the terms and conditions of the Contract Documents and that all rights and remedies reserved to Owner under the Contract Documents applied to and were possessed by Contractor in its dealings with Subcontractor. Owner and Contract were arbitrating a dispute between them when contractor/plaintiff petitioned to compel arbitration against defendant/subcontractor and to have the contractor-subcontractor arbitration consolidated with the owner-contractor arbitration. The petition was denied, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court of appeal stated that under California law, parties may validly incorporate by reference into their contract the terms of another document. The reference must be clear and unequivocal and the terms of the incorporated document must be known or easily available to the contracting parties (25 Cal. App. 4th 744, 748) . Subcontractor did not claim to be unaware of the document being incorporated but stated it had examined the Contract Documents fully (25 Cal. App. 4th 744, 749) . Instead, subcontractor argued there was obvious ambiguity because the two arbitration clauses contained different arbitration procedures. The court of appeal found no ambiguity. Here, the subcontractor's obligation to arbitrate was based on the Assumption clause, which incorporated the Construction Contract, and required subcontractor to join the arbitration between the owner and the contractor (25 Cal. App. 4th 744, 750-751) .

The facts and procedural background of Spellman v. Securities Annuities & Ins. Services, Inc. (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 452, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 427 , are discussed at § 20.22[3][d]. In considering whether plaintiff's employment contract and the U-4 form contained arbitration provisions, the court of appeal noted that a contract may validly incorporate by reference the terms of another document if the reference is clear and unequivocal and the terms of the incorporated document are know or easily available to the contracting parties (8 Cal. App. 4th 452, 457) . Here the U-4 plaintiff signed had the arbitration clause clearly set forth above the signature line. The employment contract clearly referred to and identified the incorporated document wherein the arbitration clause appeared, the Rules of Fair Practice of the National Association of Securities Dealers, Inc., as set forth in the NASD Manual. Further, it recited that a copy of the NASD Manual would be made available to be plaintiff (8 Cal. App. 4th 452, 458) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Incorporation by Reference

See also Boys Club of San Fernando Valley, Inc. v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. (1992) 6 Cal. App. 4th 1266, 1271-1273, 8 Cal. Rptr. 2d 587 , discussed at § 20.65[3][a].

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20 ARBITRATION: COMPELLING
PART II. FORMS
A. General Principles Related to Compelling Arbitration

2-20 California Points & Authorities § 20.32

§ 20.32 Attempted Revocation of Stipulation to Arbitrate Comes Too Late

[1] FORM

ARBITRATION SHOULD BE COMPELLED BECAUSE RESPONDENT'S REVOCATION OF ITS AUTHORIZATION TO STIPULATE TO BINDING ARBITRATION WAS NOT COMMUNICATED TO PETITIONER UNTIL AFTER PETITIONER HAD AGREED TO THE STIPULATION.

A. Attempted Revocation of Stipulation to Arbitrate Comes Too Late. Under ordinary contract principles[, and the rules of principal and agent], when a client communicates to its attorney its revocation of authority to stipulate to binding arbitration, but the attorney does not communicate that revocation to opposing counsel until after opposing counsel (not knowing of the revocation) has accepted and filed the stipulation, the parties have a stipulation to arbitration, it is binding, and arbitration should be compelled (CPI Builders, Inc. v. Impco Technologies, Inc. (2001) 94 Cal. App. 4th 1167, 1174, 114 Cal. Rptr. 2d 851).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used in support of a petition to compel arbitration to make the point that the opposing party's attempted revocation of a stipulation to arbitrate was ineffective because it was not communicated to petitioner until after petitioner had accepted the offer to stipulation. This form may be combined with authority from § 20.30 et seq. addressing any other rule of contract construction that may be involved in petitioner's particular case.

This form is not intended as a complete memorandum, but should be combined with the memoranda in § 20.10 and any others applicable to the particular situation.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, the argument

should describe the timing of the offer to stipulate and its attempted revocation, as well as the facts and timing of the acceptance of the offer.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747 (overruled on other grounds in Rosenthal v. Great Western Financial Securities Corp. (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 394, 404, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 875)].

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For legal background, research guides, checklists and forms relating to general contract principles, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch.140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For a memorandum establishing the validity of a stipulation even though unsigned by the client, see Ch. 20C, Arbitration: Confirming, Correcting, or Vacating the Award, § 20C.60.

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

For memoranda relating to general contract principles, see Ch. 50, Contracts .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Attempted Revocation of Stipulation to Arbitrate Comes Too Late

CPI Builders, Inc. v. Impco Technologies, Inc. (2001) 94 Cal. App. 4th 1167, 114 Cal. Rptr. 2d 851 involved breach of a construction contract. There were some discussions between the attorneys regarding mediating or arbitrating the case. During a telephone conversation on September 17, 1999, the attorneys agreed to binding arbitration. In a September 18, 1999 letter, plaintiff's attorney told plaintiff's president and sole shareholder he had tentatively agreed with defendant's attorney to submit the case to binding arbitration, that that would vacate the October trial date, and that he would no longer be able to represent plaintiff. On September 27, 1999, plaintiff's attorney signed a stipulation to submit the matter to binding arbitration and sent it to defendant's attorney. In a conversation around noontime on September 27, 1999, plaintiff's president had authorized plaintiff's attorney to consent to binding arbitration, at least for about 20 hours, but later changed her mind, and left a message at plaintiff's attorney's office at 8:00 a.m. the next day to that effect. Apparently a CPI employee received a telephone call from CPI's attorney's office on September 29, 1999, stating that it was "too late" for CPI to withdraw its stipulation for binding arbitration. Meanwhile, unaware that plaintiff's attorney's authority had been revoked, defendant's attorney signed the stipulation on September 29, 1999, and lodged it with the court the next day. On October 7, 1999, defendant's attorney received two letters: one was from plaintiff's president, stating she had authorized a new law firm to act on behalf of CPI; the other was from the new law firm stating that CPI had revoked its consent for binding arbitration on September 28, 1999, that plaintiff's previous attorney should have communicated that revocation to defendant's attorney, and demanding the stipulation either not be sent to the court, or if already sent, be retrieved before the court authorized binding arbitration. As it turned out, the court had not entered the order attached to the stipulation for binding arbitration because the 'actual parties' had not signed the stipulation. Defendant filed a motion to compel arbitration, which was granted. Plaintiff then filed a motion for reconsideration, which was also granted; and the prior order that the case proceed to binding arbitration was vacated. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed (94 Cal. App. 4th 1167, 1175) . General California contract law determines whether the parties formed a valid agreement to arbitrate (94 Cal. App. 4th 1167, 1172) . In this case, because the facts were not in dispute, the court of appeal reviewed de novo the trial court's determination of the validity of the agreement to arbitrate (94 Cal. App. 4th 1167, 1172-1173) . An attorney is authorized to do that which attorneys are normally authorized to do in the course of litigation, but that authority does not include authority to impair the client's substantial rights or the cause of action itself (94 Cal. App. 4th 1167, 1173) . The court of appeal distinguished Blanton v. Womancare, Inc. (1985) 38 Cal. 3d 396 because although Blanton's attorney had stipulated to binding arbitration, Blanton had not given her oral consent to the stipulation. Thus, the Blanton court concluded the attorney there lacked the apparent authority to waive the client's substantial rights by entering into binding arbitration without the client's consent. The key distinction is that in this case, plaintiff's president expressly authorized plaintiff's attorney to enter into binding arbitration (94 Cal. App. 4th 1167, 1174) .

The court of appeal also distinguished Sanker v. Brown (1985) 167 Cal. App. 3d 1144, 213 Cal. Rptr. 768 , because the client in that case had not expressly authorized the attorney to stipulate to binding arbitration (94 Cal. App. 4th 1167, 1175) . The court cited Civ. Code § 1587 for that proposition that an offer is properly revoked on the occurrence of one of four events: (1) the communication of revocation to the other party before acceptance is communicated; (2) the lapse of time for acceptance; (3) the failure of the acceptor to fulfill a condition precedent to acceptance; or (4) the death or insanity of the proposer. Because defendant immediately responded, there were no unfulfilled conditions and there was no death or insanity involved, the court had only to decide whether the revocation was communicated before notice of acceptance was received. No attempt to communicate a revocation of the offer to submit the matter to binding arbitration was made until the new law firm wrote defendant on October 7, a week after defendant had accepted by complying with the directions on plaintiff's original attorney's cover letter accompanying the offer: "You may file it directly with the court or return it to my office for filing" (94 Cal. App. 4th 1167, 1176) . When defendant's attorney accepted the offer, he was unaware plaintiff had withdrawn its consent. The parties had a contract. The fact that plaintiff's president communicated her revocation to plaintiff's attorney before defendant accepted the offer is of no effect (94 Cal. App. 4th 1167, 1173-1174) . The attorney-client relationship, insofar as it concerns the authority of the attorney to bind his or her client by agreement or stipulation, is governed by the principles of agency. When a principal communicates notice of revocation to his or her agent, but the agent fails to communicate the notice to the offeree, the principal is bound on the offeree's acceptance, even though the agent disregarded the principal's express instructions (94 Cal. App. 4th 1167, 1173-1174) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20 ARBITRATION: COMPELLING
PART II. FORMS
A. General Principles Related to Compelling Arbitration

2-20 California Points & Authorities § 20.33

§ 20.33 Principal Must Arbitrate Under Agreement Signed by Attorney in Fact

[1] FORM

OWNER WHO GIVES A POWER OF ATTORNEY IS BOUND TO ARBITRATE UNDER AN AGREEMENT SIGNED BY HIS OR HER ATTORNEY IN FACT.

A. Principal Is Bound by Agreement Signed by Attorney in Fact. An attorney in fact under a [durable] power of attorney has authority to enter into arbitration agreements [incidental to admission of the person who executed the power to a residential care facility]. Thus, the principal [and his or her successors] must arbitrate any claims subject to that agreement (Garrison v. Superior Court (Country Villa Belmont Heights Healthcenter) (2005) 132 Cal. App. 4th 253, 256, 265-267, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 350).

[Optional] B. Agent Under Probate Code Section 4701 Health Care Power of Attorney Can Bind Principal [and Successor(s)] to Arbitration. Probate Code Section 4600 et seq. together with Civil Code provisions on general agency law, provide that an agent under a Probate Code Section 4701 health care power of attorney[, in selecting a long-term health care facility], has the power to execute applicable admissions forms, including arbitration agreements, unless that power is restricted by the principal (Hogan v. Country Villa Health Services (2007) 148 Cal. App. 4th 259, 263-264, 55 Cal. Rptr. 3d 450).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used in support of a petition to compel arbitration if petitioner anticipates a challenge that an arbitration agreement executed by an attorney in fact is not binding. Optional Paragraph B is applicable if the power of attorney is a health care power in the form set forth in Prob. Code § 4701 without any restrictions. Although the power in Garrison v. Superior Court (2005) 132 Cal. App. 4th 253, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 350 (Garrison, discussed at [3][a], below), did not involve a standard form Prob. Code § 4701 document, the power provided that it was created under Prob. Code § 4600 et seq., so Prob. Code § 4688 was applicable to incorporate the laws of agency.

This form is not intended as a complete memorandum, but should be combined with the memoranda in § 20.10 and any others applicable to the particular situation. Counsel may wish to include authority from § 20.61.

As a tactical matter, counsel may wish to reserve these points for oral argument or for a reply memorandum. In deciding whether to reserve these arguments, counsel should consider local court rules and practice, as well as whether the moving partywould be expected to raise these points in initial moving papers, to avoid the possibility of losing the opportunity to raise them.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, the argument should set forth the exact terms of the power of attorney and show that the agreement in question was within the scope of that power.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement)].

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Memoranda

For a memorandum supporting the contention that an agent or fiduciary has power to execute an arbitration agreement on behalf of his or her principal, see § 20.61.

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Principal Is Bound by Agreement Signed by Attorney in Fact

Garrison v. Superior Court (Country Villa Belmont Heights Healthcenter) (2005) 132 Cal. App. 4th 253, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 350 involved two arbitration agreements signed by a decedent's attorney in fact, under a durable power of attorney, when the decedent was admitted to a residential care facility. Garrison has filed suit as decedent's successor in interest pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 377.10 et seq. and on her own behalf. The complaint alleged that Country Villa Belmont Heights Healthcenter failed to provide sufficient staffing levels; to offer sufficient services to enable patients to attain the highest practicable, physical, mental, and psychological well-being; to create an environment where decedent would not continue to fall; and to properly screen decedent to insure it had the ability to provide her with an adequate level of medical care. The complaint stated causes of action for: negligence; elder abuse; fraud; unlawful business practices; and wrongful death. Defendants moved to compel arbitration, and the motion was granted. Plaintiffs filed a writ of mandate seeking to set aside the order granting the motion to compel arbitration. The mandate petition was summarily denied, but later, the Supreme Court granted review and ordered us to issue an order to show cause and place the matter on calendar for oral argument.

The court of appeal granted the mandate petition to allow reconsideration of the petition to compel arbitration in light of the views expressed in the opinion, namely, that the attorney in fact had authority to bind decedent to the arbitration agreements (132 Cal. App. 4th 253, 268) . The power of attorney was entitled "ADVANCE MEDICAL DIRECTIVE AND POWER OF ATTORNEY FOR HEALTH CARE" and granted plaintiff attorney in fact power to make health care decisions, with full power and authority to make health care decisions to the same extent that decedent could make those decisions for herself if she had the capacity to do so, including all rights granted to the attorney in fact [Prob. Code § 4600 et seq.]. It specified the attorney in fact had authority to execute documents involving the refusal to permit treatment; the power to sign any necessary waiver or release from liability required by a hospital or physician, to review any of decedent's medical records, to execute any authorization necessary to facilitate the release of medical information; and to consent to the disclosure of medical information. The court of appeal began its discussion by noting that the question of whether a valid agreement to arbitrate exists is determined by reference to the law applicable to contracts generally (132 Cal. App. 4th 253, 263) and that an agent or fiduciary has the authority to require a patient's medical malpractice claims to be arbitrated [see Madden v. Kaiser Foundation Hospitals (1976) 17 Cal.3d 699, 709, 131 Cal. Rptr. 882, 552 P.2d 1178 (Madden, discussed at § 20.61[3][a])] (132 Cal. App. 4th 253, 264) . Plaintiff relied on Pagarigan v. Libby Center Care, Inc. (2002) 99 Cal. App. 4th 298, 301-302, 120 Cal. Rptr. 2d 892 and Goliger v. AMS Properties, Inc. (2004) 123 Cal. App. 4th 374, 375-376, 19 Cal. Rptr. 3d 819 , but both were distinguishable because they did not involve powers of attorney and in both cases, the patient was comatose at the time and the child in one case and parent in another signed the admission papers containing the arbitration clause (132 Cal. App. 4th 253, 264-265) . The court of appeal said the case was governed by Prob. Code §§ 4683(a), 4684, and 4688 (132 Cal. App. 4th 253, 265-266) , and concluded that the combined effect of those three provisions of the Health Care Decisions Law, gave plaintiff the authority to enter into the two arbitration agreements on behalf of decedent. The arbitration agreements were executed while making health care decisions (132 Cal. App. 4th 253, 266) . Further, the court cited Madden for the proposition that Civ. Code § 2319, which authorizes a general agent to do everything necessary or proper and usual to effect the purpose of the agency, includes the power to select arbitration as a means of resolving health care disputes (132 Cal. App. 4th 253, 266-267) . Thus, the court of appeal concluded that decedent's damage claims were subject to arbitration (132 Cal. App. 4th 253, 267) .

[b] Agent Under Probate Code Section 4701 Health Care Power of Attorney Can Bind Principal [and Successor(s)] to Arbitration.

Hogan v. Country Villa Health Services (2007) 148 Cal. App. 4th 259, 55 Cal. Rptr. 3d 450 , involved the statutory advance health care directive form, i.e., a health care power of attorney [Prob. Code, §§ 4629, 4701]. In that document, decedent named her daughter as her agent. When decedent was suffering from Stage II Alzheimer's disease, daughter had her admitted to Country Villa Plaza Healthcare Center, a skilled nursing care facility. At the time of admission, daughter signed two arbitration agreements: one agreeing to arbitrate any medical malpractice claims and one agreeing to arbitrate any other type of claim against the facility, including specifically any claim for alleged violations of the Elder Abuse and Dependent Adult Civil Protection Act [Welf. & Inst. Code, § 15600 et seq.]. Each of the two arbitration agreements was optional and each contained a 30-day rescission right. After decedent died, daughter and her three brothers filed a complaint for wrongful death, elder abuse and violation of patient rights, against Country Villa Health Services, Country Villa Plaza Healthcare Center and the administrator of the nursing home. Country Villa filed a motion to compel arbitration of the second cause of action, for elder abuse. The trial court denied the motion, finding that the health care power of attorney did not authorize the daughter to enter into the arbitration agreements on her mother's behalf. Country Villa appealed.

The court of appeal reversed and remanded, finding that, as decedent had not elected to restrict the powers of the daughter as her agent to exclude the power to enter into arbitration agreements, the daughter had the power to execute arbitration agreements when presented to her by the long-term health care facility as part of the package of admissions documents (148 Cal. App. 4th 259, 263, 271) . The court of appeal framed the question before it as whether the provision permitting daughter to select and discharge health care providers and institutions included the authority to execute admissions forms, including arbitration agreements. The standard form health care power of attorney that daughter signed is set forth in Prob. Code § 4701, a part of the Health Care Decisions Law (Prob Code § 4600 et seq.). Prob. Code § 4700 explains that the standard form may, but need not, be used to create a health care power of attorney and that other sections of the Health Care Decisions Law govern the effect of a health care power of attorney. Prob. Code § 4683 permits an agent under a health care power of attorney to make health care decisions for the principal. Section 4617 specifies that the selection and discharge of health care providers and institutions is a health care decision. Prob. Code § 4688 provides that when the Health Care Decisions Law does not articulate a rule governing a particular question about an agent's powers under a health care power of attorney, the laws of agency shall apply to provide the rule. Those Probate Code provisions, together with Civil Code provisions on general agency law, provide that an agent under a Prob. Code § 4701 health care power of attorney, in selecting a long-term health care facility, has the power to execute applicable admissions forms, including arbitration agreements, unless that power is restricted by the principal (148 Cal. App. 4th 259, 264) . The court of appeal discussed Garrison v. Superior Court (2005) 132 Cal. App. 4th 253, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 350 (Garrison, discussed at [a], above), which although it did involve a standard form Prob. Code § 4701 document, provided that it was created under Prob. Code § 4600 et seq. and provided that the daughter was authorized to make health care decisions for the mother (148 Cal. App. 4th 259, 264-268) . The court noted that Garrison had pointed out that Prob. Code § 4683 states that an agent designated in the power of attorney may make health care decisions for the principal to the same extent the principal could make health care decisions if the principal had the capacity to do so, including decisions that may be effective after the principal's death, which would include how to resolve disputes with the health care provider (148 Cal. App. 4th 259, 265-266) . The court of appeal found that the Garisson court was correct in characterizing the execution of the arbitration agreements as part of the health care decision-making process, and that the trial court in this matter erred in disregarding Garrison and denying the motion to compel arbitration (148 Cal. App. 4th 259, 268) . Plaintiffs argued that Goliger v. AMS Properties, Inc. (2004) 123 Cal. App. 4th 374, 19 Cal. Rptr. 3d 819 , and Pagarigan v. Libby Care Center, Inc. (2002) 99 Cal. App. 4th 298, 120 Cal. Rptr. 2d 892 were better reasoned, but the court of appeal found them clearly distinguishable because in neither of those cases did the child(ren) admitting the parent into a health care facility hold a health care power of attorney (148 Cal. App. 4th 259, 268) . Nor was the court of appeal persuaded that its holding would undermine the public policy principles underlying the California Constitution and the Elder Abuse and Dependent Adult Civil Protection Act. Clearly, Madden v. Kaiser Foundation Hospitals (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 699, 702-703, 705-709, 131 Cal. Rptr. 882, 552 P.2d 1178 (Madden, discussed at § 20.61[3][a]), establishes that an agent can bind his or her principal to arbitrate without violating the principal's constitution right to a jury trial (148 Cal. App. 4th 259, 268-269) . With regard to the purposes and goals of the Elder Abuse and Dependent Adult Civil Protection Act, plaintiffs did not raise this issue before the trial court, so the court of appeal treated the point as waived (148 Cal. App. 4th 259, 269) . Because not all causes of action were subject to arbitration, it remained to be determined whether a stay should be ordered or certain causes of action should proceed before others. Thus, the court of appeal remanded the matter to the trial court for further consideration of the application of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1281.2 and 1281.4 (148 Cal. App. 4th 259, 270-271) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20 ARBITRATION: COMPELLING
PART II. FORMS
A. General Principles Related to Compelling Arbitration

2-20 California Points & Authorities §§ 20.34-20.39

[Reserved]

§§ 20.34[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20 ARBITRATION: COMPELLING
PART II. FORMS
B. Particular Claims Subject to Arbitration

2-20 California Points & Authorities § 20.40

§ 20.40 Arbitration Agreement Applies to Related Tort Claim

[1] FORM

PETITIONER, AS A PARTY TO AN AGREEMENT PROVIDING FOR ARBITRATION OF ANY CONTROVERSY ARISING UNDER THE AGREEMENT, IS ENTITLED TO AN ORDER COMPELLING ARBITRATION OF _____ [specify tort or torts that are subject of dispute], WHICH AROSE OUT OF THE AGREED TRANSACTION [AND STAYING ANY PENDING ACTION RELATING TO ARBITRABLE ISSUES].

A. Arbitration Agreement Applies to Related Tort Claim. A provision in an agreement for the arbitration of any dispute arising out of the contract is broad enough to include arbitration of tort as well as contractual questions when the tort claims arose in connection with and were inextricable from the subject matter of the contract claims (Efund Capital Partners v. Pless (2007) 150 Cal. App. 4th 1311, 1321-1330, 59 Cal. Rptr. 3d 340 ; Ruiz v. Sysco Food Services (2004) 122 Cal. App. 4th 520, 531, 539-541, 18 Cal. Rptr. 3d 700 ; Buckhorn v. St. Jude Heritage Medical Group (2004) 121 Cal. App. 4th 1401, 1406-1408, 18 Cal. Rptr. 3d 215 ; Vianna v. Doctors' Management Co. (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 1186, 1189-1190, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 188 ; Berman v. Dean Witter & Co., Inc. (1975) 44 Cal. App. 3d 999, 1003, 1005, 119 Cal. Rptr. 130).

[Optional] B. Emotional Distress Claims Must Be Arbitrated: Bodily Injury Exclusion Does Not Apply. The bodily injury exclusion in the arbitration clause [in California standard form of real estate purchase agreement] does not exclude claims for emotional distress derivative of failure to disclose a structural defect. Those claims are not a type the parties would reasonably expect to be excluded and must be arbitrated. [This is true even if the stress and emotional distress are alleged to have caused a physical disease, such as gestational diabetes] (Gravillis v. Coldwell Banker Residential Brokerage Co. (2006) 143 Cal. App. 4th 761, 766, 49 Cal. Rptr. 3d 531).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used to support a petition to compel arbitration when the petitioner anticipates a challenge that, because the agreement only provided for arbitration of any controversy under the contract, it does not apply to tort claims. The bracketed language in Paragraph A reflects the fact situation in Ruiz v. Sysco Food Services (2004) 122 Cal. App. 4th 520, 18 Cal. Rptr. 3d 700 , discussed at [3][a], below. Optional Paragraph B is to anticipate or rebut the contention that a claim for emotional distress need not be arbitrated because it falls within a bodily injury exclusion to the arbitration clause. The form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in support of compelling arbitration, either alone [see § 20.10] or combined with a motion to stay an action [see § 20.11].

As a tactical matter, counsel may wish to reserve these points for oral argument or for other form of rejoinder to the respondent's opposing memorandum. In deciding whether or not to reserve these arguments, counsel should consider local court rules and practice, as well as whether the moving party would be expected to be raise these points in initial moving papers, to avoid the possibility of losing the opportunity to raise them.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, the language of the arbitration agreement which specifies the subject matter that may be arbitrated should to be quoted or referred to, followed by a statement as to how the controversy in issue is within the scope of that subject matter.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Memoranda

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[d] Opposing Memoranda

For a form opposing those in this form, see Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.40.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Arbitration Agreement Applies to Related Tort Claim

Plaintiff in Efund Capital Partners v. Pless (2007) 150 Cal. App. 4th 1311, 59 Cal. Rptr. 3d 340 , which was in part a shareholder derivative suit, sued various defendants, including RAP Technologies, the nominal defendant (in which it had invested $500,000), directors, officers, and employees of RAP, and other companies involved inexploiting RAP's primary asset, a loan software program. Causes of action included fraudulent inducement and negligence, breach of fiduciary duty, interference with contractual relations, and conversion, all based on the various officers, directors, and employees diverting the loan proceeds and software program for their personal use. The investment was memorialized in a "strategic relationship agreement," which contained an arbitration clause requiring arbitration of any dispute or other disagreement arising from or out of that agreement. The trial court denied the defendants' motion to compel arbitration on the ground the claims were beyond the scope of the arbitration clause and never reached the issues of the non-signatory defendants' standing to enforce the arbitration clause and waiver. Defendants appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, and after finding the arbitration clause broad enough to encompass the claims alleged, remanded for determination of the issues standing and waiver (150 Cal. App. 4th 1311, 1314, 1330-1331) . The court of appeal first discussed the issue of the Federal Arbitration Act (9 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.) saying that the limited preemptive aspects of the FAA did not apply because the arbitration agreement stated it was governed by California law (150 Cal. App. 4th 1311, 1319) . In considering the language of the strategic relationship agreement's arbitration provision, the court of appeal noted that they applied the ordinary rules of contract interpretation so as to give effect to the parties' intentions, in light of the usual and ordinary meaning of the contractual language and the circumstances under which the agreement was made (150 Cal. App. 4th 1311, 1321) . The court discussed various cases, including Berman v. Dean Witter & Co., Inc. (1975) 44 Cal. App. 3d 999, 1002-1003, 119 Cal. Rptr. 130 (discussed below) and Izzi v. Mesquite Country Club (1986) 186 Cal. App. 3d 1309, 1315-1317, 231 Cal. Rptr. 315 (discussed at [4][a], below), noting that such broadly worded arbitration provisions have been construed to encompass tort claims having their roots in the contractual relationship between the parties (150 Cal App. 4th 1311, 1322-1325) . In this case, although none of defendants (except RAP Technologies) was a named party to the strategic relationship agreement, it was undisputed that all individual defendants were RAP Technologies's former officers, directors, and employees. The strategic relationship agreement established and governed plaintiff's relationship with RAP Technologies; all causes of action involved either defendants fraudulently inducing plaintiff to enter into the agreement, or actions undertaken by the individual defendants acting as agents, employees, and representatives of each other and acting within the course and scope of their roles created by the agreement. Therefore, the arbitration agreement extended to the disputes alleged in plaintiff's second amended complaint (150 Cal. App. 4th 1311, 1325-1326) . The court of appeal discussed the two Ninth Circuit cases relied on by the trial court-- Tracer Research v. Nat. Environ. Services, Co. (9th Cir. 1994) 42 F. 3d 1292, 1294-1295 (Tracer), and Mediterranean Enterprises, Inc. v. Ssangyong (9th Cir. 1983) 708 F.2d 1458, 1461-1464 (Mediterranean)--and found the language in those arbitration agreements, which required arbitration of matters "arising under" the agreements, to be not as broad as the "arising from or out of" of language used in the strategic relationship agreement (150 Cal. App. 4th 1311, 1326-1328) . Further, California courts have consistently applied similar language to require arbitration of tort claims; Mediterranean and Tracer no longer find support in other federal courts (150 Cal. App. 4th 1311, 1328-1329) . Therefore, the court of appeal declined to follow the Ninth Circuit cases and concluded the arbitration clause was broad enough to encompass the claims alleged (150 Cal. App. 4th 1311, 1329-1330) .

Ruiz v. Sysco Food Services (2004) 122 Cal. App. 4th 520, 18 Cal. Rptr. 3d 700 , involved an employee's action against his employer for defamation, infliction of emotional distress, and related tort theories, all arising out of an investigation and police report of behavior of plaintiff, which lead to termination of his employment with defendant. Plaintiff was reinstated after he filed a grievance, arbitrated under the collective bargaining agreement (CBA) applicable to union employees of defendant; the arbitrator found that the investigation resulting in plaintiff's termination had not been fair and complete under the standards of the CBA. Plaintiff then filed the tort action, which defendant removed to federal court. The action was remanded, based on a ruling that because the claims did not arise under or require the interpretation of the CBA, there had been no basis for jurisdiction in federal court. In state court, defendant petitioned to compel arbitration under the CBA. The trial court denied the petition, finding that the CBA did not contemplate resolution of these claims, which it found had arisen from allegations outside the investigation conducted by defendant at the time plaintiff's employment was terminated. Furthermore, the trial court ruled that the matter was not subject to the Federal Arbitration Act (FAA, 9 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.). Defendant appealed the denial of its petition to compel arbitration.

The court of appeal reversed, both initially and on rehearing, and directed the trial court to vacate its previous order in part and to enter a new order granting the petition to compel arbitration under California law, which it found not to be inconsistent with the FAA policy and to be within the scope of the CBA arbitration provision (122 Cal. App. 4th 520, 539-541) . The court noted that the express and implied terms of the CBA had been considered to determine the merits of plaintiff's defamation and emotional distress allegations because they arose in connection with and were inextricable from the actual disciplinary or investigative procedures involved, as set forth in the CBA. Because of the factual context and nature of the proceedings in which the claims arose, an arbitrator would have been the appropriate party to make these determinations. Although plaintiff alleged that defendant published information beyond the scope of any personnel who were actually involved in personnel management and who had a need to know about the disciplinary matter, he failed to make an adequate showing that his alleged injury did not derive from rights created by the CBA (specifically the right to the investigation and grievance procedure). Thus, as a preliminary matter, the court concluded that the allegations of the complaint fell within the scope of the arbitration clause in the CBA (122 Cal. App. 4th 520, 531) .

Plaintiff physician in Buckhorn v. St. Jude Heritage Medical Group (2004) 121 Cal. App. 4th 1401, 18 Cal. Rptr. 3d 215 , sued defendants for wrongful termination and for various torts allegedly committed after he was discharged, including defamation and interference with prospective economic advantage. Defendants moved to compel arbitration in accordance with the arbitration clause in the employment agreement, which provided for mandatory arbitration of disputes "concerning theenforcement or the interpretation of any provisions of this Agreement." Plaintiff argued the arbitration clause did not apply because it only governed "contract related actions," not the tort claims, and also because defendant's tortious conduct occurred after he was terminated. The tort claims were based on a letter defendant sent to Buckhorn's patients explaining that Buckhorn was no longer with the Medical Group and offering to direct patients to other Medical Group physicians. Buckhorn also alleged that patients were alternatively informed Buckhorn had left the group because of marital problems, mental problems, loss of his insurance coverage, and that he was no longer practicing medicine, or that he had "just disappeared." The trial court agreed with plaintiff and denied the motion to compel arbitration. Defendants appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court of appeal cited Vianna v. Doctors' Management Co. (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 1186, 1188-1190, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 188 (discussed, below), which plaintiff sought to distinguish because the tort claims in Vianna arose during the employment relationship, whereas plaintiff's tort claims arose after employment had been terminated. The court of appeal said plaintiff's temporal test misconstrued the applicable standard. The issue is whether the tort claims are "rooted" in the contractual relationship between the parties (121 Cal. App. 4th 1401, 1406-1408) , not when they occurred. For example, plaintiff's claims for intentional and negligent interference with prospective economic advantage were based on an expectation of future income from his patients, who consulted him in his capacity as an employee of the Medical Group. Therefore, the employment agreement informed the extent of any economic interest. Because plaintiff failed to demonstrate his tort claims were "wholly independent" of the employment agreement, and any doubts must be resolved in favor of arbitration, the court of appeal concluded that all of plaintiff's had to be submitted to arbitration (121 Cal. App. 4th 1401, 1407-1408) .

Plaintiff employee in Vianna v. Doctors' Management Co. (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 1186, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 188 , brought an action for termination of employment in violation of public policy, breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, negligent infliction of emotional distress, and defamation. The defendant employer moved to compel arbitration under a contract clause that provided "[i]n the event of any dispute of any kind whatsoever, regarding the meaning, interpretation or enforcement of the provisions of this Agreement, both parties agree that the matter shall be resolved through the use of binding arbitration as provided in California Code of Civil Procedure 1280 et seq. " The trial court denied the motion to compel arbitration, on the ground the clause was narrow and did not encompass the myriad of claims brought by plaintiff. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court held that the trial court's finding that the clause did not cover the plaintiff's claims could not be sustained given the California policy favoring arbitration clauses (27 Cal. App. 4th 1186, 1189) . Specifically, the court found that the clause plainly covered the claim for breach the covenant of good faith and fair dealing. It then stated that all the other claims involved duties arising by operation of law, which were allegedly breached during the employment relationship, and that the parties at least arguably agreed to arbitrate those claims. Because it could not be said that the clause clearly did not apply to be those claims, the doubt had to be resolved in favor of arbitration (27 Cal. App. 4th 1186, 1189-1190) .

In Berman v. Dean Witter & Co., Inc. (1975) 44 Cal. App. 3d 999, 119 Cal. Rptr. 130 , plaintiffs commenced an action against defendant stockbrokers for negligence and breach of fiduciary relationship in the manner of effecting margin purchases of short-term futures in foreign currency for plaintiffs. Plaintiffs had signed a contract with defendants which generally referred to monies, securities, commodities, and other property and provided for an arbitration of any controversy arising out of or relating to the contract. Defendants petitioned to compel arbitration and stay the proceedings. Plaintiffs contended that the currency futures were not securities or commodities and that the dispute sounded in tort; thus, these matters were not subject to the arbitration agreement. Defendants appealed from an order denying their petition.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that arbitration should be compelled and the proceedings stayed. It found the phrase of "any controversy arising out of or relating to the contract" to be broad enough to embrace tort as well as contractual liabilities so long as they had their roots in the relationship created between the parties by the contract. When plaintiffs undertook to order the margin purchases on their established account, the purchases arose out of and were related to the customer agreement; therefore, any dispute concerning the purchases arose out of and was related to the agreement (44 Cal. App. 3d 999, 1003) . The court went on to find not only that the terms of the contract generally covered currency futures, but that the arbitration clause was intended by the parties to apply to disputes arising out of transactions based on the client-broker relationship established by the agreement (44 Cal. App. 3d 999, 1005) .

[b] Emotional Distress Claims Must Be Arbitrated: Bodily Injury Exclusion Does Not Apply

Gravillis v. Coldwell Banker Residential Brokerage Co. (2006) 143 Cal. App. 4th 761, 49 Cal. Rptr. 3d 531 , arose from the sale and purchase of a home, which had so much structural damage as to be uninhabitable. Buyers, husband and wife, sued the seller, the seller's brokers, their own brokers, the company that inspected the property, and the individual who owned that company. The complaint alleged that defendants failed to disclose the structural damage to the home. Wife was pregnant at the time of the purchase and was advised that, while on the property, she should wear a mask and special clothing to protect herself and her unborn child from exposure to dry rot, fungus, and other hazardous substances. This advice made both buyers suffer severe emotional distress, worry, depression, anxiety, and fear. Wife contended that the emotional distress caused her to develop a form of diabetes. The contract was written on the standard form California purchase agreement, which required the arbitration of disputes arising out of the agreement or any resulting transaction, but excluded from arbitration any action for bodily injury. The brokers moved to compel arbitration. The trial court denied the motion on the ground that the action was one for bodily injury. The brokers appealed.

The court of appeal reversed (143 Cal. App. 4th 761, 766). The court noted several rules of construction: doubts as to whether an arbitration provision applies to a particular dispute are to be resolved in favor of arbitration; an exclusionary clause in an arbitration provision should be narrowly construed; and the burden is on the partyopposing arbitration to show the agreement cannot be interpreted to apply to the dispute (143 Cal. App. 4th 761, 771-772). Buyers did not contend they suffered emotional distress as a result of living in the home. They were away when the termite damage was discovered. The only injury they sustained from being on the property was the distress caused by the advice that wife wear a mask and protective clothing to protect herself and her unborn child from dry rot, fungus, and other hazardous substances. Buyers did not allege they were actually exposed to any harmful matter (143 Cal. App. 4th 761, 774). In the insurance context, a bodily injury exclusion is limited to physical injury to the body and does not include nonphysical, emotional or mental harm (143 Cal. App. 4th 761, 775) . Under California law, plaintiffs could not likely recover damages for emotional distress given that (1) their claims were based on a broker's alleged failure to disclose property (termite) damage, and (2) the emotional distress was caused solely by what they saw and heard after the property had been damaged (143 Cal. App. 4th 761, 776) . Nondisclosure of termite damage, absent exposure to a real or tangible effect of the infestation (for example, the collapse of a wall), rarely threatens a buyer with physical injury (143 Cal. App. 4th 761, 777) . That breach of duty usually directly affects only a property or financial interest. Thus, the buyers could not have reasonably expected that a claim for emotional distress would exist against a broker in the circumstances here, much less that the claim would be one for bodily injury (143 Cal. App. 4th 761, 777-778). Some degree of emotional distress attends most, if not all, home purchases (143 Cal. App. 4th 761, 778). Thus, if emotional distress were considered a bodily injury, the arbitration exclusion in the agreement could apply in virtually every dispute, rendering the arbitration provision a nullity. Few, if any, claims would ever be subject to arbitration. Because the exclusion should not swallow the binding arbitration rule, the court declined to construe "bodily injury" to include purely emotional distress. That conclusion found support in the Legislative history of Code Civ. Proc. § 1298.7, which provides that in the event an arbitration provision is included in a contract or agreement to convey real property, it shall not preclude or limit any right of action for bodily injury (143 Cal. App. 4th 761, 778). It is unlikely that the buyers can recover emotional distress damages on the facts of this case (143 Cal. App. 4th 761, 780). The gist of the action is a dispute involving the failure to disclose termite damage; it is not a claim for personal injuries caused by, for example, defective construction, which comes within the arbitration exclusion. Based on the plain language of the agreement and the legislative history of Code Civ. Proc. § 1298.7, the court concluded that the arbitration exclusion for bodily injury did not include the claims for emotional distress. Unlike emotional distress, gestational diabetes is a physical condition (143 Cal. App. 4th 761, 780) . However, the parties to a home purchase agreement would not reasonably expect that, as used in the agreement, "bodily injury" would include diabetes caused by emotional distress which, in turn, is caused by learning about termite damage. Accordingly, the trial court erred in denying the motion to compel arbitration based on the bodily injury exclusion (143 Cal. App. 4th 761, 782) .

[c] Insurer's Duty to Defend Is Broader Than Its Duty to Indemnify

In Food Pro Int'l, Inc. v. Farmers Ins. Exch. (2008) 169 Cal. App. 4th 976,89Cal. Rptr. 3d1 , a food processing and distribution consulting firm tendered defense of a tort action to its insurer under a CGL policy. The underlying action arose when the insured's employee, acting in the capacity of a consultant during the process of relocating the client's food-processing plant to another city, noticed that an electrical contractor hired by the client disconnected the electrical system for a fruit extruder machine while leaving a large hole in the floor. The insured's employee apprised the client's mechanics so that they would address the problem. The mechanics covered the hole but did not secure the covering; and a week later the electrical contractor's foreman fell through the hole to the lower floor, although he had been aware of the hole when he was at the site the previous week. The CGL contained an exclusion entitled "Exclusion--Engineers, Architects or Surveyors Professional Liability," which the insurer contended applied to preclude a duty to defend. The trial court found for the insurer, holding that the bodily injury in the underlying action arose out of the insured's supervisory services, which was excluded. The court of appeal reversed, holding that the duty to defend is both separate from and broader than a duty to indemnify (169 Cal. App. 4th 976, 985) . The court construed the exclusion narrowly, noting that to do otherwise would render the CGL policy inapplicable to any incident that occurs while the insured is on a project site as an engineering consultant. Because the insured is an engineering firm, its general liability policy would be essentially useless. To prevail on a claim for breach of duty to defend, the insured need not prove coverage, but only the possibility of coverage at the time the claim is raised (169 Cal. App. 4th 976, 992) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Arbitration Agreement Applies to Related Tort Claim

The court of appeal in Blatt v. Farley (1990) 226 Cal. App. 3d 621, 276 Cal. Rptr. 612 , affirmed an award pursuant to a demand for arbitration that described the dispute as encompassing "unsuitable investment recommendations, misrepresentations and omissions in connection with the sale of securities." The arbitration was conducted under a player/representative agreement that provided for arbitration of "all disputes arising out of or relating to this Agreement." The court said that the quoted language was broad enough to encompass tort liability (226 Cal. App. 3d 621, 628) .

In Izzi v. Mesquite Country Club (1986) 186 Cal. App. 3d 1309, 231 Cal. Rptr. 315 , plaintiffs entered into a real property purchase and sale contract requiring arbitration of matters "in connection with" the contract, and subsequently brought an action in tort against the sellers, alleging fraudulent nondisclosure of assessment costs of the property. The trial court denied defendants' petition to compel arbitration on the ground that, among other things, the action was outside the scope of the arbitration clause. The court of appeal reversed, holding that the issue of whether critical information was withheld during contract negotiation was clearly connected with the contract (186 Cal. App. 3d 1309, 1315-1316) .

In Merrick v. Writers Guild of America, West, Inc. (1982) 130 Cal. App. 3d 212, 181 Cal. Rptr. 530 , defendant, a union, had brought to arbitration a claim of two of its members against their employer, under terms of the union's collective bargaining agreement with the employer. The arbitrator issued an award denying the claim on its merits. The employer, under the basic agreement, subsequently brought suit against defendant for malicious prosecution and abuse of process, based on defendant's having prosecuted the prior arbitration. Defendant answered and then filed a petition to compel arbitration. The trial court denied the petition based on its finding that the allegations on which plaintiff's suit was based arose out of tort rather than contract and therefore did not come within the arbitration provisions contained in the collective bargaining agreement. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the trial court's decision. The court stated that there appeared to be little difference in the premises between state and federal law applicable to the arbitration agreement (130 Cal. App. 3d 212, 218) . Citing both federal precedent and Lewsadder v. Mitchum, Jones & Templeton, Inc. (1973) 36 Cal. App. 3d 255, 259, 111 Cal. Rptr. 405 (discussed below), the court held that a complaint sounding in tort will not prevent arbitration if the underlying agreement embraces the disputed matter. In regard to the present case, the court stated that the defendant's allegedly tortious conduct occurred in connection with arbitration proceedings pursuant to the arbitration provision of the agreement, and that plaintiff's action had its roots in the relationship between the parties that was created by the collective bargaining agreement (130 Cal. App. 3d 212, 219) . Thus, the court concluded that it could not be said that the dispute engendered by the defendant's alleged conduct was outside the scope of the arbitration proceedings simply because the plaintiff, by its complaint, made such conduct the basis of causes of action for malicious prosecution and abuse of process. The fact that the plaintiff's action sounded in tort rather than contract was not a valid basis for theorder denying the petition to compel arbitration (130 Cal. App. 3d 212, 219-220) .

Lewsadder v. Mitchum, Jones & Templeton, Inc. (1973) 36 Cal. App. 3d 255, 111 Cal. Rptr. 405 , concerned a suit for intentional misrepresentation and libel filed by respondent against his employer, a member of the New York Stock Exchange. The employer filed a petition to compel arbitration under an application with the Exchange that respondent had signed as a condition of employment, which provided that any controversy between respondent and any member of the exchange arising out of respondent's employment or its termination would be settled by arbitration. The court of appeal stated that while the intentional torts of fraud and libel are not in themselves associated with arbitration, there is no restriction preventing an agreement from effectively connecting them. The court held that because the term "controversy" is defined in Code Civ. Proc. § 1280(c) as any question arising between parties to an agreement, whether of law or fact, the present agreement extending arbitration to any controversy was broad enough to include tort as well as contract liabilities (36 Cal. App. 3d 255, 259) . Furthermore, the court found that the causes of action had not arisen independently of respondent's association with petitioner (36 Cal. App. 3d 255, 259-261) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20 ARBITRATION: COMPELLING
PART II. FORMS
B. Particular Claims Subject to Arbitration

2-20 California Points & Authorities § 20.41

§ 20.41 Arbitration of Federal Securities Claims

[1] FORM

PETITIONER, AS A PARTY TO AN AGREEMENT PROVIDING FOR ARBITRATION OF ANY CONTROVERSY RELATING TO THE ACCOUNT(S) RESPONDENT MAINTAINED WITH PETITIONER, IS ENTITLED TO AN ORDER COMPELLING ARBITRATION OF ALL CLAIMS RAISED BY RESPONDENT.

A. Arbitrability of Federal Securities Claims. [See § 20.21[1], Paragraph A.]

[Optional] B. State Court Jurisdiction Under Securities Act of 1933. State courts have concurrent jurisdiction with federal district courts of all suits in equity and actions at law brought to enforce any liability or duty created by the Securities Act of 1933, Sections 77a through 77aa of Title 15 of the United States Code (15 U.S.C. § 77v(a); see also Lakewood Bank & Trust Co. v. Superior Court (1982) 129 Cal. App. 3d 463, 468-470, 180 Cal. Rptr. 914).

[Optional] C. State Court Jurisdiction Under Securities Exchange Act of 1934. State courts have jurisdiction over claims made under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. §§ 78a-78 ll) and over regulations promulgated under that Act only if the claim is asserted in addition to state claims and is based on common law. Exclusive federal jurisdiction over claims based on the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 extends only to those claims that go beyond common-law rights that state courts could have fully adjudicated prior to passage of the Act (Twomey v. Mitchum, Jones & Templeton, Inc. (1968) 262 Cal. App. 2d 690, 704-706) .

[Optional] D. Federal Securities Law Preempts State Law Adhesion Contract Principles. Because Congress has committed to the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) the task of insuring that the federal rights established by the Securities Acts are not compromised by inadequate arbitration procedures, the courts are bound by the SEC's determination that the arbitration procedures adopted by national securities exchanges and securities associations are satisfactory. Any contrary result would frustrate the federal scheme. Thus, state law adhesion contract principles may not be invoked to bar arbitrability, and arbitration under SEC-approved procedures is not unconscionable as a matter of law (Cohen v. Wedbush, Noble, Cooke, Inc. (9th Cir. 1988) 841 F.2d 282, 286) .

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used to support a petition to compel arbitration of a dispute encompassing federal securities claims when the specific arbitration procedures to be used have been approved by the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC). Formerly, the state securities claims could be arbitrated, but the federal claims could not [see Dean Witter Reynolds Inc. v. Byrd (1985) 470 U.S. 213, 217, 105 S. Ct. 1238, 84 L. Ed. 2d 158, 163, 165-167 (claim of adhesion contract not discussed)].

The authorities in optional Paragraphs B and C address state court jurisdiction under the federal Securities Acts of 1933 and 1934, respectively.

The authority in optional Paragraph D abrogates California cases to the contrary, specifically Lewis v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc. (1986) 183 Cal. App. 3d 1097, 1102-1106, 228 Cal. Rptr. 345 , and Lewis v. Prudential-Bache Securities, Inc. (1986) 179 Cal. App. 3d 935, 944-945, 225 Cal. Rptr. 69 . Optional Paragraph D may be used if the unconscionability issue has been raised, or if counsel anticipates that it might be raised.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in support of compelling arbitration, either alone [see § 20.10] or combined with a motion to stay an action [see § 20.11].

As a tactical matter, counsel may wish to reserve these points for oral argument or for other form of rejoinder to the respondent's opposing memorandum. In deciding whether or not to reserve these arguments, counsel should consider local court rules and practice, as well as whether the moving party would be expected to raise these points in initial moving papers, to avoid the possibility of losing the opportunity to raise them.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, the counsel should trace the language of the arbitration agreement, particularly language incorporating the SEC approved arbitration rules of a national securities exchange or securities association.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filedunverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Memoranda

The authorities cited in § 20.31 may be combined with those in this form to establish incorporation by reference of rules or bylaws requiring arbitration.

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] State Court Jurisdiction Under Securities Act of 1933

In Lakewood Bank & Trust Co. v. Superior Court (1982) 129 Cal. App. 3d 463, 180 Cal. Rptr. 914 , the court of appeal reiterated that state courts have jurisdiction, with federal district courts, of all suits in equity and actions at law brought to enforce any liability or duty created by the Securities Act of 1933 (129 Cal. App. 3d 463, 468-470) . Because the cross complaint at issue, against a Texas bank, was based on its actions after the sale of the interests in question, it was not based on the Securities Act of 1933. Thus, the court of appeal issued a peremptory writ of mandate requiring the trial court to vacate its order denying motions to dismiss and quash and requiring it to hold further proceedings to determine if the cross defendant had sufficient minimum contacts with California to establish jurisdiction on that basis (129 Cal. App. 3d 463, 471-474) .

[b] State Court Jurisdiction Under Securities Exchange Act of 1934

Twomey v. Mitchum, Jones & Templeton, Inc. (1968) 262 Cal. App. 2d 690, 69 Cal. Rptr. 222 , was an action by an investor for damages for stockbrokers' fraud, misrepresentation, and breach of fiduciary duty. In the course of the trial, plaintiff introduced evidence of SEC rules, rules of the NYSE, and rules of the NASD. For purposes of the appeal, plaintiff admitted that those rules, regarding over-trading and suitability of investments, were relied on in establishing defendants' negligence and fraud. Judgment was for plaintiff, and defendants appealed, in part, on the ground that 15 U.S.C. § 78aa vests exclusive jurisdiction of claims brought under the Act of 1934 in the federal district courts.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court noted that 15 U.S.C. § 78i(e) expressly authorizes action by a customer against a broker who has willfully engaged in certain manipulative practices (262 Cal. App. 2d 690, 699-700) . The court considered cases from other jurisdictions that held that the exclusive jurisdiction of federal courts extends only to those actions that involve some right of recovery that goes beyond those common-law rights that might have been adjudicated and enforced by appropriate action in a state court before the Act of 1934 was passed (262 Cal. App. 2d 690, 704) , and that a state court can entertain a common-law fraud action even though it has been joined with a nonjurisdictional cause of action predicated on an express or implied right under the Act of 1934 (262 Cal. App. 2d 690, 705) . The court noted that 15 U.S.C. § 78bb(a) provides that the remedies provided by the Act of 1934 are in addition to any and all other rights that may exist at law or in equity and concluded that state courts had jurisdiction over the causes of action set forth in plaintiff's complaint (262 Cal. App. 2d 690, 706) .

[c] Federal Securities Law Preempts State Law Adhesion Contract Principles

Plaintiff/investors in Cohen v. Wedbush, Noble, Cooke, Inc. (9th Cir. 1988) 841 F.2d 282 , brought an action in 1987 against their broker, charging defendant with breach of the agreement between the parties, breach of fiduciary duty, and breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing. The suit was based on defendant's sale of $3 million of securities in plaintiffs' margin accounts. Defendant moved to compel arbitration of the claims, and the motion was granted. Plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeals affirmed. Plaintiffs claimed that the arbitration clause was unenforceable as an unconscionable provision of a contract of adhesion, that they were fraudulently induced to sign the agreement, and that the arbitration provisions in the agreements were unenforceable as fraudulent and manipulative practices under regulations promulgated by the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC), that is, SEC Rule 15c2-2, 17 C.F.R. § 240.15c2-2. Plaintiffs based their claim of unconscionability on Lewis v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc. (1986) 183 Cal. App. 3d 1097, 1102-1106, 228 Cal. Rptr. 345 , and Lewis v. Prudential-Bache Securities, Inc. (1986) 179 Cal. App. 3d 935, 944-945, 225 Cal. Rptr. 69 , which held that arbitration under the auspices, rules, and panel of the New York Stock Exchange (NYSE) or the National Association of Securities Dealers (NASD) was not sufficiently impartial and, especially when industry practices were challenged, was presumptively biased. In this case, the broker claimed that liquidation of the securities was proper in accordance with industry practice, and plaintiffs challenged those practices as unreasonable. The court of appeals said it respectfully disagreed with the conclusion of the California courts that the doctrine of unconscionability was applicable under these circumstances (841 F.2d 282, 286) . As recognized by the Supreme Court in Shearson/American Express, Inc. v. McMahon (1987) 482 U.S. 220, 233-238, 107 S. Ct. 2332, 96 L. Ed. 2d 185 , the SEC has virtually plenary authority over the arbitration procedures adopted by national securities exchanges and securities associations. Because Congress has committed to the SEC the task of ensuring that the federal rights established by the Securities Acts are not compromised by inadequate arbitrationprocedures, the court of appeals held itself bound by the SEC's determination that the NYSE and NASD procedures here at issue were satisfactory. Any contrary result, it said, would frustrate the federal scheme. Similarly, state law adhesion contract principles may not be invoked to bar arbitrability of disputes under the Federal Arbitration Act. Thus, arbitration under SEC-approved procedures is not unconscionable as a matter of law (841 F.2d 282, 286) .

Plaintiffs claimed that they had been fraudulently induced to enter into the agreement to arbitrate, in that the broker had not told them they were waiving significant rights by doing so. Under the federal rule, if the claim of fraud in the inducement goes to the arbitration clause, that claim cannot be arbitrated, but must be adjudicated (841 F.2d 282, 286) . However, here the defendant had no duty to disclose the waiver of the right to trial to plaintiffs, and the statement that the agreement did not compromise any of plaintiffs' rights went to the agreement as a whole, and was not one that plaintiffs could reasonably have relied on, reliance not being reasonable when the plaintiff, through the exercise of reasonable diligence, for instance by simply reading the contract, could have ascertained the truth (841 F.2d 282, 287) . Thus, the claims did not state a cause of action for fraud (841 F.2d 282, 288) .

Regarding plaintiff's claim that the arbitration clause violated SEC Rule 15c2-2, 17 C.F.R. § 240.15c2-2, the court of appeals cited the statement from Shearson/American Express, Inc. v. McMahon (1987) 482 U.S. 220, 234 n.3, 107 S. Ct. 2332, 96 L. Ed. 2d 185 , that Rule 15c2-2 was not based on any independent analysis by the SEC, but on the premise that prior case law rendered 10b-5 claims unarbitrable. Accordingly, the SEC has rescinded Rule 15c2-2 in light of Shearson, and plaintiffs' claim was without foundation (841 F.2d 282, 288) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] State Court Jurisdiction Under Securities Exchange Act of 1934

In Lange v. H. Hentz & Co., (N.D. Tex., 1976) 418 F. Supp. 1376 , the United States District Court for the Northern District of Texas cited Twomey v. Mitchum, Jones & Templeton, Inc. (1968) 262 Cal. App. 2d 690, 69 Cal. Rptr. 222 (discussed at [3][b], above), with approval in dismissing an action against a broker for breach of NASD rules and state and federal securities laws, for fraud and negligence, and for breach of fiduciary duty. The court said that erosion of state-defined relationships would no doubt occur if federal law were to expand into the nonfraud areas already claimed by the states (418 F. Supp. 1376, 1383) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20 ARBITRATION: COMPELLING
PART II. FORMS
B. Particular Claims Subject to Arbitration

2-20 California Points & Authorities § 20.42

§ 20.42 Arbitrability of Claims of Fraud in Inducement of Contract Containing the Arbitration Clause

[1] FORM

PETITIONER, AS A PARTY TO AN ARBITRATION PROVISION PROVIDING FOR ARBITRATION OF DISPUTES ARISING FROM A CONTRACT IN WHICH THE PROVISION IS CONTAINED, IS ENTITLED TO AN ORDER COMPELLING ARBITRATION [AND STAYING ANY PENDING ACTION RELATING TO ARBITRABLE ISSUES] OF THE ISSUE OF FRAUD IN INDUCEMENT OF THE CONTRACT BECAUSE THE CLAIM OF FRAUD IS DIRECTED TO THE ENTIRE UNDERLYING AGREEMENT AND NOT TO THE ARBITRATION PROVISION ALONE.

A. Claims of Fraud in Inducement of Contract Containing Arbitration Clause Are Arbitrable. In the absence of contrary intent, and when the arbitration clause is reasonably susceptible of such an interpretation, claims of fraud in the inducement of the contract in which the clause is contained are subject to arbitration if the arbitration provision itself is not subject to a claim of fraud (Rosenthal v. Great Western Fin. Securities Corp. (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 394, 415-416, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 875, 926 P.2d 1061 ; Ericksen, Arbuthnot, McCarthy, Kearney & Walsh, Inc. v. 100 Oak Street (1983) 35 Cal. 3d 312, 323, 197 Cal. Rptr. 581, 673 P.2d 251 ; Duffens v. Valenti (2008) 161 Cal. App. 4th 434, 448-451, 74 Cal. Rptr. 3d 311 ; Larian v. Larian (2004) 123 Cal. App. 4th 751, 761-762, 19 Cal. Rptr. 3d 916).

[Optional] B. Proving Existence of Agreement to Arbitrate. [See § 20.10[1], Paragraph C.]

[Optional] C. Evidentiary Hearing. [See § 20.10[1], Paragraph D.]

[Optional] D. No Duty to Explain Provision. When parties are dealing at arms length, neither has any duty to explain the terms of a written contract to the other, particularly when the language of the contract expressly and plainly provides for arbitration of disputes arising out of the contractual relationship (Rowland v. PaineWebber Inc. (1992) 4 Cal. App. 4th 279, 286, 6 Cal. Rptr. 2d 20).

[Optional] E. Reliance Must Be Reasonable. Reliance on an alleged misrepresentation is not reasonable when plaintiff could have ascertained the truth through the exercise of reasonable diligence. [Reasonable diligence requires a party to read a contract before signing it]. A party cannot use his or her own lack of diligence to avoid an arbitration agreement (Rosenthal v. Great Western Fin. Securities Corp. (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 394, 421-427, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 875, 926 P.2d 1061 ; Rowland v. PaineWebber Inc. (1992) 4 Cal. App. 4th 279, 286, 6 Cal. Rptr. 2d 20).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used to support a petition to compel arbitration when the petitioner anticipates a challenge that, because the contract in which the arbitration clause is contained was induced by fraud, the arbitration clause is revoked because of the fraud. The optional paragraphs describe the procedure and sufficiency of the evidence used to determine which type of fraud exists and whether the court should grant the motion to compel arbitration. Counsel should use as many of the optional paragraphs as relate to specific contentions or allegations at issue, and argue that the declarations or other evidence submitted in the particular situation are not sufficient to establish fraud in the inception or execution of the principal agreement or fraud in the inducement of the arbitration clause itself.

In addition, counsel should demonstrate that the claims of fraud are directed at the entire agreement, and not at the arbitration provision alone [see Rosenthal v. GreatWestern Fin. Securities Corp. (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 394, 415-417, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 875, 926 P.2d 1061 ; Ericksen, Arbuthnot, McCarthy, Kearney & Walsh, Inc. v. 100 Oak Street (1983) 35 Cal. 3d 312, 323, 197 Cal. Rptr. 581, 673 P.2d 251 (discussed at [3][a], below)].

This form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in support of compelling arbitration, either alone [see § 20.10] or combined with a motion to stay an action [see § 20.11].

As a tactical matter, counsel may wish to reserve these points for oral argument or for other forms of rejoinder to the respondent's opposing memorandum. In deciding whether or not to reserve these arguments, counsel should consider local court rules and practice, as well as whether or not the moving party would be expected to raise these points in initial moving papers, to avoid the possibility of losing the opportunity to raise them.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, the counsel should quote or refer to language of the arbitration agreement that specifies the subject matter that may be arbitrated. Counsel should show that the arbitration agreement may reasonably be construed to encompass claims of fraud relating to the underlying contract.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California

Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Memoranda

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[d] Opposing Memoranda

The points and authorities in Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.87 generally oppose those in this form on the ground that the fraud in the execution or inception of the entire agreement was so extensive as to vitiate mutual assent or that the fraud was directed only at the arbitration provision, not at the entire contract.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Claims of Fraud in Inducement of Contract Containing Arbitration Clause Are Arbitrable

The facts and procedural background of Rosenthal v. Great Western Fin. Securities Corp. (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 394, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 875, 926 P.2d 1061 , and the portions of the opinion addressing the procedure for determining the existence of an arbitration agreement, including any defenses to enforcement thereof, in general, and the evidentiary nature of that hearing are discussed in § 20.10[3][a] and [b], respectively. Defendant contended that plaintiffs' declarations were legally insufficient to raise the issue of the nonarbitrability of the fraud claims because they were not directed specifically at the arbitration clause. In order to defeat a petition to compel arbitration, the parties opposing the petition must show that the asserted fraud claim goes to the making of the agreement to arbitrate rather than to the making of the contract in general (14 Cal. 4th 394, 415) . California law distinguishes between fraud in the inducement and fraud in the inception (or execution) of a contract. Fraud in the inception or execution refers to the situation in which the promisor is deceived as to the nature of his or her act and actually does not know what he or she is signing, or does not intend to enter into a contract at all. There being no mutual assent, the contract is void. Fraud in the inducement occurs when the promisor knows what he or she is signing but his or her consent is induced by fraud. Mutual assent is present and a contract is formed, which, by reason of the fraud, is voidable (14 Cal. 4th 394, 415) .

Defendant also contended that Prima Paint v. Flood & Conklin (1967) 388 U.S. 395, 404, 87 S. Ct. 1801, 18 L. Ed. 2d 1270 , requires arbitration of any fraud claim, even one going to the execution of the contract as a whole, except a claim directed to the arbitration clause itself. The portion of the opinion addressing this contention is discussed in Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.87[3][f]. The Supreme Court said that arbitration clauses must, under federal law, be viewed as "separable" from other provisions of a contract. However, fraud in the inducement relating to other contractual terms does not render the arbitration agreement unenforceable, even when it might justify rescission of the contract as a whole. By entering into an arbitration agreement, the parties established their intent that disputes coming within the agreement's scope be determined by an arbitrator rather than a court; this contractual intent must be respected even with regard to claims of fraud in the inducement of the contract generally (14 Cal. 4th 394, 416) .

Ericksen, Arbuthnot, McCarthy, Kearney & Walsh, Inc. v. 100 Oak Street (1983) 35 Cal. 3d 312, 197 Cal. Rptr. 581, 673 P.2d 251 , involved a dispute arising from a lease of office property. The lessee brought an action for rescission of the lease and damages, alleging that the premises were untenantable and that it had beeninduced into entering the lease by the lessor's misrepresentations about the building's condition. The lease contained an arbitration clause by which the parties agreed to arbitrate any dispute arising with respect to the lease, exclusive of disputes over rent. When the lessor petitioned the superior court to compel arbitration of the dispute and stay the civil proceedings, the lessee responded that the arbitration agreement should be revoked because of the lessor's fraud. The trial court denied the petition to stay proceedings and compel arbitration, and the lessor appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed the denial and ordered the superior court to grant the petition. The Court held the fundamental issue to be whether a court, confronted with an agreement containing an arbitration clause and a petition to compel arbitration, will preliminarily entertain and decide a party's claim that the underlying agreement, as distinguished from the agreement to arbitrate, was procured by fraud. The Court noted that this was a question of first impression in California and examined a number of federal and sister-state cases. The Court found the majority rule to be that when there is no claim made that fraud was directed to an arbitration clause itself, a broad arbitration clause will be held to encompass arbitration of the claim that the contract itself was induced by fraud. A factor in the majority rule is the policy of promoting arbitration both to accord with the original intention of the parties and to relieve court congestion. The Court held the majority rule to be compatible with California's arbitration statutes and found that the rule was in accord with California's strong public policy in favor of arbitration. This was particularly true of cases in which parties of presumptively equal bargaining power have entered into an agreement containing a commitment to arbitration, and one of the parties seeks to avoid arbitration by asserting that the other party fraudulently induced the agreement because he or she never intended to perform. The Court noted that the difference between a breach of contract and such fraudulent inducement depends on a determination of a party's state of mind at the time of entering the contract, and that the consequences of allowing a party to avoid arbitration by relying on the distinction must be considered (35 Cal. 3d 312, 322) . The Court concluded that the majority rule of the federal and sister-state courts should be adopted. In the absence of an indication of contrary intent, and when the arbitration clause is reasonably susceptible of such an interpretation, claims of fraud in the inducement of the contract, as distinguished from claims of fraud directed to the arbitration clause itself, are subject to arbitration (35 Cal. 3d 312, 323) .

Duffens v. Valenti (2008) 161 Cal. App. 4th 434, 74 Cal. Rptr. 3d 311 , involved contracts alleged to be void and unenforceable because of violation of the statutes regulating dating service contracts (Civ. Code § 1694 et seq.). Plaintiffs sought general, special, and treble damages based on allegations of fraud and statutory violations in the individual matchmaking consulting agreements sold to them by defendant. Plaintiffs alleged that defendant claimed to have a network of employees who recruited and screened high-level, wealthy, single potential romantic partners throughout the United States and internationally, and promised it had wealthy, successful persons as active clients but in fact never had any suitable matches to introduce to them and had therefore obtained their assent to the agreements through these misrepresentations. Further violations of the statute were alleged in that the retainer fees were nonrefundable, while Civ. Code § 1694.3(a) and (b) required them to be totally refundable in two instances. Defendant brought a motion to compel arbitration, arguing that the arbitration clause within the matchmaking consulting agreement was severable and enforceable, regardless of any potential defenses to the underlying contract liability. The trial court denied the motion finding the arbitration clause was unenforceable because it was contained within an agreement that lacked essential language required by the statutory scheme, and entered into under misleading circumstances, also a violation of statute (Civ. Code §§ 1694.3, 1694.4(a) and (b)). Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, concluding that under California law, the agreements were part of a small class of contracts regulated by specific statutes that expressly render nonconforming contracts void and unenforceable. Because the agreements sued on violated express requirements of the dating service statutes, they were void and unenforceable, and their arbitration provisions were likewise not enforceable (161 Cal. App. 4th 434, 441, 456) . The court of appeal said it could not determine whether the Federal Arbitration Act (FAA; 9 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.) applied because defendant raised the issue for the first time on appeal and did not provide a record sufficient to allow the court to make that determination (161 Cal. App. 4th 434, 445, 451) . The majority of the agreements contained a choice of law and choice of forum clauses that provided they would be governed by, interpreted under, and construed and enforced in accordance with the laws of the State of California (161 Cal. App. 4th 434, 446) . The court of appeal said it could not treat this as an FAA case, but would apply the standard annunciated in Rosenthal v. Great Western Fin. Securities Corp (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 394, 402, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 875, 926 P.2d 1061 (Rosenthal, discussed above) for evaluating the record under California standards for enforceability of an arbitration clause, because the legality of the overall agreement was challenged (161 Cal. App. 4th 434, 452) . Before discussing the illegality issue, however, the court of appeal discussed the fraud issue and the distinctions between fraud in the execution and fraud in the inducement and Rosenthal's holding that the nomenclature "permeation doctrine" no longer be used in California (161 Cal. App. 4th 434, 448) . The correct analysis in determining an arbitrability question that is based on a claim of an invalid agreement will use the following definitions. First, an arbitration clause will not be enforced if it is found within an agreement that may properly be judicially determined to be void for fraud in the execution or fraud in the inception, such that there was never any existing agreement in the first place, and this determination includes any arbitration clause within the basic agreement; fraud in the execution voids the entire agreement. Nevertheless, an arbitration clause may be subject to enforcement even when a challenge exists to the validity of the overall agreement, if the challenge is based on fraud in the inducement, and if the FAA applies. Claims of fraud in the inducement of the contract generally--that is, fraud claims not going to the making of the agreement to arbitrate--are to be decided by the arbitrator rather than the court, unless the parties have agreed otherwise (161 Cal. App. 4th 434, 448) . California law distinguishes between fraud in the execution or inception of a contract and fraud in the inducement of a contract. In the former case the fraud goes to the inception or execution of theagreement, so that the promisor is deceived as to the nature of his act, and actually does not know what he is signing, or does not intend to enter into a contract at all, mutual assent is lacking, and the contract is void. In such a case it may be disregarded without the necessity of rescission. Fraud in the inducement, by contrast, occurs when the promisor knows what he is signing but his consent is induced by fraud, mutual assent is present and a contract is formed, which, by reason of the fraud, is voidable. In order to escape from its obligations the aggrieved party must rescind. This type of analysis requires courts to deem that claims of fraud in the execution of the entire agreement are not arbitrable under either state or federal law. Likewise, claims that a party has employed fraud in inducing consent specifically to the arbitration agreement (e.g., by actively concealing its existence or misrepresenting its meaning or value) are, under federal or state law, to be decided by the court, because they go to the validity of the making of the arbitration clause itself. Here, it is undisputed that respondents knew the nature of their acts when they entered into the contracts, and they are not claiming fraud in the execution or inception. Under Rosenthal, claims that the contract as a whole was obtained through fraud in the inducement are, in the absence of evidence of the parties' contrary intent, arbitrable. Included in this rule of arbitrability are claims of a grand scheme of fraud, or fraud permeating the transaction (161 Cal. App. 4th 434, 449) . This type of fraud--fraud in the inducement--may result in disappointed expectations that may justify a revocation of the agreement because of a failure of performance. These cases should be distinguished from those in which a party claimed illegality of the underlying agreement. If the underlying agreement is illegal under other accepted standards, its arbitration clause can be avoided. Here, plaintiffs plead that fraud in the inducement occurred, because they knew what they were signing, but they claim their consent was induced by fraud, so that even though there was mutual assent and a contract, the contract, by reason of the fraud, is voidable (161 Cal. App. 4th 434, 450) . Claims based on fraudulent inducement of an underlying contractual arrangement normally might be arbitrable, as in a case of disappointed expectations in the performance of the contract. However, plaintiffs' allegations of breaches of statutory duty invoked other governing rules of contract interpretation that had to be considered in determining the arbitrability question (161 Cal. App. 4th 434, 451) . That portion of the opinion is discussed at § 20A.89[3][a].

Plaintiff and defendant in Larian v. Larian (2004) 123 Cal. App. 4th 751, 19 Cal. Rptr. 3d 916 , were brothers and business partners. Their partnership was formed in 1979 and later evolved into a corporation. They conveyed 10 percent of the stock to their brother-in-law; the brothers each retained a 45 percent interest in the original corporation, and each successor corporation. Plaintiff and defendant began having disputes over the operation of the business in 1993 and considered having one brother buy out the other's equity interest. An outside appraisal of the company valued the company at $35 million to $40 million. Defendant was more active in the day-to-day operations of the company and allegedly concealed from plaintiff a new product line that would have generated $3 billion in sales within a few years. In March, 2000, defendant offered to purchase plaintiff's interest in the company for $9 million, based on a total valuation of the company at $20 million, which excluded the new product line. In September, 2000, the brothers executed an agreement to arbitrate, in accordance with which their uncle would act as arbitrator to value the company. In December, 2000, the brothers executed an agreement in which plaintiff agreed to sell his shares to defendant for less than $9 million. That agreement provided that any controversy between the parties arising out it would be arbitrated by the uncle, as sole arbitrator, and that his decision would be final and binding on both parties. Plaintiff alleged that he discovered the true facts pertaining to the new line in spring or summer of 2002 and requested rescission and damages.

In January, 2003, plaintiff submitted a list of claims to the arbitrator, based mainly on the concealment of information regarding the new product line and resultant substantial undervaluation of the company. Plaintiff sued, setting forth 10 causes of action including those based on fraud and deceit in the inducement of the arbitration agreement, in the arbitration process and in the December, 2000, agreement, breach of fiduciary duties, and rescission based on mistake. Defendant moved to compel arbitration. The trial court denied the motion, concluding that the allegation of fraud in the execution of the arbitration agreement had to be decided by the court. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed (123 Cal. App. 4th 751, 765-766) . In the absence of indication of contrary intent, and if the arbitration clause is reasonably susceptible of that interpretation, claims of fraud in the inducement of the contract (as distinguished from claims of fraud directed to the arbitration clause itself) are subject to arbitration (123 Cal. App. 4th 751, 761) . The court of appeal discussed the distinction, as made in Rosenthal v. Great Western Fin. Securities Corp. (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 394, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 875, 926 P.2d 1061 (discussed above), between arbitrable and nonarbitrable fraud claims which are asserted as grounds for voiding an arbitration clause: Claims of fraud in the execution or inception of a contract are based on the promisor's being deceived as to the nature of the act of contracting, so that the promisor actually does not know what he or she is signing, or does not intend to enter into a contract at all; mutual assent is lacking, and the contract is void. Fraud in the inducement, by contrast, occurs if the promisor knows the nature of the document signed, but the consent in signing it was induced by fraud; mutual assent is present and a contract is formed, which, by reason of the fraud, is voidable. The first type of fraud--fraud in the inception or execution--is not arbitrable, on the theory that if the entire contract is void ab initio because of fraud, the parties have not agreed to arbitrate any controversy (123 Cal. App. 4th 751, 761) . However, fraud in the inducement relating to contract terms (other than the arbitration clause) does not render the arbitration agreement unenforceable, even if it might justify rescission of the contract as a whole (123 Cal. App. 4th 751, 761-762) .

The court of appeal found no evidence of fraud in the inception or execution of the agreement as it related to the arbitration clause; there was no evidence that plaintiff was ignorant of the character or essential terms of either the September 28 or December 4, 2000, arbitration agreements. Rather, the evidence related to misrepresentations concerning the new product line and the company's financial status, which was fraud in the inducement. Whether the alleged fraud concerning the concealment of the value and business prospects of the company was legally or equitably sufficientto warrant non-enforcement of the September 28 or December 4, 2000, arbitration agreements was to be resolved in the arbitrator. Thus, the trial court was required to grant the motion to compel arbitration (123 Cal. App. 4th 751, 765) .

[b] No Duty to Explain Provision

Plaintiffs in Rowland v. PaineWebber Inc. (1992) 4 Cal. App. 4th 279, 6 Cal. Rptr. 2d 20 , a retired couple, sued individual and corporate broker defendants claiming defendants purchased investments unsuitable for plaintiffs' needs and made misrepresentations and omissions of material fact, causing them financial loss and emotional distress. The allegations related solely to the supervision and handling of plaintiffs' account. There was no allegation of misrepresentation or fraud regarding execution of the Client's Agreement or the arbitration clause in it. In response to defendants' petition to compel arbitration, one plaintiff's declaration stated that (1) they were besieged with a plethora of documents to be signed during the process of opening the account, (2) one of the individual defendants represented to them that the documents for opening the account were simply paperwork necessary to open the account, (3) there was no reason to read the documents because they were for PaineWebber's records and did not affect plaintiffs or their legal rights, and (4) plaintiffs were never given ample time to read the material and trusted the individual broker's explanation. The trial court found this to be an insufficient showing and granted plaintiffs 10 days to amend their complaint to sufficiently allege the claim of fraud. Before plaintiffs filed their amended complaint, which was substantially the same as the original one, the trial court denied the petition to compel arbitration and ordered the parties to proceed to trial on the severed issue of fraud in the inducement. Defendants appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the order denying defendants' petition to compel arbitration, holding that the complaint did not allege fraud in the inducement of the contract or the arbitration clause and the allegations in plaintiffs' declarations opposing the petition did not tend to show that they were the victims of fraud. The court said the parties mischaracterized the issue as whether plaintiffs' fraud claim related to execution of the entire client's agreement or just to the arbitration provision. The more fundamental question was the sufficiency of their allegations. To be entitled to a jury trial on the issue of fraud in the inducement of the arbitration agreement, plaintiffs must state a cause of action for fraud. Any lesser showing would frustrate the purpose of arbitration agreements (4 Cal. App. 4th 279, 285) . When the complaint is devoid of contractual fraud allegations, the trial court should determine whether there are any facts supporting the allegations of fraud in the inducement (4 Cal. App. 4th 279, 285-286) . The trial court failed to impose that burden of proof on plaintiffs in this case. The allegations in the declaration were insufficient. The plaintiffs' reliance on the broker's statements about the contract was not reasonable, when they could have read the contract (4 Cal. App. 4th 279, 286) .

The court of appeal said that the individual broker's comments related to the client agreement as a whole rather than to the arbitration provision in particular, and thus, cannot be characterized as fraud in the inducement of the arbitration provision. Even assuming that a statement by a nonlawyer regarding a question of law can constitute fraud, when the challenge does not go to the validity of the arbitration clause, the dispute over the enforceability of the arbitration clause is to be arbitrated. The court distinguished Strotz v. Dean Witter Reynolds, Inc. (1990) 223 Cal. App. 3d 208, 272 Cal. Rptr. 680 (discussed in Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.87[3][e] and [g]), as involving a fiduciary relationship between the broker and the client and sufficient allegations of fraud in the inducement in the complaint. There were no facts in this case tending to show that plaintiffs were under defendants' dominion and control (4 Cal. App. 4th 279, 287) .

In reversing, the court of appeal held that when parties are dealing at arm's length, neither has any duty to explain the terms of a written contract to the other, particularly express and plain provisions such as the arbitration clause in this agreement. Reliance on an alleged misrepresentation is not reasonable when plaintiff could have ascertained the truth through the exercise of reasonable diligence. Reasonable diligence requires a party to read a contract before signing it. A party cannot use his or her own lack of diligence to avoid an arbitration agreement (4 Cal. App. 4th 279, 286) . No facts were presented that plaintiffs were in any way prevented from reading the contract, which it was their duty to do. Failure to read a contract before signing it is not by itself a reason to refuse its enforcement (4 Cal. App. 4th 279, 287) .

[c] Reliance Must Be Reasonable

The facts and procedural background of Rosenthal v. Great Western Financial Sec. (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 394, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 875, 926 P.2d 1061 , and the portions of the opinion addressing the procedure for determining the existence of an arbitration agreement, including any defenses to enforcement thereof, in general, and the evidentiary nature of that hearing are discussed in § 20.10[3][a] and [b], respectively. The portion of the opinion addressing the arbitrability of claims of fraud in the inducement of the contract as a whole is discussed at [a], above. In considering the central disputed question, whether plaintiffs could justifiably rely on defendants' misrepresentations as an excuse for their failure to read the documents, the Supreme Court noted that plaintiffs relied on Lynch v. Cruttenden & Co. (1993) 18 Cal. App. 4th 802, 807, 22 Cal. Rptr. 2d 636 , and Strotz v. Dean Witter Reynolds, Inc. (1990) 223 Cal. App. 3d 208, 218-219, 272 Cal. Rptr. 680 , which in turn relied on Witkin, Summary of California Law, vol. 1, Contracts, § 407 (9th ed. 1987), for the proposition that, as a general rule, in California, even in the absence of a fiduciary relationship, plaintiff's failure to read a contract is excusable when reliance is placed on the misrepresentation of the other party. However, the Court stated, those cases and Witkin state the rule of excuse too broadly. While some cases hold that equitable relief, such as rescission or reformation of the contract, may be available despite the defrauded party's failure to read the contract, California law is clear that a misrepresentation does not render a written contract void, unless the misled party, before making the agreement, lacked a reasonable opportunity to learn its terms. When the defrauded party had a reasonable opportunity to discover the real terms of the contract, the contract is not void. The defrauded party's failure to learn the nature of the agreement cannot be attributable to his or her own negligence (14 Cal. 4th 394, 420-421) .

California law requires that a plaintiff, in failing to acquaint his or her self with thecontents of a written agreement before signing it, not have acted in an objectively unreasonable manner. One party's misrepresentation as to the nature of character or the writing does not negate the other party's apparent manifestation of assent, if the second party had a reasonable opportunity to know of the character and essential terms of the proposed contract. It follows that one party's unreasonable reliance on the other's misrepresentation, resulting in a failure to read a written agreement before signing it, is an insufficient basis, under the doctrine of fraud in the execution, for permitting that party to avoid an arbitration agreement contained in a contract. Whether a fraud claim that is insufficient as a defense to an arbitration demand may, if proven, form the basis for equitable or other relief in the arbitral forum, is a separate issue, with which the Supreme Court was not concerned in this case (14 Cal. 4th 394, 423) . Because the facts did not establish that most plaintiffs lacked a reasonable opportunity to learn the character of the documents they signed, they did not prove fraud sufficient to make the contracts wholly void (14 Cal. 4th 394, 425) .

Plaintiffs claimed that defendant brokers and brokerage firm had a fiduciary relationship with them. However, the court concluded that at the time these agreements were signed no agency relationship had yet been formed, and those aspects of a broker's duty that derive from his or her role as the investor's agent are not applicable (14 Cal. 4th 394, 425) . The Court noted that none of plaintiffs' declarations established any actual concealment by defendant of the arbitration clause in the client agreements. The client agreement was a one-page (legal size) document; and the arbitration clause was in bold print in the center of the page's right column (14 Cal. 4th 394, 425-426) . The Court concluded that the statements of defendant's representatives to the effect that the client agreements were merely a formality, or did not need to be read, were insufficient, even in light of the parties' relationship, to warrant a finding of fraud in the inception of the agreements. Hence, as to those plaintiffs whose declarations disclosed no additional evidence of fraud, the petition to compel arbitration should have been granted (14 Cal. 4th 394, 426-427) .

The facts and procedural background of Rowland v. PaineWebber Inc. (1992) 4 Cal. App. 4th 279, 6 Cal. Rptr. 2d 20 , are discussed under [b], above. Additionally, the court of appeal noted that one plaintiff was a former securities broker and PaineWebber employee, so this was not a situation involving a helpless investor lost in the world of stocks and bonds. The court of appeal found plaintiffs' suggestion that they were in a weaker position and somehow were without choice in signing or reading the agreement to be without merit and presumed plaintiff was familiar with all industry contract terms necessary to open an investment account (4 Cal. App. 4th 279, 286) . The plaintiffs' reliance on the broker's statements about the contract was not reasonable, because they could have ascertained the truth through the exercise of reasonable diligence, specifically, they could have read the contract. A party cannot use his or her own lack of diligence to avoid an arbitration agreement (4 Cal. App. 4th 279, 286) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Claims of Fraud in Inducement of Contract Containing Arbitration Clause Are Arbitrable

Plaintiffs in Hayes Children Leasing Co. v. NCR Corp. (1995) 37 Cal. App. 4th 775, 43 Cal. Rptr. 2d 650 , were a purchaser and a lessee of computer equipment. They sued the manufacturer and some of its employees for fraud and breach of contract relating to the capabilities and performance of the equipment. The purchase contract, which mistakenly referred to the lessee as the purchaser, contained an arbitration provision. Although the arbitration clause specified that its scope included "any claim of misrepresentation, arising out of or related to this Agreement and/or ... the furnishing of any equipment or service by NCR to Customer," plaintiffs successfully opposed defendants' motion to compel arbitration.

The court of appeal reversed as to the purchaser and affirmed as to the lessee, which it agreed was not a party to the purchase agreement (37 Cal. App. 4th 775, 780) . Plaintiff/purchaser recognized the general rule that allegations that the contract as a whole were induced by fraud are to be arbitrated, but claimed that the arbitration clause itself was inserted as part of a fraudulent scheme, and therefore, under Moseley v. Electronic Facilities (1963) 374 U.S. 167, 171, 83 S. Ct. 1815, 10 L. Ed. 2d 818 , that issue had to be decided by a court. The court of appeal noted that Moseley was decided before Prima Paint v. Flood & Conklin (1967) 388 U.S. 395, 404, 87 S. Ct. 1801, 18 L. Ed. 2d 1270 , and therefore is overruled or limited to the extent it is inconsistent with Prima Paint (37 Cal. App. 4th 775, 781, 787) . The court of appeal concluded that, under Prima Paint and other authorities, it is not enough to allege that the arbitration clause was inserted to further a fraudulent scheme. The question in all cases is simply whether the agreement to arbitrate itself was induced by fraud. This means there must be facts alleged from which it might be concluded that the party resisting arbitration never intended to agree to arbitrate the issues raised in the proceedings, or that its assent to the agreement to arbitrate was the product of wrongful coercion. Absent such an allegation it must be concluded that the parties agreed to arbitrate their differences, including issues of fraud in the inducement of the contract, and the matter should be referred to arbitration (37 Cal. App. 4th 775, 781) .

The court of appeal noted that the case involved interstate commerce and was therefore governed by the provisions of the Federal Arbitration Act (9 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.). The court of appeal discussed Prima Paint and Ericksen, Arbuthnot, McCarthy, Kearney & Walsh, Inc. v. 100 Oak Street (1983) 35 Cal. 3d 312, 197 Cal. Rptr. 581, 673 P.2d 251 ; and noted that in neither case did the misrepresentation affect the parties' intent to arbitrate but affected the contract as a whole (37 Cal. App. 4th 775, 781-783) . Similarly, the allegations in this case were nothing more than allegations of fraud in the inducement of the contract as a whole and had no effect on the validity of the arbitration clause (37 Cal. App. 4th 775, 785) .

After arbitration in Britz, Inc. v. Alfa-Laval Food & Dairy Co. (1995) 34 Cal. App. 4th 1085, 40 Cal. Rptr. 2d 700 , plaintiffs petitioned to vacate the award because, among other grounds, the trial court had erred in ordering arbitration. The plaintiffs alleged that fraud permeated the entire contracts, including their arbitration provisionsand that the fraud was directed not only to the contracts as a whole, but to the agreements to arbitrate as well (34 Cal. App. 4th 1085, 1094) . In addition to the allegations regarding false representations about the machines that were the subject of the contract, the plaintiffs alleged that the "false representations went not only to the contracts as a whole, but to the agreements to arbitrate, as well. Plaintiffs were led to believe by defendants that plaintiffs had to agree to arbitration as a sine qua non for acquisition of the equipment, bags and filling machines." The court stated that neither the complaint nor the declarations alleged that the representation that there could be no contract without an arbitration clause was false (34 Cal. App. 4th 1085, 1094-1095) . The court then held that it has been long established that the sort of fraud alleged by plaintiffs does not prevent enforcement of an arbitration clause in a contract, even though contract as a whole might be revocable due to the fraud (34 Cal. App. 4th 1085, 1095) . The issue of fraud as to the contracts generally is one for the arbitrator to determine (34 Cal. App. 4th 1085, 1095-1096) .

The court of appeal in King v. Prudential-Bache Securities, Inc. (1990) 226 Cal. App. 3d 749, 277 Cal. Rptr. 214 , affirmed a judgment confirming an arbitration award in favor of plaintiff, who contended that claims of fraud in the inducement and permeating the contract should have been determined by the trial court and should have barred arbitration. The court held that fraud in the inducement of a contract containing an arbitration clause, as opposed to fraud claims directed at the arbitration clause itself, are to be decided by the arbitrator, not by the court (226 Cal. App. 3d 749, 753) . The court was satisfied from the record that the arbitrators properly decided the issue of fraudulent inducement (226 Cal. App. 3d 749, 755) .

In Herman Feil, Inc. v. Design Center of Los Angeles (1988) 204 Cal. App. 3d 1406, 251 Cal. Rptr. 895 , the court was directly confronted with the issue of whether a claim of fraud in the inducement directed toward the arbitration clause itself may be resolved in arbitration, but appears to have sidestepped a clear resolution of the issue. A commercial tenant's alleged breach of a lease was compelled to be arbitrated under an arbitration clause in the lease [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2]. The tenant alleged that the landlord had fraudulently inserted the arbitration clause into the lease by switching lease forms after a form without the clause had been reviewed and approved by the tenant's counsel. The tenant asked the arbitrator to bifurcate the proceedings and to determine first the claim of fraud in the inducement of the arbitration clause. The arbitrator denied the request for bifurcation, but heard evidence on the issue of fraud. After hearing, the arbitrator awarded the landlord damages for breach of the lease. The trial court vacated the award on the ground that the issue of fraud in the inducement of the arbitration clause had not been directly or impliedly determined either by the court in compelling the matter to arbitration or by the arbitrator.

In reversing and confirming the award for the landlord, the appellate court noted that a matter may not be compelled to arbitration if grounds exist for the revocation of the arbitration agreement [see Code. Civ. Proc. § 1281.2]. The issue of fraud in the inducement of the arbitration agreement was resolved by implication against the tenant by the court's order compelling the matter to arbitration and by denial of appellate intervention by writ as to that order (204 Cal. App. 3d 1406, 1418) . However, the court also noted that the arbitrator did in fact hear evidence on the fraud issue, which suggested by implication that the award encompassed a resolution of that issue against the tenant. The court did not expressly endorse the arbitrator's authority to determine the issue, but neither did it suggest that the arbitrator may have exceeded his or her authority (204 Cal. App. 3d 1406, 1413, 1419) . Further, the court reviewed the evidence of fraud itself and found that there was none, which suggests that even if the matter was beyond the scope of arbitration and not resolved by the trial court, there was no due process violation because it was subject to judicial consideration on appeal (204 Cal. App. 3d 1406, 1416-1417) .

In Downs v. Prudential-Bache Securities, Inc. (1988) 202 Cal. App. 3d 616, 248 Cal. Rptr. 734 , plaintiff signed an application and an employment agreement when he joined defendant stock brokerage firm, both of which provided for arbitration of any disputes. The employment agreement required arbitration under the rules of the New York Stock Exchange. After a dispute had arisen over trading plaintiff had done for one of his clients, he filed a complaint. Defendant had paid the client the money it had lost and received an assignment of the client's claims against plaintiff. After plaintiff filed the complaint, defendant moved for an order compelling arbitration, staying the court action, and consolidating plaintiff's claims with its arbitration claims. Plaintiff asked for leave to file an amended complaint and for an injunction to prevent defendant from proceeding with its pending arbitration. The amended complaint alleged that defendant induced plaintiff to accept employment by paying him an advance bonus, requiring him to sign a promissory note for that amount, and then falsely representing that it would not enforce the note. Plaintiff alleged that defendant was following an industry-wide practice of recruiting employees of competing firms by paying disguised bonuses for proprietary customer information. The trial court denied defendant's motions and plaintiff's request for an injunction, but granted plaintiff leave to amend his complaint.

The court of appeal reversed and remanded. Plaintiff argued that defendant's false promise to forego enforcement of the note was not arbitrable and that he should be entitled to rescind the entire agreement, including the arbitration clause. The court stated that if no claim is made that the fraud was specifically directed at the arbitration clause, a broad arbitration clause will be held to encompass arbitration of the claim that the contract itself was induced by fraud. The court concluded that because the fraud alleged by plaintiff was not specifically directed at the arbitration clause, it too was arbitrable (202 Cal. App. 3d 616, 620) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20 ARBITRATION: COMPELLING
PART II. FORMS
B. Particular Claims Subject to Arbitration

2-20 California Points & Authorities § 20.43

§ 20.43 Arbitration of Uninsured Motorist Claim, Including Subordinate Issues

[1] FORM

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA,
COUNTY OF _____

	)
	)	NO. _____
_____ [name],	)	MEMORANDUM IN SUPPORT OF PETITION TO Petitioner,	)	COMPEL ARBITRATION
vs.	)	Date: _____
_____ [name],	)	Time: _____
Respondent.	)	Location: _____
	)	[Judge: _____]
	)	Date Action Filed: _____
	)	[Trial Date: _____]

_____

PETITIONER, AS A PARTY TO AN INSURANCE POLICY PROVIDING FOR ARBITRATION OF THE ISSUE OF WHETHER OR NOT HE/SHE IS LEGALLY ENTITLED TO DAMAGES UNDER UNINSURED MOTORIST COVERAGE, IS ENTITLED TO AN ORDER COMPELLING ARBITRATION OF HIS/HER CLAIM FOR BENEFITS UNDER THAT COVERAGE[, INCLUDING ANY LEGAL QUESTION SUBORDINATE TO THAT ISSUE] [AND STAYING ANY PENDING ACTION RELATING TO ARBITRABLE ISSUES].

A. Arbitration of Claims Under Uninsured Motorist Coverage. The determination as to whether the insured shall be legally entitled to recover damages, and if so entitled, the amount thereof, shall be made by agreement between the insured and the insurer or, in the event of disagreement, by arbitration (Ins. Code § 11580.2(f); see Spear v. California State Automobile Ass'n (1992) 2 Cal. 4th 1035, 1041-1042, 9 Cal. Rptr. 2d 381, 831 P.2d 821 ; Allstate Ins. Co. v.

Gonzalez (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 783, 789, 45 Cal. Rptr. 2d 491 (insurer's refusal to arbitrate is essential)).

[EITHER, if petitioner filed timely action for bodily injury]

B. Claim Has Been Preserved. Petitioner's cause of action against respondent for benefits under the uninsured motorist provision of the policy has been preserved as required by Insurance Code Section 11580.2(i)(1) because, on _____ [date], which was within two years from the date of the accident, petitioner filed suit for bodily injury against the uninsured motorist, in a court of competent jurisdiction (Ins. Code § 11580.2(i)(1)(A); see also Spear v. California State Automobile Ass'n (1992) 2 Cal. 4th 1035, 1040-1041, 9 Cal. Rptr. 2d 381, 831 P.2d 821).

[OR, if parties reached agreement at to the amount due under the policy]

B. Claim Has Been Preserved. Petitioner's cause of action against respondent for benefits under the uninsured motorist provision of the policy has been preserved as required by Insurance Code Section 11580.2(i)(1) because, on _____ [date], which was within two years from the date of the accident, agreement as to the amount due under the policy was concluded (Ins. Code § 11580.2(i)(1)(B); see also Spear v. California State Automobile Ass'n (1992) 2 Cal. 4th 1035, 1040-1041, 9 Cal. Rptr. 2d 381, 831 P.2d 821).

[OR, if petitioner timely instituted arbitration proceedings]

B. Claim Has Been Preserved. Petitioner's cause of action against respondent for benefits under the uninsured motorist provision of the policy has been preserved as required by Insurance Code Section 11580.2(i)(1) because, on _____ [date], which was within two years from the date of the accident, petitioner formally instituted arbitration proceedings by notifying the insurer in writing sent by certified mail, return receipt requested, sent to the _____ [insurer or agent for process designated by the insurer filed with the department (of insurance)] (Ins. Code § 11580.2(i)(1)(C); see also Spear v. California State Automobile Ass'n (1992) 2 Cal. 4th 1035, 1040-1041, 9 Cal. Rptr. 2d 381, 831 P.2d 821 ; Blankenship v. Allstate Ins, Co. (2010) 186 Cal. App. 4th 87, 97, 111 Cal. Rptr. 3d 528).

[CONTINUE]

C. Proving Existence of Agreement to Arbitrate. [See § 20.10[1], Paragraph C.]

[Optional] D. Evidentiary Hearing. [See § 20.10[1], Paragraph D.]

E. Declaration Regarding Workers' Compensation Claim. As required by Insurance Code Section 11580.2(f), _____ [petitioner's demand for arbitration contained or this petition to compel arbitration contains] a declaration under penalty of perjury, stating that (i) the insured has _____ [a or no] workers' compensation claim; (ii) that claim has [not] proceeded to findings and award or settlement on all issues reasonably contemplated to be determined in that claim; [and (iii) that good cause exists for the arbitration to proceed immediately in that _____ (state reasons amounting to good cause, e.g., the insured will likely die before the proceedings can be completed or before settlement can be reached, and it is imperative that his/her testimony before an arbitrator be taken within the next three months)] (Ins. Code 11580.2(f); see also Briggs v. Resolution Remedies (2008) 168 Cal. App. 4th 1395, 1399, 86 Cal. Rptr. 3d 396).

[Optional] F. Issue of Physical Contact With Uninsured Motorist Is Arbitrable Under Policy Language. Under

policy language that provides for arbitration of a question or questions in dispute after the insured and the insurer have been unable to agree on the amount of damages payable under uninsured motorist coverage, the parties should be compelled to arbitrate the question of [the insured's] physical contact with a hit-and-run vehicle (Orpustan v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. (1972) 7 Cal. 3d 988, 991-992, 103 Cal. Rptr. 919, 500 P.2d 1119 ; see also Freeman v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. (1975) 14 Cal. 3d 473, 482, 121 Cal. Rptr. 477, 535 P.2d 341 (regarding terminology in uninsured motorist cases)).

[Optional] G. Whether Insurer Is Bound by Default Judgment Against Driver Who Was at Fault Is Arbitrable. [When the policy specifies that the insurer will not be bound by any judgment against any person or organization obtained without its written consent,] Insurance Code Section 11580.2(f) requires an insured and his or her insurer to arbitrate the tortfeasor's liability and damages owed to the insured, including the binding nature of any default judgment obtained against that tortfeasor. The validity of any default judgment falls squarely within and is subsumed by the questions of liability and damages statutorily subject to arbitration [and overrides any concern with uniformity of decisions] (Bouton v. USAA Casualty Insurance Company (2008) 43 Cal. 4th 1190, 1194, 1202-1203, 78 Cal. Rptr. 3d 519).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for Petitioner _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of a petition to compel arbitration relating to uninsured motorist insurance coverage. Superior courts have jurisdiction to determine petitions to compel arbitration in accordance with uninsured motorist policy provisions [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 85.1, 86(a)(10)(A) (all uninsured motorist arbitration-related proceedings in accordance with Ins. Code § 11580.2 are unlimited civil cases)]. Although this form provides a complete memorandum, counsel may wish to incorporate authorities addressing venue from § 20.10] or combine this petition with a motion to stay any related action [see § 20.11].

Optional Paragraphs F and G are for use when either of those issues will be involved and counsel wishes to have the court's order make clear that the arbitrator is to determine that issue. The bracketed language at the beginning of Optional Paragraph G reflects the policy language at issue in Bouton v. USAA Casualty Insurance Company (2008) 43 Cal. 4th 1190, 78 Cal. Rptr. 3d 519 . This issue that whether the insurer is bound by default judgment is arbitrable was resolved by the California Supreme Court in Bouton v. USAA Casualty Insurance Company (2008) 43 Cal. 4th 1190, 78 Cal. Rptr. 3d 519 , and not addressed in the subsequent case of Bouton v. USAA Casualty Insurance Company (2008) 167 Cal. App. 4th 412, 84 Cal. Rptr. 3d 152 (holding that coverage questions are not arbitrable).

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, the language of the insurance policy providing for arbitration of uninsured motorist claims should be quoted or referred to, and, if necessary, a statement of how the legal issue in question is subordinate to, or is a component part of, the central arbitrable issue should be included.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Memoranda

For a form supporting the proposition the 2003 amendment to Ins. Code § 11580.2(i) (effective January 1, 2004, instituting a two-year, rather than a one-year, limitation period) was not retroactive, see Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.45.

For a form supporting the contention that an arbitrator of an uninsured motorist claim has authority to determine the issue of the insured's physical contact with an uninsured motorist, but arising in the context of confirmation of an award, see Ch. 20C, Arbitration: Confirming, Correcting, or Vacating the Award, § 20C.63. Section 20C.63 also addresses an arbitrator's authority to award costs and expenses in an uninsured motorist arbitration when the primary portion of the award is greater than a Code Civ. Proc. § 998 offer made by the insured which the insurer did not accept.

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[d] Opposing Memoranda

For a form opposing those in this form on the ground that the uninsured motorist insurance company is not involved, see Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.42.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Arbitration of Claims Under Uninsured Motorist Coverage

Plaintiff in Spear v. California State Automobile Ass'n (1992) 2 Cal. 4th 1035, 9 Cal. Rptr. 2d 381, 831 P.2d 821 , was injured in an accident with an uninsured motorist in November, 1984, while acting in the course and scope of his employment. He notified defendant in June, 1985, that he intended to pursue a claim for benefits under the uninsured motorist provisions of his insurance policy. He filed an action against the uninsured motorist in November, 1985. He also pursued a workers' compensation claim, which was resolved in January, 1990, and notified defendant of this settlement in February, 1990. CSAA responded that it would not settle the uninsured motorist claim and that Spear should take whatever steps he thought necessary to compel arbitration. In April, 1990, Spear filed a motion to compel arbitration, which was denied on the ground that the four-year statute of limitations, which the court held began in 1985 when Spear filed the action against the uninsured motorist, had expired.

The court of appeal affirmed this denial, but the Supreme Court reversed. In addressing the commencement of the limitation period the Supreme Court said that under Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2, a party to an agreement to arbitrate may not bring an action to compel specific performance of the arbitration provision until he or she can allege not only the existence of the agreement, but also that the opposing party refuses to arbitrate the controversy (2 Cal. 4th 1035, 1041) . Thus, no cause of action to compel arbitration accrues until one party has refused to arbitrate. While the parties subject to arbitration are negotiating in good faith before submitting to arbitration, or are delaying negotiation and arbitration by mutual consent, there is no breach of the contract. Rather, the contract is breached at the time one party refuses to submit to arbitration (2 Cal. 4th 1035, 1041-1042) . The Court therefore held that an insured's cause of action against an insurance company to compel arbitration of uninsured motorist benefits does not accrue, and the statute of limitations does not begin to run, until the insurance company refuses to arbitrate. In this case, CSAA's refusal to arbitrate did not come until early in 1990, so the petition in April, 1990 was timely (2 Cal. 4th 1035, 1042-1043) .

Defendant in Allstate Ins. Co. v. Gonzalez (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 783, 45 Cal. Rptr. 2d 491 , was driving a car owned by the passenger, who was insured by plaintiff, in July, 1986, when they were involved in an accident with an uninsured vehicle. Gonzalez filed a personal injury action against the owner and operator of the uninsured vehicle in July, 1987, and in March, 1989, informed Allstate in a letter that there were uninsured motorist claims arising out of the accident. However, Gonzalez did not file a demand for arbitration until February, 1992. Later that month, Allstate filed a declaratory relief action seeking a declaration that the statute of limitations had expired or that Gonzalez' claim was barred by failure to demand arbitration within a reasonable time. The trial court denied the prayer for declaratory relief; and Allstate appealed, as did Gonazalez.

The court of appeal reversed on the ground that Gonzalez had unreasonably delayed in demanding arbitration (38 Cal. App. 4th 783, 786) . The court first discussed the issue of the statute of limitations, stating that under Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2, a party to an agreement to arbitrate may not bring an action to compel specific performance of the arbitration provision until he or she can allege not only the existence of the agreement, but also that the opposing party refuses to arbitrate the controversy. A contract cause of action does not accrue until the contract has been breached. Thus, no cause of action to compel arbitration accrues until one party has refused to arbitrate. In this case, prior to the filing of the declaratory relief action in February, 1992, neither party had refused to arbitrate the uninsured motorist claim. Consequently, Allstate was not entitled to a judicial declaration that Gonzalez' claim was barred by the statute of limitations (38 Cal. App. 4th 783, 789) . The portion of the opinion addressing unreasonable delay is discussed at Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.82[3][a].

[b] Claim Has Been Preserved

The time within which one of the actions specified in Ins. Code § 11580.2(i)(1) must occur was increased from one year from the date of the accident to 2 years from the date of the accident effective January 1, 2004 [Stats 2003, ch. 56].

The facts and procedural background of Spear v. California State Automobile Ass'n (1992) 2 Cal. 4th 1035, 9 Cal. Rptr. 2d 381, 831 P.2d 821 , and the portion of the opinion addressing the fact that a petition to compel arbitration is premature until one party has refused to arbitrate, is discussed at [a], above. The court of appeal had relied on California State Auto. Asso. Inter-Ins. Bureau v. Cohen (1975) 44 Cal. App. 3d 387, 395, 118 Cal. Rptr. 890 , which held that a cause of action for uninsured motorist benefits accrues, and the statute of limitations for demanding arbitration begins to run, when one of the contingencies specified in Ins. Code § 11580.2(i) occurs within one year of the date of the accident. The Supreme Court disagreed, saying while it is true that Ins. Code § 11580.2(i) establishes a one-year period within which the insured must act to preserve his or her cause of action, and thus, preconditions to accrual, it does not state the time of accrual (2 Cal. 4th 1035, 1041) .

In Blankenship v. Allstate Ins, Co. (2010) 186 Cal. App. 4th 87, 111 Cal. Rptr. 3d 528 , an insured under a policy was denied a motion to compel arbitration for failure to request arbitration within two years of the accrual of the claim, as required under Ins. Code § 11580.2(i). The insured sought tolling on the basis of his disability of being a minor, but the court ruled that Ins. Code § 11580.2(i) imposes an absolute obligation on the insured to comply with its mandates or else the insured forfeits his claim. One of the three events specified therein must occur as a condition precedent to the accrual of a cause of action against the insurer. The insured's evidence of contrary legislative intent did not persuade the court. Further, the court did not accept the insured's argument that the lack of tolling for minors violated the constitutional right to equal protection under two different theories. Accordingly, the statute for tolling statutes of limitation on filing judicial actions for minors, Code Civ. Proc. § 352, does not apply to Ins. Code § 11580.2(i), which concerns itself with arbitration (186 Cal. App. 4th 87, 97) . Finally, minority is not a disability for purposes of complying with section 11580.2(i), and there is no evidence here that minority renders compliance with section 11580.2(i) impossible or impractical (186 Cal. App. 4th 87, 102) .

[c] Declaration Regarding Workers' Compensation Claim

If the insured has, or may have, rights to benefits, other than occupational disability benefits, under any workers' compensation law, the arbitrator shall not proceed with the arbitration until the insured's physical condition is stationary and ratable. If the insured claims a permanent disability, the claims shall, unless good cause be shown, be adjudicated by award or settled by compromise and release before the arbitration may proceed [Ins. Code § 11580.2(f)]. Thus, every demand or petition for arbitration of a claim under an uninsured motorist endorsement of an automobile insurance policy must be accompanied by a declaration stating whether (i) the insured has a workers' compensation claim; (ii) the claim has proceeding to findings and award or settlement on all issues reasonably contemplated to be determined in that claim; and (iii) if not, what reasons amounting to good cause are grounds for the arbitration to proceed to proceed immediately (Ins. Code § 11580.2(f)).

In Briggs v. Resolution Remedies (2008) 168 Cal. App. 4th 1395 , 86 Cal. Rptr. 3d 396 , plaintiff suffered injuries when an uninsured motorist collided with her company car while she was driving on work-related business. Although the accident took place while plaintiff was acting in the scope of her employment, she declined to file a workers' compensation claim. The parties were not able to agree on whether plaintiff's insurer had a duty to pay plaintiff before there was a determination of her entitlement to workers' compensation benefits. Plaintiff demanded arbitration with her automobile insurance company. The dispute was submitted to arbitration with Resolution Remedies, defendant in this case. Plaintiff's insurance company filed a motion to stay the arbitration, arguing that it was entitled to a stay until after plaintiff pursued workers' compensation benefits pursuant to Ins. Code, § 11580.2. The arbitrator granted the motion, ruling that in light of the language of plaintiff's insurance policy and Ins. Code, § 11580.2, the insurer was entitled to a stay of the arbitration until plaintiff filed a workers' compensation claim. Thereafter, plaintiff filed a petition for a writ of mandate with the court, challenging the arbitrator's decision. The trial court denied the petition for writ of mandate, stating that the arbitrator properly stayed arbitration pursuant to Ins. Code § 11580.2 and plaintiff's insurance policy. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the trial's court dismissal of plaintiff's writ of mandate simply because the trial court lacked jurisdiction (168 Cal. App. 4th 1395, 1400). The court held that the trial court lacked subject matter jurisdiction to review the arbitrator's stay order; thus, it did not need to consider plaintiff's various arguments that the trial court erred in denying her relief from that order (168 Cal. App. 4th 1395, 1401) .

[d] Issue of Physical Contact With Uninsured Motorist Is Arbitrable Under Policy Language

In Orpustan v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. (1972) 7 Cal. 3d 988, 103 Cal. Rptr. 919, 500 P.2d 1119 , a claimant seeking damages from his insurer under uninsured motorist coverage brought an action to compel arbitration under the terms of the policy. Defendant insurer moved for summary judgment, contending that the court, prior to any arbitration, would have to decide a preliminary independent question of law, the question of physical contact with a hit-and-run vehicle. The policy involved stated that if the parties did "not agree as to the amount payable hereunder" the arbitrators were to "hear and determine the question or questions so in dispute." Some earlier court of appeals decisions had construed similar language as an agreement to arbitrate the physical contact issue [see, e.g., Felner v. Meritplan Ins. Co. (1970) 6 Cal. App. 3d 540, 543, 546-547, 86 Cal. Rptr. 178 ; Amercian Ins. Co. v. Gernand (1968) 262 Cal. App. 2d 300, 302, 68 Cal. Rptr. 810] . Ins. Code § 11580.2(b) sets forth the various definitions necessary for interpretation of that section and provides that, with respect to an "uninsured motorist vehicle" whose owner or operator is unknown, (1)

the bodily injury has arisen out of physical contact of the automobile with the insured or with an automobile which the insured is occupying and (2) that the insured or someone on his or her behalf reported the accident within 24 hours to the police department of the city where the accident occurred. Defendant's motion for summary judgment was granted.

The Supreme Court reversed, concluding that the agreement appeared sufficiently comprehensive to include the subordinate legal question of concern to the defendant (7 Cal. 3d 988, 991-992) . The Court stated that to hold otherwise would deprive the insured of the value of arbitration as a speedy remedy under the uninsured motorist coverage statute, the procedure which had been contemplated under the insurance policy (7 Cal. 3d 988, 992) .

Freeman v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. (1975) 14 Cal. 3d 473, 121 Cal. Rptr. 477, 535 P.2d 341 , considered the question of the extent of claims that should be arbitrated under an uninsured motorist provision in an insurance policy. Unfortunately, the Court disposed of the issue by holding that the insured's claim was made too late (barred by the one-year statute of limitation under Ins. Code § 11580.2). The one-year limitation theory that was the basis of that holding has since been abrogated [see Spear v. California State Automobile Ass'n (1992) 2 Cal. 4th 1035, 1039-1044, 9 Cal. Rptr. 2d 381, 831 P.2d 821 (discussed at § 20.43[3][a])].

Nevertheless, Freeman had important things to say about the terminology used in decisions addressing the extent of issues arbitrable under an uninsured motorist provision. The Freeman Court noted that certain cases--Orpustan (discussed above); Felner v. Meritplan Ins. Co. (1970) 6 Cal. App. 3d 540, 546, 86 Cal. Rptr. 178 (discussed in § 20C.63[3][a]); and particularly Van Tassel v. Superior Court (1974) 12 Cal. 3d 624, 627-628, 116 Cal. Rptr. 505, 526 P.2d 969 (discussed at [e], below)--referred to the particular kinds of preliminary questions required to be submitted to the arbitrator rather than the court as "jurisdictional facts." Freeman repudiated that language as being "certain broad, general language" (14 Cal. 3d 473, 482) , and characterized its holding in Orpustan as "unfortunately" being "stated in language whose breadth was an invitation to misinterpretation." The Court admitted having conceived a broad classification of preliminary questions for the arbitrator to determine and then "loosely and unfortunately" having termed them "jurisdictional" (14 Cal. 3d 473, 482, 485) . The Court held that its use of the term "jurisdictional" in the earlier cases had been meant to include only those preliminary questions requiring determination by an arbitrator before he or she could reach the merits of the controversy (14 Cal. 3d 473, 485) .

The facts and procedural background of Freeman v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. (1975) 14 Cal. 3d 473, 121 Cal. Rptr. 477, 535 P.2d 341 , are discussed at § 20.80[4][a]. The Court pointed out that when a statute requires a contract to provide for certain matters, the statute becomes part of the contract, imposing an arbitration agreement at least as broad at the statutory specifications (14 Cal. 3d 473, 479) . Cases which have analyzed and construed Ins. Code § 11580.2(f) have pointed out that "damages" in this section means the damages which the insured is entitled to recover from the uninsured motorist, and that the statute, read literally, requires arbitration on two issues only (14 Cal. 3d 473, 480) :

1. Whether the insured is entitled to recover against the uninsured motorist, and

2. If so, the amount of damages.

When the arbitration clause in the insurance policy is broader than the statute, the arbitration of additional issues may be required [see, e.g., Orpustan v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. (1972) 7 Cal. 3d 988, 991-992, 103 Cal. Rptr. 919, 500 P.2d 1119 ; Felner v. Meritplan Ins. Co. (1970) 6 Cal. App. 3d 540, 543, 546-547, 86 Cal. Rptr. 178). Cases involving such arbitration agreements must be distinguished from those which are concerned only with the statutory language (14 Cal. 3d 473, 481) .

There is an additional category of cases involving a post-controversy agreement between the parties in which they consented, expressly or by implication, to an arbitration going beyond the statutory requirement [see, e.g., Felner v. Meritplan Ins. Co. (1970) 6 Cal. App. 3d 540, 544, 86 Cal. Rptr. 178 ; Jordan v. Pacific Auto. Ins. Co. (1965) 232 Cal. App. 2d 127, 131, 42 Cal. Rptr. 556] (14 Cal. 3d 473, 481) .

[e] Whether Insurer Is Bound by Default Judgment Against Driver Who Was at Fault Is Arbitrable

Bouton v. USAA Casualty Insurance Company (2008) 43 Cal. 4th 1190, 78 Cal. Rptr. 3d 519 , involved two consolidated cases dealing with the same statute and the same issue: under Ins. Code § 11580.2(f), which questions are arbitrable in uninsured and underinsured motorist cases? One of the cases involved an underinsured motorist claim and arose after the insured/claimant had collected the other driver's policy limit. The insurance policy provided that State Farm would not be bound by any judgment against any person or organization obtained without its written consent. Judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff for $2,751,000 in compensatory damages and $1 million in punitive damages. Plaintiff then demanded and received $100,000 from the other driver's insurer. That was the other driver's policy limit. Plaintiff then demanded payment of $900,000 from State Farm, the maximum benefit available under his underinsured motorist coverage. Plaintiff claimed that the default judgment entered against the other driver conclusively established damages. State Farm refused to tender the requested payment, seeking instead to informally evaluate plaintiff's damages prior to tendering any money under the policy. Plaintiff sued State Farm for declaratory relief, breach of contract, and breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, arguing that the default judgment established his damages and he was not required to submit to State Farm's evaluation of the dispute. State Farm demurred, arguing that it was not bound by the declaratory judgment and that the action was premature because no arbitration had occurred as required by the policies and by Ins. Code § 11580.2(f). The trial court granted State Farm's demurrer without leave to amend and dismissed the action. Plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal held that plaintiff had to arbitrate the issues of liability and damages with State Farm, and that the arbitrator was free to consider whether the default judgment against conclusively established his damages. Plaintiff sought review and the Supreme Court granted it.

The Supreme Court affirmed (43 Cal. 4th 1190, 1204) , holding that Ins. Code § 11580.2(f) requires an insured and his or her insurer to arbitrate the tortfeasor's liability and damages owed to the insured, and the binding nature of a default judgment obtained against that tortfeasor falls squarely within those questions of liability and damages statutorily subject to arbitration (43 Cal. 4th 1190, 1194) . The parties did not dispute that the policy and Ins. Code § 11580.2(f) provided that arbitration was the appropriate forum in which to address whether the underinsured tortfeasor was liable to the insured for the injuries he sustained in the automobile accident between the two, and, if so, the amount of damages. The parties disputed that arbitration was the appropriate forum in which to address whether State Farm was bound by the default judgment obtained against the underinsured tortfeasor. The question whether State Farm was bound by the default judgment was subsumed within the arbitrable issues of liability and damages. The parties' argument that they did not agree to arbitrate whether State Farm was bound by the default judgment was unavailing. Both parties argued that permitting an arbitrator to determine whether the default judgment obtained against the underinsured motorist bound State Farm would not promote uniformity of decisions (43 Cal. 4th 1190, 1202) . The Court said that concerns about uniformity must also be balanced against the strong public policy favoring arbitration of disputes when the parties so agree, including the Legislature's expression of a strong public policy in favor of arbitration as a speedy and relatively inexpensive means of dispute resolution (43 Cal. 4th 1190, 1203) . This issue that whether the insurer is bound by default judgment is arbitrable was resolved by the California Supreme Court in Bouton v. USAA Casualty Insurance Company (2008) 43 Cal. 4th 1190, 78 Cal. Rptr. 3d 519 , and not addressed in the subsequent case of Bouton v. USAA Casualty Insurance Company (2008) 167 Cal. App. 4th 412, 84 Cal. Rptr. 3d 152 (holding that coverage questions are not arbitrable).

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20 ARBITRATION: COMPELLING
PART II. FORMS
B. Particular Claims Subject to Arbitration

2-20 California Points & Authorities § 20.44

§ 20.44 Legality of Severable Contract Provision Is Arbitrable

[1] FORM

PETITIONER, AS PARTY TO AN AGREEMENT PROVIDING FOR ARBITRATION OF DISPUTES ARISING UNDER THE AGREEMENT, IS ENTITLED TO AN ORDER COMPELLING ARBITRATION OF THE PRESENT DISPUTE, WHICH INVOLVES THE LEGALITY OF A SINGLE SEVERABLE PROVISION OF THE CONTRACT [AND TO AN ORDER STAYING ANY PENDING ACTION RELATING TO ARBITRABLE ISSUES].

A. Legality of Severable Contract Provision Is Arbitrable. The legality of a single, severable contract provision does not prohibit arbitration. The entire dispute must be arbitrated, and it is for the arbitrator to determine the illegality of the challenged provision (Wolitarsky v. Blue Cross of California (1997) 53 Cal. App. 4th 338, 344, 61 Cal. Rptr. 2d 629 ; California State Council of Carpenters v. SuperiorCourt (1970) 11 Cal. App. 3d 144, 157-158, 89 Cal. Rptr. 625).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used in support of a petition to compel arbitration if petitioner anticipates a challenge that a provision of the contract containing the arbitration clause is illegal.

This form is not intended as a complete memorandum, but should be combined with the memoranda in §§ 20.10, 20.11, and any others applicable to the particular situation.

As a tactical matter, counsel may wish to reserve these points for oral argument or for a reply memorandum. In deciding whether or not to reserve these arguments, counsel should consider local court rules and practice, as well as whether the moving party would be expected to raise these points in initial moving papers, to avoid the possibility of losing the opportunity to raise them.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, the argument should show that the allegedly illegal provision is severable and is not part of the arbitration clause.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Memoranda

For a form that addresses illegality of a single severable contract provision in the context of confirmation of an award, see Ch. 20C, Arbitration: Confirming, Correcting, or Vacating the Award, § 20C.133.

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

For memoranda relating to general contract principles, see Ch. 50, Contracts .

[d] Opposing Memoranda

For a form that may be modified in an appropriate case to oppose this form on the ground that an entire contract is illegal, and thus, arbitration under it cannot be compelled, see Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.89.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Legality of Severable Contract Provision Is Arbitrable

The facts and procedural background of Wolitarsky v. Blue Cross of California (1997) 53 Cal. App. 4th 338, 61 Cal. Rptr. 2d 629 , and the portion of the opinion addressing the arbitrability of claims under the Unruh Civil Rights Act (Civ. Code § 51 et seq.), are discussed at § 20.22[3][e]. The case involved plaintiff/insureds' claim that a $2,000 deductible for maternity benefits constituted illegal gender discrimination under various statutes.

The court of appeal reversed the trial court's order denying arbitration, agreeing with defendant's contention that the alleged illegality of a single contractual provision does not prohibit arbitration of the dispute. The court of appeal began its analysis by discussing and quoting from Moncharsh v. Heily & Blase (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 1, 30, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 183, 832 P.2d 899 (discussed in Ch. 20C, Arbitration: Confirming, Correcting, or Vacating the Award, § 20C.133[3][a]), which considered the issue in the context of confirmation of an arbitration award. Moncharsh held that when the alleged illegality goes only to a portion of the contract (that does not include the arbitration provision), the entire controversy, including the issue of illegality remains arbitrable. Wolitarskys did not seek to have the entire policy declared void, nor did they claim that the entire contract or the arbitration clause was illegal. Instead, they contended that the allegedly discriminatory maternity deductible was grounds for revocation of the entire contract. The court of appeal said it is established that partially illegal contracts may be upheld if the illegal portion is severable from the part which is legal. Finding the maternity deductible to be a severable provision and not grounds for revocation of the entire policy, following the court of appeal concluded that the entire dispute must be arbitrated and that was for the arbitrator to determine the illegality of the challenged deductible (53 Cal. App. 4th 338, 344) .

California State Council of Carpenters v. Superior Court (1970) 11 Cal. App. 3d 144, 89 Cal. Rptr. 625 , involved a collective bargaining dispute between a union and an employers, regarding the illegality of a provision in their agreement prohibiting piecework and compensation based on piecework. Employers sought to enjoin arbitration and the union sought by writ of prohibition to restrain the injunction proceeding.

The court of appeal issued the writ, holding that arbitration should go forward and the arbitrator should determine the legality of the challenged provision. Reviewing the state law of illegality in arbitration matters, and particularly Loving & Evans v. Blick(1949) 33 Cal. 2d 603, 204 P.2d 23 (discussed in Ch. 20C, Arbitration: Confirming, Correcting, or Vacating the Award, § 20C.210[3][a]), the court of appeal stated that illegality in a contract containing an arbitration provision, in order to vitiate the arbitration provision, must render the entire contract illegal and unenforceable. A claim of illegality of one of the incidental clauses of the contract that falls short of affording ground for revocation of the contract is itself subject to arbitration (11 Cal. App. 3d 144, 157) . The question whether there is illegality in a subordinate clause of a contract containing provisions for mandatory arbitration is only a question of law, which may be decided by arbitration (11 Cal. App. 3d 144, 158) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20 ARBITRATION: COMPELLING
PART II. FORMS
B. Particular Claims Subject to Arbitration

2-20 California Points & Authorities § 20.45

§ 20.45 Arbitration of Pre-Contract Medical Malpractice Claim

[1] FORM

PETITIONER, AS PARTY TO AN AGREEMENT PROVIDING FOR ARBITRATION OF MEDICAL MALPRACTICE DISPUTES, INCLUDING CLAIMS ARISING FROM TREATMENT RENDERED BEFORE THE AGREEMENT WAS SIGNED, IS ENTITLED TO AN ORDER COMPELLING ARBITRATION OF THE PRESENT DISPUTE, WHICH INCLUDES PRE-CONTRACT CLAIMS[, AND TO AN ORDER STAYING ANY PENDING ACTION RELATING TO ARBITRABLE ISSUES].

A. Agreement to Arbitrate Medical Malpractice May Extend to Pre-Contract Claims. Section 1295 of the Code of Civil Procedure neither expressly nor impliedly precludes a retroactive arbitration agreement. As long as the provisions of Section 1295 are met, the parties may legally agree to arbitrate pre-agreement claims subject to the same grounds for revocation that exist for any contract, as stated in Code of Civil Procedure Section 1281 et seq. (Coon v. Nicola (1993) 17 Cal. App. 4th 1225, 1232-1233, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 846).

[Optional] B. Provision for Arbitration of Pre-Contract Claims May Be Adhesive. A retroactivity provision in an agreement to arbitrate medical malpractice claims requiring arbitration of claims that arose before the agreement was signed is not protected by Code of Civil Procedure Section 1295(e) and could be found to be a contract of adhesion depending on the circumstances (Coon v. Nicola (1993) 17 Cal. App. 4th 1225, 1233-1234, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 846).

C. This Provision for Arbitration of Pre-Contract Claims Is Not Adhesive. A provision for arbitration of medical malpractice claims arising before the arbitration agreement was signed is not adhesive when it [is part of a one-page document that] complies with all the wording requirements of Code of Civil Procedure Section 1295, including allowing the patient to revoke the agreement within 30 days, when the patient had a choice as to medical services, when the retroactivity provision is not hidden[, but in fact is made more obvious by being required to be separately initialled], when the physician's liability is not limited in any way, when there are no unconscionable or oppressive terms, and when the parties' reasonable expectations were not frustrated (Coon v. Nicola (1993) 17 Cal. App. 4th 1225, 1236-1239, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 846).

[Optional] D. Patient's Medicated State Did Not Render Parties' Bargaining Positions Unequal. A patient's claim that medication caused him or her to be very sleepy and somewhat disoriented when he or she signed an agreement to arbitrate medical malpractice claims does not render the contract one of adhesion due to grossly unequal bargaining positions of the parties when the physician did not know, and thus could not be found to have taken advantage of, the patient's medicated state, no fraud, imposition, or excusable neglect is found, and the contract is not otherwise adhesive (Coon v. Nicola (1993) 17 Cal. App. 4th 1225, 1238-1239, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 846).

[Optional] E. Arbitration Agreement Applies to Later Treatment of Another Condition. An arbitration agreement, signed when _____ [party, e.g. defendant] first treated _____ [party, e.g., plaintiff], applies to a medical malpractice claim arising from treatment for a different condition _____ [time span, e.g., two years] later because the agreement states that it is intended to bind the patient and the health care provider who "_____ [quote language of agreement, e.g., now or in the future treat[s] the patient]" (Reigelsperger v. Siller (2007) 40 Cal. 4th 574, 579-580, 53 Cal. Rptr. 3d 887, 150 P.3d 764).

[Optional] F. Communications With Insurer Are "Medical Services." Communications between a physician and his or her patient's [disability] insurer, at the request of the patient, regarding the diagnosis and/or treatment of the patient by that physician, constitute the rendering of medical services; and therefore claims that the communications were unauthorized or improper fall within an arbitration clause that applies to "any dispute as to medical malpractice, that is as to whether any medical services rendered under this contract were unnecessary or unauthorized or were improperly, negligently, or incompetently rendered" (Titolo v. Cano (2007) 157 Cal. App. 4th 310, 314, 318-319, 68 Cal. Rptr. 3d 616).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used in support of a petition to compel arbitration of pre-contract medical malpractice claims when the arbitration agreement otherwise complies with Code Civ. Proc. § 1295 and is not a contract of adhesion to establish that an arbitration agreement relating to medical malpractice claims may properly govern pre-contract claims and is not inherently adhesive. Counsel should use as many of the optional paragraphs as are applicable to his or her particular situation.

This form is not intended as a complete memorandum, but should be combined with the memoranda in §§ 20.10, 20.11, and any others applicable to the particular situation.

As a tactical matter, counsel may wish to reserve these points for oral argument or for a reply memorandum. In deciding whether or not to reserve these arguments, counsel should consider local court rules and practice, as well as whether the moving party would be expected to raise these points in initial moving papers, to avoid the possibility of losing the opportunity to raise them.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his orher case. For example, the argument should show the circumstances under which the agreement was signed and that the patient did not revoke the agreement and in fact continued receiving medical treatment from petitioner after the 30-day revocation period [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1295(c)].

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Memoranda

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

For memoranda relating to general contract principles, see Ch. 50, Contracts .

[d] Opposing Memoranda

For a form of memorandum that may be used in an appropriate case to oppose this form on the ground that the patient did not knowingly consent to arbitration, see Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.92.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Agreement to Arbitrate Medical Malpractice May Extend to Pre-Contract Claims

Defendant/physician in Coon v. Nicola (1993) 17 Cal. App. 4th 1225, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 846 , performed surgery on plaintiff's fractured wrist, but failed to diagnose a "middle shaft radius fracture" of plaintiff's left arm, which was discovered after the surgery. Defendant told plaintiff of the missed diagnosis after the surgery, but told him it would be all right. About a week after the surgery, in the doctor's office, plaintiff signed an arbitration agreement. In addition to prospective claims, the agreement had a separate provision entitled "Retroactive Effect," which stated that if patient intended the agreement to cover services rendered before the date it was signed, patient should initial below. Plaintiff signed the agreement and initialed the clause agreeing to retroactivity. Later, plaintiff sued defendant for medical malpractice. Plaintiff's declaration submitted in opposition to defendant's petition to compel arbitration stated that he had no memory of discussing or signing the arbitration agreement and that he was heavily medicated at the time, and thus "very sleepy and somewhat disoriented." The trial court denied the petition to compel arbitration finding (1) that Code Civ. Proc. § 1295 neither authorized or mandated arbitration of pre-contract claims, (2) that the pre-contract claim provision was not insulated by Code Civ. Proc. § 1295(a), (c), and (e) from attack as being unconscionable or a contract of adhesion to the extent it retroactively governed the rights of the parties, (3) that plaintiff was heavily medicated when he signed the agreement, and (4) that plaintiff's medicated stated rendered the relative bargaining positions of the parties grossly unequal. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. Plaintiff contended that because Code Civ. Proc. § 1295(c) refers to subsequent transactions, the statute precludes retroactive application of an arbitration agreement. The court of appeal disagreed, finding nothing in the wording of the statute to prevent inclusion of terms in addition to those mandated by the statute. The court held that Code Civ. Proc. § 1295 neither expressly nor impliedly precludes a retroactive arbitration agreement (17 Cal. App. 4th 1225, 1232) . As long as the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 1295 are met, the parties may legally agree to arbitrate pre-agreement claims subject to the same grounds for revocation as exist for any contract, as stated in Code Civ. Proc. § 1281 et seq. (17 Cal. App. 4th 1225, 1233) .

[b] Provision for Arbitration of Pre-Contract Claims May Be Adhesive

Code Civ. Proc. § 1295(e) states that such a contract is not a contract of adhesion, nor unconscionable nor otherwise improper, where it complies with subdivisions (a), (b), and (c) of that section.

The facts and procedural background of Coon v. Nicola (1993) 17 Cal. App. 4th 1225, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 846 , are discussed at [a], above. The court of appeal agreed that the parties' agreement in this case was not protected by Code Civ. Proc. § 1295(e), reasoning that because Code Civ. Proc. § 1295(e) uses the terminology "such a contract," it is limited to arbitration of disputes arising out of services rendered as provided in Code Civ. Proc. § 1295 (17 Cal. App. 4th 1225, 1233) . Because retroactivity of an agreement is not addressed by the wording of Code Civ. Proc. § 1295, a retroactive agreement is subject to revocation on grounds that exist for revocation of any contract; and the provision for retroactivity could be found to be a contract of adhesion dependent on the circumstances of adhesion (17 Cal. App. 4th 1225, 1234) .

[c] This Provision for Arbitration of Pre-Contract Claims Is Not Adhesive

The facts and procedural background of Coon v. Nicola (1993) 17 Cal. App. 4th 1225, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 846 , are discussed at [a], above. The court of appeal held that this was not a contract of adhesion (17 Cal. App. 4th 1225, 1234, 1238, 1239) . Even assuming the patient/physician relationship by its very nature is unequal, in order to beconsidered a contract of adhesion, the terms of which adherent was unaware must be beyond the reasonable expectations of the ordinary person or oppressive or unconscionable (17 Cal. App. 4th 1225, 1234-1235) . Unconscionability has generally been recognized to include an absence of meaningful choice on the part of one of the parties together with contract terms which are unreasonably favorable to the other party. Although defendant drafted the arbitration form, standardized forms are common and accepted in modern daily life. A standardized form does not in itself render a contract a contract of adhesion. In determining whether a contract is a contract of adhesion, the seminal test is whether the stronger party has disappointed the reasonable expectations of the other party (17 Cal. App. 4th 1225, 1235) . Determining that includes analysis of such factors as (1) whether there was an opportunity to question the terms of the agreement; (2) whether there were hidden or ambiguous terms in the agreement; (3) whether adherent would need to sign the agreement or forego necessary treatment; (4) whether the liability of one party was greatly limited; or (5) whether the arbitration process itself was unequal. None of those factors was present in this case. The agreement was a one-page document and all the wording provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 1295 were followed, including the 10-point red bold-face type requirement and the 30-day revocation provision required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1295(c) (17 Cal. App. 4th 1225, 1236) . Plaintiff did not take advantage of the revocation provision but continued receiving treatment from defendant for nine months. The agreement carried no buried terms. The retroactivity provision was addressed as a distinct clause, and was the only clause plaintiff was asked to initial, making more obvious rather than less obvious or hidden. Most significantly, the agreement did not limit defendant's liability in any way but merely provided for a different forum in which to settle disputes (17 Cal. App. 4th 1225, 1237) . There was no lack of choice as to medical services, no limitation of liability as to defendant, no unclear terminology or hidden clause in the arbitration agreement form, no unconscionable or oppressive terms. The reasonable expectations of the parties were not frustrated. Thus, the contract was not a contract of adhesion (17 Cal. App. 4th 1225, 1239) .

[d] Patient's Medicated State Did Not Render Parties' Bargaining Positions Unequal

The facts and procedural background of Coon v. Nicola (1993) 17 Cal. App. 4th 1225, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 846 , are discussed at [a], above. The trial court supported its finding that the contract was one of adhesion by findings that the relative bargaining positions of the parties were grossly unequal at the time the agreement was signed and that the inequality was attributable to plaintiff's medicated state. The only evidence in the record regarding plaintiff's medicated

state come from his own declaration that he took Vicodin following his release form the hospital, and that like the Demerol he had in the hospital, it made him feel "very sleepy and somewhat disoriented." Plaintiff did not claim he could not read, or even that he did not understand the agreement, and there was no indication that plaintiff was unable to comprehend what he was signing. More importantly, there was no indication in the record that defendant knew plaintiff was disoriented or took advantage of the situation. Thus, defendant could not be said to have taken advantage of plaintiff by having him sign the agreement (17 Cal. App. 4th 1225, 1238) . The court of appeal said that when a person with capacity of reading and understanding an instrument signs it, he may not, in the absence of fraud, imposition, or excusable neglect, avoid its terms on the ground he failed to read it before signing it. In this case, the basis of the superior court's ruling was not fraud, imposition, or excusable neglect, but unequal bargaining positions. The court of appeal concluded that the record provided no basis for the superior court's finding of a contract of adhesion due to grossly unequal bargaining power (17 Cal. App. 4th 1225, 1239) .

[e] Arbitration Agreement Applies to Later Treatment of Another Condition

Reigelsperger v. Siller (2007) 40 Cal. 4th 574, 53 Cal. Rptr. 3d 887, 150 P.3d 764 , arose out of defendant chiropractor's treatment of plaintiff. Plaintiff first received treatment from defendant in 2000 for severe back pain. The parties disagreed as to whether they contemplated on ongoing relationship. The agreement signed by plaintiff required the parties to submit any dispute as to medical malpractice to arbitration (Article 1) and stated that it was intended to bind the patient and the health care provider "... who now or in the future treat[s] the patient" (Article 2). Plaintiff also signed an informed consent form that appeared on the reverse side of the arbitration agreement and contained a provision that read: "I intend this consent form to cover the entire course of treatment for my present condition and for any future condition(s) for which I seek treatment." Plaintiff was treated by defendant again in 2002 for problems with his cervical spine and shoulder. Plaintiff's suit arose out of that second course of treatment. Defendant sought to stay litigation and compel arbitration. The trial court denied that petition; and the Court of Appeal affirmed. The Supreme Court granted review.

The Supreme Court reversed (40 Cal. 4th 574, 577, 581) . Plaintiff claimed the agreement was unenforceable because it did not comply with Code Civ. Proc. § 1295 (40 Cal. 4th 574, 577) . However, the agreement did contain the language required by Section 1295 (40 Cal. 4th 574, 578) . Section 1295(c) provides that a proper arbitration agreement for medical malpractice claims governs "all subsequent open-book account transactions for medical services for which the contract was signed." The court of appeal concluded that neither Article 1 of the agreement or Article 2 applied because the parties did not have an open-book account relationship. The Supreme Court found this conclusion to be wrong. Regardless of whether the parties had an open-book account relationship within the meaning of Section 1295(c), their obligation to arbitrate under Article 2 of their agreement stood on its own. The agreement contained the language Section 1295 required. Having satisfied the statute, the parties were free to adopt a broader arbitration agreement. Nothing in Section 1295 prevents a medical malpractice arbitration agreement from including provisions in addition to those required by the statute. Thus, the plain language of Article 2 applied to require arbitration (40 Cal. 4th 574, 579) . Plaintiff contended that he never intended to return to defendant for treatment; but, his uncommunicated subjective intent was irrelevant (40 Cal. 4th 574, 579-580) . The Court of Appeal also held that the phrase "now or in the future treat[s]," could not reasonably be construed to bind the parties in perpetuity.The Supreme Court said the answer to that objection was that, like other contracts, arbitration agreements that do not specify a term of duration are terminable at will after a reasonable time has elapsed. The Court of Appeal also concluded that its construction was supported by the accompanying informed consent agreement, which, it found did not state that it was intended to apply to treatment of future conditions. The Supreme Court found that construction was undermined by both logic and standard rules of construction. The consent agreement stated that it was intended to apply, not only to the "entire course of treatment for my present condition," but also to "any future condition(s) for which I seek treatment." Having concluded that the parties were obligated to arbitrate under Article 2 of their agreement, the Court did not reach the question whether they were also obligated to arbitrate under Article 1 (40 Cal. 4th 574, 580) .

Plaintiff in Titolo v. Cano (2007) 157 Cal. App. 4th 310, 68 Cal. Rptr. 3d 616 , sued her former treating physician for breach of fiduciary duty, violation of privacy rights, intentional interference with prospective economic advantage, and negligence based on the physician's communications to plaintiff's disability insurer that plaintiff was not disabled, but was a scam artist and a fraud, and the physician's providing plaintiff's medical file to the disability insurer. Defendant petitioned the trial court to compel arbitration. The trial court denied the petition on the ground that the claims involved were not within the scope of the parties' written arbitration agreement. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that communications between a physician and his or her patient's disability insurer, at the request of the patient, regarding the diagnosis and/or treatment of the patient by that physician, constitute the rendering of medical services; and therefore claims that the communications were unauthorized or improper fall within an arbitration clause that applies to "any dispute as to medical malpractice, that is as to whether any medical services rendered under this contract were unnecessary or unauthorized or were improperly, negligently, or incompetently rendered" (157 Cal. App. 4th 310, 314) . The arbitration clause complied with Code Civ. Proc. § 1295, although the arbitration clause was permissibly broader than Section 1295 (157 Cal. App. 4th 310, 319) . The court of appeal first noted that once the existence of a valid arbitration clause has been established, the burden is on the party opposing arbitration to demonstrate that the arbitration clause cannot be interpreted to require arbitration of the dispute. An order to arbitrate a particular claim should not be denied unless the arbitration clause is not susceptible of an interpretation that covers the asserted dispute (157 Cal. App. 4th 310, 316-317) . Communications between physicians and insurance companies regarding the diagnosis and treatment of patients are a necessary part of the provision of medical services to those patients. The practice of medicine today requires close interaction among medical professionals, their patients, health care insurers, and health management organizations. Defendant obtained plaintiff's medical information by rendering medical services to her. Further, plaintiff only requested that defendant communicate with defendant's insurer because defendant had provided medical services to her. Plaintiff herself acknowledged that the case was based on defendant's actions and services as a physician and arose out of actions related to defendant's medical treatment of plaintiff (157 Cal. App. 4th 310, 318) . The issue hinged on the meaning of the terms "medical services" (157 Cal. App. 4th 310, 319) . The court discussed other cases that had interpreted the term in various contexts and concluded that the term embraced communications between the physician and the patient's disability insurer (157 Cal. App. 4th 310, 319-322) . Because all plaintiff's claims were based on the same facts and arose out of the same action, all were required to be arbitrated in the same proceeding (157 Cal. App. 4th 310, 322) .

82 of 174 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20 ARBITRATION: COMPELLING
PART II. FORMS
B. Particular Claims Subject to Arbitration

2-20 California Points & Authorities § 20.46

§ 20.46 Arbitration Agreement Applies to All Aspects of Transaction to Which It Relates

[1] FORM

PETITIONER, AS A PARTY TO AN AGREEMENT PROVIDING FOR ARBITRATION OF ANY DISPUTES ARISING UNDER THE AGREEMENT OR ANY TRANSACTION RESULTING FROM THE AGREEMENT, IS ENTITLED TO AN ORDER COMPELLING ARBITRATION OF _____ [specify claims that are subject of dispute], WHICH AROSE OUT OF THE _____ [specify, e.g., DISCLOSURE DOCUMENTS PROVIDED IN CONNECTION WITH THE TRANSACTION] [AND STAYING ANY PENDING ACTION RELATING TO ARBITRABLE ISSUES].

A. Arbitration Agreement Applies to All Aspects of Transaction to Which It Relates. An arbitration clause in an agreement that provides for arbitration of any dispute or claim [in law or equity] arising out of the agreement "or any resulting transaction" is broad enough to encompass fraud claims based on documents furnished in accordance with the transaction contemplated by the agreement (Johnson v. Siegel (2000) 84 Cal. App. 4th 1087, 1095, 1102, 101 Cal. Rptr. 2d 412 ; see also Bak v. MCL Financial Group, Inc. (2008) 170 Cal. App. 4th 1118, 1126-1127, 88 Cal. Rptr. 3d 800).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used to support a petition to compel arbitration to establish that an arbitration clause applies not only to disputes arising from the agreement in which arbitration clause is contained but also to disputes relating to the transaction contemplated by that agreement. The facts in the authority which is the basis of this form involved a standard form Real Estate Purchase Agreement and the Transfer Disclosure Statement furnished pursuant to Civ. Code § 1102. The form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum of in support of compelling arbitration, either alone [see § 20.10] or combined with a motion to stay an action [see § 20.11].

As a tactical matter, counsel may wish to reserve these points for oral argument or for other form of rejoinder to the respondent's opposing memorandum. In deciding whether or not to reserve these arguments, counsel should consider local court rules and practice, as well as whether the moving party would be expected to be raise these points in initial moving papers, to avoid the possibility of losing the opportunity to raise them.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, the language of the arbitration agreement which specifies the subject matter that may be arbitrated should to be quoted or referred to, followed by a statement as to how the controversy in issue is within the scope of that subject matter.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Memoranda

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[d] Opposing Memoranda

For a form opposing those in this form, see Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.140.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Arbitration Agreement Applies to All Aspects of Transaction to Which It Relates

In Johnson v. Siegel (2000) 84 Cal. App. 4th 1087, 101 Cal. Rptr. 2d 412 , plaintiff purchased a $475,000 home from defendants. The house flooded during the next rainy season. Defendant had provided a disclosure statement in accordance Civ. Code § 1102 which stated that sellers were not aware of any problems involving drainage, flooding, grading problems, slippage, or soil problems. Johnson filed suit, seeking rescission of the purchase agreement and damages for fraud and negligent misrepresentation. The arbitration clause in the real estate purchase agreement (a standard California Association of Realtors' residential purchase agreement) provided for arbitration of "any dispute or claim in Law or equity arising between them out of this agreement or any resulting transaction, which is not settled through mediation." The disclosure statement recited, in bold, that it was not intended to be any part of the contract between buyer and seller. Defendants answered, their 14th affirmative defense being that the dispute was required to be arbitrated, and moved for summary judgment on that basis. The motion was granted and judgment entered thereon. Thereafter, plaintiff sought to arbitrate, but defendants contended he could not do so, that the judgment was res judicata and that plaintiff was without any remedy. After plaintiff's motion for reconsideration was denied, plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the granting of the motion for summary judgment, but held that the granting of summary judgment did not preclude Johnson from filing a petition to compel arbitration (84 Cal. App. 4th 1087, 1102) . Although the disclosure statement recited that it was not part of the contract between the parties, the arbitration clause in the purchase agreement was broad enough to encompass the claims of fraud and misrepresentation based on the disclosure statement (84 Cal. App. 4th 1087, 1095) . The portion of the opinion addressing plaintiff's right to file a petition to compel arbitration is discussed in Ch. 20E, Arbitration: Effect of Award, § 20E.31[3][a].

Bak v. MCL Financial Group, Inc. (2008) 170 Cal. App. 4th 1118, 88 Cal. Rptr. 3d 800 , confirmed an award issued by an arbitration panel ordering attorney for defendants to pay $7,500 in sanctions as a result of conduct during a prehearing dispute over the return of documents that plaintiffs claimed were subject to the attorney-client privilege. The arbitration clause authorized the arbitrator to decide any issues arising from the contract. Given that the attorney had submitted to the arbitration panel's jurisdiction by appearing for a party as its agent (170 Cal. App. 4th 1118, 1125) , he was subject to sanction by the arbitration panel, regardless of particular legal provisions concerning sanctions in California law or the law of the choice-of-law-clause forum, under the principle that the trial court cannot review for mistakes of law (170 Cal. App. 4th 1118, 1126). The portion of the opinion dealing with the confirming trial court's lack of power to correct the arbitration panel's award by deleting the sanctions award is discussed in Ch. 20C, Arbitration: Confirming, Correcting, or Vacating the Award, § 20C.56.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20 ARBITRATION: COMPELLING
PART II. FORMS
B. Particular Claims Subject to Arbitration

2-20 California Points & Authorities § 20.47

§ 20.47 Malpractice Claim, or Fee Dispute, or Both, May be Arbitrated Because Client Has Waived Arbitration or Respondent Has Rejected Nonbinding Award Under Mandatory Fee Arbitration Act

[1] FORM

RESPONDENT'S [WAIVER OF RIGHTS or REJECTION OF A NONBINDING AWARD] UNDER THE MANDATORY FEE ARBITRATION STATUTES ENTITLES PETITIONER TO AN ORDER COMPELLING ARBITRATION OF ALL CLAIMS, IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE ARBITRATION PROVISION IN THE RETAINER AGREEMENT.

[EITHER, if client has waived arbitration under the MFAA]

A. Malpractice Claim, or Fee Dispute, or Both, May Be Arbitrated. An arbitration provision in a written attorney-client retainer agreement is generally enforceable under the California Arbitration Act (Code Civ. Proc. § 1280 et seq.), absent the client's exercise of the statutory right to mandatory fee arbitration, in accordance with Bus. & Prof. Code § 6200 et seq. (MFAA). A client waives his or her rights under the MFAA by failing to request arbitration within 30 days after receipt of the notice required by Business and Professions Code Section 6201(a). A client also waives his or her rights under the MFAA by filing a malpractice action against the [former] attorney. Thus, a client who does not request arbitration under the MFAA within 30 days of receiving the statutory notice or who files a malpractice action against his or her [former] attorney can be compelled to arbitrate the fee dispute or malpractice claim in accordance with the arbitration provision in the retainer agreement and Code Civ. Proc. § 1280 et seq. (Aguilar v. Lerner (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 974, 984-990, 12 Cal. Rptr. 3d 287, 88 P.3d 24 ; Ervin, Cohen & Jessup, LLP v. Kassel (2007) 147 Cal. App. 4th 821, 826-830, 54 Cal. Rptr. 3d 685).

[OR, if respondent has rejected award under the MFAA]

A. Respondent's Rejection of Nonbinding Mandatory Award Permits Contractual Arbitration. An award of attorney fees rendered pursuant to an arbitration under the Mandatory Fee Arbitration Act is nonbinding, and either party may seek a trial de novo under Bus. & Prof. Code § 6204(a), unless the parties have agreed that the MFAA arbitrator's award is binding (Schatz v. Allen Matkins Leck Gamble & Mallory LLP (2009) 45 Cal. 4th 557, 565, 87 Cal. Rptr. 3d 700, 198 P.3d 1109). Contractual arbitration under the California Arbitration Act, Code Civ. Proc. § 1280 et seq., may be the proceeding constituting "trial de novo" with respect to the proceeding that follows rejection of the mandatory award by either party (Schatz v. Allen Matkins Leck Gamble & Mallory LLP (2009) 45 Cal. 4th 557, 566, 87 Cal. Rptr. 3d 700, 198 P.3d 1109).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

The first version of this form may be used to support a petition to compel arbitration of a legal malpractice claim or a fee dispute if the client has waived mandatory arbitration under the Mandatory Fee Arbitration Act, Bus. & Prof. Code § 6200 et seq., by filing a malpractice action. The second version of the form may be used if the respondent rejected the arbitration award under the MFAA in accordance with Bus. & Prof. Code § 6204(a), but an arbitration agreement still applies.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum; it is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in support of compelling arbitration, either alone [see § 20.10] or together with a motion to stay an action [see § 20.11].

As a tactical matter, counsel may wish to reserve these points for oral argument or for other form of rejoinder to the respondent's opposing memorandum. In deciding whether to reserve these arguments and to avoid the possibility of losing the opportunity to raise them, counsel should consider local court rules and practice, as well as whether the moving party would be expected to raise these points in initial moving papers.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, counsel should trace the language of the arbitration agreement, particularly language that expressly refers to fee disputes or malpractice actions.

It is advisable for counsel to submit evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file (including verified pleadings), or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840] (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied if plaintiff-respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement).

Affidavits or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5] are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For forms relating to complaints for attorney compensation, notices of client's right to mandatory arbitration of fee, petition to correct mandatory fee award, and rejection of fee award, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch.

72, Attorney Practice and Ethics (Matthew Bender), § 72.740 et seq.

[d] Related Memoranda

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

For discussion of requirements and considerations of the mandatory fee arbitration statutes and memoranda relating thereto, see Ch. 25, Attorney's Fees .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Malpractice Claim, or Fee Dispute, or Both May Be Arbitrated

Plaintiff in Aguilar v. Lerner (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 974, 12 Cal. Rptr. 3d 287, 88 P.3d 24 , hired defendant as his attorney. The written retainer agreement included an agreement to arbitrate any dispute concerning fees or any other claim relating to plaintiff's legal matter which arose out of the legal representation. Plaintiff sued defendant for malpractice. Defendant cross complained for unpaid fees and costs and petitioned to compel arbitration pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1281. The petition was granted. The arbitrator found for defendant on both the malpractice claim and the claim for unpaid fees. The superior court denied plaintiff's motion to vacate the award and granted defendant's motion to confirm the award. Plaintiff appealed, contending the award relating to fees, and possibly the entire award, violated his rights under the Mandatory Fee Arbitration Act (MFAA). The court of appeal affirmed. The Supreme Court granted review and also affirmed.

While noting the limited scope of judicial review of arbitration awards, the Supreme Court held review was appropriate because an award in violation of plaintiff's rights under the MFAA would be in excess of the arbitrator's powers (32 Cal. 4th 974, 983) . The MFAA is limited in that it applies only to disputes concerning fees, costs, or both [Bus. & Prof. Code § 6200(a)]. It is inapplicable to claims for affirmative relief against the attorney for damages, or otherwise, based on alleged malpractice or professional misconduct [Bus. & Prof. Code § 6200(b)(2)] (32 Cal. 4th 974, 984) . The MFAA specifically provides that by commencing an action by filing any pleading seeking either judicial resolution of a fee dispute to which the MFAA applies or affirmative relief against the attorney for damages, or otherwise, based on alleged malpractice or professional misconduct, a client waives the right to request or maintain arbitration under its provisions [Bus. & Prof. Code § 6201(d)] (32 Cal. 4th 974, 985) .

Although the court of appeal had held that plaintiff was judicially estopped to rely on the MFAA, the Supreme Court disagreed because one of the elements of judicial estoppel is that the party being estopped have maintained two inconsistent positions. Plaintiff never did. He always maintained that the order compelling arbitration of the fee claim violated his rights under the MFAA (32 Cal. 4th 974, 986-987) . However, by the plain language of the MFAA, plaintiff waived his rights under that statute by filing the malpractice action. It did not matter that the arbitration agreement was signed before any fee dispute arose (32 Cal. 4th 974, 987-988) . Plaintiff claimed that he nevertheless retained rights under the MFAA with regard to the fee dispute. The Court found no authority or reasons to support that claim. A client who fails to invoke the MFAA waives MFAA rights entirely; no residual MFAA protections remain (32 Cal. 4th 974, 988-989) . Thus, the arbitration agreement was enforceable (32 Cal. 4th 974, 990) .

Ervin, Cohen & Jessup, LLP v. Kassel (2007) 147 Cal. App. 4th 821, 54 Cal. Rptr. 3d 685 , arose from an attorney fee dispute. In January 2004, plaintiff law firm served defendant, its former client, with a notice of client's right to arbitration explaining that the law firm intended to file suit against defendant to recover unpaid fees and costs and that the former client could invoke his right to resolve the fee dispute under the Mandatory Fee Arbitration Act (MFAA; Bus & Prof. Code § 6200 et seq.) by filing an application for arbitration with the local bar association within 30 days of the notice. Defendant did not seek arbitration under the MFAA. Plaintiff filed suit in December, 2005, and filed an application for attachment in January, 2006. In February, 2006, while the application for attachment was pending, plaintiff filed a motion to compel arbitration before the American Arbitration Association (AAA) in accordance with the retainer agreement. Defendant did not dispute that he received the notice or that he never sought to resolve the fee dispute under the MFAA, but nonetheless opposed the motion to compel arbitration. Despite continuing the matter to review Aguilar v. Lerner (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 974, 12 Cal. Rptr. 3d 287, 88 P.3d 24 (Aguilar, discussed above), the trial court denied the motion to compel arbitration on the ground that the retainer agreement violated the MFAA, specifically Bus. & Prof. § 6204(a), which provides that agreements for binding arbitration of fee disputes cannot be made before a dispute over fees arises. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, finding that the former client waived the protections of the MFAA (147 Cal. App. 4th 821, 824, 830) . The court of appeal found that defendant had a full and fair opportunity to take advantage of the protections the MFAA affords, but he declined. Having waived his right to proceed under the MFAA, defendant could not later invoke the MFAA to avoid the agreement for binding arbitration of all disputes (147 Cal. App. 4th 821, 826) . The court discussed the relevant provisions of the MFAA, including Bus. & Prof. Code § 6201(a), which requires an the attorney to forward a written notice to the client prior to or at the time of service of summons or claim in an action against the client for fees and makes clear that the client's failure to request arbitration within 30 days after receipt of the notice from the attorney is deemed a waiver of the client's right to arbitration under the MFAA. Plaintiff had served defendant with this notice nearly a year before commencing the action (147 Cal. App. 4th 821, 826-827) . Defendant failed to request arbitration under the MFAA within 30 days after receipt of plaintiff's notice and never expressed any interest in arbitrating the fee dispute under the MFAA. There was no doubt that defendant waived his rights under the MFAA. Aguilar made clear that there is no such thing as a partial waiver of rights under the MFAA: once a client fails to invoke his or her rights under the MFAA, his or her rights are waived entirely and, any preexisting arbitration agreement is enforceable against the client, with no residual MFAA protections standing as an obstacle (147 Cal. App. 4th 821, 827) . Defendant claimed that Bus. & Prof. Code § 6204(a) requires that an arbitration agreement cannot be made before a fee dispute arises but only "at any time after the dispute over fees, costs, or both, has arisen," and rendered the retainer agreement's arbitration provision invalid and unenforceable. The quoted language was added to the statute by amendment in 1996. Aguilar considered an arbitration agreement that was made in 1994. The court of appeal found the 1996 amendments inapplicable. First, because the statute itself made clear they applied only to arbitration awards made pursuant to the MFAA. Secondly, as the Aguilar Court explained, once the client had waived his rights under the MFAA, it was irrelevant whether the client entered the arbitration agreement pre- or post-dispute or which version of Section 6204(a) applied to the agreement (147 Cal. App. 4th 821, 828) . Section 6204(a) does not render a pre-dispute agreement for binding arbitration invalid or unenforceable so long as the client retains the right to try to resolve the fee dispute via nonbinding arbitration (and a trial after arbitration) under the MFAA. Defendant had the opportunity to exercise these rights and chose to waive them. Thus, he was bound by his agreement to submit all disputes with plaintiff to binding arbitration (147 Cal. App. 4th 821, 829) .

[b] Respondent's Rejection of Mandatory Award Permits Contractual Arbitration

In Schatz v. Allen Matkins Leck Gamble & Mallory LLP (2009) 45 Cal. 4th 557, 566, 87 Cal. Rptr. 3d 700, 198 P.3d 1109), the Supreme Court reversed a judgment of the court of appeal affirming trial court's denial of law firm's petition to compel contractual arbitration of a fee dispute with the client. After mandatory arbitration of the attorney-fee dispute under the Mandatory Fee Arbitration Act, Bus. & Prof. Code § 6200 et seq., resulted in award favoring the law firm, the client filed a civil complaint seeking trial de novo under Bus. & Prof. Code § 6204(a), declaratory relief, and refund of attorney fees. The firm then petitioned to compel binding arbitration under the underlying agreement. The Court ruled that the phrase "any other proceeding under a contract between attorney and client" in Bus. & Prof. Code § 6201(a), can be fairly inferred to include contractual arbitration under the California Arbitration Act, Code Civ. Proc. § 1280 et seq., with respect to the resulting proceeding following rejection of the mandatory award by either party (45 Cal. 4th 557, 566) .

The Court did not accept client's argument that the references in Bus. & Prof. Code § 6204 to a trial after MFAA arbitration, by impliedly repealing the CAA. foreclosed the possibility that a case might, following MFAA arbitration, proceed to contractual arbitration under the CAA where a contractual obligation to arbitrate existed (45 Cal. 4th 557, 573-575) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20 ARBITRATION: COMPELLING
PART II. FORMS
B. Particular Claims Subject to Arbitration

2-20 California Points & Authorities §§ 20.48-20.59

[Reserved]

§§ 20.48[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20 ARBITRATION: COMPELLING
PART II. FORMS
C. Particular Persons Bound by Arbitration Agreement

2-20 California Points & Authorities § 20.60

§ 20.60 Nonsignatory Physician Must Arbitrate Under Medical Services Agreement Between Hospital and Subscriber

[1] FORM

PETITIONER, AS AN ENROLLEE IN THE HOSPITAL'S MEDICAL SERVICES AGREEMENT THAT PROVIDES FOR ARBITRATION OF ALL DISPUTES, IS ENTITLED TO AN ORDER COMPELLING ARBITRATION [AND STAYING ANY PENDING ACTION RELATING TO ARBITRABLE ISSUES] BECAUSE RESPONDENT PHYSICIAN, WHO AS AN EMPLOYEE OF THE HOSPITAL ACCEPTS PATIENTS THROUGH ENROLLMENTS, IS BOUND TO ARBITRATION EVEN THOUGH NOT A SIGNATORY TO THE AGREEMENT.

A. Physician Employed by Hospital Is Bound by Arbitration Clause in Medical Services Agreement. As a hospital employee who accepts patients through enrollments in the hospital's medical services agreement, the patient's physician is bound to arbitrate the patient's medical malpractice claim even though the physician is not a signatory to the agreement (Harris v. Superior Court (1986) 188 Cal. App. 3d 475, 477-479, 233 Cal. Rptr. 186).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted by a subscriber to a medical services agreement in support of a petition to compel arbitration under that agreement to address the objection of a physician against whom petitioner has a claim, that the physician did not personally sign the medical services agreement.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in support of compelling arbitration, either alone [see § 20.10] or combined with a motion to stay an action [see § 20.11].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should show that the physician is employed by the hospital which is a party to the agreement and the benefits the physician derives from that relationship, particularly accepting patients enrolled in the hospital's program.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Memoranda

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Physician Employed by Hospital Is Bound by Arbitration Clause in Medical Services Agreement

In Harris v. Superior Court (1986) 188 Cal. App. 3d 475, 233 Cal. Rptr. 186 , plaintiffs, the wife and daughter of a man who had signed an arbitration agreement with a hospital on enrolling in the hospital's prepaid health services program, sought a writ of mandate directing the trial court to compel the physician named in plaintiffs' medical malpractice claim to participate in binding arbitration. Plaintiffs originally filed a medical malpractice action against, among others, the hospital and physician, to which defendants raised binding arbitration as an affirmative defense. The trial court granted a motion to compel arbitration brought by the hospital but denied plaintiffs' subsequent motion to compel the physician to participate in the arbitration, reasoning that he was not a party to the agreement.

The court of appeal issued the writ, holding that the physician was bound by the arbitration clause signed by the patient when he enrolled in the health plan even though the physician was not a signatory to the agreement. The court noted the well-established rule that a nonsignatory beneficiary of an arbitration clause is contractually entitled to compel arbitration (188 Cal. App. 3d 475, 478) . Whether a nonsignatory beneficiary can be forced to arbitrate is a closer question. The court decided on the facts of this case, that the physician, although not a signatory to the agreement, was nonetheless bound to the arbitration clause by virtue of his employment relationship to the hospital through which he rendered medical care to the hospital's patients (188 Cal. App. 3d 475, 477-479) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20 ARBITRATION: COMPELLING
PART II. FORMS
C. Particular Persons Bound by Arbitration Agreement

2-20 California Points & Authorities § 20.61

§ 20.61 Subscriber Must Arbitrate Under Medical Services Agreement Signed by Agent/Employer

[1] FORM

PETITIONER, AS A PARTY TO AN ARBITRATION PROVISION UNDER A MEDICAL SERVICES AGREEMENT, IS ENTITLED TO AN ORDER COMPELLING ARBITRATION [AND STAYING ANY PENDING ACTION RELATING TO ARBITRABLE ISSUES] BECAUSE RESPONDENT IS BOUND TO ITS TERMSBY AN AGENT AUTHORIZED TO NEGOTIATE THE ARBITRATION PROVISION.

A. Agent or Fiduciary Negotiating for Medical Care Is Authorized to Provide for Arbitration. An agent or other fiduciary contracting for medical treatment on the beneficiary's behalf retains the authority to enter into an agreement providing for arbitration of malpractice claims and binding the beneficiary to that provision (Madden v. Kaiser Foundation Hospitals (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 699, 709, 131 Cal. Rptr. 882, 552 P.2d 1178 ; Hawkins v. Superior Court (1979) 89 Cal. App. 3d 413, 418-419, 152 Cal. Rptr. 491).

[Optional] B. Health Care Plan Requiring Arbitration Is Not Unconstitutional. It is not unconstitutional for the California Department of Managed Health Care to approve health care service plans in which the only method for resolution of disputes is mandatory arbitration. An employee presented with the option of enrolling in a plan that requires arbitration of disputes has a choice: (1) to enroll in the plan and give up a right to jury trial, or (2) to decline to enroll and forego coverage under the plan (Viola v. Dep't of Managed Health Care (2005) 133 Cal. App. 4th 299, 310-312, 314, 34 Cal. Rptr. 3d 626).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted by a medical services provider in support of a petition to compel arbitration under the medical services agreement to address the objection, or anticipated objection, of the party who received medical services that he or she is not bound by the agreement because he or she did not sign when his or her agent entered into the agreement on the patient's behalf. Optional Paragraph B is to anticipate any anticipated challenge that a plan requiring arbitration as the only means of dispute resolution is an unconstitutional deprivation of the right to a jury trial.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in support of compelling arbitration, either alone [see § 20.10] or combined with a motion to stay an action [see § 20.11].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, the argument should show that a particular named agent in fact negotiated the health plan contract on behalf of the respondent subscriber and others similarly situated.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Memoranda

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[d] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate situation, counsel may wish to oppose arbitration on the basis that the enrollment form did not comply with the arbitration disclosure requirements of Health & Safety Code § 1363.1, which are the basis of Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.94[1].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Agent or Fiduciary Negotiating for Medical Care Is Authorized to Provide for Arbitration

In Madden v. Kaiser Foundation Hospitals (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 699, 131 Cal. Rptr. 882, 552 P.2d 1178 , a medical services contract had been entered into between a board representing state employees and the defendant health plan. Plaintiff, a state employee who had enrolled in the defendant's health plan, contended she was not bound by an amendment to the plan made after she had enrolled, requiring arbitration of her pending dispute with defendant for medical malpractice, for which she filed an action. She maintained she was not aware of the arbitration amendment at the time of her hospitalization. Defendant's motion to compel arbitration and stay the action was denied, and defendant appealed.

In reversing, the Supreme Court noted that in negotiating agreements and amendments pertaining to medical services, the state board acted as the agent or representative of state employees (17 Cal. 3d 699, 705) . Under principles of agency, contract provisions, as well as amendments to them, were negotiated by the board within the scope of its authority as an agent, and these provisions bound the employees who enrolled under the contract (17 Cal. 3d 699, 705-706) . Observing the evolution of arbitration from a forum of questionable status to one of preferred standing in the law, the Court stated that the agent today who consents to arbitration for a principal follows a proper and usual practice for effecting the purpose of the agency; the agent merely agrees that disputes arising under the contract being negotiated will be resolved by a common, expeditious, and judicially favored method (17 Cal. 3d 699, 706-707) . TheCourt recognized that thousands of agreements for arbitration already had been arrived at through collective bargaining (17 Cal. 3d 699, 708) . The Court perceived no reason why the implied authority of an agent should not, similarly to that of a parent, include the power to agree to arbitration of the principal's malpractice claims. It concluded that an agent or other fiduciary who contracts for medical treatment on behalf of the beneficiary retains the authority to enter into an agreement providing for arbitration of claims for medical malpractice (17 Cal. 3d 699, 709) .

In Hawkins v. Superior Court (1979) 89 Cal. App. 3d 413, 152 Cal. Rptr. 491 , plaintiff sought to set aside an order compelling arbitration of her wrongful death claim. The decedent, her husband, had enrolled both himself and his wife in a health plan. The plan's master contract called for mandatory arbitration of claims, including wrongful death actions. The decedent later died of cancer, allegedly as a result of real parties' failure to make an early diagnosis. Plaintiff argued that she had not agreed to the arbitration provision and had not authorized her husband to do so on her behalf, and therefore she could not be compelled to arbitrate her claim.

The court of appeal denied plaintiff's petition for a writ of mandate, relying on Madden v. Kaiser Foundation Hospitals (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 699, 131 Cal. Rptr. 882, 552 P.2d 1178 (discussed above). The court held that plaintiff's husband had implied authority to bind her to the mandatory arbitration provision. This authority is implicit in a spouse's power to contract for a health plan for both spouses pursuant to the duty of support created by former Civ. Code § 242 (now see Fam. Code § 4300), as well as in the recognized fiduciary relationship existing between spouses (89 Cal. App. 3d 413, 418-419) .

[b] Health Care Plan Requiring Arbitration Is Not Unconstitutional

Plaintiffs in Viola v. Dep't of Managed Health Care (2005) 133 Cal. App. 4th 299, 34 Cal. Rptr. 3d 626 , all insureds or individuals seeking health care insurance, sought a judicial declaration that the defendant's approval of health insurance plans containing mandatory arbitration requirements for resolution of any disputes thereunder was in derogation of their constitutional right to a jury trial. They also sought injunctive relief prohibiting defendant from approving any health care plan that did not provide a choice of jury trial for dispute resolution. Each of the plans to which plaintiffs applied or under which they were insured was approved by defendant in accordance with the Knox-Keene Health Care Service Plan Act of 1975 (Knox-Keene; Health & Safety Code § 1340 et seq.). Defendants' demurrer was sustained without leave to amend. The trial court found that binding arbitration agreements are constitutional when an agent for the employee has waived the right to jury trial, citing Madden v. Kaiser Foundation Hospitals (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 699, 131 Cal. Rptr. 882, 552 P.2d 1178 (Madden, discussed at [a], above). It concluded that there is no constitutional right to medical insurance through a health care service plan, and that the plaintiffs were not compelled to sign the plans containing the waiver of jury trial. After reconsideration, the trial court again sustained the demurrer without leave to amend. Plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed (133 Cal. App. 4th 299, 304, 314) . The court of appeal first reviewed the system for approval by the Department of Managed Care (the Department) for approval of health care service plans pursuant to the Knox-Keene (Health & Safety Code § 1340 et seq.) (133 Cal. App. 4th 299, 307-308), and then determined that plaintiffs' challenge to the Department's approval of health service plans presented an actual controversy proper for resolution through an action for declaratory relief (133 Cal. App. 4th 299, 309) . The court found no authority in the federal or state constitutions to support plaintiffs' claim that in the context of a group plan offered by an employer, they had a constitutional right to choose between arbitration and jury trial (133 Cal. App. 4th 299, 310) . Although the California Constitution, article I, section 16 guarantees the right to jury trial, that right can be waived, in particular, by pre-dispute arbitration agreements [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1281] (133 Cal. App. 4th 299, 310-311) . The Legislature has expressly approved arbitration as a forum for resolution of disputes under health care service contracts, thus authorizing waiver of jury trial for those disputes [see Health & Safety Code § 1363.1 (health care service plan that includes terms that require binding arbitration to settle disputes and that restrict, or provide for waiver of, right to jury trial shall include specified language and disclosure)]. Applying a basic rule of statutory construction, the Legislature is deemed to have been aware of statutes and judicial decisions already in existence, specifically Madden (discussed at [a], above), when it enacted section 1363.1 in 1994 (133 Cal. App. 4th 299, 311) . The enactment of section 1363.1 evinces a legislative intent to allow binding arbitration in health care service plans negotiated by employers acting as agents of their employees (133 Cal. App. 4th 299, 312) . The court disagreed with plaintiffs' contention that the trial court misapplied the holding in Madden, but agreed with Madden that in this circumstance, the employee has only the choice presented to the plaintiffs here: enroll in the plan and give up a right to jury trial, or decline to enroll and forego coverage under the plan. No constitutional or statutory law is violated by approval of health care service plans which contain binding arbitration clauses (133 Cal. App. 4th 299, 314) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20 ARBITRATION: COMPELLING
PART II. FORMS
C. Particular Persons Bound by Arbitration Agreement

2-20 California Points & Authorities § 20.62

§ 20.62 Spouse Must Arbitrate Under Medical Services Agreement Signed by Spouse Who Received Medical Care

[1] FORM

PETITIONER IS ENTITLED TO AN ORDER COMPELLING ARBITRATION OF THIS ACTION [AND STAYING THIS ACTION (AS TO THE ARBITRABLE ISSUES)] BECAUSE RESPONDENT'S CLAIM FOR LOSS OF CONSORTIUM ARISES OUT OF INJURIES ALLEGEDLY SUFFERED BY HIS/HER SPOUSE WHO SIGNED THE CONTRACT FOR MEDICAL SERVICES CONTAINING THE ARBITRATION CLAUSE.

A. Nonsignatory Spouse Bound. If an arbitration clause provides that it binds all parties whose claims may arise out of or relate to the treatment or services provided by the physician, including any spouse or heirs of the patient, a nonsignatory spouse may be compelled to arbitrate claims arising out of injuries suffered by the signatory spouse (Mormile v. Sinclair (1994) 21 Cal. App. 4th 1508, 1513, 1514, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 725 ; Gross v. Recabaren (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 771, 780-781, 253 Cal. Rptr. 820).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a petition to compel arbitration of an action brought by a person whose claim arises out of injuries suffered by his or her spouse in the course of medical treatment when the spouse who received the treatment signed an agreement for the provision of medical services that contained an arbitration clause binding the nonsignatory spouse to arbitration.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in support of compelling arbitration, either alone [see § 20.10] or combined with a motion to stay an action [see § 20.11].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, the argument should show the particular agreement involved and that it is broad enough to encompass the spouse's claim.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Memoranda

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[d] Opposing Memoranda

For a memorandum based on a minority case contrary to and criticized by the authorities cited in this form, see Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.62.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Nonsignatory Spouse Bound

In Mormile v. Sinclair (1994) 21 Cal. App. 4th 1508, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 725 , respondent's wife signed a contract for medical services that provided: "It is the intention of the parties that this agreement bind all parties whose claims may arise out of or relate to treatment or services provided by the physician, including any spouse or heirs of the patient." When she became dissatisfied with the treatment, she filed a medical malpractice lawsuit, in which respondent asserted a loss of consortium cause of action. The physician petitioned to compel arbitration. The court granted the petition as to the patient/spouse, but denied it as to respondent. Petitioner appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court defined the issue as being whether the wife's agreement to arbitrate claims arising out of the physician's professional negligence bound her husband, who never signed the agreement. The court, citing examples, noted that arbitration agreements are enforced with regularity against nonsignatory parties (21 Cal. App. 4th 1508, 1511) . The court noted that Gross v. Recabaren (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 771, 253 Cal. Rptr. 820 , had held a nonsignatory spouse bound to arbitrate a loss of consortium claim under a similar arbitration clause (21 Cal. App. 4th 1508, 1511-1512) . The court also noted Bolanos v. Khalatian (1991) 231 Cal. App. 3d 1586, 283 Cal. Rptr. 209 , binding a nonsignatory spouse to arbitration of an emotional distress claim for having witnessed injuries to his wife, and Michaelis v. Schori (1993) 20 Cal. App. 4th 133, 24 Cal. Rptr. 2d 380 , binding the nonsignatory father of a stillborn baby (21 Cal. App. 4th 1508, 1512-1513) .

As to the contrary case of Baker v. Birnbaum (1988) 202 Cal. App. 3d 288, 248 Cal. Rptr. 336 , discussed at Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.62[3][a], the court first distinguished it on the ground that the arbitration clause in Baker did not purport to bind anyone other than the patient. Thus, the Baker court had no need to rely on a broader principle it stated, which was that the policy in favor of arbitration does not extend to nonsignatories. The Mormile court observed that Baker has generally been ignored or questioned and constitutes a minority view, with its overly restrictive reading of the scope of arbitration agreements (21 Cal. App. 4th 1508, 1513-1514) . The court went on to find the rationale of Gross and its progeny for requiring nonsignatory spouses to arbitrate their claims arising out of injures suffered by the signatory spouse to be compelling (21 Cal. App. 4th 1508, 1514-1516) .

Gross v. Recabaren (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 771, 253 Cal. Rptr. 820 , was a medical malpractice action relating to a cancerous skin lesion which was surgically removed in May, 1986. The patient's wife also sued for loss of consortium. Husband alone signed the arbitration agreement at issue, in 1984, when he had other skin lesions removed. It required arbitration of "any dispute as to medical malpractice." The doctors' petition to compel arbitration was denied on the ground that the arbitration agreement did not extend to the 1986 procedure. The doctors appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, first finding that there was a continuing doctor-patient relationship, so the arbitration agreement did apply to the 1986 procedure (206 Cal. App. 3d 771, 777-778) . With respect to whether the wife's claim was subject to thearbitration agreement, the court of appeal noted it was in the unhappy position of having to choose between decisions of two of their colleagues, Baker v. Birnbaum (1988) 202 Cal. App. 3d 288, 248 Cal. Rptr. 336 (discussed at Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.62[3][a]), and Herbert v. Superior Court (1985) 169 Cal. App. 3d 718, 215 Cal. Rptr. 477 (discussed at § 20.63[3][a]), decided by two other divisions of the same district court of appeal, the Second District. Those cases reflect an irreconcilable divergence of views extending beyond any factual differences. The court of appeal discussed the reasoning of both cases, Herbert focusing on the impracticality of having everyone sign the agreement and of having separate forums for each heir's cause of action (206 Cal. App. 3d 771, 779) , and Baker, which merely declined to find that an agreement for one person's health care could bind another to arbitrate a cause of action arising out of that care (206 Cal. App. 3d 771, 779-780) . The Gross court of appeal decided that the reasoning in Herbert was more in line with the practical realities of the situation, more accurately reflected the existing case law governing the applicability of arbitration agreements to nonsignatories, and furthered the judicially-favored preference of joining the loss of consortium and negligence claims (206 Cal. App. 3d 771, 780-781) . The court also discussed how cumbersome it would be if a physician had to inquire into a patient's marital status at the time of every visit and postpone treatment if a recently acquired spouse is not present to join in executing a new agreement (206 Cal. App. 3d 771, 781) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20 ARBITRATION: COMPELLING
PART II. FORMS
C. Particular Persons Bound by Arbitration Agreement

2-20 California Points & Authorities § 20.63

§ 20.63 Heirs Must Arbitrate Wrongful Death Claims Under Medical Services Agreement

[1] FORM

PETITIONER, AS A PARTY TO AN ARBITRATION PROVISION UNDER THE _____ [specify type of contract, e.g., MEDICAL SERVICES AGREEMENT], IS ENTITLED TO AN ORDER COMPELLING ARBITRATION [AND STAYING ANY PENDING ACTION RELATING TO ARBITRABLE ISSUES] BECAUSE RESPONDENT IS AN HEIR OF THE PARTY WHO EXECUTED THE AGREEMENT AND THE AGREEMENT EXPRESSLY BINDS HIS/HER HEIRS TO ARBITRATE.

A. Heirs of Contracting Party May Be Expressly Bound to Arbitrate. An heir of the party who executed an agreement to arbitrate any claim asserted by the party or the party's heirs is bound by the agreement (Herbert v. Superior Court (1985) 169 Cal. App. 3d 718, 725-727, 215 Cal. Rptr. 477).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a petition to compel arbitration under a contract containing an arbitration provision that expressly provides that the heirs of the parties to the contract will be bound by the agreement to arbitrate.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in support of compelling arbitration, either alone [see § 20.10] or combined with a motion to stay an action [see § 20.11].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, the argument should show the particular agreement involved was intended to bind the heirs of the contracting party and that the agreement is otherwise enforceable.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Memoranda

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Heirs of Contracting Party May Be Expressly Bound to Arbitrate

In Herbert v. Superior Court (1985) 169 Cal. App. 3d 718, 215 Cal. Rptr. 477 , a labor union and defendant health plan had entered into a medical services contract covering the members of the union. The contract included a provision requiring arbitration of any claim asserted by a member of the health plan or a member's heir or personal representative arising from the rendition or failure to render services under the agreement, irrespective of the legal theory on which the claim was asserted. A union member joined the plan on behalf of himself, his wife, and five of his eight children. When the member died after surgery performed by defendant, his widow and all eight children instituted a wrongful death action against defendant. Defendant answered the complaint and moved to compel arbitration pursuant to the agreement. The trial court granted the motion as to the widow and the children who were members of the plan, but denied the motion as to the nonmember heirs, and all parties sought a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal granted the writ sought by defendant, holding that all parties to the wrongful death action were bound by the arbitration agreement (169 Cal. App. 3d 718, 721) . The court relied on Hawkins v. Superior Court (1979) 89 Cal. App. 3d 413, 418-419, 152 Cal. Rptr. 491 (discussed at § 20.61[3][a]) to conclude that the decedent could bind his heirs who were also members of the health plan, i.e., the widow and the five children who were members. The court then relied on two grounds in reaching its conclusion that the arbitration provision also bound the nonmember heirs. First, the court noted that the statutory cause of action for wrongful death created by Code Civ. Proc. § 377 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60 et seq.] is a joint, single, and indivisible action that may not be split (169 Cal. App. 3d 718, 722) . The court held that the reasons for a single wrongful death cause of action, requiring all heirs to be bound by an arbitration agreement executed by the decedent, were more convincing than the arguments in support of the trial court's order that would require two separate and distinct proceedings (169 Cal. App. 3d 718, 725) . Second, the court noted the express language of the agreement that bound the heirs to the arbitration provision, as well as the statutory provisions in Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1283.1(a) and 1295 that permit arbitration of wrongful death actions by agreement of the parties (169 Cal. App. 3d 718, 726-727) . The court found that these provisions evidence a legislative intent that a patient who signs an arbitration agreement may bind his or her heirs to that agreement, regardless of whether or not the heirs are also members of the plan (169 Cal. App. 3d 718, 727) .

The Herbert case was distinguished by another court of appeal that then declined to follow it [see Baker v. Birnbaum (1988) 202 Cal. App. 3d 288, 293-294, 248 Cal. Rptr. 336 (discussed in Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.62[3][a])].

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20 ARBITRATION: COMPELLING
PART II. FORMS
C. Particular Persons Bound by Arbitration Agreement

2-20 California Points & Authorities § 20.64

§ 20.64 Minor Is Bound by Mother's Medical Services Agreement (Prenatal or Postnatal Care)

[1] FORM

PETITIONER IS ENTITLED TO AN ORDER COMPELLING ARBITRATION OF RESPONDENT'S CLAIMS FOR NEGLIGENT PRENATAL AND POSTNATAL MEDICAL TREATMENT [AND STAYING THIS ACTION] BECAUSE RESPONDENT'S PARENT BOUND RESPONDENT TO ARBITRATE ALL CLAIMS AGAINST PETITIONER.

A. Parent May Bind Child to Arbitration of Medical Malpractice Claims Arising From Negligent Prenatal or Postnatal Treatment. A parent may validly bind an expected child, or even a child yet unconceived, to arbitration of all claims for negligence in prenatal and postnatal medical treatment (Pietrelli v. Peacock (1993) 13 Cal. App. 4th 943, 947, 16 Cal. Rptr. 2d 688 ; Wilson v. Kaiser Foundation Hospitals (1983) 141 Cal. App. 3d 891, 898-899, 190 Cal. Rptr. 649).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of a petition to compel arbitration of a minor's medical malpractice action against a health care provider under a medical services agreement between the minor's parent and the physician when that agreement is broad enough to encompass the claim.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in support of compelling arbitration, either alone [see § 20.10] or combined with a motion to stay an action [see § 20.11].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, the argument should quote or refer to language of the arbitration agreement and should explain how the controversy in issue is within the scope of the subject matter covered by the arbitration provision.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Memoranda

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[d] Opposing Memoranda

For a memorandum based on an arbitration clause that was not broad enough to cover an unborn child, see Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.41.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Parent May Bind Child to Arbitration of Medical Malpractice Claims Arising From Negligent Prenatal or Postnatal Treatment

In Pietrelli v. Peacock (1993) 13 Cal. App. 4th 943, 16 Cal. Rptr. 2d 688 , defendant physician sought to compel arbitration of a minor's medical malpractice claim. On July 28, 1981, the plaintiff's mother, who was not pregnant at the time, signed acontract in which she agreed to submit any dispute regarding medical services rendered by defendant physician to binding arbitration. The document, entitled "Arbitration Agreement," stated in pertinent part that any controversy between the mother and the physician concerning medical care and any such controversy between the physician and "persons, born or unborn," on behalf of whom the mother had the power to contract, would be required to be submitted to final and binding arbitration. Plaintiff was born on October 3, 1982. On September 12, 1990, plaintiff through his mother as his guardian ad litem, filed a complaint against defendant for medical malpractice, alleging negligence in the care and treatment he received from defendant at or around the time of his birth. Defendant then filed a petition to compel arbitration pursuant to the arbitration agreement with the mother. Plaintiff opposed the motion on the principal ground that he was not a party covered by the agreement. In its order denying the petition, the court found that the language in the arbitration agreement did not bind children not yet conceived at the time the arbitration agreement was signed, and that reference to "persons, born or unborn," did not pertain to those not yet conceived. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. It noted that under existing case law, a mother could validly bind her expected child to arbitration of all claims for negligence in prenatal and postnatal medical treatment. Plaintiff attempted to distinguish his own case on the ground that he was neither born nor conceived at the time his mother entered into the arbitration agreement. The court did not find this distinction significant, and noted that the law in various contexts recognizes the ability of a party to act on behalf of and affect the rights of persons who have not yet come into existence. The court concluded that the arbitration agreement bound both the mother and "persons unborn" whom the mother had authority to bind. At the moment of conception, the plaintiff became an "unborn person" within the definition set forth in the contract. By electing to receive the obstetric services provided for her under the agreement, the plaintiff's mother impliedly agreed to arbitration for her unborn child. And because plaintiff had no cause of action before he was conceived, the election became binding on him at birth (13 Cal. App. 4th 943, 947-948) .

Wilson v. Kaiser Foundation Hospitals (1983) 141 Cal. App. 3d 891, 190 Cal. Rptr. 649 , was a medical malpractice action by parents and their infant son related to allegedly negligent perinatal (shortly before or after birth) care of the infant who suffered epilepsy, brain damage, and other undefined injuries. The mother was a member of defendants' hospital services plan at the time of the child's birth. The plan required arbitration of "any claim arising from alleged violation of a legal duty incident to this agreement" if the claim was asserted by a member, a member's heir or personal representative. The plan provided that newborn children delivered at Kaiser were automatically enrolled in the plan. A parent who wished to circumvent that procedure had to complete a form to do so. Plaintiff mother never did that, instead, she enrolled him in the plan four months after he was born. Defendants petitioned to compel arbitration. Plaintiffs resisted, claiming the child was not a member of the plan at the time of his injuries or at the time of his birth. The trial court granted the petition as to the parents' claims and the child's postnatal claims, but denied the petition as to the claim for prenatal injuries, finding that the child's enrollment in the plan was retroactive to the time of his birth, but not before. Defendants appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, finding that in seeking obstetric care from defendants, the mother elected and expected medical services both for herself and for her unborn child. Because the agreement under which the services were rendered provided for prenatal care to the mother and to her unborn child, all such care was rendered subject to the agreement. The arbitration agreement was not limited to claims for services rendered to members, but instead applied to all claims for bodily injury arising from rendition or failure to render services under the agreement (141 Cal. App. 3d 891, 898) . The court also discussed former Civ. Code § 29 [now see Civ. Code § 43.1 (child conceived but unborn is deemed an existing person so far as is necessary for the child's interests in the event of the child's subsequent birth)], and cases decided under it, which held that a child has no cause of action for prenatal injuries until and unless the child is born (141 Cal. App. 3d 891, 896-898) . Thus, the child's cause of action for prenatal injuries arose at his birth and at that moment he became a member of the plan; he never had a cause of action before he was a member of the plan (141 Cal. App. 3d 891, 898) . The court distinguished Weeks v. Crow (1980) 113 Cal. App. 3d 350, 169 Cal. Rptr. 830 (discussed in Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.41[3][a]), because in Weeks, only the mother was named as the patient, and the arbitration agreement, which was found in a blanket admission agreement rather than in a comprehensive prepaid family health plan, compelled arbitration only of claims arising out of treatment of the named patient (141 Cal. App. 3d 891, 899) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20 ARBITRATION: COMPELLING
PART II. FORMS
C. Particular Persons Bound by Arbitration Agreement

2-20 California Points & Authorities § 20.65

§ 20.65 Surety on Performance Bond Is Bound by Reference to Construction Contract Which Is Incorporated in Bond

[1] FORM

THE PERFORMANCE BOND REQUIRES RESPONDENT TO ARBITRATE THIS CONTROVERSY BECAUSE THAT BOND INCORPORATES THE TERMS OF THE CONSTRUCTION CONTRACT, INCLUDING ITS ARBITRATION PROVISION.

A. Surety Under Performance Bond Is Bound by Arbitration Provision in Related Construction Contract. A contract performance bond will be read with the contract the faithful performance of which it guarantees. Thus, when the language of the bond incorporates the contract, the surety is bound by any arbitration provision in the contract even though it is not a party to the contract (Boys Club of San Fernando Valley, Inc. v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. (1992) 6 Cal. App. 4th 1266, 1271-1273, 8 Cal. Rptr. 2d 587).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used in support of a petition to compel a surety that issued a performance bond to arbitrate under an arbitration provision in the primary contract.

This form is not intended as a complete memorandum, but should be combined withthe memoranda in §§ 20.10, 20.11, and any others applicable to the particular situation.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, the counsel should trace the language of the bond referring to the primary contract and the arbitration provision in the primary agreement.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Memoranda

For a form setting forth the applicability of incorporation by reference, see § 20.31.

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Surety Under Performance Bond Is Bound by Arbitration Provision in Related Construction Contract

Owner/plaintiff in Boys Club of San Fernando Valley, Inc. v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. (1992) 6 Cal. App. 4th 1266, 8 Cal. Rptr. 2d 587 , contracted with a builder for construction of a recreational facility for $1.2M. The contract contained an arbitration clause requiring the parties to arbitrate "(a)ll claims, disputes, and other matters arising in questions between the Contractor and the Owner arising out of, or relating to, the Contract Documents or the breach thereof ... " Contractor obtained a performance bond from defendant in the sum of $1.2MM. The bond referred to the contract and made it a part of the bond by reference. After the facility was completed, plaintiff complained of defects in construction and withheld final payment on the ground that Contractor failed to perform the contract in a workmanlike manner. In March, 1988, plaintiff filed a demand for arbitration against Contractor. In January, 1991, plaintiff filed an amended demand for arbitration naming defendant Fidelity as an additional party to the arbitration and defining the dispute to be arbitrated as "breach of contract, negligence, professional negligence and claim against Bond No. 61-06-492 [the performance bond]." In February, 1991 the Boys Club petitioned the superior court for an order compelling Fidelity to arbitrate disputes regarding the performance bond. Fidelity opposed the petition on the grounds that it was not a party to the contract which contained the arbitration provision and that plaintiff had waived its right to compel defendant to arbitrate by delay. The court denied the petition to compel, and Boys Club appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court commenced its discussion by noting that whether or not an arbitration agreement is operative against a person who has not signed it involves a question of "substantive arbitrability" which is to be determined by the court (6 Cal. App. 4th 1266, 1271) . The court then held that an agreement need not expressly provide for arbitration, but may do so in a secondary document which is incorporated by reference. A contract performance bond in particular will be read with the contract because when a party enters into a contract to do certain work on certain terms, and procures a surety to guarantee the faithful performance of the work, the surety necessarily contracts with reference to the contract as made; otherwise it would not know what obligation if was assuming. And this is particularly so where the bond expressly declares that the contract is made a part of the bond and the terms of the contracts are incorporated into the bond (6 Cal. App. 4th 1266, 1271-1272) . After discussing several New York and Ohio cases, the court concluded that by the language in its bond incorporating the contract, Fidelity intended, and agreed, to be bound by the arbitration provision in the contract even though it was not a party to the contract (6 Cal. App. 4th 1266, 1273) .

91 of 174 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20 ARBITRATION: COMPELLING
PART II. FORMS
C. Particular Persons Bound by Arbitration Agreement

2-20 California Points & Authorities § 20.66

§ 20.66 Employee Must Arbitrate With Employer That Is Third Party Beneficiary of Employee's Agreement With Professional Organization

[1] FORM

PETITIONER, AS A THIRD PARTY BENEFICIARY OF RESPONDENT'S AGREEMENT WITH _____ [specify, e.g., THE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF SECURITIES DEALERS], IS ENTITLED TO AN ORDER COMPELLING ARBITRATION [AND STAYING ANY PENDING ACTION RELATING TO ARBITRABLE ISSUES] BECAUSE RESPONDENT, AS _____ [specify status, e.g., A FORMER EMPLOYEE OF PETITIONER], IS BOUND TO ARBITRATE THE DISPUTE UNDER THE TERMS OF THAT AGREEMENT.

A. Employee Must Arbitrate with Employer that Is Third Party Beneficiary of Employee's Agreement with Professional Organization. An employer that is identified in, and shown to be a third party beneficiary of _____ [a former or an] employee's agreement with a professional organization [that the employee was required to join as a condition of his/her employment] may enforce that agreement to compel the employee to arbitrate disputes that are within the scope of the agreementwith the professional organization (Cione v. Foresters Equity Services, Inc. (1997) 58 Cal. App. 4th 625, 636, 645, 68 Cal. Rptr. 2d 167).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted by an employer or former employer in support of a petition to compel its employee or former employee to arbitrate under an agreement between the employee and a professional organization when the employer is a third party beneficiary of that agreement and the dispute is within the scope of that agreement.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in support of compelling arbitration, either alone [see § 20.10] or combined with a motion to stay an action [see § 20.11].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should show that the employer was mentioned in and intended as a beneficiary of the agreement between the employee and the professional organization.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Memoranda

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Employee Must Arbitrate With Employer That Is Third Party Beneficiary of Employee's Agreement With Professional Organization

Plaintiff in Cione v. Foresters Equity Services, Inc. (1997) 58 Cal. App. 4th 625, 68 Cal. Rptr. 2d 167 , sued defendant (FESCO) for wrongful termination. Their employment agreement was silent on the issue of arbitration, but the Uniform Application for Securities Industry Registration (U-4) plaintiff had signed before signing the employment agreement identified FESCO as plaintiff's employing firm and required plaintiff to arbitrate any controversy that might arise between him and his firm. Defendant moved to compel arbitration under the U-4, but the motion was denied, apparently based on the integration clause in the employment agreement. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, finding that the integration clause in the employment agreement did not prohibit its giving effect to the U-4, and that FESCO was a third party beneficiary of the U-4 (58 Cal. App. 4th 625, 645) . The intent to benefit FESCO appears from the terms of the U-4, including its requirement that plaintiff arbitrate any controversy that might arise between him and his firm (58 Cal. App. 4th 625, 636) . The employment agreement provided that it contained "the entire understanding of the parties hereto with respect to the subject matter contained herein. There are no restrictions, promises, representations, warranties, covenants or undertakings, other than those expressly set forth or referred to in this Agreement." Neither that integration clause or anything else in the agreement suggested that the agreement stated the parties' entire agreement as to all matters or otherwise superceded the U-4 (58 Cal. App. 4th 625, 638) . Even were the court to consider the employment agreement fully integrated, it would conclude that the U-4 was not superceded, because the U-4 addressed separate terms not inconsistent with the employment agreement (58 Cal. App. 4th 625, 639) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20 ARBITRATION: COMPELLING
PART II. FORMS
C. Particular Persons Bound by Arbitration Agreement

2-20 California Points & Authorities § 20.67

§ 20.67 People Who Have Accepted Benefits of Underlying Agreement

[1] FORM

RESPONDENT HAS ACCEPTED THE BENEFITS OF THE _____ [specify, e.g., INSURANCE POLICY] CONTAINING THE ARBITRATION CLAUSE, AND MUST THEREFORE ACCEPT ITS BURDENS AND ARBITRATE.

A. People Who Have Accepted Benefits of Underlying Agreement. One who accepts the benefits of an agreement, or insurance policy, is required to accept the agreement's or policy's obligations, including the obligation to arbitrate, especially when there is an agency or similar relationship between the person who accepted the benefits and one of the parties to the arbitration agreement (Norcal Mutual Ins. Co. v. Newton (2000) 84 Cal. App. 4th 64, 71-72, 76, 84, 100 Cal. Rptr. 2d 683).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a petition to compel arbitrationwhen the person resisting arbitration is admittedly not a party to the arbitration agreement, but has accepted so many benefits of the agreement in which the arbitration clause is contained (perhaps even including benefits of the arbitration clause) that he or she should be compelled to arbitrate.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in support of compelling arbitration, either alone [see § 20.10] or combined with a motion to stay an action [see § 20.11].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel

should show what the nonsignatory did to enjoy the benefits of the contract or insurance policy containing the arbitration clause, especially if the nonsignatory previously demanded arbitration, and then withdrew that demand or otherwise refused to arbitrate.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702].

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] People Who Have Accepted Benefits of Underlying Agreement

Plaintiff in Norcal Mutual Ins. Co. v. Newton (2000) 84 Cal. App. 4th 64, 100 Cal. Rptr. 2d 683 issued a professional liability insurance policy for a physician. The policy covered the physician and "health care extenders" for whom physician was legally responsible and for whom an endorsement had been issued under the policy, and employees acting within the scope of their employment for physician. The physician's spouse was not in any of those categories. The physician and the physician's spouse, who was not insured under the policy, were sued in an action alleging sexual misconduct by the insured and unauthorized treatment of patients by the spouse. The insurance company agreed to defend both the physician and the spouse, subject to a reservation of rights, including the right to decline to pay or indemnify any settlement and to seek reimbursement of all fees and costs. The case against the physician and spouse was settled, and a dispute arose as to how the settlement would be reported (as required) to the National Practitioner Data Bank (data bank) and to the Medical Board of California. On two occasions, attorneys for spouse demanded arbitration of a number of issues. Later, both physician and spouse "withdrew their request for arbitration." Physician died. Plaintiff petitioned to compel arbitration. The trial court denied the petition on the ground that had not sustained its burden of proving that spouse was a party to the insurance policy or that she had accepted its benefits within the meaning of Civ. Code § 1589. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court discussed many cases in which a nonsignatory was required to arbitrate noting that a common thread of those cases is the existence of an agency or similar relationship between the nonsignatory and one of the parties to the arbitration agreement. In the absence of such a relationship, courts have refused to hold nonsignatories to arbitration agreements (84 Cal. App. 4th 64, 76) . The court noted that spouse sought the benefits of the insurance policy by tendering defense of the complaint to plaintiff and accepted those benefits by allowing plaintiff to assume the cost of her defense and, together with physician, requested and participated in plaintiff's settlement of the complaint, and requested arbitration of the ensuing dispute regarding plaintiff's report of the settlement to the data bank. Even after physician's death and spouse's statement of non-consent to arbitration, spouse relied on the terms of the insurance policy to obtain a change of venue (84 Cal. App. 4th 64, 78) . The court concluded that having sought and accepted the benefit of the insurance policy in handling the underlying malpractice suit, spouse was required to abide by the policy's requirement of arbitration of disputes (84 Cal. App. 4th 64, 82) . The fundamental point, the court said, was that spouse was not entitled to make use of the policy as long as it worked to her advantage, and then attempt to avoid its application in defining the forum in which her dispute with plaintiff should be resolved. The maxim "He who takes the benefit must bear the burden" [Civ. Code § 3521] is relevant here (84 Cal. App. 4th 64, 84) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] People Who Have Accepted Benefits of Underlying Agreement

The court of appeals in Suh v. Superior Court (2010) 181 Cal. App. 4th 1504, 1513-1514, 105 Cal. Rptr. 3d 585 , affirmed the trial court's ruling that doctors who had a contract with a hospital were not subject to the arbitration clause in a contract between the hospital and a medical group for which they were employed. The doctors were not signatories to the latter contract, and there was no evidence that plaintiffs actually derived any benefits from the other contract either as third party beneficiaries or otherwise.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20 ARBITRATION: COMPELLING
PART II. FORMS
C. Particular Persons Bound by Arbitration Agreement

2-20 California Points & Authorities § 20.68

§ 20.68 Persons Whose Joinder Was Consented to in Arbitration Agreement

[1] FORM

THE AGREEMENT BETWEEN _____ [name] AND _____ [name] PROVIDES FOR JOINDER IN THE ARBITRATION OF ANYONE NOT A PARTY TO THE AGREEMENT WHO IS NECESSARY FOR COMPLETE RESOLUTION OF ANY CONTROVERSY REQUIRED TO BE ARBITRATED UNDERTHE AGREEMENT. THUS, ARBITRATION SHOULD COMPELLED.

A. Persons Whose Joinder Was Consented to in Arbitration Agreement. An arbitration agreement that provides for any third party who is not a party to the agreement but is necessary for complete resolution of any matter required to be arbitrated under the agreement, to be joined in the arbitration must be enforced according to its terms and arbitration compelled under that agreement (Zakarian v. Bekov (2002) 98 Cal. App. 4th 316, 325-327, 119 Cal. Rptr. 2d 623).

[Optional] B. Rules Provide for Arbitrator to Decide Who Should Be Joined. An arbitration agreement that provides for any third party who is not a party to the agreement but is necessary for complete resolution of any matter required to be arbitrated under the agreement, to be joined in the arbitration, and which further provides, or incorporates arbitration rules or procedures that provide, that the arbitrator determine who must be joined in the arbitration to provide a complete resolution, must be enforced according to its terms and arbitration compelled under those terms (Zakarian v. Bekov (2002) 98 Cal. App. 4th 316, 325-327, 119 Cal. Rptr. 2d 623).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted by a party seeking to compel arbitration under an agreement, or rules or procedures incorporated into the arbitration agreement, that provides for any third party who is not a party to the agreement but is necessary for complete resolution of any matter required to be arbitrated under the agreement, be joined in the arbitration. Optional Paragraph B is applicable if the agreement, rules, or procedures provide that the arbitrator determine whether anyone must be joined in the arbitration to insure complete resolution of the matter. The California Hospital Association-California Medical Association Rules for the Arbitration of Hospital and Medical Fee Disputes (CHA-CMA Rules) contain such a provision. Thus, an agreement to be arbitrated under those or similar rules will be enforced to refer the issue of the third party's joinder to the arbitrator.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in support of compelling arbitration, either alone [see § 20.10] or combined with a motion to stay an action [see § 20.11].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. At a minimum, counsel should attach the agreement and any rules or procedures adopted by the agreement that provide for joinder of third parties in the arbitration and should show who and why any third person is necessary to the resolution of the matter. Counsel should specify whether the court should decide the joinder issue at the same time it determines whether to compel arbitration or if one of the parties will present the matter of joinder to the arbitrator [see Optional Paragraph B].

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Memoranda

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Persons Whose Joinder Was Consented to in Arbitration Agreement

Zakarian v. Bekov (2002) 98 Cal. App. 4th 316, 325-327, 119 Cal. Rptr. 2d 623 was a class action commenced by patients of Dr. William Ellis, M.D. and the Ellis Eye and Laser Center of Northern California for damages arising out of laser eye surgery allegedly performed by Dr. Ellis with unapproved illegally imported ophthalmic lasers, which were alleged to have been so negligently serviced, maintained, repaired and calibrated by George Bekov as to have caused plaintiffs' injuries. Bekov was employed by Dr. Ellis to service the ophthalmic lasers and was also a defendant. Plaintiffs had each executed a "Patient-Physician Arbitration Agreement" in accordance with Code Civ. Proc. § 1295, which provided in part that "any dispute as to medical malpractice, that is as to whether any medical services rendered under this contract were unnecessary or unauthorized or were improperly, negligently or incompetently rendered, will be determined by submission to arbitration ... ." Most importantly, the arbitration provision also stated: "I also hereby consent to the intervention or joinder in the arbitration proceeding of all parties relevant to a full and complete settlement of any dispute arbitrated under this Agreement, as set forth in the Medical Arbitration Rules and/or CHA-CMA Rules for the Arbitration of Hospital and Medical Fee Disputes." Ellis and Bekov filed a motion to compel arbitration. The trial court granted the motion to compel arbitration as to Ellis alone and denied arbitration of all issues relating to Bekov. Ellis and Bekov appealed.

The court of appeal reversed as to the denial of the motion to compel arbitration ofarbitrable claims as to Bekov, with directions that the trial court enter a new order referring the issue of Bekov's joinder or intervention to the arbitrator (98 Cal. App. 4th 316, 322, 327) . The court of appeal said it could not order arbitration of the merits of the dispute with Bekov, but that plaintiffs, as parties to the arbitration agreement, could not prevent Dr. Ellis from obtaining arbitration of the issue of whether or not Bekov's presence is "relevant to a full and complete settlement of any dispute" within the subject matter of the arbitration agreement. The terms of the arbitration agreement reflect that the parties agreed that the arbitrator, not the court, determine issues of joinder and intervention (98 Cal. App. 4th 316, 322) . The court distinguished cases relied on by plaintiffs that refused joinder of third parties and stressed that the critical and distinguishing fact in this case is Dr. Ellis' desire to bring in a willing third party according to the terms of his agreements with his patients. If the arbitration agreement encompasses the issue of joinder of a non-objecting third party, plaintiffs, who agreed to that term, cannot resist arbitration on the ground that the third party did not sign the agreement (98 Cal. App. 4th 316, 323) . The court of appeal asked for and received a copy of the latest version of the California Hospital Association and California Medical Association Rules for the Arbitration of Hospital and Medical Fee Disputes that were incorporated by reference in the arbitration agreement (CHA-CMA Rules). Rule 9, concerning intervention and joinder provides: "Prior to the date set for the arbitration hearing, any person ... whose participation is considered by the neutral arbitrator to be material or relevant to a complete resolution of the dispute may intervene in the arbitration. Similarly, any party to the arbitration may make a written request that additional persons ... be joined in the arbitration. If the neutral arbitrator considers the participation of the requested new party to be material or relevant to a complete resolution of the dispute, then the request shall be approved ... . All parties to the arbitration are deemed to have consented to the joinder or intervention of any person when the joinder or intervention is allowed pursuant to this rule ... ." On examination of the complaint, the contract, and the CHA-CMA Rules incorporated by reference, the court of appeal found it obvious that the parties had provided that the issue of whether Bekov could intervene or be joined in the arbitration proceeding was to be determined by the arbitrator (98 Cal. App. 4th 316, 324) . The allegations of entanglement between Bekov and Ellis bring the case against Bekov well within the scope of the language of the agreement regarding arbitration of questions of joinder of parties relevant to a full settlement of an arbitrated dispute. By denying the motion to compel arbitration, the trial court did not give effect to the role that the parties had contractually reserved to the arbitrator. The plain language of the arbitration agreement required reversal of the order denying appellants' motion to compel arbitration of the arbitrable claims as to Bekov (98 Cal. App. 4th 316, 325) .

Plaintiffs argued that because defendants had not yet applied to the arbitrator for intervention and/or joinder, denial of appellants' motion to compel arbitration had to be affirmed. The court of appeal disagreed, saying that once plaintiffs filed the complaint in this case in superior court, defendants had no choice but to ask that court to refer the issue to arbitration in accordance with the terms of their contract. The court of appeal further stated that its decision merely enforced the terms of an arbitration agreement; it was not forcing an unwilling nonsignatory to submit to arbitration. In this case, Bekov, by seeking arbitration, waived any objection he might have asserted (98 Cal. App. 4th 316, 325) . All of the policies favoring arbitration were served by the court's decision and there were no countervailing interests weighing against arbitration (98 Cal. App. 4th 316, 326) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20 ARBITRATION: COMPELLING
PART II. FORMS
C. Particular Persons Bound by Arbitration Agreement

2-20 California Points & Authorities § 20.69

§ 20.69 Equity Requires Signatory to Arbitrate on Demand of Nonsignatory

[1] FORM

THE FACTS OF RESPONDENT'S CLAIM[S] AGAINST PETITIONER ARE SO INTERTWINED WITH RESPONDENT'S CLAIMS AGAINST OTHER PARTIES TO THE ARBITRATION AGREEMENT THAT EQUITY REQUIRES RESPONDENT TO ARBITRATE ITS CLAIMS AGAINST PETITIONER [IN THE SAME ARBITRATION].

A. Equity Requires Arbitration With Nonsignatory. California recognizes that a party to an arbitration agreement may be required by the doctrine of equitable estoppel to arbitrate claims against a nonsignatory when the claims against the nonsignatory are intimately founded in and intertwined with arbitrable claims against another signatory. [This theory, first recognized in federal courts, is usually applied to situations involving related companies and individual officers or agents of those companies and claims of fraud or conspiracy] (Alliance Title Company, Inc. v. Boucher (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 262, 269-273, 25 Cal. Rptr. 3d 440 ; Metalclad Corp. v. Ventana Environmental Organizational Partnership (2003) 109 Cal. App. 4th 1705, 1 Cal. Rptr. 3d 328) accord Turtle Ridge Media Group, Inc. v. Pacific Bell Directory (2006) 140 Cal. App. 4th 828, 832-835, 44 Cal. Rptr. 3d 817 (when contract governed be Federal Arbitration Act, detrimental reliance need not be shown to compel arbitration of intertwined claim against nonsignatory)).

[Optional] B. Agent of Signatory Can Compel Arbitration. An agent of a signatory, though he or she did not sign the arbitration agreement, can enforce an arbitration agreement against the principal or can be compelled to arbitrate against the principal. This rule is based on equitable principles (Nguyen v. Tran (2007) 157 Cal. App. 4th 1032, 1037-1038 ; Westra v. Marcus & Millichap Real Estate Investment Brokerage Co. (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 759, 764-765, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 752 (agent of both buyer and seller in real estate transaction)).

[Optional] C. Nonsignatory Alleged To Be Alter Ego of Corporate Signatory. Like agents, nonsignatory officers alleged to be alter egos of a corporate defendant can compel signatories to arbitrate (Rowe v. Exline (2007) 153 Cal. App. 4th 1276, 1279, 1284-1285, 63 Cal. Rptr. 3d 787).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a petition to compel arbitration by a person or entity who is not a party to the arbitration agreement but is closely related to, and whose legal obligations and the facts determining them, are closely intertwined with, another party or party to the arbitration agreement. Nexus betweenclaims by the party resisting arbitration against both the nonsignatory and another signatory require application of the doctrine of equitable estoppel to compel arbitration with the non-party. Although the bracketed language in Paragraph A is from Metalclad Corp. [Metalclad Corp. v. Ventana Environment Organizational Partnership (2003) 109 Cal. App. 4th 1705, 1 Cal. Rptr. 3d 328] , both cases involved related companies and discuss the federal law as the origin of this doctrine. Optional Paragraph B is for use when the nonsignatory seeking to enforce the arbitration agreement is the agent of a signatory. Optional paragraph C is for use by nonsignatory officers of a corporate party who were alleged to be alter egos of the corporate signatory.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in support of compelling arbitration, either alone [see § 20.10] or combined with a motion to stay an action [see § 20.11].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should show that the claims of the party resisting arbitration against the nonsignatory are inextricably intertwined with its claims against a signatory with which it is arbitrating, or is willing to arbitrate.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Memoranda

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Equity Requires Arbitration With Nonsignatory

Alliance Title Company, Inc. v. Boucher (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 262, 25 Cal. Rptr. 3d 440 arose from an employment dispute between employee, employer, and the company to which employer transferred all its assets during the term of the agreement (Alliance). Although the employment agreement specified it could not be modified, waived, or discharged except in a writing signed by plaintiff and the original employer, after the transfer of assets, plaintiff was told he was being demoted and that he was obligated to allow unilateral modifications by Alliance to the employment agreement, including lesser incentive compensation. Alliance refused to honor plaintiff's contract with the original employer and plaintiff refused to enter into a new agreement with Alliance. Thereafter, plaintiff's employment was terminated. Plaintiff sued both defendants for nonpayment of wages, breach of the employment contract, breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, unfair business practices, and interference with contractual and prospective economic relations. The same entity is the sole shareholder of the original employer and the majority shareholder of Alliance. Both defendants petitioned to compel arbitration under the terms of the employment agreement. The trial court granted the petition as to the original employer, but denied it as to Alliance. Alliance appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, finding that plaintiff was equitably required to arbitrate his claims against Alliance (127 Cal. App. 4th 262, 265) . The Federal Arbitration Act (FAA) governed the dispute, any issue to the contrary having been waived or forfeited (127 Cal. App. 4th 262, 267) . Under the FAA the question of whether a nonsignatory can compel a signatory to arbitrate under an agreement is answered not by state law, but by the federal substantive law of arbitrability. The United States Supreme Court has not ruled on this issue. In the absence of controlling United States Supreme Court decisional authority, the court of appeal had to make an independent determination of federal law. The court noted five theories on which the lower federal courts have determined this issue: (1) incorporation by reference, (2) assumption, (3) agency, (4) veil-piercing/alter ego, and (5) estoppel (127 Cal. App. 4th 262, 268) . The court then discussed several federal cases involving estoppel, including a 4th Circuit case that required a nonsignatory plaintiff who had an arbitration agreement with a subsidiary corporation to arbitrate claims against the parent company that were based on the same facts and were inherently inseparable from the claims against the subsidiary. The court also discussed Metalclad Corp. v. Ventana Environment Organizational Partnership (2003) 109 Cal. App. 4th 1705, 1715-1716, 1 Cal. Rptr. 3d 328 [below], which involved claims against a nonsignatory parent corporation, that were "intimately founded in and intertwined with" the underlying contract and which were ordered arbitrated (127 Cal. App. 4th 262, 269-271) . The court of appeal summarized by noting that a plaintiff who relies on contract terms in a claim against a nonsignatory defendant, even if not exclusively, may be equitably estopped from repudiating the arbitration clause contained in that agreement. The focus is on the nature of the claims asserted by the plaintiff against the nonsignatory defendant. That the claims are cast in tort rather than contract does not avoid the arbitration clause. Nor is the doctrine limited to cases involving parent and subsidiary corporations. Plaintiff's claims against Alliance rely on, make reference to, and presume the existence of the employment agreement. The claims for intentional interference with prospective economic advantage make reference to and presume the existence of the validity of the original employment contract (127 Cal. App. 4th 262, 272) . Under those circumstances, plaintiff's claims against Alliance were intimately founded in and intertwined with the original employment agreement (127 Cal. App. 4th 262, 272-273) . Therefore, he was equitably estopped from avoiding arbitration of the causes of action against Alliance (127 Cal. App. 4th 262, 273) .

Plaintiff in Metalclad Corp. v. Ventana Environmental Organizational Partnership (2003) 109 Cal. App. 4th 1705, 1 Cal. Rptr. 3d 328 , agreed to sell a Mexican subsidiary to another company. The purchase agreement contained an arbitration clause that applied to any controversy or claim arising out of or relating to the contract. Buyer's parent company orally agreed to invest $5 million to finance the purchase, but did not enter into a written agreement with plaintiff/seller. Buyer assigned its rights to a third company, which seller claimed was merely a shell. Buyer's parent company never advanced the $5 million. Plaintiff/seller sued buyer, the buyer's parent company, the buyer's assignee, and related companies and individuals on various fraud theories. Assignee compelled arbitration in Mexico. The buyer's parent company, and other affiliated companies, after unsuccessfully seeking to stay the action pending the outcome of the Mexican arbitration, sought to compel arbitration in California. The trial court denied their petition. They appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, agreeing that although petitioner was not a signatory to the arbitration agreement, the doctrine of equitable estoppel precluded plaintiff from raising petitioner's nonsignatory status to oppose arbitration (109 Cal. App. 4th 1705, 1708, 1719) . The court first noted that the case was governed by the Federal Arbitration Act

(FAA) because the contract containing the arbitration clause involved transnational commerce. Although state law determines whether there is a valid agreement to arbitrate, federal law governs arbitration clauses related to international commerce. Further, the issue here was not the existence or even the scope of the arbitration agreement, but rather who could invoke it. Thus, whether petitioner, a nonsignatory to that agreement, could compel respondent to arbitration was to be determined by federal law, not state law (109 Cal. App. 4th 1705, 1712) . The court then discussed equitable estoppel generally, citing Norcal Mutual Ins. Co. v. Newton (2000) 84 Cal. App. 4th 64, 71-72, 76, 84, 100 Cal. Rptr. 2d 683 [discussed at § 20.67[3][a]] for the proposition that a party who has not signed a contract containing an arbitration clause may nonetheless be compelled to arbitrate when he or she seeks enforcement of other provisions of the same contract that benefit him or her. The court characterized this case as involving an attempt to invoke the doctrine of equitable estoppel against a party that has signed an agreement to arbitrate but attempts to avoid arbitration by suing nonsignatory defendants for claims that are " 'based on the same facts and inherently inseparable' " from arbitrable claims against signatory defendants (109 Cal. App. 4th 1705, 1713) . The court of appeal discussed cases from federal courts other than the Ninth Circuit noting that the federal circuits that have considered the doctrine of equitable estoppel have uniformly accepted it, in appropriate factual circumstances, as a basis for compelling signatories to a contract containing an arbitration clause to arbitrate their claims against nonsignatories. The court discussed Sunkist Soft Drinks, Inc. v. Sunkist Growers, Inc. (11th Cir. 1993) 10 F.3d 753 , which involved a licensee acquired by and merged into the licensor's competitor. The court noted that neither the Ninth Circuit nor any other California federal courts had addressed equitable estoppel's application under the FAA to questions of arbitrability. Even if they had, because the United States Supreme Court has not accepted or rejected the doctrine, the court noted that they would remain free to reach their own conclusion, consistent with our obligation to interpret and apply federal law (109 Cal. App. 4th 1705, 1714) . The nexus here between plaintiff's claims against petitioner and the underlying contract with its subsidiary, the buyer, as well as the integral relationship between the buyer/subsidiary and petitioner/parent, persuaded the curt that equitable estoppel should apply. Just as the plaintiff in Sunkist claimed the parent caused its subsidiary to violate the underlying license agreement, plaintiff claims petitioner/parent caused buyer/subsidiary to breach the underlying contract for the acquisition of plaintiff's Mexican subsidiary. Plaintiff's breach of contract claim against the parent company could not be more "intimately founded in and intertwined with" the underlying contract with its subsidiary, the buyer. Plaintiff knew the subsidiary's performance was dependent on its parent investing sufficient working capital in its subsidiary to meet "development objectives" and pay plaintiff the balance due. Indeed, plaintiff sought petitioner's assurances for that very reason, but only in an alleged oral contract without an arbitration clause. Plaintiff agreed to arbitration in the underlying written contract but seeks the benefit of that contract in the form of damages from the parent/petitioner while avoiding its arbitration provision. Estoppel prevents this (109 Cal. App. 4th 1705, 1717) . Similarly, plaintiff's allegations that petitioner/parent and buyer/subsidiary colluded to obtain the Mexican subsidiary by a fraudulent contract cannot help but be "intimately founded in and intertwined with" that contract, which plaintiff signed. Thus, he court concluded that plaintiff could not avoid the arbitration obligation imposed by its underlying agreement with the buyer/subsidiary (109 Cal. App. 4th 1705, 1718) .

Plaintiff in Turtle Ridge Media Group, Inc. v. Pacific Bell Directory (2006) 140 Cal. App. 4th 828, 44 Cal. Rptr. 3d 817 , was too small a company to contract directly with defendant to deliver its phone books, but had a subcontract with a third company, Clientlogic, that was to deliver phonebooks for defendant. After entering into the subcontract, Turtle Ridge began to discover that many of the phonebooks were undeliverable because their delivery addresses were invalid. Defendant's request for bids on the contract had deliberately exaggerated the number of phonebooks Clientlogic and Turtle Ridge were to deliver. Defendant inflated the number because it allowed defendant to charge higher advertising rates to advertisers in the phonebook. Plaintiff alleged it too was defrauded because it had calculated its contract price using the higher number. Turtle Ridge sued defendant for fraud and deceit, unlawful conduct by a public utility, unfair business practices, intentional and negligent interference with prospective economic advantage, and quantum meruit. Defendant moved to compel arbitration based on the fact that Turtle Ridge's subcontract with Clientlogic incorporated the contract between Clientlogic and defendant, which contained an arbitration clause covering any controversy arising under, out of, in connection with,or relating to the contract. The trial court denied the petition for arbitration. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed (140 Cal. App. 4th 828, 830, 836). Because of the mechanics of the subcontract's incorporation clause, the doctrine of incorporation by reference was not applicable (140 Cal. App. 4th 828, 834 n. 6). The court of appeal instead analyzed the matter in terms of the doctrine of equitable estoppel. Plaintiff agreed the matter was governed by the Federal Arbitration Act (FAA). Thus, federal law governs its interpretation (140 Cal. App. 4th 828, 832) . Under federal law, a nonsignatory may compel a signatory to arbitrate its claims when the signatory's claims are based on and intertwined with a contract containing an arbitration agreement. This doctrine applies when a party has signed an agreement to arbitrate but attempts to avoid arbitration by suing nonsignatory defendants for claims that are based on the same facts and are inherently inseparable from arbitrable claims against signatory defendants. Plaintiff contended its causes of action were not intertwined with its subcontract. The court disagreed (140 Cal. App. 4th 828, 833) . Given the contractual and actual relationships among the parties, plaintiff's claims against defendant were legally intertwined with its subcontract with Clientlogic, which contained the incorporated arbitration clause (140 Cal. App. 4th 828, 833-834) . Plaintiff also contended that equitable estoppel did not apply because defendant could not show it detrimentally relied on plaintiff's being obligated to submit to arbitration. However, state law does not govern the interpretation of this agreement, which is governed by the FAA (140 Cal. App. 4th 828, 835) . Regardless of whether equitable estoppel may require detrimental reliance in other contexts, the test for applying equitable estoppel to an arbitration agreement is whether the causes of action are intertwined with the contract containing the agreement. The court noted that perhaps the phrase "equitable estoppel" was a bit of a misnomer, because detrimental reliance is not necessary. Although the doctrine's name might be confusing, its application is clear: plaintiff's claims rested on the subcontract and therefore it was bound by all the terms of that subcontract (140 Cal. App. 4th 828, 835) .

[b] Agent of Signatory Can Compel Arbitration

Nguyen v. Tran (2007) 157 Cal. App. 4th 1032, 68 Cal. Rptr. 3d 906 , arose out of a real estate transaction. The purchase and sale agreement contained an arbitration clause, but none of the brokers (each party had two brokers) was party to that agreement. Buyers sued sellers and all brokers after discovering that the guesthouse was built without a permit, asserting causes of action for breach of contract against sellers, breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing and fraud against sellers and all brokers, and a cause of action for breach of fiduciary duty against cooperating (buyer's) brokers. Cooperating brokers petitioned for arbitration based on a clause in the purchase agreement between the buyers and sellers. The agreement provided no place for brokers to agree to arbitration and they did not do so. Buyers and listing brokers opposed the petition to compel arbitration, contending cooperating brokers were not parties to the purchase agreement and third parties were involved. Listing brokers further argued cooperating brokers had no authority to bind them to an arbitration provision they had not signed. The trial court denied the petition, stating cooperating brokers failed to establish they were entitled to enforce the arbitration provision. The cooperating brokers appealed.

The court of appeal reversed as to buyers, but affirmed in all other respects. The court of appeal found that cooperating brokers, as agents of one of the parties to the agreement containing the arbitration clause, could compel their principal to arbitrate but could not compel arbitration against listing brokers, who did not sign the agreement and had no preexisting confidential or contractual relationship with cooperating brokers (157 Cal. App. 4th 1032, 1034, 1040) . The court of appeal first discussed the exceptions in which an arbitration agreement may be enforced by or against nonsignatories, including third party beneficiaries and nonsignatories who have a preexisting agency relationship that makes it equitable to impose the duty to arbitrate and focused on whether cooperating brokers were entitled to enforce the arbitration provision as agents for a signatory (157 Cal. App. 4th 1032, 1036) . Cooperating brokers conceded they were relying solely on that exception. The purchase agreement listed cooperating brokers as the agents of buyers, who signed the purchase agreement. Thus, the cooperating brokers could have been compelled to arbitrate the claims against them although they did not sign the agreement and were not parties to it (157 Cal. App. 4th 1032, 1037) . The arbitration provision expressly stated: "Buyer and Seller agree to mediate and arbitrate disputes or claims involving either or both Brokers ... provided either or both Brokers shall have agreed to such mediation or arbitration prior to, or within a reasonable time after, the dispute or claim is presented to Brokers" (157 Cal. App. 4th 1032, 1037) . Under a plain reading of this clause, buyers and sellers agreed to let either or both cooperating brokers and listing brokers decide whether to arbitrate the claims against them. Cooperating brokers demanded it and no claim was made that the demand was untimely (157 Cal App. 4th 1032, 1038) .

The court of appeal arrived at a different conclusion with respect to listing brokers, who, unlike cooperating brokers, did not agree to arbitration. The arbitration provision in the purchase agreement was a contract between buyers and sellers, not one by listing brokers or cooperating brokers. There was no evidence of an agreement to arbitrate by listing brokers (157 Cal. App. 4th 1032, 1038) . Nor was there any authority to support the proposition that one nonsignatory party has the right to invoke an arbitration clause against another nonsignatory party based on an agreement signed only by the principals (157 Cal. App. 4th 1032, 1038) . It is true the claims of buyers and the defenses of the agents all relate to the same basic issue; and it might be more efficient if the entire dispute, not just the claims against cooperating brokers, were arbitrated. But considerations of judicial efficiency were not determinative. The court noted that its determination that cooperating brokers were entitled to have buyers' claims against them resolved by contractual arbitration was without prejudice to the trial court's consideration of Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c) to reject arbitration when third parties are involved. The trial court did not discuss it in its ruling and the issue was not raised on appeal, thus, the court of appeal had no occasion to consider it and offered no opinion on whether it applied (157 Cal. App. 4th 1032, 1039) .

Westra v. Marcus & Millichap Real Estate Investment Brokerage Co. (2005)129 Cal. App. 4th 759, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 752 arose from a lawsuit based on fraud claims by purchasers against, among others, seller and seller's real estate broker, both the firm and certain of its employees. The form of purchase agreement used was authored by Marcus & Millichap (MM); they were referred to in the arbitration provision as Agent, and it bound them to arbitrate any disputes. However, while buyer and seller initialed the arbitration provision, there was no place for Agent to do so; and it did not. Nor did MM even sign the purchase agreement, although there was a place for it to do so. The portion of the purchase agreement relating to MM's commission was crossed out. Apparently there was a separate agreement between MM and seller which provided for the commission. Seller and MM petitioned to compel arbitration. The court granted the petition only as to seller. MM appealed.

The court of appeal reversed (129 Cal. App. 4th 759, 770) , finding MM was an agent of a signatory and other parties agreed to arbitrate (129 Cal. App. 4th 759, 763-767) . The court of appeal felt Code Civ. Proc. § 1298, which requires an arbitration provision in a real estate purchase agreement to be initialed by all parties to be effective, could be ignored, because, although there was no discussion of any evidence of interstate commerce involvement in this transaction, other cases have held Code Civ. Proc. § 1298 to be preempted by the Federal Arbitration Act (129 Cal. App. 4th 759, 764) . MM's claim to its right to enforce the arbitration agreement was best based on the rule that an agent of a signatory can enforce an arbitration agreement or can be compelled to arbitrate. This rule is based on equitable principles [see also Berman v. Dean Witter & Co., Inc. (1975) 44 Cal. App. 3d 999, 1004, 119 Cal. Rptr. 130] (129 Cal. App. 4th 759, 764-765) . As agent of both buyer and seller, MM was both bound by the arbitration provision and entitled to enforce it to compel arbitration of claims against it (129 Cal. App. 4th 759, 766) .

[c] Nonsignatory Alleged To Be Alter Ego of Corporate Signatory

Plaintiff in Rowe v. Exline (2007) 153 Cal. App. 4th 1276, 63 Cal. Rptr. 3d 787 , was the founder, chief executive officer, and a director of the corporate defendant. He sued the corporation and two other officers who were also founders, shareholders, and directors. Plaintiff resigned from the corporation and entered into a settlement agreement with it in accordance with which he was to transfer his ownership interests in the corporation to the corporation and to resign as a corporate officer. In return, plaintiff was to receive $428,500 in installment payments. Although plaintiff alleged that he entered into the agreement with the two individual defendants, the agreement itself recites that he entered into it with the corporation and according to the signature lines the individual defendants signed on behalf of the corporation, as its secretary and CEO, and its president and COO, respectively. The agreement contained an arbitration clause. When the last installment was not paid, plaintiff sued the corporation and named the individual defendants, alleging the corporation was their alter ego. All three defendants moved to compel arbitration. The trial court denied the motion. Defendants appealed.

The court of appeal reversed (153 Cal. App. 4th 1276, 1279, 1291), agreeing that nonsignatories sued as alter egos of a corporate defendant who was a signatory, may compel another signatory party to arbitrate (153 Cal. App. 4th 1276, 1279) . The court said it found no reported California case that decided whether a nonsignatory sued as the alter ego of a signatory can enforce an arbitration provision, but likened the situation to that of an agent. A nonsignatory sued as an agent of a signatory may enforce an arbitration agreement (153 Cal. App. 4th 1276, 1284) . A nonsignatory who is the agent of a signatory can also be compelled to arbitrate claims against his or her will. While an agent is one who acts on behalf of a corporation, an alter ego is one who, effectively, is the corporation (153 Cal. App. 4th 1276, 1285) . In addition, a California court has decided that under federal law, alleged alter ego nonsignatories may enforce an arbitration provision (153 Cal. App.4th 1276, 1285 n. 3).

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Equity Requires Arbitration With Nonsignatory

As discussed at [3][c], above, the court of appeal in Rowe v. Exline (2007) 153 Cal. App. 4th 1276, 63 Cal. Rptr. 3d 787 , reversed an order refusing to compel arbitration at the behest of corporate officers sued as individuals alleged to be alter egos of the defendant corporation. There were three other causes of action to which the alter ego theory did not apply [see Corp. Code §§ 316(a), 1903. 2009, 2011]. Although appellants raised the equitable estoppel doctrine for the first time on appeal, the court of appeal found it applied to require them to arbitrate the statutory causes of action (153 Cal. App. 4th 1276, 1286-1288) . The parties did not dispute that the statutory causes of action were arbitrable with respect to the corporate defendant (153 Cal. App. 4th 1276, 1286 n. 4). The court of appeal discussed the doctrine, saying it applied to compel a signatory to an arbitration clause to arbitrate against a nonsignatory when the relevant causes of action rely on and presume the existence of the contract containing the arbitration provision (153 Cal. App. 4th 1276, 1286-1287) . In other words, a plaintiff who relies on the contractual terms in a claim against a nonsignatory may be precluded from repudiating the arbitration clause in the contract when he or she sues the nonsignatories as related or affiliated persons with the signatory and the claims are based on the same facts and are inherently inseparable from arbitrable claims against signatory defendant. Claims that rely on, make reference to, or are intertwined with claims under the subject contract are arbitrable. Here, the statutory claims relied on the agreement made reference to, presumed the existence of, and were intertwined with the agreement. All three statutory claims sought recovery of the final payment owed under the agreement. Thus, the statutory claims were also subject to arbitration (153 Cal. App. 4th 1276, 1287) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20 ARBITRATION: COMPELLING
PART II. FORMS
C. Particular Persons Bound by Arbitration Agreement

2-20 California Points & Authorities §§ 20.70-20.79

[Reserved]

§§ 20.70[Reserved]

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20 ARBITRATION: COMPELLING
PART II. FORMS
D. Negating Defenses to Arbitration

2-20 California Points & Authorities § 20.80

§ 20.80 Unreasonable Delay in Seeking to Compel Arbitration Does Not Amount to Waiver Unless There Is Some Prejudice to Other Party

[1] FORM

DESPITE PETITIONER'S DELAY IN SEEKING TO COMPEL ARBITRATION, RESPONDENT HAS NOT BEEN PREJUDICED, THEREFORE IT IS PROPER TO COMPEL ARBITRATION.

A. Waiver Is Question of Fact for Court to Decide. Waiver of the right to compel arbitration is a preliminary question of fact, which under Code of Civil Procedure Section 1281.2(a), is for the court to decide (Saint Agnes Medical Center v. PacifiCare of California (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 1187, 1196, 8 Cal. Rptr. 3d 517, 82 P.3d 727 ; Engalla v. Permanente Medical Group, Inc. (1997) 15 Cal. 4th 951, 982-983, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 843, 938 P.2d 903 ; Guess?, Inc. v. Superior Court (2000) 79 Cal. App. 4th 553, 557, 94 Cal. Rptr. 2d 201 ; Boys Club of San Fernando Valley, Inc. v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. (1992) 6 Cal. App. 4th 1266, 1274, 1276, 8 Cal. Rptr. 2d 587).

B. Substantial, Unreasonable Delay and Prejudice Required for Waiver. Unreasonable delay in seeking to compel arbitration does not, in itself, warrant a finding of waiver of that right. To constitute waiver, the delay must be substantial, unreasonable, and in spite of the other party's own reasonable diligence. In addition, the party asserting the defense of waiver must show delay amounting to laches, which requires a showing of prejudice, namely, that he or she did or omitted to do something which impaired his or her ability to participate in the arbitration in a meaningful way (Saint Agnes Medical Center v. PacifiCare of California (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 1187, 1196, 1203-1205, 8 Cal. Rptr. 3d 517, 82 P.3d 727 ; Engalla v. Permanente Medical Group, Inc. (1997) 15 Cal. 4th 951, 983-984, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 843, 938 P.2d 903 ; Simms v. NPCK Enterprises, Inc. (2003) 109 Cal. App. 4th 233, 235, 242-244, 134 Cal. Rptr. 2d 557 ; Boys Club of San Fernando Valley, Inc. v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. (1992) 6 Cal. App. 4th 1266, 1275-1276, 8 Cal. Rptr. 2d 587 ; see Sawday v. Vista Irrigation Dist. (1966) 64 Cal. 2d 833, 836-837, 52 Cal. Rptr. 1, 415 P.2d 816).

[Optional] C. Burden of Proving Waiver Is on Party Asserting It. The burden of proving waiver is on the party resisting arbitration. The defense of waiver, like any other defense, must be proved by a preponderance of the evidence (Engalla v. Permanente Medical Group, Inc. (1997) 15 Cal. 4th 951, 984, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 843, 938 P.2d 903 ; Rosenthal v. Great Western Fin. Securities Corp. (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 394, 413, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 875, 926 P.2d 1061).

[Optional] D. Insurer Did Not Waive Right to Compel Arbitration. An insurer that had no reason to know that its insured did not know of the arbitration clause in the policy[, especially when the insured was represented by counsel (who knew of the arbitration provision) during the initial claims process], does not waive its right to compel arbitration by failing to mention the arbitration provision to the insured [or in its answer to the complaint] in a situation in which the arbitration provision is not obscure [but presented in bold in a document which was both properly incorporated by reference into the terms of the parties' agreement and actually in the insured's possession at the time the insured filed the claim], the insurer does not unreasonably delay or act inconsistently with the right to demand arbitration, does not substantively engage in the litigation process, and there is no evidence of any appreciable prejudice to the insured (Wolschlager v. Fidelity National Title Ins. Co. (2003) 111 Cal. App. 4th 784, 792-793, 4 Cal. Rptr. 3d. 179).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used in support of a petition to compel arbitration if petitioner anticipates a challenge claiming that he or she has waived the right to compel arbitration by delay when respondent was not prejudiced by the delay. Optional Paragraph D. Is for use by an insurer to negate the criteria set forth in Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.85[1], which require forfeiture of an insurer's right to compel arbitration. Counsel should use as much of the bracketed language as is applicable to his or her case.

This form is not intended as a complete memorandum, but should be combined with the memoranda in §§ 20.10, 20.11, and any others applicable to the particular situation.

As a tactical matter, counsel may wish to reserve these points for oral argument or for a reply memorandum. In deciding whether or not to reserve these arguments, counsel should consider local court rules and practice, as well as whether the moving party would be expected to raise these points in initial moving papers, to avoid the possibility of losing the opportunity to raise them.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, the argument should emphasize that the delay has not caused respondent any detriment or impairment of its ability to arbitrate the matter.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations ,and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Memoranda

For another form that negates a claim of waiver of the right to compel arbitration, see § 20.81.

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[d] Opposing Memoranda

For a form opposing this one, see Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.80.

For forms that address other acts amounting to waiver of the right to compel arbitration, see Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, §§ 20A.81 -20A.86.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Waiver Is Question of Fact for Court to Decide

Saint Agnes Medical Center v. PacifiCare of California (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 1187, 8 Cal. Rptr. 3d 517, 82 P.3d 727 , arose from two health services agreements entered into by the parties in 1994 (the 1994 HSA) and in June 2000 (the June 2000 HSA). PacifiCare filed suit in Los Angeles county, seeking a declaration that the 2000 HSA was void ab initio because of the occurrence of a condition subsequent and declaring the parties' rights and obligations under the 1994 HSA as if the 2000 HSA had never existed. The 2000 HSA had an arbitration provision, but the 1994 HSA did not. PacifiCare responded by filing an action in Fresno County for damages for breach of the 2000 HSA. The Los Angeles County action was transferred to Fresno. Each party suggested arbitration of some of the causes of action in each lawsuit, but they did not agree. PacifiCare moved to compel arbitration of portions of the Fresno action and to stay the remainder of the proceedings. Saint Agnes opposed arbitration, contending that PacifiCare had waived its right to invoke arbitration by expressly repudiating the June 2000 HSA and seeking its judicial rescission, further claiming that PacifiCare's delay in seeking arbitration caused it to incur substantial legal fees and costs with respect to both actions. The trial court denied the petition to compel arbitration. The court of appeal reversed. The California Supreme Court granted Saint Agnes' petition for review.

The California Supreme Court affirmed the judgment of the court of appeal: PacifiCare never waived the right to arbitrate (31 Cal. 4th 1187, 1192, 1206) . In discussing waiver, the Court said that generally, the determination of waiver is a question of fact, and the trial court's finding, if supported by sufficient evidence, is binding on the appellate court (31 Cal. 4th 1187, 1196) .

The facts and procedural background of Engalla v. Permanente Medical Group, Inc. (1997) 15 Cal. 4th 951, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 843, 938 P.2d 903 , are discussed at § 20.10[3][a]. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded to the trial court because issues of fact remained to be determined by the trial court regarding the claims of fraud and waiver. Plaintiffs contended that Kaiser's various dilatory actions constituted waiver of its right to compel arbitration, while Kaiser contended that waiver was for the arbitrator to decide. The Court said that Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(a) gives the trial court jurisdiction to decide questions of waiver when the issue is raised in opposition to a petition to compel arbitration (15 Cal. 4th 951, 982) . Waiver is a question of fact (15 Cal. 4th 951, 983) .

The facts and procedural background of Guess?, Inc. v. Superior Court (2000) 79 Cal. App. 4th 553, 94 Cal. Rptr. 2d 201 , and the portion of the opinion discussing the specific factors amounting to waiver are discussed in Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.83[3][b]. The court opened its discussion with consideration of waiver generally, noting that a petition to compel arbitration will be denied when the right has been waived by the proponent's failure to properly and timely assert it [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1281, 1281.2(a)]. Waiver can occur in a variety of contexts; and there is no single determinative test of waiver. The question of waiver is for the trial court and is a question of fact. For the appellate court, the question is whether the trial court's decision is supported by substantial evidence. If it is, the appellate court must affirm. If not, the appellate court may decide the issue as a matter of law (79 Cal. App. 4th 553, 557) .

The facts and procedural background of Boys Club of San Fernando Valley, Inc. v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. (1992) 6 Cal. App. 4th 1266, 8 Cal. Rptr. 2d 587 , are discussed at § 20.65[3][a]. The court of appeal cited Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(a) for the proposition that a court must compel arbitration if it determines that there is an agreement to arbitrate, unless it determines that the right to compel arbitration has been waived by the petitioner. Waiver of the right to compel arbitration therefore is a preliminary question which the trial court must decide in considering the motion to compel (6 Cal. App. 4th 1266, 1274) . Evidence of waiver is a question of fact (6 Cal. App. 4th 1266, 1276) .

[b] Substantial, Unreasonable Delay and Prejudice Required for Waiver

The facts and procedural background of Saint Agnes Medical Center v. PacifiCare of California (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 1187, 8 Cal. Rptr. 3d 517, 82 P.3d 727 , are discussed in [a], above. In its preliminary discussion of waiver, the Court stated the law of waiver as it applies to arbitration. Waiver of the right to demand arbitration arises in a variety of contexts, ranging from situations in which the party seeking to compel arbitration has previously taken steps inconsistent with an intent to invoke arbitration to instances in which the petitioning party has unreasonably delayed in seeking to compel arbitration. The decisions hold that the "bad faith" or "wilful misconduct" of a party may constitute a waiver and thus justify a refusal to compel arbitration. The Court cited Sobremonte v. Superior Court (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 980, 992, 72 Cal. Rptr. 2d 43 , for the proposition that a court can consider the following in determining waiver (31 Cal. 4th 1187, 1196) :

- Whether the party's actions are inconsistent with the right to arbitrate;
- Whether "the litigation machinery has been substantially invoked" and the parties "were well into preparation of a lawsuit" before the party notified the opposing party of an intent to arbitrate;
- Whether a party either requested arbitration enforcement close to the trial date or delayed for a long period before seeking a stay;
- Whether a defendant seeking arbitration filed a counterclaim without asking for a stay of the proceedings;
- Whether important intervening steps [e.g., taking advantage of judicial discovery procedures not available in arbitration] had taken place; and
- Whether the delay "affected, misled, or prejudiced" the opposing party.

The remainder of the Court's discussion of prejudice is set forth in § 20.81[3][a].

The facts and procedural background of Engalla v. Permanente Medical Group, Inc. (1997) 15 Cal. 4th 951, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 843, 938 P.2d 903 , are discussed at § 20.10[3][a]. In its discussion of the substance of the claim of waiver, the Court noted that the term "waiver" has a number of meanings in statute and case law. Generally, waiver denotes the voluntary relinquishment of a known right. But it can also mean the loss of an opportunity or a right as a result of a party's failure to perform an act it is required to perform, regardless of the party's intent to relinquish the right. The varied meanings of the term waiver are reflected in the case law on the enforcement of arbitration agreements. In the past, California courts have found a waiver of the right to demand arbitration in a variety of contexts, ranging from situations in which the party seeking to compel arbitration has previously taken steps inconsistent with an intent to invoke arbitration to instances in which the petitioning party has unreasonably delayed in undertaking the procedure. The decisions likewise hold that the bad faith or wilful misconduct of a party may constitute a waiver and thus justify a refusal to compel arbitration. The Court noted that in order to amount to waiver, the delay must be substantial, unreasonable, and in spite of the claimant's own reasonable diligence. In this case, the trial court made no finding on plaintiffs' waiver claim.

The Supreme Court emphasized that waiver is not to be inferred lightly. The Supreme Court concluded that there was ample evidence that claimant was diligent and the Kaiser's delay was unreasonable or in bad faith. Thus, the question of waiver had to be determined by the trial court on remand (15 Cal. 4th 951, 983-984) .

Plaintiffs in Simms v. NPCK Enterprises, Inc. (2003) 109 Cal. App. 4th 233, 134 Cal. Rptr. 2d 557 , leased commercial property from defendant and granted defendant a security interest in trade fixtures and equipment as security for the faithful performance of the lease. The lease had an arbitration clause. Plaintiffs filed an action against the lessor corporation and one of its principles alleging, among other things, failure to make repairs. The last cause of action was a request for an order compelling arbitration. Plaintiffs alleged they made a formal demand for arbitration and defendants refused to agree to arbitration. Defendants filed an unlawful detainer action against plaintiffs, in which the court ordered all disputes relating to the lease to be submitted to arbitration. Defendants dismissed that action, intentionally circumventing the order for arbitration. Plaintiffs sought a temporary restraining order to prevent defendants from demolishing a structure plaintiffs had built on the property. The temporary restraining order issued, but two weeks later the court denied a preliminary injunction and dissolved the temporary restraining order. Defendants demolished the structure, but did not take possession of two pieces of meat packing equipment in which they had a security interest. Defendants filed an ex parte application for an order compelling plaintiffs to relinquish all fixtures and equipment pursuant to defendants' security interest. Plaintiffs replied that the dispute was subject to arbitration, that the remedy for repossession under a security agreement was a writ of possession, and defendants had not complied with the requirements for such a writ. The court found plaintiffs waived arbitration by filing suit and seeking an injunction without moving to stay the proceedings, denied arbitration, and entered the injunction requiring plaintiffs to relinquish the fixtures and equipment subject to NPCK's security interest. Plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, finding no waiver of arbitration as there was no evidence defendants were prejudiced by plaintiffs' inconsistent actions and delay in seeking arbitration, and that the appropriate prejudgment remedy to recover possession of personal property is a writ of possession under the claim and delivery law, not an injunction (109 Cal. App. 4th 233, 235) . The court noted that there is no single test to determine whether arbitration has been waived (109 Cal. App. 4th 233, 241) ; and went on to list the things a court can consider in determining whether a party has waived arbitration (109 Cal. App. 4th 233, 241-242) . Here the trial court relied on two actions by plaintiffs to find waiver. First, plaintiffs filed suit for damages. However, suing on an arbitrable claim does not per se result in waiver of plaintiffs' right to compel arbitration. To find waiver, the court must be satisfied not only that the party seeking arbitration acted inconsistently with the right to arbitrate but also that the objecting party was prejudiced by such action. While plaintiffs did file suit for damages, the suit also requested arbitration (109 Cal. App. 4th 233, 242) . Therefore, the court of appeal concluded that the filing of the lawsuit did not waive plaintiffs' right to arbitration (109 Cal. App. 4th 233, 243) . The portion of the opinion addressing possible waiver by seeking and obtaining a provision remedy is discussed at § 20.81[3][b].

The facts and procedural background of Boys Club of San Fernando Valley, Inc. v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. (1992) 6 Cal. App. 4th 1266, 8 Cal. Rptr. 2d 587 , are discussed at § 20.65[3][a]. The court of appeal first noted that no good reason appeared for Boys Club's delay of almost three years between its initial demand for arbitration and its amended demand seeking to make Fidelity a party to the arbitration. Unreasonable delay in asserting a right does not, in itself, warrant a finding of waiver of the right. In addition, the court said, citing Sawday v. Vista Irrigation Dist. (1966) 64 Cal. 2d 833, 836-837, 52 Cal. Rptr. 1, 415 P.2d 816 (discussed in Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.82[3][a]), it must appear that the delay amounted to laches, which requires some showing of prejudice to defendant caused by the delay. To show prejudice, the party asserting the defense must show he or she did or omitted to do something which detrimentally altered his or her position with regard to the claim asserted. Fidelity made no showing that the delayed filing of the amended demand for arbitration caused it to believe it was not subject to the arbitration provision of thecontract, or that the delay impaired its ability to participate in the arbitration in a meaningful way (6 Cal. App. 4th 1266, 1275) . Consequently, the court of appeal rejected Fidelity's claim of waiver (6 Cal. App. 4th 1266, 1276) .

Sawday v. Vista Irrigation Dist. (1966) 64 Cal. 2d 833, 52 Cal. Rptr. 1, 415 P.2d 816 , is discussed in Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.82[3][a].

[c] Burden of Proving Waiver Is on Party Asserting It

The facts and procedural background of Engalla v. Permanente Medical Group, Inc. (1997) 15 Cal. 4th 951, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 843, 938 P.2d 903 , are discussed at § 20.10[3][a]. In its discussion of the substance of the claim of waiver, the Court noted that the burden of proving waiver is on the party resisting arbitration (15 Cal. 4th 951, 984) .

The facts and procedural background of Rosenthal v. Great Western Fin. Securities Corp. (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 394, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 875, 926 P.2d 1061 , are discussed at § 20.10[3][a]. In discussing the proper procedure for determining a petition to compel arbitration, the Court noted that the burden of producing evidence of, and proving by a preponderance of the evidence, any fact necessary to a defense such as waiver is on the party who raises that defense to enforcement of the arbitration agreement (14 Cal. 4th 394, 413) .

[d] Insurer Did Not Waive Right to Compel Arbitration

The facts and procedural background of Wolschlager v. Fidelity National Title Ins. Co. (2003) 111 Cal. App. 4th 784, 4 Cal. Rptr. 3d. 179 , are discussed at § 20.31[3][a]. In denying the petition to compel arbitration, the trial court specified that its decision was not based on any finding of waiver because there was no factual basis for finding waiver. However, on appeal, plaintiff contended that the trial court's decision that there was no waiver was not supported by substantial evidence. Specifically, plaintiff asserted that defendant never informed plaintiff of the arbitration clause despite a long claims and negotiations process and that defendant failed to timely raise the issue either prior or subsequent to the filing of the complaint.

The court of appeal first set forth the requirements for waiver, noting that there is no single test for waiver of the right to compel arbitration, but that waiver may be found when the party seeking arbitration has (1) previously taken steps inconsistent with an intent to invoke arbitration, (2) unreasonably delayed in seeking arbitration, or (3) acted in bad faith or with willful misconduct. In the context of an insurer's waiver of the right to arbitrate, an insured must prove that defendant engaged in conduct designed to mislead policyholders. The evaluation of an allegation of forfeiture should focus on the subjective intent of the insurer, consistent with a finding of bad faith and the imposition of a penalty in the form of forfeiture. Conduct designed to mislead can include failure to timely or meaningfully apprise its insureds of their rights to arbitration (111 Cal. App. 4th 784, 792) . Although the court said defendant's conduct was somewhat questionable, the arbitration clause here was not obscure, it was presented in bold in a document which was both properly incorporated by reference into the terms of the parties' agreement and actually in plaintiff's possession at the time he filed his claim. Further, defendant had no reason to know that plaintiff was unaware of his arbitration rights. Nor did defendant unreasonably delay or act inconsistently with the right to demand arbitration. Defendant did not substantively engage in the litigation process; and there was no evidence of any appreciable prejudice to the plaintiff. Given the totality of the circumstances, there was no basis for denying the petition to compel arbitration (111 Cal. App. 4th 784, 793) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Waiver Is Question of Fact for Court to Decide

Freeman v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. (1975) 14 Cal. 3d 473, 121 Cal. Rptr. 477, 535 P.2d 341 , involved arbitration under an uninsured motorist provision of an automobile insurance policy [see Ins. Code § 11580.2]. When plaintiff's action against the driver of one of the cars involved in the accident ended in a verdict for the driver of that car, plaintiff made a claim against defendant for damages under plaintiff's uninsured motorist coverage with respect to a third vehicle involved in the accident. The trial court denied plaintiff's petition to compel arbitration on the ground that the claim was barred by the statute of limitations. Plaintiff appealed, contending that the time limit question was one which should have been decided by an arbitrator.

The Supreme Court, adopting the court of appeal's opinion with modifications, affirmed the lower court orders. Freeman's holding that Ins. Code § 11580.2 establishes a one-year limitation period for petitions to compel arbitration of uninsured motorist coverage disputes has been abrogated [see Spear v. California State Automobile Ass'n (1992) 2 Cal. 4th 1035, 1039-1044, 9 Cal. Rptr. 2d 381, 831 P.2d 821 , discussed at § 20.43[3][a]]. However, the Supreme Court stated that the issue of whether the right to compel arbitration has been waived was clearly one for the determination of the court pursuant to the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2 (14 Cal. 3d 473, 485) .

The facts and procedural background of Sobremonte v. Superior Court (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 980, 72 Cal. Rptr. 2d 43 , are discussed in Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.83[3][a]. The court of appeal, finding that defendant had waived its right to arbitrate, began its discussion by noting that waiver is a question of fact; and the trial court's determination will not be disturbed on appeal if it is supported by substantial evidence (61 Cal. App. 4th 980, 991) .

The facts and procedural background of Davis v. Continental Airlines, Inc. (1997) 59 Cal. App. 4th 205, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 79 , are discussed in Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.83[3][b]. The court of appeal, finding that defendants had waived their right to arbitrate, began its discussion by noting that a determination by a trial court that the right to compel arbitration has been waived ordinarily involves a question of fact, which is binding on the appellate court if it is supported by substantial evidence (59 Cal. App. 4th 205, 211) .

[b] Burden of Proving Waiver Is on Party Asserting It

The facts and procedural background of Sobremonte v. Superior Court (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 980, 72 Cal. Rptr. 2d 43 , are discussed in Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.83[3][a]. The court of appeal found that defendant had waived itsright to arbitrate. In its introductory discussion, the court said that the burden of proving waiver is on the party claiming it, that the court will closely scrutinize claims of waiver, and that the party claiming waiver has a heavy burden of proof (61 Cal. App. 4th 980, 991) .

The facts and procedural background of Davis v. Continental Airlines, Inc. (1997) 59 Cal. App. 4th 205, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 79 , are discussed in Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.83[3][b]. The court of appeal, found that defendants had waived their right to arbitrate. In its introductory discussion, the court said that the burden of proof is heavy on the party seeking to establish waiver, which should not be lightly inferred in keeping with the public policy favoring arbitration (59 Cal. App. 4th 205, 211) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20 ARBITRATION: COMPELLING
PART II. FORMS
D. Negating Defenses to Arbitration

2-20 California Points & Authorities § 20.81

§ 20.81 Filing Lawsuit Does Not Necessarily Waive Right to Compel Arbitration

[1] FORM

PETITIONER HAS NOT WAIVED THE RIGHT TO ARBITRATE BY FILING A LAWSUIT, OR IN ANY OTHER WAY, AND AS A PARTY TO AN ARBITRATION AGREEMENT, IS ENTITLED TO AN ORDER COMPELLING ARBITRATION [AND STAYING ANY PENDING ACTION RELATING TO ARBITRABLE ISSUES].

A. Filing of Lawsuit Does Not Necessarily Constitute Waiver of Right to Compel Arbitration. The right to arbitrate a dispute pursuant to contract is not waived by the bringing of a lawsuit[, even one that attacks the validity of the contract containing the arbitration clause], in good faith when the merits of the dispute are not litigated and no prejudice to the other party results from the lawsuit (Saint Agnes Medical Center v. PacifiCare of California (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 1187, 1192, 1200-1205, 8 Cal. Rptr. 3d 517, 82 P.3d 727 ; Doers v. Golden Gate Bridge etc. Dist. (1979) 23 Cal. 3d 180, 188, 151 Cal. Rptr. 837, 588 P.2d 1261 ; Kalai v. Gray (2003) 109 Cal. App. 4th 768, 776-778, 135 Cal. Rptr.2d 449 ; Simms v. NPCK Enterprises, Inc. (2003) 109 Cal. App. 4th 233, 235, 242-243, 134 Cal. Rptr. 2d 557 ; Outdoor Services, Inc. v. Pabagold, Inc. (1986) 185 Cal. App. 3d 676, 684-685, 230 Cal. Rptr. 73 , compare Christensen v. Dewor Developments (1983) 33 Cal. 3d 778, 783-784, 191 Cal. Rptr. 8, 661 P.2d 1088).

[Optional] B. Burden of Proving Waiver Is on Party Asserting It. [See § 20.80[1], Paragraph C.]

[Optional] C. Seeking Provisional Remedy Does Not Necessarily Waive Right to Arbitration. Code of Civil Procedure Section 1281.2(c) does not expressly state that applying for a provisional remedy without seeking a stay of the action waives the right to arbitrate. Given the strong public policy in favor or arbitration, without an explicit statutory command to find waiver, the failure to include a request for a stay with an application for provisional relief is a fact to consider in determining waiver, but it is not dispositive. When the party claiming waiver does not show any prejudice caused by the provisional remedy, no waiver occurs (Simms v. NPCK Enterprises, Inc. (2003) 109 Cal. App. 4th 233, 235, 243-245, 134 Cal. Rptr. 2d 557 ; Jay Bharat Developers, Inc. v. Minidis (2008) 167 Cal. App. 4th 437, 443-447, 84 Cal. Rptr. 3d 267).

[Optional] D. Contractual Deadline for Demanding Arbitration Tolled by Commencement of Judicial Action. The commencement of a civil action by a party in a controversy, within the period of time specified in an arbitration agreement for a party to the agreement to demand or initiate arbitration, tolls the applicable time limitations contained in the agreement. The limitations are tolled from the date the civil action is commenced until thirty days after a final determination by the court hearing the action that the party is required to arbitrate the controversy, or thirty days after the final termination of the civil action, whichever date occurs first (Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.12; Pearson Dental Supplies, Inc. v. Superior Court (2010) 48 Cal. 4th 665, 675, 108 Cal. Rptr. 3d 171, 229 P.3d 83). The end of a tolling period under Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.12, i.e., 30 days after the final determination, simply means that the contractual limitations clock begins to run again from where it stopped at the filing of the civil action (Pearson Dental Supplies, Inc. v. Superior Court (2010) 48 Cal. 4th 665, 675, 108 Cal. Rptr. 3d 171, 229 P.3d 83).

[Optional] E. Attempts to Settle Do Not Necessarily Waive Right to Arbitration. Attempts to settle the judicial action that do not result in undue delay are not inconsistent with the right to arbitrate (Zamora v. Lehman (2010) 186 Cal. App. 4th 1, 20, 111 Cal. Rptr. 3d 335).

[Optional] F. Demurrer to Complaint Does Not Necessarily Waive Right to Arbitration. Filing and obtaining a ruling on a demurrer on grounds of it [lacked specificity/failed to allege the timeliness of the claim] is not inconsistent with the right to arbitrate (Zamora v. Lehman (2010) 186 Cal. App. 4th 1, 20, 111 Cal. Rptr. 3d 335).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used in support of a petition to compel arbitration if petitioner anticipates a challenge based on his or her having already instituted litigation of the controversy. The bracketed language in paragraph A is for use when the lawsuit that is, or will be, claimed to have abrogated the right to arbitration is one that attacks the validity of the contract containing the arbitration clause. The invalidity must not be one that arises from lack of mutual assent or capacity to contract [see Saint Agnes Medical Center v. PacifiCare of California (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 1187, 1200, 8 Cal. Rptr. 3d 517, 82 P.3d 727 discussed in [3][a], below]. Optional paragraph D is for use when a contractual deadline for seeking arbitration of a controversy is statutorily tolled by the commencement of a civil action concerning the controversy. Optional paragraph E is for use when the conduct allegedly working a waiver consists of efforts to settle the judicial action. Optional paragraph F is for use when the conduct allegedly working a waiver consists of filing and obtaining a ruling on a demurrer on grounds that the complaint lacked specificity or failed to allege the timeliness of the claim.

This form is not intended as a complete memorandum, but should be combined with the memoranda in §§ 20.10, 20.11, and any others applicable to the particular situation.

As a tactical matter, counsel may wish to reserve these points for oral argument or for a reply memorandum. In deciding whether or not to reserve these arguments, counsel should consider local court rules and practice, as well as whether the moving party would be expected to raise these points in initial moving papers, to avoid the possibility of losing the opportunity to raise them.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, the argument may state that the respondent has waived any objection that petitioner has waived the right to arbitrate, or may describe the circumstances that could be challenged as a waiver, and then set forth the factors which preclude a waiver from having occurred, for example, that the lawsuit was dismissed.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [

see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Memoranda

For another form that negates a claim of waiver of the right to compel arbitration, see § 20.80.

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[d] Opposing Memoranda

For a form in opposition to this one, see Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.84.

For forms that address other acts that do amount to waiver of the right to compel arbitration, see Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, §§ 20A.81 -20A.86.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Filing of Lawsuit Does Not Necessarily Constitute Waiver of Right to Compel Arbitration

The facts and procedural background of Saint Agnes Medical Center v. PacifiCare of California (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 1187, 8 Cal. Rptr. 3d 517, 82 P.3d 727 , are discussed in § 20.80[3][a]. The portion of the opinion considering the criteria for determining waiver of the right to arbitrate in general is discussed in § 20.80[3][b]. In affirming the Supreme Court said that seeking a declaration of nullity or testing the validity of a contract does not waive or abrogate the right to arbitrate in accordance with that contract (31 Cal. 4th 1187, 1192) . The court distinguished situations involving lack of mutual assent, in which there was no contract. PacifiCare never repudiated the existence of the 2000 HSA, but claimed that a condition subsequent rendered it void (31 Cal. 4th 1187, 1197-1200) . The trial court had felt itself bound by Bertero v. Superior Court (1963) 216 Cal. App. 2d 213 , which held that to repudiate a contract is to waive the right to arbitrate in accordance with it (31 Cal. 4th 1187, 1192, 1197) . The Supreme Court discussed Bertero at length, noting that significant developments in both state and federal law have occurred since 1963, and concluded that Bertero's analysis was outdated, disapproving it. Both federal and California law now hold that, in the absence of a specific attack on an arbitration agreement, the arbitration agreement generally must be enforced even if one party asserts the invalidity of the contract that contains it (31 Cal. 4th 1187, 1198-1200) . The Court distinguished this situation from one in which a party did not know it was signing a contract, or did not enter into a contract at all. In those situations, both the contract and its arbitration clause are void for lack of mutual assent. PacifiCare never denied its knowing and voluntary agreement to the June 2000 HSA. Moreover, PacifiCare's petition to compel arbitration reflected its apparent position that it considered itself bound to perform under the June 2000 HSA at least until March 2001, when it notified Saint Agnes that the contract was terminated. Thus, PacifiCare's legal challenge to the validity of the June 2000 HSA was not inconsistent with an intent to invoke arbitration pursuant to that contract and did not amount to a waiver of its right to compel contractual arbitration (31 Cal. 4th 1187, 1200) . Filing of a lawsuit, without more, is not waiver or abandonment of the right to arbitrator (31 Cal. 4th 1187, 1200-1201) . Generally, waiver does not occur when the arbitrable issues have not been litigated to judgment. PacifiCare did not initiate the lawsuit in which it now seeks to compel arbitration (the Fresno actions), but it did initiate the Los Angeles action in which it sought to have the agreement containing the arbitration clause declared void ab initio. Saint Agnes' arbitrable causes of action have not been litigated to judgment or judicially addressed on their merits. Therefore, PacifiCare's filing of the Los Angeles action does not constitute waiver of its right to arbitration (31 Cal. 4th 1187, 1201) .

Under both federal and California law, the critical issue in determining waiver is whether the litigation prejudiced the arbitration. Merely participating in litigation will not prejudice arbitration. Nor do incurring court costs and legal expenses amount to prejudice (31 Cal. 4th 1187, 1203) . Prejudice is typically found only if the petitioning party's conduct substantially impaired the other side's ability to arbitrate, for instance when a petitioning party used discovery to obtain information it could not have obtained during the arbitration process or when delays result in lost evidence (31 Cal. 4th 1187, 1204) . There is no indication that PacifiCare used the litigation to gain information about Saint Agnes would otherwise been unavailable in arbitration nor does Saint Agnes claim the litigation impaired its ability to have its arbitrable disputes resolved through arbitration (31 Cal. 4th 1187, 1204) . PacifiCare's motion for change of venue did not forfeit its right to arbitration. The court reasoned that one should not be required to litigation the in an improper or inconvenient venue (31 Cal. 4th 1187, 1205) .

Doers v. Golden Gate Bridge etc. Dist. (1979) 23 Cal. 3d 180, 151 Cal. Rptr. 837, 588 P.2d 1261 , arose out of a dispute between a bus company employee and a transportation district over proper protection of the employee's interest. Protection of workers' existing interests was a condition of the district's accepting federal assistance under the Urban Mass Transit Act of 1964. The employee originally filed a complaint in the U.S. District Court, but it was dismissed for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. His subsequent petition to compel arbitration filed in the superior court was denied on the ground that he had waived the right to arbitration by bringing the federal action. The Supreme Court took over plaintiff's appeal in order to resolve a conflict in the appellate districts.

The Supreme Court, primarily adopting the court of appeal opinion, reversed the judgment. It recognized that several appellate cases had stated or held that a party waives a contractual arbitration right merely by filing a lawsuit. Examining the leading cases, however, it found that waiver was actually found only in those situations in which the party had litigated a claim (23 Cal. 3d 180, 185-186) . Because the arbitrable issues in the instant action were never litigated by the parties in the federal court, the employee had not waived his contractual arbitration rights (23 Cal. 3d 180, 188) . The Court did not discount the possibility that a waiver could occur prior to a judgment on the merits, however, if prejudice could be demonstrated (23 Cal. 3d 180, 188 n.3). The Court concluded that its approach was the appropriate one in the face of various conflicting authorities, since the result was in line with the strong public policy favoring arbitration (23 Cal. 3d 180, 189) .

Plaintiff in Kalai v. Gray (2003) 109 Cal. App. 4th 768, 776, 135 Cal. Rptr. 2d 449 , entered into a contract with defendant for construction of improvements to plaintiff's home. The agreement included an arbitration clause, providing that arbitration was the exclusive remedy for any dispute between owner and contractor and that the prevailing party was entitled to recover from the other all reasonable attorney's fees and costs incurred in connection with the arbitration proceedings. Plaintiff however filed a complaint alleging negligence, breach of contract and related claims. Defendant, rather than filing a petition to compel arbitration, filed a motion for summary judgment based on the arbitration agreement. Plaintiff opposed the motion, arguing, among other things, that the arbitration agreement was unenforceable because it did not comply with the statutory requirements for an arbitration provision contained in a contract for residential construction of the type at issue. The court granted the summary judgment, stating in its order that plaintiff had "elected to file a lawsuit ... rather than to file for arbitration, thereby failing to exhaust his administrative remedy." The actual judgment contained an additional finding that plaintiff had waived his right to arbitrate against defendant. After entry of the judgement, plaintiff tired to initiate arbitration of the dispute with the American Arbitration Association, but defendant filed an objection to the arbitration on the basis that plaintiff"s claim had already been summarily adjudicated against him in the superior court. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed and remanded, with directions to delete any reference to plaintiff having waived his right to arbitration, and to add instead a provision specifying that plaintiff may arbitrate his claim in accordance with the parties' arbitration agreement (109 Cal. App. 4th 768, 778) . The court noted that the prejudice necessary to support a waiver of arbitration requires the party to have obtained some advantage by resort to the court system, such as an adjudication of some aspect of the merits, or even access to discovery which would not have been available in the arbitration forum. Merely incurring litigation expense is not sufficient prejudice. If it were, even opposing to a petition to compel arbitration would constitute a waiver of the right to arbitrate. Rather, the court said, there were compelling policy reasons why a plaintiff should not have to forfeit the right to any remedy simply because it chooses to challenge an arbitration agreement. To the extent the reference to plaintiff's "waiver" of arbitration contained in the court's judgment was intended to preclude plaintiff from thereafter initiating arbitration of his claims against defendant, it was in error. Plaintiff did not waive the right to arbitrate merely by filing a claim in court (109 Cal. App. 4th 768, 776) . Defendant's motion for summary judgment can only be interpreted as an assertion of the right to enforce the arbitration provision and a refusal to litigate in court. Defendant must submit to arbitration (109 Cal. App. 4th 768, 777) .

The facts and procedural background of Simms v. NPCK Enterprises, Inc. (2003) 109 Cal. App. 4th 233, 134 Cal. Rptr. 2d 557 , and the portion of the opinion discussing the requirement that the party opposing arbitration have been prejudiced, and was not prejudiced by the filing of the lawsuit, are discussed at § 20.80[3][b].

Plaintiff in Outdoor Services, Inc. v. Pabagold, Inc. (1986) 185 Cal. App. 3d 676, 230 Cal. Rptr. 73 , was a company engaged in the business of purchasing advertising space for clients. Defendant manufacturer and its advertising agent had a contract which specifically provided for the agent to contract with third parties for media time and space. Plaintiff was held to be a third party beneficiary of that contract. The agent had sued the manufacturer for breach of contract and unsuccessfully sought attachment in that action. One of the billboard companies with which plaintiff had placed defendant's advertising sued plaintiff, in response to which plaintiff filed a cross complaint against defendant. Later, the matter was arbitrated, and resulted in an award in favor of plaintiff, which was confirmed. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court of appeal held that neither the agent's attempted attachment nor the plaintiff's cross complaint constituted waiver of the right to arbitrate. The court noted that attachment is not available in arbitration and that the cross complaint was essentially a protective measure which was not inconsistent with the intent to arbitrate (185 Cal. App. 3d 676, 684-685) .

Christensen v. Dewor Developments (1983) 33 Cal. 3d 778, 191 Cal. Rptr. 8, 661 P.2d 1088 , is discussed in Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.84[3][a]. The Supreme Court found that waiver did arise because prejudice was shown (33 Cal. 3d 778, 782-784) [citing Doers v. Golden Gate Bridge etc. Dist. (1979) 23 Cal. 3d 180, 188, 188 n.3, 151 Cal. Rptr. 837, 588 P.2d 1261 (discussed above)].

[b] Seeking Provisional Remedy Does Not Necessarily Waive Right to Arbitration

The facts and procedural background of Simms v. NPCK Enterprises, Inc. (2003) 109 Cal. App. 4th 233, 134 Cal. Rptr. 2d 557 , and the portion of the opinion discussing the requirement that the party opposing arbitration have been prejudiced, and was not prejudiced by the filing of the lawsuit, are discussed at § 20.80[3][b]. In addition, the trial court relied on the fact that plaintiffs obtained a temporary restraining order and sought a preliminary injunction, without moving to stay the action. Preliminary injunctions and temporary restraining orders are among the provisional remedies that may be sought pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.8. An application for a provisional remedy does not waive the right of arbitration if the applicant at the same time moves to stay all other proceedings in the action pending arbitration [Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.8(c)] (109 Cal. App. 4th 233, 243) . Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.8(c) does not expressly state that applying for a provisional remedy without seeking a stay of the action waives the right to arbitrate. Given the strong public policy in favor or arbitration, without an explicit statutory command to find waiver, the failure to include a request for a stay with an application for provisional relief, is a fact to consider in determining waiver, but it is not dispositive. The temporary restraining order resulted in a three-week delay in defendants' demolition of the structure plaintiffs had erected. Defendants did not claim that delay prejudiced them in any way. The party seeking to establish waiver must show some prejudice as a result of the other party's delay in seeking arbitration. There was no showing of any prejudice to defendants (109 Cal. App. 4th 233, 244) . The litigation machinery was not substantially invoked before the request for arbitration, there was no long delay before arbitration was sought, plaintiffs did not take advantage of judicial discovery procedures not available in arbitration, nor did the delay affected, misled or prejudiced the defendants. Simply filing suit for damages, while also requesting arbitration, and then seeking a provisional remedy without a stay is insufficient to support a finding of waiver absent any evidence of prejudice to the opposing party (109 Cal. App. 4th 233, 245) .

Jay Bharat Developers, Inc. v. Minidis (2008) 167 Cal. App. 4th 437, 84 Cal. Rptr. 3d 267 , was an action concerning the termination of a franchise agreement by the franchisor. This dispute was ordered to arbitration pursuant to the franchise agreement. The franchisees alleged that they were fraudulently induced to enter into the franchise agreement. The franchisor filed a cross-complaint and alleged that the franchisees had been in breach of the agreement by failing to pay royalties and advertising fees (167 Cal. App. 4th 437, 441) . The franchise agreement contained an arbitration provision that excluded disputes in which injunctive relief was sought (167 Cal. App. 4th 437, 440) . A party to an arbitration agreement may file with the court an application for a provisional remedy in connection with an arbitrable controversy, but only upon the ground that the award to which the applicant may be entitled may be rendered ineffectual without provisional relief [Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.8(b)] (167 Cal. App. 4th 437, 446) .

Although the matter had already been ordered to arbitration, a preliminary injunction was granted by the trial court to prohibit the franchisees from continuing to represent themselves as franchisees and from using franchise trademarks (167 Cal. App. 4th 437, 441-443). The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's grant of the injunction, concluding that the franchisors established the likelihood of prevailing on the merits by presenting evidence that the franchisees had failed to make royalty payments and to pay advertising fees. Further, the court found that the franchisor would suffer irreparable harm without the preliminary injunction. After weighing the balance of harms, an injunction prohibiting use of the franchisors' trademark was appropriate (167 Cal. App. 4th 437, 443-447) .

[c] Contractual Deadline for Demanding Arbitration Tolled by Commencement of Judicial Action

By statute effective January 1, 2007, if an arbitration agreement requires that arbitration of a controversy be demanded or initiated by a party to the arbitration agreement within a stated period of time, the commencement of a civil action by that party based upon that controversy, within that period of time, tolls the applicable time limitations contained in the agreement, from the date the civil action is commenced until 30 days after a final determination by the court hearing the action that the party is required to arbitrate the controversy, or 30 days after the final termination of the civil action, whichever date occurs first [Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.12].

Pearson Dental Supplies, Inc. v. Superior Court (2010) 48 Cal. 4th 665, 108 Cal. Rptr. 3d 171, 229 P.3d 83 , reversed the court of appeal's reversal of the trial court's ruling under Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.12. The Supreme Court held that the end of a tolling period under Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.12, i.e., 30 days after the final determination, simply means that the contractual limitations clock begins to run again from where it stopped at the filing of the civil action (48 Cal. 4th 665, 675, 108 Cal. Rptr. 3d 171, 229 P.3d 83).

[d] Attempts to Settle Do Not Necessarily Waive Right to Arbitration

In Zamora v. Lehman (2010) 186 Cal. App. 4th 1, 111 Cal. Rptr. 3d 335 , the court of appeal reversed the trial court's finding of no waiver by two defendants who had engaged in delay and discovery, but affirmed the trial court's finding of no waiver by a third who had successfully demurred and otherwise substantively made only settlement efforts. The portion of the decision setting forth the factors for determination of waiver of the right to demand arbitration is treated in Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.80[3][b], below. The portion of the decision discussing unreasonable delay in demanding arbitration is set forth in Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.82[3][a], below. The portion of the decision discussing waiver by use of prejudicial discovery is located at Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.83[4][b], below . The portion of the decision dealing with demurrer as waiver is discussed in [e], below. After ruling the third defendant's demurrer was not inconsistent with the right to arbitrate, the court moved on to the issue of the third defendant's settlement efforts. The court noted that the third defendant's continued those efforts for quite some time, until the opposing halted all settlement discussions. Three weeks later, the third defendant moved to compel arbitration. The court ruled that the third defendant's attempt to settle the action was not inconsistent with the right to arbitrate. More interestingly, it also ruled that those efforts did not result in undue delay. The court then cited caselaw favoring settlement efforts (186 Cal. App. 4th 1, 20) .

[e] Demurrer to Complaint Does Not Necessarily Waive Right to Arbitration

In Zamora v. Lehman (2010) 186 Cal. App. 4th 1, 111 Cal. Rptr. 3d 335 , the court of appeal reversed the trial court's finding of no waiver by two defendants who had engaged in delay and discovery, but affirmed the trial court's finding of no waiver by a third defendant who had successfully demurred and otherwise substantively made only settlement efforts. The portion of the decision covering the factors for determination of waiver of the right to demand arbitration is set forth in Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.80[3][b], below. The portion of the decision discussing unreasonable delay in demanding arbitration is set forth in Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.82[3][a], below. After that, the court briefly addressed the question of whether the third defendant's demurrer on grounds that the complaint lacked specificity or failed to allege the timeliness of the claim. The court noted that the demurrer was successful and not inconsistent with the right to arbitrate (186 Cal. App. 4th 1, 20) . The portion of the decision discussing waiver by use of prejudicial discovery is located at Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.83[4][b], below . The portion of the decision dealing with attempts to settle as waiver is discussed in [d], above.

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Filing of Lawsuit Does Not Necessarily Constitute Waiver of Right to Compel Arbitration

Pacific Inv. Co. v. Townsend (1976) 58 Cal. App. 3d 1, 129 Cal. Rptr. 489 , was an action brought by several limited partners against the general partner and certain of his associates involving various allegations of fraudulent management. The partnership agreement provided that in the event of any disagreement between partners and the limited partnership, or with reference to any of the activities of the general partner that could not be settled or adjudicated properly by the latter, the matter would be arbitrated. After the plaintiffs filed a second amended complaint, the general partner and another defendant petitioned to stay proceedings and compel arbitration. Prior to the trial court's final ruling in denying the petition, defendants stipulated to extensions of a hearing on a temporary restraining order, filed an answer to the complaint for the purpose of a hearing on a preliminary injunction, and noticed depositions. After the ruling, they filed a cross complaint for dissolution and abuse of process, while filing an interim appeal from the order denying a stay (which was treated as an appeal from the order refusing to compel arbitration).

Acknowledging that waiver is ordinarily a question of fact for the trial court, the court of appeal nonetheless reversed the ruling disallowing the general partner from compelling arbitration, stating that the facts below did not justify a finding of waiver. Defendants had raised the arbitration question promptly and in the form provided by law. They could not be faulted for beginning to prepare a defense in the lawsuit prior to a final ruling on their petition to compel arbitration or for continuing to defend after an adverse ruling by the trial court. Plaintiffs suffered no unconscionable injury as a result of defendants' conduct. The court noted, as an example, that the case had not gone all the way to judgment before the arbitration issue was raised (58 Cal. App. 3d 1, 12) .

Schwartz v. Leibel (1967) 249 Cal. App. 2d 761, 57 Cal. Rptr. 831 , involved arbitration of a dispute between partners, one of whom had withdrawn from the partnership and was breaching the noncompetition clause in the partnership agreement. Before respondent initiated arbitration, he commenced a lawsuit for injunctive relief. At the hearing to confirm the arbitration award, appellant claimed respondent had waived the right to arbitrate by initiating the lawsuit. The award was confirmed, and appeal followed.

The court of appeal affirmed. Because injunctive relief was not within the power of the arbitrator, respondent's suit for injunction was not an election of remedies barring arbitration. The two remedies are plainly not exclusive and are in no way inconsistent (249 Cal. App. 2d 761, 763-764) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20 ARBITRATION: COMPELLING
PART II. FORMS
D. Negating Defenses to Arbitration

2-20 California Points & Authorities § 20.82

§ 20.82 Arbitration Provision Is Neither Contract of Adhesion Nor Unconscionable

[1] FORM

PETITIONER, AS A PARTY TO AN ARBITRATION AGREEMENT, IS ENTITLED TO AN ORDER COMPELLING ARBITRATION BECAUSE THE AGREEMENT IS NOT [include all that apply: PROCEDURALLY UNCONSCIONABLE [or] SUBSTANTIVELY UNCONSCIONABLE [or] A CONTRACT OF ADHESION].

A. Contract Containing Arbitration Provision Is Not Adhesion Contract. The contract containing the arbitration provision here at issue is not a contract of adhesion because respondent had both the opportunity to negotiate its terms and the opportunity to look elsewhere for a more favorable contract (Powers v. Dickson, Carlson & Campillo (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 1102, 1110, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 261 ; Spinello v. Amblin Entertainment (1994) 29 Cal. App. 4th 1390, 1396-1398, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 695 ; see also Crippen v. Central Valley RV Outlet, Inc. (2004) 124 Cal. App. 4th 1159, 1166, 22 Cal. Rptr. 3d 189).

[AND/OR]

A. Arbitration Provision Not Shown To Be Contract of Adhesion or Procedurally Unconscionable. The mere fact that an arbitration agreement is part of a form contract that _____ [state party of other designation, e.g., defendant] used with many _____ [state relationship, e.g., customers] does not make it a contract of adhesion and therefore procedurally unconscionable. Procedural unconscionability must be established by evidence; or the relationship of the parties and the contract itself must support an inference that the party seeking to avoid the arbitration provision lacked power to bargain or negotiate or had no meaningful choice, or that the arbitration provision was set in small type or otherwise hidden in a prolix form or involved some surprise or oppression (Crippen v. Central Valley RV Outlet, Inc. (2004) 124 Cal. App. 4th 1159, 1165-1167, 22 Cal. Rptr. 3d 189).

[AND/OR]

A. Arbitration Provision Not Shown To Be Substantively Unconscionable. Substantive unconscionability addresses the fairness of the term in dispute. Substantive unconscionability traditionally involves contract terms that are so one-sided as to shock the conscience, or that impose harsh or oppressive terms (Arguelles-Romero v. Superior Ct. (2010) 184 Cal. App. 4th 825, 843-844, 109 Cal. Rptr. 3d 289).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used in support of a petition to compel arbitration if petitioner anticipates a challenge that the contract containing the arbitration provision is a contract of adhesion or is procedurally unconscionable or is substantively unconscionable.

This form is not intended as a complete memorandum, but should be combined with the memoranda in §§ 20.10, 20.11, and any others applicable to the particular situation.

As a tactical matter, counsel may wish to reserve these points for oral argument or for a reply memorandum. In deciding whether or not to reserve these arguments,counsel should consider local court rules and practice, as well as whether the moving party would be expected to raise these points in initial moving papers, to avoid the possibility of losing the opportunity to raise them.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, the argument should emphasize the negotiations between the parties, or the opportunities for negotiation, and respondent's ability to obtain the service or goods elsewhere. In any event, the argument must address the elements of the specific theory under which the party challenging the enforceability of the arbitration clause is attempting to establish unenforceability. As the courts have noted, see, e.g., Arguelles-Romero v. Superior Ct. (2010) 184 Cal. App. 4th 825, 842, 843, 109 Cal. Rptr. 3d 289 , parties often argue parts of different theories as if they were parts of the same theory, to their detriment.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Memoranda

For a form that addresses the right to compel arbitration under a contract of adhesion if its terms are within the expectations of the weaker party, see § 20.83.

For a form addressing adhesion contract principles in the context of a medical malpractice agreement governed by Code Civ. Proc. § 1295, see § 20.45.

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

For memoranda relating to general contract principles, see Ch. 50, Contracts .

[d] Opposing Memoranda

For a form that may be used in an appropriate case to oppose this form on the ground that a contract is a contract of adhesion and also unconscionable, see Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.91.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Contract Containing Arbitration Provision Is Not Adhesion Contract

Powers v. Dickson, Carlson & Campillo (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 1102, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 261 , was a legal malpractice action arising out of construction defect arbitration. Plaintiffs purchased a luxury home in 1992. They were represented during the purchase by a law firm other than defendant, and commenced arbitration in November, 1992, regarding construction defects. In March, 1993, plaintiffs retained another attorney, who later joined defendant firm. Plaintiffs met with that attorney at his office and signed a four-page "Attorney Retainer and Fee Agreement," which consisted of 12 paragraphs, including an arbitration provision. In July, 1993, that attorney moved to defendant firm. In September, 1993, plaintiffs renegotiated their financial arrangements with defendant from an hourly to a flat fee and signed a "First Amendment to Attorney Retainer and Fee Agreement," which was also four pages long and had an arbitration provision. In 1995, plaintiffs commenced a legal malpractice action against both attorneys. Defendant's motion to compel arbitration was denied on the grounds that the arbitration clause was not in bold or otherwise large or distinct print, that plaintiffs were not specifically informed that they were waiving their right to a jury trial of any malpractice action, and that they were not advised to seek independent counsel to advise them regarding the agreement. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. Noting first that generally, plaintiffs' contentions that they did not carefully read the agreements, did not understand the significance of the arbitration provision, and did not knowingly waive their right to a jury trial may not be used to invalidate a written arbitration provision. So, the court considered whether other matters, such as the contract being a contract of adhesion, would justify a different result (54 Cal. App. 4th 1102, 1109) . The court discussed the characteristics of contracts of adhesion; that they are often standardized contracts drafted by the party with superior bargaining power and that the weaker party lacks not only the opportunity to bargain but also any realistic opportunity to look elsewhere for a more favorable contract, but must adhere to the standardized agreement or forego the needed service. The court of appeal concluded that neither the March, 1993, agreement nor the September, 1993, amendment was a contract of adhesion. Plaintiffs did not enter into a standardized contract on a take it or leave it basis. The retainer agreement and the amendment were negotiated and individualized agreements. Plaintiffs had the freedom to employ the attorney of their choice and bargain for the terms of their choice. Plaintiffs' decision to change counsel and their successful renegotiation of their fee arrangement demonstrate that they possessed substantial bargaining strength (54 Cal. App. 4th 1102, 1110) .

Plaintiff in Spinello v. Amblin Entertainment (1994) 29 Cal. App. 4th 1390, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 695 , sued defendants claiming they had stolen his ideas and were using them for a movie. Plaintiff, who described himself as a motion picture producer, writer, and director with more than 20 years experience in the industry, submitted a script to an Amblin executive, in 1988. The script was returned in January, 1989, with a letter stating Amblin was not interested in it. In February, 1990, plaintiff again submitted thescript to Steven Spielberg at Amblin. Spielberg forwarded it to another Amblin executive, who wrote to plaintiff stating that Amblin would review the script only if plaintiff signed Amblin's standard submission agreement. Plaintiff discussed the submission agreement with his agent, who told him the agreement was standard, and to sign it. The submission agreement contained the arbitration clause. Amblin again rejected the script in April, 1990. Before and after his two submissions to Amblin, plaintiff submitted copies of the same script to about seventy other studios and producers. In April, 1992, when Amblin and Universal Studios released "Small Soldiers," plaintiff sued. Amblin moved to compel arbitration. The trial court denied the motion finding the arbitration clause was both procedurally and substantively unconscionable and thus unenforceable. Amblin appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, stating that the appropriate question was whether the contract was one of adhesion and concluding that it was not (29 Cal. App. 4th 1390, 1397, 1399) . The court of appeal cited cases explaining that in adhesion contracts, the weaker party lacks not only the opportunity to bargain but also any realistic opportunity to look elsewhere for a more favorable contract (29 Cal. App. 4th 1390, 1396-1397) . In this case, however, plaintiff could have asked his agent to request deletion or modification or limitation of the arbitration provision, or he could have done so himself. As he admits, he did not. Plaintiff was not a novice. He had 20 years' experience in the entertainment industry and was represented by a literary agent. He believed he had a valuable property and, therefore, a basis for negotiation (29 Cal. App. 4th 1390, 1397) . Also, he had the opportunity to go elsewhere, which in fact he did, by submitting the script to approximately 70 other producers, at least several of whom did not require execution of submission agreements--a consideration which the court of appeal said showed that this was not an adhesion contract (29 Cal. App. 4th 1390, 1397-1398) .

Crippen v. Central Valley RV Outlet, Inc. (2004) 124 Cal. App. 4th 1159, 22 Cal. Rptr. 3d 189 , is discussed at [b], below.

[b] Arbitration Provision Not Shown to Be Contract of Adhesion or Procedurally Unconscionable

Crippen v. Central Valley RV Outlet, Inc. (2004) 124 Cal. App. 4th 1159, 22 Cal. Rptr. 3d 189 , arose out of the purchase and sale of an allegedly defective used motor home. The purchase contract contained, on a separate page, an arbitration addendum that required all disputes, claims, or controversies arising from or relating to the contract to be resolved by binding arbitration, except that defendant/seller retained the option to foreclose or to use judicial or non-judicial relief to enforce its security agreement. The arbitration addendum also prohibited purchaser from participating in any class action as a representative or class member. The claim that this latter provision violated the anti-waiver provision of the Consumer Legal Remedies Act (Civ. Code § 1751) was raised for the first time on appeal, and the court of appeal declined to consider the issue (124 Cal. App. 4th 1159, 1167 n.1). Plaintiff filed a complaint against defendant alleging fraud, negligence, several statutory causes of action, that the motor home was defective, and that the action was brought on behalf of plaintiff and the general public. The complaint sought rescission, restitution, compensatory and punitive damages, attorney fees, injunctive relief, and restoration of funds to the public.

Defendant moved to compel arbitration. Plaintiff opposed the motion, arguing that the arbitration addendum was procedurally and substantively unconscionable: substantively unconscionable because it gave defendant unilateral rights to sue and deprived plaintiff of the right to participate in class actions against defendant. Plaintiff did not rely on any extrinsic evidence of the circumstances under which the arbitration addendum was executed, but contended that procedural unconscionability could be inferred from the document itself, which it described as a contract of adhesion, and from the nature of the relationship between the parties. The trial court denied the motion, without any reference in its ruling or at the hearing, to evidence of procedural unconscionability. It said only that the arbitration clause was unilateral arbitration and unenforceable because it gave defendant the right to enforce the security agreement or to foreclose on the property in a lawsuit. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed for lack of proof that the arbitration agreement was procedurally unconscionable (124 Cal. App. 4th 1159, 1162, 1168) . The court began its discussion by noting that arbitration must be denied if an arbitration agreement is both procedurally and substantively unconscionable (124 Cal. App. 4th 1159, 1162, 1165) .

While acknowledging that, in some situations, procedural unconscionability can be established simply by examining the written agreement and the nature of the relationship between the parties without the resort to extrinsic evidence, the record contained no extrinsic evidence of procedural unconscionability, and none was inferable from the agreement itself or the relationship between the parties (124 Cal. App. 4th 1159, 1162) . Plaintiff failed to show any procedural unconscionability at all, and did not introduce or rely on any evidence of the circumstances surrounding the execution of the agreement. Thus plaintiff could not show inequality of bargaining power, lack of negotiation, or lack of meaningful choice based on those circumstances.

Plaintiff gave no reason to suppose substantially unequal bargaining power was inherent in his relationship with the seller. Nor did the form of the document itself show procedural unconscionability: it was not set in small type or hidden in a prolix form. It was printed on a separate page, in ordinary type, clearly labeled as an arbitration agreement and signed separately by plaintiff (124 Cal. App. 4th 1159, 1165) . Plaintiff argued that because the agreement was a form contract that defendant used with many customers, it must have been a contract of adhesion and therefore procedurally unconscionable. However, the court said, there is no general rule that a form contract used by a party for many transactions is procedurally unconscionable. There was no reason in this case to conclude that plaintiff lacked power to bargain. In general, nothing prevents purchasers of used vehicles from bargaining with dealers, even though dealers use form contracts, and nothing in the record showed that plaintiff could not bargain in this case (124 Cal. App. 4th 1159, 1166) .

The court distinguished two cases relied on by plaintiff: O'Hare v. Municipal Resource Consultants (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 267, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 116 (O'Hare, discussed at Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.91[3][c] -[e], [i]) and Harper v. Ultimo (2003) 113 Cal. App. 4th 1402, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 418 (Harper, discussed in Ch.20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.91[3][c] and [e]). Procedural unconscionability was inferred in O'Hare because the parties' relationship was that of employer and prospective employee, one in which employees are in weak bargaining positions because of the economic pressure exerted by employers. Nothing resembling that economic pressure was at issue in this case. There is nothing in this buyer-seller relationship from which the court could infer a great disparity of bargaining power. Shopping for a motor home is simply not comparable to seeking employment (124 Cal. App. 4th 1159, 1166) . In Harper, the court based its finding of procedural unconscionability on the surprise and oppression deriving from he fact that the Better Business Bureau arbitration rules were not attached to the agreement, that defendant rejected the plaintiffs' proposals to alter certain other provisions of the contract, and that the Better Business Bureau rules limited plaintiff's recovery to $2,500. Further, that agreement did not say whether the Better Business Bureau rules in effect at the time of signing or the time of arbitration would control, so the customer was almost guaranteed a costly preliminary dispute over what rules would apply. The problems in Harper were far worse than those at issue here, merely being a form contract (124 Cal. App. 4th 1159, 1167) .

[c] Arbitration Provision Not Shown To Be Substantively Unconscionable

In Arguelles-Romero v. Superior Ct. *(2010) 184 Cal. App. 4th 825, 109 Cal. Rptr. 3d 28*9, the court of appeal reversed the trial court's ruling that the class action waiver was not substantively unconscionable. The court noted that substantive unconscionability addresses the fairness of the term in dispute. Substantive unconscionability traditionally involves contract terms that are so one-sided as to shock the conscience, or that impose harsh or oppressive terms. The parties did not raise the trial court's determination that the agreement was a contract of adhesion and, therefore, procedurally unconscionable. On substantive unconscionability, the court ruled that the party challenging the agreement failed to provide any evidence in support of its claim that the class action waiver was substantively unconscionable as an exculpatory contract. That party failed to show that the amounts in controversy were too small to be an incentive for individual actions, and to render class action the only viable remedy, in that the party provided little evidence of what the actual amounts would be in any individual cases (184 Cal. App. 4th 825, 844). While the court found a lack of evidence in support of the theory that the agreement was unenforceable on grounds of unconscionability, and therefore vacated the trial court's order for individual arbitration, it ordered the trial court to consider whether the waiver waives unwaivable statutory rights (184 Cal. App. 4th 825, 845-846) .

99 of 174 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20 ARBITRATION: COMPELLING
PART II. FORMS
D. Negating Defenses to Arbitration

2-20 California Points & Authorities § 20.83

§ 20.83 Arbitration Under Contract of Adhesion

[1] FORM

PETITIONER IS ENTITLED TO ENFORCE THE ARBITRATION AGREEMENT [AND TO A STAY OF ANY PENDING ACTION RELATING TO ARBITRABLE ISSUES] EVEN IF THE AGREEMENT IS CONTAINED WITHIN A CONTRACT OF ADHESION, SO LONG AS THE ARBITRATION AGREEMENT MET THE REASONABLE EXPECTATIONS OF RESPONDENT AND DID NOT LEAD TO LOSS OR UNFAIR IMPOSITION.

A. Arbitration Provision in Adhesion Contract Not Unenforceable If Not Contrary to Expectations of Fairness. Even if a contract containing an arbitration provision is one of adhesion, there is no reason to avoid arbitration if it is not shown that the provision is contrary to the reasonable expectations of the parties or that loss or unfair imposition would result (Keating v. Superior Court (1982) 31 Cal. 3d 584, 594-595, 183 Cal. Rptr. 360, 645 P.2d 1192 (overruled on other grounds in Southland Corp. v. Keating (1984) 465 U.S. 1, 10-11, 104 S. Ct. 852, 79 L. Ed. 2d 1); County of Solano v. Lionsgate Corporation (2005) 126 Cal. App. 4th 741, 24 Cal. Rptr. 3d 362 ; McManus v. CIBC World Markets Corp. (2003) 109 Cal. App. 4th 76, 92-102, 134 Cal. Rptr. 2d 446 ; Fittante v. Palm Springs Motors, Inc. (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 723-724, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 659 ; Painters Dist. Council No. 33 v. Moen (1982) 128 Cal. App. 3d 1032, 1040-1041, 181 Cal. Rptr. 17 ; Frame v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc. (1971) 20 Cal. App. 3d 668, 672, 97 Cal. Rptr. 811).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used in support of a petition to compel arbitration if petitioner anticipates a challenge that the contract containing the arbitration provision is a contract of adhesion when, even though the contract is a contract of adhesion, if it is within the reasonable expectations of the weaker party.

This form is not intended as a complete memorandum, but should be combined with the memoranda in §§ 20.10, 20.11, and any others applicable to the particular situation.

As a tactical matter, counsel may wish to reserve these points for oral argument or for a reply memorandum. In deciding whether or not to reserve these arguments, counsel should consider local court rules and practice, as well as whether the moving party would be expected to raise these points in initial moving papers, to avoid the possibility of losing the opportunity to raise them.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, the argument should explain why the agreement, although contained in a contract of adhesion, is neither unfair nor contrary to respondent's reasonable expectations in providing for arbitration of the controversy.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Memoranda

For a form for use to argue that a contract is not a contract of adhesion, see § 20.82.

For a form addressing adhesion contract principles in the context of a medical malpractice agreement governed by Code Civ. Proc. § 1295, see § 20.45.

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

For memoranda relating to general contract principles, see Ch. 50, Contracts .

[d] Opposing Memoranda

For a form that may be used to oppose this form on the ground that a contract is a contract of adhesion and also unconscionable, see Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.91.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Arbitration Provision in Adhesion Contract Not Unenforceable If Not Contrary to Expectations of Fairness

Keating v. Superior Court (1982) 31 Cal. 3d 584, 183 Cal. Rptr. 360, 645 P.2d 1192 , arose out of a dispute over a franchising agreement. A number of franchises filed actions against the franchisor alleging, among other things, fraud, oral misrepresentation, breach of contract, breach of fiduciary duty, and violation of certain state statutes governing franchise agreements. Each of the franchise agreements at issue contained a clause providing that any controversy or claim arising out of or relating to the agreement must be settled by arbitration in accordance with the Rules of the American Arbitration Association. After the various actions were coordinated, the trial court granted the franchisor's motion to compel arbitration in each of the actions. The franchisees filed a petition for writ of mandate or prohibition seeking relief from the order to arbitrate, arguing, inter alia, that the arbitration provisions were not enforceable because they were contained in an adhesion contract.

The Supreme Court denied the writ. The Court, although accepting the franchisees' characterization of the franchise agreement as an adhesion contract (31 Cal. 3d 584, 593) , concluded that the arbitration provisions contained in the agreement were nevertheless enforceable (31 Cal. 3d 584, 595) . Relying on Graham v. Scissor-Tail, Inc. (1981) 28 Cal. 3d 807, 817-820, 171 Cal. Rptr. 604, 623 P.2d 165 (discussed in Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, §§ 20A.90[3][a] and 20A.91[3][a]), the Court noted that an adhesion contract is fully enforceable according to its terms unless certain other factors are present which operate to render it unenforceable. There are two judicially imposed limitations on enforcement of such contracts. First, such a contract or provision which does not fall within the reasonable expectations of the weaker or adhering party will not be enforced against him. Second, a contract or provision, even if consistent with the reasonable expectations of the parties, will be denied enforcement if, considered in its context, it is unduly oppressive or unconscionable (31 Cal. 3d 584, 594) . The Court held, however, that in the absence of some special element of unfair advantage, arbitration is generally considered to be a mutually advantageous process, providing for resolution of disputes in a presumptively less costly, more expeditious, and more private manner by an impartial person or persons typically selected by the parties themselves. Moreover, the Court noted, provision for arbitration in a commercial context is quite common and reasonably to be expected. The Court further observed that the declaration of one of the franchisees made it clear that he was aware of the provision and that, in such a setting, neither he nor the other franchisees were in a position to claim that the arbitration provision did not fall within their reasonable expectations. For these reasons, the Court held that the arbitration provisions were binding and enforceable (31 Cal. 3d 584, 595) .

If it should be noted that Keating v. Superior Court (1982) 31 Cal. 3d 584, 183 Cal. Rptr. 360, 645 P.2d 1192 , was overruled in part by the United States Supreme Court in Southland Corp. v. Keating (1984) 465 U.S. 1, 104 S. Ct. 852, 79 L. Ed. 2d 1 , which held Corp. Code § 31512 violated the Supremacy Clause of the United States Constitution. The Supreme Court opinion is discussed at § 20.22[3][a].

The facts and procedural background of County of Solano v. Lionsgate Corporation (2005) 126 Cal. App. 4th 741, 24 Cal. Rptr. 3d 362 , and the portion of the opinion addressing the arbitrability of claims under the False Claims Act (Gov. Code § 12650 et seq.) are discussed at § 20.22[3][k]. Lionsgate also argued that the arbitration clause was part of a contract of adhesion, and therefore had to be construed against the County. The court noted that even an arbitration provision in an adhesion contract is legally enforceable if it (1) falls within the reasonable expectations of the weaker party, and (2) is not unduly oppressive or unconscionable. Thus, even if this contract were adhesive, arbitration of the County's claims for compensation related to performance of the contract was within Lionsgate's reasonable expectations and the arbitration clause was neither oppressive nor unconscionable. Lionsgate demonstrated neither procedural nor substantive unconscionability. Thus there was no reason to invalidate the arbitration clause or to construe the clause against the County. The plain terms of the clause bring all claims for contract-related "compensation," as well as "damages," within the scope of arbitration, and as previously noted, the penalties were awarded as a form of "compensation" for administrative expenses occasioned by Lionsgate's bad faith performance of the contract (126 Cal. App. 4th 741, 750) .

McManus v. CIBC World Markets Corp. (2003) 109 Cal. App. 4th 76, 92-102, 134 Cal. Rptr. 2d 446 , involved employment and defamation claims by a plaintiff who had been required as a condition of employment and by state and federal law to sign an arbitration agreement [see 17 C.F.R. § 240.15b7-1; Cal. Code Reg., tit. 10, § 260.210]. Actually, plaintiff had signed two arbitration agreements, one in the letter offering employment with defendant, which specified that all disputes arising out of employment or the termination of employment at defendant, including any statutory claims based on discrimination, would be submitted to and resolved exclusively by a panel of arbitrators from NASD Dispute Resolution, Inc. or the New York Stock Exchange, Inc. The second arbitration agreement was in the Securities Exchange Commission (SEC)-approved Uniform Application for Securities Industry Registration or Transfer ("form U-4"). All applicants must sign the form U-4 agreement to arbitrate as a condition of employment in order to register with NASD and NYSE. After plaintiff filed suit, defendants moved to compel arbitration. Plaintiff opposed the motion on the ground the agreements were unenforceable because they were substantively and procedurally unconscionable under California law. The motion was granted. Plaintiff filed a mandate petition with for writ, pursuant to which the trial court set aside and vacated its order granting the motion to compel arbitration and entered a new order denying the motion to compel arbitration. Thereafter, defendants filed a timely notice of appeal from the order denying the motion to compel arbitration.

The court of appeal reversed (109 Cal. App. 4th 76, 83, 102-103) . The first issue the court addressed was whether California's law of unconscionability was preempted theextent that it conflicts with the federal system of arbitration created by the SEC's adoption of form U-4 and its approval of the NASD and NYSE arbitration rules. Pursuant to its regulatory authority, the SEC has approved the arbitration procedures of NASD and NYSE, although the court noted that the SEC had also approved amendments to the NASD and NYSE arbitration procedures that exempt employment discrimination claims [NASD Code of Arbitration Procedure rule 10201; NYSE Rule 600] (109 Cal. App. 4th 76, 88-89) . The court noted that plaintiff was an experienced businessman, and that there was no evidence he was coerced or defrauded into agreeing to the arbitration clause in his registration application (109 Cal. App. 4th 76, 90) . The court concluded that there was no preemption; that the form U-4 was not unconscionable as a matter of law; and that each case should be considered individually (109 Cal. App. 4th 76, 90-91) . Although the arbitration clauses were procedurally unconscionable in that they were adhesive, that did not as a matter of law render them unenforceable (109 Cal. App. 4th 76, 91) .

Plaintiff argued that the arbitration agreements were substantively unconscionable because (1) there was an unlawful fee allocation scheme; (2) there was no neutral selection of arbitrators but mandatory NASD or NYSE arbitration; (3) with the exception of statutory discrimination claims for which NASD modified its rules, there was no requirement that the arbitrator be a lawyer or judge; (4) there were no discovery rights; (5) the arbitrators were not required to state reasons for the award; and (6) there was no mutual obligation to arbitrate. The court addressed each issue and found only the cost allocation provision to be unconscionable, but held that provision could be severed (109 Cal. App. 4th 76, 93-102) :

- Citing Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Services, Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 107-108, 110-111, 113, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669 (discussed at § 20.23[3][a] and [d]), the court held that it is unlawful to require an employee who is bound by a mandatory employment arbitration agreement to pay the costs of arbitration and that it is an insufficient judicial response to hold that the fees may ultimately be canceled because that poses a significant risk of chilling the exercise of statutory. Here, plaintiff would be obligated to pay a deposit of $500 plus $1,200 per anticipated hearing session. Thus, the fee provision was unenforceable (109 Cal. App. 4th 76, 93) . For discussion of the portion of the opinion considering severance of this fee provision, see § 20.86[3][a].

- Selection of the arbitrators in accordance with the NASD or NYSE arbitration procedures would not be unconscionable. Those rules require pertinent disclosures by proposed arbitrators and give each party one peremptory challenge and unlimited challenges for cause. Further, this agreement provided that the arbitrator and the arbitration provider were subject to standards 4 through 6 of California's Ethics Standards for Neutral Arbitrators in Contractual Arbitration (109 Cal. App. 4th 76, 93-97) .

- Plaintiff's claim that only a lawyer or retired judge could evaluate his statutory wage claims was without authority and without merit (109 Cal. App. 4th 76, 97) .

- The extensive discovery procedures under NASD and NYSE provide for document production, information exchanges, and subpoenas. Further, this arbitration agreement specifically provided that all discovery would be conducted in accordance with California state court procedures, making NASD, Rule 10334(f)(2) inapplicable to this case. No substantive unconscionability finding was warranted on inadequate discovery grounds (109 Cal. App. 4th 76, 97-100) .

- Under both NASD and NYSE rules, the award has to be in writing, accompanied by a statement of reasons or basis of the award, and contain a summary of issues, a description of the award, and a statement of any other issues resolved. In addition, both NASD and NYSE rules require that a verbatim transcript of the proceedings be maintained. Thus there would be no insufficiency with respect to a written award (109 Cal. App. 4th 76, 100) .

- With regard to plaintiff's contention that NASD, rule 10335 was substantively unconscionable because it exempts injunctive relief from the arbitration agreement, and the employer is the party most likely to bring seek such relief, the court disagreed, pointing out other language in the agreements and the rules that made the obligation to arbitrate mutual (109 Cal. App. 4th 76, 100-101) .

The facts and procedural background of Fittante v. Palm Springs Motors, Inc. (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 659 , and the portions of the opinion considering the application of minimum requirements to arbitration of claims under Lab. Code § 970, including the requirement that the employer pay all costs unique to arbitration, are discussed at § 20.23[3][a]. Plaintiff also contended that the arbitration agreement was an unconscionable adhesion contract, and therefore unenforceable. The court of appeal agreed that the contract was adhesive, but, with the exception of one specific term which it found severable, held that the arbitration agreement was not unconscionable (105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 722) . The court said that a contract of adhesion is "a standardized contract, imposed and drafted by the party of superior bargaining strength, which relegates to the subscribing party only the opportunity to adhere to the contract or reject it" (105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 722) . The arbitration agreement here was contained within a standardized employment application, and was presented to plaintiff on a "take it or leave it" basis. The defendant/employer unquestionably had superior bargaining strength, and there was no opportunity to negotiate. Had plaintiff refused to sign the form, his application for employment undoubtedly would not have been considered. The employment application, including the arbitration agreement, meets the definition of an adhesion contract. The fact that a contract is one of adhesion does not, however, affect its enforceability (105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 723) . Rather, an adhesion contract remains fully enforceable unless (1) its provisions fall outside the reasonable expectations of the weaker party, or (2) its provisions are unduly oppressive or unconscionable (105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 723-724) . Plaintiff asserted both that the arbitration agreement was outside the reasonable expectations of a lay employee applicant, and that its terms are unconscionable. Plaintiff claimed that the arbitration agreement is outside the reasonable expectationsof an applicant for employment because it was vague and over broad (105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 724) . Plaintiff argued that the arbitration agreement's exemption for "exclusively monetary claims of less than $5,000" was vague because the term "exclusively monetary claims" was not defined, and no provisions explained whether claims of the same class could, or had to be aggregated. He also suggested that the agreement's provision for arbitration of "any dispute or controversy" requiring or allowing "resort to any court or other governmental dispute resolution forum" could be interpreted to require, e.g., workers' compensation claims or unemployment insurance claims, to be arbitrated (105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 714-715) . Plaintiff based his claim of overbreadth on fact that the agreement covered not only disputes between the employee and the company, but included claims relating to the employer's "owners, directors, and officers, and parties affiliated with its employee benefit and health plans" which "arise from, relate to, or have any relationship or connection whatsoever with" the employee's employment, or any other association with, the employer (105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 715) . The court of appeal did not dwell on plaintiff's claims of vagueness or overbreadth, saying they presented only phantasms in the present context. Plaintiff's claims in the litigation all arose unquestionably out of his employment or application for employment with the defendant/employer. The arbitration agreement presented no issues of vagueness respecting the claims or theories plaintiff had alleged (105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 721) . Similarly, plaintiff's claims here were plainly within matters which could reasonably be expected to be covered by a proper employment arbitration agreement. That some hypothetical claims might be beyond the reasonable expectations of the adhering party is no reason to reject its application to a matter which is clearly within the reasonable expectations of the parties (105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 724) . The portion of the opinion considering unconscionability is discussed at Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.91[3][h].

Painters Dist. Council No. 33 v. Moen (1982) 128 Cal. App. 3d 1032, 181 Cal. Rptr. 17 , involved an appeal from a trial court order confirming an arbitration award rendered in favor of a painters' union against appellant, a small painting contractor, under a collective bargaining agreement. The agreement involved was a standard-form agreement providing for arbitration of disputes. The union clearly possessed superior bargaining strength and the contractor was not in a position to reject the agreement because a nonunion job would probably have been difficult to obtain.

The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's order confirming the award in favor of the union. The court held that although the agreement was an adhesion contract, it was fully enforceable according to its terms because it was neither contrary to the reasonable expectations of the adhering party (the contractor) nor unduly oppressive or unconscionable (128 Cal. App. 3d 1032, 1040) . The court observed that the agreement's procedure for the resolution of disputes provided that the arbitration panel be composed of a joint union-contractor committee with equal representation from both sides. Moreover, the contractor made no showing of any actual bias, unfairness, or misconduct on the part of any of the arbitrators (128 Cal. App. 3d 1032, 1040) . The court stated that a balancing of the conflicting policies of a strong judicial preference for arbitration and an equally strong concern for the rights of consumers, against whom unexpected or oppressive provisions of standardized contracts are sought to be enforced, favored confirmation of the award since the procedure for resolving disputes arising under this particular contract was reasonable and fairly concluded (128 Cal. App. 3d 1032, 1041) .

Frame v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc. (1971) 20 Cal. App. 3d 668, 97 Cal. Rptr. 811 , involved a contract dispute between a former employee and employer. As a condition of employment, plaintiff was required to have been approved by the New York Stock Exchange. The application forms of the Exchange contained an agreement to arbitrate any controversies between the employee and any of the exchange employer members. After the employee sued on the former contract, the trial court denied the employer's petition to require arbitration, and the employer appealed.

In reversing the order denying arbitration, the court of appeal noted that failure to read a contract before signing it is not in itself a reason to refuse its enforcement (20 Cal. App. 3d 668, 671) . Against the contention that the employer could not enforce the arbitration provision because the employer was not a party to it, the court observed that the application containing the arbitration agreement was an indispensable part of the arrangements through which the plaintiff became employed by defendant. It was part of the larger transaction by which they entered into their employment relationship; therefore, there was no lack of mutuality (20 Cal. App. 3d 668, 671-672) . The court recognized that where the bargaining strength of contracting parties is unequal, a contractual provision may be construed to give effect to the reasonable expectations of the weaker party when necessary to avoid injury or unfair imposition, which it is shown would be the result of giving literal effect to the contract terms. In this instance, though, assuming that the contract was adhesory, if it was not shown that arbitration would be contrary to the reasonable expectations of any party or that any loss or unfair imposition would result. Thus, no basis existed to use the doctrine of adhesion contracts to avoid arbitration (20 Cal. App. 3d 668, 672) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Arbitration Provision in Adhesion Contract Not Unenforceable If Not Contrary to Expectations of Fairness

In Izzi v. Mesquite Country Club (1986) 186 Cal. App. 3d 1309, 231 Cal. Rptr. 315 , the court of appeal reversed the trial court's order denying arbitration under a contract claimed to be adhesive in nature. The court of appeal did not find that the contract was adhesive in nature, but noted that an adhesion contract is fully enforceable unless all or part of it falls outside the reasonable expectations of the weaker party or if it is unduly oppressive or unconscionable under applicable principles of equity (186 Cal. App. 3d 1309, 1317) . The court said that even if the contract was an adhesion contract, the arbitration provision was enforceable because its provisions did not appear to conflict with the reasonable expectations of an ordinary person or to be unduly oppressive or unconscionable (186 Cal. App. 3d 1309, 1318) .

In Hope v. Dean Witter Reynolds Organization, Inc. (1986) 181 Cal. App. 3d 446, 226 Cal. Rptr. 439 , plaintiff stockbrokers brought suit against defendant, a member of the New York Stock Exchange, for wrongful termination of employment. In theircontracts of employment, the parties agreed to arbitrate, under the rules of the New York Stock Exchange, any controversy arising out of the employment. Plaintiffs claimed the arbitration provisions were unconscionable.

The court of appeal, while noting that the provisions were adhesive in nature, upheld their enforcement on the grounds that they met the required minimum level of integrity and did not leave plaintiffs without any realistic and fair opportunity to prevail in the arbitration (181 Cal. App. 3d 446, 457-461) . In upholding the validity of the arbitration provisions, the court relied heavily on the fact that the Securities Exchange Commission had approved the arbitration procedures of the Stock Exchange (181 Cal. App. 3d 446, 461) [see Cohen v. Wedbush, Noble, Cooke, Inc. (9th Cir. 1988) 841 F.2d 282, 286 ; see also §§ 20.21, 20.41].

In Bos Material Handling, Inc. v. Crown Controls Corp. (1982) 137 Cal. App. 3d 99, 186 Cal. Rptr. 740 , the court of appeal reversed the trial court's denial of petition to compel arbitration. The court held that the arbitration provision was enforceable even if it was part of a contract of adhesion. However, the court stated that the clauses in the arbitration agreement selecting the state of Ohio as the forum for arbitration and the laws of the state of Ohio as the applicable law might be special elements of unfair advantage rendering those provisions unenforceable. On remand, the court directed the trial court to grant an evidentiary hearing to petitioner to determine whether or not the agreement was adhesive and, if so, whether the Ohio forum comported with the reasonable expectations of the petitioner, or is unduly oppressive (137 Cal. App. 3d 99, 108) .

In Carpenters 46 Northern Cal. Counties Conf. Bd. v. Valentine (1982) 131 Cal. App. 3d 534, 182 Cal. Rptr. 500 , a contractor entered into an agreement with a union to comply with certain provisions concerning wages, hours, and working conditions. The agreement provided for automatic renewal and for arbitration of any disputes arising between the parties. When the contractor failed to meet his obligations under the agreement, the union submitted the problem to the designated arbitrator. The arbitrator found for the union, and the union petitioned the trial court to confirm the arbitrator's award. The contractor contended that the agreement was a contract of adhesion and could not be enforced because it did not fall within his reasonable expectations. The trial court granted the petition, and the contractor appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court said that collective bargaining agreements were not ordinary contracts; however, the court held that assuming that the doctrine in Graham v. Scissor-Tail Inc. (1981) 28 Cal. 3d 807, 171 Cal. Rptr. 604, 623 P.2d 165 , was applicable, the agreement was not contrary to the contractor's reasonable expectations. The court found that automatic renewal provisions were common in the construction industry and that the agreement contained no option to avoid coverage by hiring nonunion labor and stated that a contract giving such an option would make an odd contract (131 Cal. App. 3d 534, 541-542) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20 ARBITRATION: COMPELLING
PART II. FORMS
D. Negating Defenses to Arbitration

2-20 California Points & Authorities § 20.84

§ 20.84 Compulsory Agreement to Arbitrate Employment-Related Disputes Is Enforceable

[1] FORM

THE ARBITRATION AGREEMENT IS ENFORCEABLE AND NOT AGAINST PUBLIC POLICY EVEN THOUGH IT WAS COMPULSORY THAT RESPONDENT SIGN THE AGREEMENT AS A CONDITION OF [CONTINUED] EMPLOYMENT WITH PETITIONER.

A. Compulsory Arbitration Agreement Covering Employment-Related Disputes. Neither California law nor public policy is offended by requiring an employee to waive his or her right to a jury trial as a condition of employment (Lagatree v. Luce, Howard, Hamilton & Scripps (1999) 74 Cal. App. 4th 1105, 1127-1128, 88 Cal. Rptr. 2d 664). Nor does the compulsory nature of such a predispute arbitration agreement render the agreement unenforceable on the grounds of coercion or for lack of voluntariness (Lagatree v. Luce, Howard, Hamilton & Scripps (1999) 74 Cal. App. 4th 1105, 1129, 88 Cal. Rptr. 2d 664 ; see also Craig v. Brown & Root, Inc. (2000) 84 Cal. App. 4th 416, 422, 100 Cal. Rptr. 2d. 818 ; IBEW, AFL-CIO Local 1245 v. Citizens Telcoms. Co. (9th Cir. 2008) 549 F.3d 781, 788 ; accord EEOC v. Luce, Forward, Hamilton & Scripps (9th Cir. 2003) 345 F.3d 742, 752-754 (rehearing en banc) (with respect to federal statutory claims under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and 1991)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of a petition to compel arbitration to anticipate the objection that the arbitration clause at issue was required of respondent employee as a condition of employment. There was a bill introduced in the 1999-2000 Session of the California Legislature, Assembly Bill No. 858, which would have prohibited employers from requesting or requiring employees to enter into a predispute arbitration agreement. Although that bill did not pass, and case law since that time has consistently upheld mandatory arbitration agreements as a condition of employment, counsel may wish to check to see if similar legislation has been introduced before using this form.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in support of a petition to compel arbitration [see § 20.10]. Counsel may wish to incorporate other authorities, perhaps most appropriately those from § 20.83, which set forth the general rule that an arbitration clause in an adhesion contract is not unenforceable simply because the contract is one of adhesion, those from § 20.23, which set forth the minimum procedural safeguards required in an arbitration program that will address discrimination claims under California's Fair Housing and Employment Act (Gov. Code § 12900 et seq., or any from § 20.21 or 20.22 with respect to a particular statutory claim that is involved).

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form, and in the other forms combined with this form, with the facts of his or her case. For example, a copy of thearbitration agreement should be attached as an exhibit to the memorandum.

Although the issue addressed by this form is mainly one of law, there may be other issues with regard to which counsel will wish to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For forms of petition to compel arbitration and responses to them, as well as a procedural checklist, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 32, Contractual Arbitration: Agreements and Compelling Arbitration (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For memoranda to combine with this form, regarding other matters that the papers in support of the petition may need to address, see §§ 20.10 et seq., 20.30 et seq., 20.40 et seq., 20.60 et seq., and 20.80 et seq.

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

For memoranda addressing general contract principles, see Ch. 50, Contracts .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Compulsory Arbitration Agreement Covering Employment-Related Disputes

Lagatree v. Luce, Howard, Hamilton & Scripps (1999) 74 Cal. App. 4th 1105, 88 Cal. Rptr. 2d 664 , represents consolidated appeals from judgments in two suits by the same plaintiff against two former employers, each of which had terminated plaintiff's employment because plaintiff refused to sign an agreement to arbitrate all work-related disputes. Plaintiff had worked for one defendant for several years when, in 1997 that defendant presented him with an agreement to arbitrate any work-related disputes. He refused to sign the agreement and was summarily dismissed. After several months, plaintiff found work with the second defendant, which, on the first day of plaintiff's employment, asked him to sign an agreement to arbitrate all work related disputes. Plaintiff refused to sign the agreement and was told that the agreement was not negotiable and he would be fired if he did not sign it. Plaintiff declined to sign the agreement and was discharged. Plaintiff sued both defendants for wrongful termination in violation of public policy, specifically, for firing him for refusing to waive his constitutional rights to a jury trial and judicial forum, and on other grounds. The defendants demurred and the demurrers were sustained without leave to amend. Plaintiff appealed the dismissals.

The court of appeal affirmed. Based in part on Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373 , the court found that neither California law nor public policy is offended by requiring an employee to waive his or her right to a jury trial as a condition of employment. The right to a jury trial, although granted by the Constitution, can be waived, even when that waiver is required as a condition of employment. No substantial public policy requires a contrary result (74 Cal. App. 4th 1105, 1127-1128) . Even if the arbitration agreements were contracts of adhesion, the compulsory nature of the predispute arbitration agreement did not render it unenforceable on the grounds of coercion or for lack of voluntariness (74 Cal. App. 4th 1105, 1129-1130) . Also, an agreement that required the losing party to pay the entire cost of arbitration, was not unenforceable as against public policy, at least as of June 1997. The court was careful to point out that the public policy issue was determined as of the time plaintiff was terminated in 1997 (74 Cal. App. 4th 1105, 1131, 1136) . The court also held that predispute arbitration clauses imposed as a condition of employment do not constitute an invalid exculpatory clause (74 Cal. App. 4th 1105, 1136) .

The facts and procedural background of Craig v. Brown & Root, Inc. (2000) 84 Cal. App. 4th 416, 100 Cal. Rptr. 2d. 818 are discussed at § 20.10[3][a]. The portion of the opinion addressing unconscionability is discussed at § 20.23[3][a]. In upholding the agreement, the court of appeal attributed to Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Services, Inc . (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 91, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669 the holding that mandatory employment arbitration agreements are enforceable if the arbitration permits the employees to vindicate their statutory rights (84 Cal. App. 4th 416, 422) .

IBEW, AFL-CIO Local 1245 v. Citizens Telcoms. Co. (9th Cir. 2008) 549 F.3d 781 , affirmed the district court's order granting a labor union's petition under the Labor Management Relations Act, 29 U.S.C. § 185, to compel arbitration of a grievance over the employer's cancellation of certain medical benefits for retirees. The court rejected the employer's argument that a consent rule should apply, whereby the union must obtain the consent of retirees before arbitrating claims concerning their benefits (549 F.3d 781, 788) .

EEOC v. Luce, Forward, Hamilton & Scripps (9th Cir. 2003) 345 F.3d 742 was the opinion on rehearing en banc of EEOC v. Luce, Forward, Hamilton & Scripps (9th Cir. 2003) 303 F.3d 994 , and is discussed at § 20.21[3][f]. The case was decided in the context of an EEOC action to challenge an employer's practice of requiring prospective employees to sign arbitration agreements which covered all claims arising from employment, including claims under several specific federal statutes. The district court believed the agreements to be prohibited as to claims under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act (42 U.S.C. §§ 1981a, 2000e et seq.). The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals reversed, holding that § 118 of the 1991 Act specifically approves of arbitration as a forum for vindicating Title VII claims (345 F.3d 742, 752-754) .

101 of 174 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20 ARBITRATION: COMPELLING
PART II. FORMS
D. Negating Defenses to Arbitration

2-20 California Points & Authorities § 20.85

§ 20.85 Respondent Must Disprove Existence of Agreement to Arbitrate

[1] FORM

RESPONDENT HAS NOT DISPROVED THE VALIDITY AND/OR ENFORCEABILITY OF THE ARBITRATION AGREEMENT.

[Optional] A. Respondent Failed to Disprove Existence or Enforceability of Arbitration Agreement. The party seeking to compel arbitration does not have to introduce the agreement into evidence or provide the court with anything more than a copy or recitation of its terms. Under California Rules of Court, Rule 3.1330, petitioner need only allege the existence of an agreement and support the allegation as provided in Rule 3.1330. Once the petitioners [have] alleged that the agreement exists, the burden shifts to respondent to prove the falsity of the purported agreement (Condee v. Longwood Management Corp (2001) 88 Cal. App. 4th 215, 219, 105 Cal. Rptr. 2d 597).

[Optional] B. Respondent Failed to Bear Burden of Showing Not All Necessary Parties Signed Arbitration Agreement. Where respondent alleges that an arbitration agreement is not binding on any signatory until it is signed by all because it was conditioned upon execution by all parties, the signatory resisting enforcement of the agreement must affirmatively establish that the signatures of all parties were contemplated as being a condition precedent to the validity of the agreement (Fagelbaum & Heller LLP v. Smylie (2009) 174 Cal. App. 4th 1351, 1365, 95 Cal. Rptr. 3d 252).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a petition to compel arbitration when the person resisting arbitration has some objection to the agreement to arbitrate, such as a claim that it was not properly authenticated, but has not introduced any evidence to support that objection. By changing "Failed to" in the title of Paragraph A to "Must" the authority may be used to anticipate a lack of evidence. Note, however, that it is fatal to fail to allege the existence of an agreement to arbitrate [see Brodke v. Alphatec Spine, Inc. (2008) 160 Cal. App. 4th 1569, 1574-1577, 73 Cal. Rptr. 3d 554 (discussed at § 20A.10[3][i]).

This form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in support of compelling arbitration, either alone [see § 20.10] or combined with a motion to stay an action [see § 20.11].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should show that petitioner complied with Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1330 and that respondent has produced no declaration, document, or other evidence to support it's claim that the agreement is not valid or enforceable.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Memoranda

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[d] Opposing Memoranda

This memorandum may be opposed by any of the applicable authorities in § 20A.10, which contains optional paragraphs for most of the common defects in proof of an arbitration agreement.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Respondent Failed to Disprove Existence or Enforceability of Arbitration Agreement

The plaintiff in Condee v. Longwood Management Corp. (2001) 88 Cal. App. 4th 215, 105 Cal. Rptr. 2d 597 sued the residential care facility in which her brother suffered a fatal fall. When he was admitted to the facility, plaintiff signed the agreement for him which required him to arbitrate any disputes with the facility including actions for injury or death arising from facility's negligence. Plaintiff brought a wrongful death action alleging general negligence, negligent supervision, premises liability and medical malpractice. The trial court denied the petition to compel arbitration, finding the alleged arbitration agreement was not properly authenticated, and denying Longwood's proffer of a declaration of its custodian of records to authenticate the agreement. Defendants appealed from the denial of their petitions to compel arbitration.

The court of appeal reversed, finding that although no evidence was ever introduced to verify the signature's authenticity, it was never challenged. Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2 does not require the petitioner to introduce the arbitration agreement into evidence. A plain reading of that statute indicates that as a preliminary matter the court is only required to make a finding of the agreement's existence, not an evidentiary determination of its validity. The foregoing conclusion is bolstered by former Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 371 [see now Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1330], which only requires a petitioner to attach a copy of the agreement to the petition or to state its provisions relating to arbitration. Former Rule 371 [see now Rule 3.1330] does not require the petitioner to introduce the agreement into evidence or provide the court with anything more than a copy or recitation of its terms. Petitioner need only allege the existence of an agreement and support the allegation as provided in former Rule 371 [see now Rule 3.1330]. Defendants met this requirement. Once the petitioners had alleged that the agreement exists, the burden shifted to respondent to prove the falsity of the purported agreement (88 Cal. App. 4th 215, 219) . Once a court decides an agreement exists, it must hear and rule on any objections. Thus, it was error for the trial court to deny the petition to arbitrate on the grounds the agreement was not properly authenticated. The court of appeal remanded to permit the trial court to consider the other objections raised to the enforcement of the agreement (88 Cal. App. 4th 215, 219) .

[b] Respondent Failed to Bear Burden of Showing Not All Necessary Parties Signed Arbitration Agreement

In Fagelbaum & Heller LLP v. Smylie (2009) 174 Cal. App. 4th 1351, 95 Cal. Rptr. 3d 252 , respondent alleged that the agreement to arbitrate fees and costs was unenforceable, because it was not signed by all parties. Respondent cited the rule that where the evidence shows that an arbitration agreement was conditioned upon execution by all parties, the contract is not binding on any signatory until it is signed by all. The court noted that contrary to respondent's contention, the signatory resisting enforcement of the agreement must affirmatively establish that the signatures of all parties were contemplated as being a condition precedent to the validity of the agreement (174 Cal. App. 4th 1351, 1365) . However, respondent cited no evidence in support of the contention that all four parties to the agreement were required to sign it, in order for it to bind respondent, and the court noted that the terms of the agreement stated that each signatory was bound individually, thereby disproving respondent's claim (174 Cal. App. 4th 1351, 1365) . After disagreeing with respondent's interpretation of other language of the agreement in furtherance of respondent's argument, the court ruled that respondent failed to sustain the burden of showing that he was not bound by the agreement (174 Cal. App. 4th 1351, 1366) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20 ARBITRATION: COMPELLING
PART II. FORMS
D. Negating Defenses to Arbitration

2-20 California Points & Authorities § 20.86

§ 20.86 Agreement May Be Enforced With Unconscionable Provision(s) Severed

[1] FORM

THE COURT HAS THE AUTHORITY TO COMPEL ARBITRATION UNDER THE AGREEMENT WHILE REFUSING ENFORCEMENT OF THE UNCONSCIONABLE [_____ (specify, if desired, e.g., FORUM SELECTION)] CLAUSE.

A. The Arbitration Agreement Can Be Enforced Without Unconscionable Clause, Which Is Severable. When a single, severable provision in an arbitration agreement is unconscionable, the court has the power, under Code Civil Procedure § 1670.5 to sever the unconscionable clause [_____ (include any specificity desired, e.g., such as the venue provision in this case,)] and enforce the remainder of the agreement requiring arbitration (Little v. Auto Stiegler, Inc. (2003) 29 Cal. 4th 1064, 1082-1083, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 892, 63 P.3d 979 ; Gutierrez v. Autowest, Inc. (2004) 114 Cal. App. 4th 77, 92-93, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 267 ; McManus v. CIBC World Markets Corp. (2003) 109 Cal. App. 4th 76, 101, 134 Cal. Rptr. 2d 446 ; Fittante v. Palm Springs Motors, Inc. (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 725-727, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 659 ; Bolter v. Superior Court (Harris Research, Inc.) (2001) 87 Cal. App. 4th 900, 909-911, 104 Cal. Rptr. 2d 888).

[Optional] B. Factors Supporting Severance. Severance of a single illegal or unconscionable provision prevents the parties from gaining an undeserved benefit or suffering an undeserved detriment as a result of voiding the entire agreement, [particularly when there has been full or partial performance of the contract]. Also, severance conserves a contractual relationship if to do so would not condone an illegal scheme. If the illegality or unconscionability is collateral to the main purpose of the contract, and the illegal or unconscionable provision can be extirpated from the contract by means of severance or restriction, then severance and restriction are appropriate (Little v. Auto Stiegler, Inc. (2003) 29 Cal. 4th 1064, 1080, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 892, 63 P.3d 979 ; Gutierrez v. Autowest, Inc. (2004) 114 Cal. App. 4th 77, 92-93, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 267 ; McManus v. CIBC World Markets Corp. (2003) 109 Cal. App. 4th 76, 101-103, 134 Cal. Rptr. 2d 446 ; Fittante v. Palm Springs Motors, Inc. (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 726, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 659).

[Optional] C. Provision for Arbitral Review May Be Severed. A provision for review of an arbitration award exceeding a specified sum by a second arbitrator, while in practice, may likely be invoked only by _____ [specify party and/or status, e.g., defendant/employer], is not central to the implementation of the arbitration agreement and should be severed. Severance of that single provision will not interfere with the main purpose of the arbitration agreement and will allow the parties retain the other benefits of the arbitration agreement (Little v. Auto Stiegler, Inc. (2003) 29 Cal. 4th 1064, 1082-1083, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 892, 63 P.3d 979 ; Fittante v. Palm Springs Motors, Inc. (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 725-727, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 659).

[Optional] D. Provision Requiring Employee to Pay Arbitration Costs May Be Severed. When the only substantively unconscionable part of an arbitration agreement, [signed as a requirement of employment], is a provision requiring the employee to pay certain costs of arbitration, the cost provision can be severed from the arbitration agreement and the remainder of the agreement enforced (McManus v. CIBC World Markets Corp. (2003) 109 Cal. App. 4th 76, 101-103, 134 Cal. Rptr. 2d 446).

[Optional] E. Provision Requiring Consumer to Pay Unaffordable Fees to Initiate Arbitration Process. When the only substantively unconscionable part of an arbitration agreement [under which a consumer seeks to vindicate unwaivable statutory rights] is a provision requiring the consumer to pay unaffordable fees in order to initiate the arbitration the court should consider severing that provision and enforcing the remainder of the arbitration agreement, [and if necessary, impose an implied agreement that no unaffordable arbitration fees will allocated to the consumer at any in point in the arbitration process] (Gutierrez v. Autowest (2004) 114 Cal. App. 4th 77, 92-93, 96, 98-99, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 267).

[Optional] F. Severance of Class Arbitration Waiver Is Appropriate. Severance is particularly appropriate in the case of class arbitration waivers because, unlike limitations on remedies or other limitations that are invalid on their face, class arbitration waivers will only be invalidated after the proper factual showing (Gentry v. Superior Court (Circuit City Stores, Inc.) (2007) 42 Cal. 4th 443, 466, 64 Cal. Rptr. 3d 773, 165 P.3d 556).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a petition to compel arbitration when petitioner anticipates that some portion of the arbitration agreement may prove unconscionable to remind the court of its authority to sever the unconscionable provision and enforce the rest of the agreement. Optional Paragraph B may be used to buttress the argument for severance in general. Optional Paragraph C could be used if counsel were fairly sure (or even willing to concede) that a provision for review of the arbitration award would be held unconscionable to support the argument for its severance. Optional Paragraph D is for use when it is a provision regarding the costs of arbitration that is unconscionable and counsel wishes to have severed. Alternatively, an unenforceable cost provision can be interpreted to require the employer to pay the costs of the arbitral forum, as provided in the authority at § 20.23[1], Optional Paragraph D, which counsel may wish to incorporate in his or her memorandum.

Optional Paragraph E is for use when the cost provision sought to be severed is in a consumer contract rather than one between and employer and employee, in which case counsel may also wish to include the authority in § 20.23[1], Optional Paragraph J. Optional Paragraph F is to argue for severance of a class arbitration prohibition or waiver.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in support of compelling arbitration, either alone [see § 20.10] or combined with a motion to stay an action [see § 20.11].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should argue that to refuse enforcement to the entire agreement would be contrary to the parties' intention to resolve their conflicts through arbitration and would amount to "throwing the baby out with the bath water."

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Memoranda

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[d] Opposing Memoranda

For a memorandum addressing the characteristics of and tests for unconscionability in general, as well as authorities addressing instances in, and reason for which unconscionable provisions have been held not to be severable, see Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.91.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] The Arbitration Agreement Can Be Enforced Without Unconscionable Clause, Which Is Severable

The facts and procedural background of Little v. Auto Stiegler, Inc. (2003) 29 Cal. 4th 1064, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 892, 63 P.3d 979 , and the portions of the opinion considering the application of minimum requirements to arbitration of nonstatutory, but unwaivable claims, including the continued viability, in light of Green Tree Financial Corp. v. Randolph (2000) 531 U.S. 79, 121 S. Ct. 513, 148 L. Ed. 2d 373 , of requiring an employer in those cases to pay all costs unique to arbitration, are discussed at § 20.23[3][a] and [d]. The portion of the opinion discussing unconscionability in general and the unconscionability of the provision for arbitral review, is discussed in Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.91[3][h]. For convenience, the arbitral review provision is set forth here. The arbitration agreement provided in part that "awards exceeding $50,000.00 shall include the arbitrator's written reasoned opinion and, at either party's written request within 20 days after issuance of the award, shall be subject to reversal and remand, modification, or reduction following review of the record and arguments of the parties by a second arbitrator who shall, as far as practicable, proceed according to the law and procedures applicable to appellate review by the California Court of Appeal of a civil judgment following court trial." Plaintiff contended this provision was unconscionable. The Supreme Court unanimously agreed that it was unconscionable (29 Cal. 4th 1064, 1072, 1079) , but found it should be severed (29 Cal. 4th 1064, 1083) .

The Court began its consideration of the severance issue by reviewing the principles regarding the severance of illegal terms from an arbitration agreement. There are two reasons for severing illegal terms rather than voiding the entire contract. First, severance prevents parties from gaining undeserved benefit or suffering undeserved detriment as a result of voiding the entire agreement particularly when there has been full or partial performance of the contract. Second, the doctrine of severance attempts to conserve a contractual relationship if to do so would not condone an illegal scheme. If the central purpose of the contract is tainted with illegality, then the contract as a whole cannot be enforced. If the illegality is collateral to the main purpose of the contract, and the illegal provision can be extirpated from the contract by means of severance or restriction, then severance and restriction are appropriate (29 Cal. 4th 1064, 1080) . In the context of arbitration agreements, severance will not be appropriate if the agreement contains more than one unlawful provision or lacks mutuality. Multiple defects indicate a systematic effort to impose arbitration on the weaker party not simply as an alternative to litigation, but as an inferior forum that works to the stronger party's advantage. When an agreement lacks mutuality, there is no single provision a court can strike or restrict in order to remove the unconscionable taint from the agreement. Rather, the court would have to reform the contract by augmenting it with additional terms, which is not authorized by either Civ. Code § 1670.5 (unconscionability) or Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2 (enforcement of arbitration agreements) (29 Cal. 4th 1064, 1081) . Nor do courts have any inherent power to reform contracts. Neither problem existed here: there was only a single unconscionable provision, and the contract would not need to be reformed if that provision was severed (29 Cal. 4th 1064, 1082) . The Court considered the argument by amicus curiae for plaintiff that incorporation of legal formalities into the arbitration agreement--its mandate that the rules of pleading and evidence be observed, that the arbitrator only rely on governing law and not informal principles of "just cause," and that traditional judicial motions such as demur and summary judgment be available to the parties--were unenforceable. The Court said there was nothing unconscionably one-sided in those provisions (29 Cal. 4th 1064, 1082) [compare Crowell v. Downey Community Hospital Foundation (2002) 95 Cal. App. 4th 730, 731, 748-749, 115 Cal.Rptr. 2d 810 (discussed in Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.96[3][a], legal formalities rendering arbitration agreement unenforceable)]. The Court also mentioned that it found no bad faith in defendant's inclusion of the arbitral review provision. Despite appellate courts' refusal to enforce similar provisions in Beynon v. Garden Grove Medical Group (1980) 100 Cal. App. 3d 698, 161 Cal. Rptr. 146 (discussed in Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.64[3][a]) and Saika v. Gold (1996) 49 Cal. App. 4th 1074, 56 Cal. Rptr. 2d 922 (discussed in Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.64[3][a]), the law was not so settled as to infer bad faith. The Court therefore concluded that the arbitration agreement was valid and enforceable once the unconscionable appellate arbitration provision was deleted (29 Cal. 4th 1064, 1083) .

The facts and procedural background of Gutierrez v. Autowest, Inc. (2004) 114 Cal. App. 4th 77, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 267 are discussed in § 20.23[3][h]. The court considered the arbitration agreement to impose two classes of fees: those that had to be paid before any hearing was held and those imposed only after an arbitrator had exercised discretion to allocate them to a party (114 Cal. App. 4th 77, 90) , and considered them separately. Finding that unaffordable fees the consumer must pay to initiate the process of arbitration of unwaivable rights are unconscionable, the court of appeal instructed the trial court to consider severing the provision requiring the consumer to post the administrative fee and enforce the remainder of the agreement (114 Cal. App. 4th 77, 98-99) . The portion of the opinion addressing the implied agreement to allocate costs is discussed in § 20.23[3][j]. The court of appeal disagreed with the trial court's determination that it could not sever the cost provision even if that were the only unconscionable provision. Civ. Code § 1670.5(a) provides authority for a court to sever or limit the application of a single unconscionable clause and enforce the remainder of the contract. The court quoted from Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Services, Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 124, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669 (Armendariz) that the court should look to the various purposes of the contract. If the central purpose of the contract is illegal, the contract cannot be enforced. But if the illegality is collateral to the main purpose of the contract, the illegal clause can be severed. Because the cost provision was collateral to the main purpose of the arbitration provision, which was to establish the method for resolving any disputes, it could be severed (114 Cal. App. 4th 77, 92) . Because the plaintiffs did not argue that any provision of the agreement other than the cost provision was unconscionable, they had waived any argument that multiple defects prevent severance. The court of appeal reiterated from Armendariz that a single unconscionable provision is unseverable only if it was drafted in bad faith, and directed the trial court on remand to determine whether the provision requiring the plaintiffs to pay substantial administrative fees was drafted in bad faith, and then, exercise its discretion to sever the provision or not (114 Cal. App. 4th 77, 93) .

The facts and the procedural background of McManus v. CIBC World Markets Corp. (2003) 109 Cal. App. 4th 76, 134 Cal. Rptr. 2d 446 , and the portion of the opinion addressing the enforceability of the arbitration provisions, are discussed at § 20.83[3][a]. The court noted, citing Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Services, Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 107-108, 110-111, 113, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669 (discussed at § 20.23[3][a] and [d]), that it is unlawful to require an employee who is bound by a mandatory employment arbitration agreement to pay the costs of arbitration and that it is an insufficient judicial response to hold that the fees may ultimately be canceled because that poses a significant risk of chilling the exercise of statutory. Here, plaintiff would be obligated to pay a deposit of $500 plus $1,200 per anticipated hearing session. Thus, the fee provision was unenforceable (109 Cal. App. 4th 76, 93) . Considering severance of the unconscionable costs provision, the court of appeal noted that an agreement to arbitrate may be enforced if the unconscionable provisions can be severed from the agreement. The overreaching inquiry in such cases is whether the interests of justice will be furthered by severance. Courts look to the purposes of the contract. If the central purpose of the contract is tainted with illegality, then the contract as a whole cannot be enforced. If the illegality is collateral to the main purpose of the contract, severance is appropriate (109 Cal. App. 4th 76, 101) . Although the arbitration provision here was procedurally unconscionable because plaintiff was required to execute it as a condition of employment, the arbitration agreement was mandated by federal and state law (109 Cal. App. 4th 76, 101) . The only substantively unconscionable portion of the agreement at the time of execution was the provision that plaintiff be required to pay prohibited costs (109 Cal. App. 4th 76, 101-102) . Thus, the arbitration agreement was not so "permeated" with unconscionable provisions that it could not be saved. The court ordered that the unconscionable provision requiring payment of the fees be severed from the arbitration agreement and the remainder of the agreement enforced (109 Cal. App. 4th 76, 102-103) .

The facts and procedural background of Fittante v. Palm Springs Motors, Inc. (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 659 , and the portions of the opinion considering the application of minimum requirements to arbitration of claims under Lab. Code § 970, including the requirement that the employer pay all costs unique to arbitration, are discussed at § 20.23[3][a]. The portion of the opinion discussing unconscionability in general and the unconscionability of the appeal provision is discussed in Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.91[3][h]. For convenience, the appeal provision is set forth here. It provided that "at either party's request, awards exceeding $50,000.00 shall be subject to reversal, modification, or reduction following review of the record and arguments of the parties by a second arbitrator who shall, as far as practicable, proceed according to the law and procedures applicable to appellate review by the California Court of Appeal of a civil judgment following court trial" (105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 722-723) . The court of appeal found this appeal provision unconscionable (105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 724) , but found it could be severed and the remainder of the agreement given effect (105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 725-727) . The court of appeal set forth part of Civ. Code § 1670.5(a): If the court as a matter of law finds the contract or any clause of the contract to have been unconscionable at the time it was made the court may refuse to enforce the contract, or it may enforce the remainder of the contract without the unconscionable clause, or it may so limit the application of any unconscionable clause as to avoid any unconscionable result. There are two reasons for severing illegal terms rather than voiding the entire contract (105 Cal. App.4th 708, 725) . First, it prevents parties from gaining undeserved benefit or suffering undeserved detriment as a result of voiding the entire agreement, particularly when there has been full or partial performance of the contract. Second, the doctrine of severance attempts to conserve a contractual relationship if to do so would not be condoning an illegal scheme. Both these policies are better served here by severance, rather than invalidation of the entire agreement (105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 726) . The balance of the provisions in the arbitration agreement were not unduly one-sided, so as to betray merely a desire to maximize advantage to the employer at the expense of the employee. Both parties were bound to the same rules, procedures, limits, advantages and disadvantages of arbitration generally. The appeal clause affects only a post-award proceeding, not the general conduct of the arbitration itself. The court held the appeal clause to be severable from the remainder of the arbitration agreement (105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 727) .

Plaintiffs in Bolter v. Superior Court (Harris Research, Inc.) (2001) 87 Cal. App. 4th 900, 104 Cal. Rptr. 2d 888 , were franchisees of defendant's "Chem-Dry" dry cleaning franchises. When they entered into their franchise agreements, defendant was headquartered in California. Later, headquarters moved to Utah and the agreements were modified to require arbitration of any disputes in Utah. The American Arbitration Association in Salt Lake City believed it had the authority to have an arbitrator determine the issue of arbitrability. Petitioners applied for a temporary restraining order and OSC in the trial court, seeking to stay the arbitration proceedings. Respondent filed a motion to stay the lawsuit pending resolution of the arbitration. The trial court stayed the arbitration until it could hold hearings to determine whether arbitration should be compelled, and if so, where. On April 18, 2000, the court issued an order granting the motion to compel arbitration in Utah and dismissing the case. The court found that "The arbitration provisions in the franchise agreements, even if adhesive, are not unconscionable and do not impose an unreasonable burden on [petitioners]." Petitioners filed a writ petition, and the court of appeal temporarily stayed the arbitration proceedings.

The court of appeal issued a writ directing the superior court to issue a new order striking the unconscionable clauses delineated and dissolved its previous stay order. The court reiterated that arbitration agreements are not subject to a different standard than other contracts. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1670.5, if a contract, or clause of a contract, is unconscionable, the court may refuse to enforce it (87 Cal. App. 4th 900, 909) . The court set forth the characteristics of unconscionability, and noted that while courts have defined the substantive element in various ways, it traditionally involves contract terms that are so one-sided as to "shock the conscience," or that impose harsh or oppressive terms. In order to assess the reasonableness of this contract's "place and manner" restrictions, the respective circumstances of the parties become relevant. Respondent is a large international corporation and petitioners are small "Mom and Pop" franchisees located in California. Under the circumstances, the "place and manner" terms are unduly oppressive: the agreement requires franchisees wishing to resolve any dispute to close down their shops, pay for airfare and accommodations in Utah, and absorb the increased costs associated in having counsel familiar with Utah law (87 Cal. App. 4th 900, 910) . To rub salt in the wound, the agreement provides franchisees are precluded from consolidating arbitrations to share these increased costs among themselves. The potential to recoup expenses with a favorable verdict is limited by the restriction against exemplary or punitive damages. Although finding the "place and manner" provisions unconscionable, the court disagreed with petitioners that the agreement as a whole was unenforceable. That would be throwing the baby out with the bath water, the court said. Instead, the unconscionable provisions can be severed and the rest of the agreement enforced (87 Cal. App. 4th 900, 910-911) .

[b] Severance of Class Arbitration Waiver Is Appropriate

The facts and procedural background of Gentry v. Superior Court (Circuit City Stores, Inc.) (2007) 42 Cal. 4th 443, 64 Cal. Rptr. 3d 773, 165 P.3d 556 , are discussed in Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.22[3][d]. For the guidance of the trial court on remand, the Supreme Court noted that if the trial court invalidated the class arbitration waiver on public policy grounds and did not invalidate the arbitration agreement altogether for unconscionability, the parties could proceed to class arbitration or, if they wished, have the matter brought in court. The Court then added that severance is particularly appropriate in the case of class arbitration waivers because, unlike limitations on remedies or other limitations that are invalid on their face, class arbitration waivers will only be invalidated after the proper factual showing. The presence of a class arbitration waiver in an employee arbitration agreement therefore does not by itself indicate a systematic effort to impose arbitration on an employee not simply as an alternative to litigation, but as an inferior forum that works to the employer's advantage (42 Cal. 4th 443, 466) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Provision for Arbitral Review May Be Severed

The court of appeal in Finley v. Saturn of Roseville (2004) 117 Cal. App. 4th 1253 , reversed a wrongful termination award and judgment for defendant on the ground that it had no jurisdiction to entertain a motion for arbitral review before a second arbitrator. The determination whether plaintiff's request for that review was untimely should have been heard by the second arbitrator (117 Cal. App. 4th 1253, 1260) . The arbitration agreement provided that any award in excess of $50,000 could be reviewed by a second arbitrator at the option of either party who so requested within 10 days of the issuance of the award. The unpublished portion of the opinion noted that the initial arbitrator struck the $50,000 cap and ruled that either party could request review of an award of any amount. The court of appeal's only mention of the $50,000 cap in the published portion of the opinion was to say in its introduction that in the unpublished portion of the opinion, it concluded that plaintiff was not harmed by an unenforceable provision of the arbitration agreement (117 Cal. App. 4th 1253, 1255) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20 ARBITRATION: COMPELLING
PART II. FORMS
D. Negating Defenses to Arbitration

2-20 California Points & Authorities § 20.87

§ 20.87 Provision for Review by Second Arbitrator Is Valid and Enforceable

[1] FORM

THE PROVISION FOR REVIEW OF THE INITIAL AWARD BY A SECOND ARBITRATOR FOR ERRORS OF LAW [AND SUBSTANTIAL EVIDENTIARYSUPPORT] IS REASONABLE AND ENFORCEABLE.

A. Provision for Review by Second Arbitrator Is Valid and Enforceable. The point of review of an initial arbitration award by a second arbitrator is usually to do what a trial court or appellate court could not do: review the award for errors of law [and see whether it is supported by substantial evidence]. This contractual review for errors of law is not prohibited by the statutory standards for vacating an award. If there is no significant delay in implementing a review by a second arbitrator and the party who drafted the arbitration agreement pays the cost of that review, it is not unconscionable (Cummings v. Future Nissan (2005) 128 Cal. App. 4th 321, 330-331, 27 Cal. Rptr. 3d 10 ; see Code Civ. Proc. § 1286.2).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used in support of a petition to compel arbitration if petitioner anticipates a challenge that a provision for review of the award by a second arbitrator is unconscionable or invalid.

This form is not intended as a complete memorandum, but should be combined with the memoranda in §§ 20.10, 20.11, and any others applicable to the particular situation.

As a tactical matter, counsel may wish to reserve these points for oral argument or for a reply memorandum. In deciding whether to reserve these arguments, counsel should consider local court rules and practice, as well as whether the moving party would be expected to raise these points in initial moving papers, to avoid the possibility of losing the opportunity to raise them.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form to the facts of the case. For example, the argument might emphasize that the party who drafted the agreement is paying the costs of the second arbitrator and that the provision for arbitral review is truly mutual.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Memoranda

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[d] Opposing Memoranda

For a memorandum that may be used in an appropriate case to oppose this form on the ground that the provision for review by a second arbitrator is unconscionable, see Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.91, Optional Paragraph H.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Provision for Review by Second Arbitrator Is Valid and Enforceable

Cummings v. Future Nissan (2005) 128 Cal. App. 4th 321, 330-331, 27 Cal. Rptr. 3d 10 involved arbitration under a two-tiered procedure contained in plaintiff's employment contract. The second-tier provided for review of the initial award by a second arbitrator who would, "as far as practicable, proceed according to the law and procedures applicable to appellate review by the California Court of Appeal of a civil judgment following [a] court trial." Plaintiff sued for sexual harassment and wrongful termination, alleging that her dismissal was in retaliation for reporting both the sexual harassment and a co-worker's fraudulent practice of overstating vehicle values in loan applications. The initial arbitrator awarded plaintiff $159,000 for dismissal in violation of public policy, based on reporting the co-worker's fraudulent scheme, but found against her on all other claims. The defendant moved the arbitrator for a modification of the award, which was eventually denied. While that modification motion was pending, plaintiff petitioned the trial court to confirm the initial arbitration award, claiming that the provision for a second level of arbitral review was unconscionable. The trial court denied the petition to confirm as premature, and found nothing in the second-level review to be unconscionable, as long as the defendant bore the costs of the review and it was completed within a reasonable time. The second arbitrator reversed the award for the plaintiff on the legal ground that the public policy she identified was not an issue of such general public importance as to entitle her to damages for a wrongful dismissal in retaliation for her reporting the violation. The defendant moved to confirm the award, and plaintiff to vacate it. The trial court confirmed the award, and plaintiff appealed, without waiting for a judgment to be entered on the award.

The court of appeal affirmed, agreeing there was nothing unconscionable about the second level review and that the parties could, by contract, invest a second arbitrator with a broader standard of review than a court could apply to the initial award (128Cal. App. 4th 321, 323, 332) . The court of appeal treated the notice of appeal as premature and considered the merits of the appeal (128 Cal. App. 4th 321, 327) . The court of appeal first found that plaintiff had forfeited the issue of unconscionability in the arbitration clause by failing to raise it in her initial opposition to arbitration. The court found plaintiff's argument that the second arbitrator review clause did not become an issue until after the final arbitration award was entered unpersuasive. A party who is aware of a basis for finding the arbitration process invalid must raise its objection at the outset, or as soon as they learn of it, so that prompt judicial resolution may take place before wasting the time of the adjudicator(s) and the parties. A party who participates in arbitration and does not raise the invalidity until a petition to confirm or vacate the award has forfeited the right to contest the arbitration process at that stage. Any other result would foster gamesmanship and allow waste of time and resources (128 Cal. App. 4th 321, 328-330) . The court of appeal agreed with the trial court that almost all the delay was attributable to the plaintiff, and the defendant paid the costs of arbitration. Thus, there was no basis to any claim of unconscionability (128 Cal. App. 4th 321, 330-331) . Plaintiff also argued that Moncharsh prohibited review for errors of law [Moncharsh v. Heily & Blase (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 1, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 183, 832 P.2d 899] . Again, the court of appeal disagreed, explaining that the second arbitrator was still and arbitrator, not a judge, and that Moncharsh has no application to a contractually specified standard of review of the initial arbitration award. In fact, there would be little point to an arbitral review if the second arbitrator could not revisit the questions of law in the initial award (128 Cal. App. 4th 321, 331) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20 ARBITRATION: COMPELLING
PART II. FORMS
D. Negating Defenses to Arbitration

2-20 California Points & Authorities § 20.88

§ 20.88 Foreign Law Governs This Contract and Renders Class Action Waiver Enforceable

[1] FORM

THE CHOICE OF LAW PROVISION IN THE ARBITRATION AGREEMENT IS ENFORCEABLE AND RENDERS THIS PROHIBITION ON CLASSWIDE ARBITRATION ENFORCEABLE

A. Foreign Law Governs This Contract and Renders Class Action Waiver Enforceable. Under the law of _____ [state whose law is provided by contract at issue to govern], class action waivers are enforceable and not unconscionable even in consumer adhesion contracts. _____ [Name of state whose law governs] law governs this dispute because the contract so provides and because, under traditional conflicts analysis, _____ [name of state whose law governs] has a substantial relationship to the parties and/or their transaction in that _____ [describe connection, e.g, defendant is headquartered there and all payments are processed there]. Even assuming, arguendo, that _____ [name of state whose law governs]'s law is contrary to a fundamental policy of California, _____ [name of state whose law governs] has a materially greater interest than California in determination of the issue because _____ [specify, e,g., the claims are asserted only under Delaware law and none under California law, the putative class is a nationwide one, not a California one, and defendant is domiciled in Delaware] (Discover Bank v. Superior Court (Boehr) (2005) 134 Cal. App. 4th 886, 889-895, 36 Cal. Rptr. 3d 456 ; see Restatement Second of Conflict of Laws, § 187(2)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used to anticipate or rebut a claim that a contractual prohibition on classwide arbitration is unconscionable and unenforceable when the arbitration agreement contains a choice of law provision designating a foreign law under which the class arbitration prohibition would be enforceable.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, the argument should show that the state whose law is designated by the contract has a substantial relationship to the parties or their transaction, and/or that there is some other reasonable basis for the parties' choice of law as well as that the state whose law is designated by the contract has a materially greater interest than California in the determination of the issue.

It is advisable for counsel to submit evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file (including verified pleadings), or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied if plaintiff-respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement)].

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For discussion and forms relating to class actions, and the validity of class action prohibitions in general, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 120, Class Actions .

[d] Related Memoranda

For a complete form of authorities supporting a petition to compel arbitration in which this form may be included, see § 20.10.

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion andgeneral forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memorandum in this form is in opposition to that in Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.91, Optional Paragraph I.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Foreign Law Governs This Contract and Renders Class Action Waiver Enforceable

Discover Bank v. Superior Court (Boehr) (2005) 134 Cal. App. 4th 886, 36 Cal. Rptr. 3d 456 , is the opinion rendered by the court of appeal on remand from the California Supreme Court, which, after deciding that the classwide arbitration prohibition in the credit card agreement would likely be unconscionable under California law [see Discover Bank v. Superior Court (Boehr) (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 148, 162-163, 172-174, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 76, 113 P.3d 1100 (discussed in Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, 20A.91[3][i])], charged the court of appeal to decide whether the contractual choice of Delaware law should be respected in determining the enforceability of a class action waiver. Plaintiff did not allege any violations of California substantive law, sued on behalf of a putative nationwide class, and alleged claims for breach of contract and violation of the Delaware Consumer Fraud Act, based on Discover Bank's imposition of late fees on payments that were received on the payment due date but after Discover Bank's undisclosed

1:00 p.m. deadline. The court of appeal concluded that the parties' choice of Delaware law should be respected, and that under Delaware law, the class action waiver was enforceable. Therefore, the court of appeal granted the petition to compel arbitration on an individual basis (134 Cal. App. 4th 886, 889, 898) .

Under California law, the enforcement of contractual choice-of-law provisions, including those in consumer adhesion contracts, is governed by section 187, subdivision (2) of the Restatement Second of Conflict of Laws (134 Cal. App. 4th 886, 890). Under Restatement § 187(2), the court first determines either: (1) whether the chosen state has a substantial relationship to the parties or their transaction, or (2) whether there is any other reasonable basis for the parties' choice of law. If neither of these tests is met, that is the end of the inquiry, and the court need not enforce the parties' choice of law. However, if either test is met, the court must next determine whether the chosen state's law is contrary to a fundamental policy of California. If there is no such conflict, the court must enforce the parties' choice of law. If there is a fundamental conflict with California law, the court must then determine whether California has a materially greater interest than the chosen state in the determination of the particular issue. If California has a materially greater interest than the chosen state, the choice of law will not be enforced. Discover Bank was domiciled in Delaware, and a Delaware required credit plan be governed by Delaware law. Thus, there was no reason to deny either that Delaware had a substantial relationship to the parties or that there was another reasonable basis for the contractual choice of Delaware law enforced (134 Cal. App. 4th 886, 891). Under Delaware law, the class action waiver was enforceable and not unconscionable (134 Cal. App. 4th 886, 892-893). The court did not determine whether enforcement of the class action waiver would be contrary to a fundamental policy of California (134 Cal. App. 4th 886, 894). Even assuming, arguendo, that enforcement of the waiver would be contrary to a fundamental policy of California, the court of appeal concluded that California did not have a materially greater interest in determination of the issue than Delaware because the claims asserted were under Delaware law and none under California law, the putative class was a nationwide one, not a California one, and defendant was domiciled in Delaware. Delaware's interest was demonstrably greater than California's (134 Cal. App. 4th 886, 895).

105 of 174 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20 ARBITRATION: COMPELLING
PART II. FORMS
D. Negating Defenses to Arbitration

2-20 California Points & Authorities § 20.89

§ 20.89 Arbitration Claim Is Not Subject to Motion to Strike Pursuant to Code of Civil Procedure Section 425.16

[1] FORM

THE ARBITRATION CLAIM, FILED ONLY IN THE ARBITRAL FORUM, IS NOT A PLEADING OR COMPLAINT WITHIN THE MEANING OF SECTION 425.16 OF THE CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE AND THUS CANNOT BE STRIKEN UNDER AUTHORITY OF THAT SECTION.

A. Arbitration Claim Is Not Subject to Motion to Strike Pursuant to Code of Civil Procedure Section 425.16. An arbitration claim filed only in an agreed arbitral forum and not asserted by the claimant in any complaint, cross-complaint or petition filed in court is not a "complaint" within the meaning of Section 425.16 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Thus, Section 425.16 does not authorize a superior court to grant a motion to strike an arbitration claim filed only in an agreed arbitral forum and not asserted by the claimant in any complaint, cross-complaint or petition filed in court (Sheppard v. Lightpost Museum Fund (2006) 146 Cal. App. 4th 315, 319, 323-324, 52 Cal. Rptr. 3d 821).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used to oppose a motion to strike an arbitration claim filed only in an arbitral forum and not in any court proceeding on the ground that Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 does not extend to arbitration claims. This form is not intended to be a complete memorandum. Counsel should combine it with authority relating to the particular procedural context, such as opposition to a motion to strike. See Ch. 160, Motions to Strike .

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, the argument must show that the arbitration claim is just that and has been filed only in the arbitral forum specified in the parties' contract and not in any judicial proceeding. It is advisable for counsel to submit evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file (including verified pleadings), or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied if plaintiff-respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement)].

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Pleadings and Practice Chapters

For a forms and discussion relating to motions to strike pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 375, Motions to Strike (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For discussion and forms regarding motions to strike, see Ch. 160, Motions to Strike .

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Arbitration Claim Is Not Subject to Motion to Strike Pursuant to Code of Civil Procedure Section 425.16

Sheppard v. Lightpost Museum Fund (2006) 146 Cal. App. 4th 315, 52 Cal. Rptr. 3d 821 , arose out of an employment dispute. Plaintiff claimed to have been wrongfully terminated. Defendants claimed plaintiff had breached non-disclosure clauses in the employment agreements. The employment agreements provided for binding arbitration before Christian Dispute Resolution Professionals, Inc. (CDRP) of any dispute that arose out of, or related to the agreements, or the breach thereof, or otherwise between the parties. Plaintiff's employment was terminated in September 2003. His wrongful termination claim and defendants' claims of breach of contract and for declaratory relief were submitted to CDRP for binding arbitration in 2004. Defendants asserted that plaintiff had violated the agreements' nondisclosure clauses. The arbitrator awarded no relief to any party. In April, 2005, defendants demanded another arbitration because they claimed plaintiff, after the 2004 arbitration, had turned over confidential documents and testified about confidential information in arbitration proceedings in which he was not a party, and had expressly stated that he was not bound by the nondisclosure clauses. They sought injunctive relief to force plaintiff to return company documents and to immediately stop releasing confidential information. Plaintiff did not file a response with CDRP, but filed a complaint alleging tort causes of action and seeking declaratory relief regarding his right to testify in certain legal actions. Plaintiff also alleged that defendants were attempting to obtain a prior restraint on his constitutional right of free speech be precluding him from writing a book in violation of Code of Civ. Proc. § 425.16. Plaintiff filed a special motion to strike the arbitration claims pending before CDRP pursuant to Code of Civ. Proc. § 425.16. Defendants opposed that motion, demurred to the tort causes of action, and moved to compel arbitration, claiming that plaintiff's declaratory relief cause of action was identical to the claim pending in arbitration. Defendants did not seek to compel arbitration of their own claim previously asserted in their arbitration demand. Defendants' opposition to the motion to strike was based on the fact that there was no cause of action pending against plaintiff in the court and the arbitration demand was not before the court. The court ruled that it had jurisdiction to address the motion to strike and considered the arbitration claim to have two parts: one part was that plaintiff possess confidential documents that defendants had a right to have returned, and other part was that plaintiff had disclosed confidential information at arbitration hearings without a subpoena and was writing a book containing confidential information. The court ruled that the first part of the arbitration claim, which was not part of defendants' motion to compel, was subject to arbitration, but the other part of the arbitration claim, which had never been asserted in a complaint, cross-complaint, or petition filed in court, was within the court's jurisdiction under Section 425.16. The trial court granted the motion to strike as to the second part of the claim but denied it as to he first part. Defendants appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, finding that Code of Civ. Proc. § 425.16 does not authorize a superior court to grant a motion to strike an arbitration claim filed only in an agreed arbitral forum and not asserted by the claimant in any complaint, cross-complaint or petition filed in court (146 Cal. App. 4th 315, 319, 323-324) . The court of appeal began by noting that the objective of statutory interpretation is to ascertain and effectuate legislative intent and that Section 425.16 expressly targeted abuse of the judicial process [Code of Civ. Proc. § 425.16(a)] (146 Cal. App. 4th 315, 322, 323) . Section 425.16 does not expressly make arbitration claims asserted only in an arbitral forum subject to a motion to strike. The court discussed the word "includes" in Code of Civ. Proc. § 425.16(h) defining "complaint" to include cross-complaints and petitions, saying that while "includes" is ordinarily a word of enlargement and not of limitation (146 Cal. App. 4th 315, 322) , enlargement must be limited to items similar in nature and scope. In this case that would be pleadings filed in courts to initiate judicial proceedings. Complaints, cross-complaints and petitions are pleadings which are filed in courts to initiate judicial proceedings [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 22, 420, 422.10]. Arbitration claims filed only in an arbitral forum, while in some ways similar to pleadings, are very different because they are not filed in courts and they do not initiate judicial proceedings. These distinctions indicate that the Legislature did not intend to include arbitration claims within the term "complaint." In addition, Section 425.16's timing provisions are restricted to terms that are exclusive to actions in court (146 Cal. App. 4th 315, 323) . The court concluded that the terms of Section 425.16could not be reconciled with a legislative intent to extend it to arbitration claims filed only in private nonjudicial forums. Thus, the Legislature did not authorize superior courts to strike arbitration claims filed only in arbitral forums under Section 425.15 (146 Cal. App. 4th 315, 323-324). Nor could the motion to strike depend for its validity on defendants' motion to compel arbitration. The motion to strike targeted only defendants' arbitration claim, which had been asserted only in the arbitral forum and not as part of a complaint, cross-complaint or petition filed in court. That claim was not subject to Section 425.16. Thus, the superior court erred in partially granting the motion to strike (146 Cal. App. 4th 315, 324).

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20 ARBITRATION: COMPELLING
PART II. FORMS
D. Negating Defenses to Arbitration

2-20 California Points & Authorities § 20.90

§ 20.90 Enforcement of Unconscionable Arbitration Clause in Credit Card Agreement Cannot Be Enjoined Under California Legal Remedies Act (Civ. Code § 1750 et seq.)

[1] FORM

THE ISSUANCE OF A CREDIT CARD IS NOT WITHIN THE PURVIEW OF THE CALIFORNIA LEGAL REMEDIES ACT. THUS, THE ALLEGEDLY UNCONSCIONABLE ARBITRATION PROVISION IN THE CARDHOLDER AGREEMENT CANNOT BE ENJOINED AS A DECEPTIVE PRACTICE UNDER THAT ACT.

A. Enforcement of Unconscionable Arbitration Clause in Credit Card Agreement Cannot Be Enjoined Under California Legal Remedies Act (Civ. Code § 1750 et seq.). The California Legal Remedies Act (CLRA; Civ. Code § 1750 et seq.) applies to transactions intended to result, or which do result, in the sale or lease of goods or services to any consumer. The CLRA does not regulate an extension of credit separate and apart from a sale, which is all that is involved in the mere issuance of the credit card and all that is at issue here. Thus, enforcement of the allegedly unconscionable arbitration clause in the cardholder agreement cannot be enjoined as a deceptive practice (Berry v. American Express Publishing Co. (2007) 147 Cal. App. 4th 224, 228, 233, 54 Cal. Rptr. 3d 91).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used to support a demurrer or otherwise oppose an attempt to enjoin an allegedly unconscionable arbitration provision in a credit card agreement as a deceptive practice under the California Legal Remedies Act (CLRA; Civ. Code § 1750 et seq.). The ground of opposition is that the issuance of a credit card, apart from the sale or lease of a good or service, is not within the purview of the CLRA. This form is not intended to be a complete memorandum. Counsel should combine it with authority relating to the particular procedural context is which the issue is being litigated, such as demurrers. See Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, the argument must show that only an extension of credit is at issue, not the sale or lease of a good or service. It is advisable for counsel to submit evidence in support of factual statements by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file (including verified pleadings), or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied if plaintiff-respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement)].

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Pleadings and Practice Chapters

For discussion and forms regarding demurrers, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 206, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For a forms and discussion relating the California Legal Remedies Act, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 504, Sales: Consumers Legal Remedies Act .

[d] Related Memoranda

For discussion and forms regarding demurrers, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Enforcement of Unconscionable Arbitration Clause in Credit Card Agreement Cannot Be Enjoined Under California Legal Remedies Act (Civ. Code § 1750 et seq.)

Plaintiff cardholder in Berry v. American Express Publishing Co. (2007) 147 Cal. App. 4th 224, 54 Cal. Rptr. 3d 91 , sought to enjoin enforcement of an allegedly unconscionable arbitration provision in the cardholder agreement with defendants in accordance with the California Legal Remedies Act (CLRA; Civ. Code § 1750 et seq.). The arbitration clause prohibited class action relief. Defendants demurred to the complaint on the ground that the CLRA applied only to transactions intended to result or which do result in the sale or lease of goods or services to any consumer, not an extension of credit separate and apart from a sale, which is what defendant contendedwas involved here. The trial court agreed and sustained the demurrer. Plaintiff did not request leave to amend or demonstrate that he could amend the complaint to state a cause of action, so the action was dismissed. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed (147 Cal. App. 4th 227, 233-234) , agreeing with defendants that the issuance of a credit card was not a transaction intended to result or which did result in the sale or lease of goods or services to any consumer and thus not within the purview of the CLRA (147 Cal App. 4th 224, 228) . Civ. Code § 1770(a)(19) makes it an unlawful and deceptive act to insert an unconscionable provision in a consumer contract (147 Cal. App. 4th 224, 228) . The case was one of first impression and the court of appeal relied on the definitions within the CLRA and on the Legislative history. The credit card, though tangible, was not a "good" within the meaning of Civ. Code § 1761(a) (147 Cal. App. 4th 224, 229) . Nor is the extension of credit, separate and apart from a specific purchase or lease of a good or service, a "service" covered by the CLRA (147 Cal. App. 4th 224, 229-230, 232) . The CLRA was intended to stop deceptive practices. Although earlier drafts included "credit" and "money" within the things sought by a person it defined as a consumer, the final version omitted them (147 Cal. App. 4th 224, 230) . Courts must not interpret a statute to include terms the Legislature deleted from earlier drafts. Thus, the deletion of the terms "money" and "credit" from CLRA's definition of consumer indicated that the court of appeal should not stretch the CLRA to include extensions of credit unrelated to the purchase of any specific good or service. The court distinguished cases relied on by plaintiff to allow construction of a statute to include matters apparently deleted within its scope (147 Cal. App. 4th 224, 231) . Earlier drafts of CLRA gave standing to any consumer "who obtains credit, or purchases or leases, or agrees to purchase or lease, goods or services primarily for personal, family, or household purposes, and who thereby suffers any damage." That terminology was not used in the final version [see Civ. Code § 1780] (147 Cal. App. 4th 224, 232) . Plaintiff claimed that Discover Bank v. Superior Court (Boehr) (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 148, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 76, 113 P.3d 1100 (Discover Bank discussed in Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.91[3][i]) acknowledged that CLRA covers credit cards, but the court of appeal pointed out that Discover Bank expressly recognized that a cause of action under CLRA had not been alleged [Discover Bank v. Superior Court (Boehr) (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 148, 160, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 76, 113 P.3d 1100] . The court of appeal concluded that neither the express text of CLRA nor its legislative history supported the notion that credit transactions separate and apart from any sale or lease of goods or services are covered under the Act. Thus, the trial court did not err in sustaining the demurrer (147 Cal. App. 4th 224, 233) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20A ARBITRATION: RESISTING

2-20A California Points & Authorities 20A.syn

§ 20A.syn Synopsis to Chapter 20A: ARBITRATION: RESISTING

§ 20A.01 Scope of Chapter

§ 20A.02 Governing Law

§ 20A.03 How to Use the Forms in This Chapter

[1] Page Limits on Memoranda

[2] Using the Forms to Build a Draft Memorandum

§ 20A.04 Related Discussion and Forms

[1] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[2] Related Points and Authorities Chapters

§§ 20A.05-20A.09 [Reserved]

§ 20A.10 Issue Is Not One Required by Agreement or Statute to Be Arbitrated

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Controversy Not to Be Arbitrated If Not Covered by Arbitration Agreement

[b] Inability to Compel Arbitration of Issue Not Required by Agreement or Statute to Be Arbitrated

[c] Procedure Specified in Agreement at Issue Is Not Arbitration

[d] Court Determines Whether There Is Duty to Arbitrate

[e] Parties Have Not Mediated as Contract Requires Before Arbitration

[f] Only Class Representative Currently Before Court Did Not Sign Arbitration Agreement

[g] Acknowledgement of Receipt Is Not Agreement to Arbitrate

[h] Respondent Will Be Entitled to Attorney's Fees and Costs

[i] Petitioner Did Not Allege Existence of Agreement to Arbitrate

[j] Statute Mandating Arbitration Is Unconstitutional

[k] Arbitration Agreement Was Not Signed By Necessary Parties

[l] Attorney at Law Did Not Have Authority to Bind Client and Client Did Not Ratify or Consent to Agreement

[m] Petition Did Not Plead and Prove Request or Demand for Arbitration Pursuant to and Under Terms of Agreement

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Controversy Not to Be Arbitrated If Not Covered by Arbitration Agreement

[b] Inability to Compel Arbitration of Issue Not Required by Agreement or Statute to Be Arbitrated

§ 20A.11 Possibility of Conflicting Ruling by Court on Common Issue of Law or Fact

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Party to Arbitration Agreement Is Also Party in Pending Court Action and Conflicting Rulings on Common Issue Are Possible

[b] Application of Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2 Is Not Preempted by Federal Arbitration Act

[c] Party Invoking Code of Civil Procedure Section 1281.2(c) Need Not Be Party to Litigation

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Party to Arbitration Agreement Is Also Party in Pending Court Action and Conflicting Rulings on Common Issues Are Possible

§ 20A.12 Court Determines Cases Involving Overlapping Arbitrable and Nonarbitrable Issues

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Court Determines Controversy Containing Arbitrable and Nonarbitrable Issues

§ 20A.13 Oral Agreement Selecting Arbitrator Cannot Be Enforced

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Oral Agreement Regarding Arbitrator Cannot Be Enforced

§ 20A.14 Only Party to Agreement Can Seek to Stay Arbitration

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Only Party to Agreement Can Seek to Stay Arbitration

§ 20A.15 Arbitration Not To Be Ordered When Agreed Method Is No Longer Available

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Arbitration Not To Be Ordered When Agreed Method Is No Longer Available

§§ 20A.16-20A.19 [Reserved]

§ 20A.20 Congress/Legislature Intended to Preserve Remedies Arbitration Clause Would Waive

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Arbitration Clause Forfeits Important Statutory Rights

§ 20A.21 Congress Intended to Require Knowing Waiver of Right to Jury Trial

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Sexual Discrimination Claims under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964

[b] Claims under the Americans with Disabilities Act of 1990

§ 20A.22 Agreement Lacks Minimum Criteria for Vindication of Unwaivable Rights

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Costs Will Not Be Imposed on Employer in Face of Agreement to Share

[b] Employer's Offer to Bear All Arbitral Costs Does Not Cure Defect

[c] Discovery Is Inadequate

[d] Class Arbitration Waiver Will Hinder Vindication of Statutory Rights

§ 20A.23 [Reserved]

§ 20A.24 Union Cannot Waive Employee's Right to Jury Trial for the State or Statutory Claim at Issue

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authority

[a] Union Cannot Waive Employee's Right to Jury Trial for the State or Statutory Claim at Issue

[b] State Claim Is Not Preempted by Labor Management Relations Act

§§ 20A.25-20A.29 [Reserved]

§ 20A.30 Applicable Principles of Contract Interpretation

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Ambiguous Term Construed Against Drafter

[b] Construction of General Word Following Enumeration Is Limited

§ 20A.31 Arbitration Provision Was Not Incorporated by Reference

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Arbitration Provision Was Not Incorporated by Reference

§ 20A.32 Parties Did Not Intend Contract to Be Operative Until Signed

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Parties Did Not Intend Contract to Be Operative Until Signed

§ 20A.33 Unilateral Modification of Contract to Include Arbitration Clause

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Unilateral Attempt to Insert Arbitration Clause

[b] Particular Terms Preclude Enforcement

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Unilateral Attempt to Insert Arbitration Clause

§ 20A.34 Spousal Relationship Is Not Enough to Confer Agency Authority to Agree to Arbitration

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Spousal Relationship Is Not Enough to Confer Agency Authority to Agree to Arbitration

[b] Statute Does Not Confer Authority to Bind Relative to Arbitrate

§§ 20A.35-20A.39 [Reserved]

§ 20A.40 Language of Agreement Is Not Broad Enough to Cover Tort Claims

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Language of Agreement Is Not Broad Enough to Encompass Tort Claims

[b] Agreement to Settle Controversies Regarding Receipts and Disbursements

[c] Defamation Claims Not Arbitrable

§ 20A.41 Claim for Injuries to Infant Is Not Covered by Expectant Mother's Arbitration Agreement

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Claim for Injuries to Infant Is Not Covered Under Expectant Mother's Arbitration Agreement

§ 20A.42 Controversy Goes Beyond Scope of Uninsured Motorist Statute

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Insurer Is Not Involved in Dispute Between Claimants

[b] Insurer Is Not Required to Arbitrate Total Amount of Damages Caused by Uninsured Motorist

[c] Dollar Amount of Accident Damages Is Not Relevant to Bad Faith Claim Against Uninsured Motorist Insurer

[d] Coverage Questions Are Not Arbitrable

§ 20A.43 Claims for Injunctive Relief Under the Consumer Legal Remedies Act (Civil Code Section 1750 et seq.) Are Not Arbitrable

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Claims for Injunctive Relief Under the Consumer Legal Remedies Act (Civil Code Section 1750 et seq.) Are Not Arbitrable

§ 20A.44 Claims for Public Injunctive Relief Under Business and Professions Code Sections 17200 et seq. and 17500 et seq. Are Not Arbitrable

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Claims for Public Injunctive Relief Under the Unfair Competition Law (Business and Professions Code Section 17200 et seq.) Are Not Arbitrable

[b] Claims for Public Injunctive Relief of False Advertising Under Business and Professions Code Section 17500 et seq. Are Not Arbitrable

§ 20A.45 Uninsured Motorist Claim Was Not Preserved

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Memoranda

[d] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Action Required to Preserve Uninsured Motorist Claim

[b] 2003 Amendment Increasing Time Within Which Action Must Be Taken to Two Years Is Not Retroactive

§ 20A.46 Equitable Contribution Claim Does Not Arise Under Contract

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Memorandum

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Equitable Contribution Claim Does Not Arise Under Contract

§§ 20A.47-20A.59 [Reserved]

§ 20A.60 Court Determines Whether Third Party Is Bound by or Can Enforce Arbitration Agreement

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Court Determines Whether Third Party Is Bound by or Can Enforce Arbitration Agreement

[b] Formalities Required in Petition to Compel Arbitration

[c] One Not a Party to Arbitration Agreement Who Seeks Arbitration Must Prove It Was an Intended Beneficiary Under the Contract

§ 20A.61 Heir's Wrongful Death Claim Is Not Covered by Decedent's Arbitration Agreement

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Heir's Wrongful Death Claim Is Not Covered by Decedent's Arbitration Agreement

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Heir's Wrongful Death Claim Is Not Covered by Decedent's Arbitration Agreement

§ 20A.62 Nonsignatory Spouse's Loss of Consortium Claim Is Not Subject to Arbitration

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Nonsignatory Spouse's Loss of Consortium Claim Is Not Subject to Arbitration

§ 20A.63 Officer Who Signs Arbitration Agreement on Behalf of Corporate Party to Agreement Cannot Be Compelled to Arbitrate Under Agreement

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Officer Who Signs Arbitration Agreement on Behalf of Corporate Party to Agreement Cannot Be Compelled to Arbitrate Under Agreement

§§ 20A.64-20A.79 [Reserved]

§ 20A.80 Petitioner Has Waived the Right to Compel Arbitration

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Arbitration Not to Be Ordered if Waived

[b] Factors To Be Considered in Determining if Arbitration Has Been Waived

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Factors To Be Considered in Determining if Arbitration Has Been Waived

§ 20A.81 Waiver by Failure to Demand Arbitration Within Time Specified in Contract

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Right to Arbitrate Waived by Failure to Demand Within Contractual Time Limit

§ 20A.82 Waiver by Failure to Demand Arbitration Within a Reasonable Time

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Waiver by Failure to Demand Arbitration Within a Reasonable Time

§ 20A.83 Waiver by Pretrial Procedures or Prejudicial Discovery

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Waiver by Pretrial Procedures or Prejudicial Discovery

[b] Prejudice by Discovery

[c] Delay Until After Answer

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Waiver by Pretrial Procedures or Prejudicial Discovery

[b] Prejudice by Discovery

§ 20A.84 Waiver by Bad Faith Use of Litigation Machinery

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Waiver by Engaging in Misleading Settlement Tactics

[b] Waiver by Filing Litigation in Bad Faith to Prejudice Defendant

[c] Waiver by Pretrial Litigation in Bad Faith

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Waiver by Filing Litigation in Bad Faith to Prejudice Defendant

§ 20A.85 Medical Insurer's Bad Faith Failure to Inform Insured of Right to Arbitrate

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Medical Insurer's Bad Faith Failure to Inform Insured of Right to Arbitrate

[b] Federal Arbitration Act Not Offended by Application of Doctrine of Bad Faith

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Medical Insurer's Bad Faith Failure to Inform Insured of Right to Arbitrate

§ 20A.86 Waiver by Failure to Proceed to Arbitrate in Manner Provided by Contract

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Waiver by Failure to Proceed to Arbitrate in Manner Provided by Contract

§ 20A.87 Arbitration Agreement Vitiated by Fraud and Involuntary Consent

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Arbitration Under Void Agreement Is Not Proper

[b] Promissory Fraud Inducing Arbitration Provision

[c] Reliance May Be Inferred

[d] Agent's Reliance Is Sufficient

[e] Fraud in Inception or Execution of Contract as a Whole

[f] Permeation Doctrine No Longer Recognized in California

[g] Failure to Read Documents

[h] State Law Grounds for Revocation

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Arbitration Under Void Agreement Is Not Proper

[b] Fraud in Inception or Execution of Contract as a Whole

§ 20A.88 Inconspicuous Arbitration Clause Is Not Binding

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Inadequate Disclosure and Understanding of Arbitration Requirement Result in Lack of Contract

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Inadequate Disclosure and Understanding of Arbitration Requirement Result in Lack of Contract

§ 20A.89 Agreement Containing Arbitration Clause Is Void Due to Illegality

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Illegality Affects Entire Contract

[b] Contract Contrary to Express Statute or to Policy of Express Statute

[c] Alleged Illegality Creates Potential for Conflicting Rulings

§ 20A.90 Designated Arbitration Tribunal Lacks Minimum Integrity by Being Identified With Petitioner

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Party Not to Be Arbitrator

[b] Union of One Party Is Improper Arbitrator

[c] Design Review Board in Public Works Contract

§ 20A.91 Arbitration Rules Are Unfair and Unconscionable

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Arbitration Rules Are Unfair and Unconscionable

[b] Doctrine of Unconscionability Does Not Offend Federal Arbitration Act

[c] Criteria of Unconscionability

[d] Element of Procedural Unconscionability

[d1] Under Contract of Adhesion

[e] Element of Substantive Unconscionability

[f] Sophistication of Weaker Party Is No Defense to Unconscionability

[g] Permissible Breadth of Order in Class Action

[h] Provision for Arbitral Review Is Unconscionable

[i] Prohibition on Classwide Arbitration Is Unconscionable

[j] Arbitration Agreement May Be Procedurally Unconscionable Despite Opt-Out Provision

[k] Arbitration Agreement Is Wholly Unenforceable on Account of Unconscionable Provisions

[l] Unconscionable Portions of Arbitration Agreement Will Not Be Severed After They Are No Longer Needed by Party Urging Arbitration

[m] Court Must Strike Unconscionable Remedy Limitations Before Ordering Arbitration

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Criteria of Unconscionability

[b] Element of Procedural Unconscionability

[c] Element of Substantive Unconscionability

[d] Arbitration Agreement Is Wholly Unenforceable on Account of Unconscionable Provisions

[e] Arbitration Rules Are Unfair and Unconscionable

[f] Prohibition on Classwide Arbitration Is Unconscionable

§ 20A.92 Party Signing Medical Services Agreement Is Not Bound by It

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Party Signing Medical Services Arbitration Agreement May Show He or She Is Not Bound Thereby

§ 20A.93 Uninsured Motorist Arbitration Was Not Concluded Within Five Years

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Commencement of Five-Year Period

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[e] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Insurance Code Section 11580.2(i)(2)(A) Requires Denial

[b] Insurance Code Section 11580.2(i)(2)(A) May Be Applied When Accident Occurred Before Enactment

§ 20A.94 The Health Care Plan Disclosures Do Not Comply With Health and Safety Code Section 1363.1

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Health and Safety Code Section 1363.1 Is Not Preempted by the Federal Arbitration Act

[b] Health and Safety Code Section 1363.1 Is Not Preempted by Medicare Law or Regulations

[c] Substantial Compliance Does Not Save Arbitration Agreement

[d] Arbitration Agreement Cannot Be Enforced Because It Does Not Comply With Health and Safety Code Section 1363.1

[e] Health Plan Cannot Avoid Disclosure Requirements by Using Employer's Form

[f] Courts Have Authority to Refuse to Enforce Arbitration Agreements that Do Not Comply With Health & Safety Code Section 1363.1

[g] As Applied to Non-medical Cause(s) of Action

§ 20A.95 Arbitration Disclosures Did Not Comply With Business and Professions Code Section 7191

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Memoranda

[d] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Compliance With Business and Professions Code Section 7191 Is Mandatory

[b] The Federal Arbitration Act Will Not Preempt an Arbitration-Specific Statue Without Evidence That Interstate Commerce Is Involved

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20A ARBITRATION: RESISTING
PART I. INTRODUCTION

2-20A California Points & Authorities § 20A.01

§ 20A.01 Scope of Chapter

This chapter contains memoranda and contentions relating to resisting contractual arbitration under private agreements pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1280 et seq. The forms address motions opposing arbitration on the grounds of waiver or failure to agree to arbitrate at all (no contract or voidable contract) or a particular issue, or other contractual defenses, such as that the respondent is not a party to the arbitration agreement (see § 20A.10 et seq.).

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureAlternative Dispute ResolutionArbitrationsArbitrabilityCivil ProcedureAlternative Dispute ResolutionArbitrationsFederal Arbitration ActCoverage & ExceptionsCivil ProcedureAlternative Dispute ResolutionArbitrationsFederal Arbitration ActOrders to Compel ArbitrationCivil ProcedureAlternative Dispute ResolutionArbitrationsWaiversContracts LawContract Conditions & ProvisionsArbitration Clauses

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20A ARBITRATION: RESISTING
PART I. INTRODUCTION

2-20A California Points & Authorities § 20A.02

§ 20A.02 Governing Law

Arbitration of disputes involving maritime law or interstate or foreign commerce are governed by the Federal Arbitration Act (9 U.S.C. § 1 et seq., commonly referred to as the FAA). International arbitration agreements and awards are governed by the Convention on the Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Arbitral Awards, June 10, 1958 [21 U.S.T. 2517, T.I.A.S. No. 6997, 330 U.N.T.S. 38 (as implemented by 9 U.S.C. §§ 201-208)], entered into force for the United States on December 29, 1970. For the text of the Convention, see note to 9 U.S.C. § 201. Chapter 1 of the FAA (9 U.S.C. §§ 1-16) applies to situations governed by Convention [see 9 U.S.C. § 202].

In California, judicial enforcement of international commercial arbitration agreements is implemented by Code Civ. Proc. § 1297.100 et seq., which is discussed in California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 35, Arbitration and Conciliation of International Commercial Disputes (Matthew Bender).

The court will order arbitration on a petition to compel arbitration if it determines that an agreement to arbitrate the controversy exists, unless it determines, among other things, that the right to compel arbitration has been waived by the petitioner or grounds exist for the revocation of the agreement [Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2]. A memorandum arguing against an order compelling arbitration and urging that grounds exist for waiver or revocation may constitute the basis of a response to a petition to compel [see § 20A.10 et seq.].

For memoranda relating to revocation of contracts, see Ch. 50, Contracts , and Ch. 92, Duress, Menace, Fraud, Undue Influence, and Mistake

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureAlternative Dispute ResolutionArbitrationsFederal Arbitration ActArbitration AgreementsCivil ProcedureAlternative Dispute ResolutionArbitrationsFederal Arbitration ActOrders to Compel ArbitrationCivil ProcedureAlternative Dispute ResolutionArbitrationsFederal Arbitration ActStays Pending ArbitrationCivil ProcedureAlternative Dispute ResolutionArbitrationsForeign Arbitral AwardsCivil ProcedureAlternative Dispute ResolutionArbitrationsWaiversCivil ProcedureAlternative Dispute Resolution

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20A ARBITRATION: RESISTING
PART I. INTRODUCTION

2-20A California Points & Authorities § 20A.03

§ 20A.03 How to Use the Forms in This Chapter

[1] Page Limits on Memoranda

One of the more significant drafting requirements to keep in mind are page limits: supporting and opposing memoranda must not exceed 15 pages, or 20 pages in a summary judgment proceeding. A reply or closing memorandum may not exceed 10 pages in length [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113(d)]. Exhibits, declarations, attachments, tables of contents and authorities, and proof of service are not counted. Any party must obtain leave of court to file a longer memorandum [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113(d), (e)]. These and other drafting requirements are discussed in further detail in Chapter 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs, § 1.05.

[2] Using the Forms to Build a Draft Memorandum

The forms included in this chapter are designed to be combined with other memorandum to form a complete memorandum. For detailed discussion on how to select and use the forms in the publication to build a draft memorandum and complete the draft, with detailed discussion of all drafting requirements and strategic or stylistic considerations, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs, §§ 1.03 -1.06. For a skeletal form of memorandum for use in creating a properly formatted outline in which to compile relevant forms from this publication, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs, § 1.10.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeMotion PracticeContent & FormCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeMotion PracticeOpposing MemorandaCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeMotion PracticeSupporting Memoranda

111 of 174 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20A ARBITRATION: RESISTING
PART I. INTRODUCTION

2-20A California Points & Authorities § 20A.04

§ 20A.04 Related Discussion and Forms

[1] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed legal background discussion, research guides, procedural checklists, and practice forms of motions and other papers relating to private contractual arbitration proceedings, see:

- California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 32, Contractual Arbitration: Agreements and Compelling Arbitration (Matthew Bender).

- California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 33, Contractual Arbitration: Appointment of Arbitrator and Conduct of Proceeding (Matthew Bender).

- California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 34, Contractual Arbitration: Judicial Review (Matthew Bender).

[2] Related Points and Authorities Chapters

Chapters in this publication with related forms include:

- For compelling arbitration, see Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling .

- For selecting arbitrators and determining arbitral immunity, see Ch. 20B, Arbitration: Selecting Arbitrators; Arbitral Immunity .

- For confirming, correcting, or vacating an arbitration award, see Ch. 20C, Arbitration: Confirming, Correcting, or Vacating the Award .

- For dismissing an arbitration, see Ch. 20D, Arbitration: Dismissing .

- For determining the effect of an arbitration award, see Ch. 20E, Arbitration: Effect of Award .

- For situations in which attorney's fees may be recovered, see Ch. 25, Attorney's Fees .

- For contract provisions in general, see Ch. 50, Contracts .

- For situations in which contracts may be avoided or declared void, see Ch. 92, Duress, Menace, Fraud, Undue Influence, and Mistake .

- For requirements of injunctions, see Ch. 116, Injunctions .

- For general principles relating to specific performance of contracts, see Ch. 214, Specific Performance .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureAlternative Dispute ResolutionArbitrationsFederal Arbitration ActArbitration AgreementsCivil ProcedureAlternative Dispute ResolutionArbitrationsFederal Arbitration ActOrders to Compel ArbitrationCivil ProcedureAlternative Dispute ResolutionContracts LawDefensesDuress & Undue InfluenceGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20A ARBITRATION: RESISTING
PART I. INTRODUCTION

2-20A California Points & Authorities §§ 20A.05-20A.09

[Reserved]

§§ 20A.05[Reserved]

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20A ARBITRATION: RESISTING
PART II. FORMS
A. General Principles Relating to Resisting Arbitration

2-20A California Points & Authorities § 20A.10

§ 20A.10 Issue Is Not One Required by Agreement or Statute to Be Arbitrated

[1] FORM

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA,
COUNTY OF _____

	)
	)	NO. _____
_____ [name],	)	MEMORANDUM IN OPPOSITION TO PETITION Petitioner,	)	TO COMPEL ARBITRATION [AND MOTION TO vs.	)	STAY ACTION]
_____ [name],	)	[LIMITED CIVIL CASE]
Respondent.	)	Date: _____
	)	Time: _____
	)	Location: _____
	)	[Judge: _____]
	)	Date Action Filed: _____
		[Trial Date: _____]

_____

RESPONDENT CANNOT BE COMPELLED TO ARBITRATE _____ [describe dispute] BECAUSE IT IS NOT REQUIRED TO BE ARBITRATED EITHER BY THE AGREEMENT OR BY LAW.

A. Controversy Not to Be Arbitrated If Not Covered by Arbitration Agreement. The court shall not order the parties to arbitrate a controversy if it determines that an agreement to arbitrate the controversy does not exist, or if an agreement exists but grounds exist for its revocation or the right to compel arbitration under it has been waived (Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2; Lee v. Southern California Univ. For Professional Studies (2007) 148 Cal. App. 4th 782, 786-788, 56 Cal. Rptr. 3d 134 ; Lopez v. Charles Schwab & Co. (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 1224, 1229-1230, 13 Cal.

Rptr. 3d 544 ; Banner Entertainment, Inc. v. Superior Court (1998) 62 Cal. App. 4th 348, 356, 72 Cal. Rptr. 2d 598).

B. Inability to Compel Arbitration of Issue Not Required by Agreement or Statute to Be Arbitrated. Parties to an arbitration agreement cannot be compelled to arbitrate controversies which they did not agree to arbitrate and as to which arbitration is not required by statute (Freeman v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. (1975) 14 Cal. 3d 473, 481, 121 Cal. Rptr. 477, 535 P.2d 341 ; Balandran v. Labor Ready, Inc. (2004) 124 Cal. App. 4th 1522, 1529-1530, 22 Cal. Rptr. 3d 441 ; In re Tobacco Cases I (2004) 124 Cal. App. 4th 1095, 1112, 21 Cal. Rptr. 3d 875 ; United Public Employees v. San Francisco (1997) 53 Cal. App. 4th 1021, 1031, 62 Cal. Rptr. 2d 440).

[Optional] C. Procedure Specified in Agreement at Issue Is Not Arbitration. There is no arbitration agreement between the petitioner and respondent. The procedure referred to in the parties' agreement is not one for arbitration because _____ [specify all or as many of the following as may be applicable: (1) there is no third party decision maker; (2) the procedure does not contemplate a final and binding decision; and (3) there is no a mechanism to assure a minimum level of impartiality with respect to the rendering of that decision] (American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees v. Metropolitan Water District (2005) 126 Cal. App. 4th 247, 257-259, 24 Cal. Rptr. 3d 285 ; Cheng-Canindin v. Renaissance Hotel, Inc. (1996) 50 Cal. App. 4th 676, 687-693, 57 Cal. Rptr. 2d 867).

[Optional] D. Court Determines Whether There Is Duty to Arbitrate. The court is required under Code of Civil Procedure Section 1281.2 to make an advance determination of whether or not arbitration is required under the agreement (Freeman v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. (1975) 14 Cal. 3d 473, 480, 121 Cal. Rptr. 477, 535 P.2d 341 ; see First Options of Chicago, Inc. v. Kaplan (1995) 514 U.S. 938, 943-944, 115 S. Ct.1920, 131 L. Ed. 2d 985, 993-994 ; Lawrence v. Walzer & Gabrielson (1989) 207 Cal. App. 3d 1501, 1505, 256 Cal. Rptr. 6). The question whether an arbitration agreement is unenforceable, in whole or in part, based on general contract law principles is a question for the court to decide, rather than an arbitrator, and includes the determination whether an arbitration agreement is unconscionable or contrary to public policy (Sanchez v. Western Pizza Enterprises, Inc. (2009) 172 Cal. App. 4th 154, 165-166, 90 Cal. Rptr. 3d 818).

[Optional] E. Parties Have Not Mediated as Contract Requires Before Arbitration. When an agreement provides that any dispute between the parties shall be submitted to mediation before resorting to arbitration or litigation and makes mediation an express condition precedent to the hearing of any arbitration but not to litigation, neither party can compel arbitration (Templeton Development Corp. v. Superior Court (Dick Emard Electric, Inc.) (2006) 144 Cal. App. 4th 1073, 1085, 51 Cal. Rptr. 3d 19).

[Optional] F. Only Class Representative Currently Before Court Did Not Sign Arbitration Agreement. Arbitration is not to be ordered when the only person before the court is an individual who did not sign an arbitration agreement merely because that person's complaint was filed as a putative class or representative action and some members of the putative class signed arbitration agreements. The question of whether that person is an adequate class representative for those who did sign arbitration agreements [and all other matters pertaining to whether the action is appropriate for class treatment], should be decided when the putative representative moves to certify the class (Lee v. Southern California Univ. for Professional Studies (2007) 148 Cal. App. 4th 782, 784, 788-789, 56 Cal. Rptr. 3d 134).

[Optional] G. Acknowledgement of Receipt Is Not Agreement to Arbitrate. An acknowledgement of receipt [of an employee handbook discussing the company's arbitration program] without any signature [by the employee] agreeing to arbitrate does not amount to an agreement to arbitrate and is not a basis for compelling arbitration (Mitri v. Arnel Management Co. (2007) 157 Cal. App. 4th 1164, 1170-1173, 69 Cal. Rptr. 3d 223).

[Optional] H. Respondent Will Be Entitled to Attorney's Fees and Costs. When an action is brought solely to compel arbitration of contractual disputes between the parties [and the merits of the claims sought to be arbitrated are not at issue in the proceedings to compel arbitration], the fact that the parties will probably pursue their underlying claims in another action will not lessen respondent's victory in this discrete legal proceeding. Thus, respondent, if successful in obtaining an order denying the petition to compel arbitration, will be entitled to its attorney's fees incurred in responding to the petition (Civ. Code § 1717; Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1033.5(a)(10)(A), 1293.2; Otay River Constructors v. San Diego Expressway (2007) 158 Cal. App. 4th 796, 799, 805-808, 70 Cal. Rptr. 3d 434).

[Optional] I. Petitioner Did Not Allege Existence of Agreement to Arbitrate.

A party seeking to compel arbitration must allege the existence of an agreement to arbitrate. Here, petitioner _____ [specify defect in pleading, e.g., contested the existence or validity of the agreements alleged by respondents in their complaint]. Thus, petitioner failed to satisfy the most basic statutory prerequisite to granting the petition. There is no public policy which would compel the enforcement of a contract on behalf of a party who denies its very existence (Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2; Brodke v. Alphatec Spine, Inc. (2008) 160 Cal. App. 4th 1569, 15674-1577, 73 Cal. Rptr. 3d 554).

[Optional] J. Statute Mandating Arbitration Is Unconstitutional. A Petitioner relying on a statutory mandate to compel arbitration is not entitled to an order compelling arbitration when the statute mandating arbitration is unconstitutional (see County of Sonoma v. Superior Court (2009) 173 Cal. App. 4th 322, 346-347, 355, 93 Cal. Rptr. 3d 39).

[Optional] K. Arbitration Agreement Was Not Signed By Necessary Parties. Where the evidence shows that an arbitration agreement was conditioned upon execution by all parties, the contract is not binding on any signatory until it is signed by all (Fagelbaum & Heller LLP v. Smylie (2009) 174 Cal. App. 4th 1351, 1365, 95 Cal. Rptr. 3d 252).

[Optional] L. Attorney at Law Did Not Have Authority to Bind Client and Client Did Not Ratify or Consent to Agreement. In the absence of express authorization of counsel to sign a binding contract, a client is bound by an arbitration agreement signed by his or her counsel only if the client consented to or ratified the agreement [Toal v. Tardif (2009) 178 Cal. App. 4th 1208, 1221 & n.9, 101 Cal. Rptr. 3d 97] .

[Optional] L. Petition Did Not Plead and Prove Request or Demand for Arbitration Pursuant to and Under Terms of Agreement. Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2 requires a party filing a petition to compel arbitration to plead and prove that it made a request or demand to the other party or parties for arbitration of the controversy pursuant to and under the terms of their written arbitration agreement (Mansouri v. Superior Court (2010) 181 Cal. App. 4th 633, 641-642, 104 Cal. Rptr. 3d 824).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for _____ [party's status and name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to a petition for an order to compel arbitration under a contract or statute when the issue sought to be arbitrated is not in fact covered by the agreement or statute, when grounds exist for the revocation of the agreement, when the right to compel arbitration has been waived, when the parties have not completed some express condition precedent to arbitration, or no agreement to arbitrate has been properly alleged. It sets forth the basic reasons for denying a petition to compel arbitration [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1281.2, 1290.2].

Counsel may wish to incorporate authority from Paragraphs C, D, E, or I of the form in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.10[1] if petitioner did not attach the arbitration provision or if there is a question about the proper procedure to be applied in determining arbitrability. The authority in Optional Paragraph D is opposed by the authority in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.10[1], Optional Paragraph I, which is only applicable when the arbitration agreement clearly states that the parties intend the arbitrator to determine arbitrability.

Respondent should combine this form with as many other forms as address the specific grounds for denial involved in his or her particular case, that is, §§ 20A.01-20A.02 (procedural matters), 20A.20 et seq. (Congressional or Legislative intent to preserve judicial remedy), 20A.30 et seq. (contract principles), 20A.40 et seq. (issue is beyond scope of arbitration clause), 20A.60 et seq. (respondent is not party to arbitration agreement), and 20A.80 et seq. (waiver and contract defenses). A respondent using Optional Paragraph J must include additional authority concerning the specific constitutional defect(s) in the statute that petitioner alleges mandates arbitration.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form, and in the other forms combined with this form, with the facts of his or her case. For example, if respondent claims that petitioner has waived its right to arbitrate, counsel's argument should focus on the critical points made in the supporting declarations, and in any other pleadings or motions before the court of which respondent requests to court to take judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.] regarding the prejudice to respondent on account of any action taken by petitioner and regarding the fact that petitioner's actions were inconsistent with arbitration.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement)].

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a form of response to a petition to compel arbitration that may be supported by this memorandum, as well as a procedural checklist, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 32, Contractual Arbitration: Agreements and Compelling Arbitration (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For memoranda to combine with this form, regarding other matters that the opposition may need to address, see §§ 20A.01 -20A.02, 20A.20 et seq., 20A.30 et seq., 20A.40 et seq., 20A.60 et seq., and 20A.80 et seq. Counsel may wish to incorporate authority from Ch. 20C, Arbitration: Confirming, Correcting, or Vacating the Award, § 20C.150, which addresses the lack of agreement to arbitrate in the context of a petition to vacate an award.

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The authority in Optional Paragraph D is opposed by the authority in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.10[1], Optional Paragraph I, which is only applicable when the arbitration agreement clearly states that the parties intend the arbitrator to determine arbitrability.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Controversy Not to Be Arbitrated If Not Covered by Arbitration Agreement

Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2 also provides that arbitration is not to be ordered if a partyto the arbitration agreement is also a party to a pending court action or special proceeding arising out of the same transaction and there is a possibility of conflicting rulings on common issues of law and fact [Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c)]. This aspect of the statute is addressed by the form at § 20A.11.

Lee v. Southern California Univ. for Professional Studies (2007) 148 Cal. App. 4th 782, 56 Cal. Rptr. 3d 134 , is discussed at [f], below.

Plaintiff in Lopez v. Charles Schwab & Co. (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 1224, 13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 544 , sued for conversion and intentional infliction of emotional distress. She had applied to defendant and signed an application and an account agreement, which contained an arbitration clause and provided that it would be effective only after Schwab approved the application. Soon, plaintiff received an "account verification" but the very next day received a letter declining to open an account because of a consumer credit report. More than a month later, without any further communication between the parties, a broker with defendant "pulled some strings" and transferred plaintiff's stock from her account with another broker into the Schwab account. Defendant moved to compel arbitration. Plaintiff argued she had never entered into an enforceable contract with defendant. The court ordered arbitration. The arbitrator entered an award for defendant. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The right to arbitration depends on contract (118 Cal. App. 4th 1224, 1229) and there was no agreement between the parties. Defendant could not unilaterally rescind its rejection; and a reasonable person in plaintiff's position would not have understood that any contract was formed (118 Cal. App. 4th 1224, 1230) .

The facts and procedural background of Banner Entertainment, Inc. v. Superior Court (1998) 62 Cal. App. 4th 348, 72 Cal. Rptr. 2d 598 , and the portion of the opinion addressing the applicability of state law contract principles in general are discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.30[3][a]. The court of appeal granted a writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate its order granting defendant's petition to compel arbitration (62 Cal. App. 4th 348, 362) . The court set forth the rule that if there is no valid contract to arbitrate, a petition to compel arbitration must be denied (62 Cal. App. 4th 348, 356) . After discussing the evidence, the court found that there was no evidence of an agreement to arbitrate (62 Cal. App. 4th 348, 357, 361-362) . The portion of the opinion addressing the principle that when the parties so intend, an agreement is not operative until it is signed is discussed at § 20A.32[3][a].

[b] Inability to Compel Arbitration of Issue Not Required by Agreement or Statute to Be Arbitrated

The facts and procedural background of Freeman v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. (1975) 14 Cal. 3d 473, 121 Cal. Rptr. 477, 535 P.2d 341 , and the portion of the opinion addressing waiver are discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.80[4][a]. The Supreme Court affirmed the denial of the petition to compel arbitration. Freeman's holding that Ins. Code § 11580.2 establishes a limitation period for petitions to compel arbitration of uninsured motorist coverage disputes has been abrogated [see Spear v. California State Automobile Ass'n (1992) 2 Cal. 4th 1035, 1039-1044, 9 Cal. Rptr. 2d 381, 831 P.2d 821 , discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.43[3][a]]. However, the Supreme Court noted that while there is a strong policy in favor of enforcing agreements to arbitrate, there is no policy compelling persons to accept arbitration of controversies which they have not agreed to arbitrate and which no statute has made arbitrable (14 Cal. 3d 473, 481) . The Court found nothing in the arbitration clause, embodying the provisions of Ins. Code § 11580.2, which could be construed as an agreement to arbitrate a claim not asserted within the time limit specified under Ins. Code § 11580.2(i) (14 Cal. 3d 473, 486) .

Balandran v. Labor Ready, Inc. (2004) 124 Cal. App. 4th 1522, 22 Cal. Rptr. 3d 441 , involved a complaint, filed as a class action, for illegal gender discrimination in violation of the Fair Employment and Housing Act, wrongful failure to hire in violation of public policy, and related causes of action. Defendants were a temporary employment service and its customer who instructed that only male workers to be sent fill positions. The contract between plaintiffs and the temporary agency provided for arbitration of any disputes arising out of employment, including any claims of discrimination, harassment or wrongful termination and all other employment related issues (excluding only claims arising under the National Labor Relations Act or otherwise within the jurisdiction of the National Labor Relations Board). That contract also provided that the workers were only employed by the agency while they were on a job; registering to work did not constitute employment; employment was on a day-to-day basis; and at the end of a work day, the worker was deemed to have quit until he or she received a work assignment at a later date. Both defendants moved to compel arbitration, the customer claiming the benefit of the arbitration provision as a third party beneficiary of the contract. The trial court denied the petition to compel arbitration, finding the absence of an employment relationship was fatal to defendants' claim. Defendants appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed (124 Cal. App. 4th 1522, 1524, 1531) . Defendants conceded that plaintiffs were not Labor Ready's employees, but urged that the pre-employment discrimination claims fell within that part of the arbitration clause that applies to "all other employment related issues." Plaintiffs responded that "all other employment related issues" was not an alternative category of arbitrable claims, but simply one of the categories of claims the arbitration clause included within those disputes arising out of employment. The court of appeal began its discussion by noting that both federal and California law strongly favor arbitration and that any doubts concerning the scope of arbitrable issues should be resolved in favor of arbitration. The burden is on the party opposing arbitration to show the agreement cannot be interpreted to apply to the dispute. Whether a contract is reasonably susceptible to a party's interpretation can be determined from the language of the contract itself (124 Cal. App. 4th 1522, 1527) . The policy in favor of arbitration does not apply when the contract cannot be interpreted in favor of arbitration. There is no policy in favor of arbitrating a dispute the parties did not agree to arbitrate (124 Cal. App. 4th 1522, 1528) . The court found that plaintiff's interpretation of the contract was correct (124 Cal. App. 4th 1522, 1529) and that the language of the agreement could not reasonablybe construed as an agreement to arbitrate pre-employment discrimination claims (124 Cal. App. 4th 1522, 1530) .

In re Tobacco Cases I (2004) 124 Cal. App. 4th 1095, 21 Cal. Rptr. 3d 875 arose from the 1998 settlement between 46 states, and others, with four manufacturers of tobacco products, known as the original participating manufacturers (OPM's), and subsequent participating manufacturers (SPM's). The dispute concerned whether the Latvian affiliate of one of the SPMs should be reporting sales of its products in the United States to the designated independent auditor and making payments to the settlement fund based on those sales. The SPM demanded arbitration based on Paragraph XI(c) of the master settlement agreement (MSA) which required any dispute relating to calculations or determinations made by the auditor to be submitted to binding arbitration. In support of its position, the SPM relied on a letter and a memorandum written by one of the attorneys for the states after the SPM had signed the MSA to the effect that the auditor would decide the extent to which sales of particular brands of tobacco products would be included within SPM's market share; and that any dispute about that determination would be resolved in arbitration pursuant to MSA § XI(c). In opposing the motion to compel arbitration, the state argued the dispute did not arise out of or relate to calculations performed by the auditor, but depended entirely on interpretation of section VII(e) of the master agreement, which defined the parties bound by the agreement. The state also relied on section VII(a) of the MSA, which provides that the courts of each settling state have and retain exclusive jurisdiction for the purposes of implementing and enforcing the master agreement and consent decree as to that settling state, except as provided in subsections IX(d), XI(c) and XVII(d). The trial court denied the petition, finding that the dispute did not involve calculations and determinations by the auditor pursuant to Section XI, but interpretation of Section VII(e); and that the plain meaning of Section XI(c) did not require arbitration of the controversy.

The court of appeal affirmed (124 Cal. App. 4th 1095, 1114) . Although the matter was governed by the Federal Arbitration Act (FAA), the court of appeal noted in deciding whether the parties agreed to arbitrate a certain matter, courts generally should apply ordinary state-law principles that govern the formation of contracts. The right to arbitration depends on contract; a petition to compel arbitration is simply a suit in equity seeking specific performance of that contract (124 Cal. App. 4th 1095, 1104) . In ruling on a petition to compel arbitration, the trial court may consider evidence on factual issues relating to the threshold issue of arbitrability. However, as both parties apparently conceded, if there is no conflicting extrinsic evidence the court of appeal applies a de novo, or independent, standard of review on appeal from a trial court's determination of the issue of whether an arbitration agreement applies to a particular controversy (124 Cal. App. 4th 1095, 1105) . Although there is a policy to interpret contracts to favor arbitration, there is no public policy favoring arbitration of disputes which the parties have not agreed to arbitrate. Here, section XI(c) in the context of the entire MSA was not reasonably susceptible to an interpretation that arbitration of the instant controversy was required. Thus, the state and federal presumptions favoring arbitration did not apply. Further, the two items of extrinsic evidence relied on by the SPM were irrelevant and inadmissible on the issue of whether the claims were subject to arbitration because the MSA's provisions were not reasonably susceptible to an interpretation that arbitration was required (124 Cal. App. 4th 1095, 1112) .

Plaintiff in United Public Emples. v. City & County of San Francisco (1997) 53 Cal. App. 4th 1021, 62 Cal. Rptr. 2d 440 , sought to compel arbitration of a grievance pursuant to the governing collective bargaining agreement. The grievance concerned the random selection of one of plaintiff's members, a car cleaner for the City's Municipal Railway, for drug testing. Cleaners are required at various times to drive transit vehicles. The employee was notified that his job classification was "safety sensitive" under the Omnibus Transportation Employee Testing Act of 1991 (Omnibus Act) [see 49 U.S.C. § 5331]. When the employee was selected for testing and the plaintiff sought to compel arbitration of his classification and selection, the trial court denied the petition. The union appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court said that the right to arbitrate depends on the terms of the contract--a petition to compel arbitration is simply a suit in equity seeking specific performance of that contract (53 Cal. App. 4th 1021, 1026). The court noted that the preemptive provisions of the Omnibus Act are to nullify state laws that might prevent local transit systems from conducting drug and alcohol testing of their safety sensitive employees (53 Cal. App. 4th 1021, 1027). Consistent with this scheme, plaintiff negotiated several memoranda of understanding, which significantly do not contain any agreement to arbitrate the designation of a particular employee or job classification as safety-sensitive (53 Cal. App. 4th 1021, 1029). Given the state of the federal Omnibus Act and its implementing regulations and the recognition that the City's classification of positions is specifically carved out from the scope of bargaining, the court of appeal held that the governing agreement did not contemplate arbitration of the employee's submission to federally-mandated, random drug-testing. While the court acknowledged that there is a strong policy in favor of enforcing agreements to arbitrate, there is no policy compelling persons to accept arbitration of controversies which, as here, they have not agreed to arbitrate (53 Cal. App. 4th 1021, 1031).

[c] Procedure Specified in Agreement at Issue Is Not Arbitration

American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees v. Metropolitan Water District (2005) 126 Cal. App. 4th 247, 24 Cal. Rptr. 3d 285 involved a dispute under a memorandum of understanding (MOU) the provided for a multi-step grievance procedure. The first two levels involved management decisions. After that, management's decision could be appealed to a neutral hearing officer, whose determination was to be final and binding, but could be appealed by writ of mandate [Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5]. The Water District refused to appoint a neutral hearing officer, claiming the union's request for one came too late. The union claimed the procedure with a neutral hearing office amounted to arbitration and petitioned to compel arbitration of the grievance. The trial court denied the petition. The union appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, finding that the procedure in the MOU was not arbitration (126 Cal. App. 4th 247, 260) . The court noted that the MOU did not referto the procedure before a neutral hearing officer as arbitration, nor were the words "arbitrate" or "arbitrator" used in the MOU. However, that was not determinative (126 Cal. App. 4th 247, 257) . The components of arbitration are (1) a third party decision-maker; (2) a final and binding decision; and (3) a mechanism to insure a minimum level of impartiality with respect to the rendering of that decision. It was the second component that the court found lacking (126 Cal. App. 4th 247, 258) . The neutral hearing officer's decision was not final and binding because it was subject to review under Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5, which was a much more extensive judicial involvement than that allowed for arbitration [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1286.2, 1286.6] (126 Cal. App. 4th 247, 259) .

Plaintiff in Cheng-Canindin v. Renaissance Hotel, Assocs., (1996) 50 Cal. App. 4th 676, 57 Cal. Rptr. 2d 867 , filed a wrongful discharge action against her former employer, which petitioned to compel arbitration in accordance with procedures outlined in an employee handbook and employee guide. Plaintiff had signed a receipt for the handbook which stated in part: "I agree to resolve all disputes concerning my employment with the Hotel by the procedures outlined in this Handbook." The trial court denied the petition to compel arbitration on the ground that the procedures in the handbook did not amount to arbitration. Defendants appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, finding that there was no arbitration agreement between the parties (50 Cal. App. 4th 676, 692) . Under California law, arbitration is recognized as a matter of contract; and a party cannot be forced to arbitrate something in the absence of an agreement to do so. The question of whether the parties agreed to arbitrate is answered by applying state contract law even when it is alleged that the agreement is covered by the FAA. Here, neither the alleged agreement nor any of the literature describing the Hotel's Review Committee procedure employed the term arbitration (50 Cal. App. 4th 676, 683) . The failure of the documents to refer to the procedure as arbitration is not fatal. Although California's statutory law governing arbitration agreements (Code Civ. Proc. 1280 et seq.) does not define arbitration, the process is generally agreed to require (50 Cal. App. 4th 676, 687-688) :

1. A third party decision maker;

2. A final and binding decision; and

3. A mechanism to assure a minimum level of impartiality with respect to the rendering of that decision.

The procedure outlined in the employee handbook was inconsistent with the concept of arbitration because one party to the dispute was effectively the decision maker (50 Cal. App. 4th 676, 690) . It was not an arbitration procedure because there was no third party decision maker, the procedure totally lacked impartiality, and was controlled exclusively by one of the parties to the dispute (50 Cal. App. 4th 676, 692-693) . In addition, the court of appeal found the parties did not intend to enter into an arbitration agreement. The internal documents referred to the procedure as "an internal problem solving" mechanism, and there was sufficient evidence to support plaintiff's contention that the process was considered voluntary, not mandatory (50 Cal. App. 4th 676, 691-693) .

[d] Court Determines Whether There Is Duty to Arbitrate

The facts and procedural background of Freeman v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. (1975) 14 Cal. 3d 473, 121 Cal. Rptr. 477, 535 P.2d 341 , and the portion of the opinion addressing waiver are discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.80[4][a]. The Supreme Court affirmed the denial of the petition to compel arbitration. Freeman's holding that Ins. Code § 11580.2 establishes a one-year limitation period for petitions to compel arbitration of uninsured motorist coverage disputes has been abrogated [see Spear v. California State Automobile Ass'n (1992) 2 Cal. 4th 1035, 1039-1044, 9 Cal. Rptr. 2d 381, 831 P.2d 821 , discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.43[3][a]]. However, in denying arbitration, the Supreme Court stated that the clear purpose and effect of Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2 is to require the trial court to determine in advance if there is a duty to arbitrate the controversy which has arisen. The performance of that duty necessarily requires the court to examine and, to a limited extent, construe the underlying agreement. While it is possible for the parties to agree that the arbitrator may determine the scope of his or her authority, it is still necessary in those circumstances for the court to examine the contract to ascertain whether or not the parties, in fact, have thus provided as to the arbitrator's scope of authority (14 Cal. 3d 473, 480) .

The facts and procedural background of First Options of Chicago, Inc. v. Kaplan (1995) 514 U.S. 938, 115 S. Ct. 1920, 131 L. Ed. 2d 985 , and the portion of the opinion addressing the application of state law contract principles to determine the existence of an agreement to arbitrate are discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.30[3][a]. The Supreme Court affirmed the decision of the Third Circuit Court of Appeals, concluding that, because Kaplan did not clearly agree to submit the question of arbitrability to arbitration, the Court of Appeals was correct in finding that the arbitrability of the Kaplan/First Options dispute was subject to independent review by the court (514 U.S. 938, 946-947) . The matter turned on how a court should decide whether the parties agreed to submit the arbitrability issue to arbitration and the standard for review of that decision. If the parties did not agree to submit the arbitrability question itself to arbitration, then the court should decide that question just as it would decide any other question that the parties did not submit to arbitration, namely independently. This flows inexorably from the fact that arbitration is simply a matter of contract between the parties, but only for those disputes the parties have agreed to submit to arbitration (514 U.S. 938, 944-945) . Courts should not assume that the parties agreed to arbitrate arbitrability unless there is clear and unmistakable evidence that they did so. In this matter the law treats silence or ambiguity about "who (primarily) should decide arbitrability" different from the way it treats "whether a particular merits related dispute is arbitrable because it is within the scope of a valid arbitration agreement". In respect to the latter, the court reverses the presumption [see Mitsubishi Motors v. Soler Chrysler-Plymouth (1985) 473 U.S. 614, 626, 105 S. Ct. 3346, 87 L. Ed. 2d 444 (any doubt concerning the scope of the arbitrable issues should be resolved in favor of arbitration)] (514 U.S. 938, 944-945) .

Sanchez v. Western Pizza Enterprises, Inc. (2009) 172 Cal. App. 4th 154, 90 Cal. Rptr. 3d 818 , affirmed a trial court order finding a class arbitration waiver and other terms of the agreement unconscionable, and that the agreement therefore was unenforceable. In resolving the contention that the arbitrator, rather than the trial court, had jurisdiction to determine whether the agreement was enforceable, the court relied on the rule that under California law as well as the Federal Arbitration Act, enforceability of arbitration agreements is limited by the same general contract law principles governing the enforceability of any contract. The question whether an arbitration agreement is unenforceable, in whole or in part, based on general contract law principles is a question for the court to decide, rather than an arbitrator. This includes the determination whether an arbitration agreement is unconscionable or contrary to public policy (172 Cal. App. 4th 154, 165-166) . The portion of the opinion discussing the application of contract principles to enforceability of a class arbitration waiver is discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.30[3][a]. The portion of the opinion dealing with the issue of whether the class action waiver was unenforceable as against public policy is discussed in § 20A.22[3][d], below. The portions of the opinion addressing the procedural unconscionability of the arbitration agreement, the substantive unconscionability of the agreement, and the unenforceability of the agreement due to unconscionability are discussed, respectively, in § 20A.91[3][d], [e], and [k], below.

The facts and procedural background of Lawrence v. Walzer & Gabrielson (1989) 207 Cal. App. 3d 1501, 256 Cal. Rptr. 6 , are discussed at § 20A.30[3][b]. In its preliminary discussion, the court of appeal quoted from Freeman v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. (1975) 14 Cal. 3d 473, 481, 121 Cal. Rptr. 477, 535 P.2d 341 , for the proposition that "there is indeed a strong policy enforcing agreements to arbitrate, but there is no policy compelling persons to accept arbitration of controversies they have not agreed to arbitrate." Thus, in each case, the threshold issue that must be determined by the court is whether an agreement exists to arbitrate the particular claim involved (207 Cal. App. 3d 1501, 1505) .

[e] Parties Have Not Mediated as Contract Requires Before Arbitration

Templeton Development Corp. v. Superior Court (Dick Emard Electric, Inc.) (2006) 144 Cal. App. 4th 1073, 51 Cal. Rptr. 3d 19 , involved a claim for unpaid labor, materials, and equipment supplied by real party, Dick Emard Electric, Inc, as subcontractor, for construction of an apartment complex in Sacramento. The general contractor, Templeton, was based in Nevada. The parties' agreement required that any dispute which could not be settled through negotiation be submitted to mediation before resorting to arbitration or litigation, unless the parties agreed otherwise. The agreement provided that mediation was an express condition precedent to the hearing of any arbitration demand and had to take place within 20 days of the mediation demand. Mediation or arbitration was to be held in Las Vegas, Nevada. Real party offered to stipulate to stay the action to conduct mediation or arbitration in California, but petitioner refused to do so. Petitioner unsuccessfully moved to dismiss the complaint on the ground of inconvenient forum. The trial court ruled that Code Civ. Proc. § 410.42 rendered the out-of-state mediation provision unenforceable, finding that the Federal Arbitration Act (FAA) did not apply to mediation and would have no preemptive effect on the result. The trial court also found that because mediation was an express condition precedent to the hearing of any arbitration demand and the parties had failed to mediate, neither could request arbitration. Petitioners filed a petition for writ of mandate asking the court of appeal to set aside the trial court order denying their motion to dismiss, or to order remand for determination whether the FAA preempted Section 410.42.

The court of appeal affirmed, concluding in part that the trial court was correct in ruling that Code Civ. Proc. § 410.42 controlled and because real party was entitled to file suit under the terms of the subcontract agreement, it did not need to reach the federal preemption issue (144 Cal. App. 4th 1073, 1077, 1086) . Petitioner contended that the arbitration provisions of the agreement are severable and enforceable even if the out-of-state mediation provisions were void. Thus, they contended real party was still obligated to arbitrate in Nevada due to its failure to satisfy the contractual mediation requirements. The court of appeal disagreed, beginning by rejecting the contention that Section 410.42 voided the mediation provisions in their entirety (144 Cal. App. 4th 1073, 1084) . The court discussed the doctrine of severability of illegal contract terms in general, noting that courts must have the capacity to cure the unlawful contract through severance or restriction of the offending clause. Courts look to the various purposes of the contract. If the central purpose of the contract is tainted with illegality, then the contract as a whole cannot be enforced. If the illegality is collateral to the main purpose of the contract, and the illegal provision can be extirpated from the contract by means of severance or restriction, then severance and restriction are appropriate. Here, the court felt the interests of justice were best served by severing only the portion of the contract that violated Section 410.42--the requirement that mediation must take place in Nevada. That provision was clearly collateral to the main purpose of the agreement and easily severed from the remainder of the provisions that deal with mediation. In addition, severing only the requirement that mediation take place in Nevada would prevent petitioners from gaining undeserved benefit as a result of voiding all the mediation provisions (144 Cal. App. 4th 1073, 1085) . Regarding whether real party had to arbitrate its dispute in Nevada once the unlawful portion of the mediation provisions were severed from the subcontract agreement, the court focused no the language of Paragraph 11.3.1 that any dispute between the contractor and subcontractor "shall be submitted to mediation ... before resorting to Arbitration or litigation as discussed below ... ." and that "mediation is an express condition precedent to the hearing of any arbitration ... ." The contract did not state that mediation was a condition precedent to litigation, but provided that a party who resorts to arbitration or court action without first attempting to resolve the matter through mediation, in the discretion of the arbitrator or judge, is not entitled to recover its attorney's fees and costs. The record was not in dispute and supported the trial court's finding that petitioners failed to respond to real party's request for mediation when given the opportunity. Thus, under the express terms of paragraph 11.3.1, neither party could request, or force, arbitration in Nevada or anywhere else (144 Cal. App. 4th 1073, 1085) . In light of real party's offer to stay court proceedings in order to proceed with mediation or arbitration in California, the court would not say the real party violated the timing terms of the subcontract agreement (144 Cal. App. 4th 1073, 1085).

[f] Only Class Representative Currently Before Court Did Not Sign Arbitration Agreement

Lee v. Southern California Univ. for Professional Studies (2007) 148 Cal. App. 4th 782, 56 Cal. Rptr. 3d 134 , was a lawsuit by a student who had enrolled at defendant and been unable to complete her courses because of illness. Defendant informed plaintiff that she was not making satisfactory academic progress and was being administratively withdrawn, but refused to refund her tuition. After administrative procedures at the Bureau for Private Postsecondary and Vocational Education (the Bureau)--part of the California Department of Consumer Affairs, by which defendant was regulated--found defendant was required to use the statutory formula for refunds, plaintiff filed suit alleging violations of the Consumer Legal Remedies Act (CLRA: Civ. Code § 1750 et seq.) and the unfair competition law (UCL: Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq.). She sought only injunctive relief and filed the case as a putative class action under the CLRA, seeking to represent a class she described as "all adult student consumers who enrolled in and paid the tuition charged for the materials and services supplied in a course program with SCUPS and who subsequently either voluntarily withdrew or were administratively withdrawn by SCUPS and who did not receive a refund of their paid tuition from SCUPS upon their dismissal." Defendant claimed that 519 students had been dropped or dismissed from its program during a four-year period, and of those 408 had signed enrollment agreements containing arbitration clauses. The remaining 111, including plaintiff, signed enrollment agreements that did not include arbitration clauses. Defendant moved to compel arbitration. The trial court denied the motion. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, finding no ground for compelling arbitration when the only plaintiff then before the court never agreed to arbitrate her claims. The court said that the question of whether plaintiff was an adequate class representative for those who did, and all other matters pertaining to whether the action was appropriate for class treatment, were issues for the trial court to decide when plaintiff moved to certify the class (148 Cal. App. 4th 782, 784, 788-789) . Defendant offered no authority directly on point, but relied on basic principles favoring arbitration. The court of appeal disagreed for several reasons, the most fundamental being that arbitration requires consent; the parties must mutually agree to resolve their disputes in an alternate forum. The strong public policy in favor of arbitration does not extend to those who are not parties to an arbitration agreement, and a party cannot be compelled to arbitrate a dispute that he has not agreed to resolve by arbitration. It may be that when plaintiff moves to certify the class she will narrow it to those who did not sign arbitration agreements (148 Cal. App. 4th 782, 786) . Presently, the only plaintiff before the court was Lee, she was not bound by an arbitration agreement; and therefore could not be compelled to arbitrate (148 Cal. App. 4th 782, 787-788) . The portion of the opinion addressing the arbitrability of injunctive relief under the CLRA and the UCL is discussed at § 20A.44[3][a].

[g] Acknowledgement of Receipt Is Not Agreement to Arbitrate

Mitri v. Arnel Management Co*. (2007) 157 Cal. App. 4th 1164, 69 Cal. Rptr. 3d 223* , involved claims of sexual harassment by two former employees of defendant. Defendants filed a motion to compel arbitration on the ground plaintiffs had each signed a binding arbitration agreement. The trial court denied the motion based on defendants' failure to prove the existence of any agreement to arbitrate. Defendants appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, because defendants did not produce any evidence of signed arbitration agreements (157 Cal. App. 4th 1164, 1173-1174) . The employee handbook stated that as a condition of employment, all employees were required to sign an arbitration agreement and would be provided a copy of their signed arbitration agreement. Defendant contended the handbook was sufficient evidence of an agreement to arbitrate. The court reviewed the principles of mutual assent and found no evidence that either plaintiff ever consented to binding arbitration of claims arising out of the employment relationship (157 Cal. App. 4th 1164, 1170-1171) . Nor would an agreement be implied based on the fact that plaintiffs received a copy of the agreement and continued to work after they received those copies (157 Cal. App. 4th 1164, 1171-1172) . While both plaintiffs' personnel files contained acknowledgements of receipt of the handbook, neither contained a signed arbitration agreement. Those could not provide the basis for a binding election to arbitrate (157 Cal. App. 4th 1164, 1173) .

[h] Respondent Will Be Entitled to Attorney's Fees and Costs

Plaintiff, general contractor, in Otay River Constructors v. San Diego Expressway (2007) 158 Cal. App. 4th 796, 70

Cal. Rptr. 3d 434 , entered into three contracts with defendant, each of which included a dispute resolution provision. Two required binding arbitration; one allowed for litigation. Plaintiff initiated two arbitration proceedings against defendant claiming that the disputes arose under one of the agreements that required arbitration. Defendant denied the claims; and plaintiff petitioned to compel arbitration. Defendant claimed the dispute was not one that was required to be arbitrated. The trial court agreed with defendant and denied the motion to compel arbitration. Plaintiff did not appeal that denial. Defendant later moved for its costs and attorney's fees, claiming it was the prevailing party on the contract because it obtained a final order denying the petition to compel arbitration. After bifurcating the issue of entitlement to attorney fees and costs from the issue of the amount of any award, the trial court denied the motion on the ground defendant was not a prevailing party because the parties contemplated additional litigation. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, finding both that an order denying a request for costs and attorney fees under these circumstances is appealable as a special order after final judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 1294(e)] and that a party who succeeds in obtaining an order denying the petition to compel arbitration is a prevailing party in the action on the contract even though the merits of the parties' underlying contractual disputes have not yet been resolved (158 Cal. App. 4th 796, 799-800, 809) . The court of appeal cited Code Civ. Proc. § 1293.2, which requires the court to award costs in any judicial proceeding under Code Civ. Proc. § 1280 et seq. as provided in Code Civ. Proc. § 1021 et seq. and Code Civ. Proc. § 1033.5(a)(10)(A), which provides that attorney's fees authorized by contract are recoverable as an item of costs. A petition to compel arbitration is a judicial proceeding covered by this provision (158 Cal. App. 4th 796, 805) . The court then discussed Civ. Code § 1717, which governs awards of attorney's fees based on a contract and authorizes an award of attorney's fees to a prevailing party in any action on a contract to enforce that contract if the contract provides for an award of attorney's fees. The prevailing party is the one who recovers greater relief and shall be determined by the court (158 Cal. App. 4th 796, 806) . Plaintiff argued that defendant could not be a prevailing party because it obtained only an interim procedural victory, but cited no persuasive authority supporting that contention. The court of appeal disagreed, noting that courts have awarded attorney fees to a party obtaining an appealable order or judgment in a discrete legal proceeding even though the underlying litigation on the merits was not final. The cases relied on by plaintiff were distinguishable in that none involved the final resolution of a discrete legal proceeding (158 Cal. App. 4th 796, 807) . The merits of the claims sought to be arbitrated were not at issue in the court proceedings to compel arbitration and the fact that the parties would probably pursue those claims in another action did not lessen defendant's victory in the discrete legal proceeding (158 Cal. App. 4th 796, 808) . The court of appeal reversed and remanded the matter to the trial court with directions to conduct further proceedings to determine defendant's reasonable attorney fees and costs incurred in connection with the petition to compel arbitration and the appeal (158 Cal. App. 4th 796, 809) .

[i] Petitioner Did Not Allege Existence of Agreement to Arbitrate

Plaintiffs in Brodke v. Alphatec Spine, Inc*. (2008) 160 Cal. App. 4th 1569, 73 Cal. Rptr. 3d 554* , were four orthopedic surgeons. They sued Alphatec Spine Inc. and other defendants for, among other things, breach of contract and fraud. Plaintiffs alleged they entered into four identical written contracts with Alphatec, in which each promised to make reasonable best efforts to develop a next generation pedicle screw and hook system. In return, Alphatec agreed to pay each plaintiff a 1.5 percent royalty on net sales of all new products developed by plaintiffs and Alphatec. Plaintiffs further allege they created a "next generation" product, but Alphatec terminated the agreements, filed patent applications for the product they created, and began selling the product without paying them royalties. One of the contracts was attached to the complaint and contained an arbitration clause. Defendant, in petitioning to compel arbitration did not actually allege the existence of an arbitration agreement, but alleged that plaintiffs had alleged the existence of "alleged agreements" to arbitrate. Specifically, defendant alleged "[g]ood cause exists for granting [the] Petition because the terms of the alleged Agreements that are at the heart of the allegations of this action, and which Plaintiffs affirmatively allege, compel arbitration of any disputes under the Agreements." Defendants did not themselves affirmatively allege the existence of arbitration agreements and offered no evidence of any. Their evidence consisted solely of counsel's declaration attaching a copy of plaintiffs' complaint, which in turn attached a copy of the Brodke agreement. For their own part, defendants contested the existence of the agreements with plaintiffs, but for purposes of the petition to compel arbitration only, relied on plaintiffs' allegations. The trial court granted defendants' petition to compel arbitration and plaintiffs petitioned for a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal issued an alternative writ of mandate directing the trial court to set aside and vacate its order granting the petition and to enter a new order denying the petition because it failed to comply with Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2. The trial court complied with the writ; the court of appeal discharged the alternative writ and summarily denied the petition as moot. Defendants timely appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed (160 Cal. App. 4th 1569, 1571, 1578) . The court set forth the portions of Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2 that recite "On petition of a party to an arbitration agreement alleging the existence of a written agreement to arbitrate a controversy and that a party thereto refuses to arbitrate such controversy, the court shall order the petitioner and the respondent to arbitrate the controversy if it determines that an agreement to arbitrate the controversy exists, unless it determines" there is a defense to enforcing the agreement. It is well settled that a proceeding to compel arbitration is in essence a suit in equity to compel specific performance of a contract. Thus, a party to an agreement to arbitrate may not bring an action to compel specific performance of the arbitration provision until he or she can allege the existence of that agreement. Here, defendants did not affirmatively allege the existence of a written agreement to arbitrate. They did the opposite. They contested the existence or validity of any agreements with plaintiffs. Defendants failed to satisfy the most basic statutory prerequisite to granting the petition--to allege the existence of a written agreement to arbitrate (160 Cal. App. 4th 1569, 1574) . Defendants offered several excused for their failure to allege the existence of an arbitration agreement, none of which the court of appeal found to have any merit (160 Cal. App. 4th 1569, 1575-1577) . The court distinguished this situation from that involved in St. Agnes Medical Center v. Pacificare of California (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 1187, 1199, 8 Cal. Rptr. 3d 517, 82 P.3d 727 (St. Agnes, discussed at § 20.81[3][a] which upheld the right to move to compel arbitration while at the same time denying the existence of the contracts containing the arbitration clause. St. Agnes involved allegations that the contract was void ab initio due to an event transpiring after its effective date. Neither party denied its knowing and voluntary agreement to the contract or the terms it contained. Here defendants claim there were no written agreements with plaintiffs. The rule in St. Agnes applies where a party challenges the validity of a contract, not its very existence. It does not apply when, as here, the moving party claims it never entered into a contract (160 Cal. App. 4th 1569, 1576) . A party moving to compel arbitration is not entitled to proceed with their proof of an agreement to arbitrate without first alleging the existence of that agreement. Nor is there a public policy which would compel the enforcement of a contract on behalf of a party who denies the very existence of the contract sought to be enforced. The court of appeal concluded that because defendants have not met their pleading burden under Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2, the court properly denied their petition to compel arbitration (160 Cal. App. 4th 1569, 1577) .

[j] Statute Mandating Arbitration Is Unconstitutional

The court in County of Sonoma v. Superior Court (2009) 173 Cal. App. 4th 322, 93 Cal. Rptr. 3d 39 , ruled that Code Civ. Proc. § 1299 et seq., added by Stats. 2003, ch. 877, and requiring arbitration of firefighters' and public safety officers' wages when impasse occurs during contract negotiations, but providing for a local governmental veto of the arbitration award, is unconstitutional grant of authority delegated local jurisdictions by Cal. Const. art. XI, § 1(b), to compensate their employees and impermissibly delegates to the arbitration panel the power to interfere with county money and to perform municipal functions in violation of Cal Const. art. XI, § 11(a). On that basis, the court refused to compel arbitration under the statute (173 Cal. App. 4th 322, 346-347, 355) .

[k] Arbitration Agreement Was Not Signed By Necessary Parties

Fagelbaum & Heller LLP v. Smylie (2009) 174 Cal. App. 4th 1351, 1365, 95 Cal. Rptr. 3d 252 is discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.85[3][b].

[l] Attorney at Law Did Not Have Authority to Bind Client and Client Did Not Ratify or Consent to

Agreement

In Toal v. Tardif (2009) 178 Cal. App. 4th 1208, 101 Cal. Rptr. 3d 97 , defendant home sellers appealed a judgment of the Superior Court of Orange County, California, which confirmed an arbitration award in favor of plaintiff buyers in their action for breach of contract, negligence, misrepresentation, and negligent misrepresentation. Each party's attorney had signed a stipulation to resolve the dispute through private arbitration. The court of appeal reversed, noting that in the absence of express authorization of counsel to sign a binding contract, a client is bound by an arbitration agreement signed by his or her counsel only if the client consented to or ratified the agreement. An attorney at law, merely by virtue of his or her employment as such, has no apparent authority to bind a client to an agreement for arbitration. When a client engages an attorney to litigate in a judicial forum, the client has a right to be consulted, and the client's consent obtained, before the dispute is shifted to another, and quite different, forum (178 Cal. App. 4th 1208, 1221 & n.9). Lacking the signature of the adverse party on the contract to arbitrate, the award's proponent must provide additional substantiation of the agreement sufficient to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the opposing party expressly authorized counsel to sign on his or her behalf, or evidence the opposing party ratified the unauthorized arbitration contract. The trial court erred by granting plaintiffs' petition to confirm the award without determining whether defendants consented to or ratified the arbitration agreement (178 Cal. App. 4th 1208, 1223) . Accordingly, the court of appeal remanded for hearing on the issue of consent or ratification by the defendant (178 Cal. App. 4th 1208, 1224) . The portion of the opinion and relevant facts dealing with the issue of raising lack of attorney authority after arbitration has reached an award is discussed in Ch. 20C, Arbitration: Confirming, Correcting, or Vacating the Award, § 20C.150[1][B], [3][b].

[m] Petition Did Not Plead and Prove Request or Demand for Arbitration Pursuant to and Under Terms of Agreement

Mansouri v. Superior Court (2010) 181 Cal. App. 4th 633, 104 Cal. Rptr. 3d 824 , involved an answer to a petition to compel arbitration asserting that the petitioner never requested arbitration in accordance with the terms of the agreement. The court noted that Legislature plainly intended Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2 to provide a procedural device for enforcing the parties' written arbitration agreement if one or more of the parties does not comply with the agreement to arbitrate. The only reasonable construction of that statute is to require for a petition to compel arbitration the pleading and proof of a request or demand by one party to the other party or parties for arbitration of such controversy pursuant to and under the terms of their written arbitration agreement. Therefore, a demand for single-arbitrator arbitration under the parties' agreement, which called for three arbitrators, was not valid and the petition to compel arbitration was denied [181 Cal. App. 4th 633, 642) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Controversy Not to Be Arbitrated If Not Covered by Arbitration Agreement

Valencia v. Smyth (2010) 185 Cal. App. 4th 153, 110 Cal. Rptr. 3d 180 , turned on the choice of law clause in the arbitration agreement. It called for the application of procedures under the California Code of Civil Procedure, but interpretation of the agreement under the Federal Arbitration Act (FAA). The court of appeals, citing authority to the effect that the FAA does not prevent the enforcement of agreements to arbitrate under different rules than those set forth in the act itself, noted that the CAA and the FAA employ the same rules of contract interpretation anyway, in that the FAA obligates federal courts to apply state law when interpreting an arbitration clause. Interpreting the agreement under the plain meaning rule applicable under the FAA, the court ruled that given that Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2 is in the Code of Civil Procedure, it applies. Applying Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c) to the facts of the case, the court affirmed the trial court's exercise of discretion to stay the arbitration and consolidate the matter in the trial court.

Mundi v. Union Sec. Life Ins. Co. (9th Cir. 2009) 555 F.3d 1042 , affirmed a district court order denying defendant-insurance company's motion to compel arbitration in plaintiff's survivor's action. The basis for the defendant's motion was an arbitration clause in a loan agreement concerning the decedent's financing of a purchase of real estate, to which the defendant was not a party. Defendant sought arbitration of its dispute with plaintiff under a policy issued by the defendant covering the decedent's life. In addressing the merits of the motion, the court agreed that the face of the loan agreement indicated that the dispute between plaintiff and defendant was not within the scope of the arbitration provision, in that any disagreement between the borrower and a third party is simply not within the scope of the arbitration agreement (555 F.3d 1042, 1045) . Therefore, arbitration could not be compelled on the basis of equitable estoppel because plaintiff's claim that defendant breached the policy was not intertwined with the contract providing for arbitration or on the basis that plaintiff's claim arise out of or related directly to the loan agreement (555 F.3d 1042, 1046-1047) .

In Titan Group, Inc. v. Sonoma County Sanitation Dist. (1985) 164 Cal. App. 3d 1122, 211 Cal. Rptr. 62 , the court of appeal held that arbitration was not required by a construction contract which provided that disputes would be decided by arbitration if the parties mutually agreed or by trial in a court of competent jurisdiction. The provision for arbitration if the parties "mutually agree" was meaningless, since the parties could agree to arbitrate without this clause. The contract also contained a clause stating that controversies "may be subject to the decision of some competent person" to be agreed on by the parties, and provided a procedure to choose arbitrators if the parties couldn't agree on a referee. The court held that this provision only provided a procedure for arbitration in the event the parties agreed to arbitrate. Additionally, the clause did not waive the right to a jury trial, as such a waiver should appear in clear and unmistakable form (164 Cal. App. 3d 1122, 1127-1129) .

[b] Inability to Compel Arbitration of Issue Not Required by Agreement or Statute to Be Arbitrated

In a case governed by the Federal Arbitration Act (FAA), 9 U.S.C. § 1 et seq., the California court of appeals in Valentine Capital Asset Management, Inc. v. Agahi (2009) 174 Cal. App. 4th 606, 94 Cal. Rptr. 3d 526 , ruled that while doubts concerning the scope of arbitrable issues must be construed in favor of arbitration, neither the FAA nor public policy requires parties to arbitrate issues that they have not agreed to arbitrate. The policy under federal and California law favoring the arbitration of disputes, which cannot be used to compel arbitration of disputes that are plainly outside the scope of the arbitration agreement, did not relieve former employees of an investment advisor of the burden to provide evidence from which a court might infer that the work they allegedly performed, the trade secrets they allegedly misappropriated, the use to which they allegedly put those trade secrets, or the parties' alleged defamation of each other, arose out of a party's activities as an associated person of a Financial Industry Regulatory Authority (FINRA) member. Due to the lack of that evidence on the record in the appeal, the parties' claims were not subject to arbitration under FINRA Rule 13200 (174 Cal. App. 4th 606, 627) .

The Second District, Division Seven court of appeal reversed the trial court's denial of petition to compel arbitration in Compulink Mgmt. Ctr., Inc. v. St. Paul Fire and Marine Ins. Co. (2008) 169 Cal. App. 4th 289, 87 Cal. Rptr. 3d 72 . The reviewing court disagreed with the trial court about whether any of plaintiff's claims for breach of contract and implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing were within the scope of mandatory arbitration under Civ. Code § 2860(c). While the court of appeals agreed that claims of bad faith took those claims out of the statute's mandate (169 Cal. App. 4th 289, 300), it overruled the trial court in holding that any contested issues concerning the amount of Cumis attorney's fees allegedly owed are subject to mandatory arbitration of actions filed in California courts (169 Cal. App. 4th 289, 298) under the statute (169 Cal. App. 4th 289, 300) . Noting that the statute does not contain an exception for fee disputes in cases where other claims or issues also are alleged, the court refused to exempt from arbitration Cumis fee disputes that are coupled with additional bad faith claims (169 Cal. App. 4th 289, 296-297) . In that respect, the ruling expressly disagreed with the decision of the Second District, Division Four in Fireman's Fund v. Yunesi, discussed below (169 Cal. App. 4th 289, 299, 300) .

Plaintiff insured law firm in Gray Cary Ware & Freidenrich v. Vigilant Insurance Co. (2004) 114 Cal. App. 4th 1185, 8 Cal. Rptr. 3d 475 undertook to defend themselves in an action in which one of their investigators was also named as defendant. Defendant Vigilant Insurance agreed to defend the firm under a reservation of rights, which triggered a conflict and entitled plaintiff to independent (Cumis) counsel under Civ. Code § 2860. Plaintiff decided to defend itself and Vigilant approved. Plaintiff deemed their investigator also needed independent counsel. Without consulting or informing Vigilant, plaintiff paid the legal fees for an independent third party counsel to represent the investigator. When plaintiff sought to recover fees for the investigator's defense from Vigilant, Vigilant denied the claim on the ground the investigator was not an employee of the firm and thus not covered under the policy. Vigilant also refused plaintiff's request to arbitrate the matter under Civ. Code § 2860(c). Plaintiff moved to compel arbitration. The motion was denied, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the denial. Both parties agreed that the investigator's attorney's fees and litigation expenses were not covered under the policy. For defendant, that was enough to support denial of the motion to compel arbitration under Civ. Code § 2860(c). However, plaintiff reasoned that as they were Cumis counsel, Civ. Code § 2860(c) encompassed any defense costs they incurred, which included the attorney's fees for the investigator based on their reasonable determination that their own defense necessarily included defense of one alleged to be their agent. Civ. Code § 2860(c) does not define "attorney fees." The court of appeal concluded that although an insurer must pay both Cumis attorney fees and Cumis defense expenses, Civ. Code § 2860(c) does not require arbitration of Cumis counsel's defense expenses (114 Cal. App. 4th 1185, 1192) .

Mayhew v. Benninghoff (1997) 53 Cal. App. 4th 1365, 62 Cal. Rptr. 2d 27 , was an action by a client against an attorney for conversion, breach of fiduciary duty, and to impose a constructive trust on some $607,000 plaintiff had entrusted to defendant in connection with a side business agreement. Attorney sought to compel arbitration under a 1992 retainer agreement that provided for arbitration of any controversy arising out of or related to the petitioner's engagement for legal matters. Plaintiff opposed the petition, and it was denied. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that defendant could not rely on the arbitration clause in the retainer agreement to require arbitration of disputes arising out of a business transaction with plaintiff involving the transfer of over half a million dollars, whether or not they had an attorney-client relation ship concerning other matters. The retainer agreement does not explain what it covers, but the court of appeal found plaintiff's explanation that he expected it only to cover defendant's legal representation for plaintiff's divorce reasonable (53 Cal. App. 4th 1365, 1370) . A party cannot be compelled to arbitrate a dispute that it has not elected to submit to arbitration. Despite California's strong public policy favoring arbitration of fee disputes, the court declined to compel arbitration of litigation that went far beyond the amount of legal fees or hourly billing rates (53 Cal. App. 4th 1365, 1371-1372) .

Fireman's Fund v. Younesi (1996) 48 Cal. App. 4th 451, 55 Cal. Rptr. 2d 671 , arose out of a dispute over "Cumis counsel" fees under Civ. Code § 2860(c). After defendant had served in that capacity for over two years, and plaintiff had paid the bills as submitted, plaintiff audited the account, and sued for $160,000 alleging fraud, duplicate and excessive billings, negligence, conversion, and other causes of action. Defendant filed a motion to compel arbitration under Civ. Code § 2860(c), which provides that any dispute concerning "Cumis counsel's" fees should be decided by mandatory arbitration. The trial court denied the motion. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the denial of the motion to compel arbitration. The case involved numerous causes of action, including fraud and malpractice, which are not subject to arbitration under Civ. Code § 2860(c). The case involved more than a billing dispute. Further, plaintiff would be entitled to a jury trial on the fraud claims. Thus, Civ. Code § 2860(c) was not broad enough to compel arbitration of those claims (48 Cal. App. 4th 451, 457-459) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20A ARBITRATION: RESISTING
PART II. FORMS
A. General Principles Relating to Resisting Arbitration

2-20A California Points & Authorities § 20A.11

§ 20A.11 Possibility of Conflicting Ruling by Court on Common Issue of Law or Fact

[1] FORM

THE PETITION TO COMPEL ARBITRATION SHOULD BE DENIED BECAUSE _____ [name] IS ALSO A PARTY TO A PENDING COURT _____ [ACTION or SPECIAL PROCEEDING] WITH A THIRD PARTY, ARISING OUT OF _____ [THE SAME TRANSACTION or A SERIES OF RELATED TRANSACTIONS], AND THERE IS A POSSIBILITY OF CONFLICTING RULINGS ON A COMMON ISSUE OF LAW OR FACT.

A. Party to Arbitration Agreement Is Also Party in Pending Court Action and Conflicting Rulings on Common Issue Are Possible. Arbitration of a controversy should not be ordered if a party to the arbitration agreement is also a party to a pending court action or special proceeding with a third party, arising out of the same transaction or series of related transactions, and there is a possibility of conflicting rulings on a common issue of law or fact (Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c); Best Interiors, Inc. v. Millie and Severson, Inc. (2008) 161 Cal. App. 4th 1320, 1329-1330, 75 Cal. Rptr. 3d 1 ; Whaley v. Sony Computer Entertainment America, Inc. (2004) 121 Cal. App. 4th 479, 485-486, 17 Cal. Rptr. 3d 88 ; Henry v. Alcove Investment, Inc. (1991) 233 Cal. App. 3d 94, 284 Cal. Rptr. 255 ; C.V. Starr & Co. v. Boston Reinsurance Corp. (1987) 190 Cal. App. 3d 1637, 1641, 236 Cal. Rptr. 167).

[Optional] B. Application of Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2 Is Not Preempted by Federal Arbitration Act. In a dispute to which the Federal Arbitration Action applies, and which arises under a contract providing for arbitration in accordance with California law, the Federal Arbitration Act does not preempt the application of Code of Civil Procedure Section 1281.2 to stay arbitration pending the outcome of related litigation involving third parties (Volt Information Sciences v. Board of Trustees (1989) 489 U.S. 468, 476-479, 109 S. Ct. 1248, 103 L. Ed. 2d 488 ; Cronus Investments, Inc. v. Concierge Services (2005) 35 Cal. 4th 376, 384, 25 Cal. Rptr. 3d 540, 107 P.3d 217 ; Best Interiors, Inc. v. Millie and Severson, Inc. (2008) 161 Cal. App. 4th 1320, 1325, 75 Cal. Rptr. 3d 1 ; Mount Diablo Medical Center v. Health Net of California, Inc. (2002) 101 Cal. App. 4th 711, 714, 726-727, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 607 ; Henry v. Alcove Investment, Inc. (1991) 233 Cal. App. 3d 94, 284 Cal. Rptr. 255).

[Optional] C. Party Invoking Code of Civil Procedure Section 1281.2(c) Need Not Be Party to Litigation. There is no requirement that a party resisting arbitration by invoking Code of Civil Procedure Section 1281.2(c) to resist arbitration be a party to the litigation involving the third party (who has not signed the arbitration agreement). Neither the plain language of the statute nor its legislative history imposes such a requirement. It is enough that the party resisting arbitration be a party to the transaction that gave rise to the controversy being litigated and that there is a possibility of conflicting rulings on common issues in the litigation and in any arbitration proceeding (Whaley v. Sony Computer Entertainment America, Inc. (2004) 121 Cal. App. 4th 479, 485-486, 488, 17 Cal. Rptr. 3d 88).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to a petition to compel arbitration when a party to the arbitration agreement is also a party to a pending court action or special proceeding with a third party, arising out of the same transaction or series of related transactions, and there is a possibility of conflicting rulings on a common issue of law or fact [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c)]. Paragraph A states the general rule for application of Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c). Paragraph B is only necessary when the dispute would otherwise be governed by the Federal Arbitration Act (9 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.). Although the authorities cited in Paragraph B. involved arbitration agreements with choice of law provisions that indicated California law should be applicable, unless some other law is specified as applicable, California law would automatically apply, and a choice of California law clause should not be necessary for Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c) to be part of the law under which a California court determines whether arbitration should be ordered. Optional Paragraph C is for use to anticipate or rebut the contention that Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c) can only be invoked by a party to the arbitration agreement who is also a party to the related litigation against the third party (who did not sign the arbitration agreement).

This form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in opposition to one seeking to compel arbitration [see § 20A.10].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form, and in the other forms combined with this form, with the facts of his or her case. For example, argument should indicate the nature of the pending action, how that action deals with the same transaction, and how a conflicting ruling on a common issue of law or fact is possible.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a form of response to a petition to compel arbitration that may be supported by this memorandum, as well as a procedural checklist, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 32, Contractual Arbitration: Agreements and Compelling Arbitration (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For memoranda to combine with this form, regarding other matters that the opposition may need to address, see §§ 20A.12, 20A.20 et seq., 20A.30 et seq., 20A.40 et seq., 20A.60 et seq., and 20A.80 et seq.

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

This form may be opposed by Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.10[1], Optional Paragraph L, when the arbitration agreement clearly provides that the parties have adopted both the procedural and substantive provisions of the Federal Arbitration Act to govern their arbitration.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Party to Arbitration Agreement Is Also Party in Pending Court Action and Conflicting Rulings on Common Issue Are Possible

Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c) provides that a court is not required to compel arbitration if it determines that a party to the arbitration agreement is also a party to a pending court action or special proceeding with a third party arising out of the same transaction or series of transactions and there is a possibility of conflicting rulings on a common issue of law or facts. For purposes of Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2, a pending court action or special proceeding includes an action or proceeding initiated by the party refusing to arbitrate after the petition to compel arbitration has been filed, but on or before the date of the hearing of the petition [Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2]. Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c) is not applicable to an agreement to arbitrate disputes regarding the professional negligence of a health care provider made pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1295 [Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c)].

Best Interiors, Inc. v. Millie and Severson, Inc*. (2008) 161 Cal. App. 4th 1320, 75Cal. Rptr. 3d 1* , was a dispute between an owner, general contractor and a subcontractor. The job was completed, but the subcontractor claimed that more than $ 1.2 million of the contract price remained unpaid; that additional construction costs were owed because of various disruptions to the construction schedule; and that the reasonable value of materials and services it actually furnished for which it had not been paid was more than $ 2 million. The subcontractor sued the contractor, the owner, and two building inspectors, alleged that the contractor's failure to manage, coordinate, and schedule the work properly interfered with, hindered, and delayed it's work on the project, significantly increasing the nature, scope, and duration. As to the inspectors, who were hired by the owner, plaintiff alleged that they conducted improper and unnecessary inspections, which disrupted and hindered its work. Based on arbitration clauses in the subcontract and in the prime contract between the contractor and the owner, the contractor petitioned to compel arbitration of the dispute with plaintiff and to stay plaintiff's lawsuit pending arbitration. Plaintiff opposed the petition, arguing that the inspectors, both of whom had filed cross-complaints, could not be compelled to arbitrate; that arbitration would subject it to a risk of inconsistent results; and that the court had authority under Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2 to refuse to enforce the arbitration clause. The trial court initially granted the petition. However, after two more rounds of briefing and hearings, the trial court ending by denying the petition to compel arbitration. Defendants appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, finding no abuse of discretion (161 Cal. App. 4th 1320, 1322, 1325, 1331) . The contractor argued that the Federal Arbitration Act (FAA; 9 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.) governed and that therefore the court had no authority to deny arbitration, and even if it did have authority, there was no possibility of conflicting rulings and the court should have ordered arbitration. The FAA governs contracts in interstate commerce, but the FAA does not preempt Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2 when the parties have agreed that their arbitration agreement will be governed by the law of California (161 Cal. App. 4th 1320, 1325) . The subcontract did not contain a choice-of-law provision but stated that any dispute resolution procedure in the prime contract was incorporated in the subcontract and would apply to any disputes arising under the subcontract (161 Cal. App. 4th 1320, 1326) . The prime contract provided that it would be governed by the law of the place where the project was located. Thus, the parties had agreed that California law would govern (161 Cal. App. 4th 1320, 1327) . The contractor advanced three reasons why the prime contract's choice of law provision did not control. The court of appeal did not find any of them to have merit (161 Cal. App. 4th 1320, 1328-1329) . The court then discussed Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c), noting that it gives the trial court the discretion to refuse to enforce an arbitration agreement if a party to the agreement is also a party to a pending court case with a third party and there is a possibility of conflicting rulings on a common issue of law or fact (161 Cal. App. 4th 1320, 1329) . The court reviewed the reasons given by the trial court for concluding that the action should be litigated in a single forum, including the contested issue of whether the inspectors were agents of the owner (161 Cal. App. 4th 1320, 1329-1330) . The contractor maintained, however, that there was no possibility of conflicting rulings regarding those issues. The court of appeal pointed out that argument ignored plaintiff's allegation that the improper and illegal inspection activities were carried on with the full knowledge, consent, authorization, or ratification of the contractor, which was in a logical position to know about the inspectors designated to inspect plaintiff's work and to allow inspections and access to the project. The court agreed with plaintiff's assertion that the agency and ratification issues were a central part of its claims against both the contractor and the owner; and plaintiff's claims against the contractor could not be neatly set aside and arbitrated without potentially seriously prejudicing all of the other parties. The court of appeal concluded that the contractor's claim that there was no possibility of conflicting rulings did not survive analysis and that the trial court did not exceed the bounds of reason when it decided, on that basis, to deny the petition to compel arbitration (161 Cal. App. 4th 1320, 1330) .

Whaley v. Sony Computer Entertainment America, Inc. (2004) 121 Cal. App. 4th 479, 17 Cal. Rptr. 3d 88 , is discussed at [c], below.

Henry v. Alcove Investment, Inc. (1991) 233 Cal. App. 3d 94, 284 Cal. Rptr. 255 , was an action by a homeowner against home improvement contractors and the lender that financed the improvements and later foreclosed when plaintiff did not pay the note, which was secured by a trust deed on his home. The complaint alleged that plaintiff was a functional illiterate, that the improvement contracts and loans had been induced by the contractors' (and their agents') fraud, and that plaintiff's signature had been forged or signed to blank contracts and loan documents which were later completed for amounts in excess of those orally agreed. The contractors were alleged to be agents of the lender. The only arbitration clause was in the loan application, to which the contractors and their agents were not parties. The trial court stayed arbitration under Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c).

The court of appeal affirmed, finding sufficient possibility for conflicting rulings on the issues of fraud and agency to stay the arbitration (233 Cal. App. 3d 94).

C.V. Starr & Co. v. Boston Reinsurance Corp. (1987) 190 Cal. App. 3d 1637, 236 Cal. Rptr. 167 , involved a dispute concerning apportionment among reinsurers. In addition to a general professional liability insurance policy, an accounting firm obtained two policies of "excess" professional liability insurance from a different insurance carrier. Simultaneously, that insurance carrier obtained reinsurance from various insurers on each of the policies. Sixteen lawsuits filed against the accounting firm for professional misconduct were settled with payments by the insurers. A dispute then arose among the excess carrier's reinsurers regarding the allocation of its payment. Plaintiff, the excess carrier's underwriting manager and assignee, made the allocation to which the reinsurers of the second policy objected. After an agreement meeting among the reinsurers proved unsuccessful, plaintiff filed suit for breach of the reinsurance contracts and for declaratory relief seeking a judicial determination of the question of allocation among the excess insurers. Two of the 11 reinsurers named as defendants moved to stay or dismiss the lawsuit on the ground that the dispute was subject to arbitration. The trial court deemed the motion as a petition to compel arbitration. Plaintiff opposed the petition, arguing that arbitration was only applicable to one reinsurer, and only under a different type of dispute, and that even if a validarbitration agreement was shown, arbitration should be denied because of the possibility of conflicting rulings. The trial court denied the petition, and two of the reinsurers appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed on the ground that arbitration of the one reinsurer's dispute with plaintiff could lead to conflicting rulings on common issues. The court cited Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c) as authority for its ruling. The court found Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c) applicable because the controversy concerned the proper allocation of the settlement among the 11 reinsurance carriers, only one of which was subject to arbitration. Thus, the remaining allocation disputes would presumably be determined by court action, and the potential for conflicting rulings was readily apparent. Depending on the apportionment of responsibility by the arbitrator and the court independent of each other, plaintiff could either be overindemnified or underindemnified (190 Cal. App. 3d 1637, 1641) . The court did not agree with defendant's argument that the court action could have been stayed until the arbitration was completed and then taken the arbitration award into account when deciding allocation among the others. That would have resulted in giving the arbitrator's decision binding effect on all other reinsurers as well, even though they were not legally bound to arbitrate. The court said that the optimal procedure would be a single proceeding bringing together all the affected parties for an orderly decision on the allocations of each insurer. Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c) allows the court to order intervention or joinder of all parties in a single action or special proceeding (190 Cal. App. 3d 1637, 1642) .

[b] Application of Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2 Is Not Preempted by Federal Arbitration Act

Volt Information Sciences v. Board of Trustees (1989) 489 U.S. 468, 109 S. Ct. 1248, 103 L. Ed. 2d 488 , involved a dispute under a construction contract with a choice of law provision stipulating that the contract was governed by the law of the place of the project, namely California law. Defendant made a formal demand for arbitration. Plaintiff responded by filing an action against defendant in state court alleging fraud and breach of contract and seeking indemnity from two other companies that were involved in the construction project but did not have arbitration agreements with plaintiff. Defendant petitioned to compel arbitration and to stay the litigation, relying on both 9 U.S.C. §§ 3-4 and Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2. Plaintiff opposed the motion on the ground that there were parties necessary for the resolution of the issues who were not party to the arbitration agreement and that to compel arbitration would invite the possibility of conflicting rulings on common issues of law or fact [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c)]. The court denied the motion to compel arbitration and stayed the arbitration proceeding pending the outcome of the litigation. Defendant appealed.

The California Court of Appeal affirmed. That court acknowledged that the parties' contract involved interstate commerce, that therefore the Federal Arbitration Act (9 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.; FAA) was applicable, and that the FAA contained no provision allowing arbitration to be stayed pending resolution of related litigation involving third parties not bound by the arbitration agreement. However, the California Court of Appeal determined that the choice of law provision in the agreement made Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c) applicable and that it was not preempted by the FAA (489 U.S. 468, 471-472) .

The California Supreme Court denied defendant's petition for discretionary review. The U.S. Supreme Court determined that it had appellate jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1257(2) (489 U.S. 468, 473) .

The Supreme Court first rejected defendant's argument that the choice of law provision was invalid and unenforceable as a waiver of the right to compel arbitration. The Court said that 9 U.S.C. § 4 does not confer a right to compel arbitration of any dispute at any time, but only a right to compel arbitration in the manner provided for in the agreement, which in this case meant pursuant to California law, including Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c) (489 U.S. 468, 474-475) .

Next, the Court considered defendant's contention that the choice of law provision violated the settled federal rule that questions of arbitrability must be resolved with a healthy regard for the federal policy favoring arbitration. Again, the Court said, there is no federal policy favoring arbitration under a certain set of procedural rules; the federal policy simply ensures the enforceability of arbitration in accordance with the rules agreed to by the parties (489 U.S. 468, 476) .

Turning to the more specific question of whether application of Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c) was preempted by the FAA, the Court said that the FAA contains no express preemptive provision, nor does it reflect a congressional intent to occupy the entire field of arbitration. However, even though Congress has not completely displaced state regulation of arbitration, state law may nonetheless be preempted to the extent that it actually stands as an obstacle to the accomplishment and execution of the full purposes and objectives of Congress (489 U.S. 468, 477) . The particular state law designated by the parties in their contract will not be preempted and will govern arbitration under the contract unless enforcement of the particular state provision would undermine the goals and policies of the FAA (489 U.S. 468, 477-478) . The goals and policies of the FAA are expressed in its substantive provisions, 9 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2, which establish a federal policy favoring arbitration and enforcement of agreements to arbitrate. 9 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2 are applicable in state courts (489 U.S. 468, 477) . Those goals and policies do not require arbitration when the parties have not agreed to it, nor do they prevent parties who have agreed to arbitrate from excluding certain claims from the scope of their arbitration agreement or from specifying the rules under which their arbitration will be conducted (489 U.S. 468, 478-479) . Thus, the Court concluded that under a contract that provides for arbitration in accordance with California law, Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2 is not in conflict with the policies of the FAA and is therefore not preempted by it (489 U.S. 468, 479) .

Cronus Investments, Inc. v. Concierge Services (2005) 35 Cal. 4th 376, 25 Cal. Rptr. 3d 540, 107 P.3d 217 , involved disputes arising from purchase and sale of a business and related noncompetition clauses. Six agreements and 10 parties (including principals and controlling entities) were involved in the complaint and cross-complaints. Four of the applicable agreements contained arbitration clauses which provided that the agreement(s) would be construed and enforced in accordance with, and governed by, California law, without giving effect to the conflict of lawsprovisions thereof, but that the designation of California law would not be deemed an election to preclude application of the Federal Arbitration Act, if it would be applicable. Plaintiffs moved to compel arbitration and stay the litigation. The trial court found that (1) not all of the causes of action and controversies were subject to arbitration, (2) only three of eight cross-complaints were subject to arbitration, (3) some of the parties were not parties to the arbitration agreements, (4) the lawsuit and the arbitration proceedings contained overlapping issues of law and fact, and denied the motion to compel arbitration, stayed arbitration pending outcome of the litigation, and consolidated the three arbitrable cross-claims with the action for all purposes. Plaintiffs appealed. The court of appeal affirmed. The California Supreme Court granted review.

The California Supreme Court affirmed, finding that in this situation, the Federal Arbitration Act (FAA) did not preempt application of Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c) (35 Cal. 4th 376, 384) . The parties agreed that the contracts at issue involved interstate commerce and thus, fell within the coverage of the FAA. The Court discussed the FAA and Volt Information Sciences v. Board of Trustees (1989) 489 U.S. 468, 109 S. Ct. 1248, 103 L. Ed. 2d 488 (discussed above), noting that the FAA contains no express preemptive provision and does not reflect a congressional intent to occupy the entire field of arbitration. Nevertheless, state law is preempted to the extent that it stands as an obstacle to the accomplishment and execution of the full purposes and objectives of the FAA (35 Cal. 4th 376, 385) . However, there is no federal policy favoring arbitration under a certain set of procedural rules; the federal policy simply ensures the enforceability of arbitration in accordance with the rules agreed to by the parties. The parties seemed to agree that their choice of law provision was broad enough to incorporate the California Arbitration Act (CAA; Code Civ. Proc. § 1280 et seq.), including Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c) and that its explicit reference to enforcement included matters such as whether proceedings to enforce the agreement would occur in court of before an arbitrator (35 Cal. 4th 376, 387) . Under the agreements, application of Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c) would only be nullified if applicable provisions of the FAA were inconsistent with the CAA. The Court noted that the procedural provisions of the FAA, 9 U.S.C. §§ 3 and 4 are only applicable in federal court (35 Cal. 4th 376, 388-390) . Nor does Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c) undermine or frustrate 9 U.S.C. § 2's policy of enforceability of arbitration agreements, but in fact manifestly encourages resort to the arbitral process (35 Cal. 4th 376, 391-392) .

Federal law has not addressed the practical problems that arise in multiparty contractual disputes in which some or all of the contracts at issue include arbitration agreements. California has taken the lead in fashioning a legislative response to this problem by giving courts authority to consolidate or stay arbitration proceedings in order to minimize the potential for contradictory judgments (35 Cal. 4th 376, 391-392) . Unlike the rule at issue in Mastrobuono v. Shearson Lehman Hutton, Inc. (1995) 514 U.S. 52, 115 S. Ct. 1212, 131 L. Ed. 2d 76 , Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c) is an evenhanded law that allows the trial court to stay arbitration proceedings while the concurrent lawsuit proceeds, or to stay the lawsuit while arbitration proceeds to avoid conflicting rulings on common issue of fact and law among the interested parties (35 Cal. 4th 376, 392) . The Court further expressly declined to follow Wolsey, Ltd. v. Foodmaker, Inc. (9th Cir. 1998) 144 F.3d 1205 , in concluding that Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c) governs the allocation of power between alternative tribunals and limits the authority of arbitrator and disapproved of The Energy Group, Inc. v. Liddington (1987) 192 Cal. App. 3d 1520, 238 Cal. Rptr. 202 and Warren-Guthrie v. Health Net (2000) 84 Cal. App. 4th 804, 101 Cal. Rptr. 2d 260 to the extent their holdings were predicated on the conclusion that section 1281.2(c) limits the authority of arbitrators and conflicts with the FAA (35 Cal. 4th 376, 393, n.8). The Court concluded by saying that its opinion did not preclude parties from expressly designating that any arbitration proceeding should move forward under the FAA's procedural provisions rather than under state procedural law, but under the "if it would be applicable" language of these arbitration clauses, the FAA did not bar enforcement of Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c) (35 Cal. 4th 376, 394) .

Best Interiors, Inc. v. Millie and Severson, Inc*. (2008) 161 Cal. App. 4th 1320, 75 Cal. Rptr. 3d 1* , is discussed at [a], above.

The parties in Mount Diablo Medical Center v. Health Net of California, Inc. (2002) 101 Cal. App. 4th 711, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 607 had a fee for service agreement under which Health Net agreed to pay Mount Diablo specified fees for providing health care services to its members. Health Net also had an agreement with Alta Bates Medical Center, which provided services to plan members at prepaid rates. Alta Bates subcontracted its obligations to individual providers and hospitals, including Mount Diablo. Mount Diablo and Alta Bates had a hospital participation agreement under which Mount Diablo agreed to provide covered services at capitated rates to Health Net members who selected the Alta Bates network of providers. Both hospitals had similar agreements with PacificCare. On May 1, 1999, Mount Diablo purported to terminate its agreement with Alta Bates. The controversy is to determine who is responsible and in what amounts for services that Mount Diablo provided to Health Net members between May 1 and December 31, 1999. The complaint contained causes of action against Health Net, Alta Bates, and East Bay Medical Network (EBMN), the processing agent for Alta Bates. The agreement between Mount Diablo and Health Net had an arbitration clause. The Health Net/Alta Bates Agreement and the hospital participation agreement also contain arbitration provisions but no party other than Health Net attempted to resolve any aspect of the controversy through arbitration. In addition to the arbitration clause, the choice of law clause in the Mount Diablo/Health Net agreement provided that the "validity, construction, interpretation and enforcement of this Agreement shall be governed by the laws of the State of California." Health Net petitioned to compel arbitration. Mount Diablo resisted on the ground that Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c) applied and that arbitration would create a risk of rulings that would conflict with rulings in pending litigation involving the other parties. The trial court agreed and denied the petition. Health Net appealed, contending that under Mastrobuono v. Shearson Lehman Hutton, Inc. (1995) 514 U.S. 52, 115 S. Ct. 1212, 131 L. Ed. 2d 76 and Warren-Guthrie v. Health Net (2000) 84 Cal. App. 4th 804, 101 Cal. Rptr. 2d 260 the choice of law clause did not incorporate California procedural law and the situation was therefore governed by the Federal Arbitration Act, which hasno provision to deny arbitration on the basis of related litigation involving third parties.

The court of appeal affirmed, finding the choice of law clause broad enough to incorporate California procedural law, specifically Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c), which is not preempted by the Federal Arbitration Act (101 Cal. App. 4th 711, 714) . The court of appeal first discussed Volt Information Sciences v. Board of Trustees (1989) 489 U.S. 468, 474-479, 109 S. Ct. 1248, 103 L. Ed. 2d 488 , (discussed above) noting that Volt gave its blessing to Code Civ. Proc. §

1281.2(c) allowing parties to structure their arbitration agreements by specifying the rules under which they will arbitrate. Enforcing those rules in accordance with their terms is consistent with the FAA (101 Cal. App. 4th 711, 718) . In Volt though, the U.S. Supreme Court did not interpret the choice of law clause, but felt bound by the California court's interpretation that the parties agreed to arbitrate in accordance with California law. Mastrobuono v. Shearson Lehman Hutton, Inc. (1995) 514 U.S. 52, 115 S. Ct. 1212, 131 L. Ed. 2d 76 (discussed in Ch. 20C, Arbitration: Confirming, Correcting, or Vacating the Award, § 20C.122[3][a]) then raises the question, which California law. Health Net argued that a "generic" choice of law clause is not sufficient to designate California arbitration law in preference to federal arbitration law (101 Cal. App. 4th 711, 719) . The clause at issue in Mastrobuono provided that the entire contract be governed by the laws of the State of New York. New York's decisional law at the time did not allow arbitrators to award punitive damages, so the question became, could the arbitrator award punitive damages under that choice of law clause. The U.S. Supreme Court answered yes, reasoning that to enforce federal policy favoring arbitration, as well as the common law rule construing ambiguous contract language against the drafter, the "laws of the State of New York" should encompass substantive principles that New York courts would apply but not include special rules limiting the authority of arbitrators (101 Cal. App. 4th 711, 720) . The court of appeal noted that Health Net's position was most supported by Wolsey, Ltd. v. Foodmaker, Inc. (9th Cir. 1998) 144 F.3d 1205 (discussed below), which held that when the court has to interpret the choice of law clause at issue, the relevant question is whether Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c) is a "substantive principle that California courts would apply" or a "special rule limiting the authority of arbitrators." Wolsey held that general choice of law clauses do not incorporate state rules that govern allocation of authority between courts and arbitrators and thus, Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c) would not be applicable under such a choice of law clause (101 Cal. App. 4th 711, 721) . The clause at issue in Wolsey provided that the contract "shall be interpreted and construed under the laws of the State of California." The Court of Appeals noted that the choice of law clause here was much broader, providing that the "validity, construction, interpretation and enforcement of this Agreement shall be governed by the laws of the State of California" (101Cal. App. 4th 711, 722) and further disagreed with the implicit determination in Wolsey that Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c) is a "special rule limiting the authority of arbitrators" and preferred the characterization of Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c) in Volt as determining only "the efficient order of proceedings" (101 Cal. App. 4th 711, 726) . The court stated its view was to interpret a choice of law clause like any contract provision and rejected the approach that a choice of law provision is insufficient to incorporate a state's law concerning arbitration unless there is extrinsic evidence of an intent to contract out of the FAA's default regime. The court felt the latter approach required redundancy and lead logically to the conclusion that other provisions would also need to contain redundant choice (101 Cal. App. 4th 711, 722) . Although the choice of law provision here at issue may be "generic" in the sense that it does not mention arbitration or any other specific issue that might become a subject of controversy, it is nonetheless broad, unqualified, and all encompassing in providing that the "validity, construction, interpretation and enforcement of this Agreement shall be governed by the laws of the State of California." The court of appeal said the explicit reference to enforcement reasonably includes such matters as whether proceedings to enforce the agreement shall occur in court of before an arbitrator. Chapter 2 (in which Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c) appears) of Title 9 of Part II of the California Code of Civil Procedure is captioned "Enforcement of Arbitration Agreements". Any interpretation of the choice of law clause to exclude reference to that chapter would be strained at best (101 Cal. App. 4th 711, 722) . The court of appeal contrasted the clauses at issue in Wolsey ("interpreted and construed under the laws of the State of California"), and the provision at issue in Warren-Guthrie v. Health Net (2000) 84 Cal. App. 4th 804, 101 Cal. Rptr. 2d 260 , which provided only that all arbitration "be conducted in accordance with the California Code of Civil Procedure") (101 Cal. App. 4th 711, 723) , and concluded that the choice of law clause at issue clearly required that the decision whether the court should compel compliance with the arbitration provision was a question of enforcement to be resolved under this agreement under California law (101 Cal. App. 4th 711, 724) . Nor is Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c) hostile to enforcement of arbitration agreements or inconsistent with the policy of the FAA to enforce arbitration procedures chosen by the parties (101 Cal. App. 4th 711, 724-726)

The facts of Henry v. Alcove Investment, Inc. (1991) 233 Cal. App. 3d 94, 284 Cal. Rptr. 255 , are set forth under [a], above. Defendant contended that the action could not be stayed under Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c) because credit transactions involving real estate affect interstate commerce and thus the FAA controlled. The court of appeal disagreed, noting that whether a particular transaction affects interstate commerce is question of fact (233 Cal. App. 3d 94). No evidence was presented in the trial court (in fact the issue was first raised on appeal) on the effects of this particular transaction on interstate commerce. Thus, the choice of California law in the deed of trust was operative, and application of Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c) to stay the action was not preempted (233 Cal. App. 3d 94).

[c] Party Invoking Code of Civil Procedure Section 1281.2(c) Need Not Be Party to Litigation

Whaley v. Sony Computer Entertainment America, Inc. (2004) 121 Cal. App. 4th 479, 17 Cal. Rptr. 3d 88 , resulted from defendant's acquisition of all the assets of a company called Red Zone, which developed software. Ryan, Whaley, and Walker all worked for Red Zone and entered into an incentive agreement as part of the purchase of assets. Ryan also wanted his wife to receive incentive compensation. According to plaintiffs' version of the facts, defendant and its vice-president Yoshida agreed that Ryan's wife be placed on the payroll of Red Zone and receive incentive compensation. In April, 2003, Sony filed a complaint against Ryan and his wife for conversion, money had and received, fraud by suppression of fact, and fraud by intentional misrepresentation, alleging that Ryan's wife's placement on the payroll and participation in the incentive agreement were obtained by fraud. Ryan cross-complained for wrongful termination, breach of employment contract, breach of third party beneficiary contract, fraud and deceit, intentional interference with prospective economic advantage, implied indemnity, and negligent misrepresentation. Whaley and Walker filed a separate action against Sony and Yoshida for wrongful termination, for breach of employment contract, breach of incentive agreement, unpaid wages, fraud and deceit, intentional interference with prospective economic advantage, and negligent misrepresentation. Though not specifically alleged, the parties did not dispute that Ryan, Whaley and Walker were each terminated for their involvement in the alleged conspiracy to defraud Sony by arranging to have Ryan's wife placed on the payroll. Sony and Yoshida filed a motion to compel arbitration of the claims asserted by Whaley and Walker based on arbitration clauses in the asset purchase agreement, the incentive agreement, and the employment agreements. Whaley and Walker argued that the court should deny arbitration and consolidate their complaint with Ryan's cross-complaint pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c) because their claims against Sony and Yoshida arose out of the same set of facts as Ryan's cross-complaint and raised the same factual issue: whether Ryan's wife's employment was the result of a fraudulent conspiracy or an agreement between Yoshida, Ryan, Whaley, and Walker. Ryan was not a party to the arbitration agreements and could not be compelled to arbitrate his claims. The trial court denied the motion to compel arbitration. Defendants appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed (121 Cal. App. 4th 479, 481, 489) . Defendants conceded that it was a party to arbitration agreements with Whaley and Walker; that it was also a party to related litigation with Ryan arising out of the same transaction; and that there was a possibility of conflicting rulings on common issues in the arbitration proceedings and the Ryan litigation (121 Cal. App. 4th 479, 485) . However, Sony contended that Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c) is intended solely for the benefit of a party to the arbitration agreement who is also a party to the related litigation against a third party. The court of appeal found this claim to be contrary to the plain language of Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c), which contains no provision stating that it may be invoked only in favor of the party caught "in the middle" between arbitration and litigation. The statute is unambiguous: it allows the trial court to deny a motion to compel arbitration whenever "a party" to the arbitration agreement is also "a party" to litigation with a third party that: (1) arises out of the same transaction or series of related transactions, and (2) presents a possibility of conflicting rulings on a common issue of law or fact. Sony was "a party" to the arbitration agreements and also "a party" to litigation with a third party, Ryan. That satisfied the conditions set forth in the statute. Thus, the trial court had discretion to refuse to compel arbitration in order to avoid the possibility of conflicting rulings (121 Cal. App. 4th 479, 486) . The court of appeal also found unpersuasive Sony's argument that the Legislative history reflected any intent to limit the statute in the manner Sony suggested or that there was any latent ambiguity in the unambiguous language of the statute (121 Cal. App. 4th 479, 486-488) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Party to Arbitration Agreement Is Also Party in Pending Court Action and Conflicting Rulings on

Common Issues Are Possible

Even if arbitration has to be compelled, the possibility of conflicting rulings may require that the arbitration be stayed until the litigation is completed. That was the conclusion of the court of appeal in Pioneer Take Out Corp. v. Bhavsar (1989) 209 Cal. App. 3d 1353, 257 Cal. Rptr. 749 , in reversing the trial court's order denying arbitration. The action was one for unlawful detainer arising out of the termination of a franchisee's lease from the franchisor. The license agreement provided for arbitration but the related lease did not. The franchisee and the franchisor were parties to a pending class action regarding the license agreement; and the grounds for the franchisor's termination of the lease were alleged breaches of the same provisions of the license agreement that were the subject of the class action. The court of appeal said that arbitration of the unlawful detainer action had to be compelled but stayed until resolution of class action in order to avoid conflicting rulings (209 Cal. App. 3d 1353, 1357-1358) . Even though an action for right of possession is normally subject to priority, the breach of lease and the breach of the licensing agreement were inextricably intertwined (209 Cal. App. 3d 1353, 1358) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20A ARBITRATION: RESISTING
PART II. FORMS
A. General Principles Relating to Resisting Arbitration

2-20A California Points & Authorities § 20A.12

§ 20A.12 Court Determines Cases Involving Overlapping Arbitrable and Nonarbitrable Issues

[1] FORM

RESPONDENT CANNOT BE COMPELLED TO ARBITRATE A CONTROVERSY CONCERNING OVERLAPPING ARBITRABLE AND NONARBITRABLE ISSUES BECAUSE UNDER CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE SECTION 1281.2(c) THE COURT HAS THE POWER TO DETERMINE SUCH CASES.

A. Court Determines Controversy Containing Arbitrable and Nonarbitrable Issues. Under Code of Civil Procedure Section 1281.2(c), the trial court has the discretion to order all issues raised in a plaintiff's complaint tried in a court of law when only some of the issues are covered by the arbitration agreement, [unless a decision by arbitration on an arbitrable issue, such as an accounting, can be harmoniously used in the overall litigation]. The trial court's ruling will not be disturbed unless it exceeded the bounds of reason, which it did not do (Fitzhugh v. Granada HealthCare and Rehabilitation Center, LLC. (2007) 150 Cal. App. 4th 469, 475, 58 Cal. Rptr. 3d 585 ; Parker v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp. (1981) 118 Cal. App. 3d 895, 905-906, 173 Cal. Rptr. 639).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to a petition to compel arbitration when both arbitrable and nonarbitrable issues are involved to urge that the court exercise its power under Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c) to determine cases involving overlapping arbitrable and nonarbitrable issues.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in opposition to one seeking to compel arbitration [see § 20A.10].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form, and in the other forms combined with this form, with the facts of his or her case. For example, argument should indicate which issues are arbitrable and which are not under the arbitration agreement and why the trial court should determine the controversy. If relevant to the case in question, argument should also indicate why arbitration on an arbitrable issue cannot be harmoniously used in the overall litigation.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a form of response to a petition to compel arbitration that may be supported by this memorandum, as well as a procedural checklist, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 32, Contractual Arbitration: Agreements and Compelling Arbitration (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For memoranda to combine with this form, regarding other matters that the opposition may need to address, see §§ 20A.20 et seq., 20A.30 et seq., 20A.40 et seq., 20A.60 et seq., and 20A.80 et seq.

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Court Determines Controversy Containing Arbitrable and Nonarbitrable Issues

In Fitzhugh v. Granada HealthCare and Rehabilitation Center, L.L.C*. (2007) 150 Cal. App. 4th 469, 58 Cal. Rptr. 3d 585* , the husband and sons of a patient of defendant sued for elder abuse, fraud, violations of the Patients Bill of Rights (22 Cal. Code Reg. § 72527), and wrongful death, claiming her death resulted from a fall she took while she was a resident of Granada. The complaint named as defendants Granada and Skilled Healthcare Group, Inc., and its wholly owned subsidiary, Skilled Healthcare, LLC, entities alleged to have directed, owned, operated, administered, and/or managed Granada, and the administrator of Granada's facility and an agent or employee of Granada during the decedent's stay at the facility. Defendants petitioned to compel arbitration pursuant to agreements signed by husband as decedent's "legal representative/agent." The agreements expressly reserved decedent's right to file lawsuits in court for violations under Health & Safety Code § 1430 and the Patients Bill of Rights (22 Cal. Code Reg. § 72527). The agreements bound decedent's successors. The petition to compel arbitration was denied on several grounds. The claims for violations pursuant to Health & Safety Code § 1430 and for wrongful death were not subject to arbitration nor were the individual claims of plaintiffs. Thus, the trial court exercised its discretion to deny the petition due to the possibility of conflicting rulings on common issues of law or fact were the claims to proceed in different forums. Defendants appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed (150 Cal. App. 4th 469, 471, 477), noting that it would not consider remanding for a determination of whether husband executed the agreement as decedent's agent because there were other sufficient reasons to affirm the judgment (150 Cal. App. 4th 469, 473) . Defendants did not dispute that each of the arbitration agreements excluded a patient's claims brought pursuant to Health & Safety Code § 1430 and the Patients Bill of Rights (22 Cal. Code Reg. § 72527), but contended those claims did not survive the patient's death. The court of appeal disagreed, citing Code Civ. Proc.§ 377.20(a) for the proposition that, except as otherwise provided by statute, a cause of action for or against a person is not lost by reason of the person's death, but survives subject to the applicable limitations period. Thus any cause of action pursuant to Health & Safety Code § 1430(b) survived the patient's death and was not subject to arbitration (150 Cal. App. 4th 469, 473-474) . Nor was the wrongful death action subject to arbitration. The court of appeal cited Buckner v. Tamarin (2002) 98 Cal. App. 4th 140, 142-144, 119 Cal. Rptr. 2d 489 (Buckner, discussed at § 20A.61[3][a]) for the proposition that wrongful death claims are not usually arbitrable unless the arbitration agreement was signed by the plaintiff in his or her individual capacity, which this agreement was not. It was irrelevant to the wrongful death cause of action whether husband may have signed the arbitration agreements as the decedent's "legal representative/agent." There was no evidence that husband signed the arbitration agreements in his personal capacity, and the sons did not sign any arbitration agreements. Thus, there was no basis to infer that they waived their personal right to jury trial on the wrongful death claim. The court distinguished cases involving arbitration agreements signed pursuant to health care powers of attorney (150 Cal. App. 4th 469, 474) . The court also distinguished Herbert v. Superior Court (1985) 169 Cal. App. 3d 718, 215 Cal. Rptr. 477 (discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.63[3][a]), as having been decided for practical reasons to require all plaintiffs to try their claims in the same forum. The plaintiffs in this case were not dividing their wrongful death claims between different forums (150 Cal. App. 4th 469, 474-475) .

Regarding the trial court's choice, in its discretion under Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c), to deny the petition to compel arbitration though some claims were arbitrable, the court of appeal said it would not disturb the trial court's ruling unless it exceeded the bounds of reason (150 Cal. App. 4th 469, 475) , which it did not do. There was a potential for inconsistent rulings on a common fact, such as whether any violations of the Patients Bill of Rights caused the decedent's injuries or her death (150 Cal. App. 4th 469, 475-476) . Nor was the court of appeal persuaded by defendants' argument that arbitration agreements would cease to be enforceable so long as plaintiffs can just "toss in" a cause of action alleging violations of the Patients Bill of Rights (150 Cal. App. 4th 469, 476) .

In Parker v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp. (1981) 118 Cal. App. 3d 895, 173 Cal. Rptr. 639 , the parties had entered into a joint venture agreement to produce, distribute, and otherwise exploit a television series. The agreement provided that if any controversy arose with respect to the receipts and proceeds from the distribution of the series or the expenses pertaining thereto, the question would be submitted to certified public accountants acceptable to the parties, or to be designated by the American Arbitration Association if the parties could not agree. Plaintiff filed a complaint containing 11 causes of action, including causes of action for declaratory relief, fraud, usury, rescission, and restitution, and prayed for an accounting. Defendant filed a petition to compel arbitration, which was denied, and he appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the denial of the petition, reasoning that there was substantial evidence to support the findings of the trial court and that the scope of the arbitration clause was far too narrow to encompass the issues raised by the complaint. The court noted that by enacting Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c) the Legislature recognized that overlapping (arbitrable and nonarbitrable) issues will arise and gave the power to deal with the problem to the court. The court stated, however, that the trial court cannot ignore an arbitration provision between the parties if a decision by arbitration on an arbitrable issue can be harmoniously used in the overall litigation.The court then held that the trial court had jurisdiction over the controversy, but should use the certified public accountant required by the agreement if the need arose (118 Cal. App. 3d 895, 905-906) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20A ARBITRATION: RESISTING
PART II. FORMS
A. General Principles Relating to Resisting Arbitration

2-20A California Points & Authorities § 20A.13

§ 20A.13 Oral Agreement Selecting Arbitrator Cannot Be Enforced

[1] FORM

LIKE AN AGREEMENT TO ARBITRATE, AN AGREEMENT APPOINTING AN ARBITRATOR, [EVEN ONE THAT PURPORTS TO MODIFY A WRITTEN AGREEMENT], MUST ITSELF BE IN WRITING.

A. Oral Agreement Selecting Arbitrator Cannot Be Enforced. Just as an oral agreement to arbitrate is not ordinarily enforceable because Section 1281.2 of the Code of Civil Procedure requires a court to find a written agreement exists before it orders arbitration, an oral agreement to arbitrate [future disputes] before a particular arbitrator may not be enforced by the court on a petition to compel arbitration. [Further, such an oral agreement, if it is claimed to modify a prior written agreement, is not supportable under the definition of "written agreement" in Section 1280(f) of the Code of Civil Procedure because that definition includes only written agreements which have been extended or renewed by an oral or implied agreement]. An arbitrator's powers derive from, and cannot exceed, the contract to arbitrate and the parties' submission to arbitration. Thus, election of an arbitrator who is not authorized by the arbitration contract confers no authority on the person selected (Magness Petroleum Company v. Warren Resources of California, Inc. (2002) 103 Cal. App. 4th 901, 907-909, 127 Cal. Rptr. 2d 159).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to the contention that an oral agreement designating a particular arbitrator is enforceable. The bracketed language is based on the facts in the authority cited and should be used only if a similar claim may be raised in counsel's particular case. This form does not provide a complete memorandum, but may be combined memoranda relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue that the oral appointment is unenforceable or with a general memorandum in opposition to a petition to compel arbitration [see, e.g., § 20A.10]. If there is in fact no agreement as to a particular arbitrator, or the agreed method of selecting an arbitrator has failed, counsel may wish to file a petition under Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.6 to have the court appoint the arbitrator. For a memorandum in support of such a petition, see § 20B.10.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, the argument should quote or refer to any written provision designating a particular arbitrator, or the lack of any written agreement on the issue. It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations.

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a form of response to a petition to compel arbitration that may be supported by this memorandum, as well as a procedural checklist, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 32, Contractual Arbitration: Agreements and Compelling Arbitration (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Oral Agreement Regarding Arbitrator Cannot Be Enforced

The parties in Magness Petroleum Company v. Warren Resources of California, Inc. (2002) 103 Cal. App. 4th 901, 127 Cal. Rptr. 2d 159 , were joint venture partners in a multi-million dollar oil-drilling program for the production of oil and gas in an oil field known as the Wilmington Town Unit. Their joint venture agreement called for arbitration of any disputes before the American Arbitration Association (AAA); however, their first two disputes were arbitrated by Keith Wisot, a retired judge associated with Judicial Arbitration and Mediation Services, Inc. (JAMS). Wisot was appointed to determine the first dispute under a written submission agreement executed in December, 1999. The final award regarding the first dispute included a net award to Warren and reserved jurisdiction, "pursuant to the parties' December 2, 1999 Stipulation and Agreement to Arbitrate, to make appropriate Orders to implement this Final Award, including Injunctive Order, as may be necessary." The parties agree that they complied in full with that final award. The second dispute was also heard by Judge Wisot, although Magness sought to have it transferred to AAA or dismissed. Warren initiated the second dispute by seeking an order restraining Magness from drilling three non-joint venture wells in the Wilmington Town Unit. At the show cause hearing on July 7, 2000, Judge Wisot denied Magness's request for transfer, denied Warren's request for a preliminary injunction as moot, because Magness had no intention to drill the wells at that time. Wisot believed, and stated in an interim order dated June 6, 2000, that according to his notes of a hearing on the first dispute on February 28, 2000, the parties stipulated at that time that he retain jurisdiction over future disputes. The third dispute began on August 8, 2001, when Magness filed a demand for arbitration and statement of claim with AAA, seeking dissolution of the joint venture and a final accounting, or in the alternative declaratory relief as to drilling rights of the parties. Warren filed a petition to compel arbitration before Judge Wisot. Magness opposed that petition and filed a counter petition to compel arbitration before AAA. The trial court granted Warren's petition and denied Magness's petition, based in part on the finding in Judge Wisot's June 6, 2000 order (on the second dispute) that the parties stipulated on February 28, 2000 to his jurisdiction over future disputes as well as Judge Wisot's reservation of jurisdiction in the final award covering the first dispute. Magness appealed and also petitioned for a writ prohibiting enforcement of the trial court's order compelling arbitration before JAMS.

The court of appeal issued a writ of supersedeas staying the trial court's order compelling arbitration before Judge Wisot of JAMS, and eventually reversed, and remanded with directions to the trial court to vacate its order and enter a new order granting Magness's petition and denying Warren's petition (103 Cal. App. 4th 901, 907, 912) . The court of appeal said the issue was whether an oral agreement to arbitrate future disputes before a particular arbitrator may be enforced by the court on a petition to compel arbitration, and concluded it may not (103 Cal. App. 4th 901, 907) . An oral agreement to arbitrate is not ordinarily enforceable. The statutory scheme applies only to written agreements and expressly requires a court to order arbitration if it finds a written agreement exists [Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2] (103 Cal. App. 4th 901, 907) . Even Code Civ. Proc. § 1280(f), which describes the circumstances under which a written agreement to arbitrate is deemed to include an oral or implied provision, does not help Warren because it limits the term "written agreement" to include one which has been extended or renewed by an oral or implied agreement. The ordinary meaning of "extend" or "renew" does not include revision or modification. The statutory definition, and the cases citing it, provide no support for the proposition that a court may enforce an oral modification of a written agreement to arbitrate (103 Cal. App. 4th 901, 908) . The only oral agreements enforceable under the statute are oral agreements to extend or renew an expired agreement, not oral agreements to modify an existing written agreement (103 Cal. App. 4th 901, 908-909) . Warren claimed the oral stipulation was enforceable because it was not an oral agreement to arbitrate, but merely an oral agreement to use a particular arbitrator. The court of appeal disagreed, saying the powers of the arbitrator derive from and cannot exceed the contract to arbitrate and the parties' submission to arbitration. Selection of an arbitrator who is not authorized by the arbitration contract confers no authority on the person selected (103 Cal. App. 4th 901, 909) . There was no showing that waived, or should be estopped from asserting, its rights under the statute permitting courts to enforce only written agreements to arbitrate (103 Cal. App. 4th 901, 909-910) . There was no transcript of the proceeding at which counsel are said to have orally stipulated to Judge Wisot's jurisdiction over all future disputes (103 Cal. App. 4th 901, 911) and no statement in Judge Wisot's final award on the first dispute purporting to reserve jurisdiction over future disputes (103 Cal. App. 4th 901, 911-912) . Moreover, an arbitrator is not competent to testify in a subsequent civil proceeding as to any statement made at the prior proceeding [see Evid. Code § 703.5]. Thus, there is no legal basis on which to admit the arbitrator's recollection regarding an oral stipulation between the parties in a prior proceeding as evidence that such a stipulation was entered (103 Cal. App. 4th 901, 911 n.9).

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20A ARBITRATION: RESISTING
PART II. FORMS
A. General Principles Relating to Resisting Arbitration

2-20A California Points & Authorities § 20A.14

§ 20A.14 Only Party to Agreement Can Seek to Stay Arbitration

[1] FORM

A PARTY TO A LAWSUIT THAT HAS SOME FACTUAL NEXUS WITH AN ARBITRATION TO WHICH IT IS NOT A PARTY HAS NO STANDING TO SEEK TO HAVE THE ARBITRATION STAYED PENDING THE OUTCOME OF THE LITIGATION.

A. Only Party to Agreement Can Seek to Stay Arbitration. Subdivision (c) of Section 1281.2 of the Code of Civil Procedure cannot be invoked by one who is not a party to the arbitration agreement to seek a stay of arbitration until resolution of a related court action. It is not enough that one be a party to litigation that has some factual nexus to the matters _____ [required to be or being] arbitrated. Because the arbitrator's award will have no res judicata or collateral estoppel effect against a person or entity who is was not a party to the arbitration, and does not claim to be in privity with any party to the arbitration, that person's or entity's position in the litigation will not be prejudiced by the arbitration award (One World Networks Integrated Technologies, Inc. v. Duitch (2002) 103 Cal. App. 4th 1038, 1043-1044, 127 Cal. Rptr. 2d 843).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to a petition by one not a party to the arbitration agreement to seek to have the arbitration stayed pending resolution of a related court action. The form does not provide a complete memorandum, but may be combined with memoranda relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to oppose the stay [see, e.g., Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, §§ 20.10-20.12].

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, the argument should make clear that the non-party is not in privity with a party to the arbitration in any way that might cause it to be bound by the arbitration award [see Ch. 20E, Arbitration: Effect of Award, §§ 20E.10 -20E.12, 20E.30 -20E.32 (addressing res judicata and collateral estoppel effects of arbitration awards)]. It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations.

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5])are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For discussion of the means and effect of staying arbitration generally, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 32, Contractual Arbitration: Agreements and Compelling Arbitration (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For memoranda addressing stay of the court action while the arbitration proceeds, see Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, §§ 20.10-20.12. For memoranda to combine with this form, regarding other matters in opposition to arbitration that may need to be addressed, see §§ 20A.11-20A.13, 20A.20 et seq., 20A.30 et seq., 20A.40 et seq., 20A.60 et seq., and 20A.80 et seq. For forms addressing res judicata and collateral estoppel effects of arbitration awards, Ch. 20E, Arbitration: Effect of Award, §§ 20E.10-20E.12, 20E.30-20E.32.

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Only Party to Agreement Can Seek to Stay Arbitration

Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2 provides in part that on petition of a party to an arbitration agreement alleging the existence of a written agreement to arbitrate a controversy and that a party thereto refuses to arbitrate such controversy, the court shall order the petitioner and the respondent to arbitrate the controversy if it determines that an agreement to arbitrate the controversy exists, unless it determines that,

"(c) A party to the arbitration agreement is also a party to a pending court action or special proceeding with a third party, arising out of the same transaction or series of related transactions and there is a possibility of conflicting rulings on a common issue of law or fact. For purposes of this section, a pending court action or special proceeding includes an action or proceeding initiated by the party refusing to arbitrate after the petition to compel arbitration has been filed, but on or before the date of the hearing on the petition. This subdivision shall not be applicable to an agreement to arbitrate disputes as to the professional negligence of a health care provider made pursuant to Section 1295. If the court determines that a written agreement to arbitrate a controversy exists, an order to arbitrate such controversy may not be refused on the ground that the petitioner's contentions lack substantive merit. If the court determines that there are other issues between the petitioner and the respondent which are not subject to arbitration and which are the subject of a pending action or special proceeding between the petitioner and the respondent and that a determination of such issues may make the arbitration unnecessary, the court may delay its order to arbitrate until the determination of such other issues or until such earlier time as the court specifies. If the court determines that a party to the arbitration is also a party to litigation in a pending court action or special proceeding with a third party as set forth ... herein, the court (1) may refuse to enforce the arbitration agreement and may order intervention or joinder of all parties in a single action or special proceeding; (2) may order intervention or joinder as to all or only certain issues; (3) may order arbitration among the parties who have agreed to arbitration and stay the pending court action or special proceeding pending the outcome of the arbitration proceeding; or (4) may stay arbitration pending the outcome of the court action or special proceeding."

Plaintiff in One World Networks Integrated Technologies, Inc. v. Duitch (2002) 103 Cal. App. 4th 1038, 127 Cal. Rptr. 2d 843 , sued its former employee and her new employer on various unfair competition theories. Former employee initiated arbitration pursuant to an agreement between herself and the former employer, to resolve a salary dispute with the former employer. The former employer counterclaimed against the former employee in those proceedings. After the arbitrator ruled that the former employer's counterclaims were covered by the arbitration agreement, the former employer dismissed the former employee from the lawsuit. Nevertheless, the current employer/defendant asked the trial court to stay the arbitration of the former employer's counterclaims against the former employee. The request was granted, and the former employer appealed, contending a stay of arbitration may be sought only by a party to the arbitration agreement. Former employer also filed a petition for a writ of supersedeas asking the court of appeal to stay further proceedings in the trial court pending resolution of the appeal.

The court of appeal issued the writ as prayed, and on appeal, reversed the stay order (103 Cal. App. 4th 1038, 1040) . The stay order signed by the trial court stated that it was issued under the authority of Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2, the preamble and subdivision (c) of which are set forth in full above. The defendant/current employer claimed it had standing to have the arbitration stayed because plaintiff's claims against it arose from actions allegedly taken by the employee after she left One World's employ, and because those were the same actions which were the basis of the former employer's the counterclaims in the arbitration (103 Cal. App. 4th 1038, 1042) . Thus, any rulings by the arbitrator regarding the employee's actions would prejudice the current employer's rights in the litigation (103 Cal. App. 4th 1038, 1042-1043) . The court of appeal said that was wrong. Because the current employer was not a party to the arbitration, and did not claim to be in privity with the employee, the arbitrator's award would not have any res judicata or collateral estoppel effect with regard to One World's claims against defendant/current employer (103 Cal. App. 4th 1038, 1043) . The court of appeal also held that by its plain language, the stay provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2 may be invoked only by a party to an arbitration agreement. That language is neither vague nor ambiguous, and it makes perfectly good sense--becauseno one other than a party to the arbitration agreement ought to be allowed to interfere with the arbitration process. The obvious purpose of the stay provision in Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2 is to protect someone in the position that the employee was in before she was dismissed from this lawsuit. The court of appeal concluded that the trial court's ruling was wrong as a matter of law (103 Cal. App. 4th 1038, 1044) , reversed the order, and remanded to the trial court with directions to vacate its stay order and enter a new order denying the application for a stay (103 Cal. App. 4th 1038, 1045) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20A ARBITRATION: RESISTING
PART II. FORMS
A. General Principles Relating to Resisting Arbitration

2-20A California Points & Authorities § 20A.15

§ 20A.15 Arbitration Not To Be Ordered When Agreed Method Is No Longer Available

[1] FORM

THE COURT CANNOT ORDER ARBITRATION BECAUSE THE AGREED METHOD OF ARBITRATION HAS BECOME UNAVAILABLE.

A. Arbitration Not To Be Ordered When Agreed Method Is No Longer Available. If the agreed method of arbitration is not possible, for example, if a party is no longer a member of the organization that was to conduct the arbitration and therefore not entitled to use that organization's services as arbitrator unless the other party consents, and that party does not consent, arbitration cannot be ordered (Provencio v. WMA Securities, Inc. (2005) 125 Cal. App. 4th 1028, 1032-1033, 23 Cal. Rptr. 3d 524 (defendant no longer member of NASD; plaintiff would not consent to arbitration before NASD)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to a petition for an order to compel arbitration under a contract when the agreed method of arbitration is no longer available [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2].

This form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in opposition to one seeking to compel arbitration [see § 20A.10]. Respondent also should combine this form with as many other forms as address the specific grounds for denial involved in his or her particular case, that is, §§ 20A.11-20A.12 (procedural matters), 20A.20 et seq. (Congressional or legislative intent to preserve judicial remedy), 20A.30 et seq. (contract principles), 20A.40 et seq. (issue is beyond scope of arbitration clause), 20A.60 et seq. (respondent is not party to arbitration agreement), and 20A.80 et seq. (waiver and contract defenses).

Although the authority used in this form appears to contradict the portion of Graham v. Scissor-Tail cited in Ch. 20B, Arbitration: Selecting Arbitrators; Arbitral Immunity, § 20B.10[1], Optional Paragraph B [Graham v. Scissor-Tail,

Inc. (1982) 28 Cal. 3d 807, 171 Cal. Rptr. 604, 623 P.2d 165] , stating that when the agreed method of arbitration fails, either party is free to petition the court for appointment of another arbitrator, in fact the cited portion of Graham comprised the court's advice for use on remand should the parties be unable to agree on a mutually satisfactory arbitrator, but the opinion further stated that if neither party petitioned for appointment of an arbitrator, the court should proceed to a judicial determination of the controversy [Graham v. Scissor-Tail, Inc. (1982) 28 Cal. 3d 807, 831, 171 Cal. Rptr. 604, 623 P.2d 165] .

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form to the facts of the case. For example, the argument should set forth the portion of the arbitration clause detailing the agreed method of arbitration and explain why that method was an integral part of the agreement and why it is no longer available.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Memoranda

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Arbitration Not To Be Ordered When Agreed Method Is No Longer Available

Plaintiffs in Provencio v. WMA Securities, Inc. (2005) 125 Cal. App. 4th 1028, 23 Cal. Rptr. 3d 524 sued their securities broker for breach of fiduciary duty, fraud, and breach of contract, along with other related causes of action, alleging that they were the victims of bad advice by WMA. WMA responded by petitioning to compel arbitration in accordance with the investment services contracts that plaintiffs signed, which required any disputes to be arbitrated by the National Association of Securities Dealers (NASD), pursuant to the NASD's rules and procedures. Plaintiffs opposed the petition on the grounds that WMA was out of business, no longer a member of NASD, and therefore was not entitled to arbitration by NASD unless plaintiffs consented inwriting, which they refused to do. The trial court denied the petition. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed (125 Cal. App. 4th 1028, 1030, 1034) . The right to arbitrate depends on the terms of a contract [Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2], and these contracts were by their terms, subject to NASD's rules (125 Cal. App. 4th 1028, 1031) . If the parties to a contract agree to arbitrate any disputes before a particular forum, that provision becomes an integral part of their contract. If that forum is not available to hear the dispute, then a petition to compel arbitration may not be granted. Defendant did not contend that arbitration was appropriate in any forum other than the NASD (125 Cal. App. 4th 1028, 1032) . The court of appeal distinguished Alan v. Superior Court because here arbitration before the NASD would be allowed [Alan v. Superior Court (2003) 111 Cal. App. 4th 217, 224, 3 Cal. Rptr. 3d 377] ; see Ch. 20B, Arbitration: Selecting Arbitrators; Arbitral Immunity, § 20B.25[3][a]), but only at the option of plaintiffs (125 Cal. App. 4th 1028, 1032-1033) . Strictly speaking, therefore, the issue was not whether NASD was available as a forum: it was available if plaintiffs choose to make it available. Instead, the issues were whether WMA was defunct or no longer a member of NASD and whether, despite WMA's status as a nonmember of NASD, respondents had agreed to arbitrate their dispute in that forum. It was undisputed that WMA was no longer a NASD member and that plaintiffs did not provide written consent to arbitrate a claim before NASD. Defendant submitted the declaration of its president stating that NASD had accepted cases against it for arbitration without the claimant's consent even thought defendant was no longer a member of the NASD. Even if that testimony was believed, NASD's disregard of its own rules could not strip plaintiffs of their contractual right to rely on and enforce those rules (125 Cal. App. 4th 1028, 1033) . Therefore, arbitration could not be compelled (125 Cal. App. 4th 1028, 1034) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20A ARBITRATION: RESISTING
PART II. FORMS
A. General Principles Relating to Resisting Arbitration

2-20A California Points & Authorities §§ 20A.16-20A.19

[Reserved]

§§ 20A.16[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20A ARBITRATION: RESISTING
PART II. FORMS
A. General Principles Relating to Resisting Arbitration

2-20A California Points & Authorities § 20A.20

§ 20A.20 Congress/Legislature Intended to Preserve Remedies Arbitration Clause Would Waive

[1] FORM

RESPONDENT CANNOT BE COMPELLED TO ARBITRATE THE CONTROVERSY BECAUSE _____ [specify, e.g., THE ARBITRATION PROVISION IN THIS CONTRACT WOULD REQUIRE PLAINTIFF TO FORFEIT IMPORTANT RIGHTS THAT CONGRESS INTENDED TO PRESERVE FOR FRANCHISEES OF PETROLEUM PRODUCTS].

A. Arbitration Clause Forfeits Important Statutory Rights. Arbitration cannot be compelled under an arbitration provision that requires a party to forfeit statutorily-mandated rights that are important to effectuate the policies of a statute that was intended to protect that party [when the provisions forfeiting those rights are an integrated and unseverable part of the arbitration clause] (Graham Oil. v. ARCO Products Co. (9th Cir. 1994) 43 F.3d 1244, 1247-1249 (Petroleum Marketing Practices Act)) .

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to a petition to compel arbitration when the arbitration provision at issue would deprive respondent of rights the Congress or Legislature intended he or she not be able to waive.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in opposition to one seeking to compel arbitration [see § 20A.10].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form, and in the other forms combined with this form, with the facts of his or her case. For example, argument should indicate either the statutory anti-waiver provision or the legislative history that establishes the enacting body's intent that certain protections not be waived. Argument should explain how arbitration would do just that.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a form of response to a petition to compel arbitration that may be supported by this memorandum, as well as a procedural checklist, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 32, Contractual Arbitration: Agreements and Compelling Arbitration (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For memoranda to combine with this form, regarding other matters that the opposition may need to address, see §§ 20A.10-20A.12, 20A.21 et seq., 20A.30 et seq., 20A.40 et seq., 20A.60 et seq., and 20A.80 et seq.

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Arbitration Clause Forfeits Important Statutory Rights

Graham Oil. v. ARCO Products Co. (9th Cir. 1994) 43 F.3d 1244 , was an action by a franchisee against its franchisor for wrongful termination of the franchise because plaintiff was not purchasing as much gasoline as the franchise agreement required. Plaintiff claimed defendant had violated the Petroleum Marketing Practices Act (15 U.S.C. § 2700 et seq.; PMPA) by raising its prices so plaintiff would not be able to meet the minimum gasoline purchase requirements. Plaintiff filed a motion for preliminary injunction in federal district court seeking to prevent defendant from terminating the franchise. The district court issued a preliminary injunction for 90 days, but found plaintiff's exclusive remedy was arbitration in accordance with the franchise agreement. The court required the parties to complete arbitration within 90 days. Plaintiff appealed that order and refused to arbitrate. At the expiration of the 90 days, defendant was granted summary judgment, from which plaintiff appealed, contending that the arbitration clause of the agreement was invalid.

The court of appeals reversed and remanded. The court found that the arbitration clause deprived plaintiff of three remedies that Congress intended as important statutory benefits of the PMPA: (1) the right to exemplary damages; (2) the right to recover reasonable attorney's fees if it prevailed on certain of its claims; and (3) the one-year limitation period, which the clause reduced to 90 days (43 F.3d 1244, 1247-1248) . The PMPA was enacted to shield franchisees from the gross disparity of bargaining power that exists between them and franchisors. If franchisees can be compelled to surrender their statutorily-mandated protections as a condition of obtaining a franchise, then franchisors could use their superior bargaining power to deprive franchisees of the PMPA's protections, nullifying the PMPA (43 F.3d 1244, 1247) . Each of the three rights is important to the effectuation of the PMPA's policies. The court of appeal considered whether it would be possible to sever the provisions of the arbitration clause pertaining to exemplary damages, attorney's fees, and the statute of limitations, and thus preserve arbitration, but found that the arbitration clause was too highly integrated (43 F.3d 1244, 1248) . It included a survival provision that expressly preserved the entire clause in the event the contract was found invalid. The court said its decision to strike the entire arbitration clause rested in part on the fact that the offensive provisions clearly represented an attempt by defendant to achieve through arbitration what Congress had expressly forbidden (43 F.3d 1244, 1249) .

121 of 174 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20A ARBITRATION: RESISTING
PART II. FORMS
A. General Principles Relating to Resisting Arbitration

2-20A California Points & Authorities § 20A.21

§ 20A.21 Congress Intended to Require Knowing Waiver of Right to Jury Trial

[1] FORM

RESPONDENT CANNOT BE COMPELLED TO ARBITRATE SEXUAL HARASSMENT CLAIMS UNDER TITLE VII OF THE CIVIL RIGHTS ACT OF 1964 BECAUSE HE/SHE NEVER MADE A KNOWING WAIVER OF HIS/HER RIGHT TO A JURY TRIAL, AS CONGRESS INTENDED TO REQUIRE.

[Optional] A. Sexual Discrimination Claims under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. In enacting the Civil Rights Act of 1991, Congress intended to require a person claiming sexual harassment or discrimination in violation of that Act to knowingly waive his or her right to a judicial forum. Thus, arbitration cannot be compelled under the arbitration clause at issue, which does not specify those claims as being within its scope (Renteria v. Prudential Ins. Co. of America (9th Cir. 1997) 113 F.3d 1104, 1108 ; Prudential Ins. Co. of America v. Lai (9th Cir. 1994) 42 F.3d 1299, 1304-1305 , cert. denied 516 U.S. 812, 116 S. Ct. 61, 133 L. Ed. 2d 24 (1995) .

[Optional] B. Claims under the Americans with Disabilities Act of 1990. In enacting the Americans with Disabilities Act of 1990, Congress intended to require a person claiming to have been damaged by a violation of that Act to knowingly waive his or her right to a judicial forum for resolution of his or her claims. Thus, arbitration cannot be compelled under the arbitration clause at issue, which does not specify those claims as being within its scope (Kummetz v. Tech Mold, Inc. (9th Cir. 1998) 152 F.3d 1153, 1155-1156 ; Nelson v. Cyprus Bagdad Copper Corp. (9th Cir. 1997) 119 F.3d 756, 761, 763 ; see also Wright v. Univ. Maritime Serv. Corp. (1998) 525 U.S. 70, 79-80, 119 S. Ct. 391, 142 L. Ed. 2d 361 (union waiver, in collective bargaining agreement, of employees' right to judicial forum for resolution of statutory claims must be clear and unmistakable)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

The optional paragraphs of this form may be submitted in opposition to a petition to compel arbitration of sexual harassment or discrimination claims under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (§ 700 et seq.; 42 U.S.C. § 2000e et seq.) (Paragraph A.) or of claims under the Americans with Disabilities Act of 1990 (42 U.S.C. § 12101 et seq.) (Paragraph B.) when the arbitration provision at issue never specifically mentioned those claims as being within its scope.

In using this form, counsel must be aware that Prudential Ins. Co. of America v. Lai (9th Cir. 1994) 42 F.3d 1299 , restated in Renteria v. Prudential Ins. Co. of America (9th Cir. 1997) 113 F.3d 1104 , and relied on in Nelson v. Cyprus Bagdad Copper Corp. (9th Cir. 1997) 119 F.3d 756 , has been extensively criticized as being against the weight of authority [see, e.g., Maye v. Smith Barney, Inc. (S.D.N.Y. 1995) 897 F. Supp. 100, 107 ; Cione v. Foresters Equity Services, Inc. (1997) 58 Cal. App. 4th 625, 641, 68 Cal. Rptr. 2d 167 ; Brookwood v. Bank of America (1996) 45 Cal. App. 4th 1667, 1673 n.5, 53 Cal. Rptr. 2d 515] , and has impliedly been held unpersuasive and not to be followed in California by the California Supreme Court in Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Services, Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 99-101, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669 , discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.23[3][a]. Armendariz established minimum procedural safeguards for arbitration of claims under California's Fair Employment and Housing Act (Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.). The Armendariz court never discussed the knowing waiver issue. The arbitration clause at issue wasfairly specific and referred to any termination of employment which employee contended was "wrongful or otherwise in violation of the conditions of employment or was in violation of any express or implied condition, term or covenant of employment, whether founded in fact or in law, including but not limited to the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, or otherwise in violation of any of my rights." Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Services, Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 92, 99-100 n.7, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669 .

This form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in opposition to one seeking to compel arbitration [see § 20A.10].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form, and in the other forms combined with this form, with the facts of his or her case. For example, argument should emphasize that the language of the arbitration clause does not specify that this type of claim was one that would be required to be arbitrated.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a form of response to a petition to compel arbitration that may be supported by this memorandum, as well as a procedural checklist, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 32, Contractual Arbitration: Agreements and Compelling Arbitration (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For memoranda to combine with this form, regarding other matters that the opposition may need to address, see §§ 20A.10-20A.12, 20A.30 et seq., 20A.40 et seq., 20A.60 et seq., and 20A.80 et seq.

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Sexual Discrimination Claims under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964

Renteria v. Prudential Ins. Co. of America (9th Cir. 1997) 113 F.3d 1104 , involved sexual harassment claims under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (§ 700 et seq.; 42 U.S.C. § 2000e et seq.), and related Nevada statutes. Employer sought to compel arbitration under the Standard Application for Securities Industry Registration Form (U-4), signed by plaintiff, and the National Association of Securities Dealers (NASD) Code, under which the U-4 committed plaintiff to arbitrate any disputes. Before plaintiff filed her complaint, the NASD Code was amended to specifically require arbitration of claims "arising out of employment or termination of employment." Defendants' motion was denied, and defendants appealed.

The court of appeals affirmed, finding itself bound by Prudential Ins. Co. of America v. Lai (9th Cir. 1994) 42 F.3d 1299, 1304-1305 , and finding no evidence of knowing waiver as required by the text and legislative history of Title VII (113 F.3d 1104, 1106, 1108) . Defendants argued that the district court should have held an evidentiary hearing to determine plaintiff's subjective knowledge. The court held that knowing waiver could not occur even under the amended NASD Code, because neither arbitration clause expressly put plaintiff on notice that she was bound to arbitrate Title VII claims (113 F.3d 1104, 1108) .

In Prudential Ins. Co. of America v. Lai (9th Cir. 1994) 42 F.3d 1299 , cert. denied, 516 U.S. 812, 116 S. Ct. 61, 133 L. Ed. 2d 24 (1995) , employer sued in federal district court to compel arbitration of employees' statutory sexual harassment and discrimination claims. The only agreement to arbitrate that the employees signed was the Standard Application for Securities Industry Registration Form (U-4), which stated that the employee agreed to arbitrate any dispute, claim or controversy between them and the firm, or a customer, or any other person, that was required to be arbitrated by the rules, constitution, or bylaws of the organizations with which the employees registered. The employees joined the National Association of Securities Dealers (NASD), whose manual required arbitration of disputes between or among members an/or associated persons, arising on connection with the member's business or in connection with the activities of the associated person. The petition to compel arbitration and stay the related state court action was granted, and employees appealed.

The court of appeals reversed because the employees did not knowingly enter into any agreement to arbitrate sexual discrimination or harassment claims under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (§ 700 et seq.; 42 U.S.C. § 2000e et seq.) (42 F.3d 1299, 1304-1305) . The court agreed with appellants that Congress intended there to be at least a knowing agreement to arbitrate employment disputes before any an employee could be deemed to have waived the comprehensive statutory rights, remedies, and procedural protections prescribed in Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (§ 700et seq.; 42 U.S.C. § 2000e et seq.), and related statutes. The court relied on statements in the Congressional Record relative to the enactment of the Civil Rights Act of 1991 that alternative remedies, such as arbitration, be available only when the parties knowingly and voluntarily elect to use those methods (42 F.3d 1299, 1304-1305) . In this case, even assuming the employees were aware of the nature of the U-4, they could not have understood that in signing it, they were agreeing to arbitrate sexual discrimination claims. The U-4 did not purport to describe the types of disputes that were to be subject to arbitration; nor would the arbitration clause in the NASD manual have put them on notice that they were to arbitrate Title VII claims (42 F.3d 1299, 1305) .

Note that the knowing waiver requirement in Prudential Ins. Co. of America v. Lai (9th Cir. 1994) 42 F.3d 1299 , restated in Renteria v. Prudential Ins. Co. of America (9th Cir. 1997) 113 F.3d 1104 , has been criticized by other federal courts [see, e.g., Maye v. Smith Barney, Inc. (S.D.N.Y. 1995) 897 F. Supp. 100, 107] and by California state courts [see, e.g., Cione v. Foresters Equity Services, Inc. (1997) 58 Cal. App. 4th 625, 641, 68 Cal. Rptr. 2d 167 (criticizing them as contrary to the weight of authority); Brookwood v. Bank of America (1996) 45 Cal. App. 4th 1667, 1673 n.5, 53 Cal. Rptr. 2d 515] , and, as discussed at [2][a], above, has impliedly been held unpersuasive and not to be followed in California by the California Supreme Court in Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Services, Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 99-100 n.7, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669 .

[b] Claims under the Americans with Disabilities Act of 1990

Defendant in Kummetz v. Tech Mold, Inc. (9th Cir. 1998) 152 F.3d 1153 , transferred plaintiff to another position at a reduced rate of pay after it learned of his previous kidney transplant. Plaintiff resigned, claiming that defendant's actions amounted to constructive discharge in violation of the Americans with Disabilities Act of 1990 (42 U.S.C. § 12101 et seq.; ADA), and sued defendant under both the ADA and the Arizona Civil Rights Act. About a week after plaintiff began working for defendant he was given an Employee Information Handbook and Information Booklet Acknowledgment. The booklet contained policies and procedures unilaterally imposed by defendant along with a provision requiring plaintiff to arbitrate any disputes with defendant, including employment discrimination, termination, or employment torts. The Acknowledgment made no mention of any arbitration provision, said plaintiff understood and agreed that he was covered by and must abide by the contents of the Booklet, stated that it in no way constituted an employment contract, and that plaintiff remained an at will employee. Defendant moved for summary judgment, claiming plaintiff had to arbitrate. The district court granted the motion, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeals reversed, finding plaintiff did not knowingly waive his right to a judicial forum under the ADA (152 F.3d 1153, 1155-1156) . The court cited Nelson v. Cyprus Bagdad Copper Corp. (9th Cir. 1997) 119 F.3d 756, 762 , for the proposition that an agreement to arbitrate disputes under the ADA must at least be knowing, which means that the choice must be explicitly presented to the employee and the employee must explicitly agree to waive the specific right in question. The Acknowledgement did not so notify plaintiff (152 F.3d 1153, 1155) . Defendant did not explicitly present the arbitration agreement, and plaintiff did not explicitly accept it. Thus, plaintiff was entitled to have both his ADA claims and his Arizona Civil Rights Act claims resolved in district court (152 F.3d 1153, 1156) .

Plaintiff in Nelson v. Cyprus Bagdad Copper Corp. (9th Cir. 1997) 119 F.3d 756 , was fired by defendant after attempts to accommodate his medical needs when working rotating 12-hour shifts. Plaintiff sued defendant alleging claims under the Americans with Disabilities Act of 1990 (42 U.S.C. § 12101 et seq.; ADA) and Arizona statutes. Defendant moved for summary judgment contending that plaintiff had agreed to resolve the dispute in accordance with the procedure outlined in their employee handbook and further waived any right to a judicial forum by initiating a grievance in accordance with that procedure. The district court analyzed the arbitrability of plaintiff's claims under the waiver standard for Title VII claims set forth in Prudential Ins. Co. of America v. Lai (9th Cir. 1994) 42 F.3d 1299, 1304-1305 , but found that plaintiff had voluntarily waived his right to a judicial forum and granted the motion for summary judgment. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeals reversed, finding plaintiff did not knowingly waive his right to a judicial forum under the ADA (119 F.3d 756, 763) . Both parties agreed, and the court of appeals said they were correct, that the waiver analysis set forth in Lai applies equally in the context of the ADA (119 F.3d 756, 761) , because the legislative history relied on in Lai to support its conclusion that knowing waiver of Title VII claims is required mirrors the legislative history to the enactment of 42 U.S.C. § 12212, the alternative dispute resolution provision of the ADA (119 F.3d 756, 761 n.9). The acknowledgement plaintiff signed when he received the handbook did not amount to a knowing waiver. It did not even amount to an agreement to be bound by the procedure contained in the handbook (119 F.3d 756, 761) . What defendant construed as plaintiff's "initiating a grievance in accordance" with their procedure was only writing a letter protesting his firing (119 F.3d 756, 759, 759 n.3). Two times, plaintiff refused "appeal" by arbitration, which was the next step of defendant's procedure (119 F.3d 756, 762 n.11).

Note that the knowing waiver requirement in Prudential Ins. Co. of America v. Lai (9th Cir. 1994) 42 F.3d 1299, 1304-1305 , relied on in Nelson, has been criticized by federal [see, e.g., Maye v. Smith Barney, Inc. (S.D.N.Y. 1995) 897 F. Supp. 100, 107] and by California state courts [see, e.g., Cione v. Foresters Equity Services, Inc. (1997) 58 Cal. App. 4th 625, 641, 68 Cal. Rptr. 2d 167 (criticizing them as contrary to the weight of authority)], and, as discussed at [2][a], above, has impliedly been held unpersuasive and not to be followed in California by the California Supreme Court in Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Services, Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 99-100 n.7, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669 .

Plaintiff in Wright v. Univ. Maritime Serv. Corp. (1998) 525 U.S. 70, 119 S. Ct. 391, 142 L. Ed. 2d 361 , was a longshoreman covered by a collective bargaining agreement ("CBA") with a provision that called for arbitration of any dispute that was not settled after resort to a grievance procedure. Plaintiff injured his heel and back in a work-related accident. He settled the claim and was also awarded Social Security disability benefits. About three years after that, plaintiff worked for several days for four stevedoring companies, none of which complained about his work performance. However, when those companies realized plaintiff had previously settled a claim for permanent disability, they informed his union that they would not accept him for further work. Plaintiff asked the union how he could get back to work. Instead of suggesting that he follow the grievance procedure, the union suggested he obtain counsel and file a claim under the Americans with Disabilities Act (42 U.S.C. § 12101 et seq.; "ADA"). After obtaining a right-to-sue letter from the EEOC, plaintiff filed an action against six stevedoring companies, alleging among other things, a claim for violation of his rights under the ADA. Defendants moved to dismiss the complaint on the ground that plaintiff failed to exhaust his remedies under the CBA. The Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed. The U.S. Supreme court granted certiorari.

The Supreme Court unanimously vacated the judgment of the Fourth Circuit and remanded for further proceedings. The Court found it unnecessary to determine whether a union can waive its members' rights to a judicial forum for resolution of ADA claims because no such waiver was involved in this case (525 U.S. 70, 82) . Defendants relied primarily on the presumption of arbitrability in Section 301 of the Labor Management Relations Act (29 U.S.C. § 185), but the Court said that presumption only extended to matters of interpretation and application of the CBA (525 U.S. 70, 77-78) . The Court did not discuss the ADA, but rested its decision on the seemingly absolute prohibition of union waiver of employees' federal forum rights for adjudication of statutory claims, granted in Alexander v. Gardner-Denver Co. (1974) 415 U.S. 36, 49-51, 94 S. Ct. 1011, 39 L. Ed. 2d 147 , saying whether or not that right survives Gilmer v. Interstate/Johnson Lane Corp. (1991) 500 U.S. 20, 26, 111 S. Ct. 1647, 114 L. Ed. 2d 26 , a union employee's right to a federal judicial forum for resolution of statutory claims is of sufficient importance to be protected against less-than-explicit union waiver in a CBA. Any such waiver must be clear and unmistakable. This CBA referred only to "all matters affecting wages, hours, and other terms of employment," and thus did not constitute a clear and unmistakable waiver of plaintiff's right to a judicial forum for federal claims of employment discrimination (525 U.S. 70, 80-81) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20A ARBITRATION: RESISTING
PART II. FORMS
A. General Principles Relating to Resisting Arbitration

2-20A California Points & Authorities § 20A.22

§ 20A.22 Agreement Lacks Minimum Criteria for Vindication of Unwaivable Rights

[1] FORM

THE ARBITRATION AGREEMENT CANNOT BE ENFORCED WITH RESPECT TO RESPONDENT'S _____ [specify nature of claim, e.g., CLAIMS UNDER CALIFORNIA'S FAIR EMPLOYMENT AND HOUSING ACT] BECAUSE THE ARBITRATION PROCEDURES SPECIFIED THEREIN DO NOT PROVIDE SUFFICIENT SAFEGUARDS FOR THE VINDICATION OF _____ [specify, e.g., STATUTORY RIGHTS or FEHA CAUSE OF ACTION] [AND CANNOT BE IMPLIED TO DO SO].

A. Requirements for Arbitration of Unwaivable Statutory or Common Law Right. [See § 20A.23[1], Paragraph A.]

[Optional] B. Armendariz Minimum Requirements Apply to Tameny Claims. [See § 20A.23[1], Paragraph F.]

[Optional] C. Armendariz Minimum Requirements Apply to Claims under *Labor Code Section 970 . [See § 20A.23[1], Paragraph G.]

[Optional] D. Costs Will Not Be Imposed on Employer in Face of Agreement to Share. While silence on the issue of costs is not a ground for denying enforcement of an arbitration agreement under which one seeks to vindicate unwaivable rights, an agreement expressly imposing impermissible forum costs on an employee in violation of public policy does not permit an inference that the employer is to pay all cost unique to the arbitral forum. Therefore, the agreement here is illegal and unenforceable (Abramson v. Juniper Networks, Inc. (2004) 115 Cal. App. 4th 638, 661, 668, 9 Cal. Rptr. 3d 422).

[Optional] E. Employer's Offer to Bear All Arbitral Costs Does Not Cure Defect. An offer by the drafting party to modify an unconscionable cost-sharing provision of an arbitration agreement has no effect. The agreement is to be tested at the time of its making. Furthermore, the harm--that inclusion of the unconscionable term has an unacceptable chilling effect on the non-drafting party--has already occurred (Martinez v. Master Prot. Corp. (2004) 118 Cal. App.

4th 107, 116-117, 12 Cal. Rptr. 3d 663).

[Optional] F. Discovery Is Inadequate. An arbitration agreement's limitation of discovery to the sworn depositions of two individuals and any expert witnesses expected to testify at the hearing is not adequate to ensure that a _____ [type of unwaivable right at issue, e.g., employment-discrimination] plaintiff will be entitled to discovery sufficient to adequately arbitrate [his or her] claims. In the face of this express agreement to the contrary, the court cannot imply an agreement to provide the non-drafting party with sufficient discovery rights. [Furthermore, the defect is not cured by the fact that the arbitration agreement or policy at issue incorporates the American Arbitration Association's (AAA) National Rules for the Resolution of Employment Disputes, one of which provides that if a party establishes an adverse material inconsistency between the arbitration agreement and the AAA rules, the arbitrator must apply the AAA rule, which provides for whatever discovery the arbitrator considers necessary to a full and fair exploration of the issues in dispute. Replacing the AAA rules with the more restrictive rules in the agreement creates both the potential of preliminary legal battles regarding which rules apply and the risk of disparate enforcement of the rules. Thus, incorporation of the AAA rules cannot be allowed to cure the defect inserted by the drafting party] (Fitz v. NCR Corp. (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 702, 717-721, 13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 88).

[Optional] G. Class Arbitration Waiver May Hinder Vindication of Statutory Rights. When it is alleged that the party with superior power has systematically denied the rights of the other parties in a situation that involves unwaivable statutory rights and a class action is requested notwithstanding an arbitration agreement that contains a class arbitration or class action waiver, the trial court must consider the following factors:

- Whether the size of the potential individual recovery is modest,
- The potential for retaliation against members of the class who sue individually,
- Whether absent members of the class may be ill informed about their rights, and
- Other real world obstacles to the vindication of class members' rights if enforced through individual arbitration.

If class arbitration is likely to be a significantly more effective practical means of vindicating the statutory rights of the affected parties than individual litigation or arbitration, and the disallowance of the class action will likely lead to a less comprehensive enforcement of the laws involved, a court must invalidate the class arbitration waiver to ensure that those parties can vindicate their unwaivable rights in an arbitration (Gentry v. Superior Court (Circuit City Stores, Inc.) (2007) 42 Cal. 4th 443, 463, 64 Cal. Rptr. 3d 773, 165 P.3d 556 ; Sanchez v. Western Pizza Enterprises, Inc. (2009) 172 Cal. App. 4th 154, 165-166, 90 Cal. Rptr. 3d 818 ; Franco v. Athens Disposal Co., Inc. (2009) 171 Cal. App. 4th 1277, 1295-1299, 90 Cal. Rptr. 3d 539 ; Murphy v. Check 'N Go of California, Inc. (2007) 156 Cal. App. 4th 138, 147-149, 67 Cal. Rptr. 3d 120). [If the trial court invalidates the waiver on public policy grounds, then the parties may proceed to class arbitration, unless the trial court invalidates the arbitration agreement altogether for unconscionability, or, if the parties wish, have the matter brought in court (Gentry v. Superior Court (2007) 42 Cal. 4th 443, 466, 64 Cal. Rptr. 3d 773, 165 P.3d 556)].

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a petition to compel arbitration of a claim seeking to vindicate unwaivable statutory or common law rights if the arbitration agreement at issue does not provide the safeguards first imposed by Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Services, Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669 (Armendariz) or to argue that a class arbitration prohibition (waiver) would hinder vindication of unwaivable statutory rights [Optional Paragraph G]. If counsel seeks class arbitration, in addition to Optional Paragraph G, the memorandum should include Optional Paragraph F from form Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.86, regarding severance of the class arbitration waiver. If counsel seeks to have he entire arbitration provision severed, the memorandum should include authorities from form § 20A.91 regarding unconscionability.

Armendariz involved in a case involving a claim under California's Fair Employment and Housing Act (Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.). The Armendariz requirements were later explicitly extended to claims under Lab. Code § 970 and so-called Tameny claims for wrongful termination in violation of public policy [see Tameny v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 167, 178, 164 Cal. Rptr. 839, 610 P.2d 1330] .

Counsel should include other authority from Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.23, as applicable, such as retroactivity or other statutory rights that may be involved. Counsel should use whichever of the optional paragraphs that are applicable, with modification if necessary to accommodate the specific fact of counsel's case.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum, but rather should be combined with a general form of memorandum opposing arbitration [see § 20A.10].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form, and in the other forms combined with this form, with the facts of the case. For example, a copy of the agreement should be attached as an exhibit to the petition, response, or memorandum.

It is advisable for counsel to submit evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file (including verified pleadings), or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840] (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied if plaintiff-respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement).

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For forms of petition to compel arbitration and responses to them, as well as a procedural checklist, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 32, Contractual Arbitration: Agreements and Compelling Arbitration (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

The form in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.86 supports severance of offensive provisions that do not taint the entire arbitration agreement. Optional Paragraph F of that form should be used if counsel seeks class arbitration. Form § 20A.91 supports arguments that an arbitration agreement, or parts of it, is unconscionable. If counsel seeks to have the entire arbitration agreement, the memorandum should include authorities from form § 20A.91.

[e] Opposing Memoranda

This form of memorandum generally opposes the authorities in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.23 relating to the minimum safeguards necessary for enforcement of an arbitration provision under which the claimant seeks to vindicate unwaivable rights.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Costs Will Not Be Imposed on Employer in Face of Agreement to Share

The facts and procedural background of Abramson v. Juniper Networks, Inc. (2004) 115 Cal. App. 4th 638, 9 Cal. Rptr. 3d 422 , are discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.23[3][a]; the portion of the opinion determining that Little v. Auto Stiegler, Inc. (2003) 29 Cal. 4th 1064, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 892, 63 P.3d 979 , applies retroactively to a so-called Tameny claim for wrongful termination in violation of public policy is discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.23[3][k]. The court noted that the only relevant requirement imposed by Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Services, Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669 , was the limitation on costs, which provides that an employee seeking to vindicate unwaivable rights may not be compelled to pay forum costs that are unique to arbitration. The court noted that the agreements in both Armendariz and Little were silent as to forum costs (115 Cal. App. 4th 638, 654, 661) , whereas the instant agreement required plaintiff to pay half the costs of the arbitration--which amounted to thousands of dollars--at the very threshold. Those costs were unique to the arbitral forum and were thus impermissible under Armendariz and Little. While silence on the issue of costs is not a ground for denying enforcement of an arbitration agreement, and in fact permits the court to infer the employer's obligation to pay forum costs unique to arbitration, an agreement expressly imposing impermissible forum costs on the employee in violation of public policy does not permit an inference that the employer is to pay (115 Cal. App. 4th 638, 661) . With respect to plaintiff's unwaivable public rights, the court found the cost-sharing provision illegal and unenforceable (115 Cal. App. 4th 638, 661, 668) .

[b] Employer's Offer to Bear All Arbitral Costs Does Not Cure Defect

Martinez v. Master Protection Corp. (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 107, 116-117, 12 Cal. Rptr. 3d 663 , was a wrongful termination action which included a claim of discrimination on the basis of national origin under the Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA; Gov. Code § 12940 et seq.). Defendant petitioned to compel arbitration in accordance with the agreement it required of all employees. Plaintiff contended the agreement was unconscionable and unenforceable. The trial court disagreed, and ordered arbitration. The American Arbitration Association (AAA), the forum specified in the agreement, twice refused the matter, in part because it found the six-month limitation period imposed by the agreement to be impermissibly short. Plaintiff filed a motion asking the trial court to lift the stay so he could litigate the matter, but the court denied the motion and appointed another arbitrator, purportedly in accordance with Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.6 [see Ch. 20B, Arbitration: Selecting Arbitrators; Arbitral Immunity, § 20B.25]. The arbitrator found for defendant, and plaintiff petitioned to vacate the award. The court denied the petition, confirmed the award, and entered judgment thereon. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed (118 Cal. App. 4th 107, 112, 122) . Although the case involved a claim under the FEHA, and the opinion often cites Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Services, Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669 (Armendariz), the court's analysis did not rest on the Armendariz minimum criteria for vindication of unwaivable rights, but rested on traditional notions of unconscionability. That portion of the opinion is discussed at § 20A.91[3][c] -[e]. One of the provisions the court of appeal found unconscionable was the requirement that the parties split the cost of the arbitration and post fees in advance of the hearing. The court cited Armendariz for the contention that if an employer imposes mandatory arbitration as a condition of employment, the arbitration agreement or process cannot require the employee to bear any type of expense that the employee would not be required to bear if free to bring the action in court (118 Cal. App. 4th 107, 115-116) . Defendant conceded that was so, but offered to modify the agreement and bear the costs of arbitration. The court of appeal held that would not cure the defect. The risk that a claimant might bear substantial costs, not just the imposition of those costs, may discourage an employee from the exercise of juridical rights. The critical time for testing the agreement is at the time of its making. No rule of law permits a party to resuscitate a legally defective contract by offering to change it (118 Cal. App. 4th 107, 116) . The mere inclusion of the costs provision in the arbitration agreement produces an unacceptable chilling effect (118 Cal. App. 4th 107, 117) .

[c] Discovery Is Inadequate

The facts and procedural background of Fitz v. NCR Corp. (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 702, 13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 88 , are discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.23[3][a]. Defendant's dispute resolution policy limited discovery to the sworn depositions of two individuals and any expert witnesses expected to testify at the hearing. It also required all exhibits and a list of potential witnesses to be exchanged at least two weeks before the arbitration hearing. The arbitrator could have allowed additional discovery upon a showing that otherwise a fair hearing would be impossible. The court noted that this provision did not have mutual effect because the employer would already have in its possession many of the documents relevant to an employment discrimination case and many of the relevant witnesses would be in its employ (118 Cal. App. 4th 702, 716) . Plaintiff estimated she would need to depose eight to ten witnesses. The court noted it would be an unusual employment-discrimination case that could be sufficiently presented through the depositions of only two witnesses. In addition, granting the arbitrator discretion to allow additional discovery was not an adequate safety valve, especially because the arbitrator would be constrained by the "impossibility" standard (118 Cal. App. 4th 702, 717) .

Under the agreement at issue, the burden to establish the need for more than two depositions was so high, and the rights to initial discovery so low, that employees could find themselves in the position of being unable to gain access to enough information to prove their claims or to demonstrate the need to the arbitrator for more discovery. Nor could the court imply an agreement to allow sufficient discovery, as it did in Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Services, Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669 (Armendariz), because there was an express agreement to the contrary (118 Cal. App. 4th 702, 718) . The court concluded that the limitations on discovery imposed by defendant's dispute-resolution standards failed to ensure that plaintiff would be entitled to discovery sufficient to adequately arbitrate her claims (118 Cal. App. 4th 702, 719) .

Defendant's dispute resolution policy incorporated the American Arbitration Association's (AAA) National Rules for the Resolution of Employment Disputes, one of which provides that if a party establishes an adverse material inconsistency between the arbitration agreement and the AAA rules, the arbitrator is to apply the AAA rule. The AAA rule provides for whatever discovery the arbitrator considers necessary to a full and fair exploration of the issues in dispute. The court of appeal found there was an adverse material inconsistency between defendant's policy and the AAA rule (118 Cal. App. 4th 702, 720) , but did not agree that this cured the defects in the defendant's discovery provision. The AAA rules were not attached; there was the potential both for legal battles if AAA modified its rules and for disparate enforcement of the AAA provision. Defendant deliberately replaced the AAA discovery provision with its own more restrictive one, and in so doing failed to ensure that employees would be entitled to discovery sufficient to adequately arbitrate their claims. The court was therefore unwilling to relieve defendant of the effect of the unlawful discovery provision (118 Cal. App. 4th 702, 721) .

[d] Class Arbitration Waiver Will Hinder Vindication of Statutory Rights

Gentry v. Superior Court (Circuit City Stores, Inc.) (2007) 42 Cal. 4th 443, 64 Cal. Rptr. 3d 773, 165 P.3d 556 , involved consideration of class action waivers in the context of employee claims in under minimum wage and overtime laws [see Lab. Code §§ 550 et seq. and 1194]. The trial court upheld the waiver and ordered plaintiff to arbitrate his claims individually. The court of appeal denied a petition for writ of mandate. The Supreme Court accepted review and deferred briefing until it decided Discover Bank v. Superior Court (Boehr) (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 148, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 76, 113 P.3d 1100 (Discover Bank discussed at § 20A.91[3][i]). On remand for reconsideration in light of Discover Bank, the court of appeal again denied the writ and distinguished the case from Discover Bank on two grounds: (1) that this agreement gave employees 30 days to opt out of the arbitration provision and (2) because the agreement was not adhesive it was not procedurally unconscionable. Plaintiffs again sought review and the Supreme Court again granted it.

The Supreme Court held, in a four-to-three decision, that the class arbitration waivers should not be enforced if a trial court determines that class arbitration would be a significantly more effective way of vindicating the rights of affected employees than individual arbitration and reversed and remanded for determination of whether class arbitration would be significantly more effective (42 Cal. 4th 443, 450, 473) . The Supreme Court also held that a finding of procedural unconscionability is not required to invalidate a class arbitration waiver if that waiver implicates unwaivable statutory rights although it is a prerequisite to determining that the arbitration agreement as a whole is unconscionable. The Court concluded the present agreement had an element of procedural unconscionability notwithstanding the opt-out provision, and therefore remanded for a determination of whether provisions of the arbitration agreement were substantively unconscionable (42 Cal. 4th 443, 451, 473) . The Court first discussed and cited Discover Bank for the proposition that one-sided, exculpatory clause in contracts of adhesion, at least to the extent they operate to insulate a party from liability that otherwise would be imposed under California law, are generally unconscionable and should not be enforced. Not all class action waivers are necessarily unconscionable--only those found in consumer contracts of adhesion in a setting in which disputes between the contracting parties predictably involve small amounts of damages, and when it is alleged that the party with the superior bargaining power has carried out a scheme to deliberately cheat large numbers of consumers out of individually small sums of money [Civ. Code § 1668] (42 Cal. 4th 443, 453-453) . The Court went on to consider for the first time whether class action or class arbitration waivers would undermine statutory rights (42 Cal. 4th 443, 454) . Clearly, the Legislature intended by Lab. Code § 1194 that minimum wage and overtime laws should be enforced in part by private action brought by aggrieved employees. The overtime laws serve the important public policy goal of protecting employees in a relatively weak bargaining position, and the statutory right to receive overtime pay embodied in Section 1194 is unwaivable (42 Cal. 4th 443, 455-456) . The Court then went on to consider, and concluded, that under some circumstances a class action waiver would undermine an employee's right to vindicate his or her statutory rights to overtime pay (42 Cal. 4th 443, 457) . The Court discussed the sums likely to be involved for each individual, whether a person who sued his or her employer individually was likely to be subject to retaliation, and whether some employees might forego their rights because they did not know they had been violated (42 Cal. 4th 443, 457-461) . The Court cited a Massachusetts federal district court case which held that those reasons made class arbitration waivers inconsistent with federal minimum wage and overtime laws. The waiver might not only be unfair to employees, but also remove any incentive for the employer to avoid the type of conduct that might lead to class action litigation in the first instance. The Court would not say that all class action waivers in overtime cases were unconscionable (42 Cal. 4th 443, 462) , but when it is alleged that the employer has systematically denied proper overtime pay to a class of employees and a class action is requested notwithstanding an arbitration agreement that contains a class arbitration waiver, the trial court must consider the flowing factors (42 Cal. 4th 443, 463) :

- The modest size of the potential individual recovery,
- The potential for retaliation against members of the class,
- The fact that absent members of the class may be ill informed about their rights, and
- Other real world obstacles to the vindication of class members' rights to overtime pay through individual arbitration.

If class arbitration is likely to be a significantly more effective practical means of vindicating the rights of the affected employees than individual litigation or arbitration, and the disallowance of the class action will likely lead to a less comprehensive enforcement of overtime laws for the employees alleged to be affected by the employer's violations, a court must invalidate the class arbitration waiver to ensure that the employees can vindicate their unwaivable rights in an arbitration (42 Cal. 4th443, 463). Thus, the Court remanded to the court of appeal with directions to remand to the trial court to determine in light of the above discussion whether, in this particular case, class arbitration would be a significantly more effective means than individual arbitrations of vindicating the right to overtime pay of the group of employees whose rights to their pay had been allegedly violated by Circuit City. If the trial court invalidates the waiver on public policy grounds, then the parties may proceed to class arbitration or, if the parties wish, have the matter brought in court unless the trial court invalidates the arbitration agreement altogether for unconscionability (42 Cal. 4th 443, 466) . The portion of the opinion addressing unconscionability is discussed at § 20A.91[3][c]; the portion addressing the particular appropriateness of class arbitration waivers for severance is discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.86[3][b].

Sanchez v. Western Pizza Enterprises, Inc. (2009) 172 Cal. App. 4th 154, 90 Cal. Rptr. 3d 818 , affirmed a trial court order finding a class arbitration waiver and other terms of the agreement unconscionable, and that the agreement therefore was unenforceable. The portion of the opinion discussing the application of contract principles to enforceability of a class arbitration waiver is discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.30[3][a]. The portion of the opinion dealing with whether the agreement specified that the arbitrator was to decide the issue of enforceability is discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.10[3][k] and in § 20A.10[3][b], above . The employee claimed that a class arbitration waiver was unenforceable as against public policy. The delivery-driver employee asserted the unwaivability of the public policies of an employee's statutory right to reimbursement of job expenses under Lab. Code §§ 2802, 2804 and the statutory right to receive minimum wage under Lab. Code § 1194, which the court found to be unwaivable. On that basis. the court ruled that the four-part Gentry test applied (172 Cal. App. 4th 154, 170) .

Reaching only the first three Gentry factors, the court of appeals found that any individual recovery of the difference between the amounts paid for reimbursement of delivery expenses and the amounts actually incurred is likely to be modest. The same is true of any individual recovery for the alleged failure to pay minimum wage as a result. Second, the delivery drivers are low wage earners, and the potential for retaliation against members of the class who litigate or arbitrate individually is significant. Third, plaintiff presented evidence that most of the drivers are immigrants with limited English language skills who are likely to be unaware of their legal rights (172 Cal. App. 4th 154, 170-171) . Accordingly, the court ruled that the evidence supports the reason stated for the trial court's decision that the class arbitration waiver is unenforceable as against public policy under Gentry (172 Cal. App. 4th 154, 171) . The portions of the opinion addressing the procedural unconscionability of the arbitration agreement, the substantive unconscionability of the agreement, and the unenforceability of the agreement due to unconscionability are discussed, respectively, in § 20A.91[3][d], [e], and [k], below.

The court of appeals reversed the trial court's grant of class action defendant's motion to compel arbitration in Franco v. Athens Disposal Co., Inc. (2009) 171 Cal. App. 4th 1277, 90 Cal. Rptr. 3d 539 . The court found an arbitration agreement containing a class arbitration waiver and a waiver of the right to file an action under the Private Attorneys General Act of 2004 was unconscionable because it was tainted with illegality as a whole and therefore unenforceable. The court of appeals ruled that the substantive claims of violation of meal and rest-period requirements in Labor Code § 226.7 are not waivable, per Labor Code § 219 (171 Cal. App. 4th 1277, 1294) . Accordingly, the class arbitration waiver must comply with the four-factor Gentry test. Under the first factor, the employee's total damages for the meal and rest period violations, as alleged, come to approximately $ 7,750, plus $ 2,500 in civil penalties, an amount too high for a small claims action under Code Civ. Proc. § 116.221, and too low, as a practical matter, to be pursued as an individual claim, either in court or through arbitration. Further, the possibility of an award of attorney fees would not provide a sufficient incentive for an attorney to take a case like the employee's as an individual matter. As for the second factor, the fact that the employee no longer works for the employer simply strengthens his status as the representative in a class action or class arbitration because it is reasonably presumed that potential class members still employed by the employer might be unwilling to sue individually or join a suit for fear of retaliation at their jobs. Given that a number of putative members of the class are current employees, the concern for possible employer reprisal action exists. The employer's stated anti-retaliation policy fails as mitigation in this regard, given the record of the employer's wholesale disregard of the meal and rest period laws with respect to numerous employees over an extended period of time. Third, some workers, particularly those with limited English language skills, may be unfamiliar with labor laws. In a class proceeding, current and former employees would receive written notice of their rights. Respecting the fourth factor, absent effective enforcement, the employer's cost of paying occasional judgments and fines may be significantly outweighed by the cost savings of not paying for missed meal and rest periods. Given that class treatment would be more practical than individual actions, regardless of whether the claims are adjudicated through arbitration or in the trial court, the court of appeals held that the record does not support the trial court's determination that the employees' claims would be so individualized as to render class arbitration treatment significantly less effective than individual arbitrations (171 Cal. App. 4th 1277, 1295-1299) . The portion of the opinion dealing with the employee's claim that the arbitration agreement is not enforceable as unconscionable is discussed in § 20A.91[3][k], below.

The facts and procedural background of Murphy v. Check 'N Go of California, Inc. (2007) 156 Cal. App. 4th 138, 67 Cal. Rptr. 3d 120 , and the portion of the opinion address the court's authority to determine the issue of unconscionability are discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.10[3][k]. With regard to the class action waiver, the court of appeal discussed Discover Bank v. Superior Court (Boehr) (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 148, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 76, 113 P.3d 1100 (Discover Bank discussed at § 20A.91[3][i]) and cited it for the proposition that one-sided, exculpatory clauses in contracts of adhesion, at least to the extent they operate to insulate a party from liability that otherwise would be imposed under California law, are generally unconscionable and should not be enforced (156 Cal. App. 4th 138, 147) . Not all class action waivers are necessarily unconscionable--only those found in consumer contracts of adhesion in a setting in which disputes between the contracting parties predictably involve small amounts of damages, and when it is alleged that the party with the superior bargaining power has carried out a scheme to deliberately cheat large numbers of consumers out of individually small sums of money [Civ. Code § 1668] (156 Cal. App. 4th 138, 147-148) . The class action waiver in this case was patently one-sided and, as established by the unopposed declarations of counsel presented by plaintiff, class members would have difficulty securing legal representation for individual cases because of the relatively small sums involved, and class actions were necessary to deter employers like defendant from misclassifying their employees (156 Cal. App. 4th 138, 148) . Substantial evidence supported the court's ruling that the class action waiver was an exculpatory clause (156 Cal. App. 4th 138, 148) . The court also discussed and cited Gentry v. Superior Court (Circuit City Stores, Inc.) (2007) 42 Cal. 4th 443, 457, 463, 466, 64 Cal. Rptr. 3d 773, 165 P.3d 556 (Gentry, discussed above) for the proposition that the question of whether a class action waiver is exculpatory in the context of wage and hour laws is a factual question requiring a showing of real world obstacles to the vindication of class members' rights to overtime pay through individual arbitration, including the modest size of the potential individual recovery, the potential for retaliation against members of the class, and the fact that absent members of the class might be ill informed about their rights. These considerations were all addressed by reasonable plaintiff's declarations of counsel, and defendant failed to controvert them (156 Cal. App. 4th 138, 148-149) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20A ARBITRATION: RESISTING
PART II. FORMS
A. General Principles Relating to Resisting Arbitration

2-20A California Points & Authorities § 20A.23

[Reserved]

§ 20A.23[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20A ARBITRATION: RESISTING
PART II. FORMS
A. General Principles Relating to Resisting Arbitration

2-20A California Points & Authorities § 20A.24

§ 20A.24 Union Cannot Waive Employee's Right to Jury Trial for the State or Statutory Claim at Issue

[1] FORM

THE ARBITRATION CLAUSE IN THE COLLECTIVE BARGAINING AGREEMENT DOES NOT ENCOMPASS PLAINTIFF'S CAUSE OF ACTION FOR _____ [specify claim, e.g., DISCHARGE IN VIOLATION OF PUBLIC POLICY], AND THEREFORE PLAINTIFF CANNOT BE COMPELLED TO ARBITRATE THAT CLAIM.

A. Union Cannot Waive Employee's Right to Jury Trial for the State or Statutory Claim at Issue. A union cannot prospectively waive an employee's right to a judicial forum for his or her statutory discrimination or state claims by agreeing to arbitration in a collective bargaining agreement (Zavala v. Scott Brothers Dairy, Inc. (2006) 143 Cal. App. 4th 585, 592-596, 49 Cal. Rptr. 3d 503 ; Deschene v. Pinole Point Steel Company (1999) 76 Cal. App. 4th 33, 48-49, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 15 (termination against public policy and discrimination on basis of health); Torrez v. Consolidated Freightways, Corp. (1997) 58 Cal. App. 4th 1247, 1259, 68 Cal. Rptr. 2d 792 (FEHA)) . Further, the fact that the (former) employee initiated arbitration of those claims and later withdrew them from arbitration does not preclude judicial action on those claims (Deschene v. Pinole Point Steel Company (1999) 76 Cal. App. 4th 33, 47-49, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 15).

[Optional] B. State Claim Is Not Preempted by Labor Management Relations Act. The trigger for Labor Management Relations Act Section 301 (29 U.S.C. § 185(a)) preemption is whether application of state law requires interpretation of the terms of a collective bargaining agreement ("CBA"). Claims for termination in violation of public policy and discrimination based on health doe not require interpretation of the CBA and thus are not preempted by the LMRA (Deschene v. Pinole Point Steel Company (1999) 76 Cal. App. 4th 33, 40-42, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 15).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

Paragraph A of this form may be submitted in opposition to a petition to compel arbitration on the basis of a collective bargaining agreement to support the contention that the particular claim is not one which a union may bind its members to arbitrate. Optional Paragraph B is for use if petitioner also claims the state action is preempted by Section 301 of the Labor Management Relations Act (29 U.S.C. § 185(a)). In many cases it will be appropriate to combine the authorities in Paragraph A of this form with those in § 20A.21.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in opposition to a petition to compel arbitration [see § 20A.10 et seq.].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form, and in the other forms combined with this form, with the facts of his or her case. For example, a copy of the arbitration agreement should be attached as an exhibit to the memorandum.

Although the issue addressed by this form is mainly one of law, there may be other issues with regard to which counsel will wish to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For forms opposing petitions to compel arbitration, as well as a procedural checklist, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 32, Contractual Arbitration: Agreements and Compelling Arbitration (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

For forms addressing general contract principles, see Ch. 50, Contracts .

[3] Discussion of Authority

[a] Union Cannot Waive Employee's Right to Jury Trial for the State or Statutory Claim at Issue

Zavala v. Scott Brothers Dairy, Inc. (2006) 143 Cal. App. 4th 585, 592-596, 49 Cal. Rptr. 3d 503 , was a class action by employees alleging that defendant failed to provide them statutory rest breaks and properly itemized wage-statements, in violation of Lab. Code §§ 226 and 226.7 and wage orders issued by the Industrial Wage Commission (IWC). Defendant moved to compel arbitration based on a collective-bargaining agreement (CBA) which defined grievances as "all disputes or controversies arising under this Agreement," an article of which required wage-stub itemization and coffee breaks in language similar, but not identical, to the Labor Code and IWC wage orders. Defendant claimed the allegations arose under the CBA and were subject to arbitration. The trial court disagreed, and denied the motion to compel arbitration. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed (143 Cal. App. 4th 585, 596) . The Legislature declared in Lab. Code § 219 that no provision of that article, which includes Sections 226 and 266.7, can in any way be contravened or set aside by a private agreement, whether written, oral, or implied (143 Cal. App. 4th 585, 596) . The court said the question before it was whether the parties agreed to resolve statutory labor claims by arbitration, and concluded that regardless of whether the CBA includes a broad arbitration provision, that clause was not binding on plaintiffs because the Union could not waive plaintiffs' right to bring statutory labor-rights claims in court and because those claims did not arise under the CBA (143 Cal. App. 4th 585, 595). The court discussed federal and U.S. Supreme Court cases, including a 2005 Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal case which held that California's statutorily guaranteed meal periods are not subject to waiver by a collective-bargaining agreement (143 Cal. App. 4th 585, 592-593) . These rights devolve on plaintiffs as individual employees, not as members of a collective organization and so they exist independent of the collective-bargaining process. The lawsuit represents an effort to enforce nonwaivable statutory rights, not an attempt to enforce compliance with the CBA (143 Cal. App. 4th 585, 595). Plaintiffs did not agree to arbitrate their claims and their dispute does not arise under the CBA (143 Cal. App. 4th 585, 595). Plaintiffs are not required to arbitrate this dispute. Moreover, the court held this result was not changed because the Union had already grieved the rest-break issue under the CBA. The itemized wage-statement claim had not been grieved and would not be barred. Further, courts have repeatedly held that the prior submission of certain statutory claims to final and binding arbitration does not bar a subsequent lawsuit where the employees have not waived their statutorily protected rights to a judicial resolution (143 Cal. App. 4th 585, 595-596) .

Plaintiff in Deschene v. Pinole Point Steel Company (1999) 76 Cal. App. 4th 33, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 15 , was fired by defendant, allegedly because of insubordination, disruption of the work flow, and outbursts at his supervisor. Plaintiff contended the work flow was interrupted by problems caused by improper maintenance, denied the outbursts against his supervisor, and contended he was fired because he gave deposition and trial testimony unfavorable to defendant in an asbestos-related action. Plaintiff had diabetes and his previous supervisor had accommodated the illness by letting plaintiff use his office to take insulin injections and relieving plaintiff on the line when plaintiff needed to rest. Plaintiff's supervisor at the time of his discharge refused to make any such accommodation. Plaintiff filed a complaint seeking damages for wrongful termination on theories of breach of contract and of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing as well as termination violative of public policy and of statutory prohibitions against discrimination on the basis of medical condition and as retaliation for giving testimony in a deposition. Plaintiff was a member of the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers and subject to a collectivebargaining agreement ("CBA"). Before filing the lawsuit, plaintiff grieved his termination reprimand on the basis that he was fired because of his health and age in violation of nondiscrimination provisions contained within the CBA. The matter was set for arbitration, but plaintiff withdrew his request for arbitration and filed the suit a month later. Defendants moved for summary judgment on the grounds that all causes of action alleged in the complaint were governed by a collective bargaining agreement, and therefore preempted by section 301 of the Labor-Management Relations Act, (29 U.S.C. 185, "LMRA") and that plaintiff failed to dispute that his termination was not in violation of public policy arising out of the testimony and his medical condition. The motion was granted and judgment entered. Plaintiff's motion for new trial was denied, and he appealed.

The court of appeal for the First District, Division Four, reversed as to the causes of action for wrongful termination in violation of public policy and of discrimination on the basis of health and affirmed with respect to the claims for breach of contract and of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, which they agreed were subject to the CBA and preempted by the LMRA (76 Cal. App. 4th 33, 49). The court of appeal contrasted Alexander v. Gardner-Denver Co. (1974) 415 U.S. 36, 50-51, 94 S. Ct. 1011, 39 L. Ed. 2d 147 , which held that the purpose of Congress in enacting title VII would be defeated by permitting a union to bargain away the protections provided by the statute and that the employee's decision to submit his contractual claims to the arbitral forum did not effect a waiver of his right to pursue a judicial remedy for the title VII claims [Alexander v. Gardner-Denver Co. (1974) 415 U.S. 36, 52, 94 S. Ct. 1011, 39 L. Ed. 2d 147] , with Gilmer v. Interstate/Johnson Lane Corp. (1991) 500 U.S. 20, 22-23, 111 S. Ct. 1647, 114 L. Ed. 2d 26 , which held it appropriate to compel arbitration of an age discrimination claim in accordance with and arbitration clause in a contract signed by the individual employee (76 Cal. App. 4th 33, 47) . The court noted a 1996 Fourth Circuit opinion that required arbitration of both Title VII and ADA claims under a CBA, but also noted that a California case had criticized that decision and refused to follow it [see Torrez v. Consolidated Freightways, Corp. (1997) 58 Cal. App. 4th 1247, 68 Cal. Rptr. 2d 792 , discussed below] (76 Cal. App. 4th 33, 48) . The court of appeal concluded that the distinction between CBAs signed by union officials and contracts signed by individuals was crucial. Although plaintiff had personally signed the CBA in question, he was merely one of several union signatories to the agreement, and did not sign it in his individual capacity. Thus, he was not personally agreeing to arbitrate any state law claims he personally might have against his employer (76 Cal. App. 4th 33, 49) .

Plaintiff in Torrez v. Consolidated Freightways, Corp. (1997) 58 Cal. App. 4th 1247, 1259, 68 Cal. Rptr. 2d 792 , was bound by the terms of a collective bargaining agreement ("CBA") between his employer, defendant Consolidated Freightways Corporation of Delaware, and the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America. The CBA included provisions governing the discharge of employees, prohibiting discrimination on the basis of sex, age, race, creed, color or national origin, and established a mandatory grievance and binding arbitration procedure. Plaintiff believed he was terminated for things that non-Hispanic co-workers were allowed to do and filed suit against defendant, alleging violations of the FEHA and California Constitution, intentional infliction of emotional distress, and tortious wrongful termination. Defendant's petition to compel arbitration was denied, and defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed as to plaintiff's statutory discrimination claims. The court of appeal discussed Alexander v. Gardner-Denver Co. (1974) 415 U.S. 36, 50-51, 94 S. Ct. 1011, 39 L. Ed. 2d 147 , and Gilmer v. Interstate/Johnson Lane Corp. (1991) 500 U.S. 20, 22-23, 111 S. Ct. 1647, 114 L. Ed. 2d 26 , and cases interpreting both of them and summarized, saying it is now clear that an individual may surrender his or her statutory rights in an individual employment contract unless Congress has expressed the intent that a particular right cannot be surrendered. However, that is not the case with respect to statutory rights that a union purports to surrender on behalf of its members in a collective bargaining agreement. Although an individual employment contract can address both contractual and statutory rights, a collective bargaining agreement, by its very nature, may address only the common, contractual rights of the members of the bargaining unit (58 Cal. App. 4th 1247, 1258) . Adopting the majority view, the court of appeal concluded that a union may not prospectively waive an employee's right to a judicial forum to hear his or her statutory discrimination claims. The court noted that plaintiff's claim against defendant not based on title VII but on the California FEHA, which was modeled after the federal statute, saying this was a distinction without a difference (58 Cal. App. 4th 1247, 1259) and that rights protected by FEHA deserve the same protection that afforded the ADEA and the ADA (58 Cal. App. 4th 1247, 1260). The portion of the opinion discussing plaintiff's nonstatutory claims was not published.

[b] State Claim Is Not Preempted by Labor Management Relations Act

The facts and procedural background of Deschene v. Pinole Point Steel Company (1999) 76 Cal. App. 4th 33, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 15 , are discussed at [a], above. Before reaching the issue of whether the CBA required plaintiff to arbitrate the causes of action for termination in violation of public policy and discrimination based on medical condition, the court of appeal considered defendant's contention that those claims were preempted by Section 301 of the Labor Management Relations Act (29 U.S.C. § 185(a)), which would vest jurisdiction only in the federal district court. The purpose of section 301 is to ensure that the terms in CBAs will be construed to have the same meaning under state and federal law and from state to state. Thus, section 301 requires that federal law preempts state law with respect to the interpretation of the terms of a CBA. The trigger for section 301 preemption is whether the application of state law requires contractual interpretation of the terms in a CBA (76 Cal. App. 4th 33, 40). To determine whether a state claim is preempted by section 301 because it requires interpretation of the CBA, the court looks to the elements of the claim, the terms of the agreement, the facts which plaintiff believes support the cause of action and those the defendant may assert in his defense. After doing so, the court concluded that the relevant questions were factual in nature and therefore would not requireconstruing terms of the CBA and would not be preempted (76 Cal. App. 4th 33, 41-42) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20A ARBITRATION: RESISTING
PART II. FORMS
A. General Principles Relating to Resisting Arbitration

2-20A California Points & Authorities §§ 20A.25-20A.29

[Reserved]

§§ 20A.25[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20A ARBITRATION: RESISTING
PART II. FORMS
A. General Principles Relating to Resisting Arbitration

2-20A California Points & Authorities § 20A.30

§ 20A.30 Applicable Principles of Contract Interpretation

[1] FORM

RESPONDENT CANNOT BE COMPELLED TO ARBITRATE THIS CONTROVERSY BECAUSE, APPLYING THE GENERAL RULE OF CONTRACT CONSTRUCTION THAT _____ [specify, e.g., AMBIGUOUS CONTRACT TERMS ARE TO BE CONSTRUED AGAINST THE DRAFTER, IN THIS CASE PETITIONER], _____ [THERE IS NO ARBITRATION PROVISION IN THE AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE PARTIES or THE ARBITRATION PROVISION AT ISSUE DOES NOT APPLY TO RESPONDENT or THE ARBITRATION PROVISION AT ISSUE IS NOT BROAD ENOUGH TO ENCOMPASS THE CONTROVERSY SOUGHT TO BE ARBITRATED].

[Optional] A. Ambiguous Term Construed Against Drafter. Ambiguous language in an arbitration clause must be construed against the party who drafted the agreement, especially when the agreement was not the product of negotiation or other elements of adhesion exist (Civ. Code § 1654; Victoria v. Superior Court (1985) 40 Cal. 3d 734, 740-747, 222 Cal. Rptr. 1, 710 P.2d 833 ; Lawrence v. Walzer & Gabrielson (1989) 207 Cal. App. 3d 1501, 1507, 256 Cal. Rptr. 6).

[Optional] B. Construction of General Word Following Enumeration Is Limited. Under the doctrine of ejusdem generis, also known as Lord Tenterden's rule, when general words follow an enumeration of a particular class of things, the general words must be interpreted to mean only other things of the same nature or class as those enumerated. [Thus, for instance, an agreement to arbitrate disputes regarding "fees, costs, or any other aspect of" the parties' relationship was only broad enough to require arbitration of financial matters similar to disputes regarding fees and costs] (Lawrence v. Walzer & Gabrielson (1989) 207 Cal. App. 3d 1501, 1506, 256 Cal. Rptr. 6).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to a petition to compel arbitration to assert that the contract at issue, when interpreted in accordance with one of the general rules of contract interpretation, does not contain an arbitration provision or contains an arbitration provision that either is not broad enough in scope to coverage the controversy at issue or does not include respondent as a party who is bound by the arbitration provision.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in opposition to one seeking to compel arbitration [see § 20A.10]. Counsel may wish to incorporate other authorities, such as those from Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.30, which set forth the rule that general state law contract principles are to be applied in construing the alleged arbitration agreement. If arguing that the arbitration provision is not broad enough to cover the present controversy, counsel may wish to incorporate authorities from the forms at § 20A.40 et seq. If arguing that the arbitration provision does not bind respondent, counsel may wish to incorporate authorities form the forms at § 20A.60 et seq.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form, and in the other forms combined with this form, with the facts of his or her case. For example, argument should emphasize the language of the agreement, its ambiguity, and the fact that petitioner drafted it.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a form of response to a petition to compel arbitration that may be supported by this memorandum, as well as a procedural checklist, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 32, Contractual Arbitration: Agreements and Compelling Arbitration (Matthew Bender).

For discussion of the rules of contract interpretation, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For memoranda to combine with this form, regarding other matters that the opposition may need to address, see §§ 20A.10, 20A.12, 20A.21 et seq., 20A.31 et seq., 20A.60 et seq., and 20A.80 et seq.

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion andgeneral forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

For forms addressing general contract principles, see Ch. 50, Contracts .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Ambiguous Term Construed Against Drafter

Civ. Code § 1654 provides that in cases of uncertainty not removed by the rules of construction set forth in Civ. Code §§ 1635-1653, the language of a contract should be interpreted most strongly against the party who caused the uncertainty to exist.

In Victoria v. Superior Court (1985) 40 Cal. 3d 734, 222 Cal. Rptr. 1, 710 P.2d 833 , plaintiff, a member of a health plan, was sexually assaulted by an employee of defendant health plan while hospitalized for treatment in the plan's hospital. Under an arbitration agreement negotiated between plaintiff's employer and defendant, plaintiff agreed to arbitrate all claims "arising from rendition or failure to render services" on the part of the plan. In plaintiff's action against the plan for negligent employment of the orderly who, it was alleged, had a past history of sexual assaults, the trial court granted the plan's motion to compel arbitration.

The Supreme Court reversed. It held that the arbitration agreement was ambiguous regarding whether the arbitration clause was intended to cover intentional torts by the plan's employees that were not related to treatment. It then held that the provision should be interpreted against the drafter under the normal rules that apply to the interpretation of standard form contracts (40 Cal. 3d 734, 744, 747) . Although the Court noted the rule that arbitration clauses should be liberally construed in favor of arbitration, it held that this rule did not apply when the term was contained in a standardized form contract, at least in the present case in which it was unlikely that the parties intended that the arbitration provision would apply to suits for sexual assaults (40 Cal. 3d 734, 747) .

The facts and procedural background of Lawrence v. Walzer & Gabrielson (1989) 207 Cal. App. 3d 1501, 256 Cal. Rptr. 6 , are discussed under [b], below. The court of appeal noted that the arbitration clause at issue was part of a retainer agreement drafted by defendant attorneys and presented to the plaintiff client for signature, and that the agreement was not the product of negotiation. The court cited Civ. Code § 1654, and considered its application in affirming the denial of defendants' petition to compel arbitration (207 Cal. App. 3d 1501, 1507) .

[b] Construction of General Word Following Enumeration Is Limited

Lawrence v. Walzer & Gabrielson (1989) 207 Cal. App. 3d 1501, 256 Cal. Rptr. 6 , involved an appeal by defendant attorneys from denial of their petition to compel arbitration of plaintiff's legal malpractice claim. The retainer agreement at issue was three pages long and contained thirteen numbered paragraphs. Paragraph 11 of the agreement provided in part: "In the event of a dispute between us regarding fees, costs, or any other aspect of our attorney-client relationship, the dispute shall be resolved by binding arbitration." Plaintiff would not have signed the agreement had plaintiff been told that signing it would waive the right to trial of, and require arbitration of, any possible future malpractice claim.

The court of appeal focused on the interpretation of the quoted language, and cited Fiske v. Niagra Fire Ins. Co. (1929) 207 Cal. 355, 357, 278 P. 861 , and Scally v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co. (1972) 23 Cal. App. 3d 806, 819, 100 Cal. Rptr. 501 , for the statement of the doctrine of ejusdem generis. Under that doctrine, also known as Lord Tenterden's rule, when general words follow the enumeration of particular classes of persons or things, the general words will be construed as applicable only to persons or things of the same general nature or class as those enumerated. The rule is based on the belief that if the writer had intended the general words to be used in their unrestricted sense, he or she would not have mentioned the particular things or class of things that would in that event be mere surplusage. The words "other" or "any other" following an enumeration of particular classes should be read as "other such like" or read to include others "of like kind or character" (207 Cal. App. 3d 1501, 1506) . Thus, the arbitration clause here at issue was not broad enough to require arbitration of plaintiff's malpractice claim, but was limited in its application to financial matters similar to disputes regarding fees and costs (207 Cal. App. 3d 1501, 1506) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20A ARBITRATION: RESISTING
PART II. FORMS
A. General Principles Relating to Resisting Arbitration

2-20A California Points & Authorities § 20A.31

§ 20A.31 Arbitration Provision Was Not Incorporated by Reference

[1] FORM

RESPONDENT CANNOT BE COMPELLED TO ARBITRATE THIS CONTROVERSY BECAUSE THERE IS NO ARBITRATION PROVISION IN THE AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE PARTIES, NOR IS ANY ARBITRATION PROVISION INCORPORATED BY REFERENCE INTO THAT AGREEMENT.

A. Arbitration Provision Was Not Incorporated by Reference. A party will not be compelled to arbitrate under an agreement that does not contain an arbitration clause, or an agreement that failed to adequately incorporate an arbitration clause by reference (Adajar v. RWR Homes, Inc. (2008) 160 Cal. App. 4th 563, 569-571, 73 Cal. Rptr. 3d 17 ; Kleveland v. Chicago Title Ins. Co. (2006) 141 Cal. App. 4th 761, 764-765, 46 Cal. Rptr. 3d 314 ; Marsch v. Williams (1994) 23 Cal. App. 4th 250, 256, 28 Cal. Rptr. 2d 398 ; Chan v. Drexel Burnham Lambert, Inc. (1986) 178 Cal. App. 3d 632, 643-645, 223 Cal. Rptr. 838).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to a petition to compel arbitration in response to a claim that the parties' agreement incorporated by reference an arbitration provision in some other document, when in fact it did not do so.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in opposition to one seeking to compel arbitration [see § 20A.10]. Counsel may wish to incorporate other authorities, such as those from Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.30, which set forth the rule thatgeneral state law contract principles are to be applied in construing the alleged arbitration agreement.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form, and in the other forms combined with this form, with the facts of his or her case. For example, argument should emphasize the language of the parties' agreement and its failure to include any mention of arbitration.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a form of response to a petition to compel arbitration that may be supported by this memorandum, as well as a procedural checklist, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 32, Contractual Arbitration: Agreements and Compelling Arbitration (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For memoranda to combine with this form, regarding other matters that the opposition may need to address, see §§ 20A.10-20A.12, 20A.21 et seq., 20A.30 et seq., 20A.40 et seq., 20A.60 et seq., and 20A.80 et seq.

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

For forms addressing general contract principles, see Ch. 50, Contracts .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Arbitration Provision Was Not Incorporated by Reference

Adajar v. RWR Homes, Inc. (2008) 160 Cal. App. 4th 563, 73 Cal. Rptr. 3d 17 , was a construction defect case. Defendant rested its claim of an arbitration agreement on a provision it claimed was incorporated by reference in plaintiffs' applications for warranties. Buyers were alleged to have signed consents acknowledging that they had viewed and received a video about the warranty and read a sample copy of the warranty booklet, which was alleged to contain the arbitration provision. The consent recited that buyers agreed to the binding arbitration provision. Defendant did not submit any copy of the video or the sample copy of the warranty booklet that owners attested to having read but instead submitted copies of two warranty booklets that were issued to buyers after the close of escrow. One version was dated January 1, 2001, and the other version was dated October 1, 2002. Defendant also submitted copies of certificates of warranty insurance that notified the owners their homes were enrolled in the warranty program and specified whether they received the 2001 or the 2002 warranty booklet. Most of the owners submitted declarations stating that they did not receive a video pertaining to the warranty or a copy of the sample warranty booklet. The trial denied the motion on the grounds that (1) arbitration was unavailable because plaintiffs' claims were not for relief under the warranties; and (2)

the only arbitration agreement was set forth in the application for warranty protection, and that application was procedurally unconscionable because there was no specific acknowledgement of the arbitration clause and it was not separately identified in the paragraph, and substantively unconscionable because none of the terms of the arbitration were set forth nor was there any information regarding plaintiffs' waiver of a right to jury trial. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed (160 Cal. App. 4th 563, 566) . Defendant argued that the trial court erred by finding the applications for warranties were insufficient evidence of an agreement to arbitrate, citing the general rule that the agreement need not expressly provide for arbitration but may incorporate by reference another document containing an arbitration clause. The court of appeal pointed out that the applications plaintiffs signed did not incorporate by reference the terms of arbitration clauses included in the subsequently issued warranty booklets. Rather, the applications provided that by signing the forms, homeowners acknowledged they had viewed and received the video and had read a sample copy of the warranty booklet (160 Cal. App. 4th 563, 569) . Defendant did not produce a copy of either the video or the sample warranty booklet referred to in the application, and thus the terms of arbitration to which plaintiffs supposedly agreed could not be determined (160 Cal. App. 4th 563, 569-570) . In other words, defendant failed to prove the existence of an arbitration contract and plaintiffs' waiver of their right to a jury trial. The court emphasized that it could not simply infer the 2001 and 2002 warranty booklets issued to plaintiffs after the close of escrow were identical to the sample warranty booklet referred to in the applications, particularly because the 2001 and 2002 warranty booklets contained differences in their arbitration clauses. In fact, it was unexpected that an application for warranty would purport to bind the insured to arbitrate any claim or dispute between a homeowner and defendant, whether or not it pertained to the warranties. Further, there was no suggestion the sample warranty booklet, to any extent it actually existed, included such a broad arbitration clause (160 Cal. App. 4th 563, 570). Defendantargued that when a party signs a contract affirming that he or she agrees to be bound by provisions contained in a separate document, there is a presumption that the party knows what terms he or she was agreeing to, that plaintiffs had to establish that they did not knowingly or willingly agree to the incorporated provisions because the separate provisions were not reasonably available; and that as a general rule, a party is bound by the provisions of an agreement which he or she signs, even though he or she did not read them and was unaware of their existence (160 Cal. App. 4th 563, 570-571) . The court of appeal refused to apply any of those rules, saying it was defendant's burden to prove the existence of an arbitration agreement and no presumption arose as to plaintiffs' knowledge when defendant failed to submit the sample warranty booklet referred to in the application. Even if all parties agreed the application incorporated a sample warranty booklet, arbitration could not be compelled because there was no evidence of its terms. The court recited the rule regarding incorporation by reference, that for the terms of another document to be incorporated into the document executed by the parties the reference must be clear and unequivocal, the reference must be called to the attention of the other party and that party must consent to it, and the terms of the incorporated document must be known or easily available to the contracting parties. Defendant could not claim that the sample warranty ballot was easily available to plaintiffs, when it apparently could not even produce the document itself. The court of appeal found equally unavailing defendant's contention the existence of an arbitration agreement was for the arbitrator to determine. That contention relied on a Construction Arbitration Services, Inc. (CAS) rule that the arbitrator shall have the power to determine the existence or validity of a contract of which an arbitration clause forms a part, and on a provision of the 2001 warranty booklet that stated arbitration would be subject to CAS rules. However, the 2001 warranty booklet and CAS rules were immaterial because there was no evidence that in applying for warranty protection plaintiffs agreed to be bound by them. Given these holding, the court of appeal found it unnecessary to address the trial court's findings that arbitration was unavailable because plaintiffs' claims were unrelated to the warranties, and because of procedural and substantive unconscionability (160 Cal. App. 4th 563, 571, 571 n3). The court distinguished various cases relied on be defendant because each involved a situation in which the document or booklet containing the arbitration agreement was provided to homebuyers at the time they signed the consent (160 Cal. App. 4th 563, 572) .

Kleveland v. Chicago Title Ins. Co. (2006) 141 Cal. App. 4th 761, 46 Cal. Rptr. 3d 314 , involved a title insurance policy. The preliminary title insurance report described the real property to be insured, stated the coverage to be afforded and the exceptions and exclusions to that coverage, but did not indicate the policy would include an arbitration clause. The cover sheet stated the policy would be issued in the form of an American Land Title Association (ALTA) homeowner's policy of title insurance, version 11/98, copies of which were available on request. That policy had an arbitration clause. Defendant Chicago Title subsequently issued a different type of insurance policy, namely a California Land Title Association (CLTA) standard coverage policy, which also contained an arbitration clause applicable to any controversy or claim between the company and the insured arising out of or relating to this policy, any service of the company in connection with its issuance or the breach of a policy provision or other obligation. Plaintiffs filed an action for breach of contract and bad faith against Chicago Title after their discovering an easement on the insured property that was not mentioned in the preliminary title report. Defendant filed a motion to compel arbitration based on the clause in the CLTA policy it had issued. The court trial denied the motion to compel arbitration. After denial of its motion for reconsideration, defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed (141 Cal. App. 4th 761, 763, 766). The insured's approval and acceptance of the conditions set forth in a preliminary report create a binding contract based on the terms set forth in that report and any materials that are incorporated therein by reference. Therefore, whether the insured is bound by an arbitration clause depends directly on whether that term was set forth in the preliminary report or incorporated therein by reference (141 Cal. App. 4th 761, 764). The parties agree that the preliminary title report did not contain an arbitration clause and did not explicitly state that such a clause would be contained within the policy to be issued. But a contract, including a title insurance policy, may include provisions that are not physically a part of the basic document so long as those provisions are sufficiently incorporated by reference. Incorporation by reference requires that (1) the reference to another document was clear and unequivocal; (2) the reference was called to the attention of the other party, who consented to that term; and (3) the terms of the incorporated documents were known or easily available to the contracting parties. Chicago Title argues that the preliminary report incorporated the ALTA policy and its arbitration clause by reference because it mentioned that policy by name. But the ALTA policy never went into effect. The only arbitration clause that could conceivably be enforced in this case is the one that is a part of the CLTA policy that was actually issued, a policy that was not clearly and unequivocally referred to in the contract. While the court agreed that defendant's argument that it was unfair to deny arbitration when the arbitration clause in the CLTA policy it issued was virtually identical to an arbitration clause contained in the ALTA had a certain "no harm, no foul" appeal, it would be unreasonable to rely on an arbitration clause in a nonexistent policy to deny plaintiffs the right to a jury trial. As the drafter of the preliminary report, Chicago Title was in the best position to avoid this problem (141 Cal. App. 4th 761, 765) .

The parties in Marsch v. Williams (1994) 23 Cal. App. 4th 250, 28 Cal. Rptr. 2d 398 , were partners in several partnerships, referred to as "the La Jolla partnerships" and Horizon Properties. The agreements relating to the La Jolla partnerships did not contain arbitration clauses. The Horizon Properties agreement did. In 1990, Marschfiled a complaint against Williams alleging fraud, breach of fiduciary duty, and intentional infliction of emotional distress relating to the Horizon partnership. That dispute was arbitrated and resulted in a net award in favor of Williams. That arbitration panel also found that disputes between the partners arising out of the La Jolla partnerships were beyond the scope of the arbitration. In July, 1992, Marsch commenced this action against Williams relating to the La Jolla partnerships. Williams sought to compel arbitration and stay the litigation. The motion was denied on the ground that the La Jolla action did not arise out of or relate to the Horizon partnership and was not controlled by the arbitration clause in the La Jolla agreements. Williams appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court noted the strong policy in favor of arbitration, and the fact that that policy cannot replace an agreement to arbitrate (23 Cal. App. 4th 250, 255) . Williams contended the arbitration clause in the La Jolla agreements, which provided for arbitration of "any controversy ... arising out of or related to the contract" was sufficiently broad to include tort as well as contractual liabilities as long as the claims have their roots in the relationship between the parties created by the contract. Williams claimed that Marsch's claim that Williams' attempt to obtain control over Horizon involved undermining Marsch's ability to operate La Jolla. The court of appeal said the "roots of the relationship" theory could not be applied in that manner (23 Cal. App. 4th 250, 255-256) . The court distinguished Pioneer Take Out Corp. v. Bhavsar (1989) 209 Cal. App. 3d 1353, 257 Cal. Rptr. 749 , on the ground that the franchise agreement in Pioneer was expressly incorporated into the sublease, making the arbitration clause in the franchise agreement applicable to disputes arising out of the sublease. In this case, the Horizon agreement and the La Jolla agreements were not closely connected, did not incorporate one another's terms, were not executed at the same time, and breach of the Horizon agreement did not necessarily leads to breach of the La Jollas agreements (23 Cal. App. 4th 250, 256) .

In Chan v. Drexel Burnham Lambert, Inc. (1986) 178 Cal. App. 3d 632, 223 Cal. Rptr. 838 , a former employee filed a wrongful discharge action against a stock brokerage firm. The employer petitioned to compel arbitration, contending that by the terms of the employment, the employee had agreed to the rules and by-laws of three stock exchanges to which the employee's application was submitted, including the New York Stock Exchange (NYSE) Rule 347 requiring arbitration. The petition was denied, and defendant appealed.

In upholding the denial of the petition, the court of appeal ruled that the arbitration clause had not been incorporated by reference into the employee's application form. The court noted that nowhere in the employment contract was there any reference to arbitration. Rather, the employee would be required to seek out Rule 347 to locate the arbitration clause. Construing the ambiguities within the incorporating document against the drafter, the court held that the reference to rules and by-laws of the various stock exchanges did not clearly and unequivocally draw the employee's attention to the NYSE's Rules of Board, which is where Rule 347 appears. Moreover, because the employment contract did not adequately refer to Rule 347, the terms of the incorporated document were not so known to the employee or so made easily available to her that she would be bound by its terms (178 Cal. App. 3d 632, 643-645) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20A ARBITRATION: RESISTING
PART II. FORMS
A. General Principles Relating to Resisting Arbitration

2-20A California Points & Authorities § 20A.32

§ 20A.32 Parties Did Not Intend Contract to Be Operative Until Signed

[1] FORM

RESPONDENT CANNOT BE COMPELLED TO ARBITRATE THIS CONTROVERSY BECAUSE THERE IS NO ARBITRATION AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE PARTIES; THE PARTIES DID NOT INTEND THEIR AGREEMENT TO BE OPERATIVE UNTIL IT WAS SIGNED; AND RESPONDENT NEVER SIGNED IT.

A. Parties Did Not Intend Contract to Be Operative Until Signed. When it is clear, from a provision that a proposed written contract will become operative only when signed by the parties as well as from any other evidence presented by the parties that both parties contemplated that acceptance of the contract's terms would be signified by signing it, the failure to sign the agreement means no binding contract was created (Banner Entertainment, Inc. v. Superior Court (1998) 62 Cal. App. 4th 348, 358, 72 Cal. Rptr. 2d 598).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to a petition to compel arbitration when it is clear that the parties did not intend the agreement containing the arbitration provision to be operative until it was signed, and that agreement was not signed.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in opposition to one seeking to compel arbitration [see § 20A.10]. Counsel may wish to incorporate other authorities, such as those from Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.30, which set forth the rule that general state law contract principles are to be applied in construing the alleged arbitration agreement.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form, and in the other forms combined with this form, with the facts of his or her case. For example, argument should emphasize the language of any letters of intent, drafts of the parties' agreement, or actions by the parties that manifested their intent not to be bound until the contract was signed.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see CodeCiv. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a form of response to a petition to compel arbitration that may be supported by this memorandum, as well as a procedural checklist, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 32, Contractual Arbitration: Agreements and Compelling Arbitration (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For memoranda to combine with this form, regarding other matters that the opposition may need to address, see §§ 20A.10-20A.12, 20A.21 et seq., 20A.30-20A.31, 20A.40 et seq., 20A.60 et seq., and 20A.80 et seq.

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

For forms addressing general contract principles, see Ch. 50, Contracts .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Parties Did Not Intend Contract to Be Operative Until Signed

The facts and procedural background of Banner Entertainment, Inc. v. Superior Court (1998) 62 Cal. App. 4th 348, 72 Cal. Rptr. 2d 598 , and the portion of the opinion addressing the applicability of state law contract principles in general are discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.30[3][a]. The court of appeal granted a writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate its order granting defendant's petition to compel arbitration (62 Cal. App. 4th 348, 362) . The court set forth the rule that if there is no valid contract to arbitrate, a petition to compel arbitration must be denied (62 Cal. App. 4th 348, 356) , and discussed the fact that the determination whether there is an enforceable arbitration agreement is based on state law principles related to the formation, revocation and enforcement of contracts (62 Cal. App. 4th 348, 356-357) . One of those principles is that when it is clear, both from a provision that the proposed written contract will become operative only when signed by the parties as well as from any other evidence presented by the parties that both parties contemplated that acceptance of the contract's terms would be signified by signing it, the failure to sign the agreement means no binding contract was created (62 Cal. App. 4th 348, 358) . The draft agreement forwarded by defendant provided that "this agreement when signed by the parties hereto will constitute a legal and binding obligation of the parties. [P] Please acknowledge your approval of the foregoing terms by signing a copy of this letter in the space indicated below." After reviewing the evidence on the matter, the court found that defendant presented no evidence that the parties orally or otherwise discussed, let alone agreed, that any disputes in connection with their agreement would be resolved by arbitration. Nor did defendant present any evidence that final assent to the terms of the parties' agreement would be manifested other than by signing the drafts and returning them to defendant (62 Cal. App. 4th 348, 360) . Rather, uncontradicted evidence showed that the parties never reached an agreement which included all the terms contained in the draft agreements. The court of appeal distinguished cases relied on by defendant in which arbitration was compelled on the basis of an unsigned agreement: in one case the parties had past dealings and the unsigned agreement was identical to the earlier signed contracts; in another the parties had ratified the contract by repeatedly acknowledging its validity (62 Cal. App. 4th 348, 361) . Although the parties did have an oral agreement which covered marketing and expenses at the Cannes Film Festival in 1996, before defendant sent plaintiff the draft agreements, there was no evidence that the arbitration provision had been discussed, let alone agreed on, in connection with that agreement (62 Cal. App. 4th 348, 362) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20A ARBITRATION: RESISTING
PART II. FORMS
A. General Principles Relating to Resisting Arbitration

2-20A California Points & Authorities § 20A.33

§ 20A.33 Unilateral Modification of Contract to Include Arbitration Clause

[1] FORM

RESPONDENT CANNOT BE COMPELLED TO ARBITRATE THIS CONTROVERSY BECAUSE THERE IS NO ARBITRATION AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE PARTIES. [THE SCOPE OF THE PROVISION ALLOWING PETITIONER TO UNILATERALLY CHANGE THE TERMS OF THE PARTIES' AGREEMENT DID NOT CONTEMPLATE AN ARBITRATION PROVISION].

[EITHER]

A. Unilateral Attempt to Insert Arbitration Clause. General contract principles apply to determine whether an arbitration provision added unilaterally after the primary contract is made actually becomes part of the primary contract. Under those principles, there must first be a provision in the primary contract that allows one party to unilaterally change the terms of the agreement. Then, the "change in terms" clause is examined to determine whether addition of a requirement to arbitrate disputes is within the scope of the things that party was allowed to unilaterally change. [Thus, a requirement for arbitration added _____ (specify how added, e.g., in a "bill stuffer") is not binding on _____ (specify party, e.g., credit card holders) when it is beyond the scope of what _____ (specify party, e.g., customers) would reasonably believe _____ (specify party attempting to make unilateral change, e.g., the bank) intended by reserving to itself the power to change terms. That power is reasonably interpreted to reserve to _____ (specify party attempting to make unilateral change, e.g., the bank) the power to change _____ (specify things within contemplation of "change of terms" clause, e.g., financial terms, such as interest rate and service charges), but not to deprive _____ (specify party, e.g., cardholders) of the right to a jury trial to resolve all disputes regarding the agreement] (Badie v. Bank of America (1998) 67 Cal. App. 4th 779, 790, 797-805, 79 Cal. Rptr. 2d 273).

[AND/OR]

A. Particular Terms Preclude Enforcement. Under particular facts, a unilateral modification of a credit card agreement by the issuer to include an arbitration provision that provides no way for a card holder to opt out, [but provides instead that the arbitration provision will survive termination of the credit card account as well as repayment of all amounts borrowed thereunder], will not be enforced against a card holder who informed the issuer that he or she would not be bound by the arbitration provision and thereafter did not use the credit card. It is not necessary that the card holder immediately pay off any balance owing (Shea v. Household Bank (SB) (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 85, 90, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 387).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to a petition to compel arbitration when the arbitration clause at issue was unilaterally added by the other party. Counsel should use either or both paragraphs. The first addresses the general contract principle that modifications are only allowed if they are within the scope of a contract provision allowing unilateral modification. The second, which was decided in part under a Nevada statute that allowed credit card issuers to modify the terms of the credit card agreement unilaterally, is for use when the terms of the particular unilateral modification or statute involved provide a basis for the court to imply a requirement that the card holder actively use the card to be bound by the modification. The bracketed language in the second paragraph sets forth the terms of the particular unilateral modification at issue in Shea v. Household Bank (SB) (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 85, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 387 .

This form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in opposition to one seeking to compel arbitration [see § 20A.10]. Counsel may wish to incorporate other authorities, such as those from Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.30, which set forth the rule that general state law contract principles are to be applied in construing the alleged arbitration agreement.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form, and in the other forms combined with this form, with the facts of his or her case. For example, a copy of the original agreement as well as a copy of the document attempting to insert the arbitration clause should be attached as an exhibit to the memorandum.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For forms or petition to compel arbitration and responses to them, as well as a procedural checklist, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 32, Contractual Arbitration: Agreements and Compelling Arbitration (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For memoranda to combine with this form, regarding other matters that the opposition may need to address, see §§ 20A.10-20A.12, 20A.21 et seq., 20A.30-20A.32, 20A.40 et seq., 20A.60 et seq., and 20A.80 et seq.

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

For forms addressing general contract principles, see Ch. 50, Contracts .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Unilateral Attempt to Insert Arbitration Clause

Plaintiffs in Badie v. Bank of America (1998) 67 Cal. App. 4th 779, 79 Cal. Rptr. 2d 273 , sought to enjoin implementation of an alternative dispute resolution provision (ADR) the defendant had attempted to add to existing credit card agreements by sending credit card customers an insert with their monthly account statements (a "bill stuffer"), notifying them of the new term. The court was dealing with several versions of the "change in terms" clause in effect at the time plaintiffs' credit cards were issued. In most versions, dated between April 1988 and June 1992, the change of terms provision stated, "We may change any term, condition, service or feature of your Account at any time. We will provide you with notice of the change to the extent required by law." In two versions of the agreement, the change of terms provision was worded as follows: "WE MAY CHANGE OR TERMINATE ANY TERMS, CONDITIONS, SERVICES OR FEATURES OF YOUR ACCOUNT (INCLUDING INCREASING YOUR FINANCE CHARGES) AT ANY TIME. WE MAY IMPOSE ANY CHANGE IN TERMS ON YOUR OUTSTANDING BALANCE, AS WELL AS ON SUBSEQUENT TRANSACTIONS AND BALANCES. We may also add new terms, conditions, services or features to your Account. To the extent required by law,we will notify you in advance of any change in terms by mailing a notice to you at your address as shown on our records." (Upper case and bold in original.) By mid-1992, the two versions of the account agreement that included this wording of the change of terms provision had been superseded. The language expressly allowing defendant to add new terms was deleted from the versions of the agreement that were in effect at the time the ADR "bill stuffers" were mailed to credit account customers. Plaintiffs alleged the addition of the ADR clause to their account agreements violated the Unfair Competition Act (Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq.) and the Consumer Legal Remedies Act (Civ. Code § 1770(n) and (s) in particular), and sought a declaration as to the validity and enforceability of the ADR clause. A 17-day court trial resulted in a judgment in favor of the defendant. Plaintiffs appealed, but only preserved on appeal the claim for declaratory relief as to the enforceability of the ADR clause.

The court of appeal reversed. The court began by stating the principle that although the law favors arbitration of disputes between parties, there is no policy compelling persons to accept arbitration of controversies which they have not agreed to arbitrate (67 Cal. App. 4th 779, 788) . The court said that the trial court put the cart before the horse when it glossed over the threshold issue of consent and concluded that the validity of the modification depended on the manner in which arbitration is viewed under California law. That policy does not even come into play unless it is first determined that the credit card customers agreed to use some form of ADR to resolve disputes regarding their deposit and credit card accounts, and that determination, in turn, requires analysis of the account agreements in light of ordinary state law principles that govern the formation and interpretation of contracts (67 Cal. App. 4th 779, 790) .

A party with the unilateral right to modify a contract does not have carte blanche to make any kind of change whatsoever, but can make a modification only if the general subject matter of that modification was anticipated when the contract was entered into (67 Cal. App. 4th 779, 791) . The court compared this attempted unilateral modification with the one upheld in Perdue v. Crocker National Bank (1985) 38 Cal. 3d 913, 216 Cal. Rptr. 345, 702 P.2d 503 , in which addition of a charge for checks drawn on insufficient funds was found to be within the scope of the change in terms clause in the signature card agreement that allowed that bank to change its "rules, regulations, practices and charges" (67 Cal. App. 4th 779, 794) . The court described the change in terms provision as the "objectively determined base" which, in addition to the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, supplies an implied limitation on the change of terms provision (67 Cal. App. 4th 779, 797) . Whether the change of terms provision permitted defendant to add the ADR clause simply by sending a "bill stuffer" depended principally on what the parties intended by the word "terms," not on whether the word "change" also means "add," or on whether defendant used the word "add" in the change of terms provision (67 Cal. App. 4th 779, 797-798) .

The court noted that the original contract was ambiguous in that it was capable of more than one reasonable interpretation (67 Cal. App. 4th 779, 798) and that based solely on the language of the credit card agreement, it could not conclude that either party's interpretation of the change of terms provision was clearly untenable (67 Cal. App. 4th 779, 800) . In such a situation, general contract interpretation principles provide that the court interpret any ambiguous language in the sense in which the promisor believed, at the time the agreements were entered into, that the promisee understood it [Civ. Code § 1649] and that any uncertainty not removed by application of the other rules of interpretation, must be interpreted most strongly against the party who prepared the document [Civ. Code § 1654] (67 Cal. App. 4th 779, 801) . In the court's view, the object, nature and subject matter of these change in terms provisions strongly supported the conclusion that the customers did not intend them to be broad enough to allow waiver of a judicial forum or of the right to a jury trial for resolution of disputes with defendant, and that the customers, as promisors with respect to the change of terms provisions, had no inkling that defendant understood the change in terms provision differently (67 Cal. App. 4th 779, 801) . Although the court characterized it as of dubious admissibility, it noted that defendant's senior project manager in the marketing department testified that the change of terms provision referred only to changes in financial terms, grace periods, and the like (67 Cal. App. 4th 779, 802) . After analyzing the credit account agreements in light of the standard canons of contract interpretation, the court concluded that when the account agreements were entered into, the parties did not intend that the change of terms provision should allow defendant to add completely new terms such as an ADR clause simply by sending out a notice (67 Cal. App. 4th 779, 805) .

[b] Particular Terms Preclude Enforcement

Plaintiff/credit cardholder in Shea v. Household Bank (SB) (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 85, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 387 , sued the defendant/issuer for breach of contract, breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and fraudulent and negligent misrepresentation based on fees and penalties charged for exceeding one's credit limit. Defendant petitioned to have the matter arbitrated pursuant to an arbitration provision it had unilaterally imposed. When plaintiff first obtained the credit card in 1993, the contract allowed defendant to modify it on written notice, stating defendant could "change or terminate any term of this agreement or add any new terms at any time, including without limitation adding or increasing fees." The initial contract also included a choice of law clause that designated Illinois and federal law to govern disputes, which was later changed to designate Nevada and federal law. Defendant notified plaintiff that effective September 10, 2000, his account would require that "any claim, dispute or controversy" be resolved through binding arbitration. Two days before the amendment became effective, plaintiff's attorney contacted defendant's customer service department and informed them that Mr. Shea was refusing to accept the arbitration agreement being unilaterally imposed by defendant, and that Mr. Shea no longer wished to continue using his account. Plaintiff made no more purchases with his credit card, but did not immediately pay off his balance and close his account. The trial court denied the petition to compel arbitration, believing that because plaintiff had not used his credit card after being given notice of the arbitration provision and refused to be bound by it, he could not be compelled to arbitrate. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed (105 Cal. App. 4th 85, 87) . Defendant contended plaintiff was bound by the arbitration amendment because he kept his account open,and continued to use defendant's money: failure to pay off the balance owing immediately constituted consent to the modification. The court of appeal began its discussion by noting that Nevada law allows parties to consent to enter into a valid agreement to modify a former contract mutually, which consent may be implied from conduct consistent with the asserted modification (105 Cal. App. 4th 85, 88) . However, the court did not agree that plaintiff's failure to immediately pay off the balance and cancel the card amounted to a ratification (105 Cal. App. 4th 85, 88) . There was no law directly in point. The court of appeal did infer, based on Truth in Lending regulations, specifically 12 C.F.R. § 226.9(c)(1), Supp. I. (customer's use of account from which acceptance of changed terms might be implied under state law) that federal law defers to state law to define "use" (105 Cal. App. 4th 85, 88-89) . The Nevada statue concerning disclosures of initial credit card terms and conditions considers them to have been accepted by the cardholder only after his or her "actual use" [see Nev. Rev. Stat. Ann., § 97A.140, subd. (2)]. In five other instances, the Nevada credit card statutes employ merely the term "use." The court concluded that the common sense meaning of "actual use" denotes some kind of affirmative act; mere inaction would not seem to suffice (105 Cal. App. 4th 85, 89) . Unilateral amendment of credit card terms is allowed by Nevada statute. The court of appeal found it unlikely that the Nevada legislature would have required actual use by a consumer to accept the original terms of a credit card agreement but settled for something less definite or overt to signify acceptance of an amendment to that agreement (105 Cal. App. 4th 85, 90) .

The court of appeal discussed the practicalities of most card holder's financial situations, and felt defendant's position (and that of the dissent), that a credit card holder is always in a financial position to be able to pay off the entire balance immediately when confronted with an unacceptable change of terms, untrue. Further, the terms of this unilateral modification did not state that plaintiff could pay off the entire balance of his account if he did not agree to arbitration. Instead, it stated that the arbitration agreement would "survive termination of your Account as well as the repayment of all amounts borrowed hereunder." Thus, even if plaintiff had done what defendant argued, he still would have been subject to the arbitration provision; by its terms, there was no way for him to opt out. Based on the particular facts of this case and applicable law, the court of appeal refused to enforce the arbitration provision (105 Cal. App. 4th 85, 90) .

Although no argument was made that it was unconscionable not to provide a way for the card holder to opt out, and thus was not a basis for the court's decision, the court stated a good case could be made for unconscionability (105 Cal. App. 4th 85, 90) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Unilateral Attempt to Insert Arbitration Clause

MBNA America Bank, N.A. v. Gorman (2006) 147 Cal. App. 4th Supp. 1, 54 Cal. Rptr. 3d 724 , was an appeal to the Appellate Division of the Superior Court from an order of the superior court. The only issue on appeal was the grant of attorney's fees and costs to defendant, which are discussed in Ch. 20C, Arbitration: Confirming, Correcting, or Vacating the Award, § 20C.20[3][g]. The trial court refused to confirm an arbitration award against a card holder for sums owed to the issuer on the ground that under Badie v. Bank of America (1998) 67 Cal. App. 4th 779, 79 Cal. Rptr. 2d 273 (discussed at [3][a], above) a mailed insert or "bill stuffer" cannot serve as a waiver of the procedural right of trial by jury or as a basis for enforcement of an ADR clause by a unilaterally issued change to the original agreement (147 Cal. App. 4th Supp. 1, 4) . Although the order denying the petition to confirm the award is not binding precedent and did not formally enjoin appellant from enforcing the arbitration clause, this discussion is included here because it may benefit cardholders similarly situated to respondent.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20A ARBITRATION: RESISTING
PART II. FORMS
A. General Principles Relating to Resisting Arbitration

2-20A California Points & Authorities § 20A.34

§ 20A.34 Spousal Relationship Is Not Enough to Confer Agency Authority to Agree to Arbitration

[1] FORM

STANDING ALONE, THE SPOUSAL RELATIONSHIP IS NOT ENOUGH TO CONFER AUTHORITY ON ONE SPOUSE, AS THE AGENT OF THE OTHER, TO REQUIRE ARBITRATION.

A. Spousal Relationship Is Not Enough to Confer Agency Authority to Agree to Arbitration. A spousal relationship alone is not sufficient to confer authority on one spouse to waive the other spouse's right to a jury trial and agree to an arbitration provision [in a nursing home admission contract]. It is true that spouses are fiduciaries and owe a duty of support, but that duty does not create the power to contractually bind each other in the agency context (Warfield v. Summerville Senior Living, Inc. (2007) 158 Cal. App. 4th 443, 447-449, 69 Cal. Rptr. 3d 783 ; Flores v. Evergreen at San Diego, LLC (2007) 148 Cal. App. 4th 581, 586-589, 594, 55 Cal. Rptr. 3d 823).

[Optional] B. Statute Does Not Confer Authority to Bind Relative to Arbitrate. Statutes designed to allow relatives to sign admission contracts when a prospective patient is mentally incompetent and related statutes granting authority over medical decision making and enforcement of rights to family members, specifically Health & Safety Code Sections 1418.8, 1599.1, 1599.3, 1599.65, and 1599.81, do not grant authority to those family members to agree to arbitration (Flores v. Evergreen at San Diego, LLC (2007) 148 Cal. App. 4th 581, 590-594, 55 Cal. Rptr. 3d 823).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used to resist arbitration when the arbitration agreement at issue was signed by a spouse who did not have the other spouse's power of attorney on the ground that the spousal relationship alone does not confer authority to bind one to arbitration. Optional Paragraph B. addresses specific statutes, applicable in the context of nursing home admissions, that also do not grant the spouse or other relative authority to agree to arbitration on behalf of the person being admitted. This form is not intended to be a complete memorandum. Counsel should combine it with authority from Forms § 20A.10 et seq. if relevant to the particular procedural context is which the issue arises or to any other issues involved.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, the argument must show that the signatory spouse did not have a power of attorney and that the other spouse did nothing to support the creation of an agency by implication. It is advisable for counsel to submit evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file (including verified pleadings), or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied if plaintiff-respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement)].

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Memoranda

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Spousal Relationship Is Not Enough to Confer Agency Authority to Agree to Arbitration

Warfield v. Summerville Senior Living, Inc*. (2007) 158 Cal. App. 4th 443, 69 Cal. Rptr. 3d 783* , was an action by a resident of defendant residential care facility for elder abuse and other claims. Defendant filed a petition to compel arbitration, based on an arbitration agreement plaintiff's husband, also a resident at the time, had signed. Defendant claimed that, even though husband did not hold a power of attorney when he signed the arbitration agreement, he nonetheless had the authority, either as plaintiff's ostensible agent or as her spouse, to bind her to the agreement. Defendant also claimed that plaintiff was estopped to deny the enforceability of the arbitration agreement. The trial court denied the petition and defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed (158 Cal. App. 4th 443, 445, 451) , finding that the matter was controlled by Flores v. Evergreen at San Diego, LLC (2007) 148 Cal. App. 4th 581 (Flores), discussed below; and that Flores was correctly decided (158 Cal. App. 4th 443, 447) . The court of appeal discussed Flores, noting that Flores considered whether husband had authority as the wife's agent, as her spouse, or under various Health and Safety Code provisions pertaining to skilled nursing facilities, to bind the wife to the arbitration agreements. It answered that question in the negative. Defendant argued that Flores was not controlling because it had to do with the statutes and regulations affecting skilled nursing facilities, while this case involved a residential care facilities for the elderly. Nevertheless, defendant made no claim that any statutory basis existed. Thus, Flores was dispositive, because its first reason for affirming the order denying the petition to compel arbitration was that the husband had no authority either as agent or as spouse to bind the wife to the arbitration agreements (158 Cal. App. 4th 443, 447-448) . The court discussed agency principles, noting that agency can be established either by agreement between the agent and the principal, or it can be founded on ostensible authority, that is, some intentional conduct or neglect on the part the alleged principal to create a belief in the minds of third persons that an agency exists. Thus, the formation of an agency relationship is a bilateral matter. Words or conduct by both principal and agent are necessary to create the relationship. Here, defendant presented absolutely no evidence of the wife's express or implied consent to have her husband act as her agent. Defendant argued an ostensible agency was created because wife willingly accepted the services elected by her husband to be provided by the facility. The court of appeal disagreed, saying that the failure of a resident suffering from dementia to object to the living arrangements her husband had made would hardly constitute evidence that she had authorized him to act as her agent in waiving her right to a jury trial (158 Cal. App. 4th 443, 448) . The creation of an ostensible agency had not been shown. The court reiterated Flores' primary holding: although the establishment of an agency relationship between spouses does not require a high level of proof, the marital relationship cannot alone create an agency (158 Cal. App. 4th 443, 449) . The court distinguished cases from the medical malpractice context in which the spouse who was the patient bound the other spouse to arbitrate claims arising from the medical treatment, and those involving a spouse who purchased insurance and the other spouse who accepted the benefits of the policy and was estopped to deny the arbitration term of the policy (158 Cal. App. 4th 443, 449-450) . Here, wife never sought to make use of the arbitration agreement; thus, she was not estopped to assert that it was unenforceable against her (158 Cal. App. 4th 443, 451) .

Flores v. Evergreen at San Diego, LLC (2007) 148 Cal. App. 4th 581, 55 Cal. Rptr. 3d 823 , was an action by husband and wife against the skilled nursing care facility where wife was confined, for negligence and other causes of action, including husband's loss of consortium action arising from a fall wife took which resulted in a leg fracture and allegedly insufficient and untimely medical treatment. Wife suffered from dementia and other ailments. At the time of admission, husband did not have the wife's power of attorney, nor had he been declared her conservator or guardian. Nevertheless, he signed two arbitration agreements that were consistent with the requirements of Health & Safety. Code § 1599.61(a). The signature lines on the arbitration agreements were labeled: "Legal Rep/Responsible Party/Agent." On the admission agreement, husband signed a line designated agent. On other admission documents he signed lines variously designated legal representative or responsible party. Approximately nine months later, in February 2005, wife signed a power of attorney giving husband authority over a variety of matters, including claims and litigation. Defendant moved to compel arbitration under the two agreements husband had signed at the time of wife's admission. The trial court denied the motion on the ground that husband did not have wife's authority to waive her right to jury trial at the time he signed the admission forms. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed (148 Cal. App. 4th 581, 585, 595) . Defendant first asserted that husband's status as spouse gave him authority to bind wife to the arbitration agreements. The court of appeal reviewed general agency principles and statutory authority governing nursing homes, and concluded that absent a legislative directive, the spousal relationship alone is insufficient to confer authority to agree to an arbitration provision in a nursing home admission contract (148 Cal. App. 4th 581, 586-587) . An agency may be created by oral contract or by implication, but cannot be created by conduct of the agent alone (148 Cal. App. 4th 581, 587-588). Defendant asserted that wife's conduct "allowed it to believe" that husband was her agent, but there was no evidence of any conduct by wife giving rise to an agency (148 Cal. App. 4th 581, 588). Defendant relied on Fam. Code § 4300 (general duty to support spouse) and Hawkins v. Superior Court (Kaiser Foundation Hospital) (1979) 89 Cal.App.3d 413, 418-419, 152 Cal. Rptr. 491 (duty to support spouse includes provision of health care). While the court of appeal acknowledged that spouses are fiduciaries and owe a duty of support, that duty does not create a power to contractually bind each other in the agency context. It is also true that much less evidence is required to establish a principal and agent relationship between husband and wife than between nonspouses, but defendant presented no evidence of agency apart from the marital relationship; and marital relationship cannot alone create an agency (148 Cal. App. 4th 581, 589) .

[b] Statute Does Not Confer Authority to Bind Relative to Arbitrate

The facts and procedural background of Flores v. Evergreen at San Diego, LLC (2007) 148 Cal. App. 4th 581 , are discussed at [a], above. Defendant also contended that certain statutes designed to allow relatives to sign admission contracts when a prospective patient is mentally incompetent and related statutes imposing rigorous disclosure requirements and excluding certain claims from arbitration coverage provided agent's authority to the husband. Although the Legislature has specifically conveyed authority over medical decision-making and enforcement of rights to family members, it has not conveyed authority over the arbitration decision to family members. The court of appeal viewed this as a significant omission, and concluded there was no statutory authorization for husband to agree to arbitration based solely on a familial relationship with the patient (148 Cal. App. 4th 581, 590) . The specific statutes reviewed by the court of appeal were Health & Safety Code §§ 1418.8, 1599.1, 1599.3, governing patients' rights (148 Cal. App. 4th 581, 590-591) , Health & Safety Code § 1599.65, governing admissions, and Health & Safety Code § 1599.81, governing arbitration agreement with nursing homes, which the court described as designed to ensure that an arbitration agreement with a nursing home is obtained with the patient's informed consent (148 Cal. App. 4th 581, 591) . Health & Safety Code § 1599.81 requires that a nursing home admission contract clearly indicate that an arbitration agreement is not a precondition for admission or treatment, and requires that the arbitration clause be on a form separate from the rest of the admission contract. Referring back to Health & Safety Code § 1599.65, which defines "patient representative" to include "next of kin," the court considered whether the next of kin authority extends to the arbitration decision (148 Cal. App. 4th 581, 592) and decided it could not conclude the Legislature intended next of kin to be empowered to make the decision about arbitration when signing a nursing home admission contract (148 Cal. App. 4th 581, 593) . The court cited Pagarigan v. Libby Care Center, Inc. (2002) 99 Cal. App. 4th 298, 302, 120 Cal. Rptr. 2d 892 (Pagarigan), with favor and agreed with Pagarigan to hold that without a legislative directive to the contrary, spouses are not empowered to bind each other to arbitration (148 Cal. App. 4th 581, 593-594) . The Legislature has extensively regulated the issue of arbitration in nursing home contracts, and in other contexts has specified that next of kin may make significant decisions for mentally incompetent patients, but it has failed to specify that next of kin have authority to agree to arbitration. Further, unlike admission decisions and medical care decisions, the decision to agree to an arbitration provision in a nursing home contract is not a necessary decision that must be made to preserve a person's well-being. Thus, a family member who signs an admission agreement cannot by law sign an arbitration agreement. Because there was no express or implied agency created by wife, and because there is no statutory authority for husband to act on wife's behalf when signing an arbitration agreement, the trial court properly denied defendant's petition to compel arbitration (148 Cal. App. 4th 581, 594) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20A ARBITRATION: RESISTING
PART II. FORMS
A. General Principles Relating to Resisting Arbitration

2-20A California Points & Authorities §§ 20A.35-20A.39

[Reserved]

§§ 20A.35[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20A ARBITRATION: RESISTING
PART II. FORMS
B. Particular Claims Not Subject to Arbitration

2-20A California Points & Authorities § 20A.40

§ 20A.40 Language of Agreement Is Not Broad Enough to Cover Tort Claims

[1] FORM

RESPONDENT CANNOT BE COMPELLED TO ARBITRATE THIS CONTROVERSY BECAUSE THE ARBITRATION PROVISION IN THE AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE PARTIES IS NOT BROAD ENOUGH TO COVER TORT CLAIMS.

A. Language of Agreement Is Not Broad Enough to Encompass Tort Claims. An agreement that provides for arbitration of "disputes arising from this agreement" is not broad enough to authorize arbitration of tort claims (Medical Staff of Doctors Medical Center in Modesto v. Kamil (2005) 132 Cal. App. 4th 679, 683-684, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 853 ; Cobler v. Stanley, Barber, Southard, Brown & Associates (1990) 217 Cal. App. 3d 518, 530-532, 265 Cal. Rptr. 868).

[Optional] B. Agreement to Settle Controversies Regarding Receipts and Disbursements. An agreement authorizing a certified public accountant to settle controversies regarding receipts and disbursements is far too narrow to authorize arbitration of causes of action for fraud, usury, declaratory relief, and rescission and restitution (Parker v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp. (1981) 118 Cal. App. 3d 895, 904-905, 173 Cal. Rptr. 639).

[Optional] C. Defamation Claims Not Arbitrable. A cause of action for defamation is not arbitrable under a relatively narrow arbitration clause that requires arbitration of controversies among the parties involving the construction or application of any provision of the agreement (Bono v. David (2007) 147 Cal. App. 4th 1055, 1066-1069, 54 Cal. Rptr. 3d 837).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to a petition to compel arbitration to urge that the arbitration provision at issue is not broad enough to cover tort claims. Optional Paragraph B is for use in the unique situation in which an agreement authorized a form of arbitration only to settle controversies with respect to receipts and disbursements.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in opposition to one seeking to compel arbitration [see § 20A.10]. Counsel may wish to incorporate other authorities, such as those from Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.30, which set forth the rule that general state law contract principles are to be applied in construing the alleged arbitration agreement or those from § 20A.31, regarding construing ambiguities against the drafter.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form, and in the other forms combined with this form, with the facts of his or her case. For example, argument should emphasize the language of the parties' agreement and its failure to include any mention of torts and, if appropriate, the fact that the subject matter of the contract is not one that usually gives rise to torts.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a form of response to a petition to compel arbitration that may be supported by this memorandum, as well as a procedural checklist, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 32, Contractual Arbitration: Agreements and Compelling Arbitration (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For memoranda to combine with this form, regarding other matters that the opposition may need to address, see §§ 20A.10-20A.12, 20A.20 et seq., 20A.30 et seq., 20A.60 et seq., and 20A.80 et seq.

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

For forms addressing general contract principles, see Ch. 50, Contracts .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Language of Agreement Is Not Broad Enough to Encompass Tort Claims

Medical Staff of Doctors Medical Center in Modesto v. Kamil (2005) 132 Cal. App. 4th 679, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 853 concerned a service agreement between a medical group and an insurance provider. It required arbitration of any dispute "concerning the terms of the agreement." The insurance provider sought to terminate the agreement because the medical group performed allegedly unnecessary coronary bypass surgeries. The insurance provider issued press releases claiming that 59 percent of coronary bypasses performed by the group were unnecessary. The medical group and 16 physicians sued the provider and others, claiming defamation and alleging that the provider (Blue Cross) knew that the statements were false, but even after admitting the falsity, continued to maliciously issue press releases claiming unnecessary surgeries had been performed. Blue Cross petitioned to compel arbitration. The trial court denied the petition on the ground that the arbitration clause was not broad enough to encompass the claims alleged. Blue Cross appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed (132 Cal. App. 4th 679, 681, 686) . The arbitration clause provided "BLUE CROSS and PHYSICIAN agree to meet and confer in good faith to resolve any problems or disputes that may arise under this Agreement. In the event that any problem or dispute concerning the terms of this Agreement, other than a Utilization Review decision as provided for in Article VII, is not satisfactorily resolved, BLUE CROSS and PHYSICIAN agree to arbitrate such problem or dispute." The court noted that the agreement only applied to disputes that arose under the agreement. Blue Cross argued that a broadly-worded arbitration clause applies to any controversy that has its roots in the contractual relationship. But the court of appeal said the seemingly innocuous phrase "concerning the terms of" the agreement to provide medical care could not reasonably be said to include the malicious destruction of the physicians' personal and professional reputations. Although there may be cases where the alleged defamation is so intimately bound with the terms of the agreement that arbitration is appropriate, this was not such a case (132 Cal. App. 4th 679, 683) . The defamation alleged here no more concerned the terms of the agreement, than would a punch in the nose during a dispute over a medical billing. A separate clause governed arbitration of disputes concerning Utilization Review decisions. But under that clause, arbitration was limited to disputes over the payment of claims. The causes of action alleged here, for defamation and violation of Bus. & Prof. Code § 2056, were clearly outside the scope of that clause (132 Cal. App. 4th 679, 684) .

Cobler v. Stanley, Barber, Southard, Brown & Associates (1990) 217 Cal. App. 3d 518, 265 Cal. Rptr. 868 , involved arbitration of a dispute between a professional career-consulting agency and a former client of the agency. The arbitration clause in the parties' agreement provided the following: "[s]hould there be a dispute arising from this Agreement, it is mutually agreed that it shall be promptly settled through binding arbitration in accordance with the rules of the American Arbitration Association." Plaintiff, the client, became dissatisfied with the agency, which produced no interviews for plaintiff, and refused to pay the $1,400 balance owing under the contract. The agency demanded arbitration for the balance owing and later amended its claim to include "continual verbal and written allegations and threats" by plaintiff. Plaintiff's counterdemand sought damages for breach of contract and was later amended to seek $75,000 in punitive damages on unspecified grounds. The arbitrator awarded plaintiff $9,853, which included a refund of $1,400 paid under the contract, less $400 for value received, compensation for work time lost and travel expenses to and from Colorado during the week defendant was to have arranged interviews for plaintiff in San Diego, and $7,500 for emotional distress incurred as a result of defendant's conduct. The award stated that defendant had breached the contract and was negligent. The award was confirmed over defendant's objection, and defendant appealed the resulting judgment.

The court of appeal reversed with directions to the trial court to vacate the award of damages for emotional distress and to confirm the award for the balance. Defendant contended the award for damages for emotional distress was in excess of the arbitrator's jurisdiction. The court of appeal said that the powers of an arbitrator are limited and circumscribed by the agreement or stipulation of submission, and noted that the scope of arbitration permitted under this agreement was more limited than it would be under a clause agreeing to arbitrate any controversy arising out of or relating to the agreement (217 Cal. App. 3d 518, 530) . The court of appeal said that a contract for professional career consultation is not one within the exception to the general rule that damages for emotional distress do not arise from a breach of contract. Although the arbitrator apparently considered the matter as professional negligence or malpractice, there is no authority extending those doctrines to career consulting. Therefore, the only basis for the emotional distress award would be that tort issues were properly submitted to the arbitrator (217 Cal. App. 3d 518, 531) . Although the parties briefed and argued fraud and emotional distress issues, in view of the limited scope of the agreement, the arbitrator had a duty to keep the proceedings confined to contract issues, despite the excursions of the parties outside them, and had no authority to grant an award of damages for emotional distress (217 Cal. App. 3d 518, 532) .

[b] Agreement to Settle Controversies Regarding Receipts and Disbursements

The facts and procedural background of Parker v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp. (1981) 118 Cal. App. 3d 895, 173 Cal. Rptr. 639 , and the portion of the opinion addressing the court's right to determine overlapping arbitrable and nonarbitrable issues are discussed at § 20A.12[3][a]. The court of appeal held that the trial court was required to determine whether or not the clause requiring a certified public accountant to settle controversies connected with receipts and disbursements was a contractual agreement to arbitrate, and if so, its scope and application to the many issues, including the causes of action for declaratory relief, fraud, usury, and rescission and restitution, raised by the complaint. The court held that there was substantial evidence to support the findings of the trial court that the scope of the arbitration clause was far too narrow to encompass the issues raised by the complaint (118 Cal. App. 3d 895, 904-905) .

[c] Defamation Claims Not Arbitrable

Plaintiff and defendant in Bono v. David (2007) 147 Cal. App. 4th 1055, 54 Cal. Rptr. 3d 837 , were tenants in common with four others of a 920 acre parcel of undeveloped land in Lake County. All tenants in common had executed a memorandum of understanding (MOU) which provided that any controversy among the parties involving the construction or application of any provision of the agreement be submitted first to non-binding mediation of a disinterested third-party chosen by a two thirds majority of the parties. If the written determination of the mediator wasunacceptable to any one of the parties involved, the grievance was then to be submitted to binding arbitration in San Francisco, California, arbitration to comply with and be governed by the provisions of the rules of the American Arbitration Association. By March 2004, a number of disagreements had developed among the tenants in common and an individual named Richard Van Donk was designated to try to iron out disagreements between Bono and David. In the course of these efforts, David sent Van Donk an e-mail which contained various aspersions on Bono's emotional stability. Those settlement efforts failed, and the parties filed three lawsuits: in April 2004, the other grantees filed an action against Bono for partition of the property and an accounting; in May 2004, Bono sued two of the tenants in common for a personal injury she allegedly suffered in May 2002 while hiking on that portion of the property which might later revert to their sole ownership; and in July 2004, Bono filed a declaratory relief action against the other tenants in common seeking a declaration as to the parties' respective rights and duties under the MOU. In February, 2005 Bono filed the defamation action. David demurred to the complaint claiming that the e-mail at issue was subject to the mediation privilege under Civ. Code § 47(b), and was thus inadmissible and/or non-actionable. The trial court overruled the demurrer on the basis that it could not determine whether the e-mail was a pre-litigation communication and/or a mediation communication as to which privilege would apply. David filed a motion to consolidate the defamation action with the partition and declaratory relief actions, to compel arbitration of all three actions, and to stay proceedings in them until the arbitration was completed. David's supporting papers cited Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2 and claimed "this is all one controversy." David also re-noticed a hearing on her 2005 demurrer, adding the additional ground that Bono had failed to exhaust her remedies of mediation and arbitration. The trial court denied the motion to compel arbitration of the defamation claim, stating that the alleged defamation did not arise from the contract nor did the contract need to be interpreted in order to determine the defamation action. The trial court also overruled the demurrer. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, agreeing with the trial court that the defamation action was a "stand alone action" (147 Cal. App. 4th 1055, 1058, 1069-1070) . Among the basic principles discussed by the court of appeal at the outset was the fact that the burden falls on the party opposing arbitration to demonstrate that an arbitration clause cannot be interpreted to require arbitration of the dispute (147 Cal. App. 4th 1055, 1062) . The terms of the specific arbitration clause under consideration must reasonably cover the dispute as to which arbitration is requested (147 Cal. App. 4th 1055, 1063) . The court discussed arbitration clauses considered in other cases, including those described as "broad," such as those requiring arbitration of "[a]ny controversy or claim arising out of or relating to any provision of this Agreement or the breach thereof," or "any problem or dispute arising under this Agreement and/or concerning the terms of this Agreement" (147 Cal. App. 4th 1055, 1063-1065 , emphasis in original). The court discussed Medical Staff of Doctors Medical Center in Modesto v. Kamil (2005) 132 Cal. App. 4th 679, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 853 (Kamil, discussed at [a], above) which found a defamation action beyond the scope the arbitration provision because, although the dispute may have had its roots in the contractual relationship agreement, arbitration under the agreement was limited to disputes concerning the terms of the agreement (147 Cal. App. 4th 1055, 1065-1066) . The court found Vianna v. Doctors' Management Co. (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 1186, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 188 (discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.40[3][a]), in which the arbitration clause applied to any dispute regarding the meaning, interpretation or enforcement of the provisions of the agreement, to be inapplicable because in this case, plaintiff's defamation action did not involve construction or application of any provision of the real property agreement (147 Cal. App. 4th 1055, 1066-1067). Thus, the mandatory mediation and arbitration clause of the agreement did not apply. The court discussed broad arbitration language and characterized this agreement as using narrow terminology (147 Cal. App. 4th 1055, 1067)). Further, nothing in the MOU aided the understanding of phrases comprising the alleged defamatory statement (147 Cal. App. 4th 1055, 1068) . The court concluded that although whatever was going on between plaintiff and defendant that precipitated the allegedly defamatory e-mail was "related to" their agreement, the terminology of the arbitration clause was much narrower than the fairly standard "related to" or "arising from" (147 Cal. App. 4th 1055, 1069) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20A ARBITRATION: RESISTING
PART II. FORMS
B. Particular Claims Not Subject to Arbitration

2-20A California Points & Authorities § 20A.41

§ 20A.41 Claim for Injuries to Infant Is Not Covered by Expectant Mother's Arbitration Agreement

[1] FORM

RESPONDENT CANNOT BE COMPELLED TO ARBITRATE THIS CONTROVERSY BECAUSE THE ARBITRATION PROVISION IN THE AGREEMENT AT ISSUE DOES NOT APPLY TO INJURIES TO A PERSON NOT YET BORN AT THE TIME THE AGREEMENT WAS MADE.

A. Claim for Injuries to Infant Is Not Covered Under Expectant Mother's Arbitration Agreement. An expectant mother receiving care for impending childbirth who signs an arbitration agreement to resolve all medical malpractice disputes does not thereby agree to arbitrate controversies over the treatment of the baby if the agreement makes no reference to the expected child (Weeks v. Crow (1980) 113 Cal. App. 3d 350, 353, 169 Cal. Rptr. 830).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to a petition to compel arbitration to respond that the arbitration provision at issue does not cover injuries to a child unborn at the time the agreement was executed. It is possible to draft an agreement broad enough to require arbitration of claims for injuries to children, born, unborn, and even as yet unconceived at the time the agreement is executed [see Pietrelli v. Peacock (1993) 13 Cal. App. 4th 943, 947, 16 Cal. Rptr. 2d 688] . To compare the language used in such an agreement to the language used in the agreement in Weeks, see Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.64[3][a].

This form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in opposition to one seeking to compel arbitration [see § 20A.10]. Counsel may wish to incorporate other authorities, such asthose from Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.30, which set forth the rule that general state law contract principles are to be applied in construing the alleged arbitration agreement or those from § 20A.31 regarding construing ambiguities against the drafter.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form, and in the other forms combined with this form, with the facts of his or her case. For example, argument should emphasize the language of the parties' agreement and its failure to include any mention of persons unborn or persons whom the patient has the power to bind.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a form of response to a petition to compel arbitration that may be supported by this memorandum, as well as a procedural checklist, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 32, Contractual Arbitration: Agreements and Compelling Arbitration (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For memoranda to combine with this form, regarding other matters that the opposition may need to address, see §§ 20A.10-20A.12, 20A.20 et seq., 20A.30 et seq., 20A.60 et seq., and 20A.80 et seq.

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

For forms addressing general contract principles, see Ch. 50, Contracts .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Claim for Injuries to Infant Is Not Covered Under Expectant Mother's Arbitration Agreement

In Weeks v. Crow (1980) 113 Cal. App. 3d 350, 169 Cal. Rptr. 830 , plaintiff wife entered the hospital for childbirth, at which time she and plaintiff husband signed an agreement providing for arbitration of "any dispute as to medical malpractice." The contract named her alone as patient, and defined "patient" as "the undersigned patient or dependent of patient (whether or not a minor), or the heirs-at-law or personal representative of patient ... ." Plaintiffs brought a medical malpractice action, alleging that the baby born to them during the wife's stay at the hospital died shortly thereafter as a result of negligence in the delivery procedures. Defendants petitioned the court to order arbitration, but the superior court denied the petition, finding the arbitration agreement was inapplicable to an action for the wrongful death of the newborn baby. Defendants appealed.

The lower court ruling was affirmed. The appellate court's examination of the arbitration agreement showed the parties did not agree to arbitrate claims of malpractice in the care and treatment of the baby. Although plaintiff wife entered the hospital for childbirth, the agreement contained no reference to the expected child, and only the expectant mother was named as a patient. The court commented that the parties, if intending to agree to arbitrate claims of negligence in treating the child, easily could have done so by naming the child as a patient. The omission of any reference to the child was found to express an intention not to apply the agreement to malpractice claims arising out of medical services rendered to the child (113 Cal. App. 3d 350, 353) .

Because the definition of "patient" in the agreement included dependents of the named patient, defendants insisted the agreement required arbitration of malpractice claims arising out of treatment of dependents, even if they were not named as patients. However, the court determined that the definition was not intended to describe the individuals to whom treatment might be rendered. It included only those individuals who would have a cause of action if negligent medical treatment of the named patient resulted in injury or death. The provision was intended as an enumeration of parties bound by the agreement to arbitrate claims arising out of the treatment of the named patient. The definition did not extend the scope of the arbitration agreement to cover disputes arising out of treatment of persons other than the named patient (113 Cal. App. 3d 350, 353-354) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20A ARBITRATION: RESISTING
PART II. FORMS
B. Particular Claims Not Subject to Arbitration

2-20A California Points & Authorities § 20A.42

§ 20A.42 Controversy Goes Beyond Scope of Uninsured Motorist Statute

[1] FORM

RESPONDENT INSURER CANNOT BE COMPELLED TO ARBITRATE THIS CONTROVERSY BECAUSE _____ [specify, e.g., DISPUTES BETWEEN INSUREDS THAT DO NOT INVOLVE THE INSURER] ARE BEYOND THE SCOPE OF THOSE REQUIRED TO BE ARBITRATED BY INSURANCE CODE SECTION 11580.29(f) OR BY THE UNINSURED MOTORIST PROVISION IN THE POLICY HERE AT ISSUE.

A. Insurer Is Not Involved in Dispute Between Claimants. An insurer that [has deposited the policy limits with the court and] is not involved in a dispute between claimants [as to the division of those policy proceeds] cannot be compelled to arbitrate under Insurance Code Section 11580.2(f) (Mayflower Ins. Co. v. Pellegrino (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 1326, 1333-1335, 261 Cal. Rptr. 224).

[AND/OR]

A. Insurer Is Not Required to Arbitrate Total Amount of Damages Caused by Uninsured Motorist. After the insurer has paid its insured the full amount of its uninsured motorist coverage, the insured cannot be compelled to arbitrate (State Farm Mutual Automobile Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (Balen) (2004) 123 Cal. App. 4th 1424, 20 Cal. Rptr. 3d 850).

[Optional] B. Dollar Amount of Accident Damages Is Not Relevant to Bad Faith Claim Against Uninsured Motorist Insurer. Any damages sustained by the insured attributable to the accident itself that are over and above the uninsured motorist policy limits have no relevance in uninsured motorist arbitration. The insured's damages in any bad faith action against his or her insurer derive from actions taken by the insurer after the accident. Unlike the traditional third party bad faith situation, in an uninsured motorist context, the personal injury and property damage sustained by the insured in the accident occur before any bad faith on the insurer's part, cannot be a proximate result of any bad faith conduct, and cannot serve as a proper measure of damages in any bad faith action (State Farm Mutual Automobile Ins.

Co. v. Superior Court (Balen) (2004) 123 Cal. App. 4th 1424, 1432-1434, 20 Cal. Rptr. 3d 850).

[Optional] C. Coverage Questions Are Not Arbitrable. Questions regarding coverage--that is whether the claimant is an insured within the policy definitions--are not arbitrable but must be determined by a court before the matter is ordered to arbitration (Bouton v USAA Casualty Insurance Company (2008) 167 Cal. App. 4th 412, 420, 426, 84 Cal. Rptr. 3d 152).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to a petition to compel arbitration of a matter which falls outside the scope of Ins. Code § 11580.2(f). Counsel should use whichever of the paragraphs are relevant to his or her situation.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in opposition to one seeking to compel arbitration [see § 20A.10].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form, and in the other forms combined with this form, with the facts of his or her case. For example, argument should explain whether the policy language is any broader that the statutory language.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a form of response to a petition to compel arbitration that may be supported by this memorandum, as well as a procedural checklist, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 32, Contractual Arbitration: Agreements and Compelling Arbitration (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For memoranda to combine with this form, regarding other matters that the opposition may need to address, see §§ 20A.10-20A.12, 20A.20 et seq., 20A.30 et seq., 20A.60 et seq., and 20A.80 et seq.

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing

Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Insurer Is Not Involved in Dispute Between Claimants

Mayflower Ins. Co. v. Pellegrino (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 1326, 261 Cal. Rptr. 224 , involved an accident in August, 1986, between an uninsured motorist and a vehicle owned and driven by Mayflower's insured, Micheal Pelligrino. John Karastathas, a passenger in Pelligrino's vehicle, was killed in the accident and his widow and children claimed benefits under Pelligrino's uninsured motorist coverage, as did Pelligrino's wife. In March, 1987, Mayflower filed a complaint in interpleader, naming Pelligrinos and Karastathas' widow and children as defendants, pursuant to which Mayflower deposited the policy limit, $300,000, with the Merced County Superior Court. Pelligrinos and Karastathases answered the interpleader complaint. Mayflower was discharged from that action in May, 1988, and trial to determine the distribution of the $300,000 was set for June 21, 1988. In May, 1988, Pelligrinos sought to have the action stayed and arbitration compelled. The court held that the arbitration clause was between Pelligrino and the insurance company and that Karastathases could not be compelled to arbitrate the division of the policy proceeds. The court's order also stated that Pelligrinos had not waived their right to arbitrate by waiting until 21 months after the accident to move to compel arbitration. Pelligrinos appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The fact that Karastathases were claiming as third party beneficiaries under Pelligrinos' insurance policy, and thus, were bound by it, was not relevant (212 Cal. App. 3d 1326, 1331-1332) . Appellants could not point to any language in the statute to support their contention that it contemplated arbitration of disputes between two or more insured when the insurer was not involved. Both the statute and the policy language only contemplated arbitration between the insurer and the insured. Thus, affirmance of the order denying the petition to compel arbitration was required (212 Cal. App. 3d 1326, 1333-1335) .

[b] Insurer Is Not Required to Arbitrate Total Amount of Damages Caused by Uninsured Motorist

Real party in State Farm Mutual Automobile Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (Balen) (2004) 123 Cal. App. 4th 1424, 20 Cal. Rptr. 3d 850 , was insured by petitioner. After real party was rear-ended in an automobile accident with an uninsured motorist, petitioner paid real party the full amount of benefits possible under the terms of the uninsured motorist policy provisions. Real party still demanded arbitration, under Ins. Code § 11580.2(f), of the amount of damages she was entitled to collect from the uninsured motorist. Petitioner did not pay the policy limit to real party until after real party's offer to settle for policy limits had expired. Real party therefore claimed that the amount she could recover from the uninsured motorist was relevant in determining the damages that could be awarded her in a suit against the petitioner for bad faith in settling the uninsured motorist claim. The trial court ordered arbitration. Petitioner filed a writ of mandate, seeking an order directing the trial court to vacate its order of arbitration.

The court of appeal issued the writ (123 Cal. App. 4th 1424, 1429, 1435) , holding that even if there was bad faith in settling the uninsured motorist claim, any damages to which real party might be entitled must arise from, and be the result of, the petitioner's bad faith conduct. Real party's personal injury and property damage caused by the accident are not relevant in an uninsured motorist arbitration if the insurer has in fact paid full policy benefits (123 Cal. App. 4th 1424, 1428) . The court pointed out, citing Cothron v. Interinsurance Exchange (1980) 103 Cal. App. 3d 853, 860, 163 Cal. Rptr. 240 (discussed in Ch. 20C, Arbitration: Confirming, Correcting, or Vacating the Award, § 20C.101[3][b]), that even if an arbitrator were to determine the issues specified in Ins. Code § 11580.2(f), namely (1) whether real party was legally entitled to collect damages from the uninsured motorist, and (2) the amount of those damages, the arbitrator could not make any award greater that the policy limits. Any damages attributable to the accident itself that are over and above the uninsured motorist policy limits has no relevance in uninsured motorist arbitration; and there is no agreement to arbitrate irrelevant matters (123 Cal. App. 4th 1424, 1432) . In fact, requiring an arbitrator in an uninsured motorist arbitration to reach a decision on the total amount of damages suffered by the insured because of the uninsured motorist's actions would frustrate the purpose of uninsured motorist arbitration itself, which is to provide both the insurer and insured with a prompt, inexpensive, and final method of determining liability and damages (123 Cal. App. 4th 1424, 1433) .

[c] Dollar Amount of Accident Damages Is Not Relevant to Bad Faith Claim Against Uninsured Motorist Insurer

The facts and procedural background of State Farm Mutual Automobile Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (Balen) (2004) 123 Cal. App. 4th 1424, 20 Cal. Rptr. 3d 850 , are discussed at [b], above. As to real party's contention that the amount of damages inflicted by the uninsured motorist were relevant to any action she might bring against petitioner for bad faith, the court of appeal distinguished between ordinary third party bad faith actions and bad faith actions under uninsured motorist provisions. Citing Neal v. Farmers Ins. Exchange (1978) 21 Cal. 3d 910, 925, 148 Cal. Rptr. 389, 582 P.2d 980 , the court noted that in the ordinary third party context, an insurer that declines an offer to settle with the third party for the policy limits is liable for the full amount of any judgment that is later entered in favor of the third party against the insured, in keeping with the rule that an insurer's breach of its duty of good faith and fair dealing renders it liable for any damages which are the proximate result of that breach. The judgment against the insured in excess of policy limits is the result of the insurer's unwarranted refusal to settle within policy limits (123 Cal. App. 4th 1424, 1433) . In an uninsured motorist context, the personal injury and property damage sustained by the insured in the accident occur before any bad faith on the insurer's part, cannot be a proximate result of any bad faith conduct, and therefore cannot serve as a proper measure of damages (123 Cal. App. 4th 1424, 1434) . Similarly, real party had no right to compel arbitration in order to evaluate any bad faith claim she might have against the petitioner (123 Cal. App. 4th 1424, 1434) .

[d] Coverage Questions Are Not Arbitrable

As defined by the Insurance Code, if the named insured is an individual, "insured" means the named insured and the spouse of the named insured and, while residents of the same household, relatives of either while occupants of a motor vehicle or otherwise, heirs and any other person while in or on or entering into or alighting from an insured motor vehicle and any person with respect to damages he or she is entitled to recover for care or loss of services because of bodily injury to which the policy provisions or endorsement apply. If the named insured is an entity other than an individual, "insured" means any person while in or on or entering into or alighting from an insured motor vehicle and any person with respect to damages he or she is entitled to recover for care or loss of services because of bodily injury to which the policy provisions or endorsement apply [Ins. Code § 11580.2(b)].

Bouton v. USAA Casualty Insurance Company (2008) 167 Cal. App. 4th 412, 84 Cal. Rptr. 3d 152 , involved two consolidated cases dealing with the same statute and the same issue: under Ins. Code § 11580.2(f), which questions are arbitrable in uninsured and underinsured motorist cases? One of the cases involved a demand for uninsured motorist arbitration under Ins. Code § 11580.2(f), which the insurer opposed, and refused to arbitrate on the ground that the claimant was not covered by the insurance policy. The policyholder was the claimant's sister. After settling with the other driver for his policy limits, claimant demanded a further sum from his sister's insurer. The insurer denied coverage on the ground that the claimant was not a resident of his sister's household, and was therefore not covered under her insurance policy. "Covered person" was defined as the named insured "or any family member." The policy defined a "family member" as "a person related to [the named insured] by blood, marriage, or adoption who is a resident of [the named insured's] household." Plaintiff contended that he constituted a family member of the named insured, his sister, because they were blood relatives permanently residing in the same household. Claimant moved to compel arbitration. The trial court denied the motion to compel arbitration, finding that because the arbitration provision of the insurance policy was no broader than Ins. Code § 11580.2(f), the issue of coverage was not one that was to be arbitrated. Claimant appealed, and the court of appeal, consistent with Van Tassel v. Superior Court of Fresno County (1974) 12 Cal. 3d 624, 627, 116 Cal. Rptr. 505, 526 P.2d 696 (Van Tassel), reversed. The insurer petitioned for review, which the Supreme Court granted.

The Supreme Court reversed and remanded for further proceedings consistent with its decision (167 Cal. App. 4th 412, 416-419) , holding that the "jurisdictional fact" of claimant's coverage was not required to be arbitrated under Ins. Code 11580.2(f) (167 Cal. App. 4th 412, 420) . The Court acknowledged it was overruling Van Tassel, from which it said it retreated in Freeman v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. (1975) 14 Cal. 3d 473, 485, 121 Cal Rptr. 477, 535 P. 2d 341 (Freeman), and held Freeman to be the law: the only two things that are for arbitration under Ins. Code § 1189.2(f) are (1) whether the insured is entitled to recover against the uninsured motorist; and (2) if, so, the amount (167 Cal. App. 4th 412, 420) . A court, not an arbitrator, must determine whether claimant was and insured under his sister's policy. Whether claimant was a covered person under the insurance policy was not a question regarding the underinsured tortfeasor's liability to the insured, or the amount of damages. Questions of coverage--that is, whether the claimant is insured and therefore entitled to take advantage of the protection provided by the policy at issue--must be resolved before an arbitrator reaches the two arbitrable question. Because the parties did not agree to arbitrate more than the statute required, the coverage question was for the court to decide (167 Cal. App. 4th 412, 416) .

Subsequently, on remand from the Supreme Court, the court of appeal concluded that the trial court erred in denying the petition because it did not decide the question whether Bouton is an insured under the policy. (167 Cal. App. 4th 412, 422) . Because that preliminary question of standing is so closely connected and is a predicate to the ultimate determination whether to compel arbitration of the policy's arbitration provision, it is most efficient and logical to have the trial court determine that question. (167 Cal. App. 4th 412, 426) . Since the record did not show the trial court considered the evidence submitted, the court of appeal reversed the order denying the petition to compel arbitration and remanded the matter for further proceedings on the question whether claimant is an insured under the policy entitled to enforce the policy's arbitration provision. (167 Cal. App. 4th 412, 427) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20A ARBITRATION: RESISTING
PART II. FORMS
B. Particular Claims Not Subject to Arbitration

2-20A California Points & Authorities § 20A.43

§ 20A.43 Claims for Injunctive Relief Under the Consumer Legal Remedies Act (Civil Code Section 1750 et seq.) Are Not Arbitrable

[1] FORM

RESPONDENT CANNOT BE COMPELLED TO ARBITRATE CLAIMS FOR INJUNCTIVE RELIEF UNDER THE CONSUMER LEGAL REMEDIES ACT (CIVIL CODE SECTION 175O ET SEQ.)

A. Claims for Injunctive Relief Under the Consumer Legal Remedies Act (Civil Code Section 1750 et seq.) Are Not Arbitrable. Despite the inefficiency of arbitrating damage claims under the Consumer Legal Remedies Act (Civ. Code § 1750 et seq.) and requiring claims for injunctive relief under the Consumer Legal Remedies Act to be tried by a court, even when they are part of the same cause of action, CLRA claims for injunctive relief in which the plaintiff is acting as private attorney general, such as a claim seeking to enjoin deceptive business practices, are not arbitrable (Broughton v. Cigna Healthplans of California (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 1066, 1072, 1079-1084, 1088, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 334, 988 P.2d 67 ; Lee v. Southern California Univ. for Professional Studies (2007) 148 Cal. App. 4th 782, 787-788, 56 Cal. Rptr. 3d 134 ; but see Arriaga v. Cross Country Bank (S.D. Cal. 2001) 163 F. Supp. 2d 1189, 1199-1200 (public injunctive relief under Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 is arbitrable in case subject to Federal Arbitration Act)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to a petition to compel arbitration of a claim seeking injunctive relief under the Consumer Legal Remedies Act (Civ. Code § 1750 et seq.) when that injunction would vindicate the public purpose of the CLRA more than the respondent's private remedy.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in opposition to one seeking to compel arbitration [see § 20A.10]. Counsel may also wish to include authority from § 20A.21 addressing any failure of the arbitration agreement to specifically mention these claims as within its scope.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form, and in the other forms combined with this form, with the facts of his or her case. For example, argument should emphasize the language and scope of the arbitration provision and also of the pleadings.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747 (overruled on other grounds in Rosenthal v. Great Western Financial Securities Corp. (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 394, 404, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 875)].

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a form of response to a petition to compel arbitration that may be supported by this memorandum, as well as a procedural checklist, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 32, Contractual Arbitration: Agreements and Compelling Arbitration (Matthew Bender).

For general discussion and forms relating to the Consumer Legal Remedies Act, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, 504, Sales: Consumers Legal Remedies Act (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For memoranda to combine with this form, regarding other matters that the opposition may need to address, see §§ 20A.10-20A.12, 20A.21 et seq., 20A.30 et seq., 20A.40 et seq., 20A.60 et seq., and 20A.80 et seq.

For forms addressing the arbitrability of damage claims under the Consumer Legal Remedies Act, see Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.22.

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Claims for Injunctive Relief Under the Consumer Legal Remedies Act (Civil Code Section 1750 et seq.) Are Not Arbitrable

The facts and procedural background of Broughton v. Cigna Healthplans of California (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 1066, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 334, 988 P.2d 67 , and the portion of the opinion discussing the arbitrability of damage claims under the Consumer Legal Remedies Act (Civ. Code § 1750 et seq.) are discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, §

20.22[3][f]. The portion of the opinion addressing the availability of costs and attorney's fees in arbitration of a CLRA claim for damages is discussed in Ch. 20C, Arbitration: Confirming, Correcting, or Vacating the Award, § 20C.110[3][d].

In considering the arbitrability of the CLRA claim for injunctive relief, the Court considered U.S. Supreme Court cases addressing the arbitrability of claims under federal statutes designed to vindicate public wrongs (antitrust and Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act). The Court found that those opinions established an "inherent conflict" exception applicable when the primary purpose of a statute is not to compensate for an individual wrong but to prohibit and enjoin conduct injurious to the general public, i.e., when the plaintiff's role plausibly goes beyond achieving compensation for his or her private injury and places the plaintiff authentically in the position of a private attorney general (21 Cal. 4th 1066, 1076-1077) . Considering whether CLRA claims to enjoin deceptive practices come within this "inherent conflict" exception, the Court noted the "institutional" shortcomings of arbitration: arbitrators, unlike courts, do not have continuing authority to modify or vacate injunctions. The injured party must resort to the relatively cumbersome remedy of initiating a second arbitration proceeding [see Ch. 20E, Arbitration: Effect of Award, § 20E.33] (21 Cal. 4th 1066, 1081) . Furthermore, as the Court had recently held in Vandenberg v. Superior Court (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 815, 836-837, 88 Cal. Rptr. 2d, 366, 982 P.2d 229 [see Ch. 20E, Arbitration: Effect of Award, § 20E.30], an injunction issued as an arbitration award, even if confirmed and entered as a judgment, could not be enforced by a member of the public injured by the same deceptive practice. Thatplaintiff would have to relitigate the injunction (21 Cal. 4th 1066, 1081) . Thus, the Court concluded that the California Legislature did not intend that CLRA injunctive relief claims be arbitrated (21 Cal. 4th 1066, 1082) . While the Court acknowledged that the U.S. Supreme Court expressed this capacity to withdraw statutory rights from the scope of arbitration agreements as the prerogative solely of Congress, not state courts or legislatures, and that the U.S. Supreme Court has never directly decided whether a legislature may restrict a private arbitration agreement when it inherently conflicts with a public statutory purpose, the majority, unlike the dissent, found that it would be perverse to preclude states from passing legislation the purposes of which was incompatible with arbitration (21 Cal. 4th 1066, 1083) . The Court found nothing in this result to contravene the Federal Arbitration Act, noting that the legislative history of the FAA dealt only with commercial nonstatutory claims, not public injunctions (21 Cal. 4th 1066, 1083-1084) .

Additionally, the Court found a basis for treating CLRA claims for damages differently than CLRA claims for injunction in Civ. Code § 1782, which does not require notice by a potential plaintiff before commencing an action for injunction, but does require notice by a potential plaintiff before commencing a CLRA claim for damages, and in fact, precludes a suit for damages if appropriate repairs are made or other remedy given [compare Civ. Code § 1782(a), (b) with Civ. Code § 1782(c)]. This distinction indicated to the majority that informal methods of resolution are appropriate for CLRA claims for damages but compromise the public protective purpose of the statute when injunctive relief is sought (21 Cal. 4th 1066, 1084-1085) . The Court acknowledged the inefficiency of requiring CLRA claims for damages to be vindicated in arbitration while requiring litigation of CLRA claims for injunction, but found this result to be required by federal law (21 Cal. 4th 1066, 1088) .

The facts and procedural background of Lee v. Southern California Univ. for Professional Studies (2007) 148 Cal. App. 4th 782, 56 Cal. Rptr. 3d 134 , are discussed at § 20A.10[3][f]. The portion of the opinion discussing the fact that claims for injunctive relief under both the CLRA and UCL are not arbitrable is discussed at § 20A.44[3][a], below.

Arriaga v. Cross Country Bank (S.D. Cal. 2001) 163 F. Supp. 2d 1189 , was a class action by credit card holders against issuers alleging wrongful practices relating to fees and charges. The complaint stated causes of action for fraud, violation of the Truth-in-Lending Act, the Consumer Legal Remedies Act ("CRLA" Civ. Code § 1720 et seq.), and Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200. Plaintiffs sought damages, disgorgement of profits, and injunction to prohibit the challenged practices and fees. The credit card agreements contained an arbitration provision. Defendants moved to compel arbitration in accordance with the agreement. Plaintiffs opposed on several grounds, including that the agreement was fraudulently induced (they were not given the agreements until after they had incurred charges) and unconscionable, and that the "public" causes of action under Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 for disgorgement and injunction were not arbitrable because the California legislature intended they not be. All parties agreed the matter involved interstate commence and was thus governed by the Federal Arbitration Act (163 F. Supp. 2d 1189, 1191 n.4). The district court granted the motion to compel arbitration as to all causes of action, finding (1) that the claim of fraudulent inducement went to the entire agreement, not just the arbitration clause, and so was arbitrable; (2) that the agreement might be a little harsh as to the credit card holder, but not harsh enough to be unconscionable; and (3) that no matter what the California legislature intended, The FAA still required that the arbitration agreement be enforced (163 F. Supp. 2d 1189, 1196) . The Supremacy Clause of the United States Constitution, federal cases, and the FAA mandated that only statutes intended by Congress to create claims that were not arbitrable were excepted from arbitration under the FAA (163 F. Supp. 2d 1189, 1199-1200) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20A ARBITRATION: RESISTING
PART II. FORMS
B. Particular Claims Not Subject to Arbitration

2-20A California Points & Authorities § 20A.44

§ 20A.44 Claims for Public Injunctive Relief Under Business and Professions Code Sections 17200 et seq. and 17500 et seq. Are Not Arbitrable

[1] FORM

RESPONDENT CANNOT BE COMPELLED TO ARBITRATE THE CLAIMS FOR PUBLIC INJUNCTIVE RELIEF UNDER THE _____ [FALSE ADVERTISING STATUTES (BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONS CODE SECTION 17500 ET SEQ.) and/or THE UNFAIR COMPETITION LAW (BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONS CODE SECTION 17200 ET SEQ.)].

A. Claims for Public Injunctive Relief Under the Unfair Competition Law (Business and Professions Code Section 17200 et seq.) Are Not Arbitrable. Claims for public injunctive relief under the Unfair Competition Law (Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq.), such as a claim by a plaintiff acting as private attorney general seeking to enjoin unfair business practices, must be tried by a court[, even if the same cause of action asserts claims for damages, including claims for restitution and/or disgorgement, that must be arbitrated, because the arbitrable claims may be severed] (see Bus. & Prof. Code § 17203; Cruz v. PacifiCare Health Sys. (2003) 30 Cal. 4th 303, 133 Cal. Rptr. 2d 58, 66 P.3d 1157 ; Lee v. Southern California Univ. for Professional Studies (2007) 148 Cal. App. 4th 782, 787-788, 56 Cal. Rptr. 3d 134).

[AND/OR]

B. Claims for Public Injunctive Relief of False Advertising Under Business and Professions Code Section 17500 et seq. Are Not Arbitrable. Claims for public injunctive relief under the false advertising statutes, Business and Professions Code Section 17200 et seq., such as a claim by a plaintiff acting as private attorney general seeking to enjoin deceptive advertising practices, must be tried by a court[, even if the same cause of action includes damage claims, including claims for restitution and/or disgorgement, that must be arbitrated, because the arbitrable claims may be severed] (see Bus. & Prof. Code § 17535; Cruz v. PacifiCare Health Sys. (2003) 30 Cal. 4th 303, 133 Cal. Rptr. 2d 58, 66 P.3d 1157).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

The form at [1], above, may be submitted in opposition to a petition to compel arbitration of a claim seeking public injunctive relief under the false advertising statutes (Bus. & Prof. Code § 17500 et seq.) or the Unfair Competition Law (Bus. &Prof. Code § 17200 et seq.), when that injunction would vindicate the public purpose of those laws. The authority on which the form is based considered a case brought by an individual for himself and on behalf of the general public and expressly left open the question whether UCL injunctive relief actions brought by injured business competitors were arbitrable.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in opposition to one seeking to compel arbitration [see § 20A.10]. Counsel may also wish to include authority from § 20A.43, to the effect that claims for public injunctive relief under the Consumer Legal Remedies Act (Civ. Code § 1750 et seq.) also must be tried by a court.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form, and in the other forms combined with this form, with the facts of his or her case. For example, argument should emphasize the language and scope of the arbitration provision and also of the pleadings.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Memoranda

For memoranda to combine with this form, regarding other matters that the opposition may need to address, see §§ 20A.10 -20A.12, 20A.21 et seq., 20A.30 et seq., 20A.40 et seq., 20A.60 et seq., and 20A.80 et seq.

For forms addressing the arbitrability of damage claims under the Consumer Legal Remedies Act, the false advertising statutes, and the Unfair Competition Law, see Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.22.

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Claims for Public Injunctive Relief Under the Unfair Competition Law (Business and Professions Code Section 17200 et seq.) Are Not Arbitrable

The facts and procedural background of Cruz v. PacifiCare Health Sys. (2003) 30 Cal. 4th 303, 133 Cal. Rptr. 2d 58, 66 P.3d 1157 , and the portions of the opinion considering the arbitrability of claims for restitution and disgorgement under the Consumer Legal Remedies Act (Civ. Code § 1750 et seq.), the Unfair Competition Law (Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq.), and on account of false advertising under Bus. & Prof. Code § 17500 et seq., as well as common law claims for unjust enrichment are discussed at Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.22[3][f]. The Court began its consideration of the arbitrability of claims for injunctive relief under Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq. and Bus. & Prof. Code § 17500 et seq. by noting that while there may be occasions on which the injunctive power of the UCL is used primarily to redress injuries to competing businesses and only incidentally for the public benefit, it did not need not decide whether UCL injunctive relief actions brought by injured business competitors were arbitrable (30 Cal. 4th 303, 315) . In this case, the request for injunctive relief is clearly for the benefit of health care consumers and the general public by seeking to enjoin defendants' alleged deceptive advertising practices. The claim is virtually indistinguishable from the CLRA claim that was at issue in Broughton, which also sought to enjoin a health care company's alleged deceptive advertising of its medical services. The same is true of plaintiff's request to enjoin defendants' alleged misleading advertising under Bus. & Prof. Code § 17500 et seq. (30 Cal. 4th 303, 315-316) . Plaintiff's injunctive relief claim under Bus. & Prof. Code § 17535 is essentially requesting the same relief for the same reason as is his UCL claim (30 Cal. 4th 303, 316) . Plaintiff's action to enjoin defendants' alleged deceptive business practices is undertaken for the public benefit, whether designated as a claim under the CLRA, Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 or 17500: it is designed to prevent further harm to the public at large rather than to redress or prevent injury to a plaintiff. As such, for the reasons discussed in Broughton, there is an "inherent conflict" between arbitration and the underlying purpose of those statutes' injunctive relief remedy. Therefore, the Court concluded that the injunctive relief claims were inarbitrable unless there were indications of legislative intent to the contrary in the UCL or Bus. & Prof. Code § 17500. The Court discerned no such intent. Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 17203 and 17535 both provide that injunctive relief claims are to be brought in "any court of competent jurisdiction." Defendant noted certain features in the CLRA not present in the UCL, such as the CLRA antiwaiver provision [Civ. Code § 1751] and the fact that it provides for more extensive remedies than the UCL or Bus. & Prof. Code § 17500 [see Civ. Code § 1780]. But those were not the characteristics the Court relied on in Broughton in concluding that requests for injunctive relief under the CLRA are inarbitrable (30 Cal. 4th 303, 316) . The absence of these features in the UCL or in Bus. & Prof. Code § 17500 did not persuade the Court that the Legislature intended to allow arbitration of public injunctive relief requests under these statutes (30 Cal. 4th 303, 316) . The Court concluded that each of plaintiff's injunctive reliefrequests was inarbitrable (30 Cal. 4th 303, 316) .

The facts and procedural background of Lee v. Southern California Univ. for Professional Studies (2007) 148 Cal. App. 4th 782, 56 Cal. Rptr. 3d 134 , are discussed at § 20A.10[3][f]. A further complication was added by the fact that the CLRA and UCL claims sought only injunctive relief, which would not be arbitrable even if plaintiff had consented to an arbitration clause. A claim under the UCL that seeks only injunctive relief on behalf of the public, as opposed to restitution and/or disgorgement of profits, is not arbitrable [see Cruz v. PacifiCare Health Systems, Inc. (2003) 30 Cal. 4th 303, 315-316, 133 Cal. Rptr. 2d 58, 66 P.3d 1157 (Cruz, discussed above)]. Thus, if plaintiff had signed an agreement with an arbitration clause, claims for damages under the CLRA would be arbitrable. But her claims for injunctive relief, under either the CLRA or UCL, would not be. The California Supreme Court has said that a judicial forum has significant institutional advantages over arbitration in administering a public injunctive remedy (148 Cal. App. 4th 782, 787) . The claim would not be arbitrable even if named representative was a party to an arbitration agreement (148 Cal. App. 4th 782, 788) .

[b] Claims for Public Injunctive Relief of False Advertising Under Business and Professions Code Section 17500 et seq. Are Not Arbitrable

The facts and procedural background of Cruz v. PacifiCare Health Sys. (2003) 30 Cal. 4th 303, 133 Cal. Rptr. 2d 58, 66 P.3d 1157 , are discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.22[3][f]. The portion of the opinion addressing claims for public injunctive relief under the false advertising law Bus. & Prof. Code § 17500 et seq., is discussed at [a], above. The portions of the opinion considering the arbitrability of claims for restitution and disgorgement under the Consumer Legal Remedies Act (Civ. Code § 1750 et seq.), the Unfair Competition Law (Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq.), and on account of false advertising under Bus. & Prof. Code § 17500 et seq., as well as common law claims for unjust enrichment are discussed at Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.22[3][f].

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20A ARBITRATION: RESISTING
PART II. FORMS
B. Particular Claims Not Subject to Arbitration

2-20A California Points & Authorities § 20A.45

§ 20A.45 Uninsured Motorist Claim Was Not Preserved

[1] FORM

THIS UNINSURED MOTORIST CLAIM CANNOT BE ARBITRATED BECAUSE THE INSURED DID NOT PRESERVE HIS/HER CLAIM BY DOING ONE OF THE ACTS REQUIRED BY INSURANCE CODE SECTION 11580.2(i)(1) WITHIN THE TIME REQUIRED.

A. Action Required to Preserve Uninsured Motorist Claim. No cause of action for uninsured motorist coverage shall accrue to the insured unless one of the following actions has taken place within two years from the date of the accident (Ins. Code § 11580.2(i)(1)):

(A) Suit for bodily injury has been filed against the uninsured motorist, in a court of competent jurisdiction.

(B) Agreement as to the amount due under the policy has been concluded.

(C) The insured has formally instituted arbitration proceedings by notifying the insurer in writing sent by certified mail, return receipt requested.

[Optional] B. 2003 Amendment Increasing Time Within Which Action Must Be Taken to Two Years Is Not Retroactive. The statutory period for completion of one of the prerequisites listed in Insurance Code Section 11580.2(i)(1) was increased from one year to two years effective January 1, 2004, but that amendment was not retroactive. Thus, insureds who were injured by an uninsured motorist on _____ [date before January 16, 2004], lost any cause of action against their insurer by failing to demand arbitration or file suit against the uninsured motorist until _____ [date, more than one year after date of injury, on which notice of and demand for arbitration was finally made] (Bullard v. California State Automobile Assn. (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 211, 218-221, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 225).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used to oppose a petition to compel uninsured motorist arbitration when the insured has failed to preserve his or her claim as required by Ins. Code § 1158.2(i)(1). Optional Paragraph B is for use to oppose the argument that the two-year time frame applicable to accidents occurring on or after January 1, 2004, applies to the case.

This form is not intended as a complete memorandum, but should be combined with the points and authorities in § 20A.10 and any others applicable to the particular situation.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, the argument should set forth which action the insured undertook as well as the date of the action.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement)].

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Memoranda

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[d] Opposing Memoranda

For memoranda that may be used in an appropriate case to oppose this form, see Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.43.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Action Required to Preserve Uninsured Motorist Claim

Ins. Code § 11580.2 (i)(1) is set forth in paragraph A of the form at § 20A.45[1].

[b] 2003 Amendment Increasing Time Within Which Action Must Be Taken to Two Years Is Not Retroactive

Bullard v. California State Automobile Assn. (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 211, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 225 addresses whether the 2003 amendment to Ins. Code § 11580.2(i) (effective January 1, 2004, instituting a two-year, rather than a one-year, limitation period) is retroactive. It is not. Plaintiffs were injured by an uninsured motorist on June 16, 2002. On February 10, 2003, they informed CSAA that they intended to pursue an uninsured motorist claim but that letter did not demand arbitration. On June 19, 2003, Bullards filed their personal injury action against the driver and owner of the uninsured vehicle. In September, 2003, CSAA denied Bullard's uninsured motorist claim on the ground that they had failed to preserve their right to arbitration. Bullards claimed the 2003 amendment was retroactive to their situation. CSAA and the trial court disagreed when it denied their motion to compel arbitration, finding also that there was no estoppel. Bullards appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed (129 Cal. App. 4th 211, 216) , finding that the plain language of the statute, which did not expressly provide for retroactivity, deposed of the matter (129 Cal. App. 4th 211, 217, 221) . Ordinarily, a statute is not retroactive unless the Legislature expressly so states. This amendment was signed by the Governor on July 14, 2003, after Bullard's claim was already time-barred under the then-current statute, to become effective January 1, 2004. Their claim was not revived by the amendment (129 Cal. App. 4th 211, 218) . The court of appeal agreed that the 2003 amendment to Ins. Code § 11580.2(i) was made to conform to the 2002 amendment to Code Civ. Proc. §§ 335.1 and 340, which changed the statute of limitations for assault, battery, personal injury, and wrongful death to two years (from one year) effective January 1, 2003, but disagreed that desire for conformity implied made the two-year limitation period in Ins. Code § 11580.2(i) retroactive to the date of the other amendments (129 Cal. App. 4th 211, 219-220) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20A ARBITRATION: RESISTING
PART II. FORMS
B. Particular Claims Not Subject to Arbitration

2-20A California Points & Authorities § 20A.46

§ 20A.46 Equitable Contribution Claim Does Not Arise Under Contract

[1] FORM

THE CLAIM FOR EQUITABLE CONTRIBUTION CANNOT BE ARBITRATED BECAUSE IT DOES NOT ARISE UNDER THE CONTRACT

A. Equitable Contribution Claim Does Not Arise Under Contract. An equitable contribution claim is not arbitrable because it does not arise from contract but from equity. The right to equitable contribution does not arise from contract, because the multiple insurers who may share responsibility for the same loss have not contracted with each other--only with their insured. Nor can arbitration be compelled on grounds of equitable estoppel or third-party beneficiary status. The insurers do not "stand in the insured's shoes," nor do they attempt to obtain benefits potentially payable to the insured under the insurance contract containing the agreement to arbitrate. This situation is distinguishable from those in which a party seeks direct benefits of the contract containing the arbitration clause. This situation does not involve a claim for direct benefits under the insurance contracts with the insured but is based on the noncontractual ground of equitable contribution (Crowley Maritime Corp. v. Boston Old Colony Ins. Co. (2007) 158 Cal. App 4th 1061, 1065-1066, 1068-1071, 70 Cal. Rptr. 3d 605).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of memorandum may be used to resist a petition to compel arbitration of an equitable contribution claim between insurers of the same insured. This form is not intended to be a complete memorandum. Counsel should combine it with authority from § 20A.10 et seq. and any other forms addressing any other relevant issues, such as § 20A.60.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, the argument must show that the parties seeking equitable contribution and those from which the seek it are not both parties to the same contract or insurance policy, but that claimants are relying on the fact that all parties have policies with the same insured which contain arbitration clauses. It is advisable for counsel to submit evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file (including verified pleadings), or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied if plaintiff-respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement)].

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations ,and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Memorandum

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Equitable Contribution Claim Does Not Arise Under Contract

Crowley Maritime Corp. v. Boston Old Colony Ins. Co. (2007) 158 Cal. App 4th 1061, 70 Cal. Rptr. 3d 605 , involved equitable contribution claims by two insurance companies against other insurers. The insured, plaintiff Crowley Maritime Corporation, received indemnification from two insurers (respondents): Boston Old Colony Insurance Company and Glens Falls Insurance Company. Those companies in turn sued other of plaintiff's insurers (the third-party insurers) for equitable contribution. The third-party insurers sought to compel arbitration of the contribution claims based on the arbitration provisions in their policies with plaintiff. The trail court denied the motion because respondents were not parties or signatories to the third party insurers' arbitration agreements with plaintiff and no exception applied to allow them to compel arbitration. The third-party insurers appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed (158 Cal. App. 4th 1061, 1065, 1074) , finding that an equitable contribution claim does not arise from contract but from equity (158 Cal. App. 4th 1061, 1065, 1069) , and because there were no applicable exceptions to the general rule that nonsignatories to an arbitration agreement cannot be compelled to arbitrate under it (158 Cal. App. 4th 1061, 1065, 1066) . The right to equitable contribution does not arise from contract, because the multiple insurers who may share responsibility for the same loss have not contracted with each other--only with their insured (158 Cal. App. 4th 1061, 1068) . The court discussed the exceptions to the rule that a nonsignatory to an arbitration agreement cannot be compelled to arbitrate. A nonsignatory can be compelled to arbitrate when the nonsignatory is a third party beneficiary of the contract containing the arbitration agreement or when a preexisting relationship existed between the nonsignatory and one of the parties to the arbitration agreement, making it equitable to compel the nonsignatory to also be bound to arbitrate his or her claim (158 Cal. App. 4th 1061, 1069-1070) . Here, respondents had no preexisting relationship with appellants, nor were they third party beneficiaries of appellants' contracts with plaintiff (158 Cal. App. 4th 1061, 1070) . Appellants argued that under federal law, they could compel arbitration based on the principle of equitable estoppel because respondents would be estopped from avoiding arbitration, having knowingly sought the benefits of the contract containing the arbitration clause. They argued that respondents "stood in plaintiff's shoes" and were attempting to obtain benefits potentially payable to the signatory under the insurance contract containing the agreement to arbitrate (158 Cal. App. 4th 1061, 1070-1071) . The court of appeal distinguished all the authorities relied on by appellants as involving parties who sought direct benefits of the contract containing the arbitration clause as opposed to respondents, who were not suing for direct benefits under the insurance contracts with plaintiff, but were suing on the noncontractual ground of equitable contribution. Thus, they did not "stand in plaintiff's shoes" or seek to recover benefits provided to plaintiff (158 Cal. App. 4th 1061, 1071) . The court discussed other issues raised for the first time on appeal and concluded that the trial court correctly denied the petition to compel arbitration (158 Cal. App. 4th 1061, 1071-1073) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20A ARBITRATION: RESISTING
PART II. FORMS
B. Particular Claims Not Subject to Arbitration

2-20A California Points & Authorities §§ 20A.47-20A.59

[Reserved]

§§ 20A.47[Reserved]

140 of 174 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20A ARBITRATION: RESISTING
PART II. FORMS
C. Particular Persons Not Bound by Arbitration Agreement

2-20A California Points & Authorities § 20A.60

§ 20A.60 Court Determines Whether Third Party Is Bound by or Can Enforce Arbitration Agreement

[1] FORM

_____ [PETITIONER or RESPONDENT] CANNOT _____ [BE COMPELLED TO ARBITRATE or COMPEL ARBITRATION OF] THIS CONTROVERSY WITH _____ [PETITIONER or RESPONDENT, and name of other party] UNLESS AND UNTIL THE COURT DETERMINES WHETHER [PETITIONER or RESPONDENT or name of other entity], WHICH/WHO IS NOT A PARTY TO THE ARBITRATION AGREEMENT, _____ [HAS STANDING TO ENFORCE or IS BOUND BY] THAT AGREEMENT.

A. Court Determines Whether Third Party Is Bound by or Can Enforce Arbitration Agreement. Whether one who is not a signatory to an arbitration agreement is nevertheless bound by it or is entitled to enforce it is a question of fact to be determined by the court before it orders arbitration that will bind that party or determine that party's rights and obligations. The determination of standing to arbitrate as a party to the contractual arbitration agreement is a question of law for the trial court in the first instance [unless the agreement explicitly provides otherwise. Because this is a general principle of law, a statement that the arbitrator is to determine the "scope" of the arbitration provision is not explicit enough to confer authority to the arbitrator to determine standing] (Smith v. Microskills San Diego, L.P. (2007) 153 Cal. App. 4th 892, 900, 63 Cal. Rptr. 3d 608 ; City of Hope v. Bryan Cave (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 1356, 1369, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 283 ; Valley Casework, Inc. v. Comfort Construction, Inc. (1999) 76 Cal. App. 4th 1013, 1024, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 779 ; American Builder's Assn. v. Au-Yang (1990) 226 Cal. App. 3d 170, 179-180, 276 Cal. Rptr. 262 ; Unimart v. Superior Court of Los Angeles (1969) 1 Cal. App. 3d 1039, 1045, 1047, 82 Cal. Rptr. 249).

[Optional] B. Formalities Required in Petition to Compel Arbitration. A petition to compel arbitration is in essence a suit in equity to compel specific performance of a contract, therefore, the rules covering complaints are applicable to petitions to arbitrate. These rules require a statement of the facts constituting the cause of action, in ordinary and concise language. In the case of a person claiming to be a third party beneficiary, a minimal requirements would be an allegation of a controversy between the parties, facts demonstrating the existence of an arbitrable controversy, the existence of the written agreement, and an allegation that the other party has refused to arbitrate. The petition should also set forth the written agreement and the arbitration provision verbatim so the court can determine both whether an arbitration agreement exists and who has standing to demand arbitration (Smith v. Microskills San Diego, L.P. (2007) 153 Cal. App. 4th 892, 898, 63 Cal. Rptr. 3d 608 ; Matthau v. Superior Court (William Morris Agency, LLC) (2007) 151 Cal. App. 4th 593, 602, 60 Cal. Rptr. 3d 93 ; City of Hope v. Bryan Cave (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 1356, 1369, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 283).

[Optional] C. One Not a Party to Arbitration Agreement Who Seeks Arbitration Must Prove It Was an Intended Beneficiary Under the Contract. One who claims rights under an arbitration agreement must demonstrate that agreement applies to them personally. A third party's right to enforce an arbitration agreement is predicated on the contracting parties' intent to benefit that third party. Some agreements, such as release agreements containing boilerplate language purporting to excuse everyone in the world from liability can be enforced by persons who are not parties to the agreement. Still, a third party has the burden of proving the parties to the [release] agreement intended to benefit that third party. It is not enough that a literal interpretation of the contract would result in a benefit to the third party (City of Hope v. Bryan Cave (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 1356, 1369-1370, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 283).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used to resist arbitration when the court has yet to determine whether some entity that is not a signatory of the arbitration agreement is bound by it and should be compelled to arbitrate or is entitled to enforce the arbitration agreement and may compel the resisting party to arbitrate. It is not appropriate when the arbitration agreement, or rules adopted by the agreement, provide that the arbitrator will determine who is necessary for complete resolution of the controversy [see Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.68]. The bracketed language in Paragraph A is taken from and reflects the fact situation in Smith v. Microskills San Diego, L.P. (2007) 153 Cal. App. 4th 892, 63 Cal. Rptr. 3d 608 . Optional Paragraphs B and C are to point out omissions in the moving papers of anyone seeking to compel arbitration as a third party beneficiary of the arbitration agreement. They should be used only if the conform to counsel's particular situation.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in opposition to one seeking to compel arbitration [see § 20A.10] and with one or more of the authorities from § 20A.60 et seq., addressing the specifics persons who are not bound by particular arbitration agreements.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, the argument should indicate the language of the arbitration agreement at issue and facts about the third party which place it outside the scope of that agreement.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a form of response to a petition to compel arbitration that may be supported by this memorandum, as well as a procedural checklist, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 32, Contractual Arbitration: Agreements and Compelling Arbitration (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For memoranda to combine with this form, regarding other matters that the opposition may need to address, see §§ 20A.10-20A.12, 20A.20 et seq., 20A.30 et seq., 20A.40 et seq., and 20A.80 et seq.

For a memorandum opposing the contention that an officer who signed an agreement on behalf of a corporation is a third party beneficiary of that agreement, see § 20A.63.

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

For forms addressing general contract principles, see Ch. 50, Contracts .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Court Determines Whether Third Party Is Bound by or Can Enforce Arbitration Agreement

Plaintiff in Smith v. Microskills San Diego, L.P. (2007) 153 Cal. App. 4th 892, 63 Cal. Rptr. 3d 608 , attended classes at a postsecondary vocational institution owned and operated by defendant and paid for a portion of his tuition by borrowing funds from Sallie Mae, an educational lender. The note contained an arbitration provision which covered "any claim, dispute or controversy ... arising from or relating to this Note or my application for a loan or advertisements, promotions or oral or written statements related to this Note or the program under which such a loan is or would be made, the relationships which result from this Note (including to the full extent permitted by law, relationships with third parties who are not signatories of this Note) or the validity, enforceability or scope of this Arbitration Provision or the entire Note (collectively, 'Claim')." Plaintiff's amended complaint alleged that defendant had made a number of misrepresentations in order to induce students to enroll in its classes, that the misrepresentations gave rise to liability under the unfair competition law (UCL, Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq.), and that defendant had violated disclosure provisions of the Education Code. Defendant moved to compel arbitration, claiming it was a third party beneficiary of the arbitration provisions of the note. The trial court denied the motion. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed (153 Cal. App. 4th 892, 894, 901) . The court first noted that whether the defendant was a party to the arbitration agreement and whether the arbitration covered plaintiff's statutory claims were questions of law (153 Cal. App. 4th 892, 896) . The court then discussed in general terms the exceptions to the general rule that a nonsignatory to an agreement cannot be compelled to arbitrate and cannot invoke an agreement to arbitrate. A nonsignatory to an agreement to arbitrate may be required to arbitrate, and may invoke arbitration against a party, if a preexisting confidential relationship, such as an agency relationship makes it equitable to impose the duty to arbitrate on the nonsignatory (153 Cal. App. 4th 892, 896-897) . However, there was nothing in the record to suggest that defendant acted as Sallie Mae's agent so as to give rise to any equitable reason to grant defendant the benefit of the arbitration clause in the note (153 Cal. App. 4th 892, 897) .

Defendant also claimed that because the arbitration clause provided that covered any dispute relating to "the validity, enforceability or scope of this Arbitration Provision," the arbitrator was to determine standing. The court of appeal disagreed, saying that the determination of standing to arbitrate as a party to the contractual arbitration agreement is a question of law for the trial court in the first instance. Although an arbitration provision might expressly provide that the question of standing to demand arbitration is itself arbitrable, here the reference to the "scope" of the agreement does not make the distinct question of standing arbitrable. In light of the general rule making standing a question for the court, a more explicit reference to standing would be required (153 Cal. App. 4th 892, 900) .

City of Hope v. Bryan Cave (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 1356, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 283 involved consolidated lawsuits for breach of fiduciary duty, legal malpractice, and fraud against two law firms and individual members of those firms, who, while representing plaintiff, were representing, advising, or conspiring with officers of plaintiffs who were eventually fired or resigned. The settlement agreements between plaintiff and the former officers provided that any disputes between them were to be submitted to arbitration. After the lawsuits had been proceeding for about three years, the complaints were amended in 2001 to allege that each of the defendants committed acts in furtherance of a conspiracy, and in committing those acts, each defendant acted as the agent of the other and all of the co-conspirators, including the former officers. After those amendments, because the complaints alleged that the law firms had acted as agents of the former officers, the law firms sought to compel arbitration pursuant to the settlement agreements and to stay the actions. The trial court denied their requests. Defendants appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, finding that the defendants failed to prove they were third party beneficiaries of the settlement agreements (102 Cal. App. 4th 1356, 1368, 1371) . One problem was that defendants did not file formal petitions to compelarbitration (102 Cal. App. 4th 1356, 1370) . A petition to compel arbitration is in essence a suit in equity to compel specific performance of a contract, therefore, the rules covering complaints are applicable to petitions to arbitrate. These rules require a statement of the facts constituting the cause of action, in ordinary and concise language. In the case of a person claiming to be a third party beneficiary, a minimal requirements would be an allegation of a controversy between the parties, facts demonstrating the existence of an arbitrable controversy, the existence of the written agreement, and an allegation that the other party has refused to arbitrate. The petition should also set forth the written agreement and the arbitration provision verbatim. Inclusion of the arbitration agreement is necessary because to determine both whether an arbitration agreement exists and who has standing to demand arbitration. A petition to compel arbitration is heard in the same manner as any other motion. Factual issues are resolved the by the trial court based on conflicting affidavits or declarations and, at the court's discretion, even oral testimony. The determination of standing to arbitrate as a party to the contractual arbitration agreement is a question of law for the trial court in the first instance. Because both law firms claimed rights under the contract, it was their duty to demonstrate the promises applied to them personally (102 Cal. App. 4th 1356, 1369) .

Valley Casework, Inc. v. Comfort Construction, Inc. (1999) 76 Cal. App. 4th 1013, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 779 , arose from a dispute regarding the quality of materials and workmanship under a contract between the general contractor and a subcontractor. The general contractor's insurer paid the owner/buyer $45,000 to settle the claim and sought to enforce the arbitration clause in the construction contract. The subcontractor moved for a preliminary injunction to prevent arbitration, claiming the insurer had no standing to enforce the arbitration agreement. The trial court denied the injunction and ordered arbitration. The subcontractor did not attend the arbitration but appealed from the judgment entered on the award against it. The appeal also sought reversal of the order denying the preliminary injunction for relief from arbitration.

The court of appeal reversed, ordering (1) that the judgment and award be vacated and (2) that an injunction be issued preventing arbitration so that the subcontractor could proceed in a judicial forum for resolution of the issues (76 Cal. App. 4th 1013, 1017) . The court was bound by two different standards on appeal: the denial of the injunction was to be reviewed to determine if the court abused its discretion in denying relief from arbitration (76 Cal. App. 4th 1013, 1019) ; the insurer's standing was purely a matter of law to be reviewed de novo (76 Cal. App. 4th 1013, 1020) . In the context of the petition for injunction to restrain arbitration, the question was whether requiring contractual arbitration to proceed, precluding the jury trial that Valley wanted to pursue, amounted to great or irreparable injury to a party to the action (76 Cal. App. 4th 1013, 1023) . By denying the injunction, the trial court went beyond the scope of the contractual issues presented, into the equitable arena of subrogation law. The complaint and declarations outlined legal issues that should have remained within the province of the trial court and should never have reached the arbitrator. The only issues within the scope of the arbitration agreement were those regarding the nature and quality of the work performed under the subcontract or the specifications (76 Cal. App. 4th 1013, 1024) . The larger issue of the respective liabilities of all parties, including the unresolved issues relating to equitable subrogation were beyond the scope of the agreement. Without a court determination of those issues, the insurer did not have standing to enforce the arbitration agreement either for its own benefit or "on behalf" of the general contractor (76 Cal. App. 4th 1013, 1024) .

Plaintiff in American Builder's Assn. v. Au-Yang (1990) 226 Cal. App. 3d 170, 276 Cal. Rptr. 262 , as general contractor, entered into an agreement with defendants to renovate a property in North Hollywood. The contract contained an arbitration provision. A dispute arose between the parties, and Au-Yangs filed for arbitration. Arbitration commenced, and determined, among other things, that although defendants were entitled to possession of the property being improved, they did not own it and had made no payments under the contract beyond the initial deposit. Bonita, Inc. owned the property and made the payments. The arbitrator determined that Bonita must be joined in the arbitration proceedings and set a deadline for defendants to amend their demand for arbitration and for plaintiff to respond. Plaintiff objected to arbitration with Bonita, which it considered a stranger to the contract, claimed the arbitrator had exceeding his powers by joining Bonita, and filed a complaint for damages and injunctive relief naming defendants and Bonita, Inc. The trial court denied the preliminary injunction, holding that plaintiff had failed to show that the arbitrator was without jurisdiction to determine whether Au-Yangs had signed the agreement as principals or as agents for Bonita, and that the "all claims" language in the arbitration agreement may have been broad to bind plaintiff to arbitrate with any willing claimant. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed and remanded. The court said that notwithstanding an arbitrator's broad authority to resolve questions presented by a controversy, an arbitrator has no power to determine the rights and obligations of one who is not a party to the arbitration agreement The question of whether a nonsignatory is a party to an arbitration agreement is one for the trial court in the first instance. If an arbitrator rather than a court were to decide whether an arbitration provision bound a nonsignatory, that stranger could be bound by arbitration to which it had not consented and would be without effective review. While a court will vacate an award if the arbitrator exceeded his or her powers, a court will not examine the sufficiency of the evidence. Thus, if plaintiff were to bring a motion to vacate an award claiming the arbitrator exceeded his powers in ordering joinder of Bonita, the trial court, constrained by Code Civ. Proc. § 1286.2, would decline to review the arbitrator's factual findings (226 Cal. App. 3d 170, 179-180) . The court of appeal remanded for plaintiff to file an amended complaint for declaratory relief as to Bonita's status (226 Cal. App. 3d 170, 180) .

Unimart v. Superior Court of Los Angeles (1969) 1 Cal. App. 3d 1039, 82 Cal. Rptr. 249 , arose out of a union's petition to compel arbitration of a dispute between the union and Unimart, a retail store. The Union alleged that Unimart had opened two stores in the geographic area encompassed by the parties' collective bargaining agreement, but did so in the name of a sister corporation (Two Guys) and refused to apply the collective bargaining agreement to those stores. Arbitration was ordered, and Unimart filed for writ of mandate to vacate that order, claiming that Two Guys was anindispensable party to the arbitration and that the court had to find that Two Guys was the alter ego of Unimart before it could order arbitration.

The court of appeal issued the writ. The court said that in spite of the strong public policy in favor of arbitration, an employer cannot be compelled to arbitrate if the arbitration agreement is not binding on it. An arbitrator has no power to determine the rights and obligations of one who is not a party to the arbitration agreement or arbitration proceedings. Whether or not the arbitration provision are operative against a party who did not sign the arbitration agreement (Two Guys) depends on that party's status and its relation to the party-employer who signed the agreement. This involves a question of substantive arbitrability, which is to be determined by the court (1 Cal. App. 3d 1039, 1045) . In this case, respondent court did not determine whether Two Guys was owned, operated, or controlled by Unimart, nor could it do so in the absence of Two Guys. Rather, the court directed that issue to be determined by the arbitrator. This was error. The present record reflected conflicting allegations which must be decided by the court in an appropriate proceeding on the basis of a factual determination (1 Cal. App. 3d 1039, 1047) .

[b] Formalities Required in Petition to Compel Arbitration

The facts and procedural background of City of Hope v. Bryan Cave (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 1356, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 283 , and the portion of the opinion considering the formalities required of a petition by a third party to compel arbitration are discussed at [a], above.

[c] One Not a Party to Arbitration Agreement Who Seeks Arbitration Must Prove It Was an Intended Beneficiary Under the Contract

The facts and procedural background of Smith v. Microskills San Diego, L.P. (2007) 153 Cal. App. 4th 892, 63 Cal. Rptr. 3d 608 , and the portions of the opinion addressing general theories under which a nonsignatory may enforce an arbitration agreement and the rule that the court makes the determination who has standing to enforce the agreement are discussed at [a], above. The court also found that defendant was not a third party beneficiary of the note. The court cited Civ. Code § 1559 for the proposition that a third party beneficiary contract must be made expressly for the benefit of that third person. A contract need not be exclusively for the benefit of the third party, i.e., he or she need not be the sole or the primary beneficiary, but the intent to benefit a third person must have been understood by the promisor (153 Cal. App. 4th 892, 898) . The court discussed and distinguished other cases and concluded that defendant was not a party to the note and could not enforce the arbitration clause (153 Cal. App. 4th 892, 898-901) .

Matthau v. Superior Court (William Morris Agency, LLC) (2007) 151 Cal. App. 4th 593, 60 Cal. Rptr. 3d 93 , was a suit by a talent agency against a deceased actor's son and the "loan out" company through which the actor sometimes provided his services. After the actor's death, his son, who succeeded to the actor's rights under his motion picture employment contracts, ceased to pay the agency's commission on profit participation payments received under the employment contracts. The talent agency sought to compel arbitration with the actor's son and the "loan out" company under various theories. The trial court granted the petition to compel arbitration. The son and loan out company filed a writ of mandate seeking to vacate the order.

The court of appeal granted the writ (151 Cal. App. 4th 593, 598, 605), finding no basis on which to allow the contracts to be enforced against the sons or the loan out company (151 Cal. App. 4th 593, 595, 604) . The court of appeal discussed various theories under which a nonsignatory may be required to arbitrate, including agency and successor at interest (151 Cal. App. 4th 593, 602-604) . The court said there are two categories of cases binding nonsignatories to arbitrate their claims: (1) those where a benefit was conferred on the nonsignatory as a result of the contract, making the nonsignatory a third party beneficiary of the arbitration agreement, and (2) those under which the nonsignatory is bound to arbitrate because of a preexisting relationship between the nonsignatory and one of the parties to the arbitration agreement, making it equitable to compel the nonsignatory to also be bound to arbitrate his or her claim. Neither category applied here (151 Cal. App. 4th 593, 600) . A third party beneficiary is someone who may enforce a contract because the contract is made expressly for his or her benefit [see Civ. Code § 1559]. The mere fact that a contract results in benefits to a third party does not render that party a third party beneficiary. A third party's rights under a contract are predicated on the contracting parties' intent to benefit the third party. The circumstance that a literal contract interpretation would result in a benefit to the third party is not enough to entitle that party to demand enforcement (151 Cal. App. 4th 593, 602) .

The facts and procedural background of City of Hope v. Bryan Cave (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 1356, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 283 , and the portion of the opinion considering the formalities required in a petition by a third party to compel arbitration are discussed at [a], above. Considering the burden of proof of one who claims to be a third party beneficiary of an arbitration agreement, the court of appeal said a third party's right to enforce covenants of a contract is predicated on the contracting parties' intent to benefit that third party. A release agreement containing boilerplate language that purports to excuse everyone in the world from liability can be enforced by persons who are not parties to the agreement. But the third party still has the burden of proving the parties to the release agreement intended to benefit that third party. It is not enough that a literal interpretation of the contract would result in a benefit to the third party. Instead of filing formal petitions to compel arbitration, defendants filed pleadings that relied on an estoppel theory. Bryan Cave stated: "As the alleged agent of Shapero and Leeka, and hence, also an express third party beneficiary of the Settlement Agreements, Bryan Cave is entitled to enforce the arbitration agreements against City of Hope." Estoppel may sometimes allow non-signatories to a contract to demand arbitration. However, the linchpin of equitable estoppel is fairness. Here, there was no fairness principle on which the law firms could rely (102 Cal. App. 4th 1356, 1370) . Both firms denied they were ever the agents of the former officers, just as they deny they ever did anything wrong in their representations of City of Hope. Defendants have not shown they were third party beneficiaries of the settlement agreements. Because they did not prove they were intended beneficiaries of the settlement agreements, therewas no error in denying their requests to compel arbitration (102 Cal. App. 4th 1356, 1371) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20A ARBITRATION: RESISTING
PART II. FORMS
C. Particular Persons Not Bound by Arbitration Agreement

2-20A California Points & Authorities § 20A.61

§ 20A.61 Heir's Wrongful Death Claim Is Not Covered by Decedent's Arbitration Agreement

[1] FORM

RESPONDENT CANNOT BE COMPELLED TO ARBITRATE THE CONTROVERSY OF THE WRONGFUL DEATH OF A PARTY TO THE ARBITRATION AGREEMENT, BECAUSE THE WRONGFUL DEATH CLAIM BELONGS TO RESPONDENT AND NOT TO DECEDENT.

A. Heir's Wrongful Death Claim Not Covered by Decedent's Arbitration Agreement. Ordinarily, a patient who signs an arbitration agreement covering medical malpractice claims cannot bind anyone else except his or her spouse and minor children to arbitrate any wrongful death claim under that agreement. Thus, adult children cannot usually be compelled to arbitrate wrongful death claims relating to a parent's death. Some agreements will not bind a surviving spouse to arbitrate his or her wrongful death claim (Buckner v. Tamarin (2002) 98 Cal. App. 4th 140, 142-143, 119 Cal. Rptr. 2d 489 [adult children not required to arbitrate wrongful death claim]; Rhodes v. California Hosp. Medical Center (1978) 76 Cal. App. 3d 606, 608-610, 143 Cal. Rptr. 59 (husband's signature was as agent for wife, not in his individual capacity) cf. Herbert v. Superior Court (1985) 169 Cal. App. 3d 718, 725 n.2, 215 Cal. Rptr. 477).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used to resist arbitration of adult children's wrongful death claims, or, if using the bracketed language in Paragraph A, when the arbitration agreement provided for arbitration only of the decedent's personal claims but not for arbitration of the spouse's or children's wrongful death claim. The more generally applicable authorities that require arbitration of a surviving spouse's claim are in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.62 [see also Hawkins v. Superior Court (1979) 89 Cal. App. 3d 413, 418-419, 419 n.5, 152 Cal. Rptr. 491 (discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.61[3][a])].

This form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in opposition to one seeking to compel arbitration [see § 20A.10]. Counsel may also wish to include the authority from § 20A.60.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, the argument should indicate the language of the arbitration agreement at issue and emphasize how that language fails to include wrongful death claims or claims of heirs.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a form of response to a petition to compel arbitration that may be supported by this memorandum, as well as a procedural checklist, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 32, Contractual Arbitration: Agreements and Compelling Arbitration (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For memoranda to combine with this form, regarding other matters that the opposition may need to address, see §§ 20A.10-20A.12, 20A.20 et seq., 20A.30 et seq., 20A.40 et seq., and 20A.80 et seq.

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

For forms addressing general contract principles, see Ch. 50, Contracts .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Heir's Wrongful Death Claim Is Not Covered by Decedent's Arbitration Agreement

Buckner v. Tamarin (2002) 98 Cal. App. 4th 140, 119 Cal. Rptr. 2d 489 was a wrongful death action by adult daughters of a man who died following surgery by Dr. Tamarin. Decedent had signed a medical arbitration agreement covering any dispute arising out of or related to the treatment or services provided by Dr. Tamarin, including wrongful death claims any heirs of the patient's heirs. Dr. Tamarin petitioned to compel arbitration. The daughters opposed arbitration, contending their father had no authority to waive their right to sue. The court agreed and denied the petition to arbitrate. Dr. Tamarin appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court said there are only three circumstances under which someone can bind another person to a medical arbitration agreement without that other person's consent. First, an agent can bind a principal [see, e.g., Madden v. Kaiser Foundation Hospitals (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 699, 706, 131 Cal. Rptr. 882, 552 P.2d 1178 (discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.61[3][a])]. Second, spouses can bind each other [see, e.g., Bolanos v. Khalatian (1991) 231 Cal. App. 3d 1586, 1591, 283 Cal. Rptr. 209 ; Gross v. Recabaren (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 771, 781, 253 Cal. Rptr. 820 (discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.62[3][a])]. And, third, a parent can bind a minor child [see, e.g., Pietrelli v. Peacock (1993) 13 Cal. App. 4th 943, 947, 16 Cal. Rptr. 2d 688 (discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.64[3][a])]. In each of the foregoing situations, there is an agency or similar relationship between the nonsignatory and one of the parties to the arbitration agreement (98 Cal. App. 4th 140, 142) . Here, the plaintiffs do not fall into any of the foregoing categories. Their father was not their agent, they were not married to him, and they were not minors. He therefore lacked the authority to waive their right to a jury trial of their claims (98 Cal. App. 4th 140, 143) . Tamarin contended to the contrary, citing Herbert v. Superior Court (1985) 169 Cal. App. 3d 718, 722-725, 215 Cal. Rptr. 477 as authority that adult children could be required to arbitrate a wrongful death claim under a medical services agreement signed by their deceased parent. The court of appeal disagreed, saying the result in Herbert, is anomalous: because decedent's spouse and five minor children were required to arbitrate their wrongful death claim, rather than try to split an indivisible cause of action, the court required the adult children to arbitrate too (98 Cal. App. 4th 140, 143) .

In Rhodes v. California Hosp. Medical Center (1978) 76 Cal. App. 3d 606, 143 Cal. Rptr. 59 , decedent's surviving husband and children filed an action for her wrongful death allegedly due to the negligence of defendant hospital. The decedent, and the husband as her "agent," had signed instruments containing provisions for arbitration. Defendant appealed from the trial court's denial of its petition to compel arbitration.

The court of appeal affirmed. While recognizing the strong public policy in favor of arbitration, the court of appeal said that policy does not extend to those who are not parties to an arbitration agreement or who have not authorized anyone to act for them in executing such an agreement (76 Cal. App. 3d 606, 609) . The court of appeal recognized that a wrongful death action must rest on a cause of action in the decedent, but held that the decedent's agreement to arbitrate her own possible claim was ineffective to waive her husband's and children's right to a jury trial in their own, independent action for her wrongful death (76 Cal. App. 3d 606, 609-610) .

The facts and procedural background of Herbert v. Superior Court (1985) 169 Cal. App. 3d 718, 215 Cal. Rptr. 477 , are discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.63[3][a]. In reaching its conclusion that the heirs were bound by the agreement to arbitrate executed by the decedent, the court noted that the agreement in Rhodes did not include a provision whereby the signing party intended his or her heirs to be bound to the arbitration clause (169 Cal. App. 3d 718, 725 n.2). Also, as noted above, the court in Buckner v. Tamarin (2002) 98 Cal. App. 4th 140, 143, 119 Cal. Rptr. 2d 489 considered the result in Herbert to be for convenience.

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Heir's Wrongful Death Claim Is Not Covered by Decedent's Arbitration Agreement

The court of appeal in Fitzhugh v. Granada HealthCare and Rehabilitation Center, L.L.C. (2007) 150 Cal. App. 4th 469, 58 Cal. Rptr. 3d 585 , affirmed the trial court's denial of a motion to compel arbitration. The facts and procedural background and the portion of the opinion addressing the court's discretion under Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c) to deny arbitration of all claims when some are arbitrable is discussed in § 20A.12[3][a]. The husband and sons of a patient of defendant sued for elder abuse, fraud, violations of the Patients Bill of Rights (22 Cal. Code Reg. § 72527), and wrongful death, claiming her death resulted from a fall she took while she was a resident of Granada. With respect to the wrongful death claims, the court of appeal said they were not subject to arbitration and cited Buckner v. Tamarin (2002) 98 Cal. App. 4th 140, 142-144, 119 Cal. Rptr. 2d 489 (Buckner, discussed at [3][a], above) for the proposition that wrongful death claims are not usually arbitrable unless the arbitration agreement was signed by the plaintiff in his or her individual capacity, which this agreement was not. It was irrelevant to the wrongful death cause of action whether husband may have signed the arbitration agreements as the decedent's "legal representative/agent." There was no evidence that husband signed the arbitration agreements in his personal capacity, and the sons did not sign any arbitration agreements. Thus, there was no basis to infer that they waived their personal right to jury trial on the wrongful death claim. The court distinguished cases involving arbitration agreements signed pursuant to health care powers of attorney (150 Cal. App. 4th 469, 474) . The court also distinguished Herbert v. Superior Court (1985) 169 Cal. App. 3d 718, 215 Cal. Rptr. 477 (discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.63[3][a]), as having been decided for practical reasons to require all plaintiffs to try their claims in the same forum. The plaintiffs in this case were not dividing their wrongful death claims between different forums (150 Cal. App. 4th 469, 474-475) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20A ARBITRATION: RESISTING
PART II. FORMS
C. Particular Persons Not Bound by Arbitration Agreement

2-20A California Points & Authorities § 20A.62

§ 20A.62 Nonsignatory Spouse's Loss of Consortium Claim Is Not Subject to Arbitration

[1] FORM

RESPONDENT CANNOT BE COMPELLED TO ARBITRATE HIS/HER CLAIM FOR LOSS OF CONSORTIUM BECAUSE HE/SHE DID NOT SIGN, AND IS NOT BOUND BY, THE ARBITRATION AGREEMENT AT ISSUE.

A. Nonsignatory Spouse's Loss of Consortium Claim Is Not Subject to Arbitration. A party cannot be compelled to arbitrate a dispute when he/she/it has not elected to submit to arbitration either through entering an arbitration agreement or by authorizing someone to act for him/her/it in executing such an agreement (Baker v. Birnbaum (1988) 202 Cal. App. 3d 288, 291-293, 248 Cal. Rptr. 336).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used to resist arbitration of a nonsignatory spouse's loss of consortium claim in a medical malpractice action arising from treatment of the signatory spouse. This form is based on a minority case, which has generally been questioned and not followed by the cases set forth in the form at Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.62.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in opposition to one seeking to compel arbitration [see § 20A.10]. Counsel may also wish to include the authority from § 20A.60.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, the argument should indicate the language of the arbitration agreement at issue and emphasize how that language fails to include claims by the nonsignatory spouse.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a form of response to a petition to compel arbitration that may be supported by this memorandum, as well as a procedural checklist, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 32, Contractual Arbitration: Agreements and Compelling Arbitration (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For memoranda to combine with this form, regarding other matters that the opposition may need to address, see §§ 20A.10-20A.12, 20A.20 et seq., 20A.30 et seq., 20A.40 et seq., and 20A.80 et seq.

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

For forms addressing general contract principles, see Ch. 50, Contracts.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Nonsignatory Spouse's Loss of Consortium Claim Is Not Subject to Arbitration

In Baker v. Birnbaum (1988) 202 Cal. App. 3d 288, 248 Cal. Rptr. 336 , before undergoing surgery to be performed by defendant physician, plaintiff signed an agreement to arbitrate any dispute concerning medical treatment, which purportedly bound her and anyone else who might have a right to assert a claim on her behalf, as well as other persons for whom she had responsibility, such as her spouse. After she was diagnosed as having cancer, plaintiff filed a professional negligence action against defendant, and her husband alleged a claim for loss of consortium. Citing the arbitration agreement signed by plaintiff, defendant moved to compel arbitration regarding both plaintiff and her husband. The trial court granted the motion regarding plaintiff, but not her husband, concluding that he was not bound by an agreement he did not sign. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court explained that public policy favors arbitration as an expeditious and economical method of resolving disputes. However, arbitration assumes an election by the parties involved to use it as an alternative to the judicial process. A party cannot be compelled to arbitrate a dispute it has not elected to submit. The court observed that Code Civ. Proc. § 1295, which authorizes arbitration in medical malpractice disputes, does not discuss whether claimants other than signatories may be bound by the agreement to arbitrate. It explained that in some circumstances a person who has authority to contract for medical services on behalf of another may, in the exercise of that authority, bind that person to an agreement to arbitrate his or her medical malpractice claims (202 Cal. App. 3d 288, 291) . However, the court said that was not the situation in plaintiff's case, because she contracted for medical care solely on her own behalf, and the agreement to arbitrate related only to those services provided to her under that contract. The policy favoring arbitration does not extend to those who are not parties to an arbitration agreement or who have not authorized anyone to act for them in executing such an agreement (202 Cal. App. 3d 288, 292) . The court found that there was nothing on the face of the contract to extend it to any claim made by plaintiff's husband; the submission to arbitration of any dispute regarding medical malpractice refers to claims asserted by plaintiff on her behalf (202 Cal. App. 3d 288, 292-293) .

The court distinguished and declined to follow Herbert v. Superior Court (1985) 169 Cal. App. 3d 718, 215 Cal. Rptr. 477 , discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.63[3][a] (202 Cal. App. 3d 288, 293-294) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20A ARBITRATION: RESISTING
PART II. FORMS
C. Particular Persons Not Bound by Arbitration Agreement

2-20A California Points & Authorities § 20A.63

§ 20A.63 Officer Who Signs Arbitration Agreement on Behalf of Corporate Party to Agreement Cannot Be Compelled to Arbitrate Under Agreement

[1] FORM

RESPONDENT'S ONLY CONNECTION WITH THE ARBITRATION AGREEMENT IS HIS/HER SIGNATURE AS AN OFFICER ON BEHALF OF THE CORPORATION. THAT IS NOT ENOUGH TO REQUIRE HIM/HER TO ARBITRATE UNDER THE AGREEMENT

A. Officer Who Signs Arbitration Agreement on Behalf of Corporate Party to Agreement Cannot Be Compelled to Arbitrate Under Agreement. A corporate officer whose only connection with an arbitration agreement is to sign it as a corporate officer on behalf of a corporate party to the agreement cannot be compelled to arbitrate under that agreement any claim he or she may have individually against a party to the arbitration agreement (Benasra v. Marciano (2001) 92 Cal. App. 4th 987, 990, 112 Cal. Rptr. 2d 358).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used by an individual who signed an arbitration agreement as a corporate officer and has no interest in the agreement (i.e., is not an agent of the corporation or third-party of the agreement) to resist arbitration of an individual claim he or she has against a party to the arbitration agreement.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in opposition to one seeking to compel arbitration [see § 20A.10] and with one or more of the authorities from § 20A.60 et seq., addressing the specifics persons who are not bound by particular arbitration agreements.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, the argument should indicate that his or her client signed the agreement only as a corporate officer and cannot be construed as an agent of the corporation or a third-party beneficiary of the contract.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a form of response to a petition to compel arbitration that may be supported by this memorandum, as well as a procedural checklist, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 32, Contractual Arbitration: Agreements and Compelling Arbitration (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For memoranda to combine with this form, regarding other matters that the opposition may need to address, see §§ 20A.10-20A.12, 20A.20 et seq., 20A.30 et seq., 20A.40 et seq., and 20A.80 et seq.

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

For forms addressing general contract principles, see Ch. 50, Contracts .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Officer Who Signs Arbitration Agreement on Behalf of Corporate Party to Agreement Cannot Be Compelled to Arbitrate Under Agreement

Benasra v. Marciano (2001) 92 Cal. App. 4th 987, 112 Cal. Rptr. 2d 358 , was a libel action in which the defendants (a corporation and its president) claimed the plaintiff (an individual) ought to be compelled to arbitrate simply because he was president of another corporation that had a licensing agreement (that provided for arbitration) with the defendant corporation. Plaintiff signed the licensing agreement as president of the licensee corporation, but was neither an agent of the corporation or a third-party beneficiary of the licensing agreement. The trial court denied defendants' motion to compel arbitration and defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court noted that the strong public policy in favor of arbitration does not extend to those who are not parties to an arbitration agreement, and a party cannot be compelled to arbitrate a dispute that he has not agreed to resolve by arbitration Plaintiff was not a party to the license agreements, but unambiguously signed both as a corporate officer and only as a corporate officer, not in his individual capacity (92 Cal. App. 4th 987, 990) . To avoid this result, defendant contended plaintiff was an agent of the corporation at all relevant times and an intended third-party beneficiary of the license agreements, in part based on a provision in theagreements that provided for their automatic termination if plaintiff failed to remain as the majority owner and controlling officer of the corporation. Defendant claimed this provision benefited plaintiff because it meant he could not be ousted from his company without the company's loss of the Guess contracts. The court disagreed, saying that the provision could just as well have been included for the benefit of defendant corporation, to ensure that it was not stuck with a licensee operated by someone other than plaintiff. It takes more than a provision such as this to create third-party beneficiary status (92 Cal. App. 4th 987, 992-993) . The court of appeal distinguished cases relied on by defendant in which a nonsignatory to a contract was allowed to compel arbitration. Here, plaintiff was not the one who wanted to be bound by the arbitration provision in a contract that he signed only in a representative capacity. It is one thing to permit a nonsignatory to relinquish his or her right to a jury trial, but quite another to compel him or her to do so. While the court of appeal did not foreclose the possibility that a nonsignatory third-party beneficiary could in some circumstances be compelled to arbitrate a particular dispute, there was nothing about this case to suggest the need or desirability for that remedy. There was no evidentiary support for defendant's assertions that plaintiff was a third-party beneficiary of the contract (92 Cal. App. 4th 987, 991-992) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20A ARBITRATION: RESISTING
PART II. FORMS
C. Particular Persons Not Bound by Arbitration Agreement

2-20A California Points & Authorities §§ 20A.64-20A.79

[Reserved]

§§ 20A.64[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20A ARBITRATION: RESISTING
PART II. FORMS
D. Defenses to Arbitration

2-20A California Points & Authorities § 20A.80

§ 20A.80 Petitioner Has Waived the Right to Compel Arbitration

[1] FORM

RESPONDENT CANNOT BE COMPELLED TO ARBITRATE THE CONTROVERSY PETITIONER SEEKS TO ARBITRATE BECAUSE PETITIONER HAS WAIVED THE RIGHT TO COMPEL ARBITRATION.

A. Arbitration Not to Be Ordered if Waived. The court shall not order parties to an arbitration agreement to arbitrate a controversy if it determines that the right to compel such arbitration has been waived by the petitioner under the circumstances (Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(a); Engalla v. Permanente Medical Group, Inc. (1997) 15 Cal. 4th 951, 982, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 843, 938 P.2d 903 ; Sawday v. Vista Irrigation Dist. (1966) 64 Cal. 2d 833, 837, 52 Cal. Rptr. 1, 415 P.2d 816 ; Guess?, Inc. v. Superior Court (2000) 79 Cal. App. 4th 553, 557, 94 Cal. Rptr. 2d 201).

B. Waiver Is Question of Fact for Court to Decide. [See Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.80[1], Paragraph A.]

[Optional] C. Burden of Proving Waiver Is on Party Asserting It. [See Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.80[1], Paragraph C.]

D. Factors To Be Considered in Determining if Arbitration Has Been Waived. No single test delineates the nature of the conduct of a party that will constitute waiver of the right to compel arbitration. In determining waiver, a court can consider the following (Sobremonte v. Superior Court (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 980, 992, 72 Cal. Rptr. 2d 43 ; see Berman v. Health Net (2000) 80 Cal. App. 4th 1359, 1363, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 295 ; Davis v. Continental Airlines, Inc. (1997) 59 Cal. App. 4th 205, 211, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 79 ; Zamora v. Lehman (2010) 186 Cal. App. 4th 1, 111 Cal. Rptr. 3d 335):

1. Whether the party's actions are inconsistent with the right to arbitrate;

2. Whether the litigation machinery has been substantially invoked and the parties were well into preparation of a lawsuit before the party notified the opposing party of an intent to arbitrate;

3. Whether a party either requested arbitration enforcement close to the trial date or delayed for a long period before seeking a stay;

4. Whether a defendant seeking arbitration filed a counterclaim without asking for a stay of the proceedings;

5. Whether important intervening steps had taken place[, such as one party's taking advantage of judicial discovery procedures not available in arbitration]; and

6. Whether the delay affected, misled, or prejudiced the opposing party.

[Assertion of the right to arbitration as an affirmative defense, without more, does not preclude a finding that subsequent conduct waived that right (Sobremonte v. Superior Court (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 980, 993, 998, 72 Cal. Rptr. 2d 43 ; Davis v. Continental Airlines, Inc. (1997) 59 Cal. App. 4th 205, 217, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 79)].

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used to resist arbitration when the petitioner has waived the right to compel arbitration.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in opposition to one seeking to compel arbitration [see § 20A.10] and with one or more of the authorities from §§ 20A.81-20A.86, addressing the specifics of various acts that may constitute waiver. Counsel may wish to include authority from Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.30 regarding the applicability of general state law contract principles.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, the argument should clearly indicate the acts constituting waiver and why those acts amount to waiver.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a form of response to a petition to compel arbitration that may be supported by this memorandum, as well as a procedural checklist, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 32, Contractual Arbitration: Agreements and Compelling Arbitration (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For memoranda to combine with this form, regarding other matters that the opposition may need to address, see §§ 20A.10-20A.12, 20A.20 et seq., 20A.30 et seq., 20A.40 et seq., and 20A.87 et seq.

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

For forms addressing general contract principles, see Ch. 50, Contracts .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Arbitration Not to Be Ordered if Waived

The facts and procedural background of Engalla v. Permanente Medical Group, Inc. (1997) 15 Cal. 4th 951, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 843, 938 P.2d 903 , are discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.10[3][a]. The Court said that Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(a) gives the trial court jurisdiction to decide questions of waiver when the issue is raised in opposition to a petition to compel arbitration (15 Cal. 4th 951, 982) . Additional portions of the opinion addressing waiver are set forth in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.80[3][a] and in § 20A.86[3][a].

The facts and procedural background of Sawday v. Vista Irrigation Dist. (1966) 64 Cal. 2d 833, 52 Cal. Rptr. 1, 415 P.2d 816 , are discussed at § 20A.82[3][a]. The Supreme Court, in affirming that the petitioner had lost the right to compel arbitration as to the majority of damages in question, stated that a party to an arbitration agreement can waive his or her right to arbitrate. Whether there has been a waiver of such a right is ordinarily a question of fact. The Court went on to hold that a finding of waiver, if supported by sufficient evidence, is binding on an appellate court (64 Cal. 2d 833, 836) .

The facts and procedural background of Guess?, Inc. v. Superior Court (2000) 79 Cal. App. 4th 553, 94 Cal. Rptr. 2d 201 , and the portion of the opinion discussing the specific factors amounting to waiver, are discussed at § 20A.83[3][b]. The court opened its discussion with consideration of waiver generally, noting that a petition to compel arbitration will be denied when the right has been waived by the proponent's failure to properly and timely assert it [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1281, 1281.2(a)]. This may happen in a variety of contexts, including situations in which the proponent of arbitration has previously taken steps inconsistent with an intent to invoke arbitration and instances in which the proponent has unreasonably delayed in undertaking the procedure. There is no single determinative test of waiver, and the question for the trial court is one of fact. For the appellate court, the question is whether the trial court's decision is supported by substantial evidence. If it is, the court must affirm. If not, the court may decide the issue as a matter of law (79 Cal. App. 4th 553, 557) .

[b] Factors To Be Considered in Determining if Arbitration Has Been Waived

In Zamora v. Lehman (2010) 186 Cal. App. 4th 1, 111 Cal. Rptr. 3d 335 , the court of appeal reversed the trial court's finding of no waiver by two defendants who had engaged in delay and discovery, but affirmed the trial court's finding of no waiver by a third defendant who had successfully demurred and otherwise substantively made only settlement efforts. The court addressed the assertion that the determination of waiver was subject to the Federal Arbitration Act (FAA) by ruling that the test under the FAA for default under 9 U.S.C. § 3 and the California Arbitration Act for waiver under Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(a) are the same, citing St. Agnes Medical Center v. PacifiCare of California (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 1187, 8 Cal. Rptr. 3d 517, 82 P.3d 727 . However, later, the court acknowledges that the Ninth Circuit also requires knowledge of the existing right to arbitration. In any case, the court cited the factors for determining waiver that are set out in the form in [1][D], above. The portion of the decision discussing unreasonable delay in demanding arbitration is set forth in § 20A.82[3][a], below. The portion of the decision discussing waiver by use of prejudicial discovery is located at § 20A.83[4][b], below . The portion of the decision dealing with demurrer as waiver is discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.81[3][e], above. The portion of the decision dealing with attempts to settle as waiver is discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.81[3][d], above.

The facts and procedural background of Sobremonte v. Superior Court (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 980, 72 Cal. Rptr. 2d 43 , are discussed at § 20A.83[3][a]. The court of appeal, finding that defendant had waived its right to arbitrate. The court cited Davis v. Blue Cross of Northern California (1979) 25 Cal. 3d 418, 424, 425-426, 431, 158 Cal. Rptr. 828, 600 P.2d 1060 (discussed at § 20A.85[3][a]) for the proposition that there is no single test for waiver, and proceeded to enumerate the factors set out in theform in [1], above (61 Cal. App. 4th 980, 992) . The court of appeal also said that delay may be unreasonable even after one has raised the right to arbitrate as an affirmative defense. Mere assertion of the right to arbitration as an affirmative defense, without more, does not preclude a finding that subsequent conduct waived that right (61 Cal. App. 4th 980, 993, 998) .

Berman v. Health Net (2000) 80 Cal. App. 4th 1359, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 295 , began as an action against Health Net, Associated Physicians of St. John's, and a number of individual doctors. The claims against Health Net alleged many difficulties getting Health Net to approve appropriate treatments for Renee Berman, who was a plaintiff when the action began, but died in 1998. Health Net demurred to the complaint in May, 1996, and, also beginning in May, 1996, served extensive discovery requests on the Bermans, as well as third-party subpoenas for Renee's medical records. Also in May, 1996, the parties stipulated that Health Net would not be considered to have waived any right to arbitration by reason of filing any motions or pleadings challenging the sufficiency of the complaint, and providing that Health Net would have thirty days after the date on which their answer was due to seek an order compelling arbitration. The Bermans also served Health Net with their own discovery requests. Health Net answered the complaint in October, 1996 and in November, filed a petition to compel arbitration. The petition was denied on the ground a risk of inconsistent rulings existed because the Bermans' claims against the individual physician defendants were not arbitrable. In the fall of 1997, the Bermans settled all claims against the non-Health Net defendants. In April, 1998, Health Net again petitioned to compel arbitration, based on the changed circumstance there would no longer be any risk of conflicting rulings. The petition was denied on the ground that Health Net had waived the right to compel arbitration by engaging in substantial discovery. Health Net appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court pointed out that there is no single test for waiver of the right to compel arbitration, but waiver may be found when the party seeking arbitration has (1) previously taken steps inconsistent with an intent to invoke arbitration, (2) unreasonably delayed in seeking arbitration, or (3) acted in bad faith or with willful misconduct. While engaging in litigation of the matter may be inconsistent with an intent to invoke arbitration, the party who seeks to establish waiver must show that some prejudice has resulted from the other party's delay in seeking arbitration. Here, the trial court reviewed the discovery conducted by the parties and made an implied finding that the Bermans had been prejudiced by Health Net's conduct of extensive discovery. The court of appeal found that finding to be supported by substantial evidence (80 Cal. App. 4th 1359, 1363) .

The facts and procedural background of Davis v. Continental Airlines, Inc. (1997) 59 Cal. App. 4th 205, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 79 , are discussed at § 20A.83[3][b]. The court of appeal, finding that defendant had waived its right to arbitrate, began its discussion by noting that there is no single test for waiver of the right to compel arbitration, but waiver may be found if the party seeking arbitration has (1) previously taken steps inconsistent with an intent to invoke arbitration, (2) unreasonable delayed in seeking arbitration, or (3) acted in bad faith or with willful misconduct (59 Cal. App. 4th 205, 211) . Later, the court of appeal distinguished the cases on which defendants relied, and said that merely pleading the right to arbitration as an affirmative defense in defendants' answers did not preclude a finding that their subsequent conduct waived their right to compel arbitration (59 Cal. App. 4th 205, 216-217) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Factors To Be Considered in Determining if Arbitration Has Been Waived

The facts and procedural background of Spear v. California State Automobile Ass'n (1992) 2 Cal. 4th 1035, 9 Cal. Rptr. 2d 381, 831 P.2d 821 , are discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.43[3][a]. The Supreme Court reversed the trial court's denial of a motion to compel arbitration, having determined that the trial court misapplied the statute of limitations. The Court mentioned that its conclusion was not inconsistent with the rule that demand for arbitration can not be unreasonably delayed. What constitutes a reasonable time is a question of fact depending on the situation of the parties, the nature of the transaction, and the facts of the particular case. Among the facts a court may consider is any prejudice the opposing party suffered because of the delay. Here the four-year delay was reasonable because it was consumed by the workers' compensation action. The insurance company informed plaintiff that it would await resolution of the workers' compensation matter before settling the uninsured motorist claim. Plaintiff informed defendant when the workers' compensation matter was settled and demanded arbitration less than three months after resolution of the workers' compensation case. The Court said it was difficult to imagine how the delay in demanding arbitration in these circumstances might prejudice an insurer (2 Cal. 4th 1035, 1043) .

The facts and procedural background of Guess?, Inc. v. Superior Court (2000) 79 Cal. App. 4th 553, 94 Cal. Rptr. 2d 201 , and the portion of the opinion discussing the specific factors that amounted to waiver, are discussed at § 20A.83[3][b]. The portion of the opinion addressing generally the factors that may be considered in determining whether waiver has occurred are discussed at [3][a], above.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20A ARBITRATION: RESISTING
PART II. FORMS
D. Defenses to Arbitration

2-20A California Points & Authorities § 20A.81

§ 20A.81 Waiver by Failure to Demand Arbitration Within Time Specified in Contract

[1] FORM

RESPONDENT CANNOT BE COMPELLED TO ARBITRATE THE CONTROVERSY PETITIONER SEEKS TO ARBITRATE BECAUSE PETITIONER HAS WAIVED THE RIGHT TO COMPEL ARBITRATION BY FAILING TO DEMAND ARBITRATION WITHIN THE TIME SPECIFIED IN THE PARTIES' CONTRACT.

A. Right to Arbitrate Waived by Failure to Demand Within Contractual Time Limit. When a contract provides that arbitration may be demanded within a stated time, failure to make a demand within that time constitutes a waiver of the right to arbitrate (Platt Pacific, Inc. v. Andelson (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 307, 321, 24 Cal. Rptr. 2d 597, 862 P.2d 158).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used to resist arbitration when the petitioner has waived the right to compel arbitration by failing to demand arbitration within the time specified in the parties' contract.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in opposition to one seeking to compel arbitration [see § 20A.10] and with the general waiver authorities in § 20A.80. If there may be other grounds of waiver, counsel should also use one or more of the authorities from §§ 20A.82-20A.86. Counsel may wish to include authority from Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.30 regarding the applicability of general state law contract principles.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, the argument should clearly indicate the time specified by the contract for demanding arbitration and petitioner's failure to make timely demand.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a form of response to a petition to compel arbitration that may be supported by this memorandum, as well as a procedural checklist, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 32, Contractual Arbitration: Agreements and Compelling Arbitration (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For memoranda to combine with this form, regarding other matters that the opposition may need to address, see §§ 20A.10-20A.12, 20A.20 et seq., 20A.30 et seq., 20A.40 et seq., and 20A.87 et seq.

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

For forms addressing general contract principles, see Ch. 50, Contracts .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Right to Arbitrate Waived by Failure to Demand Within Contractual Time Limit

Platt Pacific, Inc. v. Andelson (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 307, 24 Cal. Rptr. 2d 597, 862 P.2d 158 , involved a petition to compel arbitration in an action to recover funds owed under a home construction contract. After commencement of the suit, the parties entered into an agreement for alternative resolution of their disputes in the event that settlement efforts, in conjunction with a scheduled voluntary settlement conference, were unsuccessful. The agreement provided that the parties must file a demand for arbitration not later than a specified date. Defendant's counsel canceled the settlement conference and plaintiff demanded arbitration approximately two months after the cut-off date. The arbitrator concluded that it did not have authority to arbitrate the matter, and the trial court denied plaintiff's petition to compel arbitration on the ground that plaintiff failed to make a timely demand. The court of appeal affirmed.

The Supreme Court affirmed. The plaintiffs contended that the court of appeal erred in holding that a failure to demand arbitration by the date specified in an arbitration agreement is a waiver of the right to arbitrate. They asserted that determination of waiver requires an evaluation of the state of mind of the party alleged to have waived arbitration, and the extent of prejudice to the other contracting party. The Court disagreed, pointing out that "waiver" has been used to refer to a number of concepts. In addition to the meaning cited by the plaintiffs, waiver can also mean the loss of an opportunity or a right as a result of a party's failure to perform an act it is required to perform, regardless of the party's intent to abandon or relinquish the right (6 Cal. 4th 307, 313-315) . It is this latter construction given by California courts for the rule that arbitration must be demanded within the time agreed on by the parties [citing Jordan v. Friedman (1946) 72 Cal. App. 2d 726, 727, 165 P.2d 728] (6 Cal. 4th 307, 315) . In support of their position, the plaintiffs cited Napa Association of Public Employees v. County of Napa (1979) 98 Cal. App. 3d 263, 159 Cal. Rptr. 522 . The Supreme Court, however, held that the portion of Napa Association on which plaintiffs' relied was dicta based on distinguishable cases dealing with determining whether an arbitration was timely when it is required to be made within a reasonable time or with whether a party, by conduct inconsistent with arbitration, has abandoned the right to demand it (6 Cal. 4th 307, 316-318) . Thus, the Court held that a contractual requirement that a party's demand for arbitration must be made within a certain time is a condition precedent to the right to arbitration. In the absence of a legal excuse or subsequent modification of the parties' agreement, the failure to submit the dispute to arbitration within the agreed time precludes judicial enforcement of the right to arbitrate (6 Cal. 4th 307, 321) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20A ARBITRATION: RESISTING
PART II. FORMS
D. Defenses to Arbitration

2-20A California Points & Authorities § 20A.82

§ 20A.82 Waiver by Failure to Demand Arbitration Within a Reasonable Time

[1] FORM

RESPONDENT CANNOT BE COMPELLED TO ARBITRATE THE CONTROVERSY PETITIONER SEEKS TO ARBITRATE BECAUSE PETITIONER HAS WAIVED THE RIGHT TO COMPEL ARBITRATION BY FAILING TO DEMAND ARBITRATION WITHIN A REASONABLE TIME.

A. Waiver by Failure to Demand Arbitration Within a Reasonable Time. When an arbitration agreement does not specify a time within which arbitration must be demanded, a reasonable time is allowed based on the circumstances of the case, after which the right to arbitrate is waived (Sawday v. Vista Irrigation Dist. (1966) 64 Cal. 2d 833, 836, 837, 52 Cal. Rptr. 1, 415 P.2d 816 ; Allstate Ins. Co. v. Gonzalez (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 783, 793, 45 Cal. Rptr. 2d 491). Failure to remember that the agreement contained an arbitration provision does not preclude a finding of waiver by unreasonable delay (Zamora v. Lehman (2010) 186 Cal. App. 4th 1, 18, 111 Cal. Rptr. 3d 335).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used to resist arbitration when the petitioner has waived the right to compel arbitration by failing to demand arbitration within a reasonable time.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in opposition to one seeking to compel arbitration [see § 20A.10] and with the general waiver authorities in § 20A.80. If there may be other grounds of waiver, counsel should also use one or more of the authorities from §§ 20A.81, 20A.83-20A.86. Counsel may wish to include authority from Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.30 regarding the applicability of general state law contract principles.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, the argument should clearly indicate why the delay constitutes an unreasonable time, including, if was the case, respondent's repeated requests for petitioner to demand arbitration.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a form of response to a petition to compel arbitration that may be supported by this memorandum, as well as a procedural checklist, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 32, Contractual Arbitration: Agreements and Compelling Arbitration (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For memoranda to combine with this form, regarding other matters that the opposition may need to address, see §§ 20A.10-20A.12, 20A.20 et seq., 20A.30 et seq., 20A.40 et seq., and 20A.87 et seq.

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

For forms addressing general contract principles, see Ch. 50, Contracts .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Waiver by Failure to Demand Arbitration Within a Reasonable Time

Sawday v. Vista Irrigation Dist. (1966) 64 Cal. 2d 833, 52 Cal. Rptr. 1, 415 P.2d 816 , involved parties to a lease under which the lessor, an irrigation district which had financed its purchase by bonds, reserved the right to remove water from the premises. If the lessee was damaged by such removal, the rent was subject to reduction after demand therefor and, in the event of disagreement, arbitration of the claim. The lessee requested rent adjustment for three years after the lessor began removing water but the lessor denied the demand. Many years later, just before the lease expired and could no longer be renewed, the lessee demanded arbitration for claimed damages for the past decade. The lessor appointed an arbitrator but expressly reserved the right to contest the claim on the basis of the statute of limitations, and it thereafter brought an action for declaratory relief, seeking to terminate the arbitration. The lessee petitioned to compel arbitration. On consolidation of the matters, the lower court ruled that the lessee was guilty of laches for most of the years' damages in question, and it ordered arbitration as to the final two years in issue but denied arbitration as to the previous years. The lessee appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed, holding the lessee waived the right to compel arbitration as to the majority of the years' damages in issue. When the agreement does not specify a time within which arbitration must be demanded, a reasonable time is allowed. What constitutes a reasonable time is a question of fact, depending on thesituation of the parties, the nature of the transaction, and the facts of the particular case (64 Cal. 2d 833, 836) . Under the circumstances of the instant case, the Court concluded the lessor was entitled to assume it would receive the full amount of rent provided by the lease in order to meet its bond service requirements, and therefore the lessee should have made a claim for adjustment within one year after the year in which damages were alleged (64 Cal. 2d 833, 837) .

The facts and procedural background of Allstate Ins. Co. v. Gonzalez (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 783, 45 Cal. Rptr. 2d 491 , and the portion of the opinion addressing the accrual of the cause of action to compel specific performance of the uninsured motorist arbitration provision are discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.43[3][a]. To summarize the time line: the accident occurred in 1986; the injured driver filed a personal injury action against the owner and operator of the uninsured vehicle in 1987; in 1989, the injured driver informed Allstate by letter that there were uninsured motorist claims arising from the accident, but did not make formal demand for arbitration until February, 1992. Although the statute of limitations had not expired, because it did not commence until Allstate refused to arbitrate in February, 1992, the court of appeal held that the delay of three years and several months was unreasonable as a matter of law so as to amount to waiver of the right to arbitration of the uninsured motorist claim (38 Cal. App. 4th 783, 793) . During that period, Gonzalez had several attorneys and Allstate had urged him several times to make formal demand for arbitration. In view of what the statue required, the 1989 letter was not a proper demand (38 Cal. App. 4th 783, 792) . The burden was on Gonzalez, not the insurance company to pursue arbitration. While lack of prejudice to the other party is a factor to weigh when the claimant has been diligent, given Gonzalez' protracted and unexplained delay in filing a formal demand for arbitration, the court found it unnecessary to address whether Allstate was prejudiced by the delay. Nor did the court of appeal find any merit in Gonzalez' contention that Allstate had acquiesced in the delay (38 Cal. App. 4th 783, 793) .

In Zamora v. Lehman (2010) 186 Cal. App. 4th 1, 111 Cal. Rptr. 3d 335 , the court of appeal reversed the trial court's finding of no waiver by two defendants who had engaged in delay and discovery, but affirmed the trial court's finding of no waiver by a third defendant who had successfully demurred and otherwise substantively made only settlement efforts. The portion of the decision discussing the factors for determination of waiver of the right to demand arbitration is set forth in § 20A.80[3][b], above. The court noted that failure to make a timely demand for arbitration results in a waiver of the right to compel arbitration. Further, none of the cases concerning the failure to timely demand arbitration have used the word "waiver" to mean voluntary relinquishment of a known right. The court then ruled that waiting to file a motion to compel four months before the trial date and one year after the trial court rejected a demurrer based on a statute of limitations defense was an unreasonable delay in making the request and too close to the trial date. The court subsequently ruled that failure to remember that the agreement contained an arbitration provision does not preclude a finding of waiver (186 Cal. App. 4th 1, 18) . The portion of the decision discussing waiver by use of prejudicial pretrial procedures and discovery is located at § 20A.83[3][a], below . The portion of the decision dealing with demurrer as waiver is discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.81[3][e], above. The portion of the decision dealing with attempts to settle as waiver is discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.81[3][d], above.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20A ARBITRATION: RESISTING
PART II. FORMS
D. Defenses to Arbitration

2-20A California Points & Authorities § 20A.83

§ 20A.83 Waiver by Pretrial Procedures or Prejudicial Discovery

[1] FORM

RESPONDENT CANNOT BE COMPELLED TO ARBITRATE THE CONTROVERSY PETITIONER SEEKS TO ARBITRATE BECAUSE PETITIONER HAS WAIVED THE RIGHT TO COMPEL ARBITRATION BY _____ [specify acts constituting waiver, e.g., ENGAGING IN UNILATERAL DISCOVERY WHICH PREJUDICED PLAINTIFF AND WAS INCONSISTENT WITH ARBITRATION].

A. Waiver by Pretrial Procedures or Prejudicial Discovery. Partial litigation of issues in a dispute, through pretrial procedures, or by [unilateral] discovery which prejudices the party resisting arbitration, may justify a finding of waiver of the right to compel arbitration (Zamora v. Lehman (2010) 186 Cal. App. 4th 1, 19, 111 Cal. Rptr. 3d 335 ; Sobremonte v. Superior Court (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 980, 996, 72 Cal. Rptr. 2d 43 (both); Davis v. Continental Airlines, Inc. (1997) 59 Cal. App. 4th 205, 214-217, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 79 (discovery); McConnell v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc. (1980) 105 Cal. App. 3d 946, 951, 164 Cal. Rptr. 751 (pretrial proceedings)).

[Optional] B. Prejudice by Discovery. Prejudice results from the disclosure of defenses and strategies. When one party uses the discovery process to obtain information about the other party's case that they could not obtain in arbitration, and then, having gained that information, seeks to compel arbitration[, in which the party resisting arbitration will not have equivalent discovery rights], the court may reasonably find that the party who conducted discovery has waived its right to compel arbitration (Sobremonte v. Superior Court (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 980, 996-997, 72 Cal. Rptr. 2d 43 ; Davis v. Continental Airlines, Inc. (1997) 59 Cal. App. 4th 205, 215, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 79 ; see Berman v. Health Net (2000) 80 Cal. App. 4th 1359, 1366-1370, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 295 (both parties engaged in discovery); Guess?, Inc. v. Superior Court (2000) 79 Cal. App. 4th 553, 558, 94 Cal. Rptr. 2d 201).

[Optional] C. Delay Until After Answer. Delay in seeking to compel arbitration until after the defendant has answered amounts to waiver if procedures and steps taken during the delay are inconsistent with an intent to arbitrate and defendant has suffered prejudice by disclosing its legal strategies in the answer (Kaneko Ford Design v. Citipark, Inc. (1988) 202 Cal. App. 3d 1220, 1228-1229, 249 Cal. Rptr. 544 ; see Guess?, Inc. v. Superior Court (2000) 79 Cal. App.

4th 553, 557-558, 94 Cal. Rptr. 2d 201).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used to resist arbitration when the petitioner has waived the right to compel arbitration by engaging in pretrial procedures or prejudicial discovery before demanding arbitration. The authorities in this form, except in Optional Paragraph C, involve defendants who engaged in pretrial procedures or prejudicial discovery before seeking to compel arbitration. The authority in § 20A.84 addresses situations in which either a plaintiff or defendant used the litigation machinery in bad faith.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in opposition to one seeking to compel arbitration [see § 20A.10] and with the general waiver authorities in § 20A.80. If there may be other grounds of waiver, counsel should also use one or more of the authorities from §§ 20A.81-20A.82, 20A.84-20A.86. Counsel may wish to include authority from Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.30 regarding the applicability of general state law contract principles.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, the argument should address the commencement of the litigation, what it involved, and how far it proceeded before petitioner sought to compel arbitration.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a form of response to a petition to compel arbitration that may be supported by this memorandum, as well as a procedural checklist, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 32, Contractual Arbitration: Agreements and Compelling Arbitration (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For memoranda to combine with this form, regarding other matters that the opposition may need to address, see §§ 20A.10-20A.12, 20A.20 et seq., 20A.30 et seq., 20A.40 et seq., 20A.60 et seq., and 20A.87 et seq.

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

For forms addressing general contract principles, see Ch. 50, Contracts.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Waiver by Pretrial Procedures or Prejudicial Discovery

In Zamora v. Lehman (2010) 186 Cal. App. 4th 1, 111 Cal. Rptr. 3d 335 , the court of appeal reversed the trial court's finding of no waiver by two defendants who had engaged in delay and discovery, but affirmed the trial court's finding of no waiver by a third defendant who had successfully demurred and otherwise substantively made only settlement efforts. The portion of the decision covering the factors for determination of waiver of the right to demand arbitration is set forth in § 20A.80[3][b], above. The portion of the decision discussing unreasonable delay in demanding arbitration is set forth in § 20A.82[3][a], above. The court pointed out that the rules of the arbitration service under which the arbitration was to take place did not allow for discovery, yet the party seeking arbitration had undertaken huge quantities of discovery in the judicial action that yielded more than 60,000 documents, among other things. That party failed to show that the contract mistakenly made applicable the wrong set of arbitration rules. Accordingly, the party seeking to compel took advantage of judicial discovery procedures not available in arbitration. Next, the court stated that that party's filing a counterclaim in the judicial action without asking for a stay of the proceedings to pursue arbitration constituted acting inconsistently with the right to arbitrate. Finally, the court ruled that the trial court erred in failing to find waiver by that party, given the prejudice to the other party (186 Cal. App. 4th 1, 19) . The portion of the decision addressing lack of waiver by attempting to settle the judicial action is discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.91, above. The portion of the decision dealing with demurrer as waiver is discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.81[3][e], above. The portion of the decision dealing with attempts to settle as waiver is discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.81[3][d], above.

Sobremonte v. Superior Court (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 980, 72 Cal. Rptr. 2d 43 , was an action by bank customers against bank/real party for wrongful setoff of deposit accounts. After the accounts were opened, under terms that allowed the bank to change the terms of the accounts, plaintiffs were allegedly notified of the arbitration provision by inserts included with their periodic account statements. The bank's answer included the affirmative defense that the matter was subject to arbitration, but the bank did not move to compel arbitration until 10 months later, which was only 6 weeks prior to trial. During that time the bank engaged in extensive discovery, filed two demurrers, one cross-complaint, and one motion to transfer the matter to municipal court, participated in five pretrial hearings and two status conferences. Plaintiffs' counsel had spent 200 hours on the matter before defendant moved to compel arbitration. Without making a specific ruling on the issue of waiver, the trial court granted the motion. Plaintiffs sought a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to reverse its order compelling arbitration.

The court of appeal granted the writ, finding that the bank had waived arbitration as a matter of law by delay, by conduct inconsistent with an intent to arbitrate, and by prejudicing plaintiffs (61 Cal. App. 4th 980, 983-984) . The court said the bank actively litigated the case and never objected, on the grounds of arbitration, to the setting of a trial date or to discovery propounded by plaintiffs. The bank did, however, object to a number of interrogatories and document requests and sought protective orders and opposed motions by plaintiffs to compel its compliance with discovery. None of those objections or oppositions mentioned arbitration. The court of appeal said it could infer that the bank took advantage of judicial discovery procedures not available in arbitration. The bank also used the judicial process to narrow the scope of the case, demurring to the emotional distress claims and seeking to have the matter transferred to municipal court. The court quoted from Davis v. Continental Airlines, Inc. (1997) 59 Cal. App. 4th 205, 215, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 79 , discussed at [b], below, that the vice involved was defendants' use of the discovery process to obtain information about plaintiff's case that they could not have gained in arbitration, and then, having gained that information, sought to change the game to arbitration, in which plaintiff would not have equivalent discovery rights and that disclosure of defenses and strategies is a prejudice in these circumstances (61 Cal. App. 4th 980, 995-997) .

The court of appeal found that plaintiffs had been further prejudiced by their inability to take advantage of the benefits of arbitration as an expedient, efficient, and cost effective method to resolve disputes. Considering the time and money plaintiffs already spent in the judicial system, any benefits they may have achieved from arbitration have been lost (61 Cal. App. 4th 980, 996) .

Davis v. Continental Airlines, Inc. (1997) 59 Cal. App. 4th 205, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 79 , is discussed at [b], below.

McConnell v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc. (1980) 105 Cal. App. 3d 946, 164 Cal. Rptr. 751 , involved a class action suit for usury brought on behalf of margin account customers of the defendant stockbrokers for a three-month period. While all class members had signed agreements with the defendant, only agreements signed after a certain date had arbitration clauses. The defendant answered and had the matter removed to federal court for litigation, but the action was remanded to the state court. On discovery, the defendant affirmed that the later form of agreement was the only one which governed. The plaintiff instituted a lengthy set of class certification hearings, in which defendant filed three separate oppositions. Plaintiff filed two amended complaints during these hearings. The trial court's dismissal of the action for a nonexistent class was appealed, and the Supreme Court returned the action for reconsideration of the class issues. During the second certification contest, the defendant for the first time petitioned to compel arbitration of all claims subject to arbitration, but the trial court ruled the right to compel had been waived, and defendant appealed.

In affirming the order denying arbitration, the court of appeal noted that defendantcited Doers v. Golden Gate Bridge etc. Dist. (1979) 23 Cal. 3d 180, 151 Cal. Rptr. 837, 588 P.2d 1261 (discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.81[3][a]) for the proposition that engaging in a lawsuit did not amount to waiver of arbitration until there was a final judgment on the merits. The court disagreed, stating that during the course of a legal action numerous matters can be litigated before there is a final judgment. A party could litigate various issues through demurrers, motions for summary judgment, motions for certification of the class, and the like, yet just before trial demand arbitration. The court concluded that partial or piecemeal litigation of issues in dispute, through pretrial procedures, may in many instances justify a finding of waiver of the right to arbitrate and would be consistent with the law spelled out in Doers (105 Cal. App. 3d 946, 951) . Reviewing the history of the litigation in the instant case, the court determined there was substantial evidence to support a finding of defendant's waiver of the right to compel arbitration (105 Cal. App. 3d 946, 952) .

[b] Prejudice by Discovery

Sobremonte v. Superior Court (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 980, 72 Cal. Rptr. 2d 43 , is discussed at [a], above.

Davis v. Continental Airlines, Inc. (1997) 59 Cal. App. 4th 205, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 79 , was an action for sexual harassment in employment brought under California Fair Employment and Housing Act (Gov. Code §§ 12900 and 12904 et seq.; FEHA) by a female employee against defendant airline and her male supervisor. Defendants claimed the dispute had to be resolved according to a company procedure specified in the employee handbook. Seven months after filing an answer in which the right to arbitrate was raised as an affirmative defense, defendants moved to compel arbitration. The trial court denied the motion, finding that the procedure in the handbook was not mandatory and that defendants waived any right to compel arbitration by unreasonably delaying their motion until after obtaining extensive discovery from plaintiff. Defendants appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed on the basis of waiver and thus did not reach the issues of whether the employee handbook set forth a binding agreement to arbitrate or whether public policy precludes arbitration of a statutory claim for sexual harassment under FEHA (59 Cal. App. 4th 205, 207, 217) . The fact that the party seeking arbitration participated in litigation is not enough; the party who seeks to establish waiver must show that some prejudice has resulted from the other party's delay in seeking arbitration (59 Cal. App. 4th 205, 212) . Before moving to compel arbitration, defendants used discovery procedures to obtain 1,600 pages of documents from plaintiff in 86 categories and took plaintiff's 2-day, 410-page videotaped deposition. Although defendants claimed much of the discovery was designed to prove the agreement to arbitrate, the court of appeal found the record amply supported the trial court's inference that defendants unreasonably delayed their motion to compel arbitration to use discovery to learn plaintiff's strategies, evidence, and witnesses and to pin plaintiff down to a particular version of the facts (59 Cal. App. 4th 205, 213) . The deposition covered typical broad-ranging issues, such as plaintiff's attitude towards vulgar remarks and how she handled them. Given its implied finding that defendants engaged in extensive discovery before moving to compel arbitration, the trial court properly found that defendants waived arbitration. Defendants contended that even if they did obtain discovery, plaintiff had not shown prejudice, and in order to establish waiver, plaintiff had to show some prejudice beyond expenses that specifically affected plaintiff's ability to arbitrate, for example faded recollection of witnesses due to delay (59 Cal. App. 4th 205, 214) . The court of appeal said there was more prejudice here than incurring of court costs and legal expenses. Defendants used the discovery process to obtain information about plaintiff's case that they could not have gained in arbitration, ad then, having gained that information, sought to change the game to arbitration, in which plaintiff would not have equivalent discovery rights. Prejudice results from the disclosure of defenses and strategies. Although defendants' participation in discovery did not compel a finding of waiver, it presented a question of fact for the trial court. The trial court could reasonably find the discovery conducted was not equivalent for both sides and would work an unfair advantage for defendants if arbitration were ordered. The facts supported the trial court's finding of waiver (59 Cal. App. 4th 205, 215) . The extent, significance, and consequences of the discovery were disputed, but reasonable inferences supported the trial court's conclusion that plaintiff suffered prejudice from defendants' delay in seeking arbitration and that defendants therefore waived their right to compel arbitration (59 Cal. App. 4th 205, 217) .

The facts and procedural background of Berman v. Health Net (2000) 80 Cal. App. 4th 1359, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 295 , and the portion of the opinion addressing factors to be considered in determining waiver, are discussed at § 20A.80[3][b]. The court noted that Health Net's discovery included demands for production of documents in 103 categories, several sets of special interrogatories, form interrogatories, notices of deposition (subsequently postponed) and subpoenas for medical records, none of which it would have been able to obtain in an arbitration proceeding. The court agreed with Davis v. Continental Airlines, Inc. (1997) 59 Cal. App. 4th 205, 215, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 79 , discussed above, that the vice was in use of discovery processes to gain information which defendants could not have gained in arbitration, and did not require any further specific showing of how that information disadvantaged the plaintiffs; and said that trial court could reasonably infer the discovery revealed information which could not have been gained in arbitration, to the Bermans' prejudice (80 Cal. App. 4th 1359, 1366) . The test for prejudice, the court continued, is not whether the discovery reveals secret strategies or confidential information, but whether one party used the discovery processes of the court to gain information about the other party's case which it could not have gained in arbitration. Even discovery responses totally devoid of substantive content can reveal volumes about the strength and weakness of a party's case (80 Cal. App. 4th 1359, 1367) . The important fact is that discovery forced the Bermans to reveal their hand (80 Cal. App. 4th 1359, 1367-1368) . Health Net contended that Bermans could not prove "specific prejudice" because they also had engaged in discovery; but the court said it could not conclude that prejudice was overcome simply because plaintiff also engaged in discovery (80 Cal. App. 4th 1359, 1369-1370) .

The arbitration provisions involved in Guess?, Inc. v. Superior Court (2000) 79Cal. App. 4th 553, 94 Cal. Rptr. 2d 201 , were in four licensing agreements between petitioner as licensor and PLB as licensee. Petitioner terminated the licensing agreements for nonpayment of royalties and commenced arbitration to recover the royalties owing. While that dispute was being arbitrated, in June, 1999, petitioner sued real party, an investment banker retained by PLB to aid it in a financial turnaround, alleging intentional interference with contractual relations and prospective economic advantage, unfair competition, and related causes of action, not including breach of the licensing agreements. Real party answered the complaint in July, 1999, with a general denial and eight affirmative defenses, none of which mentioned arbitration. Later in July, 1999, petitioner commenced discovery, serving document demands and interrogatories and scheduling more than 10 third-party depositions. Although real party objected to discovery on a variety of grounds, the right to arbitration was not one of them. In August, 1999, real party filed a motion to stay the lawsuit pending the resolution of the Guess/PLB arbitration, but did not suggest that the lawsuit ought to be arbitrated. Real party conceded that it was not a party to the Guess/PLB arbitration or to the license agreements, but claimed that the lawsuit arose from the same transactions at issue in the arbitration and suggested there was a possibility that the decision in the Guess/PLB arbitration might have some sort of collateral estoppel effect in the lawsuit. The motion was denied. Real party participated in at least four third-party depositions that were conducted during September, 1999. On October 1, 1999, real party moved to compel arbitration in this case, claiming it had negotiated with Guess as PLB's "agent" and that it was therefore entitled to the benefit of the arbitration provisions in the license agreements. Guess opposed the option, pointing out that it had sued real party for real party's own wrongs, not on a theory of derivative liability, and also contending that real party had waived whatever right it had to arbitrate by its delay in raising the point. The trial courted order arbitration. Guess filed a petition for a writ of mandate asking the court of appeal to compel the trial court to vacate that order.

The court of appeal issued the writ without determining whether real party could have compelled arbitration if it sought to do so in a timely manner, but finding that real party had waived any right it might have had to arbitrate (79 Cal. App. 4th 553, 557, 559) . The portion of the opinion discussing waiver generally is set forth at § 20A.80[3][a]. In this case, the court of appeal found four factors indicating waiver. First, real party knew about the arbitration provisions in the license agreements since before the lawsuit was filed and served and knew that Guess and PLB were arbitrating pursuant to those provisions. In fact, the same lawyers representing real party in this action represent PLB in the arbitration. Real party never offered any explanation for its decision to defer for three months its demand for arbitration. Second, real party never asserted the right to arbitrate as an affirmative defense (79 Cal. App. 4th 553, 557) . At a minimum, the failure to plead arbitration as an affirmative defense is an act inconsistent with the later assertion of a right to arbitrate. Third, real party's other conduct in the lawsuit, specifically moving for the stay and participating in discovery, was wholly inconsistent with a desire to arbitrate. Its participation in discovery took full advantage of the opportunity to test the validity of Guess's claims, both legally and factually, primarily at Guess's expense. Fourth, real party's conduct caused prejudice to Guess in the form of the substantial expense of pretrial discovery and motions that would have been avoided if real party has timely asserted a right to arbitrate and in the form of its disclosure, during the discovery process, of at least some of its trial tactics, which would not have been disclosed in the arbitral arena (79 Cal. App. 4th 553, 558) . Without any evidence to support the trial court's refusal to find waiver, the court of appeal found that the motion to compel arbitration should have been denied and issued the writ so ordering (79 Cal. App. 4th 553, 559) .

[c] Delay Until After Answer

Kaneko Ford Design v. Citipark, Inc. (1988) 202 Cal. App. 3d 1220, 249 Cal. Rptr. 544 , was an action by an interior design firm against its client and the owner of the building in which the suite it designed was located. The contract provided for arbitration of any dispute arising out of the contract that the parties could not resolve within 10 days. On August 25, 1986, plaintiff filed a complaint and an ex parte application for stay of the action pending arbitration. Because plaintiff and Citipark were negotiating directly to settle the matter, neither the complaint nor the application was served at that time. The application for stay was denied. Plaintiff served the complaint, but not the application for stay on both defendants in October, 1986. Defendants answered on December 31, 1986. On February 5, 1987, plaintiff filed a motion for stay and request to compel arbitration. Both were denied: the stay was denied because of unreasonable delay in seeking arbitration and resulting prejudice to defendants; arbitration was denied because the owner was not a party to the arbitration agreement and arbitration as to only one defendant might lead to inconsistent results. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, finding that plaintiff had unreasonably delayed in seeking arbitration and the procedures and steps it followed were inconsistent with an intent to arbitrate. The cumulative effect of plaintiff's procedures was prejudicial to Citipark (202 Cal. App. 3d 1220, 1229) . Even though plaintiff knew after one month that its ex parte application for stay was denied, it did nothing further to obtain the stay or compel arbitration until five and one-half months after filing the complaint. During the negotiations, it failed to inform Citipark of its intent to seek arbitration. By means of Citipark's answer to the complaint, plaintiff obtained information as to Citipark's legal strategies (202 Cal.

App. 3d 1220, 1228) . The court said that prejudice had accrued to Citipark from the delay in the forms of time and effort spent, legal expenses and costs incurred, and in the disclosure of its defenses and strategies to plaintiff (202 Cal. App. 3d 1220, 1229) .

Guess?, Inc. v. Superior Court (2000) 79 Cal. App. 4th 553, 94 Cal. Rptr. 2d 201 , is discussed at [b], above.

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Waiver by Pretrial Procedures or Prejudicial Discovery

McMillin Development, Inc. Home Buyers Warranty (1998) 68 Cal. App. 4th 896, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 611 , was a suit by a builder/insured against its insurer for failure of the insurer to defend a claim (the Spector claim) under a warranty program and builderagreement, which contained an arbitration clause. Plaintiff's other insurers defended the Spector claim, which went to trial and resulted in a defense verdict. Thereafter, plaintiff sued defendant (HBW) for breach of contract, breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, declaratory relief, fraud and negligent misrepresentation, eventually adding causes of action for reformation and rescission. Both parties moved for summary judgment, and it was granted as to the contract claims in favor of HBW. The fraud cause of action was tried to a jury, which found HBW had falsely promised to defend the Spector claim, but also found plaintiff had not suffered any damage by HBW's failure to defend. After a court trial on the remaining causes of action, plaintiff moved for a new trial as to some limited issues. The court ordered a complete new trial. Plaintiff appealed, contending the new trial should have been granted only as to the question of damages. The court of appeal found no abuse of discretion and remanded for retrial of all issues. While that appeal was pending, plaintiff filed a second suit based on HBW's failure to defend another claim (the Mumby claim). HBW removed that case to federal court and obtained an order compelling arbitration of that dispute. On remand of the first suit for retrial, HBW moved to compel arbitration. Plaintiff contended HBW had waived the right to arbitrate, and the trial court agreed. HBW appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, stating that under well-established legal principles parties may participate in judicial proceedings without losing the right to arbitrate only so long as their participation does not substantially prejudice the rights of their opponents (68 Cal. App. 4th 896, 909) . In discussing prejudice, the court said that prejudice can be established when discovery and motions have given the party seeking to arbitrate an opportunity to test both the legal validity and the factual persuasiveness of its opponent's position, usually at considerable expense to that opponent and while depriving that opponent of the efficiencies that would have been available to it by way of arbitration (68 Cal. App. 4th 896, 910) .

Weisman v. Johnson (1982) 133 Cal. App. 3d 289, 183 Cal. Rptr. 792 , was an action for accounting, breach of contract, and common counts, arising from three separate loan transactions, the first of which was evidenced by an agreement with an arbitration provision. Plaintiff commenced that action. Defendant resisted. While refusing to stipulate to personal jurisdiction or arbitration in Ontario, Canada, defendant, brought motions to quash service, first as to himself and then as to the company that was his alter ego, and which was added as a defendant by an amended complaint. One month after having lost the last of those motions, defendant sought to compel arbitration. The motion was denied, based on waiver and bad faith, in part due to a letter placed in evidence which the court characterized as showing that the petition to compel arbitration was not brought in good faith, but rather to do everything in defendant's power to avoid litigation, as well as arbitration. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court discussed defendant's ownership of a home in Los Angeles as well as the fact that he had filed a petition for dissolution of marriage at about the time the lawsuit was commenced, alleging himself to be a resident of Los Angeles for at least three months. All this the court said was evidence of an attempt to delay a hearing on the merits and of the fact that defendant would not voluntarily submit to arbitration even though it was based on his own demand (133 Cal. App. 3d 289, 293-295) . Defendant also contended that a finding of prejudice was required before he could be held to have waived his right to arbitration. The court of appeal said sufficient prejudice to dismiss a petition to arbitrate is established when a party incurs monetary expense in furtherance of litigation. Such prejudice because of defendant's delaying tactics, was established by plaintiff's opposition to the petition to compel arbitration. The court concluded that when prejudice has been demonstrated to the court, a specific finding of prejudice is not necessary (133 Cal. App. 3d 289, 296) .

Lounge-A-Round v. GCM Mills, Inc. (1980) 109 Cal. App. 3d 190, 166 Cal. Rptr. 920 , involved a suit for breach of contract and breach of warranty between a buyer (plaintiff) and seller (defendant) of fabric. The suit was filed in November, 1977, in Los Angeles. Defendant petitioned for arbitration in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. In March, 1978, that petition was dismissed with prejudice pursuant to stipulation of the parties and that court's own deliberations. Defendant filed a cross-complaint in the California action in March, 1978, and discovery was undertaken by both parties. In December, 1978, defendant sought to compel arbitration in California. The petition was denied on the grounds of waiver and res judicata, and defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. While the court of appeal found that the trial court erred in applying California law on the issue of waiver, the error was not reversible because no prejudice resulted (109 Cal. App. 3d 190, 201-202) . The court cited a New York case for the proposition that there comes a time in litigation between parties who have agreed to arbitrate when it becomes unfair to permit one side to resort to arbitration over the protest of the other, and that time is when the defendant files an answer on the merits (109 Cal. App. 3d 190, 200) . Here, defendant indicated to plaintiff that it would not arbitrate, but would litigate the matter. Defendant filed a cross complaint on a fourth contract that was not covered by the complaint; it answered without asserting any affirmative defenses based on arbitration; and nine months later, it sought to compel arbitration. In the meantime, plaintiff had incurred monetary expense in furtherance of the litigation (109 Cal. App. 3d 190, 201) . The court of appeal concluded that the prejudice sustained by plaintiff was sufficient to support the conclusion that defendant waived whatever rights to arbitration it may have had (109 Cal. App. 3d 190, 202) .

[b] Prejudice by Discovery

See McMillin Development, Inc. Home Buyers Warranty (1998) 68 Cal. App. 4th 896, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 611 , discussed at [a], above.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20A ARBITRATION: RESISTING
PART II. FORMS
D. Defenses to Arbitration

2-20A California Points & Authorities § 20A.84

§ 20A.84 Waiver by Bad Faith Use of Litigation Machinery

[1] FORM

RESPONDENT CANNOT BE COMPELLED TO ARBITRATE THE CONTROVERSY PETITIONER SEEKS TO ARBITRATE BECAUSE PETITIONER WAIVED THE RIGHT TO COMPEL ARBITRATION BY _____ [e.g., INITIATING LITIGATION OF THIS MATTER IN BAD FAITH] AND TO PREJUDICE RESONDENT(S).

A. Waiver by Engaging in Misleading Settlement Tactics. Although settlement efforts do not usually waive the right to arbitrate if the settlement is not finalized, when a party attempts to obtain settlement by misleading the court and _____ [other parties or class members] about the benefits of the proposed settlement and the other party or parties were prejudiced by those tactics, the party who engaged in the misleading tactics has forfeited its right to arbitrate. This result is based in part on the principle that one cannot profit from his or her own misconduct (Aviation Data, Inc. v. American Express Travel Related Services Company, Inc. (2007) 152 Cal. App. 4th 1522, 1539-1542, 62 Cal. Rptr. 3d 396).

[OR]

A. Waiver by Filing Litigation in Bad Faith to Prejudice Defendant. The mere filing of a lawsuit, if done in bad faith, can constitute a waiver of the right to arbitration if defendant was prejudiced by the plaintiff's conduct (Christensen v. Dewor Developments (1983) 33 Cal. 3d 778, 783-784, 191 Cal. Rptr. 8, 661 P.2d 1088).

[OR]

A. Waiver by Pretrial Litigation in Bad Faith. The bad faith or willful misconduct of a party may constitute a waiver and thus justify a refusal to compel arbitration (Adolph v. Coastal Auto Sales, Inc. (2010) 184 Cal. App. 4th 1443, 1452, 110 Cal. Rptr. 3d 104).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used to resist arbitration when the petitioner has waived the right to compel arbitration by initiating litigation of the matter in bad faith and to prejudice defendant/respondent.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in opposition to one seeking to compel arbitration [see § 20A.10] and with the general waiver authorities in § 20A.80. If there may be other grounds of waiver, counsel should also use one or more of the authorities from §§ 20A.81-20A.83, 20A.85-20A.86. Counsel may wish to include authority from Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.30 regarding the applicability of general state law contract principles.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, the argument should address the commencement of the litigation, what it involved, how it prejudiced respondent, and why it appears to have been commenced in bad faith.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a form of response to a petition to compel arbitration that may be supported by this memorandum, as well as a procedural checklist, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 32, Contractual Arbitration: Agreements and Compelling Arbitration (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For memoranda to combine with this form, regarding other matters that the opposition may need to address, see §§ 20A.10-20A.12, 20A.20 et seq., 20A.30 et seq., 20A.40 et seq., and 20A.87 et seq.

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

For forms addressing general contract principles, see Ch. 50, Contracts .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Waiver by Engaging in Misleading Settlement Tactics

Aviation Data, Inc. v. American Express Travel Related Services Company, Inc. (2007) 152 Cal. App. 4th 1522, 62 Cal. Rptr. 3d 396 , was a class action alleging violations of Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 17200, 17500 involving schemes to charge card holders for flight and baggage insurance on flights they did not take. Defendant's computer personnel lied during depositions, falsely claiming that defendant's computer programs could not be reprogrammed to delete charges for cancelled flights. In fact, the programs had already been modified to do so. For more than a year the parties engaged in settlement preparations. The proposed settlement would not provide any monetary recovery to plaintiffs, but only make the changes to the computer program to automatically delete the charges relating to cancelled flights. Then, in January, 2004, it was discovered that the program changes had in fact been in effect since November, 2002, and all the proposed settlement materials and court papers relating to it were inaccurate. After the settlement was terminated, the court certified a class. Defendant moved to compel arbitration and to exclude from the class all cardholders who were subject to arbitration agreements. The court denied that motion on the ground that defendant waived its right to arbitration by invoking the judicial forum to pursue settlement, noting that while one does not usually waive the right to arbitration by invoking the judicial forum to pursue settlement, defendant's misrepresentations reprogramming gave rise to unique considerations. Allowing defendant to appearbefore the Court, seek and obtain Court approval for a class settlement, mislead the Court, send out a misleading class notice, and then, when the settlement fails, assert a contractual right to arbitration that would take the claims out of the judicial system and require each cardholder to arbitrate his or her claims individually would allow defendant to profit from its wrong. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed (152 Cal. App. 4th 1522, 1526, 1543) . The agreement provided that it was governed by the Federal Arbitration Act. The court first addressed whether the issue of waiver was governed by state or federal law and concluded that under either standard, the court of appeal was to defer to the trial court's factual findings but to independently review issues of law (152 Cal. App. 4th 1522, 1536) . There was no discussion of whether the court or the arbitrator should determine if there had been a waiver. The court began its discussion of waiver by noting that the term "waiver" describes the consequences of a party's participation in litigation that results in the loss of the right to arbitrate while more generally it refers to the intentional relinquishment of a right. The court used the terms waiver, or loss or abandonment of the right to arbitrate interchangeably (152 Cal. App. 4th 1522, 1537 n.10).

To waive arbitration rights, a party must substantially invoke the litigation machinery in a way that prejudices the other party. Any ambiguity as to the scope of the waiver must be resolved in favor of arbitration. Also relevant are the amount of litigation, the time elapsed from the commencement of litigation to the request for arbitration, and the proximity of a trial date when arbitration is sought, whether the party filing the lawsuit intended to elect a judicial forum rather than the arbitral tribunal, the degree to which the party seeking to compel arbitration has contested the merits of its opponent's claims, whether that party has informed its adversary of the intention to seek arbitration even if it has not yet filed a motion to stay court proceedings, and the extent to which both parties have engaged in discovery (152 Cal. App. 4th 1522, 1537-1538) . Under both federal and California law, bad faith or willful misconduct may also constitute waiver (152 Cal. App. 4th 1522, 1538) . Defendant itself characterized this case as involving more than two years of intense litigation (152 Cal. App. 4th 1522, 1540) .

Under federal law, settlement efforts, even those involving class actions in which court involvement is necessary, are not interpreted as waiving the right to arbitrate if the settlement is not finalized (152 Cal. App. 4th 1522, 1539) . The trial court found that defendant's delay in pursuing arbitration affected, misled, or prejudiced plaintiff, which had gone from a litigation track in New York to an objector track in California to a litigation track in California and would be required to move again to an arbitration track (152 Cal. App. 4th 1522, 1540) . The trial court also found prejudice to the absent class members by defendant's misleading efforts to get them to use the judicial process to resolve thousands of potential individual claims in a class settlement, in particular, by the court's order preliminarily approving the settlement which prohibited class members from initiating claims in arbitration or in any other court. It found that the legal prejudice was not ameliorated because the absent class members could have telephoned defendant, which might have agreed to return the overcharges that were the subject matter of the litigation. The court of appeal found no reason to question those findings (152 Cal. App. 4th 1522, 1541) . When a party attempts to obtain settlement by misleading the court and proposed class members about the benefits of the proposed settlement and the other party or parties were prejudiced by those tactics, then, based in part on the principle that one cannot profit from his or her own misconduct, the party who engaged in the misleading tactics has forfeited its right to arbitrate (152 Cal. App. 4th 1522, 1542) .

[b] Waiver by Filing Litigation in Bad Faith to Prejudice Defendant

Christensen v. Dewor Developments (1983) 33 Cal. 3d 778, 191 Cal. Rptr. 8, 661 P.2d 1088 , involved a party to an arbitration agreement who filed a comprehensive complaint that acknowledged the arbitrability of the dispute. The rationale for the filing of the complaint was plaintiff's desire to discover the legal theories that defendant would rely on in the arbitration. After the first complaint was successfully demurred to, and while a demurrer to the amended complaint was awaiting hearing, plaintiff dismissed the complaint and filed a petition to compel arbitration. The trial court denied the petition, finding that plaintiff had acted in bad faith in filing the complaint, to the prejudice of defendant, and had thereby waived the right to arbitrate under the agreement.

The Supreme Court affirmed. The trial court found that plaintiff had acted in bad faith in filing the complaint, to the prejudice of defendant, and had thereby waived the right to arbitrate under the agreement. In affirming the denial, the Supreme Court set out factors to be considered in determining whether a waiver has been shown, including whether the party seeking arbitration (1) has previously taken steps inconsistent with an intent to invoke arbitration, (2) has unreasonably delayed in seeking arbitration, or (3) has acted in bad faith or with willful misconduct. The Court noted that, while waiver usually requires judicial litigation of the merits of arbitrable issues, waiver can occur before a judgment on the merits if prejudice can be demonstrated [citing Doers v. Golden Gate Bridge etc. Dist. (1979) 23 Cal. 3d 180, 188, 188 n.3, 151 Cal. Rptr. 837, 588 P.2d 1261 (discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.81[3][a])] (33 Cal. 3d 778, 782) .

Turning to the facts of the case, the Court found that plaintiff had acted in bad faith in instituting the lawsuit. The Court relied on plaintiff's awareness of the arbitration provision and its applicability to the dispute to conclude that plaintiff's "procedural gamesmanship" in bringing the action waived the right to arbitration (33 Cal. 3d 778, 783-784) . The Court distinguished the Doers case by pointing out that in that case, plaintiff had not been a direct party to the arbitration agreement and had therefore not violated any contractual obligation, while in the case before it, the lawsuit was brought in knowing disregard of the arbitration proceeding (33 Cal. 3d 778, 783) . The Court also upheld the finding that defendant had been prejudiced by the filing of the lawsuit because of the costs and attorney's fees incurred, the delay that the pretrial proceedings entailed, and the resulting difficulty in obtaining testimony of witnesses and records (33 Cal. 3d 778, 784) . The finding of prejudice to defendant permitted a finding of waiver without judicial litigation of the arbitrable dispute's merits (33 Cal. 3d 778, 782) .

[c] Waiver by Pretrial Litigation in Bad Faith

The court of appeal in Adolph v. Coastal Auto Sales, Inc. (2010) 184 Cal. App. 4th 1443, 110 Cal. Rptr. 3d 104 affirmed the trial court's finding of waiver. Defendant repeatedly used the trial court proceedings for its own purposes by challenging the pleadings with demurrers, while steadfastly remaining uncooperative with the plaintiff's attempts to take depositions. All the while, defendant did not breathe a word about the existence of an arbitration agreement, or a desire to pursue arbitration. Defendant, in fact, withheld production of the arbitration agreement until after the demurrer hearing on the day the demurrer was overruled. The court noted that bad faith is a basis for finding waiver, and quoted the trial court's inference, "To believe that defendant was not aware of its late-asserted right to arbitrate until plaintiff filed its SAC strains our imagination to the breaking point." Although the trial court made no express finding of bad faith, the Court of Appeals found sufficient evidence for one (184 Cal. App. 4th 1443, 1452).

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Waiver by Filing Litigation in Bad Faith to Prejudice Defendant

Weisman v. Johnson (1982) 133 Cal. App. 3d 289, 293-296, 183 Cal. Rptr. 792 , discussed at § 20A.83[4][a], involves a finding that defendant participated in litigation and petitioned for arbitration in bad faith and for only purposes of delay.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20A ARBITRATION: RESISTING
PART II. FORMS
D. Defenses to Arbitration

2-20A California Points & Authorities § 20A.85

§ 20A.85 Medical Insurer's Bad Faith Failure to Inform Insured of Right to Arbitrate

[1] FORM

RESPONDENT CANNOT BE COMPELLED TO ARBITRATE THIS CONTROVERSY BECAUSE PETITIONER WAIVED THE RIGHT TO COMPEL ARBITRATION BY FAILING, IN BAD FAITH, TO ADVISE RESPONDENT OF HIS/HER RIGHT TO ARBITRATE.

A. Medical Insurer's Bad Faith Failure to Inform Insured of Right to Arbitrate. A medical insurer forfeits its right to compel arbitration if, given the totality of the circumstances, its failure to inform its insured adequately of the availability of, or procedure for arbitration, is designed to mislead the insured and amounts to a breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing (Davis v. Blue Cross of Northern California (1979) 25 Cal. 3d 418, 424, 431, 158 Cal. Rptr. 828, 600 P.2d 1060 ; Chase v. Blue Cross of California (1996) 42 Cal. App. 4th 1142, 1157-1158, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 178).

[Optional] B. Federal Arbitration Act Not Offended by Application of Doctrine of Bad Faith. The covenant of good faith and fair dealing is a general contract principle. Therefore, application of that principle to deny arbitration to an insurer that has acted in bad faith to mislead its insured does not offend the federal law of substantive arbitrability and is not preempted by the Federal Arbitration Act (see 9 U.S.C. § 2; Chase v. Blue Cross of California (1996) 42 Cal. App. 4th 1142, 1160-1162, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 178).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used to resist arbitration when the petitioner is an insurer and has waived, or forfeited, the right to compel arbitration by failing to inform insured respondent of his or her right to arbitration, if, given the totality of the circumstances, that failure amounted to breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing. For insurer's actions to amount to bad faith, there must be evidence of the insurer's intent to mislead the policyholder [Chase v. Blue Cross of California (1996) 42 Cal. App. 4th 1142, 1148, 1157, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 178] .

Optional Paragraph B is to establish that the federal law of substantive arbitrability is not offended by and does not preempt application of the doctrine of bad faith.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in opposition to one seeking to compel arbitration [see § 20A.10] and with the general waiver authorities in § 20A.80. If there may be other grounds of waiver, counsel should also use one or more of the authorities from §§ 20A.81-20A.84, 20A.86. Counsel may wish to include authority from Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.30 regarding the applicability of general state law contract principles.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, the argument should address the placement of the arbitration provision in the policy and any other materials furnished by the insurer to the insured and all other circumstances establishing bad faith.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a form of response to a petition to compel arbitration that may be supported by this memorandum, as well as a procedural checklist, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 32, Contractual Arbitration: Agreements and Compelling Arbitration (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For memoranda to combine with this form, regarding other matters that the opposition may need to address, see §§ 20A.10 -20A.12, 20A.20 et. seq., 20A.30 et. seq., 20A.40 et. seq., 20A.60 et. seq., and 20A.87 et. seq.

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

For forms addressing general contract principles, see Ch. 50, Contracts .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Medical Insurer's Bad Faith Failure to Inform Insured of Right to Arbitrate

In Davis v. Blue Cross of Northern California (1979) 25 Cal. 3d 418, 158 Cal. Rptr. 828, 600 P.2d 1060 , two class actions had been filed against defendant health insurer by a number of individuals insured under its hospitalization policies. The trial court denied defendant's petition to compel arbitration because defendant had failed to apprise its insureds at the time it rejected their claims of the availability of arbitration or the procedure for initiating it. Defendant appealed the order.

Affirming the lower court ruling, the Supreme Court found that the trial court had properly concluded that defendant had breached its duty of good faith and fair dealing by failing to advise its insureds of the availability of, and of the procedure for initiating, arbitration; therefore, the defendant waived or forfeited any right to subsequently compel its insureds to resort to arbitration (25 Cal. 3d 418, 424, 431) . The Court noted that defendant had given obscure placement to its information on arbitration to its insureds, and had worded the information ambiguously. Despite knowing that the insureds frequently would be unaware of the right to, or the procedure for, arbitration, it took no steps to apprise them of the procedure. Its routine format in a letter rejecting a claim made no mention of the availability of or procedure for arbitration (25 Cal. 3d 418, 426) . Because of the insurer's deliberate action of not so informing its insureds, it had transformed the arbitration clause into a unilateral provision, available only to itself but not subserving the purposes of arbitration policy (25 Cal. 3d 418, 430) .

Chase v. Blue Cross of California (1996) 42 Cal. App. 4th 1142, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 178 , involved claims for plaintiff's son's treatment for leukemia, especially a bone marrow transplant for which defendant refused to pay, on the ground that it was excluded as an investigative procedure. During more than two years of the boy's illness, plaintiff received many letters denying coverage, at least 10 of which referred to the arbitration provision in the policy, and many explanation of benefit forms, which explained the arbitration procedure on their reverse sides. The letter denying coverage for the bone marrow transplant, however, did not mention arbitration. Plaintiff wrote requesting reconsideration of that denial. When she had heard nothing from defendant for six months, she contacted the State Department of Insurance. Defendant again denied the claim. Finally, plaintiff commenced an action for damages, and defendant petitioned to compel arbitration. The petition was denied because, even thought the trial court found the arbitration clause was "clear, plain, conspicuous, and unambiguous," defendant had intentionally waived and relinquished its right to compel arbitration because communications between it and Chase did not mention the arbitration provision. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed and remanding, finding that the trial court erred in basing its decision only on isolated facts of the defendant's contact with plaintiff, because a finding of waiver can only be reached after consideration of all relevant circumstances and requires a determination of bad faith conduct by the insurer (42 Cal. App. 4th 1142, 1148) . The court of appeal first discussed the fact that this is not actually waiver, in the sense of an intentional relinquishment of a known right, but a forfeiture, resulting from a failure to perform an obligation under the contract (42 Cal. App. 4th 1142, 1148-1151) . The court stated that the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, in the context of insurance contracts, requires the insurer to give at least as much consideration to the welfare of its insured as it gives to its own interests. Part of this duty is to inform the insured of the insurer's rights and obligations under the contract (42 Cal. App. 4th 1142, 1152) . However, the court of appeal said this obligation does not go as far as the statement of dictum in the plurality opinion in Sarchett v. Blue Shield of California (1987) 43 Cal. 3d 1, 15, 233 Cal. Rptr. 76, 729 P.2d 267 , (discussed at [4][a], below) that an insurer must take affirmative steps to inform an insured of his or her rights when the insured disputes a denial of coverage. The insurer has no ongoing duty to keep the insured informed of his or her rights once those rights have been clearly set forth in the policy and no duty to inform the insured of the arbitration provision in every communication (42 Cal. App. 4th 1142, 1155, 1158) . The court distinguished this situation from the one in Davis v. Blue Cross of Northern California (1979) 25 Cal. 3d 418, 424, 158 Cal. Rptr. 828, 600 P.2d 1060 , (discussed above) because here the arbitration provision was clearly and conspicuously set forth, and there was no finding, as there was in Davis, that the insurer deliberately pursued a course of conduct which failed to apprise its insureds of the availability of arbitration (42 Cal. App. 4th 1142, 1156) . The court of appeal understood Davis and Sarchett together to require conduct designed to mislead policyholders. Such a requirement balances the enhanced duty of the insurer against the strong public policy in favor of arbitration. Thus, the court's focus when evaluating an allegation of forfeiture should be on the subjective intent of the insurer. This focus will distinguish the forfeiture from estoppel: forfeiture requires an intent to mislead and is satisfied whether or not the insured is in fact misled. Even if the insured is aware of the right to arbitrate, bad faith tactics designed to mislead merit the sanction of forfeiture. Forfeiture must be established by clear and convincing evidence (42 Cal. App. 4th 1142, 1157) . The court concluded that even though it was reversing and remanding because of the lower court's misinterpretation of the governing legal principle, it could not say that forfeiture did not lie here (42 Cal. App. 4th 1142, 1158) .

[b] Federal Arbitration Act Not Offended by Application of Doctrine of Bad Faith

The facts and procedural background of Chase v. Blue Cross of California (1996) 42 Cal. App. 4th 1142, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 178 , and the portion of the opinion addressing the conduct which warrants insurer's forfeiting the right to arbitrate are discussed at [a], above. Defendant also contended that the rulings in Sarchett v. Blue Shield of California (1987) 43 Cal. 3d 1, 15, 233 Cal. Rptr. 76, 729 P.2d 267 , (discussed at [4][a], below) and Davis v. Blue Cross of Northern California (1979) 25 Cal. 3d 418, 424, 158 Cal. Rptr. 828, 600 P.2d 1060 , (discussed at [a], above) were preempted by the Federal Arbitration Act (9 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.; FAA) under Allied-Bruce Terminix Companies, Inc. v. Dobson (1995) 513 U.S. 265, 281, 115 S. Ct. 834, 130 L. Ed. 2d 753 , (discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.20[3][b] and [d]). The court of appeal disagreed. The court noted that the covenant of good faith and fair dealingis implied in every contract in California (42 Cal. App. 4th 1142, 1159) . The broad purposes of the FAA to countermand judicial reluctance to enforce privately contracted arbitration agreements is not violated merely because general contract law principles preclude enforcement of an arbitration agreement. Federal courts too have held arbitration "waived" by a party who substantially invokes the judicial process to the detriment of the other party. But arbitration agreements are not beyond the reach of ordinary contract principles (42 Cal. App. 4th 1142, 1160) . The FAA prevents states from impeding private parties who have agreed to arbitrate or wish to do so, except to the extent the state would intervene ordinarily on general contract grounds. Here, the court said, it was not concerned with a state law designed to frustrate entry into an arbitration agreement or to invalidate the arbitration agreement per se (42 Cal. App. 4th 1142, 1161) . This ruling applies only when an insured can demonstrate bad faith by the insurer designed to mislead the insured into not exercising the right to arbitrate for which they had contracted (42 Cal. App. 4th 1142, 1161-1162) . Additionally, even if the trial court does declare a forfeiture, it is not of the arbitration clause in toto, but only with respect to a specific claim (42 Cal. App. 4th 1142, 1162) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Medical Insurer's Bad Faith Failure to Inform Insured of Right to Arbitrate

Sarchett v. Blue Shield of California (1987) 43 Cal. 3d 1, 233 Cal. Rptr. 76, 729 P.2d 267 , arose from a dispute over defendant's refusal to pay $1,203.05 of hospitalization charges incurred for diagnostic purposes. After six months of correspondence and repeated protests, Blue Shield first mentioned the possibility of peer review, not to plaintiff, but to the hospital's utilization review committee. There was arbitration, which resulted in an award for plaintiff, but that was vacated by the superior court. Plaintiff then filed an action for breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing. That resulted in a directed verdict for plaintiff of hospital costs, $20,000 in compensatory damages, and $80,000 in punitive damages. Blue Shield appealed that award.

The Supreme Court reversed and remanded, finding the trial court had erroneously taken from the jury's consideration the issue of whether plaintiff's hospitalization was reasonably intended for the treatment of illness or injury (as required by the policy). The Supreme Court did not find any error in the trial court's directing a verdict that defendant's failure to advise plaintiff of his right to peer review and arbitration breached the duty of good faith and fair dealing, and affirmed the trial court's ruling on that issue. Rather, the Court was uncertain whether plaintiff sustained damages independently attributable to that breach (43 Cal. 3d 1, 16-17) . The arbitration clause in the policy was unambiguous on the question of who decides what is "medically necessary." In the event of a dispute the decision is made by a impartial review committee, subject to further review by arbitration (43 Cal. 3d 1, 10) . The Court acknowledged the dissent's point that it appears inconsistent to hold that an arbitration clause is clear and conspicuous, and therefore binding on the insured, but that the insurer was in bad faith because it failed to call the clause to the subscriber's attention. However, the majority found that this apparent inconsistency disappears when reviewed in context. Once it becomes clear to the insurer that its insured disputes its denial of coverage, the duty of good faith does not permit the insurer passively to assume that its insured is aware of his or her rights under the policy. The insurer must instead take affirmative steps to make sure that the insured is informed of his or her remedial rights, which defendant in this case, failed to do at the appropriate time. Further, defendant had reason to know that plaintiff was uninformed about his rights because he repeatedly protested the denial without demanding review by an impartial panel of physicians. Defendant nevertheless denied the claims several times with out mentioning plaintiff's right to review--a course of conduct that the Court concluded appeared designed to mislead subscribers into forfeiting their contractual rights to impartial review and arbitration of disputed claims (43 Cal. 3d 1, 15) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20A ARBITRATION: RESISTING
PART II. FORMS
D. Defenses to Arbitration

2-20A California Points & Authorities § 20A.86

§ 20A.86 Waiver by Failure to Proceed to Arbitrate in Manner Provided by Contract

[1] FORM

RESPONDENT CANNOT BE COMPELLED TO ARBITRATE THIS CONTROVERSY BECAUSE PETITIONER WAIVED THE RIGHT TO COMPEL ARBITRATION BY FAILING[, IN BAD FAITH], TO PROCEED WITH ARBITRATION IN THE MANNER PROVIDED BY THE CONTRACT IN THAT HE/SHE/IT _____ [describe breach of arbitration provision, i.e., HAS FAILED TO NOMINATE AN ARBITRATOR WITHIN THE TIME REQUIRED].

A. Waiver by Failure to Proceed to Arbitrate in Manner Provided by Contract. The failure to proceed to arbitrate according to a contractual arbitration provision or to otherwise act in a manner which is clearly inconsistent with an intent to arbitrate may constitute a waiver of the right to arbitrate (Engalla v. Permanente Medical Group, Inc. (1997) 15 Cal. 4th 951, 984, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 843, 938 P.2d 903 ; National Farm Workers Service Center, Inc. v. Caratan (1983) 146 Cal. App. 3d 796, 803-804, 194 Cal. Rptr. 617).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used to resist arbitration when the petitioner has waived the right to compel arbitration by failing to proceed with arbitration in the manner provided by the parties' agreement.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in opposition to one seeking to compel arbitration [see § 20A.10] and with the general waiver authorities in § 20A.80. If there may be other grounds of waiver, counsel should also use one or more of the authorities from §§ 20A.81-20A.85. Counsel may wish to include authority from Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.30 regarding the applicability of general state law contract principles.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his orher case. For example, the argument set forth the portion of the contract that was violated and describe the manner in which petitioner failed to comply with the procedure specified in the contract.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a form of response to a petition to compel arbitration that may be supported by this memorandum, as well as a procedural checklist, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 32, Contractual Arbitration: Agreements and Compelling Arbitration (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For memoranda to combine with this form, regarding other matters that the opposition may need to address, see §§ 20A.10-20A.12, 20A.20 et seq., 20A.30 et seq., 20A.40 et seq., and 20A.87 et seq.

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

For forms addressing general contract principles, see Ch. 50, Contracts .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Waiver by Failure to Proceed to Arbitrate in Manner Provided by Contract

The facts and procedural background of Engalla v. Permanente Medical Group, Inc. (1997) 15 Cal. 4th 951, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 843, 938 P.2d 903 , are discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.10[3][a]. The portion of the opinion addressing the waiver claim in general terms is discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.80[3][b]. The claim of waiver involved that fact that despite the provision in the arbitration clause that arbitrators be chosen within 60 days, defendant had caused delays so that it had taken over two years, until after the death of the insured, for defendant to acknowledge and agree to the so-called neutral arbitrator. In remanding to the trial court for its determination whether defendant's actions amounted to waiver, the Court concluded that the evidence of Kaiser's course of delay, which was arguably unreasonable or undertaken in bad faith, might provide sufficient grounds for a trier of fact to conclude that Kaiser had waived its arbitration agreement. The court also distinguished the situation in which a delay in choosing arbitrators results from a reasonable and good faith disagreement between the parties; and noted that in such a situation, a claimant's remedy is a petition under Code. Civ. Proc. § 1281.6 to have the court appoint the arbitrator(s) (15 Cal. 4th 951, 984) .

National Farm Workers Service Center, Inc. v. Caratan (1983) 146 Cal. App. 3d 796, 194 Cal. Rptr. 617 , was an action for breach of contract. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's finding that defendant had breached the contract. In its decision the court said that defendant's failure to proceed to arbitrate in the manner and at the time provided in the arbitration provision was a waiver of the right to arbitration. The court noted that defendant had the opportunity to seek arbitration, but instead, acted in a manner clearly inconsistent with an intent to arbitrate (146 Cal. App. 3d 796, 803-804) . Defendant's failure to invoke the arbitration machinery was an additional waiver of that right (146 Cal. App. 3d 796, 804) .

152 of 174 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20A ARBITRATION: RESISTING
PART II. FORMS
D. Defenses to Arbitration

2-20A California Points & Authorities § 20A.87

§ 20A.87 Arbitration Agreement Vitiated by Fraud and Involuntary Consent

[1] FORM

THE PETITION TO COMPEL ARBITRATION [AND THE MOTION TO STAY THE ACTION] SHOULD BE DENIED BECAUSE THE AGREEMENT TO ARBITRATE IS UNENFORCEABLE IN THAT RESPONDENT'S ASSENT TO IT WAS NOT VOLUNTARILY OBTAINED.

A. Arbitration Under Void Agreement Is Not Proper. Arbitration should not be compelled if the agreement containing the arbitration provision [or the arbitration provision itself] was induced by fraud, duress, or undue influence such that there was no voluntary mutual assent (Engalla v. Permanente Medical Group, Inc. (1997) 15 Cal. 4th 951, 973, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 843, 938 P.2d 903 ; Rosenthal v. Great Western Fin. Securities Corp. (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 394, 416, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 875, 926 P.2d 1061 ; Brown v. Wells Fargo Bank (2008) 168 Cal. App. 4th 938, 954, 85 Cal. Rptr. 3d 817 ; Jones v. Adams Financial Services (1999) 71 Cal. App. 4th 831, 835, 84 Cal. Rptr. 2d 151 ; Ford v. Shearson Lehman American Express, Inc. (1986) 180 Cal. App. 3d 1011, 1020, 1024, 1028-1029, 225 Cal. Rptr. 895 ; Main v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc. (1977) 67 Cal. App. 3d 19, 32-33, 136 Cal. Rptr. 378).

[Optional] B. Proving Existence of Agreement to Arbitrate. [See Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.10[1], Paragraph C.]

[Optional] C. Evidentiary Hearing. [See Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.10[1], Paragraph D.]

[Optional] D. Federal Right to Jury Trial Is Not Applicable in State Court. [See Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.10[1], Paragraph E.]

[Optional] E. Promissory Fraud Inducing Arbitration Provision. Code of Civil Procedure Section 1281.2(b) provides that a petition to compel arbitration is not to be granted when there are grounds for rescinding the agreement, including fraud which goes to the making of the agreement to arbitrate rather than to the making of the contract in general. Promissory fraud is a subspecies of fraud and deceit. Promissory fraud is sufficient to defeat an arbitration provision when the party opposing arbitration proves (1) that the party seeking to compel arbitration misrepresented its arbitration agreement in that it entered into the agreement knowing that at least there was a likelihood it[s agents] would breach some material part of the arbitration provision; (2) that the party seeking to compel arbitration employed that misrepresentation to induce reliance on the part of the party resisting arbitration[, or his or her agent]; and (3) that the party resisting arbitration[, or his or her agent], relied on those representations to his or her detriment. There is no requirement to show pecuniary damage when fraud is used as the basis for a defense to a petition to compel arbitration rather than in an action for damages (Engalla v. Permanente Medical Group, Inc. (1997) 15 Cal. 4th 951, 974-975, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 843, 938 P.2d 903).

[Optional] F. Reliance May Be Inferred. There is a presumption or inference of reliance when the misrepresentation was material. In order to survive a summary judgment-like proceeding, the party seeking to prove fraud need only show the misrepresentation was material; and in the absence of conclusive rebutting evidence, the trier of fact can infer reliance. A representation is material if the person would not, in all reasonable probability, have entered into the contract or transaction in the absence of the representation. It is not necessary that reliance on the misrepresentation be the sole or even the predominant or decisive factor in influencing the person's conduct. It is enough that the representation played a substantial part (Engalla v. Permanente Medical Group, Inc. (1997) 15 Cal. 4th 951, 976-977, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 843, 938 P.2d 903).

[Optional] G. Agent's Reliance Is Sufficient. Because an employer, in negotiating a health care agreement for its employees, is an agent of the employees and their fiduciary, the employer's reliance on a material misrepresentation is attributed to an employee who enrolls in that health plan (Engalla v. Permanente Medical Group, Inc. (1997) 15 Cal. 4th 951, 977-979, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 843, 938 P.2d 903).

[Optional] H. Fraud in Inception or Execution of Contract as a Whole. To defeat arbitration on the ground of fraud in the inception or execution of a contract that contains an agreement to arbitrate, the party resisting arbitration must prove that the party seeking to compel arbitration deceived him or her as to the nature and effect of the documents he or she was signing and that had he or she known the true nature and effect of the documents, he or she would not have signed them (see Hotels Nevada v. L.A. Pacific Center, Inc. (2006) 144 Cal. App. 4th 754, 763-764, 50 Cal. Rptr. 3d 700 ; Jones v. Adams Financial Services (1999) 71 Cal. App. 4th 831, 835, 84 Cal. Rptr. 2d 151 ; Brown v. Wells Fargo Bank (2008) 168 Cal. App. 4th 938, 958, 85 Cal. Rptr. 3d 817 ; Strotz v. Dean Witter Reynolds, Inc. (1990) 223 Cal. App. 3d 208, 218, 272 Cal. Rptr. 680 ; Ford v. Shearson Lehman American Express, Inc. (1986) 180 Cal. App. 3d 1011, 1028-1029, 225 Cal. Rptr. 895 ; Main v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc. (1977) 67 Cal. App. 3d 19, 32-33, 136 Cal. Rptr. 378).

[Optional] I. Permeation Doctrine No Longer Recognized in California. To the extent it indicates that an agreement to arbitrate may be found invalid simply because the contract as a whole was induced by fraud, the permeation doctrine conflicts with federal law. To the extent to permeation doctrine is merely another name for fraud in the execution of a contract, it is unnecessary. Thus there is no legally valid use for the theory, and California courts decline to further recognize it (Rosenthal v. Great Western Fin. Securities Corp. (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 394, 418-419, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 875, 926 P.2d 1061 ; see also Duffens v. Valenti (2008) 161 Cal. App. 4th 434, 448, 74 Cal. Rptr. 3d 311 ; Hayes Children Leasing Co. v. NCR Corp. (1995) 37 Cal. App. 4th 775, 784, 43 Cal. Rptr. 2d 650).

[Optional] J. Failure to Read Documents. Plaintiff's failure to read the documents may be excusable in light of evidence of some physical or other impairment, or of a fiduciary relationship and defendant's misrepresentations (Jones v. Adams Financial Services (1999) 71 Cal. App. 4th 831, 837-839, 84 Cal. Rptr. 2d 151 (physical and mental infirmities); Brown v. Wells Fargo Bank (2008) 168 Cal. App. 4th 938, 959, 85 Cal. Rptr. 3d 817 ; see Strotz v. Dean Witter Reynolds, Inc. (1990) 223 Cal. App. 3d 208, 218-219, 272 Cal. Rptr. 680).

[Optional] K. State Law Grounds for Revocation. Under the Federal Arbitration Act, whether there is a basis for revocation of an arbitration agreement at law or in equity may be determined under California law that applies to contracts in general (see 9 U.S.C. § 2; Engalla v. Permanente Medical Group, Inc. (1997) 15 Cal. 4th 951, 971-972, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 843, 938 P.2d 903 ; Ford v. Shearson Lehman American Express, Inc. (1986) 180 Cal. App. 3d 1011, 1024, 225 Cal. Rptr. 895).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used to resist arbitration when the arbitration clause at issue was induced by fraud (Paragraphs A, E, F, G) or when the entire contract is void for fraud in its inducement or execution (Paragraphs A and H). Paragraphs I-K are for use when those issues may be in contention. If using Paragraph G, counsel may wish to include authority from Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.61 regarding an agent's ability to commit the principal to arbitrate. If using Paragraph K, counsel may wish to include authority from Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.30 regarding the applicability of general state law contract principles.

Note that although arbitration may eventually be denied if the entire agreement was induced by fraud, under the Federal Arbitration Act, applicable in state court, the arbitrator and not the court must determine in the first instance a challenge to the entire agreement (as opposed to the arbitration provision alone) [see Buckeye Check Cashing, Inc. v. Cardegna (2002) 546 U.S. 440, 126 S. Ct. 1204, 163 L. Ed. 2d 1038 (Buckeye discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.10[3][i]); Rosenthal v. Great Western Fin. Securities Corp. (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 394, 413-414, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 875, 926 P.2d 1061 (discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.42[3][a] and [3][f], below)].

This form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in opposition to one seeking to compel arbitration [see § 20A.10].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, the argument should indicate why the agreement is void or vitiated because of the fraud, duress, or undue influence, or that the arbitration provision itself was induced by fraud. This argument should distinguish the situation from that addressed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.42, which involves fraud in the inducement of the contract generally.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a form of response to a petition to compel arbitration that may be supported by this memorandum, as well as a procedural checklist, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 32, Contractual Arbitration: Agreements and

Compelling Arbitration (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For memoranda to combine with this form, regarding other matters that the opposition may need to address, see §§ 20A.10-20A.12, 20A.20 et seq., 20A.30 et seq., 20A.40 et seq., and 20A.80 et seq.

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

For forms addressing general contract principles, see Ch. 50, Contracts .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Arbitration Under Void Agreement Is Not Proper

Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(b) provides that one of the exceptions in which the court need not compel arbitration is when it determines that grounds exist for the revocation of the contract containing the agreement to arbitrate.

Engalla v. Permanente Medical Group, Inc. (1997) 15 Cal. 4th 951, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 843, 938 P.2d 903 , arose out of a medical malpractice claim between plaintiffs' decedent and defendant (Kaiser). That claim was to have been arbitrated under the Service Agreement between decedent's employer and defendant, but decedent died one day after the neutral (third) arbitrator's appointment was acknowledged by defendant, which was approximately three months after the 60 days provided in the Service Agreement for the appointment of the neutral arbitrator by the two party-appointed arbitrators. Plaintiffs' attorney asked defendant not to capitalize on the death, but to stipulate that, contrary to Yates v. Pollock (1987) 194 Cal. App. 3d 195 , decedent's wife's claim would not be deemed merged with decedent's. Defendant refused to so stipulate. Shortly thereafter decedent's family and representatives refused to continue with the arbitration and filed a complaint for medical malpractice and for fraud, alleging in the fraud claim that defendant had fraudulently induced decedent to enter into the service agreement by falsely representing that it intended to abide by the terms of the agreement regarding the expedition of arbitration, in particular the appointment of arbitrators, when in fact it was likely to take two years rather than the 60 days provided for in the agreement for the arbitrators to be appointed. The complaint also alleged that Kaiser engaged in a course of dilatory conduct designed to postpone Engalla's arbitration hearing until after his death. Defendant petitioned to compel arbitration of the claims in the suit. Plaintiffs opposed the petition on the grounds the agreement had been induced by fraud and that defendant had waived its right to arbitrate by bad faith and unreasonable delay in appointment of arbitrators. The trial court agreed, and refused to grant the petition to compel arbitration, but the court of appeal reversed.

The Supreme Court reversed and remanded to the trial court because there were still issues of fact to be determined by the trial court regarding the claims of fraud and waiver. The portions of the opinion addressing procedural matters are discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.10[3][a]. In order to defeat a petition to compel arbitration, the parties opposing arbitration must show that the asserted fraud claim goes specifically "to the 'making' of the agreement to arbitrate" rather than to the making of the contract in general. The Court noted that was what plaintiffs alleged and sought in this case (15 Cal. 4th 951, 973) . The remainder of the Court's consideration of plaintiff's burden of proof is discussed under [b] and [c], below.

The facts and procedural background of Rosenthal v. Great Western Fin. Securities Corp. (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 394, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 875, 926 P.2d 1061 , and the portions of the opinion addressing the procedure for determining the existence of an arbitration agreement, including any defenses to its enforcement, in general, and the evidentiary nature of that hearing are discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.10[3][a] and [b], respectively. The portion of the opinion addressing the arbitrability of fraud claims is discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.42[3][a].

Jones v. Adams Financial Services (1999) 71 Cal. App. 4th 831, 84 Cal. Rptr. 2d 151 , was an action by a legally blind 79-year old woman, who also suffered from Alzheimer's disease and dementia, to cancel a note and deed of trust based on fraud in their execution. Plaintiff had been visited on several occasions by a Ms. J., who tried in interest her in a "reverse" mortgage. Plaintiff, who lived on social security and a small pension, repeatedly told J she was not interested in a reverse mortgage or any other kind of mortgage. After several visits, however, J persuaded plaintiff to go to defendant's office, where plaintiff was tricked into signing the note and deed of trust. Plaintiff was told by J, in the presence of defendant's president, that the papers she was signing were just authorization to obtain the payoff amount of her existing mortgage. Plaintiff did not have her magnifying glass with her at the time and the papers looked to her like "a lot of blurry lines." The check for the loan proceeds was made payable to and delivered to J, who was not a defendant. The first plaintiff learned of the loan and mortgage was when she received a foreclosure notice. Defendants petitioned to compel arbitration pursuant to a provision in the loan application. The petition was denied. Defendants appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court began its discussion by stating the rule that when fraud goes to the inception or execution of an agreement, so that the promisor is deceived as to the nature of his or her act, and actually does not know what he or she is signing, or does not intend to enter into a contact at all, mutual assent is lacking, and the contract is void. Claims of fraud in the execution of the entire agreement are not arbitrable under either state or federal law (71 Cal. App. 4th 831, 835) .

In Brown v. Wells Fargo Bank (2008) 168 Cal. App. 4th 938, 85 Cal. Rptr. 3d 817 , plaintiffs were Wells Fargo customers with substantial assets. They were a married couple, with the husband being 93 years old, in failing health and legally blind, and the wife being 81 years old. Wells Fargo assigned a "relationship manager" to plaintiffs in order to ensure that the bank handled all of plaintiff's assets. The relationship manager was a Wells Fargo vice president, who made biweekly visits to the plaintiffs' home office in order to manage their financial paperwork. In essence, the relationship manager induced the plaintiffs to rely on her to help provide for their financial well being. At the relationship manager's urging, plaintiffs met with the Wells Fargo financial consultant and opened a brokerage account with him. That brokerage account agreement contained an arbitration clause. In executing the agreement, Wells Fargo treated plaintiffs as any other customers opening a brokerage account. The court found that Wells Fargo approached the execution of the brokerage account agreement as though it were part of an arm's-length transaction, rather than with a fiduciary duty of care. The trial court denied Wells Fargo's motion to compel arbitration on the basis that the arbitration clause was procedurally unconscionable, although it may not have been substantively unconscionable. Significantly, the trial court also concluded that Wells Fargo had established a fiduciary relationship with the plaintiffs, and that this relationship may have given rise to a fiduciary duty on the part of Wells Fargo to make certain that the plaintiffs understood the material terms of the contract they were signing.

The court of appeal agreed with the trial court but found that the trial court failed to consider and rule upon whether there was fraud in the execution of the brokerage account agreement, which conclusion would necessarily preclude enforcement of any part of that agreement, including the arbitration clause. Therefore, the court of appeal reversed the trial court's order and remanded for further proceedings during which the trial court should determine whether there was fraud in the execution of the agreement. The court indicated that the trial court's further proceedings would be consistent with the views about breach of fiduciary duty expressed in the court of appeal's opinion (168 Cal. App. 4th 938, 959-962) .

In Ford v. Shearson Lehman American Express, Inc. (1986) 180 Cal. App. 3d 1011, 225 Cal. Rptr. 895 , plaintiff filed suit against his former psychotherapist, his business manager, and a securities broker for breach of fiduciary duty, conversion, and civil conspiracy to commit fraud, among other things. The broker moved to compel arbitration, based on arbitration agreements plaintiff had signed with the broker's predecessors in interest. The trial court denied the motion to compel arbitration, and the broker appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court first stated that the case was governed by the Federal Arbitration Act (9 U.S.C. § 2) because the agreements involved securities transactions in interstate commerce (180 Cal. App. 3d 1011, 1017) . 9 U.S.C. § 2 provides that an arbitration agreement is unenforceable on such grounds as exist for revocation of any contract at law or in equity. The court concluded that plaintiff had successfully pleaded grounds for revocation. Therefore, the threshold issues of whether the agreements were procured by fraud or not voluntarily assented to had to be determined initially by a court and not by arbitration (180 Cal. App. 3d 1011, 1024) . The court's discussion of the "permeation" doctrine is omitted here because that doctrine is no longer recognized in California [see discussion of Rosenthal v. Great Western Fin. Securities Corp. (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 394, 418-419, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 875, 926 P.2d 1061 , under [f], below]. Ford alleged that one defendant was a psychotherapist who began treating plaintiff in the early 1970s and soon gave up the full-time practice of psychotherapy to become plaintiff's business advisor. Using the psychotherapist-patient relationship, that defendant was able to gain plaintiff's complete trust and confidence from 1971 through 1983 and used that dominance and confidence to supervise and control plaintiff's wealth and property and plaintiff's access to it. If plaintiff signed the securities trading agreement containing the arbitration provision, he did so because defendants directed him to sign them at a time when he felt he had to comply and had no opportunity to make an independent judgment about whether to sign them. Plaintiff did not know what the agreements said or what their effect was but signed them because he was told to do so (180 Cal. App. 3d 1011, 1027-1028) . The court reviewed Civ. Code § 1573, relating to constructive fraud in confidential relations (180 Cal. App. 3d 1011, 1020) , and Civ. Code §§ 1550, 1565, relating to voluntary assent as an essential element of a contract (180 Cal. App. 3d 1011, 1028) . There is a well-known distinction between fraud in the inducement and fraud in the inception, factum, or execution. If the fraud goes to the inception or execution of the agreement so that the promisor is deceived as to the nature of his or her act, and actually does not know what he or she is signing, or does not intend to enter into a contract at all, mutual assent is lacking and the contract is void. In such a case, the contract may be disregarded without the necessity of rescission (180 Cal. App. 3d 1011, 1028) . The court concluded that the complaint alleged fraud in the inception, which, if proven, would void the arbitration clause (180 Cal. App. 3d 1011, 1028-1029) .

Plaintiff in Main v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc. (1977) 67 Cal. App. 3d 19, 136 Cal. Rptr. 378 , alleged that she was aged and unschooled in business affairs and did not know the true nature or content of the documents. Although defendants knew of plaintiff's ignorance, defendants nevertheless induced plaintiff to sign the documents by misrepresenting their nature and content, and by failing to disclose the specific significant aspects of the agreements. Defendant's motion to compel arbitration was denied, and they appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The controversy was governed by the Federal Arbitration Act (67 Cal. App. 3d 19, 25) . Affirmance was based in part on the "permeation" doctrine, which is no longer recognized in California [see discussion of Rosenthal v. Great Western Fin. Securities Corp. (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 394, 418-419, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 875, 926 P.2d 1061 , under [f], below]. The court also based its affirmance on constructive fraud and defendants' abuse of the confidential relationship, saying the complaint sufficiently alleged fraud and undue influence, not only in the inducement of the entire lending agreement, but also in the inducement of the arbitration clause (67 Cal. App. 3d 19, 32-33) .

[b] Promissory Fraud Inducing Arbitration Provision

The facts and procedural background of Engalla v. Permanente Medical Group, Inc. (1997) 15 Cal. 4th 951, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 843, 938 P.2d 903 , are discussed under [a], above. The Court construed Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(b) to mean that a petition to compel arbitration is not to be granted when there are grounds for rescinding the agreement. Fraud is one of the grounds on which a contract can be rescinded [Civ. Code § 1689(b)(1)]. In order to defeat a petition to compel arbitration, the parties opposing the petition must show that the asserted fraud claim goes to the making of the agreement to arbitrate rather than to the making of the contract in general (15 Cal. 4th 951, 973) . In this case, plaintiffs alleged and sought to show fraud in the making of the arbitration agreement, in essence a claim of promissory fraud.

Promissory fraud is a subspecies of fraud and deceit. A promise to do something necessarily implies an intention to perform. When a promise is made without that intention, there is an implied misrepresentation of fact that may be actionable fraud. An action for promissory fraud may lie. The Supreme Court set forth the five elements of an action for fraud and deceit and noted that, as to the fifth element, damages, there is no requirement to show pecuniary damage when fraud is used as the basis for a defense to a petition to compel arbitration rather than in an action for damages (15 Cal. 4th 951, 973-974) .

Plaintiff claimed (1) that Kaiser misrepresented its arbitration agreement in that it entered into the agreement knowing that at least there was a likelihood its agents would breach the part of the agreement providing for timely appointment of the arbitrator and the expeditious progress towards and arbitration hearing; (2) that Kaiser employed that misrepresentation to induce reliance on the part of decedent and his employer; (3) that decedent relied on those representations to his detriment. The Court examined the evidence supporting each of those claims. Facts supported the allegation that Kaiser entered into the arbitration agreement with knowledge that it would not comply with its own contractual timelines, or with at least reckless indifference as to whether its agents would use reasonable diligence and good faith to comply with them (15 Cal. 4th 951, 974) . Studies of Kaiser's arbitration experience in 1984-1986 showed that in only 3 percent of their claims were the arbitrators appointed within 180 days. In most cases, it took 674 days to appoint the arbitrators. These studies were know to Kaiser and its counsel by 1989. The Court said that it was a reasonable inference from the documentary record before it that Kaiser's contractual representations of expedition were made with knowledge of their likely falsity and in fact concealed an unofficial policy or practice of delay system wide (15 Cal. 4th 951, 974-975) . This is especially so when Kaiser's program is compared with other health care organization which typically appoint a third party, such as the American Arbitration Association, to neutrally administer the program. Kaiser described itself as a fiduciary in its agreements, but in fact, entrusted administration to outside counsel retained to act as advocates on its behalf. In other words, there is evidence that Kaiser established a self-administered system in which delay for its own benefit and convenience was an inherent part, despite express contractual statements to the contrary and statements to the contrary in newsletter and other information provided to subscribers (15 Cal. 4th 951, 975-976) .

The portion of the Court's opinion considering reliance is discussed under [c], below.

[c] Reliance May Be Inferred

The facts and procedural background of Engalla v. Permanente Medical Group, Inc. (1997) 15 Cal. 4th 951, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 843, 938 P.2d 903 , are discussed under [a], above. The Court's opinion considering promissory fraud inducing an arbitration provision is discussed under [b], above. As to the reliance element of promissory fraud, the Court said intent to induce reliance can be reasonably inferred when the representation is material (15 Cal. 4th 951, 977) . Reliance occurs if the plaintiff would not, in all reasonable probability, have entered into the contract or transaction in the absence of the representation (15 Cal. 4th 951, 976) . It is not necessary that reliance on the misrepresentation be the sole or even the predominant or decisive factor in influencing the plaintiff's conduct. It is enough that the representation played a substantial part (15 Cal. 4th 951, 976-977) . There is a presumption or inference of reliance when the misrepresentation was material. In order to survive a summary judgment-like proceeding, plaintiff need only show the misrepresentation was material, and in the absence of conclusive rebutting evidence, the trier of fact can infer reliance (15 Cal. 4th 951, 977) .

The materiality of the misrepresentations is this case was complicated by the fact that decedent's employer was the primary decision maker responsible for selecting Kaiser, not decedent. In negotiating group medical benefits for its employees, the employer is agent for its employees. An agency relationship is a fiduciary one, requiring the agent to act in the best interests of its principal (15 Cal. 4th 951, 977) . Thus, a material misrepresentation in this case is one which would have substantially influenced the employer's health plan selection process (15 Cal. 4th 951, 977-978) . Expedition is commonly regarded as one of the primary advantages of arbitration. The employer's personnel officer stated that whether or not a health plan had an arbitration agreement was not material but that an expeditious way of handling disputes was a consideration in favor of a particular health plan. Thus, the Supreme Court concluded there was sufficient evidence to support the claim that the employer actually relied on Kaiser's misrepresentations (15 Cal. 4th 951, 978-979) .

[d] Agent's Reliance Is Sufficient

The facts and procedural background of Engalla v. Permanente Medical Group, Inc. (1997) 15 Cal. 4th 951, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 843, 938 P.2d 903 , are discussed under [a], above. The portion of the Court's opinion considering reliance is discussed at [c], above.

[e] Fraud in Inception or Execution of Contract as a Whole

The facts and procedural background of Hotels Nevada v. L.A. Pacific Center, Inc. (2006) 144 Cal. App. 4th 754, 50 Cal. Rptr. 3d 700 , and the portion of the opinion discussing the need for the trial court to hold an evidentiary hearing before ruling on a motion to compel arbitration are discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.10[3][a]. The court of appeal discussed the difference between fraud in the inception and fraud in the execution saying that fraud in the inducement is more usual and occurs when the promisor knows what he or she is signing but his or her consent is induced by fraud: mutual assent is present and a contract is formed, which, by reason of the fraud, is voidable. In order to escape from its obligations the aggrieved party must rescind, by prompt notice and offer to restore the consideration received, if any. Fraud in the execution occurs when the promisor is deceived as to the nature of his or her act, and actually does not know what he or she is signing, or does not intend to enter into a contract at all: mutual assent is lacking, and it is void and may be disregarded without the necessity of rescission (144 Cal. App. 4th 754, 763) . If the entire contract is void at its inception because of fraud, then the parties have not agreed to anything, including the arbitration of any controversy (144 Cal. App. 4th 754, 764) . The court of appeal concluded that the complaint had sufficiently alleged facts supporting a claim of fraud in the execution--a claim that could constitute grounds for revocation of the agreement if substantiated by evidentiary support. Plaintiff alleged that it had reached an agreement with appellant to a 12-month holdback period for $5 million of the purchase price of the property that was the subject of their transaction but that the copies of the memorandum and agreement that appellant sought to enforce were not the same documents that it signed, as they contained a 60-month holdback period. According to the complaint, this discrepancy was the result of appellant's "changing, modifying, removing, replacing and otherwise wrongfully and unlawfully altering the memorandum, as well as the agreement" on which it was based. These allegations sufficiently supported a claim of fraud in the execution. A contract void at its inception contains no enforceable agreement to arbitrate. There is no contractual intent to be enforced because the parties cannot have intended arbitration under a contract wholly void for fraud in its execution. Nothing precludes the court from deciding claims of fraud in the execution of the entire contract, even if that will dispose of the entire case on the hearing of the motion to compel arbitration (144 Cal. App. 4th 754, 764) .

Jones v. Adams Financial Services (1999) 71 Cal. App. 4th 831, 84 Cal. Rptr. 2d 151 , is discussed at [a], above.

Brown v. Wells Fargo Bank (2008) 168 Cal. App. 4th 938, 85 Cal. Rptr. 3d 817 , is discussed at [a], above.

Plaintiff in Strotz v. Dean Witter Reynolds, Inc. (1990) 223 Cal. App. 3d 208, 272 Cal. Rptr. 680 , sued her stock brokers (the individual and the company) after learning they had lost plaintiff's original $180,000 investment, claiming defendants had misrepresented the nature of OEX options by stating that they were low risk investments, had concealed the full extent of plaintiff's losses, and sold plaintiff's stock to cover those losses. When plaintiff opened the account at defendant's Costa Mesa office, she had signed a "Customer's Agreement" and an "Option Client Information" agreement, both of which contained arbitration provisions. Plaintiff alleged that she was fraudulently induced to sign those agreements in that defendants deceived plaintiff as to the nature and effect of the documents plaintiff was signing by telling her that the contracts were simply documents necessary to open the account, that they did not affect her legal rights, and that it was not necessary to read them. Plaintiff was not given an opportunity to read them and was not told they contained arbitration provisions. Plaintiff alleged she was not told that the "Option Client Information" agreement was actually a contract, the terms of which were set forth on the back of the form. Further, plaintiff alleged that had she known the true nature and effect of the documents, she would not have signed them. Defendants moved to compel arbitration, and the trial court denied their motion because the complaint alleged that defendants had fraudulently induced her to sign the agreement and that the fraud permeated the entire contract, including the arbitration provision. Defendants appealed the order denying the motion.

The court of appeal affirmed. Affirmance was based in part on the "permeation" doctrine, which is no longer recognized in California [see discussion of Rosenthal v. Great Western Fin. Securities Corp. (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 394, 418-419, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 875, 926 P.2d 1061 , under [f], below], so that part of the discussion is omitted here. The court of appeal agreed with the result in Ford v. Shearson Lehman American Express, Inc. (1986) 180 Cal. App. 3d 1011, 225 Cal. Rptr. 895 , and Main v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc. (1977) 67 Cal. App. 3d 19, 136 Cal. Rptr. 378 , on the alternative theory applied in those cases. In Ford, the plaintiff, at the time the agreement was signed was under complete dominion and control of one of the defendants and if that plaintiff did in fact sign the agreements, he did not know what they were or what their effect was. If a party is unaware he or she is signing any contract, obviously that person is unaware that he or she is agreeing to arbitration (223 Cal. App. 3d 208, 217) . Accordingly, an allegation of fraud in the inception or execution of the contract is necessarily directed at both the principal contract and the arbitration provision contained in it (223 Cal. App. 3d 208, 217-218) . Similarly, the result in Main can be explained and upheld under this theory based on the allegations of a fiduciary relationship, that because of plaintiff's trust and confidence in the defendant, plaintiff was accustomed to signing documents at defendant's request without reading them, that plaintiff did not know the true nature and effect of the documents, and that defendant had misrepresented their nature and effect to plaintiff (223 Cal. App. 3d 208, 218 n.8). The court concluded that allegations of fraud in the inception or execution of a contract that contains an agreement to arbitrate, such as those set forth in the complaint, are sufficient to place the issue of fraud before the court and to deny the petition to compel arbitration (223 Cal. App. 3d 208, 218) . Further, plaintiff's failure to read the documents may be excusable in light of the allegations of a fiduciary relationship and defendant's misrepresentations (223 Cal. App. 3d 208, 218-219) . If the trial court decides the issue of fraud in the execution of the documents in favor of plaintiff, litigation should proceed on the remaining issues, including the fraudulent misrepresentations about the index options. However, if the court finds no fraud in the execution of the documents, plaintiff will be bound by the agreement to arbitrate and the court should enter an order compelling arbitration (223 Cal. App. 3d 208, 219) .

Ford v. Shearson Lehman American Express, Inc. (1986) 180 Cal. App. 3d 1011, 225 Cal. Rptr. 895 , and Main v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc. (1977) 67 Cal. App. 3d 19, 136 Cal. Rptr. 378 , are discussed at [a], above.

[f] Permeation Doctrine No Longer Recognized in California

The facts and procedural background of Rosenthal v. Great Western Fin. Securities Corp. (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 394, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 875, 926 P.2d 1061 , and the portions of the opinion addressing the procedure for determining the existence of an arbitration agreement, including any defenses to its enforcement, in general, and the evidentiary nature of that hearing are discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.10[3] [a] and [b], respectively. The portion of the opinion addressing the arbitrability of fraud claims is discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.42[3][a]. With respect to the burden of proof required to establish fraud in the execution of an agreement, the Court then considered the so-called "permeation doctrine," plaintiff's second theory. The Court described the permeation doctrine as an ill-defined exception to Prima Paint's [Prima Paint v. Flood & Conklin (1967) 388 U.S. 395, 404, 87 S. Ct. 1801, 18 L. Ed. 2d 1270] rule of arbitrability. Some cases have considered it synonymous to fraud in the inducement [see, e.g., Main v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc. (1977) 67 Cal. App. 3d 19, 27, 31, 136 Cal. Rptr. 378] . Others have understood it as identical or very similar to fraud in the inception or execution of a contract [see, e.g., Ericksen, Arbuthnot, McCarthy, Kearney & Walsh, Inc. v. 100 Oak Street (1983) 35 Cal. 3d 312, 323, n 18, 197 Cal. Rptr. 581,

673 P.2d 251 ; Hayes Children Leasing Co. v. NCR Corp. (1995) 37 Cal. App. 4th 775, 784, 43 Cal. Rptr. 2d 650 ; Herman Feil, Inc. v. Design Center of Los Angeles (1988) 204 Cal. App. 3d 1406, 1416, 251 Cal. Rptr. 895] . The broadest application of the doctrine was in Ford v. Shearson Lehman American Express, Inc. (1986) 180 Cal. App. 3d 1011, 1019-1028, 225 Cal. Rptr. 895 , which the Supreme Court characterized as ignoring the rule in Prima Paint that the arbitration agreement is severable from the principal contract and incorrectly making a distinction between fraud claims going to the performance of the contract and those going to the making of the contract. What Prima Paint did was make the distinction between fraud directed at the arbitration agreement and fraud directed at the principal contract and hold that only fraud directed at the making or performance of the arbitration agreement is to be determined by a court (14 Cal. 4th 394, 417-418) .

The Supreme Court concluded that the permeation doctrine in fact conflicts with Prima Paint to the extent it indicates that an agreement to arbitrate may be found invalid simply because the contract as a whole was induced by fraud. On the other hand, to the extent to permeation doctrine is merely another name for fraud in the execution of a contract, it is unnecessary (14 Cal. 4th 394, 418) . Seeing no legally valid use for the theory, the Court declined to further recognize it (14 Cal. 4th 394, 418-419) . Claims that a party employed fraud in inducing consent specifically to the arbitration agreement (e.g., by actively concealing its existence of misrepresenting its meaning or value) are, under Prima Paint, to be decided by the court, because they go to the valid making of the arbitration clause itself. Claims that, due to fraud in the execution of the agreement as a whole, the parties reached no contract containing an arbitration clause, are to be decided by the court. But claims that the contract as a whole was obtained through fraud in the inducement are, in the absence of evidence of the parties' contrary intent, arbitrable. Included in this rule of arbitrability are claims of a "grand scheme" of fraud or fraud "permeating" the transaction (14 Cal. 4th 394, 419) .

The facts and procedural background of Duffens v. Valenti (2008) 161 Cal. App. 4th 434, 74 Cal. Rptr. 3d 311 , and the portions of the opinion discussing the inapplicability of the Federal Arbitration Act and the distinction between fraud in the inducement and fraud in the execution are set forth at § 20.42[3][a]. Regarding the permeation doctrine, the court of appeal cited in Rosenthal v. Great Western Fin. Securities Corp. (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 394, 418-419, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 875, 926 P.2d 1061 (Rosenthal, discussed above), which expressly repudiated an alternative means of expressing the concepts of fraud in the execution and fraud in the inducement, specifically, the "permeation doctrine," because the permeation doctrine concepts are identical or very similar to fraud in the inception or execution of a contract. The permeation doctrine is merely another name for fraud in the execution of a contract and is unnecessary. Seeing no legally valid use for the theory, the Rosenthal Court declined further to recognize that term (161 Cal. App. 4th 434, 448) .

Hayes Children Leasing Co. v. NCR Corp. (1995) 37 Cal. App. 4th 775, 43 Cal. Rptr. 2d 650 , is discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.42[4][a]. The court of appeal agreed that the permeation doctrine was inconsistent with Prima Paint [Prima Paint v. Flood & Conklin (1967) 388 U.S. 395, 404, 87 S. Ct. 1801, 18 L. Ed. 2d 1270] to the extent it indicates that an agreement to arbitrate may be found invalid simply because the contract as a whole was induced by fraud (37 Cal. App. 4th 775, 784) .

[g] Failure to Read Documents

The facts and procedural background of Jones v. Adams Financial Services (1999) 71 Cal. App. 4th 831, 84 Cal. Rptr. 2d 151 , are discussed at [a], above. Defendants contended that even if they had misrepresented the nature of the documents plaintiff signed, the contract was not void because she had a reasonable opportunity to discover the true nature of the documents and she failed to do so. The court of appeal said that a party does not have a reasonable opportunity to discover the true nature of a writing if that party is prevented from doing so by some physical or other impairment (71 Cal. App. 4th 831, 837) . The court discussed other cases and the evidence in this case (in the form of plaintiff's declaration and those of her physicians), and concluded that plaintiff had no reasonable opportunity to discover the true nature of the documents and that her failure to read them was not negligent. The court pointed out that defendant's president knew plaintiff was blind because he guided her hand to the places where she signed the documents (71 Cal. App. 4th 831, 838) . Further, the court said the fact that plaintiff had a three- day "cooling off" period under the Truth-in-Lending law within which to read and rescind the documents did not require her to read them during that period. If she thought they were only an authorization for calculation of payoff amount of her existing mortgage, she would not have had any reason to read them during the cooling off period. The reasonable opportunity to discover the true nature of the documents must come before they are signed (71 Cal. App. 4th 831, 839) .

The facts and procedural background of Brown v. Wells Fargo Bank (2008) 168 Cal. App. 4th 938, 85 Cal. Rptr. 3d 817 , are discussed at [a], above. On the day of execution of the documents which contained the arbitration agreement at issue, the bank representative and the stock broker met with plaintiffs for thirty minutes. The arbitration provision was on the third page of a 17-page document, with eleven of those pages containing double columns of single-spaced fine print. The court of appeal pointed out that plaintiffs apparently did not read the documents, and they signed the documents almost immediately after they received them from the bank representative. Plaintiffs believed that by signing the agreements they were agreeing to open brokerage accounts only. Plaintiffs were unable to read the fine print in the agreement. One of the plaintiffs was visibly frail and could not sign his name where indicated. The stock broker knew that the plaintiff was unable to read the documents and had been told of his limitations during the meeting. The court found that the stock broker did not explain the purpose of the documents to be signed, did not mention the arbitration provision, did not ask plaintiffs whether they had any questions, and did not offer to read any portions of the agreement to them.

The court of appeal opined that when parties are dealing at arm's length, reasonable diligence requires a party to read a contract before signing it. However, when parties are in a fiduciary relationship, the same degree of diligence is not required of the non-fiduciary party, and plaintiffs' failure to read the contract would be reasonable (168 Cal. App. 4th 938, 959) . In such a case, the defendant fiduciary's failure to perform its duty would constitute constructive fraud, the plaintiff's failure to read the contract would be justifiable, and constructive fraud in the execution would be established (168 Cal. App. 4th 938, 959) . In this case, the trial court found a fiduciary relationship existed between the parties; however, the court expressly did not make a finding on whether constructive fraud existed, stating that this was an issue for the jury. The court of appeal found that the trial court was required to resolve the factual issues raised by the petition to compel arbitration, not simply determine whether sufficient evidence existed to go to a jury, and thus, the court of appeal remanded for the trial court to determine whether there was constructive fraud in the execution of the Agreement (168 Cal. App. 4th 938, 959-962) .

Strotz v. Dean Witter Reynolds, Inc. (1990) 223 Cal. App. 3d 208, 272 Cal. Rptr. 680 , is discussed at [e], above. Note that the Supreme Court in Rosenthal v. Great Western Fin. Securities Corp. (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 394, 420-421, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 875, 926 P.2d 1061 , which portion of that opinion is discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.42[3][d], criticized as too broad the statement in Strotz that even in the absence of a fiduciary relationship, misrepresentation may be regarded as an excuse for failure to read a document. There was no fiduciary relationship involved in Rosenthal, but there was in Strotz (223 Cal. App. 3d 208, 218-219) , so the extent to which the holding in Strotz has been abrogated is unclear.

[h] State Law Grounds for Revocation

The facts and procedural background of Engalla v. Permanente Medical Group, Inc. (1997) 15 Cal. 4th 951, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 843, 938 P.2d 903 , are discussed under [a], above. The Supreme Court prefaced its consideration of procedural matters, which are discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.10[3][b] and [c], by noting that California law incorporates many of the policy objectives of the Federal Arbitration Act, including a presumption in favor of arbitration and a requirement that a contract be enforced on the basis of state law standards that apply to contracts in general (15 Cal. 4th 951, 971-972) .

Ford v. Shearson Lehman American Express, Inc. (1986) 180 Cal. App. 3d 1011, 225 Cal. Rptr. 895 , is discussed at [a], above. The controversy was governed by the Federal Arbitration Act, specifically 9 U.S.C. § 2, because it involved securities transactions in interstate commerce (180 Cal. App. 3d 1011, 1017) . The court of appeal, relying on Southland Corp. v. Keating (1984) 465 U.S. 1, 10-11, 104 S. Ct. 852, 79 L. Ed. 2d 1 , said that under the Federal Arbitration Act, whether there is a basis for revocation of the agreement at law or in equity may be determined under California law (180 Cal. App. 3d 1011, 1024) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Arbitration Under Void Agreement Is Not Proper

The court of appeal in Bayscene Resident Negotiators v. Bayscene Mobilehome Park (1993) 15 Cal. App. 4th 119, 18 Cal. Rptr. 2d 626 , vacated an award that resulted from arbitration pursuant to a submission agreement that defendants were forced to sign under threat of criminal prosecution. A municipal ordinance required arbitration of disputes regarding rental rates at mobilehome parks when the dispute could not be resolved by negotiation. The city attorney threatened park owners with criminal prosecution, so they signed the submission agreement and submitted to arbitration, albeit with repeated and continual protests. The court of appeal found the ordinance unconstitutional because it deprived owners of their due process rights in that it did not provide for trial de novo or for judicial review of the sufficiency of the evidence supporting the award (15 Cal. App. 4th 119, 134-135) . As to the validity of the submission agreement, the court noted that to form an enforceable contract, the parties' consent must be free [Civ. Code § 1565]. Apparent consent is not free when obtained, among other ways, through duress, menace, or fraud [Civ. Code § 1567]. Threat of criminal prosecution constitutes menace, which destroys free consent and renders any agreement obtained thereby invalid and unenforceable as against public policy (15 Cal. App. 4th 119, 127, 129) .

[b] Fraud in Inception or Execution of Contract as a Whole

The plaintiff in Rice v. Dean Witter Reynolds, Inc. (1991) 235 Cal. App. 3d 1016, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 265 , was 75 years old, unsophisticated, and in poor health and relied on her son-in-law to administer her business affairs. The brokerage account containing the arbitration clause was opened at his suggestion, and the complaint alleged that the son-in-law, with the knowledge of the individual broker who was his personal friend, engaged in many unauthorized and speculative transactions. Plaintiff alleged that the son-in-law and the individual broker misrepresented or concealed the true nature of the documents she had signed; that she did not understand the nature of the documents and would not have signed them had she known their true nature and effect. In particular, she would not have assented to the provision permitting Dean Witter to sell her stock and would not have waived her right to a jury trial. The trial court denied the defendant's petition to compel arbitration, and the court of appeal affirmed.

The court discussed the "fraud in the inception" theory, which it described as applicable when the party seeking to avoid arbitration did not enter into any contract and thus did not assent to the arbitration clause. The court noted that Ford v. Shearson Lehman American Express, Inc. (1986) 180 Cal. App. 3d 1011, 1028, 225 Cal. Rptr. 895 , distinguished between fraud in the inducement, i.e, the party knows what he or she is signing but his or her consent is induced by fraud, in which case there is mutual assent and a contract is formed, and fraud in the inception, which involves deception as to the nature of the promisor's act so that the promisor does not know what he or she is signing, or does not intend to enter into a contract at all. When there is fraud in the inception, mutual assent is lacking, any contract is void, and may be disregarded without the necessity of rescission (235 Cal. App. 3d 1016, 1024) . Every court in California which has addressed the issue has concluded that fraud in the inception is sufficient to avoid an arbitration clause and that the court--not the arbitrator--must determine if such fraud exists (235 Cal. App. 3d 1016, 1025) . The court of appeal also discussed the conflict existing in the California cases with respect to the so-called "permeation" doctrine and suggested that the trial court first determine whether "fraud in inception" vitiated the agreement so that application of permeation doctrine might be rendered moot (235 Cal. App. 3d 1016, 1026) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20A ARBITRATION: RESISTING
PART II. FORMS
D. Defenses to Arbitration

2-20A California Points & Authorities § 20A.88

§ 20A.88 Inconspicuous Arbitration Clause Is Not Binding

[1] FORM

RESPONDENT CANNOT BE COMPELLED TO ARBITRATE THIS CONTROVERSY BECAUSE THE PROVISION FOR ARBITRATION WAS PLACED IN A FORM INCONSPICUOUSLY, RESPONDENT'S ATTENTION WAS NOT CALLED TO THAT PROVISION, AND RESPONDENT HAD NO KNOWLEDGE OF THE PROVISION.

A. Inadequate Disclosure and Understanding of Arbitration Requirement Result in Lack of Contract. When the provision for arbitration in an agreement is not conspicuous, and a party is not informed and does not know that the agreement contains such a provision, there is no agreement by that party to arbitrate (Metters v. Ralphs Grocery Co. (2008) 161 Cal. App. 4th 696, 701-704, 74 Cal. Rptr. 3d 210 ; Windsor Mills, Inc. v. Collins & Aikman Corp. (1972) 25 Cal. App. 3d 987, 994, 101 Cal. Rptr. 347 ; see also Lawrence v. Walzer & Gabrielson (1989) 207 Cal. App. 3d 1501, 1507-1508, 256 Cal. Rptr. 6).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used to resist arbitration when the arbitration clause was buriedin a form and was not called to the respondent's attention, and in fact the respondent did not know about it. Counsel may wish to include authority from Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.30 regarding the applicability of general state law contract principles.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in opposition to one seeking to compel arbitration [see § 20A.10].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, the argument should indicate the inconspicuous placement of the arbitration clause in the contract, point out the nature of the form in which it is contained as being one not liable to raise expectations of containing an agreement to arbitrate related controversies, and show how respondent was not on notice of the presence of the arbitration provision.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a form of response to a petition to compel arbitration that may be supported by this memorandum, as well as a procedural checklist, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 32, Contractual Arbitration: Agreements and Compelling Arbitration (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For memoranda to combine with this form, regarding other matters that the opposition may need to address, see §§ 20A.10-20A.12, 20A.20 et seq., 20A.30 et seq., 20A.40 et seq., 20A.60 et seq., and 20A.80 et seq.

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

For forms addressing general contract principles, see Ch. 50, Contracts .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Inadequate Disclosure and Understanding of Arbitration Requirement Result in Lack of Contract

Plaintiff in Metters v. Ralphs Grocery Co. (2008) 161 Cal. App. 4th 696, 74 Cal. Rptr. 3d 210 , alleged racial discrimination and harassment in violation of the California Fair Employment and Housing Act) (FEHA; Gov. Code 12940 et seq.) against his employer and his store manager. Defendant moved to compel arbitration, claiming plaintiff had entered into a binding arbitration agreement when he filled out a dispute resolution form. The trial court denied the motion, finding there was no valid agreement to arbitrate. Defendants appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed (161 Cal. App. 4th 696, 698, 704) . Defendant contended the agreement to arbitrate was valid and plaintiff was bound by it. There was no dispute that plaintiff signed the agreement, which stated he received and read the arbitration policy. Defendant argued the agreement must therefore be presumed and that it met its burden to establish a valid agreement to arbitrate by supplying a copy of the agreement and showing that plaintiff signed it. Even given the Federal Arbitration Act's (FAA; 9 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.) policy in favor of arbitration, that policy does not come into play until a court has found the parties entered into a valid contract under state law because there is no public policy favoring arbitration of disputes which the parties have not agreed to arbitrate (161 Cal. App. 4th 696, 701) . The general rule that one who signs an instrument which on its face is a contract is deemed to assent to all its terms and cannot avoid those terms on the ground that he or she failed to read it before signing it (161 Cal. App. 4th 696, 701) , is not applicable if the person signing the instrument is unaware of the contractual provisions, and therefore cannot be said to have agreed to them. This exception applies when the writing does not appear to be a contract and the terms are not called to the attention of the recipient. Then, no contract is formed with respect to the undisclosed term. The court cited Windsor Mills, Inc. v. Collins & Aikman Corp. (1972) 25 Cal. App. 3d 987, 993, 101 Cal. Rptr. 347 (Windsor Mills, discussed below), for the proposition that an offeree was not bound by inconspicuous contractual provisions of which he was unaware, contained in a document whose contractual nature is not obvious. This principle of knowing consent applies with particular force to provisions for arbitration. Here, the trial court found the dispute form did not look like a contract and did not alert plaintiff that he was agreeing to binding arbitration. It was entitled "Notice of Dispute & Request for Resolution" and according to plaintiff's declaration, he was told to fill out the form in order to submit his dispute for resolution. His telephone calls to both the personnel manager and the company president produced no results. The letters he received from the personnel manager as well as his conversation with her strongly suggested the form was the only vehicle by which he could have his claims reviewed, and no one told himif he did so, he would automatically agree to arbitration. Defendant argued that plaintiff should have known he could have submitted his dispute without filling out the dispute, but the court said that had defendant wanted to clarify, rather than obfuscate, the grievance procedure, it would have told plaintiff to either fill out the dispute form, under which he would agree to binding arbitration, or to write a letter detailing his dispute (161 Cal. App. 4th 696, 702) . The court found the arbitration provisions of the dispute form confusing and full of legalistic references to the unattached policy. The form explains that the policy applies to "Covered Disputes," but fails to define them. It further explains that Covered Disputes will be resolved through "voluntary mediation and/or mandatory final and binding arbitration" if not resolved by informal means. The form then states its ostensible purpose on the employee's behalf: to submit this dispute for informal resolution directly by the Company's management. Defendant argued that the dispute form incorporated the policy by reference, thus plaintiff was presumed to know its terms, which define "Covered Disputes" and explain that participation in formal dispute resolution required binding arbitration. The court of appeal distinguished cases relied on by defendant to support that proposition finding no warning of arbitration being required was contained on the dispute form and that the agreement to arbitrate was not even contained in the employment contract, where it might have been expected, but in a form on which plaintiff was directed to submit his grievance. The context of that form did not alert him he was agreeing to anything, let alone arbitration (161 Cal. App. 4th 696, 703) . Further, it is the employer's duty to investigate complaints for discrimination under the FEHA promptly and this affirmative and mandatory duty is not dependent on whether the employee agrees to arbitration (161 Cal. App. 4th 696, 703-704). The court of appeal concluded that the record contained substantial evidence to support the trial court's finding that there was no valid agreement to arbitrate the discrimination claim (161 Cal. App. 4th 696, 704) .

Windsor Mills, Inc. v. Collins & Aikman Corp. (1972) 25 Cal. App. 3d 987, 101 Cal. Rptr. 347 , arose out of a dispute over commercial shipments routinely ordered orally by plaintiff from defendant. The orders would be confirmed by printed acknowledgments, the face side of which made reference to conditions in fine print on the reverse side, which included an arbitration clause. Defendant filed a demand for arbitration in New York, plaintiff filed a suit for damages resulting from defects in the goods. Defendant answered and filed a petition to compel arbitration and stay the proceedings. The petition was denied, and defendant was enjoined from carrying on the arbitration it had initiated. Defendant appealed from these rulings.

The court of appeal affirmed the rulings, stating that the principle of knowing consent to contractual proposals applies with particular force to provisions for arbitration (25 Cal. App. 3d 987, 993) . The arbitration provision in this case was in small print and inconspicuous. The plaintiff was not advised that the forms contained the provision and in fact did not know that they did. It follows that there was no agreement by plaintiff to arbitrate, regardless of plaintiff's outward manifestations of apparent assent in retention of the order forms without objection and in acceptance of the shipments (25 Cal. App. 3d 987, 994) . Defendant also contended that the parties were both merchants, and under Com. Code §

2207(1) the act of acceptance or transmission of a written confirmation operates as an acceptance of contractual terms even though these may be added to or different from those originally agreed to unless a new acceptance expressly has been required. Com. Code § 2207(2)(b) also provides that additional terms are to be construed as proposals for addition to the contract and between merchants become part of the contract unless, among other things, they materially alter it (25 Cal. App. 3d 987, 994) . The court found the scope of an arbitration provision outside the reach of Com. Code § 2207, because it is the type of provision which materially alters an offer (25 Cal. App. 3d 987, 995) .

The facts and procedural background of Lawrence v. Walzer & Gabrielson (1989) 207 Cal. App. 3d 1501, 256 Cal. Rptr. 6 , and the part of the opinion dealing with one basis for its holding are discussed § 20A.30[3][b]. In addition to that basis for its holding, the court of appeal concluded that plaintiff did not agree to arbitrate claims of legal malpractice or breach of fiduciary duty (207 Cal. App. 3d 1501, 1508) . The court considered the fact that the arbitration clause at issue was part of a retainer agreement drafted by defendant attorneys and presented to the plaintiff client for signature, that the agreement was not the product of negotiation, and that plaintiff did not understand that the agreement required arbitration of any future malpractice claim. The court noted that although a formal opinion of the State Bar of California holds nothing to be inherently improper with an agreement between an attorney and a client to arbitrate malpractice claims, the client must be fully advised of the consequences of that agreement and that agreement will be closely scrutinized for any unfairness to the client (207 Cal. App. 3d 1501, 1507) . The Court cited Windsor Mills, Inc. v. Collins & Aikman Corp. (1972) 25 Cal. App. 3d 987, 993-994, 101 Cal. Rptr. 347 (discussed above) for the proposition that if a party wishes to bind in writing another to an agreement to arbitrate future disputes, that purpose must be accomplished in a way that each party to the agreement will fully and clearly comprehend that the agreement to arbitrate exists and binds both parties (207 Cal. App. 3d 1501, 1508) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Inadequate Disclosure and Understanding of Arbitration Requirement Result in Lack of Contract

Chan v. Drexel Burnham Lambert, Inc. (1986) 178 Cal. App. 3d 632, 643-645, 223 Cal. Rptr. 838 , discussed § 20A.31[3][a], is also authority for the proposition that an inconspicuous arbitration clause that one party does not know about will not bind that party.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20A ARBITRATION: RESISTING
PART II. FORMS
D. Defenses to Arbitration

2-20A California Points & Authorities § 20A.89

§ 20A.89 Agreement Containing Arbitration Clause Is Void Due to Illegality

[1] FORM

THE PETITION TO COMPEL ARBITRATION [AND THE MOTION TO STAY THE ACTION] SHOULD BE DENIED BECAUSE UNCONTROVERTED EVIDENCE ESTABLISHES THAT THE ENTIRE CONTRACT IS VOID DUE TO ILLEGALITY.

A. Illegality Affects Entire Contract. In order to avoid arbitration, the illegality must be such as to render entire agreement illegal and unenforceable (Duffens v. Valenti (2008) 161 Cal. App. 4th 434, 449-451, 74 Cal. Rptr. 3d 311 ; Green v. Mt. Diablo Hospital Dist. (1989) 207 Cal. App. 3d 63, 71, 254 Cal. Rptr. 689).

B. Contract Contrary to Express Statute or to Policy of Express Statute. Arbitration is not to be compelled under a contract when the entire contract is void for illegality because that contract is contrary to an express statute or to the policy of an express statute (Duffens v. Valenti (2008) 161 Cal. App. 4th 434, 451-456, 74 Cal. Rptr. 3d 331 ; Green v. Mt. Diablo Hospital Dist. (1989) 207 Cal. App. 3d 63, 72-74, 254 Cal. Rptr. 689 ; see Civ. Code § 1667; Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(b)).

[Optional] C. Alleged Illegality Creates Potential for Conflicting Rulings. In some situations, especially those involving parties who are not parties to the agreement containing the arbitration provision, arbitration should not be compelled when the agreement containing the arbitration provision is challenged as void for illegality, because arbitration in that situation creates the potential for conflicting rulings that the contract is contrary to an express statute or to the policy of an express statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c); Green v. Mt. Diablo Hospital Dist. (1989) 207 Cal. App. 3d 63, 75-76, 254 Cal. Rptr. 689).

CAUTION:

This form retains limited, if any, application since Buckeye Check Cashing, Inc. v. Cardegna (2006) 546 U.S. 440, 126 S. Ct. 1204, 1210, 163 L. Ed. 2d 1038 (discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.10[3][i]) held that when the Federal Arbitration Act governs or otherwise as a matter of substantive federal arbitration law, an arbitration provision is severable from the remainder of the contract, and the issue of the illegality of that contract as a whole is to be determined by the arbitrator. The court presumably can determine the issue of the validity of the arbitration clause itself if that alone is challenged. The Court acknowledged this rule permits a court to enforce an arbitration agreement in a contract that the arbitrator later finds to be void. For authority to support a petition to vacate an arbitration award based on an illegal contract, see Ch. 20C, Arbitration: Confirming, Correcting, or Vacating the Award, § 20C.210.

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used to resist arbitration when the arbitration clause at issue is part of an agreement that is void due to illegality. The illegality must not be severable [see Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.44 (illegality of single, severable provision is arbitrable)] and it must violate an express statute or the public policy to be enforced by an express statute [see Civ. Code § 1667; Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(b)]. Counsel may wish to include authority from Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.30 regarding the applicability of general state law contract principles, or from Ch. 20C, Arbitration: Confirming, Correcting, or Vacating the Award, § 20C.210, addressing illegality in the context of vacating an arbitration award.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in opposition to one seeking to compel arbitration [see § 20A.10].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, the argument should include the express statute or policy being violated, discuss the manner in which that statute or policy is violated, and indicate why the illegal provision is not severable.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a form of response to a petition to compel arbitration that may be supported by this memorandum, as well as a procedural checklist, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 32, Contractual Arbitration: Agreements and Compelling Arbitration (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For memoranda to combine with this form, regarding other matters that the opposition may need to address, see §§ 20A.10-20A.12, 20A.20 et seq., 20A.30 et seq., 20A.40 et seq., 60 et seq., and 20A.80 et seq.

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

For forms addressing general contract principles, see Ch. 50, Contracts .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Illegality Affects Entire Contract

The facts and procedural background of Duffens v. Valenti (2008) 161 Cal. App. 4th434, 74 Cal. Rptr. 3d 311 , and the portions of the opinion discussing the inapplicability of the Federal Arbitration Act and the distinction between fraud in the inducement and fraud in the execution are set forth at § 20.42[3][a]. When an illegal contract that is correctly subject to revocation contains an arbitration agreement, the arbitration agreement will not be enforced. However, when the alleged illegality goes to only a portion of the contract (that does not include the arbitration agreement), the entire controversy, including the issue of illegality, remains arbitrable (161 Cal. App. 4th 434, 449) . This means that when the underlying agreement is illegal under other accepted standards, its arbitration clause can be avoided (161 Cal. App. 4th 434, 450) . Plaintiffs' allegations of breaches of statutory duty invoked the rule that contracts which are contrary to express statutes or to the policy of express statutes are illegal contracts and that illegality voids the entire contract (161 Cal. App. 4th 434, 451) . After finding the Federal Arbitration Act in applicable to this contract (161 Cal. App. 4th 434, 452) , the court of appeal said it would adhere to the analysis in Rosenthal v. Great Western Fin. Securities Corp (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 394, 402, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 875, 926 P.2d 1061 (Rosenthal) for evaluating this record in terms of California standards for enforceability of an arbitration clause, when the legality of the overall agreement is challenged. The court of appeal noted the dating service regulations' placement in division 3, Obligations, title 5, Extinction of Contracts, and inferred from that that the Legislature was concerned with regulating the manner in which dating service contracts were entered into, for the express purpose of providing the consumer with a means of release from them when exploitative contractual practices were followed. The Legislature used the terms "void and unenforceable" in the dating service statutes, which are a justification for securing "extinction" of a contract. The arbitration statutes, Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2 uses the term "revocation" to indicate when a contractual arbitration clause should not be enforced (although rescission is more accurate). All these distinctions and terminology are important in determining whether this form of illegality provides a specific basis for revocation of the arbitration provision. If a contract never existed, due to fraud in the execution or inception, no arbitration can be ordered under it. However, if a contract once existed, but was fraudulently induced, arbitration in some cases can be ordered, as when disappointed expectations are involved, in that performance did not match the promised result (161 Cal. App. 4th 434, 453) . Under Civ. Code § 1694.4(a) any contract for dating services which does not comply with Civ. Code § 1694 et seq. is void and unenforceable. Further, under Civ. Code § 1694.4(b) any contract for dating services entered into under willful and fraudulent or misleading information or advertisements of the seller is void and unenforceable. The section then provides for a private right of action for actual damages and treble damages by any buyer injured by a violation. When an alleged illegality goes to only a portion of the contract, not including an arbitration agreement, a court will be justified in ruling that the entire controversy, including the issue of illegality, arbitrable. Not only does the basic agreement fail to contain the mandatory provisions of Section 1694.3, it instead contains language about nonrefundability of payments made that is directly contrary to the required language. Contracts contrary to express statutes or to the policy of express statutes are illegal. That illegality voids the entire contract, including the arbitration clause. This particular omission cannot be deemed to be only a peripheral or minor illegality of the contract, because it goes to a major policy promoted by the statutory scheme. The dating services statutes specify that a contract that fails to meet the standards is void and unenforceable, but does not clarify how these the rules apply to an arbitration clause within that contract or agreement (161 Cal. App. 4th 434, 454). Specialized types of contracts must meet certain statutory standards in order to be valid (e.g., a broker's listing contract, or contracts entered into by a school board, city, or county). If a statute prescribes the only method in which a valid contract can be made, a contract that fails to follow that method is void. Required provisions were omitted from these contracts. The power of the arbitrator to determine the rights of the parties is dependent on the existence of a valid contract under which those rights might arise. In the absence of a valid contract no rights can arise and no power can be conferred on the arbitrator to determine nonexistent rights (161 Cal. App. 4th 434, 455) . The court concluded that when the agreements were read together with the statutes and authorities, because of the particular manner in which fraud in the inducement was alleged within the context of these statutorily insufficient and illegal agreements and because of the importance of the omitted provisions, the agreements did not belong within the general category allowing severable arbitration clauses. The dating service statutes represent the Legislature's intent to regulate in a particular manner contracts for dating services, and the statutes operate to exclude contracts for dating services from the scope of the general rule that a court will refrain from determining the legality of voidable contracts that contain an arbitration clause, and will instead allow an arbitrator to do so. The defects in these agreements are central to the policy of the statutes, and the express language of the statutes regarding unenforceability applies to the arbitration clauses as well. These conclusions applied to void the arbitration clauses contained within the agreements (161 Cal. App. 4th 434, 456) .

Green v. Mt. Diablo Hospital Dist. (1989) 207 Cal. App. 3d 63, 254 Cal. Rptr. 689 , involved multiple claims by a discharged hospital chief executive officer, as plaintiff, and a taxpayers' action in which the taxpayers (respondents) sought declarations (1) that a 1982 employment contract of a hospital's chief executive officer had expired by its terms, and (2) that the 1985 amendment to that contract and a related "buy-out" agreement were void and unconstitutional. Both the 1982 agreement and the buy-out agreement had arbitration provisions; and plaintiff petitioned to compel arbitration. The taxpayers opposed the petition. The trial court denied the petition, relying on Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(b) (grounds exist for the revocation of the agreement) and Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c) (possibility of conflicting rulings). Plaintiff appealed; the court of appeal affirmed.

The 1982 agreement had an "evergreen" clause that automatically extended the employment term for four years from each subsequent day of the contract period. To terminate plaintiff's employment, the district's board of directors had to agree by majority vote to do so and had to pay severance benefits equal to two years' salary, including housing allowance. The 1985 amendment increased the voting requirement to a four-fifths majority and the severance benefits to four years' salary. In November, 1986, the composition of the board changed and, fearing ouster, plaintiff forwarded tothe district board a termination agreement calling for various payments and benefits, the most substantial of which was that a trust was to be established for the benefit of plaintiff and plaintiff's spouse. The trust was to be funded with $822,614 and was to pay the former officer $95,000 a year for life, with payments to continue to the spouse after plaintiff's death. By a three-to-two vote, the district's board of directors approved the agreement at a closed session.

The grounds of illegality alleged by respondents included the following: (1) the evergreen provision in the 1982 agreement violated Health & Safety Code § 32121.5; (2) the 1982 agreement and the buy-out agreement amounted to illegal gifts to public officials [see Cal. Const., art. XVI, § 6]; (3) the 1985 amendment violated public policy; (4) the officer initiated private meetings with board members in violation of the Ralph M. Brown Act [see Gov. Code § 54953] in order to persuade them to accept the buy-out agreement; and (5) the establishment of the trust fund violated Health & Safety Code § 32121(e). The trial court additionally held that the supermajority requirement in the 1985 amendment was illegal and that the buy-out agreement provided extra compensation to a public official in violation of Cal. Const., art. XI, § 10(a) (207 Cal. App. 3d 63, 68-69) .

The court of appeal said the question was whether these violations would void the entire agreement or just the illegal provisions. The court of appeal cited California State Council of Carpenters v. Superior Court (1970) 11 Cal. App. 3d 144, 159, 89 Cal. Rptr. 625 , for the proposition that in order to avoid arbitration, the illegality must be such as to render the entire agreement illegal and unenforceable; a claim of illegality of incidental clauses of a contract that falls short of affording ground for revocation of entire contract is insufficient (207 Cal. App. 3d 63, 71) . The court discussed the various challenges to the legality of the buy-out agreement and concluded that those challenges went to the entire agreement, and were not incidental (207 Cal. App. 3d 63, 71-73) . Similarly, because it was impossible to ascertain what part of the consideration for the 1982 agreement was in exchange for the illegal evergreen provision, the attack went to that entire agreement too. However, the court considered arguments regarding the 1982 agreement moot, because even if only the illegal evergreen clause were avoided, the 1982 agreement would have expired by its own terms (207 Cal. App. 3d 63, 71) .

The court of appeal noted that Civ. Code 1667(1), (2) provides that contracts that are contrary to express statutes or to the policy of express statutes are illegal (207 Cal. App. 3d 63, 73) . The court cited Loving & Evans v. Blick (1949) 33 Cal. 2d 603, 609, 610, 204 P.2d 23 (discussed in Ch. 20C, Arbitration: Confirming, Correcting, or Vacating the Award, § 20C.210[3][b]) for the propositions that any such illegality voids the entire contract and that Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2 does not contemplate that the parties may provide for arbitration of controversies arising out of contracts that are expressly declared by law to be illegal and against public policy (207 Cal. App. 3d 63, 73) .

Plaintiff also challenged whether the grounds for revocation of the contract were supported by uncontroverted evidence. The court of appeal acknowledged that Loving & Evans v. Blick (1949) 33 Cal. 2d 603, 610, 204 P.2d 23 (discussed in Ch. 20C, Arbitration: Confirming, Correcting, or Vacating the Award, § 20C.210[3][b]) did say that arbitration should be denied if it appears to the court from uncontroverted evidence that the contract is illegal, but said that the Court did not condition its holding on the existence of uncontroverted evidence and did not establish a requirement of uncontradicted evidence. Rather, that case merely stands for the proposition that the legality of the underlying agreement should first be judicially determined. In addition, here, although there were contradictory affidavits on the issues of fraud and the closed sessions, there was no controversy regarding the constitutional violations, the ultra vires acts of the board, or the invalidity of the evergreen clause (207 Cal. App. 3d 63, 74) .

[b] Contract Contrary to Express Statute or to Policy of Express Statute

The portion of the opinion in Duffens v. Valenti (2008) 161 Cal. App. 4th 434, 74 Cal. Rptr. 3d 311 , dealing with the illegality and voidness of the entire agreement is discussed at [b], above.

Green v. Mt. Diablo Hospital Dist. (1989) 207 Cal. App. 3d 63, 254 Cal. Rptr. 689 , is discussed at [a], above.

[c] Alleged Illegality Creates Potential for Conflicting Rulings

The facts and procedural background of Green v. Mt. Diablo Hospital Dist. (1989) 207 Cal. App. 3d 63, 254 Cal. Rptr. 689 , are discussed at [a], above. Plaintiff also challenged the trial court's reliance on Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2(c) (set forth at § 20A.11[1], Paragraph A) in refusing to compel arbitration. The court of appeal disagreed. The court noted that the taxpayers were not subject to arbitration and said it was conceivable that arbitration of the breach of contract and specific performance issues between plaintiff and the hospital district could result in an award in favor of plaintiff, which award would be made moot by finding in the taxpayers' declaratory relief action that the contracts were illegal (207 Cal. App. 3d 63, 75) . The court of appeal concluded that the trial court had properly considered the potential for conflicting rules in denying plaintiff's petition to compel arbitration (207 Cal. App. 3d 63, 76) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20A ARBITRATION: RESISTING
PART II. FORMS
D. Defenses to Arbitration

2-20A California Points & Authorities § 20A.90

§ 20A.90 Designated Arbitration Tribunal Lacks Minimum Integrity by Being Identified With Petitioner

[1] FORM

RESPONDENT CANNOT BE COMPELLED TO ARBITRATE BECAUSE THE ARBITRATION TRIBUNAL DESIGNATED UNDER THE AGREEMENT IS SO IDENTIFIED WITH A PARTY TO THE AGREEMENT AS TO RENDER THE ARBITRATION AGREEMENT ILLUSORY. THE LACK OF MINIMAL INTEGRITY RENDERS THE AGREEMENT UNENFORCEABLE AS UNCONSCIONABLE.

A. Party Not to Be Arbitrator. Especially under circumstances in which there is a contract of adhesion, minimum levels of integrity must be met for private dispute settlement. If one who is a party, or so identified with a party as to be in fact that party,is designated as an arbitrator, the agreement to arbitrate is illusory. If the minimum levels of integrity are not achieved, and the "agreement to arbitrate" should be denied enforcement on the grounds of unconscionability (Graham v. Scissor-Tail, Inc. (1981) 28 Cal. 3d 807, 825, 826-827, 171 Cal. Rptr. 604, 623 P.2d 165).

[Optional] B. Union of One Party Is Improper Arbitrator. Especially under circumstances indicative of adhesion, "minimum levels of integrity" are not achieved when the union of one party is to be the arbitrator of disputes arising out of employment (Graham v. Scissor-Tail, Inc. (1981) 28 Cal. 3d 807, 826-827, 171 Cal. Rptr. 604, 623 P.2d 165).

[Optional] C. Design Review Board in Public Works Contract. In the context of a public works contract, a subcontractor is excused from exhausting the administrative remedy of arbitration before a dispute review board prior to litigation when the interests of the owner and the general contractor are aligned against the subcontractor and they, not the subcontractor, would select the members of the review board. The dispute review process in that situation is presumptively biased against the subcontractor and does not comport with fundamental notions of fairness. Thus, requiring a subcontractor to comply with the dispute review process would be unconscionable (Sehulser Tunnels/Pre-Con v. Traylor Brothers, Inc./Obayashi Corp. (2003) 111 Cal. App. 4th 1328, 1342-1343, 4 Cal. Rptr. 3d 655).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used to resist arbitration when the arbitration clause at issue provides for an arbitrator that is so identified with a party as to be unfair and improper. Note, however, that arbitration under rules approved by the Securities and Exchange Commission is required by federal law even though those rules provide for industry-affiliated arbitrators [Cohen v. Wedbush, Noble, Cooke, Inc. (9th Cir. 1988) 841 F.2d 282, 286 ; see Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, §§ 20.21, 20.41; see also McManus v. CIBC World Markets Corp. (2003) 109 Cal. App. 4th 76, 93-97, 134 Cal. Rptr. 2d 446 (in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.83[3][a], discussing then-current arbitrator selection process under NYSE and NASD arbitration rules and procedures)]. The Securities and Exchange Commission has approved the rules of the New York Stock Exchange, the American Stock Exchange, and the National Association of Securities Dealers.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in opposition to one seeking to compel arbitration [see § 20A.10].

Counsel should be prepared for the fact that, in the absence of other circumstances, the normal result of success under the points urged in this form is that the court will have the parties select a more neutral forum or will appoint the arbitrators at the request of a party. See Ch. 20B, Arbitration: Selecting Arbitrators; Arbitral Immunity, § 20B.10 for a memorandum in support of a petition to appoint an arbitrator.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, the argument should quote or refer to the arbitration provision at issue and explain the connection and unity of interest between the arbitrator and the petitioner.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a form of response to a petition to compel arbitration that may be supported by this memorandum, as well as a procedural checklist, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 32, Contractual Arbitration: Agreements and Compelling Arbitration (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

For memoranda to combine with this form, regarding other matters that the opposition may need to address, see §§ 20A.10-20A.12, 20A.20 et seq., 20A.30 et seq., 20A.40 et seq., 20A.60 et seq., and 20A.80 et seq.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Party Not to Be Arbitrator

Graham v. Scissor-Tail, Inc. (1981) 28 Cal. 3d 807, 171 Cal. Rptr. 604, 623 P.2d 165 , arose out of a dispute between a promoter and a group of performing musicians over a series of contracts providing for their concert appearances. The contracts were of a standard form promulgated by the musicians' union and one which members ofthe union were required to use whenever contracting to make professional appearances, and which promoters desiring to sponsor their performances had to utilize. The contract form provided for submission of all disputes arising thereunder to the union. The promoter brought an action on various contract grounds, and the musicians petitioned to compel arbitration, which was ordered. The union rendered an original award for the musicians, after arbitrating without notice to or appearance by the parties. When the parties mutually arranged to reopen the controversy, a union arbitrator heard a practically uncontested presentation by the promoter but made the award for the musicians. The musicians petitioned to confirm the award. The promoter petitioned to vacate the award and, on appeal from its confirmation, also challenged the validity of the order compelling arbitration.

The Supreme Court reversed the order confirming the award, and it directed that the order compelling arbitration be vacated. The Court found the agreement providing for arbitration to be a contract of adhesion which the promoter, despite his experience and standing in the industry, had to sign along with the musicians if either wanted to do business by virtue of the controlling position of the musician's union in the industry. The terms that were available for negotiation did not change the nonnegotiable character of the rest of the contract (28 Cal. 3d 807, 818-819) . The Court acknowledged, however, that the provisions of the agreement were not contrary to the reasonable expectations of the promoter, who was well aware the union was the sole arbiter under the contract (28 Cal. 3d 807, 821) . It also recognized that the arbitration statutes permit the parties to select an arbitrator who is not necessarily neutral (28 Cal. 3d 807, 821-822) . The Court noted, however, that when, as in this case, the contract designating such an arbitrator is the product of circumstances suggestive of adhesion, the possibility of overreaching by the dominant party looms large. A contract concluded in such circumstances must be scrutinized with particular care to insure that the party of lesser bargaining power, in agreeing to the contracts, is not left in the position of one deprived of any realistic and fair opportunity to prevail in a dispute under its terms (28 Cal. 3d 807, 824-825) .

The Court observed that while the leeway of the arbitration laws may permit the establishment of arrangements which vary to some extent from the dead-center of neutrality, the Court would have to insist, most especially in circumstances smacking of adhesion, that certain minimum levels of integrity be achieved if any such arrangement in question is to pass judicial muster. It is for the courts to determine, largely on a case by case basis, what these minimum levels will be. Although an arbitration agreement sets up contractual machinery to substitute for (although not duplicate) formal judicial proceedings, arbitration still must involve a tribunal which hears and decides disputes. Where the arbitration entity is incapable of deciding on the basis of what it has heard, as where that entity is so identified with a party as to be as good as that party, the agreement to arbitrate is essentially illusory, and devoid of minimal levels of integrity, and it should be denied enforcement as being unconscionable (28 Cal. 3d 807, 825) .

The Court stated that the "minimum levels of integrity" which are requisite to a contractual arrangement for the nonjudicial resolution of disputes are not achieved by an arrangement which designates the union of one of the parties as the arbitrator of disputes arising out of employment, especially when, as in the case before the Court, the arrangement is the product of circumstances indicative of adhesion (28 Cal. 3d 807, 826-827) . The Court pointed out that a contract purporting to designate one of the parties as the arbitrator of all disputes arising thereunder is illusory because the designated party has an interest in the outcome which, in the view of the law, will render fair and reasoned decision, based on the evidence presented, a virtual impossibility. The same situation occurs when the designated arbitrator is not the actual party but one whose interests are so allied with those of that party that, for all practical purposes, the arbitrator is subject to the same disabilities which prevent the party from serving. A contractual provision designating either the party or the allied entity as arbitrator must be denied enforcement as an unconscionable one. The Court then determined that the labor union as an arbitrator would have interests identical with those of its members who were parties to the dispute (28 Cal. 3d 807, 827) . The Court concluded that the arbitration agreement did not achieve the minimum levels of integrity necessary, and being inimical to the concept of arbitration, would be denied enforcement in any circumstances although especially when arising under an arrangement indicative of adhesion (28 Cal. 3d 807, 828) .

[b] Union of One Party Is Improper Arbitrator

Graham v. Scissor-Tail, Inc. (1981) 28 Cal. 3d 807, 171 Cal. Rptr. 604, 623 P.2d 165 , is discussed at [a], above.

[c] Design Review Board in Public Works Contract

Sehulser Tunnels/Pre-Con v. Traylor Brothers, Inc./Obayashi Corp. (2003) 111 Cal. App. 4th 1328, 4 Cal. Rptr. 3d 655 , arose out of the construction contracts for a 3.5 mile $90 million sewage discharge tunnel under the Pacific Ocean near San Diego. Defendant City of San Diego was the project owner. Defendant Traylor Brothers, Inc./Obayashi (TBO) was the general contractor. Plaintiff was the subcontractor who supplied the precast concrete ring segments lining the tunnel. Disputes arose as to cost overruns. TBO contended that plaintiff was required by the prime contract between TBO and the city to submit its claims to a Dispute Review Board (DRB) before pursuing litigation. The trial court disagreed. A jury awarded plaintiff $2.8 million in damages against TBO. The trial court awarded Sehulster another $1.6 million in attorney fees against TBO. Both defendants appealed, claiming that as a matter of law, plaintiff's claims were barred by its failure to comply with the DRB process.

The court of appeal affirmed, finding that the interests of the general contractor and the owner were adverse to those of the subcontractor, so that the contractually mandated DRB process was presumptively biased and unenforceable as a condition precedent to the subcontractor pursuing litigation (111 Cal. App. 4th 1328, 1332-1333, 1352) . The DRB was a three-member panel of construction professionals who issue a nonbinding opinion. It consists of one member selected by the city and approved by TBO, one member selected by TBO and approved by the city, and a third member, who would serve as chairperson, selected by the first two members and approved by both the city and TBO. The court of appeal quoted extensively from Graham v. Scissor-Tail,Inc. (1981) 28 Cal. 3d 807, 171 Cal. Rptr. 604, 623 P.2d 165 for the propositions that an agreement to submit a dispute to arbitration will not be enforced if the designated decisional body is so associated with a party that it is presumptively biased in favor of that party; that when the contract designating such an arbitrator is the product of circumstances suggestive of adhesion, the possibility of overreaching by the dominant party looms large; that such a contract must be scrutinized with particular care to insure that the party of lesser bargaining power is not left in a position depriving him of any realistic and fair opportunity to prevail in a dispute under its terms; and that the arbitration process must operate within minimum levels of integrity to pass judicial muster (111 Cal. App. 4th 1328, 1340) . The court of appeal said that although the DRB selection process might be appropriate and fair for resolving disputes between the owner and general contractor who are the appointing parties, it did not have the appearance of fairness in the context of a subcontractor's claim against the owner and general contractor (111 Cal. App. 4th 1328, 1341-1342) . The contract was presented to Sehulster on a take-it-or-leave-it basis. Sehulster had no meaningful opportunity or ability to negotiate the its provisions. The DRB members were appointed and compensated by TBO and the city, parties adverse to Sehulster because it was in the interests of both City and TBO that Sehulster's claim be denied. Such a scheme conflicts with fundamental notions of fairness. Under these circumstances, the court concluded, the DRB was presumptively biased in favor of TBO and the city, thus excusing Sehulster from any obligation to comply with the DRB process before filing suit (111 Cal. App. 4th 1328, 1342) .

Requiring the application of the DRB provisions of the prime contract to Sehulster's claim would be unconscionable (111 Cal. App. 4th 1328, 1343) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20A ARBITRATION: RESISTING
PART II. FORMS
D. Defenses to Arbitration

2-20A California Points & Authorities § 20A.91

§ 20A.91 Arbitration Rules Are Unfair and Unconscionable

[1] FORM

RESPONDENT CANNOT BE COMPELLED TO ARBITRATE BECAUSE THE RULES OF PROCEDURE PROVIDED UNDER THE ARBITRATION CLAUSE ARE UNFAIR AND UNCONSCIONABLE [AND WOULD OPERATE TO DENY RESPONDENT A FAIR OPPORTUNITY TO PRESENT HIS/HER/ITS POSITION].

A. Arbitration Rules Are Unfair and Unconscionable. When the rules of arbitration procedure designated in the arbitration provision are unfair to the extent of denying a party a fair opportunity to present his or her case, the arbitration provision is unconscionable and arbitration will not be compelled under the agreement (Graham v. Scissor-Tail, Inc. (1981) 28 Cal. 3d 807, 825-826, 171 Cal. Rptr. 604, 623 P.2d 165 ; Stirlen v. Supercuts, Inc. (1997) 51 Cal. App. 4th 1519, 1552, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 138 ; Treo v. Kettner Homeowners Assn. v. Superior Court (2008) 166 Cal. App. 4th 1055, 1067, 83 Cal. Rptr. 3d 318 ; see Civ. Code § 1670.5).

B. Doctrine of Unconscionability Does Not Offend Federal Arbitration Act. Judicial refusal to enforce an arbitration clause that is clearly unconscionable under a general contract principle not at all hostile to arbitration presents no obstacle to the objective of the Federal Arbitration Act or any other congressional purpose (Discover Bank v. Superior Court (Boehr) (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 148, 160-167, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 76, 13 P.3d 1100 ; Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Services, Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 114, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669 ; Gutierrez v. Autowest, Inc. (2004) 114 Cal. App. 4th 77, 86, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 267 ; Flores v. Transamerica HomeFirst, Inc. (2001) 93 Cal. App. 4th 846, 856-857, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 376 ; Stirlen v. Supercuts, Inc. (1997) 51 Cal. App. 4th 1519, 1551, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 138 ; see Ingle v. Circuit City Stores, Inc. (9th Cir. 2003) 328 F.3d 1165, 1170) .

C. Criteria of Unconscionability. Unconscionability has generally been held to include an absence of meaningful choice on the part of one of the two parties together with contract terms that are unreasonably favorable to the other party. Thus, unconscionability has both a "procedural" and a "substantive" element. Both procedural and substantive elements of unconscionability must be present in order for a court to refuse to enforce a contract or clause under the doctrine of unconscionability, but they need not be present in the same degree. A sliding scale is invoked under which the more substantively oppressive the contract term, the less evidence of procedural unconscionability is required to come to the conclusion that the term is unenforceable, and vice versa (Gentry v. Superior Court (Circuit City Stores, Inc.) (2007) 42 Cal. 4th 443, 468-470, 64 Cal. Rptr. 3d 773, 165 P.3d 556 ; Little v. Auto Stiegler, Inc. (2003) 29 Cal. 4th 1064, 1072, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 892, 63 P.3d 979 ; Parada v. Superior Ct. (2009) 176 Cal. App. 4th 1554, 1569, 98 Cal. Rptr. 3d 743 ; Bruni v. Didion (2008) 160 Cal. App. 4th 1272, 1277, 1288, 73 Cal. Rptr. 3d 395 ; Baker v. Osborne Development Corp. (2008) 159 Cal. App. 4th 884, 894, 71 Cal. Rptr. 3d 854 ; Higgins v. Superior Court (Disney/ABC International Television, Inc.) (2006) 140 Cal. App. 4th 1238, 1249, 45 Cal. Rptr. 3d 293 ; Nyulassy v. Lockheed Martin Corporation (2004) 120 Cal. App. 4th 1267, 1280, 1282, 1287, 16 Cal. Rptr. 3d 296 (more substantive, less procedural); Martinez v. Master Prot. Corp. (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 107, 113, 12 Cal. Rptr. 3d 663 ; Abramson v. Juniper Networks, Inc. (2004) 115 Cal. App. 4th 638, 655-656, 9 Cal. Rptr. 3d 422 ; Gutierrez v. Autowest, Inc. (2004) 114 Cal. App. 4th 77, 86, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 267 ; Jamarillo v. JH Real Estate Partners, Inc. (2003) 111 Cal. App. 4th 394, 400, 3 Cal. Rptr. 3d 525 ; Gutierrez v. Autowest, Inc. (2004) 114 Cal. App. 4th 77, 87-88, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 267 ; Harper v. Ultimo (2003) 113 Cal. App. 4th 1402, 1406, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 418 ; O'Hare v. Municipal Resource Consultants (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 267, 272-273, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 116 ; Fittante v. Palm Springs Motors, Inc. (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 725-726, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 659 ; Mercuro v. Superior Court (Countrywide Securities Corp.) (2002) 96 Cal. App. 4th 167, 174, 116 Cal. Rptr. 2d 671 ; Flores v. Transamerica HomeFirst, Inc. (2001) 93 Cal. App. 4th 846, 853, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 376 ; Kinney v. United Healthcare Services, Inc. (1999) 70 Cal. App. 4th 1322, 1328-1329, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 348 ; Stirlen v. Supercuts, Inc. (1997) 51 Cal. App. 4th 1519, 1531, 1533, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 138 ; Patterson v. ITT Consumer Financial Corp. (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 1659, 1663-1664, 1666-1667, 18 Cal. Rptr. 2d 563).

D. Element of Procedural Unconscionability. The procedural element of unconscionability focuses on two factors: "oppression" and "surprise." "Oppression" arises from an inequality of bargaining power which results in no real negotiation and an absence of meaningful choice. "Surprise" involves the extent to which the supposedly agreed-on terms of the bargain are hidden in the prolix printed form drafted by the party seeking to enforce the disputed terms. [If a contract is one of adhesion, the procedural element of unconscionability is present; procedural unconscionability can be inferred from the arbitration agreement itself when that agreement is so one-sided that it defies credulity to suggest that the weaker party had any input or that any desire of the weaker party to change the contract terms would have been considered or honored]. [Although failure to read a provision does not excuse compliance with it, it may establish actual surprise (the unfairness of which is reinforced by the defendant's failure to call the arbitration clause to the attention of plaintiffs). The circumstances of this transaction established actual surprise. While an agreement need not expressly provide for arbitration, but may do so by incorporating a referenced document that is readily available, the _____ (specify document, how, and when it was presented for signature, e.g., warranty booklet was not provided before or at the time the builder application was presented for signature just before the close of escrow). Thus, substantial evidence supported the trial court's findings of surprise and oppression and the conclusion of procedural unconscionability.] (Gentry v. Superior Court (Circuit City Stores, Inc.) (2007) 42 Cal. 4th 443, 469-470, 64 Cal. Rptr. 3d 773, 165 P.3d 556 ; Little v. Auto Stiegler, Inc. (2003) 29 Cal. 4th 1064, 1073, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 892, 63 P.3d 979 ; Parada v. Superior Ct. (2009) 176 Cal. App. 4th 1554, 1569, 98 Cal. Rptr. 3d 743 ; Sanchez v. Western Pizza Enterprises, Inc. (2009) 172 Cal. App. 4th 154, 165-166, 90 Cal. Rptr. 3d 818 ; Bruni v. Didion (2008) 160 Cal. App. 4th 1272, 1288 [-1289], 73 Cal. Rptr. 3d 395 ; Baker v. Osborne Development Corp. (2008) 159 Cal. App. 4th 884, 894-896, 71 Cal. Rptr. 3d 854 ; Higgins v. Superior Court (Disney/ABC International Television, Inc.) (2006) 140 Cal. App. 4th 1238, 1251-1253, 45 Cal. Rptr. 3d 293 ; Nyulassy v. Lockheed Martin Corporation (2004) 120 Cal. App. 4th 1267, 1280-1281, 1284-1286, 16 Cal. Rptr. 3d 296 ; Fitz v. NCR Corp. (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 702, 721-722, 13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 88 ; Martinez v. Master Prot. Corp. (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 107, 113-114, 12 Cal. Rptr. 3d 663 ; Abramson v. Juniper Networks, Inc. (2004) 115 Cal. App. 4th 638, 656, 662-664, 9 Cal. Rptr. 3d 422 ; Gutierrez v. Autowest, Inc. (2004) 114 Cal. App. 4th 77, 86, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 267 ; Harper v. Ultimo (2003) 113 Cal. App. 4th 1402, 1406, 1408-1410, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 418 ; O'Hare v. Municipal Resource Consultants (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 267, 282-283, 284, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 116 ; Fittante v. Palm Springs Motors, Inc. (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 725-728, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 659 ; Mercuro v. Superior Court (Countrywide Securities Corp.) (2002) 96 Cal. App. 4th 167, 174, 116 Cal. Rptr. 2d 671 ; Flores v. Transamerica HomeFirst, Inc. (2001) 93 Cal. App. 4th 846, 853-854, 113 Cal. Rptr.

2d 376 ; Kinney v. United Healthcare Services, Inc. (1999) 70 Cal. App. 4th 1322, 1329-1330, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 348 ; Stirlen v. Supercuts, Inc. (1997) 51 Cal. App. 4th 1519, 1532, 1533-1534, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 138 ; Treo v. Kettner Homeowners Assn. v. Superior Court (2008) 166 Cal. App. 4th 1055, 1059-1060, 1066-1067, 83 Cal. Rptr. 3d 318 ; Patterson v. ITT Consumer Financial Corp. (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 1659, 1664, 1667, 18 Cal. Rptr. 2d 563 ; see Graham v. Scissor-Tail, Inc. (1981) 28 Cal. 3d 807, 826-827, 171 Cal. Rptr. 604, 623 P.2d 165).

[Optional] D1. Under Contract of Adhesion. A contract of adhesion is a standardized contract, which, imposed and drafted by the party of superior bargaining strength, relegates to the subscribing party only the opportunity to adhere to the contract or reject it. Although contracts of adhesion are generally enforceable according to their terms, a provision contained in a contract of adhesion cannot be enforced if it does not fall within the reasonable expectations of the weaker or "adhering" party. Failure to pass the "reasonable expectations" test is generally treated as the equivalent of substantive unconscionability. An arbitration provision in a contract of adhesion will be considered unconscionable and will not be enforced if its terms do not fall within plaintiffs' reasonable expectations (Parada v. Superior Ct. (2009) 176 Cal. App. 4th 1554, 1569, 98 Cal. Rptr. 3d 743 ; Bruni v. Didion (2008) 160 Cal. App. 4th 1272, 1277, 1288-1289, 73 Cal. Rptr. 3d 395).

E. Element of Substantive Unconscionabilty. Substantive unconscionability involves a harsh or one-sided allocation of risks between the parties. A contractual term is suspect if it reallocates the risks of the bargain in an objectively unreasonable or unexpected manner, resulting in contract terms so one-sided as to shock the conscience. [Not all unreasonable risk allocations are unconscionable. Unenforceability of the clause is tied to the procedural aspects of unconscionability such that the greater the unfair surprise or inequality of bargaining power, the less unreasonable the risk allocation which will be tolerated] (Little v. Auto Stiegler, Inc. (2003) 29 Cal. 4th 1064, 1073, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 892, 63 P.3d 979 ; Parada v. Superior Ct. (2009) 176 Cal. App. 4th 1554, 1559, 98 Cal. Rptr. 3d 743 ; Sanchez v. Western Pizza Enterprises, Inc. (2009) 172 Cal. App. 4th 154, 175, 90 Cal. Rptr. 3d 818 ; Bruni v. Didion (2008) 160 Cal. App. 4th 1272, 1288-1289, 73 Cal. Rptr. 3d 395 ; Baker v. Osborne Development Corp. (2008) 159 Cal. App. 4th 884, 894-896, 71 Cal. Rptr. 3d 854 ; Higgins v. Superior Court (Disney/ABC International Television, Inc.) (2006) 140 Cal. App. 4th 1238, 1253-1254, 45 Cal. Rptr. 3d 293 ; Nyulassy v. Lockheed Martin Corporation (2004) 120 Cal. App. 4th 1267, 1281-1283, 16 Cal. Rptr. 3d 296 ; Gutierrez v. Autowest, Inc. (2004) 114 Cal. App. 4th 77, 86, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 267 ; Harper v. Ultimo (2003) 113 Cal. App. 4th 1402, 1406, 1408-1410, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 418 ; Jamarillo v. JH Real Estate Partners, Inc. (2003) 111 Cal. App. 4th 394, 401, 404-406, 3 Cal. Rptr. 3d 525 ; O'Hare v. Municipal Resource Consultants (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 267, 273, 277-278, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 116 ; Fittante v. Palm Springs Motors, Inc. (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 726, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 659 ; Mercuro v. Superior Court (Countrywide Securities Corp.) (2002) 96 Cal. App. 4th 167, 175-178, 116 Cal. Rptr. 2d 671 ; Flores v. Transamerica HomeFirst, Inc. (2001) 93 Cal. App. 4th 846, 854-855, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 376 ; Kinney v. United Healthcare Services, Inc. (1999) 70 Cal. App. 4th 1322, 1330-1332, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 348 ; Stirlen v. Supercuts, Inc. (1997) 51 Cal. App. 4th 1519, 1532, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 138 ; Treo v. Kettner Homeowners Assn. v. Superior Court (2008) 166 Cal. App. 4th 1055, 1059-1060, 1066-1067, 83 Cal. Rptr. 3d 318 ; Patterson v. ITT Consumer Financial Corp. (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 1659, 1664-1667, 18 Cal. Rptr. 2d 563).

[Optional] F. Sophistication of Weaker Party Is No Defense to Unconscionability. Even a sophisticated business person may be the victim of unconscionability if presented with a standard form contract the provisions of which are non-negotiable (Graham v. Scissor-Tail, Inc. (1981) 28 Cal. 3d 807, 818-819, 171 Cal. Rptr. 604, 623 P.2d 165 ; Dotson v. Amgen, Inc. (2010) 181 Cal. App. 4th 975, 980-982, 104 Cal. Rptr. 3d 341 ; Stirlen v. Supercuts, Inc. (1997) 51 Cal. App. 4th 1519, 1533-1534, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 138).

[Optional] G. Permissible Breadth of Order in Class Action. When an arbitration provision is unconscionable and unenforceable, the trial court in a class action has authority to order that the arbitration provision not be enforced against potential class members (Patterson v. ITT Consumer Financial Corp. (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 1659, 1663-1667, 18 Cal. Rptr. 2d 563).

[Optional] H. Provision for Arbitral Review Is Unconscionable. A post-arbitration proceeding, either judicial or arbitral, wholly or largely to benefit the party that drafted and imposed the arbitration agreement at the expense of the party on which the arbitration is imposed is unconscionable. Although seemingly neutral on its face,a provision that allows either party to have an award in excess of $50,000 reviewed by a second arbitrator is so one-sided as to be unconscionable. The $50,000 threshold only benefits the party against whom an award of that magnitude is likely to be entered. While an asymmetrical arbitration may be permissible when there is a "legitimate commercial need," that need must be other than the stronger party's desire to maximize its advantage in the arbitration process (Little v. Auto Stiegler, Inc. (2003) 29 Cal. 4th 1064, 1074, 1077-1079, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 892, 63 P.3d 979 ; Fittante v. Palm Springs Motors, Inc. (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 722-724, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 659).

[Optional] I. Prohibition on Classwide Arbitration Is Unconscionable. A class arbitration prohibition in a consumer contract of adhesion in a setting in which disputes between the contracting parties involve small amounts of damages, when it is alleged that the party with the superior bargaining power has carried out a scheme to deliberately cheat large numbers of consumers of individually small sums of money, [at least to the extent the issue is governed by California law], becomes in practice an exculpatory clause and is unconscionable and unenforceable (Discover Bank v. Superior Court (Boehr) (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 148, 161, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 76, 113 P.3d 1100 (remanding for determination of choice of law issue); Parada v. Superior Ct. (2009) 176 Cal. App. 4th 1554, 1573, 98 Cal. Rptr. 3d 743 (prohibition on consolidation or joinder); Gatton v. T-Mobile USA, Inc. (2007 152 Cal. App. 4th 571, 579-581, 61 Cal. Rptr. 3d 344 ; Cohen v. DirecTV, Inc. (2006) 142 Cal. App. 4th 1442, 1451-1455, 48 Cal. Rptr. 3d 813 ; Klussman v. Cross Country Bank (2005) 134 Cal. App. 4th 1283, 1290, 1294, 36 Cal. Rptr. 3d 728 (finding California law applicable after choice of law analysis); Aral v. Earthlink, Inc. (2005) 134 Cal. App. 4th 544, 556-557, 36 Cal. Rptr. 3d 229 (finding California law applicable after choice of law analysis); see Civ. Code § 1668).

[Optional] J. Arbitration Agreement May Be Procedurally Unconscionable Despite Opt-Out Provision. An arbitration agreement may have an element of procedural unconscionability notwithstanding an opt-out provision. The lack of material information about the disadvantageous terms of the arbitration agreement, combined with the likelihood that _____ [specify, e.g., employees felt at least some pressure not to opt out of the arbitration agreement], supports the conclusion that the agreement is not entirely free from procedural unconscionability _____ [Add situation-specific facts, e.g., The one-page description of the advantages and disadvantages of arbitration gave a very one-sided view of arbitration and failed to mention reduced limitation periods, limitation on the length of time for which back pay could be recovered, a cap on punitive damages, that there was no right to attorney's fees and costs, which would be provided by the overtime pay statute, and limited discovery] (Gentry v. Superior Court (Circuit City Stores, Inc.) (2007) 42 Cal. 4th 443, 451, 468, 470-472, 64 Cal. Rptr. 3d 773, 165 P.3d 556).

[Optional] K. Arbitration Agreement Is Wholly Unenforceable on Account of Unconscionable Provisions. Although Civil Code Section 1670.5(a) gives a court authority to sever the unconscionable portions of an arbitration clause and enforce the remainder, with respect to an arbitration clause that suffers from multiple problems of unconscionability or unconscionable provisions that are not severable, severing the unconscionable portions of the clause and compelling arbitration is not appropriate (Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Services, Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 121-122, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669 ; Parada v. Superior Ct. (2009) 176 Cal. App. 4th 1554, 1585-1587, 98 Cal. Rptr. 3d 743 ; Sanchez v. Western Pizza Enterprises, Inc. (2009) 172 Cal. App. 4th 154, 181, 90 Cal. Rptr. 3d 818 ; Franco v. Athens Disposal Co., Inc. (2009) 171 Cal. App. 4th 1277, 1303, 90 Cal. Rptr. 3d 539 ; Murphy v. Check 'N Go of California, Inc. (2007) 156 Cal. App. 4th 138, 149, 67 Cal. Rptr. 3d 120 ; Fitz v. NCR Corp. (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 702, 726-727, 13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 88 ; Abramson v. Juniper Networks, Inc. (2004) 115 Cal. App. 4th 638, 666-668, 9 Cal. Rptr. 3d 422 ; O'Hare v. Municipal Resource Consultants (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 267, 279, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 116 ; Mercuro v. Superior Court (Countrywide Securities Corp.) (2002) 96 Cal. App. 4th 167, 184, 116 Cal. Rptr. 2d 671 ; Flores v. Transamerica HomeFirst, Inc. (2001) 93 Cal. App. 4th 846, 857-858, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 376). [Refusing to compel arbitration is especially appropriate when the entire arbitration provision is unilateral, and/or the multiple defects indicate a systematic effort to impose arbitration on the weaker party, not simply as an alternative to litigation, but as an inferior forum that works to the stronger party's advantage. With an unconscionably unilateral arbitration clause, there is no single provision a court could strike or restrict in order to remove the unconscionable taint from the agreement. The only option would be to reform the agreement to make it bilateral; and a court has no power to do that (Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Services, Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 124-125, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669 ; Nyulassy v. Lockheed Martin Corporation (2004) 120 Cal. App. 4th 1267, 1287-1288, 16 Cal. Rptr. 3d 296 ; Fitz v. NCR Corp. (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 702, 727-728, 13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 88 ; Abramson v. Juniper Networks, Inc. (2004) 115 Cal. App. 4th 638, 666-668, 9 Cal. Rptr. 3d 422 ; O'Hare v. Municipal Resource Consultants (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 267, 279, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 116 ; Mercuro v. Superior Court (Countrywide Securities Corp.) (2002) 96 Cal. App. 4th 167, 185, 116 Cal. Rptr. 2d 671 ; Flores v. Transamerica HomeFirst, Inc. (2001) 93 Cal. App. 4th 846, 857-858, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 376)].

[Optional] L. Unconscionable Portions of Arbitration Agreement Will Not Be Severed After They Are No Longer Needed by Party Urging Arbitration. When an arbitration agreement is not only permeated with unconscionability, but when the primary agreement has been terminated and the party urging arbitration obtained everything it bargained under that agreement, it is woefully unfair, and justice would not be served, by severing post hoc the offending provisions for which the party urging arbitration no longer has any use, and requiring the party claiming injury to arbitrate its claim (Flores v. Transamerica HomeFirst, Inc. (2001) 93 Cal. App. 4th 846, 857-858, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 376).

[Optional] M. Court Must Strike Unconscionable Remedy Limitations Before Ordering Arbitration. Even if the arbitrator has broad discretion to interpret an arbitration agreement, the court has the duty, before compelling arbitration, to strike from the arbitration clause any provisions that would deprive the arbitrator of authority to award statutory remedies or any relief that would otherwise be allowable in court (Independent Assn. of Mailbox Center Owners, Inc. v. Superior Court (Mail Boxes Etc., USA, Inc.) (2005) 133 Cal. App. 4th 396, 410, 34 Cal. Rptr. 3d 659).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used to resist arbitration under an arbitration clause that is so unfair as to be unconscionable; that is one which the weaker party had no real opportunity to negotiate and which allocates the risks, rights, or remedies in a manner so unfair as to "shock the conscience." The first bracketed sentence in Paragraph D, regarding when it is permissible to infer procedural unconscionability is from the portion of O'Hare v. Municipal Resource Consultants (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 267, 283-284, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 116 , discussed at [3][d], below. The second bracketed sentence in Paragraph D, regarding the plaintiffs' not having read the arbitration agreement and surprise as evidence of procedural unconscionability, is from Baker v. Osborne Development Corp. (2008) 159 Cal. App. 4th 884, 895-896, 71 Cal. Rptr. 3d 854 , which points out that defendant never brought the arbitration provision to plaintiffs. Optional paragraph D1 explains how the concept of substantive unconscionability is applied in the context of a contract of adhesion [see Bruni v. Didion (2008) 160 Cal. App. 4th 1272, 1277, 1288-1289, 73 Cal. Rptr. 3d 395 , discussed at [3][c], below]. Optional Paragraphs F and G are for use when respondent is a sophisticated business person or in a class action, respectively. Optional Paragraph H is for use when a facially neutral review provision in fact only benefits the party that drafted and imposed the arbitration agreement. Optional Paragraph I is to resist enforcement of a prohibition on or waiver of classwide arbitration. Unenforceability of class arbitration waivers in the context of unwaivable statutory rights is addressed in § 20A.22, Optional Paragraph G. Optional Paragraph J is to argue that an arbitration clause is procedurally unconscionable despite the fact that it has an opt-out provision. Paragraphs K and L are to rebut any argument that the unconscionable portions of the arbitration agreement can be stricken and the remainder enforced.

Optional Paragraph M is for use to argue for an order striking as unconscionable limitations on statutory remedies. The particular appropriateness of class arbitration waivers for severance is addressed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.86, Optional Paragraph F.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in opposition to one seeking to compel arbitration [see § 20A.10].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, the argument should quote or refer to the arbitration provision at issue and the circumstances under which it was negotiated and explain each instance of unequal or unfair bargaining power and allocation of risk. If the party petitioning to compel arbitration has claimed, or counsel anticipates that petitioner will argue, in a reply memoranda, that certain of the unequal risk allocations are necessary for business reasons, the argument should negate any such claim by showing other ways the petitioner has to protect its legitimate business interests.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a form of response to a petition to compel arbitration that may be supported by this memorandum, as well as a procedural checklist, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 32, Contractual Arbitration: Agreements and Compelling Arbitration (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For a form addressing adhesion contract principles in the context of a medical malpractice agreement governed by Code Civ. Proc. § 1295, see Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.45.

Unenforceability of class arbitration waivers in the context of unwaivable statutory rights is addressed in § 20A.22, Optional Paragraph G. The particular appropriateness of class arbitration waivers for severance is addressed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.86, Optional Paragraph F.

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

For memoranda to combine with this form, regarding other matters that the opposition may need to address, see §§ 20A.10-20A.12, 20A.20 et seq., 20A.30 et seq., 20A.40 et seq., 20A.60 et seq., and 20A.80 et seq.

For forms addressing general contract principles, including unconscionability, see Ch. 50, Contracts .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memorandum in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.86 may be used oppose this form by supporting the contention that if the unconscionable portions of the arbitration clause are severable, the remainder of the arbitration clause may be enforced. The authorities in Optional Paragraph H, regarding a provision for review by a second arbitrator, may be opposed by those in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.87. The memorandum in Optional Paragraph I, regarding the unconscionability and thus unenforceability of a class arbitration waiver may be opposed by those in form Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.88 when a choice of foreign law provision in the parties' contract is enforceable and designates a foreign law under which the class arbitration wavier is enforceable.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Arbitration Rules Are Unfair and Unconscionable

Civ. Code § 1670.5 provides that:

> (a) If the court as a matter of law finds the contract or any clause of the contract to have been unconscionable at the time it was made the court may refuse to enforce the contract, or it may enforce the remainder of the contract without the unconscionable clause, or it may so limit the application of any unconscionable clause as to avoid any unconscionable result.
>
> (b) When it is claimed or appears to the court that the contract or any clause thereof may be unconscionable, the parties shall have an opportunity to present evidence as to its commercial setting, purpose, and effect to aid the court in making its determination.

The plaintiff in Dotson v. Amgen, Inc. (2010) 181 Cal. App. 4th 975, 980-982, 104 Cal. Rptr. 3d 341 , was a highly educated attorney, who knowingly entered into a contract containing an arbitration provision in exchange for a generous compensation and benefits package. For that reason, the court found a minimum degree of procedural unconscionability, due to the fact that the employment contract offer was presented on a take-it or leave-it basis.

The facts and procedural background of Graham v. Scissor-Tail, Inc. (1981) 28 Cal. 3d 807, 171 Cal. Rptr. 604, 623 P.2d 165 , are discussed at § 20A.90[3][a]. Even a proper tribunal is of little consequence if it proceeds under rules which deny a party the fair opportunity to present his or her side of the dispute. If a party resisting arbitration can show that the rules under which arbitration is to proceed will operate to deprive him or her of the common law right of fair procedure, the agreement to arbitrate should not be enforced. When the established procedure denies the resisting party a fair opportunity to present his or her position, the court should refuse to compel arbitration (28 Cal. 3d 807, 825-826) . The record in the instant case disclosed nothing to indicate that the union's arbitration procedures operated to deny any party a fair opportunity to present its position (28 Cal. 3d 807, 825-826) . However, the Court did find that the contractual arrangement designating the union of one of the parties as the arbitrator of employment disputes, arising out of circumstances indicative of adhesion, lacked minimum levels of integrity and would not be enforced (28 Cal. 3d 807, 826-827) .

Plaintiff in Stirlen v. Supercuts, Inc. (1997) 51 Cal. App. 4th 1519, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 138 , filed a wrongful termination action against his former employer. The employer moved to compel arbitration. The motion was denied on the ground that the employment contract was unconscionable and unenforceable as against public policy in that it violated Civ. Code § 1668 by exempting the employer from its own willful acts including fraud and violation of law. The court of appeal affirmed, holding, in part, that Civ. Code § 1670.5 is not preempted by the Federal Arbitration Act (9 U.S.C. § 2) (51 Cal. App. 4th 1519, 1544-1552) [see discussion at [b], below].

The employment contract provided that defendant employer could seek protection or redress in state or federal court for violations of paragraphs 7, 8, 9, and 10 of the agreement relating to inventions, trade secrets, confidential and proprietary information, and employee's promise not to compete after termination. Employee was limited to arbitration to resolve all claims related to employment, including tort claims, claims under California Fair Employment and Housing Act (Gov. Code § 12940 et seq.), Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (§ 700 et seq.; 42 U.S.C. § 2000e et seq.), the Age Discrimination in Employment Act (29 U.S.C. § 621 et seq.), the Americans with Disabilities Act (42 U.S.C. § 12101 et seq.), and any other statute. Employee's damages in arbitration were limited to actual damages for breach of contract, less any setoff in mitigation; and "the parties" were not entitled to any other remedy at law or at equity including other monetary damages, injunctive relief, exemplary damages, and/or specific performance. Arbitration was to be held pursuant to the Federal Arbitration Act (9 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.) (FAA) and California's Code Civ. Proc. § 1280 et seq. Plaintiff's negotiations for the job with defendant centered around compensation, including stock options and bonuses. The contract was not presented to plaintiff until after he had accepted employment. Then, it was presented to him as standard provisions that were not negotiable.

The court of appeal concluded that the arbitration clause at issue was unconscionably one-sided and unfair in numerous respects and therefore unenforceable in its entirety (51 Cal. App. 4th 1519, 1552) .

In Treo v. Kettner Homeowners Assn. v. Superior Court (2008) 166 Cal. App. 4th 1055, 1059, 83 Cal. Rptr. 3d 318 , plaintiff homeowners association of a condominium project sued the developer for alleged construction defects. A provision of the homeowners association's covenants, conditions and restrictions (CC&R's) required that all disputes between the association and the developer be decided by a general judicial reference pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 638 (166 Cal. App. 4th 1055, 1059) . The developer moved for an order submitting the case to a judicial referee. The homeowners association opposed the order, arguing that the provision of its CC&R's was not a contract as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 638, and that if it was, it was unconscionable and unforceable. The trial court granted developer's motion and ordered the matter to a general judicial referee. The association appealed (166 Cal. App. 4th 1055, 1059) .

The court of appeal issued a peremptory writ of mandate directing the superior court to vacate its order granting the motion for general reference and enter an order denying the motion. The court concluded that the CC&R's did not suffice as contract when the issue involved was the waiver pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 638, of the constitutional right to trial by jury. While it may have been reasonable under the circumstances to bind the owners and the association concerning the governance of the community and the placement of restrictions on the use of property, the Legislature did not intend that CC&R's be sufficient to effectively and permanently waive the constitutional right to trial by jury (166 Cal. App. 4th 1055, 1067) . When the Legislature stated in Code Civ. Proc. § 638 that the right to jury trial could be waived by written contract, it did not mean to include equitable servitudes created by the CC&R's of common interest communities. Treating CCR's as a contract such that they were sufficient to waive the right to trial by jury did not comport with the importance of the right waived (166 Cal. App. 4th 1055, 1059-1060, 1066-1067) . Because of this conclusion, it was unnecessary for the court to determine whether the provision is unconscionable (166 Cal. App. 4th 1055, 1067) .

[b] Doctrine of Unconscionability Does Not Offend Federal Arbitration Act

In Discover Bank v. Superior Court (Boehr) (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 148, 161, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 76, 113 P.3d 1100 , plaintiff cardholder, a California resident, alleged that defendant had a fraudulent practice of charging a $29 late fee for payments received after 1:00 p.m. (an undisclosed deadline) on the due date. Defendant successfully moved to compel arbitration in accordance with the cardholder agreement, which provided that it was governed by Delaware law. Contrary to an express provision of the cardholder agreement, plaintiff sought to pursue classwide arbitration, favored by California law, but allowed to be waived by Delaware law. The trial court ruled that the classwide arbitration prohibition was unconscionable and unenforceable. The court of appeal ruled, without disputing that the waiver would be unenforceable under California law and without addressing the choice-of-law issue, that the Federal Arbitration Act (FAA; 9 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.) preempted California's rule that classwide arbitration waivers are unconscionable. Plaintiff sought review by the California Supreme Court.

The California Supreme Court reversed and remanded, discussing the circumstances under which a class arbitration prohibition is unconscionable and unenforceable, holding that the FAA does not preempt the state law of unconscionability, and directing the choice of law issue to be determined on remand (36 Cal. 4th 148, 173-174) . After discussing California's strong public policy in favor of class proceeding, both in court and in arbitration, as the only practicable means for addressing situations in which business practices damage many individuals, each in small amounts and the unenforceability of class actions waivers, based on the explicit prohibition in the Consumers' Legal Remedies Act [see Civ. Code § 1751], the strong public policy evidenced by Civ. Code § 1668 against exculpatory clauses, tantamount to a class action waiver in some situations, and the doctrine of unconscionability in general (36 Cal. 4th 148, 174) , the Court discussed class action waivers and Federal Arbitration Act preemption.

The Court noted the distinction between statutes that govern only arbitration clauses, which are preempted by Section 2 of the FAA [9 U.S.C. § 2], and generally applicable contract defenses, such as fraud, duress, and unconscionability, which are not preempted (36 Cal. 4th 148, 165-166) . Here, the class action waivers were unconscionable because in the nature of exculpatory clauses, a contract defense they were generally applicable to all contracts. The FAA does not federalize the law of unconscionability or related contract defenses, except to the extent that it forbids the use of those defenses to discriminate against arbitration clauses. There is no such discrimination with respect to California's rule against class action waivers (36 Cal. 4th 148, 177) . The Court discussed Gilmer v. Interstate/Johnson Lane (1991) 500 U.S. 20, 26, 32, 111 S. Ct. 1647, 114 L. Ed. 2d 26 and Green Tree Financial Corp. v. Bazzle (2003) 539 U.S. 444, 123 S. Ct. 2402, 156 L. Ed.2d 414 , and concluded that neither required a contrary result (36 Cal. 4th 148, 168-172) . The court noted that Green Tree's holding was very limited and did not question state courts' rights to enforce general contract rules regarding unconscionability and public policy that preclude class action waivers. Nor did Green Tree even address the issue of whether the determination of unconscionability should be made by the court or by the arbitrator (36 Cal. 4th 148, 172) . Under California law, specifically Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2, arbitration agreements are valid, irrevocable, and enforceable, except upon grounds supporting revocation of any contract, and as limited by contract principles in law and equity (36 Cal. 4th 148, 163) .

The facts and procedural background of Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Services, Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669 , and the portion of the opinion addressing the arbitrability of claims under California's Fair Employment and Housing Act (Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.), are discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.23[3][a]. In discussing general principles of unconscionability, the Court noted that a court may not rely on anything that is unique to an arbitration agreement when assessing unconscionability of an agreement governed by the Federal Arbitration Act ("FAA"). The fact that ordinary principles of unconscionability may manifest themselves in forms peculiar to the arbitration context does not mean that application of ordinary principles disfavors or disparages arbitration (24 Cal. 4th 83, 114, 119) .

The facts and procedural background of Gutierrez v. Autowest, Inc. (2004) 114 Cal. App. 4th 77, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 267 , are discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.23[3][h]. In its initial mention of the defense of unconscionability, the court noted that it was a generally available contract formation defense that does not single out arbitration agreements; thus it does not violate the Federal Arbitration Act (114 Cal. App. 4th 77, 86) .

Plaintiffs in Flores v. Transamerica HomeFirst, Inc. (2001) 93 Cal. App. 4th 846, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 376 , were husband and wife senior citizens who borrowed from defendant under a reverse mortgage using their home as security. When they sold the home and received the final loan payoff demand, plaintiffs discovered for the first time that they were obligated to pay not only the $72,018 in principal they had borrowed plus interest on that principal but also another $75,000 in "contingent interest" which represented 50 percent of the market value appreciation over the two-year loan period. Plaintiffs paid the payoff demand under protest and then filed suit claiming unfair business practices, violations of the Consumer Legal Remedies Act, unconscionability, fraud, unlawful prepayment penalties, and bad faith. HomeFirst removed the action to federal court on the ground of federal preemption, but the federal court remanded the matter back to state court. HomeFirst then petitioned to compel arbitration pursuant to arbitration clauses contained in the loan agreement and deed of trust signed by plaintiffs. The trial court denied the petition, finding the arbitration unconscionable. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The loan documents contained an arbitration provision which, among other things, provided that "Notwithstanding anything that may be contained in this Section to the contrary, this Section does not limit your right to foreclose against the Property (whether judicially or non-judicially by exercising your right of sale or otherwise), to exercise self-help remedies such as set-off, or to obtain injunctive relief for the appointment of a receiver from any appropriate court, whether before, during or after any arbitration." Throughout these quoted provisions, the terms "you," "your," and "Lender" refer to HomeFirst. "I" refers to the borrower, which was somewhat confusing, because in the "Important Information for All Borrowers" that accompanied the loan documents, "you" and "your" to referred to the borrower.

The court of appeal began its discussion of unconscionability by noting that an agreement to arbitrate is enforceable, save on such grounds as exist for the revocation of any contract, and that as is true for any contract, an arbitration provision may be held unenforceable if it is unconscionable (93 Cal. App. 4th 846, 850-851) . Unconscionability is ultimately a question of law for the court (93 Cal. App. 4th 846, 851) . As to Defendant's argument that refusal to enforce the arbitration clause on the ground of unconscionability singled out arbitration agreements and was therefore precluded by the Federal Arbitration Act (hereafter FAA, the court of appeal said that argument was unsound. Section 2 of the FAA contains language virtually identical to that of Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2: a written agreement to arbitrate a controversy "shall be valid, irrevocable, and enforceable, save upon such grounds as exist at law or in equity for the revocation of any contract." Generally applicable contract defenses, including unconscionability, may be applied to invalidate arbitration agreements without contravening the FAA. Judicial refusal to enforce an arbitration clause clearly unconscionable under a general contract law principle not at all hostile to arbitration presents no obstacle to the objective of the FAA or any other congressional purpose (93 Cal. App. 4th 846, 856) . Requiring a "modicum of bilaterality" in arbitration agreements does not single out arbitration for disfavor. While that form of unconscionability (e.g., one-sided choice of forums) may be peculiar to the context of arbitration,the application of ordinary principles of unconscionability does not disparage arbitration as a favored voluntary remedy (93 Cal. App. 4th 846, 857) .

The facts and procedural background of Stirlen v. Supercuts, Inc. (1997) 51 Cal. App. 4th 1519, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 138 , are discussed at [a], above. The matter was not originally before them, but the court had asked for briefs on whether the entire arbitration clause could be invalidated under the state doctrine of unconscionability without offense to the Federal Arbitration Act (9 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.; FAA) [see Allied-Bruce Terminix Cos. v. Dobson (1995) 513 U.S. 265, 115 S. Ct. 834, 130 L. Ed. 2d 753 , discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.20[3][c]] (51 Cal. App. 4th 1519, 1543) . Though some California statutes have been preempted [see Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.22], California statutes by and large are designed to encourage resort to the arbitral process and do not conflict with any policy of the FAA [see Volt Info. Sciences v. Leland Stanford Jr. Univ. Bd. of Trustees (1989) 489 U.S. 468, 476, n.5, 109 S. Ct. 1248, 103 L. Ed. 2d 488 , discussed in § 20A.11[3][b]] (51 Cal. App. 4th 1519, 1543-1544) . The findings that restriction on arbitral remedies was unenforceable as against public policy, and that the arbitration clause was unconscionable were justified by Civ. Code §§ 1668, 1670.5, which define "unlawful contracts." Those statutes do not single out arbitration agreements or in any way reflect an antiarbitration policy, nor do they facially conflict with substantive federal law in any particular area. State courts can invalidate an arbitration clause on grounds which "arose to govern issues concerning the validity, revocability, and enforceability of contracts generally" (51 Cal. App. 4th 1519, 1544) . The FAA is not offended by the refusal to enforce an arbitration agreement under state law contract principles of unconscionability (51 Cal. App. 4th 1519, 1547-1548) , except in situations involving arbitration procedures approved by the Securities and Exchange Commission (51 Cal. App. 4th 1519, 1548-1550) . The court of appeal concluded that judicial refusal to enforce an arbitration clause that is clearly unconscionable under a general contract principle not at all hostile to arbitration presents no obstacle to the objective of the FAA or any other congressional purpose (51 Cal. App. 4th 1519, 1551) .

Plaintiff in Ingle v. Circuit City Stores, Inc. (9th Cir. 2003) 328 F.3d 1165 , was required to sign an arbitration agreement in order for defendant to consider her application for employment. Later, she sued defendant, a Virginia corporation in federal district court for the Southern District of California, alleging sexual harassment, sex discrimination, disability discrimination under the California Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA, Gov. Code § 12940 et seq.), and sex discrimination and retaliation under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. § 2000e et seq.). Defendant moved to compel arbitration. The district court denied the motion. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, finding the arbitration agreement unconscionable under California law. The Federal Arbitration Act (FAA) provides that arbitration agreements are valid, irrevocable, and enforceable unless grounds exist at law or in equity for the revocation of any contract [9 U.S.C. § 2]. The FAA required arbitration agreements to be on an equal footing with other contracts. Thus, arbitration agreements are subject to all defenses to enforcement that apply to contracts generally. To evaluate the validity of an arbitration agreement, federal courts should apply ordinary state-law principles that govern contracts. Therefore, the district court applied California law. Unconscionability is a generally applicable defense to contracts; thus California courts may refuse to enforce an unconscionable arbitration agreement (328 F.3d 1165, 1170) .

[c] Criteria of Unconscionability

The facts and procedural background of Gentry v. Superior Court (Circuit City Stores, Inc.) (2007) 42 Cal. 4th 443, 64 Cal. Rptr. 3d 773, 165 P.3d 556 , are discussed in § 20A.22[3][d]. In case the issue of unconscionability was not rendered moot by the decision on remand, the Court discussed the general criteria of unconscionability, noting that unconscionability has both a procedural and a substantive element, the former focusing on "oppression" or "surprise" due to unequal bargaining power, the latter on "overly harsh" or "one-sided" results (42 Cal. 4th 443, 468-469) . The procedural element of an unconscionable contract generally takes the form of a contract of adhesion, which, imposed and drafted by the party of superior bargaining strength, relegates to the subscribing party only the opportunity to adhere to the contract or reject it. Substantively unconscionable terms may take various forms, but may generally be described as unfairly one-sided. The prevailing view is that procedural and substantive unconscionability must both be present in order for a court to exercise its discretion to refuse to enforce a contract or clause under the doctrine of unconscionability. However, they need not be present in the same degree. A sliding scale is invoked which disregards the regularity of the procedural process of the contract formation, that creates the terms, in proportion to the greater harshness or unreasonableness of the substantive terms themselves. In other words, the more substantively oppressive the contract term, the less evidence of procedural unconscionability is required to come to the conclusion that the term is unenforceable, and vice versa (42 Cal. 4th 443, 469) . A conclusion that a contract contains no element of procedural unconscionability is tantamount to saying that, no matter how one-sided the contract terms, a court will not disturb the contract because of its confidence that the contract was negotiated or chosen freely, that the party subject to a seemingly one-sided term is presumed to have obtained some advantage from conceding the term or that, if one party negotiated poorly, it is not the court's place to rectify these kinds of errors or asymmetries. The Court concluded that the Court of Appeal erred in finding the present agreement free of procedural unconscionability (42 Cal. 4th 443, 470) .

The portions of the opinion in Little v. Auto Stiegler, Inc. (2003) 29 Cal. 4th 1064, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 892, 63 P.3d 979 , considering unconscionability in general and the unconscionability of the provision for review are discussed at [h], below.

In Parada v. Superior Ct. (2009) 176 Cal. App. 4th 1554, 98 Cal. Rptr. 3d 743 , investor-customers sued defendant-investment company for a determination that the brokerage's arbitration agreement was unenforceable due to unconscionable provisions in it. They sought damages for fraud and related claims. The arbitration agreement required them to arbitrate disputes before a panel of three arbitrators from JAMS and prohibited consolidation or joinder of claims. The customers lost substantial amounts. In opposing the motion to compel arbitration, the customers presented evidence that the advance deposit required by JAMS for a panel of three arbitrators would be prohibitively expensive.

The court of appeals upheld the trial court's determination that the agreement was unenforceable (176 Cal. App. 4th 1554, 1587) . In its enforceability analysis, the court of appeals noted that the procedural unconscionability of each provision must be measured in a sliding scale with its substantive unconscionability (176 Cal. App. 4th 1554, 1569) . The portion of the opinion discussing procedural unconscionability is set forth in § 20A.91[3][d], below. The portion of the opinion considering the nature of the adhesion contract analysis of procedural unconscionability is set forth in § 20A.91[3][d1], below. The portion of the opinion dealing with substantive unconscionability is set forth in § 20A.91[3][e], below. The portion of the decision handling the issue of the consolidated action waiver is discussed in § 20A.91[3][i], below. The portion of the decision analyzing the issue of the unenforceability of the entire arbitration agreement is treated in § 20A.91[3][k], below.

The facts and procedural background of Bruni v. Didion (2008) 160 Cal. App. 4th 1272, 73 Cal. Rptr. 3d 395 , and the portion of the opinion discussing whether the court or the arbitrator should decide whether a valid and enforceable contract to arbitrate had been executed by the parties, is set forth at § 20.10[3][k]. The case involved consolidated construction defect suits by 35 homeowners. The court of appeal held that because plaintiffs were claiming that they never knowingly agreed to the arbitrationprovisions, the trial court, and not the arbitrator, had to resolve the unconscionability claim (160 Cal. App. 4th 1272, 1277) . The court further held that the arbitration provisions were unconscionable because they were contained in contracts of adhesion, and they violated plaintiffs' reasonable expectations claim (160 Cal. App. 4th 1272, 1277) . Before applying the general principles of unconscionability to plaintiffs' claims, the court of appeal reviewed them. Unconscionability has both a procedural and a substantive element. Both elements must be present for a court to invalidate a contract or clause, although the degree to which each must exist may vary. The procedural element of unconscionability focuses on two factors: oppression and surprise. Oppression arises from an inequality of bargaining power which results in no real negotiation and an absence of meaningful choice. Surprise involves the extent to which the supposedly agreed-upon terms of the bargain are hidden in a prolix printed form drafted by the party seeking to enforce the disputed terms (160 Cal. App. 4th 1272, 1288) . Substantive unconscionability focuses on the actual terms of the agreement and evaluates whether they create overly harsh or one-sided results as to shock the conscience (160 Cal. App. 4th 1272, 1288-1289) .

The facts and procedural background of Baker v. Osborne Development Corp. (2008) 159 Cal. App. 4th 884, 71 Cal. Rptr. 3d 854 , and the portion of the opinion discussing whether the court or the arbitrator should determine The court of appeal found that the trial court correctly ruled that the arbitration agreement was both procedurally and substantively unconscionable and therefore unenforceable (159 Cal. App.4th 884, 897) . The court of appeal said that because unconscionability is a defense that applies generally to contracts, courts may refuse to enforce an unconscionable arbitration agreement. Under California law, unconscionability has both procedural and substantive elements, and both elements must be present for a court to invalidate a contract on the ground of unconscionability. The substantive element of unconscionability focuses on the actual terms of the agreement and evaluates whether they create overly harsh or one-sided results, that is, whether contractual provisions reallocate risks in an objectively unreasonable or unexpected manner. To be substantively unconscionable, a contractual provision must shock the conscience (159 Cal. App. 4th 884, 894) .

Higgins v. Superior Court (Disney/ABC International Television, Inc.) (2006) 140 Cal. App. 4th 1238, 45 Cal. Rptr. 3d 293 , arose from an episode of the television program Extreme Makeover: Home Edition (Extreme Makeover) featuring the five plaintiffs/petitioners, who were siblings. Their parents had died, and at the time of the episode, they were living with church acquaintances, who were defendants in the litigation but not involved in writ proceeding. Petitioners and the church acquaintances were chosen to participate in the program in which the church acquaintances' home would be completely renovated. Petitioners allege that, after the show was first broadcast, the church acquaintances informed petitioners that the home was theirs and forced petitioners to leave. The oldest sibling contacted the field producer and asked for help. The producer responded that he could not assist petitioners. Sometime thereafter, the Extreme Makeover episode was rebroadcast. Petitioners filed an action against the television defendants and the church acquaintances claiming intentional and negligent misrepresentation, breach of contract, unfair competition (Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq.), and false advertising (Bus. & Prof. Code § 17500 et seq.). The television defendants petitioned to compel arbitration pursuant to the Federal Arbitration Act (FAA) (9 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.). Petitioners opposed the petition on the ground that the arbitration provision was unconscionable. They claimed it was procedurally unconscionable because the parties had unequal bargaining power, the arbitration provision was buried in the agreement, petitioners were given only five to ten minutes before they were asked to sign the agreement, none of the television defendants explained the agreement to them, and copies of the executed documents were withheld from them. Petitioners also argued the agreement was substantively unconscionable because its terms were so one-sided as to shock the conscience. The agreement requires them, but not the television defendants, to arbitrate, limits petitioners' remedies to damages (while the television defendants' remedies are not so limited), precludes only petitioners from appealing, provides that the arbitration will be in accordance with the rules of the American Arbitration Association (which unfairly requires arbitration costs to be borne equally by the parties), and allows the television defendants to change the terms of the agreement at any time. The trial court granted the petition in most respects, conditioned on the television defendants paying all arbitration costs. The court construed petitioners' opposition to the petition to compel arbitration as an attack on the entire agreement and not just on the arbitration provisions contained. Thus, under the FAA, that claim had to be considered by the arbitrator, not the court. Petitioners then filed a writ petition challenging the trial court's ruling.

The court of appeal granted the writ, directed the trial court to vacate its order compelling arbitration and to a new and different order denying the petition to compel arbitration (140 Cal. App. 4th 1238, 1255) . First, the court of appeal disposed of the characterization of petitioners' attack as being against the entire agreement. Although there was language in the pleadings and papers that was ambiguous, a careful reading of petitioners' points made clear they sought to attack only the arbitration clause (140 Cal. App. 4th 1238, 1250-1251) . The court of appeal then discussed the criteria of unconscionability in general, stating that unconscionability has both a procedural and a substantive element, the former focusing on oppression or surprise due to unequal bargaining power, the latter on overly harsh or one-sided results. Both procedural and substantive unconscionability must be present in order for a court to exercise its discretion to refuse to enforce a contract or clause under the doctrine of unconscionability. But they need not be present in the same degree. A sliding scale is invoked. Thus, the more substantively oppressive the contract term, the less evidence of procedural unconscionability is required to come to the conclusion that the term is unenforceable, and vice versa (140 Cal. App. 4th 1238, 1249) .

Plaintiff in Nyulassy v. Lockheed Martin Corporation (2004) 120 Cal. App. 4th 1267, 16 Cal. Rptr. 3d 296 , sued his employer, alleging that defendant demoted him in retaliation for his protected workplace activity (i.e., complaints about treatment of employees and resistance to employer-sanctioned illegal activity). Plaintiff asserted claims for breach of contract, breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing,wrongful demotion in violation of public policy, and violation of Lab. Code § 6310. Defendant moved to compel arbitration and stay all proceedings based on a mandatory arbitration clause in plaintiff's employment agreement. Plaintiff had signed that employment agreement, approved as to form by the attorney who represented plaintiff in both actions, as part of a settlement of a wrongful termination action against defendant's predecessor. Except for that fact that plaintiff's employment relationship was terminable only for good cause for a period of three years after the date of his rehire, the employment agreement was defendant's standard mandatory form and was not negotiable. Plaintiff resisted arbitration on the ground that the arbitration agreement was unconscionable and unenforceable. The trial court agreed and denied the motion to compel arbitration.

Defendant appealed. The court of appeal affirmed (120 Cal. App. 4th 1267, 1271, 1288) . Although there was some discussion of the Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Services, Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669 , minimum standards, because the trial court based its denial of the motion on the ground that the agreement was unconscionable, the court of appeal confined itself to that issue and did not consider whether the arbitration agreement failed to meet the five minimum requirements enunciated in Armendariz (120 Cal. App. 4th 1267, 1278-1280) . The court discussed the doctrine of unconscionability generally, saying that it is a judicially created doctrine [see Civ. Code § 1670.5(a)]. Whether an agreement is unconscionable depends on circumstances at the time it was made. Unconscionability has both a "procedural" and a "substantive" element, the former focusing on "oppression" or "surprise" due to unequal bargaining power, the latter on "overly harsh" or "one-sided" results (120 Cal. App. 4th 1267, 1280) . Procedural and substantive unconscionability must both be present in order for a court to refuse to enforce a contract or clause under the doctrine of unconscionability. But they need not be present in the same degree. Essentially a sliding scale is applied under which the more substantively oppressive the contract term, the less evidence of procedural unconscionability is required to come to the conclusion that the term is unenforceable, and vice versa (120 Cal. App. 4th 1267, 1282) . In this case, the court found a high degree of substantive unconscionability, which, coupled with the lower quantum of procedural unconscionability, warranted the conclusion that the mandatory arbitration agreement was unconscionable (120 Cal. App. 4th 1267, 1287) .

The facts and procedural background of Martinez v. Master Protection Corp. (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 107, 12 Cal. Rptr. 3d 663 and the portion of the opinion considering the provision regarding arbitral costs is discussed at § 20A.22[3][b]. The court began its unconscionability analysis by noting that both procedural and substantive unconscionability are required to invalidate an arbitration clause. Procedural unconscionability focuses largely on oppression and the manner in which the agreement was negotiated. Substantive unconscionability focuses on the terms of the agreement and the presence of overly harsh or one-sided results. The two aspects need not be present to the same degree. The more substantively oppressive the contract term, the less evidence of procedural unconscionability is required to come to the conclusion that the term is unenforceable, and vice versa (118 Cal. App. 4th 107, 113) .

The facts and procedural background of Abramson v. Juniper Networks, Inc. (2004) 115 Cal. App. 4th 638, 9 Cal. Rptr. 3d 422 , and the portions of the opinion addressing the arbitration agreement in the context of plaintiff's unwaivable Tameny claim for wrongful termination in violation of public policy [see Tameny v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 167, 178, 164 Cal. Rptr. 839, 610 P.2d 1330] are discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.23[3][a] and [k] and § 20A.22[3][a]. With respect to plaintiff's private rights, the court began its unconscionability discussion by noting that unconscionability is a judicially created doctrine. Whether an agreement is unconscionable depends on circumstances at the time it was made. Unconscionability has procedural and substantive aspects, both of which must be present before a court can refuse to enforce an arbitration provision. However, the two elements need not be present in the same degree (115 Cal. App. 4th 638, 655) . The more substantively oppressive the contract term, the less evidence of procedural unconscionability is required to come to the conclusion that the term is unenforceable, and vice versa (115 Cal. App. 4th 638, 656) .

The facts and procedural background of Nyulassy v. Lockheed Martin Corporation (2004) 120 Cal. App. 4th 1267, 16 Cal. Rptr. 3d 296 , and the portions of the opinion addressing unconscionability in general are discussed at [c], above. Regarding procedural unconscionability, the court of appeal noted that the procedural element of an unconscionable contract generally takes the form of a contract of adhesion, which, imposed and drafted by the party of superior bargaining strength, relegates to the subscribing party only the opportunity to adhere to the contract or reject it (120 Cal. App. 4th 1267, 1280-1281) . The court rejected defendant's contentions that this mandatory employment arbitration agreement was a "postdispute" agreement because it was entered into in settlement of a prior dispute and that, as a general proposition, unconscionability does not apply to an arbitration agreement executed after a dispute has arisen (120 Cal. App. 4th 1267, 1284-1285) . Although the court agreed with defendant that there had been no element of "surprise," the fact that plaintiff was represented by an attorney at the time the agreement was executed did not foreclose him from claiming unconscionability (120 Cal. App. 4th 1267, 1285) . The court found the agreement procedurally unconscionable because plaintiff was unable to negotiate the standard form arbitration clause and needed employment, having been unemployed for three years at the time the prior case was settled. Plaintiff's ability to negotiate the three year "good cause" provision in the employment agreement did not place him on equal footing with defendant in the negotiation process and had no bearing on the question of whether he had power to negotiate the arbitration provision (120 Cal. App. 4th 1267, 1286) .

The facts and procedural background of Gutierrez v. Autowest, Inc. (2004) 114 Cal. App. 4th 77, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 267 , are discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.23[3][h]. The court of appeal began its discussion of unconscionability by noting that a court cannot refuse to enforce a contract unless it is both procedurally and substantively unconscionable (114 Cal. App. 4th 77, 87) . Though courts refuse to enforce only those agreements that are both procedurally and substantively unconscionable, the two factors need not each exist to the same degree. The moresubstantively oppressive the contract term, the less evidence of procedural unconscionability is required to come to the conclusion that the term is unenforceable, and vice versa (114 Cal. App. 4th 77, 88) . Unconscionability is a question of law for the court (114 Cal. App. 4th 77, 89) .

Plaintiffs in Harper v. Ultimo (2003) 113 Cal. App. 4th 1402, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 418 , hired defendant to stabilize the soil and re-level a pool on their property. The contract was preprinted and provided that all controversies under, or related to the contract were to be settled in accordance with the uniform rules for Better Business Bureau arbitration. Defendant rejected plaintiffs attempts to add addenda relating to start and stop dates, integration, and notification. Plaintiffs were not provided with a copy of the Better Business Bureau arbitration rules. Defendant broke a sewer pipe in the course of the work which spread concrete into the sewer system and soil, blocking plaintiffs' plumbing system and causing considerable damage to the backyard drainage system. Plaintiffs filed sued alleging causes of action for fraud and negligence as well as for breach of contract and seeking punitive damages. Defendant moved to compel arbitration. The Better Business Bureau arbitration rules provided that consumer remedies were limited to full or partial refund, completion of work, costs of repair or any out of pocket loss or property damage, not to exceed $2,500, caused by the repair. Consumers were prohibited from recovering for "personal injuries" unless all parties so agreed in writing (which defendant would not do). The trial court found the arbitration clause unconscionable and denied the motion. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed (113 Cal. App. 4th 1402, 1412) . Both procedural and substantive unconscionability must be present for a court to refuse to enforce a contract or clause under the doctrine of unconscionability, yet they need not be present in equal amounts. There is a sliding scale where the greater the evidence of procedural unconscionability, the less evidence is needed of substantive unconscionability, and vice versa. Here, the court said, both procedural and substantive unconscionability were so present it was almost impossible to keep from tripping over them (113 Cal. App. 4th 1402, 1406) .

Jamarillo v. JH Real Estate Partners, Inc. (2003) 111 Cal. App. 4th 394, 3 Cal. Rptr. 3d 525 , arose in the context of a residential lease. Plaintiff/tenants sued for general negligence, intentional tort, premises liability, breach of contract, breach of the implied warranty of habitability, and unfair business practices and false and deceptive advertising, mostly on account of mold infestation, which they alleged caused them to suffer physical injury and severe emotional distress, but also because one tenant slipped and fell on a concrete ramp located on the premises and injured her knee. The lease provided that any dispute between the parties relating to a claim for personal injury, directly or indirectly relating to, or arising from, the condition of the leased premises, or the apartment community, was to be resolved by arbitration conducted by the American Arbitration Association. In small, non-bold print it provided that the arbitration be conducted before three arbitrators and that all administrative fees and costs be shared equally by the landlord and resident, and that "all such fees must be advanced prior to the arbitration." Also in small, non-bold print, the provision specified that nothing would be deemed to limit the landlord's rights in the event of resident's breach or default under the agreement, including the right to bring an action for unlawful detainer. Defendants owner and management company moved to compel arbitration. The motion was denied on the ground that the arbitration provision was unconscionable as lacking mutuality. Defendants appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. Although the court discussed Civ. Code §§ 1942.1 and 1953, concluding that Civ. Code § 1953(a)(4) as a general rule prevents a tenant of residential premises from validly agreeing, in the lease agreement itself, to binding arbitration to resolve disputes regarding his or her rights and obligations as a tenant. The court continued, however, by saying that even if they had come to a contrary conclusion regarding section 1953, they would refuse to enforce the arbitration clause on the ground of unconscionability (111 Cal. App. 4th 394, 404) . The analysis of unconscionability, the court noted, begins with an inquiry into whether the contract is one of adhesion, which is to say a standardized contract, which, imposed and drafted by the party of superior bargaining strength, relegates to the subscribing party only the opportunity to adhere to the contract or reject it. If the contract is adhesive, the court must then determine whether other factors are present which operate to render it unenforceable. If an adhesive contract or provision does not fall within the reasonable expectations of the weaker or "adhering" party, it will not be enforced against that party. Even if consistent with the reasonable expectations of the weaker party, the contract or provision will be denied enforcement if it is unduly oppressive or unconscionable. Unconscionability has both a "procedural" and a "substantive" element, the former focusing on oppression or surprise due to unequal bargaining power, the latter on overly harsh or one-sided results. Both procedural and substantive unconscionability must be present in order for a court to refuse to enforce a contract or clause under the doctrine of unconscionability, but they need not be present in the same degree (111 Cal. App. 4th 394, 400) . A sliding scale is invoked which disregards the regularity of the procedural process of the contract formation, that such that the more substantively oppressive the contract term, the less evidence of procedural unconscionability is required to come to the conclusion that the term is unenforceable, and vice versa (111 Cal. App. 4th 394, 400-401) . The procedural element of an unconscionable contract generally takes the form of a contract of adhesion (111 Cal. App. 4th 394, 401) .

Plaintiff in O'Hare v. Municipal Resource Consultants (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 267, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 116 , sued his former employer for, among other things, wrongful discharge and age discrimination under the Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA; Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.). After serving plaintiff with special interrogatories, form interrogatories, and a request to produce documents, to which his attorney spent 13 hours responding, defendant moved to compel arbitration. The motion was denied on the ground that the arbitration provision lacked mutuality and did not meet the criteria set forth in Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Services, Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669 , (Armendariz). Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed (107 Cal. App. 4th 267, 270) . The court of appeal first discussed the concept of unconscionability in general, that it was based on Civ. Code§ 1670.5, and that it has both a "procedural" and a "substantive" element, the former focusing on "oppression" or "surprise" due to unequal bargaining power, the latter on "overly harsh" or "one-sided" results (107 Cal. App. 4th 267, 272-273) . Substantive unconscionability focuses on the actual terms of the agreement, while procedural unconscionability focuses on the manner in which the contract was negotiated and the circumstances of the parties. Both procedural and substantive unconscionability must be present before a court can refuse to enforce an arbitration provision based on unconscionability. However, the two elements need not be present in the same degree. A sliding scale is invoked: the more substantively oppressive the contract terms, the less evidence of procedural unconscionability is required to come to the conclusion that the term is unenforceable, and vice versa (107 Cal. App. 4th 267, 273) . The portions of the opinion considering the substantively unconscionable terms of the agreement are discussed at [e], below. The court's consideration of why the unconscionable provision should not be severed is discussed at [i], below.

The portions of the opinion in Fittante v. Palm Springs Motors, Inc. (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 659 , considering unconscionability in general and the unconscionability of the provision for review are discussed at [h], below.

Mercuro v. Superior Court (Countrywide Securities Corp.) (2002) 96 Cal. App. 4th 167, 116 Cal. Rptr. 2d 671 began as a suit by plaintiff/petitioner and his wife against his former employer for numerous employment-related torts including age and disability discrimination, fraud, and wrongful termination in violation of public policy. Wife joined as a plaintiff in the causes of action for fraudulent inducement and negligent misrepresentation. Plaintiff worked for defendant/real party from April, 1996 until March, 2000. In 1997, real party asked all its sales personnel to sign a contract agreeing to arbitrate certain disputes which might arise between them and the company. The agreement covered some employment-related claims including employment discrimination but excluded others such as injunctive or other equitable relief for unfair competition, unauthorized disclosure of trade secrets or violation of intellectual property rights. The agreement contained specific provisions in which the employee acknowledged he or she "knowingly and voluntarily" waived his or her right to a jury trial and agreed to certain limitations on his or her ability to conduct discovery. Plaintiff did not want to sign the agreement, but was told by defendant's executive director of sales that he "did not have the option of not signing the agreement" and that a sales person who did not sign the agreement "would find it difficult to make a living at Countrywide." Defendant's CEO told plaintiff that if he did not sign the arbitration agreement he would be "cut off" and made to "pay big time," his accounts would be removed, his travel expenses would not be approved, and the CEO would take whatever action was necessary to drive plaintiff out. Defendant's chief operating officer (COO) counseled plaintiff that the executive director of sales and the CEO would drive plaintiff out, making it all but impossible for him to earn a living, that plaintiff would be living in California with no income and litigating a court case which would take years to resolve. The COO also warned plaintiff that other employers would likely discover any lawsuit filed against Countrywide and that plaintiff would have difficulty in obtaining other employment. Finally, plaintiff signed the arbitration agreement under duress and coercion. Defendant moved to compel arbitration. Without addressing plaintiff's evidence of coercion or his legal arguments on the unconscionability of the agreements, the trial court ordered arbitration. Plaintiffs petitioned for writ of mandate overturning the order compelling arbitration.

The court of appealed granted the writ. The court of appeal reiterated that under California law, the doctrine of unconscionability has a procedural and a substantive element. Both elements must appear to invalidate a contract or one of its individual terms. The two elements need not be present in the same degree. The more substantively oppressive the contract terms, the less evidence of procedural unconscionability is required to conclude that the term is unconscionable, and vice versa. Procedural unconscionability turns on adhesiveness--a set of circumstances in which the weaker or "adhering" party is presented a contract drafted by the stronger party on a take it or leave it basis. To put it another way, procedural unconscionability focuses on the oppressiveness of the stronger party. The court of appeal concluded that there was no doubt in this case that defendant used oppressive tactics to secure plaintiff's signature on the arbitration agreement [96 Cal. App. 4th 167, 174]. The economic pressure defendant exerted on plaintiff through the threats was particularly acute because plaintiff was 52 years of age at the time, had just moved to California from Florida in the past year, and had only been with defendant for approximately a year. Given defendant's highly oppressive conduct in securing plaintiff's consent to its arbitration agreement, the court of appeal said he need only make a minimal showing of the agreement's substantive unconscionability [96 Cal. App. 4th 167, 175].

The facts and procedural background of Flores v. Transamerica HomeFirst, Inc. (2001) 93 Cal. App. 4th 846, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 376 , and consideration of the fact that the doctrine of unconscionability is not precluded by the Federal Arbitration Act are discussed at [b], above. With respect to the doctrine of unconscionability in general, the court of appeal explained that unconscionability has both a procedural and a substantive element. Analysis of unconscionability begins with an inquiry into whether the contract is a contract of adhesion--i.e., a standardized contract, imposed on the weaker party without an opportunity to negotiate the terms (93 Cal. App. 4th 846, 853) .

Kinney v. United Healthcare Services, Inc. (1999) 70 Cal. App. 4th 1322, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 348 , was a suit by an employee against her employer and her supervisor for employment discrimination and retaliation, breach of contract, infliction of emotional distress, negligent supervision, tortious conduct and interference with prospective economic advantage. The complaint alleged physical sexual harassment by the supervisor and later harassment by the supervisor about plaintiff's work in retaliation plaintiff's complaints to management about the sexual harassment. Plaintiff had been given an employee handbook which set forth a policy requiring her to arbitrate any claim under any federal, state, or local statute, regulation, or common law doctrine regarding or relating to employment discrimination, terms and conditions of employment, or termination of employment including, but not limited to, the following: Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, the Civil Rights Act of 1866, the Civil Rights Act of 1991, the Age Discrimination in Employment Act, the Rehabilitation Act of 1973,the Americans With Disabilities Act, the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, and all applicable amendments; state human rights or fair employment practices laws; breach of contract, promissory estoppel, or any other contract theory; and defamation, employment negligence, or any other tort theory. The handbook also set forth an internal dispute resolution process which the employee, but not the employer, was required to follow before commencing arbitration. The policy also did not not require the employer to arbitrate any dispute. The handbook precluded an arbitrator from finding that the employment relationship was other than at-will, limited discovery, and limited recovery of compensatory and punitive damages for employment discrimination in accordance with the provisions of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. § 2000e et seq.), to $300,000. The policy also expressly permitted an award of attorney fees to the employer, but made no similar provision for the employee to recover attorney's fees. Defendants moved to dismiss or stay the court proceedings, seeking to require arbitration in accordance with the employee handbook. Plaintiff contended that the agreement to arbitrate employment-related claims was unenforceable against as not mutual and unconscionable. The motion was denied, and defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court first discussed the doctrine of unconscionability, as established in Graham v. Scissor-Tail, Inc. (1981) 28 Cal. 3d 807, 820, 171 Cal. Rptr. 604, 623 P.2d 165 , and after enactment of Civ. Code § 1670.5, saying that unconscionability generally arises when there is an absence of meaningful choice on the part of one of the parties, together with contract terms which are unreasonably favorable to the other party. Unconscionability has a procedural and a substantive element. Although both elements must be present before a contract or contract provision is rendered unenforceable on grounds of unconscionability, they are reviewed in tandem and the greater the degree of substantive unconscionability, the less the degree of procedural unconscionability is required to annul the contract or clause (70 Cal. App. 4th 1322, 1328-1329) .

The facts and procedural background of Stirlen v. Supercuts, Inc. (1997) 51 Cal. App. 4th 1519, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 138 , are discussed at [a], above. The trial court had described the one-sidedness of the arbitration clause as follows:

> Defendants can use the court system for certain claims, but the plaintiff must use arbitration for all his, with very limited damages. The plaintiff gives up significant rights, and defendant is protected from liability for all fraud, willful injury or violation of law.

The court of appeal reviewed the criteria for determining whether an arbitration clause is unconscionable and thus unenforceable as set forth in Graham v. Scissor-Tail, Inc. (1981) 28 Cal. 3d 807, 817-820, 171 Cal. Rptr. 604, 623 P.2d 165 [see discussion at § 20A.90[3][a]]. There are two limitations on the enforcement of adhesion contracts. First, a contract or provision that does not fall within the reasonable expectations of the weaker or "adhering" party will not be enforced against that party. Second, even if consistent with the reasonable expectations of the parties, a contract will be denied enforcement if it is unduly oppressive or unconscionable (51 Cal. App. 4th 1519, 1530) . Neither Com. Code § 2302 nor Civ. Code § 1670.5 provide a definition of unconscionability, but mandate an analysis that is not materially different from that described in Scissor-Tail. The two approaches were harmonized in Perdue v. Crocker National Bank (1985) 38 Cal. 3d 913, 925, n.9, 216 Cal. Rptr. 345, 702 P.2d 503 , in which the Court observed that both pathways should lead to the same result. Under the UCC provision, unconscionability has generally been recognized to include an absence of meaningful choice on the part of one of the two parties together with contract terms that are unreasonably favorable to the other party: a "procedural" and a "substantive" element (51 Cal. App. 4th 1519, 1531) . Both procedural and substantive elements of unconscionability must be present in order for a court to refuse to enforce a contract or clause under the doctrine of unconscionability (51 Cal. App. 4th 1519, 1533) .

Plaintiffs filed Patterson v. ITT Consumer Financial Corp. (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 1659, 18 Cal. Rptr. 2d 563 , as a class action against a group of related companies alleging that defendants had violated the Consumer Legal Remedies Act (Civ. Code § 1750 et seq.), engaged in unfair debt collection practices [see Civ. Code § 1788 et seq.], unlawfully required them to make other purchases as a condition of obtaining loans, breached the loan agreements with respect to insurance proceeds and refunds, engaged in false advertising, intentionally inflicted emotional distress, and committed fraud. Most of the plaintiffs were of modest means, some self-employed or temporarily jobless, and had borrowed relatively small amounts of money, often in response to advertising promising "guaranteed loans." Before the class was certified, defendants petitioned to compel arbitration pursuant to a provision in the loan agreements that required "binding arbitration by the National Arbitration Forum, Minneapolis, Minnesota" and further provided that "judgment on any award by the arbitrator may be entered in any court having jurisdiction."

The trial court denied the petition, finding the arbitration clauses unconscionable and thus unenforceable. The court further ordered defendants not to seek confirmation of any arbitration awards in the City and County of San Francisco, but permitted defendants to pursue claims in San Francisco in small claims or superior court actions. Defendants appealed, contended the determination of unconscionability was error and that the order prohibiting them from confirming arbitration awards was improper in that it extended to persons who were not parties to the action.

The court of appeal affirmed. Because unconscionability is a question of law, it is reviewed de novo by an appellate court when there is no evidence extrinsic to the written contract (14 Cal. App. 4th 1659, 1663) . The court of appeal stated that there are two alternative analyses for determining unconscionability, though both should lead to the same result (14 Cal. App. 4th 1659, 1663-1664) , and did here (14 Cal. App. 4th 1659, 1666-1667) . The first approach, established by Graham v. Scissor-Tail, Inc. (1981) 28 Cal. 3d 807, 171 Cal. Rptr. 604, 623 P.2d 165 , applies to contracts of adhesion, and denies their enforcement if the contract or provision falls outside the reasonable expectations of the weaker party. Even if the contract or provision is within the reasonable expectations of the parties, enforcement will be denied if it is unduly oppressive or unconscionable. The second approach, set out in A & M Produce Co. v. FMC Corp. (1982) 135 Cal. App. 3d 473, 489, 186 Cal. Rptr. 114 , analyzed thecontract or provision in terms of Civ. Code § 1670.5, based on both procedural and substantive components (14 Cal. App. 4th 1659, 1664) .

[d] Element of Procedural Unconscionability

The facts and procedural background of Gentry v. Superior Court (Circuit City Stores, Inc.) (2007) 42 Cal. 4th 443, 64 Cal. Rptr. 3d 773, 165 P.3d 556 , are discussed in § 20A.22[3][d]. The discussion of the general criteria for unconscionabilty and procedural unconscionabilty are discussed at [c], above. Discussion of why there may be procedural unconscionability despite the opt-out provision is discussed at [j], below.

The portions of the opinion in Little v. Auto Stiegler, Inc. (2003) 29 Cal. 4th 1064, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 892, 63 P.3d 979 , considering unconscionability in general and the unconscionability of the provision for review are discussed at [h], below.

In Parada v. Superior Ct. (2009) 176 Cal. App. 4th 1554, 98 Cal. Rptr. 3d 743 , the court of appeals upheld the trial court's determination that the agreement was unenforceable (176 Cal. App. 4th 1554, 1587) . The facts of the case and the portion of the decision discussing the elements of unconscionability are covered in § 20A.91[3][c], above. The court of appeals referred to the two methods of determining procedural unconscionability, the common law doctrine of adhesive contracts and the statute-based surprise and oppression elements, and noted that each of the two approaches has generated some confusion in its application. After citing Morris v. Redwood Empire Bancorp (2005) 128 Cal. App.4th 1305, 1317, 27 Cal. Rptr. 3d 797 , for definitions of the elements surprise and oppression in procedural unconscionability, the court of appeals noted that procedural unconscionability must be measured in a sliding scale with substantive unconscionability, so courts must not only to determine whether procedural unconscionability exists, but more importantly, to what degree it may exist (176 Cal. App. 4th 1554, 1569) .

In so doing, the court determined that the defendant's brokerage account agreements exhibited elements of procedural unconscionability in that they were contracts of adhesion; petitioners were in the weaker bargaining position and could not negotiate terms; the requirement of a three-judge arbitration panel and prohibition on consolidation or joinder were beyond petitioners' reasonable expectations; and there was no evidence that the broker called petitioners' attention to the Arbitration Panel paragraphs and No Consolidation paragraphs. The court held that if a contractual provision would defeat the strong expectation of the weaker party, it may also be necessary to call his or her attention to the language of the provision. Thus, while arbitration may be within the reasonable expectations of consumers, a process that builds prohibitively expensive fees into the arbitration process is not. Further, the weaker party would not reasonably expect that his or her claims could not be joined with others in a single proceeding (176 Cal. App. 4th 1554, 1571-1572) .

The agreements also exhibited elements contrary to procedural unconscionability: The arbitration provisions were not hidden in a prolix form, and petitioners had many realistic alternatives to opening the broker's accounts (176 Cal. App. 4th 1554, 1573) . The court of appeals agreed with the trial court that the plaintiffs had alternative venues for their investments, in that the particular type of investments that the defendant brokered, precious metals, were viewed as fungible with other investments constituting the alternatives, such as stocks and bonds. The court held that the availability of reasonable alternatives is but one factor, along with the absence of power to negotiate terms, used in considering oppression, and its absence does not disprove procedural unconscionability (176 Cal. App. 4th 1554, 1572-1573) . Considered as a whole, the elements both supporting and contrary to a finding of procedural unconscionability led to a conclusion of a low to medium degree of procedural unconscionability in the agreements (176 Cal. App. 4th 1554, 1573) . The portion of the opinion considering the nature of the adhesion contract analysis of procedural unconscionability is set forth in § 20A.91[3][d1], below. The portion of the opinion dealing with substantive unconscionability is set forth in § 20A.91[3][e], below. The portion of the decision handling the issue of the consolidated action waiver is discussed in § 20A.91[3][i], below. The portion of the decision analyzing the issue of the unenforceability of the entire arbitration agreement is treated in § 20A.91[3][k], below.

Sanchez v. Western Pizza Enterprises, Inc. (2009) 172 Cal. App. 4th 154, 90 Cal. Rptr. 3d 818 , affirmed a trial court order finding a class arbitration waiver and other terms of the agreement unconscionable, and that the agreement therefore was unenforceable. The portion of the opinion discussing the application of contract principles to enforceability of a class arbitration waiver is discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.30[3][a]. The portion of the opinion dealing with whether the agreement specified that the arbitrator was to decide the issue of enforceability is discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.10[3][k] and in § 20A.10[3][b], above . The portion of the opinion and relevant facts dealing with the issue of whether the class action waiver was unenforceable as against public policy is discussed in § 20A.22[3][d], above. The employee claimed that an arbitration agreement was procedurally unconscionable. Upon review, the court noted that the agreement did not set forth a distorted presentation of the benefits of arbitration to the degree necessary for unconscionability. It states that the purpose of the agreement is "to resolve any disputes that may arise between the Parties in a timely, fair and individualized manner," but otherwise does not extol the benefits of arbitration. The arbitration agreement does not limit the limitations periods, the remedies available, or the amount of punitive damages. It requires each party bear its own attorney fees and costs and therefore incorporates any statutory right to recover fees rather than creating a presumption against a fee recovery. Thus, the arbitration agreement neither contains the same types of disadvantages for employees as were present in Gentry nor fails to mention such disadvantageous terms. Moreover, the arbitration agreement expressly states that that the agreement is not a mandatory condition of employment (172 Cal. App. 4th 154, 173) . However, the court did find procedural unconscionability in two respects. First, the inequality in bargaining power between the low-wage employees and their employer makes it likely that the employees felt at least some pressure to sign the arbitration agreement. Second, the arbitration agreement suggests that there are multiple arbitrators to chose from and fails to mention that the designated arbitration provider offers only one arbitrator. This fact renders the arbitrator selection process illusory and creates a significant risk that the employer, as a "repeat player" before the same arbitrator, will reap a significant advantage. These circumstances indicate that the employees' decision to enter into the arbitration agreement likely was not a free and informed decision but was marked by some degree of that oppression and unfair surprise constituting procedural unconscionability (172 Cal. App. 4th 154, 174) . The portion of the opinion addressing the substantive unconscionability of the arbitration agreement is discussed in [e], below. The portion of the opinion determining the unenforceability of the agreement due to unconscionability is discussed in [k], below.

The facts and procedural background of Bruni v. Didion (2008) 160 Cal. App. 4th 1272, 73 Cal. Rptr. 3d 395 (Bruni), and the portions of the opinion discussing whether the court or the arbitrator should determine whether the arbitration provision was unconscionable is set forth at § 20.10[3][k]. The court of appeal held that because plaintiffs were claiming that they never knowingly agreed to the arbitration provisions, the trial court, and not the arbitrator, had to resolve the unconscionability claim (160 Cal. App. 4th 1272, 1277) . The case involved consolidated construction defect suits by 35 homeowners. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's finding that the arbitration provision was unconscionable because it was contained in contracts of adhesion and violated plaintiffs' reasonable expectations (160 Cal. App. 4th 1272, 1277, 1296) . The general criteria of unconscionabilty are discussed in the portion of the opinion set forth at [c], above. The procedural element of an unconscionable contract generally takes the form of a contract of adhesion, although adhesion is not a prerequisite for unconscionability. A contract term may be held to be unconscionable even if the weaker party knowingly agreed to it (160 Cal. App. 4th 1272, 1289) . A contract of adhesion is a standardized contract, which, imposed and drafted by the party of superior bargaining strength, relegates to the subscribing party only the opportunity to adhere to the contract or reject it. Although contracts of adhesion are generally enforceable according to their terms, a provision contained in a contract of adhesion cannot be enforced if it does not fall within the reasonable expectations of the weaker or "adhering" party. Failure to pass the "reasonable expectations" test is generally treated as the equivalent of substantive unconscionability (160 Cal. App. 4th 1272, 1289) . Plaintiffs claimed that they never knowingly agreed to the arbitration provisions. As in most adhesion contract cases, they denied ever reading them. The general rule that one who signs an instrument may not avoid the impact of its terms on the ground that he or she failed to read the instrument before signing it applies only in the absence of overreaching (160 Cal. App. 4th 1272, 1290-1291) . Defendants argue that, under Evid. Code § 622 , plaintiffs are bound by the recital in the one-page application form that they had "read a sample copy of the warranty booklet." However, Evid. Code § 622 does not bar an assertion of fraud or other grounds for rescission. That would be impermissible bootstrapping. For similar reasons, it should not apply to recitals in an adhesion contract. Thus, plaintiffs cannot be required to arbitrate anything--not even arbitrability--until a court has made a threshold determination that they did, in fact, agree to arbitrate something. Turning to the question of whether the purported agreement to arbitrate the question of arbitrability was unconscionable, the court of appeal agreed with the trial court's finding that the arbitration provisions were part of a contract of adhesion (160 Cal. App. 4th 1272, 1291). The reality of the transaction was that plaintiffs had to accept the arbitration provisions if they wanted to buy a house. The arbitration provisions were part of a preprinted form contract, presented on a take-it-or-leave-it basis. Even assuming that plaintiffs could have negotiated over some terms of the purchase and sale agreement, such as the purchase price, it seems apparent that any attempt to negotiate over the terms of the warranty would have been fruitless, particularly because it arose out of a three-way relationship between the home buyer; Howard Roberts Development Company (HRD, Didion's joint venture partner and alleged alter ego); and Home Buyers' Warranty Corp (HBW), the administrator, which provided it as a package deal (160 Cal. App. 4th 1272, 1293) .

In addition, there was a strong showing of surprise. The arbitration provisions take up roughly one full page in a 30-page booklet. The entire booklet is in single-spaced, 10-point type. The arbitration provisions are not distinguished from the rest of the booklet by either bolding or capitalization. The booklet, in turn, was buried in a voluminous stack of purchase and sale documents (160 Cal. App. 4th 1272, 1293) . Most important, plaintiffs were never asked to sign or initial the booklet, much less the arbitration provisions; they were merely asked to sign the one-page application. Admittedly, the application did indicate--in capital letters--that the booklet contained binding arbitration provisions; however, it did not provide any information regarding their scope or effect. It also recited that the home buyer had read a sample booklet, even though plaintiffs were not actually given a sample booklet until after they had signed the whole stack of documents--sometimes not even until they had moved in. HRD's agents lessened any incentive plaintiffs might have had to read the booklet by describing the warranty as a benefit or a bonus. The court of appeal recognized that there was no evidence regarding the availability of similarly priced housing in the area, but found the most recent view to be that the absence of reasonable market alternatives has no bearing on whether a contract is adhesive. Thus, the court of appeal concluded that the arbitration provisions were contained in a contract of adhesion (160 Cal. App. 4th 1272, 1272-1294) . Next, the court of appeal considered of the reasonable expectations issue, limiting its consideration to the arbitration provisions themselves, not the other provisions of the warranty. Defendants argued that the arbitration provisions were only to be expected, because residential purchase agreements frequently include arbitration agreements or some form of alternative dispute resolution provision. Here, however, the arbitration provisions were not contained within the main purchase and sale agreement; instead, they were contained in what was labeled as a warranty. Thus, plaintiffs would reasonably expect that the arbitration provisions would apply only to disputes over the warranty.

Instead, the actual scope of the arbitration provisions was unforeseeably broad. They purported to apply not only to disputes "arising from or related to this Warranty," but also to all disputes "arising from or related to ... the subject Home, ... any defect in or to the subject Home ..., or the sale of the subject Home by the Builder... ." This would not have been within plaintiffs' reasonable expectations (160 Cal. App. 4th 1272, 1295) . Moreover, at least in the 2001 and 2002 versions, the warranty purported to relieve the builder of any liability, except under the warranty. As a result, any claim against defendants became a claim "arising from or related to" the warranty itself and hence a claim within the scope of the arbitration provisions. Finally, the arbitration provisions also purported to apply to disputes over arbitrability. As the United States Supreme Court has noted, the question of who should decide arbitrability is rather arcane. A party often might not focus on that question or on the significance of having arbitrators decide the scope of their own powers. Thus, this provision, too, was well beyond a layperson's reasonable expectations order (160 Cal. App. 4th 1272, 1296) .

The facts and procedural background of Baker v. Osborne Development Corp. (2008) 159 Cal. App. 4th 884, 71 Cal. Rptr. 3d 854 , and the portion of the opinion discussing whether the court or the arbitrator should determine arbitrability is discussed at § 20.10[3][k]. The court of appeal found that the trial court correctly ruled that the arbitration agreement was both procedurally and substantively unconscionable and therefore unenforceable (159 Cal. App. 4th 884, 897) . The procedural element of unconscionability involves oppression and surprise. Oppression arises when the parties have unequal bargaining power, leading to no real negotiation and lack of meaningful choice. Surprise may arise when challenged terms are hidden in a prolix printed form drafted by a party in a superior bargaining position (159 Cal. App. 4th 884, 894) . Although, failure to read a provision does not excuse compliance with it, it may establish actual surprise the unfairness of which is reinforced by the defendant's failure to call the arbitration clause to the attention of plaintiffs (159 Cal. App. 4th 884, 895) . The circumstances of this transaction established actual surprise. While the agreement need not expressly provide for arbitration, but may do so by incorporating a referenced document that is readily available, the warranty booklet was not provided before or at the time the builder application was presented for signature just before the close of escrow (159 Cal. App. 4th 884, 895-896). Thus, substantial evidence supported the trial court's findings of surprise and oppression and the conclusion of procedural unconscionability (159 Cal. App. 4th 884, 896) .

The facts and procedural background of Higgins v. Superior Court (Disney/ABC International Television, Inc.) (2006) 140 Cal. App. 4th 1238, 45 Cal. Rptr. 3d 293 , and the portion of the opinion addressing the general criteria of unconscionability are discussed at [c], above. Regarding procedural unconscionability, the court began with whether the parties' agreement was adhesive. A contract of adhesion is a standardized contract, which, imposed and drafted by the party of superior bargaining strength, relegates to the subscribing party only the opportunity to adhere to the contract or reject it (140 Cal. App. 4th 1238, 1251-1252) . In this case, the lengthy Agreement was drafted by the television defendants. It was a standardized contract; none of the petitioners' names or other identifying information was included in the body of the document. There was no serious doubt that the television defendants had far more bargaining power than petitioners. From the facts, the court concluded the agreement was presented to petitioners on a take-it-or-leave-it basis by the party with the superior bargaining position who was not willing to engage in negotiations. Accordingly, the court concluded that the agreement and exhibits constituted a contract of adhesion (140 Cal. App. 4th 1238, 1252) . Procedural unconscionability focuses on the factors of surprise and oppression, with surprise being a function of the disappointed reasonable expectations of the weaker party. In this case, the arbitration provision appears in one paragraph near the end of a lengthy, single-spaced document. The entire agreement was drafted by the television defendants, who transmitted copies of it to the petitioners. The television defendants knew petitioners were young and unsophisticated, and had recently lost both parents. Indeed, it was petitioners' vulnerability that made them so attractive to the television defendants. The latter made no effort to highlight the presence of the arbitration provision in the agreement. It was entitled "MISCELLANEOUS." In contrast to several other paragraphs, no text in the arbitration provision was highlighted. No words were printed in bold letters or larger font; nor were they capitalized (140 Cal. App. 4th 1238, 1252-1253). Although petitioners were required to place their initials in boxes adjacent to six other paragraphs, no box appeared next to the arbitration provision. Although the first page advised petitioners to read the entire agreement before signing it and the second-to-last paragraph stated that the person signing acknowledges doing so, that language did not defeat the otherwise strong showing of procedural unconscionability (140 Cal. App. 4th 1238, 1253).

The facts and procedural background of Nyulassy v. Lockheed Martin Corporation (2004) 120 Cal. App. 4th 1267, 16 Cal. Rptr. 3d 296 , and the portions of the opinion addressing unconscionability in general are discussed at [c], above. Regarding procedural unconscionability, the court of appeal noted that the procedural element of an unconscionable contract generally takes the form of a contract of adhesion, which, imposed and drafted by the party of superior bargaining strength, relegates to the subscribing party only the opportunity to adhere to the contract or reject it (120 Cal. App. 4th 1267, 1280-1281). The court rejected defendant's contentions that this mandatory employment arbitration agreement was a "postdispute" agreement because it was entered into in settlement of a prior dispute and that, as a general proposition, unconscionability does not apply to an arbitration agreement executed after a dispute has arisen (120 Cal. App. 4th 1267, 1284-1285). Although the court agreed with defendant that there had been no element of "surprise," the fact that plaintiff was represented by an attorney at the time the agreement was executed did not foreclose him from claiming unconscionability (120 Cal. App. 4th 1267, 1285) . The court found the agreement procedurally unconscionable because plaintiff was unable to negotiate the standard form arbitration clause and needed employment, having been unemployed for three years at the time the prior case was settled. Plaintiff's ability to negotiate the three year "good cause" provision in the employment agreement did not place him on equal footing with defendant in the negotiation process and had no bearing on the question of whether he had power to negotiate the arbitration provision (120 Cal. App. 4th 1267, 1286) .

The facts and procedural background of Fitz v. NCR Corp. (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 702, 13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 88 , are discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling,§ 20.23[3][a]. The portion of the opinion holding the arbitration agreement's discovery provision inadequate to ensure vindication of unwaivable rights is discussed in § 20A.22[3][c]. The court began its discussion of unconscionability and mutuality by noting that procedural unconscionability focuses on the oppressiveness of the stronger party's conduct, which arises from an inequality of bargaining power and an absence of meaningful choice on the part of the weaker party (118 Cal. App. 4th 702, 721) . In this case, plaintiff had no opportunity to negotiate the terms of defendant's arbitration policy. The policy was unilaterally imposed after plaintiff had worked for defendant for 14 years. Few employees are in a position to forfeit a job and the benefits they have accrued for more than a decade solely to avoid the arbitration terms that are forced on them by their employer. These facts establish a high degree of oppressiveness. The arbitration policy was therefore procedurally unconscionable (118 Cal. App. 4th 702, 722) .

The facts and procedural background of Martinez v. Master Protection Corp. (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 107, 12 Cal. Rptr. 3d 663 and the portion of the opinion considering the provision regarding arbitral costs is discussed in § 20A.22[3][b]. The discussion of the general criteria for unconscionability is at [c], above. The procedural aspect of the unconscionability analysis focuses on the manner in which the agreement was negotiated and the oppressiveness of the stronger party's conduct (118 Cal. App. 4th 107, 113) . Oppression arises from an inequality of bargaining power that results in no real negotiation and an absence of meaningful choice. Plaintiff was required to execute the arbitration agreement as a prerequisite of his employment by defendant. There was no evidence he had any opportunity to negotiate or refuse to sign the arbitration agreement. An arbitration agreement that is an essential part of a "take it or leave it" employment condition is procedurally unconscionable (118 Cal. App. 4th 107, 114) .

The facts and procedural background of Abramson v. Juniper Networks, Inc. (2004) 115 Cal. App. 4th 638, 9 Cal. Rptr. 3d 422 , and the portions of the opinion addressing the arbitration agreement in the context of plaintiff's unwaivable Tameny claim for wrongful termination in violation of public policy [see Tameny v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 167, 178, 164 Cal. Rptr. 839, 610 P.2d 1330] are discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.23[3][a] and [k] and § 20A.22[3][a]. The discussion of the general criteria for unconscionability is at [c], above. Procedural unconscionability concerns the manner in which the contract was negotiated and the circumstances of the parties at that time. The relevant factors are oppression and surprise. Oppression arises from an inequality of bargaining power of the parties to the contract and an absence of real negotiation or a meaningful choice on the part of the weaker party. Surprise arises if the challenged terms are "hidden in a prolix printed form drafted by the party seeking to enforce them." If an adhesive contract is oppressive, surprise need not be shown. An employee's awareness of the employer's mandate that disputes be resolved in a non-judicial forum does not preclude a finding that the arbitration provision is unenforceable (115 Cal. App. 4th 638, 656, 662-663) . In this case, the circumstances demonstrate a high degree of oppressiveness--plaintiff had no meaningful choice about arbitration and lacked equal bargaining power; the arbitration agreement was presented on a take-it-or-leave-it basis (115 Cal. App. 4th 638, 663) . Given the oppressiveness of the contract, the court concluded that even without the element of surprise, the arbitration provision was procedurally unconscionable (115 Cal. App. 4th 638, 663-664) .

The facts and procedural background of Gutierrez v. Autowest, Inc. (2004) 114 Cal. App. 4th 77, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 267 , are discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.23[3][h]. The procedural element focuses on "oppression" and "surprise." When the parties to the contract have unequal bargaining power and the contract is not the result of real negotiation or meaningful choice, it is oppressive. "Surprise" is defined as "the extent to which the supposedly agreed-on terms are hidden in the prolix printed form drafted by the party seeking to enforce the disputed terms. The procedural element of unconscionability generally takes the form of a contract of adhesion (114 Cal. App. 4th 77, 87) . An adhesive contract is "a standardized contract which, imposed and drafted by the party of superior bargaining strength relegates to the subscribing party only the opportunity to adhere to it or to reject it." Simply because a provision within a contract of adhesion is not read or understood by the nondrafting party does not justify a refusal to enforce it. The unbargained-for term may only be denied enforcement if it is substantively unconscionable (114 Cal. App. 4th 77, 88) . The court of appeal found that the trial court's implicit conclusion that the lease was adhesive was supported by substantial evidence. The lease was presented to plaintiffs on a "take it or leave it" basis and they were given no opportunity to negotiate any of the preprinted terms. The arbitration clause was particularly inconspicuous, printed in eight-point type face on the opposite side of the signature page of the lease. Plaintiffs were never informed that the lease contained an arbitration clause; nor were they required to initial it. Under these circumstances, the arbitration clause was procedurally unconscionable (114 Cal. App. 4th 77, 89) .

The facts and procedural background of Harper v. Ultimo (2003) 113 Cal. App. 4th 1402, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 418 , and the portion of the opinion considering the general criteria for unconscionability are discussed in [c], above. The court said procedural unconscionability focuses on the factors of surprise and oppression, with surprise being a function of the disappointed reasonable expectations of the weaker party. The nasty surprise here was that the customer could have no relief even if out and out fraud was perpetrated and would not be fully compensated for property damage. Oppression resulted from the fact that the inability to receive full relief was artfully hidden by merely referencing the Better Business Bureau arbitration rules and not attaching them (113 Cal. App. 4th 1402, 1406) . The trail judge had commented that this was not a contract of adhesion because plaintiffs had market alternatives. The court of appeal took pains to state that while most cases stated that the starting point of any analysis of unconscionability is whether the contract is of adhesion, adhesion is not a prerequisite for unconscionability (113 Cal. App. 4th 1402, 1408-1409) . There will be cases, like this one, where procedural unconscionability is obvious without the need to establish that the contract is one of adhesion or to consider market alternatives (113 Cal. App. 4th 1402, 1410) .

The facts and procedural background of O'Hare v. Municipal Resource Consultants (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 267, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 116 , are discussed at [c], above. The court first considered the substantively unconscionable aspects of the arbitration, which is discussed at [e], below, and then considered procedural unconscionability, noting that procedural unconscionability focuses on whether the arbitration provision was the result of oppression or surprise due to unequal bargaining power between the employer and employee (107 Cal. App. 4th 267, 282-283) . It turns on adhesiveness--a set of circumstances in which the weaker or 'adhering' party is presented a contract drafted by the stronger party on a take it or leave it basis. Here, no extrinsic evidence about the negotiations, if any, preceding the execution of the employment contract, was presented. However, that did not preclude a finding of procedural unconscionability. In this case, the contract itself created sufficient inference of procedural unconscionability. Given the multiple unlawful provisions in this contact, a very low showing of procedural unconscionability was required to bar enforcement of the arbitration provision (107 Cal. App. 4th 267, 283) . The court pointed out that the contract was a typed eight-page boilerplate contract given to all employees who had access to confidential information. It contained multiple generic provisions. The only portion filled in by hand was the amount of plaintiff's salary. Nothing suggested the contract was the product of "give and take." In fact, the arbitration provision was so one-sided the court said it defied credulity to suggest either that plaintiff had any input or that any desire by plaintiff to change the contract terms would have been considered or honored. Thus, the court concluded it was reasonable to infer procedural unconscionability (107 Cal. App. 4th 267, 284) .

The portions of the opinion in Fittante v. Palm Springs Motors, Inc. (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 659 , considering unconscionability in general and the unconscionability of the provision for review are discussed at [h], below.

The facts and procedural background of Mercuro v. Superior Court (Countrywide Securities Corp.) (2002) 96 Cal. App. 4th 167, 116 Cal. Rptr. 2d 671 , and the portion of the opinion discussing procedural unconscionability are at [c], above.

The facts and procedural background of Flores v. Transamerica HomeFirst, Inc. (2001) 93 Cal. App. 4th 846, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 376 , and consideration of the fact that the doctrine of unconscionability is not precluded by the Federal Arbitration Act are discussed at [b], above. The general criteria for unconscionability are discussed at [c], above. As to the procedural element of unconscionability, the court of appeal noted that the procedural element focuses on "oppression" or "surprise." Oppression arises from an inequality of bargaining power that results in no real negotiation and an absence of meaningful choice. Surprise involves the extent to which the supposedly agreed-on terms are hidden in a prolix printed form drafted by the party seeking to enforce them. A finding of a contract of adhesion is essentially a finding of procedural unconscionability. In the present case, the arbitration clauses contained in the loan agreement and deed of trust constituted a contract of adhesion. HomeFirst unquestionably had superior bargaining strength in that it presented its preprinted documents, cast in generic language, to plaintiffs for signature. Plaintiffs were offered no opportunity to negotiate. The "IMPORTANT INFORMATION FOR ALL BORROWERS" which plaintiffs received indicated that in order to establish the reverse mortgage plaintiffs were required to sign the standardized loan documents. Plaintiffs were never informed that the documents, much less the arbitration provisions, were negotiable. Moreover, according to plaintiffs' son, HomeFirst's representative told plaintiffs that HomeFirst was the only company in California offering reverse mortgages, thereby indicating that plaintiffs had no real choice of alternate lenders (93 Cal. App. 4th 846, 853) . Here, the undisputed facts indicated that the arbitration agreement was imposed on plaintiffs on a "take it or leave it" basis, making it a contract of adhesion and thereby procedurally unconscionable (93 Cal. App. 4th 846, 854) .

The facts and procedural background of Kinney v. United Healthcare Services, Inc. (1999) 70 Cal. App. 4th 1322, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 348 , are discussed at [c], above. The court of appeal said that the procedural element of unconscionability focuses on factors of oppression and surprise. Oppression arises from an inequality of bargaining power of the parties to the contract and an absence of real negotiation or a meaningful choice on the part of the weaker party. In this case, the procedural component of unconscionability existed because the handbook was given to the employees, who were required to consent to its terms, including the arbitration provision, as a condition of continued employment. The employees had no opportunity to negotiate regarding the terms of the handbook (70 Cal. App. 4th 1322, 1329) . Surprise can arise when the terms to which the party supposedly agreed are hidden in a prolix printed form drafted by the party seeking to enforce them. In this case, after providing the employees assurances that their jobs would not be affected by its takeover of the company, defendant United Healthcare gave plaintiff a copy of the handbook, contained in a large three-ring binder, and pressured her to sign the consent and acknowledgment form that same day. The court found that the language used in the policy to describe its scope was so extensive as to render it difficult for a lay person to read and understand the parameters of the policy. That was particularly true regarding the unilateral nature of the arbitration obligation. Although the acknowledgment form referred to the arbitration policy, it did not specify the details of that policy, or its unilateral nature. Given that these terms worked so clearly to defendant's advantage, to the detriment of its employees, the court concluded that the element of surprise was satisfied (70 Cal. App. 4th 1322, 1329-1330) .

The facts and procedural background of Stirlen v. Supercuts, Inc. (1997) 51 Cal. App. 4th 1519, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 138 , are discussed at [a], above. The procedural element focuses on two factors: "oppression" and "surprise." "Oppression" results from an inequality of bargaining power which results in no real negotiation and an absence of meaningful choice. "Surprise" involves the extent to which the supposedly agreed-on terms of the bargain are hidden in the prolix printed form drafted by the party seeking to enforce the disputed terms (51 Cal. App. 4th 1519, 1532) . A contract of adhesion is a standardized contract, which, imposed and drafted by the party of superior bargaining strength, relegates to the subscribing party only the opportunity to adhere to the contract or reject it. If a contract is one of adhesion, the procedural element of unconscionability is present (51 Cal. App. 4th 1519, 1533) .

The facts and procedural background of Treo v. Kettner Homeowners Assn. v. Superior Court (2008) 166 Cal. App. 4th 1055, 83 Cal. Rptr. 3d 318 , are discussed at [a], above. A developer-written requirement in an association's CC&R's that all disputes between owners and the developer and disputes between the association and the developer be decided by a general judicial reference is not a written contract as the Legislature contemplated the term in the context of Code Civ. Proc. § 638. The trial court erred in finding to the contrary. Because of this conclusion, it was unnecessary for the appellate court to reach the Association's claim the jury waiver provision was unconscionable (166 Cal. App. 4th 1055, 1067) .

The facts and procedural background of Patterson v. ITT Consumer Financial Corp. (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 1659, 18 Cal. Rptr. 2d 563 , are discussed at [c], above. The procedural components of unconscionability focus on facts of surprise and oppression. Surprise involves the extent to which the supposedly agreed-on term is hidden in a prolix preprinted form drafted by the party seeking to enforce the disputed term. Oppression results when there is no real negotiation of contract terms because of unequal bargaining power. The loan agreements were preprinted forms. The arbitration clause was either the final paragraph of a page entitled "Agreement for Dispute Resolution" or at midpage on a sheet of text, but set apart in bold type. On both versions the provision was clearly title "Arbitration." None of the preprinted clauses had been modified in any manner, which suggested to the court that they were not negotiable. In addition, several of the borrowers stated they believed they would not be able to qualify for bank loans. In these circumstances, the contract was one of adhesion (14 Cal. App. 4th 1659, 1664) .

Defendants also argued that plaintiffs failed to establish the oppression factor of procedural unconscionability set forth in Dean Witter Reynolds, Inc. v. Superior Court (1989) 211 Cal. App. 3d 758, 771-772, 259 Cal. Rptr. 789 , because they did not demonstrate that they could obtain loans only from defendants [see Dean Witter Reynolds, Inc. v. Superior Court (1989) 211 Cal. App. 3d 758, 771-772, 259 Cal. Rptr. 789 (oppression requires plaintiff to show goods or service was not available from another source)]. The court of appeal disagreed and found it sufficient that plaintiffs were individuals of modest resources who believed they would not have qualified for conventional loans from banks and that there was nothing in the record to suggest that plaintiffs had a meaningful choice of reasonably available alternative sources of personal loans from lenders who would not require National Arbitration Forum arbitration (14 Cal. App. 4th 1659, 1667) .

[d1] Under Contract of Adhesion

In Parada v. Superior Ct. (2009) 176 Cal. App. 4th 1554, 98 Cal. Rptr. 3d 743 , the court of appeals upheld the trial court's determination that the agreement was unenforceable (176 Cal. App. 4th 1554, 1587) . The facts of the case and the portion of the decision discussing the elements of unconscionability are covered in § 20A.91[3][c], above. The portion of the decision dealing with surprise and oppression in procedural unconscionability analysis is covered in § 20A.91[3][d], above. The court of appeals noted that of the two types of procedural unconscionability analysis, the adhesion contract approach often leads to confusion. The court criticized decisions that have reflexively concluded the finding of an adhesion contract alone satisfies the procedural prong, and immediately moved on to the subject of substantive unconscionability. In the court's view, other procedural issues, including surprise, often are ignored when balancing or weighing procedural and substantive unconscionability. Undue reliance on any one procedural factor to the exclusion of others may produce analytical myopia and obscure the larger unconscionability picture (176 Cal. App. 4th 1554, 1569) .

As for the brokerage contracts in question, account agreements that were on printed, standardized forms drafted by the broker and presented to petitioners who were school teachers, a delivery driver, and a school janitor with the option of signing the agreements or rejecting them, in which case petitioner could not open a margin account, were contracts of adhesion, especially where the fact that the agreement contained a clause stating that "Any deletions from, additions to or cutting or mutilation of any portion of this Agreement will render the Agreement unacceptable" controverted the broker's claim that the petitioners were given reasonable notice of the opportunity to negotiate or reject the terms of a contract, and an actual, meaningful, and reasonable choice to exercise that discretion (176 Cal. App. 4th 1554, 1570-1571) . The portion of the opinion dealing with substantive unconscionability is set forth in § 20A.91[3][e], below. The portion of the decision handling the issue of the consolidated action waiver is discussed in § 20A.91[3][i], below. The portion of the decision analyzing the issue of the unenforceability of the entire arbitration agreement is treated in § 20A.91[3][k], below.

The facts and procedural background of Bruni v. Didion (2008) 160 Cal. App. 4th 1272, 73 Cal. Rptr. 3d 395 (Bruni), and the portions of the opinion discussing whether the court or the arbitrator should determine whether the arbitration provision was unconscionable is set forth at § 20.10[3][k]. The portions of the opinion addressing procedural and substantive unconscionability and contracts of adhesion are discussed at [d], above.

[e] Element of Substantive Unconscionability

The portions of the opinion in Little v. Auto Stiegler, Inc. (2003) 29 Cal. 4th 1064, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 892, 63 P.3d 979 , considering unconscionability in general and the unconscionability of the provision for review are discussed at [h], below.

In Parada v. Superior Ct. (2009) 176 Cal. App. 4th 1554, 98 Cal. Rptr. 3d 743 , the court of appeals upheld the trial court's determination that the agreement was unenforceable (176 Cal. App. 4th 1554, 1587) . The facts of the case and the portion of the decision discussing the elements of unconscionability are covered in § 20A.91[3][c], above. The portion of the decision dealing with surprise and oppression in procedural unconscionability analysis is covered in § 20A.91[3][d], above. The portion of the opinion dealing with procedural unconscionability under adhesion contract analysis is set forth in § 20A.91[3][d1], above. After determining the account agreements exhibited low- to moderate levels of procedural unconscionability, the court of appeals determined that the agreements exhibited a high degree of substantive unconscionability because they called for an unjustified three-arbitrator panel and allowed for high fees compared to the ability to pay of the customers bringing claims against the brokerage. The fact that petitioners were investors did not detract from that finding that the fees of three arbitrators would exceed their reasonable expectations (176 Cal. App. 4th 1554, 1579-1580) . The portion of the decision handling the issue of the consolidated action waiver is discussed in § 20A.91[3][i], below. The portion of the decision analyzing the issue of the unenforceability of the entire arbitration agreement is treated in § 20A.91[3][k], below.

Sanchez v. Western Pizza Enterprises, Inc. (2009) 172 Cal. App. 4th 154, 90 Cal. Rptr. 3d 818 , affirmed a trial court order finding a class arbitration waiver and other terms of the agreement unconscionable, and that the agreement therefore was unenforceable. The portion of the opinion discussing the application of contract principles to enforceability of a class arbitration waiver is discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.30[3][a]. The portion of the opinion dealing with whether the agreement specified that the arbitrator was to decide the issue of enforceability is discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.10[3][k] and in § 20A.10[3][b], above . The portion of the opinion and relevant facts dealing with the issue of whether the class action waiver was unenforceable as against public policy is discussed in § 20A.22[3][d], above. The portion of the opinion and facts addressing the procedural unconscionability of the arbitration agreement is discussed in [d], above. The employee claimed that several provisions of the agreement were substantively unconscionable. Upon review, the court noted that the absence of express provisions requiring a written arbitration award and allowing discovery does not render the arbitration agreement unconscionable. Rather, those terms are implied as a matter of law as part of the agreement (172 Cal. App. 4th 154, 176) . Similarly, the matters authorized under the small claims provision of the agreement, while not meeting the standards applicable to a court action, are an ordinary incident of arbitration and thus the small claims provision is not substantively unconscionable (172 Cal. App. 4th 154, 177) . However, the court did find substantive unconscionability in one respect. The designation of a panel of arbitrators consisting of a single arbitrator selected by the employer created a false appearance of mutuality in the selection of an arbitrator. Moreover, the effective designation of a single arbitrator in what appears to be a standard arbitration agreement applicable to a large number of corporate employees gives rise to a significant risk of financial interdependence between the employer and the arbitrator, and an opportunity for the employer to gain an advantage through its knowledge of and experience with the arbitrator. In failing to provide a neutral arbitrator, this arbitrator-selection provision is sufficiently unfairly one-sided to manifest substantive unconscionability (172 Cal. App. 4th 154, 177) . The portion of the opinion determining the unenforceability of the agreement due to unconscionability is discussed in [k], below.

The facts and procedural background of Bruni v. Didion (2008) 160 Cal. App. 4th 1272, 73 Cal. Rptr. 3d 395 (Bruni), and the portions of the opinion discussing whether the court or the arbitrator should determine whether the arbitration provision was unconscionable is set forth at § 20.10[3][k]. The portions of the opinion addressing procedural and substantive unconscionability and contracts of adhesion are discussed at [d], above.

The facts and procedural background of Baker v. Osborne Development Corp. (2008) 159 Cal. App. 4th 884, 71 Cal. Rptr. 3d 854 , and the portion of the opinions addressing whether the court or the arbitrator should decide are discussed at § 20.10[3][k]. The portions of the opinion discussing the criteria of unconscionability are discussed at [d], above. The discussion of procedural unconscionability is set forth at [d], above. Addressing the issue of substantive unconscionability, the court said that the arbitration agreement was one-sided in that defendant as the builder and seller of the homes, would have no conceivable reason to institute legal proceedings against a homeowner after escrow closed, but virtually every claim the homeowners might raise against not only the builder, but also against subcontractors, materialmen, and others in any way involved in the construction of the homes would be subject to arbitration. That one-sidedness rendered the arbitration agreement substantively unconscionable (159 Cal. App. 4th 884, 896) .

The facts and procedural background of Nyulassy v. Lockheed Martin Corporation (2004) 120 Cal. App. 4th 1267, 16 Cal. Rptr. 3d 296 , and the portions of the opinion addressing unconscionability in general are discussed at [c], above. The discussion of procedural unconscionability is at [d], above. Substantive unconscionability focuses on the terms of the agreement and whether those terms are so one-sided as to "shock the conscience." The paramount consideration in assessing substantive unconscionability is mutuality (120 Cal. App. 4th 1267, 1281) . The employment agreement had three aspects which rendered it substantively unconscionable: (1) it was totally unilateral, requiring plaintiff only to arbitrate any and all of his employment claims; (2) it required that before proceeding to arbitration, plaintiff discussion any dispute with his supervisors; and (3) it required plaintiff to assert any claim within 180 days of the date of his employment termination or "such other dispute or controversy first arose." Regarding the requirement that plaintiff first discuss any dispute with his supervisors, the court said that while on its face, this provision may present a laudable mechanism for resolving employment disputes informally, it connotes a less benign goal. Given the unilateral nature of the agreement, requiring plaintiff to submit to an employer-controlled dispute resolution mechanism (i.e., one without a neutral mediator) suggested that defendant would receive a "free peek" at plaintiff's case, thereby obtaining an advantage if and when plaintiff were to later demand arbitration (120 Cal. App. 4th 1267, 1282-1283) .

The facts and procedural background of Higgins v. Superior Court (Disney/ABC International Television, Inc.) (2006) 140 Cal. App. 4th 1238, 45 Cal. Rptr. 3d 293 , and the portion of the opinion addressing the general criteria of unconscionability are discussed at [c], above. The portion of the opinion addressing procedural unconscionability is discussed at [d], above. Substantively unconscionable terms may generally be described as unfairly one-sided. An agreement may lack a modicum of bilaterality and therefore be unconscionable if the agreement requires arbitration only for the claims of the weaker party but a choice of forums for the claims of the stronger party. In this case, the arbitration provision required only petitioners to submit their claims to arbitration. The clause repeatedly included "I agree" language, with the "I" being a reference to the petitioners. The only time the phrase "the parties" is used is where "the parties" agree that the producer has the right to seek injunctive or other equitable relief in a court of law (140 Cal. App. 4th 1238, 1253) . The television defendants claimed the arbitration provision was bilateral, because it provided that all disputes or controversies arising under the agreement would be resolved by binding arbitration (140 Cal. App. 4th 1238, 1253-1254). They missed the point: only one side (petitioners) agreed to that clause. The television defendants, though not petitioners, can compel arbitration. Additional elements of substantive unconscionability are found in the provision barring only petitioners from seeking appellate review of the arbitrator's decision and the provision requiring arbitration in accordance with the rules of the American Arbitration Association, which provide that arbitration costs are to be borne equally by the parties. The harsh, one-sided nature of the arbitrationprovision, combined with the elements of procedural unconscionability earlier discussed, led the court of appeal to conclude that the arbitration provision was unconscionable and, therefore, unenforceable (140 Cal. App. 4th 1238, 1254).

The facts and procedural background of Fitz v. NCR Corp. (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 702, 13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 88 , are discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.23[3][a]. The portion of the opinion holding the arbitration agreement's discovery provision inadequate to ensure vindication of unwaivable rights is discussed in § 20A.22[3][c]. The discussions of procedural unconscionability is at [d], above. Substantive unconscionability focuses on overly harsh or one-sidedness, with the paramount consideration being mutuality (118 Cal. App. 4th 702, 723) . An agreement may be unfairly one-sided if it compels arbitration of claims more likely to be brought by the weaker party, but exempts from arbitration the types of claims that are more likely to be brought by the stronger party (118 Cal. App. 4th 702, 724) . That is what this agreement did. The claims exempted from arbitration--claims relating to noncompetition clauses and intellectual property--are more often brought by employers than employees (118 Cal. App. 4th 702, 725) . The court found the defendant's argument that it needed to exempt those claims from arbitration in order to provide for the swift and effective relief of restraining orders necessary to prevent an employee from disclosing trade secrets unpersuasive in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.8, which permits parties to an arbitration agreement to obtain just such relief (118 Cal. App. 4th 702, 725-726) .

The facts and procedural background of Martinez v. Master Protection Corp. (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 107, 12 Cal. Rptr. 3d 663 and the portion of the opinion considering the provision regarding arbitral costs is discussed in § 20A.22[3][b]. The discussions of the general criteria for unconscionability and procedural unconscionability are at [c] and [d], above, respectively. An arbitration agreement is substantively unconscionable if it requires the employee but not the employer to arbitrate claims, which is precisely what this agreement does (118 Cal. App. 4th 107, 114) . Specifically exempted from its terms were any claims by defendant for injunctive or equitable relief, or both, for unfair competition; it also exempted claims based on the use or unauthorized disclosure, or both, of trade secrets and confidential information. The agreement required employees to arbitrate the claims they were most likely to assert against defendant while permitting defendant to litigate the claims it was most likely to assert against its employees (118 Cal. App. 4th 107, 115) . The cost-sharing provision was unconscionable (118 Cal. App. 4th 107, 115-116) . The six-month limitation period constituted an unlawful attempt to restrict employees' statutory rights (118 Cal. App. 4th 107, 117) and was unconscionable (118 Cal. App. 4th 107, 118) . Discovery was limited to a single deposition and a single document request, except on a showing of substantial need. Given the relatively straightforward allegations of misconduct involved and the fact that claims for unpaid commissions would rest largely on documentary evidence, the court could not state that the agreement did not afford plaintiff adequate discovery rights to vindicate his statutory claims (118 Cal. App. 4th 107, 118-119) .

The facts and procedural background of Abramson v. Juniper Networks, Inc. (2004) 115 Cal. App. 4th 638, 9 Cal. Rptr. 3d 422 , and the portions of the opinion addressing the arbitration agreement in the context of plaintiff's unwaivable Tameny claim for wrongful termination in violation of public policy [see Tameny v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 167, 178, 164 Cal. Rptr. 839, 610 P.2d 1330] are discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.23[3][a] and [k] and § 20A.22[3][a]. The discussions of the general criteria for unconscionability and procedural unconscionability are at [c] and [d], above, respectively. Substantive unconscionability focuses on the terms of the agreement and whether those terms are so one-sided as to "shock the conscience." Courts have identified a number of factors that may result in substantive unconscionability (115 Cal. App. 4th 638, 656) , but the paramount consideration is mutuality--whether the contract terms are so harsh or one-sided that they lack basic fairness (115 Cal. App. 4th 638, 657-658) . Here the agreement provided a "carve out" under which the employer did not have to arbitrate, but could litigate claims related to trade secrets, confidential information, and other intellectual property. The court found the arbitration provision entirely lacking in mutuality and basic fairness, and thus substantively unconscionable (115 Cal. App. 4th 638, 665-666) .

The facts and procedural background of Gutierrez v. Autowest, Inc. (2004) 114 Cal. App. 4th 77, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 267 , are discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.23[3][h]. The court said that substantive unconscionability focuses on whether the provision is overly harsh or one-sided and is shown if he disputed provision of the contract falls outside the "reasonable expectations" of the nondrafting party or is "unduly oppressive." Some courts have imposed a higher standard: the terms must be "so one-sided as to shock the conscience." When a party with superior bargaining power has imposed contractual terms on another, courts must carefully assess claims that one or more of these provisions are one-sided or unreasonable (114 Cal. App. 4th 77, 88) . When a consumer enters into an adhesive contract that mandates arbitration, it is unconscionable to condition that process on the consumer posting fees he or she cannot pay (114 Cal. App. 4th 77, 89) . It is self-evident that such a provision is unduly harsh and one-sided, defeats the expectations of the nondrafting party, and shocks the conscience (114 Cal. App. 4th 77, 89-90) . While arbitration may be within the reasonable expectations of consumers, a process that builds prohibitively expensive fees into the process is not. It is substantively unconscionable to require a consumer to give up the right to utilize the judicial system while imposing arbitral forum fees that are prohibitively high. Whatever preference for arbitration exists, it is not served by an adhesive agreement that effectively blocks every forum for the redress of disputes, including arbitration itself (114 Cal. App. 4th 77, 90) . Unconscionability is determined at the time the contract is made (114 Cal. App. 4th 77, 91) . The fact that the AAA rules state that the arbitrator may, in the event of extreme hardship on the part of any party, reduce or defer fees administrative fees is not enough to ensure the fees are affordable (114 Cal. App. 4th 77, 92) . The court considered separately the arbitration fees that had to be paid before any hearing was held, which part of the opinion is discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.86[3][a], and the fees imposed only after an arbitrator had exercised discretion to allocate them to a party,which part of the opinion is discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.23[3][j].

The facts and procedural background of Harper v. Ultimo (2003) 113 Cal. App. 4th 1402, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 418 , and the portion of the opinion considering the general criteria for unconscionability are discussed in [c], above. The court said that substantive unconscionability focuses on the one-sidedness or overly harsh effect of the contract term or clause. This clause was more one-sided than many others that have been found unconscionable: there was not even the possibility of full relief for the consumer (113 Cal. App. 4th 1402, 1407) .

The facts and procedural background of Jamarillo v. JH Real Estate Partners, Inc. (2003) 111 Cal. App. 4th 394, 3 Cal. Rptr. 3d 525 , and the portion of the opinion addressing the general criteria for unconscionability are discussed at [c], above. Substantively unconscionable terms may take various forms, the court of appeal said, but may generally be described as unfairly one-sided. One form of substantive unconscionability involves an arbitration agreement's lack of a modicum of bilaterality, wherein the weaker party's claims against the stronger party, but not the stronger party's claims against the weaker party, are subject to arbitration (111 Cal. App. 4th 394, 401, 405) . Defendants argued that the arbitration clause was neutral, applying equally to both landlord and tenants in regard to personal injury disputes arising from the condition of the leased premises (111 Cal. App. 4th 394, 404) . However, the court did not agree, saying that the reality is that personal injury claims arising from the condition of the leased premises are largely, if not exclusively, tenant claims. Buried in the small print, the arbitration clause makes those claims subject to arbitration (111 Cal. App. 4th 394, 405-406) . Additional factors, such as the requirement that the demand for arbitration had to be made in writing within 180 days after the claim arose, that all administrative fees and costs had to be advanced prior to the arbitration, and that plaintiffs had no opportunity in the printed form lease to decline the provision, as by not initialing it, buttressed the court's conclusion that the arbitration clause lacked sufficient "bilaterality" and was unconscionable (111 Cal. App. 4th 394, 406) .

The facts and procedural background of O'Hare v. Municipal Resource Consultants (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 267, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 116 , are discussed at [c], above. The court began its consideration of the substantively unconscionable aspects of the arbitration agreement by noting that to be enforceable, there must be a modicum of bilaterality. It is unfairly one-sided for an employer with superior bargaining power to impose arbitration on the employee as plaintiff but not to accept such limitations when it seeks to prosecute a claim against the employee, without at least some reasonable justification for such one-sidedness based on business realities when there is no justification for the lack of mutuality (107 Cal. App. 4th 267, 273) . This agreement required the employee to arbitrate all claims against the employer, but did not require the employee to arbitrate any claims against the employee. Instead it specifically reserved to defendant the right to file a lawsuit seeking injunctive and equitable relief against plaintiff, and was silent about requiring defendant to arbitrate any other claim it may have against plaintiff. Defendant argued that its obligation to arbitrate should be implied because it was not expressly excluded, only its claims for injunctive and equitable relief were specifically excluded (107 Cal. App. 4th 267, 274) . The court found this argument unpersuasive for several reasons (107 Cal. App. 4th 267, 275-277) . Further, there was no business justification for this unilateral exception. First, the court explained, the agreement did not just except from arbitration defendant's right to obtain injunctive relief against plaintiff; it exempted defendant from arbitrating any claim against plaintiff (107 Cal. App. 4th 267, 277) . Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.8 provides for provisional remedies in connection with an arbitrable controversy; thus, the unilateral right to litigate rather than arbitrate claims cannot be justified by the need for provisional remedies. Injunctive relief would be available both prior to and at the conclusion of arbitration (107 Cal. App. 4th 267, 277-278) . The court's consideration of defendant's contention that exception for injunctive relief should be severed is discussed at [i], below.

The portions of the opinion in Fittante v. Palm Springs Motors, Inc. (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 659 , considering unconscionability in general and the unconscionability of the provision for review are discussed at [h], below.

The facts and procedural background of Mercuro v. Superior Court (Countrywide Securities Corp.) (2002) 96 Cal. App. 4th 167, 116 Cal. Rptr. 2d 671 , and the portions of the opinion discussing the two elements of unconscionability, the fact that the more of one element that appears, the less of the other that need be shown, and procedural unconscionability are at [c], above.

Considering the substantive unconscionability of the arbitration agreement, the court of appeal found the agreement to be unfairly one-sided in requiring arbitration of most claims of interest to employees but exempting from arbitration most claims of interest to defendant. Excepted from arbitration were claims for injunctive and/or other equitable relief for intellectual property violations, unfair competition and/or the use and/or unauthorized disclosure of trade secrets or confidential information. Defendant claimed the agreement did not apply to all claims an employee was likely to have: it did not cover workers' compensation, unemployment benefits or benefits under an employee pension plan which has its own arbitration procedure. The court of appeal said that these exceptions do not turn what was essentially a unilateral arbitration agreement into a bilateral one. Workers' compensation and unemployment benefits are governed by their own adjudicatory systems; neither is a proper subject matter for arbitration [96 Cal. App. 4th 167, 176-177] . Defendant claimed it had reasonable business justification for not arbitrating claims for injunctive or other equitable relief in cases involving intellectual property violations, unfair competition and unauthorized disclosure of trade secrets or confidential information, namely that monetary damages for the misappropriation of intellectual property assets are often difficult to calculate, and would not protect it from further misappropriation of those assets. Therefore, speedy and effective relief from the misappropriation of intellectual property assets could only be had in the court system. The court of appeal was not persuaded, noting that Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.8(b) empowers a court to grant emergency judicial relief in the form of preliminary injunctions and temporary restraining orders to a party in arbitration [96 Cal. App. 4th 167, 177] .

Plaintiff also claimed the arbitration was fatally flawed because it did not guaranteea neutral arbitrator. The agreement provided for arbitration by the National Arbitration Forum (NAF) in the federal judicial district in which the employee was last employed by the company. The court of appeal found that in the Central District of California, NAF had eight arbitrators. Given defendant's size, its parent corporation and all its affiliates compared to the relatively few available NAF arbitrators meant employees would be victims of the "repeat player effect". When an employer repeatedly appears before the same group of arbitrators it obtains distinct advantages over the individual employee. These advantages include knowledge of the arbitrators' temperaments, procedural preferences, styles and the like and the arbitrators' cultivation of further business by taking a "split the difference" approach to damages [96 Cal. App. 4th 167, 178] . The court of appeal was unwilling to say without more evidence that the "repeat player effect" was enough to render the arbitration agreement unconscionable. However, given the low threshold of substantive unconscionability in this case, the court of appeal found the lack of mutuality as to arbitrable claims together with the disadvantages to the employee in using NAF as the arbitration provider rendered the arbitration agreement substantively unconscionable [96 Cal. App. 4th 167, 179] .

The facts and procedural background of Flores v. Transamerica HomeFirst, Inc. (2001) 93 Cal. App. 4th 846, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 376 , and consideration of the fact that the doctrine of unconscionability is not precluded by the Federal Arbitration Act are discussed at [b], above. The portion of the opinion addressing the general criteria for unconscionability is discussed at [c], above, and the portion addressing procedural unconscionability is discussed at [d], above. As to the substantive element of unconscionability, the court of appeal noted that the substantive element has to do with the effects of the contractual terms and whether they are overly harsh or one-sided (93 Cal. App. 4th 846, 853) . An arbitration agreement is unconscionable unless there is a " 'modicum of bilaterality' " in the arbitration remedy. Although the parties are free to contract for asymmetrical remedies and arbitration clauses of varying scope, the doctrine of unconscionability limits the extent to which a stronger party may, through a contract of adhesion, impose the arbitration forum on the weaker party without accepting that forum for itself. Here, the arbitration provisions did not display a modicum of bilaterality. Under the loan agreement plaintiffs' principal obligation was to repay the sums advanced with interest. In the event of a breach by plaintiffs, HomeFirst was allowed to sell the property. While plaintiffs were required to arbitrate "any controversy" arising out of the loan agreement or deed of trust, HomeFirst was allowed to proceed by judicial or non-judicial foreclosure, by self-help remedies such as set-off, and by injunctive relief to obtain appointment of a receiver. Moreover, the loan documents allowed HomeFirst to proceed with foreclosure despite the pendency of disputes brought to arbitration. The arbitration clauses provided that arbitration "may not ... without [HomeFirst's] consent, delay or adversely affect [HomeFirst's] ability to exercise any of the remedies available to [HomeFirst] under [the loan agreement or deed of trust]." And finally, HomeFirst's remedies were cumulative, and could be exercised concurrently, independently, or successively (93 Cal. App. 4th 846, 854) . Realistically, then, the mandatory arbitration provisions applied to claims of the borrower against HomeFirst but not vice-versa. The court concluded that this unilateral obligation to arbitrate is so one-sided as to be substantively unconscionable. HomeFirst argued there was justification for the one-sidedness based on the "business reality" which required it be allowed to foreclose against the property as a legitimate commercial means of ensuring its security for the non-recourse loan. The court was not persuaded, saying that as a practical matter, HomeFirst assured the availability of the only remedy it is likely to need: foreclosure; but also reserved other remedies to itself from the scope of arbitration while confining plaintiffs to arbitration for all purposes (93 Cal. App. 4th 846, 855) .

The facts and procedural background of Kinney v. United Healthcare Services, Inc. (1999) 70 Cal. App. 4th 1322, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 348 , are discussed at [c], above, and the portion of the opinion discussing procedural unconscionability is set forth at [d], above. The substantive element of unconscionability focuses on the terms of the agreement and whether those terms are so one-sided as to shock the conscience (70 Cal. App. 4th 1322, 1330) . Plaintiff contended that, because the arbitration obligation was essentially unilateral, the provision imposing it was substantively unconscionable. After discussing Grubb & Ellis Co. v. Bello (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 231, 241, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 281 , which defendant contended allowed for enforcement of a unilateral arbitration provision, and determining that Bello had no application except to agreements governed by Code of Civ. Proc. § 1298(c) (relating to real estate contracts), the court of appeal agreed that this unilateral agreement to arbitrate was so one-sided as to be substantively unconscionable (70 Cal. App. 4th 1322, 1330-1332) . The court of appeal found the arbitration provision's limitation on discovery particularly troublesome noting that defendant was presumably in possession of the vast majority of evidence that would be relevant to employment-related claims against it. Thus, the limitations on discovery, although equally applicable to both parties, would work to curtail the employee's ability to substantiate any claim against defendant. The provision that prohibited an arbitrator finding that the employment relationship was other than at-will precluded an employee from recovering contract damages that might otherwise be available. Even given the strong policy favoring arbitration, this arbitration provision failed to satisfy even a "modicum of bilaterality" and was so one-sided as so offend the equitable principles underlying the policy favoring arbitration (70 Cal. App. 4th 1322, 1332) .

The facts and procedural background of Stirlen v. Supercuts, Inc. (1997) 51 Cal. App. 4th 1519, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 138 , are discussed at [a], above. Substantive unconscionability involves a harsh or one-sided allocation of risks between the parties. A contractual term is suspect if it reallocates the risks of the bargain in an objectively unreasonable or unexpected manner. But not all unreasonable risk allocations are unconscionable. Unenforceability of the clause is tied to the procedural aspects of unconscionability such that the greater the unfair surprise or inequality of bargaining power, the less unreasonable the risk allocation which will be tolerated. The "reasonableness" standard applied in A & M Produce Co. v. FMC Corp. (1982) 135 Cal. App. 3d 473, 487-487, 186 Cal. Rptr. 114 , has been rejected as inherently subjective and replaced with the traditional standard of unconscionability: contract terms so one-sided as to shock the conscience (51 Cal. App. 4th 1519, 1532) .

Supercuts claimed that the one-sidedness of allowing it judicial remedies for violations of paragraphs 7, 8, 9, and 10 of the agreement was justified by business realities that could pose an immediate threat to its operations and therefore would require emergency court-ordered relief. The court of appeal said that those "business realities" would not be justified even if they had been proven, because, under Civ. Code § 1281.8(b), all the emergency judicial relief Supercuts might need would be available to a party compelled to arbitrate (51 Cal. App. 4th 1519, 1536-1537) . Even if Supercuts could show that its legitimate dispute resolution needs would not always be met during arbitration, that was also true with respect to employee claims (51 Cal. App. 4th 1519, 1537-1538) . The issue in this case was not simply the unilateral nature of the compulsory duty to arbitrate, but a variety of attendant discrepancies all favorable to the employer and prejudicial to the employee (51 Cal. App. 4th 1519, 1539) . Among those discrepancies was the fact that while Supercuts was not deprived of any common law or statutory remedies in paragraphs 7-10 of the agreement, remedies available to the employee were seriously curtailed. The employee was denied (51 Cal. App. 4th 1519, 1539-1540) :

- Punitive damages for tort claims and other statutory claims.
- Equitable and injunctive relief for claims under the ADEA and ADA.
- The right to recover attorney's fees and costs under most of the statutory claims.

The only remedy left to the employee was actual damages for breach of contract. That might bear no relation to the extent of the wrong and the magnitude of the injuries suffered and would amount to denial of the underlying cause of action, which would be preserved in name only (51 Cal. App. 4th 1519, 1540) . The arbitration agreement lacked even a modicum of bilaterality (51 Cal. App. 4th 1519, 1540-1541) . The most extreme burden imposed on employees was submission to the loss of his or her job, salary and all other benefits during the pendency of what may prove to be lengthy litigation, "without penalty to the Company," even if employer's claim proved unmeritorious. Supercuts offered no commercial justification for that provision, which the court felt was calculated to intimidate any employee who might otherwise have the temerity to resist Supercuts' claims. The agreement imposed a one-year statute of limitation on all claims by employees and deprived them of otherwise applicable tolling. The arbitration clause provided employer more rights and greater remedies than would otherwise be available and deprived employees of significant rights and remedies they would normally enjoy. Considering the arbitration clause in the light of the commercial context in which it operated, the court concluded it had little difficulty concluding that its terms were so extreme as to appear unconscionable according to the mores and business practices of the time and place (51 Cal. App. 4th 1519, 1542) .

The facts and procedural background of Treo v. Kettner Homeowners Assn. v. Superior Court (2008) 166 Cal. App. 4th 1055, 83 Cal. Rptr. 3d 318 , are discussed at [a], above. A developer-written requirement in an association's CC&R's that all disputes between owners and the developer and disputes between the association and the developer be decided by a general judicial reference is not a written contract as the Legislature contemplated the term in the context of Code Civ. Proc. § 638. The trial court erred in finding to the contrary. Because of this conclusion, it was unnecessary for the appellate court to reach the Association's claim the jury waiver provision was unconscionable (166 Cal. App. 4th 1055, 1067) .

The facts and procedural background of Patterson v. ITT Consumer Financial Corp. (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 1659, 18 Cal. Rptr. 2d 563 , are discussed at [c], above. The court of appeal said the substantive component of unconscionability looks to whether the contract allocates the risks of the bargain in an objectively reasonable or unexpected manner. To deny enforcement, both procedural and substantive unconscionability must exist (14 Cal. App. 4th 1659, 1664) .

While arbitration per se may be within the reasonable expectation of most consumers, arbitration in Minnesota would not be within the reasonable expectations of California consumers. The location of the arbitration was unclear both from the agreement and from the National Arbitration Forum procedures. Borrowers were not given a copy of the National Arbitration Forum procedural rules until after defendant had initiated a claim against them. The court found that the rules of the National Arbitration Forum and fees required of borrowers (approximately $850) seemed designed to discourage borrowers from responding at all (14 Cal. App. 4th 1659, 1665-1666) . The procedures might not have met all the Scissor-Tail criteria of denying the borrower a fair opportunity to present his or her point of view, but they came perilously close do doing so and are oppressive when applied to unsophisticated borrowers of limited means in disputes over small amounts. Thus, the arbitration clause is beyond the reasonable expectation of the borrower (14 Cal. App. 4th 1659, 1666) and unenforceable (14 Cal. App. 4th 1659, 1667) .

Analyzed in A & M Produce terms, the arbitration procedures bear on the substantive element of unconscionability, in that the contractual risk is weighed heavily against the borrower being able to obtain a participatory hearing, which is particularly unreasonable in light of the much greater bargaining power of defendants and their reluctance to disclose even the mechanics of the arbitration until they make a claim (14 Cal. App. 4th 1659, 1666) . This established both substantive and procedural unconscionability and rendered the arbitration provision unenforceable (14 Cal. App. 4th 1659, 1667) .

[f] Sophistication of Weaker Party Is No Defense to Unconscionability

The facts and procedural background of Graham v. Scissor-Tail, Inc. (1981) 28 Cal. 3d 807, 171 Cal. Rptr. 604, 623 P.2d 165 , are discussed in § 20A.90[3][a]. The Court noted that virtually all concert artists with whom Graham wished to do business belonged to the labor union that prepared the contract at issue, and that those artists were not permitted to sign any form of contract other than the one prepared by the union. Thus, Graham, whatever his asserted prominence in the industry, was required by the realities of his business as a concert promoter to sign the union form contract; he was presented with the nonnegotiable option of accepting the contract as proposed or not at all. The terms that were available for negotiation did not change the nonnegotiable character of the rest of the contract (28 Cal. 3d 807, 818-819) .

The plaintiff in Dotson v. Amgen, Inc. (2010) 181 Cal. App. 4th 975, 980-982, 104 Cal. Rptr. 3d 341 , was a highly educated attorney, who knowingly entered into a contract containing an arbitration provision in exchange for a generous compensation and benefits package. For that reason, the court found a minimum degree of procedural unconscionability, due to the fact that the employment contract offer was presented on a take-it or leave-it basis.

The facts and procedural background of Stirlen v. Supercuts, Inc. (1997) 51 Cal. App. 4th 1519, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 138 , are discussed at [a], above. Supercuts maintained that the contract was not adhesive because Stirlen was not a person desperately seeking employment, but a successful and sophisticated corporate executive hired away from a highly paid position for an annual salary of $150,000 and renumerative extras (51 Cal. App. 4th 1519, 1533) . Supercuts argued that Stirlen was estopped from claiming the arbitration provision to be unconscionable because he was too bright and too experienced in the machinations of corporate management to sign an agreement that was unduly oppressive (51 Cal. App. 4th 1519, 1534) . The court of appeal did not agree. For one thing, Stirlen did not even arguably possess the bargaining strength of Bill Graham, plaintiff in Scissor-Tail and the dominant rock music impresario of hisgeneration, and even Graham had no choice but to sign the form contracts of the union to which virtually all concert artists belonged. Also, undisputed evidence showed that in this case, the terms of the contract were cast in generic and gender neutral language, were presented to plaintiff after he accepted employment, and were described to him as standard provisions that were not negotiable. The contract was one of adhesion, thus the procedural element of unconscionability was present (51 Cal. App. 4th 1519, 1533-1534) . The court referred to Scissor-Tail as the Supreme Court's repudiation of the suggestion that a contract or clause cannot be unconscionable if it is accepted by a knowledgeable party. Even a sophisticated businessman can be unfairly surprised by unconscionable contract terms (51 Cal. App. 4th 1519, 1534-1535) .

[g] Permissible Breadth of Order in Class Action

The facts and procedural background of Patterson v. ITT Consumer Financial Corp. (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 1659, 18 Cal. Rptr. 2d 563 , are discussed at [c], above. At the time defendants' motion to compel arbitration was denied, the class had not been certified, but a number of petitions by defendants to confirm arbitration awards against potential class members were pending in San Francisco Superior Court. Defendants contended the trial court's order that they not seek confirmation of any arbitration awards based on this arbitration provision in the City and County of San Francisco was error because plaintiffs had no standing to object to confirmation of awards against persons who were not named plaintiffs in the action and because it was overbroad and not necessary under California law. The court of appeal held that the trial court was empowered by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 187 and 527 to make this order before the class was certified, because the class action was pending and potentially included all California borrowers of defendants. The order was appropriate to effectuate the trial court's conclusion that the arbitration clause is unenforceable. The order was tailored to protect defendants' collection rights by allowing them to pursue claims in San Francisco in small claims or superior court actions, and by preventing a consumer defendant in such an action from obtaining a stay based on the arbitration clause or from seeking to require arbitration under the clause. Thus, the court of appeal concluded, the order was not overbroad (14 Cal. App. 4th 1659, 1668) .

[h] Provision for Arbitral Review Is Unconscionable

The facts and procedural background of Little v. Auto Stiegler, Inc. (2003) 29 Cal. 4th 1064, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 892, 63 P.3d 979 , and the portions of the opinion considering the application of minimum requirements to arbitration of nonstatutory, but unwaivable claims, including the continued viability, in light of Green Tree Financial Corp. v. Randolph (2000) 531 U.S. 79, 121 S. Ct. 513, 148 L. Ed. 2d 373 , of the requirement that an employer in those cases to pay all costs unique to arbitration, are is discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.23[3][a] and [d], respectively. The arbitration agreement provided in part that "awards exceeding $50,000.00 shall include the arbitrator's written reasoned opinion and, at either party's written request within 20 days after issuance of the award, shall be subject to reversal and remand, modification, or reduction following review of the record and arguments of the parties by a second arbitrator who shall, as far as practicable, proceed according to the law and procedures applicable to appellate review by the California Court of Appeal of a civil judgment following court trial." Plaintiff contended this provision was unconscionable. The Supreme Court unanimously agreed (29 Cal. 4th 1064, 1072) .

The Court began by briefly recapitulating the principles of unconscionability: the doctrine has both a "procedural" and a "substantive" element, the former focusing on "oppression" or "surprise" due to unequal bargaining power, the latter on "overly harsh" or "one-sided" results (29 Cal. 4th 1064, 1072) . The procedural element of an unconscionable contract generally takes the form of a contract of adhesion, which, imposed and drafted by the party of superior bargaining strength, relegates to the subscribing party only the opportunity to adhere to the contract or reject it. The Court found it clear in this case, as in most preemployment arbitration contracts, that defendant/employer imposed on an adhesive arbitration agreement employee. Substantively unconscionable terms may take various forms, but may generally be described as unfairly one-sided. One such form is the arbitration agreement's lack of a "modicum of bilaterality," wherein the employee's claims against the employer, but not the employer's claims against the employee, are subject to arbitration (29 Cal. 4th 1064, 1073) .

Another kind of substantively unconscionable provision is one by which the party imposing arbitration mandates a post-arbitration proceeding, either judicial or arbitral, wholly or largely to its benefit at the expense of the party on which the arbitration is imposed. Two Court of Appeal cases have addressed this kind of unconscionability: Beynon v. Garden Grove Medical Group (1980) 100 Cal. App. 3d 698, 161 Cal. Rptr. 146 (hereinafter Benyon; discussed in Ch. 20C, Arbitration: Confirming, Correcting, or Vacating the Award, § 20C.64[3][a]) (29 Cal. 4th 1064, 1074) and Saika v. Gold (1996) 49 Cal. App. 4th 1074, 56 Cal. Rptr. 2d 922 (hereinafter Saika; discussed in Ch. 20C, Arbitration: Confirming, Correcting, or Vacating the Award, § 20C.64[3][a]). Both Beynon and Saika involved medical malpractice claims. Defendant Auto Stiegler claimed the review provisions in Beynon and Saika were distinguishable, that the arbitral review provision here applied evenhandedly to both parties and that, unlike the doctor/patient relationship in Saika, there was at least the possibility that an employer would become the plaintiff, for example in cases of misappropriation of trade secrets. If that were the case, the Supreme Court said, defendant failed to explain the reason for the $50,000 threshold. From a plaintiff's perspective, the decision to resort to arbitral appeal would be made not according to the amount of the arbitration award but the potential value of the arbitration claim compared to the costs of the appeal. If the plaintiff and his or her attorney estimate that the potential value of the claim is substantial, and the arbitrator rules that the plaintiff takes nothing because of its erroneous understanding of a point of law, then it is rational for the plaintiff to appeal. Thus, the $50,000 threshold inordinately benefits defendants (29 Cal. 4th 1064, 1077) . Given the fact that defendant was the party imposing the arbitration agreement and the $50,000 threshold, it is reasonable to conclude it imposed the threshold with the knowledge or belief that it would generally be the defendant. While an asymmetrical arbitration may be permissible when there is a "legitimate commercial need," that need must be other than the employer's desire to maximize its advantage in the arbitration process. The Court found no such justification for the $50,000 threshold, and said the explanation for the threshold offered by amicus curiae--that an award in which there is less than that amount in controversy would not be worth going through the extra step of appellate arbitral review--makes sense only from a defendant's standpoint and cannot withstand scrutiny (29 Cal. 4th 1064, 1078) . Defendant also argued that an arbitration appeal is less objectionable than a second arbitration, as in Benyon, or a trial de novo, as in Saika. The Court saw no significant difference: all three provisions were geared toward giving the arbitral defendant a substantial opportunity to overturn a sizable arbitration award. The Court felt appellate review might be even more favorable to an employer (than trial de novo or a second arbitration) attempting to protect its interests. It is unlikely that an arbitrator who merely acts in an appellate capacity will increase an award against the employer, whereas a trial or arbitration de novo at least runs the risk that the employer would become liable for an even larger sum than that awarded in the initial arbitration. Therefore, the Court concluded that the arbitral appeal provision in this particular agreement was unconscionably one-sided and could not be enforced, and turned to consider whether the provision could be severed, or whether the entire agreement should be invalidated (29 Cal. 4th 1064, 1079) . That portion of the Court's opinion is discussed at Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.86[3][a].

The facts and procedural background of Fittante v. Palm Springs Motors, Inc. (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 659 , and the portions of the opinion considering the application of minimum requirements to arbitration of claims under Lab. Code § 970, the requirement that the employer pay all costs unique to arbitration, are discussed at Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.23[3][a]. The portion of the opinion addressing the fact that the arbitration agreement was a contract of adhesion is discussed at Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.83[3][a]. The court of appeal next considered whether the arbitration agreement was unconscionable, and held that, with the exception of one specific term which it found severable, the arbitration agreement was not unconscionable (105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 722) . The court of appeal first discussed unconscionability generally, saying unconscionability has both a "procedural" and a "substantive" element. The procedural element focuses on two factors: "oppression" and "surprise." "Oppression" arises from an inequality of bargaining power which results in no real negotiation and 'an absence of meaningful choice' (105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 725) . "Surprise" involves the extent to which the supposedly agreed-on terms of the bargain are hidden in a prolix printed form drafted by the party seeking to enforce the disputed terms (105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 725-726) . The substantive prong of unconscionability encompasses "overly harsh" or "one-sided" results, and looks to whether the contract allocates the risks of the bargain in an objectively unreasonable or unexpected manner. Both procedural and substantive unconscionability must be present to deny enforcement to the contract, but there may be an inverse relation between the two components, such that the greater the unfair surprise or inequality of bargaining power, the less unreasonable the risk reallocation which will be tolerated (105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 726) . The procedural component of unconscionability was present here. Plaintiff clearly had no opportunity to negotiate the arbitration agreement; he was presented with the employment application, containing the agreement, on a "take it or leave it" basis. The employer/defendant was clearly in the superior bargaining position. Plaintiff had no meaningful choice; he could accept the agreement or forgo employment. "Surprise" was also present (105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 727) . The court of appeal described the arbitration agreement as hidden "in plain sight," being one of several provisions in a dense, single-spaced page at the end of the five-page employment application. While it appeared to be in bold type, so were several other provisions; the typeface was quite small, and not otherwise distinguished from any of the other provisions of the employment application. There were no headings or other obvious indications that an applicant was giving up significant legal rights. On the other hand, the court of appeal found that substantive unconscionability had not been shown, except with respect to the so-called appeal provision, discussed below. Unlike other mandatory employment arbitration agreements (and the court discussed several), most of the provisions of the instant agreement were bilateral in form (105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 728) . The court of appeal held that this agreement had a "modicum of bilaterality." Nominally, at least, both the employer and plaintiff were bound to submit their claims to arbitration, subject to the same rules and procedures, and the same advantages and disadvantages (105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 722) .

The arbitration agreement provided that "at either party's request, awards exceeding $50,000.00 shall be subject to reversal, modification, or reduction following review of the record and arguments of the parties by a second arbitrator who shall, as far as practicable, proceed according to the law and procedures applicable to appellate review by the California Court of Appeal of a civil judgment following court trial" (105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 722-723) . The court of appeal noted that although this provision applied facially to both parties, mutuality was largely illusory. Although it is conceivable that an employer might have some claims against an employee which would result in a monetary award, including the possibility of an award of over $50,000.00, such claims would be rare (105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 723) . The court of appeal discussed Saika v. Gold (1996) 49 Cal. App. 4th 1074, 56 Cal. Rptr. 2d 922 [see Ch. 20C, Arbitration: Confirming, Correcting, or Vacating the Award, § 20C.64[3][a]], and found this appeal provision, like the rearbitration provision in Saika, unenforceable (105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 724) . The court of appeal determined that the appeal provision could be severed and the remainder of the agreement given effect (105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 725-727) . The portion of the opinion considering severance is discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.86[3][a].

Finley v. Saturn of Roseville (2004) 117 Cal. App. 4th 1253, 12 Cal. Rptr. 3d 561 , is discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.86[3][b].

[i] Prohibition on Classwide Arbitration Is Unconscionable

Civil Code Section 1668 provides that all contracts which have for their object, directly or indirectly, exempting anyone from responsibility for his own fraud, or willful injury to the person or property of another, or violation of law, whether willful or negligent, are against the policy of the law.

The facts and procedural background of Discover Bank v. Superior Court (Boehr) (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 148, 160-167, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 76, 113 P.3d 1100 , and the portion of the opinion addressing the fact that the doctrine of unconscionability is not preempted by the Federal Arbitration Act (9 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.) are discussed at [b], above. The Court discussed the fact that class actions are favored in California, especially in situations in which numerous consumers are exposed to the same dubious practice by the same seller so that individual actions by each of the defrauded consumers is impracticable (36 Cal. 4th 148, 156-157) .

Further, class-wide arbitration, though entailing a greater degree of judicial involvement than is normally associated with arbitration ideally, is accepted in California [see Keating v. Superior Court (1982) 31 Cal. 3d 584, 613, 183 Cal. Rptr. 360, 645 P.2d 1192 (overruled on other grounds, Southland Corp. v. Keating (1984) 465 U.S. 1, 10-11, 104 S. Ct. 852, 79 L. Ed. 2d 1)] (36 Cal. 4th 148, 152) .

With respect to class action waivers in contracts designating a foreign law, the Court said that the foreign law would not be given effect if it would violate a strong California public policy or result in an evasion of a California statute protecting its citizens. Civil Code § 1751 in the Consumer Legal Remedies Act is such a statute. It prevents a consumer's wavier of the right to bring a class action and has been held to override a Virginia choice-of-law and forum-selection provisions in the contracts (36 Cal. 4th 148, 158-159) .

Class arbitration waivers have been held unenforceable on the ground of unconscionability. Otherwise, the potential exists for millions of customers to be overcharged small amounts without an effective method of redress. This is not only unconscionable, the Court said, but amounts to giving the defendants a "get out of jail free" card (36 Cal. 4th 148, 159-160) . At least some class-action waivers in consumer contracts are unconscionable under California law (36 Cal. 4th 148, 160) . Certainly they are unconscionable if they effectively operate as exculpatory clauses [see Civ. Code § 1668] to insulate a party from liability that would otherwise be imposed (36 Cal. 4th 148, 161) .

The Court discussed cases to the contrary from other jurisdictions, and stated that, while not holding that all class actions waivers are unconscionable, a class action waiver in a consumer contract of adhesion in practice becomes an exculpatory clause and is unconscionable and unenforceable. At least this is so, the Court said, to the extent the issue is governed by California law in a dispute between contracting parties which involves small amounts of damages and in which it is alleged that the party with the superior bargaining power has carried out a scheme to deliberately cheat each of a large numbers of consumers of small sums of money (36 Cal. 4th 148, 162-163) .

In Parada v. Superior Ct. (2009) 176 Cal. App. 4th 1554, 98 Cal. Rptr. 3d 743 , the court of appeals upheld the trial court's determination that the agreement was unenforceable (176 Cal. App. 4th 1554, 1587) . The facts of the case and the portion of the decision discussing the elements of unconscionability are covered in § 20A.91[3][c], above. The portion of the decision dealing with surprise and oppression in procedural unconscionability analysis is covered in § 20A.91[3][d], above. The portion of the opinion dealing with procedural unconscionability under adhesion contract analysis is set forth in § 20A.91[3][d1], above. The portion of the decision handling the issue of substantive unconscionability is set forth in § 20A.91[3][e], above. In its procedural unconscionability analysis, the court of appeals held that the weaker party would not reasonably expect that his or her claims could not be joined with others in a single proceeding. Therefore, the consolidation waiver was procedurally unconscionable (176 Cal. App. 4th 1554, 1571-1572) . Similarly, the no-consolidation clause in combination with the requirement of three arbitrators generated extremely high costs that translated into a high degree of substantive unconscionability, even though those costs were still less than the cost of going to trial (176 Cal. App. 4th 1554, 1574, 1582) . The portion of the decision analyzing the issue of the unenforceability of the entire arbitration agreement is treated in § 20A.91[3][k], below.

Gatton v. T-Mobile USA, Inc. (2007) 152 Cal. App. 4th 571, 61 Cal. Rptr. 3d 344 , were consolidated cases by subscribers against seven cellular phone carriers challenging the carriers' early termination fees and their practice of selling locked handsets that a subscriber cannot use when switching carriers. The contracts were all drafted by T-Mobile and were substantially similar. They provided for mandatory arbitration and included a class action waiver. T-Mobile moved to compel arbitration. The trial court denied the motion on the grounds that the claims for injunctive relief were primarily for the benefit of the public and, consequently, were not subject to arbitration, and that the arbitration provisions were unconscionable and unenforceable. Defendants appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed (152 Cal. App. 4th 571, 575, 588) . The court first discussed unconscionability in general and the decision in Discover Bank v. Superior Court (Boehr) (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 148, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 76, 113 P.3d 1100 (Discover Bank discussed above), citing it for the proposition that when a class arbitration waiver is found in a consumer contract of adhesion in a setting in which disputes between the contracting parties predictably involve small amounts of damages, and when it is alleged that the party with the superior bargaining power has carried out a scheme to deliberately cheat large numbers of consumers out of individually small sums of money, then, at least to the extent the obligation at issue is governed by California law, the waiver becomes in practice the exemption of the party from responsibility for its own fraud, or willful injury to the person or property of another, and in accordance with Civ. Code § 1668, the waiver is unconscionable and should not be enforced (152 Cal. App 4th 571, 579-581) . The court of appeal concluded that plaintiffs did not show surprise because the arbitration provision was not disguised or hidden, and T-Mobile made affirmative efforts to bring the provision to the attention of its customers, including by referencing the provision on a sticker placed across the closing seam of the handset shipping box. Nevertheless, the court found the service agreement to be a contract of adhesion because T-Mobile drafted the form agreement, its bargaining strength was far greater than that of individual customers, and customers were required to accept all terms and conditions of the agreement as presented or forgo T-Mobile's telephone service (152 Cal. App. 4th 571, 582) . The court was not persuaded otherwise because there were two mobile phone providers whose contracts did not contain class action waivers; the availability of market alternatives was exceedingly slim. The court also rejected the contention that the existence of market choice altogether negates the oppression aspect of procedural unconscionability. The existence of market alternatives is relevant, but not determinative of the issue (152 Cal. App. 4th 571, 583) . There was no evidence that the consumers knew or should have known of the existence of alternate providers whose contracts did not have class arbitration waivers. The court said the issue of market choice negates the existence of oppression, not whether choice renders a contract nonadhesive and discussed the issue at length. The court felt that, in accordance with the "sliding scale" balancing rule that the higher degree of substantive unconscionability the lower the degree of procedural unconscionability required, that absent unusual circumstances, use of a contract of adhesion establishes a minimal degree of procedural unconscionability notwithstanding the availability of market alternatives. Courts are not obligated to enforce highly unfair provisions that undermine important public policies simply because there is some degree of consumer choice in the market (152 Cal. App. 4th 571, 585) .

T-Mobile argued the $200 termination fee was large compared to the $29 late fee at issue in Discover Bank and therefore the case was not within the rule applicable when consumers suffered individually small losses. The court rejected this argument, pointing out that a $1,000 expense had been viewed as a small enough sum to apply*Discover Bank* because many consumers would consider that sum insufficient to warrant individual litigation, and certainly not sufficient to obtain legal assistance in prosecuting the claim. (152 Cal. App. 4th 571, 587) .

Cohen v. DirecTV, Inc. (2006) 142 Cal. App. 4th 1442, 48 Cal. Rptr. 3d 813 was a class action filed by a subscriber against his satellite television programming company. The original subscriber contract did not have an arbitration clause. That was added in a bill stuffer a few months after the original subscription. Six years later, the subscriber upgraded to high definition programming, which cost approximately $11 more per month and necessitated an expenditure of approximately $1,000 in additional equipment. A few months later, the subscriber noticed that DirecTV had degraded several of the premium HDTV channels by switching them to lower, non-standard resolution. A few months after that, DirecTV made another amendment to the subscriber agreement, this one prohibiting joinder or class litigation of claims in arbitration. Plaintiff nevertheless filed a class-action suit against alleging violation of the California Consumers Legal Remedies Act (CLRA; Civ. Code § 1750 et seq.) and unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business practices in violation of Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200. Cohen sought damages for the costs of equipment and monthly subscription fees, restitution, an injunction preventing DirecTV from representing its channels as HDTV, punitive damages, and reasonable attorney fees. DirecTV moved to compel arbitration, and Cohen resisted, arguing the arbitration clause was unenforceable because the ban on class litigation of claims in arbitration was unconscionable. The trial court denied the motion to compel arbitration finding the arbitration clause procedurally and substantively unconscionable, against public policy, and unenforceable. The trial court found the arbitration clause substantively unconscionable under principles announced in Discover Bank v. Superior Court (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 148, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 76, 113 P.3d 1100 (Discover Bank, discussed above). DirecTV appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed (142 Cal. App. 4th 1442, 1455) . The court of appeal agreed that the provision in the arbitration clause prohibiting class or representative claims in arbitration (class action waiver) was unconscionable and unenforceable. Further, because the customer agreement expressly prohibited the severance of the class action waiver from the remainder of the arbitration clause, the entire arbitration clause was unenforceable (142 Cal. App. 4th 1442, 1446-1447). Because the court concluded the class action waiver was unenforceable and could not be severed from the arbitration clause, they did not address the issue of whether a valid agreement to arbitrate was formed by the amendments in the bill stuffers or by plaintiff's use of the service after receipt of the amendments in the bill stuffers (142 Cal. App. 4th 1442, 1448). The court of appeal discussed Discover Bank at length (142 Cal. App. 4th 1442, 1448-1450) , concluding with its primary holding, that while not all class arbitration waivers are unconscionable and unenforceable, when the waiver is found in a consumer contract of adhesion in a setting in which disputes between the contracting parties predictably involve small amounts of damages, and when it is alleged that the party with the superior bargaining power has carried out a scheme to deliberately cheat large numbers of consumers out of individually small sums of money, then, at least to the extent the obligation at issue is governed by California law, the waiver becomes in practice the exemption of the party from responsibility for its own fraud, or willful injury to the person or property of another [see Civ. Code § 1668], and is unconscionable and unenforceable (142 Cal. App. 4th 1442, 1450-1451) . The court found that the class action waiver in DirecTV's customer agreement met the indicia identified in Discover Bank, of a waiver that in practice has the potential effect of exempting DirecTV from responsibility for its own fraud, or willful injury. First, DirecTV's customer agreement was a consumer contract of adhesion (142 Cal. App. 4th 1442, 1451) . Second, customer agreements with television programming providers occur in a setting in which disputes between the contracting parties predictably involve small amounts of damages. The court was not persuaded that the $1,000 cost of the high definition equipment package negated the premise that the class action waiver occurred in a setting where disputes between the contracting parties would predictably involve small amounts of damages. While $1,000 is not an insignificant sum, many consumers of these services may not view that amount as sufficient to warrant individual litigation, and certainly it is not sufficient to obtain legal assistance in prosecuting the claim (142 Cal. App. 4th 1442, 1452) . Third, the allegation that the party with the superior bargaining power has carried out a scheme to deliberately cheat large numbers of consumers out of individually small sums of money was made in plaintiff's allegations that after representing its high-definition package would provide astonishing picture clarity consistent with specified standards and bandwidth, DirecTV reduced its HDTV transmission quality by 33 percent to non-standard levels (142 Cal. App. 4th 1442, 1452-1453) . The court of appeal discussed other cases decided since Discover Bank in which a class arbitration wavier had been held unconscionable [see Aral v. EarthLink, Inc. (2005) 134 Cal. App. 4th 544, 36 Cal. Rptr. 3d 229 (discussed below); Klussman v. Cross Country Bank (2005) 134 Cal. App. 4th 1283, 1287, 36 Cal. Rptr. 3d 728 (discussed below); Independent Assn. of Mailbox Center Owners, Inc. v. Superior Court (2005) 133 Cal. App. 4th 396 , 34 Cal. Rptr. 3d 659 (discussed at [f], above)], noting that not off of them involved small sums of money (142 Cal. App. 4th 1442, 1453-1455) . The court reiterated: DirecTV's customer agreement appeared in a consumer contract of adhesion presented to Cohen on a take it or leave it basis; the class action waiver was indisputably one-sided; the sums involved were sufficiently small that the class action was likely the only effective way to redress conduct that deprives DirecTV's customers of the full high-definition services for which they are paying; the prohibition on class claims effectively operated to insulate DirecTV from liability for its conduct. Thus, the class action waiver was unconscionable and unenforceable (142 Cal. App. 4th 1442, 1455) .

Plaintiffs in Klussman v. Cross Country Bank (2005) 134 Cal. App. 4th 1283, 36 Cal. Rptr. 3d 728 , sued the bank, its credit card servicing company, and their owner and Chief Executive Officer, alleging that they had earned hundreds of millions of dollars by offering credit cards to these consumers and subsequently engaged in a pattern of unlawful practices such as misrepresenting payoff charges, imposing unauthorized fees, charging late fees for timely payments, automatically subscribing customers to unauthorized and costly programs and using abusive and harassing tactics in collecting fees and charges. The complaint alleged violations of the CaliforniaConsumers Legal Remedies Act (CLRA; Civ. Code § 1750 et seq.), the California Unfair Competition Law (UCL; Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq.), and of the Delaware Unfair Business Practices Act, as well as causes of action for breach of contract, fraud, and imposition of excessive bank fees. The complaint requested damages, restitution, interest, an injunction and attorney fees. The bank was a Delaware corporation headquartered in Delaware. The servicing company was a Delaware corporation headquartered in Florida. The cardholder agreements stated that Delaware law governed except when federal law applied and contained an arbitration provision which specified that arbitration would be before the National Arbitration

Forum (NAF). It gave a phone number from which to obtain the NAF rules and forms and required all claims to be filed at any NAF office, on the World Wide Web, or in Minneapolis, Minnesota. Defendants petitioned to compel arbitration, claiming the matter was governed by the Federal Arbitration Act (FAA). Plaintiffs opposed the motion, arguing that the CLRA and UCL claims for injunctive relief were not subject to arbitration, that the CLRA expressly authorizes class actions, that enforcement of the arbitration clause would preclude class actions under the NAF rules, and that such prohibition was prohibited. The superior court agreed with plaintiffs that the CLRA and UCL claims for injunctive relief were not subject to arbitration, found the FAA and California law applicable, and concluded that the arbitration clause was unenforceable because the NAF restriction on class actions could not be severed. The court denied the motion to compel arbitration. Defendants appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, concluding that the trial court correctly applied the appropriate choice of law analysis; that under California law the hidden waiver of the right to bring classwide arbitration in this case was unconscionable; and that the arbitration clause was unenforceable (134 Cal. App. 4th 1283, 1287, 1290) . The court of appeal agreed that the CLRA and UCL claims for injunctive relief were intended to remedy public wrongs and were not subject to arbitration (134 Cal. App. 4th 1283, 1290) . The court noted that the FAA is silent on the issue of class action arbitration and does not preempt a court from ruling on initial matters of state law regarding contractual grounds for revoking an arbitration agreement (134 Cal. App. 4th 1283, 1287, 1290-1291) . The court noted that the proper approach for determining the choice of law issue is for the court first to determine either: (1) whether the chosen state has a substantial relationship to the parties or their transaction, or (2) whether there is any other reasonable basis for the parties' choice of law. If neither of these tests is met, that is the end of the inquiry, and the court need not enforce the parties' choice of law. If, however, either test is met, the court must next determine whether the chosen state's law is contrary to a fundamental policy of California (134 Cal. App. 4th 1283, 1291). In this case, Delaware had a substantial relationship to the defendants and recognizes the concept of unconscionability in commercial transactions. Delaware would not invalidate an arbitration clause merely because it prohibited class actions (134 Cal. App. 4th 1283, 1287, 1292) . However, California law would invalidate class action waivers in the appropriate circumstances, specifically, when the class action waiver is found in a consumer contract of adhesion in a setting in which disputes between the contracting parties predictably involve small amounts of damages, and when it is alleged that the party with the superior bargaining power has carried out a scheme to deliberately cheat large numbers of consumers out of individually small sums of money. Then, at least to the extent the obligation at issue is governed by California law, the waiver becomes in practice the exemption of the party from responsibility for its own fraud, or willful injury to the person or property of another [Civ. Code § 1668], and the waiver is unconscionable under California law and should not be enforced [Discover Bank v. Superior Court (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 148, 162-163, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 76, 113 P.3d 1100 (Discover Bank)] (134 Cal. App. 4th 1283, 1293) . This resulted in a clear conflict between the law of the two states and required an evaluation of whether this conflict implicates a fundamental public policy in California (134 Cal. App. 4th 1283, 1294).

The court of appeal concluded that fundamental California public policy was implicated and that California's interest in the issue was "materially greater" than that of Delaware. (134 Cal. App. 4th 1283, 1287, 1294-1300). California's interest was so compelling because: (1) the waiver was not expressed in the agreement, which was presented in the context of a "take it or leave it" arbitration clause; (2) the plaintiffs pleaded causes of action under the CLRA and UCL, which are statutes that seek to vindicate public rights, and (3) plaintiffs seek to represent only California residents, not a nationwide class as was involved in Discover Bank (134 Cal. App. 4th 1283, 1298-1300). The trial court correctly determined that California law applies, that the waiver is unconscionable under California law, and that it cannot be severed from the arbitration clause (134 Cal. App. 4th 1283, 1300). Thus, the court of appeal affirmed the order denying enforcement of the arbitration provision (134 Cal. App. 4th 1283, 1300-1301).

Aral v. Earthlink, Inc. (2005) 134 Cal. App. 4th 544, 36 Cal. Rptr. 3d 229 , was a putative statewide class action. Plaintiff ordered DSL service from defendant in early June 2003, but did not receive the kit containing equipment needed to operate the service for approximately five weeks. He was charged based on the date he ordered service.

Defendant is a Delaware corporation with its principal place of business in Atlanta, Georgia. The DSL service agreement that provided that it was governed by Georgia law "without regard to conflict-of-law provisions;" that any controversy or claim arising out of or relating to the agreement, or the breach thereof, would be settled by arbitration administered by the American Arbitration Association (AAA) under its Commercial Arbitration Rules; and that arbitration would be governed by Georgia law and held in Atlanta, Georgia. It also specifically prohibited class action arbitration. Generally, individuals who install defendant's DSL service using defendant's software cannot complete installation until they click on an icon indicating that they have read and agreed to the terms and conditions of the DSL service agreement. However, plaintiff, a software engineer, installed the service through alternate means that did not require using the software provided or clicking on the icon. The proposed class consisted of California residents who were victims of defendant's practice of charging for services during prior to providing the hardware necessary use the service. The sole cause of action in the complaint was brought under the Unfair Competition Law (UCL; Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq.), and sought both injunctive and restitutionary relief. Defendant sought to compel arbitration in Georgia and to dismiss or stay the court proceedings, claiming plaintiff had entered into a binding written arbitration agreement because that agreement was posted on defendant's website and was mailed to plaintiff as part of his User Guide. The trial court denied the motion to compel arbitration, finding that claims for injunctive relief under the UCL are not arbitrable and that, although arbitrable claims such as restitution, disgorgement, and unjust enrichment can generally be severed from nonarbitrable claims, that was not appropriate in this case at bar because the gravamen of the case was the claim for injunctive relief. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed arbitration (134 Cal. App. 4th 544, 548, 564) , but on a different ground, finding that the claim for injunctive relief could have been severed from the claim for restitution, and the latter sent to arbitration (134 Cal. App. 4th 544, 548, 551-553) , but that under Discover Bank v. Superior Court (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 148, 162-163, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 76, 113 P.3d 1100 (Discover Bank), provisions in adhesion contacts that preclude class actions are unconscionable when the case involves allegations that a large number of consumers have been cheated out of a small sum of money (134 Cal. App. 4th 544, 548-549) . Moreover, defendant sought an order specifying that arbitration of a minor monetary claim by a California resident take place in Georgia, and a forum selection clause that discourages legitimate claims by imposing unreasonable geographical barriers is unenforceable under well-settled California law (134 Cal. App. 4th 544, 549) . Although the trial court did not reach the issues of whether the parties had entered into a binding agreement containing a valid arbitration clause and, if so, whether the clause could be enforced, the court of appeal agreed to determine those issues at the request of the parties and amicus curiae Attorney General. The specific issues raised revolve around the provisions prohibiting class actions and requiring consumers to travel to Georgia to raise claims.

The court began its analysis by emphasizing that an arbitration agreement containing a forum selection clause and a clause forbidding class actions must be treated in the same manner as any other contract containing those clauses (134 Cal. App. 4th 544, 553-554) . The defense of unconscionability as used to challenge class action waivers as unlawfully exculpatory is a principle of California law that does not specifically apply to arbitration agreements, but to contracts generally. Thus, the court was free to determine whether the class action prohibition and forum selection clause were enforceable under general contract law principles (134 Cal. App. 4th 544, 555) .

The ultimate holding in Discover Bank is that when a class action waiver is found in a consumer contract of adhesion in a setting in which disputes between the contracting parties predictably involve small amounts of damages, and when it is alleged that the party with the superior bargaining power has carried out a scheme to deliberately cheat large numbers of consumers out of individually small sums of money, then, at least to the extent the obligation at issue is governed by California law, the waiver becomes in practice the exemption of the party from responsibility for its own fraud, or willful injury to the person or property of another [Civ. Code § 1668]. Under these circumstances, class arbitration waivers are unconscionable under California law and should not be enforced (134 Cal. App. 4th 544, 556) . In the present case, the terms of the agreement were presented on a "take it or leave it" basis either through installation of the software or through materials included in the package mailed with the software with no opportunity to opt out. This is quintessential procedural unconscionability.

With respect to substantive unconscionability, plaintiff alleged in his complaint that defendant began charging customers for DSL service as soon as they ordered the service although the company knew or should have known that the service would not be available until after the modem was delivered, some weeks later. The gravamen of the complaint was that numerous consumers were cheated out of small sums of money through deliberate behavior. Accepting these allegations as true, as the court had to at this stage of the proceedings, the class action waiver had to be deemed unconscionable under California law. The determination of the enforceability of the forum selection clause, as with the class action waiver, is made utilizing general contract law principles without regard to the fact that it appears in an arbitration agreement (134 Cal. App. 4th 544, 557). A forum selection clause should not be denied enforcement if it appears in a contract entered into freely and voluntarily by parties who have negotiated at arm's length, even if the forum selection clause is part of a contract having the basic qualities of an adhesion contract--a standardized contract, imposed on the subscribing party without an opportunity to negotiate the terms (134 Cal. App. 4th 544, 557-558). Although the forum selection clause here was contained in an adhesion contract, that clause in an adhesion contract would be enforceable even though the defendant did not actually read it as long as the clause provided adequate notice to the plaintiff that he was agreeing to the jurisdiction cited in the contract. However, when the clause does not give adequate notice, the requisite mutual consent to that contractual term is lacking and no valid contract with respect to that clause thus exists (134 Cal. App. 4th 544, 560) . A forum selection clause that requires consumer to travel 2,000 miles to recover a small sum is not reasonable under either California or United States Supreme Court law. If trial in the contractual forum will be so gravely difficult and inconvenient that the consumer will for all practical purposes be deprived of his day in court, it is unfair, unjust, and unreasonable to enforce the forum selection provision. The court could not say at that point whether plaintiff's situation represented a one-time aberration or a regular practice. If the latter, there may well be a significant number of California consumers who have suffered losses in the range of $40 to $50 dollars. To expect any or all of them to travel to Georgia in order to obtain redress on a case-by-case basis, whether in a courthouse or in an arbitration hearing room, is unreasonable as a matter of law (134 Cal. App. 4th 544, 561) .

Defendant contended that under AAA Consumer Rules, plaintiff and others similarly situated could bring claims in California small claims court. The Hobson's choice of litigation in a distant forum and the limited relief available in small claims court does not cure the problem. Small claims courts do not provide the panoply of relief available in court or before an arbitrator, such as punitive damages and attorney fees. Litigants also have no right to pursue class actions.

Citing Discover Bank, the court of appeal was not persuaded that the possibility ofredress in small claims court was enough to enforce a patently unreasonable forum selection clause (134 Cal. App. 4th 544, 562) . Considering the choice of law issue, the court of appeal noted that Georgia would not deem a class action waiver unconscionable in these circumstances and that in this case, unlike the situation in Discover Bank, plaintiff was seeking to enforce an obligation imposed by California statute. The court found that enforcement of California law with respect to the unconscionability of the class waiver provision was appropriate (134 Cal. App. 4th 544, 563) .

The court found there was no dispute that the first part of the Restatement's test had been met: EarthLink had a substantial relationship to Georgia and a reasonable basis for choosing Georgia law because its principle place of business was there. But plaintiff resides in California, sought to represent only California consumers, and relied solely on California's UCL to support his claim. The fundamental policy at issue was not simply the right to pursue a class action remedy, but the right of California to ensure that its citizens have a viable forum in which to recover minor amounts of money allegedly obtained in violation of the UCL. Forcing consumers to travel to a far location and depriving them of any hope of class litigation would pose an insurmountable barrier to recovery of small sums unjustly obtained, and undermine the protections of the UCL. There was no doubt that California had a materially greater interest than Georgia in the determination of this particular issue (134 Cal. App. 4th 544, 564) .

[j] Arbitration Agreement May Be Procedurally Unconscionable Despite Opt-Out Provision

The facts and procedural background of Gentry v. Superior Court (Circuit City Stores, Inc.) (2007) 42 Cal. 4th 443, 64 Cal. Rptr. 3d 773, 165 P.3d 556 , are discussed at § 20A.22[3][d]. The discussion of the general criteria for unconscionabilty and procedural unconscionabilty are discussed at [c], above.

Regarding the issue of whether the opt-out provision foreclosed a finding of procedural unconscionabilty, the Court noted that a finding of procedural unconscionability is not required to invalidate a class arbitration waiver if that waiver implicates unwaivable statutory rights. But such a finding is a prerequisite to determining that the arbitration agreement as a whole is unconscionable. An arbitration agreement may have an element of procedural unconscionability notwithstanding an opt-out provision (42 Cal. 4th 443, 451) . An employee's signature on an arbitration agreement may reasonably lead the employer to believe that the employee's failure to opt out constituted acceptance of the arbitration agreement, but the question whether an arbitration agreement has been validly formed is different from whether that agreement was unconscionable (42 Cal. 4th 443, 468) . The lack of material information about the disadvantageous terms of the arbitration agreement, combined with the likelihood that employees felt at least some pressure not to opt out of the arbitration agreement, led the Supreme Court to conclusion that the agreement was, at the very least, not entirely free from procedural unconscionability (42 Cal. 4th 443, 470-472) . The one-page description of the advantages and disadvantages of arbitration gave a very one-sided view of arbitration and failed to mention reduced limitation periods, limitation on the length of time for which back pay could be recovered, a cap on punitive damages, that there was no right to attorney's fees and costs, which would be provided by the overtime pay statute, and limited discovery (42 Cal. 4th 443, 470-472) .

[k] Arbitration Agreement Is Wholly Unenforceable on Account of Unconscionable Provisions

The facts and procedural background of Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Services, Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669 , and the portion of the opinion addressing the arbitrability of claims under California's Fair Employment and Housing Act (Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.), are discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.23[3][a]. The Court considered defendant's contention that the unconscionable portions of the arbitration agreement (limitation on damage, unilateral enforcement against employee) should be severed and the rest of the arbitration agreement enforced. The Court acknowledged that Civ. Code § 1670.5(a) empowers a court to do that, but could find no case explaining how to evaluate the appropriateness of severance. The Court discussed illegal contracts and Civ. Code §§ 1598 and 1599, noting that the reasons for severing illegal portions of an agreement were to prevent parties from gaining undeserved benefit or suffering undeserved detriment as a result of voiding the entire agreement and to conserve a contractual relationship if to do so would not be condoning an illegal scheme (24 Cal. 4th 83, 121-124) .

The Court found these basic principles of severability of illegal contracts fully applicable to the doctrine of unconscionability, but found two factors that made severance inappropriate in this case. First, the arbitration agreement contained more than one unlawful provision; it had both an unlawful damages provision and an unconscionably unilateral arbitration clause (only employee had to arbitrate termination disputes). Those multiple defects indicated to the Court a systematic effort to impose arbitration on an employee not simply as an alternative to litigation, but as an inferior forum that works to the employer's advantage. The Court said that, given the multiple unlawful provisions, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in concluding that the arbitration agreement was totally unenforceable (24 Cal. 4th 83, 124) . Further, with respect to the agreement's lack of mutuality, there was no single provision a court could strike or restrict in order to remove the unconscionable taint from the agreement. The court would have to reform the contract, not through severance or restriction, but by augmenting it with additional terms. Neither Civ. Code § 1670.5 nor Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2 authorizes such reformation by augmentation (24 Cal. 4th 83, 124-125) . The Court distinguished cases severing provisions about non-neutral arbitrators, such as Graham v. Scissor-Tail, Inc. (1981) 28 Cal. 3d 807, 831, 171 Cal. Rptr. 604, 623 P.2d 165 and Lewis v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc. (1986) 183 Cal. App. 3d 1097, 1107, 228 Cal. Rptr. 345 , because in those situations, the offending provision could be severed and the arbitrator could be chosen in accordance with Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.6. There is no comparable provision in the arbitration statute that permits courts to reform an unconscionably one-sided agreement (24 Cal. 4th 83, 126-127) .

In Parada v. Superior Ct. (2009) 176 Cal. App. 4th 1554, 98 Cal. Rptr. 3d 743 , the court of appeals upheld the trial court's determination that the agreement was unenforceable (176 Cal. App. 4th 1554, 1587) . The facts of the case and the portion of the decision discussing the elements of unconscionability are covered in § 20A.91[3][c], above. The portion of the decision dealing with surprise and oppression in procedural unconscionability analysis is covered in § 20A.91[3][d], above. The portion of the opinion dealing with procedural unconscionability under adhesion contract analysis is set forth in § 20A.91[3][d1], above. The portion of the decision handling the issue of substantive unconscionability is set forth in § 20A.91[3][e], above. The portion of the decision handling the issue of the consolidated action waiver is discussed in § 20A.91[3][i], above. After deciding that the Arbitration Panel and No Consolidation paragraphs of the arbitration agreement exhibited a low- to moderate-degree of procedural unconscionability and a high degree of substantive unconscionability, the court of appeals turned to the balancing of the proof of those two elements. The court ruled that on the sliding scale, the low- to mid-range amount of procedural unconscionability and the high degree of substantive unconscionability rendered clauses requiring three arbitrators and barring consolidation of claims unconscionable and, hence, unenforceable (176 Cal. App. 4th 1554, 1585-1586) .

The court then stated that in assessing the severability of unenforceable clauses, courts are to look first to the various purposes of the contract. If the central purpose of the contract is tainted with illegality, then the contract as a whole cannot be enforced. If (1) the illegality is collateral to the main purpose of the contract, and (2) the illegal provision can be extirpated from the contract by means of severance or restriction, then severance and restriction are appropriate. An unconscionable arbitration term is not to be severed if it was drafted in bad faith, because severing such a term and enforcing the arbitration provision would encourage drafters to overreach (176 Cal. App. 4th 1554, 1585-1586) . In this case, the investment company's failure to offer a justification or explanation for requiring three arbitrators barring consolidation in the brokerage account agreements demonstrated that it included them deliberately for the improper purpose of discouraging or preventing its customers from vindicating their rights, rendering them unserverable as being in bad faith. Accordingly, the court upheld the trial court's determination of the unenforceability of the entire arbitration agreement (176 Cal. App. 4th 1554, 1586-1587) .

Sanchez v. Western Pizza Enterprises, Inc. (2009) 172 Cal. App. 4th 154, 90 Cal. Rptr. 3d 818 , affirmed a trial court order finding a class arbitration waiver and other terms of the agreement unconscionable, and that the agreement therefore was unenforceable. The portion of the opinion discussing the application of contract principles to enforceability of a class arbitration waiver is discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.30[3][a]. The portion of the opinion dealing with whether the agreement specified that the arbitrator was to decide the issue of enforceability is discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.10[3][k] and in § 20A.10[3][b], above . The portion of the opinion dealing with the issue of whether the class action waiver was unenforceable as against public policy is discussed in § 20A.22[3][d], above. The portion of the opinion addressing the procedural unconscionability of the arbitration agreement is discussed in [d], above. The portion of the opinion addressing the substantive unconscionability of the arbitration agreement is discussed in [e], above. The employee claimed that the arbitration agreement was unenforceable, because it was unconscionable. Having ruled the class action waiver unenforceable as against public policy, regardless of whether the entire agreement was unenforceable, and the arbitrator selection clause unconscionable, the court ruled that while it may be true that neither of these provisions alone would justify the refusal to enforce the entire arbitration agreement, considered together they indicate an effort to impose on the employee a forum with distinct advantages for the employer. Accordingly, the arbitration agreement is permeated by an unlawful purpose, warranting the trial court's denial of the motion to compel arbitration (172 Cal. App. 4th 154, 181) .

The court of appeals reversed the trial court's grant of class action defendant's motion to compel arbitration in Franco v. Athens Disposal Co., Inc. (2009) 171 Cal. App. 4th 1277, 1303, 90 Cal. Rptr. 3d 539 . The court found an arbitration agreement containing a class arbitration waiver unenforceable, because it precluded the vindication of nonwaivable right of the employee to obtain relief on his substantive claims of violation of meal and rest-period requirements in Labor Code § 226.7, per Labor Code § 219, in court. The portion of the opinion dealing with the employee's claim that the class action arbitration waiver is not enforceable as against public policy is discussed in § 20A.22[3][d], above. The court next addressed the employee's claim that the arbitration agreement was unenforceable. In addition to the class arbitration waiver against public policy, the agreement precluded the employee from obtaining relief under the Private Attorneys General Act of 2004 for anyone but himself. While the employee's wage claims themselves were not subject to the Act, the employee's claims under the applicable Wage Order granting penalties constituted PAGA claims, Cal. Code Reg. Title 8, § 11090. Therefore, the provision would preclude the employee from seeking civil penalties on behalf of other current and former employees, which constitutes performing the core function of a private attorney general. By thus impeding the comprehensive enforcement of a statutory scheme authorizing the imposition of statutory sanctions and fines, the prohibition of private attorneys general damages for other potential plaintiffs is invalid. On account of the fact that the arbitration agreement contains a class arbitration waiver and also precludes the employee from seeking civil penalties on behalf of other employees, contrary to the PAGA, the agreement as a whole is tainted with illegality and is unenforceable (171 Cal. App. 4th 1277, 1303) .

The facts and procedural background of Murphy v. Check 'N Go of California, Inc. (2007) 156 Cal. App. 4th 138, 67 Cal. Rptr. 3d 120 , and the portion of the opinionaddress the court's authority to determine the issue of unconscionablity are discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.10[3][k]. The portion of the opinion addressing the invalidity of the class arbitration waiver is discussed at § 20A.22[3][d]. Defendant argued that the trial court erred by refusing to enforce the entire arbitration agreement, rather than severing the clauses it found to be unconscionable, specifically the provision purporting to give the arbitrator the authority to determine unconscionabilty and the class arbitration waiver. The court of appeal disagreed, pointing out that under Civ. Code § 1670.5, a court has discretion to refuse to enforce an entire agreement if the agreement is permeated by unconscionability (156 Cal. App. 4th 138 , 149). An employment arbitration agreement can be considered permeated by unconscionability if it contains more than one unlawful provision. Multiple defects indicate a systematic effort to impose arbitration on employees not simply as an alternative to litigation, but as an inferior forum that works to the employer's advantage. This agreement contained at least two unconscionable aspects. Thus, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in concluding that the arbitration agreement was permeated by an unlawful purpose and refused to enforce it in its entirety. The court distinguished Gentry v. Superior Court (Circuit City Stores, Inc.) (2007) 42 Cal. 4th 443, 457, 463, 466, 64 Cal. Rptr. 3d 773, 165 P.3d 556 (Gentry, portion of opinion addressing severability is discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.86[3][b]) as involving only a single term that violated public policy (156 Cal. App. 4th 138, 149) .

The facts and procedural background of Nyulassy v. Lockheed Martin Corporation (2004) 120 Cal. App. 4th 1267, 16 Cal. Rptr. 3d 296 , and the portions of the opinion addressing unconscionability in general are discussed at [c], above. The discussion of procedural unconscionability is at [d], above. Substantive unconscionability is discussed at [e], above. Regarding severance, the court of appeal noted there are two instances in which severance is not appropriate: one concerns the existence of multiple unlawful provisions; the other concerns such a lack of mutuality that there is no single provision a court can strike or restrict in order to remove the unconscionable taint from the agreement (120 Cal. App. 4th 1267, 1287) . Given the lack of mutuality, the defendant-controlled prearbitration resolution procedure, and the severe limitation on the time within which plaintiff could demand arbitration, the court concluded that the arbitration clause was permeated by unconscionability and refusal to sever or restrict the unconscionable provisions was proper (120 Cal. App. 4th 1267, 1287-1288) .

The facts and procedural background of Fitz v. NCR Corp. (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 702, 13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 88 , are discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.23[3][a]. The portion of the opinion holding the arbitration agreement's discovery provision inadequate to ensure vindication of unwaivable rights is discussed at § 20A.22[3][c]. The discussions of procedural and substantive unconscionability are at [d] and [e], above, respectively. The existence of more than one unconscionable provision weighs against severance. Here there were two: the lack of mutuality with respect to the types of claims required to be arbitrated and the cost provision (118 Cal. App. 4th 702, 726-727) . There was no single provision the court could strike to remove the unconscionability (118 Cal. App. 4th 702, 727) . The court felt the interest of justice would not be served by severing either unconscionable provision, but would grant an undeserved benefit to defendant, which drafted the agreement not to provide an alternative to litigation, but as a means to compel arbitration as an inferior forum that works to its advantage (118 Cal. App. 4th 702, 728) .

The facts and procedural background of Abramson v. Juniper Networks, Inc. (2004) 115 Cal. App. 4th 638, 9 Cal. Rptr. 3d 422 , and the portions of the opinion addressing the arbitration agreement in the context of plaintiff's unwaivable Tameny claim for wrongful termination in violation of public policy [see Tameny v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 167, 178, 164 Cal. Rptr. 839, 610 P.2d 1330] are discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.23[3][a] and [k] and § 20A.22[3][a]. The discussions of the general criteria for unconscionability, procedural unconscionability, and substantive unconscionability are at [c], [d], and [e], above, respectively. The court concluded that this agreement lacked mutuality, was permeated with unconscionability, and that there was no single provision the court could strike or restrict in order to remove the unconscionable [or illegal] taint from the agreement (115 Cal. App. 4th 638, 666-668) .

The facts and procedural background of O'Hare v. Municipal Resource Consultants (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 267, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 116 , are discussed at [c], above. The portion of the opinion addressing the substantively unconscionable aspects of the arbitration agreement is discussed at [e], above. Defendant contended that the "carve-out" for injunctive relief should be severed. The court of appeal disagreed, finding defendant did not simply "carve out" a provision entitling it to file a lawsuit for injunctive relief; it drafted a completely one-sided agreement compelling plaintiff to arbitrate all of its claims while allowing defendant to file a lawsuit on any claim it had against plaintiff. Because unconscionability permeated the entire agreement, severance was not appropriate. There was no single provision that could be stricken or restricted to remove the unconscionable taint through severance (107 Cal. App. 4th 267, 279) .

The facts and procedural background of Mercuro v. Superior Court (Countrywide Securities Corp.) (2002) 96 Cal. App. 4th 167, 116 Cal. Rptr. 2d 671 , and the portions of the opinion discussing the two elements of unconscionability, the fact that the more of one element that appears, the less of the other that need be shown, and procedural unconscionability are at [c], above. The portion of the opinion discussing substantive unconscionability is at [e], above.

Defendant urged that the arbitration agreement be enforced without the offensive provisions. The court of appeal noted that when a court finds a contract unconscionable or illegal it may sever the offending clause, or limit the application of the offending clause, so as to avoid the unconscionable or illegal result. That approach works when the unconscionability or illegality is collateral to the main purpose of the contract. However, if the central purpose of the contract is "permeated" or "tainted" with unconscionability or illegality then the contract as a whole cannot be enforced [96 Cal. App. 4th 167, 184] . The court of appeal concluded that the Countrywide arbitration agreement was unenforceable because it was permeated with unconscionability and illegality and it could not be cured by "hacking off" the offending provisions--it would have to rewrite the contract, which it did not have the power to do. The court found the threats leveled at plaintiff to obtain his signature on the arbitration agreement together with the lack of mutuality as to arbitrable claims, and the disadvantages to an employee of using NAF as the arbitrator indicated a systematic effort by defendant to impose arbitration on an employee as an inferior forum that works to the employer's advantage [96 Cal. App. 4th 167, 185] .

The facts and procedural background of Flores v. Transamerica HomeFirst, Inc. (2001) 93 Cal. App. 4th 846, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 376 , and consideration of the fact that the doctrine of unconscionability is not precluded by the Federal Arbitration Act are discussed at [b], above. The portion of the opinion addressing the general criteria for unconscionability is discussed at [c], above; the portion addressing procedural unconscionability is discussed at [d], above; and the portion addressing substantive unconscionability is discussed at [e], above. The portion of the opinion addressing severance of the unconscionable portions of the arbitration agreement is discussed at [j], below.

[l] Unconscionable Portions of Arbitration Agreement Will Not Be Severed After They Are No Longer Needed by Party Urging Arbitration

The facts and procedural background of Flores v. Transamerica HomeFirst, Inc. (2001) 93 Cal. App. 4th 846, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 376 , and consideration of the fact that the doctrine of unconscionability is not precluded by the Federal

Arbitration Act are discussed at [b], above. The portion of the opinion addressing the general criteria for unconscionability is discussed at [c], above; the portion addressing procedural unconscionability is discussed at [d], above; and the portion addressing substantive unconscionability is discussed at [e], above. HomeFirst contended that the court of appeal should sever the provisions which reserved its remedies (foreclosure, set-off, and appointment of a receiver) from arbitration, and still require plaintiffs to arbitrate their claims. The court of appeal declined to do so. First, a court need not sever the invalid arbitration provisions when a unilateral arbitration agreement is "permeated" with unconscionability: such permeation is indicated by the fact that there is no single provision a court can strike or restrict in order to remove the unconscionable taint from the agreement. The court would have to reform the contract by augmenting it with additional terms, which the court has no inherent to do. Here the court was faced with an arbitration agreement in which no single provision could be stricken to remove the unconscionable taint. The lack of bilaterality consisted not only in the reservation of remedies of foreclosure, set-off, appointment of receiver, but also in allowing HomeFirst to proceed with its remedies despite a claim pending in arbitration, and giving HomeFirst all remedies "afforded by law and equity." In addition, the court found it would be woefully unfair to plaintiffs to allow HomeFirst--after a dispute had arisen and after the reverse mortgage was terminated--to refute the unconscionable aspects of the arbitration agreement HomeFirst itself drafted (93 Cal. App. 4th 846, 857) . The court did not believe justice would be served by an effort to save the arbitration agreement by removing post hoc offending provisions for which HomeFirst no longer had any use (93 Cal. App. 4th 846, 857-858) .

[m] Court Must Strike Unconscionable Remedy Limitations Before Ordering Arbitration

The facts and procedural background of Independent Assn. of Mailbox Center Owners, Inc. v. Superior Court (Mail Boxes Etc., USA, Inc.) (2005) 133 Cal. App. 4th 396, 34 Cal. Rptr. 3d 659 , and the portion of the opinion considering consolidation of the arbitrations is discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.13[3][f]. The arbitration agreements also provided that the arbitrator did not have power to award punitive damages, consequential, or incidental damages. Some of the other agreement also prohibited the arbitrator from awarding damages for lost wages or profits, attorney's fees and/or costs and limited damages to the amount the of the franchise fee and the cost of building out the MailBox Center. Franchisees sought compensatory and punitive damages, as authorized by the various statutes, as well as injunctive relief regarding unfair trade practices, restitution, disgorgement of illegal gains, and statutory penalties under the unfair competition law. AAA Rule R-43, which was applicable, allows the arbitrator to grant any remedy or relief the arbitrator deems just and equitable and within the scope of the parties' agreement. The court of appeal said it was not within the scope of the writ proceedings to decide the availability of the substantive relief requested under the various statutory schemes, but to the extent the arbitration clauses purported to deny the arbitrator the ability to award full relief according to the merits of the respective showings, the arbitration clauses are contrary to statute and unduly restrictive, possible amounting to unconscionable waivers of statutory rights. Thus, the trial court should have stricken any provisions that would deprive the arbitrator of authority to award statutory remedies or any relief that would otherwise be allowable in court.

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Criteria of Unconscionability

Dotson v. Amgen, Inc. (2010) 181 Cal. App. 4th 975, 980, 104 Cal. Rptr. 3d 341 , discusses the criteria of unconscionability in the course of finding a restriction on discovery not uneforceable due to unconscionability.

The criteria of unconscionability are discussed in Lhotka v. Geographic Expeditions, Inc. (2010) 181 Cal. App. 4th 816, 820-821, 104 Cal. Rptr. 3d 844 , in the course of holding a recreational release unconscionable.

[b] Element of Procedural Unconscionability

Requiring employees to sign a printed form "Waiver and Agreement" binding them to the agreement without giving them an opportunity to see that agreement and as a condition of practicing anesthesiology at the hospital was procedurally unconscionable in Suh v. Superior Court (2010) 181 Cal. App. 4th 1504, 1516-1517, 105 Cal. Rptr. 3d 585 .

Dotson v. Amgen, Inc. (2010) 181 Cal. App. 4th 975, 980-982, 104 Cal. Rptr. 3d 341 , discusses the element of procedural unconscionability in the course of finding a restriction on discovery to has a low level of procedural unconscionability, due to the fact that the contract offer was presented on a take-it or leave-it basis, because the plaintiff was an attorney knowingly entered into a contract containing an arbitration provision in exchange for a generous compensation and benefits package.

In Lhotka v. Geographic Expeditions, Inc. (2010) 181 Cal. App. 4th 816, 822-824, 104 Cal. Rptr. 3d 844 , the court held that the nonessential nature of recreational activities is a factor to be taken into account in assessing whether a contract is oppressive, but it is not necessarily the dispositive factor. Nonetheless, the court ruled that terms and conditions of a recreational release agreement that are nonnegotiable, and defendant's statement that plaintiffs would encounter the same requirements with any other recreational company, made the agreement have a sufficient level of oppression to support a finding of procedural unconscionability.

[c] Element of Substantive Unconscionability

The trial court's finding that the provisions of the American Health Lawyers Association Alternative Dispute Resolution Service Rules of Procedure for Arbitration limiting remedies are severe and substantively unconscionable was upheld in Suh v. Superior Court (2010) 181 Cal. App. 4th 1504, 1515-1516, 105 Cal. Rptr. 3d 585 .

Dotson v. Amgen, Inc. (2010) 181 Cal. App. 4th 975, 980, 982-985, 104 Cal. Rptr. 3d 341 , discusses the element of substantive unconscionability in the course of finding a restriction on discovery not narrow enough to be unconscionable, because although the agreement purported to limit discovery to one deposition of a natural person, the agreement gave the arbitrator broad discretion to order the discovery needed to sufficiently litigate the parties' claims.

A limitation of the amount of recovery to the cost of a recreational trip in a recreational-activity release was found without more substantively unconscionable in Lhotka v. Geographic Expeditions, Inc. (2010) 181 Cal. App. 4th 816, 825-826, 104 Cal. Rptr. 3d 844 .

[d] Arbitration Agreement Is Wholly Unenforceable on Account of Unconscionable Provisions

In Suh v. Superior Court (2010) 181 Cal. App. 4th 1504, 1517, 105 Cal. Rptr. 3d 585 , the court of appeal refused to sever unconscionable remedy limitations in the applicable American Health Lawyers Association Alternative Dispute Resolution Service Rules of Procedure for Arbitration, because the rules by their own terms were a cohesive whole that could not be applied only in part and thus permeated the arbitration agreement.

The court of appeals ruled in Lhotka v. Geographic Expeditions, Inc. (2010) 181 Cal. App. 4th 816, 826, 104 Cal. Rptr. 3d 844 , that the trial court properly exercised its discretion in refusing to sever offending provisions from the contract and to enforce the entire arbitration clause of the contract that included provisions greatly limiting plaintiffs' recovery, and requiring plaintiffs to indemnify the other party for its legal costs and fees if plaintiffs pursued any claims covered by the release agreement, and to pay half of any mediation fees and mediate and arbitrate in defendant's choice of venue, far from plaintiffs.

[e] Arbitration Rules Are Unfair and Unconscionable

In Pokorny v. Quixtar, Inc. (9th Cir. 2010) 601 F.3d 987 , the federal Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals ruled that the arbitration provision was unenforceable because it was procedurally and substantively unconscionable. The Court noted that under the Federal Arbitration Act, whether an arbitration provision is unconscionable is governed by state contract law (601 F.3d 987, 994) . After citing California law on unconscionability of agreements (601 F.3d 987, 996) , the court analyzed and found procedural (601 F.3d 987, 996-997) and substantive (601 F.3d 987, 997-1005) unconscionability in the terms of the arbitration agreement. Finding the offending arbitration provisions unenforceable, the Court addressed the severability of those arbitration provisions, ruled that they were unseverable, and voided the entire arbitration agreement (601 F.3d 987, 1005) .

[f] Prohibition on Classwide Arbitration Is Unconscionable

The federal Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals found in Omstead v. Dell, Inc. (9th Cir. 2010) 594 F.3d 1081, that a class action waiver was unenforceable, because it was unconscionable under California contract law. The Court noted that under the Federal Arbitration Act, whether an arbitration provision is unconscionable is governed by state contract law (594 F.3d 1081, 1085). The Court cited California caselaw setting forth the elements necessary for a finding that a class action waiver is unconscionable under California law if (1) the waiver is found in a consumer contract of adhesion, (2) the contractual setting is one in which disputes between the contracting parties predictably involve small amounts of damages, and (3) it is alleged that the party with the superior bargaining power has carried out a scheme to deliberately cheat large numbers of consumers out of individually small sums of money, and noted the trial court's findings relevant to the three elements, and affirmed that trial court's conclusion that the waiver in question met all three elements of the test (594 F.3d 1081, 1086 & n.3). The Court then reversed the trial court's ruling that the waiver was severable, and voided the arbitration provision (594 F.3d 1081, 1087).

157 of 174 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20A ARBITRATION: RESISTING
PART II. FORMS
D. Defenses to Arbitration

2-20A California Points & Authorities § 20A.92

§ 20A.92 Party Signing Medical Services Agreement Is Not Bound by It

[1] FORM

RESPONDENT CANNOT BE COMPELLED TO ARBITRATE THIS CONTROVERSY BECAUSE RESPONDENT EXECUTED THE MEDICAL SERVICES CONTRACT _____ [UNDER COERCION or WITHOUT READING THE WAIVER NOTICES AND DID NOT UNDERSTAND IT PROVIDED FOR ARBITRATION] AND IS NOT BOUND BY ITS ARBITRATION PROVISIONS.

A. Party Signing Medical Services Arbitration Agreement May Show He or She Is Not Bound Thereby. Section 1295 of the Code of Civil Procedure permits a party to seek to show that he or she was coerced into signing or did not read the waiver notices provided in a medical services arbitration agreement provided for by that section and did not realize that it provided for binding arbitration (Ramirez v. Superior Court (1980) 103 Cal. App. 3d 746, 756, 163 Cal. Rptr. 223).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of memorandum may be used by a consumer to resist arbitration under a medical services contract with an arbitration clause governed by Code Civ. Proc. § 1295 when the consumer signed the agreement either under coercion or withoutrealizing it provided for arbitration. A contract that complies with Code Civ. Proc. § 1295(a)-(c) is not a contract of adhesion, nor unconscionable, nor otherwise improper [Code Civ. Proc. § 1295(d)]. Respondent will have a very difficult burden in showing coercion in signing and particularly in showing lack of knowledge concerning arbitrability of disputes under the medical services contract, as well as in explaining failure to rescind arbitrability [see Ramirez v. Superior Court (1980) 103 Cal. App. 3d 746, 756-757, 163 Cal. Rptr. 223 , discussed at [3][a], below]. Counsel should give particular heed to the guidelines of this case in setting out argument in connection with the foregoing form.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in opposition to one seeking to compel arbitration [see § 20A.10]. Counsel may also wish to incorporate authority from Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.30, regarding the applicability of general contract principles.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, the argument should explain what constituted coercion in signing, how respondent managed not to notice the bold red arbitration notice immediately before the signature line [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1295(b)], and why the agreement was not rescinded in accordance with Code Civ. Proc. § 1295(c).

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747 (overruled on other grounds in Rosenthal v. Great Western Financial Securities Corp. (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 394, 404, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 875)].

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a form of response to a petition to compel arbitration that may be supported by this memorandum, as well as a procedural checklist, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 32, Contractual Arbitration: Agreements and Compelling Arbitration (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

For memoranda to combine with this form, regarding other matters that the opposition may need to address, see §§ 20A.10-20A.12, 20A.20 et seq., 20A.30 et seq., 20A.40 et seq., 20A.60 et seq., and 20A.80 et seq.

For forms addressing contract principles generally, see Ch. 50, Contracts .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Party Signing Medical Services Arbitration Agreement May Show He or She Is Not Bound Thereby

Ramirez v. Superior Court (1980) 103 Cal. App. 3d 746, 163 Cal. Rptr. 223 , concerned a plaintiff mother who brought her sick infant to defendant hospital for pediatric examination. The child was mistakenly discharged after an examination in the emergency room. The mother had been handed and was required to sign a Spanish language version of the medical care arbitration agreement specified in Code Civ. Proc. § 1295 before her child would be treated. The infant died, allegedly from failure of the hospital to make a timely diagnosis of the child's illness, and plaintiff brought a medical malpractice action. When defendant petitioned to compel arbitration, plaintiff claimed that she had not realized she was agreeing to arbitrate claims against the defendant The trial court granted defendant's petition to compel arbitration. Although the court recognized that the mother probably was more concerned about the treatment for her ill baby than about the language of the document, the court concluded nonetheless that Code Civ. Proc. § 1295(e) removed the aura of adhesion from the contract and that Code Civ. Proc. § 1295 was a legislative directive to move medical services disputes to the arbitration forum. The mother sought a writ of mandate to vacate the order compelling arbitration.

The court of appeal granted the writ, directing the superior court to vacate its order and reconsider the question of compelling arbitration. The appellate court concluded that in order to avoid constitutional infirmity, Code Civ. Proc. § 1295 must be read as permitting a very limited species of attack by one who has signed an agreement in proper form, basing its decision on the constitutional right to trial by jury in civil cases (103 Cal. App. 3d 746, 755) . The court determined that the Legislature may not establish a conclusive presumption that one signing an agreement meeting the requirements of Code Civ. Proc. § 1295 has in fact consented to arbitration. Therefore, the statute must be read as permitting a party to seek to show that he or she was coerced into signing or did not read the many waiver notices provided and did not realize that the agreement was one to arbitrate (103 Cal. App. 3d 746, 756) . Because the trial court did not resolve the factual issues of coercion in signing and knowledgeas to what the agreement was, the court or appeal was constrained to annul the ruling and return the matter for redetermination (103 Cal. App. 3d 746, 757) .

The court speculated that because of the nature of the warnings on the form prescribed by Code Civ. Proc. § 1295, a party attacking the arbitration agreement would have a difficult time in doing so. The party would have to explain how the 10-point red type above the signature line was overlooked, and why no questions were asked about the document being signed. The party would have to show that no one explained the document or asked that it be read before being signed. Finally, the party would have to explain why he or she did not rescind the agreement within 30 days after it was signed as provided by the statute. The trial court then would make a factual ruling on the questions of coercion and of whether the party actually knew or reasonably should have known that he or she was waiving jury trial rights and agreeing to arbitrate any medical malpractice controversy. Although this procedure might impose a special burden on the trial court, the court of appeal concluded that constitutional provisions for right to jury trial [see U.S. Const., amend. VII; Cal. Const., art. I, § 16] nevertheless required it (103 Cal. App. 3d 746, 756-757) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20A ARBITRATION: RESISTING
PART II. FORMS
D. Defenses to Arbitration

2-20A California Points & Authorities § 20A.93

§ 20A.93 Uninsured Motorist Arbitration Was Not Concluded Within Five Years

[1] FORM

RESPONDENT CANNOT BE COMPELLED TO ARBITRATE THIS UNINSURED MOTORIST CLAIM BECAUSE PETITIONER COULD HAVE CONCLUDED THIS ARBITRATION WITHIN FIVE YEARS AS REQUIRED BY SECTION 11580.2(i)(2)(A) OF THE INSURANCE CODE, BUT FAILED TO DO SO.

A. Insurance Code Section 11580.2(i)(2)(A) Requires Denial. Any uninsured motorist arbitration instituted pursuant to Section 11580.2 of the Insurance Code[, other than one in which the insured also has a workers' compensation claim], shall be concluded within five years from the institution of the arbitration proceeding. If the claimant does not conclude the arbitration within that five-year period and he or she cannot establish any basis for waiver or estoppel of the five-year period for completion of arbitration, any petition to compel that arbitration must be denied (Ins. Code § 11580.2(i)(2)(A); Santangelo v. Allstate Insurance Company (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 804, 812, 816-818, 76 Cal. Rptr. 2d 735).

[Optional] B. Insurance Code Section 11580.2(i)(2)(A) May Be Applied When Accident Occurred Before Enactment. Application of Section 11580.2(i)(2)(A) of the Insurance Code to refuse to compel arbitration arising out of an accident that occurred before enactment of the five-year limitation is proper if, under the circumstances of the particular case, petitioner had a reasonable time after the legislation became operative within which to conclude the arbitration and failed to do so (Santangelo v. Allstate Insurance Company (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 804, 815-818, 76 Cal. Rptr. 2d 735).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used by an insurance company to resist a motion to compel arbitration of an uninsured motorist claim if that motion is not brought until more than five years after arbitration was demanded or otherwise instituted [Ins. Code § 11580.2(i)(2)(A)]. This form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form in opposition to one seeking to compel arbitration [see § 20A.10]. Counsel may also wish to incorporate authority from §§ 20A.80-20A.82 or 20A.86 addressing other aspects and means of waiver.

The five-year limitation in Ins. Code § 11580.2(i)(2)(A) was enacted by 1995 legislation and became effective on January 1, 1996. Paragraph B is for use if the accident that is the basis for the arbitration occurred before January 1, 1996, but the party pursing the claim still had a reasonable amount of time to bring the arbitration to conclusion within the five-year period. In the case cited in Paragraph B, the five-year period expired on March 4, 1996, but given the circumstances of the case [see [3][a], below], the two-month interval was considered reasonable.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. The argument should show the date of the accident, when the arbitration was demanded, agreed to, or otherwise instituted, when and whether any action was commenced and stayed. If the accident occurred before January 1, 1996, counsel should trace the history of the litigation and arbitration to show that the parties were ready to proceed with the arbitration hearing and that the arbitration could have been concluded within what remained of the five-year period.

[c] Commencement of Five-Year Period

In Santangelo v. Allstate Insurance Company (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 804, 76 Cal. Rptr. 2d 735 , the arbitration was deemed instituted on the date plaintiff sent a letter to defendant demanding arbitration even though that letter referred to an agreement to postpone the arbitration hearing until after a medical examination scheduled for the next month [Santangelo v. Allstate Insurance Company (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 804, 812, 76 Cal. Rptr. 2d 735] .

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For discussion of the split of authority on this issue, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 32, Contractual Arbitration: Agreements and Compelling Arbitration (Matthew Bender).

[e] Related Memoranda

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

For other memoranda addressing uninsured motorist arbitration, see Ch. 20,Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.43, and § 20A.42.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Insurance Code Section 11580.2(i)(2)(A) Requires Denial

Ins. Code § 11580.2(i)(2) was amended effective January 1, 1996 to provide that any arbitration instituted pursuant to Ins. Code § 11580.2 had to be concluded either:

> (A) Within five years from the institution of the arbitration proceeding.
>
> (B) If the insured has a workers' compensation claim arising from the same accident, within three years of the date the claim is concluded, or within the five-year period set forth in (A), whichever occurs later.

The doctrines of estoppel, waiver, impossibility, impracticality, and futility apply to excuse a party's compliance with the statutory time frame, as determined by the court [Ins. Code § 11580.2(i)(3)]. Also, that parties to the insurance contract may stipulate in writing to extending the time to conclude arbitration [Ins. Code § 11580.2(i)(4)].

Santangelo v. Allstate Insurance Company (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 804, 76 Cal. Rptr. 2d 735 , arose out of an accident that occurred on March 3, 1990. On March 4, 1991, plaintiff's attorney sent a demand for arbitration to defendant. That letter stated in part that the parties agreed to await an April, 1991 medical examination "prior to initiating the arbitration proceedings." There was a tentative settlement in March, 1993, but it was never finalized. In October, 1994 and March, 1995, Allstate sent letters to plaintiff demanding arbitration. By the time the five-year limitation went into effect on January 1, 1996, the parties had picked an arbitrator. On January 18, 1996, plaintiff wrote to defendant to "go ahead and schedule the Arbitration Hearing 90 days from today." After expiration of the five years, defendant wrote to plaintiff pointing out that she had failed to comply with Ins. Code § 11580.2(i)(2), and that she was prohibited from pursuing her claim further. Plaintiff then filed a motion to compel arbitration, but presented no reason whatsoever why the arbitration hearing could not have been held by March 4, 1996, the five-year mark. She did not contend that she could not obtain a hearing date; she did not even try. The motion was denied. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court of appeal held that the March 4, 1991 letter constituted formal institution of arbitration pursuant to Ins. Code § 11580.2(i); that reference in that letter to the medical examination referred only to deferral of scheduling the hearing, and did not amount to a waiver of the one-year period for institution of arbitration. Allstate's subsequent demands for arbitration were made in an effort to get the case moving and did not "restart the clock" on the time to complete arbitration (65 Cal. App. 4th 804, 812) . Further, the court of appeal found no basis for plaintiff's claim that Allstate had waived or was estopped to assert the five-year period for completion of arbitration (65 Cal. App. 4th 804, 817) .

[b] Insurance Code Section 11580.2(i)(2)(A) May Be Applied When Accident Occurred Before Enactment

The facts and procedural background of Santangelo v. Allstate Insurance Company (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 804, 76 Cal. Rptr. 2d 735 , are discussed at [a], above. Plaintiff argued that application of the five-year limitation of Ins. Code § 11580.2(i)(2)(A) to her case would constitute a retroactive application in violation of her constitutional rights. The court of appeal disagreed (65 Cal. App. 4th 804, 812) . Even before the 1995 amendment of Ins. Code § 11580.2(i), plaintiff would not have had an unlimited time within which to conclude arbitration, either by application of Code Civ. Proc. § 583.310 et seq. [see forms in Ch. 20D, Arbitration: Dismissing, §§ 20D.10 et seq., 20D.20 et seq.] or by extension of the principle that one cannot unreasonably delay initiation of arbitration without waiving the right to arbitration to require one to conclude arbitration within a reasonable time (65 Cal. App. 4th 804, 813-814) . Under the circumstances of this case, the court found that two months [after the effective date of the amendment] was a reasonable amount of time for plaintiff to conclude the arbitration (65 Cal. App. 4th 804, 816) .

159 of 174 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20A ARBITRATION: RESISTING
PART II. FORMS
D. Defenses to Arbitration

2-20A California Points & Authorities § 20A.94

§ 20A.94 The Health Care Plan Disclosures Do Not Comply With Health and Safety Code Section 1363.1

[1] FORM

THE HEALTH CARE PLAN DISCLOSURES DO NOT COMPLY WITH HEALTH AND SAFETY CODE SECTION 1363.1, WHICH IS NOT PREEMPTED BY THE FEDERAL ARBITRATION ACT[, OR BY MEDICARE LAW OR REGULATIONS], AND THEREFORE THIS ARBITRATION AGREEMENT MAY NOT BE ENFORCED.

A. Health and Safety Code Sec 1363.1 Is Not Preempted by the Federal Arbitration Act. Petitioner is engaged in the business of insurance and Health and Safety Code Section 1363.1 clearly purports to regulate an important aspect of that business relating to the performance and enforcement of the policy, which takes the form of the health care plan and subscriber agreement. Because Section 1363.1 regulates the business of insurance within the meaning of the McCarran-Ferguson Act, the Federal Arbitration Act, a federal statute of general application, which does not "specifically relate" to insurance, is foreclosed from application to prevent the operation of Section 1363.1. As a result, the arbitration provisions of the health care plan's subscriber agreement may not be enforced because of their failure to satisfy the specific and unambiguous disclosure requirements imposed by Section 1363.1 (Smith v. PacifiCare Behavioral Health Plan of California, Inc. (2001) 93 Cal. App. 4th 139, 144, 162, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 140 , Second Appellate District, Division Three, cert. denied, (2002) 537 U.S. 818, 123 S. Ct. 92, 154 L. Ed. 2d 23 ; accord Imbler v. PacifiCare of California, Inc. (2002) 103 Cal. App. 4th 567, 576-577, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 715 (Fourth Appellate District, Division Two) ; Pagarigan v. Superior Court (Aetna U.S. Health Care of California, Inc.) (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 1121, 1134, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 124 (Second Appellate District, Division Seven)) .

[Optional] B. Health and Safety Code Section 1363.1 Is Not Preempted by Medicare Law or Regulations. [With respect to plan enrollment documents for Medicare+Choice plans submitted to the Health Care Financing Administration for approval before December 21, 2000, neither or Neither] Medicare law or regulationspreempt state laws, such as Health and Safety Code Section 1363.1, which require specific terms, language, or placement of disclosures in plan enrollment documents, or "marketing materials" as the term is used in Medicare law (Zolezzi v. PacifiCare of California (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 573, 576, 583-588, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 526 ; Pagarigan v. Superior Court (Aetna U.S. Health Care of California, Inc.) (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 1121, 1134, 1147-1150, 1150 n.23, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 124).

[Optional] C. Substantial Compliance Does Not Save Arbitration Agreement. The doctrine of substantial compliance excuses literal noncompliance only when there has been actual compliance in respect to the substance essential to every reasonable objective of the statute. The essential objective of Health & Safety Code Section 1363.1 is to ensure that the enrollee knowingly waived his or her right to a jury trial. Thus, if a health care plan enrollment form does not have the arbitration disclosure immediately before the enrollee's signature and prominently displayed, and there is no indication that the enrollee knowingly waived his or her right to a jury trial, the statutory objective is not met, and the arbitration agreement cannot be enforced. This is true even if the notice requirement was later satisfied with actual notice (Rodriguez v. Blue Cross of California (2008) 162 Cal. App. 4th 330, 338, 340, 75 Cal. Rptr. 3d 754 ; Burks v. Kaiser Foundation Health Plan, Inc. (2008) 160 Cal. App. 4th 1021, 1028-1029, 73 Cal. Rptr. 3d 257 ; Zembsch v. Superior Court (Health Net of California, Inc.) (2006) 146 Cal. App. 4th 153, 166-167, 53 Cal. Rptr. 3d 69 ; Robertson v. Health Net of California, Inc. (2005) 132 Cal. App. 4th 1419, 1431, 34 Cal. Rptr. 3d 547 ; Malek v. Blue Cross of California (2004) 121 Cal. App. 4th 44, 61-64, 72-73, 16 Cal. Rptr. 3d 687).

[Optional] D. Arbitration Agreement Cannot Be Enforced Because It Does Not Comply With Health and Safety Code Section 1363.1. The enrollment form does not comply with the statutory requirement of Health and Safety Code Section 1363.1(b) that the arbitration disclosure be prominently displayed. Thus, noncompliance with the statute renders the arbitration agreement unenforceable (Rodriguez v. Blue Cross of California (2008) 162 Cal. App. 4th 330, 338, 75 Cal. Rptr. 3d 754 ; Burks v. Kaiser Foundation Health Plan, Inc. (2008) 160 Cal. App. 4th 1021, 1028-1029, 73 Cal. Rptr. 3d 257 ; Zembsch v. Superior Court (Health Net of California, Inc.) (2006) 146 Cal. App. 4th 153, 156, 163-168, 53 Cal. Rptr. 3d 69 ; Imbler v. PacifiCare of Cal., Inc. (2002) 103 Cal. App. 4th 567, 578-579, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 715).

[Optional] E. Health Plan Cannot Avoid Disclosure Requirements by Using Employer's Form. An arbitration disclosure in the master agreement between and employer and a health plan is no substitute for compliance with the arbitration disclosure requirements of Health & Safety Code Section 1363.1. Further, the plan cannot avoid compliance by using a form provided by the employer to evidence an employee's election to enroll in the plan. If the an employer-prepared form does not provide the required disclosures, the health plan must provide its own form for that purpose (Medeiros v. Superior Court (Health Net of California) (2007) 146 Cal. App. 4th 1008, 1016-1019, 53 Cal. Rptr. 3d 307).

[Optional] F. Courts Have Authority to Refuse to Enforce Arbitration Agreements that Do Not Comply With Health & Safety Code Section 1363.1. Administrative remedies handed down by the Department of Managed Health Care are not the exclusive means of enforcing the disclosure requirements of Health & Safety Code Section 1363.1. Because the disclosure requirements are mandatory, disclosure is necessary to create an enforceable arbitration provision in a health care service plan, regardless of whether the subscriber actually had notice of the term requiring arbitration. Courts have the authority to refuse to enforce an arbitration agreement based on failure to comply with the mandatory disclosure requirements (Medeiros v. Superior Court (Health Net of California) (2007) 146 Cal. App. 4th 1008, 1019, 53 Cal. Rptr. 3d 307 ; Zembsch v. Superior Court (Health Net of California, Inc.) (2006) 146 Cal. App. 4th 153, 167-168, 53 Cal. Rptr. 3d 69 ; Malek v. Blue Cross of California (2004) 121 Cal. App. 4th 44, 67, 69, 72, 16 Cal. Rptr. 3d 687).

[Optional] G. As Applied to Non-Medical Cause(s) of Action. A disclosure does not meet the requirement of Health & Safety Code Section 1363.1(c) that it clearly state whether the subscriber or enrollee is waiving his or her right to a jury trial for medical malpractice, other disputes relating to the delivery of service under the plan, or both when there is no indication that the subscriber is waiving his or her right to a jury trial for the "delivery of service under the plan" other than malpractice. In a case alleging causes of action other than medical malpractice, confusion as to the extent of the enrollee's waiver undermines the fundamental purpose of the statute--to ensure a knowing waiver of the right to a jury trial--and renders the arbitration provision unenforceable (Rodriguez v. Blue Cross of California (2008) 162 Cal.

App. 4th 330, 338-340, 75 Cal. Rptr. 3d 754).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

The form at [1], above, may be used to resist a motion to compel arbitration by a health care service plan when the plan disclosures do not comply with Health & Safety Code § 1363.1. Most commonly, the health care service plan will argue that Health & Safety Code § 1363.1 is preempted by the Federal Arbitration Act, because it is not applicable to contracts in general, but governs only arbitration contracts. There is authority to that effect [see Erickson v. Aetna Health Plans of Cal. (1999) 71 Cal. App. 4th 646, 652, 84 Cal. Rptr. 2d 76 , Fourth Appellate District, Division Two]. However, the better view seems to be that expressed by the authority used in this form. Optional Paragraph B may be of limited application, because effective December 21, 2000, Medicare law [42 U.S.C. § 1395w-26(b)(3)(B)(iv); see Pub. L. No. 106-554, 114 Stats. 2763, 2763A-560-561] was amended to provide for preemption of state law with respect to "marketing materials" of Medicare+Choice health plans, which most cases have assumed without much argument or discussion include the enrollment form in which the arbitration disclosure required by Health & Safety Code § 1363.1 has to appear. Consistent with the position of the Health Care Financing Administration (HCFA), the federal entity that administers the Medicare program, optional Paragraph B specifies that it is applicable to Medicare+Choice plan enrollment documents submitted to HCFA for approval before December 21, 2000. Optional Paragraph C isfor use to anticipate or rebut a claim that the defect in the disclosure was only technical and therefore the arbitration agreement should be enforced. Optional Paragraph D is for use when the arbitration agreement does not comply with the "prominently displayed" requirement of Health & Safety Code § 1363.1, but the contention that Section 1363.1 is preempted by the Federal Arbitration Act has not been made. Paragraph D incorporates authority from Paragraph A. Optional Paragraph G is for use when the disclosure does not meet the requirement of Health & Safety Code § 1363.1(c) because there is confusion about whether the arbitration requirement applies to causes of action other than those relating to the delivery of medical services.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form in opposition to one seeking to compel arbitration [see § 20A.10]. Counsel may also wish to incorporate authority from § 20A.90 et seq.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. The subscriber agreement should be attached to show clearly the way or ways in which its arbitration provisions do not comply with Health and Safety Code § 1363.1.

Although the issue addressed by this form is mainly one of law, there may be other issues with regard to which counsel will wish to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747 (overruled on other grounds in Rosenthal v. Great Western Financial Securities Corp. (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 394, 404, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 875)].

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For general discussion of compelling and resisting arbitration, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 32, Contractual Arbitration: Agreements and Compelling Arbitration (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Health and Safety Code Section 1363.1 Is Not Preempted by the Federal Arbitration Act

Smith v. PacifiCare Behavioral Health Plan of California, Inc. (2001) 93 Cal. App. 4th 139, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 140 , Second Appellate District, Division Three, cert. denied, (2002) 537 U.S. 818, 123 S. Ct. 92, 154 L. Ed. 2d 23 , was consolidated actions based on identical subscriber agreements of PacifiCare of California and related affiliates. PacifiCare admitted that the agreements did not comply with Health & Safety Code § 1363.1 in the placement of the disclosures required by that section, but argued, based on Erickson v. Aetna Health Plans of Cal. (1999) 71 Cal. App. 4th 646, 652, 84 Cal. Rptr. 2d 76 , Fourth Appellate District, Division Two, that Health & Safety Code § 1363.1, was preempted by the Federal Arbitration Act with respect to contracts involving interstate commerce. In one case arbitration was denied. In the other, it was compelled. In the case in which arbitration was compelled, subscriber sought a writ of mandate vacating the order compelling arbitration. In the case in which the order did not compel arbitration, PacifiCare appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment refusing to compel arbitration and issued the writ vacating the order compelling arbitration, finding that the McCarran-Ferguson Act (15 U.S.C. § 1012) nullified the Federal Arbitration Act's attempt to preempt Health & Safety Code § 1363.1, a state statute which specifically regulates the business of insurance (93 Cal. App. 4th 139, 144, 162) . McCarran-Ferguson was enacted in 1946, in response to a U.S. Supreme Court decision, to return to the states the plenary power to regulate the business of insurance. Under McCarran-Ferguson, an act of Congress may not be construed to "invalidate, impair, or supercede" a state law enacted "for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance" unless the federal act "specifically relates to the business of insurance." (15 U.S.C. § 1012(b)). There was no dispute between the parties that the application of the FAA would have the effect of invalidating, impairing and superceding the operation of Section 1363.1; indeed, it would absolutely preclude its use to regulate the wording and organization of PacifiCare's arbitration clauses. Similarly, there was no argument that the FAA is a statute of general application which does not specifically relate to the business of insurance. Thus, in order for the court of appeal to conclude that McCarran-Ferguson does preclude the application of the FAA, the court had to address only the integrally related questions (1) whether health care service plans, such as PacifiCare, are engaged in the business of insurance and (2) whether Section 1363.1 is a statute enacted "for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance" (93 Cal. App. 4th 139, 154) . The court answered both questions in the affirmative: (1) health care service plans are engaged in the business of insurance (93 Cal. App. 4th 139, 155-159); and (2) Health& Safety Code § 1363.1 was enacted to regulate the relationship between insurer and its insureds, thus "for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance" (93 Cal. App. 4th 139, 159-162) . The court of appeal concluded that McCarran-Ferguson prevented FAA's preemption of and required compliance with Health & Safety Code § 1363.1 by a health care service plan before its arbitration clauses can be enforced (93 Cal. App. 4th 139, 162) .

Plaintiff in Imbler v. PacifiCare of Cal. Inc. (2002) 103 Cal. App. 4th 567, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 715 (Fourth Appellate District, Division Two) , was diagnosed with cancer when his employer was changing health plans and enrolled in defendant's plan based in part on its representation that it would pay for the treatment recommended, which it did not do. Plaintiff sued defendant. Defendant petitioned to compel arbitration. The trial court denied the petition. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed (103 Cal. App. 4th 567, 579) , finding both that Health & Safety Code § 1363.1 is not preempted by the Federal Arbitration Act (FAA) (103 Cal. App. 4th 567, 577) , and that defendant's enrollment documents did not comply with Health & Safety Code § 1363.1 (103 Cal. App. 4th 567, 579) . The court of appeal agreed with Smith v. PacifiCare Behavioral Health of Cal., Inc. (2001) 93 Cal. App. 4th 139, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 140 , that the McCarran-Ferguson Act prevents the FAA from preempting Health & Safety Code § 1363.1 (103 Cal. App. 4th 567, 577) . The McCarran-Ferguson Act sets forth a policy declaration that the primary regulation of the business of insurance be by the states, not the national government (103 Cal. App. 4th 567, 571) and specifically provides that no federal law may be construed to "invalidate, impair, or supersede" a state law "enacted for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance" unless the federal law "specifically relates to the business of insurance" [15 U.S.C., § 1012(b)] (103 Cal. App. 4th 567, 572-573) . The FAA is a statute of general application which does not specifically relate to the business of insurance. Thus, in order to conclude that McCarran-Ferguson does preclude the application of the FAA, the court had only to answer two questions: (1) whether health care service plans, such as PacifiCare, are engaged in the business of insurance and (2) whether Health & Safety Code § 1363.1 is a statute enacted for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance (103 Cal. App. 4th 567, 573) . The court of appeal answered both in the affirmative (103 Cal. App. 4th 567, 574, 576-577) . Plaintiff urged that the plan's enrollment documents failed in three respects to comply with Health & Safety Code § 1363.1. The court considered only one: the failure of the arbitration provision to be prominently displayed on the enrollment form signed by each subscriber or enrolled [see Health & Safety Code § 1363.1(b)] (103 Cal. App. 4th 567, 578) . Here, the disclosure sentence was written in the middle of the authorization for the release of medical records and an authorization for payroll deduction of premiums. The disclosure was in the same font as the rest of the paragraph, and was not bolded, underlined or italicized. The disclosure sentence neither stood out nor was readily noticeable (103 Cal. App. 4th 567, 579) .

Pagarigan v. Superior Court (Aetna U.S. Health Care of California, Inc.) (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 1121, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 124 (Second Appellate District, Division Seven) was a writ of mandate proceeding arising out of an action by survivors of an enrollee in a Medicare HMO health plan offered by Aetna U.S. Health Care of California, Inc., in fact, the very same plan that was at issue in Erickson v. Aetna Health Plans of California, Inc. (1999) 71 Cal. App. 4th 646, 84 Cal. Rptr. 2d 76 (hereinafter "Erickson"). The enrollment form signed by decedent did not include any mention of arbitration, nor did the Evidence of Coverage (EOC) manual supplied for 1996-1999. Decedent first enrolled in 1995 and died in June, 2000. Aetna based its motion to compel arbitration on the 2000 EOC, which mentioned arbitration as an unpaginated amendment located about 75 pages into a document of more than 100 pages. The arbitration provision in the 2002 EOC had been approved by Health Care Financing Administration (HCFA), the federal entity that administers the Medicare program. The trial court granted the motion to compel arbitration, believing itself bound by Erickson. Thereafter, the Second Appellate District, Division Three, issued its decision in Smith v. PacifiCare Behavioral Health of Cal., Inc. (2001) 93 Cal. App. 4th 139, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 140 (hereinafter "Smith", discussed above); and the survivors moved for reconsideration. The trial court again ordered arbitration, reasoning that (1) Smith did not consider a Medicare plan, (2) Erickson upheld federal preemption with respect to a Medicare health plan, (3) federal regulation of the Medicare program, including Medicare health plans, is extensive, and thus, (4) Smith is distinguishable. The survivors filed a writ of mandate arguing that Aetna could not enforce the arbitration provision because it failed to comply with Health & Safety Code § 1363.1, which is not preempted by either the Federal Arbitration Act (FAA) or the Medicare scheme.

The court of appeal agreed and issued the writ, directing the trial court to deny Aetna's petition to compel arbitration (102 Cal. App. 4th 1121, 1151) . The court of appeal noted that although Erickson made mention of the fact that the plan involved was a Medicare plan, that figured in its preemption analysis only for the purpose of assessing whether the contract at issue involved interstate commerce as required for the FAA to apply. There was no discussion whatsoever of whether Health & Safety Code § 1363.1 was independently preempted under the Medicare scheme (102 Cal. App. 4th 1121, 1131) . The court of appeal agreed with Smith's conclusion that the McCarran-Ferguson Act applies to the FAA, with the result that the FAA, a federal statute of general application, which does not specifically relate to insurance, is foreclosed from application to prevent the operation of Health & Safety Code § 1363.1 (102 Cal. App. 4th 1121, 1134) .

[b] Health and Safety Code Section 1363.1 Is Not Preempted by Medicare Law or Regulations

Plaintiff in Zolezzi v. PacifiCare of California (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 573, 575, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 526 enrolled in defendant's Secure Horizons Medicare+Choice plan on January 1, 2000, and shortly thereafter suffered a fractured shoulder. Defendant refused to authorize surgery, which a second opinion provided was necessary to avoid amputation. Plaintiff appealed the denial, and an administrative hearing was held on December 15. On February 6, 2001, not having received a decision by the administrative law judge, plaintiff underwent surgery to repair her fractured humerus. The surgery was performed by a non-plan surgeon at plaintiff's expense. On February7 the administrative decision upheld defendant's denial of the surgical referral authorization. Plaintiff filed a complaint against defendant alleging seven causes of action:

- Breach of the duty of good faith and fair dealing;
- Conspiracy to breach the covenant of good faith and fair dealing;
- Negligent interference with a contractual relationship;
- Intentional interference with a contractual relationship;
- Intentional infliction of emotional distress;
- Breach of fiduciary duty; and
- Unfair business practices in violation of Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200.

Defendant moved to compel arbitration. Both parties agreed the plan documents did not comply with Health & Safety Code § 1363.1, but defendant contented that Health & Safety Code § 1363.1 was preempted by the Federal Arbitration Act and by Medicare law. The trial court denied the motion to compel arbitration, and defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed (105 Cal. App. 4th 573, 576) . The 1997 Balanced Budget Act (BBA) authorized Medicare+Choice (M+C) plans [42 U.S.C. § 1395w21 et seq.] (105 Cal. App. 4th 573, 579) . At the time of the acts complained of, the law which defendant contended preempted Health & Safety Code § 1363.1--42 U.S.C. § 1395w-26(b)(3)(B)--explicitly superseded state law with respect only to (1) benefit requirements, (2) requirements relating to inclusion or treatment of providers, and (3) coverage determinations (including related appeals and grievance processes). On December 21, 2000, 42 U.S.C. § 1395w-26(b)(3)(B) was amended to add a fourth category of specifically preempted state standards: requirements relating to marketing materials and summaries and schedules of benefits regarding a Medicare+Choice plan (105 Cal. App. 4th 573, 580) . The court of appeal, relying on McCall v. PacifiCare of Cal., Inc. (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 412, 423-426, 106 Cal. Rptr. 2d 271, 21 P.3d 1189 , which considered the state of the law prior to the enactment of the BBA amendments, believed the preemption of coverage determinations should be narrowly construed and would relate only to procedures for obtaining payment or reimbursement for medical services. Other state law causes of action against an HMO arising out of its denial of services under a Medicare-subsidized health plan were not preempted by the Medicare statute (105 Cal. App. 4th 573, 583-584) . The court noted that the Health Care Financing Administration (HCFA), the federal entity that administers the Medicare program, stated, in soliciting comments to its regulations after enactment of the BBA, that it was adopting a narrow interpretation of the scope of preemption of coverage determinations [see 63 Fed. Reg. 34968, 35013] (105 Cal. App. 4th 573, 583-584) . The regulation as adopted, 42 C.F.R. § 422.204(b)(3), provides that preemption extends to coverage determinations (including related appeal and grievance processes for all benefits included under an M+C contract), but that determinations on issues other than whether a service is covered under an M+C contract, and the extent of enrollee liability under the M+C plan for that service, are not considered coverage determinations for purposes of this preemption (105 Cal. App. 4th 573, 585) . The court of appeal concluded that neither 42 U.S.C. § 1395w-26(b)(3)(B)(iii) nor the regulation preempted state law causes of action that do not seek payment or reimbursement of a Medicare claim or otherwise fall within the Medicare administrative review process for coverage determinations (105 Cal. App. 4th 573, 586) . Thus, 42 U.S.C. § 1395w-26(b)(3)(B)(iii) also does not preempt state law tort claims or state consumer protection statutes, such as Health & Safety Code § 1363.1 (105 Cal. App. 4th 573, 587) . Health & Safety Code § 1363.1 does not provide an alternative to Medicare's exclusive review process for coverage determinations; Thus 42 U.S.C. § 1395w-26(b)(3)(B)(iii) does not preempt it. "Appeals" and "grievances" as used in 42 U.S.C. § 1395w-26(b)(3)(B)(iii) relate to underlying "coverage determinations," which term relates to decisions on claims seeking payment or reimbursement of a Medicare claim (105 Cal. App. 4th 573, 587) .

Although defendant conceded that the December 21, 2000 amendment of 42 U.S.C. § 1395w-26(b)(3)(B)(iv) to add marketing materials to the matters specifically preempted was prospective only, it argued for preemption on the ground that the relevant law was that in effect on the date the court ruled on the motion to compel arbitration or the date when plaintiff filed her complaint (105 Cal. App. 4th 573, 586-588) . The court of appeal disagreed, saying the relevant acts were plaintiff's enrollment in the plan and the actions and omissions of defendant and its health care providers with respect to plaintiff's fracture, all of which occurred before December 21, 2000. Because defendant did not comply with the arbitration disclosure requirements of Health & Safety Code § 1363.1 during that relevant period, 42 U.S.C. § 1395w-26(b)(3)(B)(iv) did not preempt application of section 1363.1 and therefore defendant could enforce the arbitration provision (105 Cal. App. 4th 573, 588) .

The facts and procedural background of Pagarigan v. Superior Court (Aetna U.S. Health Care of California, Inc.) (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 1121, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 124 , and the portion of the opinion addressing Federal Arbitration Act preemption of Health & Safety Code § 1363.1 are discussed at [a], above. Aetna argued that the Medicare scheme, as federal legislation "specifically related" to insurance, prevails over the McCarran-Ferguson Act (102 Cal. App. 4th 1121, 1135) . The court of appeal agreed that because Medicare is a federal statutory scheme "specifically related to the business of insurance," the McCarran-Ferguson Act is inapplicable to Medicare, but the preemptive effect of the Medicare laws on state laws still had to be considered (102 Cal. App. 4th 1121, 1135) . Aetna claimed two bases for Medicare's preemption of Health & Safety Code § 1363.1: either (1) the "all encompassing federal regulatory scheme governing the Medicare program and its contracted Medicare health care service plans" generally or (2) the fact that the form and substance of its arbitration provision pursuant to federal regulation, were subject to, and received, approval from HCF as the arbitration provision was within the definition of "marketing materials" governed by 42 C.F.R. § 422.80. The court of appeal noted that in enacting Medicare, Congress did not intend to displace state tort remedies for claims unrelated to Medicare coverage determinations, such claims being considered collateral to, and not inextricably intertwined with, Medicare benefit claims (102 Cal. App. 4th 1121,1136-1137) . The Medicare HMO plan here at issue (a Medicare+Choice plan in the language of the statute) is governed by the Balanced Budget Act of 1997 (42 U.S.C. §§ 1395w-21 to 1395w-28), which has been held noteworthy for its addition of an express limited preemption provision to the Medicare Act (102 Cal. App. 4th 1121, 1137) . There is no express preemption statement in the Medicare Act. Rather 42 U.S.C. § 1395 explicitly states an intent to minimize federal intrusion in the area of medical services for the elderly (102 Cal. App. 4th 1121, 1138) . 42 U.S.C. § 1395w-26(b)(3) authorizes the creation of standards under the Medicare+Choice program and delineates the limited preemptive effect of those standards: those standards supersede state law or regulation to the extent the law or regulation is inconsistent with the standards (102 Cal. App. 4th 1121, 1140) . 42 C.F.R. § 22.80, the federal authority on which Aetna primarily relied, addresses the "approval of marketing materials and election forms," defined to include "membership communication materials such as membership rules, subscriber agreements (evidence of coverage) [and] member handbooks ..." and requires their submission to HCFA for review at least 45 days before their distribution (102 Cal. App. 4th 1121, 1141) . 42 C.F.R. § 422.402(a), (b) provide, with exceptions for benefit requirements and treatment of providers and suppliers and coverage determinations which are specifically superseded, that the standards supersede state laws, regulations, contract requirements, or other standards only to the extent that the state laws are inconsistent with the standards established under that part. Otherwise, nothing in 42 C.F.R. 422.402 may be construed to affect or modify the provisions of any other law or regulation that imposes or preempts a specific state authority [42 C.F.R. § 422.402(c)] (102 Cal. App. 4th 1121, 1143) . The court of appeal also noted that comments to interim regulations promulgated by HCFA stated that unless specific preemptions apply, state laws or standards that are more strict than Medicare standards would not be preempted unless they prevented compliance with Medicare requirements and that there were likely to be quality and consumer protection standards imposed by state law that all Medicare plans must comply with, and for which there is no Federal preemption [see 63 Fed. Reg. 34967, 35012 (Jun. 26, 1998)] (102 Cal. App. 4th 1121, 1144) . The Knox-Keene Health Care Service Plan Act of 1975 (Health & Safety Code § 1340 et seq.), of which Section 1363.1 by its express terms applies to plans accepting Medicare beneficiaries as enrollees [see, e.g., Health & Safety Code §§ 1363, 1363.05, 1367.12 & 1367.15] (102 Cal. App. 4th 1121, 1145) . The court of appeal found no inconsistency between the Medicare statutes and regulations and Health & Safety Code § 1363.1 but in fact found section 1363.1 wholly consistent with Medicare standards (102 Cal. App. 4th 1121, 1148) .

Although 42 U.S.C. § 1395w-26(b)(3)(B)(iv) was amended, effective December 21, 2000 [see Pub. L. No. 106-554, Dec. 21, 2000, 114 Stats. 2763, 2763A-560-561], to add Medicare plan marketing materials to the matters expressly preempting state laws, and authorized regulations providing model language for marketing materials, the court of appeal noted that the amendment and any regulations that might be adopted pursuant to it, were prospective only and did not apply to this case (102 Cal. App. 4th 1121, 1149-1151) . The court cited a letter from the HCFA informing states of the amendment and also advising that the new specific prohibition against state regulation of marketing materials applies to marketing materials submitted after December 21, 2000 (102 Cal. App. 4th 1121, 1149 n.3).

42 C.F.R. § 422.402 as discussed in Pagarigan, above, is quoted as it was at that time. Since January, 2005, it has stated only that the standards established by the Code of Federal Regulations supersede any state law or regulation (other than state licensing laws or state laws relating to plan solvency) with respect to the Medicare Advantage plans.

[c] Substantial Compliance Does Not Save Arbitration Agreement

Rodriguez v. Blue Cross of California (2008) 162 Cal. App. 4th 330, 75 Cal. Rptr. 3d 754 , and Burks v. Kaiser Foundation Health Plan, Inc. (2008) 160 Cal. App. 4th 1021, 73 Cal. Rptr. 3d 257 , are discussed at [d], below.

Zembsch v. Superior Court (Health Net of California, Inc.) (2006) 146 Cal. App. 4th 153, 53 Cal. Rptr. 3d 69 , involved an action by an insured against a health insurance provider and the physician group that provided medical care. A member of the insured family had a life threatening condition for which the insured sought a standing referral to a specialist in Delaware. The insurance plan provides for standing referrals if the primary care physician, Health Net's medical director, and the member deem it necessary. Defendants refused to issue a standing referral until two days after plaintiffs filed suit. Plaintiffs considered the referral they issued then to be inadequate because it was for consultation only. Both Health Net and Alta Bates moved to compel arbitration and stay the action. Plaintiffs opposed the motions on various grounds, including the failure of the arbitration disclosure on Health Net's enrollment form to comply with Health & Safety Code § 1363.1 because that disclosure was not "prominently displayed." The trial court granted defendants' motions and ordered the matter to arbitration, saying that while there was no doubt that the disclosure could have been made more prominent, it adequately fit the standard definition of prominent, i.e. standing out or readily noticeable. Plaintiffs filed a petition for writ of mandate and/or prohibition seeking review of the trial court order compelling arbitration.

The court of appeal issued a peremptory writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate its order compelling arbitration, and to enter an order denying the motions to compel arbitration and dissolving the stay order (146 Cal.

App. 4th 153, 169) . The court of appeal held that the enrollment form did not comply with the statutory requirement of Health & Safety Code § 1363.1(b) that the arbitration disclosure be prominently displayed and that noncompliance with the statute rendered the arbitration agreement unenforceable (146 Cal. App. 4th 153, 156). The court first discussed why review by writ was available and appropriate in these circumstances (146 Cal. App. 4th 153, 160-162). Because the material facts were undisputed, the issue of the enforceability of the arbitration agreement was decided de novo (146 Cal. App. 4th 153, 162) . The single page enrollment form was Appendix A to the opinion. The arbitration agreement appeared beneath a boldface black line at the very bottom of the page. Under the boldface line were two single-spaced, unindented "paragraphs" printed in the smallest typeface used on the form. The first and longer of these two paragraphs concerned the enrollee's authorization for the release of medical information. The arbitration agreement appeared immediately above the signature line. The court discussed the law applying to Section 1363.1(b), specifically that the requirement that the arbitration disclosure be "prominently displayed," had been interpreted in Imbler v. PacifiCare of Cal., Inc. (2002) 103 Cal. App. 4th 567, 579, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 715 (Imbler, discussed at [a], above), Malek v. Blue Cross of California (2004) 121 Cal. App. 4th 44, 61-62, (Malek, discussed above), and Robertson v. Health Net of California, Inc. (2005) 132 Cal. App. 4th 1419, 1426-1429, 34 Cal. Rptr. 3d 547 (Robertson, discussed above) meant the disclosure had to stand out or project beyond a surface or line, or be readily noticeable (146 Cal. App. 4th 153, 163-165) . The court concluded that the arbitration disclosure was not prominently displayed because it did not stand out or project beyond the surface line nor was it readily noticeable (146 Cal. App. 4th 153, 164-165) . Like the disclosure in Robertson, the disclosure in this case was printed in the same font or typeface as most of the form. The disclosure heading appeared to be in faint boldface type. The disclosure was the second of two single-spaced paragraphs of small, condensed type located at the bottom of the enrollment form. Neither the disclosure nor the preceding paragraph was indented, and the two paragraphs were not separated from each other by any lines or spacing. The disclosure was in the same font as the preceding paragraph, and it was not bolded, underlined or italicized. In contrast, some of the text of the form was printed in boldface type, in all capitals or in larger fonts, so Health Net clearly could have made the text of the disclosure more prominent had it chosen to do so. The disclosure does not stand out from the remainder of the document and is not readily noticeable (146 Cal. App. 4th 153, 165) . In fact, the court found this disclosure less prominent than those in Malek and Robertson. The disclosure in Robertson was set off from the remainder of the text by blank lines before the first and after the last sentences. That spacing gave it greater prominence and made it easier to read than the disclosure being considered here. The disclosure in Malek was preceded by the heading "ARBITRATION AGREEMENT" in clear, boldface type and was contained in a separate numbered paragraph. Neither of these two distinguishing features was present here. Thus, the arbitration disclosure on the enrollment form signed by Zembsch was not "prominently displayed" and, therefore, does not comply with the terms of Section 1363.1(b) (146 Cal. App. 4th 153, 165) .

The court also considered Health Net's claim that the arbitration disclosure substantially complied with Health & Safety Code § 1363.1. Health Net argued that the purpose of Section 1363.1 had been served because Zembsch never claimed not to have read or understand the arbitration disclosure: thus, the statute's objective--to safeguard against patients unknowingly waiving their constitutional right to a jury trial--has been achieved. The court of appeal noted that there is some doubt whether Section 1363.1 permits mere substantial compliance with its provisions. Without a proper disclosure, the court could not be certain that the subscriber knowingly waived the right to a jury trial. Health Net's failure to display its disclosure with the prominence required by the statute cast doubt on whether Zembsch knowingly waived his rights; and the court was therefore unwilling to hold that there had been "actual compliance in respect to the substance essential to every reasonable objective of the statute" (146 Cal. App. 4th 153, 166). The court rejected the claim of substantial compliance (146 Cal. App. 4th 153, 167).

Health Net also claimed that the arbitration agreement could be enforced despite the violation of Health & Safety Code § 1363.1 because the only remedies for violations of Section 1363.1 are the administrative enforcement remedies contained in the Knox-Keene Health Care Service Plan Act of 1975 (Knox-Keene Act; Health & Safety Code § 1340 et seq.). Malek rejected a very similar argument, and the court of appeal followed its reasoning Health Net relied on cases holding that various provisions of the Knox-Keene Act do not create either private rights of action or independent bases for liability. Plaintiffs did not assert any private right of action against defendants. Their reliance on Section 1363.1 was purely defensive. They did not assert that Health Net was liable to them, in damages or otherwise. The court was not persuaded that the Legislature intended that the sole consequence of a violation of Section 1363.1 should be administrative penalties imposed by the Department of Managed Health Care. The notice requirements of Section 1363.1 were intended to ensure consent to a binding agreement to arbitrate; to make certain that the parties have agreed to be bound to contractual arbitration (146 Cal. App. 4th 153, 167) . The court agreed with the well-reasoned conclusion in Malek that it would be absurd to impose an administrative penalty on a health service plan provider for failure to comply with the arbitration disclosure requirements but permit arbitration to go forward under those circumstances (146 Cal. App. 4th 153, 167-168) . The lack of language in Section 1363.1 specifying that a noncomplying arbitration agreement be unenforceable is of no consequence. The statute is phrased in mandatory terms, and any result other than denying enforcement would lead to the absurd result of compelling arbitration under an undisclosed agreement. A violation of section 1363.1 renders an arbitration agreement unenforceable. The trial court erred in compelling plaintiffs to arbitrate (146 Cal. App. 4th 153, 168) .

Plaintiff in Robertson v. Health Net of California, Inc. (2005) 132 Cal. App. 4th 1419, 34 Cal. Rptr. 3d 547 was a member of a health plan issued by defendant. When the plan was cancelled, plaintiff filed a lawsuit against Health Net claiming breach of contract, breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, fraud, unfair competition, and violation of the Consumer Legal Remedies Act (CRLA: Civ. Code § 1780 et seq.). Health Net filed a motion to compel arbitration, attaching a copy of Robertson's enrollment form, which included the claimed arbitration agreement. The trial court denied the motion to compel arbitration, ruling that the arbitration clause was unenforceable because it failed to meet two of the mandatory display requirements set forth in Health & Safety Code § 1363.1. The agreement failed to comply with section 1363.1(d), which requires a health plan to display its arbitration agreement "immediately before" the signature line provided for the enrollee on the enrollment form. It also failed to comply with section 1363.1(b), which requires a health plan to prominently display its arbitration agreement on the plan enrollment form. Health Net appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed (132 Cal. App. 4th 1419, 1432) . Health & Safety Code § 1363.1(d) directs a health plan to place its arbitration agreement "immediatelybefore the signature line provided for the individual enrolling in the health care service plan." The court said it would be hard to imagine that the Legislature's directive to health care plan providers could have been clearer. In plain and ordinary language, "immediately before" means that the arbitration agreement must be typed in directly before the signature line provided for the individual on the enrollment form without any intervening language (132 Cal. App. 4th 1419, 1426) . According to Health Net, it complied with this requirement given the fact that only five sentences separate its arbitration agreement and enrollee signature line. Health Net argued that immediately means "close by." The court of appeal disagreed (132 Cal. App. 4th 1419, 1427) . As to the requirement that the arbitration clause be prominently displayed, Health Net argued that "prominently displayed" only means that the arbitration agreement must stand out and be readily noticeable on the plan enrollment form and contended that its separated and bolded arbitration clause fulfilled this requirement. Again, the court disagreed, observing that the arbitration clause itself was not highlighted or bolded. Only the title of the clause was bolded. Moreover, both the bolded title and the text of the disclosure itself, are printed in the same typeface as that used in the rest of the enrollment form (132 Cal. App. 4th 1419, 1428) . Given the facts that: (1) the provision is some distance from the enrollees' signature line, (2) the provision is printed in the same font or typeface as the rest of the form, and (3) only the title is in bolded type, the court of appeal concluded that the arbitration clause also failed to meet the mandatory prominence requirement of section 1363.1(b) and was unenforceable for this additional reason (132 Cal. App. 4th 1419, 1429) . The court of appeal said that the rules governing the doctrine of substantial compliance are well settled: the doctrine excuses literal noncompliance only when there has been actual compliance in respect to the substance essential to every reasonable objective of the statute. The essential objective of Health & Safety Code § 1363.1 is to ensure a knowing waiver of the right to a jury. Because of the lack of prominent display of the arbitration clause, the space between the arbitration agreement and enrollee signature line, and the intervening language, Health Net had not actually complied with the essential purpose of the statute and there was doubt whether Robertson knowingly waived her right to a jury trial. Consequently, the court could not excuse Health Net's violation of Health & Safety Code § 1363.1 based on a theory of substantial compliance trial (132 Cal. App. 4th 1419, 1431) .

Plaintiffs in Malek v. Blue Cross of California (2004) 121 Cal. App. 4th 44, 16 Cal. Rptr. 3d 687 filed a complaint based on defendant's allegedly improper denial of benefits for infertility treatment. Although the arbitration disclosure in the plan enrollment form did not comply with Health & Safety Code § 1363.1, the trial court granted defendant's petition to compel arbitration, with the exception of a claim for injunctive relief brought under the Consumer Legal Remedies Act (CLRA), based on Erickson v. Aetna Health Plans of California, Inc. (1999) 71 Cal. App. 4th 646, 84 Cal. Rptr. 2d 76 , which held that the Federal Arbitration Act (FAA) preempted the requirements of Health & Safety Code § 1363.1. When Smith v. PacifiCare Behavioral Health of Cal., Inc. (2001) 93 Cal. App. 4th 139, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 140 , cert. denied, (2002) 537 U.S. 818, 123 S. Ct. 92, 154 L. Ed. 2d 23 (Smith) was decided, plaintiffs moved to vacate the trial court's order compelling arbitration based on that decision, but the trial court denied the motion, holding it lacked jurisdiction to consider the matter. Then, plaintiffs moved the arbitrator to dismiss the arbitration. That motion was also based on Pagarigan v. Superior Court (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 1121, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 124 , and Imbler v. PacifiCare of Cal., Inc. (2002) 103 Cal. App. 4th 567, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 715 (Imbler). Defendant argued that the arbitrator could not reverse the trial court's order finding the existence of a valid arbitration agreement and compelling arbitration, but the arbitrator granted the motion and dismissed the arbitration. Defendant filed a petition to vacate the arbitrator's decision to dismiss the arbitration on the ground that the arbitrator exceeded his powers under the arbitration agreement. The trial court concluded that the arbitrator's dismissal order was an award, and vacated it, finding that the arbitrator exceeded his power by making the determination that he lacked jurisdiction to proceed with the arbitration. After notice to the parties, the trial court reconsidered its original order, and based on the change in the law, entered an order denying defendant's petition to compel arbitration. Both parties appealed. Plaintiffs contended that the trial court erred in vacating the dismissal, and should have confirmed it, because even if the arbitrator had exceeded his authority, any error in the award could have been corrected without affecting the merits of the decision. Defendant contended the trial court lacked subject matter jurisdiction to reconsider the issue and that the arbitration provision in the enrollment form was enforceable even though it did not strictly comply with Health & Safety Code § 1363.1.

The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's order denying the petition to compel arbitration, and the orders vacating the arbitrator's award and vacating its original decision to grant the petition to compel arbitration (121 Cal. App. 4th 44, 50-51, 73) . The portion of the opinion addressing the issue of the arbitrator's exceeding his authority is discussed in Ch. 20C, Arbitration: Confirming, Correcting, or Vacating the Award, § 20C.192[3][a]. The court of appeal distinguished the authorities relied on by defendant in arguing that the trial court had no jurisdiction to reconsider the petition to compel arbitration [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.4], and based its position on Blake v. Ecker (2001) 93 Cal. App. 4th 728, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 422 (121 Cal. App. 4th 44, 59) . A change in the law required the trial court to reconsider its prior ruling compelling arbitration [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(c)] (121 Cal. App. 4th 44, 59-60) . The progress of the arbitration is not material when considering a change in the law affecting whether the arbitral forum was a correct one (121 Cal. App. 4th 44, 60) . The court of appeal said that a violation of Health & Safety Code § 1363.1 renders a contractually binding arbitration provision in a health service plan enrollment form unenforceable. Although the court did not foreclose the possibility that under the appropriate circumstances the doctrine of substantial compliance might apply, it concluded that the enrollment format issue here did not substantially comply with section 1363.1 (121 Cal. App. 4th 44, 50) .

Defendant conceded that its enrollment form did not meet the requirements of Health & Safety Code § 1363.1(d) because the arbitration provision did not appear immediately before the signature line (121 Cal. App. 4th 44, 61-62) . The court ofappeal also concluded that the enrollment form did not meet the prominence requirement of Health & Safety Code § 1363.1(b) (121 Cal. App. 4th 44, 62) . The court of appeal agreed with Imbler, that noncompliance with Health & Safety Code § 1363.1 renders the arbitration provision unenforceable (121 Cal. App. 4th 44, 63) . The plain language of section 1363.1 is clear--the arbitration disclosure requirements are mandatory (121 Cal. App. 4th 44, 64) . Defendant argued that because section 1363.1 is silent on the consequences of failing to comply with the disclosure requirements, the Legislature must have concluded that failure to comply would not render an arbitration provision unenforceable (121 Cal. App. 4th 44, 67) . But the court of appeal felt the statutory language itself implied that an enrollment form complying with the notice requirements would be enforced, and that such a contract could not be enforced against a party who did not knowingly waive his or her right to a jury trial. There was no need to explicitly state the consequences of failure to comply when this statutory language was clear and unambiguous (121 Cal. App. 4th 44, 68) .

The court of appeal also rejected defendant's argument that the only remedy for violations of section 1363.1 were the administrative penalties set forth in the Knox-Keene Act (121 Cal. App. 4th 44, 68) . Nor did the court agree that defendant had substantially complied with the requirements of section 1363.1. Section 1363.1 is not just a notice statute; it is also to ensure a knowing waiver of the right to a jury trial. The signature of the individual enrolling in the health service plan is required to ensure a knowing waiver of his or her rights (121 Cal. App. 4th 44, 72) . The court found it disputable whether the arbitration provision satisfied the prominence requirement, but even if the notice requirement was satisfied with actual notice at a later date, there was no indication that the plaintiffs knowingly waived their right to a jury trial based on the juxtaposition of the signature line. The arbitration provision was on the left-hand side of the enrollment form while the signature line was on the lower right-hand side of the form. The signature line appeared directly below the authorization to obtain or release medical information. This placement was not a technical defect of form because it left in doubt whether the plaintiffs knowingly waived their right to a jury trial. Under those circumstances, the statutory objectives of section 1363.1 had not been met (121 Cal. App. 4th 44, 73) .

[d] Arbitration Agreement Cannot Be Enforced Because It Does Not Comply With Health and Safety Code Section 1363.1

Rodriguez v. Blue Cross of California (2008) 162 Cal. App. 4th 330, 75 Cal. Rptr. 3d 754 , was a class action containing causes of action for violation of the unfair competition law, declaratory relief, breach of contract, breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and breach of the Consumers Legal Remedies Act (CLRA; Civ. Code § 1750 et seq.). The complaint alleged that Blue Cross had a practice of speaking in Spanish to Spanish-speaking potential purchasers but then sending applications in English and that Blue Cross rescinded plaintiff's agreement based on unintentional misstatements. Blue Cross petitioned to compel arbitration, but the trial court denied the petition, finding that the language in the arbitration agreement was not prominently displayed; the provision and the language above the signature line were limited to medical malpractice disputes. Because this case did not involve medical malpractice, the trial court found the arbitration provision was unenforceable. Blue Cross appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed (162 Cal. App. 4th 330, 333, 342) . The court discussed Health & Safety Code § 1363.1 and cases interpreting it, noting that the doctrine of substantial compliance cannot save a disclosure that does not actually comply with the essential purpose of the statute, which is to ensure the knowing waiver of the jury trial right by the health plan enrollee (162 Cal. App. 4th 330, 335-338) . The court acknowledged that the disclosure complied with the requirements of Section 1363.1 because it was set off in a separate paragraph, the title was emphasized, a majority of the text was bolded, the most important notices were written in bold with uppercase lettering, and it was the last disclosure on the page with no intervening language before the signature. However, that was only applicable to the portions of the disclosure dealing with the arbitration of medical malpractice disputes; it was therefore inapplicable to this case. The portion in bold concerns "any dispute as to medical malpractice" and the language immediately above the signature line in capital letters referred only to "any issue of medical malpractice." There was only one sentence in the disclosure that was more expansive and did not expressly limit arbitration to medical malpractice lawsuits. That was the first sentence, which provided that "Blue Cross requires binding arbitration to settle all dispute against Blue Cross, including claims of medical malpractice." Considered in isolation, that sentence failed to comply with the requirements of Health & Safety Code § 1363.1(b) and (d): it was in plain text, was not prominently displayed because it was not readily noticeable. When one considers the emphasis of the other sentences, the first sentence recedes from the forefront because it is in plain text and is not immediately above the signature line. It is artificial to separate that sentence from the disclosure as a whole (162 Cal. App. 4th 330, 338) . Once the entire disclosure is considered, the disclosure does not meet the requirement of Health & Safety Code § 1363.1(c) that it clearly state whether the subscriber or enrollee is waiving his or her right to a jury trial for medical malpractice, other disputes relating to the delivery of service under the plan, or both (162 Cal. App. 4th 330, 338-339) . Significantly absent from the disclosure is any indication that the subscriber is waiving his or her right to a jury trial for the "delivery of service under the plan" other than malpractice. The discrepancy between the first sentence, which is expansive, and the remainder of the disclosure, which is limited to medical malpractice, creates confusion. And that confusion regarding the extent of the jury trial waiver violates Section 1363.1(c). The court of appeal agreed with plaintiff that the emphasis on the arbitration of disputes involving medical malpractice served to de-emphasize, rather than make prominent, the general reference to arbitration of "all disputes against Blue Cross" (162 Cal. App. 4th 330, 339) The court again considered the doctrine of substantial compliance, noting that it was not met in this case with respect to a lawsuit involving a dispute other than medical malpractice. "Substantial compliance," as the phrase is used in the decisions, means actual compliance in respect to the substance essential to every reasonable objective of the statute. When there is compliance as to all matters of substance technical deviations are not to be given the stature of noncompliance. The express language in the disclosure limiting arbitration to disputesinvolving malpractice rendered it impossible to conclude that Rodriguez knowingly waived his right to a jury trial or court trial with respect to disputes other than medical malpractice. The majority of the disclosure and all of the emphasized language limited arbitration to disputes of medical malpractice claims. Even though the first sentence supported Blue Cross's contrary interpretation, it conflicted with the remainder of the disclosure and rendered unclear the extent of Rodriguez's waiver. The confusion as to the extent of Rodriguez's waiver undermined the fundamental purpose of the statute--to ensure a knowing waiver of the right to a jury trial. Noncompliance with Section 1363.1 rendered the arbitration provision unenforceable (162 Cal. App. 4th 330, 340) .

Plaintiff in Burks v. Kaiser Foundation Health Plan, Inc. (2008) 160 Cal. App. 4th 1021, 73 Cal. Rptr. 3d 257 , sued defendants alleging that he received egregious treatment while suffering from renal failure and awaiting a kidney transplant. Defendants petitioned to compel arbitration under the arbitration provision in the membership agreement between Burks and Kaiser. Plaintiff opposed the petition on the ground the arbitration provision was unenforceable because the disclosure in the enrollment form was not prominently displayed as required by Health & Safety Code 1363.1(b). The arbitration disclosure appeared in a single paragraph just beneath the line forming the bottom of the box, immediately above the space provided for the enrollee's signature. The arbitration disclosure was printed in typeface that was substantially the same or smaller than the typeface used on the rest of the enrollment form, and was not highlighted, italicized, or bolded. The notice lacked any kind of heading. It was simply a paragraph of small text at the end of the enrollment form immediately above the space for the enrollee's signature. The trial court found the disclosure was not prominently displayed and refused to compel arbitration. Defendants appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed (160 Cal. App. 4th 1021, 1024, 1030) , finding that the arbitration disclosure was not prominently displayed on the enrollment form because there was nothing that made the disclosure stand out from the remainder of the form, so that it could be reasonably expected to command the notice of a person filling out the form (160 Cal. App. 4th 1021, 1024, 1028) . The court also rejected the argument that the enrollment form substantially complied with Health & Safety Code § 1363.1 because an enrollment form that does not have the required arbitration disclosure prominently displayed on it cannot be deemed to substantially comply with that statute. Health & Safety Code § 1363.1 provides that a health care service plan that requires binding arbitration to settle disputes with its members must disclose that arbitration requirement in a separate article in the agreement issued to the employer group or individual subscriber. That disclosure must be prominently displayed on the enrollment form signed by each subscriber or enrollee. A violation of Section 1363.1 renders a contractually binding arbitration provision in a health service plan enrollment form unenforceable (160 Cal. App. 4th 1021, 1029) .

Zembsch v. Superior Court (Health Net of California, Inc.) (2006) 146 Cal. App. 4th 153, 53 Cal. Rptr. 3d 69 , is discussed at [c], above.

Imbler v. PacifiCare of Cal., Inc. (2002) 103 Cal. App. 4th 567, 579, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 715 , is discussed at [a], above.

[e] Health Plan Cannot Avoid Disclosure Requirements by Using Employer's Form

Medeiros v. Superior Court (Health Net of California) (2007) 146 Cal. App. 4th 1008, 53 Cal. Rptr. 3d 307 , involved a health care plan administered by the County of San Bernardino, for which both plaintiffs worked. The County entered into a group service agreement with Health Net. That agreement required members to arbitrate all disputes, except medical malpractice, between a member and Health Net regarding the performance, interpretation or breach of the agreement between the County and Health Net. Medeiros did not sign an "enrollment form" supplied by Health Net but in June, 2002, signed a "benefits election form" supplied by and returned to the County, which then submitted it to Health Net. The benefits election form recited that the member would be bound the rules of binding arbitration as described in the Evidence of Coverage (EOC), but plaintiffs were not provided with the EOC until November, 2005. Health Net did not receive any application form signed by the member. Plaintiffs contended the arbitration provision in the benefits election agreement was unenforceable because it did not comply with the mandatory disclosure requirements set forth in Health & Safety Code § 1363.1 in that the arbitration provision was not prominently displayed and was not located immediately before the signature line as required by the statute. Health Net claimed the disclosure requirements applied only to the application for group service agreement and the group service agreement with the County, not the benefits election agreement. On reconsideration of the motion to compel arbitration, the trial court agreed with Health Net, that the disclosure in the group service agreement controlled, not an individual benefit election form, and compelled arbitration. Medeiros filed a petition for writ of mandate challenging the trial order.

The court of appeal granted the writ and ordered the trial court vacate its order compelling arbitration and to issue an order denying Health Net's motion to compel arbitration (146 Cal. App. 4th 1008, 1011, 1019-1020) . The court of appeal noted that neither the benefits election agreement nor the EOC satisfied the disclosure requirements of Health & Safety Code § 1363.1, but Health Net did not claim they did. Instead, Health Net claimed no signed individual arbitration disclosures or agreements were required by Health & Safety Code § 1363.1. Health Net gave three reasons, each of which the court of appeal rejected (146 Cal. App. 4th 1008, 1015) . First, Health Net claimed plaintiffs were bound by the arbitration provisions in the group service application and group service agreement between Health Net and the County, even if plaintiffs never received any other disclosures. This argument was based on Madden v. Kaiser Foundation Hospitals (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 699, 702-703, 705-709, 131 Cal. Rptr. 882, 552 P.2d 1178 (Madden, discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.61[3][a]), which held that an agent of a group of employees has authority to enter into a group health plan with a binding arbitration provision on their behalf. Madden was decided 15 years before enactment of Health & Safety Code § 1363.1. The Legislature was aware of Madden when it enacted Section 1363.1, and rather than abrogating Madden, the Legislature imposed the requirement of individual disclosureto each enrolling employee (146 Cal. App. 4th 1008, 1016) . Thus, when an employer negotiates a health care plan which imposes binding arbitration on employees who enroll in it, the employees have the choice to enroll in the plan and give up a right to jury trial, or to decline to enroll in the plan. Disclosure to the employer, but not to the individual employees who enroll in a plan, does not satisfy the requirements of Section 1363.1 (146 Cal. App. 4th 1008, 1017) . Health Net's second argument was that nothing in the Knox-Keene Act requires a health plan to use its own enrollment form and compliance with the disclosure requirements of Health & Safety Code § 1363.1 is mandatory only if a health plan uses its own enrollment form or application. The court of appeal found this argument was not reasonable and elevated form over substance. Employees who sign a document called an enrollment form provided by the insurance company should not receive more protection than employees who sign a document called a benefits election agreement provided by their employer. If an employer-prepared form does not provide the required disclosures, the health plan must provide its own form for that purpose (146 Cal. App. 4th 1008, 1018) .

[f] Courts Have Authority to Refuse to Enforce Arbitration Agreements that Do Not Comply With Health & Safety Code Section 1363.1

The facts and procedural background of Medeiros v. Superior Court (Health Net of California) (2007) 146 Cal. App. 4th 1008, 53 Cal. Rptr. 3d 307 , and the portion of the opinion considering whether individual disclosure to an enrolling member is necessary are discussed at [e], above. Health Net also argued that the only remedy for noncompliance with the disclosure requirements of Health & Safety Code § 1363.1 is an administrative remedy handed down by the Department of Managed Health Care: courts do not have the authority to refuse to enforce an arbitration agreement based on failure to comply with the mandatory disclosure requirements (146 Cal. App. 4th 1008, 1018) . This issue was disposed of in Malek v. Blue Cross of California (2004) 121 Cal. App. 4th 44, 67, 69, 72, 16 Cal. Rptr. 3d 687 (Malek, discussed below), with which the court of appeal agreed, saying that although nothing in the Knox-Keene Act explicitly states an arbitration provision which does not comply with Section 1363.1 is unenforceable, any other result would be absurd. Because the disclosure requirements are mandatory, disclosure is necessary to create an enforceable arbitration provision in a health service plan, regardless of whether the subscriber actually had notice of the term requiring arbitration. What protection would the statute afford a consumer if courts would enforce arbitration provisions which do not comply with the mandatory disclosure requirements? The court of appeal concluded by saying the disclosure requirements of Section 1363.1 are mandatory; plaintiffs were entitled to the same disclosure from Health Net concerning the arbitration provisions as any individual subscriber who signed an enrollment form, and they did not receive it (146 Cal. App. 4th 1008, 1019) .

Zembsch v. Superior Court (Health Net of California, Inc.) (2006) 146 Cal. App. 4th 153, 53 Cal. Rptr. 3d 69 , is discussed at [d], above.

The facts and procedural background of Malek v. Blue Cross of California (2004) 121 Cal. App. 4th 44, 16 Cal. Rptr. 3d 687 , and the portion of the opinion considering the doctrine of application of the doctrine of substantial compliance are discussed at [c], above. Blue Cross contended that because Health & Safety Code § 1363.1 is silent on the consequences of failing to comply with the disclosure requirements, the Legislature must have concluded that failure to comply would not render an arbitration provision unenforceable, citing other sections in which the consequences of failure to comply were specified (121 Cal. App. 4th 44, 67-68) . The court of appeal found this argument unpersuasive because of the mandatory language of Section 1363.1 and because the waiver of a jury was involved. Other principles of statutory construction did not apply here because their application would contravene the plain meaning of Section 1363.1. The court of appeal also rejected Blue Cross' contention that penalties for noncompliance were within the exclusive enforcement powers of the Department of Managed Health Care (121 Cal. App. 4th 44, 68) .

[g] As Applied to Non-medical Cause(s) of Action

Rodriguez v. Blue Cross of California (2008) 162 Cal. App. 4th 330, 75 Cal. Rptr. 3d 754 , is discussed at [d], above.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20A ARBITRATION: RESISTING
PART II. FORMS
D. Defenses to Arbitration

2-20A California Points & Authorities § 20A.95

§ 20A.95 Arbitration Disclosures Did Not Comply With Business and Professions Code Section 7191

[1] FORM

BECAUSE PETITIONER NEITHER COMPLIED WITH BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONS CODE SECTION 7191 NOR ESTABLISHED THAT THE TRANSACTION INVOLVED INTERSTATE COMMERCE, THE ARBITRATION PROVISION CANNOT BE ENFORCED.

A. Compliance With Business and Professions Code Section 7191 Is Mandatory. Despite the words "may not enforce," Section 7191 of the Business and Professions Code is mandatory. Thus, if an arbitration provision does not comply with that statute, a court has no discretion and cannot enforce the arbitration provision against anyone except the licensee. [This is true even if the homeowner is an attorney or otherwise realizes that agreeing to arbitration is effectively a waiver of the right to a jury trial] (Woolls v. Superior Court (Turner) (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 197, 205-210[, 214], 25 Cal. Rptr. 3d 426).

B. The Federal Arbitration Act Will Not Preempt an Arbitration-Specific Statute Without Evidence That Interstate Commerce Is Involved. Although the Federal Arbitration Act will preempt any state law that is applicable only to arbitration provisions, courts are reluctant to infer preemption. The party claiming that the Federal Arbitration Act preempts a particular state law has the burden of proving that the contract involves interstate commerce. If the contract is not shown to involve interstate commerce and the statute is not complied with, arbitration cannot be ordered (Woolls v. Superior Court (Turner) (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 197, 211-214, 25 Cal. Rptr. 3d 426).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used to resist arbitration under a contract for improvement of a one-to-four unit residential property if the arbitration provision in the contract did not comply with Bus. & Prof. Code § 7191 (set forth at [3][a], below) and if the petition seeking the order compelling arbitration was not supported by evidence establishing that the transaction involved interstate commerce.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in opposition to one seeking to compel arbitration [see § 20A.10]. Respondent also should combine this form with as many other forms as address the specific grounds for denial involved in his or her particular case, that is, §§ 20A.10-20A.12 (procedural matters), 20A.20 et seq. (Congressional or Legislative intent to preserve judicial remedy), 20A.30 et seq. (contract principles), 20A.40 et seq. (issue is beyond scope of arbitration clause), 20A.60 et seq. (respondent is not party to arbitration agreement), and 20A.80 et seq. (waiver and contract defenses).

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form to the facts of the case. For example, the argument should set forth the arbitration clause and discuss the ways it did not comply with Bus. & Prof. Code § 7191, as well as negate any out-of-state connection with the project.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.] and by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Memoranda

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[d] Opposing Memoranda

For a memorandum that oppose this form on the ground that the transaction at issue does involve interstate commerce and that particular arbitration-specific statute is thus preempted by the Federal Arbitration Act, see Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.22.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[A] Compliance With Business and Professions Code Section 7191 Is Mandatory

Business and Professions Code Section 7191 provides that if a contract for work on residential property with four or fewer units contains a provision for arbitration of a dispute between the principals in the transaction, the provision shall be clearly titled "ARBITRATION OF DISPUTES." If a provision for arbitration is included in a printed contract, it shall be set out in at least 10-point roman boldface type or in contrasting red print in at least 8-point roman boldface type, and if the provision is included in a typed contract, it shall be set out in capital letters [Bus. & Prof. Code § 7191(a)]. Immediately before the line or space provided for the parties to indicate their assent or nonassent to the arbitration provision and immediately following that arbitration provision, the following shall appear [Bus. & Prof. Code § 7191(b)]:

"NOTICE: BY INITIALING IN THE SPACE BELOW YOU ARE AGREEING TO HAVE ANY DISPUTE ARISING OUT OF THE MATTERS INCLUDED IN THE 'ARBITRATION OF DISPUTES' PROVISION DECIDED BY NEUTRAL ARBITRATION AS PROVIDED BY CALIFORNIA LAW AND YOU ARE GIVING UP ANY RIGHTS YOU MIGHT POSSESS TO HAVE THE DISPUTE LITIGATED IN A COURT OR JURY TRIAL. BY INITIALING IN THE SPACE BELOW YOU ARE GIVING UP YOUR JUDICIAL RIGHTS TO DISCOVERY AND APPEAL, UNLESS THOSE RIGHTS ARE SPECIFICALLY INCLUDED IN THE 'ARBITRATION OF DISPUTES' PROVISION. IF YOU REFUSE TO SUBMIT TO ARBITRATION AFTER AGREEING TO THIS PROVISION, YOU MAY BE COMPELLED TO ARBITRATE UNDER THE AUTHORITY OF THE BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONS CODE OR OTHER APPLICABLE LAWS. YOUR AGREEMENT TO THIS ARBITRATION PROVISION IS VOLUNTARY." "WE HAVE READ AND UNDERSTAND THE FOREGOING AND AGREE TO SUBMIT DISPUTES ARISING OUT OF THE MATTERS INCLUDED IN THE 'ARBITRATION OF DISPUTES' PROVISION TO NEUTRAL ARBITRATION."

If the provision set forth above is included in a printed contract, it shall be set out either in at least 10-point roman boldface type or in contrasting red print in at least 8-point roman boldface type, and if the provision is included in a typed contract, it shall be set out in capital letters [Bus. & Prof. Code § 7191(b)].

A provision for arbitration of a dispute between a principal in a contract for work on a residential property with four or fewer units that does not comply with Bus. & Prof. Code § 7191 may not be enforceable against any person other than the licensee [Bus. & Prof. Code § 7191(c)]. However, Bus. & Prof. Code § 7191 does not limit the board's authority to investigate complaints or to discipline a licensee for violations of the Business and Professions Code [Bus. & Prof. Code § 7191(d)].

Woolls v. Superior Court (Turner) (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 197, 25 Cal. Rptr. 3d 426 , arose out of a contract for renovation and expansion of Woolls's single-family residence, with Turner as contractor. Both that agreement and a related but unsigned document which contained specifications for the project contained arbitration clauses. Neither of these arbitration provisions included an advisement that by agreeing to arbitration, a party waives the right to a court or jury trial, as required by Bus. & Prof. Code § 7191, nor a space for the parties to initial the provisions, also as required by Bus. & Prof. Code § 7191. Problems developed, and Woolls hired someone else to finish the renovations. Turner's lumber supplier filed a mechanics' lien and sued to foreclose that lien. Woolls answered and filed a cross-complaint against the lumber supplier and Turner. Turner initiated an arbitration proceeding against Woolls. Woolls submitted written objections to the arbitrator, contending the arbitration agreement failed to comply with Bus. & Prof. Code § 7191, but the arbitrator issued an award against Woolls for $46,881.58, administrative fees, the arbitrator's compensation, and expenses. Turner filed a petition to confirm the award and Woolls filed a petition to vacate the award. After a full hearing on the matter, the trial court concluded that the arbitration provision was enforceable against Woolls, despite noncompliance with the requirements set forth in Bus. & Prof. Code § 7191, in part because Woolls was an attorney, and continued the hearing for consideration of Woolls's claim of fraud in the inducement of the contract. Prior to that hearing, Woolls filed a petition for writ of mandate to set aside the trial court's order denying his petition to vacate the arbitration award.

The court of appeal granted the petition, finding that an arbitration provision that does not comply with Bus. & Prof. Code § 7191 cannot be enforced against anyone other than the licensee (127 Cal. App. 4th 197, 200, 215) . The court of appeal first discussed Bus. & Prof. Code § 7191 and concluded that there was a total failure of the arbitration provisions to comply with Bus. & Prof. Code § 7191 (127 Cal. App. 4th 197, 205-207) . Turner argued that because the statute said it "may not" be enforced against anyone but the licensee in cases of noncompliance, the court had discretion to enforce the arbitration provision despite its failure to comply with the statute. The court of appeal disagreed. As a matter of statutory construction, although the word "may" is permissive, "may not" is prohibitory. Thus,

Bus. & Prof. Code § 7191(c) leaves the court no discretion to enforce an arbitration provision that does not comply with the statute (127 Cal. App. 4th 197, 208-209) . The court also considered the legislative history of Bus. & Prof. Code § 7191, stating that at the time of the final vote on the bill which became section 7191, the Legislature understood and intended that an arbitration provision which fails to satisfy section 7191 "shall not be enforceable." Thus, an arbitration provision which fails to comply with section 7191 cannot be enforced against any person other than the licensee (127 Cal. App. 4th 197, 210) . Addressing Turner's argument that because Woolls was a licensed attorney, he was fully aware signing the arbitration provision was a waiver of his right to a jury trial and his right to appeal, the court found those factors militated against enforcing section 7191. The court said it would not rewrite the statute. Doing so would only result in additional litigation causing parties in future cases to contest whether the consumer was aware that he or she was giving up the basic right to a court or jury trial, notwithstanding a contract's failure to comply with section 7191. That would be at odds with section 7191, which imposes mandatory notice provisions as a condition to the enforceability of an agreement to arbitrate (127 Cal. App. 4th 197, 214) .

[b] The Federal Arbitration Act Will Not Preempt an Arbitration-Specific Statue Without Evidence That Interstate Commerce Is Involved

The facts and procedural background of Woolls v. Superior Court (Turner) (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 197, 25 Cal. Rptr. 3d 426 , and the portion of the opinion addressing the nondiscretionary nature of Bus & Prof. Code § 7191, are discussed at [a], above. Turner also contended that Bus. & Prof. Code § 7191 was preempted by the Federal Arbitration Act (FAA; 9 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.), and therefore noncompliance with section 7191 was not a ground to invalidate the arbitration agreement (127 Cal. App. 4th 197, 211) . The court found this argument meritless because Turner failed to introduce any evidence or authority that the transaction involved interstate commerce (127 Cal. App. 4th 197, 211, 213-214) . The FAA applies to any contract evidencing a transaction involving commerce and will preempt any state law that is applicable only to arbitration provisions. However, courts are reluctant to infer preemption; and the party claiming that the FAA preempts a particular state law has the burden of proving that the contract involves interstate commerce (127 Cal. App. 4th 197, 211) . Turner did not cite any authority for the proposition that an agreement between a California homeowner and a California contractor to renovate a single family residence in La Canada, California, involves interstate commerce so as to implicate the FAA. The court discussed Allied-Bruce Terminix Cos. v. Dobson (1995) 513 U.S. 265, 115 S. Ct. 834, 130 L. Ed. 2d 753 (discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.20[3][b] and [d]), and Basura v. U.S. Home Corp. (2002) 98 Cal. App. 4th 1205, 120 Cal. Rptr. 2d 328 (discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.22[3][i]) by way of comparison and went into detail about the out-of-state suppliers, design professionals, trade contractors, subcontractors, and advertising involved in the large scale development project at issue in Basura (127 Cal. App. 4th 197, 212-213) . The court contrasted those cases with Turner's total lack of any evidentiary showing that this transaction involved interstate commerce (127 Cal. App. 4th 197, 213-214) . The court concluded that Turner failed to meet his burden of establishing the FAA precluded enforcement of section 7191 (127 Cal. App. 4th 197, 214) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20B ARBITRATION: SELECTING ARBITRATORS; ARBITRAL IMMUNITY

2-20B California Points & Authorities 20B.syn

§ 20B.syn Synopsis to Chapter 20B: ARBITRATION: SELECTING ARBITRATORS; ARBITRAL IMMUNITY

§ 20B.01 Scope of Chapter

§ 20B.02 Governing Law

[1] Appointment of Arbitrator

[2] Immunity

§ 20B.03 How to Use the Forms in This Chapter

[1] Page Limits on Points and Authorities

[2] Using the Forms to Build a Draft Memorandum

§ 20B.04 Related Discussion and Forms

[1] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[2] Related Points and Authorities

§§ 20B.05-20B.09 [Reserved]

§ 20B.10 Supporting Petition to Appoint Arbitrator When Agreed Method of Selection Failed or Is Unenforceable

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Court Appoints Arbitrator When No Selection Is Produced Under the Agreement

[b] Method of Selection Is Unenforceable

[c] Arbitrator for Public Works Contract Dispute

§§ 20B.11-20B.24 [Reserved]

§ 20B.25 Court Has No Authority to Appoint Arbitrator If Chosen Arbitration Service Provider Has Refused to Act

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Court Has No Authority to Appoint Arbitrator

§ 20B.26 Court Does Not Have Authority to Appoint Second Arbitrator for First Arbitrator's Failure to Make Award

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Court Had No Authority to Appoint Successor Arbitrator

§§ 20B.27-20B.49 [Reserved]

§ 20B.50 Arbitrator Is Immune From Civil Liability for Acts Done in Capacity of Arbitrator

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Arbitral Immunity

[b] Inclusive Definition of Agreement

[c] Insurance Appraiser Is Entitled to Arbitral Immunity

§ 20B.51 Arbitral Immunity Extends to Sponsoring Organization

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Sponsoring Organization's Immunity

[b] Scope of Organization's Immunity

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Sponsoring Organization's Immunity

§ 20B.52 Arbitral Immunity Does Not Extend to Breach of Agreement to Conduct Arbitration

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Memoranda

[d] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Arbitral Immunity Will Not Protect Arbitrator or Arbitration Service Provider from Liability for Beach of Contract to Conduct Arbitration

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20B ARBITRATION: SELECTING ARBITRATORS; ARBITRAL IMMUNITY
PART I. INTRODUCTION

2-20B California Points & Authorities § 20B.01

§ 20B.01 Scope of Chapter

This chapter contains memoranda and contentions relating to selecting arbitrators (see § 20B.10 et seq.) and immunity of arbitrators and sponsoring organizations (see § 20B.50 et seq.) under private agreements pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1280 et seq.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureAlternative Dispute ResolutionCivil ProcedureAlternative Dispute ResolutionArbitrationsFederal Arbitration ActCoverage & ExceptionsContracts LawContract Conditions & ProvisionsArbitration Clauses

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20B ARBITRATION: SELECTING ARBITRATORS; ARBITRAL IMMUNITY
PART I. INTRODUCTION

2-20B California Points & Authorities § 20B.02

§ 20B.02 Governing Law

[1] Appointment of Arbitrator

If arbitration cannot proceed because the agreed method for appointment of an arbitrator has failed for any reason, unless the parties stipulate to another arbitrator, either party may petition for appointment of an arbitrator, and the court will appoint one [Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.6; see § 20B.10].

[2] Immunity

Former Code Civ. Proc. § 1280.1 granted arbitrators the same immunity a judicial officer would have for acts done in the capacity of an arbitrator. Former Code Civ. Proc. § 1280.1 was repealed by its own terms effective January 1, 1997, and no similar statute has been enacted. Nevertheless, case law, both before enactment and after repeal of former Code Civ. Proc. § 1280.1, recognize arbitral immunity, for both the individual arbitrator and the sponsoring organization arbitrator [see Stasz v. Charles R. Schwab (2004) 121 Cal. App. 4th 420, 433-434, 17 Cal. Rptr. 3d 116 ; Olson v. NASD (8th Cir. 1996) 85 F.3d 381, 382-383].

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureAlternative Dispute Resolution

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20B ARBITRATION: SELECTING ARBITRATORS; ARBITRAL IMMUNITY
PART I. INTRODUCTION

2-20B California Points & Authorities § 20B.03

§ 20B.03 How to Use the Forms in This Chapter

[1] Page Limits on Points and Authorities

One of the more significant drafting requirements to keep in mind are page limits: supporting and opposing memoranda must not exceed 15 pages, or 20 pages in a summary judgment proceeding. A reply or closing memorandum may not exceed 10 pages in length [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113(d)]. Exhibits, declarations, attachments, tables of contents and authorities, and proof of service are not counted. Any party must obtain leave of court to file a longer memorandum [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113(d), (e)]. These and other drafting requirements are discussed in further detail in Chapter 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs, § 1.05.

[2] Using the Forms to Build a Draft Memorandum

The forms included in this chapter are designed to be combined with other forms to form a complete memorandum. For detailed discussion on how to select and use the forms in the publication to build a draft memorandum and complete the draft, with detailed discussion of all drafting requirements and strategic or stylistic considerations, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs, §§ 1.03 -1.06. For a skeletal form of memorandum for use in creating a properly formatted outline in which to compile relevant forms from this publication, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs, § 1.10.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeMotion PracticeContent & FormCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeMotion PracticeOpposing MemorandaCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeMotion PracticeSupporting Memoranda

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20B ARBITRATION: SELECTING ARBITRATORS; ARBITRAL IMMUNITY
PART I. INTRODUCTION

2-20B California Points & Authorities § 20B.04

§ 20B.04 Related Discussion and Forms

[1] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed legal background discussion, research guides, procedural checklists, and practice forms of motions and other papers relating to private contractual arbitration proceedings, see:

- California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 32, Contractual Arbitration: Agreements and Compelling Arbitration (Matthew Bender).

- California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 33, Contractual Arbitration: Appointment of Arbitrator and Conduct of Proceeding (Matthew Bender).

- California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 34, Contractual Arbitration: Judicial Review (Matthew Bender).

[2] Related Points and Authorities

Chapters in this publication with related forms include:

- For compelling arbitration, see Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling .

- For resisting arbitration, see Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting .

- For confirming, correcting, or vacating an arbitration award, see Ch. 20C, Arbitration: Confirming, Correcting, or Vacating the Award .

- For dismissing an arbitration, see Ch. 20D, Arbitration: Dismissing .

- For determining the effect of an arbitration award, see Ch. 20E, Arbitration: Effect of Award .

- For situations in which attorney's fees may be recovered, see Ch. 25, Attorney's Fees .

- For contract provisions in general, see Ch. 50, Contracts .

- For situations in which contracts may be avoided or declared void, see Ch. 92, Duress, Menace, Fraud, Undue Influence, and Mistake .

- For requirements of injunctions, see Ch. 116, Injunctions .

- For general principles relating to specific performance of contracts, see Ch. 214, Specific Performance .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureAlternative Dispute ResolutionArbitrationsFederal Arbitration ActArbitration AgreementsCivil ProcedureAlternative Dispute ResolutionContracts LawDefensesDuress & Undue InfluenceGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20B ARBITRATION: SELECTING ARBITRATORS; ARBITRAL IMMUNITY
PART I. INTRODUCTION

2-20B California Points & Authorities §§ 20B.05-20B.09

[Reserved]

§§ 20B.05[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20B ARBITRATION: SELECTING ARBITRATORS; ARBITRAL IMMUNITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Selecting Arbitrators

2-20B California Points & Authorities § 20B.10

§ 20B.10 Supporting Petition to Appoint Arbitrator When Agreed Method of Selection Failed or Is Unenforceable

[1] FORM

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA,
COUNTY OF _____

	)
	)	NO. _____
	)	MEMORANDUM IN SUPPORT OF PETITION TO
_____ [name],	)	APPOINT ARBITRATOR
Petitioner, vs.	)	[LIMITED CIVIL CASE]
_____ [name],	)	Date: _____
Respondent.	)	Time: _____
	)	Location: _____
	)	[Judge: _____]
	)	Date Action Filed: _____
	)	[Trial Date: _____]

_____

PETITIONER, AS A PARTY TO AN ARBITRATION AGREEMENT IN WHICH THE METHOD OF APPOINTING AN ARBITRATOR _____ [HAS BEEN OMITTED or HAS FAILED or IS UNENFORCEABLE], IS ENTITLED TO AN ORDER APPOINTING AN ARBITRATOR BECAUSE THE PARTIES HAVE NOT BEEN ABLE TO AGREE ON ANY OTHER METHOD OF APPOINTMENT.

A. Court Appoints Arbitrator When No Selection Is Produced Under the Agreement. In the absence of a provision in the arbitration agreement providing an agreed method of appointing an arbitrator, or if an agreed method fails or for any reason cannot be followed, or when an appointed arbitrator fails to act and a successor has not been appointed, the court, on petition of a party to the arbitration agreement, shall appoint the arbitrator (Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.6; see Engalla v. Permanente Medical Group, Inc. (1997) 15 Cal. 4th 951, 979-981, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 843, 938 P.2d 903 (situations in which party need not resort to Section 1281.6 petition)).

[Optional] B. Method of Selection Is Unenforceable. Although the method of selection of an arbitrator contained in an agreement may be unenforceable, the parties should still be allowed to proceed to arbitration by either party's petitioning the court to appoint an arbitrator if the parties cannot otherwise agree on a suitable arbitrator (Graham v. Scissor-Tail, Inc. (1981) 28 Cal. 3d 807, 831, 171 Cal. Rptr. 604, 623 P.2d 165).

[Optional] C. Venue for Petition Made Prior to Commencement of Arbitration under Private Agreement. [See Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.10[1], Paragraph B.]

[Optional] D. Jurisdiction Over Petition as Limited Civil Case. Superior courts have jurisdiction over arbitration-related petitions whether the matter is a limited or unlimited civil case (see Cal. Const., art. VI, § 10; Code Civ. Proc. § 86(a)(10)(A)).

[Optional] E. Arbitrator for Public Works Contract Dispute. If the arbitration involves a dispute with regard to a project governed by the Public Contract Code, an arbitrator appointed pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.6 must be from the list of arbitrators approved by the Public Works Contract Arbitration Board [See Pub. Contract Code § 10240 et seq.] (Brutoco Engineering & Construction, Inc. v. Superior Court (United Engineering Technology, Inc.) (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 1326, 1334-1335, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 866).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for _____ [party's status and name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used to support a petition for appointment of an arbitrator when the arbitration agreement fails to provide a method of selecting an arbitrator and the parties have been unable to agree on one, or when the method provided by the arbitration agreement for selecting an arbitrator has failed or is unenforceable [Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.6; see also Health & Safety Code § 1373.20 (presumptions regarding failure of selection under health care service plan that does not use independent dispute resolution organization)]. Optional Paragraph B is for use when the agreed method is unenforceable, and which at first appears to contradict Provencio v. WMA Securities, Inc. (2005) 125 Cal. App. 4th 1028, 1032-1033, 23 Cal. Rptr. 3d 524 , which is the basis of Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.15[1] and which involved a party who resisted arbitration on the ground that the agreed method or forum (NASD) was no longer available. Neither party in Provencio petitioned for appointment of another arbitrator under Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.6. No party in Graham v. Scissor-Tail, Inc. (1982) 28 Cal. 3d 807, 831, 171 Cal. Rptr. 604, 623 P.2d 165 petitioned for appointment an arbitrator under Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.6 either. In Graham, the sole arbitrator specified by the contract was identified with one party, and disqualified by the court on appeal on that ground after arbitration. The portion of the opinion sited in Paragraph B comprised the court's advice for use on remand should the parties be unable to agree on a mutually satisfactory arbitrator. Graham also stated that if neither party petitioned for appointment of an arbitrator, the court should proceed to a judicial determination of the controversy (28 Cal. 3d 807, 831) . Optional Paragraph E. is for use when the contract at issue is governed by the Public Contract Code.

If the failure to appoint an arbitrator or arbitrators is due to one party's misfeasance, the other party is not required to bring a petition under Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.6, nor is a petition under Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.6 a precondition to successfully opposing a petition to compel arbitration [see Engalla v. Permanente Medical Group, Inc. (1997) 15 Cal. 4th 951, 980-981, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 843, 938 P.2d 903 (discussed at [3][a], below].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, the argument should show whether the agreement provided a method for selecting arbitrators, and if so, how the method provided in the agreement is unenforceable. While the very filing of a petition for appointment suggests that no agreement has been reached either as to a method or as to appointment of an arbitrator, it may be advisable for the argument to disclose whether the parties have attempted to reach an agreed method or have attempted to agree on an arbitrator, and, if so, that agreement has not been possible. It is also probably appropriate to attach a copy of the arbitration provision.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement)].

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a form of petition to appoint neutral arbitrator that may be supported by this memorandum, as well as discussion of the procedure the court will use to select the arbitrator and presumptions applicable in cases involving health care service plans, and a procedural checklist, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 33, Contractual Arbitration: Appointment of Arbitrator and Conduct of Proceeding (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Court Appoints Arbitrator When No Selection Is Produced Under the Agreement

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.6, if the arbitration agreement does not provide a method for appointing an arbitrator, the parties to an arbitration proceeding may agree on a method of appointment. It would appear, therefore, that the parties may always amend the arbitration agreement, such as by stipulation, to provide for a new method of selection prior to a request by a party that the court appoint an arbitrator [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1280(f), 1281].

The facts and procedural background of Engalla v. Permanente Medical Group, Inc. (1997) 15 Cal. 4th 951, 64 Cal.

Rptr. 2d 843, 938 P.2d 903 , are discussed at Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.10[3][a].

Defendant (Kaiser), contrary to its representations regarding the expeditiousness of its procedure and contrary to the parties' agreement, delayed selection of the third (neutral) arbitrator by a series of excuses until the patient died. One of Kaiser's contentions on appeal was that its misrepresentations could not have been material because plaintiffs always had the option of petitioning for appointment of the neutral arbitrator under Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.6. The Court said that Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.6 does not render a party's systemic delay irrelevant. A party's success in having a Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.6 petition granted is not assured, nor is it costless, nor is it in accord with normal expectations of arbitration participants (15 Cal. 4th 951, 979) . Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.6 did not excuse Kaiser's alleged misfeasance by providing a way to resolve breakdowns in the arbitrator selection process or absolve Kaiser of its duties under the arbitration agreement to timely select an arbitrator and not to obstruct the progress towards arbitration (15 Cal. 4th 951, 980-981) . Nothing in the language of Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.6 compels a party to seek that, nor does the language of Section 1281.6 suggest that resort to it is a precondition of successfully opposing a petition to compel arbitration when the petitioning party has engaged in fraud. In contrast, when delay in the selection of arbitrators is the result of reasonable and good faith disagreement between the parties, the remedy for that delay may be a Section 1281.6 petition (15 Cal. 4th 951, 981) .

[b] Method of Selection Is Unenforceable

The facts and procedural background of Graham v. Scissor-Tail, Inc. (1981) 28 Cal. 3d 807, 171 Cal. Rptr. 604, 623 P.2d 165 , are discussed in Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.90[3][a]. The Supreme Court determined that the particular provision of the parties' agreement providing for a particular arbitrator (the union of one party) was unconscionable and unenforceable. However, in light of the strong public policy in favor of arbitration, the Court believed the parties should not be precluded from availing themselves of arbitration. The Court concluded that on remand the trial court should afford the parties a reasonable opportunity to agree on a suitable arbitrator and, if agreement could not be reached, the court, on petition of either party, should appoint the arbitrator in the manner specified under Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.6. In the absence of an agreement or petition to appoint, the court was ordered to proceed to a judicial determination of the instant controversy (28 Cal. 3d 807, 831) .

[c] Arbitrator for Public Works Contract Dispute

Brutoco Engineering & Construction, Inc. v. Superior Court (United Engineering Technology, Inc.) (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 1326, 1334-1335, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 866 , arose out of a state highway project for which Brutoco was the prime contractor and United was a subcontractor. United filed a claim for cost overruns, which was denied. United then filed a complaint in arbitration against the state, naming Brutoco as a real party in interest. The parties made efforts to agree on an arbitrator, but without success. Brutoco then requested the superior court to appoint an arbitrator pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.6. The contract provided arbitration was to be conducted in accordance with Pub. Contract Code § 10240 et seq. Pub. Contract Code § 10240.3, differs in significant respects from Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.6 and provides that unless the parties agree otherwise, the arbitration must be conducted by a single arbitrator selected by the parties from the certified list created by the Public Works Contract Arbitration Committee. If the parties cannot agree on the arbitrator, either party may petition the superior court to appoint one from the panel of arbitrators certified by the Public Works Contract Arbitration Committee. After several arbitrators from the list were either unavailable to serve or disqualified by one of the parties, Brutoco petitioned the court or appeal for an order declaring the statutory scheme to be unconstitutional, arguing that the trial court had the power to nominate persons not on the list.

The court of appeal denied the writ, agreeing with the trial court that it could nominate or otherwise consider only persons who were on the certified list (107 Cal. App. 4th 1326, 1335) . Brutoco argued the list was unconstitutional because the only arbitrators on it were people who had indicated they would favor the state. The court concluded that Brutoco failed to demonstrate that the selection process was or could have been manipulated by any of the state representatives on the Arbitration Committee (107 Cal. App. 4th 1326, 1332) . The court discussed the statute and implementing regulations and concluded that the state could agree with the other parties on an arbitrator not on the certified list; but in the absence of such agreement, the proposed arbitrator must come from a prescreened and prequalified panel. A person not on the certified list cannot be appointed over the objection of the state (107 Cal. App. 4th 1326, 1334) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20B ARBITRATION: SELECTING ARBITRATORS; ARBITRAL IMMUNITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Selecting Arbitrators

2-20B California Points & Authorities §§ 20B.11-20B.24

[Reserved]

§§ 20B.11[Reserved]

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20B ARBITRATION: SELECTING ARBITRATORS; ARBITRAL IMMUNITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Selecting Arbitrators

2-20B California Points & Authorities § 20B.25

§ 20B.25 Court Has No Authority to Appoint Arbitrator If Chosen Arbitration Service Provider Has Refused to Act

[1] FORM

CONTRACT SPECIFICATION FOR ARBITRATION IN ACCORDANCE WITH PROCEDURES OF _____ [name arbitration service provider, e.g., AMERICAN ARBITRATION ASSOCIATION] AMOUNTS TO A CHOICE OF FORUM, AND _____'S [name arbitration service provider, e.g., AMERICAN ARBITRATION ASSOCIATION] REFUSAL TO ACT DOES NOT CONFER AUTHORITY ON THIS COURT TO APPOINT ANOTHER ARBITRATOR.

A. Court Has No Authority to Appoint Arbitrator. There is a vital distinction between the failure of an agreed method for choosing an arbitrator and the chosen agency's refusal to conduct the arbitration. If the chosen agency refuses to conduct the arbitration, Section 1281.6 of the Code of Civil Procedure does not permit a court to choose an alternative forum by appointing substitute arbitrators. Upon _____ [name of arbitration service provider specified in parties' agreement]'s refusal to conduct the arbitration, the court should have returned the matter to the civil active list. [An agreement for arbitration "in accordance with" American Arbitration Association procedures has been held to mean that the arbitration had to take place before that agency] (Martinez v. Master Prot. Corp. (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 107, 120-121, 12 Cal. Rptr. 3d 663 (AAA) ; see also Alan v. Superior Court (2003) 111 Cal. App. 4th 217, 227-228, 3 Cal. Rptr. 3d 377 (NASD) compare Reddam v. KPMG LLP (9th Cir. 2006) 457 F.3d 1054, 1061 (under New York or federal law, implied choice of NASD was not so integral to agreement as to deprive court of authority to compel arbitration when NASD refused to act)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used to oppose a petition for appointment of an arbitrator if the arbitration agreement provides for arbitration in accordance with the rules or procedures of a specific arbitration service provider and that entity has refused to act [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.6].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, the argument should show that although the agreement provided for arbitration in accordance with a specific arbitration service provider's rules or procedures, that entity has refused to act. If strategically appropriate, counsel may also include facts and argument disclosing whether the parties have attempted to reach agreement on an alternative provider. It is also appropriate to attach a copy of the arbitration provision.

It is advisable for counsel to submit evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file (including verified pleadings), or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied if plaintiff-respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement)].

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a form of petition to appoint neutral arbitrator that may be supported by this memorandum, as well as discussion of the procedure the court will use to select the arbitrator and presumptions applicable in cases involving health care service plans, and a procedural checklist, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 33, Contractual Arbitration: Appointment of Arbitrator and Conduct of Proceeding (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

This form generally opposes the memorandum in § 20B.10 relating to appointment of an arbitrator pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.6 if the agreed method of appointment has failed.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Court Has No Authority to Appoint Arbitrator

The facts and procedural background of Martinez v. Master Protection Corp. (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 107, 12 Cal. Rptr. 3d 663 and the portion of the opinion considering the provision regarding arbitral costs is discussed at Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.23[3][b]. The discussions of the unconscionability are at Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting, § 20A.91[c]-[e]. Plaintiff contended that the trial court erred in appointing an arbitrator after the American Arbitration Association ("AAA") refused to act. The court of appeal agreed, saying that the arbitration agreement's requirement for resolution of the dispute "in accordance with" AAA procedures means that the arbitration must take place before that agency, that is, in an AAA forum (118 Cal. App. 4th 107, 120) . Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.6 does not permit the trial court to choose an alternative forum if the forum designated in the agreement refuses to hear the case. The judgment confirming the award had to be reversed. The trial court erred in denying plaintiff's motion to restore the matter to the civil active litigation calendar after AAA refused to conduct the arbitration (118 Cal. App. 4th 107, 121) .

Alan v. Superior Court (2003) 111 Cal. App. 4th 217, 227-228, 3 Cal. Rptr. 3d 377 , was an action by an investor brought against his securities broker alleging mismanagement of his account. The account agreement required disputes to be arbitrated by one of the securities industry's self-regulatory organizations (SROs). Plaintiff refused to choose an organization. Defendant had chosen NASD, but NASD refused to conduct an arbitration in California because of an objection to complying with the California Judicial Council's ethics standards for arbitrators. Nevertheless, defendant moved to compel arbitration provided plaintiff would waive the ethics standards or agree to arbitration outside California. Plaintiff refused to do either, but the trial court ordered arbitration. Plaintiff filed a writ of mandate seeking to have that order vacated.

The court of appeal issued the writ, instructing the trial court to vacate the order, and to order NASD to choose a place of arbitration outside California, subject to the trial court's determination that the location was proper, i.e., reasonable and just. Subject to satisfying that standard, the arbitration could be held there. If not, the case should be litigated in California (111 Cal. App. 4th 217, 230-231) . Defendant argued that the trial court should appoint another arbitrator pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.6, but the court of appeal found Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.6 was not relevant. The problem was not the appointment of an arbitrator, but the unavailability of the designated arbitral forum (111 Cal. App. 4th 217, 227) . The court had no power to compel arbitration in an alternate forum by appointing substitute arbitrators (111 Cal. App. 4th 217, 228) .

Reddam v. KPMG LLP (9th Cir. 2006) 457 F.3d 1054 , began as an action by investors against joint venture partners that were to provide them tax shelters and a securities broker they had to use to invest in those shelters. The action was originally brought in Orange County Superior Court but was transferred to federal district court in accordance with 9 U.S.C. § 205, relating to arbitration agreements under the Convention on the Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Arbitral Awards, because the venture partners and broker were German entities. The brokerage agreements provided for arbitration of all controversies which might arise concerning any transaction. The arbitration was to be conducted pursuant to the rules then in effect of the National Association of Securities Dealers, Inc. [NASD], "as the undersigned you may elect." Before NASD, the investor deleted all reference to the broker from its complaint and then asserted that as the broker was not a party, the NASD did not have jurisdiction. The NASD agreed and refused to take jurisdiction over the arbitration because no named party was a member or associated person of the NASD. Then the investor moved for remand to state court because the NASD, and thus, arbitration, was no longer available. The venture partners argued that the district court has jurisdiction under 9 U.S.C. § 5 to appoint a substitute arbitrator rather than to remand. The district court agreed with the investor and declined to proceed, finding the claims no longer subject to arbitration because the NASD had declined to proceed. The venture partners appealed.

The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals reversed, finding that NASD's refusal to conduct the arbitration neither rendered the district court powerless to compel arbitration nor deprived it of jurisdiction (457 F. 3d 1054, 1058-1059) . In interpreting the agreement, the court pointed out that it did not (as later versions of the brokerage firm's customer agreement did), specify that arbitration was to be before NASD, but noted that several courts have held that an agreement which adopts the rules of an organization like NASD implicitly chooses that organization as the, or an, arbitrator. The court treated the implied choice of NASD as a forum selection clause. The agreement contained a choice of law clause providing it be governed by New York law. However, whether governed by New York law or federal law, the court found that the implied choice of NASD as arbitrator was not so integral that the arbitration agreement became unenforceable between the parties when the NASD bowed out. There was no evidence that naming of the NASD was so central to the arbitration agreement that the unavailability of that arbitrator brought the agreement to an end (457 F. 3d 1054, 1061) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20B ARBITRATION: SELECTING ARBITRATORS; ARBITRAL IMMUNITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Selecting Arbitrators

2-20B California Points & Authorities § 20B.26

§ 20B.26 Court Does Not Have Authority to Appoint Second Arbitrator for First Arbitrator's Failure to Make Award

[1] FORM

THERE HAS BEEN NO FAILURE TO ACT WITHIN THE MEANING OF CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE SECTION 1281.6, SO THE COURT HAS NO AUTHORITY TO APPOINT A SUCCESSOR ARBITRATOR.

A. Court Had No Authority to Appoint Successor Arbitrator. Although a trial court has authority to set a completion date within which the arbitrator must render his or her award, and although an arbitrator may be removed for failure to act, when the delays in concluding the arbitration are not chargeable to the arbitrator, but to the parties and/or the arbitration administrator, there is no failure to act within the meaning of Code of Civil Procedure Section 1281.6; and a court has no authority to remove that arbitrator and appoint a successor. When a court removes an arbitrator and appoints a successor without authority, any award made by the successor is void (Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.6; Bosworth v. Whitmore (2006) 135 Cal. App. 4th 536, 546-553, 37 Cal. Rptr. 3d 560).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used to oppose a petition for appointment of a successor arbitrator when original arbitrator has not failed to act within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.6.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, the argument should show that any failure to complete the arbitration is due to factors beyond the arbitrator's control. It is also appropriate to attach a copy of the arbitration provision.

It is advisable for counsel to submit evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid.

Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file (including verified pleadings), or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied if plaintiff-respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement)].

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Memoranda

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Court Had No Authority to Appoint Successor Arbitrator

Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.6 provides in part that when an arbitrator appointed fails to act and his or her successor has not been appointed, the court, on petition of a party to the arbitration agreement, shall appoint the arbitrator.

Bosworth v. Whitmore (2006) 135 Cal. App. 4th 536, 37 Cal. Rptr. 3d 560 , arose out of a contract for the construction of a home. The contract contained an arbitration provision requiring arbitration in accordance with Construction Industry Arbitration Rules of the American Arbitration Association (AAA). Buyers sued the corporate builder and its president, as its alter ego, for breach of contract and fraud, alleging that the unfinished home had not been constructed in accord with the plans and specifications and that defendant had accepted disbursement of funds from their construction loan before the work was completed. Plaintiffs demanded arbitration and an arbitrator was appointed. The arbitration was not heard because defendants did not pay their arbitration fees. Plaintiffs moved for and obtained an order that arbitration be completed by March 31, 2002. When the arbitrator was unable to represent that the arbitration would be completed by March 31, plaintiffs moved ex parte for appointment of a new arbitrator. The court found that the arbitrator's inability to guarantee completion by the court-ordered deadline constituted a failure to act under Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.6, justifying the appointment of a new arbitrator and directed each side to present a list of five candidates within five days. A second arbitrator was appointed and scheduled a pre-arbitration hearing for February 20. Defendants objected and declined to participate in the proceeding because the arbitration agreement required the parties and the court to follow the AAA process of selecting and replacing arbitrators, and that second arbitrator, and JAMS, by which the second arbitrator was employed, had no standing or authority to proceed in the matter. Defendants did not participate in the arbitration, but the second arbitrator conducted a hearing and entered an award for plaintiffs. Plaintiffs petitioned to confirm the arbitration award, and defendants petitioned to vacate it. The trial court confirmed the arbitration award and denied the defense petition to vacate it. Both defendants filed for Chapter 7 bankruptcy on the day the judgment was entered and their trustee in bankruptcy was substituted and appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, finding that absent a completion date set by agreement, Code Civ. Proc. § 1283.8 gives the trial court the authority, on petition by a party to the arbitration, to set a date by which the arbitration proceeding must be concluded. Although the trial court properly set a completion date, it abused its discretion when it later removed the arbitrator who had been handling the case. On the record presented, the arbitrator's reluctance to promise completion by the court's deadline did not constitute a failure to act under Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.6 so as to justify his removal. Therefore, the court's appointment of a successor arbitrator was unauthorized, and the successor arbitrator's award was void (135 Cal. App. 4th 536, 539) . Code Civ. Proc. § 1283.8 provides in relevant part that the arbitration award shall be made within the time fixed therefore by the agreement or, if not so fixed, within such time as the court orders on petition of a party to the arbitration. Defendant argued that Code Civ. Proc. § 1283.8 grants authority to the court only to set a date after completion of the evidentiary hearing within which the arbitrator must render his award and that the trial court has no jurisdiction to set a deadline by which the entire arbitration proceeding must be concluded. Plaintiffs claim section 1283.8 gives the trial court the power to regulate the duration of the arbitration proceeding itself (135 Cal. App. 4th 536, 545) . After reviewing the legislative history, the court of appeal concluded that in the absence of an arbitration completion date set by agreement, section 1283.8 was intended to authorize the trial court to fix a deadline within which the arbitration proceeding must be completed and the award rendered (135 Cal. App. 4th 536, 546-550) . Any date chosen must be reasonable in light of the circumstances presented by the particular arbitration. Thus, in the present case, the trial court had the authority to grant the request to set a March 31, 2002 deadline for completion of the arbitration (135 Cal. App. 4th 536, 550) . Although an arbitrator's inability to meet a court ordered deadline might in some circumstances constitute a failure to act justifying removal, the record does not support that finding here (135 Cal. App. 4th 536, 551-552) . To the contrary, since his appointment in May 2000, the arbitrator had been performing his duties as arbitrator: he had conducted preliminary hearings; he had made various rulings, including ordering the plaintiffs to prepare their statement of damages, set a deadline for the defense to file its claims against the subcontractors, directed the defense to produce documents, and ordered the plaintiffs to permit defendant to conduct an inspection of the home. With the consent of the parties, he continued the hearing for two months so that proper notice could be given to the subcontractors after the AAA had failed to do so. Thus, for almost two years, the arbitrator had been fulfilling his obligations as arbitrator (135 Cal. App. 4th 536, 552) .

Even if the first arbitrator could not complete the arbitration by March 31, this inability was not caused by his failure to act within the meaning of section 1281.6. The arbitration had been delayed for various reasons, none of which were attributable to the arbitrator. Plaintiffs themselves failed to comply with the arbitrator's order to provide their final defect list, damages estimate, and expert reports by October 15, 2000. Because the record does not support a finding that the first arbitrator failed to act within the meaning of section 1281.6, the trial court's removal of that arbitrator was an abuse of discretion (135 Cal. App. 4th 536, 552) . Because the arbitrator's removal was improper under section 1281.6, the court was not authorized by that statute to appoint a successor. When the court is not authorized to appoint an arbitrator, section 1281.6 requires that the arbitrator be appointed by the method provided in the parties' arbitration agreement. Here, the parties' agreement incorporated the applicable AAA rules, which provide a procedure for selection of an arbitrator, including the selection of a successor if the present arbitrator is unable to perform the duties of the office (AAA Rule R-22). Thus, the trial court's appointment of the second arbitrator violated the parties' contract, and that arbitrator's award in favor of plaintiffs is void [see American Home Assurance Co. v. Benowitz (1991) 234 Cal. App. 3d 192, 200-201] (135 Cal. App. 4th 536, 553). The court of appeal reversed the judgment and remanded the matter is remanded for proceedings consistent with the views expressed in its opinion (135 Cal. App. 4th 536, 554).

171 of 174 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20B ARBITRATION: SELECTING ARBITRATORS; ARBITRAL IMMUNITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Selecting Arbitrators

2-20B California Points & Authorities §§ 20B.27-20B.49

[Reserved]

§§ 20B.27[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 2 Chapters 20-23 ARBITRATION---to---ATTACHMENT
CHAPTER 20B ARBITRATION: SELECTING ARBITRATORS; ARBITRAL IMMUNITY
PART II. FORMS
B. Arbitral Immunity

2-20B California Points & Authorities § 20B.50

§ 20B.50 Arbitrator Is Immune From Civil Liability for Acts Done in Capacity of Arbitrator

[1] FORM

THE ACTS COMPLAINED OF AROSE FROM DEFENDANT'S ACTIVITIES AS AN ARBITRATOR PURSUANT TO _____ [STATUTE or CONTRACT], THUS MAKING DEFENDANT IMMUNE FROM CIVIL LIABILITY.

A. Arbitral Immunity. An arbitrator is immune from civil liability for actions taken in his or her capacity as an arbitrator under any statute or contract. This immunity shields the arbitrator from liability for any misconduct, professional negligence, or fraud, and does not depend on whether the act at issue is discretionary, ministerial, or administrative. The scope of arbitral immunity is defined by the functions it protects and serves. It shields all functions which are integrally related to the arbitral process. Thus, arbitrators are exempt from civil liability for failure to exercise care or skill in the performance of their arbitral functions[, even corrupt or biased actions for which the proper remedy is to have the award vacated] (Wasyl, Inc. v. First Boston Corp. (9th Cir. 1987) 813 F.2d 1579, 1582 ; Greenspan v. LADT, LLC (2010) 185 Cal. App. 4th 1413, 1458, 111 Cal. Rptr. 3d 468 ; Stasz v. Charles R. Schwab (2004) 121 Cal. App. 4th 420, 431-432, 439-440, 17 Cal. Rptr. 3d 116 ; Coopers & Lybrand v. Superior Court (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 524, 536, 260 Cal. Rptr. 713).

[Optional] B. Inclusive Definition of Agreement. An agreement within the meaning of the statutes governing contractual arbitration includes but is not limited to agreements providing for valuation, appraisals, and similar proceedings and agreements between employers and employees or between their respective representatives (Code Civ. Proc. § 1280(a); see Wasyl, Inc. v. First Boston Corp. (9th Cir. 1987) 813 F.2d 1579, 1582 ; Coopers & Lybrand v. Superior Court (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 524, 536, 260 Cal. Rptr. 713).

[Optional] C. Insurance Appraiser Is Entitled to Arbitral Immunity. A fire insurance appraisal pursuant to Insurance Code Section 2071 is an arbitration governed by Code of Civil Procedure Section 1280 et seq., even though the procedures are different and an appraiser does not have the same powers as arbitrator. Thus, an appraiser, even one appointed by a party, is entitled to the immunity of an arbitrator when performing the function of resolving disputes between parties or of adjudicating private rights (Lambert v. Carneghi (2008) 158 Cal. App. 4th 1120, 1129-1134, 1136-1137, 70 Cal. Rptr. 3d 626).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used to support the contention that a person who acted as arbitrator has no liability to any party to the arbitration for any acts done in his or her capacity as arbitrator. It may be necessary to examine the particular agreement and proceeding under which the arbitration occurred to determine whether the proceeding was an arbitration. Optional Paragraph B is for use in that situation because it will be necessary to infer from the obligations undertaken by the "neutral" that the parties intended him or her to function as an arbitrator. Optional Paragraph C is for use when the person seeking immunity functioned as a appraiser in a proceeding under Ins. Code § 2071. There may be additional bases for immunity, such as the statutory immunity granted to arbitrators and their sponsoring association in conducting arbitration of attorney's fee disputes [see Bus. & Prof. Code § 6200(e)]. However, former Code Civ. Proc. § 1280.1, on which cases decided between January 1, 1986, and December 31, 1996, were based, gave arbitrators the immunity of judicial officers and may have provided a broader immunity than the common-law immunity recognized before and after that time [see 79 Ops. Cal. Atty. Gen. 294 (1996)] .

This form does not provide a complete memorandum but should be combined with forms relating to the procedural context in which this issue is raised [see, e.g., Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings , and Ch. 221, Summary Judgments].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. It is probably appropriate to attach copies of the arbitration agreement and the award to the papers supporting the memorandum. The argument should establish that the acts on which liability is sought to be based were done within the scope of the arbitration agreement and proceeding or were necessary to carrying out the duties imposed on the arbitrator.

It is advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, including verified pleadings, or by affidavits or declarations [see Owens v. Intertec Design, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 72, 74-75, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 (motion to compel arbitration improperly denied when plaintiff/respondent filed unverified complaint and presented no evidence, by declaration or otherwise, of grounds claimed for revocation of arbitration agreement); Strauch v. Eyring (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 181, 184-186, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits on a motion), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For discussion of the immunity or arbitrators and their sponsoring associations in arbitrating attorney's fee disputes, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 72, Attorney Practice and Ethics, § 72.430 et seq. (Matthew Bender).

For legal discussion and forms relating to demurrers, as well as a procedural checklist and research guide, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 206, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings (Matthew Bender).

For legal discussion and forms generally relating to summary judgment, as well as a procedural checklist and research guide, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Arbitral Immunity

Plaintiffs in Wasyl, Inc. v. First Boston Corp. (9th Cir. 1987) 813 F. 2d 1579 , were former partners for whom defendant served as the third, "neutral" appraiser in valuing the partnership. Plaintiffs sued First Boston for breach of contract and gross negligence claiming the partnership was undervalued by $10 million. The district court granted defendant's motion for summary judgment, finding defendant entitled to arbitral immunity. Plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeals affirmed. The case was decided under the Federal Arbitration Act (9 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.), which does not provide for arbitral immunity, but case law does. Arbitrators' decision-making process and judgments have the same need for independent judgment free from threat of lawsuits as do those used by judges and hearing examiners. Arbitral immunity is essential to protect the decision-making process from reprisals by dissatisfied litigants. Thus, immunity extends to arbitrators for acts done within the scope of their duties and within their jurisdiction (813 F.2d 1579, 1582) .

Greenspan v. LADT, LLC (2010) 185 Cal. App. 4th 1413, 111 Cal. Rptr. 3d 468 , affirmed the confirmation of an arbitration decision on a breach of contract claim. The portion of the decision on whether the agreement gave the arbitrator the power to decide arbitrability of issues is discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.10[3][g], above. The portion of the decision dealing with review of the arbitrator's determination of arbitrability of the issue of joint and several liability is covered in Ch. 20C, Arbitration: Confirming, Correcting, and Vacating the Award, § 20C.91[3][c], below. The portion of the decision addressing the review of the timeliness of the arbitrator's award is covered in Ch. 20C, Arbitration: Confirming, Correcting, and Vacating the Award, § 20C.90[3][a], below. The portion of the decision covering whether the award should be vacated due to the arbitrator's failure to recuse himself is dealt with in Ch. 20C, Arbitration: Confirming, Correcting, and Vacating the Award, § 20C.80[3][g], below . Finally, the court discussed whether arbitral immunity barred a suit against the arbitrator that was alleged to be the basis for vacating the award, because the arbitrator did not recuse himself. The lawsuit was filed against the arbitrator by an officer of an entity party to the arbitration in this case seeking costs and fees in another arbitration. Noting that immunity does not apply to the arbitrator's breach of contract by failing to make any decision at all, the court ruled that given that the arbitrator made an award in the other arbitration, arbitral immunity barred the suit (185 Cal. App. 4th 1413, 1458) .

