A. Motion to Strike Proper. When the attorney purporting to appear for the defendant in an action lacks authority to do so, a motion to strike the answer is properly granted (Kellar v. Hendey (1961) 189 Cal. App. 2d 86, 87-88, 10 Cal.

CAUTION:
Code Civ. Proc. § 437(a), enacted in 1982, provides that the grounds for a motion to strike must appear on the face of the challenged pleading or from any matter of which the court is required to take judicial notice. A motion to strike that purports to rely on evidence extrinsic to the pleadings or matters subject to judicial notice should be treated as a motion for summary judgment under Code Civ. Proc. § 437c [Vesely v. Sager (1971) 5 Cal. 3d 153, 168-169, 95 Cal. Rptr. 623, 486 P.2d 151 ; see Pianka v. State of California (1956) 46 Cal. 2d 208, 211, 293 P.2d 458] . Since a motion to strike a pleading on the grounds that the attorney was not authorized to file it must usually rely on extrinsic evidence, this motion will now probably be required to meet the requirements of Code Civ. Proc. § 437c. For discussion and forms supporting and opposing motions for summary judgment, see Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a motion by the plaintiff, or motion by special appearance of the defendant, to withdraw the defendant's appearance and strike an answer filed by an attorney without the defendant's authorization. Paragraph C of the form should be used only when defendant is the moving party, and seeks to withdraw defendant's appearance in addition to striking the answer.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should insert facts and argument showing that the attorney purporting to represent defendant in the instant action lacks authority to do so.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For forms of notice of motion by defendant to withdraw appearance and strike answer, supporting declaration, and order granting the motion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 72, Attorney Practice and Ethics (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Discussions

If applicable, counsel may also wish to base the motion on Code Civ. Proc. §§ 435-437. See California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 375, Motions to Strike (Matthew Bender).

[d] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 24.37 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a motion supported by this memorandum.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Motion to Strike Proper

Kellar v. Hendey (1961) 189 Cal. App. 2d 86, 10 Cal. Rptr. 748 , was an appeal from a superior court order denying a motion to intervene. Two rival factions within a corporation each sought to file an answer on behalf of the corporation. After the first group answered the complaint, the second group moved to strike the answer. The court of appeal affirmed the lower court's order denying the motion, and held that the second group did not show sufficient cause why it should be permitted to intervene on behalf of the corporation instead of the first group. The court held, however, that a motion to strike would properly be granted if an answer was filed without authority, or by a stranger to the action (189 Cal. App. 2d 86, 87-88) . Counsel should note that this case was decided before the enactment of Code Civ. Proc. § 437(a) [see CAUTION in § 24.35[2]].

People v. Honey Lake Valley Irrigation Dist. (1926) 77 Cal. App. 367, 246 P. 819 , was an appeal from a superior court judgment. An intervening party sought to collect money from the defendant, and the trial court ruled in defendant's favor. One contention on appeal was that defendant's attorney had never been properly authorized to appear on defendant's behalf. The court affirmed the judgment for other reasons, and also held that a challenge to the attorney's authority should have been made in the trial court. The court stated that by analogy to cases establishing the propriety of a motion to dismiss where the plaintiff's attorney lacks authority, a motion in trial court to strike the answer is the proper procedure to challenge the authority of a defendant's attorney (77 Cal. App. 367, 374). Counsel should note that this case was decided before the enactment of Code Civ. Proc. § 437(a) [see CAUTION in § 24.35[2]].

[b] Motion to Withdraw Proper

In Wilson v. Barry (1951) 102 Cal. App. 2d 778, 228 P.2d 331 , plaintiffs filed a suit naming several defendants. An attorney who had communicated with only one defendant, brought two demurrers and a motion for summary judgment on behalf of all the defendants. Defendants then brought a motion in superior court to withdraw their appearances due to the attorney's lack of authority to appear for them. The trial court granted the motion, and the court of appeal affirmed, with the exception of the defendant who had been in communication with the attorney. The court of appeal held that when an attorney lacks authority to appear on behalf of a defendant, no appearance made by the attorney is binding, and a motion for an order permitting defendant's withdrawal is properly granted (102 Cal. App. 2d 778, 780) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Motion to Strike Proper

In Corcoran v. Arouh (1994) 24 Cal. App. 4th 310, 29 Cal. Rptr. 2d 326 , an attorney entered an appearance on behalf of all defendants. The parties entered into a stipulated judgment, which was signed by the attorney. Subsequently, one of the defendants filed a motion to quash service and to vacate the judgment on the grounds that he had never authorized the attorney to enter an appearance on his behalf. The court of appeal reversed the trial court's order denying the defendant's motion, concluding that the attorney had no express or actual authority from the defendant to appear on his behalf. The attorney's understanding from a co-defendant that he had the authority to act on the defendant's behalf was insufficient to confer authority on the attorney to act on the defendant's behalf (24 Cal. App. 4th 310, 315-316) .

WHEN A LICENSED ATTORNEY APPEARS ON BEHALF OF A PARTY, THERE IS BOTH A PRESUMPTION AND PRIMA FACIE EVIDENCE OF AUTHORITY, AND ABSENT A CLEAR SHOWING TO THE CONTRARY, A MOTION TO DISMISS FOR LACK OF AUTHORITY SHOULD BE DENIED.

A. Presumption of Authority. When an attorney appears on behalf of a party, it is presumed that he or she has the authority to do so (Turner v. Caruthers (1861) 17 Cal. 431, 432-433 ; Clark Equip. Co. v. Wheat (1979) 92 Cal. App. 3d 503, 523, 154 Cal. Rptr. 874)

B. License Prima Facie Evidence of Authority. An attorney's license is prima facie evidence of his or her authority to appear on behalf of a purported client (People v. Mariposa Co. (1870) 39 Cal. 683, 684) .

C. Burden of Proof. The party challenging an attorney's authority has the burden of proving a lack of authority by a clear preponderance of the evidence (Clark Equip. Co. v. Wheat (1979) 92 Cal. App. 3d 503, 523, 154 Cal. Rptr. 874 ; see also People v. Mariposa Co. (1870) 39 Cal. 683, 685) .

D. Motion to Dismiss Denied on Finding of Authorization. A finding of authorization, even if by subsequent ratification of the attorney's actions, dispels the reason for a motion to dismiss, and on such a finding, the motion will be denied (People v. Madden (1901) 133 Cal. 347, 348, 65 P. 741).

[Optional] E. Insufficient Declaration by Moving Party. An affidavit or declaration based on information and belief which is submitted by the moving party is insufficient to overcome the presumption of an attorney's authority (People v. Mariposa Co. (1870) 39 Cal. 683, 685) .

[Optional] F. Indirect Authorization. When a client's authorization is indirect, the attorney will still be presumed to have authority to represent him or her (Kraus v. Walt Disney Prod. (1963) 221 Cal. App. 2d 736, 741-742, 34 Cal. Rptr. 702).

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted by the attorney whose authority is challenged, in opposition to a motion by a plaintiff to dismiss the complaint on the asserted grounds that the attorney has no authority to appear, or by a plaintiff in opposition to a motion by defendant to dismiss the complaint on the grounds that the plaintiff's attorney has no authority.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should insert argument and facts showing the absence of a clear showing that the attorney was not authorized to appear.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Presumption of Authority

In Turner v. Caruthers (1861) 17 Cal. 431 , a husband and wife together owned certain real property, on which they resided. The husband abandoned the wife, who rented the property to defendant, while she was away on business. While defendant was in possession of the property, the husband sold it to defendant without the wife's consent. The wife brought suit on behalf of her husband and herself, to eject the defendant from the property. The husband moved to dismiss, but the trial court refused to dismiss him, and granted judgment for plaintiffs. Defendant appealed, and asserted by pleading in abatement, that plaintiffs' attorney had no authority to bring the suit. The Supreme Court affirmed judgment for plaintiffs, and held that when a suit is instituted in the name of plaintiffs by an attorney it is to be presumed that the attorney is authorized to appear on their behalf. A mere suggestion, without supporting affidavits, that an attorney has no authority is not enough to rebut the presumption (17 Cal. 431, 432-433) .

In Clark Equip. Co. v. Wheat (1979) 92 Cal. App. 3d 503, 154 Cal. Rptr. 874 , plaintiffs in a civil suit appealed a superior court judgment. One issue on appeal was whether the wrongful acts of one plaintiff's attorney against the defendants were authorized by the plaintiff, and were therefore within the scope of employment so as to make the plaintiff liable for punitive damages. The court of appeal held that because the attorney was hired by the plaintiff to handle the case against defendants, he was presumed to have authority to commit the acts in question. The court restated the general rule that when an attorney appears or acts on behalf of a client, there is a presumption that he or she is authorized to do so, and in this particular case, the court applied the presumption of authority even when the attorney's acts were tortious (92 Cal. App. 3d 503, 523).

[b] License Prima Facie Evidence of Authority

People v. Mariposa Co. (1870) 39 Cal. 683 , was an appeal from a district court order dismissing a defendant's motion to set aside a judgment. The lower court refused to hear the motion, on the grounds submitted by the plaintiff's attorney, that the defendant's attorney had no authority to appear on defendant's behalf. The plaintiff's attorney's affidavit had merely asserted a lack of authority on information and belief. In reply, the defendant's attorney had produced his license to practice law. The Supreme Court reversed the order dismissing the motion and held that although the lower court had the power to question the attorney's authority, it should not have determined a lack of authority based on the evidence submitted. The Court stated that an attorney's license is prima facie evidence of his or her authority to represent the supposed client (39 Cal. 683, 684) . The attorney's actual appearance in the case, combined with the prima facie evidence of a license, will create a presumption of authority. This presumption will prevail unless the party questioning authority states facts, or grounds and reasons inducing him or her to believe that authority does not exist (39 Cal. 683, 685) .

[c] Burden of Proof

Clark Equip. Co. v. Wheat (1979) 92 Cal. App. 3d 503, 154 Cal. Rptr. 874 , is discussed in § 24.36[3][a]. The court of appeal held that when the attorney is presumed to have authority to appear or act for a client, the party denying the authority has the burden of proving a lack of authority by a clear preponderance of the evidence (92 Cal. App. 3d 503, 523) .

People v. Mariposa Co. (1870) 39 Cal. 683 , is discussed in § 24.36[3][b]. The Supreme Court held that the presumption of an attorney's authority will prevail, unless the challenging party makes a specific showing to the contrary. A mere assertion, on information and belief, that authority does not exist in insufficient to overcome the presumption of authority (39 Cal. 683, 685) .

[d] Motion to Dismiss Denied on Finding of Authorization

People v. Madden (1901) 133 Cal. 347, 65 P. 741 , was an action by the district attorney against the county treasurer and others for mishandling county funds. An intervening party in the action brought a motion to dismiss based on allegations that the district attorney had received no authorization to bring the suit. Official authorization as required by local statute, whether or not received at the outset of the case, was given by the county board of supervisors and the grand jury by subsequent ratification of the district attorney's actions, and by express direction to him to continue prosecution. The trial court nevertheless dismissed the action, and the plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court reversed the dismissal. It held that motions to dismiss a suit to lack of authority are permitted so that a defendant will not have to litigate the same cause of action twice. This reason disappears once the client's authorization can be shown, and a motion to dismiss should then be denied (133 Cal. 347, 348) .

[e] Insufficient Declaration by Moving Party

People v. Mariposa Co. (1870) 39 Cal. 683 , is discussed in § 24.36[3][b]. In that case, an attorney's authority to appear for the defendant was challenged by the plaintiff's attorney. The lower court denied a hearing on defendant's motion because the plaintiff's attorney had submitted an affidavit asserting a lack of authority on information and belief. The Supreme Court reversed, and held that a statement of information and belief was insufficient to overcome a presumption of authority. To challenge an attorney's authority successfully, the opposing party must instead submit facts showing a lack of authority, or in the alternative, grounds and reasons why he or she believes the attorney lacks authority (39 Cal. 683, 685) .

[f] Indirect Authorization

Kraus v. Walt Disney Prod. (1963) 221 Cal. App. 2d 736, 34 Cal. Rptr. 702 , was a personal injury case in which the plaintiff appealed a superior court judgment in favor of the defendants, an individual and his corporate employer. One contention on appeal was that the answer filed on behalf of the individual defendant was unauthorized, and the defendant was therefore in default. The same attorney represented both defendants. The employee had not seen the answer filed on his behalf and had no personal contact with the attorney. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment for defendants. It held that because it is a common practice for an employee to turn over the litigation to his or her employer when both are sued jointly, the employee's lack of communication with the attorney does not defeat the presumption of the attorney's authority to appear on the employee's behalf (221 Cal. App. 2d 736, 741-742) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Presumption of Authority

In Pacific Paving Co. v. Vizelich (1903) 141 Cal. 4 , one of two defendants moved the superior court to dismiss the action as to him, on the grounds that the attorney who had purportedly appeared on his behalf was never authorized to do so. The defendant asserted that since he made no appearance, the plaintiff was required to return summons within three years under former Code Civ. Proc. § 581(7), now Code Civ. Proc. §§ 583.210-583.250. Three years had elapsed, and the plaintiff had not returned summons, relying instead on the filing of a demurrer, purportedly on defendant's behalf, as an appearance by defendant. The defendant had been personally served, and had had knowledge of the attorney's filing of the demurrer.

The superior court dismissed the action as to the moving defendant, but the Supreme Court reversed. The Court held that in the absence of a specific statutory requirement that an attorney's authority be in writing, the authority of an attorney appearing on behalf of a purported client will be presumed (141 Cal. 4, 8). When an attorney appears on behalf of a supposed client, and that client has notice of the action and does not repudiate the appearance, the other parties have a right to treat the appearance as an authorized one (141 Cal. 4, 9-10). The client will not be permitted to deny authorization later, to the detriment of the other party (141 Cal. 4, 10).

[b] License Prima Facie Evidence of Authority

Pacific Paving Co. v. Vizelich (1903) 141 Cal. 4 , is discussed in § 24.36[4][a]. In that case, the Supreme Court cited with approval the rule that an attorney's position as an officer of the court gives all parties the right, prima facie, to regard him or her as the authorized representative of any party the attorney purports to represent (141 Cal. 4, 9).

[c] Motion to Dismiss Denied on Finding of Authorization

In Baker v. Boxx (1991) 226 Cal. App. 3d 1303, 277 Cal. Rptr. 409 , the trial court granted the defendant's motion to dismiss under Code Civ. Proc. § 583.250 (three-year mandatory dismissal) for delay in prosecution. The motion was brought on the ground that plaintiff's amended complaint, filed shortly before the lapse of the three-year period, was filed and served by an attorney who had been substituted into the case without a formal substitution in accordance with Code Civ. Proc. §§ 284(1) and 285. The court of appeal reversed the dismissal, holding that the procedural lapse was insufficient to justify mandatory dismissal, given that the original complaint had never been served by the plaintiff's original attorney and there was no showing that the lack of a formal substitution misled or prejudiced the defendants (226 Cal. App. 3d 1303, 1308-1311) .

CAUTION:
Code Civ. Proc. § 437(a), enacted in 1982, provides that the grounds for a motion to strike must appear on the face of the challenged pleading or from any matter of which the court is required to take judicial notice. Since a motion to strike a pleading for lack of authority on the part of the attorney will usually rely on extrinsic evidence, a motion to strike is now technically improper and will probably be treated by the court as a motion for summary judgment under Code Civ. Proc. § 437c [see Pianka v. State of California (1956) 46 Cal. 2d 208, 211, 293 P.2d 458 ; Vesely v. Sager (1971) 5 Cal. 3d 153, 168-169, 95 Cal. Rptr. 623, 486 P.2d 151] . For discussion and forms supporting and opposing a motion for summary judgment, see Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

This memorandum may be submitted by the defendant in opposition to a motion by the plaintiff to strike the answer on the asserted ground that defendant's attorney has no authority to appear, or by the plaintiff in opposition to a motion by special appearance of the defendant, to withdraw the defendant's appearance and strike the answer on the ground of defendant's attorney's lack of authority.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should insert argument and facts showing an appearance by a licensed attorney and the absence of a clear showing that the attorney was not authorized to appear on behalf of the client.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Motion to Strike Should Be Denied

Kraus v. Walt Disney Prod. (1963) 221 Cal. App. 2d 736, 34 Cal. Rptr. 702 , was a personal injury case in which the plaintiff appealed a superior court judgment in favor of the defendants, an individual and his corporate employer. One contention on appeal was that the answer filed on behalf of both defendants was unauthorized by the individual defendant employee, who had therefore made no appearance, and was in default. The employee had not seen the answer filed on his behalf in response to the unverified complaint, and had had no personal contact with the attorney. He had turned over the litigation to his codefendant employer, who had in turn dealt with the attorney. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment for defendants. It held that even when a defendant's authorization is indirect, the presumption of the attorney's authority to file an answer will prevail (221 Cal. App. 2d 736, 741-742) .

THE COMPLAINTS SHOULD BE STRICKEN BECAUSE PLAINTIFF IS A CORPORATION NOT APPEARING THROUGH A LICENSED ATTORNEY.

A. Motion to Strike Complaint. Any party, within the time allowed to respond to a pleading, may serve and file a notice of motion to strike the whole or any part of the pleading. [This time limitation does not apply to a motion to strike when an amended pleading is filed and the moving party contends that the pleading is filed after the time to file an amended pleading has expired or that the pleading is in violation of the court's prior ruling on the motion] (*Code of Civ. This memorandum may be submitted in support of a motion by the defendant or cross defendant to strike a complaint or cross complaint when the corporation filing the complaint or cross complaint does not appear through a licensed attorney.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Corporation Must Appear Through Attorney

In Merco Constr. Eng'rs, Inc. v. Municipal Court (1978) 21 Cal. 3d 724, 147 Cal. Rptr. 631, 581 P.2d 636 , a corporate litigant sought a writ of mandate in superior court to compel the municipal court to allow it to appear through an officer who was not an attorney. The corporation cited Code Civ. Proc. § 90 [recodified as Code Civ. Proc. § 87 and repealed in 1998], which had allowed a corporation to appear in municipal court through a director, officer, or employee who is not an attorney. Code Civ. Proc. § 87 was repealed in 1998 as an unconstitutional intrusion on the power of the court to set minimum standards on who may appear on behalf of a corporation.

The superior court denied the writ, and the Supreme Court affirmed. It held that if a conflict exists between legislative enactments and the judiciary's rules regarding the qualifications required the practice law, the Legislature must give way (21 Cal. 3d 724, 728-729) . The Court then reiterated the rule developed by the courts that a corporation cannot represent itself in court, either by an agent who is not a licensed attorney, or in propria persona (21 Cal. 3d 724, 729) . The rule cannot be legislated out of existence because the qualifications of a person representing any person or entity in court are of vital concern to the judiciary (21 Cal. 3d 724, 730) . A person representing a corporation is engaged in the practice of law, and should be subject to the ethical standards and restraints of an attorney (21 Cal. 3d 724, 730, 733) . Otherwise, the representation could afford a corporation the opportunity to take unfair advantage of individual parties (21 Cal. 3d 724, 732) .

Vann v. Shilleh (1975) 54 Cal. App. 3d 192, 126 Cal. Rptr. 401 , was a breach of contract action against a corporation and its individual shareholder. The defendants' attorney withdrew from the case on the Friday before a Monday trial date, on the ground that the individual defendant refused to accept a negotiated settlement that he had earlier authorized. The trial court denied the defendants' motion for continuance to obtain new counsel, and the individual shareholder was thereby put in a position of representing both himself and the corporation. The court entered judgement for the plaintiffs, and the defendants appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment. It held that the trial court's denial of a motion to continue was an abuse of discretion, in that it was arbitrary, peremptory, and made without any consideration of the facts (54 Cal. App. 3d 192, 198-199) . The court held first that the trial court had a duty to protect the defendants from the unethical abandonment by their attorney (54 Cal. App. 3d 192, 197) . Further, California law forbids a corporation from appearing in propria persona (54 Cal. App. 3d 192, 199) . By denying a continuance to give defendants time to obtain new counsel, the trial court had improperly forced the corporate defendant to make an unlawful appearance (54 Cal. App. 3d 192, 199) .

In Paradise v. Nowlin (1948) 86 Cal. App. 2d 897, 195 P.2d 867 , the defendant brought a motion in the court of appeal to dismiss the appeal by a corporate plaintiff, on the ground that the appellant failed to pay the required filing fee. The court of appeal granted the motion, but added that on its own motion it would dismiss on more important grounds, that a corporation may not appear in propria persona. The court held that it is a well sustained rule that because a corporation is an artificially created entity rather than a natural person, it cannot appear in propria persona (86 Cal. App. 2d 897, 898) .

[b] Court Will Strike Complaint by Corporation Without Attorney

In Himmel v. City Council (1959) 169 Cal. App. 2d 97, 336 P.2d 996 , plaintiffs appealed from superior courts orders dismissing two of their amended complaints. Plaintiffs, apparently consisting of a corporation and one of its officers, filed several complaints. The first amended complaint named the corporation as plaintiff, and was signed and verified by an individual as an officer. No attorney or person in propria persona appeared. In a later amended complaint, plaintiffs were listed as being the individual officer, as trustee for the corporation, and the corporation itself. Again, no attorneys or persons suing as individuals in propria persona appeared. The court of appeal affirmed the orders dismissing the complaints, and stated that the rule in California clearly prohibits a corporation from suing in propria persona. In court, a corporation can only act through licensed attorneys, and it cannot appear by an officer who is not an attorney (169 Cal. App. 2d 97, 100) . The court held that when a complaint is filed by a corporation in propria persona, or by an officer who is not a licensed attorney, it will properly be stricken (169 Cal. App. 2d 97, 101) .

[a] Corporation Must Appear Through Attorney

In Johnson v. Hayes Cal. Builders, Inc. (1963) 60 Cal. 2d 572, 35 Cal. Rptr. 618, 387 P.2d 394 , a corporate defendant, after filing its answer, substituted itself in propria persona in place of its attorneys. Thereafter, the plaintiff sent interrogatories directly to the corporation, rather than to its former attorneys. When the corporation failed to answer the interrogatories, the plaintiff moved to strike the answer. The superior court struck the answer, and after the required time period, entered a default judgment. The corporation's surety filed a motion in superior court to intervene, and a motion to set aside the default judgment. The court granted the motions, and the plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed the order permitting intervention, but reversed the order setting aside the judgment. It held that even if a corporation cannot appear in propria persona, it will be able to receive and be bound by notices that are served on it when it substitutes itself as attorney. Otherwise, a corporation could disrupt or delay litigation by filing notice of substitution of itself in propria persona (60 Cal. 2d 572, 577) .

In Channel Lumber Co., Inc. v. Simon (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 1222, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 482 , a corporation brought an unsuccessful legal malpractice action against its former outside trail counsel. Relying on Corp. Code § 317, requiring corporations to indemnify corporate "agents," the trial court ordered the corporation to indemnify its former counsel for attorneys fees and expenses incurred in defending against the corporation's malpractice action. The corporation appealed the order. The court of appeal reversed, holding that an outside trial attorney, retained by a corporation to represent it at a trial, is not acting as an "agent" of the corporation within the meaning and purpose of Corp. Code § 317, and is not entitled to indemnification under that section when the corporation later sues the attorney for legal malpractice (78 Cal. App. 4th 1222, 1232). In reaching its holding, the court of appeal stated that a corporation cannot represent itself in court, and must appoint a licensed attorney to represent it in court (78 Cal. App. 4th 1222, 1228).

In Ferruzzo v. Superior Court (1980) 104 Cal. App. 3d 501, 163 Cal. Rptr. 573 , an attorney who represented a corporation had been refused permission to withdraw from the case by the trial court. The court believed that because withdrawal would leave the corporate client without an attorney, a formal substitution of attorneys should be required instead. The court of appeal granted the attorney's petition for a writ of mandate, and ordered the trial court to permit withdrawal. It held that while it is clear that a corporation cannot appear in propria persona except in small claims court (104 Cal. App. 3d 501, 503) , the rule is not inconsistent with that permitting an attorney to withdraw from a case (104 Cal. App. 3d 501, 504) . The court stated that the effect of such withdrawal would be merely to compel the corporation to obtain new counsel in order to pursue its case (104 Cal. App. 3d 501, 504) .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Unincorporated Association Must Appear Through Attorney

In Clean Air Transport Systems v. San Mateo County Transit Dist. (1988) 198 Cal. App. 3d 576, 579, 243 Cal. Rptr. 799 , a woman who was not an attorney brought an action as an individual and on behalf of an unincorporated association against the San Mateo County Transit District, alleging that the county did not receive an adequate environmental impact report before it approved the building of a park-and-ride facility. The county demurred to the complaint, raising as one of the issues that the woman could not legally appear in court as the association's representative. The trial court ruled that the association could be represented only by a licensed attorney, and it gave the association leave to amend the complaint, specifying that the complaint could not name the association as plaintiff unless it was represented by a licensed attorney. Neither the association nor the woman as an individual amended the complaint, and the court entered a judgment of dismissal against both in favor of defendants. The woman and the association appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment of dismissal. The court relied on the Supreme Court's analysis in Merco Constr. Eng'rs, Inc. v. Municipal Court (1978) 21 Cal. 3d 724, 729-730, 147 Cal. Rptr. 631, 581 P.2d 636 , discussed in § 24.38[3][a], that a corporation is a distinct legal entity, separate from its shareholders and officers, and cannot appear in court except through an agent lawfully engaged in the practice of law. The court held that this reasoning also applies by analogy to an unincorporated association, which resembles a corporation more than it does an individual, and therefore must be represented in legal proceedings by a licensed attorney (198 Cal. App. 3d 576, 579) .

A trustee who is not a licensed attorney may not represent the trust in an action in court and may be compelled to withdraw from that representation and to hire a licensed member of the bar to represent the trust. [3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Nonattorney Trustee May Not Represent Trust in Court Action

In Ziegler v. Nickel (1998) 64 Cal. App. 4th 545, 75 Cal. Rptr. 2d 312 , the trustee of a trust commenced an action alleging that sellers of a mobilehome to the trust intentionally failed to disclose material defects. The defendant-sellers concurrently demurred to the complaint and moved for an order compelling the trustee to withdraw as attorney for the trust and to hire a member of the bar to prosecute the lawsuit, on the ground that the trustee was not an attorney so that his representation constituted the unauthorized practice of law in violation of Bus. & Prof. Code § 6125. The trial court ordered the trustee to withdraw as attorney for the trust and to hire an attorney within 30 days to represent the trust. The trustee appealed the order.

The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's order. The court found that California cases regarding representation of a corporation were distinguishable from the situation involving a trust, since a corporation is a distinct legal entity separate from stockholders and corporate officers, and is deemed a person within many legal constructs, but a trust is not a person but rather a fiduciary relationship with respect to property, and an ordinary express trust is not an entity separate from its trustees (64 Cal. App. 4th 545, 548) . However, citing out-of-state cases since no California case addressed the question of whether a trustee who is not an attorney could represent the trust in action to protect trust property, the court found that because the trustee must always act solely in the beneficiaries' interest, actions of the trustee affecting the trust estate affect the interest of the beneficiaries, so that representing the trust in court is representing and affecting the interests of the beneficiaries, so that it is the unauthorized practice of law under Bus. & Prof. Code § 6125 (64 Cal. App. 4th 545, 548-549) .

§ 24.41 Opposing Motion for Order Disqualifying Attorney Based on Contact With Opposing Party's Expert Witness--No Presumption that Confidential Information Was Imparted Exists When There Is No Impediment to Opposing Party's Ability to Obtain Information From Expert Regarding What Actually Was Disclosed

[Caption. See § 24.28.]

_____ [Name of attorney] SHOULD NOT BE DISQUALIFIED FROM REPRESENTING _____ [specify party, e.g., PLAINTIFF] IN THIS CASE BASED ON THE CONTACT BETWEEN _____ [name of attorney] AND _____ [other party, e.g., DEFENDANT]'S EXPERT, _____ [name of expert], BECAUSE NO LEGAL IMPEDIMENT EXISTS TO _____ [other party, e.g., DEFENDANT]'S ABILITY TO OBTAIN EVIDENCE FROM _____ [name of expert] REGARDING WHAT INFORMATION ACTUALLY WAS IMPARTED; THE PRESUMPTION THAT CONFIDENTIAL INFORMATION WAS IMPARTED TO _____ [name of attorney] THEREFORE IS INAPPLICABLE AND _____ [other party, e.g., DEFENDANT], AS MOVING PARTY, HAS THE BURDEN OF PROVING THAT CONFIDENTIAL INFORMATION WAS IMPARTED--A BURDEN WHICH _____ [other party, e.g., DEFENDANT] HAS FAILED TO MEET UNDER THE FACTS OF THIS CASE.

A. Moving Party Has Burden of Proving Expert's Improper Disclosure of Confidential Information to Opposing Party's Attorney When Expert Remains Under Control of Moving Party. The presumption that an expert witness improperly imparted confidential information to opposing party's counsel is inapplicable when no legal impediment exists to the moving party's ability to obtain evidence from the expert regarding what information was actually imparted. In such a situation, the moving party has the burden of proving that confidential information it imparted to its expert witness has been transmitted to the opposing party, and _____ [moving party, e.g., Defendant] in this case has failed to do so [Collins v. State of California (2004) 121 Cal. App. 4th 1112, 1127-1129 ; 18 Cal. Rptr. 3d 112 , Shandralina G. v. Homonchuk (2007) 147 Cal. App. 4th 395, 412, 54 Cal. Rptr. 3d 207] .

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to a party's motion to disqualify an opposing attorney from further participation in the case when the opposing attorney is alleged to have obtained confidential information as a result of contact with an expert previously consulted by the moving party. Generally, the rule is that when one side imparts confidential information to a potential expert witness, and the other side later consults with or retains that expert, there is a rebuttable presumption that the expert disclosed the confidential information to the attorney [see Shadow Traffic Network v. Superior Court (1994) 24 Cal. App. 4th 1067, 29 Cal. Rptr. 2d 693 , discussed in § 24.27]. However, the cases cited in this form hold that this rebuttable presumption is inapplicable, and the burden of proof shifts back to the moving party (i.e., the party seeking disqualification), when the expert remains under the moving party's control or no legal impediment exists to the moving party's ability to obtain evidence from the expert regarding what information, if any, actually was imparted to the other party [see [3], below].

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts showing that (1) there was no reason why the moving party could not have obtained information from the expert regarding what confidential information actually was or was not disclosed; and (2) the moving party has failed to show that any disclosure of confidential information actually occurred.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Moving Party Has Burden of Proving Expert's Improper Disclosure of Confidential Information to Opposing Party's Attorney When Expert Remains Under Control of Moving Party.

In Collins v. State of California (2004) 121 Cal. App. 4th 1112, 18 Cal. Rptr. 3d 112 , an auto accident personal injury case, one of the lawyers from the plaintiffs' law firm hired an expert witness on the subject of windshields, unaware that one year earlier counsel for the defendants had hired the same expert as a consultant for the defendants on the same subject matter. The expert later told plaintiffs' lawyer that he had been retained "by an attorney from Los Angeles" and that he had completely forgotten about it at the time he was contacted by plaintiffs' lawyers. After plaintiffs' lawyers disclosed the expert as a retained expert witness, defendant moved to disqualify plaintiffs' counsel, and the court granted the motion. Plaintiffs appealed [121 Cal. App. 4th 1112, 1116] .

The appellate court reversed. The court held that disqualification of the plaintiffs' law firm was unwarranted. That firm had no notice of the expert's dual status until defense counsel raised the issue because the expert had never disclosed his dual retention. Further, the plaintiffs' firm ceased all direct contact with the expert after his dual role was revealed. Most importantly, the undisputed evidence demonstrated that no confidential information originating with defendants or their attorneys was transmitted by the expert to the plaintiffs' firm [121 Cal. App. 4th 1112, 1116] .

In ordering disqualification, the trial court had relied heavily on Shadow Traffic Network v. Superior Court (1994) 24 Cal. App. 4th 1067, 29 Cal. Rptr. 2d 693 [discussed in § 24.27]. On appeal, plaintiffs contended that (1) the evidence failed to demonstrate that defendants provided confidential information to the expert; (2) the Shadow Traffic rebuttable presumption should not apply because defendants had retained access to the expert witness and plaintiffs could not ethically speak with the expert; and (3) the evidence provided by plaintiffs' law firm decisively rebutted the presumption. The appellate court rejected the first contention, but agreed with the second argument, and further concluded that the undisputed evidence established that no material confidential information was disclosed to the plaintiffs' law firm [121 Cal. App. 4th 1112, 1127-1129] .

Under Shadow Traffic, once confidential information has been shared with an expert, a rebuttable presumption arises that the same information has been used by or disclosed to the expert's subsequent employer. The court explained that as stated by the court in Shadow Traffic, shifting the burden of proof to the party opposing disqualification is a "rule by necessity" because the party seeking disqualification will be at a loss to prove what was actually disclosed--that would be known only by the adversary's attorneys and legal staff. In this case however, the expert witness remained a consultant for defendants' counsel. Thus, the most important source of the information from which to ascertain whether the expert had passed on any confidential information to plaintiffs' counsel--the expert himself--remained in the defendant's hands. The court reasoned that under these circumstances, the reason for shifting the burden of proof to the opposing party does not exist, and that application of the normal burden of proof, under which the party moving for relief must establish its right to it, is appropriate. The court concluded that when the expert has remained under the control of the moving party, and there is no evidence counsel knowingly retained the opposing party's expert or that the expert intentionally advised both sides, the Shadow Traffic rebuttable presumption does not apply. Instead, the moving party has the burden of proving that the confidential information it imparted to its expert witness has been transmitted to the opposing party. Note, however, that the court expressed no opinion as to whether the burden of proof should shift if the expert is no longer communicating with the party that originally retained him or her [121 Cal. App. 4th 1112, 1129] .

After reviewing the undisputed evidence in the case, the court concluded that defendant failed to demonstrate that any confidential attorney work product was transmitted from the expert to plaintiffs' counsel. The court further stated that recusal would be inappropriate because the plaintiffs' firm was innocent of wrongdoing when it hired the expert and acted ethically after the issue was discovered [121 Cal. App. 4th 1112, 1130-1131] .

In Shandralina G. v. Homonchuk (2007) 147 Cal. App. 4th 395, 54 Cal. Rptr. 3d 207 , a medical malpractice action, the defense counsel hired a doctor as a confidential medical consultant. The plaintiff's counsel, who was unaware that the doctor had been hired by defendant, subsequently contacted the doctor and asked him if he was familiar with the case. When the doctor said he was not, plaintiff's counsel sent the doctor medical records from the case and designated the doctor as an expert witness. The defendant then moved to disqualify plaintiff's counsel from the case, arguing that under Shadow Traffic Network v. Superior Court (1994) 24 Cal. App. 4th 1067, 29 Cal. Rptr. 2d 693 [discussed in § 24.27], a rebuttable presumption existed that plaintiff's counsel had improperly obtained confidential information during his telephone call with the doctor, and that the plaintiff did not sustain the burden of showing that her counsel had not obtained confidential information. The plaintiff opposed the motion, asserting that the Shadow Traffic rebuttable presumption was not applicable because the doctor remained under the defendant's control and, therefore, the defendant had the burden of persuasion to affirmatively show that the plaintiff's counsel obtained confidential information from the doctor. The plaintiff also argued that even if she had the burden of demonstrating that her counsel did not obtain confidential information during the conversation, she had satisfied that burden. The trial court granted the motion to disqualify the plaintiff's counsel, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal concluded that the trial court erroneously placed the burden of persuasion on the plaintiff to disprove confidential information was imparted to her counsel, and instead should have placed the burden of proof on the defendant to prove confidential information was imparted to plaintiff's counsel. Relying on Collins v. State of California (2004) 121 Cal. App. 4th 1112, 18 Cal. Rptr. 3d 112 , discussed above, the court opined that is was error to apply the Shadow Traffic presumption under the facts of the case because there was no legal impediment to defendant's ability to obtain evidence from the doctor on the content of the conversation. The court stated that when the reason for shifting the burden of proof to the opposing party does not exist, application of the normal burden of proof, under which the moving party must establish its right to relief, is appropriate. Based on the facts of the case, the court of appeal held that the defendant failed to meet this burden [147 Cal. App. 4th 395, 412] .

CHAPTER 24A ATTORNEYS AT LAW: MALPRACTICE
PART I. INTRODUCTION

2A-24A California Points & Authorities § 24A.03

§ 24A.03 Liability of Attorney for Sanctions

Pursuant to statutory authorization, a court may impose monetary liability on an attorney as a sanction. For example, the court may impose a sanction of up to $1,000 on an attorney who files a sworn affidavit of fault to relieve a client from a default judgment or dismissal [Code Civ. Proc. § 473]. Furthermore, a judicial officer may impose a sanction of up to $1,500, payable to the county in which the judicial officer is located, for any violation of a lawful court order done without good cause or substantial justification [Code Civ. Proc. § 177.5; see Caldwell v. Samuels Jewelers (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 970, 975-979, 272 Cal. Rptr. 126] .

A number of statutes require attorneys to pay the costs or attorney's fees, or both, of the opposing party. For example, a monetary sanction of reasonable expenses, including attorney's fees, for frivolous actions or bad-faith tactics is governed by Code Civ. Proc. § 128.7 for actions and proceedings started after 1994, and by Code Civ. Proc. § 128.5 applicable only to actions or proceedings pending as of December 31, 1994 [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 128.5(b)(1), 128.7(i); see also Code Civ. Proc. §§ 128.6, 128.7]. For memoranda regarding the recovery of attorney's fees, see Ch. 60, Costs .

Under Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.276, the court may require an attorney to pay penalties for unreasonable infractions of the rules governing appeals [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.276(e); see, e.g., Hummel v. First Nat'l Bank (1987) 191 Cal. App. 3d 489, 496, 236 Cal. Rptr. 449] . In addition, an attorney who engages in misuse of the discovery process, as defined in Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.010, may be required to pay the reasonable expenses, including attorney's fees, incurred by anyone as a result of the misconduct [Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a)]. For memoranda relating to discovery sanctions, see Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse .

Courts also have power to fine attorneys up to $1,000, and to require payment of reasonable attorney's fees and costs, for contempt of court [Code Civ. Proc. § 1218]. For memoranda concerning contempt proceedings and review of contempt proceedings, see Ch. 47, Contempt .

THE COURT SHOULD GRANT SUMMARY JUDGMENT IN DEFENDANT'S FAVOR BECAUSE NO ATTORNEY-CLIENT RELATIONSHIP EXISTED BETWEEN PLAINTIFF AND DEFENDANT AND THEREFORE DEFENDANT OWED NO DUTY TO PLAINTIFF.

A. Summary Judgment. A defendant may move for summary judgment in any action or proceeding if it is contended that the action has no merit. Such motion shall be granted if all papers submitted show that there is no triable issue as to any material fact, and that the defendant is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law (Code Civ. Proc. § 437c).

B. Elements Required for Cause of Action. To state a cause of action for legal malpractice, the following elements are required: (1) duty of the attorney, owed to the plaintiff, to use the standard of care commonly exercised by other members of the legal profession; (2) breach of that duty; (3) proximate causation between breach and plaintiff's injury; and (4) actual loss or damage to plaintiff as a result. The absence of any of these elements results in judgment for the defendant (Budd v. Nixen (1971) 6 Cal. 3d 195, 200, 98 Cal. Rptr. 849, 491 P.2d 433 ; Baldock v. Green (1980) 109 Cal. App. 3d 234, 238, 167 Cal. Rptr. 157).

C. Absence of Duty Requires Judgment for Defendant. Duty of care is the most important element of a cause of action for legal malpractice, and when circumstances establish its absence, there is no valid case against the defendant (Zalta v. Billips (1978) 81 Cal. App. 3d 183, 191, 144 Cal. Rptr. 888 ; Ventura County Humane Soc'y v. Holloway (1974) 40 Cal. App. 3d 897, 902, 906-907, 115 Cal. Rptr. 464).

D. Attorney-Client Relationship Required to Show Duty. An attorney has no duty to act in a particular transaction unless the attorney-client relationship exists with respect to that transaction, and in the absence of such a relationship, summary judgment for the defendant will be granted (Zenith Ins. Co. v. Cozen O'Connor (2007) 148 Cal. App. 4th 998, 1010-1011, 55 Cal. Rptr. 3d 911 ; Brandlin v. Belcher (1977) 67 Cal. App. 3d 997, 999, 1001, 134 Cal. Rptr. 1).

[Optional] E. Discontinued Relationship Precludes Duty. When the attorney-client relationship has been discontinued, unless the client reestablishes it, the attorney has no duty to act for the client, and summary judgment for the defendant will be granted (Brandlin v. Belcher (1977) 67 Cal. App. 3d 997, 999, 1000, 134 Cal. Rptr. 1).

[Optional] F. Attorney-Client Relationship Terminated by Operation of Labor Code Section 3755. If a workers' compensation insurer hires an attorney to represent the insurer and the insured employer in a workers' compensation claim, the attorney's representation of the employer terminates by operation of Lab. Code § 3755 when the insurer notifies the injured employee and the workers' compensation appeals board that the insurer accepts liability for the claim, and thereafter the insurer's attorney owes no duties to the employer (Canton Poultry & Deli, Inc. v. Stockwell, Harris, Widom & Woolverton (2003) 109 Cal. App. 4th 1219, 1226-1228, 135 Cal. Rptr. 2d 695).

[Optional] G. Malpractice Claims Not Assignable. Public policy considerations and the nature of the relationship require that the attorney-client relationship and its obligations be restricted to the parties involved, and that malpractice claims not be subject to assignment (Goodley v. Wank & Wank, Inc. (1976) 62 Cal. App. 3d 389, 396, 397, 133 Cal. Rptr. 83).

[Optional] H. District Attorney Owes No Duty of Care to Caretaker Parent With Respect to Enforcement of Support Obligation. The statutory scheme empowering the district attorney to establish, modify, and enforce support obligations in the name of the county on behalf of children and caretaker parents does not create an attorney-client relationship or other basis for a duty of care between the district attorney and caretaker parents (Jager v. County of Alameda (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 294, 297-298, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 293).

[Optional] I. No Attorney-Client Relationship Between Reinsurer and Attorney Hired by Insurer. If an insurer contracts with a reinsurer to obtain reimbursement coverage for some of the insurer's coverage liabilities, and the insurer subsequently hires an attorney to represent it when a claim is brought against its insured, the reinsurer on that claim does not become a client of the insurer's attorney in the absence of an express agreement between the retained attorney and the reinsurer (Zenith Ins. Co. v. O'Connor (2007) 148 Cal. App. 4th 998, 1006-1007, 55 Cal. Rptr. 3d 911).

This form may be submitted by defendant in support of a motion for summary judgment in a legal malpractice action, on the basis that defendant did not owe any duty to plaintiff, because there was no attorney-client relationship between plaintiff and defendant.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations which support the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c], and which include a showing of the absence of an attorney-client relationship between defendant, or defendant's law firm, and plaintiff.

[b] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, this form may be used to support a general demurrer to a malpractice complaint, or a motion for judgment on the pleadings, when it appears on the face of the complaint that no attorney-client relationship existed and therefore the defendant owes no duty to the plaintiff.

[c] Related Memoranda

For memoranda relating to summary judgments generally, see Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

[d] Opposing Memoranda

The points in §§ 24A.39 and 24A.40 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a motion for summary judgment supported by this memorandum.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Elements Required for Cause of Action

Budd v. Nixen (1971) 6 Cal. 3d 195, 98 Cal. Rptr. 849, 491 P.2d 433 , was a malpractice action in which a client alleged that his attorney failed to assert a crucial defense on his behalf in a contract action. Several years after the alleged negligence, the client filed the malpractice action. The trial court sustained the attorney's motion for summary judgment on the ground that the statute of limitations barred the client's action, and the client appealed. The major issue in the case was when the statute of limitations commences in a negligence action. The Supreme Court reversed the summary judgment because the question of whether the client had suffered damage had not been resolved (6 Cal. 3d 195, 203-204) . In the course of its opinion, the Court also discussed the requirement of actual damage and noted that the elements required to show malpractice include duty to use the skill, prudence, and diligence commonly exercised by members of the profession, breach of that duty, proximate causation, and actual loss or damage to the plaintiff (6 Cal. 3d 195, 200) .

In Baldock v. Green (1980) 109 Cal. App. 3d 234, 167 Cal. Rptr. 157 , plaintiffs were beneficiaries of a remainder interest under their grandmother's will. The executor of the deceased's estate held a life estate, which at his death was to go half to decedent's daughter, and half to plaintiffs. The defendant was the executor's attorney, and had handled the estate's distribution in probate court. Subsequent to the final account in probate court, and his discharge as executor, the life tenant deposited the estate assets in a savings account, which named only the daughter as having a remainder interest. On his death, the funds were released to the daughter only. The grandchildren brought a suit against the daughter, and a malpractice action against the attorney. The complaint against the attorney alleged first that he had breached his duty to advise and direct the executor so that the intended beneficiaries would receive their interest, and second that he had negligently represented to the probate court that the executor had properly carried out his duties.

The trial court sustained the defendant's demurrer to the third amended complaint, and on plaintiffs' failure to amend, dismissed the action. Plaintiffs appealed the judgment of dismissal, and the court of appeal affirmed. The court of appeal stated first that the required elements of a cause of action for professional negligence are duty, breach, proximate cause, and actual loss or damage to plaintiff as a result (109 Cal. App. 3d 234, 238) . The court then held that the defendant represented the executor, not the estate, the life tenant, or holders of the remainder interest, and that he thus had no duty to assure the actual delivery of the remainder interest after the executor was discharged (109 Cal. App. 3d 234, 240-241) . In this situation, because the attorney owed no duty to plaintiffs, the complaint failed to state a cause of action, and the dismissal was proper (109 Cal. App. 3d 234, 239-240, 241) .

[b] Absence of Duty Requires Judgment for Defendant

Zalta v. Billips (1978) 81 Cal. App. 3d 183, 144 Cal. Rptr. 888 , was an appeal from the trial court's dismissal, after sustaining demurrers, of the appellants' malpractice action against their attorneys. The complaint alleged that during the litigation of a medical malpractice action against appellants and others, a settlement conference was held in open court at which a settlement was reached. Under the settlement terms, the appellants were not required to contribute to the settlement fund, although because the defendant attorneys did not announce that fact in open court, newspaper accounts listed appellants as among the defendants paying the settlement. The complaint also alleged that the attorneys' omission amounted to negligence, and that as a result of that negligence, the appellants were damaged by adverse publicity.

The court of appeal affirmed, and held that although an attorney has a duty to represent his or her client to the best of his or her ability, there is no duty to insure the client's public reputation (81 Cal. App. 3d 183, 189) . The court also stated that its decision to affirm dismissal was based on defendants' lack of duty, and was buttressed by a failure to establish proximate causation (81 Cal. App. 3d 183, 190-191) . The court held that when there is no reasonable doubt as to the absence of either duty or proximate cause, the court must resolve the issues as questions of law, and in sustaining the demurrers, the trial court had correctly resolved those issues as a matter of law (81 Cal. App. 3d 183, 191) .

In Ventura County Humane Soc'y v. Holloway (1974) 40 Cal. App. 3d 897, 115 Cal. Rptr. 464 , the plaintiff appealed from the trial court's dismissal, on defendant's demurrer, of a legal malpractice action. The plaintiff, a humane society, brought an action against a law firm whose members had prepared a will designating one beneficiary as either a local or national SPCA. The executors of the estate eventually distributed the funds to an organization other than the plaintiff. The complaint alleged that drafting the will in such ambiguous terms constituted negligence, and by incurring expenses in an unsuccessful attempt to prove itself a rightful beneficiary, plaintiff had been damaged as a result.

The court of appeal affirmed the dismissal, and stated that an attorney drafting a will owes a duty to testamentary beneficiaries only if the testamentary intent is frustrated, and the clearly designated beneficiaries lose their inheritance as a result (40 Cal. App. 3d 897, 903) . The opinion held that the absence of any of the required elements negates a plaintiff's cause of action, and added that this especially applies to the element of duty (40 Cal. App. 3d 897, 902) . The court stated that duty is the most vital element of a cause of action for malpractice (40 Cal. App. 3d 897, 906-907) , and when the plaintiff does not show a direct duty owed to him or her, the action fails (40 Cal. App. 3d 897, 902) .

[c] Attorney-Client Relationship Required to Show Duty

In Zenith Ins. Co. v. Cozen O'Connor (2007) 148 Cal. App. 4th 998, 1010-1011, 55 Cal. Rptr. 3d 911 , plaintiff insurance company entered into a reinsurance contract with another insurer under which plaintiff agreed to reinsure 100 percent of the other insurer's exposure under certain liability policies. After claims were asserted against the insured, the other insurer retained defendant law firm to defend the claims. Subsequently, plaintiff reinsurer sued the law firm for professional negligence, alleging that an attorney-client relationship existed between plaintiff and defendant based on (1) an implied in fact contract and (2) the theory that plaintiff was an intended beneficiary of the legal services to be performed by the law firm for the other insurer. The trial court granted the law firm's demurrer to plaintiff's claim, and plaintiff's cause of action against defendant was dismissed with prejudice.

The court of appeal affirmed. It held that an essential predicate for establishing an attorney's duty of care under an "intended beneficiary" theory is that both the attorney and the client intend the third party to be a beneficiary of legal services the attorney is to render [148 Cal. App. 4th 998, 1008] . In this case, the first insurer, not plaintiff reinsurer, hired the law firm. The firm was retained to advise the first insurer regarding its coverage obligations and to avoid any potential bad faith liability of the first insurer to its insured. Any advice the law firm gave to the first insurer to settle or resolve a claim would be given in that context and might not necessarily be in the reinsurer's best interests. The court noted that the interests of the first insurer and plaintiff reinsurer were not identical, and in fact were potentially adverse. Thus, the law firm could not ethically represent both the first insurer and plaintiff reinsurer. In such circumstances, the court held, it would be impossible to conclude that either the first insurer or the law firm ever intended to confer beneficiary status on the reinsurer for legal services the law firm performed for the first insurer [148 Cal. App. 4th 998, 1008] .

In addition, the court held, the reinsurer's allegation that it "paid" the law firm's legal fees was irrelevant. The reinsurance agreement obligated the reinsurer to reimburse the first insurer for indemnity and claims expenses, which necessarily included legal fees that the first insurer paid the law firm. Thus, the reinsurer did not actually pay the law firm, but simply reimbursed the first insurer for the law firm's fees. Moreover, the court held that the mere payment of attorneys' fees does not necessarily establish an attorney-client relationship [148 Cal. App. 4th 998, 1009] .

Finally, the court held that it was inconsequential that the law firm had multiple communications with the reinsurer. The reinsurer was entitled by statute to information regarding claim status, and the first insurer was required by statute to communicate to the reinsurer all the information it had regarding reinsured liability. By communicating with the reinsurer, the law firm, as the first insurer's retained counsel, was only discharging it's client's statutory obligation [148 Cal. App. 4th 998, 1009] .

In Brandlin v. Belcher (1977) 67 Cal. App. 3d 997, 134 Cal. Rptr. 1 , an attorney had handled a client's divorce and will, and had assisted her in setting up an inter vivos trust, with a bank as trustee. About two years later, the client discussed with an officer of the bank her desire to amend the trust, and to add some of her children as beneficiaries. The bank officer suggested that the client contact the attorney, but she failed to do so. The officer then contacted the attorney, who said the client should contact him personally if she wanted to alter the trust. The client died before the trust was changed, and without having contacted the attorney. The client's children, as intended beneficiaries of the trust, brought a malpractice action against the attorney. The trial court granted the attorney's motion for summary judgment, and the plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the summary judgment, and stated that although a formal agreement or retainer is not required to show the attorney-client relationship, that relationship must exist with respect to a particular transaction in order to establish the attorney's duty to act in that transaction (67 Cal. App. 3d 997, 1001) . Here, the attorney had not been under a retainer to the client, had not contacted her since completing his services in her divorce action, and had specifically articulated through the trustee that he would not do further work on the trust without her contacting him. The court held that the attorney therefore had no continuing employment relationship with the client sufficient to establish the attorney-client relationship, and thus had no duty, with respect to the transaction in question (67 Cal. App. 3d 997, 1000, 1001) . Further, the court stated that the attorney had actively discharged any possible duty the prior relationship imposed, by his request that the client contact him personally (67 Cal. App. 3d 997, 1001) .

[d] Discontinued Relationship Precludes Duty

Brandlin v. Belcher (1977) 67 Cal. App. 3d 997, 134 Cal. Rptr. 1 , is discussed in § 24A.20[3][c]. Summary judgment was granted in favor of the defendant by the trial court, and affirmed by the court of appeal. The court held that when an attorney has been hired by the client to perform specific services, such as handling a divorce, preparing a will, and setting up an inter vivos trust, when he or she is not under retainer to the client, and has not remained in contact since completing the specific services, the relationship has been discontinued for the purposes of imposing duty (67 Cal. App. 3d 997, 1000, 1001) . Unless the client reestablishes the relationship, the attorney has no further duty to act, even with regard to matters relating to the prior employment (67 Cal. App. 3d 997, 1001) . For the attorney to do so would arguably violate former Cal. Rules Prof. Conduct, Rule 2-101 [now see Cal. Rules Prof. Conduct, Rule 1-400] which precludes an attorney from soliciting employment (67 Cal. App. 3d 997, 1001-1002) .

[e] Attorney-Client Relationship Terminated by Operation of Labor Code Section 3755

In Canton Poultry & Deli, Inc. v. Stockwell, Harris, Widom & Woolverton (2003) 109 Cal. App. 4th 1219, 135 Cal. Rptr. 2d 695 , the plaintiffs' employee filed a workers' compensation claim, the plaintiffs' insurer hired a law firm to handle the compensation claim, and subsequently the insurer agreed to accept liability for the compensation claim. The employee then notified the insurer's law firm that the employee intended to pursue a civil suit against the plaintiffs, desired to negotiate a global settlement of both the compensation claim and the lawsuit, and was willing to settle both claims for an additional $4,000. The insurer's law firm told the employee that the separate lawsuit against the employer was not their concern, and they never informed the employer of the employee's stated desire to reach a global settlement. The plaintiffs subsequently settled the separate lawsuit against them for $6,500 and expended over $10,000 on costs and attorney's fees. The plaintiffs then sued the insurer and the insurer's law firm for malpractice in failing to inform the plaintiffs of the employee's stated desire to reach a global settlement for $4,000. The trial court sustained the law firm's demurrer on the grounds that the firm's attorneys owed no duty to the plaintiffs by operation of Lab. Code § 3755, and the plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court noted that if a workers' compensation insurer hires an attorney to represent the insurer and the insured employer in a workers' compensation claim, the attorney's representation of the employer terminates by operation of Lab. Code § 3755 when the insurer notifies the injured employee and the workers' compensation appeals board that the insurer accepts liability for the claim. At that moment, the employer is relieved of potential liability and dismissed from the claim. Thereafter, the insurer's attorney owes no duties to the employer. Because the employee's desire to reach a global settlement was communicated to the insurer's attorneys after the insurer had given notification that the insurer had accepted liability for the claim, the attorney-client relationship between those attorneys and the plaintiffs had terminated, and the attorneys had no duty to notify the plaintiffs of that offer. Therefore, the attorneys were not liable to the plaintiffs (109 Cal. App. 4th 1219, 1226-1228) . The court also noted that if circumstances indicate that an insured might be misled as to the extent of an attorney's representation, the attorney has a duty to make clear to the insured that the attorney represents only the insurer. However, the court concluded that the complaint in this particular case did not allege any such circumstances (109 Cal. App. 4th 1219, 1228) .

[f] Malpractice Claims Not Assignable

In Goodley v. Wank & Wank, Inc. (1976) 62 Cal. App. 3d 389, 133 Cal. Rptr. 83 , attorneys for the wife in a dissolution proceeding negligently failed to take precautions with regard to her insurance policies, which the husband later cancelled without her knowledge. The wife eventually made a written assignment of her malpractice claim to the plaintiff, who brought the malpractice action. The attorneys' motion for summary judgment was granted by the trial court on the ground that an action in tort is not assignable, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the summary judgment for defendants. It first noted that tort actions involving injury or damage of a personal nature are not assignable (62 Cal. App. 3d 389, 393-394) . The holding followed that although a cause of action for malpractice arises out of a contract of employment, it remains a tort action for negligence (62 Cal. App. 3d 389, 395) . Further, the relationship between attorney and client is of necessity a confidential and very personal one, and the duties arising from it should be restricted to the parties involved (62 Cal. App. 3d 389, 395-396) . The court finally noted that public policy dictates that if malpractice claims were assignable, an undue burden would be placed on the legal profession, the attorney-client relationship would be undermined, and attorneys would have to be selective in choosing clients, thus restricting the availability of legal services (62 Cal. App. 3d 389, 397-398) .

[g] District Attorney Owes No Duty of Care to Caretaker Parent With Respect to Enforcement of Support Obligation

In Jager v. County of Alameda (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 294, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 293 , plaintiff brought an action in which she alleged that the county district attorney was professionally negligent in failing to collect the full amount of child support and interest that was due her under a prior court judgment, and that the district attorney improperly released a child support judgment lien. The trial court sustained defendants' demurrer without leave to amend. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court noted that one of the requisite elements of a legal malpractice claim is the existence of an attorney-client relationship or other basis for a duty of care owed by the attorney. The statutory framework that authorized the district attorney's actions in the case, Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 11350.1, 11475.1 (repealed January 1, 2000), did not create an attorney-client relationship between a parent seeking child support enforcement and the district attorney. In child support recovery proceedings the "client" is the county, notwithstanding the collateral benefit to the custodial parent (8 Cal. App. 4th 294, 297) .

[h] No Attorney-Client Relationship Between Reinsurer and Attorney Hired by Insurer

In Zenith Ins. Co. v. O'Connor (2007) 148 Cal. App. 4th 998, 55 Cal. Rptr. 3d 911 , plaintiff was a reinsurer under contract with another insurer to provide reimbursement coverage for certain of the insurer's insurance coverage liabilities. The insurer hired an attorney to defend claims brought against an insured and the attorney eventually settled for an amount in excess of $3 million. The reinsurer was liable for full reimbursement to the insurer on these claims, although the reinsurer paid only $500,000. The reinsurer filed suit against the insurer, alleging that the insurer had mishandled the adjustment of several of the claims, and against the insurer's attorney, alleging that the attorney had failed to pursue contribution and indemnity claims against other parties in a timely manner. The trial court sustained the attorney's demurrer, holding that the reinsurer had failed to demonstrate an attorney-client relationship with the attorney and the attorney owed no duty of care to the reinsurer. The reinsurer appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court of appeal held that if an insurer contracts with a reinsurer to obtain reimbursement coverage for some of the insurer's coverage liabilities, and the insurer subsequently hires an attorney to represent it when a claim is brought against its insured, the reinsurer on that claim does not become a client of the insurer's attorney in the absence of an express agreement between the retained attorney and the reinsurer (148 Cal. App. 4th 998, 1006) . The court noted that contracts for reinsurance are between the insurer and reinsurer, not between the reinsurer and the insured policyholder, and when a valid claim is made implicating the reinsurance, the reinsurer pays the insurer, not the insured. The insurer in this case also expressly retained the exclusive power to investigate, defend, and settle any claim on such terms as it, in its discretion, deemed expedient. The reinsurer had no right or authority under its contract to participate in the underlying claim investigation or settlement (148 Cal. App. 4th 998, 1007) . As the insurer had the authority to settle the underlying claims in a manner that was not in the best interests of the reinsurer, the court also concluded that the reinsurer was not a third-party beneficiary of the attorney's services given the potential, if not actual, conflict of interest between the insurer and the reinsurer (148 Cal. App. 4th 998, 1008-1009 ). Finally, despite any subjective belief of the reinsurer to the contrary, the court rejected the reinsurer's suggestion that there was an implied contract between the reinsurer and the attorney because of communications between the reinsurer and the attorney. The reinsurer had a statutory right to receive certain claims information, and the provision of that information could not establish an undertaking by the attorney to represent the reinsurer (148 Cal. App. 4th 998, 1010-1011).

[a] Absence of Duty Requires Judgment for Defendant

In Foster v. County of San Luis Obispo (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 668, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 730 , the appellant was represented in a criminal action by a public defender appointed by the county. The public defender appointed was not an employee of the county; rather, he was an independent contractor. The appellant sued the county that had appointed the public defender alleging that the county had committed malpractice. The trial court entered a summary judgment on behalf of the county, finding that there was no statutory basis for the county's alleged duty to supervise the acts of its public defender, such supervision would constitute a miscarriage of justice, and the county had no right to practice law.

The court of appeal affirmed, stating that the public defender's representation of the appellant was the result of acts of his own discretion, for which the county was not liable pursuant to Gov. Code § 815.4 (14 Cal. App. 4th 668, 672) . Consequently, when the indigent defendant is provided with free and licensed legal assistance throughout the criminal proceedings, when there is no claim or evidence that the defendant's attorney did not have the required expertise to handle the case, and when the attorney was not employed by the local government entity responsible for providing the defendant with legal representation, the government entity owes no duty to the defendant to control the performance of the publicly provided lawyer (14 Cal. App. 4th 668, 674-675) .

[b] Attorney-Client Relationship Required to Show Duty

In American Cas. Co. v. O'Flaherty (1997) 57 Cal. App. 4th 1070, 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 539 , a hospital and a number of its professional staff, including a nurse, were sued by the heirs of a patient for wrongful death. The insurance carrier for the hospital undertook the defense of the institution and its staff, and hired defense counsel for that purpose. The nurse had her own liability policy. Her insurance carrier refused to contribute toward a possible settlement. The verdict exceeded the limits of the hospital's primary policy, and the underlying case settled for the amount of the verdict before judgment was entered. The nurse's insurer sued defense counsel for legal malpractice based on counsel's refusal of an offer to dismiss the nurse from the underlying complaint and failure to adequately advise the nurse of the settlement and of her right to independent counsel. The trial court granted defense counsel's motion for summary judgment on the ground that it owed no duty to the nurse's insurer because it had no attorney-client relationship with the company, and the insurer appealed. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that defense counsel had no attorney-client relationship with and owed no duty of care to the nurse's own liability insurer when the liability insurer neither retained defense counsel nor had anything to do with the services the firm rendered (57 Cal. App. 4th 1070, 1077) .

In Assurance Co. of Am. v. Haven (1995) 32 Cal. App. 4th 78, 38 Cal. Rptr. 2d 25 , a liability insurer sued the attorney for the insured for negligence in defending an action brought against the insured by a third party. Although the attorney began the third-party defense as the attorney for both the insured and the insurer, a conflict of interest arose and the attorney became the representative of the insured alone. The attorney was then negligent in failing to assert a statute of limitations defense in a timely manner and in failing to demur to or motion for summary judgment on a cause of action for peculiar risk. Due to these negligent actions, and because the attorney failed to keep the insurer informed about the third-party action as required by Civ. Code § 2860, the insurer was forced to settle with the third party for the full amount of the liability policy. The insurer then sued the insured's attorney for his negligence, but the attorney demurred on the grounds that the attorney owed no duty to the insurer. The demurrer was sustained, and the insurer appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court held that the insurer had a cause of action for any violations of duties imposed on the attorney by Civ. Code § 2860, the statute that governs the provision of an attorney for an insured in actions by third parties, when violation of those duties prevented the insurer from timely and completely defending the action brought against the insured. These statutory duties included the duties to consult with the insurer in a timely manner, to disclose all known and nonprivileged information to the insurer, and to cooperate in exchanging information with the counsel for the insurer. However, the court also held that the insurer had no cause of action for duties that fell outside those imposed by the statute. Thus, the attorney could not be held liable to the insurer for failing to investigate, prepare, assert, establish, or perform other similar functions regarding the defense (32 Cal. App. 4th 78, 83) .

In Kane, Kane & Kritzer, Inc. v. Altagen (1980) 107 Cal. App. 3d 36, 165 Cal. Rptr. 534 , an attorney had been sued by a corporate client for negligence in handling the client's collection claim. Following judgment in its favor, the client appealed, on the grounds that the trial court had erred in finding that the attorney had only a limited duty, and in reducing the client's damages by the amount of contingent fee the attorney would have received had the collection been successful. The latter question became the major issue on appeal, but the court of appeal first affirmed the lower court's finding of limited duty.

The court noted that in the relationship between attorney and client, a pattern of dealing had developed in which the attorney made phone calls and sent letters to the client's debtors, but rarely filed lawsuits, only doing so after specific instructions from the client. Often the client contacted the debtor and settled the matter without further participation of the attorney. The court held that the attorney's duty to act with respect to a particular transaction does not arise unless the attorney-client relationship is established with respect to that transaction (107 Cal. App. 3d 36, 40) . Because of the nature of the dealings between attorney and client in this situation, only a limited attorney-client relationship existed with respect to each transaction. Therefore, the attorney had no duty to file a complaint prior to the client's instruction, or to advise the client with regard to filing the complaint at a particular time (107 Cal. App. 3d 36, 42) .

[c] Malpractice Claims Not Assignable

In Curtis v. Kellogg & Andelson (1999) 73 Cal. App. 4th 492, 86 Cal. Rptr. 2d 536 , a physician and his medical corporation filed an action against an accounting firm and a law firm stemming from erroneous tax advice that had resulted in an assessment against the corporation of back taxes plus penalties and interest. Prior to the filing of the action, the medical corporation had filed for bankruptcy, although through an agreement with the bankruptcy trustee that was approved by the bankruptcy court, the physician purported to purchase all of the corporation's potential causes of action. As to the action against the law firm, the trial court ruled that the malpractice action was not assignable and sustained the firm's demurrer. The court of appeal affirmed. The court recognized the general rule in California that legal malpractice actions are not assignable and concluded that this rule applied equally to a cause of action belonging to a corporation in bankruptcy. Because the cause of action had not been brought prior to bankruptcy, the malpractice action could only be asserted by the trustee of the bankrupt estate, and any attempt by the trustee to transfer to the physician the right to bring the cause of action was ineffective. Furthermore, the court noted that the agreement made it clear that the physician was not prosecuting the malpractice action for the benefit of the bankrupt estate, because any proceeds of the action would go directly to the physician (73 Cal. App. 4th 492, 505-506) .

In Baum v. Duckor, Spradling & Metzger (1999) 72 Cal. App. 4th 54, 84 Cal. Rptr. 2d 703 , a creditor of two corporations brought a legal malpractice action against the corporations' former legal counsel for their role in allegedly fraudulently transferring the assets of the corporations to the corporations' principal prior to filing for bankruptcy. The creditor argued that pursuant to an agreement approved by the bankruptcy court between the creditor and the trustees for the corporations in bankruptcy, the right to prosecute the malpractice action had been transferred to the creditor. However, the trial court sustained the defendants' demurrer without leave to amend and the court of appeal affirmed. The court of appeal agreed that in conformity with the rule in California, the trustee of a bankruptcy estate for a corporation may not assign a legal malpractice claim belonging to the estate to a creditor of the corporation or to any other person (72 Cal. App. 4th 54, 69) . The court recognized that under federal law, a bankruptcy estate may have property rights to legal malpractice claims arising under state law and that a debtor's legal malpractice claims are involuntarily transferred to the bankruptcy estate. However, the court concluded that the nature and extent of these property rights are defined by state law, not bankruptcy law, and thus any attempted assignment to another party was ineffective in California (72 Cal. App. 4th 54, 69-72) .

In Fireman's Fund Ins. v. McDonald, Hecht & Sol (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 1373, 36 Cal. Rptr. 2d 424 , three liability insurers paid over $10,000,000 in settlement of a lawsuit brought by homeowners against the insured developer. The homeowners had alleged misrepresentations in the sale of certain residential units. After settling, the developer brought a malpractice action against the law firm that handled the sale of the development project, alleging that the law firm was responsible for the misrepresentations. The developer had agreed as part of the settlement to reimburse the insurers up to the limits of the policies from any proceeds gained from the suit against the law firm. The insurers then joined the malpractice suit as plaintiffs under a theory of subrogation. The law firm demurred, arguing successfully that the prohibition on the assignment of legal malpractice claims precluded the insurance companies from joining as subrogation plaintiffs. The insurance companies appealed their dismissal, but the court of appeal upheld the trial court's decision (30 Cal. App. 4th 1373, 1378) . The court of appeal noted that California law was well settled that the uniquely personal and confidential nature of the attorney-client relationship prevented the assignment of malpractice claims and concluded that allowing the insurers to join as subrogees under those facts would effectively constitute an assignment of the claim (30 Cal. App. 4th 1373, 1378-1379) .

In Jackson v. Rogers & Wells (1989) 210 Cal. App. 3d 336, 258 Cal. Rptr. 454 , the court of appeal upheld a judgment of dismissal in an action for "fraud" that was based on an assigned attorney malpractice claim. The purported fraud involved the defendants' performance of unnecessarily extensive and improper legal services for the assignors. The court found that the gravamen of the fraud claim was legal malpractice, and that the claim was not assignable under applicable authority (210 Cal. App. 3d 336, 348) . The court also pointed out that causes of action for fraud are generally not assignable unless they involve deprivation of a specific item of the plaintiff's property. Here, the disputed billings were not sufficiently analogous to a specific, identifiable piece of property to support a finding of assignability (210 Cal. App. 3d 336, 345-347) .

2A-24A California Points & Authorities § 24A.21

§ 24A.21 Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] in Legal Malpractice Action--By Defendant--Plaintiff as Third Party to Whom Defendant Owed No Duty

[Caption. See § 24A.20.]

SUMMARY JUDGMENT SHOULD BE GRANTED IN FAVOR OF DEFENDANT BECAUSE DEFENDANT OWED NO DUTY TO PLAINTIFF, SINCE PLAINTIFF IS A THIRD PARTY NOT INTENDED TO BENEFIT FROM DEFENDANT'S SERVICES TO HIS/HER CLIENT.

A. Summary Judgment. [See § 24A.20, Paragraph A.]

B. Elements Required for Cause of Action. [See § 24A.20, Paragraph B.]

C. Absence of Duty Requires Judgment for Defendant. [See § 24A.20, Paragraph C.]

D. No Duty to Third Parties. Existence of duty is a question of law, and an attorney owes no duty of care to a third party, unless the client intends the third party to be a beneficiary of the attorney's services. Whether the third party is such an intended beneficiary is determined by a balancing of the following factors: the extent to which the transaction was actually intended to benefit that party, foreseeability of harm to that party, certainty of injury to that party, the closeness of connection between defendant's negligence and the injury, moral blame attached to defendant's conduct, and the policy of preventing the same type of future harm (Goodman v. Kennedy (1976) 18 Cal. 3d 335, 342-344, 134 Cal. Rptr. 375, 556 P.2d 737).

[Optional] E. Absent Client Testator's Clear Intent, No Duty to Nonbeneficiary of Will. For an attorney drafting a will to have any duty to a third party who is not the client, the client must have clearly intended the third party to benefit, beyond the actual benefit received, from the will, and that intent must be frustrated as a direct result of the attorney's negligence (Ventura County Humane Soc'y v. Holloway (1974) 40 Cal. App. 3d 897, 903, 115 Cal. Rptr. 464 ; Hiemstra v. Huston (1970) 12 Cal. App. 3d 1043, 1048, 91 Cal. Rptr. 269).

[Optional] F. No Duty to Client's Adversary. An attorney owes no legal duty to a third party who is his or her client's adversary, and if a malpractice action is brought against the attorney by such a party, summary judgment for defendant will be granted (Weaver v. Superior Court (1979) 95 Cal. App. 3d 166, 182, 156 Cal. Rptr. 745 ; Parnell v. Smart (1977) 66 Cal. App. 3d 833, 837-838, 136 Cal. Rptr. 246).

[Optional] G. No Duty to Client's Former or Subsequent Attorneys. An attorney has no duty to his or her client's previous or subsequent attorneys, both as a matter of policy, and because dealings with the client are not intended to benefit other attorneys (Mason v. Levy & Van Bourg (1978) 77 Cal. App. 3d 60, 67-68, 143 Cal. Rptr. 389).

[Optional] H. No Duty Owed to Co-Counsel. To avoid imposing duties on an attorney that may conflict with the attorney's undivided duty of loyalty to the client, an attorney does not owe a duty to co-counsel that will support an action by that co-counsel if the result of the representation has caused the complaining co-counsel to recover a smaller attorney's fee than would otherwise have been received (Beck v. Wecht (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 289, 297-298, 121 Cal. Rptr. 2d 384, 48 P.3d 417 ; Joseph A. Saunders, P.C. v. Weissburg & Aronson (1999) 74 Cal. App. 4th 869, 872-874, 87 Cal. Rptr. 2d 405).

[Optional] I. No Duty to Potential Beneficiary Named in Unsigned Will. An attorney does not owe a duty to a beneficiary named in an unexecuted will to inquire of the client whether additional assistance is needed to complete a change in testamentary disposition (Radovich v. Locke-Paddon (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 946, 950, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 573).

[Optional] J. No Duty to Will Beneficiaries to Determine Testamentary Capacity of Testator. An attorney preparing or amending a will for a testator owes no duty to the beneficiary of the will, or to the beneficiary of a previous will, to ascertain and document the testamentary capacity of the testator (Boranian v. Clark (2004) 123 Cal. App. 4th 1012, 1017-1021, 20 Cal. Rptr. 3d 405 ; Moore v. Anderson Zeigler Disharoon Gallagher & Gray (2003) 109 Cal. App. 4th 1287, 1298, 135 Cal. Rptr. 2d 888).

[Optional] K. Signed Document Memorializing Testator's Intent Required to Hold Attorney Liable for Failure to Execute That Intent. Attorney liability to third-party beneficiaries of estate documents is limited to instances in which the testator's intent was explicitly memorialized in a signed will or trust document, but negligence on the part of the attorney in drafting or executing the document caused the testator's intent as stated in the document to be frustrated (Chang v. Lederman (2009) 172 Cal. App. 4th 67, 81-82, 90 Cal. Rptr. 3d 758).

[Optional] L. Attorney's Signature on Contract Not Basis for Tort Liability to Attorney for Other Party. An attorney who, on behalf of a client, signs a contract that contains a signature recital reading "approved as to form and content"' does not by doing so make a representation to the attorney for the other contracting party that may form the basis for tort liability to that other attorney (Freedman v. Brutzkus (2010) 182 Cal. App. 4th 1065, 1070, 106 Cal. Rptr. 3d 371).

This form may be submitted by defendant in support of a motion for summary judgment in a legal malpractice action when the motion is made on the basis that plaintiff is a third party who was not intended to benefit from defendant's services to his or her client, and defendant therefore owes no duty to plaintiff.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations that support the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c], and include a declaration establishing the relationship of plaintiff to defendant and client, and the lack of the client's intention to benefit plaintiff, or to benefit plaintiff to a greater extent than actually occurred.

[b] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, this form may be used to support defendant's general demurrer to the complaint or a motion for judgment on the pleadings where it appears on the face of the complaint that plaintiff is a third party to whom defendant owes no duty.

[c] Related Memoranda

For memoranda relating to summary judgments generally, see Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

[d] Opposing Memoranda

The points in § 24A.42 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a motion for summary judgment supported by the points this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Duty to Third Parties

Goodman v. Kennedy (1976) 18 Cal. 3d 335, 134 Cal. Rptr. 375, 556 P.2d 737 , was a malpractice action by purchasers of stock against the attorney and law firm for the sellers. The complaint alleged, among other things, that the attorney had negligently advised his clients regarding the SEC regulations' effect on the stock sale, and that in the course of the purchase negotiations, the buyers had relied on the incorrect information to their detriment. The trial court sustained the defendants' demurrer to the complaint, and dismissed the action against them. The plaintiffs appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed the dismissal, and held that the attorney owed no duty of care to the plaintiffs (18 Cal. 3d 335, 343, 344) . Whether or not a duty to a third person exists is a question of law, and involves a judicial balancing of factors, including the extent to which the transaction was intended to benefit the plaintiff, foreseeability of harm to plaintiff, certainty of actual injury to plaintiff, the closeness of connection between defendant's negligence and the injury, moral blame attached to defendant's conduct, and the policy of preventing future harm of the same type (18 Cal. 3d 335, 342-343) . An attorney has no duty to third parties who deal with the client at arm's length and are not intended beneficiaries of the attorney's services (18 Cal. 3d 335, 344) . The Court stated that if an attorney giving negligent advice were to be liable to any party with whom the client deals at arm's length, the attorney's concern with possible claims of negligence would interfere with his or her duty to protect the client's interests (18 Cal. 3d 335, 344) .

[b] Absent Client Testator's Clear Intent, No Duty to Nonbeneficiary of Will

Ventura County Humane Soc'y v. Holloway (1974) 40 Cal. App. 3d 897, 115 Cal. Rptr. 464 , is discussed in § 24A.20[3][b]. After losing its claim to qualify as a beneficiary under a will, the plaintiff sued a law firm for negligence in drafting the will. The will had named as beneficiary the "Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals," either the local or national branch, and the plaintiff was a particular local humane society. The trial court granted defendants' general demurrer, and dismissed the suit. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the dismissal, and held that an attorney may be liable to a third party for negligence in drafting a will only if the attorney's negligence frustrated the testamentary intent, and caused the third party as a clearly designated beneficiary to lose his, her, or its legacy as a direct result (40 Cal. App. 3d 897, 903) . In this case, the court held that although there were ambiguities in the specific identity of beneficiaries, the purpose and intent of the testator was clear, and could be implemented under the will (40 Cal. App. 3d 897, 905) . Further, since the plaintiff was not a named beneficiary, it failed to show the critical elements of foreseeability of harm, degree of certainty of injury, and closeness of connection between defendants' conduct and plaintiff's alleged loss (40 Cal. App. 3d 897, 906) . Such elements provide a necessary foundation for the existence of an attorney's duty to a third party who is not a client (40 Cal. App. 3d 897, 903, 906) .

In Hiemstra v. Huston (1970) 12 Cal. App. 3d 1043, 91 Cal. Rptr. 269 , plaintiff, the son of a deceased testator, brought a malpractice action against his father's attorneys, alleging that they had negligently drafted a will without proper instructions from the testator, and without knowledge of his testamentary intent. Plaintiff alleged that as a direct result of defendant's negligence, the bequests to him were substantially reduced. Defendants brought a demurrer, and the trial court sustained it, dismissing the action. On appeal by plaintiff, the court of appeal affirmed the dismissal. It held that a plaintiff has no cause of action against an attorney for negligence in drafting a will unless the alleged negligence resulted in a legal defect in the will, which frustrates the testator's express intent. When the testator does not express an intention to benefit the plaintiff, beyond the actual benefit received, the plaintiff has no claim against the attorneys who drafted the will (12 Cal. App. 3d 1043, 1048) .

[c] No Duty to Client's Adversary

In Weaver v. Superior Court (1979) 95 Cal. App. 3d 166, 156 Cal. Rptr. 745 , defendant attorney's client had brought a medical malpractice suit against the legal malpractice plaintiff. Subsequent to judgment for the plaintiff in the medical malpractice action, plaintiff brought an action against defendant and his client for malicious prosecution, and against defendant for legal malpractice in negligently filing the suit against plaintiff, without adequate factual or legal research. The trial court granted defendant's motion for summary judgment as to the cause of action for malpractice. On appeal by plaintiff, the court of appeal affirmed. It held that an attorney owes no duty to parties adverse to his or her client in litigation (95 Cal. App. 3d 166, 182) . Such a duty would directly conflict with the attorney's duties to his or her client, and would subvert the public policy of free access to the courts (95 Cal. App. 3d 166, 179, 182-183) . In addition, the third party's action for malicious prosecution would be an adequate remedy in such a situation (95 Cal. App. 3d 166, 183) .

In Parnell v. Smart (1977) 66 Cal. App. 3d 833, 136 Cal. Rptr. 246 , plaintiff had brought an uninsured motorist claim against an insurance company. The insurance company hired defendant attorneys to represent it. Prior to the arbitration hearing, the plaintiff made several settlement offers to defendant attorneys, who allegedly failed to convey the offers to the insurance company. Following judgment for plaintiff, plaintiff brought a malpractice action against defendants for negligence in failing to procure a settlement. The trial court sustained defendants' demurrer, and dismissed the suit against them. Plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal affirmed dismissal. Although plaintiff asserted that in an uninsured motorist proceeding a close relationship exists between the insurance company, its attorneys, and the claimant, the court pointed out that it is still an adversary proceeding. The attorneys were under a duty to protect their client's interests against the plaintiff's interests (66 Cal. App. 3d 833, 837-838) , and an attorney owes no legal duty to his or her client's adversary. Cases extending an attorney's duty to a third party do not apply in this situation, since the adversary is clearly not intended to benefit by the subject attorney-client relationship (66 Cal. App. 3d 833, 838) .

[d] No Duty to Client's Former or Subsequent Attorneys

In Mason v. Levy & Van Bourg (1978) 77 Cal. App. 3d 60, 143 Cal. Rptr. 389 , an attorney brought suit against his former client's present attorneys for breach of contract, fraud and misrepresentation, and negligence. Plaintiff had transferred his client's cases to defendants by an agreement that defendants would pay plaintiff a percentage of the contingent fee they charged the client. Plaintiff alleged defendants failed to follow his advice, and had failed to exercise their best efforts to prevail in the cases. Consequently, no contingent fee was charged. Defendants demurred to the complaint, and the trial court dismissed the case. Plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal affirmed dismissal, and held that with regard to the action for negligence, as a matter of policy, an attorney owes no duty to a third party unless that party was intended to benefit by the attorney's performance in a transaction (77 Cal. App. 3d 60, 68) . The Court held that although both the client and another of the client's attorneys might benefit from a client's recovery, their interests are not identical, and an attorney's loyalty to his or her client should not be diluted by imposing another duty which could interfere with it (77 Cal. App. 3d 60, 66-67) .

[e] No Duty Owed to Co-Counsel

In Beck v. Wecht (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 289, 121 Cal. Rptr. 2d 384, 48 P.3d 417 , the plaintiff was an attorney who filed suit for breach of fiduciary duty against another attorney, alleging that while the two were engaged in the joint representation of a client, the defendant breached a duty owed to the plaintiff to settle the underlying case for $6 million as instructed by the client. The underlying claim went to trial, resulting in a defense verdict. The plaintiff then brought this suit, arguing that the defendant's mishandling of the underlying case cost the plaintiff the fees he would have recovered had the defendant settled as instructed. The defendant filed a cross-complaint, and the trial court granted summary judgment for the defendant on all claims. The plaintiff appealed, and the court of appeal affirmed.

The Supreme Court affirmed. The Court recognized that the court of appeal had reached conflicting results in different cases on the issue of whether one co-counsel could sue another for breach of fiduciary duty if the latter's actions reduce or eliminate the amount of the former's fee. After reviewing the decisions in Pollack v. Lytle (1981) 120 Cal. App. 3d 931, 175 Cal. Rptr. 81 , which had recognized the right to recover from co-counsel, and Joseph A. Saunders, P.C. v. Weissburg & Aronson (1999) 74 Cal. App. 4th 869, 87 Cal. Rptr. 2d 405 , which reached a contrary result, the Supreme Court agreed with Saunders. The Court held as a matter of law that co-counsel do not owe one another a fiduciary duty to conduct their joint representation in a manner that does not diminish or eliminate the fees each expects to collect in the case, because recognition of such a duty could interfere with each attorney's undivided duty of loyalty to the client. The Court also noted that in some cases, allowing one counsel to sue another could jeopardize the attorney-client privilege between the client in the underlying case and the attorney being sued (28 Cal. 4th 289, 297-298) .

In Joseph A. Saunders, P.C. v. Weissburg & Aronson (1999) 74 Cal. App. 4th 869, 87 Cal. Rptr. 2d 405 , the plaintiff and the defendant served as co-counsel pursuant to a written agreement in contingency fee litigation representing a large group of hospitals in an action brought against the Medicare program. That litigation was ultimately settled by the hospitals and the plaintiff was paid both a contingency fee and a consulting fee under the terms of the representation agreement. However, the plaintiff later filed suit against the defendant and others, alleging that misrepresentations were made to the plaintiff and to members of the group of hospitals that affected their assessment of the settlement offer and caused the litigation to be settled in a manner that favored certain hospitals and the defendant's fee recovery to the detriment of other hospitals and the plaintiff's contingency fee recovery. Summary judgment was entered for the defendants, and the plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court reviewed the holding and rationale of Mason v. Levy & Van Bourg (1978) 77 Cal. App. 3d 60, 143 Cal. Rptr. 389 [see § 24A.21[3][d]], and concluded that the argument for not imposing a duty on a successor attorney that runs to a predecessor attorney applies equally to attorneys who serve as co-counsel. The court of appeal held that to avoid imposing duties on an attorney that may conflict with the attorney's undivided duty of loyalty to the client, the attorney in this case owed no duty to co-counsel, especially in light of the fact that the clients themselves were satisfied with the results of the representation (74 Cal. App. 4th 869, 872-874) . In reaching its decision, the court also specifically disagreed with the analysis in Pollack v. Lytle (1981) 120 Cal. App. 3d 931, 175 Cal. Rptr. 81 , in which the court majority held that an attorney may bring an action against an associated attorney who is acting as an agent of the principal attorney (74 Cal. App. 4th 869, 873) .

[f] No Duty to Potential Beneficiary Named in Unsigned Will

In Radovich v. Locke-Paddon (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 946, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 573 , a husband sued the attorney who had drafted a new will for the husband's deceased wife. The draft was sent to the decedent two months before she died, but was not signed. Prior to their marriage, the husband and decedent had signed a form of prenuptial agreement stating that each party's property would remain his or her separate property, and that no community property would exist during the marriage. In 1973, decedent executed a will which provided a specific gift to her husband, and the residue of her estate to two charitable remainder trusts. In June 1991, decedent met with the defendant to discuss drafting a new will under which her husband would receive 100% of the testamentary trust income for the rest of his life. Defendant learned at this time that decedent had been diagnosed as suffering from breast cancer, and had received chemotherapy treatments. Defendant delivered a rough draft of a proposed new will to decedent in October 1991, for her review and comments. The decedent died in December 1991, without executing the new will and without further communication with the defendant. Decedent's 1973 will was admitted to probate, and her husband then brought an action for legal malpractice against defendant, alleging negligence in "failing to obtain the decedent's due execution" of the 1991 draft will. Defendant moved for summary adjudication on the ground that no duty was owed to the plaintiff, and the trial court granted summary adjudication as requested.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment for defendant, framing the issue as whether an attorney's duty to use professional skill, prudence, and diligence extends beyond the client to an individual who would have benefited had the client executed a will consistent with a draft prepared by the attorney (35 Cal. App. 4th 946, 954) . The husband characterized the June meeting between the decedent and defendant as a significant commitment to a particular testamentary disposition. However, the court noted both practical and policy reasons for requiring more evidence of commitment than was furnished by the direction to prepare a will with specified provisions. The court reasoned that, from a practical standpoint, potential testators may change their minds more than once after the first meeting; and from a policy standpoint, the potential for misunderstanding and the difficulties of proof in this sort of dispute required the clearest manifestation of commitment the circumstance will permit. The court concluded that under the circumstances, including the fact that the decedent had two months to sign the will, and did not do so, the June meeting and the preparation of the October draft were insufficient to manifest a commitment by the decedent to benefit her husband (35 Cal. App. 4th 946, 964) . The court acknowledged that it would have been professionally appropriate for the defendant to have inquired of the decedent whether she had any question or wished further assistance in completing the discussed change of testamentary disposition, but held that the attorney did not owe a duty to the plaintiff to have made such an inquiry (35 Cal. App. 4th 946, 965) .

[g] No Duty to Will Beneficiaries to Determine Testamentary Capacity of Testator

In Boranian v. Clark (2004) 123 Cal. App. 4th 1012, 1017-1021, 20 Cal. Rptr. 3d 405 , the plaintiffs were the decedent's adult children who brought a malpractice suit against Clark, the attorney who executed the decedent's final will. They argued that on the day the decedent signed the will, her body was failing, she was taking morphine for pain, and she was confused, lethargic, hallucinating, and in great pain. Under that will, the decedent left a laundromat to her male companion and made the plaintiffs responsible for the mortgage payments on the laundromat.

After the decedent's death, her children sued in the probate court to determine which will would govern the disposition of her property. The decedent's daughter offered a 1979 will for probate, and the decedent's companion offered the will prepared by Clark. A will contest ensued, and the decedent's companion ultimately agreed to settle the matter and give up all claim to the laundromat in exchange for $5,000.

The plaintiffs then sued Clark for professional negligence and breach of fiduciary duty. At a court trial, Clark moved for a nonsuit on the ground that, as a matter of law, he did not owe a duty to the plaintiffs. The trial court denied the motion. The trial court found in favor of plaintiffs, determined that Clark was negligent, and that his joint representation of the decedent and her companion constituted a conflict of interest. The court also found that the decedent lacked testamentary capacity, but it never addressed the issue of duty. Clark appealed.

The court of appeal held that it is an "elementary proposition" that an attorney, by accepting employment to give legal advice or to render legal services, impliedly agrees to use ordinary judgment, care, skill and diligence in the performance of the tasks he undertakes (123 Cal. App. 4th 1012, 1017) . In elaborating on this duty, the court held that an attorney who agrees to prepare a will incurs a duty not only to the testator client, but also to the intended beneficiaries. Lack of privity does not preclude the testamentary beneficiary from maintaining an action against the attorney based on either the contractual theory of third party beneficiary or the tort theory of negligence (123 Cal. App. 4th 1012, 1017) .

However, the court held, a lawyer's liability to the intended beneficiary is not automatic or absolute, and there is no liability where the testator's capacity is placed in issue by the allegedly intended beneficiary. Whether liability exists in a specific case is a matter of policy and involves the balancing of various factors, including (1) the extent to which the transaction was intended to affect the plaintiff, (2) the foreseeability of harm to the plaintiff, (3) the degree of certainty that the plaintiff suffered injury, (4) the closeness of the connection between the lawyer's conduct and the injury suffered, (5) the moral blame attached to the lawyer's conduct, (6) the policy of preventing future harm, (7) the likelihood that imposition of liability might interfere with the attorney's ethical duties to the client, and (8) whether the imposition of liability would impose an undue burden on the profession (123 Cal. App. 4th 1012, 1017) .

While an attorney has a duty to act with due care with regard to the interests of an intended beneficiary, the court held that the scope of the duty owed to the beneficiary is determined by reference to the attorney-client relationship. The attorney's primary duty is to the testator-client; the attorney's paramount obligation is to serve and carry out the testator's intentions. When, as here, the extension of that duty to a third party could improperly compromise the lawyer's primary duty of undivided loyalty by creating an incentive for him to exert pressure on his client to complete her estate planning documents summarily, or by making him the arbiter of a dying client's true intent, the courts will not impose that insurmountable burden on the lawyer (123 Cal. App. 4th 1012, 1020) . Here, the court held, Clark's sole duty was to the decedent, and he did not owe a duty to her beneficiaries to evaluate or ascertain his client's capacity to make a new will.

Further, the court held, ascertaining testamentary capacity is often difficult; the potential for liability to beneficiaries who might deem an investigation inadequate would unjustifiably deny many persons the opportunity to make or amend their wills. Factors which might suggest lack of testamentary capacity do not necessarily denote a lack of capacity. For example, old age, feebleness, forgetfulness, failure to recognize old friends or relatives, absent-mindedness, and mental confusion are not necessarily grounds for holding that a testator lacked testamentary capacity. An attorney might resolve any doubts as to capacity by refusing to draft the will as the testator decided, turning the presumption of testamentary capacity on its head and requiring the testator to prove his or her competency (123 Cal. App. 4th 1012, 1020) . On the other hand, beneficiaries of a will executed by an incompetent testator have a remedy in the probate court. They may contest the probate and challenge the will on the ground that the testator lacked testamentary capacity at the time of executing the will. That is precisely what happened in this case. The plaintiffs challenged the will in the probate court, and the issue of testamentary capacity would have been resolved there had they not settled the matter with the decedent's companion (123 Cal. App. 4th 1012, 1021-1022) . Thus, the court reversed the judgment against Clark.

In Moore v. Anderson Zeigler Disharoon Gallagher & Gray (2003) 109 Cal. App. 4th 1287, 135 Cal. Rptr. 2d 888 , the plaintiffs were the adult children of a decedent who brought suit against the attorney who executed the decedent's final, amended will and trust documents. They argued that the decedent was terminally ill, extremely weak, and under the influence of pain medications at the time he instructed the attorney to amend his will and trust documents, under which the plaintiffs received less than they would have under the previously executed will and trust documents. After the decedent's death, litigation was brought to determine which will and trust documents would govern the disposition of the decedent's property. A settlement was finally reached under which the plaintiffs received more than they would have under the final executed documents, but less than they would have received prior to the final amendments. In bringing a malpractice suit against the attorney, the plaintiffs alleged that the attorney had a duty to ascertain the testamentary capacity of the decedent before executing the final amendments, that the attorney should have recognized that the decedent's testamentary capacity was questionable at the time the final instructions for amendment were given, and that the attorney was required to document his confirmation of his client's testamentary capacity. The trial court sustained the attorney's demurrer on the grounds that he owed no duty to the plaintiffs to ascertain the decedent's testamentary capacity, and the plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court held that an attorney preparing or amending a will for a testator owes no duty to the beneficiary of the will, or to the beneficiary of a previous will, to ascertain and document the testamentary capacity of the testator. In contrast to the cases that have imposed a duty that runs to a will beneficiary, the court concluded that imposing a duty on the attorney to determine testamentary capacity that runs to third-party beneficiaries would compromise the duty of loyalty that the attorney owes to the client. The attorney who is persuaded of the client's testamentary capacity through personal observation fulfills his or her duty of loyalty to the client by drafting the will according to the client's wishes. If a duty to third parties were recognized, the testator's attorney would face potential liability either to the beneficiaries disinherited if the attorney prepares the will or to the potential beneficiaries of the new will if the attorney refuses to prepare it in accordance with the testator's stated desires. Not only would the attorney face potential conflicting duties between the client and the beneficiaries, but also conflicting duties between different sets of beneficiaries (109 Cal. App. 4th 1287, 1298-1299) . The court also recognized the difficulties that an attorney might have in properly evaluating a lack of testamentary capacity, as well as the problems of proving that a testator actually intended something other than what was in the final will, and noted that aggrieved beneficiaries are not left without a remedy, because they may challenge the testator's testamentary capacity in probate court (109 Cal. App. 4th 1287, 1300) .

[h] Signed Document Memorializing Testator's Intent Required to Hold Attorney Liable for Failure to Execute That Intent

In Chang v. Lederman (2009) 172 Cal. App. 4th 67, 90 Cal. Rptr. 3d 758 , plaintiff sued her deceased husband's estate attorney for legal malpractice and related causes of action. Approximately six months before he married plaintiff, the decedent had hired the attorney to establish a revocable trust under which plaintiff would receive $15,000 and some household furnishings upon decedent's death, with the remainder going to the decedent's son from a previous marriage. In addition, the decedent's ex-wife would succeed the decedent as trustee. The following year, about six weeks before his death, the decedent, who was seriously ill at the time, informed the attorney that he wanted to revise the trust to leave all trust assets to plaintiff, to whom he was then married, with the understanding that she would make a payment of $250,000 to the decedent's son when he turned 25 years of age. The attorney refused to make the requested changes, claiming that he would be subject to suit by the decedent's first wife, and advised the decedent that he should have a psychiatric evaluation before making any changes to the trust. The decedent died without any changes being made to the trust. Based on the existing trust instructions, plaintiff was told to move from her house within 30 days, and thereafter unsuccessfully challenged the trust. Plaintiff then sued her husband's attorney for failing to amend the trust to increase her bequest as requested by her husband before his death. The court sustained a demurrer to plaintiff's second amended complaint, finding that the operative facts did not give rise to a duty owed to plaintiff by the attorney. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. After reviewing existing case law establishing the scope of an estate attorney's duty to estate beneficiaries, the court concluded that attorney liability to third-party beneficiaries of estate documents was limited to instances in which the testator's intent was explicitly memorialized in a signed will or trust document, but negligence on the part of the attorney in drafting or executing the document caused the testator's stated intent to be frustrated (172 Cal. App. 4th 67, 81-82) . However, in the case before the court, although the beneficiary was listed in the trust as a beneficiary of a stated bequest, there was no written document memorializing the change that the beneficiary argued the decedent intended to make. Recognizing a duty in such a case would, according to the court, impose an undue burden on the profession by exposing attorneys to potential liability that was almost limitless, as any potential beneficiary could argue that the now-deceased testator intended to change the estate plan but failed to do so due to the attorney's negligence. Moreover, without requiring an explicit manifestation of the testator's intentions, the existence of a duty owed by the attorney, which is a question of law, would always turn on the resolution of disputed facts and could never be decided as a matter of law. In addition, the results in such lawsuits would inevitably be speculative, as the claim necessarily would arrive only after the testator's death, depriving the court of the one person who could definitively explain what he or she intended (172 Cal. App. 4th 67, 82-86) .

[i] Attorney's Signature on Contract Not Basis for Tort Liability to Attorney for Other Party

In Freedman v. Brutzkus (2010) 182 Cal. App. 4th 1065, 106 Cal. Rptr. 3d 371 , plaintiff attorney represented a clothing company in contractual negotiations with another company for whom the attorney had previously provided legal services. Plaintiff had specifically told the other company that he would withdraw from representing the clothing company in the negotiations if the fact of his prior representation of the other party made them uncomfortable, but the principals for the other company did not object to his representing the clothing company in the matter. The other company hired its own attorney and the parties eventually reached an agreement. The agreement contained a statement that plaintiff was representing only the clothing company, with the consent of the other company, and the other company had waived any potential conflicts of interest based on plaintiff's prior representation. The attorneys for both parties signed the agreement below a recital that stated, "Approved as to Form and Content." A dispute eventually arose between the clients, and the clothing company was forced into bankruptcy. The other company then sued plaintiff, arguing that he had represented them in the negotiations and had represented to them that the clothing company would pay the amount due under the agreement. In the course of this lawsuit, plaintiff deposed the other attorney from the previous negotiations, at which point plaintiff learned that the principals for the other company had told this attorney during the contractual negotiations that they were relying on plaintiff because of their long-standing professional relationship with him. Despite this knowledge, this attorney said nothing to plaintiff during the negotiations, even though the final agreement signed by the attorneys contained representations specifically stating that plaintiff was representing only the clothing company. Plaintiff's malpractice insurers settled the lawsuit with the other company. Plaintiff then brought suit against the other attorney based on intentional misrepresentation and fraudulent concealment. Plaintiff's suit alleged that the other attorney's signature following the recital "Approved as to Form and Content" in the underlying agreement constituted an actionable misrepresentation in light of the fact that the other attorney knew that his clients were in fact relying on plaintiff to represent their interests, despite the statements to the contrary contained in the agreement. The trial court sustained defendant's demurrer. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court held that an attorney who, on behalf of a client, signs a contract that contains a signature recital reading "approved as to form and content" does not by doing so make a representation to the attorney for the other contracting party that may form the basis for tort liability to that other attorney. The court concluded that the signature recital simply means that the signing attorney is agreeing that he or she is the attorney for his or her client and that the document is in the proper form and embodies the deal made between the parties (182 Cal. App. 4th 1065, 1070) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No Duty to Third Parties

In Bily v. Arthur Young & Co. (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 370, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 51, 834 P.2d 745 , the Supreme Court concluded that an accountant owes no general duty of care regarding the conduct of an audit to persons other than the client (3 Cal. 4th 370, 376) . The Court also held, however, that an auditor may be liable for negligent misrepresentations in an audit report to those persons who act in reliance on those misrepresentations in a transaction that the auditor intended to influence (3 Cal. 4th 370, 407-412) .

In Hall v. Superior Court (2003) 108 Cal. App. 4th 706, 133 Cal. Rptr. 2d 806 , a wife sued her mother-in-law for the wrongful death of her child, who drowned in a backyard pool at her mother-in-law's home. The husband was present at his mother's home at the time of the accident, but the wife was not. The wife settled her wrongful death action, and the husband, who by then was seeking a divorce from his wife, sued her and her attorney for failing to advise him of his rights in the action or join him in the action as required by statute. In holding that the husband had no action against his ex-wife's attorney, the court of appeal noted that the trial court was justified in inferring that the attorney was aware of a potential conflict of interest in representing both spouses, given that the husband was present at the time of the drowning and the wife was not. The court also emphasized that the husband never met with the attorney to discuss his potential claims, and that neither the husband nor the wife had any expectation that the husband would benefit from the legal services the attorney provided to the wife. Under the circumstances, the wife's attorney owed no duty to seek out the husband, who was by then separated from his wife, to advise him of his rights or to suggest that he contact another attorney to protect his rights (108 Cal. App. 4th 706, 714) . Although the husband might have an action against his ex-wife for failing to join him in the wrongful death action as required by the wrongful death statute, he did not have an action against his ex-wife's attorney for the omission (108 Cal. App. 4th 706, 714-715) .

In B.L.M. v. Sabo & Deitsch (1997) 55 Cal. App. 4th 823, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 335 , the court of appeal affirmed the trial court's grant of summary judgment for defendant attorneys on the ground that no duty was owed to plaintiff. Plaintiff was a housing developer which had approached a city council with a proposal to develop senior housing. The city council appointed defendant as special counsel and bond counsel for the project. Plaintiff alleged that defendants provided incorrect information to plaintiff regarding the need to pay the prevailing wage on the project. Plaintiff further contended that the appointment of defendants as bond counsel created a professional relationship between plaintiff and defendants. The court rejected this argument, reasoning that it would undermine the very nature of the attorney-client relationship. The court stated that for a duty to be owed to a third party beneficiary of a legal services agreement, the third party must show that it was the intention of the purchaser of the services to impose such a duty (55 Cal. App. 4th 823, 832).

In Burger v. Pond (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 597, 273 Cal. Rptr. 709 , the court of appeal held that an attorney who was retained by a husband to obtain a divorce from the husband's first wife owed no duty of care to the husband's second wife, and consequently had no liability to the second wife for professional negligence (224 Cal. App. 3d 597, 607) . The court based its holding primarily on the fact that the attorney never agreed to perform legal services intended directly to benefit the second wife (224 Cal. App. 3d 597, 605, 607) .

In Goldberg v. Frye (1990) 217 Cal. App. 3d 1258, 266 Cal. Rptr. 483 , involving, inter alia, a malpractice suit by estate beneficiaries against the attorney for the administrator of the decedent's estate, the court of appeal held that summary judgment was properly granted by the trial court. The court of appeal found it significant that there was no showing that the principal purpose of the attorney's retention was to provide legal services for the legatees' benefit. The court noted that the attorney was hired to represent the administrator, not the estate; any benefit incurred by the legatees was incidental and no duty was directly owed the legatees by the attorney (217 Cal. App. 3d 1258, 1267-1269) .

[b] No Duty to Client's Adversary

In Assurance Co. of Am. v. Haven (1995) 32 Cal. App. 4th 78, 38 Cal. Rptr. 2d 25 , a liability insurer sued the attorney for the insured for negligence in defending an action brought against the insured by a third party. Although the attorney began the third-party defense as the attorney for both the insured and the insurer, a conflict of interest arose and the attorney became the representative of the insured alone. The attorney was then negligent in failing to assert a statute of limitations defense in a timely manner and in failing to demur to or motion for summary judgment on a cause of action for peculiar risk. Due to these negligent actions, and because the attorney failed to keep the insurer informed about the third-party action as required by Civ. Code § 2860, the insurer was forced to settle with the third party for the full amount of the liability policy. The insurer then sued the insured's attorney for his negligence, but the attorney demurred on the grounds that the attorney owed no duty to the insurer. The demurrer was sustained, and the insurer appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court held that the insurer had a cause of action for any violations of duties imposed on the attorney by Civ. Code § 2860, the statute that governs the provision of an attorney for an insured in actions by third parties, when violation of those duties prevented the insurer from timely and completely defending the action brought against the insured. These statutory duties included the duties to consult with the insurer in a timely manner, to disclose all known and nonprivileged information to the insurer, and to cooperate in exchanging information with the counsel for the insurer (32 Cal. App. 4th 78, 83) . However, the court also held that the insurer had no cause of action for duties that fell outside those imposed by the statute. Thus, the attorney could not be held liable to the insurer for failing to investigate, prepare, assert, establish, or perform other similar functions regarding the defense (32 Cal. App. 4th 78, 83) .

In Schick v. Bach (1987) 193 Cal. App. 3d 1321, 238 Cal. Rptr. 902 , the plaintiff, a patient of a psychotherapist, brought an action for professional malpractice against the therapist's attorney, alleging that he had been injured because of the attorney's negligent advice to the therapist. The attorney had advised the therapist that he could legally execute a declaration, to be filed in a family law matter, that contained confidential information about the plaintiff-patient. In affirming summary judgment for the attorney, the court considered the interests of the patient to be adverse to those of the therapist in regard to the matters about which the attorney was consulted. The court held that an attorney has no duty to protect the interests of an adverse party or of a party with whom the client deals at arm's length. The public policy in maintaining and strengthening the attorney-client relationship outweighs any consequences to the public if liability is withheld (193 Cal. App. 3d 1321, 1329-1332) .

[c] No Duty to Will Beneficiaries to Determine Testamentary Capacity of Testator

In Boranian v. Clark (2004) 123 Cal. App. 4th 1012, 20 Cal. Rptr. 3d 405 , the plaintiffs were the adult son and daughter of a decedent who brought suit against their mother's attorney for executing a will and gift confirmation document while their mother was terminally ill, bedridden, and suffering intermittent periods of disorientation and confusion. The attorney had been hired by the decedent's live-in boyfriend at the request of the decedent to execute the documents in order to provide that a laundromat recently purchased by the decedent would be transferred to the boyfriend as a gift, with the new will providing that the remainder of the estate would go to the adult children. After the decedent's death, the plaintiffs challenged these documents in probate and reached a settlement with the boyfriend in which he would get $5,000 and they would receive the rest of the estate. They then sued the attorney for preparing the documents without taking sufficient steps to ascertain their mother's intent or testamentary capacity. After a trial court judgment for the plaintiffs, the court of appeal reversed, finding that the attorney owed no such duty to the beneficiaries. The court of appeal agreed with the reasoning of Moore v. Anderson Zeigler Disharoon Gallagher & Gray (2003) 109 Cal. App. 4th 1287, 135 Cal. Rptr. 2d 888 [see § 24A.21[3][g]], and concluded that an attorney, if persuaded of the client's testamentary capacity by his or her own observations and experience, has no further duty to beneficiaries to ascertain testamentary capacity (123 Cal. App. 4th 1012, 1019) . The court noted evidence showing that when the attorney arrived at the decedent's bedside, he observed the decedent talking to others, he asked her name, address, phone number, age, and other such questions, conversed with her about the will and her intentions, and was convinced that she was of sound mind on that particular morning (123 Cal. App. 4th 1012, 1019 n.1)

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted by defendant in support of a motion for summary judgment in a legal malpractice action, when the basis of the motion is that no duty to plaintiff existed, because defendant's duty of undivided loyalty to another existing client imposed a mandatory duty on defendant not to represent plaintiff, and negated the existence of any duty to plaintiff.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss evidence regarding the relationship of plaintiff to defendant, the duty of defendant to the first client, the irreducible and mandatory duty of defendant to withdraw from the representation of plaintiff, and the lack of substantial prejudice to the interests of the plaintiff arising out of the withdrawal of defendant from the representation of plaintiff [see Flatt v. Superior Court (1994) 9 Cal. 4th 275, 289-290, 36 Cal. Rptr. 2d 537, 885 P.2d 950] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Duty to Prospective Client if There Is Conflicting Duty to Existing Client

In Flatt v. Superior Court (1994) 9 Cal. 4th 275, 36 Cal. Rptr. 2d 537, 885 P.2d 950 , plaintiff and defendant attorney met and discussed plaintiff's potential cause of action against another attorney regarding a previous business transaction. During this meeting, plaintiff disclosed confidential information to defendant attorney concerning the conduct of the other attorney in structuring the previous business transaction, and the defendant attorney told plaintiff that he "definitely" had a claim for legal malpractice against the other attorney. In a letter dated a week after this meeting, defendant attorney returned plaintiff's documents and advised him that she could not represent him in an action against the other attorney because her firm had a conflict in that it was representing the other attorney in an unrelated matter. Almost two years later, plaintiff filed a legal malpractice action against both the other attorney for actions regarding the previous business transaction, and against the defendant attorney for failing to advise him of the statute of limitations governing his claims against the other attorney and to see other counsel in order to avoid having those claims time-barred. Defendant attorney moved for summary judgment on the ground that she owed no duty to advise plaintiff as alleged in the complaint because any such advice would have been contrary to the interests of the firm's existing client. The trial court declined to grant the summary judgment motion on the ground that there were triable issues of fact material to the issue of whether an attorney-client relationship had arisen between defendant attorney and plaintiff. The court of appeal affirmed the ruling of the trial court, confining it's reasoning to the question of whether plaintiff had become a client of defendant attorney and her firm, and concluding that a professional relationship could have been formed.

The Supreme Court reversed, remanding the cause with directions to order that defendant attorney's motion for summary judgment be granted. The Court stressed the duty of loyalty to the existing client, noting that this duty is so inviolate that an attorney cannot evade it by withdrawing from the relationship (9 Cal. 4th 275, 288) . Furthermore, the Court stated that the attorney's duty to protect a client is such that it is a violation of that duty for the attorney to assume a position adverse or antagonistic to the client without the client's free and intelligent consent given after full knowledge of all the facts and circumstances. Thus, by virtue of this rule, an attorney is precluded from assuming any relation that would prevent the attorney from devoting his or her entire energies to the client's interests. Since the duty of loyalty to a client forbids any act that would interfere with the dedication of the attorney's entire energies to the client's interests, the defendant attorney had no duty to give plaintiff advice that would have aided in advancing his contemplated lawsuit against defendant attorney's existing client (9 Cal. 4th 275, 289) . The Court acknowledged the possibility that in a different factual situation, such as one involving the lapse of considerable time and the expenditure of substantial resources before discovery of the conflicting dual representation, an attorney's mere withdrawal from the second representation may not be sufficient in itself to resolve all ethical responsibilities. However, since any advice to plaintiff would have run counter to the interests of an existing client and of the obligation of undivided loyalty to that client, defendant attorney had no duty to give plaintiff any advice (9 Cal. 4th 275, 290) .

This memorandum may be submitted by defendant in support of a motion for summary judgment in a legal malpractice action, on the basis that defendant had no duty to plaintiff to insure plaintiff's favorable reputation, or to present plaintiff in a favorable public light.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations which support the motion [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c], and which include a declaration showing that the acts or omissions alleged by plaintiff as defendant's negligence amount to a mere failure to present plaintiff in a favorable public light.

[b] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, this form may be used to support defendant's general demurrer to the complaint or a motion for judgment on the pleadings where it appears on the face of the complaint that the duty alleged is the duty to present the plaintiff in a favorable public light.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Duty to Present Client in Favorable Public Light

In Zalta v. Billips (1978) 81 Cal. App. 3d 183, 144 Cal. Rptr. 888 , defendant attorneys represented a doctor and a medical group in a medical malpractice action, in which there were many others being sued, who were represented by other counsel. A settlement was reached in open court, and under the settlement agreement terms, defendants' clients were not required to contribute to a settlement fund to be paid to the plaintiff. Because defendant attorneys did not announce this provision in open court, newspaper accounts included their client's names as among those paying a settlement in the action. The clients brought suit against the attorneys and others, alleging against the attorneys' professional negligence in failing to protect the clients from a public inference that they were guilty of medical malpractice.

The trial court dismissed the action against defendants, and plaintiff clients appealed. The court of appeal affirmed dismissal. It noted that no cases have held attorneys liable for injury resulting from public reaction to the legal proceedings involving their clients (81 Cal. App. 3d 183, 188) . The court held that an attorney does not have a duty to insure the client's self-esteem, or his or her public reputation, or actively to publicize the client's freedom from liability (81 Cal. App. 3d 183, 189, 190) .

This memorandum may be submitted by defendant in support of a motion for summary judgment in a legal malpractice action on the basis that defendant is not liable for failure to maintain or pursue further the client's action which defendant believed to be unjust, without merit, or to no avail.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations which support the motion [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c], and which include a declaration showing the reasonableness of defendant's conclusion that plaintiff's action was either without merit, or that to pursue the action would conflict with the administration of justice, or would be useless. Although the holdings do not express such requirement, the facts of the cases cited in support of this motion indicate that it is most likely necessary to make a showing that the attorney had a basis for his or her belief.

[b] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, this form may be used to support a defendant's general demurrer to the complaint, or a motion for judgment on the pleadings where it appears on the face of the complaint that the client's original action was either without merit, unjust, or could not have been won.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Duty to Pursue Meritless Action

In Kirsch v. Duryea (1978) 21 Cal. 3d 303, 146 Cal. Rptr. 218, 578 P.2d 935 , plaintiff was referred to defendant attorney to prosecute a medical malpractice action a few days before the statute of limitations would bar the suit. Defendant filed the complaint, and shortly thereafter, plaintiff moved out of state, so that all further communication between the two was by mail or telephone. After researching the case, but without opposing any of the doctors involved, defendant concluded that there was insufficient evidence to prosecute plaintiff's case. About four years after the complaint was filed, defendant informed plaintiff by letter that he would not try the case. He informed plaintiff that a substitution of attorneys form had to be filed within a certain time, mailed plaintiff the form, told plaintiff he had to act in propria persona until he hired a new attorney, offered cooperation and assistance to plaintiff's new attorney, and stressed that the case had to be brought to trial within the five-year period, giving plaintiff a specific deadline date. After receiving no response, defendant sent a second letter stating that if the substitution form was not returned by a certain date, defendant would move for withdrawal. Defendant received no response, and made a motion for withdrawal which was granted. Plaintiff consulted with various attorneys on receipt of defendant's first letter, and eventually employed two to handle his case. The suit was dismissed for failure to prosecute within five years. Plaintiff then sued defendant for legal malpractice. The trial court entered a judgment for plaintiff, following a jury trial, and defendant appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed, and held that the evidence was insufficient to support the judgment. The opinion noted that courts have granted attorneys some latitude in choosing alternative legal strategies (21 Cal. 3d 303, 309) . The Court then stated that such latitude should also exist when the attorney is confronted with conflicting ethical obligations (21 Cal. 3d 303, 309) . Such conflicts would frequently arise, since an attorney has the duty not only to protect his or her client, but also a duty to protect the interests of fellow bar members, the judiciary, and the administration of justice (21 Cal. 3d 303, 309) . An attorney's duty to prosecute a client's case does not include a duty to maintain an action he or she believes is unjust, or lacking merit (21 Cal. 3d 303, 309-310) . When the defendant must choose between advancing the client's case, and a duty to the administration of justice to refuse to prosecute a meritless action, a choice to honor the public duty does not constitute malpractice unless the choice was so clearly erroneous that no prudent attorney would have made it (21 Cal. 3d 303, 309) . The Supreme Court held that in this particular case, the attorney had made a reasonable decision, and had acted responsibly in delaying his withdrawal, and in notifying the client regarding substitution requirements and the need for quick action in the case (21 Cal. 3d 303, 310, 311) .

In Hays v. Ewing (1886) 70 Cal. 127, 11 P. 602 , a client brought a malpractice action against the attorney for mishandling the client's suit, which had been barred by the statute of limitations. The client asserted that the attorney should have pled the defendants' absence during the statutory period, and that the attorney should have appealed the judgment. The attorney demurred to the complaint generally, and on the specific grounds that the malpractice action was barred by the statute of limitations. The trial court sustained the demurrer, and entered judgment for defendant. On plaintiff's appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. It held that the statute of limitations barred any action regarding the attorney's conduct prior to judgment in the client's previous suit (70 Cal. 127, 128) . With regard to the allegation that defendant was negligent in failing to appeal the case, the Court held that the defendant had no duty to do so when the appeal would have been to no avail (70 Cal. 127, 128) .

In Floro v. Lawton (1960) 187 Cal. App. 2d 657, 10 Cal. Rptr. 98 , defendants in a legal malpractice action were two attorneys who had prosecuted a client's suit for slander, false arrest, and malicious prosecution. After obtaining permission from the client to use his discretion in the matter, one attorney decided at trial not to try and prove the false arrest cause of action, but to merge it with the malicious prosecution action. The trial court judge made certain findings in support of a judgment against plaintiff, and mailed a letter regarding the findings to the attorneys. One defendant answered the letter and pointed out the judge's error in finding against the plaintiff on the malicious prosecution issue, including authority for his point. The judge had also ordered that the defendant attorney prepare findings of fact and conclusions of law in accordance with the findings in the judge's letter, however. The defendant attorney did so, and judgment was entered against plaintiff. Subsequently, defendants consulted with plaintiff regarding an appeal, and plaintiff stated that he did not want an appeal, then negotiated his own settlement, and entered satisfaction of judgment without consulting defendants.

In the malpractice action, plaintiff alleged that the attorneys had breached their contract with plaintiff, and that they were negligent in abandoning a false imprisonment cause of action. The trial court entered a judgment of nonsuit in favor of defendants, and plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal affirmed, and held that there was no abandonment of the action when the acting attorney believed that there was no merit to an action for false arrest or false imprisonment, and in accordance with his legal research on the matter, merged the false arrest action into a related action which contained all the allegations necessary to prove either false arrest or false imprisonment (187 Cal. App. 2d 657, 672) . In addition, the court stated that an attorney is not negligent when after the judge releases initial findings, and the attorney informs the judge that he or she disagrees, supporting his or her position with legal authority, the attorney then yields to the judge's final decision against the attorney (187 Cal. App. 2d 657, 671) . In addition, once judgment is entered against the client, an attorney has no obligation to appeal the case, even if an appeal would be meritorious, without the consent of the client (187 Cal. App. 2d 657, 672) . The court concluded that under the facts of the case, there was no evidence to show that the defendants had been negligent in failing to pursue a particular cause of action they had initiated on behalf of their client (187 Cal. App. 2d 657, 676) .

[a] No Duty to Pursue Meritless Action

In Redante v. Yockelson (2003) 112 Cal. App. 4th 1351, 6 Cal. Rptr. 3d 10 , a criminal defendant who was convicted of numerous sex crimes with minors brought a malpractice action against his defense attorney for failing to file a timely habeas petition and failing to raise all arguable issues on appeal. The criminal defendant's primary arguments stemmed from his belief that because the sex acts were consensual, his attorney should have argued that his conduct was not illegal in most countries, given that the age of consent was lower in most countries, and that his conviction was thus a "travesty of justice." The court of appeal held that the attorney was entitled to summary judgment for three reasons.

First, a criminal defense attorney could not be liable for choosing not to raise issues on appeal that the attorney reasonably believed had no potential for success (112 Cal. App. 4th 1351, 1357) . Second, a criminal defendant has no right to effective assistance of counsel in collateral proceedings such as a habeas corpus proceeding. Third, a criminal defendant must establish actual innocence to pursue a malpractice action against defense counsel (112 Cal. App. 4th 1351, 1357) .

SUMMARY JUDGMENT SHOULD BE GRANTED IN FAVOR OF DEFENDANT BECAUSE DEFENDANT IS NOT LIABLE TO PLAINTIFF FOR A MISTAKE ON A DOUBTFUL OR DEBATABLE POINT OF LAW.

A. Summary Judgment. [See § 24A.20, Paragraph A.]

B. No Liability for Mistake on Doubtful Area of Law. An attorney's duty to his or her client, or to an intended beneficiary is limited to a use of the skill, prudence, and diligence of a lawyer of ordinary skill and capacity, and liability will not be imposed for mistakes which involve areas of law debatable or doubtful to reasonable attorneys (Lucas v. Hamm (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 583, 591, 15 Cal. Rptr. 821, 364 P.2d 685 ; Sprague v. Morgan (1960) 185 Cal. App. 2d 519, 523, 8 Cal. Rptr. 347). This rule applies so long as the mistake is based on the exercise of an informed judgment (Davis v. Damrell (1981) 119 Cal. App. 3d 883, 887, 174 Cal. Rptr. 257).

[Optional] C. CAUTION:

In using this form, counsel should be aware of Smith v. Lewis (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 349, 118 Cal. Rptr. 621, 530 P.2d 589 , a malpractice case in which the Supreme Court rejected defendant's argument that the law regarding the characterization of retirement benefits was clearly debatable, and that he was therefore shielded from liability for any mistakes pertaining to it. The Court favored a characterization of liability for the attorney's mistake on a debatable issue as a question of fact, rather than one of law [Smith v. Lewis (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 349, 358-360, 118 Cal. Rptr. 621, 530 P.2d 589] . The Court took a limited view of the rule in Lucas v. Hamm (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 583, 15 Cal. Rptr. 821, 364 P.2d 685 [see § 24A.25[3][a]]. In Smith, the Court stated that even in an unsettled area of law, an attorney has the duty to undertake reasonable research in an effort to make an educated decision in the matter [Smith v. Lewis (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 349, 359, 118 Cal. Rptr. 621, 530 P.2d 589] . It added that an attorney may be negligent in choosing the trial tactic of refraining from pursuing a debatable point, when the decision is based on ignorance [Smith v. Lewis (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 349, 359, 118 Cal. Rptr. 621, 530 P.2d 589] . The Court went on to distinguish the facts of the case before it from the facts in Lucas, and stated that the Lucas rule applied to so esoteric an issue (the Rule Against Perpetuities) that the defendant could not reasonably have been expected to be aware of it or its probable resolution [Smith v. Lewis (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 349, 359, 118 Cal. Rptr. 621, 530 P.2d 589] .

Accordingly, whether or not courts will consider a defendant's mistake on a debatable legal issue as a question of law, and therefore as a basis for summary judgment, seems questionable. However, Lucas has not been overruled, and according to the court of appeal in Wright v. Williams (1975) 47 Cal. App. 3d 802, 121 Cal. Rptr. 194 , there are cases on which reasonable minds could not differ regarding whether an attorney's mistake satisfies his or her duty of care, and such cases would properly be resolved as a matter of law [Wright v. Williams (1975) 47 Cal. App. 3d 802, 809, 121 Cal. Rptr. 194] . One such case, decided after Smith, is Davis v. Damrell (1981) 119 Cal. App. 3d 883, 174 Cal. Rptr. 257 , in which a court of appeal held that as a matter of law an attorney was not liable for a mistake, when he had researched the unsettled issue of military pensions as community property, and had made an informed decision that later turned out to be wrong [Davis v. Damrell (1981) 119 Cal. App. 3d 883, 888-889, 174 Cal. Rptr. 257] . Aside from Lucas and Davis, however, the courts seem to prefer treating liability for mistake as a question of fact. The Wright court, for example, expresses some doubt that even the Lucas case presents a problem esoteric enough, in view of the current state of the art, to absolve mistakes on it as a matter of law [see Wright v. Williams (1975) 47 Cal. App. 3d 802, 809 n.2, 121 Cal. Rptr. 194] . Therefore, it appears that unless counsel can clearly demonstrate that the attorney's mistake related to an issue so esoteric that reasonable minds could not differ in refusing to impose liability, it is possible that the defendant's liability for mistake would not be considered a proper basis for a summary judgment motion.

This memorandum may be submitted by defendant in support of a motion for summary judgment in a legal malpractice action on the basis that defendant is not liable as a matter of law since his or her alleged mistake involved a clearly debatable or doubtful point of law.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations which support the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c], and which include a declaration establishing that the attorney's alleged mistake related to an area of law which is clearly doubtful or debatable.

[b] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, this form may be used to support defendant's general demurrer to the complaint, or a motion for judgment on the pleadings where it appears on the face of the complaint that defendant's mistake related to a doubtful or debatable point of law.

[c] Related Memoranda

For memoranda relating to summary judgments generally, see Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

[d] Opposing Memoranda

The points in §§ 24A.45 -24A.47 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a motion for summary judgment supported by this memorandum.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Liability for Mistake on Doubtful Area of Law

In Lucas v. Hamm (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 583, 15 Cal. Rptr. 821, 364 P.2d 685 , beneficiaries under a will brought a legal malpractice action against the testator's attorney. The complaint alleged that defendant had negligently drafted the will, by including a clause which, due to the Rule Against Perpetuities, invalidated the residual estate in trust which was intended to go to plaintiffs. On demurrer by defendant, the trial court dismissed the case, and plaintiffs appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed the dismissal. It held first that an attorney may be liable for negligence to the intended beneficiaries of his or her client's will (56 Cal. 2d 583, 591) . The Court went on to say that an attorney's liability for negligence is based on his or her duty to use such skill, prudence, and diligence as lawyers of ordinary skill and capacity commonly possess and exercise. This standard of care does not impose a duty on the attorney to insure that his or her services are devoid of mistakes. An attorney will not be liable for negligence in making a mistake as to a question of law on which well-informed lawyers may have reasonable doubt (56 Cal. 2d 583, 591) . In this case, because the Rule Against Perpetuities is so complex and confusing, the Court held that an error relating to it is not a violation of an attorney's required standard of care (56 Cal. 2d 583, 593) .

In Davis v. Damrell (1981) 119 Cal. App. 3d 883, 174 Cal. Rptr. 257 , defendant was an attorney who had represented the plaintiff in a dissolution proceeding. Plaintiff had questioned defendant about community property rights to her husband's vested military pension benefits, and defendant had concluded that she had no claim to such benefits. Several years later, a California Supreme Court decision held that such benefits were subject to community property division. Plaintiff brought a legal malpractice action against defendant. The trial court granted summary judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. It held that in view of Smith v. Lewis (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 349, 118 Cal. Rptr. 621, 530 P.2d 589 , which imposed on attorneys a duty to research unsettled areas of law, an attorney is not liable for mistake as a matter of law if (1) the legal issue on which he or she was mistaken was unsettled at the time he or she advised the client, and (2) the attorney's legal advice was based on the exercise of an informed judgment (119 Cal. App. 3d 883, 887) . In this case, because the question of the community nature of pension benefits was clearly unsettled at the time defendant advised the plaintiff, and because defendant had demonstrated experience and familiarity with the area of community property law as of that time, summary judgment had been properly granted in his favor (119 Cal. App. 3d 883, 888-889) .

Sprague v. Morgan (1960) 185 Cal. App. 2d 519, 8 Cal. Rptr. 347 , involved a client who brought suit against her attorney for allegedly negligently handling her worker's compensation claim. Following an award to her of a disability payment rating, the client consulted defendant regarding her worsened condition, and requested that defendant obtain an order for further medical treatment from the Industrial Accident Commission. The attorney petitioned for the order, but did not request an increase in plaintiff's disability rating. Defendant believed that the law required him to obtain the order for further treatment prior to petitioning for a rating increase, and that filing a petition for the order would toll the five-year limitation that existed for obtaining disability rating. The trial court entered judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. It held that the degree of care and skill that an attorney owes his or her client is limited to that of an attorney of ordinary skill and capacity, and does not impose liability for lack of knowledge as to the true state of the law on a debatable legal issue (185 Cal. App. 2d 519, 523) . In this case, the court held that the issue involved was clearly debatable at the time of defendant's conduct, and therefore no liability could be imposed (185 Cal. App. 2d 519, 523) .

[b] No Duty to Advise Client of Unsettled Nature of Legal Issue

Davis v. Damrell (1981) 119 Cal. App. 3d 883, 174 Cal. Rptr. 257 , is discussed in § 24A.25[3][a]. The court of appeal held that an attorney is not liable for a mistaken interpretation of an unsettled legal issue, so long as the mistake was based on the exercise of an informed judgment (119 Cal. App. 3d 883, 887) . The court held further that to require the attorney to inform the client as to possible alternative interpretations of the unsettled issue would render the attorney's exercise of professional judgment meaningless. The court stated that as a matter of policy, an attorney owes no duty to a client to give advice regarding the unsettled nature of relevant legal principles (119 Cal. App. 3d 883, 889) .

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of a motion for summary judgment by a defendant attorney in an action for legal malpractice, on the basis that defendant's negligence did not cause injury to plaintiff.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should show that the issue of causation may be decided as a matter of law because there is no room for a reasonable difference of opinion under undisputed facts.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Causation Not Established

In Kurinij v. Hanna & Morton (1997) 55 Cal. App. 4th 853, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 324 , plaintiff brought a legal malpractice action based on an allegation that defendant attorneys negligently failed to appeal a jury verdict which had found plaintiff liable for $1.00 in damages in an underlying fraud action. Although they did not concede negligence, defendant attorneys contended that plaintiffs could not establish that their failure to appeal was the cause of damage. Defendant attorneys argued that there was no certainty that the verdict would have been reversed even if it had been appealed. The trial court agreed with defendants, and entered summary judgment.

Plaintiffs argued that the $1.00 award was a nominal award; that the jury had found that there were no actual damages. Plaintiffs then argued that the judgment was reversible because without actual damages there is no fraud. However, the court of appeal concluded that the jury had found actual damages in support of the fraud cause of action, so that plaintiff's argument lacked its necessary factual basis. The court affirmed the summary judgment for defendant attorneys (55 Cal. App. 4th 853, 866) .

[b] "But For" Test of Causation Applicable to Actions for Transactional Malpractice

In Viner v. Sweet (2003) 30 Cal. 4th 1232, 135 Cal. Rptr. 2d 629, 70 P.3d 1046 , the plaintiffs were the founders of a successful company that made primarily audio books. About a decade after the company was formed, the company made its initial public stock offering, and the plaintiffs entered into long-term employment contracts with their company. Within a few years, however, the plaintiffs entered into negotiations with another party for the purchase of the plaintiffs' stock in the company and the termination of their employment. The defendant, an attorney, and his law firm represented the plaintiffs in the negotiations leading up to and the drafting of the securities purchasing agreement and employment termination agreement, which the plaintiffs eventually signed. However, disagreements between the parties to the agreements as to their meaning led to several arbitration proceedings, which the plaintiffs lost. The plaintiffs then brought a malpractice action against the defendant and his law firm, alleging various errors in negotiating and drafting the agreements. The jury found for the plaintiffs and awarded damages. The court of appeal reduced the amount of damages, but otherwise affirmed. The court noted that the plaintiffs did not attempt to prove that in the absence of the attorney's negligence, the other party would have given the plaintiffs better terms on the contracts. However, the court held that a plaintiff alleging malpractice in a business transaction is not required to prove that but for the negligence, the harm would not have occurred. The defendants appealed, and the California Supreme Court granted review limited to that narrow issue.

The Supreme Court reversed. The Court held that plaintiffs in a transactional malpractice case are required to prove that but for the alleged negligence, the plaintiffs would have obtained a more favorable result. The Court noted that the rule of causation with respect to negligence cases generally is that the plaintiff must prove causation with evidence that but for the negligence, the harm would not have occurred, with one exception--if the negligence was a concurrent independent cause of the harm. The case before the court did not involve the concurrent independent cause exception, so the issue was whether there was any reason to depart from the traditional "but for" test of causation in the context of transactional malpractice cases. The Court concluded that there was not (30 Cal. 4th 1232, 1240-1242) . The Court did note, however, that a plaintiff may use circumstantial evidence to satisfy the burden and need not extract an express concession from the other parties to the transaction that they would have accepted other or additional terms if not for the malpractice. The Court also pointed out that absolute certainty of proof is not required, but only evidence allowing a factfinder to conclude that it is more likely than not that the malpractice was an actual cause of the plaintiff's harm (30 Cal. 4th 1232, 1242-1243) .

[a] Causation Not Established

In New Plumbing Contractors, Inc. v. Edwards, Sooy & Byron (2002) 99 Cal. App. 4th 799, 121 Cal. Rptr. 2d 472 , the plaintiff was a plumbing contractor with insurance coverage that included a consent clause giving the insurer the right to investigate and settle any claim or suit brought against the plaintiff. The insurer hired a law firm, to defend the plaintiff in one case, which the insurer eventually settled within its policy limits on the law firm's recommendation. The plaintiff, who was apparently not notified of the settlement negotiations, then sued the law firm for negligence and breach of fiduciary duty, arguing that the insurer failed to properly defend the action and as a result the settlement subjected the plaintiff to higher premiums, lower coverage, and higher deductibles. The trial court granted summary judgment for the law firm, and the court of appeal affirmed. The court held that because the insurer had the contractual right to settle the case as the insurer saw fit, without consulting the insured and regardless of whether the claim was defensible, the law firm's conduct in recommending the settlement to the insurer was not a cause of any harm that the contractor may have suffered. Because causation could not be established, summary judgment for the law firm was appropriate (99 Cal. App. 4th 799, 801-802) .

[b] "But For" Test of Causation Applicable to Actions for Transactional Malpractice

The factual background of Viner v. Sweet (2004) 117 Cal. App. 4th 1218, 12 Cal. Rptr. 3d 533 is discussed in § 24A.26[3][b]. On remand from the California Supreme Court, the court of appeal held that as to five of the plaintiffs' seven claims, the plaintiffs had presented no substantial evidence that they would have reached a more favorable result if their attorneys had not been negligent when drafting and negotiating the agreement to sell the plaintiffs' ownership interest in their former company. Therefore, the trial court erred in not granting judgment notwithstanding the verdict as to those five claims. At trial, the uncontradicted testimony of the principal of the purchasing company showed that certain provisions of the agreement as executed, including a nonsolicitation clause in the employment termination agreement and the value of offered stock provisions, were essential elements of any agreement and would not have been negotiable even in the absence of any negligence by the plaintiffs' attorneys (117 Cal. App. 4th 1218, 1224-1225) . In addition, although the plaintiffs presented evidence that they would have walked away from the transaction if they had known of the nonsolicitation clause, they failed to present any evidence that they would have been better off economically by walking away than they were under the agreement as executed (117 Cal. App. 4th 1218, 1227) . The court of appeal also held that even though the jury was free to disbelieve the testimony of the buying company's principal that the company would not have agreed to more favorable terms for the plaintiffs on any of the five disputed claims, that disbelief was not evidence that a more favorable result would have been obtained. The plaintiffs still had the burden of showing with actual evidence that a more favorable result was likely without the negligence, a burden that the plaintiffs never attempted to meet as to the five disputed claims (117 Cal. App. 4th 1218, 1229-1231) .

This form may be submitted by defendant in support of a motion for summary judgment in a legal malpractice action, on the basis that plaintiff suffered no actual harm as a result of defendant's conduct.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations which support the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c], and which include a showing that plaintiff suffered no actual loss or injury as a result of defendant's conduct.

[b] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, this form may be used to support a general demurrer to a complaint for legal malpractice, or a motion for judgment on the pleadings where it appears on the face of the complaint that plaintiff suffered no actual loss or injury as a result of defendant's conduct.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Judgment for Defendant Proper When No Harm to Plaintiff

Alhino v. Starr (1980) 112 Cal. App. 3d 158, 169 Cal. Rptr. 136 , involved two actions consolidated for jury trial. Plaintiff, as executor of her husband's will and as an individual, brought an action against real estate brokers for fraudulent misrepresentation in sales of real estate by plaintiff and her husband to an insolvent buyer. Plaintiff, in the same dual capacity, also brought a malpractice action against her previous attorneys for their alleged negligence in consultations regarding the sale and the handling of plaintiff's case against the buyer. In the malpractice action, the trial court entered judgment on a directed verdict in favor of defendants, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. It held that plaintiff had failed to show any actual harm resulting from defendants' conduct (112 Cal. App. 3d 158, 176 176) . When the buyer defaulted on payments, defendants filed a suit against him and against the real estate brokers on plaintiff's behalf, alleging several causes of action. Defendants later dismissed the action in exchange for a reformed promissory note. Several months later the buyer died, and defendants filed a claim on his estate in plaintiff's behalf. The claim was approved, but the estate was declared insolvent. The court noted that initially the acting attorney had merely advised plaintiff as to the buyer's financial status in a limited fashion, and had suggested that for a definitive determination, further investigation would be necessary. Plaintiff's husband had declined to authorize such investigation. The record also indicated that defendants had investigated alternative settlement arrangements, of which plaintiff had disapproved. The court concluded that since plaintiff had made no showing of actual harm resulting from defendants' conduct, the judgment in favor of defendants must be affirmed. The court stated that when a defendant's conduct, even if negligent, does not cause actual damage, there is no cause of action against him or her. Nominal damages, speculative harm, or threat of future harm will not establish injury sufficient to sustain plaintiff's cause of action (112 Cal. App. 3d 158, 176) .

In Kirtland & Packard v. Superior Court (1976) 59 Cal. App. 3d 140, 131 Cal. Rptr. 418 , a physician, who along with another had been sued for medical malpractice, brought a legal malpractice action against the attorneys his insurance company had hired to represent him. The medical malpractice action resulted partly in a settlement, and partly in a judgment against both physicians. Payments were made by the insurance company; nothing was paid by the plaintiff in this action. Among the damages resulting from legal malpractice, plaintiff alleged the settlement and judgment against him. The defendant attorneys filed two motions for summary adjudication of the issue, contending that plaintiff could not recover either of the alleged amounts, since he had not suffered any actual losses. The trial court denied both motions, and the attorneys petitioned the court of appeal for a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal issued the writ. It held that until the client suffers appreciable harm as a result of the attorney's negligence, there is no cause of action for malpractice (59 Cal. App. 3d 140, 144) . The court also rejected plaintiff's application of the collateral source rule, which states that when an injured person receives compensation from a source independent of the tortfeasor, the tortfeasor is still liable for the damages. The collateral source rule was held not to apply, since the insurance company, which had hired defendant attorneys, was not independent of them (59 Cal. App. 3d 140, 145) . The court expressly refused to adjudicate certain items of damages, such as loss of reputation, higher insurance rates, or future judgments against plaintiff based on the initial suit, but concluded that with regard to the award of judgment against him, since the plaintiff had not yet suffered any actual injury, the trial court had abused its discretion in denying defendants' motions for summary adjudication (59 Cal. App. 3d 140, 143, 144, 146) . A writ of mandate was issued, compelling the trial court to order that plaintiff could not recover that item of alleged damages as a matter of law (59 Cal. App. 3d 140, 147) .

[b] Legal Fees Incurred Trying to Overturn Earlier Settlement or Judgment Not Recoverable as Damages

In Orrick Herrington & Sutcliffe v. Superior Court (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 1052, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 658 , the plaintiff brought a malpractice action against his former attorneys for alleged negligence in drafting a marital settlement agreement that the plaintiff claimed could expose him to future legal liabilities. The defendants moved for summary adjudication or summary judgment, arguing that the plaintiff could not prove actual damages. Based on discovery responses, the plaintiff could not show either that absent the alleged errors, the plaintiff's ex-wife would have accepted a lesser settlement, or that any legal claims had been filed against him because of the alleged settlement deficiencies. However, the plaintiff argued that he suffered recoverable damages in the form of the fees that he paid his former attorneys for their inadequate representation, as well as the hundreds of thousands of dollars in fees that the plaintiff paid to other attorneys in his unsuccessful attempt to overturn the settlement agreement. The trial court denied the motions, finding triable issues of fact as to damages. The defendants filed a petition for writ of mandate or prohibition.

The court of appeal issued the writ. The court rejected the plaintiff's claimed damages under the circumstances of the case. The court first recognized the established rule that a plaintiff alleging legal malpractice in the prosecution or defense of a legal claim must prove that but for the attorney's negligence, a better result would have been obtained in the underlying action. However, the court specifically rejected the notion that a malpractice plaintiff dissatisfied by the quality of an attorney's services can generate recoverable tort damages merely by hiring new attorneys and incurring legal fees in attempting to challenge or overturn an earlier settlement or judgment. Similarly, the court found absurd the notion that a malpractice plaintiff can prove recoverable tort damages merely by seeking to recover the fees paid to the allegedly negligent attorney. According to the court, a contrary conclusion on either point would obviate the need to prove that in the absence of the attorney's negligence, the plaintiff would have achieved a better result (107 Cal. App. 4th 1052, 1058) . In this particular case, no claims had been made against the plaintiff because of the settlement, and therefore there was no compelling reason for him to spend hundreds of thousands of dollars attempting to overturn it, although the court recognized that had a claim actually been filed against him, the plaintiff might be able to recover as tort damages the fees expended in defending the claim (107 Cal. App. 4th 1052, 1060) . As for the fees paid to the attorneys for their allegedly deficient representation, these appeared to the court to be contract, rather than tort, damages, and therefore the plaintiff's only remedy was to try and prove a claim for breach of contract (107 Cal. App. 4th 1052, 1060-1061) .

Orrick Herrington & Sutcliffe v. Superior Court (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 1052, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 658 is discussed in § 24A.27[3][b].

[d] No Provable Damages When Statute of Limitations in Underlying Suit Had Expired Before Client Hired Attorney

In Slovensky v. Friedman 142 Cal. App. 4th 1518, 49 Cal. Rptr. 3d 60 , plaintiff hired defendant attorneys to file a lawsuit against her former apartment complex based on injuries suffered due to toxic mold exposure while she was living in the complex. Although plaintiff was on actual or constructive notice of her cause of action for toxic mold exposure sometime in 1997 or 1998, plaintiff did not consult with the attorneys about a possible lawsuit until March 2000. Although it appeared the one-year statute of limitations had expired on her claim before she first consulted the attorneys, the defendants in the underlying suit nonetheless agreed to a settlement of claims brought by dozens of plaintiffs who were suing for the same mold exposure. After settling, plaintiff filed an action for malpractice and breach of fiduciary duty against her attorneys for not adequately handling her claim and for coercing her into accepting a settlement that plaintiff considered to be inadequate. The trial court granted defendants' motion for summary judgment on the grounds that the statute of limitations on her toxic mold claims had expired before she first consulted defendants, and as such, had her case gone to trial she would not have achieved a better result than she actually achieved. Thus, she could not prove that defendants' alleged misconduct caused her any harm. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court agreed that plaintiff was on actual or constructive notice of her claim for toxic mold exposure well before the spring of 1999, but did not consult with defendants until March 2000. Given the one-year limitations period on that claim, plaintiff was entitled to no recovery. Thus, the settlement defendants obtained for her was a windfall and defendants' alleged wrongdoing leading to her acceptance of the settlement caused her no damage (142 Cal. App. 4th 1518, 1527-1528) . To the extent that plaintiff's claim for breach of fiduciary duty alleged the same damages, that claim failed for the same reason (142 Cal. App. 4th 1518, 1533) .

In Lazy Acres Market, Inc. v. Tseng (2007) 152 Cal. App. 4th 1431, 62 Cal. Rptr. 3d 378 , a market hired a security firm to catch shoplifters and this security firm had their own insurer. An employee of the firm apprehended an alleged shoplifter, who subsequently filed suit against the market, the security firm, and the firm's employee. The security firm's insurer agreed to defend and indemnify the market without asserting a reservation of rights and provided an attorney to handle the defense for all of the defendants. The market eventually determined that the attorney hired by the insurer had an actual conflict of interest in representing both the market and the security firm and decided to provide its own attorney. However, the insurer did not respond to the market's requests for payment of its fees and costs. The insurer subsequently settled the underlying lawsuit at no cost to the market. The market then sued the insurer's attorney for malpractice and breach of fiduciary duty for failing to advise the market of the conflict of interest earlier in the proceedings, asserting its defense fees and costs incurred in the underlying action as damages. The court of appeal affirmed a demurrer in favor of the attorney. The court held that even assuming that the attorney breached a duty in failing to disclose any actual or potential conflict of interest, the market had alleged no damages caused by any such breach. The complaint alleged that the insurer, not the attorney, had the duty to pay the fees and costs incurred in defending the underlying action. Plaintiff alleged no facts showing that anything the attorney did influenced the insurer's decision not to pay plaintiff's costs and fees. Plaintiff had paid nothing in settlement of the underlying claim. The court noted that it would be pure speculation to suggest that the outcome would have been any different had the attorney declared a conflict at the beginning of the case (152 Cal. App. 4th 1431, 1436) .

In Barnard v. Langer (2003) 109 Cal. App. 4th 1453, 1 Cal. Rptr. 3d 175 , the plaintiffs brought a malpractice action against their former attorneys for alleged misconduct that caused them to settle their underlying inverse condemnation action against the City of Los Angeles for less than it was worth. The trial court granted nonsuit for the defendants on the grounds that the plaintiffs' claim for damages was too speculative. The court of appeal affirmed and imposed $20,000 in sanctions against the plaintiffs for pursuing a frivolous appeal. The court held that even assuming negligence on the part of the defendants, the plaintiffs failed to prove that but for that negligence, the plaintiffs would have settled the underlying action for more or recovered more at trial. It was insufficient for the plaintiffs merely to claim as they did that it was possible to obtain a better settlement or judgment at trial. Because none of the evidence offered by the plaintiffs did any more than suggest speculative harm, nonsuit was proper (109 Cal. App. 4th 1453, 1461-1463) .

In Jalali v. Root (2003) 109 Cal. App. 4th 1768, 1 Cal. Rptr. 3d 689 , the court of appeal held that a malpractice plaintiff had failed to prove that her attorney caused her any damages in an underlying sexual harassment action when she accepted a settlement offer of $2.75 million based on her attorney's incorrect advice that she would not be liable for taxes on the share of the settlement allocated to his fees. In the malpractice action, the plaintiff did not try to prove that she would have received a better monetary outcome if she had rejected the settlement offer, and in fact, the evidence suggested that she probably received the best possible amount from her case by taking the settlement. However, she argued that if she had known her true tax liability on the settlement, she would have rejected the settlement and gone to trial to receive the emotional satisfaction of airing the defendant's alleged wrongful conduct publicly in court. The court of appeal, in reversing a trial court judgment for the plaintiff, held that the plaintiff failed to prove that the erroneous tax advice had caused her any damages (109 Cal. App. 4th 1768, 1777-1779) .

In Marshak v. Ballesteros (1999) 72 Cal. App. 4th 1514, 86 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1 , the plaintiff sued the attorney who had represented him in his marital dissolution action, alleging that the attorney had negligently failed to object to the alleged undervaluation of the marital residence, which was awarded to the plaintiff's ex-wife, and to the alleged overvaluation of the accounts receivable from the plaintiff's medical practice, which were charged to the plaintiff. The defendant successfully moved for summary judgment on the grounds that the plaintiff could not establish that he suffered any damages as a result of the alleged negligence. The court of appeal affirmed. The court of appeal noted that the plaintiff had offered no evidence to establish the value of his underlying settlement case, other than his own declaration stating that the family residence was worth more than the valuation suggested by the ex-wife and used in the settlement and stating that the accounts receivable were worth less than the settlement valuation. The court also noted that the plaintiff offered no evidence to prove that his ex-wife would have settled for less than she did or that the judge would have entered a more favorable judgment. Absent competent evidence to prove these elements of damages, the plaintiff could not show with sufficient certainty that he suffered harm from the alleged malpractice, and summary judgment was proper (72 Cal. App. 4th 1514, 1519) .

In Loube v. Loube (1998) 64 Cal. App. 4th 421, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 906 , the malpractice plaintiffs received $25,000 in compensatory damages and $200,000 in punitive damages following a default judgment and prove-up hearing in the underlying action, although their original award of compensatory damages had been reduced from $248,102 due to their attorneys' negligent failure to specify an amount of damages in the complaint. At trial in the malpractice action, the plaintiffs argued that their attorneys' negligence cost them the additional amount of compensatory damages originally awarded. However, the trial court in the malpractice action required a "trial within a trial" in order to ascertain the value of the underlying action, and the proof showed that had the underlying action gone to trial, the plaintiffs would have only been able to prove compensatory damages of $12,850 and no punitive damages. The trial court granted the defendants' motion for judgment on the grounds that plaintiffs had proven no damages. The court of appeals agreed that plaintiffs had not been damaged by their attorneys' negligence, since plaintiffs in the underlying action received an award vastly greater than the damages they actually sustained. The court of appeal also noted that it was pure speculation that, but for the negligent failure to specify in the complaint the amount of damages sought, plaintiffs would have still received a default judgment awarding compensatory damages of $248,102 to each (64 Cal. App. 4th 421, 425-427) .

In Sisco v. Cosgrove, Michelizzi, Schwabacher, Ward & Bianchi (1996) 51 Cal. App. 4th 1302, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 647 , plaintiff, the mother of a boy who had been entitled to proceeds from a structured settlement, brought an action against the boy's attorneys for a failure to name her as his sole beneficiary in the settlement documents. Plaintiff claimed that the attorneys had told her that she was the sole beneficiary of the settlement funds until the boy reached the age of 18. However, the settlement agreement provided that any payments to be made after the boy's death were to be paid to his estate, and after his death his father claimed one-half of the settlement funds. The court of appeal disagreed with the mother's contention that she could have been designated as beneficiary, stating that a minor lacks legal capacity to designate a beneficiary, and thus can neither disinherit a parent nor contract around this prohibition by assigning a future interest to just one parent. Stating that it is axiomatic that there is no cause of action for legal malpractice without damages proximately caused by the malpractice, the court affirmed a trial court judgment dismissing the action (51 Cal. App. 4th 1302, 1305) .

In In re Easterbrook (1988) 200 Cal. App. 3d 1541, 244 Cal. Rptr. 652 , the court of appeal struck a criminal defendant's complaint against his attorney for malpractice. This complaint sought $500,000 in damages, and was filed during the attorney's representation of the client in a criminal matter. The court noted that the complaint was devoid of any showing of actual harm incurred by the client, and merely recited instances of the attorney's allegedly negligent conduct in handling his case. Damages may not be based on sheer speculation and surmise, and the mere possibility or even probability that damage will result from wrongful conduct does not render it actionable. The court noted that there was as yet no verdict in the criminal case, and that the client, at most, suffered only speculative harm (200 Cal. App. 3d 1541, 1544) .

Ventura County Humane Soc'y v. Holloway (1974) 40 Cal. App. 3d 897, 115 Cal. Rptr. 464 , is discussed in § 24A.20[3][b]. The plaintiffs claimed to be intended beneficiaries of a will, and brought a malpractice action against the attorney who drafted the will for negligently failing to clarify the identity of the beneficiary. The trial court dismissed the action following the sustaining of a demurrer. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment of dismissal, and held that the required elements of a cause of action for professional negligence are duty, breach, proximate cause, and actual loss or damage. The absence of any of these elements is fatal to plaintiff's case (40 Cal. App. 3d 897, 902) . The court discussed the issue of duty, and went on to discuss actual damage. It held that because plaintiffs did not allege that the testator intended to leave part of his estate to plaintiffs specifically, it could not be determined that plaintiffs had suffered any harm (40 Cal. App. 3d 897, 906-907) . The court added that damages may not be based on speculation, or the possibility or probability that they will result from defendant's negligence. Unless there is certainty that actual damage to plaintiff exists, the plaintiff has no action (40 Cal. App. 3d 897, 907) .

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted by defendant in support of a motion for summary judgment in a legal malpractice action, when the basis of the motion is that plaintiff did not have a duty to obtain informed written consent of partners before the plaintiff could represent the partnership for the purpose of documenting an agreement between the partners.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss evidence of a prior agreement between the partners regarding the matter that the plaintiff agreed to document, and should argue that the matter which was documented as part of the representation of the partnership did not constitute a concurrent representation adverse to an individual partner who was already an existing client [see Buehler v. Sbardellati (1995) 34 Cal. App. 4th 1527, 1539, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 104] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Representation of Partnership Regarding Agreement Between Partners

In Buehler v. Sbardellati (1995) 34 Cal. App. 4th 1527, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 104 , defendant attorney was hired to document a business transaction consisting of a real estate investment by a limited partnership that included the plaintiff as a limited partner. Prior to this transaction, the defendant had represented both the plaintiff and the general partner in other matters. The plaintiff and the general partner had agreed to the purchase of the real estate prior to meeting with the defendant, and the evidence indicated that they told the defendant that he was not to make any decisions about the partnership agreement, but just to make sure that the agreement complied with California law. Defendant informed both parties that he could document their agreement in a written partnership agreement, but that if the dealings between them became adversarial he could not represent both of them, and he could not participate in any negotiation or representation of one contrary to the other. Evidence also indicated that, based on knowledge from his prior representation of the general partner, defendant had some concern about the possibility that the property could fail to perform, but did not disclose this concern to plaintiff. Under these circumstances, a limited partnership agreement was drafted by defendant and executed by plaintiff and the general partner. The investment subsequently failed, and the lender was successful in an action against plaintiff to enforce a personal guarantee for the loan. Plaintiff then sued defendant for legal malpractice, claiming that the defendant failed to provide him with the advice and counsel to be expected of an attorney with undivided loyalty and commitment to the client. After a special jury verdict finding that defendant was not negligent, plaintiff claimed error in the trial court's refusal to instruct the jury that an attorney cannot avoid the requirement of informed written consent by narrowing the scope of representation.

The court of appeal upheld the refusal to give the requested instruction, and affirmed the judgment. The court noted that the requirement to obtain informed written consent of clients whose interests conflict applies only when there is a concurrent representation of clients whose interests conflict (34 Cal. App. 4th 1527, 1538) . In this situation, the defendant and his preexisting clients agreed to have the defendant represent the partnership, and not the individual partners, and the plaintiff understood that the defendant could not participate in any negotiation or representation of one partner contrary to the other. Thus, defendant's representation of the partnership did not constitute a limitation of his representation of defendant and the requested jury instruction was properly refused (34 Cal. App. 4th 1527, 1539) .

2A-24A California Points & Authorities § 24A.29

§ 24A.29 Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] in Legal Malpractice Action--By Defendant--Action Barred by Statute of Limitations

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 24A.20.]

THE COURT SHOULD GRANT SUMMARY JUDGMENT IN DEFENDANT'S FAVOR BECAUSE THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS BARS THE ACTION.

A. Summary Judgment. [See § 24A.20, Paragraph A.]

B. Summary Judgment Proper When Statute of Limitations Bars Action. When affidavits or declarations clearly establish that a plaintiff's action is barred by the statute of limitations, summary judgment is properly granted (Chavez v. Carter (1967) 256 Cal. App. 2d 577, 580, 64 Cal. Rptr. 350).

C. Statute of Limitations for Legal Malpractice. A legal malpractice action must be brought within one year after the plaintiff discovers, or should have discovered through reasonable diligence, the facts constituting wrongful conduct, or four years from the date of wrongful conduct, whichever is first. If the plaintiff is required to establish his or her factual innocence for an underlying criminal charge as an element of his or her malpractice claim, the action must be commenced within two years after the plaintiff achieves post-conviction exoneration in the form of a final judicial disposition of the criminal case. Except for claims in which the plaintiff is required to establish his or her factual innocence for an underlying criminal conviction, in no event will the time permitted for bringing suit exceed four years from the date of the wrongful conduct, unless the period is tolled (Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6; Ruchti v. Goldfein (1980) 113 Cal. App. 3d 928, 934-935, 170 Cal. Rptr. 375).

[Optional] D. Statute Commences When Plaintiff Suffers Actual Injury. The statute of limitations begins to run when the plaintiff suffers actual injury, regardless of whether that injury is irremediable (Laird v. Blacker (1992) 2 Cal. 4th 606, 609, 615, 7 Cal. Rptr. 2d 550, 828 P.2d 691 ; Turley v. Wooldridge (1991) 230 Cal. App. 3d 586, 593, 281 Cal. Rptr. 441). Actual injury has occurred when the plaintiff has sustained any damages compensable in a legal action, other than one for actual fraud, against an attorney for a wrongful act or omission arising in the performance of professional services (Jordache Enters., Inc. v. Brobeck, Phleger & Harrison (1998) 18 Cal. 4th 739, 751, 76 Cal. Rptr. 2d 749, 958 P.2d 1062).

[Optional] E. Statute Commences When Client's Cause of Action Is Proscribed. In malpractice cases based on an attorney's failure to file an action on behalf of a client within the appropriate statute of limitations, plaintiff suffers actual injury, and the statute of limitations begins to run, when the client's cause of action is proscribed (Finlayson v. Sanbrook (1992) 10 Cal. App. 4th 1436, 1444, 13 Cal. Rptr. 2d 406).

[Optional] F. Statute Commences on Entry of Adverse Judgment or Order of Dismissal. When the malpractice occurs during the course of litigation, plaintiff suffers actual injury, and the statute of limitations begins to run, when an adverse judgment or order of dismissal is entered against plaintiff in the action on which the malpractice action is based, absent continuous representation by the malpracticing attorney to a postjudgment or postdismissal stage of the litigation (Laird v. Blacker (1992) 2 Cal. 4th 606, 609, 615, 7 Cal. Rptr. 2d 550, 828 P.2d 691). The fact that an appeal has been taken does not alter the fact that an adverse judgment injured the client (see Safine v. Sinnott (1993) 15 Cal. App. 4th 614, 617, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 52).

[Optional] G. Statute Commences When Facts Should Put Plaintiff on Inquiry. The statute of limitations begins running when the facts should put plaintiff on further inquiry, and not when plaintiff becomes aware of legal theories pertaining to a malpractice claim (Peregrine Funding, Inc. v. Sheppard Mullin Richter & Hampton LLP (2005) 133 Cal. App. 4th 658, 35 Cal. Rptr. 3d 31 ; McGee v. Weinberg (1979) 97 Cal. App. 3d 798, 803, 804, 159 Cal. Rptr. 86).

[Optional] H. Statute Not Tolled Once Defendant No Longer Represents Plaintiff as Attorney. The statute of limitations is tolled while an attorney continues to represent the client regarding the specific subject matter in which the alleged wrongful act or omission occurs but is not tolled while the attorney acts in a separate and distinct role other than as an attorney for the client (Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6(a)(2); Von Rott v. Johnson (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 608, 612-613, 196 Cal. Rptr. 55).

[Optional] I. Negligent Attorney's Continued Representation Does Not Toll Statute On Claims Against Attorney's Former Law Firm. Even though a negligent attorney continues to represent the plaintiff, the statute of limitations is not tolled under the continued representation tolling provision on claims brought against the negligent attorney's former law firm (Beal Bank, SSB v. Arter & Hadden, LLP (2007) 42 Cal. 4th 503, 505, 66 Cal. Rptr. 3d 52, 167 P.3d 666 ; Crouse v. Brobeck, Phleger, & Harrison (1998) 67 Cal. App. 4th 1509, 1538-1539, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 94).

[Optional] J. Equitable Tolling Doctrine Inapplicable to Statute. The equitable tolling doctrine, under which a plaintiff may be relieved of the effects of a statute of limitations in certain cases in order to prevent a technical forfeiture and unjustifiably prevent a trial on the merits, does not apply to apply to attorney malpractice actions subject to Code of Civil Procedure Section 340.6 (Gordon v. Law Offices of Aguirre & Meyer (1999) 70 Cal. App. 4th 972, 979-980, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 119).

[Optional] K. Statute Applicable in Action Based on Breach of Fiduciary Duty. Code of Civil Procedure Section 340.6 applies in legal malpractice actions based on breach of fiduciary duty (Stoll v. Superior Court (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 1362, 1363-1364, 1366-1369, 12 Cal. Rptr. 2d 354).

[Optional] L. Actual Injury May Occur When Incurring Legal Fees Caused by Defendant's Malpractice. If the alleged malpractice consists of negligent advice that prompts plaintiff to sign a contract he or she later seeks to rescind, actual injury may be sustained when the plaintiff hires a new attorney to pursue rescission, as plaintiff at that point incurs liability for legal fees due to the first attorney's malpractice (Truong v. Glasser (2009) 181 Cal. App. 4th 102, 114-115, 103 Cal. Rptr. 3d 811).

This form may be submitted by defendant in support of a motion for summary judgment in a legal malpractice action on the basis that the action is barred by the statute of limitations under Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6. Optional Paragraph E is included for use when the alleged malpractice consisted of failing to file a suit within the period of limitation. Optional Paragraph F is included for use when the alleged malpractice has arisen out of litigation. When using either Optional Paragraph E or F, Optional Paragraph D should also be used. Optional Paragraph G is for use when the defendant is contending that the plaintiff had been put on inquiry of his or her claim so as to start the period of limitation running at an earlier time than plaintiff contends. Optional Paragraph H is included for use when plaintiff has argued, or it appears likely that the plaintiff will argue, that the running of the statute of limitations was tolled under Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6(a)(2).

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations that support the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)], and include a showing of facts determining when the statutory period commenced running.

[b] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, this form may be used to support a general demurrer to a malpractice complaint, or a motion for judgment on the pleadings when it appears on the face of the complaint that the statute of limitations provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6 bars the action [see Ruchti v. Goldfein (1980) 113 Cal. App. 3d 928, 170 Cal. Rptr. 375 (defendant's general demurrer sustained and action dismissed on basis of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6); see also McGee v. Weinberg (1979) 97 Cal. App. 3d 798, 159 Cal. Rptr. 86 (general demurrer proper when statute of limitations bars suit)].

[c] Opposing Memoranda

The points in §§ 24A.53, 24A.54, or 24A.55 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a motion for summary judgment supported by this memorandum.

[d] Statute of Limitations Does Not Bar Defensive Use of Legal Malpractice

Under some circumstances, a client may be able to assert an attorney's legal malpractice as a set-off to a claim by the attorney for fees, even though the malpractice action would otherwise be barred by the statute of limitations. If the attorney's fee claim coexisted with the malpractice claim at a time when neither claim would have been barred by the statute of limitations, the client may assert the attorney's malpractice as a defense in his or her answer to the attorney's complaint for fees. If the statute of limitations has run on the malpractice claim at the time the answer was filed, the malpractice claim may nevertheless be allowed up to an amount not exceeding the amount of fees found to be owing to the attorney [see Safine v. Sinnott (1993) 15 Cal. App. 4th 614, 618-619, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 52 ; Code Civ. Proc. § 431.70].

For memoranda pertaining to actions for recovery of fees by an attorney, see Ch. 25, Attorney's Fees .

[e] Statute of Limitations Does Not Bar Actions Based on Nonlegal Services

The legal malpractice statute of limitations, Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6, does not apply to all professional services performed by an attorney, only to legal services. Thus, for example, Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6 will not bar a legal malpractice action against a lawyer who provides administrative consulting services on behalf of a client [Quintilliani v. Mannerino (1998) 62 Cal. App. 4th 54, 65, 72 Cal. Rptr. 2d 359 (term "professional services" must mean services performed by attorney that can be judged against skill, prudence, and diligence commonly possessed by other attorneys)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Summary Judgment Proper When Statute of Limitations Bars Action

Chavez v. Carter (1967) 256 Cal. App. 2d 577, 64 Cal. Rptr. 350 , was a legal malpractice action in which plaintiff alleged that defendant was negligent in failing to prepare and enter an interlocutory decree in a dissolution proceeding, thus causing title to defendant's property to be clouded. In the trial court, defendant filed a motion for summary judgment, based on the contention that the statute of limitations had barred the suit, and the motion was granted.

Plaintiff appealed from the judgment, and the court of appeal reversed. It held that when a statute of limitations bars an action, it is proper to grant summary judgment for defendant. The action was not barred in this case, however. At the time of this case, the statute of limitations applicable to legal malpractice actions was two years under Civ. Code § 339(1) (256 Cal. App. 2d 577, 580) . The court held that the defendant's alleged negligent act did not occur on the date the court directed a granting of interlocutory decree of dissolution, but rather the facts tended to show that defendant was not able to prepare such a decree for some time, and in fact that defendant had a continuing duty since he was still the attorney of record for plaintiff in the matter (256 Cal. App. 2d 577, 581) . Because the negligent act did not occur more than two years prior to the malpractice suit, the statutory period of two years did not bar the action, and summary judgment for defendant was held improper (256 Cal. App. 2d 577, 581, 583) .

[b] Statute of Limitations for Legal Malpractice

In Ruchti v. Goldfein (1980) 113 Cal. App. 3d 928, 170 Cal. Rptr. 375 , plaintiff brought a malpractice action against the attorneys who had represented her in dissolution proceedings. Plaintiff alleged that attorneys were negligent in failing to assert her community property rights to her husband's military retirement benefits. One of the defendants demurred on the ground that the statute of limitations barred the action, and the demurrer was sustained without leave to amend.

Plaintiff appealed and the court of appeal affirmed. It held first that at the time of the dissolution proceeding, plaintiff had no cause of action against defendant since nonvested pension benefits were not characterized as community property (113 Cal. App. 3d 928, 932) . When the law later changed in that regard, the change did not apply retroactively to dissolution decrees that had become final (113 Cal. App. 3d 928, 933) . The court held further that even if defendant's conduct had been negligent in failing to appeal the decree or to research the developing law and inform plaintiff of its uncertain nature, the statute of limitations barred plaintiff's action. In the event of such negligence, the damage occurs when the unclaimed rights become terminated, or when defendant allows the judgment to become final (113 Cal. App. 3d 928, 934) . Since the plaintiff failed to bring the action within four years of that time, the statute of limitations under Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6 effectively barred it (113 Cal. App. 3d 928, 935) .

[c] Statute Commences When Plaintiff Suffers Actual Injury

In Laird v. Blacker (1992) 2 Cal. 4th 606, 7 Cal. Rptr. 2d 550, 828 P.2d 691 , plaintiff television writer retained counsel to commence an action against a television production company for the company's unauthorized use of one of her scripts. After serving the complaint, counsel failed to pursue the case, and plaintiff retained other counsel to prosecute the same case. The suit was subsequently dismissed for lack of prosecution, and plaintiff then discharged the later retained counsel and filed a notice of appeal in propria persona. Thereafter, she settled with the television production company and voluntarily dismissed her appeal.

Nineteen months after the trial court dismissed her action against the production company, and 17 months after she discharged her later-retained counsel, but only eight months after she dismissed her appeal, plaintiff filed a legal malpractice action against both her originally retained and later-retained counsel. Plaintiff then settled with the originally retained counsel and proceeded to trial against the later-retained counsel. These defendants moved for a nonsuit, asserting the one-year limitation period of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6(a) began to run when plaintiff's suit against the production company was dismissed, regardless of her ensuing appeal. Plaintiff asserted her cause of action for legal malpractice did not accrue until the date she dismissed her appeal and her injury due to the malpractice became irremediable. The court denied defendants' motion, and a jury awarded plaintiff damages. Defendants then moved for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict. The court denied the motion, and defendants appealed.

The court of appeal reversed and remanded with directions to enter judgment in favor of defendants. It held that under Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6(a), plaintiff sustained actual injury on the date that her case against the production company was dismissed and judgment was entered against her. Plaintiff then appealed that decision to the Supreme Court.

The Supreme Court affirmed, construing both prior case law and the legislative history of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6 to find that while the injury suffered by the malpractice plaintiff must be actual, it need not be irremediable to be actionable and to commence the running of the statute. Additionally, the Court rejected plaintiff's proposal that the limitations period be tolled until any resultant injury to the client becomes irremediable (2 Cal. 4th 606, 615-620) . Finally, the Court disapproved prior case law on the issue of irremediable harm to the extent that those cases conflict with this holding [see Heyer v. Flaig (1969) 70 Cal. 2d 223, 74 Cal. Rptr. 225, 449 P.2d 161 ; Robinson v. McGinn (1987) 195 Cal. App. 3d 66, 240 Cal. Rptr. 423 ; Bell v. Hummel (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 1009, 186 Cal. Rptr. 688 ; Southland Mech. Constructors Corp. v. Nixen (1981) 119 Cal. App. 3d 417, 173 Cal. Rptr. 917] (2 Cal. 4th 606, 617) .

The Court also held its decision to be retroactive, because its holding followed the majority of court of appeal cases on the irremediability issue, despite a split of authority on the issue, and therefore did not represent a departure from established law (2 Cal. 4th 606, 620) .

In Turley v. Wooldridge (1991) 230 Cal. App. 3d 586, 281 Cal. Rptr. 441 , plaintiff hired defendant attorney to advise her regarding a marriage termination agreement. Plaintiff then signed the agreement, which was approved by the court in an interlocutory judgment of dissolution entered four months later. The final judgment of dissolution was entered almost three months later. Five years after signing the agreement, plaintiff filed a complaint for legal malpractice against defendant, alleging that as a result of defendant's negligence, plaintiff received substantially less than half of the community property and failed to receive the spousal support to which she was entitled after 20 years of marriage. Defendant moved for summary judgment on the ground the action was barred by the four-year limitations period of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6. Plaintiff contended her action was timely because she did not suffer actual injury until she was no longer able to modify the final judgment of dissolution under Code Civ. Proc. § 473 relief from judgment taken by mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect) or the court's equitable powers to set aside a fraudulent agreement or judgment. Thus, by her calculations, plaintiff did not suffer actual injury until six months after entry of final judgment and less than four years before she filed her complaint. The trial court granted defendant's motion and entered judgment in defendant's favor. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court agreed with the trial court in finding that any actual injury from the unequal community property division took place when plaintiff executed the marriage termination agreement, because the agreement became effective on execution. At that point, plaintiff's damages were not speculative, but appreciable. The court also agreed with the trial court in finding that any actual injury from the spousal support arrangement took place when the family law court entered its interlocutory judgment of dissolution. The fact that plaintiff could have challenged the agreement in an action for rescission or other contract relief, or the interlocutory judgment under Code Civ. Proc. § 473 or the court's equitable powers, did not affect the date she suffered actual harm (230 Cal. App. 3d 586, 592-594) .

In Jordache Enters., Inc. v. Brobeck, Phleger & Harrison (1998) 18 Cal. 4th 739, 76 Cal. Rptr. 2d 749, 958 P.2d 1062 , plaintiffs retained defendant law firm in 1984 to defend them in a lawsuit brought against them alleging that they were marketing clothing that was a "knockoff" of another company's clothing. Soon after the 1984 action was filed, plaintiffs contacted their insurance broker and requested information on insurance coverage for the action and were told that their insurers provided no coverage for the action. Based on that information, plaintiffs failed to give the actual insurers notice of the lawsuit. Plaintiffs did not request from defendants any advice concerning insurance coverage for the lawsuit, and defendant law firm did not advise, ask about, or otherwise investigate as to whether there might be a potential for insurance coverage that would trigger a duty on the part of an insurer to defend the lawsuit.

In 1987, plaintiffs hired new attorneys to replace defendant in the 1984 action. These new attorneys advised plaintiffs of the potential insurance coverage and plaintiffs submitted a demand for a defense through its insurance broker. In December 1987, plaintiffs again hired new counsel and plaintiffs by that time were aware of defendant's alleged negligence in failing to notify or advise plaintiffs to notify its insurers of the 1984 lawsuit. In early 1988, following a formal tender of defense of the 1984 action to plaintiffs' insurers, plaintiffs sued the insurers for failing to provide a defense and wrongfully refusing to acknowledge coverage. In that action, plaintiffs sought reimbursement for $30 million allegedly paid for attorney fees and other costs in the 1984 lawsuit, and also asserted the loss to their companies of millions of dollars in profits because the funds spent on legal fees would otherwise have been used for profitable investments. In denying liability, one insurer alleged that late notice of the lawsuit had caused it substantial prejudice. The 1984 lawsuit was settled in 1990, and in July 1990, plaintiffs settled their insurance coverage disputes for $12.5 million.

In February 1991, plaintiffs filed suit for legal malpractice against defendant for omissions in investigating and advising as to the possibility for insurance coverage in the 1984 lawsuit. Defendant moved for summary judgment under Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6, arguing that plaintiffs knew of the omissions no later than 1987 and sustained actual injury in the form of lost profits from business investments caused by moneys diverted to defense costs for the 1984 lawsuit, as well as foregone insurance benefits for defense costs incurred prior to tendering defense of the 1984 action to their insurers. Plaintiffs opposed the motion on the grounds that they did not sustain actual injury until the insurance coverage suits were settled. The trial court granted summary judgment, finding actual injury in the lost business profits. The court of appeal reversed, holding that no actual injury was sustained for purposes of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6 until the insurance coverage suits were settled, since settlement of those suits was required to determine whether defendants' actions actually caused plaintiffs any damages.

The Supreme Court reversed the court of appeal. The Court first reaffirmed that the legislature's enactment of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6 was largely intended to codify the approach taken in the Court's earlier opinion in Budd v. Nixen (1971) 6 Cal. 3d 195, 98 Cal. Rptr. 849, 491 P.2d 433 , which, while it did not use the phrase "actual injury," held that the statute of limitations began to run when the plaintiff sustained sufficient loss or damage from the attorney's negligence to assert a malpractice cause of action. The Court then specifically held for the first time that the test for actual injury under Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6 is whether the plaintiff has sustained any damages compensable in a legal action, other than one for actual fraud, against an attorney for a wrongful act or omission arising in the performance of professional services (18 Cal. 4th 739, 751) . The Court then rejected the approach taken by the court of appeal, which suggested that establishing a causal nexus between the attorney's negligent acts and an invasion of the client's legally protected interests required the conclusion of any related litigation. In applying the Court's approach to the facts in the instant case, the Court concluded that the undisputed facts established that plaintiffs sustained actual injury as a result of defendant's alleged neglect no later than December 1987, since by then the plaintiffs had lost millions of dollars in both unpaid insurance benefits for defense costs and in lost profits from the diversion of investment funds. These lost millions were sufficiently manifest, nonspeculative, and mature that plaintiffs had tried to recover them as damages in the insurance coverage suits (18 Cal. 4th 739, 752) . The Court also rejected the court of appeal's conclusion that plaintiffs' injury was only speculative until settlement of the coverage lawsuits. Instead, the Court concluded that the coverage lawsuits were only relevant to the legal malpractice suit in that they potentially affected the amount of damages; they did not affect the existence of the defendant's negligence nor the diminishment of plaintiffs' right to liability insurance sustained in the first instance because of the alleged negligence (18 Cal. 4th 739, 753-754) . The Court rejected the creation or application of a general rule that would toll the limitations period until a related lawsuit establishes a causal connection between the attorney's error and any resulting error injury, adopting instead an approach that takes into consideration the precise circumstances of the particular case (18 Cal. 4th 739, 754-755) .

Finally, after rejecting plaintiffs' policy arguments for construing the statute of limitations narrowly in order to avoid forfeiture of a plaintiff's rights, the Court considered the effect of its holding on the approach taken in other recent Supreme Court and court of appeal decisions addressing the question of what constitutes actual injury under Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6. While the Court was able to distinguish on their facts some cases that had required the conclusion of a related proceeding in order support a finding of actual injury, including Sirott v. Latts (1992) 6 Cal. App. 4th 923, 8 Cal. Rptr. 2d 206 , Foxborough v. Van Atta (1994) 26 Cal. App. 4th 217, 31 Cal. Rptr. 2d 525 , and Baltins v. James (1995) 36 Cal. App. 4th 1193, 42 Cal. Rptr. 2d 896 , the Court explicitly overruled its own prior holding in ITT Small Business Fin. Corp. v. Niles (1994) 9 Cal. 4th 245, 36 Cal. Rptr. 2d 552, 885 P.2d 965 , in which the Court had attempted to establish a bright-line rule that actual damages are sustained in transactional malpractice cases in which the adequacy of the documentation is the subject of the dispute only upon entry of adverse judgment, settlement, or dismissal of the underlying action (18 Cal. 4th 739, 758-763) .

[d] Statute Commences When Client's Cause of Action Is Proscribed

In Finlayson v. Sanbrook (1992) 10 Cal. App. 4th 1436, 13 Cal. Rptr. 2d 406 , plaintiff client alleged causes of action for legal malpractice, negligent misrepresentation, and negligent infliction of emotional distress against defendant law firm; all causes of action were based on the defendant's alleged failure to file an action that became time-barred. Plaintiff allegedly had suffered injuries from exposure to asbestos and asbestos-related materials while employed as a sheet metal worker from 1952 to 1981. In 1981, plaintiff hired an attorney from defendant law firm to represent him on a workers' compensation claim and to pursue the possibility of other remedies of compensation for his injuries. Defendant advised plaintiff that he would protect plaintiff's legal right regarding any and all claims arising out of his asbestos-related illness. However, the attorney failed to bring a third-party action against the manufacturers and suppliers of the asbestos within one year after plaintiff discovered that his disability was caused by exposure to asbestos, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 340.2. In 1983, plaintiff, through a new attorney, did file a third-party action against the asbestos manufacturers and suppliers he claimed defendant should have brought suit against; several of these defendants obtained summary judgment in 1988 on limitations grounds. On February 9, 1989, plaintiff filed a legal malpractice action alleging that he sustained actual injury on or about May 26, 1988, when summary judgment on limitations grounds was granted against plaintiff in the third-party action. Defendant law firm demurred to the complaint on the ground that the cause of action for legal malpractice was time-barred. The court sustained without leave to amend the demurrer as to the legal malpractice and negligent misrepresentation causes of action. Later, the court granted summary judgment as to the remaining cause of action for negligent infliction of emotional distress. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court held that in cases in which the malpractice consists of not filing an underlying action within the applicable statute of limitations, actual injury for purposes of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6 occurs when the client's underlying action becomes time-barred (10 Cal. App. 4th 1436, 1444) . The court also noted that after the underlying action becomes time-barred, plaintiff's attempts to remedy his or her injury do not delay accrual of the statute of limitations for attorney malpractice (10 Cal. App. 4th 1436, 1443) . Under the facts of the case, plaintiff's legal malpractice action became time-barred in 1984, which was one year after the plaintiff discovered the defendant's wrongful act or omission (10 Cal. App. 4th 1436, 1444-1445) .

[e] Statute Commences on Entry of Adverse Judgment or Order of Dismissal

The facts and procedural background of Laird v. Blacker (1992) 2 Cal. 4th 606, 7 Cal. Rptr. 2d 550, 828 P.2d 691 , are discussed in § 24A.29[3][c]. The plaintiff contended that her actual injury occurred when her appeal of right in the underlying litigation was dismissed, rather than when that litigation was dismissed in the trial court through counsel's malpractice. The Supreme Court disagreed, and held that when legal malpractice arises out of litigation, the "actual injury" sustained by the plaintiff under Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6 is the entry of an adverse judgment or a final order of dismissal in that litigation, rather than the finality of an appeal from the judgment or order (2 Cal. 4th 606, 609) . Therefore, the statute of limitations begins to run on entry of the judgment or order. In the case at bar, plaintiff sustained actual injury when the trial court dismissed her action against the production company and she was compelled to incur legal costs and expenses in pursuing an appeal. Additionally, her case lost considerable settlement value and potential interest on any monetary award that would have been made absent the malpractice, once the action was dismissed (2 Cal. 4th 606, 615) . In so holding, the Court expressly disagreed with plaintiff's contentions that actual injury should be defined in terms of monetary amount and that a successful appeal negates the client's ability to file a malpractice action. On the contrary, according to the Court, the focus of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6 is on the occurrence and discovery of the malpractice and actual injury, rather than on success on appeal or proof of the total amount of monetary damages suffered by the former client (2 Cal. 4th 606, 614) .

In Safine v. Sinnott (1993) 15 Cal. App. 4th 614, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 52 , a judgment was entered against the client for an amount that included money he did not owe. This mistake was a result of the attorney's negligence. Before the client realized the mistake, he paid the judgment. On a motion by new counsel, the trial court modified its judgment. On appeal, the appellate court reversed because the trial court did not have jurisdiction to modify the judgment.

In response to the client's action for malpractice, the former attorney asserted the statute of limitation. The former attorney argued that the client incurred actual injury on the date he paid the judgment as opposed to the date on which the modified judgment was reversed by the appellate court. In accepting the attorney's argument, the appellate court stated that the client was injured when he paid the money he did not owe, and he was injured again when he incurred costs and attorney's fees in attempting to recoup those funds (15 Cal. App. 4th 614, 617) .

[f] Statute Commences When Facts Should Put Plaintiff on Inquiry

In Peregrine Funding, Inc. v. Sheppard Mullin Richter & Hampton LLP (2005) 133 Cal. App. 4th 658, 35 Cal. Rptr. 3d 31 , the plaintiffs were investors that sued attorneys representing a company perpetrating a Ponzi scheme. The plaintiffs claimed that the attorneys' negligence and affirmative misconduct helped the perpetrators of the scheme avoid detection and prosecution by securities regulators. The attorneys filed a special motion to strike the complaint as a SLAPP suit under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(b)(1), arguing that the complaint should be dismissed because it targeted the attorneys' constitutionally protected speech or petitioning activity. The attorneys argued that the plaintiffs could not establish the requisite likelihood of success because their claims were barred by the statute of limitations. The trial court denied the motion.

The court of appeal reversed. It concluded that the motion to strike should have been granted in part because the plaintiffs' claims were partially based on protected activity and because some plaintiffs did not establish the requisite likelihood of prevailing. Specifically, the court concluded that the plaintiffs' claims were barred by the applicable statute of limitations (133 Cal. App. 4th 658, 682-685) . The parties agreed that Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6 provided the applicable limitations period. The court of appeal held that the facts showed that the plaintiffs knew or should have known of their claims against the attorneys more than one year before they filed their claim (133 Cal. App. 4th 658, 682-685) . For example, the plaintiffs knew more than one year earlier that they had been damaged by the Ponzi scheme and that the attorneys were representing the company (133 Cal. App. 4th 658, 682) . They also had access to reports by a receiver appointed to represent the company that blamed the attorneys for much of what had gone wrong (133 Cal. App. 4th 658, 683) . The court held that the only fact that the plaintiffs discovered less than one year after they filed their complaint was that the attorneys had information about individual investors' contributions to the funds involved in the scheme. However, this fact was ancillary to the allegations of misconduct in the complaint, and it was merely evidence cited by the plaintiffs to support the theory that the attorneys owed them duties of care and loyalty (133 Cal. App. 4th 658, 685) .

McGee v. Weinberg (1979) 97 Cal. App. 3d 798, 159 Cal. Rptr. 86 , was a malpractice action in which plaintiff sued the attorney who represented her in a dissolution proceeding for failure to provide in the judgment of dissolution that the husband was required to maintain plaintiff as the irrevocable beneficiary of his life insurance policy. The husband had failed to maintain the policy, and when he died, plaintiff did not receive any proceeds. The interlocutory judgment of dissolution was entered in 1963, and the husband died in 1973. In 1975, plaintiff consulted another attorney on an unrelated matter, and learned she had a cause of action against defendant. She filed the malpractice action in 1976.

Defendant demurred to the complaint, contending the statute of limitations barred the suit, and the trial court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend. The plaintiff appealed, and the court of appeal affirmed, and ordered dismissal of the action. The court held that the statute of limitations commenced at the husband's death, as that was the time plaintiff suffered harm by failing to recover the insurance proceeds, and that was also when plaintiff discovered the loss, and should have been put on inquiry regarding defendant's negligence (97 Cal. App. 3d 798, 802, 803) . Although plaintiff argued that she was not aware she had a cause of action against defendant until later, the court held that it is a plaintiff's knowledge of facts sufficient to put a reasonable person on notice that further inquiry or investigation is required, that begins the running of the statute of limitations (97 Cal. App. 3d 798, 803) . Whether or not a plaintiff has discovered or is aware of legal rights, is immaterial to the running of the statute (97 Cal. App. 3d 798, 803, 804) . Because in this case the plaintiff was put on such notice of inquiry at the time of the husband's death, the statute of limitations began running at that time, and the action against defendant was barred (97 Cal. App. 3d 798, 804, 805) .

[g] Statute Not Tolled Once Defendant No Longer Represents Plaintiff as Attorney

Von Rott v. Johnson (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 608, 196 Cal. Rptr. 55 , was an action for legal malpractice based on defendant's alleged negligence in structuring a sale of plaintiff's business. Under the terms of the transaction, defendant was to remain a pledgeholder of the shares of the business, to be sold if the purchaser defaulted. Defendant's last legal act on behalf of plaintiff was taken in June 1978; after the purchaser declared bankruptcy in January 1979, the action was filed in August 1979. Defendant's motion for summary judgment was granted, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that defendant's role as pledgeholder did not constitute continued representation of plaintiff within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6(a)(2) (148 Cal. App. 3d 608, 612-613) . The court held that by its terms, Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6 applies only to actions arising out of the performance of professional services by attorneys (148 Cal. App. 3d 608, 612) . The court noted that one need not be an attorney to be a pledgeholder and that one acting as a pledgeholder is not performing legal services, and concluded that defendant's status as pledgeholder was only tangentially related to the legal representation of plaintiff and therefore did not operate to toll the statute of limitations. The court observed that a contrary result could have meant that defendant would have acted as plaintiff's attorney for the 15-year term of the sale agreement despite plaintiff's awareness of the alleged malpractice and her retention of new counsel to represent her in the transaction (148 Cal. App. 3d 608, 613) .

[h] Negligent Attorney's Continued Representation Does Not Toll Statute On Claims Against Attorney's Former Law Firm

In Beal Bank, SSB v. Arter & Hadden, LLP (2007) 42 Cal. 4th 503, 66 Cal. Rptr. 3d 52, 167 P.3d 666 , plaintiff was a bank that had hired a law firm to represent it in pursuing a claim in bankruptcy court against a debtor who had defaulted on a loan. The bank's claim was rejected by the bankruptcy court, and while an appeal was pending, the individual attorney who was representing plaintiff left his law firm to start his own firm and plaintiff's representation followed him to the new firm. Plaintiff eventually lost on appeal from the bankruptcy ruling. Plaintiff then sued all of the attorneys and law firms for malpractice, alleging that they failed to conduct any legal research on the relevant issue and advise plaintiff that the claim was likely to be rejected. The law firm that had originally been hired to represent plaintiff in the bankruptcy proceeding demurred, arguing that the suit against it was untimely because the statute of limitations ceased to be tolled under the continued representation exception when the individual attorney representing plaintiff left the firm and plaintiff left with him. Recognizing a conflict in court of appeal opinions on the issue, the trial court sustained the demurrer, holding that the continued representation exception ceased to toll any action against the former law firm when that firm ceased representing plaintiff. Plaintiff appealed, and the court of appeal reversed, concluding that the tolling exception had not ceased against the original firm when the attorney left that firm. Defendant appealed.

The California Supreme Court reversed the court of appeal. The Supreme Court held that if an attorney leaves a law firm and takes the representation of a particular client with him or her, the statute of limitations does not continue to toll under the continued representation exception on a malpractice action that the client may have against the attorney's former law firm or any of the other attorneys in that firm (42 Cal. 4th 503, 505) . In so holding, the California Supreme Court concluded that this result was more consistent with the language of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6, which extends this tolling exception to the period during ongoing representation by "the attorney" (42 Cal. 4th 503, 508-509) . The Court also concluded that the purposes underlying the continued representation exception--to avoid disruption of the attorney-client relationship while providing the attorney an opportunity to correct or minimize any error, and to prevent an attorney from defeating a malpractice action by continuing to represent the client until the limitations period on the malpractice claim has expired--are only minimally implicated when the individual defendant attorney actually providing representation has left a defendant law firm. There is no longer any risk a defendant firm that is no longer providing representation to plaintiff will try to stall until the expiration period on the malpractice claim has expired by providing assurances to the plaintiff. Conversely, the law firm loses all ability to mitigate any potential damage to the client and there is no longer any attorney-client relationship to protect (42 Cal. 4th 503, 511-512). Moreover, a contrary rule, according to the Court, would subject the former law firm to an indeterminate period of potential liability over which it has no control, frustrating one goal of the statute of limitations (42 Cal. 4th 503, 512) . The Court also noted that voluntary tolling agreements and stays of litigation could be used to reduce the impact of any lawsuit brought against the former employing firm, which when sued might counter with an indemnity suit against the individual attorney that continues to represent the client (42 Cal. 4th 503, 505).

In Crouse v. Brobeck, Phleger, & Harrison (1998) 67 Cal. App. 4th 1509, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 94 , plaintiff brought a malpractice action against her attorney, the attorney's former law firm, and the attorney's current firm. The attorney and his former law firm had represented the plaintiff in 1987 and 1988 as she sold her interest in a limited partnership to the partnership's general partners. As part of that transaction, a promissory note that was to be due and payable in 1990 was made out to plaintiff, although the note was delivered to defendant attorney, who took no steps to ensure the note would be held in a secure location. After defendant attorney left this law firm in August 1989 to join the attorney's current firm, the former law firm continued to represent plaintiff with respect to the transaction until March 1990. When plaintiff learned in early 1990 that the obligors on the note wished to renegotiate the terms of the note, plaintiff retained defendant attorney and his current law firm to represent her in those renegotiations, and her file was then transferred from the attorney's former firm to his current firm. In April 1990, plaintiff and defendant attorney discovered that they could not locate the promissory note, and while the attorney continued to negotiate the restructuring, he did nothing during the next six months to try to locate the note, nor did he assess the legal significance of not having the note on the restructuring. On the day for closing the restructuring, the attorney for the other parties aborted the restructuring when plaintiff was unable to produce the note, believing erroneously that the note was negotiable and that a holder of the note would later be entitled to demand payment. A few days later, despite lack of the original note, a new note-restructuring agreement was reached, although on terms less favorable to plaintiff than those aborted earlier. By October 1990, plaintiff had consulted independent counsel who advised her the loss of the note was negligence, as was the failure to search for the note, explain to plaintiff the significance of loss of the note, and make alternative arrangements in lieu of producing the note at the closing. Defendant attorney and his current firm continued to represent plaintiff until July 1993 in matters related to the restructured note transaction.

Plaintiff sued defendant attorney and both law firms for malpractice, with December 1993 the relevant filing date for purposes of the statute of limitations. Defendant attorney and his current firm cross-complained for equitable indemnity against the attorney's former law firm. Former law firm successfully moved for summary judgment against plaintiff on the grounds that, as to it, the one-year statute of limitations had begun to run in October of 1990 and was not tolled by defendant attorney's continued representation of plaintiff. The trial court also extended the summary judgment to those claims brought against defendant attorney for his actions while he was with his former firm. Defendant attorney and his current law firm also successfully moved for summary judgment or judgment on the pleadings against plaintiff, arguing principally that the action was barred by the statute of limitations. Attorney's former law firm also obtained summary adjudication and judgment on the cross claims for equitable indemnity.

The court of appeal affirmed in part and reversed in part. As part of its decision, the court affirmed that plaintiff's claim against the attorney's former law firm was barred by the one-year statute of limitations. The court rejected plaintiff's argument that under a prior decision [Beane v. Paulsen (1993) 21 Cal. App. 4th 89, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 486] , overruled in part, Beal Bank, SSB v. Arter & Hadden, LLP (2007) 42 Cal. 4th 503 , defendant attorney's continued representation of plaintiff tolled the limitations period even as to his former firm. The court noted that the tolling provision of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6(a)(2) is designed to serve two purposes: to prevent the attorney from defeating a malpractice claim by continuing to represent the client until the limitations period on the malpractice claim has expired, and to avoid forcing a client to file a lawsuit that would disrupt an ongoing attorney-client relationship and thereby prevent the attorney from attempting to correct or minimize the damage caused by the attorney's error (67 Cal. App. 4th 1509, 1535) .

Distinguishing the facts of the Beane case and disagreeing with that opinion's policy analysis, the court, noting that the right to assert a limitations defense is a privilege personal to a defendant, concluded that to toll the statute on the claims brought against the attorney's former firm would subject the former partners to the tolled limitations period without having elected to continue to represent the former client and without obtaining the benefit of being able to participate in eliminating or minimizing their liability for damages through continued representation (67 Cal. App. 4th 1509, 1538-1539) . The court recognized that forcing plaintiffs to sue a negligent attorney's former law firm promptly might trigger cross-complaints against the negligent attorney and impede efforts to remedy or minimize the attorney's own error. The court therefore concluded that this detriment should equitably be borne by the negligent attorney and not the former law partners (67 Cal. App. 4th 1509, 1539) .

[i] Equitable Tolling Doctrine Inapplicable to Statute

In Gordon v. Law Offices of Aguirre & Meyer (1999) 70 Cal. App. 4th 972, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 119 , plaintiffs were Arizona residents who filed an attorney malpractice action in Arizona state court against a San Diego law firm that had represented plaintiffs in an underlying class action involving alleged violations of securities laws. The Arizona malpractice action was removed to federal district court, where it was dismissed for lack of personal jurisdiction over the San Diego firm. Less than two months after dismissal, plaintiffs refiled the malpractice action against the law firm in California state court. Defendant demurred to the California action on the grounds that the action was barred by the one-year limitations period of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6, and the trial court agreed, rejecting plaintiff's argument that the California statute was equitably tolled while the Arizona action was pending. Plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's ruling. The court noted that prior court opinions had interpreted the language of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6(a), which provides that "in no event" shall the limitations period be tolled except under the circumstances specified in the statute, as evidence of a legislative intent to disallow tolling in any other circumstances (70 Cal. App. 4th 972, 979-980) . Thus, despite any lack of prejudice to the defendants, the court of appeal held that the equitable tolling doctrine, under which a plaintiff may be relieved of the effects of a statute of limitations in certain cases in order to prevent a technical forfeiture and unjustifiably prevent a trial on the merits, does not apply to attorney malpractice actions subject to Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6 (70 Cal. App. 4th 972, 980) . However, the court also suggested that the equitable tolling doctrine would not apply under the facts in any event, since trial on the merits was not denied due to an error of the trial court or through forces outside of the plaintiffs' control, but because the plaintiffs mistakenly filed suit in Arizona against California defendants (70 Cal. App. 4th 972, 980 n.8).

[j] Statute Applicable in Action Based on Breach of Fiduciary Duty

In Stoll v. Superior Court (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 1362, 12 Cal. Rptr. 2d 354 , plaintiff brought an action for breach of fiduciary duty against his former attorney. Defendant demurred to the complaint on the ground that the pleading actually sounded in legal malpractice and was therefore time-barred under the one-year malpractice statute of limitations under Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6. The trial court overruled the demurrer, concluding that the complaint for breach of fiduciary duty was governed by the "catch-all" limitations period of four years under Code Civ. Proc. § 343. Defendant sought review by extraordinary writ.

The court of appeals issued a peremptory writ of mandate commanding the trial court to vacate its order overruling petitioner's demurrer and to enter a new and different order sustaining the demurrer without leave to amend (9 Cal. App. 4th 1362, 1369) . The court stated that "wrongful act or omission," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6 refers to all legal malpractice excepting actual fraud. The court held that Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6 applies in legal malpractice actions based on breach of fiduciary duty (9 Cal. App. 4th 1362, 1363-1364, 1366-1369) .

The court (First Dist., Div. Five) declined to follow David Welch Co. v. Erskine & Tulley (1988) 203 Cal. App. 3d 884, 893, 250 Cal. Rptr. 339 (First Dist., Div. Four) , which holds that a cause of action based on an attorney's breach of fiduciary duties is subject to the four-year catchall statute set forth in Code Civ. Proc. § 343. The court noted that the David Welch Co. case lacked extensive analysis behind its conclusions and failed to examine applicable legislative history and case authority (9 Cal. App. 4th 1362, 1369) .

[k] Actual Injury May Occur When Incurring Legal Fees Caused by Defendant's Malpractice

In Truong v. Glasser (2009) 181 Cal. App. 4th 102, 103 Cal. Rptr. 3d 811 , plaintiff was a company that manufactured printed circuit boards and defendant was an attorney who reviewed a proposed lease for commercial property at the request of plaintiff. Plaintiff signed the lease only to discover that the property needed more work than anticipated before the company could occupy the property. After a dispute with the landlord over the necessary property improvements, plaintiff sent to defendant a lease addendum designed to resolve the dispute. Although the parties disagreed over whether the attorney advised plaintiff to sign the addendum or not, plaintiff did sign it. Three months later, with the plaintiff dissatisfied with the landlord's work on the improvements, plaintiff hired a different attorney to pursue litigation against the landlord, litigation that included an attempt to rescind the lease addendum. A year and a half later, judgment was entered against plaintiff in that lawsuit. The following month, plaintiff filed a malpractice action against defendant attorney, alleging that defendant was negligent and breached his fiduciary duties by not properly advising plaintiff regarding the lease and lease addendum. Defendant filed a motion for summary judgment on the grounds that the action was barred by the one-year statute of limitations of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6. The trial court granted the motion. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court rejected plaintiff's argument that the plaintiff did not suffer actual injury, thereby triggering the statute of limitations, until judgment was rendered in the lawsuit against the landlord. The court held instead that plaintiff suffered actual injury sufficient to begin the limitations period when plaintiff hired an attorney to pursue litigation against the landlord to escape the consequences of having signed the lease, as at that point plaintiff incurred legal fees allegedly caused by the negligent conduct of defendant attorney (181 Cal. App. 4th 102, 114-115) .

[a] Statute of Limitations for Legal Malpractice

In Bell v. Hummel (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 1009, 186 Cal. Rptr. 688 , plaintiffs brought a legal malpractice action against defendants for failure to assert a valid claim for damages on their behalf in a prior action. Defendants' demurrer, based on the statute of limitations, was sustained, and plaintiffs appealed. The court of appeal affirmed. Citing Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6 in deciding the statute of limitations issue, the court held that the limitations period for legal malpractice is tolled during the times, inter alia, that plaintiff has not sustained actual injury or the errant attorney continues to represent the plaintiff regarding the specific matter in which the malpractice occurred (136 Cal. App. 3d 1009, 1015, 1017-1018) .

[b] Statute Commences When Plaintiff Suffers Actual Injury

In Village Nurseries v. Greenbaum (2002) 101 Cal. App. 4th 26, 123 Cal. Rptr. 2d 555 , the plaintiff was a landscaping and irrigation systems company that performed extensive work for a building contractor. The building contractor filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy, and the plaintiff recorded several mechanic's liens for amounts that the contractor owed. The plaintiff specifically inquired from its attorneys about whether, to protect its liens, a Notice of Perfection of Security Interest needed to be filed with the Bankruptcy Court under 11 U.S.C.S. § 546(b). The attorneys were of the opinion that a Notice was not necessary, but that suit needed to be filed in state court to protect the liens. The following year, both the bankruptcy trustee and the bankruptcy court indicated their opinion that the liens were invalid due to the failure to file a Section 546 notice. The plaintiff eventually filed a malpractice suit against the attorneys after the bankruptcy court ruled that the liens were in fact invalid. The trial court rejected the defendants' summary judgment motion to the extent that it was based on the statute of limitations, although it granted summary judgment for the defendants on other grounds. The court of appeal held that the defendants were entitled to summary judgment on the grounds that the statute of limitations had run before suit was filed. The plaintiff had failed to file the lawsuit within one year after learning that the bankruptcy trustee and the bankruptcy court were of the opinion that the liens were invalid. Although suit was filed within a year after the court's eventual ruling on the invalidity of the liens, the settlement value of the plaintiff's claims for payment was impaired once the trustee questioned the validity of the liens. It was on that date that the plaintiff sustained actual injury, thus triggering the statute of limitations. The court rejected the defendants' argument that the statute did not begin to run until the court actually invalidated the liens (101 Cal. App. 4th 26, 41-42) .

In Gailing v. Rose, Klein & Marias (1996) 43 Cal. App. 4th 1570, 51 Cal. Rptr. 2d 381 , a deceased's estate brought a malpractice action against the deceased's attorneys for the failure to resolve a personal injury action for asbestos exposure, and thus losing the right to general damages. However, the estate delayed filing the malpractice action until the underlying wrongful death action concluded based on its belief that the statute of limitations would not begin to run on the malpractice action until final damage was sustained, with final damage defined as occurring at the completion of the underlying action. The malpractice action was thus filed more than a year after the deceased's death. The attorneys moved for summary judgment on the ground that the statute of limitations had run, and the trial court granted the motion. The court of appeal recognized that in Laird v. Blacker (1992) 2 Cal. 4th 606, 7 Cal. Rptr. 2d 550, 828 P.2d 691 , the Supreme Court stated that the statute of limitations for legal malpractice actions commences on entry of adverse judgment or final order of dismissal. However, the court stated that Adams v. Paul (1995) 11 Cal. 4th 583, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 594, 904 P.2d 1205 , removed any notion that Laird created a bright line rule regarding the tolling of the statute of limitations (43 Cal. App. 4th 1570, 1574) . Adams demonstrated that the determination of when a plaintiff in a legal malpractice case has sustained actual injury is predominantly a factual rather than a legal determination (43 Cal. App. 4th 1570, 1576) . Applying this reasoning, the court stated that when a plaintiff in a personal injury action dies, the right to general damages for pain and suffering is extinguished. Therefore, a negligent failure to bring a case to trial before the plaintiff's death is akin to missing a statute of limitations for pain and suffering damages (43 Cal. App. 4th 1570, 1577) . Concluding that actual injury occurred immediately on death when the estate was deprived of the opportunity to collect pain and suffering damages, the court affirmed the summary judgment for defendants.

In Fantazia v. County of Stanislaus (1996) 41 Cal. App. 4th 1444, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 177 , plaintiff sued a county and its public defender for legal malpractice with regard to the legal representation provided him in defense of criminal sexual offense charges. Plaintiff was originally convicted on all counts and sentenced to prison, but after substituting private counsel and obtaining an order for a new trial, the charges were dismissed and plaintiff was ordered discharged. Plaintiff then filed his malpractice action against the county. The county moved for summary judgment on the basis of the statute of limitations, and the trial court granted the motion. Plaintiff contended that the statute of limitations was tolled until the charges against him were dismissed, because until then he did not know whether his counsel's inadequate representation was harmless. The court of appeal cited Laird v. Blacker (1992) 2 Cal. 4th 606, 7 Cal. Rptr. 2d 550, 828 P.2d 691 , for the rule that actual injury occurs upon entry of the underlying adverse judgment or order of dismissal. While fitting criminal malpractice litigation into forms designed for civil cases may not always work, the court did not find this case to require a departure from the standards evolved in civil malpractice (41 Cal. App. 4th 1444, 1454) . The court thus concluded that Laird compelled finding that the limitations period commenced at the latest on the date when plaintiff's sentence to prison in the underlying case was executed (41 Cal. App. 4th 1444, 1452) . The summary judgment ordered by the trial court was thus affirmed.

In Bennett v. McCall (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 122, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 268 , the court of appeal held that a client suffers damage when he or she is compelled, as a result of the attorney's error, to incur or pay attorney fees. The plaintiff knew about the defendant attorney's alleged negligence by June 1986, and paid a $1,500 retainer fee to another attorney on March 5, 1987, to represent him in the dissolution action and rectify the alleged negligence of defendant. The court of appeal held that the lower court correctly determined that the statute of limitations began running at the latest on March 5, 1987 (19 Cal. App. 4th 122, 126) .

[c] Statute Not Tolled Once Defendant No Longer Represents Plaintiff as Attorney

The factual and procedural background of Truong v. Glasser (2009) 181 Cal. App. 4th 102, 103 Cal. Rptr. 3d 811 , is described in [3][k], above. The court of appeal in that case rejected plaintiff's claim that the attorney malpractice action was tolled by the continuous representation exception. The court concluded that plaintiff had failed to present evidence showing that defendant attorney continued to represent plaintiff on the subject of the lease documents after providing his last advice on the subject in December 2005. Because the malpractice lawsuit was not filed until September 2007, the continued representation exception could not be used to overcome defendant's defense that the lawsuit was untimely. The court noted also that defendant provided no advice or assistance to plaintiff when plaintiff hired a new attorney in March 2006 to pursue litigation against the landlord with respect to the lease (181 Cal. App. 4th 102, 116-117) .

In Foxborough v. Van Atta (1994) 26 Cal. App. 4th 217, 31 Cal. Rptr. 2d 525 , there was a four-year gap between an attorney's representation of a client in a real estate development matter and his subsequent acts of serving as a consultant and expert in litigation arising out of that transaction. The court distinguished continuous, non-sporadic representation regarding a specific subject matter from the existence of a continuing attorney-client relationship and concluded as a matter of law that the continuous representation requirement had not been met because of the client's retention of new counsel, the lack of contact between the attorney and the client during the four-year period, and the significant change in the attorney's role in the later litigation (26 Cal. App. 4th 217, 229) .

Hensley v. Caietti (1993) 13 Cal. App. 4th 1165, 16 Cal. Rptr. 2d 837 , arose out of a marital settlement agreement that was approved orally by the court after a hearing, effective immediately. One party to the agreement became dissatisfied with its terms before her attorney prepared the written judgment. After reviewing the proposed judgment in her attorney's office, she refused to agree to it, and the two became embroiled in a heated argument. The party filed a legal malpractice action over one year later, but less than one year after formally obtaining a substitution of attorney in the dissolution matter. The court of appeal affirmed summary judgment in favor of defendant in the legal malpractice action on the ground that it was time-barred under Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6. Representation is discontinued according to the perspective of the client rather than the attorney. Under the facts, the attorney-client relationship was terminated when the disagreement occurred in the attorney's office, not when the substitution was formally made (13 Cal. App.

Panattoni v. Superior Court (1988) 203 Cal. App. 3d 1092, 250 Cal. Rptr. 390 , was an appeal from a superior court's denial of defendant attorneys' motion for summary judgment. The defendant had neglected to file a meritorious third-party claim in social security and workers' compensation proceedings arising out of a construction accident. Several years after the termination of these proceedings, the attorneys attempted to reinstate social security benefits and reopen the workers' compensation action. The court of appeal held that this latter representation did not toll the statute under the "continued representation" exception, and it issued a writ of mandate directing the superior court to enter judgment in defendants' favor (203 Cal. App. 3d 1092, 1097-1098) . The court stated that legal representation in a matter terminates when no court or administrative tribunal retains jurisdiction over the matter and nothing remains to be done with regard to the proceedings in which legal representation was rendered (203 Cal. App. 3d 1092, 1097) .

In Rubinstein v. Barnes (1987) 195 Cal. App. 3d 276, 240 Cal. Rptr. 535 , the court of appeal affirmed the trial court's summary judgment in favor of defendant attorney, on the ground that the plaintiff's malpractice action was barred under Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6. The action was based on defendant's alleged negligence in representing plaintiff during a 1974 marriage dissolution proceeding. Plaintiff argued that defendant continued to represent her until 1986 (and that the statute was thereby tolled), because the court retained jurisdiction over the issue of spousal support until that year. The court rejected this argument, noting that the plaintiff, by her own admission, had only one contact with defendant following the final judgment of dissolution, and that after this discussion in late 1974, she never asked defendant to do anything further in connection with the dissolution (195 Cal. App. 3d 276, 283-284) .

In Shapero v. Fliegel (1987) 191 Cal. App. 3d 842, 236 Cal. Rptr. 696 , plaintiff, who had retained defendant attorney to represent her in a divorce action, brought a malpractice action against the attorney. The trial court granted summary judgment to defendant, finding the action was barred under Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6(a). Plaintiff appealed, claiming that the statute of limitations had been tolled because the attorney never formally withdrew as her attorney of record under Code Civ. Proc. § 285.1. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that failure to withdraw formally as attorney of record, standing alone, will not toll the statute of limitations under the rubric of continued representation (191 Cal. App. 3d 842, 846) .

[d] Plaintiff in Malpractice Action Against Criminal Defense Attorney Must Comply With Statute of Limitations Even While Seeking Reversal or Other Postconviction Relief in Underlying Criminal Action

In Ovando v. County of Los Angeles (2008) 159 Cal. App. 4th 42, 71 Cal. Rptr. 3d 415 , a former criminal defendant sued his criminal defense attorney and the attorney's employer, the county, for attorney malpractice resulting in his false conviction. A jury verdict was rendered in favor of plaintiff and he was awarded substantial damages, but the trial court granted a new trial because of juror misconduct. The court of appeal affirmed the new trial order, but also held that the lower court had erred in ruling that plaintiff's malpractice action had not accrued until his convictions were set aside in habeas corpus proceedings and that plaintiff's claim filed with the county had therefore been timely. Citing the analysis of the Supreme Court in Coscia v. McKenna & Cuneo (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 1194, 1209-1211, 108 Cal. Rptr. 2d 471, 25 P.3d 670 , discussed in [3][k], above, the court of appeal held that while proving actual innocence requires exoneration through postconviction relief, the lack of postconviction relief does not stay the running of the statute of limitations on an attorney malpractice action that has otherwise accrued. The appropriate remedy for a convicted criminal defendant who has been the victim of attorney malpractice but has not yet been exonerated is to file the malpractice action within the statute of limitations and to seek a stay of that action until exoneration on the criminal charges can be obtained. Thus, for the new trial, plaintiff would be required to plead and prove facts demonstrating either compliance with the government claims presentation requirement or an excuse for noncompliance (159 Cal. App. 4th 42, 68-70) .

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted by defendant in support of a motion for summary judgment, on the ground that defendant's representation of plaintiff's interests was in connection with defendant's function as a union agent in the collective bargaining process.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should allege facts showing that the representation of plaintiff took place in the context of defendant's role as a union agent in the collective bargaining process.

With appropriate modifications, this form may be used to support a general demurrer to a complaint, or a motion for judgment on the pleadings.

[b] When Immunity Unavailable

Immunity from malpractice actions by aggrieved individual labor union members is unavailable under 29 U.S.C.S. § 185(b) if either of the following is true [Peterson v. Kennedy (9th Cir. 1985) 771 F.2d 1244, 1259 ; Aragon v. Pappy, Kaplon, Vogel & Phillips (1989) 214 Cal. App. 3d 451, 462, 262 Cal. Rptr. 646] :

- The aggrieved union member has personally retained the attorney or firm to process grievances on his or her behalf, even though the attorney or firm also serves as the union's regular outside counsel and is employed at the union's suggestion; or

- The legal services provided by the attorney or firm are wholly unrelated to the collective bargaining process, whether or not the attorney or firm is employed by the union.

If either of these immunity exceptions apply, this form should not be used.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Immunity of Attorney Retained in Collective Bargaining Process by Union

In Aragon v. Pappy, Kaplon, Vogel & Phillips (1989) 214 Cal. App. 3d 451, 463, 262 Cal. Rptr. 646 , plaintiff, a discharged employee, brought an action against a law firm and attorney retained by her union to represent its members in grievance and arbitration proceedings as provided by a collective bargaining agreement. The complaint included allegations of professional malpractice. The defendants moved for summary judgment, contending that the immunity from individual liability generally provided to union members, officials, and agents pursuant to 29 U.S.C.S. § 185(b) is available to attorneys and law firms on retainer to unions in a cause of action for professional malpractice. The trial court granted the motion for summary judgment and entered judgment accordingly. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment. The court followed Peterson v. Kennedy (9th Cir. 1985) 771 F.2d 1244, 1256 , in which the Ninth Circuit held that under 29 U.S.C.S. § 185(b), attorneys who perform services for and on behalf of a union may not be held liable in malpractice to individual grievants when the services the attorneys perform constitute a part of the collective bargaining process (214 Cal. App. 3d 451, 460) . The attorney defendants in Peterson were in-house counsel, rather than hired on retainer, but the court found this difference would not make the immunity doctrine inapplicable in the instant case. The court rejected plaintiff's contention that attorney immunity would unduly interfere with the state interest in protecting citizens from the harm caused by negligent attorneys; the court stated that nothing in the Peterson case would prevent a dissatisfied union member from complaining to the State Bar regarding negligent acts. Furthermore, in egregious situations related to the collective bargaining process, the union member may bring an action against the union, which may in turn sue its counsel (214 Cal. App. 3d 451, 463) .

§ 24A.31 Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] in Legal Malpractice Action--By Defendant--No Recovery for Emotional Distress Damages When Malpractice Results in Only Economic Loss

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

A CLIENT MAY NOT RECOVER EMOTIONAL DISTRESS DAMAGES FOR ATTORNEY MALPRACTICE CAUSING ONLY ECONOMIC LOSS.

No Recovery for Emotional Distress Damages When Attorney Malpractice Results in Only Economic Loss. Emotional distress damages are not recoverable in an attorney malpractice action alleging only economic loss regardless of whether the malpractice occurred in the context of litigation or tax advice (Camenisch v. Superior Court (1996) 44 Cal. App. 4th 1689, 1691, 52 Cal. Rptr. 2d 450).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a defendant's contention in a legal malpractice action that a plaintiff may not recover emotional distress damages where the malpractice leads only to economic loss.

This form may be combined with points pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that plaintiff may not recover emotional distress damages, for example in a general demurrer or motion for summary judgment. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss evidence of the type of loss sustained by plaintiff [see Camenisch v. Superior Court (1996) 44 Cal. App. 4th 1689, 1693, 52 Cal. Rptr. 2d 450] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Recovery for Emotional Distress Damages When Attorney Malpractice Results in Only Economic Loss

In Camenisch v. Superior Court (1996) 44 Cal. App. 4th 1689, 52 Cal. Rptr. 2d 450 , a client brought an action for negligent infliction of emotional distress and legal malpractice against an attorney. Plaintiff had hired defendant to prepare trust and estate documents, including a life insurance trust in favor of his daughters, and informed defendant that he wanted to ensure financial security for his wife and daughters and that he did not want the proceeds to become a taxable part of his estate. Defendant prepared the life insurance trust, and assured plaintiff that the proceeds would not be taxed. When plaintiff discovered that the trust was incorrectly formed and estate taxes would result he sued for emotional distress damages. Defendant demurred, but the trial court overruled the demurrer.

The court of appeal disagreed, and issued a writ of mandate to strike all allegations directed toward emotional distress. The court held that the law does not recognize a protectable interest in freedom from the emotional distress involved in paying taxes, even if the taxes might have been avoided by skilled legal advice and drafting. Therefore, a lawyer may not be held liable for the emotional distress of a client who learns that the attorney's negligence may have thwarted the client's tax avoidance goal. The fact that the alleged negligence did not take place in a litigation context did not defeat the general rule that emotional distress damages are not recoverable for attorney malpractice when the malpractice leads only to economic loss (44 Cal. App. 4th 1689, 1691) .

§ 24A.32 Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] in Legal Malpractice Action--By Defendant--No Cause of Action Against Criminal Defense Attorney Absent Proof That Plaintiff Was Not Guilty in Prior Criminal Action

[Caption. See § 24A.20.]

THE COURT SHOULD GRANT SUMMARY JUDGMENT IN FAVOR OF DEFENDANT BECAUSE PLAINTIFF HAS FAILED TO PROVE HIS/HER FACTUAL INNOCENCE OF THE CRIME FOR WHICH HE/SHE WAS CHARGED IN THE PRIOR CRIMINAL ACTION.

A. Summary Judgment. [See § 24A.20 Paragraph A].

B. Elements Required for Cause of Action. [See § 24A.20, Paragraph B.]

C. Plaintiff Must Show Factual Innocence of Criminal Charges in Prior Action. In order for a former criminal defendant to establish a legal malpractice action against his or her criminal defense attorney, plaintiff must prove, by a preponderance of the evidence, not only that the former attorney was negligent, but that plaintiff was innocent of the criminal charges (Wiley v. County of San Diego (1998) 19 Cal. 4th 532, 545, 79 Cal. Rptr. 2d 672, 966 P.2d 983).

D. Plaintiff Must Obtain Reversal or Other Postconviction Relief in Underlying Criminal Action. To establish factual innocence of the underlying criminal charges and successfully pursue a malpractice action against a criminal defense attorney, an individual convicted of a criminal offense must first obtain reversal of the conviction or other exoneration by postconviction relief (Coscia v. McKenna & Cuneo (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 1194, 1201, 108 Cal. Rptr. 2d 471, 25 P.3d 670).

[Optional] E. Plaintiff's Showing of Factual Innocence Extends to Lesser-Included Offenses. The factual innocence requirement applies not just to the criminal charges actually brought against the criminal defendant, but to lesser-included criminal offenses as well (Sangha v. LaBarbera (2006) 146 Cal. App. 4th 79, 88, 52 Cal. Rptr. 3d 640).

[Optional] F. Plaintiff's Required Showing of Factual Innocence and Exoneration Extends to Transactionally Related Offenses. The factual innocence and exoneration requirement applies not just to the criminal actually brought against the criminal defendant, but to all transactionally related offenses stemming from the same criminal event, even those that do not necessarily qualify as lesser-included offenses (Wilkinson v. Zelen (2008) 167 Cal. App. 4th 37, 48, 83 Cal. Rptr. 3d 779).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted by defendant in support of a motion for summary judgment in an action for damages based on defendant's alleged malpractice in defending plaintiff in a prior criminal action. They are for use when the plaintiff has failed to meet his or her burden of showing, by a preponderance of evidence, that he or she was not in fact guilty.

This form may be modified for use in another procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. In particular, counsel should include specific facts showing that a reasonable cause exists to believe that the plaintiff committed the offense for which he or she was arrested, and should argue that plaintiff's opposing papers fail to meet his or her burden to show his or her innocence of the charges by a preponderance of evidence.

In supporting or opposing a motion for summary judgment, it is necessary to produce evidentiary facts that support or oppose a finding that there is triable issue as to any material fact [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]. Thus counsel for the moving party must submit a statement of undisputed facts supported by cognizable evidence in the form of a request for judicial notice or one or more affidavits or declarations. Affidavits or declarations supply facts that are within the personal knowledge of the affiant or declarant [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702], and may also provide the necessary foundation for any accompanying discovery documents or other documentary evidence attached in the form of an exhibit. References to exhibits and declarations must reference the number or letter of the exhibit, the specific page, and, if applicable, the paragraph or line number [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113(k)].

Although the issue of a plaintiff's factual innocence of the earlier criminal charges may be decided by a court on summary judgment if there are no triable issues of fact, the plaintiff otherwise has the right to have a jury determination of the issue [Salisbury v. County of Orange (2005) 131 Cal. App. 4th 756, 764-766, 31 Cal. Rptr. 3d 831] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff Must Show Factual Innocence of Criminal Charges in Prior Action

In Wiley v. County of San Diego (1998) 19 Cal. 4th 532, 79 Cal. Rptr. 2d 672, 966 P.2d 983 , plaintiff was a former criminal defendant whose conviction for battery resulted in a four-year prison sentence that was eventually overturned through a petition for habeas corpus. The evidence supporting the petition demonstrated that a key witness for the prosecution in the underlying criminal action had lied in testifying that plaintiff was at the scene of the battery and that the public defender assigned to plaintiff had failed to interview witnesses that would have testified that someone other than plaintiff had been at the scene of the alleged battery and been shouting at the victim. Following the invalidation of plaintiff's conviction, plaintiff brought a legal malpractice action against the public defender and the county. Prior to trial, the court determined that plaintiff's innocence was not an issue and refused to require proof on the matter or submit the issue to the jury, who subsequently found in favor of the plaintiff. The defendants challenged the ruling on the issue of actual innocence, citing Tibor v. Superior Court (1997) 52 Cal. App. 4th 1359, 61 Cal. Rptr. 2d 326 [see § 24A.32[4]], in which the court of appeal concluded that a former criminal defendant must prove his or her innocence of the underlying criminal charges in order to prove proximate causation in a legal malpractice action against the defense attorney in the criminal action. The court of appeal reversed the judgment on evidentiary grounds unrelated to the issue of the plaintiff's actual innocence, but rejected the argument that plaintiff was required to prove his actual innocence of the criminal charges in order to recover for legal malpractice. The Supreme Court granted review to resolve the dispute between the court of appeal decision and the decision in Tibor.

The Supreme Court affirmed the court of appeal's decision to reverse the trial court judgment, but did so by holding that in an attorney malpractice action involving an underlying criminal defense, the malpractice plaintiff must prove by a preponderance of the evidence his or her actual innocence as a necessary element of the cause of action (19 Cal. 4th 532, 545) . The Supreme Court noted that the clear majority of courts in other jurisdictions that had considered the issue had required proof of actual innocence in criminal malpractice actions as an additional element of the cause of action and that common to these court decisions was a public policy concern with preventing a guilty criminal defendant from recovering in a civil malpractice action. In reaching its decision, the Supreme Court found compelling this policy concern with preventing a factually guilty criminal defendant from benefiting from his or her wrongful actions and concluded that only an innocent person wrongly convicted due to inadequate representation has suffered a compensable injury (19 Cal. 4th 532, 538-539) .

The Court recognized that guilty criminal defendants who are harmed by their attorney's negligence in ways other than conviction, such as through the imposition of a longer sentence, would be without a civil remedy for that negligence. However, the Court noted that in the this context, the criminal defendant's own criminal act remains the ultimate source of his or her predicament irrespective of counsel's subsequent negligence (19 Cal. 4th 532, 540) . The Court also noted that procedural protections designed to protect a criminal defendant's constitutional rights, while afforded to protect and vindicate fundamental values, are not intended to confer direct benefit outside the context of the criminal justice system. Thus, a criminal defense attorney's negligent failure to secure an acquittal for a guilty defendant does not give rise to civil liability, although post-conviction criminal procedures might offer relief (19 Cal. 4th 532, 541-543) .

The Court distinguished the alternative remedies available to a defendant in a criminal case from the lack of alternative remedies when the malpractice takes place in a civil case. The Court also noted the fact that while damages in the civil context are usually easily translated into money damages, that is not the case when the malpractice occurs in the criminal context (19 Cal. 4th 532, 543) . Finally, the Court reinforced its decision by noting the pragmatic difficulties that would accompany an attempt to prove causation if the plaintiff's actual innocence were not an element. Without that requirement, a plaintiff would be required to "prove by a preponderance of the evidence that, but for the negligence of [his or her] attorney, the jury could not have found [the plaintiff] guilty beyond a reasonable doubt" (19 Cal. 4th

[b] Plaintiff Must Obtain Reversal or Other Postconviction Relief in Underlying Criminal Action

In Coscia v. McKenna & Cuneo (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 1194, 108 Cal. Rptr. 2d 471, 25 P.3d 670 , the plaintiff was an attorney indicted on federal charges of securities fraud and related offenses. During plea negotiations, he discussed with his attorney the possibility of offering the government information about another ongoing securities fraud scheme in exchange for the prosecutor's agreement to a misdemeanor plea. However, his attorney advised him not to make the offer, stating that it would not be worth her time to even discuss it with the prosecutor. Relying on his attorney's advice, the plaintiff did not make the offer and instead accepted a felony plea offer. He was then sentenced to two years' probation and fined $5,000. Following the conviction, his license to practice law in California was suspended, causing him economic and emotional damage. The plaintiff then learned, through discussions with a U.S. Attorney and an F.B.I. agent, that his attorney had made a mistake by not offering the plaintiff's information in exchange for a better plea, because plea deals such as the plaintiff proposed were commonly made. The plaintiff then brought a malpractice suit against the attorney and her firm. The defendants successfully demurred without leave to amend on the grounds that the plaintiff's criminal conviction precluded relief in the malpractice action, based on principles of collateral estoppel. The court of appeal reversed, holding that a plaintiff in a criminal malpractice action who pleaded guilty to the underlying offense is not collaterally estopped from proving actual innocence.

The California Supreme Court agreed that the trial court's ruling should be reversed, but disagreed with the analysis of the court of appeal. The Court first reviewed its earlier analysis in Wiley v. County of San Diego (1998) 19 Cal. 4th 532, 79 Cal. Rptr. 2d 672, 966 P.2d 983 [see § 24A.32[3][a]]. Then, addressing a point explicitly left unanswered in Wiley, the Court held that an individual convicted of a criminal offense must obtain reversal of the conviction, or other exoneration by postconviction relief, to establish actual innocence in a criminal malpractice case. The Court noted that the public policy considerations reviewed in Wiley require that only an innocent person who is wrongly convicted be deemed to have suffered legally compensable harm (25 Cal. 4th 1194, 1201) . The Court reasoned that an individual who was convicted and has not obtained postconviction relief should not be permitted to shift responsibility for his or her predicament to the former defense counsel. The Court also briefly noted other policy concerns that supported their holding: protection against inconsistent verdicts, such as might result if a legal malpractice judgment were won by the plaintiff while his or her criminal conviction remained intact; promotion of judicial economy by eliminating frivolous malpractice actions if postconviction relief is denied; and encouraging the representation of criminal defendants by reducing the risk of baseless malpractice actions (25 Cal. 4th 1194, 1204) . Thus, an intact conviction, regardless of whether it results from a trial or a plea of guilty or nolo contendere, bars proof of actual innocence in a legal malpractice action even if ordinary collateral estoppel principles might not otherwise be controlling (25 Cal. 4th 1194, 1204-1205) . The Court suggested that the requisite postconviction relief may be in the form of acquittal after retrial, reversal on appeal with directions to dismiss, reversal followed by the People's refusal to continue the prosecution, or a grant of habeas corpus relief (25 Cal. 4th 1194, 1205) .

After holding that the plaintiff was still required to comply with the applicable limitations period (25 Cal. 4th 1194, 1210-1211) , the Court remanded to the trial court to allow the plaintiff to attempt to amend his pleading to allege actual innocence, because the complaint in the case was filed before the Supreme Court's opinion in Wiley (25 Cal. 4th 1194, 1211) .

[c] Plaintiff's Showing of Factual Innocence Extends to Lesser-Included Offenses

In Sangha v. LaBarbera (2006) 146 Cal. App. 4th 79, 52 Cal. Rptr. 3d 640 , plaintiff was charged with making a felony criminal threat and misdemeanor violations for vandalism and petty theft after an altercation with his girlfriend. On the advice of his attorney, plaintiff accepted a plea bargain under which he would plead guilty to felony vandalism and be placed on probation for three years, after which the felony conviction would be changed to a misdemeanor and cold be expunged from his record. When plaintiff was subsequently unable to renew his license to deal securities because of the felony conviction, he hired new counsel. This attorney successfully convinced a court to set aside the felony conviction and enter a misdemeanor conviction instead, which was eventually expunged. Plaintiff then sued his original attorney for malpractice, but the trial court granted summary judgment for the attorney. The trial court concluded that plaintiff failed to raise a triable issue as to his actual innocence and postconviction exoneration. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. Plaintiff had argued that he was only required to show that he was factually innocent of felony vandalism, which required destruction of property worth at least $400. The court disagreed, holding that plaintiff was required to show that he was factually innocent of the lesser-included offense of misdemeanor vandalism, which applies when the property damage is less than $400 but is otherwise the same crime. The court noted that the factual innocence requirement is designed to limit malpractice damages to those criminal defendants who are factually innocent of any criminal conduct. Plaintiff conceded that he was guilty of misdemeanor vandalism, disputing only the value of the damage, and as such he could not prove his factual innocence (146 Cal. App. 4th 79, 88-89) .

[d] Plaintiff's Required Showing of Factual Innocence and Exoneration Extends to Transactionally Related Offenses

In Wilkinson v. Zelen (2008) 167 Cal. App. 4th 37, 48, 83 Cal. Rptr. 3d 779 , a criminal defendant was convicted by a jury of felony battery on a custodial officer, misdemeanor driving under the influence, and failing to stop at the scene of an accident. She filed a direct appeal and a petition for writ of habeas corpus, arguing that her attorney had been incompetent in providing representation to her. Her convictions were affirmed on direct appeal, but her petition for writ of habeas corpus based on ineffective assistance of counsel was successful, resulting in the vacating of her three convictions. Pursuant to a plea bargain, she then entered no contest pleas to two misdemeanor counts, one for driving under the influence and one for interference with an officer in the performance of his or her duties, and given probation. She then sued her defense attorney for malpractice. The trial court sustained defendant's demurrer without leave to amend, concluding that plaintiff had shown neither factual innocence of all criminal charges relating to the action nor exoneration. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court first concluded that plaintiff could not allege factual innocence under the Wiley standard described in [3][a], above. The court noted that plaintiff had entered no contest pleas to two misdemeanors in order to compromise the charges that were the basis for her earlier convictions, a result inconsistent with factual innocence. Moreover, the court also noted that no court had ever suggested that plaintiff was factually innocent of any of the charged offenses, including the original felony charge of battery on a custodial officer (167 Cal. App. 4th 37, 46) . Relying in part on the rationale of Sangha v. LaBarbera, discussed in [3][c], above, the court next held that the factual innocence and exoneration requirements applied to all transactionally related offenses, even those that failed to qualify as necessarily lesser-included offenses. Because plaintiff pleaded no contest to two misdemeanors that were transactionally related to the felony charge of battery in order to settle the criminal action, plaintiff could not plead exoneration from all criminal charges stemming from that one criminal event. The court noted that plaintiff had received appropriate relief from her attorney's alleged negligence when she was successful on her habeas petition and eventually received a lighter punishment (167 Cal. App. 4th 37, 48) .

[a] Plaintiff Must Show Factual Innocence of Criminal Charges in Prior Action

In Tibor v. Superior Court (1997) 52 Cal. App. 4th 1359, 61 Cal. Rptr. 2d 326 , plaintiff, a criminal defendant, brought a legal malpractice action against his former public defender. The charges against plaintiff in the underlying action had ultimately been dismissed, but plaintiff sought damages for his alleged 655 days in jail between the time of his arrest and his release upon dismissal. The malpractice action was based on two theories. The first was that defendant was negligent in failing to timely request DNA testing of plaintiff, and the second was that defendant was negligent in failing to act more quickly in locating and interviewing alibi witnesses. Defendant moved for summary judgment. The trial court denied the motion, finding that a triable issue of material fact existed as to whether defendant had been negligent in representing plaintiff. Defendant then filed a petition for writ of mandate, which was denied by the court of appeal. Defendant sought review in the Supreme Court, which issued an order directing the appeals court to vacate its order denying the writ petition and to set the matter for hearing.

The court of appeal granted the writ and directed the trial court to set aside its order denying defendant's summary judgment motion and to enter a new order granting the motion. Defendant argued on review that he was entitled to summary judgment on either or both of two theories: (1) he had not breached his duty of care; (2) alternatively, even if he had been negligent, there was no proximate cause between his acts and defendant's resulting harm in the absence of a showing by plaintiff that he was innocent of the charges brought against him. The court concluded as to the first theory that there was a triable issue of fact regarding defendant's negligence. But the court accepted defendant's alternative theory and held, as a matter of sound public policy, that a former criminal defendant, in order to establish proximate cause in a legal malpractice action against his or her former criminal defense attorney, must prove by a preponderance of the evidence not only that the former attorney was negligent, but also that the plaintiff was innocent of the criminal charges against him or her (52 Cal. App. 4th 1359, 1373) .

§ 24A.33 Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] in Legal Malpractice Action--By Defendant--Collateral Estoppel Bars Action Based on Same Facts Determined in Prior Proceeding

[Caption. See § 24A.20.]

THE COURT SHOULD GRANT DEFENDANT'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT, BECAUSE UNDISPUTED FACTS SHOW THAT PLAINTIFF'S ALLEGATIONS OF DEFENDANT'S PROFESSIONAL NEGLIGENCE ARE BASED ON FACTS IDENTICAL TO THOSE PREVIOUSLY DETERMINED IN A PRIOR PROCEEDING AND PLAINTIFF IS THEREFORE BARRED FROM PROSECUTING THE PRESENT ACTION.

A. Elements of Collateral Estoppel. Collateral estoppel bars relitigation of an issue decided at a prior proceeding if (1) the issue necessarily decided at the prior proceeding is identical to the one sought to be relitigated, (2) the previous proceeding resulted in a final judgment on the merits, and (3) the party against whom collateral estoppel is asserted was a party or in privity with a party at the prior proceeding (Mooney v. Caspari (2006) 138 Cal. App. 4th 704, 717, 41 Cal. Rptr. 3d 728).

[Optional] B. Privity Defined. A party is in privity with another if the two share a mutual or successive relationship to the same rights of property, or if there is such an identification in interest of one person with another as to represent the same legal rights (Mooney v. Caspari (2006) 138 Cal. App. 4th 704, 718, 41 Cal. Rptr. 3d 728).

[Optional] C. Collateral Estoppel Proper When Malpractice Complaint Is Based on Same Factual Allegations of Attorney Neglect That Were Determined In Prior Habeas Corpus Proceeding. If a plaintiff's civil malpractice complaint is based on the same factual allegations of attorney neglect which were actually determined against the plaintiff after a full evidentiary hearing in a prior habeas corpus proceeding, the action is barred by collateral estoppel (Younan v. Caruso (1996) 51 Cal. App. 4th 401, 414, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 103).

[Optional] D. Court Approval of Settlement Procedures in Class Action Will Collaterally Estop Class Member From Suing for Insufficient Settlement Notification Procedures. When, after a class action has settled, a member of the plaintiff class sues class counsel for negligence, collateral estoppel will defeat any malpractice claim based on the alleged insufficiency of the settlement notification procedures utilized, at least when the trial court approved the final settlement and notice procedures after providing class members an opportunity to object (Martorana v. Marlin & Saltzman (2009) 175 Cal. App. 4th 685, 694-697, 96 Cal. Rptr. 3d 172).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted by defendant in support of a motion for summary judgment in an action for damages based on defendant's alleged legal malpractice. They are for use when the plaintiff's action is based on facts that were fully determined in a prior proceeding.

This form may be modified for use in another procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue. For example, they may be modified to support a motion to dismiss, the procedural device used by the defendant in Younan v. Caruso (1996) 51 Cal. App. 4th 401, 414, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 103 , or to support a demurrer when the prior proceeding is subject to judicial notice and determined issues identical to those alleged in the complaint. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. In particular, counsel should show that the prior proceeding determined legal issues identical to those raised in the malpractice action, that the standard of proof in both proceedings were the same, and that the decision against plaintiff in the prior proceeding was final as to the facts adjudicated [see Younan v. Caruso (1996) 51 Cal. App. 4th 401, 414, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 103] .

In supporting or opposing a motion for summary judgment, it is necessary to produce evidentiary facts that support or oppose a finding that there is triable issue as to any material fact [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]. Thus counsel for the moving party must submit a statement of undisputed facts supported by cognizable evidence in the form of a request for judicial notice or one or more affidavits or declarations. Affidavits or declarations supply facts that are within the personal knowledge of the affiant or declarant [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702], and may also provide the necessary foundation for any accompanying discovery documents or other documentary evidence attached in the form of an exhibit. References to exhibits and declarations must reference the number or letter of the exhibit, the specific page, and, if applicable, the paragraph or line number [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113(k) . In this case, the evidentiary facts will necessarily be based on copies of relevant portions of the prior proceeding, attached to a separate request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 452; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 3.1113(l), 3.1306(c)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Elements of Collateral Estoppel

In Mooney v. Caspari (2006) 138 Cal. App. 4th 704, 41 Cal. Rptr. 3d 728 , the plaintiff was a real estate broker who lost a large potential commission when a real estate development project fell through because the city failed to agree to a freeway interchange to be built adjacent to the planned development. Without the freeway interchange, the landowner pulled out of a joint venture agreement with a real estate developer to develop the land for commercial office space. The landowner subsequently filed for bankruptcy and sought to quiet title to the property, which the developer opposed unsuccessfully, with substantial participation from the real estate broker. While this was proceeding, the developer's contractual right to develop the property expired. The developer then brought a legal malpractice action against the attorney who handled the bankruptcy action, and although the real estate broker was not a plaintiff in this action, once again he participated extensively. After trial on the merits, the attorney was found not liable for malpractice. The real estate broker then sued the attorney who prosecuted the legal malpractice action for failing to prosecute a legal malpractice action on his behalf against the developer's former attorney. A jury awarded $1.5 million to the broker, and the attorney appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that the doctrine of collateral estoppel prevented the broker from proving any damages from the lost legal malpractice claim. The court reaffirmed the traditional formulation for application of collateral estoppel, which may be used to bar relitigation of an issue decided at a prior proceeding if (1) the issue necessarily decided at the prior proceeding is identical to the one sought to be relitigated, (2) the previous proceeding resulted in a final judgment on the merits, and (3) the party against whom collateral estoppel is asserted was a party or in privity with a party at the prior proceeding (138 Cal. App. 4th 704, 717) .

[b] Privity Defined

The factual and procedural background of Mooney v. Caspari (2006) 138 Cal. App. 4th 704, 41 Cal. Rptr. 3d 728 , is described in § 24A.33[3][a]. The court of appeal recognized that the real estate broker was not a party to the earlier legal malpractice action against the developer's former attorney. However, the court concluded that the broker was in privity with the developer, because privity occurs if two parties share a mutual or successive relationship to the same rights of property, or if there is such an identification in interest of one person with another as to represent the same legal rights. The court noted that the real estate broker participated extensively in assisting the developer, and that the two parties shared virtually the same interest in preventing the landowner from backing out of the development project. The court concluded that because the developer's former attorney was found not liable for malpractice, any action against the developer's current attorney based on failure to file a malpractice action against the former attorney would fail for lack of damages. Although the broker was not a party to the developer's malpractice action, the broker's interest in the litigation was interconnected with the developer's to such a close degree that the broker was in privity with the developer, and application of collateral estoppel was therefore appropriate (138 Cal. App. 4th 704, 718-721) .

[c] Collateral Estoppel Proper When Malpractice Complaint Is Based on Same Factual Allegations of Attorney Neglect That Were Determined In Prior Habeas Corpus Proceeding

In Younan v. Caruso (1996) 51 Cal. App. 4th 401, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 103 , plaintiff, who was convicted of molesting his stepdaughter, sued defendant, the lawyer who defended him in that criminal prosecution, for legal malpractice in connection with the lawyer's defense of the molestation charge. The complaint alleged that (1) defendant failed to investigate the charges and to call professional witnesses on plaintiff's behalf, (2) defendant negligently and carelessly failed to interview witnesses to support the position of the plaintiff and to investigate the claim of the prosecution or to call witnesses to testify on plaintiff's behalf. Defendant moved to dismiss on the ground that the earlier denial of plaintiff's habeas corpus petition, based on a constitutional claim of ineffective assistance of counsel, collaterally estopped plaintiff from relitigating the issue of defendant's competence. The trial court granted defendant's motion to dismiss. Plaintiff appealed, contending that collateral estoppel did not apply because the standards and burdens of proof placed on him in connection with his habeas corpus petition were far greater than those required to prove a claim for simple negligence.

The court of appeal affirmed the order of the trial court, holding that where a plaintiff's civil malpractice complaint is based on the same factual allegations of attorney neglect which were actually determined against the plaintiff after a full evidentiary hearing in a prior habeas corpus proceeding, the action is barred by collateral estoppel (51 Cal. App. 4th 401, 414) . The court first determined that the habeas standard for gauging the effectiveness of trial counsel was the same as in a legal malpractice action, whether counsel performed as a reasonable lawyer would have under prevailing professional norms. Next it determined that the threshold requirements of collateral estoppel were met: plaintiff was a party to both actions; the burden of proof on the issue of counsel's effectiveness and the legal issues raised at the habeas corpus hearing were the same as those raised in plaintiff's legal malpractice complaint; and the decision denying plaintiff's request for habeas relief was final as to the facts adjudicated. As to the final judgment requirement the court acknowledged that an order denying a habeas corpus writ is not res judicata. However, given the judicially created policy against repetitious habeas corpus petitions, the decision denying plaintiff's writ request was, for all intents and purposes, final. Lastly, the court stated that there were a number of policy reasons for application of collateral estoppel in this case: the specter of inconsistent verdicts, should plaintiff prevail on his malpractice claim, would cast great doubt on the fact-finding process by which the trial court determined that defendant's trial conduct was competent; and allowing the malpractice claim would run counter to the policy prohibiting successive habeas petitions based on factual allegations already determined in prior habeas proceedings. On the other hand, disallowing the malpractice claim promoted the important policy of judicial economy by eliminating repetitive litigation (51 Cal. App. 4th 401, 413-414) .

[d] Court Approval of Settlement Procedures in Class Action Will Collaterally Estop Class Member From Suing for Insufficient Settlement Notification Procedures

In Martorana v. Marlin & Saltzman (2009) 175 Cal. App. 4th 685, 96 Cal. Rptr. 3d 172 , plaintiff was a member of a plaintiff class in an earlier class action brought against an insurance company for the company's failure to pay overtime pay and related penalties. Class counsel negotiated a settlement in that suit, which the trial court approved after a fairness hearing, and claim notices were mailed to all class members at their most recent addresses. Plaintiff, who would have received $65,000 under the terms of the settlement, failed to submit a claim by the deadline imposed and was denied his share of the recovery. Although he admitted that he received the settlement notification and claims form, plaintiff had recently been diagnosed with cancer and was feeling the physical effects of his disease and treatment, causing him to neglect his obligation to respond to the notification or return the claim form in the allotted time. Plaintiff then sued the attorneys who represented the plaintiff class, alleging that they were negligent in failing to negotiate a settlement notification procedure under which class counsel would be notified before the claim filing deadline as to which class members had not responded, so that counsel could then contact those members to determine why they had not responded. Plaintiff also alleged counsel could be held liable for failing to contact him personally once counsel knew or should have known that he had not submitted a timely claim form. The trial court sustained class counsels' demurrer without leave to amend. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the sustaining of the demurrer. The court held that the doctrine of collateral estoppel defeated plaintiff's claim that class counsel could be liable for failing to negotiate a different notification procedure. The court noted that the trial court in the underlying class action held a fairness hearing before approving the settlement, which necessarily meant that the court found that the notice procedure used by the parties complied with the requirements of due process and that the settlement itself was fair, adequate, and reasonable. Plaintiff had an opportunity to file a written objection to the settlement or the notice procedures and appear at the fairness hearing, but he failed to do so. Under those circumstances, the court held that plaintiff was estopped from relitigating the sufficiency of the settlement notification in his subsequent negligence suit. The court also concluded that allowing a malpractice claim challenging the adequacy of a judicially approved notice of settlement would undermine the authority of the trial court to determine the form and content of the notice to class members (175 Cal. App. 4th 685, 694-697) . The court also rejected plaintiff's claim that class attorneys utilizing an approved procedure for providing mass notification of settlement claims procedures to class members have an additional duty to follow up with individual class members who do not respond by the deadline for doing so (175 Cal. App. 4th 685, 697).

§ 24A.34 Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] in Legal Malpractice Action--By Defendant--Outside Counsel Hired by Corporation Not Subject to Derivative Malpractice Suit Brought by Shareholder

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

A SHAREHOLDER OF A CORPORATION MAY NOT BRING A DERIVATIVE ACTION FOR MALPRACTICE AGAINST OUTSIDE COUNSEL HIRED BY THE CORPORATION, BECAUSE THE CORPORATE CLIENT HOLDS THE ATTORNEY-CLIENT PRIVILEGE AND IN THE ABSENCE OF A WAIVER OF THE PRIVILEGE BY THE CORPORATION, THE ATTORNEY SUED BY SHAREHOLDERS WOULD BE PREVENTED FROM MOUNTING ANY MEANINGFUL DEFENSE TO THE MALPRACTICE CLAIM FOR ACTIONS TAKEN WHILE REPRESENTING THE CORPORATION.

Shareholder May Not Prosecute Derivative Malpractice Suit Against Outside Corporate Counsel. A shareholder of a corporation may not bring a derivative action for malpractice against outside counsel hired by the corporation, because the corporate client holds the attorney-client privilege and in the absence of a waiver of the privilege by the corporation, the attorney sued by shareholders would be prevented from mounting any meaningful defense to the malpractice claim for actions taken while representing the corporation (McDermott, Will & Emery v. Superior Court (2000) 83 Cal. App. 4th 378, 384-385, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 622).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted to support the contention that a shareholder of a corporation may not bring a shareholder derivative action for malpractice against outside counsel hired by the corporation. This contention is based on the fact that the corporate client holds the attorney-client privilege, and in the absence of a waiver of the privilege by the corporation, the attorney sued by shareholders would be prevented from mounting any meaningful defense to the malpractice claim for actions taken while representing the corporation.

This form may be combined with points relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue that a malpractice action brought by a stockholder may not be maintained against outside counsel. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include facts showing that the attorney was representing the corporation and that the corporation has not waived the attorney-client privilege with respect to that representation.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Shareholder May Not Prosecute Derivative Malpractice Suit Against Outside Corporate Counsel

In McDermott, Will & Emery v. Superior Court (2000) 83 Cal. App. 4th 378, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 622 , five shareholders of a corporation with approximately 1,200 shareholders brought a derivative action against a law firm for alleged malpractice in representing the corporation. Before discovery was commenced, the law firm filed a motion for judgment on the pleadings, arguing that the derivative action against outside counsel constituted an impermissible assignment of the malpractice action and was against public policy because it required the firm to defend the malpractice action without the ability to disclose privileged information in connection with that defense. The trial court denied the motion for judgment on the pleadings. The law firm petitioned for writ of mandate.

The court of appeal issued a peremptory writ directing the trial court to vacate its order and enter a new order granting judgment on the pleadings. The court first held that because the cause of action in a shareholder derivative suit belongs to and remains with the corporation, allowing the derivative suit does not constitute an impermissible assignment of the malpractice action to dissident shareholders (83 Cal. App. 4th 378, 382) . The court also held that the business judgment rule did not necessarily preclude the action (83 Cal. App. 4th 378, 382-383) . However, the court nonetheless concluded that due to concerns over the attorney-client privilege, a shareholder may not bring a derivative action for malpractice against outside counsel hired by the corporation. Because the attorney-client privilege is held not by shareholders, but by the corporate client, in the absence of a waiver of the privilege by the corporation, the attorney sued by shareholders would be prevented from mounting any meaningful defense to the malpractice claim for actions taken while representing the corporation (83 Cal. App. 4th 378, 383-385) .

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF'S LEGAL MALPRACTICE ACTION IS BARRED BY PUBLIC POLICY BECAUSE EVEN IF DEFENDANT PROVIDED ERRONEOUS LEGAL ADVICE TO PLAINTIFF, PLAINTIFF CANNOT RECOVER DAMAGES SUSTAINED IF PLAINTIFF'S UNDERLYING CONDUCT CONSTITUTED A CRIME.

Malpractice Action Not Permitted if Plaintiff's Conduct Was Criminal. Public policy prohibits a plaintiff from pursuing a legal malpractice action if the receipt of bad legal advice led to the commission of a crime by the plaintiff (Chapman v. Superior Court (2005) 130 Cal. App. 4th 261, 276-277, 29 Cal. Rptr. 3d 852).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted by the defendant in a legal malpractice action if the plaintiff seeks to recover for damages sustained from the plaintiff's own criminal conduct, even though the defendant's legal advice may have prompted the commission of the crime.

This form may be combined with points pertaining to the specific procedural context in which these points are raised, such as a motion for summary judgment. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Thus, for example, counsel should include facts showing that plaintiff is seeking to recover damages caused by plaintiff's own criminal conduct.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Malpractice Action Not Permitted When Plaintiff's Conduct Was Criminal

In Chapman v. Superior Court (2005) 130 Cal. App. 4th 261, 29 Cal. Rptr. 3d 852 , the plaintiff was a former public official pursuing a legal malpractice action against counsel for the public board on which the plaintiff formerly served. While serving as a board member, the plaintiff was a founding member of a firm that entered into contracts with energy companies and communities that wanted to decommission aging power plants. The plaintiff's firm entered into a contract with a specific energy company under which the firm was paid $20,000 per month, during a period in which that energy company was also involved in contracts with the plaintiff's public board. The plaintiff disclosed this conflict of interest to the attorney serving as the public board's counsel, and this attorney advised the plaintiff that the proper course of conduct was to reveal his conflict of interest and excuse himself from any votes involving this particular energy company. However, when the plaintiff's self-serving deals became public knowledge, he was forced to resign, and he became the target of several criminal investigations by the district attorney. As a result, the plaintiff eventually pleaded guilty to a felony for having financial interests in public contracts made by the board, in willful violation of Gov. Code § 1090, under which the plaintiff should have resigned from the board when he entered into the self-serving financial deals. The plaintiff then sued the board's counsel for providing erroneous advice on how to handle the conflicts of interest. The trial court denied the defendant's motion for summary judgment, and the defendant petitioned for a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal granted the petition for writ of mandate, directing the trial court to grant the summary judgment motion. The court noted that under Gov. Code § 1090, a holder of public office is prohibited from having a financial interest in a public contract made by a board or commission of which the officer is a member. Moreover, case law had established that a public officer cannot escape liability for a violation of this statute merely by abstaining from voting or participating in discussions or negotiations. Case law had also established that reliance on the advice of counsel was not an excuse (130 Cal. App. 4th 261, 274) . The court then held that public policy prohibited the plaintiff from seeking what would amount to indemnification from the public counsel and his employer for the damages that the plaintiff sustained by virtue of his commission of a felony. The court noted that Gov. Code § 1090 was designed to serve as a disincentive to officers who might be tempted to take personal advantage of their office, and this purpose would be thwarted if the officer were allowed to recoup his or her losses attributable to a violation of the statute. The court noted that the plaintiff should have recognized the wrongfulness of his conduct when he entered into self-serving private financial contracts and failed to relinquish his seat on the board, especially in light of the fact that the plaintiff's contract with the energy company specified that the plaintiff was to place the energy company's interests ahead of any interests of the public board (130 Cal. App. 4th 261, 276-277) .

B. No Cross Complaint Against Subsequent Attorney for Indemnity. The defendant in a legal malpractice suit may not file a cross complaint for indemnity against the plaintiff's subsequent attorney who was hired to extricate plaintiff from the damage caused by defendant's negligence, because the possibility of such liability would inhibit the subsequent attorney's ability to act in the client's best interests (Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher v. Superior Court (1979) 94 Cal. App. 3d 347, 356, 156 Cal. Rptr. 326 ; Held v. Arant (1977) 67 Cal. App. 3d 748, 752, 134 Cal. Rptr. 422).

This memorandum may be submitted in a legal malpractice action by the client's subsequent attorney who is a cross defendant against whom the defendant is seeking indemnity, on the grounds that such a cross complaint is not allowed.

However, at least one later case has limited the rule stated in this form disallowing such cross complaints to cases in which the subsequent attorney was required to exercise his or her professional judgment in choosing a course of conduct to extricate the client from the first attorney's negligence [see Parker v. Morton (1981) 117 Cal. App. 3d 751, 767, 173 Cal. Rptr. 197 ; but see Holland v. Thacher (1988) 199 Cal. App. 3d 924, 934-935, 245 Cal. Rptr. 247 (rejecting Parker case as untenable departure from majority rule); see also Copenbarger v. International Ins. Co. (1996) 46 Cal. App. 4th 961, 966, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1 (although Parker has been disagreed with, it has not been overturned)].

[b] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, this form may be used to support a general demurrer to a cross complaint, or a motion for judgment on the pleadings, where it appears on the face of the cross complaint that cross defendant is an attorney, hired by the client subsequent to the first attorney's negligence.

[d] Opposing Memoranda

The points in § 24A.57 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a motion for summary judgment supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Cross Complaint Against Subsequent Attorney for Indemnity

In Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher v. Superior Court (1979) 94 Cal. App. 3d 347, 156 Cal. Rptr. 326 , plaintiff sued a debtor and the law firm which had been hired to prepare a loan transaction, for negligence in failing to provide a valid, enforceable security interest for plaintiff. Defendants cross complained against plaintiff's subsequent attorney for negligently representing plaintiff in its attempts to collect the interest, thereby contributing to plaintiff's loss. Cross defendant demurred to the cross complaint of one defendant, which was essentially the same as the other cross complaint. The trial court overruled the demurrer, and cross defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, sustaining the demurrer, and dismissing the cross complaint. It held that an attorney undertaking to represent a client who is seeking to extricate himself or herself from a prior attorney's negligence, should not be subject to cross complaints for comparative negligence by the prior attorney (94 Cal. App. 3d 347, 355) . The court reasoned that the second attorney, whose alternatives in handling the client's case may be more limited than those of the first attorney, should not be required to face potential conflicts between loyalty to the client, and the desire to protect himself or herself from exposure to a cross complaint for indemnity (94 Cal. App. 3d 347, 356) . Potential liability to a client's adversaries, including a previous attorney the client is suing for malpractice, would interfere with the second attorney's duty to follow whatever course of action he or she deemed to be in the client's best interest (94 Cal. App. 3d 347, 355, 356) .

In Held v. Arant (1977) 67 Cal. App. 3d 748, 134 Cal. Rptr. 422 , plaintiff brought a malpractice action against the attorney who represented him in dealings with a third party after the plaintiff had been sued by the third party for fraud in those dealings. The plaintiff had hired subsequent attorneys to defend him in the fraud case, which was settled. The first attorney, defendant in the malpractice suit, brought a cross complaint for indemnity against the subsequent attorneys for recommending that the client settle legally defensible claims, which injured the client and also foreseeably damaged the first attorney by exposing him to liability for malpractice. The subsequent attorneys demurred to the cross complaint, and the trial court dismissed it.

The defendant and cross complainant appealed, and the court of appeal affirmed. It held that there were two grounds on which to dismiss the cross complaint. First, an attorney may be liable for negligence only to an intended beneficiary of his or her actions, and the client's prior attorney is not an intended beneficiary (67 Cal. App. 3d 748, 751) . Therefore, there could be no liability to defendant for direct negligence by the subsequent attorneys (67 Cal. App. 3d 748, 751) . In addition, an attorney attempting to extricate a client from a prior attorney's negligence, who must choose between alternative courses of conduct in protecting the client's interest, cannot be inhibited by the possibility that he or she will be liable to the earlier attorney for making one choice over another (67 Cal. App. 3d 748, 751-752) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No Cross Complaint Against Subsequent Attorney for Indemnity

In Lewis v. Purvin (1989) 208 Cal. App. 3d 1208, 256 Cal. Rptr. 827 , the defendant in an attorney malpractice suit cross complained for equitable indemnity against his former client's attorney. The defendant claimed this attorney was "entirely or jointly responsible" for the complained-of malpractice because the attorney had represented plaintiffs as their attorney of record before, during, and after the alleged malpractice, and had failed to protect plaintiffs from the consequences of his (defendant's) advice (208 Cal. App. 3d 1208, 1214, 1215) . The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's judgment dismissing the defendant's cross complaint against the attorney (208 Cal. App. 3d 1208, 1219) .

In Holland v. Thacher (1988) 199 Cal. App. 3d 924, 245 Cal. Rptr. 247 , defendants in an attorney malpractice suit cross complained for equitable indemnity against their former client's new counsel. The trial court sustained the new counsel's demurrer, and the attorney malpractice defendants appealed. The court of appeal affirmed, deeming the order sustaining the demurrer to incorporate a judgment of dismissal (199 Cal. App. 3d 924, 927 n.1). The court held that sound public policy reasons prohibit predecessor attorneys sued for malpractice by a former client from cross complaining for equitable indemnity against a successor attorney hired to extricate the client from the condition created by the predecessor attorneys (199 Cal. App. 3d 924, 926) . The court also noted that the prohibition on cross complaints was not inconsistent with and did not violate Civ. Code § 1432, which governs the right of contribution between obligors (199 Cal. App. 3d 924, 936) . In addition, the court noted that the prohibition imposes no burden on the predecessor attorney, because he or she may assert the successor attorney's negligence as an affirmative defense (199 Cal. App. 3d 924, 929) .

Goldfisher v. Superior Court (1982) 133 Cal. App. 3d 12, 183 Cal. Rptr. 609 , was an action involving an attorney's malpractice in which the subsequently hired attorney petitioned for a writ of mandamus, directing the trial court to vacate its order overruling his general demurrer to a cross complaint for equitable indemnity filed against him by the first attorney, to sustain the demurrer without leave to amend, and to enter a judgment against the first attorney. The court of appeal granted his petition, noting that the first attorney's cross complaint was against public policy. The court stated that the consequence of allowing such cross complaints would be to corrode the sacred attributes of complete confidentiality and undivided loyalty that are the heart of the relationship between lawyer and client (133 Cal. App. 3d 12, 22) .

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to a claim for equitable indemnity in a legal malpractice action stemming from an underlying third-party action in which an insurer has provided an insured with defense counsel and also provided separate counsel either to participate in defending the action under a reservation of the insurer's rights or to monitor the action [see Civ. Code § 2860]. The grounds for the opposition to the claim for indemnity are that indemnity is not allowed between an attorney representing the interests of an insured and an associated attorney representing or protecting the interests of the insurer in the same action.

[b] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, this form may be used to support a general demurrer to a cross-complaint, or a motion for judgment on the pleadings, if it appears on the face of the cross complaint that indemnity is not permitted.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Cross Complaint for Indemnity By Insurer-Provided Defense Attorney Against Insured's Independent Counsel Not Allowed

In Kroll & Tract v. Paris & Paris (1999) 72 Cal. App. 4th 1537, 86 Cal. Rptr. 2d 78 , an insured was sued in an action in which the liability insurer provided defense counsel under a full reservation of rights under the policy, and a second law firm was associated to serve as independent counsel for the insured. Both firms actively participated in the defense until 10 days before trial, when the insured's independent counsel asked the insurer's appointed counsel to take on the full defense. The insured lost the lawsuit and sued the insurer-provided firm for allegedly mishandling the case. The second, independent law firm was not named as a defendant in the malpractice action. The insurer-provided firm filed a cross complaint for indemnity against the second law firm. That firm successfully demurred to the cross complaint on the grounds that public policy considerations barred the indemnity. The insurer-provided law firm appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court recognized the well-established exception to the ordinary rules of equitable indemnity that bars a legal malpractice defendant from seeking indemnity against the former client's successor attorney. The court then held that the policy concerns that bar an attorney from seeking indemnity from a client's successor attorney also bar an indemnity cross complaint between two independent attorneys who concurrently represented the client under the circumstances present in this case, when one attorney represented the client as a defense counsel provided by an insurance company and the other counsel represented the client as independent counsel. Under those circumstances, the loyalties of the independent counsel representing the insured are to the insured, while the loyalties of the counsel provided by the insurer run to the insurer as well as to the insured and may conflict, given the insurer's reservation of rights under the policy. Thus, according to the court of appeal, the concern with protecting both an attorney's undivided loyalty and the preservation of the attorney-client privilege caution against allowing an action for indemnity between those attorneys, even if the client's independent counsel no longer represents the client (72 Cal. App. 4th 1537, 1542-1545) . As noted by the court, if the indemnity claim were allowed, the independent counsel would be put into the position of having to defend itself without revealing client confidences that may have been revealed during the representation, in violation of the attorney-client privilege, which runs to the client rather than to the attorney (72 Cal. App. 4th 1537, 1544) .

[b] Attorney Paid by Client's Insurer Not Entitled to Indemnity From Separate Counsel Hired by Insurer to Monitor Case

In Shaffery v. Wilson, Elser, Moskowitz, Edelman & Dicker (2000) 82 Cal. App. 4th 768, 98 Cal. Rptr. 2d 419 , an insurer filed a legal malpractice action against an attorney who had been hired to defend the insured against a sexual harassment claim. Although the attorney was initially hired by the insured, defense of the underlying case was eventually tendered to the insurer, who agreed to provide a defense and subsequently entered into an agreement with the attorney for his continued representation of the insured. The insurer also hired a separate law firm to act as "monitoring counsel" for the harassment case. The underlying plaintiff won the harassment case after the insurer refused to settle the suit for an amount within the policy limits. The client filed a claim against the insurer for bad faith refusal to settle, and that action was eventually settled. The insurer then filed the legal malpractice claim. The defendant in that claim (the attorney) filed a cross-complaint for indemnity against the insurer's "monitoring counsel," alleging that if the attorney's own negligence contributed to the client's loss in the harassment suit, then so did the negligence of the monitoring counsel in failing to properly oversee the work done by the attorney. The demurrer of the monitoring firm was sustained, and the attorney appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's decision. The court first reviewed the numerous opinions that have dealt with the issue of whether an attorney sued for malpractice may seek indemnity from other attorneys for their role in causing the loss suffered by the malpractice plaintiff. The court then specifically reviewed the facts and analysis in Kroll & Tract v. Paris & Paris(1999) 72 Cal. App. 4th 1537, 86 Cal. Rptr. 2d 78 [see § 24A.36[3][a]]. The court of appeal concluded that although the parties were not in precisely the same position as the parties in Kroll & Tract, the two cases were analytically indistinguishable. Under the analysis of that earlier case, the associated counsel could not be sued for indemnity if that counsel actively participated in the underlying case. Therefore, the "monitoring counsel" in this case also could not be sued for indemnity. The court added that even if the monitoring counsel was in some fashion representing the underlying client as well as the insurer, that relationship could not support a claim for indemnity for the same reasons that a successor lawyer cannot seek indemnity from a predecessor attorney (82 Cal. App. 4th 768, 777-778) .

AN ORDER THAT DAMAGES FOR A PRIOR JUDGMENT AGAINST THE CLIENT ARE NOT ALLOWED IS PROPER, BECAUSE THE JUDGMENT WAS PAID BY AN INSURANCE COMPANY, AND CAUSED THE CLIENT NO APPRECIABLE HARM.

A. Motion for Summary Adjudication by Defendant. A defendant may move for summary adjudication as to one or more causes of action within an action, one or more claims for damages, or one or more issues of duty, if the defendant contends that the cause of action has no merit, or that there is no merit to a claim for damages, as specified in Civil Code Section 3294, or that one or more defendants did not owe a duty to plaintiff or plaintiffs. A motion for summary adjudication shall be granted only if it completely disposes of a cause of action, a claim for damages, or an issue of duty (Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f)(1), (n)).

B. Adjudication Proper When No Actual Harm. When certain alleged damages did not result in an actual loss to plaintiff, the court should grant a summary adjudication and order that the plaintiff cannot recover those damages from defendant as a matter of law (*Kirtland & Packard v. This memorandum may be submitted by defendant in support of a motion for summary adjudication of a cause of action for legal malpractice action when the plaintiff alleges an earlier judgment as damages, and that judgment was paid by an insurance company.

When appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations which support the motion [*Code Civ. [a] Motion for Summary Adjudication by Defendant

Kirtland & Packard v. Superior Court (1976) 59 Cal. App. 3d 140, 131 Cal. Rptr. 418 , is discussed in §§ 24A.27[3][a] and 24A.37[2][a]. The court of appeal issued a writ of mandate compelling the trial court to grant defendants' motion for summary adjudication of the issue that no damages were recoverable for an award of judgment against the client in an earlier action, when the judgment was paid by the client's insurance company (59 Cal. App. 3d 140, 147) . Because the insurance company had paid the damages alleged, the client suffered no appreciable harm, and the amount of judgment was therefore not a proper element of damages (59 Cal. App. 3d 140, 145, 147) .

This memorandum may be submitted by defendant in support of a motion for summary adjudication of a cause of action for legal malpractice action when the client alleges a settlement in an earlier action as damages, and that settlement was reached and paid on behalf of the client's codefendant in that action.

When appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations which support the motion [*Code Civ. The court of appeal issued a writ of mandate requiring that defendants' motion for summary adjudication be granted regarding damages for payment of a settlement agreement reached on behalf of client's codefendant in the earlier suit (*59 Cal. The amount paid in satisfaction of the settlement agreement reflected no appreciable harm to the client, because the client had never been liable for it, since the settlement was made on behalf of the codefendant only (*59 Cal. SUMMARY JUDGMENT SHOULD BE DENIED BECAUSE THERE IS A TRIABLE ISSUE OF FACT AS TO WHETHER OR NOT AN ATTORNEY-CLIENT RELATIONSHIP EXISTED WITHOUT A FORMAL AGREEMENT.

A. Rules Governing Summary Judgment Procedure. It is proper for a court to grant a motion for summary judgment only if the affidavits supporting the motion establish every element necessary to sustain a judgment in favor of the moving party and the opposing party has not presented any facts which give rise to a triable issue. In ruling on the motion, the moving party's affidavits are strictly construed, and doubts as to the propriety of granting the motion should be resolved in favor of the opposing party (Corwin v. Los Angeles Newspaper Serv. Bureau, Inc. (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 842, 851 fn. 6, 851-852, 94 Cal. Rptr. 785, 484 P.2d 953). The court may not properly grant summary judgment based on inferences reasonably deducible from the papers submitted, if such inferences are contradicted by other inferences that raise a triable issue of fact (Hepp v. Lockheed-Cal. Co. (1978) 86 Cal. App. 3d 714, 717-718, 150 Cal. Rptr. 408).

B. Moving Party's Burden to Negate Existence of Duty. On a summary judgment motion, the moving party has the burden of negating all of the opposing party's claims, and in a malpractice action, when the moving party fails to make an uncontradicted showing negating the existence of duty, summary judgment must be denied (Miller v. Metzinger (1979) 91 Cal. App. 3d 31, 42, 154 Cal. Rptr. 22).

C. Employment Agreement or Fee Not Required for Relationship. Formal arrangements or agreements regarding employment or fees are not necessary to show that an attorney-client relationship existed (Arden v. State Bar (1959) 52 Cal. 2d 310, 315, 341 P.2d 6 ; Miller v. Metzinger (1979) 91 Cal. App. 3d 31, 39, 154 Cal. Rptr. 22).

Legal Advice Establishes Relationship. A party's seeking and obtaining legal advice from an attorney establishes the attorney-client relationship prima facie, whether or not an employment agreement is reached (*C. [a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted by a plaintiff in opposition to a motion for summary judgment in a legal malpractice action when the motion was based on the contention that there was no attorney-client relationship creating a duty to the plaintiff. The ground of opposition is that there is a triable issue of fact as to whether or not an attorney-client relationship existed without a formal agreement.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations which oppose the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c], and which include a showing of the attorney-client relationship between the defendant attorney and the plaintiff, or between the defendant attorney and a third party intending to benefit the plaintiff by his or her employment of the attorney [see § 24A.42].

This form may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a motion for summary judgment supported by The points in § 24A.20.

[b] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, this form may be used to oppose a general demurrer to the complaint, or to oppose a motion for judgment on the pleadings, where it appears on the face of the complaint that the attorney-client relationship existed between plaintiff and defendant.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Rules Governing Summary Judgment Procedure

In Corwin v. Los Angeles Newspaper Serv. Bureau, Inc. (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 842, 94 Cal. Rptr. 785, 484 P.2d 953 , the plaintiffs filed an action against the defendants for violations of Bus. & Prof. Code § 16726 (prohibited restraints on trade under Cartwright Act). The trial court granted defendants' motion for summary judgment and plaintiffs appealed from the judgment entered in favor of defendants. The Supreme Court concluded that the trial court had erroneously granted the summary judgment and reversed the judgment. In reviewing the trial court's action, the Court commented that summary judgment is a drastic procedure to be used with caution so that it does not become a substitute for the open trial method of determining facts and repeated its previous summary of the rules governing summary judgment procedure set out in Paragraph A of this form (4 Cal. 3d 842, 851-852) .

Hepp v. Lockheed-Cal. Co. (1978) 86 Cal. App. 3d 714, 150 Cal. Rptr. 408 , was an action for breach of contract and fraud. The trial court granted summary judgment for defendant, and the court of appeal reversed the judgment of dismissal. The court of appeal reviewed the rules for granting summary judgment. Relying on Code Civ. Proc. § 437c, it stated that summary judgment may not be granted on the basis of inferences that are contradicted by other inferences that raise a triable issue of fact (86 Cal. App. 3d 714, 717-718) .

[b] Moving Party's Burden to Negate Existence of Duty

In Miller v. Metzinger (1979) 91 Cal. App. 3d 31, 154 Cal. Rptr. 22 , plaintiffs sued a law firm and its attorneys for negligently handling plaintiffs' wrongful death claim. The plaintiffs had consulted with defendants on the matter of bringing suit, and the defendants had declined to accept the case, suggesting a second firm, which plaintiffs contacted shortly before the statute of limitations had run. The second firm filed the action, which was subsequently barred by the statute of limitations. Plaintiffs alleged that defendants were negligent in waiting so long to refer the case, and in failing to advise plaintiffs as to the statute of limitations issue. The trial court granted summary judgment for defendants. Although it is not clear on what grounds the summary judgment was granted, a discussion of the papers submitted for hearing on the motion indicate that they may have addressed the issue of whether or not a duty was owed to plaintiff, and whether there was a breach. Plaintiffs appealed. The court of appeal reversed the summary judgment, and held that the defendants had not established the absence of an attorney-client relationship merely because they refused to take the case (91 Cal. App. 3d 31, 39) . When the moving party fails to negate the existence of duty by an uncontradicted showing and duty therefore remains an unresolved question of fact, summary judgment will be denied (91 Cal. App. 3d 31, 42) .

[c] Employment Agreement or Fee Not Required for Relationship

Arden v. State Bar (1959) 52 Cal. 2d 310, 341 P.2d 6 , was a proceeding to review the State Bar's recommendation to suspend an attorney. The attorney had represented the natural mother and the adoptive parents in arranging and handling an adoption proceeding. Subsequently, the natural mother initiated proceedings to have the adoption set aside, and the attorney, representing the adoptive parents, made threats to the mother in order that the adoptive parents would prevail. The Supreme Court held that the attorney could properly represent both parties during the adoption, with their consent, and then represent one of them later, adversely to the other (52 Cal. 2d 310, 318) . It also held that the attorney had acted reprehensibly in threatening the mother, and concluded that he should be disciplined by public reprimand (52 Cal. 2d 310, 321) .

During the course of its opinion, the Court also discussed the issue of whether or not the attorney-client relationship had existed between the attorney and the mother. The attorney had initially consulted with the mother, had made arrangements for her regarding a place to live, a false mailing address, and introductions to prospective parents, all without pay (52 Cal. 2d 310, 314) . The Court held that the attorney-client relationship clearly existed under the circumstances. It is immaterial to the existence of the attorney-client relationship that the attorney is not paid for his or her services, or that no formal employment arrangements between attorney and client are made (52 Cal. 2d 310, 315) .

Miller v. Metzinger (1979) 91 Cal. App. 3d 31, 154 Cal. Rptr. 22 , is discussed in § 24A.39[3][b], [d]. Clients appealed from a summary judgment granted by the trial court in the defendant attorney's favor. One client had consulted with the attorney regarding the prosecution of a wrongful death claim. The attorney had consulted with the client, and investigated and evaluated the case, concluding finally that he would not take it, and referring the client to another law firm. The evidence was conflicting as to whether or not the attorney and client had made any agreement of employment prior to the attorney's referral of the client to the other firm. There were other unresolved factual questions also, leading the court of appeal to reverse the summary judgment. The court noted in its opinion however, that even if it were established that the attorney and client had never made any employment agreement, the attorney-client relationship could still exist. The absence of any agreement as to fees or employment does not prevent the relationship from arising, and if a party seeks legal advice, consults an attorney, and obtains the advice, the relationship is established prima facie (91 Cal. App. 3d 31, 39) .

[d] Legal Advice Establishes Relationship

C. J. Perkins v. West Coast Lumber Co. (1900) 129 Cal. 427, 62 P. 57 , was an action in which an attorney sought to recover fees for his services. The defendant client filed a cross complaint alleging that the attorney negligently gave advice, to the client's damage. Judgment for the client followed, and the attorney appealed. On appeal, the attorney contended that at the time he allegedly gave the negligent advice, no attorney-client relationship existed, since he had not yet been retained by the client, and was never paid for giving the advice. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, and held that when a party consults an attorney for legal advice, and obtains the advice, an attorney-client relationship is established prima facie. The court reasoned that the relationship existed because the attorney would be able to recover fees for his or her services in such a situation (129 Cal. 427, 429) .

Miller v. Metzinger (1979) 91 Cal. App. 3d 31, 154 Cal. Rptr. 22 , is discussed in § 24A.39[3][b]. The client had consulted with the attorney, who after some investigation, decided not to take the case, and referred the client to another law firm. The court noted that if legal advice is sought and given, on consultation with an attorney, the attorney-client relationship is established prima facie (91 Cal. App. 3d 31, 39) .

[e] Attorney Making Special Appearance in Court for Another Attorney's Client Establishes Attorney-Client Relationship

In Streit v. Covington & Crowe (2000) 82 Cal. App. 4th 441, 98 Cal. Rptr. 2d 193 , the plaintiff sued her former law firm and individual firm members for legal malpractice. The plaintiff later added an additional law firm and one of its member attorneys as defendants, based on that attorney's representation of the plaintiff at a court hearing on a motion for summary judgment in the underlying action, a court appearance that was made as a professional courtesy for the plaintiff's attorney of record. After the action against the original defendants was settled and dismissed, the trial court granted summary judgment for the other attorney and his firm, finding that they were not associated as counsel for the plaintiff, did not participate in any advice or recommendations to the plaintiff, and appeared in court solely as an accommodation to the other attorneys and their firm. The plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. Noting that the attorney-client relationship normally arises from an express contract between the attorney and the client, the court recognized that it may also arise by implication or from a simple association for a particular case. The court then held that, contrary to the defendants' assertions, an attorney making a special appearance for a client's attorney of record is associated with the attorney of record for purposes of the case, is representing the interests of the client, and has a professional attorney-client relationship with the client. The fact that the association is limited to a single appearance is a distinction of degree, not of kind (82 Cal. App. 4th 441, 444-446) . The court noted that its holding was consistent with the rule that the act of making a court appearance on behalf of a party creates a presumption that the attorney is authorized to do so and is strongly presumptive of an attorney-client relationship (82 Cal. App. 4th 441, 446) . However, the court also noted that although the associated attorney owed a duty of care to the client, the precise scope of the duty would have to be determined under the particular facts of the case (82 Cal. App. 4th 441, 447) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Legal Advice Establishes Relationship

In Wood v. Jamison (2008) 167 Cal. App. 4th 156, 83 Cal. Rptr. 3d 877 , a decedent's trustee sued an attorney who, immediately prior to decedent's death, had helped secure a $250,000 loan against the decedent's residence. The attorney was originally representing a third party who falsely claimed to be the decedent's nephew, and the loan proceeds were distributed directly to this third party for investment in a nightclub. In facilitating the loan, the attorney met with the decedent and her "nephew" in his office to discuss financing for the nightclub, located a lender for the decedent, advised the decedent about various lenders, selected a lender, gathered documents necessary to close the loan, completed the loan application, transmitted documents on his letterhead, communicated with the lender and title company, reviewed the loan documents, and attended close of escrow with the decedent. In upholding a judgment for the trustee on his action for malpractice and breach of fiduciary duty, the court of appeal held that the record provided ample evidence that an attorney-client relationship existed between the attorney and the decedent based on the work performed by the attorney (167 Cal. App. 4th 156, 163) .

This memorandum may be submitted by a plaintiff in opposition to a motion for summary judgment in a legal malpractice action when the motion was based on the contention that there is no attorney-client relationship creating a duty to the plaintiff. The ground of opposition is that there is a triable issue of fact as to whether or not the duties accompanying the attorney-client relationship are owed by the defendant who brought the motion, when that defendant is a partner or former partner in the law firm hired by plaintiff, or hired by a third party when the plaintiff was the intended beneficiary of the firm's services to the client [see § 24A.42].

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations that oppose the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] and include a showing of defendant's membership, or former membership, in the law firm partnership at the time that the plaintiff, or third party intending to benefit the plaintiff, hired the law firm, and showing also the attorney-client relationship between the law firm and the plaintiff or third party who intended to benefit the plaintiff.

This form may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a motion for summary judgment supported by The points in § 24A.20.

[b] Former Partner Released From Liability

This form would not be appropriate if the law firm had filed a substitution of attorneys in the client's case, signed by the client, and reflecting the termination of the former partner's relationship to the firm. In that case, the former partner would be released from liability, since the client would have consented to that partner's discontinued involvement [see Redman v. Walters (1979) 88 Cal. App. 3d 448, 453, 152 Cal. Rptr. 42] .

[c] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, this form may be used to oppose a general demurrer to the complaint, or to oppose a motion for judgment on the pleadings, when it appears on the face of the complaint that defendant was a member or partner in a law firm when an attorney-client relationship existed between the law firm and the plaintiff.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Each Member of Law Firm Partnership Has Duty to Client

In Beane v. Paulsen (1993) 21 Cal. App. 4th 89, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 486 , overruled in part, Beal Bank, SSB v. Arter & Hadden, LLP (2007) 42 Ca. 4th 503, , a client brought a malpractice action against two attorneys whose law corporation had been associated with plaintiff's original attorney in plaintiff's bankruptcy matter. Defendants claimed they severed their relationship with their former partner and corporation by the time plaintiff was given notice of the break-up of the firm, and thus they could not be held liable for their former partner's failure to prosecute the bankruptcy proceeding before the break-up (21 Cal. App. 4th 89, 93-94) , overruled in part, Beal Bank, SSB v. Arter & Hadden, LLP (2007) 42 Cal. 4th 503 . The court held that the defendants were guarantors of the corporation's financial responsibility for malpractice, and had joint and several liability to plaintiff as a former client of their corporation (21 Cal. App. 4th 89, 96) , overruled in part, Beal Bank, SSB v. Arter & Hadden, LLP (2007) 42 Cal. 4th 503 . The court distinguished Redman v. Walters (1979) 88 Cal. App. 3d 448, 152 Cal. Rptr. 42 , which cautioned law firms that a partner can only terminate prospective liability if the client knows of the partner's withdrawal and consents to terminating that individual's obligations. In this case, however, the negligent acts had been committed before the break-up of the firm and there had been no showing that the client was consciously relinquishing the right to sue (21 Cal. App. 4th 89, 97-98) , overruled in part, Beal Bank, SSB v. Arter & Hadden, LLP (2007) 42 Cal. 4th 503 .

Redman v. Walters (1979) 88 Cal. App. 3d 448, 152 Cal. Rptr. 42 , involved a malpractice action against a law firm partnership, and one of its individual members. The plaintiff had hired the firm to handle his case, which was dismissed five years later for failure to prosecute under former Code Civ. Proc. § 583 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 583.310 et seq.]. The individual attorney sued had never met the plaintiff, had never known about the case, and had severed his relationship with the partnership one year after the plaintiff hired the firm to take the case. No formal substitution had ever been filed in plaintiff's case reflecting defendant's discontinued involvement, and the plaintiff had never consented to any change of attorneys. All of the plaintiff's dealings with the firm had been through an attorney other than the individual defendant. The defendant attorney brought a motion for summary judgment, which was granted by the trial court, partly on the grounds that since the defendant was not a member of the partnership at the time of the negligent act, there was no attorney-client relationship between the parties creating a duty of the defendant to perform.

The court of appeal disagreed, and reversed the summary judgment. It held that when there is an attorney-client relationship between the client and the partnership, the duties accompanying that relationship are owed to the client by each individual partner (88 Cal. App. 3d 448, 453) . According to partnership law, the dissolution of a law firm does not terminate an individual partner's existing duties to the client, absent the implied or express consent of the client, or the client's waiver or estoppel to assert the partner's liability (88 Cal. App. 3d 448, 453, 455) . Because no formal substitution had been filed in this case, it could not be presumed that the plaintiff had consented to a substitution releasing the defendant from liability as a partner (88 Cal. App. 3d 448, 451, 454) . When it is an unresolved question of fact whether or not such consent, or waiver or estoppel exists, the absence of an attorney-client relationship has not been established, and summary judgment will be denied (88 Cal. App. 3d 448, 454, 455) .

This form may be submitted in opposition to a motion for summary judgment brought by an attorney who is a defendant in a legal malpractice claim, if the basis for the motion for summary judgment is that the defendant owed no duty to the plaintiff, who is a successor fiduciary to an estate in probate, because the defendant was hired by the plaintiff's predecessor, not by the plaintiff, to provide legal services to the estate.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law raised. Thus, counsel should include facts showing that the plaintiff's predecessor hired the defendant to provide legal services to the estate in probate, that the defendant committed malpractice while performing those services, that this malpractice damaged the estate, and that the plaintiff was appointed as a successor fiduciary for the estate, with all the powers and duties of the original fiduciary.

This form may be modified for use in other procedural contexts, such as to oppose a demurrer to the plaintiff's complaint.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Successor Fiduciary Representing Estate in Probate Has Standing to Sue Attorney Hired by Predecessor for Malpractice

In Borissoff v. Taylor & Faust (2004) 33 Cal. 4th 523, 15 Cal Rptr. 3d 735, 93 P.3d 337 , the plaintiff was appointed as the fiduciary representative of a decedent's estate, replacing an earlier fiduciary who had been appointed to serve in that role while a dispute as to the validity of competing wills was resolved. While the original fiduciary was representing the estate, he hired a law firm to provide tax services for the estate, which they did for a time, before they withdrew from representing the fiduciary. The original fiduciary died shortly thereafter, and the estate's file was turned over to another attorney. At that time, there were only two months left for the estate to file certain tax forms to extend the estate's time for claiming a tax refund. This form was never filed, causing the estate to lose the right to claim the refund. After the will dispute was resolved and the plaintiff was finally appointed as the executor of the decedent's will, he brought a malpractice action against both sets of attorneys that had earlier provided services to the estate for malpractice in failing to file the appropriate tax form in a timely manner. The defendants asserted as affirmative defenses that they owed no duty to the plaintiff, because they were not in privity of contract with him, and that the claims were barred by the applicable statute of limitations. The trial court agreed with both arguments and entered judgment for the defendants. The plaintiff appealed, the court of appeal affirmed on the basis of lack of privity, without deciding the merits of the statute of limitations defense, and the plaintiff appealed again.

The California Supreme Court reversed on the issue of the plaintiff's standing and remanded to the court of appeal to decide the statute of limitations issue. The Supreme Court held that the fiduciary representative of an estate that hires an attorney to provide legal services for the estate may sue that attorney for malpractice to recover for damage caused to the estate, and that this right to sue extends to successor fiduciaries who replace the original fiduciary that hired the attorney. The Court based its decision on Prob. Code § 8524(c), which gives an estate representative the power to commence and maintain actions and proceedings for the benefit of the estate, combined with Prob. Code § 8524(c), which gives to any successor representative all the powers and duties in representing the estate that the former representative would have had. Because Prob. Code § 10801(b) gives to a representative the right to hire a tax attorney for the estate and pay for those services from the estate's funds, a successor representative, like the original representative that actually did the hiring, has the right to sue for malpractice if the services of those tax attorneys causes damage to the estate (33 Cal. 4th 523, 530) .

SUMMARY JUDGMENT SHOULD BE DENIED BECAUSE THERE IS A TRIABLE ISSUE OF FACT AS TO WHETHER OR NOT DEFENDANT OWES A DUTY TO PLAINTIFF AS AN INTENDED BENEFICIARY OF DEFENDANT'S SERVICES.

A. Rules Governing Summary Judgment Procedure. [See § 24A.39, Paragraph A.]

B. Moving Party's Burden to Negate Existence of Duty. [See § 24A.39, Paragraph B.]

C. Duty to Third Party as Intended Beneficiary. An attorney's duty to his or her client, to perform to the standard that attorneys of ordinary skill and capacity commonly exercise, extends also to the intended beneficiaries of the attorney's services. In determining whether defendant is liable to plaintiff as such a beneficiary, the court should balance various factors, including the extent to which plaintiff was intended to benefit, foreseeability of harm to plaintiff, degree of certainty of injury, closeness of connection between defendant's conduct and plaintiff's injury, moral blame attached to defendant's conduct, and the policy of preventing future harm (Heyer v. Flaig (1969) 70 Cal. 2d 223, 228-229, 74 Cal. Rptr. 225, 449 P.2d 161 ; Osornio v. Weingarten (2004) 124 Cal. App. 4th 304, 330-335, 21 Cal. Rptr. 3d 246 ; Donald v. Garry (1971) 19 Cal. App. 3d 769, 771-772, 97 Cal. Rptr. 191).

[Optional] D. Duty to Intended Beneficiary Under a Will. An attorney preparing a will owes a duty not only to the client testator, but also to the intended beneficiaries, who may properly bring a cause of action against the attorney for professional negligence (Heyer v. Flaig (1969) 70 Cal. 2d 223, 228, 229, 74 Cal. Rptr. 225, 449 P.2d 161 ; Osornio v. Weingarten (2004) 124 Cal. App. 4th 304, 329-335, 21 Cal. Rptr. 3d 246).

[Optional] E. Duty to Trust Beneficiaries. An attorney representing a trustee owes a duty to the trust beneficiaries to use ordinary judgment, care, and skill in the performance of his or her legal services (Bucquet v. Livingston (1976) 57 Cal. App. 3d 914, 921, 922, 129 Cal. Rptr. 514).

[Optional] F. Duty to Disclose Dual Representation to Third Party Trust Beneficiaries. An attorney for a trustee owes a duty to the trust beneficiaries to disclose any dual representation in transactions involving the trust (Morales v. Field, DeGoff, Huppert & MacGowan (1979) 99 Cal. App. 3d 307, 316, 160 Cal. Rptr. 239).

[Optional] G. Duty to Creditor When Collection Agency Is Client. An attorney for a collection agency has a duty to the creditor whose claims the agency handles, because the agency is merely the intermediary between the attorney and the creditor as intended beneficiary of the attorney's services (Donald v. Garry (1971) 19 Cal. App. 3d 769, 772, 97 Cal. Rptr. 191).

[Optional] H. Duty to Client and Investors. Part and parcel of effectively protecting a client, and thus discharging the attorney's duty of care, is to protect the client from the liability that may flow from promulgating a false or misleading offering to investors. An important duty of securities counsel is to make a reasonable and independent investigation to detect and correct false or misleading materials (FDIC v. O'Melveny & Meyers (9th Cir. 1992) 969 F.2d 744, 748-749 , rev'd on other grounds, O'Melveny & Meyers v. F.D.I.C. (1994) 512 U.S. 79, 114 S. Ct. 2048, 129 L. Ed. 2d 67).

[Optional] I. Duty to Inform Personal Injury Client's Spouse of Potential Claim for Loss of Consortium. When a husband and wife consult an attorney about a personal injury action against a third party on account of personal injury to one of them, and the other spouse has a potential claim for loss of consortium of which the attorney is or ought to be aware, the attorney has a duty to inform that spouse of the consortium cause of action (Meighan v. Shore (1995) 34 Cal. App. 4th 1025, 1029, 40 Cal. Rptr. 2d 744).

[Optional] J. Attorney for Insurer May Be Liable for Fraud to Claimant Under Policy. An attorney for an insurer can be liable for fraud to claimants under an insurance policy who have obtained a judgment against the insured, if the attorney provides knowingly false information about the amount of coverage under the policy (Shafer v. Berger, Kahn, Shafton, Moss, Figler, Simon & Gladstone (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 54, 74-77, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 777).

[Optional] K. Attorney Agreeing to Serve as Mediator in Dispute Involving Client Owes Duty to Disclose Facts Affecting Impartiality. If an attorney representing a client in a dispute agrees to serve as a mediator between that client and the opposing party, the attorney owes a duty to the opposing party to disclose all facts and circumstances that may affect the impartiality of the attorney while acting as mediator (Furia v. Helm (2003) 111 Cal. App. 4th 945, 954-955, 4 Cal. Rptr. 3d 357).

This memorandum may be submitted by a plaintiff in opposition to a motion for summary judgment in a legal malpractice action when the motion is based on the contention that plaintiff is a third party to whom defendant owed no duty. The ground of opposition is that there is a triable issue of fact as to whether or not plaintiff was an intended beneficiary of defendant's services.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations that oppose the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c], and include a showing of plaintiff's status as an intended beneficiary of defendant's services to the client.

This form may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a motion for summary judgment supported by The points in § 24A.21.

[b] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, this form may be used to oppose a general demurrer to the complaint, or to oppose a motion for judgment on the pleadings, when it appears on the face of the complaint that plaintiff was an intended beneficiary of defendant's services.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Duty to Third Party as Intended Beneficiary

Heyer v. Flaig (1969) 70 Cal. 2d 223, 74 Cal. Rptr. 225, 449 P.2d 161 , was a legal malpractice action brought by the beneficiaries of a will against the deceased testator's attorney. The testator told defendant at the time the will was prepared that the estate was to be left to plaintiffs, her daughters. She also told defendant that she intended to marry. The husband was not mentioned in the will, except to be named executor, and consequently, he later claimed a portion of the estate as a post-testamentary spouse. Plaintiffs' share in the estate was thereby substantially diminished, and they alleged that defendant was negligent in failing to include a provision in the will expressing the testator's intent not to include the spouse as beneficiary. The trial court dismissed the case on defendant's demurrer, on the grounds that the statute of limitations commenced at the time of the negligent act, and that the action was therefore barred. The Supreme Court reversed, holding that with regard to a negligently drafted will, the statute commences to run at the testator's death, and since plaintiffs here filed less than two years later, the case was not barred (70 Cal. 2d 223, 233-234) .

The Supreme Court also held that defendant owed a duty to plaintiffs as beneficiaries of the will (70 Cal. 2d 223, 229) . In determining whether or not an attorney, in a specific case, should be liable to a third party who is not in privity of contract with the attorney, a court should balance various factors, including the extent to which plaintiff was intended to benefit by the attorney's services, foreseeability of harm to plaintiff, degree of certainty that plaintiff was injured, closeness of connection between defendant's negligence and the injury, moral blame attached to defendant's negligence, and the policy of preventing the same type of harm in the future (70 Cal. 2d 223, 227) . The Court stated that when an attorney undertakes to perform services for the client, the attorney's duty to perform at the standard that lawyers of ordinary skill and capacity commonly exercise extends to an intended beneficiary, whose interests are certain and foreseeable (70 Cal. 2d 223, 228-229) . Here, the attorney had breached his duty to the intended beneficiaries by failing to take the precautions that a reasonably prudent attorney would, with regard to the potential claims of a post-testamentary spouse (70 Cal. 2d 223, 229) .

In Osornio v. Weingarten (2004) 124 Cal. App. 4th 304, 21 Cal. Rptr. 3d 246 , the decedent retained the defendant, a licensed California attorney, to draft her will. The decedent subsequently asked the defendant to prepare a new will that would revoke her prior wills and codicils and name the plaintiff as the executor and sole beneficiary. When the decedent died, the plaintiff, as the care custodian to the decedent, who was a dependent adult, was presumptively disqualified under Prob. Code § 21350(a) from receiving a donative transfer of property under the will, and a probate court subsequently held that the plaintiff had not overcome the presumption of disqualification under Prob. Code § 21351. The plaintiff sued the defendant, alleging in the complaint that the defendant was negligent in failing to include with the will a Certificate of Independent Review pursuant to Prob. Code § 21351, which would have been sufficient to overcome the presumption of disqualification. The trial court granted the defendant's demurrer without leave to amend, and the plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal first noted that an attorney's liability for professional negligence does not ordinarily extend beyond the client, except in limited circumstances (124 Cal. App. 4th 304, 320) . However, the court noted that the plaintiff could have alleged that the defendant negligently failed to advise the decedent that the intended beneficiary under her will, the plaintiff, would be presumptively disqualified because she was the decedent's care custodian. Under this theory, the defendant was negligent for failing to advise the decedent of these consequences and for failing to refer the decedent to independent counsel to advise her and to provide a Certificate of Independent Review as required by Prob. Code § 21351 (124 Cal. App. 4th 304, 329) .

The court then applied the following factors for finding that an attorney had a duty to a nonclient, as set forth in Lucas v. Hamm (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 583, 588-589, 15 Cal. Rptr. 821, 364 P.2d 685 : (1) the extent to which the transaction was intended to affect the plaintiff; (2) the foreseeability of harm to the plaintiff; (3) the degree of certainty that the plaintiff suffered injury; (4) the closeness of the connection between the defendant's conduct and the injury; (5) the policy of preventing future harm; and (6) whether the recognition of liability to beneficiaries of wills negligently drawn by attorneys would impose an undue burden on the profession. The court held that each of these factors weighed in favor of the plaintiff, and therefore the court remanded the case to the trial court to allow the plaintiff to amend her complaint (124 Cal. App. 4th 304, 330-335) .

In Donald v. Garry (1971) 19 Cal. App. 3d 769, 97 Cal. Rptr. 191 , a creditor brought a malpractice action against the attorney representing the collection agency handling the creditor's claim. The plaintiff alleged that by defendant's negligence to delay, a valid, collectible claim was dismissed for lack of prosecution. The trial court sustained defendant's general demurrer on the ground that defendant owed no duty of care to plaintiff, and dismissed the case. On appeal by plaintiff, the court of appeal reversed. It held that an attorney has a duty to the party intended to benefit from the attorney's services, regardless of a lack of privity of contract (19 Cal. App. 3d 769, 771) . In this case, the collection agency client was a mere intermediary, and the attorney's services were clearly intended to benefit the creditor (19 Cal. App. 3d 769, 772) .

[b] Duty to Intended Beneficiary Under a Will

Heyer v. Flaig (1969) 70 Cal. 2d 223, 74 Cal. Rptr. 225, 449 P.2d 161 , is discussed in § 24A.42[3][a]. The Supreme Court held that when an attorney performs legal services for a prospective testator, the attorney's duty extends to the intended beneficiaries (70 Cal. 2d 223, 229) . Unless the beneficiary had a cause of action against the attorney for negligence in such a situation, no one would bring suit, the attorney would in fact never have liability for negligently drafting a will, and the public policy of preventing future harm would be frustrated (70 Cal. 2d 223, 228) .

In Osornio v. Weingarten (2004) 124 Cal. App. 4th 304, 21 Cal. Rptr. 3d 246 , the plaintiff was the named executor and sole beneficiary under a will. However, because she was the care custodian to the decedent, who was a dependent adult, the plaintiff was presumptively disqualified under Prob. Code § 21350(a) from receiving a donative transfer of property under the will, and a probate court subsequently held that the plaintiff had not overcome the presumption of disqualification under Prob. Code § 21351. The plaintiff sued the attorney who prepared the will, alleging in the complaint that the attorney was negligent in failing to include with the will a Certificate of Independent Review pursuant to Prob. Code § 21351, which would have been sufficient to overcome the presumption of disqualification. The trial court granted the defendant's demurrer without leave to amend, and the plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal agreed that the complaint, as written, failed to state a cause of action, but held that the trial court abused its discretion in failing to grant leave to amend. The court reviewed the relevant sections of the Probate Code, as well as past court decisions that had established that the intended beneficiary of a will may, under the appropriate circumstances, state a cause of action in negligence against the testator's attorney for failing to achieve the testator's intentions (124 Cal. App. 4th 304, 317-328) . The court then held that the plaintiff's complaint, in basing the claim on the defendant's failure to include with the will a Certificate of Independent Review pursuant to Prob. Code § 21351, failed to allege a duty owed by the defendant to the plaintiff. Under the Probate Code, a Certificate of Independent Review must be supplied by an independent counsel, not by the drafter of the transferring instrument, with the original Certificate then given to the client and a copy provided to the drafter of the transferring instrument. Contrary to the plaintiff's allegations, the testator's attorney is not responsible for supplying the Certificate, and a Certificate is not required to accompany a will (124 Cal. App. 4th 304, 328-329) . However, the court concluded that the plaintiff should have been given the opportunity to amend the complaint to allege that the defendant owed a duty, running to the intended beneficiary, to advise the testator that the proposed transfer, if challenged, would have a significant likelihood of failing unless steps were taken under Prob. Code § 21351 to exempt the transfer from the statutory presumption of disqualification. In addition, the attorney owed a duty to recommend to the client that she seek independent counsel in an effort to obtain a Certificate of Independent Review as described in Prob. Code § 21351(b) (124 Cal. App. 4th 304, 334) . The court noted that the existence of this duty of care did not mean that an attorney would automatically be liable if the duty were not met. For example, the attorney might avoid liability if the intended beneficiary was unable to establish that the attorney's negligence was the cause of the failed transfer, because, for instance, it is shown to be unlikely that the intended beneficiary could have obtained a Certificate of Independent Review (124 Cal. App. 4th 304, 335) .

[c] Duty to Trust Beneficiaries

In Bucquet v. Livingston (1976) 57 Cal. App. 3d 914, 129 Cal. Rptr. 514 , defendant was an attorney employed to plan the settlor's estate, which included an inter vivos trust. The attorney allegedly neglected an important tax aspect, and drafted the trust so that problems arose later, reducing the corpus of the trust. The trust beneficiaries brought a professional negligence action against the attorney. The defendant moved for a judgment on the pleadings, asserting that the complaint did not state a cause of action, in part, because he had no duty to plaintiffs. The plaintiffs appealed, and the court of appeal reversed. It held that the attorney owed a duty to plaintiffs as the intended beneficiaries of the trust (57 Cal. App. 3d 914, 925-926) . The attorney's duty to use ordinary judgment, care, and skill in the performance of his or her legal services extends not only to the client, but also to intended beneficiaries, despite a lack of privity (57 Cal. App. 3d 914, 921) . This rule applies not only to wills, but to inter vivos trusts as well (57 Cal. App. 3d 914, 922) .

[d] Duty to Disclose Dual Representation to Third Party Trust Beneficiaries

In Morales v. Field, DeGoff, Huppert & MacGowan (1979) 99 Cal. App. 3d 307, 160 Cal. Rptr. 239 , plaintiff was a beneficiary of her mother's estate. The mother's will left her separate property to a trust, of which her husband was life beneficiary, and plaintiff the remainderperson. A bank was named as executor and trustee, and was represented by defendant law firm. Plaintiff alleged that defendants breached their duty to her as a beneficiary with regard to two transactions. In one transaction, the testator had earlier guaranteed loans by a second bank to a corporation. As part of the settlement of the lending bank's claim against the estate, it agreed to refinance the original loans guaranteed by the testator. To refinance, defendants arranged for executor bank to execute a new loan guarantee. Defendants did not notify plaintiff of the transaction, which would affect the estate, and thus her interest, and did not disclose to the court authorizing the guarantee that defendants represented the corporation's shareholders as well as the executor. Plaintiff brought suit, alleging, among other things, defendants' professional negligence. On general demurrer by defendants, the trial court granted a judgment of dismissal, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the dismissal with respect to the loan guarantee transaction, and held that defendants did owe a duty to plaintiff as trust beneficiary (99 Cal. App. 3d 307, 316) . The court stated that whether or not the attorney for a trustee owes a duty to the beneficiary for negligent conduct depends on a judicial weighing of policy considerations, and a balancing of factors such as the extent to which plaintiff was an intended beneficiary of the transaction, foreseeability of harm to plaintiff, degree of certainty of harm, closeness of the connection between defendant's conduct and the harm, moral blame attached to defendant's conduct, and the policy of preventing future harm (99 Cal. App. 3d 307, 315) . Looking at the facts of the case, the court said that when an attorney for the trustee and executor also represents third parties involved in transactions with the estate, there is clear foreseeability of harm to any trust beneficiaries. In addition, because a trustee is bound to act in the highest good faith toward beneficiaries, an attorney for the trustee is obligated to do so as well (99 Cal. App. 3d 307, 316) . The court concluded that defendants owed to plaintiff at least the duty to disclose their mutual representation of the trustee/executor and the corporate shareholders benefitting from the estate's loan guarantee. The court added that to require the trustee's attorney to disclose to beneficiaries such a dual representation would eliminate the need for lawsuits of the type involved here (99 Cal. App. 3d 307, 316) .

[e] Duty to Creditor When Collection Agency Is Client

Donald v. Garry (1971) 19 Cal. App. 3d 769, 97 Cal. Rptr. 191 , is discussed in § 24A.42[3][a]. A creditor sued the attorney representing the collection agency hired by the creditor. After balancing various factors, the court of appeal held that, under these circumstances, the attorney clearly owed a duty to the plaintiff. Because the collection agency was a mere intermediary between the plaintiff creditor and the attorney hired to prosecute the creditor's claim, harm to the plaintiff by defendant's negligence was clearly foreseeable, the degree of certainty of harm was definite, and the connection between the defendant's negligence and plaintiff's harm was direct. In addition, there is some moral blame attached to the defendant's procrastination, and there exists a policy that lawsuits should be diligently prosecuted (19 Cal. App. 3d 769, 772) .

[f] Duty to Client and Investors

In FDIC v. O'Melveny & Meyers (9th Cir. 1992) 969 F.2d 744 , rev'd on other grounds, O'Melveny & Meyers v. FDIC (1994) 512 U.S. 79, 114 S. Ct. 2048, 129 L. Ed. 2d 67 , the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC) sued defendant law firm, claiming professional negligence in connection with its legal advice and services to a failed savings and loan association. Defendant had assisted the failed institution in preparing Private Placement Memoranda for two real estate syndications. The district court granted defendant's motion for summary judgment.

The appellate court reversed the summary judgment. Defendant admitted the existence of a duty by a principal and its agent of complete and accurate disclosure to potential investors in a securities offering. But defendant argued that the investors were fully compensated, and that as an agent it owed no additional duty to the principal's successor in interest to make inquiries and disclose information that the principal already knew and was trying to conceal. The court rejected the implication that if the client happens to be committing a fraud, of which the attorney may or may not be aware, the presence of the fraud cancels the attorney's duty to use due care. The court found no reported exception to the general rule that a lawyer has to act competently to avoid public harm when he or she learns that the client is dishonest. The court also stated defendant's distinction between a duty to investors, which defendant conceded, and a duty to clients, which it denied, was false. Part and parcel of effectively protecting a client, and thus discharging the attorney's duty of care, is to protect the client from the liability that may flow from promulgating a false or misleading offering to investors. An important duty of securities counsel is to make a reasonable and independent investigation to detect and correct false or misleading materials (969 F.2d 744, 748-749) .

NOTE:

The United States Supreme Court granted certiorari in the O'Melveny & Meyers case and reversed the Court of Appeals [see O'Melveny & Meyers v. FDIC (1994) 512 U.S. 79, 83-89, 114 S. Ct. 2048, 129 L. Ed. 2d 67] . However, the Supreme Court's reversal was based on the narrow question of whether California or federal common law governed the determination of whether certain knowledge of corporate officers could be imputed to the corporation and whether that knowledge could be imputed to the FDIC when it sued as the corporation's receiver. The Court ruled that California law governed and remanded the case [see O'Melveny & Meyers v. FDIC (1994) 512 U.S. 79, 83-89, 114 S. Ct. 2048, 129 L. Ed. 2d 67] . The Court did not address the substantive issues of the law firm's duties to the failed savings and loan association or to the FDIC.

[g] Duty to Inform Personal Injury Client's Spouse of Potential Claim for Loss of Consortium

In Meighan v. Shore (1995) 34 Cal. App. 4th 1025, 40 Cal. Rptr. 2d 744 , a wife brought an action against the attorney who had represented her husband in the husband's personal injury claim on the ground that the attorney was negligent for failing to inform her of her right to pursue a cause of action for loss of consortium. The husband and wife felt that the husband had been the victim of medical malpractice. The wife sought out an attorney, and both husband and wife met with the attorney to discuss the case. The attorney agreed to take the case, telling the wife that her husband, rather than she, was the client. Nothing was said during the interview about the wife's right to pursue an action in her own right for loss of consortium, and neither the wife nor her husband had any idea that there was such a tort. The attorney filed a suit for medical malpractice, naming only the husband as plaintiff. Subsequently, husband and wife substituted in new counsel, who informed them of the wife's entitlement to pursue an action for loss of consortium, but by then the right had become time-barred. After the medical malpractice action was settled, the wife sued the original attorney for failure to inform her of her right to pursue a cause of action, or to alert her to the need to consult another attorney about it. The attorney moved for summary judgment, and the motion was granted by the trial court.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that under the facts of the case the attorney had the duty to inform the wife of her potential claim for loss of consortium. The attorney argued that he had no duty to the wife because she was not his client (34 Cal. App. 4th 1025, 1033) . The court initially noted that the relationship between spouses with regard to an action for loss of consortium is one of privity, and that the circumstance of privity bears on the duty of an attorney to the spouse of a physically injured client (34 Cal. App. 4th 1025, 1035) . The court then stated that professional liability is not dependent upon privity of contract between a professional and an injured party, but rather that the presence or absence of a client's intent that the plaintiff benefit from or relay upon the attorney's services is particularly significant in the determination of duty (34 Cal. App. 4th 1025, 1041) . The court then noted that the husband and wife expected the relationship with the attorney to affect the wife, that harm to the wife was foreseeable unless the attorney alerted her to the existence of her rights to pursue an action for loss of consortium, that the wife was injured when her potential action became barred by the running of the statute of limitations, that there was a close connection between the attorney's conduct and the injury, that requiring a duty of an attorney in these circumstances would prevent future harm, and that recognition of liability under the circumstance would not impose an undue burden on the profession (34 Cal. App. 4th 1025, 1043-1044) . The court thus concluded that the attorney had a duty to inform the husband and wife of the existence of their rights under the consortium tort (34 Cal. App. 4th 1025, 1044) . However, the court emphasized the narrowness of its holding, stating that it pertains only to the loss of consortium, when both spouses consult an attorney with respect to a personal injury suffered by one of them and the attorney knows or could readily ascertain that the other spouse has a potential claim for loss of consortium, and that spouse is unaware of his or her rights (34 Cal. App. 4th 1025, 1030) .

[h] Attorney for Insurer May Be Liable for Fraud to Claimant Under Policy

In Shafer v. Berger, Kahn, Shafton, Moss, Figler, Simon & Gladstone (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 54, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 777 , the plaintiffs were homeowners who had obtained an arbitration judgment against a home remodeler, then subsequently filed suit against the remodeler's insurer and its attorney. This subsequent lawsuit was based on allegedly fraudulent statements made by the attorney concerning the extent of coverage, statements that prompted the plaintiffs to accept in satisfaction of the judgment much less than the amount the insurer was legally obligated to pay to indemnify the remodeler. The trial court sustained the demurrer of the attorney and his law firm, dismissing the fraud claim against them on the grounds that the attorney did not owe the plaintiffs a duty of truthful disclosure and that the plaintiffs' reliance on the attorney's statements was not reasonable.

The court of appeal reversed. The court concluded that an attorney, like any party, has a duty to refrain from committing fraud against another, and that an attorney is not relieved of that duty merely by virtue of his or her status as an attorney and the fact that the attorney was at the time negotiating with a party other than his or her client (107 Cal. App. 4th 54, 69-72) . In this case, the court concluded that the plaintiffs had adequately alleged facts that, if proven, would support a fraud action against the attorney and his firm. The pleadings alleged that the attorney misled the plaintiffs as to the extent of the insurer's liability to indemnify the remodeler, and that the plaintiffs believed that the attorney's statements about coverage were statements of fact. Moreover, the plaintiffs' reliance on the attorney's statements was justifiable, because the plaintiffs had no reason to doubt the attorney and had no reason to know that the remodeler's insurer had agreed, after the claims procedures had begun, to cover willful acts under the remodeler's policy (107 Cal. App. 4th 54, 74-76) . In addition, under these circumstances, the plaintiffs' relationship with the attorney for the insurer was not actually that of attorney and opposing party. As claimants, the plaintiffs were third-party beneficiaries under the insurance policy, and under Ins. Code § 11580, the insurer was obligated by virtue of the arbitration judgment to pay the amount of the judgment, subject to the terms and limitations of the policy and any reservation of rights. Furthermore, that statute inures to the benefit of any party injured by the insured as if that party were specifically named in the policy. Therefore, the plaintiffs in this sense were actually standing in the shoes of the insured when the misrepresentations were made (107 Cal. App. 4th 54, 76) .

[i] Attorney Agreeing to Serve as Mediator in Dispute Involving Client Owes Duty to Disclose Facts Affecting Impartiality

In Furia v. Helm (2003) 111 Cal. App. 4th 945, 4 Cal. Rptr. 3d 357 , the plaintiff was a contractor involved in a dispute with homeowners who had hired the plaintiff to remodel their home. Those homeowners, dissatisfied with the work being performed on the project, consulted their attorney for advice. With the agreement of all parties, the attorney agreed to mediate the dispute and sent a letter to both parties memorializing that agreement. In that letter, the attorney reaffirmed that he represented the homeowners, but agreed to work to mediate the dispute in an effort to resolve the dispute as efficiently as possible. The attorney also sent a separate letter only to the homeowners, reaffirming to them that he represented their interests and would not be truly neutral in the matter. The homeowners eventually replaced the plaintiff on the construction project and filed a complaint against the plaintiff for construction deficiencies, in addition to filing a complaint against the plaintiff with the Contractors' State License Board. The Board suspended the plaintiff's license and required as a condition of reinstatement that he pay restitution to the homeowners, although the Board also concluded that the plaintiff had not abandoned the construction project. The plaintiff then sued the homeowners' attorney for malpractice and fraudulent concealment and misrepresentation, alleging that the plaintiff, unaware of the attorney's true loyalties, abandoned the construction project on the suggestion of the attorney during mediation, only to incur the costs and expenses of defending against the homeowners' subsequent legal actions. The trial court sustained the attorney's demurrer to the plaintiff's second amended complaint on the grounds that the attorney could not be liable to plaintiff because no attorney-client relationship existed between them.

The court of appeal affirmed, but did not follow the reasoning of the trial court. The court of appeal agreed that there was no attorney-client relationship between the attorney and the contractor, but held that the attorney owed a duty to the contractor based on the attorney's accepted role as mediator. Although questioning the propriety of an attorney acting as a mediator in a dispute against a client's adversaries, the court noted that the parties had agreed to the attorney assuming that role, and as such, the attorney owed a duty to both sides in the dispute. Without exploring the full dimensions of the duty owed in this case to his clients' adversary, the court held that the duty extended at least to the duty to disclose fully all facts and circumstances that might reasonably have caused the plaintiff to believe that the attorney would not or could not be impartial. The court then held that the plaintiff had alleged facts showing a duty and breach of duty sufficient to withstand a demurrer (111 Cal. App. 4th 945, 953-955) . However, the court went on to hold that the plaintiff was unable to allege any facts supporting the claim that his reliance on the attorney's misrepresentations or failure to disclose had caused any damages. In the earlier proceedings before the Board, the plaintiff had argued, and the Board had concluded, that the plaintiff had not abandoned the construction project. Given this earlier position, the plaintiff could not now argue that he abandoned the project in reliance on the attorney's suggestions during mediation and subsequently incurred legal costs. Because this was the plaintiff's only argument in support of his claim that he had sustained damages because of the attorney's conduct, the trial court was correct in sustaining the demurrer (111 Cal. App. 4th 945, 956-959) .

[j] Lawyer May Be Liable for Fraud Against Third Party

In Vega v. Jones, Day, Reavis & Pogue (2004) 121 Cal. App. 4th 282, 291, 17 Cal. Rptr. 26 , the plaintiff was a shareholder in Monsterbook, a company acquired by Transmedia in a merger transaction. The terms of the acquisition included the plaintiff's receipt of restricted stock in Transmedia in exchange for his interest in Monsterbook. Jones, Day, Reavis & Pogue represented Transmedia in the transaction. Before the transaction closed, Transmedia sought and secured $10 million in investment financing from a third party. The terms of the financing transaction included so-called "toxic" stock provisions, under which the investors received convertible preferred stock that seriously diluted the shares of all other Transmedia stockholders. Both Transmedia and Jones Day knew that "toxic" stock financing is a "desperate and last resort of financing for a struggling company" and that 95 percent of companies who engage in such financing end up in bankruptcy. Jones Day prepared a two-page disclosure schedule that clearly described and properly disclosed the toxic provisions of the $10 million investment. However, it did not send the disclosure to Vega. Jones Day knew that disclosing the toxic terms of the financing would have "killed" the acquisition, without which Transmedia would not have obtained the financing and would have gone out of business. Instead, Jones Day told Vega that the $10 million financing was "standard" and "nothing unusual" and that Jones Day and Transmedia would supply additional documents to support these characterizations of the financing. Jones Day supplied Vega with a different sanitized version of the disclosure schedule which did not include the toxic stock provisions.

Vega sued Jones Day for fraud. Jones Day demurred. It contended it made no affirmative misstatements and had no duty to disclose the terms of the third-party investment to an adverse party in the merger transaction. The trial court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend on several grounds, including that Jones Day owed Vega no duty to disclose so that Vega could not state a claim based on omission or nondisclosure. Vega appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. It held that Vega's complaint stated a fraud claim based on nondisclosure. The complaint alleged the law firm, while expressly undertaking to disclose the financing transaction, provided disclosure schedules that did not include material terms of the transaction. The court noted that a fraud claim against a lawyer is no different from a fraud claim against anyone else. If an attorney commits actual fraud in dealings with a third party, the fact the attorney did so in the capacity of attorney for a client does not relieve the attorney of liability. The court of appeal held that a lawyer communicating on behalf of a client with a nonclient may not knowingly make a false statement of material fact or fail to disclose a material fact to the nonclient (121 Cal. App. 4th 282, 291) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Duty to Third Party as Intended Beneficiary

In Assurance Co. of Am. v. Haven (1995) 32 Cal. App. 4th 78, 38 Cal. Rptr. 2d 25 , a liability insurer sued the attorney for the insured for negligence in defending an action brought against the insured by a third party. Although the attorney began the third-party defense as the attorney for both the insured and the insurer, a conflict of interest arose and the attorney became the representative of the insured alone. The attorney was then negligent in failing to assert a statute of limitations defense in a timely manner and in failing to demur to or motion for summary judgment on a cause of action for peculiar risk. Due to these negligent actions, and because the attorney failed to keep the insurer informed about the third-party action as required by Civ. Code § 2860, the insurer was forced to settle with the third party for the full amount of the liability policy. The insurer then sued the insured's attorney for his negligence, but the attorney demurred on the grounds that the attorney owed no duty to the insurer. The demurrer was sustained, and the insurer appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court held that the insurer had a cause of action for any violations of duties imposed on the attorney by Civ. Code § 2860, the statute that governs the provision of an attorney for an insured in actions by third parties, when violation of those duties prevented the insurer from timely and completely defending the action brought against the insured. These statutory duties included the duties to consult with the insurer in a timely manner, to disclose all known and nonprivileged information to the insurer, and to cooperate in exchanging information with the counsel for the insurer. However, the court also held that the insurer had no cause of action for duties that fell outside those imposed by the statute. Thus, the attorney could not be held liable to the insurer for failing to investigate, prepare, assert, establish, or perform other similar functions regarding the defense (32 Cal. App. 4th 78, 83) .

§ 24A.43 Opposing Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] in Legal Malpractice Action--Failure to Segregate Funds Constitutes Professional Negligence

[Caption. See § 24A.39.]

DEFENDANT'S FAILURE TO MAINTAIN PLAINTIFF'S FUNDS IN A TRUST ACCOUNT CONSTITUTED PROFESSIONAL NEGLIGENCE.

Attorney's Failure to Place Client's Funds in Trust Account Is Actionable Legal Malpractice. An attorney's failure to comply with Rule 4-100 of the Rules of Professional Conduct of the State Bar of California, requiring that client's funds be deposited in a trust account, is a breach of fiduciary duty and professional negligence (T & R Foods, Inc. v. Rose (1996) 47 Cal. App. 4th Supp. 1 , Supp. 8, 56 Cal. Rptr. 2d 41).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted by a plaintiff in a legal malpractice action, in opposition to a defendant's motion for summary judgment, when the defendant's motion is based on the argument that the failure to maintain plaintiff's funds in a separate trust account does not constitute legal malpractice.

This form may be modified for use in another procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that an attorney has an obligation to keep clients' funds segregated in a trust account. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. In particular, counsel should include specific facts showing evidence of an attorney-client relationship and of a fee agreement between the parties, and should argue that funds tendered to the attorney were not intended to pass to the attorney at the time of payment.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Attorney's Failure to Place Client's Funds in Trust Account Is Actionable Legal Malpractice

In T & R Foods, Inc. v. Rose (1996) 47 Cal. App. 4th Supp. 1 , 56 Cal. Rptr. 2d 41 , after the death of the sole shareholder of a professional law corporation, a client of the corporation sued the shareholder's estate for funds which had been given as a retainer but which had not been placed in a client trust account. Plaintiff also filed a claim against the corporation, but the corporation was the subject of a court-supervised dissolution proceeding, and as of the date of trial plaintiff had received no payments from the corporation. In the professional negligence action against the estate, the matter was submitted on stipulated facts, and the trial court entered a judgment that plaintiff take nothing.

The court of appeal first considered the question of whether State Bar Rules of Prof. Conduct, Rule 4-100, requires advances for attorney fees to be kept in trust accounts, segregated from money belonging to the attorney. Since the funds in question did not constitute a classic retainer to secure availability over a period of time, but rather were an advance payment retainer so that ownership would not pass until earned, the court concluded that the rule required the funds to be segregated (47 Cal. App. 4th Supp. 1). The court then reasoned that an attorney's breach of the ethical duties of good faith and fidelity owed to a client constitutes actionable legal malpractice, and concluded that the failure to segregate plaintiff's funds was professional negligence (47 Cal. App. 4th Supp. 1). The court thus reversed the judgment, and ordered the trial court to enter judgment for plaintiff.

This form may be submitted in opposition to a motion for summary judgment brought by an attorney who is a defendant in a legal malpractice action, if the basis for the motion for summary judgment is that the attorney owed no duty to the class action plaintiffs represented by the attorney in an underlying class action lawsuit to consider, advise on, and include other legal claims in addition to the claims that were specified in the class certification order.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law raised. Thus, counsel should include facts detailing the legal claims that the plaintiff believes should have been included in the underlying class action lawsuit, how they relate to the facts underlying the claims that were certified for inclusion, and the failure of the attorney in the underlying action to advise, consider, or include such claims.

This form may be modified for use in other procedural contexts, such as to oppose a demurrer to the plaintiff's complaint.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Class Attorney Owes Duty to Consider and Advise Class Members on Additional Potential Claims Arising From Same Underlying Facts

In Janik v. Rudy, Exelrod & Zieff (2004) 119 Cal. App. 4th 930, 14 Cal. Rptr. 3d 751 , the plaintiff was an insurance claims representative who brought a malpractice lawsuit against the attorneys who represented a class of claims representatives, including the plaintiff, in an earlier class action suit against an insurance company. In the earlier class action lawsuit, the claims certified for the class included claims for unpaid overtime wages brought under a Labor Code provision that allowed recovery of up to three years of unpaid wages. The attorneys were successful in winning $90,000,000 for the class on those claims. In the malpractice action, the plaintiff alleged that the attorneys should have also included claims for unpaid wages under the unfair competition statute, Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq., because doing so would have allowed recovery of up to four years of unpaid wages, rather than just three years as under the Labor Code. The defendants successfully demurred to the malpractice claim on the grounds that they had no duty to represent the class on claims beyond those included in the class certification order. The plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court held that if an attorney represents the plaintiff class in a class action lawsuit, the certification of the class does not relieve the attorney from a duty to advise about other potential claims that the plaintiffs may have that arise from the same facts that underlie the certified claims. The court noted that claims under the unfair competition statute would have been based on the same set of facts as the Labor Code claims and would have been subject to essentially the same legal analysis (119 Cal. App. 4th 930, 934) . In reaching its decision, the court recognized the general legal principle that an attorney who undertakes one matter on behalf of a client owes a duty of care to at least consider and advise the client if there are related matters that the client is overlooking that should be pursued to avoid prejudicing the client's interests. In the context of a class action, both the representative plaintiffs and the absent class members have the right to assume that the class attorneys will consider and bring to the attention of the plaintiffs any additional or greater claims that may exist arising out of the same set of facts that underlie the certified claims, at least if the failure to do so would result in the loss of any of those claims (119 Cal. App. 4th 930, 940) . The court also noted that the existence of a duty of care does not mean that the attorney must include other related claims, because doing so may expand the scope of the lawsuit and create additional grounds for the defendant to challenge the propriety of the class as certified. However, a failure to actually include the additional claims in the lawsuit goes to the issue of whether the attorney has breached the duty of care, and not to the issue of whether a duty of care exists to advise as to the potential claims (119 Cal. App. 4th 930, 942-943) . The court also held that because the issue was not addressed in the class action lawsuit, the plaintiff was free to bring a separate action to adjudicate the issue of the attorneys' negligence in handling the class claims (119 Cal. App. 4th 930, 946) .

This memorandum may be submitted by a plaintiff in opposition to a motion for summary judgment in a legal malpractice action when the motion is based on the contention that defendant is not liable for a mistake on a debatable issue. The basis of opposition is that there is a triable issue of fact as to whether or not the legal matter involved was so esoteric that the attorney could not reasonably have been aware of it, or whether or not the defendant had a duty to conduct reasonable research on the matter.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations which oppose the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c], and which include a showing that the defendant's mistake involved an area of law which was not so esoteric that defendant would not reasonably have been aware of it, and that defendant failed to conduct minimal research into the area of the mistake.

[b] Type of Duty

This form is different from the forms in §§ 24A.39 -24A.42, in which the plaintiff argues that a duty of care exists, in opposition to defendant's motion for summary judgment on the grounds that there is no duty of care owed by defendant to plaintiff. In this form, plaintiff opposes defendant's argument that although a duty of care exists, there can be no liability, by asserting that a particular type of duty of care exists under these particular circumstances.

This memorandum may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a motion for summary judgment supported by The points in § 24A.25.

[c] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, this form may be used to oppose a general demurrer to the complaint, or to oppose a motion for judgment on the pleadings, where it appears on the face of the complaint that defendant failed to research an unsettled area of law.

[d] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Duty to Research Unsettled Issue

In Smith v. Lewis (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 349, 118 Cal. Rptr. 621, 530 P.2d 589 , a client sued the attorney who had represented her in a marriage dissolution proceeding for negligence in failing to assert her community interest in her husband's retirement benefits. The retirement benefits were a sizeable portion of the husband's property, but defendant had advised plaintiff that they were not community property, and the court had not considered or apportioned them in the dissolution proceeding. In the malpractice action, the trial court entered judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appealed to the Supreme Court, contending that because the law characterizing retirement benefits was unsettled at the time of his decision relating to the benefits, he should not be liable for his mistake.

The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment. It held that although an attorney will not be liable for failing to anticipate which way an uncertain issue will be resolved, he or she does have a duty to undertake reasonable research into the unsettled area of law in order to make an informed decision as to his or her course of conduct on behalf of the client (

13 Cal. 3d 349, 358-359) . The Court held that, in this case, the attorney had failed to perform even minimal research, which would have revealed a feasible argument in his client's favor (13 Cal. 3d 349, 360) . The area of property characterization of retirement benefits is not so esoteric that an attorney could not reasonably be expected to be aware of it, especially since the division of community property is a major issue in dissolution proceedings (13 Cal. 3d 349, 359) .

[b] Duty to Avoid Involving Client in Doubtful Area of Law

In Horne v. Peckham (1979) 97 Cal. App. 3d 404, 158 Cal. Rptr. 714 , plaintiff hired defendant attorney to prepare a trust for his patent rights, with his sons as beneficiaries. Following his accountant's recommendation, plaintiff sought the tax advantages of a "Clifford Trust" in which the sons rather than plaintiff would be taxed as owners on the patent. Defendant told plaintiff that he had no knowledge of tax matters, and that initially, an expert opinion would be required. Defendant relied chiefly on the accountant's advice, and consulted a newly licensed tax attorney on one question. Defendant alone drafted the required documents. Later, the IRS audited plaintiff's tax returns and assessed plaintiff's taxes on the grounds that the trust had failed to transfer tax liability to plaintiff's sons. After conceding his tax liability, plaintiff sued defendant for malpractice. The trial court entered judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment of defendant's liability. Defendant contended, among other things, that the question of law involved was so doubtful that he should not be liable for his mistake. Defendant relied on Lucas v. Hamm (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 583, 15 Cal. Rptr. 821, 364 P.2d 685 [see § 24A.25[3][a]], which held that an area of law that poses difficult problems for competent attorneys precludes liability for an attorney's mistake relating to it. The court of appeal held that the principle of the Lucas case should not control, because in this case, applicable law clearly showed the invalidity of plaintiff's (Clifford) trust for its intended purpose (97 Cal. App. 3d 404, 409-410, 416) . The court held that once an attorney has determined that the legal issue involved is doubtful or debatable, he or she then has a duty to the client to research the issue in order to make an informed decision. If this reasonable research by the attorney reveals an alternate course of conduct, the attorney has a duty to avoid that conduct which would involve the client in a doubtful or debatable area of law (97 Cal. App. 3d 404, 416) .

[a] Duty to Research Unsettled Issue

In Village Nurseries v. Greenbaum (2002) 101 Cal. App. 4th 26, 123 Cal. Rptr. 2d 555 , the plaintiff was a landscaping and irrigation systems company that performed extensive work for a building contractor. The building contractor filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy, and the plaintiff recorded several mechanic's liens for amounts that the contractor owed. The plaintiff specifically inquired from its attorneys about whether, to protect its liens, a Notice of Perfection of Security Interest needed to be filed with the Bankruptcy Court under 11 U.S.C.S. § 546(b). The attorneys were of the opinion that a Notice was not necessary, but that suit needed to be filed in state court to protect the liens. The following year, both the bankruptcy trustee and the bankruptcy court indicated their opinion that the liens were invalid due to the failure to file a Section 546 notice. The plaintiff eventually filed a malpractice suit against the attorneys after the bankruptcy court ruled that the liens were in fact invalid. The trial court granted summary judgment for the defendants on the grounds of the judgmental immunity doctrine, but the court of appeal ruled that summary judgment should not have been granted on that basis. The court held that regardless of whether the legal question of whether a Notice was required was unsettled or not, the defendants provided no evidence that they performed any legal research on the issue prior to advising the plaintiff. In the absence of evidence that any actual research was performed, the defendants' advice was not based on the exercise of an informed judgment, and the defendants were not entitled to the protection of the judgmental immunity doctrine (101 Cal. App. 4th 26, 37-39) .

In Aloy v. Mash (1985) 38 Cal. 3d 413, 212 Cal. Rptr. 162, 696 P.2d 656 , the Supreme Court reversed the trial court's summary judgment in favor of defendant in an attorney malpractice action based on the attorney's failure to assert a community property interest in the husband's military pension. The Court noted that characterization of federal military retirement pensions was the subject of legal debate for some time. Defendant asserted that at the time he acted the law was unsettled and that he had exercised informed judgment and was therefore immune from a claim of professional negligence. The Court responded that defendant relied on a single case and did not base his judgment on all available data to make a rational, professional judgment. Defendant acted on an incomplete reading of a single case, without appreciating a vital difference between the facts of the case and the facts of his client's situation (38 Cal. 3d 413, 417-419) .

This memorandum may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a motion for summary judgment supported by The points in § 24A.25.

[b] Related Memoranda

For memoranda relating to summary judgment generally, see Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Duty to Refer to Specialist

Horne v. Peckham (1979) 97 Cal. App. 3d 404, 158 Cal. Rptr. 714 , is discussed in §§ 24A.45[3][b] and 24A.46[3][a]. The defendant prepared documents to effectuate a trust which would have tax benefits for plaintiff. The trust was invalid for the purposes intended, however, and the court of appeal held that defendant had breached a duty to research the issue prior to preparing the trust (97 Cal. App. 3d 404, 416) . The court also held that when a reasonable attorney would do so, an attorney has the duty to refer his or her client to a specialist, or recommend the assistance of a specialist, or in the alternative to exercise a standard of care of the ordinary specialist in the same locality and circumstances (97 Cal. App. 3d 404, 414-415) . Under the circumstances of this case, the court held that defendant did have that duty, because tax has traditionally been considered an area of specialty, and the defendant himself acknowledged his need for expert assistance in the matter (97 Cal. App. 3d 404, 415) .

[b] Duty to Refer to Specialist in Tax Matters

Horne v. Peckham (1979) 97 Cal. App. 3d 404, 158 Cal. Rptr. 714 , is discussed in §§ 24A.45[3][b] and 24A.46[3][a]. The defendant prepared a "Clifford Trust" for plaintiff, purportedly to transfer tax liability for plaintiff's patent income to plaintiff's sons. The trust was later held to be invalid. The court of appeal held that an attorney in general practice has the duty to refer his or her client to a tax specialist, if under the circumstances a reasonable attorney would do so, or to meet the standard of care of a tax specialist (97 Cal. App. 3d 404, 414-415) . The court noted the recent phenomenon of increased specialization among attorneys, and the fact that tax is one area most commonly acknowledged as one of specialization (97 Cal. App. 3d 404, 415) . The opinion added that the duty to refer to a tax specialist does not exist with every tax case, since many tax matters are generally known and understood by general practitioners (97 Cal. App. 3d 404, 415) . But if under the circumstances a reasonable attorney would do so, as was the case here, the defendant will be liable for negligence if he or she fails to make the referral, or to exercise the standard of care of an expert himself or herself (97 Cal. App. 3d 404, 414-415) .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Liability for Malpractice Normally Question of Fact

In Wright v. Williams (1975) 47 Cal. App. 3d 802, 121 Cal. Rptr. 194 , plaintiff clients brought a malpractice action against an attorney specializing in maritime law, for negligently failing to advise them of a law precluding the commercial use of a vessel that has been previously owned by an alien. Plaintiffs intended to purchase a boat that had been owned by an alien, and use it for business operations. They hired defendant to advise them regarding the purchase, but told defendant they intended to use the boat for pleasure. Following the purchase, plaintiffs were cited by the Coast Guard for their use of the boat in violation of the Merchant Marine Act of 1920, and plaintiffs brought the suit against defendant. The case was tried to a judge sitting without a jury. The trial court granted defendant's motion for judgment under Code Civ. Proc. § 631.8, after plaintiffs had produced their evidence on the ground that plaintiffs had not carried their burden of proof, defendant had fulfilled the obligation for which he was retained, and defendant was not negligent. The trial court entered judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appealed.

Plaintiffs contended on appeal, that defendant was negligent as a matter of law because a reasonable specialist in maritime law would have informed plaintiffs of the law prohibiting commercial use of their boat, regardless of the intended use disclosed by plaintiffs. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment. It held first that although there are some cases in which reasonable minds cannot differ regarding an attorney's liability, the question of liability for professional negligence is usually one of fact (47 Cal. App. 3d 802, 808-809) . Such was true with the case at hand, which involved no special circumstances transforming the issue of liability into a question of law (47 Cal. App. 3d 802, 809) . In addition, the court held that although in some situations expert testimony may not be required, when the claim against defendant specialist is related to his or her expertise as a specialist, only an expert can define the standard of care to be applied, and determine whether it was breached (47 Cal. App. 3d 802, 810-811) . The case at hand required expert testimony to prove the allegations of liability to the trier of fact, and in its absence judgment for defendant was proper (47 Cal. App. 3d 802, 811) .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Summary Judgment Denied When Damages Possible

In Lewis v. Superior Court (1978) 77 Cal. App. 3d 844, 144 Cal. Rptr. 1 , defendant, as attorney for plaintiff, failed to assert plaintiff's rights to her husband's military pension as community property in her dissolution proceeding. In the malpractice suit, defendant moved for summary judgment, contending that plaintiff could not as a matter of law show any damage, since she would still be able to assert her rights to the pension as a tenant in common. The motion for summary judgment was denied, and defendant petitioned for a writ of mandate in the court of appeal.

The court of appeal denied the writ, agreeing with the trial court that summary judgment should not be granted. It held that although plaintiff remained a tenant in common to the unadjudicated property, and could later enforce her interest in a separate action, it did not necessarily follow that she could not as a matter of law prove damages in this action (77 Cal. App. 3d 844, 852) . Although defendant's omission may not have caused any damage to plaintiff, it could be possible for her to show that she would not be able to collect on a future judgment for some reason, such as her husband's moving out of the jurisdiction, making new elections under the pension affecting plaintiff's interest, or having defenses against her action based on some agreement between them (77 Cal. App. 3d 844, 852) . The court concluded that where there are such possible factual issues that might establish damage at trial, a motion for summary judgment should be denied (77 Cal. App. 3d 844, 852-853) .

This form may be submitted by plaintiff in opposition to a motion for summary judgment in a legal malpractice action when the motion is based on the contention that the action is premature because no damage will occur unless plaintiffs lose an unresolved lawsuit stemming from the malpractice. The ground of opposition is that the malpractice consisted of failing to prevent the litigation, so that the litigation itself constitutes damage.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should provide facts showing that purpose of the employment of defendant was to place plaintiff in a position to be free from subsequent litigation, and should then argue that the fact that subsequent litigation has been filed constitutes damages.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Subsequent Litigation Constitutes Damage

In Sindell v. Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 1457, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 594 , plaintiffs brought a malpractice action based on defendant's employment by plaintiff's father to complete an estate plan. The action alleged that defendant failed to obtain a consent from the father's spouse regarding which assets were properly to be included in and distributed from his estate. The action further alleged that at the time of the preparation of the estate plan, the spouse had been willing to waive any community interest in assets which were involved in the estate plan. However, after the father's death, the spouse disputed what assets were included in the estate, and initiated litigation on that issue. Defendant attorney contented that the malpractice action was premature, arguing that plaintiffs would suffer actual injury only if their father's spouse's litigation resulted in a judgment adverse to them. The trial court agreed with defendant, and dismissed the action on the ground that until the pending litigation is resolved it cannot be determined whether or not plaintiffs sustained any actual injury.

The court of appeal reversed, concluding that the litigation itself constituted damage. Defendant relied heavily on ITT Small Business Fin. Corp. v. Niles (1994) 9 Cal. 4th 245, 36 Cal. Rptr. 2d 552, 885 P.2d 965 , arguing that in transactional malpractice cases the action does not accrue until plaintiff suffers an actual injury through entry of an adverse judgment. However, the court noted that the unresolved litigation at issue in this case did not involve the adequacy of defendant's estate plan documentation, but rather negligence in failing to obtain from the spouse written confirmation of the assets encompassed by the plan (54 Cal. App. 4th 1457, 1467). The court held that where the purpose of the retention of a lawyer is to place a client or the client's beneficiaries in quiet ownership of assets, and the lawyer fails to obtain a consent which would have precluded subsequent litigation, then the fact of the litigation itself is the event which constitutes damage (54 Cal. App. 4th 1457, 1470) .

This form may be submitted by plaintiff in opposition to a motion for summary judgment in a legal malpractice action when the motion is based on the contention that the plaintiff lacks proof that the underlying lawsuit was meritorious. The ground of opposition is that the attorney's own negligence in the underlying action in failing to preserve critical evidence makes it practically impossible for plaintiff to prove causation, justifying a shift in the burden of proof to the attorney to prove that his or her negligence did not damage plaintiff.

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, counsel should provide facts showing that the malpractice defendant failed to preserve evidence critical to the underlying lawsuit, as well as facts showing how that evidence, had it been preserved, would have allowed plaintiff to prevail in the underlying action.

This form may be modified for use in other procedural contexts, such as to oppose a motion for nonsuit.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Burden of Proving Causation May Be Shifted to Defendant

In Galanek v. Wismar (1999) 68 Cal. App. 4th 1417, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 236 , plaintiff suffered a serious head injury in a car accident when her car was hit from behind by another vehicle. In addition to filing suit against the other driver, plaintiff brought a products liability action against the car manufacturer, alleging that the injuries were caused by a defect in her vehicle that caused the driver's seat to collapse upon impact. While defendant was serving as plaintiff's counsel, plaintiff's automobile, critical to proving the claim of defect against the manufacturer, was sold at auction to a third party and eventually destroyed. The car manufacturer successfully moved for summary judgment on the products liability action, arguing that plaintiff could not prove the vehicle was defective since it had been destroyed before it was properly inspected. Rather than appealing that summary judgment, plaintiff filed a malpractice action against the negligent attorney, alleging the failure to take reasonable steps to prevent the destruction of the vehicle. Following an admission by the plaintiff's attorney in the malpractice suit that he could not prove that plaintiff would have prevailed in the underlying products liability action without the vehicle, defendant attorney successfully moved for nonsuit after plaintiff's opening statement.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that when the alleged malpractice involves the failure to preserve evidence that was critical to the success of the underlying lawsuit, the burden may be shifted to the defendant to prove that the negligence did not cause the malpractice plaintiff to lose a lawsuit that was otherwise meritorious. The court justified shifting the burden of proof on the grounds that it is more appropriate to hold the attorney liable for failing to preserve critical evidence than to deny the malpractice plaintiff's claim, since the underlying malpractice is the very reason the plaintiff has lost the evidence necessary to prove that the underlying claim was meritorious (68 Cal. App. 4th 1417, 1426) . The court also noted, however, that a malpractice plaintiff must establish a prima facie case or substantial probability of causation as a condition precedent to shifting the burden of proof. In the case before the court, nonsuit was improper because the malpractice plaintiff's opening statement alleged a prima facie case against the attorney by alleging that the car was defective, the defect caused plaintiff's head injury, the car was unavailable due to defendant's negligence, and that unavailability caused the loss of the underlying lawsuit (68 Cal. App. 4th 1417, 1427).

This form may be submitted in opposition to a motion for summary judgment brought by an attorney in a legal malpractice claim, if the basis for the motion for summary judgment is that the allegations of misconduct made against the attorney are the same allegations that were made and rejected in the arbitration of a fee dispute pursuant to the mandatory fee arbitration statute, Bus. & Prof. Code § 6200 et seq.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law raised. Thus, counsel should include facts detailing the alleged acts of misconduct by the attorney and explain how the damages caused by that misconduct differ from the fee award that was given to the attorney in the arbitration proceeding.

This form may be modified for use in other procedural contexts, such as to oppose a demurrer to the plaintiff's complaint.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Malpractice Action Not Barred by Arbitrator's Award in Favor of Attorney in Attorney's Fee Dispute

In Liska v. Arns Law Firm (2004) 117 Cal. App. 4th 275, 12 Cal. Rptr. 3d 21 , the plaintiff was the former client of a law firm that had represented the plaintiff in a products liability lawsuit. Under the retainer agreement between the plaintiff and the firm, the firm would get one-third of any recovery if the case settled before a trial date was set, but 40 percent of the recovery if the case settled after a trial date was set. The plaintiff alleged that the firm told him that he could expect a recovery of approximately $1,600,000, and that certain top attorneys at the firm would participate fully in handling the case. After a trial date was set, the case settled during mediation for $600,000. Pursuant to the mandatory fee arbitration statute, Bus. & Prof. Code § 6200 et seq., the plaintiff filed a request for arbitration of a dispute over the amount of fees that the firm was owed, and the parties agreed to be bound by the result of the arbitration. During arbitration, the plaintiff alleged that the case settled for less than it was worth because the attorneys were unprepared for the mediation and did not give enough attention to the case. The arbitration panel found in favor of the law firm, concluding that the settlement amount was reasonable, that the plaintiff had been kept fully informed about the case, and that the contingency fee was fair and reasonable given the difficulty of the case. The plaintiff subsequently filed a lawsuit against the law firm and the attorneys who worked on the case, including causes of action for breach of contract and fraud. In addition to reasserting the facts argued at the arbitration, the plaintiff alleged that the individual attorneys who promised to participate fully in the underlying representation did not do so and that the law firm had made an oral representation that the firm would waive its right to recover its costs and would accept only one-third of the settlement if the plaintiff accepted the $600,000 settlement, a promise that was not honored. The defendants demurred to the complaint, arguing that the lawsuit was an attempt to vacate the arbitration award and was barred by the doctrines of collateral estoppel and res judicata because it addressed the same issues adjudicated in the arbitration. The trial court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend, and the plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court held that an arbitration award in favor of an attorney, even if binding by prior agreement of the parties, does not preclude an aggrieved client from filing a subsequent malpractice suit against the attorney (117 Cal. App. 4th 275, 278) . The court noted that the mandatory fee arbitration statute [Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 6200(b)(2), 6204(e)] specifically provides both that the statute does not apply to claims for affirmative relief for damages against the attorney for malpractice and that the award and determinations of the arbitrator are inadmissible in any subsequent action and have no collateral estoppel or res judicata effect (117 Cal. App. 4th 275, 282-283) . Therefore, the court concluded that even if an arbitration award of fees is binding, this award will not preclude a malpractice claim or other claim of misconduct that is based on the same factual claims made to the arbitrator in the fee dispute, so long as the damages or relief sought are something other than the fees that were the subject of the arbitration award (117 Cal. App. 4th 275, 287-288) . In this particular case, although the plaintiff was barred from seeking recovery of the fees awarded to the defendants at the arbitration, he was free to seek recovery for misconduct that may have led to his achieving a smaller recovery in the underlying action than he could have received, and in pursuing this claim, the factual findings of the arbitration panel would not be binding (117 Cal. App. 4th 275, 288) .

This form may be submitted by plaintiff in opposition to a motion for summary judgment in a legal malpractice action when the motion is based on the contention that the one-year limitation period of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6(a) bars the action. The ground of opposition is that there is a triable issue of fact regarding when plaintiff discovered defendant's wrongful act or omission.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach opposing affidavits or declarations and a separate statement of disputed and/or undisputed facts [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)(2), (3)], which include facts showing when plaintiff discovered or reasonably should have discovered defendant's wrongful act or omission.

This form may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a motion for summary judgment supported by The points in § 24A.29.

[b] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, this form may be used to oppose a general demurrer to the complaint, or to oppose a motion for judgment on the pleadings, when it appears on the face of the complaint that plaintiff discovered the facts constituting the alleged malpractice at such time that the statute of limitations does not bar the action.

For memoranda relating to summary judgment generally, see Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Summary Judgment If Question of When Discovery Occurred

In McCann v. Welden (1984) 153 Cal. App. 3d 814, 200 Cal. Rptr. 703 , defendant had represented plaintiff in a divorce proceeding during which he had drafted a stipulation that distributed community assets and required plaintiff to pay spousal support. Plaintiff later brought a malpractice action alleging that the stipulation failed to designate and distribute a savings account as community property, and failed, contrary to defendant's representation, to ensure termination of the spousal support obligation within one year. Defendant moved for summary judgment on the ground that the action was barred by Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6(a). Supporting evidence showed that over one year before filing suit, plaintiff had dismissed defendant after becoming generally dissatisfied with the stipulation, and also that plaintiff knew, from consultation with another attorney, that he had a potential cause of action against defendant for certain errors in the stipulation other than those in issue. Plaintiff, in his opposing declarations, alleged that he discovered the alleged instances of malpractice within a year of bringing suit; he was told of the distribution error by an attorney he had retained to terminate his spousal support obligation, and he learned of the misrepresentation regarding his spousal support obligation when the court denied his request for termination. The trial court granted defendant's motion, and plaintiff appealed the ensuing judgment.

The court of appeal reversed on the ground that there were triable issues of fact regarding whether or not the action was barred by the one-year limitation period of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6(a) (153 Cal. App. 3d 814, 824-825) . The court first noted that the evidence in support of the motion did not necessarily establish that the action was barred by the statute of limitations (153 Cal. App. 3d 814, 819-824) . The court held that, on the contrary, plaintiff's opposing declarations were sufficient to present triable issues on the question whether he discovered, or through the use of reasonable diligence should have discovered, the alleged malpractice within one year of filing his action, and that determination of these issues by way of summary judgment was error (153 Cal. App. 3d 814, 824) .

[b] Statute of Limitations Commences Only for Act or Omission Discovered

The facts and procedural background of McCann v. Welden (1984) 153 Cal. App. 3d 814, 200 Cal. Rptr. 703 , are discussed in § 24A.52[3][a]. The court of appeal, in reversing the summary judgment for defendant, construed Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6(a) to provide a one-year limitation period that runs for a specific wrongful act or omission once it has been actually or constructively discovered by the plaintiff, but does not commence running for any other related but separate wrongful act or omission not yet discovered. Thus, the court rejected defendant's argument that the action was necessarily barred because it was filed over one year after plaintiff became dissatisfied with defendant's work in general, and also after he sought legal advice concerning defendant's work and was told that it contained errors related to but separate from those in issue (153 Cal. App. 3d 814, 819-821) .

[c] Constructive Discovery Depends on Plaintiff's Knowledge and Opportunity

The facts and procedural background of McCann v. Welden (1984) 153 Cal. App. 3d 814, 200 Cal. Rptr. 703 , are discussed in § 24A.52[3][a]. The court of appeal, in reversing the summary judgment for defendant, stated that whether plaintiff had constructive discovery, i.e., whether he should have discovered the alleged malpractice in the exercise of reasonable diligence, depended on whether he possessed knowledge sufficient to put a reasonable person on inquiry, or whether he had the opportunity to learn of the facts of the alleged errors from sources available to him (153 Cal. App. 3d 814, 822) . The court also noted that the question is generally one of fact (153 Cal. App. 3d 814, 824) . Accordingly, the court rejected defendant's argument that constructive knowledge of the alleged malpractice was necessarily established from the time that plaintiff admitted that he became generally dissatisfied with defendant's work and had actual knowledge of specific errors in this work that were related to but separate from those in issue (153 Cal. App. 3d 814, 822-824) .

[d] Confidential Relationship Excuses Failure to Discover Attorney Malpractice

In Day v. Rosenthal (1985) 170 Cal. App. 3d 1125, 217 Cal. Rptr. 89 , the court of appeal affirmed a judgment for plaintiffs for damages for attorney malpractice involving defendant's handling of plaintiffs' tax affairs. The court rejected defendant's argument that plaintiffs' action was barred by the statute of limitations. The court noted that as a general rule, a cause of action for malpractice accrues when the plaintiff is aware of, or with the exercise of reasonable care should have been aware of, the essential facts necessary to establish a cause of action. Defendant argued that plaintiffs should have been on notice of the malpractice for various reasons, including the fact that they received a notice of deficiency from the IRS. However, the court held that because a confidential relationship existed between plaintiffs and defendant, plaintiffs' failure to discover facts constituting fraud or misrepresentation were excused until the attorney-client relationship was terminated (170 Cal. App. 3d 1125, 1166) . The court also noted that the date-of-discovery rule, when applied to a fiduciary, is particularly appropriate when defendant maintains control of plaintiff's property or interests. The court also suggested that the continuing relationship between an attorney and client implies a continuing duty to remedy any error and thus extends the period of limitation. For a discussion of the related issue of the tolling of the statute of limitations while an attorney continues to represent a plaintiff in a specific transaction, see § 24A.54.

[e] Defendant Bears Burden of Proving When Discovery Occurred or Should Have Occurred

In Samuels v. Mix (1999) 22 Cal. 4th 1, 91 Cal. Rptr. 2d 273, 989 P.2d 701 , the plaintiff filed a malpractice action against an attorney and his law firm, alleging that the attorney had negligently advised her to settle for an inadequate amount her suit against a drug manufacturer for injuries she allegedly suffered after ingesting the drug L-tryptophan. The plaintiff, who filed the malpractice suit in October 1992, alleged that she first learned of the attorney's negligence after November 1991, when she first discovered that the attorney had substantially understated the value of her claim. In the defendants' answer to the complaint, they alleged in part that all causes of action were barred by an applicable statute of limitations, including Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6(a). The plaintiff's suit was bifurcated, with the statute of limitations issue tried separately first. The trial court granted the defendants' motion in limine for an order placing on the plaintiff the burden of establishing by a preponderance of the evidence that the statute of limitations had not run. After taking testimony from the plaintiff and the attorney she had consulted subsequent to the defendant, the trial court instructed the jury that the plaintiff had the burden of proving that her lawsuit was timely filed. The jury found that the plaintiff had failed to bring her action in a timely manner, and the plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal reversed the trial court, concluding that the trial court had erred in placing the burden of proof on the plaintiff. The defendants appealed.

The California Supreme Court agreed with the court of appeal that the trial court erred in placing the burden on the plaintiff to prove when she discovered or should have discovered the facts constituting the defendants' alleged malpractice. The Court first noted that Evid. Code § 500 places on the party making a claim or asserting a defense the burden of proving each element essential to that claim or defense, except when otherwise provided by law. The Court then concluded that the plain language of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6(a) makes the plaintiff's actual or constructive discovery of the facts constituting a defendant's wrongdoing an element of the affirmative defense that the claim is barred by the one-year limitations period, rather than an element of the plaintiff's claim for malpractice (22 Cal. 4th 1, 5, 7-9) .

The Court went on to reject the defendants' arguments for creating an exception to the general rule of Evid. Code § 500. First, the Court rejected the argument that the legislature, in enacting Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6, intended that the burden of proof be placed on the plaintiff, as it is when applying the common law discovery rule. In the absence of any legislative history to support the defendants' argument, the Court noted that the common law discovery rule is a rule designed to benefit a plaintiff by delaying accrual of a cause of action until such time as the plaintiff discovers or reasonably has cause to discover the facts constituting that cause of action. Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6(a), by contrast, is intended to benefit the defendant by allowing for a shorter one-year limitations period, rather than the alternate four-year-from-occurrence limitations period, if the defendant can prove that the plaintiff failed to bring the action within one year after actual or constructive discovery of the wrongdoing. The Court concluded that this distinction justified the different burdens of proof (22 Cal. 4th 1, 9-11) . The Court also concluded that the legislature's apparent concern with benefiting defendants in attorney malpractice actions by providing a rule that would provide a definite outside limitations period demonstrated that they were concerned with more than merely codifying the common law discovery rule, which in theory was very open-ended (22 Cal. 4th 1, 12) .

Second, the Court rejected the defendants' argument that the discovery rule of Code Civ. Proc. § 338(d), applicable to some fraud actions, was analogous to the rule of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6(a), and therefore the burden should be placed on the plaintiff under the latter, as it is when applying the former. In rejecting this argument, the Court noted that the two provisions were structured differently and that the rule applicable in fraud actions was, like the common law rule, a rule creating an exception to the applicable limitations period by delaying the accrual of the cause of action. Therefore, when applying the rule in a fraud action, the burden is properly placed on the plaintiff (22 Cal. 4th 1, 14-17) .

Third, the Court rejected the defendants' argument that the burden of proof should be placed on the plaintiff as a matter of fairness and judicial policy, reiterating its conclusion that a defendant seeking to benefit from a shorter limitations period should bear the burden of proving the elements of that defense (22 Cal. 4th 1, 17-19) .

Finally, the Court rejected the defendants' argument that the burden of proof should be placed on the plaintiff because the facts necessary to demonstrate the plaintiff's actual or constructive discovery of the alleged malpractice are peculiarly within the plaintiff's access and control. The Court noted that it did not usually create exceptions to the general rule of Evid. Code § 500 merely on the basis of relative access to evidence. Moreover, the Court pointed out that to the extent that a defendant argues for a plaintiff's constructive discovery of the facts constituting the alleged malpractice, no reason existed to assume that the facts needed would be peculiarly within the control of the plaintiff. The Court also noted that there was nothing in the record to indicate that the plaintiff in this particular case had any superior or enhanced access to evidence concerning when she discovered or should have discovered the facts constituting the alleged malpractice (22 Cal. 4th 1, 19-20) .

This form may be submitted by plaintiff in opposition to a motion for summary judgment in a legal malpractice action when the motion is based on the contention that the statute of limitations bars the action. The ground of opposition is that there is a triable issue of fact regarding when plaintiff suffered actual harm from defendant's negligence.

The optional bracketed language in Paragraph B may be used in actions involving an attorney's failure to comply with the statute of limitations in the underlying action. Optional Paragraph C may be used in actions involving alleged inadequate legal advice.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations which oppose the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c], and which include a showing of when the harm to plaintiff occurred as a result of defendant's negligence.

This form may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a motion for summary judgment supported by The points in § 24A.29.

[b] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, The points in this form may be used to oppose a general demurrer to the complaint, or to oppose a motion for judgment on the pleadings, when it appears on the face of the complaint that plaintiff suffered injury at such time that the statute of limitations bars the action.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Summary Judgment if Question of When Injury Occurred

In Adams v. Paul (1995) 11 Cal. 4th 583, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 594, 904 P.2d 1205 , plaintiff Adams had retained defendant Paul for the purpose of proceeding against her late husband's estate based on the husband's killing of their son. Paul advised Adams that the time for filing claims against the estate would not begin to run until letters of administration were issued, and that an action would need to be filed within 90 days after any claim was rejected. Adams's claim against the estate was not rejected until two years later, at which time Adams instituted a wrongful death action. The estate argued that the statute of limitations barred the action, but the trial court found that material issues of fact existed concerning whether the estate was estopped from asserting the defense because of its representations to Adams. Adams and the estate reached a settlement in the action, and Adams then sued Paul for legal malpractice, alleging that his failure to inform her of the correct statute of limitations was negligent, and caused her to receive less in the settlement than she would have absent the negligent advice. Paul demurred to the complaint on the ground that the malpractice action was barred by the statute of limitations; the trial court sustained the demurrer and dismissed the complaint on the ground that Adams had been damaged, and the malpractice cause of action accrued, at the time the statute of limitations in the underlying wrongful death action expired. The court of appeal held that the cause of action had accrued at the time of the summary judgment motion in the wrongful death action, but that the malpractice action was still time-barred. The Supreme Court granted review, and reversed.

The Court began by noting that, in the "classic" situation in which an attorney negligently fails to file the underlying lawsuit within the applicable statutory period and does nothing further, the plaintiff suffers actual harm at the time the statutory period lapses because the right or remedy of recovery is substantially impaired at that time (11 Cal. 4th 583, 589) . However, there are numerous other circumstances in which the attorney's negligence may have created only the potential for future harm, including situations in which there may be factual issues raised regarding the statute of limitations, such as issues of waiver, estoppel, or even the applicable statute of limitations (11 Cal. 4th 583, 590-591) . The Court also pointed out that in cases of contingent or speculative harm, the determination of actual injury does not necessarily depend on or require some form of final adjudication or settlement (11 Cal. 4th 583, 591) . In light of this range of issues, the Court held that it is for the trier of fact to determine when the requisite actual harm occurred as a consequence of the attorney's negligence; only if the facts are undisputed can the trial court resolve the question as a matter of law for the purposes of a summary judgment motion (11 Cal. 4th 583, 591-592) .

In Budd v. Nixen (1971) 6 Cal. 3d 195, 98 Cal. Rptr. 849, 491 P.2d 433 , plaintiff hired an attorney to defend him and the corporation of which he was president, in a civil suit for breach of contract. The attorney filed answers to the complaint in 1963, but failed to make the necessary allegation that his individual client had signed the contract in his representative capacity only, and bore no personal liability on the contract. In 1966, after hiring a new attorney, losing the action, and filing a motion for new trial and an appeal which were unsuccessful, plaintiff filed a legal malpractice action against the first attorney. Defendant's motion for summary judgment was granted by the trial court on the basis that the then two-year statute of limitations barred the action. Plaintiff appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed the summary judgment. The Court noted that the evidence conflicted as to when plaintiff suffered injury from defendant's negligence, because plaintiff alleged injury at the time he was required to pay attorney's fees, and at the time of formal entry of judgment against him in the contract action (6 Cal. 3d 195, 201-202) . Because plaintiff's cause of action did not accrue until plaintiff both discovered the cause of action and sustained actual damage, and because the factual issue as to when damage accrued remained unresolved, summary judgment for defendant was improper (6 Cal. 3d 195, 203-204) .

[b] Statute Commences on Conclusion of Litigation or Negotiation When Adequacy of Advice Is Subject of Dispute

In Baltins v. James (1995) 36 Cal. App. 4th 1193, 42 Cal. Rptr. 2d 896 , plaintiffs, a husband and wife, sued their former attorney for professional negligence in advising them that they could transfer real property that was part of a disputed community property division between the husband and his former wife. When plaintiff husband and his former wife separated, they signed a handwritten marital settlement agreement which became the basis of an interlocutory judgment of dissolution. Subsequently, the former wife filed a motion to set aside those portions of the interlocutory and final judgments that divided the community property and set the amount of spousal and child support. Plaintiffs then retained defendant to oppose the ex-wife's motion and provide related legal advice. The trial court set aside the community property division, and, on defendant's advise, plaintiff's appealed this order. Defendant then advised plaintiffs that the pendency of the appeal allowed them to dispose of and manage property as though the trial court's order setting aside the property division did not exist. Plaintiff husband then transferred real property which had been a community asset of his first marriage to plaintiff wife as her sole and separate property. Furthermore, plaintiff husband continued to pay mortgages on certain investment properties he received under the former property settlement agreement, based on defendant's advice that he would either get title to those properties or would receive reimbursement credits for his expenditures. On appeal, the order setting aside the community property division was affirmed, and matter remanded with the indication that the husband's right to reimbursement credits was uncertain and that the husband might be assessed charges to reimburse the community for his use of community assets. The plaintiffs then filed suit against defendant, alleging in an amended complaint that as a result of actions taken following defendant's advice plaintiff husband was found to have violated fiduciary duties in managing community assets and was thus denied a substantial portion of the reimbursement credits he claimed. Plaintiffs further asserted that until the dissolution action ruling, he did not discover defendant's negligence and the resulting damage. Defendant demurred on the ground that the plaintiffs claims were time barred by Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6, and the trial court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend.

The court of appeal reversed, ruling that any error in defendant's advice was not determinable, and had no effect, until following defendant's advice resulted in an adverse judgment in the dissolution action (36 Cal. App. 4th 1193, 1208) . The court noted that the tolling provision of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6 provides that the period for commencement of an action for legal malpractice is tolled until the plaintiff sustains actual injury (36 Cal. App. 4th 1193, 1201) . The court rejected defendant's argument that the plaintiff's actual injury occurred at the time of the transfer of the community asset from plaintiff husband to plaintiff wife. The plaintiffs sustained no injury immediately upon the property's transfer; rather, the transfer created a potential for adverse consequences if the former wife challenged the transfer and the trial court ruled against the plaintiffs. This threat of future harm which was not yet realized was insufficient to create a cause of action and thereby end the tolling of the limitations period (36 Cal. App. 4th 1193, 1207-1208) . Since the alleged actual injury was within the statutory limitations period, the court of appeal reversed the dismissal of the complaint, and remanded the cause to the trial court for further proceedings (36 Cal. App. 4th 1193, 1208) .

In Moss v. Stockdale, Peckham & Werner (1996) 47 Cal. App. 4th 494, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 805 , plaintiff retained an attorney to represent her in an insurance bad faith action. The attorney failed to prosecute the case and it was dismissed for failure to bring it to trial within five years as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 583.310. Plaintiff sued the law firm for legal malpractice. Plaintiff's legal malpractice complaint was filed less than one year after the underlying action was dismissed, but more than one year after the five year deadline imposed by Code Civ. Proc. § 583.310 passed. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of defendant on the ground that the action was barred by the Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6 one year statute of limitations for legal malpractice. The court of appeal reversed, holding that under Adams v. Paul (1995) 11 Cal. 4th 583, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 594, 904 P.2d 1205 [see § 24A.53[3][a]], there were triable issues of fact as to when plaintiff suffered actual injury. The court concluded that the trial court erred in finding that plaintiff suffered actual injury as soon as the five year deadline passed (47 Cal. App. 4th 494, 503) . Code of Civ. Proc. § 583.340 provides an exception to the five year deadline would have tolled the statute when bringing the action would have been impossible, impracticable, or futile. According to the court, the record in this case raised a factual issue as to whether the dismissal of the underlying action might have been avoided on the basis that plaintiff could not be penalized for the positive misconduct of her attorney who abandoned her (47 Cal. App. 4th 494, 503) .

This memorandum may be submitted by plaintiff in opposition to a motion for summary judgment in a legal malpractice action when the motion is based on the contention that the statute of limitations bars the action. The ground of opposition is that there is a triable issue of fact regarding when the defendant no longer continued to represent plaintiff in the matter in which the wrongful act or omission allegedly occurred. The optional paragraph may be used if a fee arbitration between the attorney and the client is the basis for the assertion that the representation was ended.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations that oppose the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c], and that include a showing of when the defendant continued to represent plaintiff in the matter in which the wrongful act or omission allegedly occurred.

This form may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a motion for summary judgment supported by The points in § 24A.29.

With appropriate modifications, this form may be used to oppose a general demurrer to the complaint, or to oppose a motion for judgment on the pleadings, when it appears on the face of the complaint that the statute of limitations does not bar the action.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Summary Judgment if Question of When Representation Ended

In O'Neill v. Tichy (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 114, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 162 , defendants advised plaintiffs regarding the reorganization of their business and how to reduce labor costs. As a result of plaintiffs' actions to close a slaughterhouse in 1977 and replace it with four new, nonunion companies, two unions filed claims with the NLRB alleging that plaintiffs had committed unfair labor practices. Defendants continued to represent plaintiffs in proceedings before the NLRB. In 1982, the administrative law judge found that plaintiffs had committed unfair labor practices. After the ALJ decision, plaintiffs sought second opinions concerning defendants' advice regarding the reorganization of their business. In May 1988, the NLRB affirmed the ALJ's decision, and defendants advised plaintiffs that it was unlikely the decision would be overturned. In July 1988, plaintiffs retained separate counsel regarding defendants' perceived malpractice. In September 1988, plaintiffs notified defendants in writing that although they wanted them to continue to protect their appeal to the Ninth Circuit, they wanted to delay pursuing the appeal in order to pursue a negotiated settlement of the NLRB proceedings. Defendants agreed with plaintiffs that other counsel should be retained to handle the settlement negotiations. Defendants were asked to make their files regarding the NLRB action available for review by the new attorney and to provide him office space and background advice on the matter. On February 17, 1989, plaintiffs formally discharged defendants in writing. On February 16, 1990, plaintiffs filed a legal malpractice action against the defendants for negligently advising them regarding the reorganization of their business. Defendants moved for summary judgment on the grounds, among others, that the action was barred by the statute of limitations. The trial court granted summary judgment after determining the action was barred by the statute of limitations.

The court of appeal reversed the summary judgment. The court held that under Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6(a)(2), the statute of limitations was tolled until the date defendants ceased to represent plaintiffs on the specific matter in which the malpractice allegedly occurred, and that the client's awareness of the attorney's negligence does not interrupt the tolling of the statute of limitations period so long as the client permits the attorney to continue representing the client regarding the specific subject matter in which the alleged negligence occurred (19 Cal. App. 4th 114, 120-121) . Here, the record revealed a triable issue of material fact concerning the date in which defendants ceased to represent plaintiffs. It was uncertain what defendants were authorized to do and the extent of their involvement. There was also evidence that another attorney took over the subject matter at issue at an earlier date. In light of the conflicting evidence, summary judgment could not be sustained (19 Cal. App. 4th 114, 121) .

In Gurkewitz v. Haberman (1982) 137 Cal. App. 3d 328, 187 Cal. Rptr. 14 , defendants represented plaintiffs in an action undertaken in their capacity as trustees against a third party. The action was dismissed in October 1977, for failure to prosecute under former Code Civ. Proc. § 583(a) (now see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 583.410-583.430), and the dismissal was affirmed by the court of appeal. This decision was final in December 1978; thereafter, defendants negotiated with the third party's attorney for a reduction in the latter's costs bill. The memorandum of costs on appeal was sent to plaintiffs in March 1979, and the instant malpractice action was filed in November 1979. Defendant's motion for summary judgment was granted on the ground that the action was barred by the statute of limitations of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6; the statute of limitations was held by the trial court to have begun to run in October 1977. Plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the summary judgment. The court held that the negotiations with opposing counsel constituted continuing representation within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6(a)(2), and that this continuing representation tolled the operation of both the one-year and the four-year limitations periods (137 Cal. App. 3d 328, 333-335) . The facts as presented by the motion for summary judgment were insufficient to support the granting of the motion (137 Cal. App. 3d 328, 333) .

[b] Participation in Fee Arbitration Does Not Preclude Continued Representation

In Jacoby v. Schenkel (1995) 36 Cal. App. 4th 1701, 43 Cal. Rptr. 2d 309 , plaintiff filed an original complaint for breach of fiduciary duty, constructive trust, money paid by mistake, and money had and received against his former attorney based on the attorney's withdrawal of substantial sums from the client trust account without permission. The complaint, which was filed in 1992, alleged that plaintiff and defendant were in the process of arbitrating their fee dispute during the period from 1991 to 1992. The defendant filed a demurrer to the original complaint, asserting that the action was time-barred since plaintiff had knowledge of the facts constituting the alleged breach in 1989. Prior to the hearing on the demurrer, plaintiff filed an amended complaint omitting the allegation that plaintiff and defendant were arbitrating their fee dispute from 1991 to 1992, and adding allegations that defendant continued to represent plaintiff into 1992 so that the statute of limitations was tolled. At the hearing, the trial court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend as to both the original complaint and the amended complaint, and dismissed the action.

The court of appeal reversed the dismissal and directed the trial court to reinstate plaintiff's amended complaint (36 Cal. App. 4th 1701, 1709) . The court noted that Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6 provides for a tolling of the statute of limitations during the period that the attorney continues to represent the plaintiff regarding the specific subject matter in which the alleged wrongful act or omission occurred. The court then noted that although the original complaint stated that the parties were engaged in fee arbitration in 1991 and 1992, it did not indicate the date the representation ceased. The court stated that the allegation regarding fee arbitration is not inconsistent with a continuing representation of plaintiff by defendant, reasoning that merely because an attorney and a client are involved in a fee dispute does not preclude the attorney from continuing to represent the client in the underlying matter (36 Cal. App. 4th 1701, 1708) . Then, taking as true the allegation in the amended complaint that the defendant continued to represent the plaintiff regarding the same subject matter into 1992, the court concluded that the original complaint was timely (36 Cal. App. 4th 1701, 1708) .

[c] Continued Representation Tolling Applies Unconditionally

In Kulesa v. Castleberry (1996) 47 Cal. App. 4th 103, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 669 , plaintiffs brought an action for legal malpractice against their former attorneys for failure to pursue a personal injury claim. Defendants moved for summary judgment on the ground that the action was barred by the statute of limitations. The trial court agreed and entered summary judgment.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment for defendants, finding that the running of the statute had been tolled because of the attorneys' continued representation. Defendants argued that pursuant to Finlayson v. Sanbrook (1992) 10 Cal. App. 4th 1436, 13 Cal. Rptr. 2d 406 , the statute of limitations began to run on the day the plaintiffs lost their rights to pursue their personal injury claims, regardless of the continued representation. The court of appeal disagreed, stating that when undisputed facts showed the attorneys' continued representation until within a year of the filing of the legal malpractice action, the observations in Finlayson about actual injury were irrelevant (47 Cal. App. 4th 103, 109) . The court concluded that under Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6(a)(2) the statute of limitations on a legal malpractice action is unconditionally tolled during the time the attorney continues to represent the client regarding the specific subject matter in which the alleged malpractice occurred. Furthermore, the continued representation tolling is unaffected by events which might otherwise trigger the commencement of the statutory period (47 Cal. App. 4th 103, 106) .

[d] Continued Representation Tolling Applicable if Client Returns to Attorney With Problem In Transactional Documents

In Fritz v. Ehrmann (2006) 136 Cal. App. 4th 1374, 39 Cal. Rptr. 3d 670 , the plaintiff was the former client of an attorney who prepared two promissory notes for the plaintiff in connection with the plaintiff's sale of a motel. The first note, drafted in 1983, provided generally that the buyers would pay interest at 10 percent on the purchase price for twenty years, at which point the principal would be due and payable. It also contained a provision under which half of the interest due during the first five years would be deferred and paid at the end of the note's term. The second note, drafted in 1995, replaced the initial note and reduced the interest rate to 8 percent. However, due to the attorney's error, the note did not contain a requested clause that would have prohibited the buyers from making early payments on the principal. Instead, it contained a clause carried over from the first note that allowed the buyers to make early principal payments. In addition, the second note failed to reference the deferred interest due at term's end under the first note. From 2000 to 2002, the buyers made three payments on the principal, each of which the plaintiff agreed to accept at the time they were made. After the third payment, which covered the last of the principal amount, the buyers sought reconveyance of the deed of trust, but the plaintiff alleged that they still owed over $180,000 in deferred interest. The buyers brought suit to clear their title in June 2002, and the plaintiff cross-complained for payment of the missing interest. The same attorney who drafted the notes represented the plaintiff in the controversy from April 2002 until April 2003, at which time he was replaced. In October 2003, the dispute was settled, with the plaintiff agreeing to accept $100,000. The plaintiff then filed a malpractice suit in November 2003 against the attorney who drafted the notes. The trial court granted summary judgment for the attorney on the grounds that the suit was barred by the statute of limitations. The plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court first concluded that the plaintiff did not sustain actual injury sufficient to begin the running of the statute of limitations in 1995 when the second note was drafted with errors. At the time the note was drafted, any potential harm was merely speculative future harm, because the buyers could have chosen not to make payments on the principal and they could have paid the deferred interest as owed under the first note. Moreover, even if the statute had begun to run in 2000 for the injury of early principal payments, the limitations period would not have begun to run for the separate injury of refusal to pay the deferred interest until early 2002 (136 Cal. App. 4th 1374, 1383-1387) .

The court then rejected the attorney's argument that the one-year limitations period, even if triggered as late as mid-2002, had expired before suit was filed in November 2003. The court held that in a case involving negligence in the preparation of transactional documents, the statute of limitations is tolled under the continued representation tolling provision if the client comes to the attorney after the potential malpractice manifests itself, and before the limitations period has run, in an attempt to have the attorney rectify the problem or mitigate the damage. Under these circumstances, it does not matter if there is a gap in time between the completion of the documents and the date on which the client returns to the attorney with the problem during which the attorney was not actually "continuing to represent" the client with respect to that specific subject matter. In this particular case, in early 2002, within a few months after the buyers' refusal to pay the deferred interest, the plaintiff had come to the defendant with the problems in the second note, at which point the defendant agreed to represent the plaintiff. That representation lasted until April 2003, approximately seven months before the malpractice suit was filed. The court tolled the statute of limitations during the time the defendant "continued to represent" plaintiff in trying to solve the dispute over the deferred interest caused by the defendant's earlier error, and held that the malpractice suit was filed within a year after the injury sustained in early 2002 (136 Cal. App. 4th 1374, 1387-1391) .

In Gonzalez v. Kalu (2006) 140 Cal. App. 4th 21, 43 Cal. Rptr. 3d 866 , plaintiff hired an attorney to represent her in a claim for sexual harassment against her employer. The attorney sent a letter to the employer demanding a settlement. The employer fired the client, after which the attorney filed a sexual harassment complaint with the Department of Fair Employment and Housing. On that same day, according to plaintiff, either the attorney or someone in the attorney's office told plaintiff that the case was going to take a very long time and that they would contact her. Two-and-a-half years later, during which time plaintiff had no communications with the attorney's office, plaintiff discovered that the attorney was not prosecuting the sexual harassment lawsuit and that the time for filing the lawsuit had expired. Plaintiff sued the attorney for malpractice. Although the limitations period for bringing a malpractice action had seemingly expired, plaintiff argued that the limitations period had been tolled during the time that plaintiff believed that the attorney was continuing to represent her with her sexual harassment claim. The trial court rejected this argument, however, after concluding that no reasonable person would have thought the attorney was still representing the client through such a long time period with no contact between the two. Summary judgment was entered for the attorney. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed and remanded. The court held that if an attorney unilaterally withdraws or abandons the client, the representation ends for purposes of the continued representation exception when the client actually has or reasonably should have no expectation that the attorney will provide further legal services. Thus, the representation may end when the attorney provides express notification to the client that the attorney will perform no further services, or, if the attorney remains silent, the end of the representation may be inferred from the circumstances of the case. The court also noted that the issue of whether the client actually and reasonably believed that the attorney would provide further legal services in the matter is predominantly a question of fact (140 Cal. App. 4th 21, 30-31) . In the case before the court, the court held that a triable issue existed as to whether the limitations period was tolled. Plaintiff had presented evidence that the attorney's office had told her the claim would take a very long time and that they would contact her, although they never prosecuted the claim beyond filing an administrative claim and never contacted her. In addition, there was no evidence plaintiff had been advised as to the time frames within which specific actions would need to be taken. Under those circumstances, the court could not say as a matter of law that it was unreasonable for plaintiff not to have known during the long period with no contact that the attorney was no longer representing her (140 Cal. App. 4th 21, 31-33) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No Summary Judgment if Question of When Representation Ended

In Nielsen v. Beck (2007) 157 Cal. App. 4th 1041, 69 Cal. Rptr. 3d 435 , plaintiffs filed an attorney malpractice action against the attorney hired originally to handle their bankruptcy matters. As part of this representation, the attorney advised the plaintiffs to stop making rent payments to their landlord. When a subsequent unlawful detainer action was filed by the landlord, the attorney also provided representation on that matter. The clients were subsequently found liable for a substantial sum in the unlawful detainer action, although efforts to settle the matter continued. Dissatisfied with the representation being provided by the attorney, the clients executed a substitution of attorney form in the unlawful detainer case. Thereafter, one of the clients called the former attorney on three occasions to seek advice regarding strategies for settling the unlawful detainer action, and the attorney responded to these requests and billed the former clients. The clients subsequently brought the malpractice action against the attorney based on his handling of both cases. The trial court granted summary judgment based on the statute of limitations, but the court of appeal reversed. The court of appeal concluded that triable issues of fact remained as to how long the limitations period was tolled by the continued representation tolling rule. The court noted that the execution of a substitution of attorney form does not necessarily dictate a finding that the attorney's representation of the client has ceased, at least if there is contrary evidence from which the trier of fact could conclude that the representation continued beyond that date. In the case before it, the court concluded that the trier of fact could reasonably find that the attorney's representation continued in some capacity through the subsequent phone conversations, even though he had been replaced as litigator in the case, which would mean that the action was timely (157 Cal. App. 4th 1041, 1051-1052) .

In Gold v. Weissman (2004) 114 Cal. App. 4th 1195, 8 Cal. Rptr. 3d 480 , the plaintiff's attorney failed to file the plaintiff's medical malpractice action within the statute of limitations. The attorney admitted to the plaintiff that he failed to meet the statutory time limit, blaming the failure on his attorney service, and offered the plaintiff $10,000 in compensation if she would agree not to sue him. He also said he would try to get further compensation from the attorney service. The plaintiff declined the offer and demanded $25,000 instead. A few months later, the plaintiff's daughter, who practiced law outside California, contacted the plaintiff's attorney about the dispute. He asked for more time to pursue the attorney service and suggested in the meantime that the plaintiff file a complaint about the underlying medical malpractice with the California Board of Medical Quality Assurance (BMQA). In an effort to assist the plaintiff, the attorney drew up a complaint for submission to the BMQA, sent it to the plaintiff's daughter, and also indicated a willingness to offer further assistance. The plaintiff never filed the BMQA complaint, but instead filed an attorney malpractice action one year minus one day after the date that the attorney sent the drafted complaint to the plaintiff's daughter. The attorney argued that the attorney malpractice action was untimely because it was filed more than a year after the date that the attorney acknowledged that he had missed the time for filing the medical malpractice action. The trial court agreed and granted summary judgment, but the court of appeal reversed. The court of appeal held that the attorney's continued efforts on behalf of the client, both in seeking additional compensation from the attorney service and in preparing the BMQA complaint against the doctor, constituted continued representation stemming from the same underlying medical malpractice claim. The court of appeal rejected the attorney's claim that the continued representation involved a different subject matter because it involved different forums than the medical malpractice claim and sought different remedies from that underlying claim. The court focused instead on the fact that the actions all stemmed from the same underlying conduct, the doctor's malpractice, and sought to help remedy the various injuries caused to plaintiff by that conduct. Therefore, the statute of limitations on the attorney malpractice claim was tolled during that continued representation (114 Cal. App. 4th 1195, 1200-1201) .

In Lockley v. Law Office of Cantrell, Green, Pekich, Cruz & McCort (2001) 91 Cal. App. 4th 875, 110 Cal. Rptr. 2d 877 , the plaintiff, a police officer who had been employed by a city, hired the defendant, a law firm, to represent him in a workers' compensation claim filed against his employer after the employer had terminated him. Shortly after the plaintiff hired the defendant, the plaintiff and his former employer entered into a compromise and release agreement under which the plaintiff gave up his workers' compensation claim and other claims against the former employer in exchange for the former employer's promise to process an application for non-work-related disability for the plaintiff. Although the defendant was apparently not involved in the negotiation of the release agreement, the defendant did advise the plaintiff to sign the agreement. After the plaintiff's former employer subsequently failed to honor its obligations under the release agreement and the defendant took no steps to enforce the agreement on the plaintiff's behalf, the plaintiff sued the defendant for malpractice. The trial court sustained the defendant's demurrer on the grounds that the action was barred by the statute of limitations. The court of appeal reversed. The court ruled that the trial court erred in sustaining the demurrer in light of the plaintiff's allegations that the statute of limitations was tolled due to the defendant's continued representation of the plaintiff in the workers' compensation claim. On its face, the complaint alleged that the defendant continuously represented the plaintiff's legal interests on the same specific matter of the workers' compensation claim from 1988 until March 1999 and that the malpractice action was filed in February 2000. In addition, the defendant conceded that it represented the plaintiff in the workers' compensation claim at the time the release agreement was being negotiated and that it advised the plaintiff to sign the agreement, even though the agreement clearly and adversely affected the plaintiff's claim to all workers' compensation benefits. Therefore, the workers' compensation claim and the release agreement constituted the same specific subject matter, at least under the record that existed at this stage of the proceedings (91 Cal. App. 4th 875, 889) .

The facts and procedural background of Crouse v. Brobeck, Phleger, & Harrison (1998) 67 Cal. App. 4th 1509, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 94 , are discussed in § 24A.29[3][h]. The court of appeal reversed the trial court's summary judgment granted for defendant attorney, holding not that a fact question existed as to whether defendant attorney had continued to represent plaintiff on the same specific subject matter for purposes of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6(a)(2), but that in fact defendant attorney had continued to represent plaintiff for purposes of the statute and thus the tolling provision applied. The court of appeal rejected defendant's argument that the specific subject matter in which the negligence occurred was "representation on the note," finding instead that defendant attorney's representation of plaintiff involved the same specific subject matter: the sale of plaintiff's limited partnership interest and the collection of the proceeds of the sale. The court noted that, although the original note was replaced after restructuring with a new note, this did not transform the attorney's representation in collecting on the new note representation on a different subject matter (67 Cal. App. 4th 1509, 1528-1529) .

In Worthington v. Rusconi (1994) 29 Cal. App. 4th 1488, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 169 , defendant attorney had been hired by the plaintiff in May 1988 to probate her mother's estate. In the course of the representation, the defendant advised the plaintiff to disclaim the life estate granted to her by her mother (subject to her not remarrying), but to keep the one-sixth interest that she had in the remainder of the estate should the life estate be terminated or should she choose to sell the estate prior to termination of the life estate. Approximately two years after disclaiming her life interest, the plaintiff's siblings filed a petition to have her replaced as executrix of the estate upon learning that she had turned down a $300,000 offer on the home that made up the bulk of the estate. The plaintiff, no longer trusting completely the counsel of the defendant, consulted a second attorney. This second attorney contacted the office of the defendant on March 14, 1991, but was unable to speak with the defendant. Thereafter, the defendant unsuccessfully tried to contact the other attorney but did speak with the plaintiff. The defendant claimed that he performed no legal services for the plaintiff and had no further contact with her after this. On May 1, 1991, the plaintiff signed a substitution of attorneys form, which was signed by the defendant the following day and filed with the probate court on May 14. Plaintiff then filed a malpractice suit against the defendant on April 2, 1992, arguing that the advice to disclaim the life estate was self-serving on the part of the defendant in that he stood to make more money in probating the estate and secured a source of funds for payment of his fees. The defendant moved for summary judgment, claiming that the action was barred by the statute of limitations. The defendant argued that, although the statute of limitations in a legal malpractice claim is tolled pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6(a)(2) while the attorney continues to represent the client, his representation of the plaintiff ended when the second attorney contacted his office. The trial court agreed, and summary judgment for the defendant was entered.

The court of appeal reversed, finding that a material issue of fact existed as to when the defendant ceased his representation of the plaintiff. The court noted that despite his declarations to the contrary, the defendant had contacts with the plaintiff and took actions on her behalf after March 14, 1991, when on April 5, 1991, the defendant sent a letter to the plaintiff that made no mention of the apparent change of counsel and instead offered substantial legal advice as to how they should proceed on the probate matter. The court held that the determination of whether the representation had concluded is to be made from an objective perspective, based on evidence of whether there was an ongoing mutual relationship between the parties and whether activities had been taken in furtherance of the relationship. Thus, the letter sent by the defendant less than a year before the malpractice suit was filed created a question of fact as to whether the attorney/client relationship had ceased, despite evidence that the plaintiff had consulted a second attorney prior to the drafting of the letter (29 Cal. App. 4th 1488, 1498-1499) .

This form may be submitted by plaintiff in opposition to a motion for summary judgment in a legal malpractice action when the motion is based on the contention that the statute of limitations bars the action. The ground of opposition is that there is a triable issue of fact regarding whether plaintiff was under a legal or physical disability which tolled the running of the statute of limitations [see Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6(a)(4)].

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include a showing of when plaintiff was under a legal disability, as might be indicated by any period of insanity [see Code Civ. Proc. § 352]. Counsel should attach affidavits or declarations which oppose the motion, along with the opposing party's separate statement in response to the moving party's statement of undisputed material facts [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b), (c)].

This form may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a motion for summary judgment supported by The points in § 24A.29.

[b] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, this form may be used to oppose a general demurrer to the complaint, or to oppose a motion for judgment on the pleadings, when it appears on the face of the complaint that the statute of limitations does not bar the action.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Statute of Limitations Tolled During Time When Plaintiff Was Under Legal or Physical Disability

Bledstein v. Superior Court (1984) 162 Cal. App. 3d 152, 208 Cal. Rptr. 428 , involved a legal malpractice action brought by plaintiff against his criminal defense attorney. Plaintiff, in reliance on the attorney's advice, pleaded guilty to a narcotics charge and was sentenced to four years in federal prison. Plaintiff served his sentence and filed an action for legal malpractice shortly before his term was complete. Defendant claimed that the action was barred by the legal malpractice statute of limitations. The trial court rejected the defense. Defendant's alternative writ was granted.

The court of appeal discharged the alternative writ and denied defendant's petition for mandate. The court defined the issue as whether the formerly incarcerated plaintiff's legal malpractice case was governed by the tolling provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6 or former Code Civ. Proc. § 352 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 352.1). While both statutes applied, any inconsistencies between the ultimate effect of the statutes were to be resolved by interpretation of the statutes in accordance with the general rules of statutory interpretation. After an exhaustive analysis of the rules of statutory interpretation and prior case law, the court ultimately held that by enacting Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6(a)(4), which tolls the statute during a legal disability, the legislature intended to refer to the general legal disability tolling provision of former Code Civ. Proc. § 352(a)(3), which included imprisonment on a criminal charge as a legal disability. Interpreting the two statutes together, the court found that plaintiff's imprisonment was sufficient to toll the statute, and plaintiff need not show that the imprisonment actually restricted the ability to bring suit (162 Cal. App. 3d 152, 160-166) .

[b] Imprisonment Is Legal Disability for Two Years

Bledstein v. Superior Court (1984) 162 Cal. App. 3d 152, 208 Cal. Rptr. 428 , is discussed in § 24A.55[3][a].

[c] Defendant's Presence Out of State Tolls Limitations Period in Legal Malpractice Action

In Jocer Enterprises, Inc. v. Price (2010) 183 Cal. App. 4th 559, 107 Cal. Rptr. 3d 539 , plaintiffs filed a legal malpractice action against the attorney and law firm who had represented plaintiffs in both prosecution of an action for trade secret misappropriation and defense of a malicious prosecution claim subsequently filed by the defendant in the trade secret misappropriation action. Defendant attorneys were substituted out of the malicious prosecution action as plaintiffs' counsel on July 3, 2006, but the malpractice action was not filed until July 9, 2007. Defendant attorneys demurred to the malpractice claim on the grounds that the action was barred by the limitations period of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6, and the trial court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend. Plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal reversed and remanded to provide plaintiffs an opportunity to amend their complaint. Plaintiffs had agreed that their complaint was untimely unless the limitations period was tolled. However, plaintiffs argued that because the defendant attorney was out of state for the year prior to the filing of the malpractice lawsuit, the limitations period was tolled under Code Civ. Proc. § 351, which provides that if a defendant is out of state when a cause of action against him or her accrues, or after accrual the defendant leaves the state, the running of any statute of limitations is tolled while the defendant is out of state. The court of appeal agreed. Although only the tolling provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6 are effective to toll the limitations period in an attorney malpractice action, the court held that under the rationale of Bledstein v. Superior Court, discussed in [a], above, the tolling provision of Code Civ. Proc. § 351 was incorporated into the tolling provision for legal and physical disabilities provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6(a)(4) (183 Cal. App. 4th 559, 569-570) . The court found, however, that plaintiffs had failed to allege damages by alleging that they could have achieved a better result in the underlying actions but for the attorney's substandard representation. Because this deficiency was first alleged on appeal, the court remanded to allow plaintiffs to cure the defect (183 Cal. App. 4th 559, 572) .

This form may be submitted in opposition to a motion for summary judgment in a legal malpractice action if the plaintiff alleges that the defendant should be equitably estopped from asserting the defense of the statute of limitations because the statute expired only because the plaintiff relied on advice provided by the defendant.

[b] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, this form may be used to oppose a general demurrer to the complaint, or to oppose a motion for judgment on the pleadings.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Equitable Estoppel May Prevent Defendant From Asserting Statute of Limitations

In Leasequip, Inc. v. Dapeer (2002) 103 Cal. App. 4th 394, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 782 , the plaintiff was a privately-held corporation that brought suit against its former attorney for multiple claims of legal malpractice. This suit concerned the defendant's representation of the corporation in multiple claims brought by and against the corporation. During the period in which the defendant continued to represent the corporation, the defendant advised the corporation on many occasions that the failure of the corporation to comply with corporate formalities, including the failure to keep corporate minutes or file a statement of information required by Corp. Code § 1502, would have no negative effect on the ability of the corporation to pursue its business and legal claims. Eventually, however, the Secretary of State suspended the corporation's corporate status for failure to file the required statement of information, which rendered the corporation legally incapable of pursuing a lawsuit. The corporation's corporate status had not yet been revived when the corporation filed a timely suit against the defendant for mishandling many of the corporation's past claims. However, by the time corporate status had been restored, thereby allowing the corporation to prosecute these claims, the statute of limitations had expired on the legal malpractice claims. The defendant demurred on the grounds that the statute of limitations had expired, and the trial court sustained the demurrer. The corporation appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court held that the defendant was equitably estopped from asserting the statute of limitations defense. The court noted that the facts of the case were a classic example of when estoppel was appropriate: (1) an attorney defendant rendered legal advice to a client, allegedly with knowledge that the advice would render the client legally incapable of pursuing a lawsuit against the attorney; (2) the attorney intended the client to rely on the advice; (3) the client was unaware of the effect the advice would have on the statute of limitations; and (4) the client relied on the advice to the client's detriment. Under these circumstances, because the corporation's reliance on the defendant's advice was the cause of both the corporation's suspension and the expiration of the statute of limitations, equitable estoppel was appropriate (103 Cal. App. 4th 394, 404-405) . The court noted that although Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6 may not be tolled for reasons not specified by the statute, estoppel is a distinct concept that does not seek to extend the limitations period, but comes into play only after the limitations period has expired to prevent a defendant from benefitting from the defendant's own wrongdoing (103 Cal. App. 4th 394, 406-407) .

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a motion for summary judgment brought by a defendant attorney in an action brought against the attorney by a former client who was represented by the attorney to defend against criminal charges. The basis for the opposition to the motion for summary judgment is that the claims alleged by the former client are not the type of claims that implicate the policy concerns underlying the requirement that a criminal defendant demonstrate his or her actual innocence of the crimes of which he or she was convicted prior to proceeding with a claim against his or her former attorney.

Counsel should insert argument in this memorandum showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Thus, counsel should include facts describing the nature of the claim being asserted and argue how successful prosecution of the claim would not implicate the policy concerns underlying the requirement that a criminal defendant demonstrate his or her actual innocence of the crimes of which he or she was convicted prior to proceeding with a claim against his or her former attorney, including concerns about permitting a guilty criminal defendant to profit from his or her wrongdoing or allowing a guilty criminal defendant to shift his or her punishment to a negligent attorney. The policy concerns supporting the requirement are discussed in more detail in § 24A.32.

[b] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, this memorandum may be used to oppose a general demurrer to the complaint, to oppose a motion for judgment on the pleadings, or in support of a trial or appellate brief.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Fee Dispute Does Not Require Showing of Actual Innocence

In Brooks v. Shemaria (2006) 144 Cal. App. 4th 434, 50 Cal. Rptr. 3d 430 , plaintiff had been represented by defendant attorney in a prior criminal action in which plaintiff had pleaded no contest and been convicted and sentenced to prison on drug charges. In connection with that criminal proceeding, plaintiff had paid defendant a $50,000 retainer fee, which would pay for both the attorney's representation in defending against the criminal charges and the attorney's actions in seeking the return of plaintiff's property that had been seized in connection with the arrest. According to plaintiff, they had also reached an oral agreement under which the attorney would return the unused balance of the retainer fee at the conclusion of the representation. Following plaintiff's sentencing, the court heard his motion for the return of seized property in a series of hearings occurring over a three-and-a-half-month period. Plaintiff's attorney appeared at the first two hearings, but failed to attend the final two hearings. Some of plaintiff's property was ordered returned and some ordered destroyed. However, because no one ever picked up the property that was ordered returned, steps were taken to dispose of that property as well. Plaintiff subsequently brought suit against his former attorney for negligently failing to secure the return of his property and for breach of contract for not returning the unused portion of the retainer fee that plaintiff had paid. The attorney moved for summary judgment on the grounds that, in order to prosecute the action, plaintiff was required to prove that his criminal conviction had been reversed or vacated and that he was actually innocent of the criminal charges, and that it was undisputed that plaintiff could not meet either of those requirements. The trial court agreed and granted summary judgment. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. Addressing plaintiff's claim that the defendant failed to return the unused portion of the retainer fee, the court held that the requirement that plaintiff demonstrate his actual innocence did not apply to this breach of contract claim. The court briefly described the Supreme Court holdings establishing this "actual innocence" requirement, which are described in § 24A.32, and then briefly described the court of appeal opinion in Bird, Marella, Boxer & Wolpert v. Superior Court (2003) 106 Cal. App. 4th 419, 432, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 782 . In the latter case, the court of appeal held that the actual innocence requirement did not apply to a fee dispute between a criminal defendant and his or her attorney, because such a dispute is not a legal malpractice claim and did not implicate the policy considerations underlying the actual innocence requirement. The court of appeal in the instant case agreed with that holding and concluded that the plaintiff's claim for breach of contract stemming from the attorney's failure to return the unused portion of the retainer had nothing to do with the quality of the attorney's representation or with the plaintiff's guilt or innocence. Therefore, the actual innocence requirement did not apply (144 Cal. App. 4th 434, 439-441) .

[b] Claim Based on Failure to Secure Return of Seized Property Does Not Require Showing of Actual Innocence

The factual and procedural background of Brooks v. Shemaria (2006) 144 Cal. App. 4th 434, 50 Cal. Rptr. 3d 430 , is described in [a], above. In that case, the court of appeal also held that the actual innocence requirement did not apply to plaintiff's claim that the attorney committed negligence in failing to secure the return of plaintiff's property that had been seized in connection with the criminal arrest. Plaintiff argued that because the property recovery proceedings took place after his conviction and sentencing, they were civil rather than criminal proceedings and the actual innocence requirement did not apply. Conversely, defendant argued that because the property return proceedings concerned property seized pursuant to a valid search warrant and took place in the criminal court that convicted and sentenced plaintiff, the proceedings were criminal in nature and the actual innocence requirement applied.

The court of appeal concluded that the determination hinged on the policy considerations underlying the actual innocence requirement, rather than on whether the proceedings were labeled as "criminal" or "civil," and that none of the relevant policy considerations weighed in favor of applying the actual innocence requirement to plaintiff's claim. The court noted that in seeking damages for his attorney's failure to secure the return of plaintiff's property, plaintiff was not seeking to profit from his own wrong, as the relevant property was in fact plaintiff's property. Similarly, plaintiff was not seeking to shift his criminal responsibility to his attorney or otherwise challenge his conviction or sentence. In addition, while plaintiff's criminal conduct was in some sense the ultimate source of his predicament, even the relevant law enforcement authorities had concluded that the property at issue should have been returned to plaintiff, suggesting that the harm for which plaintiff sought damages was not caused by plaintiff's criminal conduct. The court also recognized that there was no mechanism for postconviction redress for the attorney's alleged misconduct and that other potential practical problems, such as problems in quantifying damages, were not implicated by plaintiff's claim. Finding no policy justification for requiring plaintiff to demonstrate his actual innocence before pursuing his claim against defendant, the court reversed the trial court grant of summary judgment (144 Cal. App. 4th 434, 443) .

This memorandum may be submitted by a defendant and cross complainant in opposition to a motion for summary judgment in a legal malpractice action when the motion is based on the contention that a cross complaint against a subsequent attorney for indemnity is not allowed. The ground of opposition is that the cross defendant's negligence did not involve an exercise of professional judgment on the client's behalf.

However, one court of appeal has rejected the main point of law set out in this form--that is, the rule stated in Paragraph B. In Holland v. Thacher (1988) 199 Cal. App. 3d 924, 934-935, 245 Cal. Rptr. 247 , an appellate panel in the First Appellate District of the court of appeal held that, as a broad rule, predecessor attorneys sued for malpractice are prohibited from cross complaining for equitable indemnity against a successor attorney hired to extricate the client from the condition created by the predecessor attorneys [see Holland v. Thacher (1988) 199 Cal. App. 3d 924, 926, 245 Cal. Rptr. 247] . Counsel should therefore take care when using this form, particularly in the First Appellate District, to distinguish the decision in Holland.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations which oppose the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c], and which include a showing that the cross defendant's conduct was negligent, and did not involve an exercise of professional judgment.

This form may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a motion for summary judgment supported by The points in § 24A.35.

[b] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, this form may be used to oppose a general demurrer to the cross complaint, or to oppose a motion for judgment on the pleadings, when it appears on the face of the cross complaint that cross defendant was negligent, and did not exercise professional judgment in choosing a course of action to extricate the client from the cross complainant's negligence.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Cross Complaint for Indemnity Allowed When No Exercise of Professional Judgment by Cross Defendant

In Parker v. Morton (1981) 117 Cal. App. 3d 751, 173 Cal. Rptr. 197 , plaintiff brought a malpractice action against her former attorney for failing to assert, in a dissolution proceeding, her rights to her husband's pension benefits. Defendant filed a cross complaint for indemnity against plaintiff's subsequent attorney for exacerbating plaintiff's damages by failing to pursue the plaintiff's rights to the benefits, which had not yet been lost. The cross defendant moved for summary judgment on the ground that no such cross complaint was permissible, and the trial court granted the motion. Cross complainant appealed, and the court of appeal reversed.

The court of appeal held that a cross complaint for indemnity against a plaintiff's subsequent attorney is allowable when the subsequent attorney clearly exacerbated the first attorney's negligence (117 Cal. App. 3d 751, 767) . The court distinguished the facts of this case from those in which cross complaints against subsequent attorneys were disallowed.

In those cases, the court held, the subsequent attorney was alleged to have negligently exercised professional judgment by making an unreasonable choice of alternative remedies for the client (117 Cal. App. 3d 751, 760, 763) . The court held that in such cases it is correct to disallow the cross complaint because the subsequent attorney's professional judgment in the client's best interest should not be inhibited by the possibility of potential liability to indemnify the client's prior attorney (117 Cal. App. 3d 751, 760, 767) . But in cases where the alleged negligent conduct involved no exercise of professional choice, but rather involved clear cut negligent conduct, a cross complaint should be allowed (117 Cal. App. 3d 751, 767) .

In the case at hand, the subsequent attorney breached his duty to advise the client to pursue her rights, which would have mitigated her damages, and protected her against additional loss (117 Cal. App. 3d 751, 761) . Such conduct did not involve the exercise of professional judgment in making a choice between alternatives, and therefore the possibility of indemnification would present no conflicts of interest (117 Cal. App. 3d 751, 761) . Under these facts, a cross complaint for indemnification was properly allowed (117 Cal. App. 3d 751, 767) .

[b] No Summary Judgment When Cross Defendant Failed to Mitigate Plaintiff's Damages

Parker v. Morton (1981) 117 Cal. App. 3d 751, 173 Cal. Rptr. 197 , is discussed in § 24A.57[3][a].

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Cross Complaint for Indemnity Allowed When No Exercise of Professional Judgment by Cross Defendant

In Copenbarger v. International Ins. Co. (1996) 46 Cal. App. 4th 961, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1 , an action for malicious prosecution against attorneys who filed an indemnity action against successor attorneys, the court noted that although Parker v. Morton (1981) 117 Cal. App. 3d 751, 173 Cal. Rptr. 197 , has been subsequently disagreed with, it has not been overturned. The court thus concluded that a reasonable attorney could have thought that filing a claim for indemnity against the defendants was tenable, so that there was probable cause for the institution of the indemnity action (46 Cal. App. 4th 961, 966) .

§ 24A.58 Opposing Cross Defendant's Contention That Cross Complaint for Indemnity Is Not Allowable--Claim for Indemnity May Be Permitted Against Concurrent Counsel If Policy Considerations Do Not Bar Claim Under Facts of Case

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or used in a trial or appellate brief.]

A CLAIM FOR INDEMNITY MAY BE ALLOWED AGAINST A CONCURRENT COUNSEL OR CO-COUNSEL IN AN ATTORNEY MALPRACTICE CASE IF THE PUBLIC POLICY CONSIDERATIONS THAT GENERALLY PROHIBIT INDEMNIFICATION FROM A SUCCESSOR COUNSEL ARE NOT IMPLICATED UNDER THE FACTS OF THE PARTICULAR CASE.

A. Case-by-Case Analysis Required. The question of whether a claim for indemnity should be allowed in concurrent counsel or co-counsel cases must be decided on a case-by-case basis (Musser v. Provencher (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 274, 284, 121 Cal. Rptr. 2d 373, 48 P.3d 408).

B. Claim Allowable If Public Policy Concerns Not Implicated. If the policy reasons justifying the rule preventing indemnification from a successor attorney do not apply under the facts of the particular case, indemnification from concurrent counsel may be allowed. Thus, indemnification may be allowed if the claim creates no conflict of interest between the indemnifying attorney's duty to the client and the attorney's self-interest, and if there is no non-waived attorney-client privilege that will prevent the attorney from whom indemnity is sought from providing a defense (Musser v. Provencher (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 274, 284-285, 121 Cal. Rptr. 2d 373, 48 P.3d 408).

[Optional] C. Indemnification of Expert Witness From Hiring Attorney. An expert witness, sued for negligence by the client on whose behalf the expert was hired, may seek indemnity from the attorney who hired the expert, so long as under the circumstances of the case, the attorney may defend against the indemnification claim without conflicts of interest or the need to reveal confidential communications of the former client (Forensis Group, Inc. v. Frantz, Townsend & Foldenauer (2005) 130 Cal. App. 4th 14, 34-36, 29 Cal. Rptr. 3d 622).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to the contention that in an attorney malpractice action, a claim for indemnity may not be pursued against a concurrent counsel or co-counsel. The grounds for the opposition are that a claim for indemnity may be pursued against a concurrent counsel or co-counsel if the policy considerations that prohibit such a claim against a successor attorney are not implicated under the facts of the particular case. Optional Paragraph C should be used if the indemnification claim against the attorney is being made not by an associated counsel sued for malpractice, but by an expert witness hired to assist in the litigation who has been sued for negligence by the former client.

This form may be combined with points pertaining to the specific procedural context in which these points are raised, such as a motion for summary judgment. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Thus, for example, counsel should include facts that may support a finding that the concurrent counsel may be liable at least in part to the malpractice defendant for the injuries to the malpractice plaintiff. Counsel should also include facts describing the relationship of the attorneys and the malpractice plaintiff to support the argument that the policy considerations that might caution against indemnification are not implicated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Case-by-Case Analysis Required

In Musser v. Provencher (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 274, 121 Cal. Rptr. 2d 373, 48 P.3d 408 , a family law attorney was sued for malpractice by her former client, based on the attorney's advice during the client's divorce proceedings to continue to pursue a child support claim despite an automatic stay imposed by the client's spouse's bankruptcy. The decision to continue with the child support hearing was based on the erroneous advice of another attorney, a bankruptcy specialist, who was hired by the client to deal with the legal issues surrounding the spouse's bankruptcy. Because the client faced punitive damages for violation of the stay, she was forced to settle with her former husband for less than the original support order. The client's malpractice action against the family law attorney followed. When the bankruptcy specialist refused to contribute to a settlement offer to the client, the family law attorney filed a cross-complaint for indemnity and settled with the client, as well as with the client's former husband, who had also sued the family law attorney for violating the stay. The trial court eventually granted a nonsuit in favor of the bankruptcy specialist on the indemnification claim, although the court of appeal reversed.

The Supreme Court affirmed the court of appeal's reversal. The Court first reviewed the case law holding that predecessor attorneys may not seek indemnity from successor attorneys, distilling two primary policy considerations: avoiding conflicts between the successor attorney's duty to the client and the attorney's self-interest, and protecting the confidentiality of the communications between the client and the successor attorney. The Court then reviewed court of appeal cases that had addressed indemnification in the context of concurrent counsel or co-counsel. After reviewing these cases, the Court concluded that the question of whether a claim for indemnity should be allowed in concurrent counsel or co-counsel cases should be decided on a case-by-case basis (28 Cal. 4th 274, 284) .

[b] Claim Allowable If Public Policy Concerns Not Implicated

The facts and procedural background of Musser v. Provencher (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 274, 121 Cal. Rptr. 2d 373, 48 P.3d 408 , are discussed in § 24A.58[3][a]. After concluding that a case-by-case analysis is necessary in the context of indemnity claims against concurrent counsel, the Supreme Court considered the policy reasons justifying the rule preventing indemnification from a successor attorney--the potential for conflicts between the indemnifying attorney's duty to the client and the attorney's self-interest, and protecting the confidentiality of communications between the client and the indemnifying attorney--and considered whether those concerns should preclude indemnification in this case. The Court noted that no conflict of interest was identified by the bankruptcy specialist, the cross-defendant in this case, and the Court itself could discern no potential conflict in allowing an attorney to seek indemnification from concurrent counsel (28 Cal. 4th 274, 284) . As to the need to protect the confidentiality of the client's communications with the attorney, the Court noted that the concern is that the attorney from whom indemnity is sought will not be able to provide a proper defense without revealing privileged client communications. However, the client in this case had expressly waived the attorney-client privilege as to the bankruptcy specialist from whom indemnity was sought by the client's family law attorney. Therefore, there was no compelling reason to prevent the family law attorney from seeking indemnification from the bankruptcy specialist (28 Cal. 4th 274, 284-285) .

[c] Indemnification of Expert Witness From Hiring Attorney

In Forensis Group, Inc. v. Frantz, Townsend & Foldenauer (2005) 130 Cal. App. 4th 14, 29 Cal. Rptr. 3d 622 , an engineering expert and an expert witness referral firm were sued by plaintiffs, who had been unsuccessful in prosecuting a wrongful death products liability lawsuit, allegedly due to the negligence of the expert in being insufficiently knowledgeable about products liability law. The plaintiffs did not sue the attorneys who represented them in the wrongful death action. The defendants settled with the plaintiffs and sought indemnity from the law firm that represented the plaintiffs in the wrongful death action, arguing that the law firm's negligence contributed to the failure of that underlying lawsuit. The trial court granted summary judgment for the law firm on the indemnification claim, concluding that public policy prohibited indemnification under those circumstances. The expert and the referral firm appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court adopted the rationale of the Supreme Court in Musser v. Provencher [see § 24A.58[3][a], [b]]. The court of appeal concluded that an expert witness, sued for negligence by the clients on whose behalf the expert was hired, could seek indemnity from the clients' former law firm, which had hired the expert. Applying the same case-by-case approach promoted by Musser in the context of indemnification between two concurrently serving attorneys, the court of appeal concluded that the law firm, even though not named as a defendant by the former clients, was a potential joint tortfeasor with the expert for negligent handling of the underlying lawsuit. Given that the indemnification issue centered on whether the expert witness was sufficiently knowledgeable to testify and whether the law firm properly guided him on the relevant legal issues, the court concluded that there was no danger under the circumstances that the law firm would be faced with conflicts of interest in defending the indemnity claim or that the law firm would be forced to reveal confidential communications made by the former clients. Thus, the trial court erred in granting summary judgment (130 Cal. App. 4th 14, 34-40) .

This memorandum may be submitted by a defendant and cross complainant in opposition to a motion for summary judgment in a legal malpractice action when the motion is based on the cross defendant's contention that a cross complaint for indemnity may not be filed by a successor attorney against a predecessor attorney.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, for example, counsel should include facts that may support a finding that the predecessor attorney is liable at least in part to the successor attorney for the injuries to the malpractice plaintiff.

[b] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, this form may be used to oppose a general demurrer to the cross complaint, or to oppose a motion for judgment on the pleadings, when it appears on the face of the pleadings that the cross defendant may be liable to indemnify the cross complainant.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Cross Complaint for Indemnity May Be Brought by Successor Attorney Against Predecessor Attorney

The facts and procedural background of Crouse v. Brobeck, Phleger, & Harrison (1998) 67 Cal. App. 4th 1509, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 94 are discussed in § 24A.29[3][h]. The court of appeal reversed the trial court's grant of summary judgment for the defendant attorney's former law firm on the cross complaint for equitable indemnity brought by the defendant attorney's current law firm, and reversed the order granting summary adjudication in favor of the former law firm on the cross complaint for indemnity brought by the defendant attorney. In reaching its decision, the court noted the rule that a defendant may ordinarily seek equitable indemnity from another party when the negligent acts of both have combined to cause a single injury to the plaintiff, regardless of whether the negligent defendants acted jointly, concurrently, or successively. The court noted that in this case, the plaintiff alleged a single injury, the loss of the additional benefits from the aborted note-restructuring agreement, and that the loss was caused by the negligence of the defendant attorney and his former law firm in misplacing and not safeguarding the note, as well as by the attorney and his current law firm in not acting appropriately when informed of the missing note. Thus, under the general rule, defendant attorney and his current firm had a right to seek indemnity from the attorney's former firm (67 Cal. App. 4th 1509, 1544-1548) .

However, the court also noted that policy concerns have been used to override principles of equitable indemnity and preclude a defendant who has injured a client from seeking indemnification from the client's subsequent attorney for malpractice committed while that subsequent attorney represents the client in an effort to rectify or recover for the earlier injury caused by the defendant. Those earlier court opinions had expressed concern that the threat of an indemnity suit against the subsequent attorney would create conflicts of interest for the subsequent attorney and difficult problems in protecting privileged communications and attorney work product. The court in the instant case concluded, however, that despite the policy concerns that might caution against allowing a predecessor attorney to seek equitable indemnity from a successor attorney, those concerns seem inapplicable when a successor attorney seeks indemnity from a predecessor attorney. The court concluded that a predecessor attorney was not subject to any conflict of interest and had no continuing privileged communications or work product to protect, and thus, a successor attorney could seek indemnity when the predecessor's negligence contributed to the injury for which the successor was liable. The court distinguished the opinion in Munoz v. Davis (1983) 141 Cal. App. 3d 420, 190 Cal. Rptr. 400 , which held that a liable attorney could not seek indemnity from the tortfeasor whose conduct caused the personal injury to the attorney's client and created the opportunity for the later malpractice. In the Munoz situation, the negligence of the original tortfeasor did not cause or contribute to the subsequent malpractice of the attorney, while in the instant case, plaintiff alleged a single injury caused by the actions of defendant attorney and both his former and current law firms (67 Cal. App. 4th 1509, 1544-1548) .

§ 24A.60 Supporting Motion for Lien on Proceeds of Remaining Legal Action

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT IS ENTITLED TO A LIEN AGAINST THE PROCEEDS OF PLAINTIFF'S REMAINING LEGAL ACTION TO PREVENT A DOUBLE RECOVERY BY PLAINTIFF.

Lien Proper to Avoid Double Recovery. A negligent attorney is entitled to a lien on the proceeds of a remaining legal action to prevent a double recovery (W.W.S.M. Investors Greve, Clifford, Diepenbrock & Paras (1996) 43 Cal. App. 4th 517, 523, 51 Cal. Rptr. 2d 31).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a defendant's contention in a legal malpractice action that defendant is entitled to a lien on the proceeds of a pending lawsuit by the plaintiff against another party.

This form may be combined with points pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that defendant's liability to plaintiff should be decreased by any recovery in a future or pending related action, for example in a motion for summary judgment. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

4th 517, 523, 51 Cal. Rptr. 2d 31] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Lien Proper to Avoid Double Recovery

In W.W.S.M. Investors v. Greve, Clifford, Diepenbrock & Paras (1996) 43 Cal. App. 4th 517, 51 Cal. Rptr. 2d 31 , plaintiff retained defendant to assist in stopping the I.R.S. from wrongfully levying funds and to recover the funds. Defendant successfully convinced the I.R.S. that its levies were wrong, but failed to provide plaintiff with adequate advice as to how to obtain recovery of wrongfully levied amounts. As a result of defendant's negligence, plaintiff filed an invalid claim form. A subsequent action against the I.R.S. was dismissed as untimely, and plaintiff brought a legal malpractice action against defendant. After the trial court granted plaintiff a judgment in the malpractice action, the Ninth Circuit reversed the dismissal of plaintiff's case against the I.R.S. The trial court then amended the judgment to give defendant a lien against any recovery obtained by plaintiff is this action. Plaintiff objected to the lien on the ground that an attorney who commits malpractice has no right to equitable indemnity.

The court of appeal upheld the lien. Plaintiff relied on Munoz v. Davis (1983) 141 Cal. App. 3d 420, 190 Cal. Rptr. 400 , denying an attorney indemnity on the ground that the attorney and tortfeasor were not jointly and severally liable to the plaintiff for the same injury because the connection between the tortfeasor's act and the attorney's malpractice was too tenuous. The court distinguished Munoz on the basis that the trial court had not created a new cause of action allowing defendant to proceed against the I.R.S., but had merely recognized the potential for plaintiff to receive a double recovery (43 Cal. App. 4th 517, 523) . The court remanded the action for the trial court to consider whether a lien or an assignment of the action against the I.R.S. was the best method to protect against a double recovery by plaintiff, but otherwise affirmed the judgment.

This memorandum may be submitted by defendant in support of a motion for new trial in a legal malpractice action in which plaintiff was awarded damages. The basis of the motion is that the evidence was insufficient to support the award because plaintiff, alleging damages as resulting from a lost judgment, did not prove that had defendant not been negligent, plaintiff would have won the initial case in which defendant was representing him or her.

Where appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

In an appropriate case, the defendant could bring a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict [see Code Civ. Proc. § 629] on the issue of damages on the ground that when plaintiff alleged damage as resulting from a lost judgment, there was no substantial evidence in the record sufficient to support the award. With appropriate modifications, the arguments presented in this form could be the basis of an oral argument for a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Judgment for Plaintiff Requires Proof That Plaintiff's Original Case Had Merit

Hastings v. Halleck (1859) 13 Cal. 203 , was a legal malpractice case in which a client alleged that his attorneys were negligent in their representation of him in a suit brought against him for money owed. In that suit, judgment was entered against the client. The attorneys brought an appeal on his behalf, and were successful in reversing judgment because the trial court had erred in awarding certain items of interest. Eventually, they signed a stipulation permitting the original judgment to stand, so long as the interest was deducted from it.

In the malpractice suit, plaintiff alleged that defendants had failed to assert a defense on his behalf, and that he was damaged in the amount of judgment as a result. The trial court entered judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment. It held that in order to establish an attorney's negligence in failing to set up a defense, the plaintiff must prove that the defense could have been successful, had the defendant acted diligently (13 Cal. 203, 209) . Because the evidence at trial in this case indicated that no such defense actually existed, or that it could not have been proven at trial, the judgment was properly entered in favor of defendants (13 Cal. 203, 210-211) .

In Campbell v. Magana (1960) 184 Cal. App. 2d 751, 8 Cal. Rptr. 32 , a client sued her attorneys for their allegedly negligent handling of her personal injury action. That action had been dismissed, and the attorneys had appealed, although they later abandoned the appeal. Plaintiff alleged damages in the amount she would have recovered. The trial court entered judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment. It noted that the trial court had found defendant's conduct negligent, but held that there was no showing of damage as a result of that negligence (184 Cal. App. 2d 751, 753) . The court held that plaintiff in a malpractice case has a burden of proving damage by showing that careful management of his or her case by the defendant would have resulted in a favorable judgment for him or her (184 Cal. App. 2d 751, 754) . Because in this case the plaintiff did not offer evidence sufficient to show that she could have won her personal injury action, judgment for defendants was properly supported by the evidence (184 Cal. App. 2d 751, 763) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Judgment for Plaintiff Requires Proof That Plaintiff's Original Case Had Merit

In Garretson v. Harold I. Miller (2002) 99 Cal. App. 4th 563, 121 Cal. Rptr. 2d 317 , the plaintiff was an employee injured at work who pursued a workers' compensation claim against her employer on the advice of her attorney and then filed a malpractice claim against that attorney for failing to advise about or pursue potential lawsuits against third parties who might have been liable for the injury. After a jury verdict in favor of the plaintiff on the malpractice claim, the trial court granted the defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict and motion for a new trial. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment notwithstanding the verdict on the grounds that the plaintiff failed to argue or present any evidence that any judgment on the potential claims against third parties would have been collectible. The plaintiff had the burden of raising and proving the collectibility of any underlying judgment, but the plaintiff failed to raise the issue or present any evidence of insurance, income or net worth, property with equity value, or other assets held by potential third-party defendants. Therefore, the plaintiff failed to prove the success of any underlying lawsuit, and judgment for the defendant was proper (99 Cal. App. 4th 563, 569-573) .

Mattco Forge, Inc. v. Arthur Young & Co. (1997) 52 Cal. App. 4th 820, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 780 , dealt with the issue of malpractice by an accountant, and involved a discussion of legal malpractice by analogy. Plaintiff contended that the trial-within-a-trial standard, requiring a plaintiff to prove the merits of the original action, was in some dispute, and, in any case, applied only to attorneys. The trial court agreed, and did not require plaintiff to establish that absent defendant's negligence, plaintiff would have prevailed in the underlying case. The court of appeal reversed, stating that, although the trial-within-a-trial burden has been criticized, the burden persists because it is the most effective safeguard against speculative and conjectural claims (52 Cal. App. 4th 820, 834) .

THE MOTION FOR A NEW TRIAL SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE PLAINTIFF HAS FAILED TO SUBMIT EXPERT TESTIMONY REGARDING DEFENDANT'S REQUIRED STANDARD OF CARE AND BREACH OF THAT STANDARD.

A. Motion for New Trial. [See § 24A.61, Paragraph A.]

B. Expert Testimony Required to Establish Malpractice. To prove professional negligence, a plaintiff must prove that the attorney breached the standard of care of an attorney under similar circumstances; to show that standard of care requires expert testimony (Fergus v. Songer (2007) 150 Cal. App. 4th 552, 578, 59 Cal. Rptr. 3d 273 ; Wilkinson v. Rives (1981) 116 Cal. App. 3d 641, 648, 172 Cal. Rptr. 254 ; *Lipscomb v. Krause (1978) 87 Cal. [Optional] D. Duty to Investigate Case Further. When an attorney initially determines that his or her client's case lacks merit, and the client alleges malpractice in failure to investigate the case further, the client is required to produce expert testimony to establish that the attorney had a duty to do so (*Kirsch v. [a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted by defendant in support of a motion for new trial in a legal malpractice action in which the evidence was insufficient to support a judgment for plaintiff because plaintiff did not offer expert testimony to establish negligence of the defendant under the circumstances of the case.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

In an appropriate case, the defendant could bring a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict [see Code Civ. Proc. § 629] on the ground that there was no substantial evidence in the record sufficient to support judgment for plaintiff because there was no expert testimony. [3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Expert Testimony Required to Establish Malpractice

In Fergus v. Songer (2007) 150 Cal. App. 4th 552, 578, 59 Cal. Rptr. 3d 273 , an attorney sued a client for failure to pay the amount due under a contingency fee agreement and a partnership agreement. The client filed a cross-complaint for legal malpractice, arguing that the attorney committed malpractice when he failed to provide an accurate legal description to be used at the sheriff's sale of a hotel. The trial court found the contingency fee agreement and the partnership agreement unenforceable. The jury returned a special verdict setting a reasonable attorney's fee. The trial court granted the client a new trial on the issue of damages and denied its motion for a new trial on the malpractice claim.

The court of appeal affirmed that the client failed to establish that the attorney committed malpractice [150 Cal. App. 4th 552, 578] . The court held that even if the attorney had made a mistake in the legal description of the hotel, the client failed to refer the court to testimony establishing that the attorney's performance fell below the standard of care and skill of members of his profession [150 Cal. App. 4th 552, 578] .

In Wilkinson v. Rives (1981) 116 Cal. App. 3d 641, 172 Cal. Rptr. 254 , plaintiffs were sellers of property on which they had recorded a declaration of homestead filed by their attorney. A title company had refused to issue a title insurance policy, and had mistakenly advised plaintiffs that certain claims against the property would have to be satisfied in order to obtain title insurance. Plaintiffs brought a malpractice claim against the attorney for his alleged negligent preparation of the declaration of homestead, and an action against the title company for negligence. After trial by the court, judgment was rendered for defendants, and plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment on several grounds. One issue discussed by the court was expert testimony at trial. Whether or not the attorney had been negligent under the particular circumstances of the case was not a matter of common knowledge, and therefore plaintiffs were required to offer expert testimony to prove negligence (116 Cal. App. 3d 641, 648) . The court held that because the plaintiffs offered no such testimony, there was no evidence on which a finding of negligence could have been made (116 Cal. App. 3d 641, 648) .

In Lipscomb v. Krause (1978) 87 Cal. App. 3d 970, 151 Cal. Rptr. 465 , plaintiffs brought a malpractice suit against an attorney who had represented them in two lawsuits and had dismissed one of them by stipulation without plaintiffs' consent. At the malpractice trial, the only expert testimony presented by plaintiffs related to scientific technicalities on the merits of the two original suits. At the close of plaintiffs' presentation of evidence, defendants moved for nonsuit on the grounds that there was no evidence to establish either his required standard of care under the circumstances, or a breach of that standard. The trial court found that the attorney's liability was a question of fact not within the common knowledge of laypersons, and granted the nonsuit. Plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. It stated that the existence of malpractice is generally a question of fact (87 Cal. App. 3d 970, 975) . In determining this question of fact, an attorney's standard of care is that of attorneys of ordinary skill and capacity in similar circumstances (87 Cal. App. 3d 970, 976) . As a general rule, the court held that a plaintiff's proof as to these issues requires expert testimony, since the standard of care of an attorney under the particular circumstances is usually not a matter of common knowledge (87 Cal. App. 3d 970, 976) . The court concluded that, in this case, the lack of expert testimony properly resulted in judgment of nonsuit for defendant (87 Cal. App. 3d 970, 976) .

[b] Suit Against Legal Specialist

Wright v. Williams (1975) 47 Cal. App. 3d 802, 121 Cal. Rptr. 194 , is discussed in § 24A.47[3][a]. The court held that an attorney holding himself or herself out as a specialist in a particular area of law is held to the standard of other specialists in that area (47 Cal. App. 3d 802, 810) . The court stated further that when a malpractice action is brought against a legal specialist, and the malpractice claim relates to his or her area of expertise, then expert testimony is required to define the proper standard of care, and determine whether that standard was met (47 Cal. App. 3d 802, 810-811) . The court held that because plaintiffs had not produced evidence in the form of expert testimony, judgment for defendant was the proper result (47 Cal. App. 3d 802, 811) .

[c] Duty to Investigate Case Further

Kirsch v. Duryea (1978) 21 Cal. 3d 303, 146 Cal. Rptr. 218, 578 P.2d 935 , is discussed in § 24A.24[3][a]. The Supreme Court reversed judgment for the plaintiff on the ground that the defendant did not owe any duty to the plaintiff to prosecute an action the attorney believed to be without merit. The Court also held that to support plaintiff's contention that the attorney should have investigated plaintiff's case further before refusing to go forward with it, plaintiff was required to produce expert testimony (21 Cal. 3d 303, 311) . To establish that an attorney has the duty to hire investigators, depose witnesses, or otherwise further investigate a client's case requires expert testimony, as these things are not matters of common knowledge (21 Cal. 3d 303, 311) .

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief].

A MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE PLAINTIFF HAS FAILED TO SHOW BY SUFFICIENT EVIDENCE THE ESSENTIAL ELEMENT OF PROXIMATE CAUSATION.

A. Motion for New Trial. [See § 24A.61, Paragraph A.]

B. Judgment for Plaintiff Requires Proof of Causation. In order to obtain judgment in his or her favor, a plaintiff must submit evidence to show the essential element of causation between the defendant's conduct and the plaintiff's injury (Sprigg v. Garcin (1980) 105 Cal. App. 3d 869, 873, 164 Cal. Rptr. 677).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted by defendant in support of a motion for new trial in a legal malpractice action in which the evidence was insufficient to support a judgment for plaintiff because it was insufficient to show proximate cause between defendant's conduct, whether negligent or not, and the injury to plaintiff.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Uses

In an appropriate case, the defendant could bring a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict [see Code Civ. Proc. § 629] on the ground that there was no substantial evidence in the record sufficient to support the award because there was no evidence of causation. With appropriate modifications, the arguments presented in this form could be the basis of an oral argument for a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Judgment for Plaintiff Requires Proof of Causation

In Sprigg v. Garcin (1980) 105 Cal. App. 3d 869, 164 Cal. Rptr. 677 , plaintiffs, husband and wife, were the owners of a warehouse, who hired attorneys to prosecute a case seeking rent from the warehouse lessee. In that case, the trial court had entered partial summary judgment in favor of the lessee, but ordered that the action would proceed as to whether lessee was obligated to restore the building. The attorneys then drafted, but never filed, an amended complaint seeking damages against lessee for failure to restore the warehouse. Several months later, plaintiffs substituted the original attorneys out of the case, and their new attorney filed an amended complaint. Eventually, the parties reached a settlement for a certain sum, although plaintiffs had earlier disclosed to the original attorneys that they would not accept that sum. After settlement, plaintiffs filed the malpractice action against the original attorneys. Defendants also filed an action against plaintiffs for attorney's fees, and the two actions were consolidated for trial.

In the malpractice action, the jury returned a verdict for plaintiffs, and defendants moved for a new trial or for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. The court granted the motion for new trial, but denied the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Plaintiffs appealed the order granting the motion for new trial, and defendants appealed the order denying their motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. The court of appeal disposed of both issues by ordering judgment notwithstanding the verdict.

In the attorney's fees action the jury returned a verdict for the attorneys, but the parties stipulated that if a new trial was ordered in the malpractice action, a new trial would be ordered in the attorney's fees action. The court of appeal reversed this order as part of its ruling on the appeals in the malpractice action, so as to avoid possible inconsistencies.

In ordering the judgment notwithstanding the verdict, the court found that although there was evidence to show both that the defendants had been negligent, and that the plaintiffs had been injured by the lessee, there was no evidence from which a court could infer a causal connection between the negligence and any injury (105 Cal. App. 3d 869, 874) . The court held that the absence of evidence to show the essential element of causation precludes a plaintiff's recovery (105 Cal. App. 3d 869, 873) .

§ 24A.64 Supporting Motion for New Trial [Code Civ. Proc. § 659] in Legal Malpractice Action--By Defendant--Error to Allow Expert Testimony on Probable Outcome of Underlying Litigation

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief].

A MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE THE TRIAL COURT ERRED IN ALLOWING PLAINTIFF'S EXPERT TO TESTIFY BEFORE THE JURY ON THE ULTIMATE ISSUE OF THE PROBABLE OUTCOME OF THE UNDERLYING LITIGATION HAD THE DEFENDANT NOT COMMITTED THE ALLEGED MALPRACTICE.

A. Motion for New Trial. [See § 24A.61, Paragraph A.]

B. Expert Testimony on Probable Outcome of Underlying Litigation Not Allowed. Because it is the role of the fact finder, usually a jury, to determine what would have happened in the underlying proceeding absent the alleged malpractice, a trial court errs if it allows an expert to testify as to what the probable result would have been (Piscitelli v. Friedenberg (2001) 87 Cal. App. 4th 953, 973-974, 105 Cal. Rptr. 2d 88).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of a motion for new trial on the grounds that the trial court erred in allowing the plaintiff's expert to testify as to the probable outcome of the underlying litigation had the defendant's alleged malpractice not occurred. The grounds for the claim of error are that the expert should not have been allowed to testify on an ultimate factual issue that is properly for the jury to decide.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Thus, counsel should include facts showing that the expert testified on the probable outcome of the underlying litigation, that this was an error, and that the instructions given by the trial court to the jury did not correct the error.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Expert Testimony on Probable Outcome of Underlying Litigation Not Allowed

In Piscitelli v. Friedenberg (2001) 87 Cal. App. 4th 953, 105 Cal. Rptr. 2d 88 , the plaintiff hired a law firm to pursue claims against the plaintiff's employer, a securities investment firm, based in part on allegations that the investment firm had misrepresented to its brokers the safety, operation, and returns of certain limited partnership investments, causing the brokers to sell the investments to customers who were not accustomed to the level of risk that actually accompanied the partnerships. While the law firm and the individual attorney assigned to the case were preparing the case against the investment firm, a separate class action suit was proceeding against the investment firm based on similar allegations. Although the attorney handling the case had actual knowledge of the class action suit, he was of the opinion that the plaintiff's claims were not covered by the class action and he failed to advise the plaintiff to opt out of the class action settlement. The attorney was wrong about the scope of the class action settlement, however, which resulted in the release of the plaintiff's claims that would have otherwise been presented to a panel of New York Stock Exchange arbitrators if the plaintiff had opted out of the settlement. The plaintiff brought a legal malpractice action against the law firm, the individual attorney, and others, and settled with all the defendants before trial except the individual attorney. At trial, the jury found that the attorney had been negligent, rendered a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, and awarded the plaintiff over $223,000,000 in damages. The attorney moved for j.n.o.v. and a new trial on various grounds, including excessive damages and legal errors, and the trial court granted the motion for new trial on damages alone unless the plaintiff consented to a remittitur of over $221,000,000. The plaintiff refused to accept the remittitur, and both parties appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, and in the process addressed the defendant's claim that he was entitled to a new trial on both liability and damages because of various legal errors made by the trial court. As an initial matter, the court of appeal held that the trial court did not err in allowing a jury to decide what the result would have been in the underlying action in the absence of the defendant's negligence. The plaintiff had a constitutional right to a jury trial, and the question of what would have happened if a negligent attorney had acted otherwise is a factual question to be decided by the jury. The court rejected the defendant's argument that the issues in the underlying action, which would have been decided by a specialized arbitration panel, were too complex for a lay jury to decide (87 Cal. App. 4th 953, 969-971) . The court then held that because it is the role of the fact finder to determine what would have happened in the underlying proceeding absent the malpractice, the trial court erred by allowing the plaintiff's expert to testify as to what the probable result of the underlying arbitration would have been. It was the jury's role to step into the shoes of the arbitrators, consider the facts of the underlying claims, and ultimately determine those claims on their merits, and the trial court abused its discretion in allowing the expert to decide and testify on this ultimate issue entrusted to the jury (87 Cal. App. 4th 953, 973-974) . The court also concluded that the error was prejudicial and warranted a new trial, because the trial court refused to give the jury instructions that would have permitted the jury to properly perform its function as the trier of the underlying arbitration. Specifically, partly because an expert told the jury how the arbitration was to proceed and what would have happened, the trial court refused to provide the jury with requested instructions on the rules and regulations that would have governed and been applied by the arbitrators, which prevented the jury from independently deciding the substantive issues that would have faced the arbitration panel. In the absence of these instructions, and because the plaintiff's counsel relied heavily on the expert's testimony in closing arguments to the jury, a new trial was warranted (87 Cal. App. 4th 953, 974-977) .

§ 24A.65 Supporting Contention That Compensatory Damages for Lost Claim for Punitive Damages Are Not Allowed

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

A MALPRACTICE PLAINTIFF CANNOT RECOVER AS COMPENSATORY DAMAGES FROM A NEGLIGENT ATTORNEY THE VALUE OF A CLAIM FOR PUNITIVE DAMAGES THAT WOULD HAVE BEEN RECOVERED AGAINST THE DEFENDANT IN THE UNDERLYING ACTION IN THE ABSENCE OF THE ATTORNEY'S NEGLIGENCE.

No Compensatory Damages for Lost Punitive Damages Claim. A plaintiff in a legal malpractice action may not recover from an attorney, as compensatory damages, the amount of punitive damages the plaintiff alleges he or she would have obtained from the defendant in the underlying litigation giving rise to the malpractice (Ferguson v. Lieff, Cabraser, Heimann & Bernstein (2003) 30 Cal. 4th 1037, 1041, 135 Cal. Rptr. 2d 46, 69 P.3d 965 ; Expansion Pointe Properties Limited Partnership v. App. 4th 953, 979-983, 105 Cal. Rptr. 2d 88).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of the contention that the plaintiff in a legal malpractice action, as a matter of public policy, may not recover as compensatory damages from a negligent attorney the value of a punitive damages award the plaintiff could have recovered from the defendant in the underlying action in which the malpractice occurred.

This form can be modified to fit the particular procedural context in which the defendant is making the contention that the plaintiff may not recover for a lost claim for punitive damages, such as a motion for new trial or a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict.

The Supreme Court's holding in Ferguson v. Lieff, Cabraser, Heimann & Bernstein applies retroactively, even if the negligent attorney was retained prior to the date of the Supreme Court's decision [see Expansion Pointe Properties Limited Partnership v. Procopio, Cory, Hargreaves & Savitch, LLP (2007) 152 Cal. App. 4th 42, 55-56, 61 Cal. Rptr. 3d 166 (issue waived on appeal, but concluding that retroactive application was proper nonetheless)].

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Thus, counsel should include facts showing that the attorney was merely negligent and argue that allowing recovery for a lost claim for punitive damages allegedly caused by such negligence would be against public policy.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Compensatory Damages for Lost Punitive Damages Claim

In Ferguson v. Lieff, Cabraser, Heimann & Bernstein (2003) 30 Cal. 4th 1037, 135 Cal. Rptr. 2d 46, 69 P.3d 965 , the plaintiffs were two individuals out of approximately 12,000 who had been part of a class action lawsuit against an oil refinery based on a toxic chemical release. The parties in the class action stipulated to the certification of a mandatory, non-opt-out punitive damages class. The class action lawsuit eventually settled for $80,000,000, and as part of the settlement, the plaintiffs' attorneys stipulated to the dismissal of the punitive damages claims with prejudice. After receiving payment in the class action, the two individual plaintiffs then brought a legal malpractice action against the attorneys responsible for the settlement of the class action, alleging that their malpractice resulted in the loss of a much larger damages award, including a large punitive damages award. The trial court sustained demurrers to some causes of action and granted summary judgment for defendants on the others. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that as a matter of law, a malpractice plaintiff may not recover as compensatory damages the value of a lost claim for punitive damages. The California Supreme Court granted review solely to determine that issue, on which court of appeal opinions had disagreed.

The Supreme Court affirmed the court of appeal. The Court held that, for policy reasons, a legal malpractice plaintiff may not recover as compensatory damages the value of a claim for punitive damages that was lost in the underlying lawsuit due to the attorney's negligence (30 Cal. 4th 1037, 1041) . The Court first concluded that allowing a recovery for a lost punitive damages claim would not further the purpose of punitive damages, which is to serve a societal interest by punishing the wrongdoer and deterring further similar misconduct. A compensatory award of lost punitive damages would serve no societal interest, because the attorney has no control over the intentional misconduct justifying the underlying punitive damages claim, and therefore the underlying tortfeasor would not be deterred. Moreover, the amount of an award of punitive damages is properly measured by the gravity of the wrongdoer's conduct and the wealth of the wrongdoer. An award "transferred" to the negligent attorney, however, bears no relation to the gravity of the attorney's misconduct, nor does it bear any relation to the attorney's ability to pay (30 Cal. 4th 1037, 1046-1047) .

Second, the Court concluded that permitting recovery of a lost punitive damages claim would violate the public policy against speculative damages. Compensatory damages in a legal malpractice action are based on what a reasonable factfinder in the underlying action would have awarded, while punitive damages are based primarily on the moral outrage of the jury. Thus, a jury in a legal malpractice action would be in the position of having to determine what level of moral outrage a reasonable jury would have felt in the underlying action, a standard that the Court concluded was too speculative (30 Cal. 4th 1037, 1048-1049) .

Third, the Court similarly concluded that the standard of proof applicable to such claims would be too unwieldy to apply. Compensatory damages are based on proof by a preponderance of the evidence, while punitive damages are awarded only on clear and convincing evidence. Thus, a plaintiff in a malpractice action would have to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the jury in the underlying case would have found by clear and convincing evidence that the underlying defendant was guilty of oppression, fraud, or malice (30 Cal. 4th 1037, 1049) .

Fourth, the Court concluded that allowing the recovery of lost punitive damages would likely increase the cost of malpractice insurance, and at a minimum, encourage the practice of "defensive law" by attorneys trying to avoid malpractice claims at all cost (30 Cal. 4th 1037, 1050) . Because the issue came before the Supreme Court in the context of a class action lawsuit, the Court also noted that allowing the recovery of lost punitive damages in the class action context would hinder the ability of trial courts to manage and resolve mass tort suits. Allowing recovery would discourage the use of mandatory, non-opt-out punitive damages classes, because attorneys using such classes would face the prospect of multiple malpractice lawsuits by dissatisfied class members (30 Cal. 4th 1037, 1049-1050) .

In Expansion Pointe Properties Limited Partnership v. Procopio, Cory, Hargreaves & Savitch, LLP (2007) 152 Cal. App. 4th 42, 51-52, 61 Cal. Rptr 3d. 166, 2007 Cal. App. LEXIS 993 , the issue was whether Ferguson v. Lieff, Cabraser, Heimann & Bernstein (2003) 30 Cal. 4th 1037, 135 Cal. Rptr. 2d 46, 69 P.3d 965 , discussed above, applied to a retainer agreement signed before Ferguson was decided. In 1998, plaintiff hired defendant law firm to represent it in an Arizona lawsuit that had been brought against plaintiff by plaintiff's joint venturer. In that suit, plaintiff filed a counterclaim against its joint venturer for breach of contract, breach of fiduciary duty, and breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and sought punitive damages. The joint venturer moved for summary judgment on the punitive damages claim, and the trial court granted the motion. Plaintiff then sued the law firm in California for malpractice and breach of fiduciary duties, alleging that the law firm failed to fully understand Arizona law on punitive damages and intentionally failed to present certain evidence in support of plaintiff's punitive damages claim that would have defeated the summary judgment motion in the Arizona action and would have resulted in an award of punitive damages in plaintiff's favor in that action. The law firm moved for summary judgment, arguing that under Ferguson, plaintiff could not recover lost punitive damages. The trial court granted the law firm's motion.

On appeal, plaintiff argued that the trial court erred by applying Ferguson retrospectively, based on the fact that plaintiff and the law firm entered into their retainer agreement in 1998, five years before Ferguson was decided. Plaintiff argued that the change brought on by Ferguson unfairly undermined plaintiff's reasonable reliance on the previously existing state of the law, and imposed great hardships on plaintiff. Plaintiff further argued that it believed the law firm would face legal responsibility for the consequences of any negligence, including the loss of punitive damages.

The court of appeal first held that the law firm had no duty to learn about and advise plaintiff of the Ferguson opinion [152 Cal. App. 4th 42, 55] . While an attorney has a duty to keep clients reasonably informed of significant developments in matters with regard to which the attorney has agreed to provide legal services [Bus. & Prof. Code § 6068(m)], an attorney does not have a duty to discuss the various types of recovery a client may obtain in a potential malpractice action against him or her [152 Cal. App. 4th 42, 55-56] .

In addition, the court held that plaintiff's contention that the retroactive application of Ferguson impaired its vested contract rights was erroneous. The court held that the retainer agreement was for the firm's representation of plaintiff in the Arizona litigation; it did not include terms pertaining to a potential malpractice action and there was no suggestion that plaintiff entered into it in reliance on pre-Ferguson law [152 Cal. App. 4th 42, 56] .

The factual and procedural background of Piscitelli v. Friedenberg (2001) 87 Cal. App. 4th 953, 105 Cal. Rptr. 2d 88 , is discussed in § 24A.64[3][a]. As part of the compensatory damages award, the jury awarded over $220,000,000 to the plaintiff as the value of an award of punitive damages that the plaintiff could have recovered from an investment firm if the attorney had not been negligent and the plaintiff's case against the firm had gone to arbitration. However, the court of appeal held that as a matter of policy, a malpractice plaintiff may not recover as compensatory damages the value of a lost claim for punitive damages. In Merenda v. Superior Court (1992) 3 Cal. App. 4th 1, 12, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 87 , the court of appeal had allowed such compensatory damages for a lost punitive damages claim on the grounds that the amount of lost punitive damages is properly considered as part of the amount that would have been recovered but for the malpractice defendant's negligence. However, in criticizing the Merenda analysis, the court in Piscitelli noted that punitive damages are private fines levied to punish reprehensible conduct and deter its future occurrence, rather than compensation for a plaintiff's loss. The plaintiff in an action is made "whole" through an award of compensatory damages, and punitive damages designed to punish a defendant constitute a windfall for a recovering plaintiff. The court then concluded that a windfall award designed to punish an actor for oppressive, malicious, or fraudulent conduct should not be imposed on a third party who is merely negligent as part of an attempt to make the plaintiff "whole" for the loss of the underlying claim (87 Cal. App. 4th 953, 981) . The court also noted that a punitive damages award is uniquely justified by and proportioned to the actor's particular reprehensible conduct and net worth, that transferring the award to a third party was inconsistent with the goal of punishment that underlies the award, and that this conclusion was consistent with California's law prohibiting indemnification of punitive damages by insurers (87 Cal. App. 4th 953, 981-982) .

Finally, the court rejected the conclusion that an attorney guilty of malpractice proximately causes the loss of a plaintiff's underlying punitive damages claim. Noting that "proximate cause" is concerned not with the fact of causation, but with "the various considerations of [public] policy that limit an actor's responsibility for the consequences of [his or her] conduct," the court was persuaded that policy considerations justified their decision not to hold a malpractice defendant liable for the value of a lost claim for punitive damages (87 Cal. App. 4th 953, 982-983) .

§ 24A.66 Supporting Contention That Civil Code Section 1431.2 Does Not Apply to Damages Obtained in Legal Malpractice Action

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief].

CIVIL CODE SECTION 1431.2, WHICH LIMITS LIABILITY FOR NONECONOMIC DAMAGES TO SEVERAL LIABILITY ONLY, DOES NOT APPLY IN A LEGAL MALPRACTICE ACTION, BECAUSE A MALPRACTICE ACTION IS NOT AN ACTION FOR "PERSONAL INJURY, PROPERTY DAMAGE, OR WRONGFUL DEATH."

Civil Code Section 1431.2* Does Not Apply in Attorney Malpractice Action. The limitation on liability for noneconomic damages to several liability only, found in Civil Code Section 1431.2, does not apply to a malpractice claim against an attorney (Brandon G. v. Gray (2003) 111 Cal. App. 4th 29, 3 Cal. Rptr. 3d 330).

[2] Comments

This form may be submitted in support of the contention that Civ. Code § 1431.2, which limits liability for noneconomic damages to several liability only in actions for "personal injury, property damage, or wrongful death," does not apply in an attorney malpractice action.

This form may be combined with points pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the contention that Civ. Code § 1431.2 does not apply. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

argue that these damages are not damages for personal injury, property damage, or wrongful death.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Civil Code Section 1431.2 Does Not Apply in Attorney Malpractice Action

In Brandon G. v. Gray (2003) 111 Cal. App. 4th 29, 3 Cal. Rptr. 3d 330 , the plaintiffs' two children were sexually assaulted by the owner of a day care center. Prior to enrolling the children in the day care center, the plaintiffs had inquired with the county social services department and been told that no complaints had been lodged against the center and that it was apparently a good center. After their children were molested, the plaintiffs learned that this information was false and that several other complaints had been lodged against the center prior to the plaintiffs' inquiries. The plaintiffs hired an attorney and his law firm to represent the plaintiffs and their children in an action against the county for misrepresenting that no complaints had been filed against the center. Approximately eight months later, the plaintiffs were concerned that no action was being taken on their behalf by the attorneys, and they hired another attorney to take over the case. This second attorney filed a claim with the county, but did not file an application to file a late claim, which was required under the circumstances. The county rejected the claim, and after the plaintiffs filed suit, the court awarded summary judgment to the county on the grounds that no application to file a late claim was ever filed. The plaintiffs then sued both attorneys for malpractice. The first attorney and his firm settled in good faith for $49,000, and trial proceeded against the second attorney. Judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiffs, and damages were awarded for $41,724, which included economic damages and a proportion of the noneconomic damages, minus deductions for the share of the plaintiffs' own negligence and an offset for the settlement amount of the other defendants. Both parties appealed.

The court of appeal reduced the amount of damages owed by the attorney and affirmed. In reducing the amount of damages owed by the attorney, the court held that the trial court erred in applying Civ. Code § 1431.2 to the action. That statute, which limits liability for noneconomic damages to several liability only, by its own terms applies only to actions for "personal injury, property damage, or wrongful death." The court held that an action for attorney malpractice is not one of those actions, but rather is an action to recover the value of a meritorious claim that was lost because of the attorney's failure to press the claim. Thus, Civ. Code § 1431.2 was inapplicable (111 Cal. App. 4th 29, 39) . Given the inapplicability of Civ. Code § 1431.2, the court concluded that the nonsettling defendant was jointly and severally liable for the entire amount of the claim against the county, which was $90,000, minus a $9,000 reduction for the 10 percent contributory negligence attributed to the plaintiffs, and minus a $49,000 offset for the settlement. Therefore, the defendant's total liability should have been $32,000 (111 Cal. App. 4th 29, 39-40) .

CIVIL CODE SECTION 1431.2 REQUIRES APPORTIONMENT OF FAULT IN A LEGAL MALPRACTICE ACTION THAT SEEKS PRIMARILY NONECONOMIC DAMAGES.

Proposition 51 Applicable to Legal Malpractice Action Seeking Primarily Noneconomic Damages. Civ. Code § 1431.2 can be applied to an attorney malpractice action that seeks primarily noneconomic damages, such as damages for emotional distress caused when a criminal defense attorney's malpractice resulted in his client's criminal conviction (Ovando v. County of Los Angeles (2008) 159 Cal. App. 4th 42, 73-74, 71 Cal. Rptr. 3d 415).

[2] Comments

This form may be submitted in opposition to the contention that Proposition 51, as codified in Civ. Code § 1431.2, does not apply to a legal malpractice action because a legal malpractice action is not an action for "personal injury." The basis for the opposition is that the damages sought by plaintiff are primarily noneconomic damages, such as damages for emotional distress, and as such, the cause of action is an action for "personal injury."

This form may be combined with points pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the contention that Civ. Code § 1431.2 applies. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

emotional distress, and argue that the damages sought are primarily damages for "personal injury" under Civ. Code § 1431.2.

[c] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Immunities

[a] Proposition 51 Applicable to Legal Malpractice Action Seeking Primarily Noneconomic Damages

In Ovando v. County of Los Angeles (2008) 159 Cal. App. 4th 42, 71 Cal. Rptr. 3d 415 , plaintiff was a former criminal defendant who sued his criminal defense attorney and the attorney's employer, the county, for attorney malpractice resulting in his false conviction. A jury verdict was rendered in favor of plaintiff and he was awarded substantial damages, but the trial court granted a new trial because of juror misconduct. The trial court also ruled that Proposition 51, as codified at Civ. Code § 1431.2, applied to an attorney malpractice action such as this in which the plaintiff seeks damages primarily for emotional distress, and as such a share of fault should have been apportioned to two police officers who planted false evidence against plaintiff. Both parties appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the new trial order. While the appeals from the judgment were dismissed as moot, the court discussed the issue of the proper apportionment of fault in a legal malpractice action in which the plaintiff seeks primarily noneconomic damages. The court discussed the earlier holding in Brandon G. v. Gray (2003) 111 Cal. App. 4th 29, 3 Cal. Rptr. 3d 330 , discussed in § 24A.66[3][a], that Proposition 51 did not apply in an attorney malpractice action because the damages sought were for a lost legal claim rather than for "personal injury." The court of appeal in the instant case noted, however, that the court in Brandon was faced with attorney malpractice that caused the loss of an underlying civil claim. In the instant case, by contrast, plaintiff was seeking primarily damages for emotional distress caused by his wrongful criminal conviction. As such, according to the court, the cause of action was clearly one for "personal injury" within the meaning of Civ. Code § 1431.2 and apportionment of fault to the police officers who planted false evidence was required in order to apportion liability for noneconomic damages properly (159 Cal. App. 4th 42, 73-74) .

This form may be submitted by plaintiff in opposition to a defendant's motion for a new trial made on the ground that plaintiff failed to submit expert testimony regarding defendant's standard of care and breach of that standard. It generally opposes a motion for new trial that would be supported by The points in § 24A.62.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should show that defendant's conduct clearly violated particular Rules of Professional Conduct or statutes governing the practice of law, or both [see, e.g., Bus. & Prof. Code § 6106.5 (fraudulent conduct in connection with insurance claim or worker's compensation claim); Rules of Professional Conduct, Rule 4-100 (requiring preservation by attorney of identity of client's property and funds)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Expert Testimony Unnecessary

In Day v. Rosenthal (1985) 170 Cal. App. 3d 1125, 217 Cal. Rptr. 89 , defendant attorney appealed from a judgment in favor of former clients in which defendant was found liable for legal malpractice, breach of fiduciary duty, fraud, and abuse of process. The trial court had made numerous factual findings as to defendant's misconduct. Among other things, defendant, as business manager and investment counselor to plaintiffs, had misappropriated plaintiffs' funds through a large number of sham investments. In so doing, he concealed information from the clients and, in many instances, intentionally misled the clients. Several of the investments resulted in major losses to the clients. On appeal, defendant challenged the sufficiency of the evidence on several grounds, including the ground that his negligence was not proven at trial through expert testimony.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment (170 Cal. App. 3d 1125, 1179) . The court remarked that it required no expert to tell the trial court that defendant's conduct was attorney negligence. Expert testimony is needed when it will assist the trier of fact. It is not appropriate in all cases. When the attorney's performance is so clearly contrary to established standards that a trier of fact may find professional negligence without expert testimony, such testimony is not required (170 Cal. App. 3d 1125, 1146) . The standards governing an attorney's ethical duties are conclusively established by the Rules of Professional Conduct and cannot be changed by expert testimony. In the instant case, the court of appeal found that defendant's numerous, blatant, and egregious violations of attorney responsibility were not breaches of legal technicalities for which expert testimony is required. Rather, defendant's conduct constituted violations of professional standards of which the trial court was required to take notice (170 Cal. App. 3d 1125, 1147) .

[a] Expert Testimony Unnecessary

In Stanley v. Richmond (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 1070, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 768 , a client brought an action against the attorney who represented her in a marital dissolution proceeding on the ground that the attorney breached the professional standard of care in failing to advise her about the consequences of ceding her interest in her ex-husband's Veterans' Administration pension. At the close of plaintiff's evidence, the trial court granted defendant's motion for nonsuit, ruling that plaintiff was required to present expert testimony on the applicable standard of care for family law attorneys. The appellate court reversed, stating that if an attorney's negligence is readily apparent from the facts of the case, then the testimony of an expert may not be necessary. With regard to the advice about the pension, the court noted that this was not an unsettled question of law, and that the defendant's advice demonstrated a total failure to perform even the most perfunctory research on the legal issue. The court concluded that the testimony of a family law expert was not necessary to establish whether the defendant was negligent by failing to perform a simple research task, and that it was a question of fact within the purview of a jury to decide whether the failure to conduct such research was a violation of the applicable standard of care (35 Cal. App. 4th 1070, 1092-1095) .

§ 24A.68 Supporting Motion for Dismissal in Legal Malpractice Action--Attorney-Client Privilege Prevents Proper Defense of Suit

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief].

PLAINTIFF'S LEGAL MALPRACTICE ACTION SHOULD BE DISMISSED BECAUSE DEFENDING THE ACTION WOULD REQUIRE DEFENDANT TO REVEAL CONFIDENTIAL INFORMATION RELATED TO DEFENDANT BY PLAINTIFF CONCERNING PLAIN TIFF'S OWN CLIENTS, AND THOSE CLIENTS HAVE NOT CONSENTED TO WAIVE THE ATTORNEY-CLIENT PRIVILEGE THAT PROTECTS THAT INFORMATION.

Attorney-Client Privilege Prevents Proper Defense of Suit. A legal malpractice action is subject to dismissal if: the malpractice plaintiff is also an attorney; the alleged malpractice consists of negligence in providing faulty legal advice to the plaintiff when the plaintiff was consulting the defendant in connection with the plaintiff's representation of a client; presenting a proper defense of the malpractice claim would require the defendant to reveal confidential information about the plaintiff's client; and that client has not consented to waive the attorney-client privilege (Solin v. O'Melveny & Myers (2001) 89 Cal. App. 4th 451, 463, 467, 107 Cal. Rptr. 2d 456).

[2] Comments

This form may be submitted in support of a motion for dismissal in a legal malpractice action brought by a plaintiff who is also an attorney and who alleges that the defendant provided faulty legal advice when the plaintiff consulted the defendant concerning the plaintiff's representation of a client. The grounds for the motion are that the defendant cannot provide a proper defense to the action without revealing confidential information that the plaintiff revealed to the defendant concerning the plaintiff's client. If the client has not waived the attorney-client privilege protecting that confidential information, fairness requires that the malpractice action be dismissed.

Although the case that provides the basis for this form involved a motion for dismissal brought by the malpractice plaintiff's clients, who had intervened in the malpractice action to protect the confidential information that they had revealed to their attorney (the malpractice plaintiff), the form should be appropriate for use by the malpractice defendant, if the malpractice defendant can provide evidence that the malpractice plaintiff's client has not waived the attorney-client privilege.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Thus, counsel should include facts showing that the confidential information about the plaintiff's client played a role in determining the legal advice provided by the defendant to the plaintiff, that the defendant cannot provide a proper defense without revealing that information, and that the client has not waived and is asserting the attorney-client privilege protecting that information.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Attorney-Client Privilege Prevents Proper Defense of Suit

In Solin v. O'Melveny & Myers (2001) 89 Cal. App. 4th 451, 107 Cal. Rptr. 2d 456 , the plaintiff was an attorney who had been serving as outside counsel for clients who were subjects of a federal criminal grand jury investigation. In the course of negotiating the terms under which he would continue to represent the clients, the plaintiff consulted his own counsel because he was concerned that his continued representation might implicate him in any criminal proceedings that might be brought against the clients. Although the attorneys he initially consulted assured him that his conduct was ethical and proper, the plaintiff raised additional concerns about his contractual relationship with his clients and his fees. To protect himself against a future contract dispute, he sought advice on the best way to structure the retainer contract. The attorneys he had been consulting referred him to the defendant, another law firm, for advice on these matters. Consequently, the plaintiff consulted an attorney at this firm seeking additional advice on the criminal implications of his continued representation of his clients, as well as the renewal of his retainer agreement. The eventual malpractice action stemmed from this consultation and the advice given to the plaintiff. The plaintiff alleged that the defendant negligently failed to call attention to a New York line of cases dealing with general retainers that would have benefitted him in structuring his renewal agreement with his clients. The defendant countered that the parties did not discuss the payment terms of the plaintiff's client's renewal retainer agreement, except as those terms affected the criminal law advice rendered by the defendant. After the malpractice action was filed, the plaintiff's clients intervened and, with the defendant, entered into a stipulation and order of confidentiality presented to the trial court to protect the clients' confidential information, which had been revealed by the plaintiff during his consultation with the defendant. The clients moved to dismiss the malpractice action or, in the alternative, for a protective order precluding the disclosure of their privileged and confidential information. The motion to dismiss was based on the defendant's stated intent to disclose the clients' confidential information as part of its defense against the plaintiff's claim that the defendant was negligent in advising him. The trial court ruled that the defendant could not effectively defend itself without revealing the clients' secrets and dismissed the action. The plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court agreed that proper resolution of the issues in the malpractice claim would require the defendant to reveal precisely what the plaintiff said to the defendant when the plaintiff sought the defendant's legal advice, in order for the defendant to explain precisely why it gave the particular legal advice to the plaintiff. However, this would require revealing confidential information about the plaintiff's clients, and those clients has asserted the attorney-client privilege. Therefore, if the defendant attempted to introduce evidence of the clients' confidential information, the plaintiff would be under an obligation to object to the introduction of that evidence and, absent an applicable statutory exception to the attorney-client privilege, the trial court would be obligated to sustain the objection. Because the malpractice defendant in this situation is thus precluded from presenting all relevant evidence, dismissal of the plaintiff's malpractice action was proper (89 Cal. App. 4th 451, 463) . It was irrelevant that the plaintiff had stated that he would prove his case without resort to revealing the clients' confidential information. The relevant issue was whether the defendant would need to reveal the confidential disclosures to defend the action (89 Cal. App. 4th 451, 462-463) .

NOTE:

Dismissal for inability to present a defense due to client confidences should be reserved for rare cases, and the court must consider at least four factors before deciding to dismiss. First, the relevant evidence must be the client's confidential information and the client must be insisting that the information remain confidential. Second, the confidential information must be highly material to the defense. Third, the court must determine whether it is able to protect the information, and thus allow the action to proceed, through use of such measures as sealing or protective orders, limited admissibility or use orders, or in camera proceedings. Finally, the court should consider whether it would be fundamentally unfair to allow the action to proceed, as might be the case if the plaintiff has brought a suit that, by its very nature, would require the defendant to reveal confidential information to defend, and the plaintiff was the party who provided defendant with the confidential information [Dietz v. Meisenheimer & Herron (2009) 177 Cal. App. 4th 771, 792-793, 99 Cal. Rptr. 3d 464].

CHAPTER 25 ATTORNEY'S FEES
PART I. INTRODUCTION

2A-25 California Points & Authorities § 25.01

§ 25.01 Scope of Chapter

This chapter contains memoranda for use in actions involving disputes between attorneys and clients over the payment of attorney's fees and costs. The chapter does not cover the recovery of attorney's fees from an opposing party in actions or proceedings. For memoranda relating to the recovery of attorney's fees from an opposing party, see Ch. 60, Costs . For memoranda relating to recovery of attorney's fees as damages in insurance bad-faith actions, see Ch. 120, Insurance , Part III.

This chapter includes memoranda pertaining to an attorney's entitlement to compensation under a fee agreement [see §§ 25.30, 25.31, 25.51 -25.54, 25.70], or for the reasonable value of services in the absence of such an agreement [see §§ 25.32 -25.38, 25.55 -25.56]. It also includes memoranda pertaining to the issue of the reasonableness of an attorney's claimed fees [see §§ 25.39, 25.57, 25.72], the attorney's entitlement to a lien on the client's recovery [see §§ 25.40, 25.58], an attorney's claim for litigation costs or expenses [see §§ 25.41, 25.59], and limitations on attorney's fees in medical malpractice actions [see §§ 25.50, 25.71]. Also contained in this chapter are memoranda relating to arbitration of fee disputes [see §§ 25.73 -25.77].

PART I. INTRODUCTION

2A-25 California Points & Authorities § 25.02

§ 25.02 Governing Law

The provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 1021 govern recovery of attorney's fees generally. Limits on contingent fees in medical malpractice actions are governed by Bus. & Prof. Code § 6146. Requirements for contingent fee agreements, including the requirement that the agreement be in writing, are set forth in Bus. & Prof. Code § 6147. Requirements for certain other fee agreements, also including the requirement that the agreement be in writing, are set forth in Bus. & Prof. Code § 6148. Treatment of fee agreements as confidential communications is governed by Bus. & Prof. Code § 6149. The fee arbitration program administered by the Board of Governors of the State Bar, which is mandatory for an attorney if commenced by the client, is governed by Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 6200-6206.

The State Bar has adopted Rules of Professional Conduct to regulate the professional conduct of California attorneys [see Bus. & Prof. Code § 6077; Cal. Rules Prof. Conduct, Rule 1-100]. Several of the Rules relate to the payment of attorney's fees. Cal. Rules Prof. Conduct, Rule 4-200 prohibits attorneys from charging an unconscionable fee. Cal. Rules Prof. Conduct, Rule 3-310(F) restricts an attorney from accepting compensation from a nonclient for representing a client. Cal. Rules Prof. Conduct, Rule 3-700(D)(2) requires an attorney to repay unearned fees once representation has terminated.

The Rules of Procedure for the Hearings of Fee Arbitrations by the State Bar of California govern the fee arbitration program administered by the Board of Governors of the State Bar. This program is also governed by Guidelines and Minimum Standards for the Operation of Mandatory Fee Arbitration Programs, Rules I-IV.

PART I. INTRODUCTION

2A-25 California Points & Authorities § 25.03

§ 25.03 How to Use Forms in This Chapter

[1] Page Limits on Memoranda

One of the more significant drafting requirements to keep in mind are page limits: supporting and opposing memoranda filed in discovery motion proceedings may not exceed 15 pages. A reply or closing memorandum may not exceed 10 pages. Exhibits, declarations, attachments, the table of contents, the table of authorities, and the proof of service are excluded from these page limits. Any party must obtain leave of court to file a longer memorandum [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113]. These and other drafting requirements are discussed in further detail in Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[2] Using the Forms to Build a Draft Memorandum

Forms in this chapter are in the form of contentions based on particular procedural and substantive points of law, and may be combined with each other depending on the facts and issues involved in a particular case. They may also be combined with any appropriate procedural forms, depending on the context in which they are raised. For example, forms supporting a contention that an attorney has a valid claim for compensation may be raised in the context of opposing or supporting a motion for summary judgment and, in that context, might be combined with appropriate procedural forms in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments . The contentions may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or be used to research office memoranda and jury instructions. Whatever procedural context or paper is involved, counsel should add argument that shows the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

For a discussion of how to use the forms in this chapter to draft a memorandum or a trial or appellate brief, and for a sample of a complete memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

PART I. INTRODUCTION

2A-25 California Points & Authorities § 25.04

§ 25.04 Recovery of Attorney's Fees as Costs

If the attorney and client have entered into a written compensation agreement that includes a clause pursuant to Civ. Code § 1717 that provides for the recovery of attorney's fees and costs in any future litigation concerning the compensation, and the attorney is later the prevailing party in an action for fees under that agreement, he or she may not recover attorney's fees as an item of costs pursuant to Civ. Code § 1717 if he or she acted proper in the action on the fee agreement. The attorney, by not engaging an attorney to represent himself or herself, does not "incur" any obligation to pay attorney's fees and may not recover to compensate for his or her own time spent on the case or for business opportunities lost by reason of the time spent on the case [Trope v. Katz (1995) 11 Cal. 4th 274, 282, 292-293, 45 Cal. Rptr. 2d 241, 902 P.2d 259] . For detailed discussion of the recovery of attorney's fees as an item of Cost, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 174, Costs and Attorney's Fees . For memoranda relating to the recovery of attorney's fees as an items of costs, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 60, Costs .

PART I. INTRODUCTION

§ 25.05 Bad Faith Conduct in Fee Disputes

A client may not recover in a separate lawsuit attorney's fees and costs from a former attorney that the client has incurred defending against that attorney's attempt to collect or retain an unreasonable fee [Schneider v. Friedman, Collard, Poswall & Virga (1991) 232 Cal. App. 3d 1276, 1281-1285, 283 Cal. Rptr. 882] .

CHAPTER 25 ATTORNEY'S FEES
PART I. INTRODUCTION

2A-25 California Points & Authorities § 25.06

§ 25.06 Resolution of Fee Disputes

[1] Voluntary Mediation

Mediation is a voluntary consensual process for both an attorney and his or her client, based on direct negotiations between the attorney and the client [Bus. & Prof. Code § 6200(c)]. Local bar associations are authorized to sponsor discipline mediation programs to resolve certain complaints against attorneys, and to charge a reasonable administrative fee for the purpose of offsetting the costs of administration [Bus. & Prof. Code § 6086.14(a)].

Voluntary mediation is an extension of the negotiated settlement process. All discussions and offers of settlement are confidential, and may not be disclosed in any subsequent arbitration or other proceeding [Bus. & Prof. Code § 6200(h)].

[2] Mandatory Arbitration

Unless the client has agreed in writing to arbitration under Chapter 4, Article 13, of the Business and Professions Code, of all disputes concerning fees, costs, or both, mandatory arbitration is a procedure that a client may select, without the consent of the attorney, in order to resolve a fee or cost dispute [Bus. & Prof. Code § 6200(c), 6201]. This procedure is designed to alleviate the disparity in bargaining power in attorney fee matters by providing an effective, inexpensive remedy to a client that does not require the hiring of a second attorney [Manatt, Phelps, Rothenberg & Tunney v. Lawrence (1984) 151 Cal. App. 3d 1165, 1174, 199 Cal. Rptr. 246 ; see also Law Offices of Dixon R. Howell v. Valley (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 1076, 1086-1087, 29 Cal. Rptr. 3d 499 ; Alternative Systems, Inc. v. Carey (1998) 67 Cal. App. 4th 1034, 1043] . The public protections established by Business and Professions Code § 6200 et seq. cannot be contravened by private agreement between the attorney and the client [Alternative Systems, Inc. v. Carey (1998) 67 Cal. App. 4th 1034, 1044] .

Arbitration is formally initiated by the filing of a request for arbitration on the approved State Bar form [Cal. State B. Rules Proc. for Hearing Fee Arb., Rule 15.1]. Any reply must be filed within 20 days of the service of the request [Cal. State B. Rules Proc. for Hearing Fee Arb., Rule 17.1].

When resolving a fee dispute, parties generally cannot pursue both litigation and arbitration simultaneously. For example, if a client elects arbitration, any existing civil action by the attorney to collect fees or cost is automatically stayed until the arbitration's conclusion [Bus. & Prof. Code § 6201(c); Cal. State B. Rules Proc. for Hearing Fee Arb., Rule 9.0]. The stay can be lifted only if the attorney shows that the issues are not appropriate for arbitration [Bus. & Prof. Code § 6201(c)].

Parties may agree to make arbitration binding or nonbinding [see Bus. & Prof. Code § 6204(a); Cal. State B. Rules Proc. for Hearing Fee Arb., Rule 6.0]. If the parties agree to a nonbinding arbitration, each party maintains the right to challenge the arbitration award; for this purpose, the limitations period for filing a civil action is tolled from the arbitration's initiation to 30 days after the receipt of the arbitration award [Bus. & Prof. Code § 6206].

Either party may reject a nonbinding arbitration award and request a trial within 30 days after the notice of the award is served [Bus. & Prof. Code § 6204]. If neither party requests a trial within this 30-day period, a nonbinding arbitration award becomes binding [Bus. & Prof. Code § 6203(b); see Loeb v. Record (2008) 162 Cal. App. 4th 431, 444-447, 75 Cal. Rptr. 3d 551].

The small claims court has jurisdiction to confirm, correct, or vacate a fee arbitration award not exceeding $5,000 between an attorney and client that is binding or has become binding, or to conduct a hearing de novo between an attorney and a client after nonbinding arbitration of a fee dispute involving no more than $5,000 in controversy [Code Civ. Proc. § 116.220(a)(4)].

The statutory privileges against disclosure of work product and attorney-client communications generally do not apply in proceedings related to mandatory fee arbitration [see Bus. & Prof. Code § 6202]. For memoranda relating to privileges against disclosure, see Ch. 81, Discovery: Privileges and Other Discovery Limitations .

[3] Judicial Action

An attorney or a client may bring an action in court to resolve a fee dispute. The attorney can sue for damages for breach of contract [Berk v. Twentynine Palms Rancheros, Inc. (1962) 201 Cal. App. 2d 625, 637, 20 Cal. Rptr. 144] or sue in quantum meruit for the reasonable value of legal services rendered [Elconin v. Yalen (1929) 208 Cal. 546, 549, 282 P. 791] . An attorney generally may not intervene against his or her client in a pending action in order to recover attorney's fees, but must instead bring an independent action against the client [Kelly v. Smith (1928) 204 Cal. 496, 500-501, 268 P. 1057] .

If a client instigates a lawsuit against an attorney to resolve a fee dispute, the client waives the right to request or maintain arbitration [Bus. & Prof. Code § 6201(d); Law Offices of Dixon R. Howell v. Valley (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 1076, 1086-1087, 29 Cal. Rptr. 3d 499 ; Juodakis v. Wolfrum (1986) 177 Cal. App. 3d 587, 592, 223 Cal. Rptr. 95] . If the client elects to waive the right to arbitration, the parties may stipulate to set aside the waiver and to proceed with arbitration [Bus. & Prof. Code § 6201(e)].

[4] Cumis Fees

Pursuant to Civ. Code § 2860, Cumis fee issues are to be decided in an arbitration forum and not the state's judicial forum. However, this statue does not affect the normal relationship between the federal and state courts when actions have been filed in both of these jurisdictions dealing with the same subject matter. Since Civ. Code § 2860 does not forbid federal judges or juries from deciding these issues, it is not an abuse of discretion to deny a petition compelling the arbitration of a Cumis fee dispute pending the outcome of a federal action involving the same issues [Caiafa Prof. Law Corp. v. State Farm Fire & Cas. Co. (1993) 15 Cal. App. 4th 800, 803-807, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 138] . For discussion of Civ. Code § 2860, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 308, Insurance .

§ 25.30 Supporting Contention That Attorney Has Valid Contractual Claim for Compensation [Code Civ. Proc. § 1021]

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF HAS A VALID CLAIM FOR COMPENSATION BECAUSE PLAINTIFF AND DEFENDANT ENTERED INTO AN _____ [EXPRESS or IMPLIED] CONTRACT BY WHICH DEFENDANT AGREED TO PAY PLAINTIFF FOR PROFESSIONAL SERVICES RENDERED BY PLAINTIFF IN HIS/HER PROFESSIONAL CAPACITY AS ATTORNEY ON BEHALF OF DEFENDANT, AND PLAINTIFF HAS PERFORMED UNDER THE TERMS OF SUCH CONTRACT.

A. Validity of Contract. Except as attorney's fees are specifically provided for by statute, the measure and mode of attorneys' compensation is left to the agreement, express or implied, of the parties (Code Civ. Proc. § 1021; see Tracy v. Ringole (1927) 87 Cal. App. 549, 550-551, 262 P. 73).

B. Requirement of Duplicate Copy. At the time the contract is entered into, the attorney must provide a duplicate copy of the contract, signed by both the attorney and the client (or the client's guardian or representative), to the client (or his or her guardian or representative) [Bus. & Prof. Code § 6148(a)].

C. Full Performance by Attorney. An attorney who has fully performed under a contract of employment is entitled to the stipulated fee (Berk v. Twentynine Palms Ranchos, Inc. (1962) 201 Cal. App. 2d 625, 637, 20 Cal. Rptr. 144 ; Pinto v. Seely (1913) 22 Cal. App. 318, 326-327, 135 P. 43).

[If oral fee contract that was entered into on or after January 1, 1987, EITHER]

D. Validity of Oral Fee Contract. A contract for attorney services is not required to be in writing if it is not a contingency fee contract that comes within Section 6147 of the Business and Professions Code, and it is not reasonably foreseeable that total expense to a client, including attorney's fees, will exceed $1,000 (Bus. & Prof. Code § 6148(a)).

[OR]

D. Validity of Oral Fee Contract. A contract for attorney services is not required to be in writing if it is not a contingency fee contract that comes within Section 6147 of the Business and Professions Code, and the contract is for services rendered in an emergency to avoid foreseeable prejudice to the rights or interests of the client or when a writing is otherwise impractical (Bus. & Prof. Code § 6148(a), (d)(1)).

[OR]

D. Validity of Oral Fee Contract. A contract for attorney services is not required to be in writing if it is not a contingency fee contract that comes within Section 6147 of the Business and Professions Code, and the arrangement as to the fee is implied by the fact that the attorney's services are of the same general kind as previously rendered to and paid for by the client (Bus. & Prof. Code § 6148(a), (d)(2)).

[OR]

D. Validity of Oral Fee Contract. A contract for attorney services is not required to be in writing if it is not a contingency fee contract that comes within Section 6147 of the Business and Professions Code, and the client knowingly states in writing, after full disclosure of the provisions of Section 6148 of the Business and Professions Code, that a writing concerning fees is not required (Bus. & Prof. Code § 6148(a), (d)(3)).

[OR]

D. Validity of Oral Fee Contract. A contract for attorney services is not required to be in writing if it is not a contingency fee contract that comes within Section 6147 of the Business and Professions Code, and the client is a corporation (Bus. & Prof. Code § 6148(a), (d)(4)).

[2] Comments

This form may be submitted in support of an attorney's contention that he or she has a valid contractual claim for compensation. This form may be used any time an attorney seeks to enforce an employment contract entered into by the attorney and a client that provides for attorney's fees in exchange for legal services rendered on behalf of the client.

When appropriate, this form may be used in conjunction with § 25.31 (supporting contention that attorney has valid contingent fee contract), § 25.39 (supporting contention that attorney's fees are reasonable), § 25.40 (supporting contention that attorney has valid contractual lien on judgment or recovery), and § 25.41 (supporting contention that attorney has valid claim for compensation for costs of lawsuit and other reasonable expenses). Counsel may wish to refer to additional memoranda for use in actions for breach of contract, which are found in Ch. 50, Contracts . When the client alleges fraud, duress, or undue influence on the part of the attorney at the time of entering the fee agreement, counsel should refer to additional memoranda found in Ch. 92, Duress, Menace, Fraud, Undue Influence, and Mistake .

The argument supported by this memorandum may be raised any time the opposing party contends that an attorney's fee agreement is not valid (Paragraph A and Optional Paragraphs C, D and E) or that the attorney has not fully performed under the contract (Paragraph B). The argument would be most likely to arise in support of an attorney's independent action against a client for breach of contract for nonpayment of the stipulated fee. Counsel for an attorney who has not fully performed under the terms of the contract, but who seeks to recover the reasonable value of his or her services rendered on behalf of a client, should see §§ 25.32 -25.38. Counsel for an attorney who may not be entitled to full recovery under the contract because the attorney is an out-of-state attorney not licensed in California, and rendered services to the client some of which were compensable because performed out-of-state, but some of which were noncompensable as constituting the unauthorized practice of law in California under Bus. & Prof. Code § 6125, should refer to § 25.38. § 25.37 should be used when the fee contract is an oral contract that was entered into on or after January 1, 1987, that does not come within any of the exceptions to the writing requirement [see Bus. & Prof. Code § 6148(a), (d)], because although the contract may be voided by the client, the attorney is nevertheless entitled to recover a reasonable fee [see Bus. & Prof. Code § 6148(c)].

Prior to January 1, 1987, the effective date of Bus. & Prof. Code § 6148, oral agreements for the payment of attorney's fees, except for contingency fee agreements governed by Bus. & Prof. Code § 6147, were held to be valid [see Sattinger v. Golden State Glass Corp. (1942) 53 Cal. App. 2d 130, 134, 127 P.2d 653 ; Harvey v. Ballagh (1940) 38 Cal. App. 2d 348, 354, 101 P.2d 147 ; see also Bus. & Prof. Code § 6148(e)].

This form may be combined with a form relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the existence of a valid contract for the payment of attorney's fees. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

If the client contends that the fee agreement is unenforceable because the attorney is an out-of-state attorney or law firm not licensed to practice law in California, counsel should show either that the attorney is licensed to practice law in California or that the firm had an attorney licensed to practice law in California at the time services were rendered, or that the services were performed out-of-state and were not activities constituting the practice of law in California. If only some of the activities performed constituted compensable services while others constituted the practice of law in California and thus were not compensable, counsel must show that the attorney is entitled to the reasonable value of his or her services [see § 25.38].

If a client contends that the amount of the fee sought by the attorney is excessive and bears no relation to the reasonable value of the services rendered by the attorney [see § 25.57], the memoranda set out in § 25.39 (supporting contention that attorney's fees are reasonable) may be used by the attorney in conjunction with the memoranda set forth in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Validity of Contract

The facts and procedural background of Tracy v. Ringole (1927) 87 Cal. App. 549, 262 P. 73 are discussed in § 25.40[4][a]. In discussing the issue of whether an attorney's contingent fee contract could create a valid lien on the proceeds of a judgment, the court stated that it is well settled throughout the United States that an attorney may contract for his or her professional services, that such contract may fix the amount of compensation, and that the right of attorneys to compensation depends in all cases on a contract, either express or implied (87 Cal. App. 549, 550) .

[b] Full Performance by Attorney

In Berk v. Twentynine Palms Ranchos, Inc. (1962) 201 Cal. App. 2d 625, 20 Cal. Rptr. 144 , plaintiff was employed by a group of investors who wished to form a corporation for the purpose of developing real property. Plaintiff orally agreed to do the legal work required for incorporation and purchase of the real property in exchange for a 25 percent stock interest in the corporation to be formed. The parties later agreed to change plaintiff's compensation to a flat fee of $10,000. Plaintiff then performed all legal work necessary for the creation of the corporation and for the acquisition of the real property on behalf of the corporation. Plaintiff agreed to purchase a discounted trust deed from another corporation in which one of the corporate directors had an interest. It was arranged that $4,000 of the plaintiff's fee would be applied as partial payment toward the purchase price of the trust deed. When the corporation refused to pay the $6,000 balance of his fee, plaintiff brought an action to recover the fee, alleging that payment was conditional on the corporation's lump-sum settlement of the balance due on the purchase price of the property originally acquired by the corporation and that the condition had been met. Defendant alleged that plaintiff was not to receive his fee until such time as the corporation was showing a profit and that in any event, plaintiff had not fully performed because he had not performed any services in connection with obtaining subdivision approval for the corporation's real property. Plaintiff was awarded the balance of his fee by the trial court, and defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that there was sufficient evidence to support a finding that plaintiff had contracted to do the necessary legal work to acquire the real property and incorporate but that there was no agreement that plaintiff obtain approval for a subdivision of the property. The evidence also supported a finding that the balance of plaintiff's fee was due when the sellers of the real property had been paid, not when the corporation was making a profit (201 Cal. App. 2d 625, 635) . The court found that plaintiff's fee had been agreed on by the parties and that plaintiff was suing on a contract that had been fully performed. The court stated that when the attorney and the client each has the capacity to contract and the fee is fixed by the contract, such determination is generally binding on the parties. When an attorney performs fully under the contract, he is entitled to the stipulated fee and is not required to prove the reasonable value of his services (201 Cal. App. 2d 625, 637) .

In Pinto v. Seely (1913) 22 Cal. App. 318, 135 P. 43 , an attorney agreed to represent a client who was threatened with litigation. There was conflicting evidence as to whether the contingent fee was to be 10 or 50 percent of any recovery. The attorney tried the case, which resulted in a judgment for the client on his cross-complaint. The client was dissatisfied with the amount of the judgment and insisted that the attorney prosecute an appeal. The attorney refused to do any more work on the case unless defendant paid him $100 in cash. The client then decided to employ other counsel to prosecute the appeal, which was agreeable to the attorney. After the attorney's death, the client retained another attorney who prepared and served a notice of appeal but then procured a settlement and satisfaction of the judgment as originally entered. The client refused to pay any attorney's fees to the attorney's estate, alleging that the attorney had repudiated his contract by refusing to prosecute the appeal. The administratrix of the attorney's estate brought an action to recover the fee and obtained a judgment in her favor, from which defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed and remanded the case for a new trial on the ground that the evidence did not support a finding that the attorney's contingent fee under the terms of the contract was 50 percent of any recovery. However, the court found no support for defendant's claim that the attorney had repudiated the contract when he refused to prosecute an appeal. The court stated that the general rule that any ambiguity in a contract between an attorney and client in regard to compensation should be construed in favor of the client is not so inflexible that it calls for construction of a contract beyond the express covenants of the parties. The contract between the attorney and defendant did not on its face call for the services of the attorney to continue until the final determination of the controversy on appeal (22 Cal. App. 318, 326) . The attorney's compensation was dependent on the satisfaction of the judgment obtained at the initial trial of the action, and therefore his cause of action for his fee accrued when the judgment he had obtained for his client was collected in the settlement negotiated by the substituted attorney. The attorney did what he had contracted to do and was entitled to his compensation under the contract (22 Cal. App. 318, 327) .

[c] Validity of Oral Contract

On or after January 1, 1987, in any case not coming under Bus. & Prof. Code § 6147 (contingency fee contract not for the recovery of workers' compensation benefits) in which it is reasonably foreseeable that total expense to a client, including attorney's fees, will exceed $1,000, the contract for services in the case must be in writing [Bus. & Prof. Code § 6148(a)]. Failure to comply with the writing requirement renders the agreement voidable at the option of the client. If the agreement is voided, the attorney is entitled to collect a reasonable fee [Bus. & Prof. Code § 6148(c)]. However, the writing requirement does not apply to any of the following [Bus. & Prof. Code § 6148(d)]:

- Services rendered in an emergency to avoid foreseeable prejudice to the rights or interests of the client or when a writing is otherwise impractical.

- An arrangement as to the fee implied by the fact that the attorney's services are of the same general kind as previously rendered to and paid for by the client.

- If the client knowingly states in writing, after full disclosure of Bus. & Prof. Code § 6148, that a writing concerning fees is not required.

- If the client is a corporation.

[d] Legal Services Performed by Attorney or Firm Not Licensed in California

The facts and procedural background of Birbrower, Montalbano, Condon & Frank v. Superior Court of Santa Clara County (ESQ Business Services, Inc.) (1998) 17 Cal. 4th 119, 70 Cal. Rptr. 2d 304, 949 P.2d 1 are discussed in § 25.44[3]. There the California Supreme Court held that a New York law firm, none of whose attorneys were licensed to practice law in California while representing a California client in matters occurring in California, violated Bus. & Prof. Code § 6125 (unauthorized practice of law by person not licensed in California), and that the fee agreement was unenforceable as to legal services provided in California (17 Cal. 4th 119, 127-140) . However, the Court also held that the agreement was enforceable to the extent it was possible to sever the portions of the consideration attributable to services illegally rendered in California from those attributable to New York services, and the firm could recover fees under the agreement for the limited legal services performed in New York to the extent they did not constitute practicing law in California. The fee agreement became illegal when the firm performed legal services in violation of Bus. & Prof. Code § 6125, but the law of contract severability [Civ. Code § 1599] allows courts to enforce valid parts of contracts that are only partially void when the contract has several distinct objects, of which one at least is lawful. The object of the fee agreement in Birbrower may not have been entirely illegal, assuming the client was to pay compensation based in part on work performed in New York that did not amount to the practice of law in California (17 Cal. 4th 119, 137-140) .

In Estate of Condon (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 1138, 76 Cal. Rptr. 2d 922 , a California probate court entered an order denying a Colorado attorney fees for services provided to a coexecutor of a decedent's estate who lived in Colorado. The decedent had lived in California, but had a Colorado law firm at which the Colorado attorney worked prepare her will. One coexecutor, her son, lived in Colorado and hired the Colorado attorney to advise him as coexecutor while also hiring a California attorney to make appearances in the California probate court. The other coexecutor, the decedent's daughter, lived in California and hired separate California counsel to represent her as coexecutor. Upon application for the Colorado attorney's ordinary and extraordinary fees (pursuant to Prob. Code §§ 10810, 10811), the probate judge concluded that by serving as counsel for the coexecutor of a will written for a California decedent, which devised California property and was subject to California probate proceedings, the Colorado attorney had practiced law in California in violation of Bus. & Prof. Code § 6125 and was therefore not entitled to fees.

On the Colorado attorney's appeal, the court of appeal reversed the probate court's order, holding that Prob. Code § 8570 et seq. allowed for those fees and that Bus. & Prof. Code § 6125 did not proscribe them (65 Cal. App. 4th 1138, 1142) . Following the appellate court's denial of a petition for rehearing, the Supreme Court granted review and ordered action on the cause deferred until disposition of Birbrower, Montalbano, Condon & Frank v. Superior Court (1998) 17 Cal. 4th 119, 70 Cal. Rptr. 2d 304, 949 P.2d 1 . Following its decision in Birbrower, the Supreme Court transferred review back to the court of appeal with directions to vacate its prior decision and to reconsider Condon in light of Birbrower.

Following reconsideration, the court of appeal held that the Colorado attorney had not practiced law "in California" and was therefore entitled to fees for his services (65 Cal. App. 4th 1138, 1148) . The court distinguished the facts of Condon from Birbrower, noting that in Birbrower, the out-of-state attorney's client was a California resident, while in Condon, both the attorney and client were from Colorado (65 Cal. App. 4th 1138, 1146) . Adopting the premise articulated in Birbrower that the goal of Bus. & Prof. Code § 6125 is to protect California citizens from incompetent or unscrupulous practitioners of law, the court concluded that Section 6125, while generally applicable to out-of-state lawyers, was not applicable to the matter before it (65 Cal. App. 4th 1138, 1146) . The court held that where an out-of-state lawyer, not licensed in California, provides legal services to an out-of-state client regarding California law, the lawyer is not "practicing law" in California for purposes of Bus. & Prof. Code § 6125 and is entitled to attorney's fees regardless of the lawyer's physical or virtual presence in California relating to the matter (65 Cal. App. 4th 1138, 1148) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Full Performance by Attorney

In Stone v. Carpenter (1963) 211 Cal. App. 2d 491, 27 Cal. Rptr. 203 , an attorney agreed to represent a client in litigation in return for one third of any recovery from the litigation, including a one-third interest in certain real property if and when title to the property had been quieted in the client. The attorney rendered legal services on behalf of the client, which resulted in a judgment awarding the client a one-third interest in the real property. The client refused to pay the contingent fee, alleging that the contingency on which the attorney's right to receive an interest in the real property depended had never occurred because title to the property had not been quieted in the client. The attorney brought an action to recover his fee and obtained a judgment in his favor. The client appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, finding that the evidence showed that the client had wrongfully refused to execute the necessary documents to quiet title in an attempt to avoid paying the attorney's fee. The court found that the attorney had fully performed under the terms of the contract and that the client was obligated to fulfill his part of the contract (211 Cal. App. 2d 491, 498) .

In Setzer v. Moore (1927) 202 Cal. 333, 260 P. 550 , the client agreed to pay $10,000 to several attorneys as compensation for representing the client as plaintiff in pending litigation. Five thousand dollars was paid on execution of the agreement and the second $5,000 was to be paid on commencement of trial or on the date the action was settled. The client then entered a dismissal without prejudice and refused to pay the second $5,000 because the case had been neither tried nor settled. Plaintiffs' assignee brought an action to recover the balance of the fee and obtained a favorable judgment from which defendant appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed, finding that the evidence sustained a showing that the parties intended the term "settled" to mean a termination of the pending litigation either by trial or by dismissal without trial. Defendant's attorneys performed substantial legal services on behalf of defendant in the pending litigation, and defendant obtained important advantages in other litigation by agreeing to dismiss the underlying action. The Court concluded that defendant's decision to terminate the litigation by dismissal amounted to such a settlement in his favor that the attorneys would be entitled to recover the remainder of their fee under the agreement (202 Cal. 333, 340) .

In MacInnis v. Pope (1955) 134 Cal. App. 2d 528, 285 P.2d 688 , the written contract between attorney and client provided that in exchange for representing the client in litigation the attorney would receive 20 percent of any recovery. The client received a settlement of $150,000 but refused to pay anything to the attorney. The attorney brought an action to recover his contingent fee and obtained a verdict in his favor, from which the client appealed. The court of appeal affirmed, stating that the attorney sued on a contract fully performed and was entitled to the fee stipulated in the contract (134 Cal. App. 2d 528, 530) .

PART II. FORMS

2A-25 California Points & Authorities § 25.31

§ 25.31 Supporting Contention That Attorney Has Valid Claim for Compensation Based on Contingent Fee Agreement

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF HAS A VALID CLAIM FOR COMPENSATION BASED ON THE CONTINGENT FEE CONTRACT BETWEEN PLAINTIFF AND DEFENDANT.

A. Contingent Fee Agreement Is Legal and Valid Contract. A contingent fee agreement between an attorney and client in which the attorney agrees to perform legal services for the client in exchange for a certain amount or percentage of the client's recovery in the action is a valid and legal contract entitled to the protection of the law (Herron v. State Farm Mutual Ins. Co. (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 202, 205, 14 Cal. Rptr. 294, 363 P.2d 310 ; Mathewson v. Fitch (1863) 22 Cal. 86, 94 ; see Bus. & Prof. Code § 6147).

[Optional] B. Validity of Oral Contingency Fee Contract for Recovery of Workers' Compensation Benefits. A contingency fee contract for attorney services is not required to be written if it is for the recovery of workers' compensation benefits (Bus. & Prof. Code § 6147(a), (c)).

[Optional] C. Validity of Contingency Fee Contract Not Involving Plaintiff in Damages Action. Business and Professions Code Section 6147, the statute setting forth requirements for contingency fee agreements, applies only to contingency fee agreements involving plaintiffs as clients in damages actions, and contingency fee agreements in other cases are not voidable for failure to comply with the statute (Franklin v. Appel (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 875, 891).

[2] Comments

This form may be submitted in support of an attorney's contention that he or she has a valid claim for compensation based on a contingent fee agreement between the attorney and client. When appropriate, this form may be used by an attorney seeking to enforce a contingent fee agreement and may be used in conjunction with § 25.40 (supporting contention that attorney has valid contractual lien on judgment or recovery) and with § 25.39 (supporting contention that attorney's fees are reasonable). Counsel may wish to refer to additional memoranda for use in actions for breach of contract, which are found in Ch. 50, Contracts . The argument would be most likely to arise in support of an attorney's independent action against a client for breach of contract for nonpayment of the contingent fee.

This form may be combined with a form of memorandum relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the enforceability of a contingent fee contract. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

If a client contends that the amount of the fee sought by the attorney is excessive and bears no relation to the reasonable value of the services rendered by the attorney [see § 25.57], the memoranda set out in § 25.39 (supporting contention that attorney's fees are reasonable) may be used by the attorney in conjunction with the memoranda set forth in this form.

If the contingency fee contract was entered into orally in contemplation of litigation for the recovery of damages and was not for the recovery of workers' compensation benefits, counsel should not use this form but instead should use § 25.37, to recover a reasonable fee [see Bus. & Prof. Code § 6147(b)].

[b] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda set out in § 25.53 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the contention supported by this memorandum.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Contingent Fee Agreement Is Legal and Valid Contract

In Herron v. State Farm Mutual Ins. Co. (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 202, 14 Cal. Rptr. 294, 363 P.2d 310 , several attorneys entered into a contingent fee contract to represent clients in a personal injury action. The contract terms provided that the attorneys advance court costs and trial preparation costs and receive one third of the amount of recovery after deduction of the costs. No settlement was to be made without the consent of both attorney and client, and if there was no recovery the attorneys would receive nothing for their services or for costs advanced. The insurer of the defendant in the personal injury action then induced the clients to breach the contingent fee agreement by telling them that they did not need an attorney and that a satisfactory settlement would be made. Plaintiff attorneys brought an action against the insurer for intentional interference with contractual relations and against their clients for breach of contract. The clients were not served, and the defendant insurer's demurrer was sustained without leave to amend. Plaintiffs appealed from the judgment. The Supreme Court held that the contingent fee contract was a legal and valid contract and therefore an action would lie for intentional interference with a contractual relationship (56 Cal. 2d 202, 205) . There was no evidence to show cause for dismissal of plaintiffs, and no efforts were made to negotiate with them. The Court therefore reversed the judgment.

In Mathewson v. Fitch (1863) 22 Cal. 86 , three attorneys made a contract with a client that provided for payment of $500 as attorneys' fees if the attorneys were able to secure final decrees concerning title to certain property. The attorneys procured a decision that the client had valid title to the property and then demanded payment of their fees, which the client refused to pay. The attorneys' assignee on the contract brought an action against the client, and defendant appealed from a judgment in favor of plaintiff.

On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the contract was valid and that obtaining the judgment in favor of defendant was a performance of the condition on which defendant's promise to pay the $500 depended (22 Cal. 86, 93) .

[b] Validity of Oral Contingency Fee Contract for Recovery of Workers' Compensation Benefits

A contingency fee contract is required to be made in writing [Bus. & Prof. Code § 6147(a)]. If not in writing, the contract is voidable at the option of the client, and the attorney is only entitled to recover a reasonable fee [Bus. & Prof. Code § 6147(b)]. However, a contingency fee contract for the recovery of workers' compensation benefits is specifically exempted from this writing requirement [Bus. & Prof. Code § 6147(c)].

[c] Validity of Contingency Fee Contract Not Involving Plaintiff in Damages Action

In Franklin v. Appel (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 875 , an attorney contracted to represent two spouses in connection with the spouses' real estate and video business. Under the terms of the parties' written contingency fee agreement, as compensation for the attorney's legal and financial consulting services, the attorney would receive 25 percent of future profits in the clients' business. As a result of the attorney's efforts under the contract, the clients' equity in certain real property increased substantially. The clients, attempting to obtain a reduction of the attorney's fees, later sought to renegotiate the contingency fee agreement. After the attorney refused to accept a reduction in his fee, the clients brought suit against the attorney for, among other things, rescission of the contingency fee contract. Attorney cross complained for, among other things, breach of contract and quantum meruit. The trial court rejected the clients' theories of recovery. It also rejected the attorney's breach of contract claim, holding that the contract was voidable because it failed to include a statement that "the fee is not set by law but is negotiable" as required by Bus. & Prof. Code § 6147. The court held, however, that the attorney was entitled to recover $705,000 in quantum meruit.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, but held that the trial court erred in holding that the clients were entitled to void the agreement pursuant to Bus. & Prof. Code § 6147 and in resorting to a quantum meruit measure of damages (8 Cal. App. 4th 875, 893, 895) . The appellate court, after reviewing the legislative history of Bus. & Prof. Code § 6147, determined that the statute does not apply to all contingency fee arrangements; rather, it applies only to contingency fee agreements involving plaintiffs in litigation matters (8 Cal. App. 4th 875, 886-892) . Because the agreement in this case contemplated transactional matters only, the Bus. & Prof. Code § 6147 requirements did not apply (8 Cal. App. 4th 875, 892) . The appellate court concluded that the trial court's error was nonprejudicial, because the award to the attorney in quantum meruit following trial approximated the attorney's earned fee pursuant to the agreement (8 Cal. App. 4th 875, 893) .

The court disregarded the contrary holding in Alderman v. Hamilton (1988) 205 Cal. App. 3d 1033, 252 Cal. Rptr. 845 . In Alderman, an attorney sought to recover 25 percent of the net proceeds as his fee for services rendered in connection with the sale of certain real property. The Alderman court held that Bus. & Prof. Code § 6147(a) requires all contingency fee agreements to be in writing and that the clients had an absolute right to void the contract for noncompliance with the statute. The Franklin court noted that the Alderman decision was not helpful, because it simply stated without analysis or discussion that § 6147 requires all contingency fee agreements to be in writing. The Franklin court, on analysis of the statute's legislative history rejected Alderman as reading the statute overbroadly (8 Cal. App. 4th 875, 886) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Contingent Fee Agreement Is Legal and Valid Contract

In Hendricks v. Sefton (1960) 180 Cal. App. 2d 526, 4 Cal. Rptr. 218 , the court of appeal affirmed a judgment upholding a contingent fee contract that provided for a fee of one third of the amount recovered in a personal injury action. The appellant argued that the fact that the agreement provided for a one-third recovery was sufficient to make the contract unfair and unequitable, but the court stated that contingent fee contracts are of a very common variety and not necessarily unfair because they contain such terms (180 Cal. App. 2d 526, 532) .

In Eaton v. Thieme (1936) 15 Cal. App. 2d 458, 59 P.2d 638 , the attorney agreed to prosecute plaintiff's claim against an estate in return for a contingent fee of one third of the net amount of the distribution to plaintiff. The court of appeal found no fault with the agreement, stating that it was one of a very common variety entered into by attorneys or speculators on the one part, and persons claiming some right of action that they are either unable or unwilling to prosecute at their own expense, by which the attorney or speculator undertakes to render legal or other services in exchange for a stated proportion of any amount recovered, and that the attorney frequently agrees to advance necessary expenses that will be reimbursed only in the event of recovery (15 Cal. App. 2d 458, 463) .

§ 25.32 Supporting Contention That Attorney Has Valid Claim for Compensation Based on Reasonable Value of Services Rendered to Client--When Employment Agreement Makes No Provision for Payment of Specified Fee

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF HAS A VALID CLAIM FOR COMPENSATION BECAUSE PLAINTIFF AND DEFENDANT ENTERED INTO AN _____ [EXPRESS or IMPLIED] CONTRACT BY WHICH PLAINTIFF AGREED TO PERFORM PROFESSIONAL SERVICES ON BEHALF OF DEFENDANT AND DEFENDANT [EXPRESSLY or IMPLIEDLY] AGREED TO PAY THE REASONABLE VALUE OF SUCH SERVICES.

Contract Without Specified Fee Provision. In an employment agreement between attorney and client that makes no specific provision for payment of attorney's fees, the consideration for the attorney's services is the client's implied promise to pay the reasonable value of such services (see Elconin v. Yalen (1929) 208 Cal. 546, 549, 282 P. 791 ; Stuart v. Preston (1934) 2 Cal. App. 2d 310, 316, 38 P.2d 155).

This form may be submitted in support of an attorney's contention that he or she has a valid claim for compensation based on the reasonable value of professional services rendered by the attorney on behalf of a client. Such a situation may arise when the employment agreement has no provision for payment of a specified fee. The argument supported by these memorandum may be raised any time the opposing party alleges that an attorney is not entitled to the reasonable value of services rendered under the contract. The argument would be most likely to arise in support of an attorney's independent action against a client to recover in quantum meruit.

This form may be combined with a form of memorandum relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the attorney's right to recover the reasonable value of services rendered under an attorney-client employment contract. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

If a client contends that the amount of the fee sought by the attorney is excessive and bears no relation to the reasonable value of the services rendered by the attorney [see § 25.57], the memoranda set out in § 25.39 (supporting contention that attorney's fees are reasonable) may be used by the attorney in conjunction with the memoranda set forth in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Contract Without Specified Fee Provision

In Elconin v. Yalen (1929) 208 Cal. 546, 282 P. 791 , plaintiff attorney orally agreed with defendants to represent them in a personal injury action. The attorney unsuccessfully attempted to settle the case and then filed suit on behalf of defendants and had the case set for trial. Defendants then discharged plaintiff and hired another attorney. Defendants were awarded a judgment in the personal injury action, but refused to pay plaintiff's fee. Plaintiff brought an action claiming that he was entitled to either his contingent fee or to the reasonable value of his services. At trial, the attorney alleged that the agreed compensation was to be one third of any recovery in favor of his clients while the clients alleged that the fee was to be 10 percent of any settlement before trial or 20 percent of any judgment obtained and collected. The trial court found that there was no agreement for a one-third fee and that since plaintiff had refused to accept the defendant's other offer of either 10 or 20 percent, there was no agreement between the parties for any specific sum or compensation to plaintiff. Therefore, plaintiff was entitled only to the reasonable value of his services. Plaintiff appealed the judgment.

The Supreme Court affirmed, finding that the trial court had been correct in its assessment of the agreement between the parties. Although there was a valid oral agreement contract of employment between the parties, it was clear that no agreement was ever reached regarding the compensation to be paid plaintiff. Thus, plaintiff was entitled to the reasonable value of his services up to the time of his discharge (208 Cal. 546, 549) .

In Stuart v. Preston (1934) 2 Cal. App. 2d 310, 38 P.2d 155 , an attorney was hired by several attorneys to represent them in an action to recover attorneys' fees from a client who they had represented in litigation involving water rights. The attorney was successful in his efforts, and his clients were awarded their fee by the trial court. The clients then began to argue among themselves regarding the division of the judgment and were unable to agree on the compensation to be paid to their attorney. The attorney brought an action to recover the reasonable value of his services and was awarded $50,400. The defendants' motion for a new trial was denied, and they appealed from the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed, finding that there was an employment contract among the parties but that no specific fee had been fixed. Plaintiff alleged that he had told defendants that he refused to agree to a specific fee because the duties to be performed by him were so indefinite and that the parties agreed that when the action was completed they would calculate a fair and reasonable fee for the work done by plaintiff. Defendants alleged that there was an express agreement that they would fix the amount of the fee at the termination of litigation and therefore plaintiff could not bring an action in quantum meruit. The court stated that when there has been no meeting of the minds on the subject of compensation but merely a contract of employment, the plaintiff may sue for the reasonable value of his services (2 Cal. App. 2d 310, 316) . The court found that there was substantial evidence to support the verdict that plaintiff's fee was reasonable and therefore upheld the trial court's decision (2 Cal. App. 2d 310, 318) .

[a] Contract Without Specified Fee Provision

In Cowen v. Calabrese (1964) 230 Cal. App. 2d 870, 41 Cal. Rptr. 441 , plaintiff attorney, an expert in bankruptcy law, was retained to assist a client in bankruptcy proceedings. The initial services were performed at plaintiff's office in Illinois and the parties agreed that $2,500 was a fair fee for such services. The client then asked the attorney to come to California to give further assistance in the pending proceedings. The attorney did so under the promise of payment of his expenses and a fair fee. The client later refused to pay the attorney's fee and the attorney brought an action to recover the reasonable value of his legal services. Judgment was for plaintiff for $5,000 for services rendered in Illinois and California plus $583 for his expenses. Defendant appealed, questioning the finding of the trial court that there was an express agreement to pay the attorney a substantial fee if he was successful in bringing the bankruptcy proceedings to a satisfactory conclusion and an implied contract to pay a smaller fee for the attorney's professional advice even if the proceedings were not concluded favorably to the client. The court of appeal affirmed, finding that testimony at trial supported the conclusion that there was an implied contract for defendant to pay plaintiff for the reasonable value of his services on defendant's behalf (230 Cal. App. 2d 870, 872) .

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of an attorney's contention that he or she has a valid claim for compensation based on the reasonable value of professional services rendered by the attorney on behalf of a client when there is a valid employment contract between attorney and client, but the attorney is unable to fully perform under the contract terms without fault of either party. [3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Attorney Unable To Fully Perform Without Fault of Either Party

In Boardman v. Christin (1924) 65 Cal. App. 413, 224 P. 97 , plaintiff attorney was retained by defendant pursuant to a written agreement. Plaintiff, as guardian of the client's minor brother, was about to bring an action to determine the minor's water rights. The client, who owned property adjoining that of her brother, also wanted her water rights determined. The fee agreement stated that, in return for procuring a judgment determining the water rights, the client would pay the attorney a sum of money equivalent to the amount allowed by the court for the attorney's services rendered on behalf of his ward. The attorney made preparations for trial, but prior to the start of trial the minor ward attained his majority and substituted other counsel to maintain the action. The attorney then presented to the court a statement of the services he had performed so far on behalf of the ward, and the court allowed plaintiff $1,000 for his services. Plaintiff then presented a bill for the same amount to his client, which she refused to pay. Plaintiff brought an action to recover his fee and obtained a judgment in his favor. The client appealed, alleging that plaintiff failed to perform his obligation under the contract since no judgment had been procured.

The court of appeal affirmed, finding that the failure of plaintiff to fully perform under his contract of employment was not due to any fault of either his or his client. The ward had the right to discharge plaintiff as his attorney when he reached majority and when he did so, plaintiff's remedy was to sue for the reasonable value of his services up to the time of discharge. Plaintiff could not recover the stipulated compensation in an action on his employment contract, but he was entitled to bring an action in quantum meruit for services actually rendered. The court stated the rule that when complete performance by an attorney of his contract of employment becomes impossible without fault on the part of either party, the attorney may recover in quantum meruit the value of the services actually rendered by him (65 Cal. App. 413, 419) .

In Green v. Sherritt (1936) 17 Cal. App. 2d 732, 62 P.2d 769 , an attorney was employed to defend the client in a suit brought by the client's ex-wife to set aside a property settlement and to compel the client to account for $50,000. Injunctions had been issued impounding all the client's assets in that amount. The written fee agreement between attorney and client provided that the attorney receive $10,000 in cash or securities on dissolution of the injunctions, or a reasonable fee to be determined by mutual agreement if the court ordered an accounting and the accounting showed that the client was not indebted in an amount equal to the securities impounded. Plaintiff represented his client at trial, which resulted in the court orally directing the client to account for $74,000 in cash and securities. Plaintiff insisted on findings of fact before the signing of an interlocutory judgment. Due to the difficulty of their preparation, findings were never presented and so no interlocutory judgment was ever granted and the property settlement was not annulled. The parties then began to discuss settlement amount themselves and ultimately agreed that the ex-wife would terminate the litigation in exchange for $5,000. When plaintiff was informed of the settlement and the dismissal of the lawsuit he instituted an action to collect $10,000 either under the contract or as the reasonable amount of his services. The trial court awarded plaintiff $7,500, and both parties appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, finding that the specified fee of $10,000 was payable upon the happening of one of two contingencies, but that both the attorney's continued performance and the occurrence of either contingency had been prevented by the client's settlement of the action (17 Cal. App. 2d 732, 735) . Plaintiff could not recover under the contract for the specified fee of $10,000, but proof of the contingent contract and defendant's compromise supported a recovery in quantum meruit (17 Cal. App. 2d 732, 736) .

PLAINTIFF HAS A VALID CLAIM FOR COMPENSATION BECAUSE PLAINTIFF IS ENTITLED TO THE REASONABLE VALUE OF PROFESSIONAL SERVICES RENDERED ON BEHALF OF DEFENDANT UP TO THE TIME PLAINTIFF WAS DISCHARGED AS ATTORNEY FOR DEFENDANT.

Attorney Discharged by Client. An attorney discharged by a client is entitled to the reasonable value of any services rendered under the contract of employment (Fracasse v. Brent (1972) 6 Cal. 3d 784, 792, 100 Cal. Rptr. 385, 494 P.2d 9 ; Jeffry v. Pounds (1977) 67 Cal. App. 3d 6, 12, 136 Cal. Rptr. 373).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of an attorney's contention that he or she has a valid claim for compensation based on the reasonable value of professional services rendered by the attorney on behalf of a client up to the time that the attorney is discharged by the client. The argument supported by the foregoing memorandum may be raised any time the opposing party alleges that an attorney is not entitled to the reasonable value of services performed prior to the attorney's discharge by the client. Counsel should note that if the attorney and client entered into a contingent fee contract, the attorney's cause of action for reasonable compensation accrues only when the contingency stated in the original agreement, the client's recovery by either settlement or judgment, has occurred [see § 25.55]. The argument would be most likely to arise in support of an attorney's independent action against a client to recover in quantum meruit.

existence of a valid contract. Counsel should discuss the nature and extent of the legal services performed by the attorney up to the time of discharge in order to show that the attorney is entitled to reasonable compensation for such services. Counsel may wish to discuss the reasons for the attorney's discharge by the client, and should state the date of discharge and the manner in which the attorney was notified of the discharge by the client. If the reasonable value of the legal services rendered in a particular situation is at issue, counsel may wish to use this form in conjunction with § 25.39 (supporting the contention that an attorney's fees are reasonable). Counsel should show that the attorney has made demand on the client for payment of the reasonable value of his or her services and that the client refuses to pay.

If the attorney seeks to obtain compensation for the reasonable value of his or her services from any recovery or judgment in the underlying action, counsel must show that there has been a recovery in the client's favor and that the client or any other person holding the recovery obtained refuses to pay the attorney for the reasonable value of services rendered under the attorney-client contract. In the case of a contingent fee agreement, counsel should show that the stated contingency, that is, a recovery or judgment in the client's favor, has occurred.

If a client contends that the amount of the fee sought by the attorney is excessive and bears no relation to the reasonable value of the services rendered by the attorney [see § 25.57], the memoranda set out in § 25.39 (supporting contention that attorney's fees are reasonable) may be used by the attorney in conjunction with the memoranda set forth in this form.

This form may be combined with a form of memorandum relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the attorney's right to recover the reasonable value of services rendered up to the time of discharge. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the memoranda set out in §§ 25.55, 25.56 may be used to oppose the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Attorney Discharged by Client

In Fracasse v. Brent (1972) 6 Cal. 3d 784, 100 Cal. Rptr. 385, 494 P.2d 9 , an attorney agreed to represent a client in a personal injury action. The written fee agreement provided for a contingent fee of 33.3 percent of any settlement made at least 30 days prior to the date set for trial and 40 percent of any recovery obtained thereafter, whether by settlement or judgment. Before any recovery was obtained, the client discharged the attorney and retained other counsel. The original attorney then filed a complaint for declaratory relief, alleging that his discharge was without cause, that the client had breached her contract, and that he was entitled to a one-third interest in any monies ultimately recovered in the personal injury action. The trial court held that his complaint did not state a cause of action and sustained the client's general demurrer. The attorney appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed on the ground that the action was premature, but held that an attorney discharged with or without cause is entitled to the reasonable value of services rendered up to the time of discharge (6 Cal. 3d 784, 792) . The Court stated that a client has an absolute right to discharge his or her attorney at any time with or without cause and such a discharge does not constitute a breach of contract (6 Cal. 3d 784, 790-791) . By awarding a discharged attorney the reasonable value of the services he or she has rendered up to the time of discharge, the client's right to discharge an attorney without undue restriction is preserved and the attorney's right to fair compensation for work performed is also acknowledged (6 Cal. 3d 784, 791) . In the case of a contingent fee contract, an attorney's cause of action for reasonable compensation accrues only when the contingency stated in the original agreement, that is, the client's recovery by either settlement or judgment, has occurred (6 Cal. 3d 784, 792) . However, when the discharge occurs "on the courthouse steps," where the client has executed a settlement obtained after much work by the attorney, the factors involved in a determination of reasonableness may justify a finding that the entire contingent fee was the reasonable value of the attorney's services (6 Cal. 3d 784, 791) .

In Jeffry v. Pounds (1977) 67 Cal. App. 3d 6, 136 Cal. Rptr. 373 , a law firm agreed to represent a client in a personal injury action. The case was turned over to one of the attorneys in the firm, who began preparations for trial and secured a settlement conference date. Meanwhile, the client consulted another attorney in regard to his marital problems. This attorney prepared a proposed property settlement agreement and submitted it to the client's wife. The wife was dissatisfied with the proposal and consulted an attorney at the law firm representing her husband in the personal injury action. That law firm agreed to represent her in a marital dissolution suit. When the client learned that the law firm handling his personal injury suit was also representing his wife in the dissolution action, he asked the attorney handling his dissolution action to also take over the personal injury action. The client's new attorney effected a settlement of the personal injury action in favor of the client and received a $1,000 fee. The client's original attorneys brought an action against the client and his new attorney for their services rendered on behalf of the client prior to the substitution of attorneys. The trial court found that plaintiffs had not violated any professional canons and awarded them $500 as the reasonable value of their legal services performed up to the time that a conflict of interest might possibly have arisen. Their fee was payable out of the new attorney's fee. Defendants appealed, alleging that plaintiffs should be barred from recovering a fee because the client had discharged them for accepting employment hostile to his interests.

The court of appeal reversed, finding that although their conduct was not deliberately unethical plaintiffs had violated a rule of professional conduct when they agreed to represent a third party in suing their client on an unrelated matter without the knowledge and consent of the client (67 Cal. App. 3d 6, 10) . The court held that the client had the absolute right to discharge his attorney, but that plaintiffs were nevertheless entitled to compensation for services supplied preceding the breach of professional conduct and remanded the action to the trial court for determination of the date of the violation (67 Cal. App. 3d 6, 12) .

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF HAS A VALID CLAIM FOR A PRO RATA SHARE OF A CONTINGENT FEE BECAUSE BOTH THE DISCHARGED AND EXISTING ATTORNEYS MAKE QUANTUM MERUIT CLAIMS AND THE CONTINGENT FEE IS INSUFFICIENT TO MEET BOTH CLAIMS.

Pro Rata Distribution of Contingent Fee. When the discharged and existing attorneys both make quantum meruit claims and the contingent fee is insufficient to meet both claims, the contingent fee will be distributed among all discharged and existing attorneys in proportion to the time spent on the case by each (*Spires v. [a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of an attorney's contention that he or she has a valid claim for compensation based on the reasonable value of professional services rendered by the attorney on behalf of a client when other discharged or existing attorneys have made similar claims and the contingent fee is insufficient to meet all claims.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the amount of time he or she spent in providing services to the client in comparison to the amount of time claimed to have been spent by any other existing or discharged attorneys of the client, and argue what his or her pro rata portion of the contingent fee should be. If the reasonable value of the legal services rendered in a particular situation is at issue, counsel may wish to use this form in conjunction with § 25.39 (supporting the contention that an attorney's fees are reasonable). Counsel should show that the attorney has made demand on the client for payment of the reasonable value of his or her services and that the client refuses to pay.

This form may be combined with a form of memorandum relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the attorney's right to recover the reasonable value of services rendered. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the memoranda set out in § 25.55 may be used to oppose the contentions supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Pro Rata Distribution of Contingent Fee.

In Spires v. American Bus Lines (1984) 158 Cal. App. 3d 211, 204 Cal. Rptr. 531 a personal injury action, the trial court awarded attorney's fees to discharged attorneys but nothing to the attorney who obtained the settlement for the plaintiff. That attorney appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the order adjudicating the fees and remanded the case to the trial court for determination and distribution of attorney's fees on a pro rata basis. The court held that when, as here, the contingent fee is insufficient to meet the quantum meruit claims of both discharged and existing counsel, the proper application of the Fracasse rule (attorney employed under contingent fee contract and discharged prior to occurrence of contingency is limited to quantum meruit recovery for reasonable value of services rendered up to time of discharge, rather than full amount of agreed contingent fee) is to use an appropriate pro rata formula that distributes the contingent fee among all discharged and existing attorneys in proportion to the time spent on the case by each (158 Cal. App. 3d 211, 216) . Fracasse v. Brent (1972) 6 Cal. 3d 784, 100 Cal. Rptr. 385, 494 P.2d 9 , is discussed in § 25.34[3][a].

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF HAS A VALID CLAIM FOR COMPENSATION BECAUSE PLAINTIFF IS ENTITLED TO THE REASONABLE VALUE OF PROFESSIONAL SERVICES RENDERED ON BEHALF OF CLIENT DESPITE THE PARTIAL INVALIDITY OF THE EMPLOYMENT CONTRACT BETWEEN PLAINTIFF AND DEFENDANT.

Invalid Contract. When the contract terms cannot be fully enforced due to the invalidity of certain provisions, the attorney is entitled to compensation based on the reasonable value of his or her services (Calvert v. Stoner (1948) 33 Cal. 2d 97, 105, 199 P.2d 297).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of an attorney's contention that he or she has a valid claim for compensation based on the reasonable value of professional services rendered by the attorney on behalf of a client even though the employment contract between the parties cannot be fully enforced due to the invalidity of one or more provisions. The argument supported by this memorandum may be raised any time the opposing party alleges that an attorney is not entitled to the reasonable value of services performed because one or more provisions in the employment contract are invalid and unenforceable, thus making the entire contract void. The argument would be most likely to arise in support of an attorney's independent action against a client to recover in quantum meruit.

Counsel should note that a contingent fee contract that does not meet the requirements of Bus. & Prof. Code § 6147(a) is voidable at the option of the client and the attorney is then entitled only to a reasonable fee [Bus. & Prof. Code § 6147(b)]. Under these circumstances, counsel should use § 25.37 for the appropriate memoranda to recover the reasonable fee.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the terms of the employment contract between the attorney and client to show that even if some provisions of the contract are invalid for any reason, the contract is lawful in other respects and that the attorney is entitled to the reasonable value of his or her services. Counsel should discuss the nature and extent of the legal services performed by the attorney in order to show the value of such services. If the reasonable value of the legal services rendered in a particular situation is at issue, counsel may wish to use this form in conjunction with § 25.39 (supporting contention that an attorney's fees are reasonable). Counsel should show that the attorney has made demand on the client for payment of the reasonable value of his or her services, and that the client refuses to pay. If the attorney seeks to obtain compensation for the reasonable value of his or her services from any recovery or judgment in the underlying action, counsel must show that there has been a recovery in the client's favor and that the client or any other person holding the recovery obtained refuses to pay the attorney for the reasonable value of services rendered under the attorney-client contract.

This form may be combined with a form of memorandum relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the attorney's right to recover the reasonable value of services rendered under an employment contract that is partially invalid. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Invalid Contract

In Calvert v. Stoner (1948) 33 Cal. 2d 97, 199 P.2d 297 , an attorney was employed to represent a client in a probate proceeding. The contract of employment provided for a contingent fee of one third of the recovery over and above the payment of $25 per month to the date of final distribution or settlement. The parties then negotiated the contract by which the client assigned a one-third interest in the estate to the attorney and the attorney agreed to pay one third of the litigation costs. The estate was settled and the client received a one-half share in real property. The client managed the property, turning over one third of the rentals to the attorney. Subsequently, the client brought an action for declaratory relief to reform the contract, alleging that if the attorney was entitled to anything under the contract, it was no more than one third of the excess over the value of the client's interest under the will. The client contended that the employment contract was against public policy and void because it contained a provision that the client could not make a settlement of her claim without the attorney's consent, and that if she did so she would still be liable for his fee. The trial court found in favor of the attorney, and the client appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed and stated that, assuming the invalidity of such a provision, the compensation features of the contract were not affected if the contract was lawful in other respects (33 Cal. 2d 97, 104) . The Court held that the attorney was entitled to the reasonable value of his services and that there was sufficient evidence to indicate that the services of the attorney were reasonably worth the compensation received by him (33 Cal. 2d 97, 105) .

Attorney Is Entitled to Collect Reasonable Fee. [2] Comments

This form may be submitted in support of an attorney's contention that he or she is entitled to recover a reasonable fee for professional services rendered by the attorney on behalf of a client when the contract for services was not made in writing or did not meet some other requirement of either Bus. & Prof. Code § 6147 (contingency fee contracts) or 6148 (certain other contracts). The argument supported by this memorandum may be raised any time the opposing party alleges that the contract for services is void for failure to comply with the statutory requirements. The argument would be most likely to arise in support of an attorney's independent action against a client to recover in quantum meruit.

This form may be combined with a form of memorandum relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the attorney's right to recover a reasonable fee for services rendered under an attorney-client employment contract. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the nature and extent of the legal services performed by the attorney to show that the attorney is entitled to a reasonable fee. Counsel should show that the attorney has made demand on the client for payment of a reasonable fee for his or her services, and that the client refuses to pay. If the attorney seeks to obtain a reasonable fee for the reasonable value of his or her services from any recovery or judgment in the underlying action, counsel must show that there has been a recovery in the client's favor and that the client or any other person holding the recovery obtained refuses to pay the attorney for the reasonable value of services rendered under the attorney-client contract.

The memoranda set out in §§ 25.53 and 25.54 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the contention that an attorney fee contract is valid and enforceable when the contract does not meet the statutory requirements of Bus. & Prof. Code § 6147 or 6148.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Attorney Is Entitled to Collect Reasonable Fee

When a contract for professional services by an attorney fails to meet the requirements of Bus. & Prof. Code § 6147 or 6148, the agreement is voidable at the option of the client. However, the attorney is nevertheless entitled to collect a reasonable fee [Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 6147(b), 6148(c)]. The Supreme Court of California supported this contention in Huskinson & Brown v. Wolf, which dealt with the failure of a law firm to satisfy the requirement of Cal. R. Prof. Conduct, Rule 2-200 that a client must consent in writing to a fee-sharing agreement between two law firms. The court stated that even if a particular fee or compensation agreement was not in writing, law firms laboring under such an agreement nonetheless deserved reasonable compensation for their services [Huskinson & Brown v. Wolf (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 453, 460, 9 Cal. Rptr. 3d 693, 84 P.3d 379] .

For the specific requirements of Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 6147, 6148, see §§ 25.53 and 25.54.

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Attorney Is Entitled to Collect Reasonable Fee

In Strong v. Beydoun (2008) 166 Cal. App. 4th 1398, 1403-1404, 83 Cal. Rptr. 3d 632 , the court of appeal relied on Huskinson & Brown v. Wolf (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 453, 460, 9 Cal. Rptr. 3d 693, 84 P.3d 379 , and held further that the attorney's claim for quantum meruit should be against the attorney with which the fee-sharing agreement is entered, not the client.

§ 25.38 Supporting Contention That Attorney Has Valid Claim for Compensation Based on Reasonable Value of Services Rendered to Client--Services Performed Out-of-State by Attorney or Firm Not Licensed to Practice in California

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF HAS A VALID CLAIM FOR COMPENSATION BECAUSE PLAINTIFF IS ENTITLED TO THE REASONABLE VALUE OF PROFESSIONAL SERVICES RENDERED ON BEHALF OF DEFENDANT TO THE EXTENT THAT THOSE SERVICES WERE PERFORMED OUT-OF-STATE AND DID NOT AMOUNT TO THE PRACTICE OF LAW IN CALIFORNIA.

Out-of-State Attorney or Firm Not Licensed to Practice Law in California Is Entitled to Compensation for Services Performed Out-of-State, Not Constituting the Practice of Law in California. An out-of-state attorney or firm, not licensed to practice law in California, is entitled to the reasonable value of services rendered to a client when those services were performed out-of-state and did not constitute the unauthorized practice of law in California under Bus. & Prof. Code § 6125 (Birbrower, Montalbano, Condon & Frank v. Superior Court of Santa Clara County (ESQ Business Services, Inc.) (1998) 17 Cal. 4th 119, 70 Cal. Rptr. 2d 304, 949 P.2d 1 ; see also Estate of Condon (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 1138, 76 Cal. Rptr. 2d 922).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of an attorney's contention that he or she has a valid claim for compensation based on the reasonable value of professional services rendered by the attorney on behalf of a client out-of-state, which did not constitute the unauthorized practice of law in California, even though other services rendered under the same contract may have constituted services performed in California in violation of Bus. & Prof. Code § 6125, and thus are noncompensable. The argument supported by this memorandum may be raised any time the opposing party alleges that an attorney is not entitled to the reasonable value of services performed out-of-state by an attorney or firm not licensed to practice law in California. The argument would be most likely to arise in support of an attorney's independent action against a client to recover in quantum meruit. If counsel for the attorney asserts that all services rendered under the contract are compensable, counsel should refer to § 25.30.

If the attorney and client entered into a contingent fee contract, the attorney's cause of action for reasonable compensation accrues only when the contingency stated in the original agreement, e.g., the client's recovery by either settlement or judgment, has occurred [see § 25.55].

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the terms of the fee agreement between the attorney and client and show the existence of a valid contract. Counsel should discuss the terms of the contract between the attorney and client to show that even if some provisions of the contract are invalid because they pertain to the provision of services in California that constitute the unauthorized practice of law, the contract is lawful in other respects and the attorney is entitled to the reasonable value of his or her services rendered out-of-state that do not constitute the unauthorized practice of law in California. Counsel should discuss the nature and extent of the compensable legal services performed by the attorney to show the value of those services. If the client contends that the amount of the fee sought by the attorney is excessive and bears no relation to the reasonable value of the services rendered by the attorney [see § 25.57], the memoranda set out in § 25.39 (supporting contention that attorney's fees are reasonable) may be used by the attorney in conjunction with the memoranda set forth in this form. Counsel should show that the attorney has made demand on the client for payment of the reasonable value of his or her services, and that the client refuses to pay. If the attorney seeks to obtain compensation for the reasonable value of his or her services from any recovery or judgment in the underlying action, counsel must show that there has been a recovery in the client's favor and that the client or any other person holding the recovery obtained refuses to pay the attorney for the reasonable value of services rendered under the attorney-client contract. In the case of a contingent fee agreement, counsel should show that the stated contingency, e.g., a recovery or judgment in the client's favor, has occurred.

This form may be combined with a form of memorandum relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the attorney's right to recover the reasonable value of services rendered under a contract that is partially invalid. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the memoranda set out in § 25.52 may be used to oppose the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Out-of-State Attorney or Firm Not Licensed to Practice Law in California Is Entitled to Compensation for Services Performed Out-of-State, Not Constituting the Practice of Law in California

The facts and procedural background of Birbrower, Montalbano, Condon & Frank v. Superior Court of Santa Clara County (ESQ Business Services, Inc.) (1998) 17 Cal. 4th 119, 70 Cal. Rptr. 2d 304, 949 P.2d 1 are discussed in § 25.44[3]. There the California Supreme Court held that a New York law firm, none of whose attorneys were licensed to practice law in California while representing a California client in matters occurring in California, violated Bus. & Prof. Code § 6125 (unauthorized practice of law by person not licensed in California), and that the fee agreement was unenforceable as to legal services provided in California (17 Cal. 4th 119, 127-140) . However, the Court also held that the agreement was enforceable to the extent it was possible to sever the portions of the consideration attributable to services illegally rendered in California from those attributable to New York services, and the firm could recover fees under the agreement for the limited legal services performed in New York to the extent they did not constitute practicing law in California. The fee agreement became illegal when the firm performed legal services in violation of Bus. & Prof. Code § 6125, but the law of contract severability [Civ. Code § 1599] allows courts to enforce valid parts of contracts that are only partially void when the contract has several distinct objects, of which one at least is lawful. The object of the fee agreement in Birbrower may not have been entirely illegal, assuming the client was to pay compensation based in part on work performed in New York that did not amount to the practice of law in California (17 Cal. 4th 119, 137-140) .

The facts and procedural background of Estate of Condon (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 1138, 76 Cal. Rptr. 2d 922 are discussed in § 25.30[3][d]. In that case, after a California probate court denied a Colorado attorney fees for services provided to a coexecutor of a decedent's estate who lived in Colorado, the court of appeal, after reconsideration of its reversal of the probate court's order ordered by the California Supreme Court in light of Birbrower, held that the Colorado attorney had not practiced law "in California" and was therefore entitled to fees for his services (65 Cal. App. 4th 1138, 1148) . The court distinguished the facts before it from Birbrower, noting that in Birbrower, the out-of-state attorney's client was a California resident, while in this case, both the attorney and client were from Colorado (65 Cal. App. 4th 1138, 1146) . Acknowledging that, as stated in Birbrower, the goal of Bus. & Prof. Code § 6125 is to protect California citizens from incompetent or unscrupulous practitioners of law, the court concluded that Section 6125, while generally applicable to out-of-state lawyers, was not applicable to the matter before it (65 Cal. App. 4th 1138, 1146) . Where an out-of-state lawyer, not licensed in California, provides legal services to an out-of-state client regarding California law, the lawyer is not "practicing law" in California for purposes of Bus. & Prof. Code § 6125 and is entitled to attorney's fees regardless of the lawyer's physical or virtual presence in California relating to the matter (65 Cal. App. 4th 1138, 1148) .

PART II. FORMS

2A-25 California Points & Authorities § 25.39

§ 25.39 Supporting Contention That Attorney's Fees Sought Are Reasonable

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF IS ENTITLED TO COMPENSATION BECAUSE PLAINTIFF HAS RENDERED PROFESSIONAL SERVICES ON BEHALF OF DEFENDANT AND THE COMPENSATION SOUGHT IS A REASONABLE AMOUNT.

A. General Factors to Be Considered. Factors to be considered in determining the reasonableness of attorney's fees are the time and labor involved, the novelty and difficulty of the legal questions involved and the skill required to properly conduct the case, customary charges for similar services, the amount involved in the controversy and the benefits resulting to the client, and the contingency or certainty of the compensation (Cline v. Zappettini (1955) 131 Cal. App. 2d 723, 728, 281 P.2d 35).

[Optional] B. Customary Fee in Locality. The fee that is customarily charged in the locality for similar legal services can determine the amount of reasonable attorney's fees (Knight v. Russ (1888) 77 Cal. 410, 415, 19 P. 698 ; Matthiesen v. Smith (1936) 16 Cal. App. 2d 479, 483).

[Optional] C. Experience, Reputation, and Ability of Attorney. Reasonableness of fees can be judged according to the experience, reputation, and ability of the attorney (Hurst v. Hurst (1964) 227 Cal. App. 2d 859, 871, 39 Cal. Rptr. 162 ; Boller v. Signal Oil & Gas Co. (1964) 230 Cal. App. 2d 648, 655, 41 Cal. Rptr. 206).

[Optional] D. Contingent Versus Fixed Fee. Whether or not attorney's fees are fixed or contingent is a factor used in determining reasonableness of attorney's fees (Estate of Raphael (1951) 103 Cal. App. 2d 792, 796, 230 P.2d 436 ; Swanson v. Hempstead (1944) 64 Cal. App. 2d 681, 688, 149 P.2d 404).

[Optional] E. Discretion of Trial Court. When the trial court is informed of the nature and extent of the legal services rendered, it may rely on its own experience and knowledge in determining their reasonable value Elconin v. Yalen (1929) 208 Cal. 546, 549-550, 282 P. 791 ; Clejan v. Reisman (1970) 5 Cal. App. 3d 224, 241, 84 Cal. Rptr. 897).

[Optional] F. Profit Margin Irrelevant to Determination of Unconscionable Fee. California Rules of Professional Conduct, Rule 4-200, specifically describes how to determine whether an attorney has charged an unconscionable fee, and nothing in that rule suggests that an attorney's profit margin is in any way relevant to that determination (Shaffer v. Superior Court (1995) 33 Cal. App. 4th 993, 1000, 39 Cal. Rptr. 2d 506).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of an attorney's contention that the attorney's fees sought by him or her are reasonable. It may be used when an attorney seeking to obtain the reasonable value of services rendered to a client wants to establish that the compensation sought is a reasonable amount. The argument supported by this form may be raised any time the opposing party alleges that an attorney's fees are not reasonable. The argument would be most likely to arise in support of an attorney's independent action against a client to recover in quantum meruit for the reasonable value of services rendered. Thus, the memoranda in this form may be used when the employment agreement makes no provision for payment of a specified fee (see § 25.32), when the attorney is unable to fully perform without fault of either party (see § 25.33), when the attorney is discharged by the client (see § 25.34), or when the attorney-client contract cannot be enforced (see § 25.36).

The argument may also arise in an action for malpractice in which a client is alleging that the attorney defendant violated rules of profession conduct by charging an unconscionable fee [Optional Paragraph F].

This form may be combined with a form of memorandum relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the reasonableness of an attorney's fee. This for may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

In most cases, if the employment contract is otherwise valid, the attorney is entitled to the stipulated fee, regardless of whether it is reasonable [see Berk v. Twentynine Palms Ranchos, Inc. (1962) 201 Cal. App. 2d 625, 636-637, 20 Cal. Rptr. 144 ; see also Setzer v. Robinson (1962) 57 Cal. 2d 213, 218, 18 Cal. Rptr. 524, 368 P.2d 124 ; Reynolds v. Sorosis Fruit Co. (1901) 133 Cal. 625, 630, 66 P. 21] . However, the argument that attorney's fees are reasonable may arise in support of an attorney's independent action against a client for breach of contract to recover the set fee provided for in the employment contract when the client refuses to pay the fee on the ground that it is so high as to be unconscionable. In such a case, the memoranda in this form may be used in conjunction with § 25.30 (supporting contention that attorney has valid contractual claim for compensation), § 25.31 (supporting contention that attorney has valid claim for compensation based on contingent fee agreement), or § 25.40 (supporting contention that attorney has valid contractual lien on judgment or recovery). For additional memoranda for use in an action for breach of contract, see Ch. 50, Contracts .

Counsel should insert argument with this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, if the attorney seeks to recover in quantum meruit for the reasonable value of services rendered, counsel should discuss the nature of the performance rendered. Factors that are used by the court in determining the reasonableness of a fee, such as the time, labor, and skill required to satisfactorily handle the case and the difficulty of the legal issues involved (Paragraph A), customary fees in the locality for similar services (optional Paragraph B), the experience, reputation, and ability of the attorney (optional Paragraph C), whether the fee is contingent (optional Paragraph D), and any other pertinent factors should be discussed as they relate to the facts of the case. If the attorney has fully performed under the terms of an employment contract and the client then refuses to pay on the ground that the fee is too high, counsel should discuss the terms of the contract in order to show that the contract is valid and enforceable and that its terms are not unconscionable [see §§ 25.30, 25.31; see also Ch. 50, Contracts].

[b] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the memoranda set out in § 25.57 may be used to oppose the contention supported by this form.

[a] General Factors to Be Considered

In Cline v. Zappettini (1955) 131 Cal. App. 2d 723, 281 P.2d 35 , plaintiff attorney brought an action for declaratory relief seeking a determination of his rights under a contingent fee contract. The client was threatened with a lawsuit by a real estate broker seeking to collect his broker's fee for services rendered in connection with an agreement to exchange real property. The client claimed that he had revoked the exchange agreement. Attorney and client agreed that if the case was settled within one week before trial or if it went to judgment, the attorney would receive one third of the brokerage fee. If the case settled before that time, the attorney would receive one third of the brokerage fee saved. If the client agreed to abide by the exchange agreement, the attorney would charge a reasonable fee not to exceed $500. It was also agreed that if the client was sued for the additional brokerage fee promised by the other party to the exchange agreement, the attorney's fee would be based on the larger amount since the attorney would have to defend the client in two actions.

The attorney filed a complaint in declaratory relief against the broker and against the other party to the exchange agreement. Both defendants answered and crosscomplained. The attorney met again with his client to discuss fees and it was agreed that if the suit was prosecuted to a successful conclusion the client would pay an attorney's fee of $7,000. The trial court decided that the exchange agreement was of no legal force and that neither defendant was entitled to judgment on the crosscomplaints. The client then sent the attorney a check for approximately one half of the agreed fee. The attorney returned the check and brought an action for declaratory relief. The trial court determined that the attorney was entitled to the full fee, and defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, stating that the evidence supported the attorney's contention that the client was fully informed of all pertinent facts relating to the fee agreement. The agreement was in writing and the parties met several times to discuss its terms. The court stated that in determining whether a contract between attorney and client is fair and equitable, the following factors may considered: the time and labor involved, the novelty and difficulty of the legal questions involved and the skill required to properly conduct the case, customary charges for similar services, the amount involved in the controversy and the benefits resulting to the client, and the contingency or certainty of the compensation. The court held that the contract was fair and equitable because the attorney did many hours of research and spent five days in trial. From defendant's point view the best possible result was obtained since, if the exchange agreement had been carried out, it would have cost the client $75,000. Therefore, considering the services rendered and the results obtained, $7,000 was a reasonable fee (131 Cal. App. 2d 723, 728) .

[b] Customary Fee in Locality

In Knight v. Russ (1888) 77 Cal. 410, 19 P. 698 , plaintiff attorney was retained by defendant to assist in his defense on an indictment for subornation of perjury. Plaintiff assisted in handling the case, and defendant's demurrer was sustained and the indictment dismissed. Plaintiff presented his client with a bill that the client refused to pay. The attorney brought an action to recover his fee and obtained a jury verdict for the full amount claimed. Defendant appealed.

The Supreme Court held that there was strong evidence to show that plaintiff was employed by defendant to assist in the defense of the criminal prosecution, and that his services were worth as much as the amount allowed by the verdict. Defendant contended that the trial court's instruction, stating that it was proper to consider evidence of the prices usually charged for similar services by other attorneys in the same vicinity and practicing in the same court, was misleading and erroneous. The Court stated that the instruction was a proper and well-settled rule of law (77 Cal. 410, 415) .

In Matthiesen v. Smith (1936) 16 Cal. App. 2d 479 , the owner of six promissory notes totaling $171,358 placed the notes with a bank for collection with instructions that if they were not paid they should be turned over to an attorney for collection. Payment on the notes was refused so the bank turned the matter over to one of its attorneys. The attorney brought an action to collect, and prior to the date set for trial, defendants paid the notes in full. The attorney then presented the owner of the notes with a bill for services in the amount of $12,500. The owner refused to pay the fee, claiming that it was exorbitant, and plaintiff attorney brought an action to recover for the reasonable amount of legal services. At the trial, a jury found for plaintiff and awarded him $12,500. Defendants appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, stating that no evidence had been presented showing that the fee was unreasonable for the services rendered. Defendants had introduced no testimony as to what was a reasonable fee, and plaintiff's expert witnesses all testified that the value of the services was greater than the amount of the verdict (16 Cal. App. 2d 479, 481-482) . The court also stated that the amount of compensation must vary with the place in which attorney's services are rendered, for the same services are of more value in a large city than in a small community (16 Cal. App. 2d 479, 483) .

[c] Experience, Reputation, and Ability of Attorney

In Hurst v. Hurst (1964) 227 Cal. App. 2d 859, 39 Cal. Rptr. 162 , plaintiff brought a paternity action against defendant. Plaintiff was successful in establishing paternity but appealed the trial court's award of $10,000 to her attorney, contending that it was so inadequate as to amount to a clear abuse of discretion.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment as to attorney's fees and remanded the matter to the trial court for redetermination of reasonable attorney's fees. The court said that all parties and the trial court conceded that it was a very difficult case and yet plaintiff's attorney had obtained a successful result. Many hours were spent in preparation for the six-day trial and the numerous court appearances. The court made special note of the experience and reputation of plaintiff's attorney, mentioning his years of experience, the types of litigation he had done during his distinguished career, and the reputation he had as a litigator and legal scholar among his peers (227 Cal. App. 2d 859, 871) .

In Boller v. Signal Oil & Gas Co. (1964) 230 Cal. App. 2d 648, 41 Cal. Rptr. 206 , plaintiff attorney was retained by defendant to prosecute an appeal. Defendant had been involved in a lengthy dispute with the county in which defendant alleged that it had been illegally taxed on offshore oil and gas leases for the benefit of certain school districts. Defendant had sued in superior court for a writ of mandate to compel the county board of supervisors to take action on defendant's refund claims. The county's demurrer was sustained, and defendant employed plaintiff attorney to handle the appeal. It was agreed that defendant would provide secretarial services, stationery, use of its law library, and any out-of-pocket costs of litigation. The attorney was paid $5,000 on account but the arrangement as to his fee was not definite. Plaintiff was successful in prosecuting the appeal and submitted a final statement, showing that he had worked 6411/2 hours on the case at a rate of $35 per hour. Defendant refused to pay, alleging that no arrangement for an hourly fee had been made that it believed that the attorney had agreed to accept $5,000 as a flat fee for all his services. The attorney brought an action to collect the fee, on the theory that either he had an express oral contract for a fee of $35 per hour or that he should be paid for the reasonable value of his services. The trial court found that there was no express oral contract, but that the attorney was entitled to the reasonable value of his services, which the court fixed at $2,500 after crediting the $5,000 advance. Plaintiff appealed, claiming that the amount was insufficient.

The court of appeal concluded that the trial court had applied erroneous standards when determining a reasonable fee, and the judgment was modified to allow a fee of $17,500. The trial court was of the opinion that the attorney had spent more time than necessary on the case, but the court of appeal stated that plaintiff had been given sole responsibility for the appeal and his judgment and methods of operation in handling the case should be given consideration. The trial court also stated that the case did not call on plaintiff's stipulated expertise as a tax lawyer, since the appeal mainly involved a question of statutory construction. The court of appeal found that the evidence did not support this conclusion, since the case did involve a complex and difficult property tax matter and plaintiff was an expert in the area of law concerning claims for tax refunds. Plaintiff had to overcome a variety of legal obstacles in successfully prosecuting the appeal, and he brought to the task a background of years of experience with such problems. He was hired by defendant because of such background, and he obtained successful results for defendant (230 Cal. App. 2d 648, 655-656) . Thus, a fee of $17,500 was reasonable for the services rendered by plaintiff.

[d] Contingent Versus Fixed Fee

In Estate of Raphael (1951) 103 Cal. App. 2d 792, 230 P.2d 436 , two attorneys agreed to represent a widow on a contingent fee basis in proceedings to settle her husband's estate. The contract provided that the contingent fee would be 50 percent of her share of any property not inventoried that they succeeded in having included in the estate and 50 percent of the additional one half of the inventoried property that she would receive if it was established that it was community and not separate property. The attorneys were successful in obtaining an adjudication that all the inventoried property was community property, which was affirmed on appeal. During the pendency of the appeal, the client discharged the attorneys and substituted other counsel and refused to pay any amount under the contingent fee contract, alleging that the contingent fee was unreasonable and that the contract had been obtained by fraud, duress, and undue influence. The attorneys moved the probate court for an order approving the contract and allowing them compensation. The order was granted, and the client appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, finding that there was no evidence to show that the contract had been obtained under fraud, duress, or undue influence and that the contingent fee was not unreasonable. The court stated that a contingent fee contract, because it involves a gamble on the result, may properly provide for a larger compensation than would otherwise be reasonable. The attorneys made a gamble that they would not collect any fees at all, since the outcome was uncertain, and even the trial judge had stated that the case involved a very "close question" (103 Cal. App. 2d 792, 796-797) . The court of appeal found that the attorneys were entitled to 50 percent of the client's recovery.

In Swanson v. Hempstead (1944) 64 Cal. App. 2d 681, 149 P.2d 404 , a contingent fee contract provided that an attorney would represent a client in an action to recover certain money and property owed to the client in exchange for a contingent fee of 50 percent of any recovery. The attorney brought an attachment action on the client's behalf to collect on a promissory note. A compromise was reached in which the debtor agreed to execute a new note in the client's favor in consideration of cancellation of the old note and dismissal of the action to collect on the old note. One-half interest in the new note was assigned to the attorney. The client then brought an action against the attorney to cancel the assignment, alleging that the attorney had been paid in full and that the partial assignment of the note was without any consideration. The attorney claimed that he had an interest in the note because of the terms of the contingent fee contract and that he had not been paid in full for his services. The trial court cancelled the attorney-client contract on the grounds that it was an unconscionable contract entered into under fraud and undue influence, and the attorney appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, stating that the evidence produced at the trial level did not support any findings that the contract was unconscionable (64 Cal. App. 2d 681, 687) . The court said that the unconscionability of a contingent fee contract must be determined upon the situation as it fairly appears to the parties at the time it is entered into, not as subsequent events reveal it to be, and that speculation on the outcome is implicit in the nature of such contracts. A fee of 50 percent of the client's recovery might be unconscionable if the recovery was sure to be made, but the evidence presented showed that this was not the case (64 Cal. App. 2d 681, 688-689) .

[e] Discretion of Trial Court

The facts and procedural background of Elconin v. Yalen (1929) 208 Cal. 546, 282 P. 791 are discussed in § 25.32[3][a]. In Elconin, the Supreme Court upheld the ruling of the trial court and stated that the trial court had before it detailed evidence regarding the nature and extent of the legal services rendered and could use its own experience and judgment to determine the reasonable value, with or without the aid of witnesses' testimony (208 Cal. 546, 549-550) .

In Clejan v. Reisman (1970) 5 Cal. App. 3d 224, 84 Cal. Rptr. 897 , plaintiffs were successful in litigation but appealed from that portion of the judgment awarding them $3,000 in attorney's fees, asserting that the award was inadequate. Counsel for plaintiffs had informed the trial court that 468 hours were spent in preparation for the trial and two members of their law firm were in court during the eight days of trial. The court of appeal reversed the judgment as to the award of attorney's fees, finding that based on a total of 500 hours, the award allowed only the wholly inadequate fee of $6 per hour. The court said that the knowledge and experience of the trial judge was sufficient to determine the reasonable value of attorney's services, but that in this case the trial court had abused its discretion (5 Cal. App. 3d 224, 241) .

[f] Profit Margin Irrelevant to Determination of Unconscionable Fee

In Shaffer v. Superior Court (1995) 33 Cal. App. 4th 993, 39 Cal. Rptr. 2d 506 , a client brought an action against his attorney alleging malpractice. At a deposition, the client sought disclosure of the hourly rate that a contract attorney charged defendant attorney while she was working on the client's case. The client argued that the information tended to prove that the defendant attorney had charged the client an unconscionable fee in violation of Cal. Rules of Professional Conduct, Rule 4-200. The contract attorney refused to disclose the information, and the client filed a motion to compel her to answer. The motion was granted and the contract attorney petitioned the court of appeal for a peremptory writ of mandate.

The court of appeal granted the petition, compelling the trial court to vacate its order. The court stated that California Rules of Professional Conduct, Rule 4-200 prohibits members of the bar from contracting for, charging, or collecting unconscionable fees and it specifically describes how it is to be determined that an unconscionable fee has been charged. The court concluded that there is nothing in Rule 4-200 to suggest that an attorney's profit margin is in any way relevant to the issue. In support of its conclusion, the court cited several questions and problems that would be opened should a law firm's profit margin be relevant to the analysis of the conscionability of its fees (33 Cal. App. 4th 993, 1000-1001) . The court also cited comments made in cases relating to an award of reasonable attorneys fees in public interest cases, which similarly concluded that a determination of a "reasonable" attorney fee based on costs is neither appropriate or practical (33 Cal. App. 4th 993, 1002-1003) .

[a] General Factors to Be Considered

In Olson v. Cohen, (2003) 106 Cal. App. 4th 1209, 1218, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 620 , the court held that the determination of reasonable attorney fees is at the discretion of the trial court, which is in the best position to judge the value of services rendered in its court. The court stated that factors which may be considered in determining the reasonableness of attorney's fees include the nature of the litigation, the difficulty of the litigation, the amount involved, the skill employed, the attention given, the success of the attorney's efforts, the attorney's learning and experience, the intricacies and importance of the litigation, the labor necessary, and the time consumed.

In Melnyk v. Robledo (1976) 64 Cal. App. 3d 618, 134 Cal. Rptr. 602 , defendant appealed from that portion of a judgment in her favor awarding her attorney's fees in less than the amount requested. In affirming, the court of appeal stated that a trial court should make its determination after consideration of a number of factors, including the nature of the litigation, its difficulty, the amount involved, the skill required and the skill employed in handling the litigation, the attention given, the results obtained, and other circumstances in the case (64 Cal. App. 3d 618, 623-624) .

In Anthony v. Anthony (1968) 259 Cal. App. 2d 156, 66 Cal. Rptr. 420 , defendant in a dissolution action appealed from an order after judgment awarding plaintiff $53,000 in attorney's fees. The court of appeal upheld the award, finding that the fees were less than 3 percent of the potential community property that plaintiff's attorneys had obtained for her through their skillful efforts on her behalf (259 Cal. App. 2d 156, 157-158) .

In Berry v. Chaplin (1946) 74 Cal. App. 2d 669, 169 P.2d 453 , plaintiff brought an action against defendant to determine paternity and obtain support. The jury determined that defendant was the father of plaintiff's child, and plaintiff was awarded a monthly sum for support and $5,000 in attorney's fees. Plaintiff appealed from the portions of the judgment awarding support and attorney's fees on the grounds that the amounts were inadequate.

The court of appeal affirmed the amount awarded as monthly support, but reversed the portion of the judgment fixing attorney's fees. The court found that the $5,000 award was insufficient and that the trial court had abused its discretion in granting it. The court stated that among the factors to be considered in determining reasonable compensation for an attorney are the nature of the litigation, its difficulty, the amount involved, the skill required and employed in handling the litigation, the result obtained, the learning, age, and experience of the attorney, and the time consumed in trying the case (74 Cal. App. 2d 669, 679) . Attorneys for plaintiff filed several motions and petitions, held conferences with county counsel, and prepared briefs prior to going to trial. The first trial took approximately three weeks and the jury could not reach a verdict, necessitating a second trial of two weeks. The court of appeal found that the attorneys' work was executed with the thoroughness that characterizes skilled attorneys, that important and unusual questions of law were resolved, and that the results of the case were favorable to plaintiff (74 Cal. App. 2d 669, 681) . The portion of the judgment fixing fees was reversed with directions to redetermine the amount of attorneys' fees.

[b] Contingent Versus Fixed Fee

The facts and procedural background of Goldstone v. The State Bar of California (1931) 214 Cal. 490, 6 P.2d 513 are discussed in § 25.57[3][a]. In Goldstone, in reviewing disciplinary proceedings of the State Bar, the Supreme Court found that an attorney had charged such a high fee for such trivial service that a temporary suspension from practice was warranted. The attorney had originally agreed to assist in the collection of an award in an industrial accident case in exchange for a contingent fee of 40 percent of any recovery. The attorney later disclaimed the contingent fee contract and said that his fee was the subsequent charge for the services rendered by him. The Supreme Court stated that to charge such a fee after doing so little for the client was attorney misconduct, but that a contingent fee agreement might have been some justification for the size of the fee. An attorney embarking on litigation on a contingent fee basis is well within his or her rights in charging a substantial percentage of the amount recovered because the amount of services to be rendered and the outcome of the litigation are both uncertain (214 Cal. 490, 498) .

The facts and procedural background of Gelfand, Greer, Popko & Miller v. Shivener (1973) 30 Cal. App. 3d 364, 105 Cal. Rptr. 445 are discussed in § 25.58[3][a]. In Gelfand, the court of appeal held that an attorney who successfully established a client's 20 percent share of a $100,000 wrongful death settlement was entitled to a 50 percent contingent fee, even though the attorney had not participated in the wrongful death litigation that led up to the settlement, and the major portion of his services to the client consisted of an appearance at a two hour apportionment hearing. The court discussed the various eventualities that could have resulted and stated that the attorney should not be compelled to recover on a quantum meruit basis simply because he was singularly successful on behalf of his client (30 Cal. App. 3d 364, 377) . The summary judgment for the attorney was reversed solely on the ground that there was a triable issue of fact as to whether the parties to the fee contract intended to give the attorney a security interest in, or lien on, the recovery.

In Youngblood v. Higgins (1956) 146 Cal. App. 2d 350, 303 P.2d 637 , the court of appeal held that a contingent fee agreement was not excessive merely because it was for $500 plus one third of the gross recovery (146 Cal. App. 2d 350, 352) .

[c] Discretion of Trial Court

In Glendora Community Development Agency v. Demeter (1984) 155 Cal. App. 3d 465, 202 Cal. Rptr. 389 , the appellate court upheld the trial court's award of attorney's fees based on a contingent fee contract in an action under Code Civ. Proc. § 1268.610. Noting that the lower court's holding had substantial evidence to support it, the court said that the amount to be awarded as attorney's fees is left to the sound discretion of the trial court, where the trial judge is in the best position to evaluate the services rendered by an attorney in the courtroom, and the judge's finding will not be disturbed on appeal unless it is clearly wrong (155 Cal. App.3d 465, 474) .

PART II. FORMS

2A-25 California Points & Authorities § 25.40

§ 25.40 Supporting Contention That Attorney Has Valid Contractual Lien on Judgment or Recovery

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF HAS A VALID CONTRACTUAL LIEN ON _____ [DEFENDANT'S or HIS/HER CLIENT'S] RECOVERY IN THE UNDERLYING ACTION BECAUSE PLAINTIFF HAS RENDERED PROFESSIONAL SERVICES IN HIS/HER CAPACITY AS ATTORNEY PURSUANT TO A VALID CONTRACT ENTERED INTO BETWEEN PLAINTIFF AND _____ [DEFENDANT or HIS/HER CLIENT] BY WHICH _____ [DEFENDANT or THE CLIENT] AGREED TO PAY PLAINTIFF FOR SUCH SERVICES AND WHICH PROVIDED FOR A LIEN IN PLAINTIFF'S FAVOR ON ANY RECOVERY OR JUDGMENT IN FAVOR OF _____ [DEFENDANT or THE CLIENT] IN THE UNDERLYING ACTION.

A. Lien Created by Express Contract. A fee agreement between an attorney and client that provides for a lien on the client's recovery creates a valid contractual lien on the proceeds of the judgment (see Fletcher v. Davis (2004) 33 Cal. 4th 61, 69-70, 14 Cal. Rptr. 3d 58, 90 P.3d 1216 (charging lien must comply with Cal. Rules of Prof. Conduct, Rule 3-300); Cetenko v. United California Bank (1982) 30 Cal. 3d 528, 531, 179 Cal. Rptr. 902, 638 P.2d 1299 ; Haupt v. Charlie's Kosher Market (1941) 17 Cal. 2d 843, 845-846, 112 P.2d 627 ; Plummer v. Day/Eisenberg, LLP (2010) 184 Cal. App. 4th 38, 45-48, 108 Cal. Rptr. 3d 455 ; Epstein v. Abrams (1997) 57 Cal. App. 4th 1159, 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 555 ; Saltarelli & Steponovich v. Douglas (1995) 40 Cal. App. 4th 1, 6, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 683).

[Optional] B. Attorney's Lien May Be Created by Implication. An attorney's lien on the proceeds of a judgment may be implied if the retainer agreement between lawyer and client indicates that the attorney is to look to the judgment for payment of professional fees (Skelly v. Richman (1970) 10 Cal. App. 3d 844, 865, 89 Cal. Rptr. 556 ; Bartlett v. Pacific Nat. Bank (1952) 110 Cal. App. 2d 683, 689, 244 P.2d 91, 94-95) .

[Optional] C. Lien Survives Discharge. A lien for attorney's fees survives the discharge of the attorney by the client, and the amount of the lien is equal to the reasonable value of the attorney's services rendered prior to discharge (Weiss

v. Marcus (1975) 51 Cal. App. 3d 590, 598, 124 Cal. Rptr. 297).

[Optional] D. Attorney Lien Survives Client's Later Bankruptcy Absent Its Disallowance or Avoidance During Bankruptcy. An attorney's lien is perfected at the time of contractual agreement, and a former client's obligation to pay, secured under that lien and incurred before the former client's bankruptcy proceeding, is not automatically discharged. The bankruptcy does not prevent enforcement of the lien unless the lien itself was disallowed or avoided in the bankruptcy proceeding (Saltarelli & Steponovich v. Douglas (1995) 40 Cal. App. 4th 1, 5, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 683).

[Optional] E. Attorney's Contractual Lien on Proceeds of Judgment Has Priority Over Subsequent Judgment Creditor Liens. An attorney's lien created by contract is entitled to priority over a subsequent judgment creditors's lien filed pursuant to Section 708.410 of the Code of Civil Procedure and over subsequent attachments levied on the judgment (Cetenko v. United California Bank (1982) 30 Cal. 3d 528, 532-536, 179 Cal. Rptr. 902, 638 P.2d 1299 ; Haupt v. Charlie's Kosher Market (1941) 17 Cal. 2d 843, 845-846, 112 P.2d 627 ; Waltrip v. Kimberlin (2008) 164 Cal. App. 4th 517, 524-525, 79 Cal. Rptr. 3d 460).

[Optional] F. Debtor With Notice of Attorney's Lien Not Discharged by Payment to Client. A client's debtor who has notice of an attorney's lien on funds due the client will not be discharged from his or her obligation to the attorney by subsequent performance rendered to the client (Siciliano v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. (1976) 62 Cal. App. 3d 745, 757, 133 Cal. Rptr. 376 ; Skelly v. Richman (1970) 10 Cal. App. 3d 844, 865, 89 Cal. Rptr. 556).

[Optional] G. Lien on Proceeds of Unrelated Litigation. A contractual lien may be created to secure attorney fees for services that were rendered unrelated to the litigation and that did not generate the settlement proceeds (see Bluxome Street Associates v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 1149, 1153-1154, 254 Cal. Rptr. 198).

[Optional] H. Notice of Lien Not Required. Providing notice of a lien is not a prerequisite to the creation or enforceability of an attorney's contractual lien on a client's recovery (see Saltarelli & Steponovich v. Douglas (1995) 40 Cal. App. 4th 1, 6, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 683 ; Bluxome Street Associates v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 1149, 1156-1157, 1158, 254 Cal. Rptr. 198).

[Optional] I. Lien Exists Without Judgment From Independent Action. While a discharged attorney must file an independent action to establish the amount of the lien and to enforce it, a judgment on the lien is not a condition precedent to its existence or viability (Saltarelli & Steponovich v. Douglas (1995) 40 Cal. App. 4th 1, 6, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 683).

[Optional] J. Recovery of Fee Is Permitted Even if Lien Is Invalid. Even if a lien is invalid or otherwise unenforceable, the underlying obligation remains valid (Shopoff & Cavallo LLP v. Hyon (2008) 167 Cal. App. 4th 1489, 1522-1524, 85 Cal. Rptr. 3d 268).

[Optional] K. Attorney's Contractual Lien on Proceeds of Judgment Has Priority Over Medical Lien, Regardless of Which is Filed First. An attorney's lien created by contract is entitled to priority over a medical lien, regardless of which one is filed first [Gilman v. Dalby (2009) 176 Cal. App. 4th 606, 616-620, 98 Cal. Rptr. 3d 231].

[Optional] L. Contingency Fee Agreement Need Not Comply With Cal. Rules of Prof. Conduct, Rule 3-300 to Create Valid Lien. Unlike an hourly fee agreement, a contingency fee agreement need not comply with California Rules of Professional Conduct, Rule 3-300, to create a valid lien on the recovery (Plummer v. Day/Eisenberg, LLP (2010) 184 Cal. App. 4th 38, 48-50, 108 Cal. Rptr. 3d 455).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of an attorney's contention that he or she has valid contractual lien for attorney's fees on the proceeds of any judgment or recovery in favor of a client who was represented by the attorney in the underlying action. This form may also be used when an attorney seeks to establish priority of the attorney's contractual lien over liens or attachments of subsequent judgment creditors of the client (optional Paragraph E), when an attorney seeks to charge the amount of a lien for attorney's fees against a debtor with notice of the attorney's lien (e.g., the nonprevailing party in the underlying lawsuit) who has made payment directly to the client (optional Paragraph F), or when an attorney seeks to establish a lien for services rendered that are unrelated to the litigation that generated the judgment or recovery (optional Paragraph G). The argument supported by this memorandum may be raised any time the opposing party alleges that there is no lien for attorney's fees on the proceeds of a judgment or recovery. The argument would be most likely to arise in support of an attorney's independent action against the client or the client's debtor to enforce the attorney's lien on the judgment or recovery. The argument could also arise in defense to an action brought by a client's creditor to enforce a subsequent judgment creditor's lien on the client's recovery. An attorney's lien on a client's prospective recovery must be enforced in a separate action; any order or judgment granting the attorney fees in the main action exceeds the court's jurisdiction and is void [Cal-Western Reconveyance Corp. v. Reed (2007) 152 Cal. App. 4th 1308, 1321-1323, 62 Cal. Rptr. 3d 244] .

The form may be combined with other memoranda relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the existence of a lien for attorney's fees. The form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the terms of the fee agreement between the attorney and his or her client and show the existence of a valid contract and either an express or implied contract provision granting the attorney a lien on any recovery. Counsel should also discuss performance under the contract by the attorney (or excuse for partial performance, such as discharge by the client) and indicate, if applicable, that there has been recovery obtained on the client's claim and that the client or any other person holding the recovery obtained refuses to pay the fee provided for by the contract, or the reasonable value of the attorney's services, in the case of partial performance. If the nonprevailing party paid the client without satisfying the attorney's claim, counsel should show that the party who paid the client had notice of the attorney's lien.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Lien Created by Express Contract

In Fletcher v. Davis (2004) 33 Cal. 4th 61, 14 Cal. Rptr. 3d 58, 90 P.3d 1216 , a client retained plaintiff, attorney Freddie Fletcher, to defend a breach-of-lease action and to institute a conversion action for damages. The client orally agreed to pay all costs plus Fletcher's fee of $200 per hour. In lieu of a cash retainer, the client agreed to grant Fletcher a lien on any judgment or settlement in its litigation. If the judgment or settlement was insufficient, the client agreed to pay the difference from the income it earned once it resumed operations. The client also promised Fletcher an extra unspecified percentage of any judgment obtained if extensive litigation or trial was required and if the recovery in the case was "large." Fletcher also agreed to do additional, personal legal work on behalf of the client's president and his mother. In each matter, the president orally granted Fletcher a lien on the client's prospective recovery in the conversion action.

After the conversion trial resulted in a mistrial, the client fired Fletcher and hired a new attorney. With the new attorney in charge, the client obtained a judgment for $504,000 plus interest. The judgment proceeds were disbursed to various people with claims against the client, not including Fletcher.

Fletcher claimed he did not learn about the disbursement until the day after the funds had been disbursed. Fletcher then filed an action against the client and the others who received part of the judgment proceeds to collect on his lien.

The defendants filed a demurrer against Fletcher, arguing that Fletcher had not perfected his lien against the client. The trial court granted the demurrer, holding that no valid lien existed because, under Cal. Rules of Prof. Conduct, Rule 3-300, a client must consent in writing to an attorney's charging lien against the client's future recovery. The court of appeal reversed, holding that Rule 3-300 was inapplicable in that an attorney's charging lien is not "adverse" within the meaning of Hawk v. State Bar (1988) 45 Cal. 3d 589, 247 Cal. Rptr. 599 . The California Supreme Court granted review.

The Court held that in California a charging lien is created by contract only. Unlike a service lien or a mechanic's lien, an attorney's lien is not created by the mere fact that an attorney has performed services for a client (33 Cal. 4th 61, 66-67) . The Court also held that it was reasonably foreseeable the charging lien could become detrimental to the client. Although a charging lien does not grant an attorney the power to extinguish summarily the client's interest in any recovery, a charging lien could significantly impair the client's interest by delaying payment of the recovery or settlement proceeds until any disputes over the lien can be resolved (33 Cal. 4th 61, 68-69) . Thus, the Court held that a charging lien is an adverse interest within the meaning of Cal. Rules of Prof. Conduct, Rule 3-300 and therefore requires the client's informed written consent (33 Cal. 4th 61, 69) .

In Cetenko v. United California Bank (1982) 30 Cal. 3d 528, 179 Cal. Rptr. 902, 638 P.2d 1299 , an attorney who successfully represented a client in obtaining a judgment filed a motion asking that the entire proceeds of the judgment be released to him as partial satisfaction of his fee. The written contract between the attorney and the client provided for deferred payment of attorney's fees at a stated hourly rate and for a lien on any recovery in the underlying action. Subsequent to the attorney-client contract, a judgment creditor of the client filed a lien on the judgment pursuant to former Code Civ. Proc. § 688.1 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 708.410). The trial court found that the attorney's contractual lien took precedence over the subsequent judgment creditor's lien, and the creditor appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed, stating that the attorney had a valid lien created by express contract between attorney and client and that it was immaterial whether the contract was for a contingency fee or the payment of hourly fees, as long as the fee arrangement was not so inherently unfair as to be unconscionable. The Court noted that the creditor had not alleged or presented any evidence to show that the fee arrangement was in any way unfair or unreasonable (30 Cal. 3d 528, 532) .

The creditor also alleged that the lien was invalid because it was a "secret lien," but the Court found that there is no legal authority that compels an attorney to give notice to a client's creditors of a contractual lien on the judgment, and in any case, the creditor did have actual notice of the attorney's lien. The Court held that the creditor's assertion that a lien on a judgment could be created only by compliance with former Code Civ. Proc. § 688.1 was completely without merit. By its terms former Code Civ. Proc. § 688.1 relates only to liens of judgment creditors and does not purport to limit liens on a judgment to such creditors to the exclusion of those who have contractual liens (30 Cal. 3d 528, 533) . The Court stated that when there is a lien acquired pursuant to statute and a lien created by contract, the text of the statute controls. Since former Code Civ. Proc. § 688.1 contains no language relating to the priority of liens obtained in compliance with its terms, the standard rule of priority applies and thus, other things being equal, the lien first created prevails [Civ. Code § 2897]. Since the attorney's contractual lien was created several years before the statutory lien, the attorney's lien prevailed (30 Cal. 3d 528, 533-534) .

Former Code Civ. Proc. § 688.1 was superseded in 1983 by Code Civ. Proc. § 708.410. In Cappa v. F & K Rock & Sand, Inc. (1988) 203 Cal. App. 3d 172, 175, 249 Cal. Rptr. 718 , the court of appeal indicated that the rules set forth in the Cetenko case concerning priority of liens will continue to apply under Code Civ. Proc. § 708.410. For a discussion of Cappa, see § 25.40[3][e].

In Haupt v. Charlie's Kosher Market (1941) 17 Cal. 2d 843, 112 P.2d 627 , an attorney entered into a contingent fee contract with his client, which provided for a fee of one third of any recovery in the action, and a lien in that amount on the judgment. Immediately following a verdict for his client in the personal injury action, the attorney notified the defendants of his lien on the judgment. At the same time, a creditor of the client levied two attachments on the entire amount due under the judgment. Because of the conflicting claims to the proceeds, the defendants asserted the right to withhold payment until the issue of priority was determined. The attorney then brought an action against the defendants in the personal injury action, their insurance carrier, the attaching creditor, and the sheriff. The creditor alone answered, and the attorney then moved for summary judgment. The trial court granted the motion and found that the attorney did have a lien on the proceeds of the judgment, and the creditor appealed.

The Supreme Court found that the attorney had a valid lien on the judgment, created by written contract with his client. The Court stated that an attachment lien reaches only the interest of the debtor in the attached property and is therefore subject to prior equities against the debtor, and that the contractual attorney's lien thus had priority over the subsequent attachment (17 Cal. 2d 843, 845-846) .

In Plummer v. Day/Eisenberg, LLP (2010) 184 Cal. App. 4th 38, 45-48, 108 Cal. Rptr. 3d 455 , the plaintiff and the defendants agreed to represent a party in an underlying personal injury suit. The contingency fee contract with the client stated that the attorneys would split any attorney's fees and granted the plaintiff an independent lien on the recovery to secure those fees. The parties worked on the case for over a year until the defendants allegedly forced the plaintiff out of the case. The defendants associated with other counsel in the case. After the underlying case settled, the plaintiff notified the underlying defense counsel that he should be included as a payee on the settlement check. The defendants apparently forged the plaintiff's endorsement on the settlement check. The plaintiff sued the defendants for conversion. The defendants filed a summary judgment motion arguing that the conversion cause of action failed as a matter of law because the plaintiff did not perfect an enforceable attorney's lien on the settlement funds; therefore, the plaintiff did not own or have a right to possess the settlement funds. The court granted the summary judgment motion.

The court of appeal reversed. It held that the retention agreement created a contract between the plaintiffs and the clients whereby the plaintiff would perform legal work on their case and the clients expressly granted an attorney's lien on any settlement funds to the plaintiff. The court concluded that triable issues existed on whether the plaintiff acted as the clients' attorney, consistent with a direct contractual relationship [184 Cal. App. 4th 38, 47-48] . The lien would satisfy the "right to possess" element of conversion [184 Cal. App. 4th 38, 48] .

In Epstein v. Abrams (1997) 57 Cal. App. 4th 1159, 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 555 , an action for breach of a noncompetition agreement, the attorney representing the defendants obtained a summary judgement on behalf of one of the defendants, including an award of attorney's fees in that defendant's favor. Following that defendant's dismissal from the case, the attorney filed and served notice of his contractual attorney's lien. Subsequently, the plaintiffs agreed to settle with the remaining defendants in exchange for the dismissed defendant's execution of a satisfaction of judgment, in the dismissed defendant's favor, for attorney's fees and costs. The trial court granted the plaintiff's motion for approval of the settlement over the attorney's objection and later denied the attorney's motion for reconsideration. The attorney appealed, contending that the trial court acted in excess of its jurisdiction in approving the settlement.

The court of appeal reversed, agreeing that the trial court had acted in excess of its jurisdiction in approving the settlement pursuant to the judgment lien statutes (Code Civ. Proc. § 708.410 et seq.), where the attorney was seeking to enforce a contractual lien (57 Cal. App. 4th 1159, 1166-1167) . The court stated that an attorney's lien against prospective recovery of a client upon his or her claim may be created by contract; it is a charging lien and vests in the attorney an equitable interest in the client's recovery (57 Cal. App. 4th 1159, 1169) . Although the validity of the attorney's contractual lien was not before the court and would have to proven in an independent action (57 Cal. App. 4th 1159, 1166) , the court held that the trial court erred in approving the settlement because it constituted an attempt to defeat an existing attorney's lien (57 Cal. App. 4th 1159, 1170) .

In Saltarelli & Steponovich v. Douglas (1995) 40 Cal. App. 4th 1, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 683 , plaintiff law firm filed an independent action against a former client seeking to enforce its attorney's lien, based on legal services provided under a retainer agreement in another action, before the firm withdrew from representation of the former client in that other action. The former client moved to dismiss the action, claiming that it was barred by a discharge in bankruptcy. The trial court dismissed the action with prejudice, concluding that the former client's personal liability for the unpaid fees had been discharged in bankruptcy and that the law firm had failed to perfect its lien before the bankruptcy proceeding.

The court of appeal reversed and remanded the matter to the trial court with directions. The court observed that California recognizes that parties to an attorney retainer agreement can create a lien in favor of the attorney on the proceeds of the client's prospective recovery in a lawsuit. The court cited Haupt v. Charlie's Kosher Market (1941) 17 Cal. 2d 843, 845, 112 P.2d 627 , discussed above, for the principle that the agreement for an attorney's lien is decisive as to its existence (40 Cal. App. 4th 1, 6) .

[b] Attorney's Lien May Be Created by Implication

In Skelly v. Richman (1970) 10 Cal. App. 3d 844, 89 Cal. Rptr. 556 , the plaintiff attorney had a contingent fee contract with his client that made no specific reference to the subject of an attorney's lien on the prospective judgment. After the attorney obtained judgment for his client in the action, the defendants in that action settled directly with the attorney's client who lived out of state. The plaintiff attorney had authorized direct negotiations by the defendant attorney and had been told that his contingent fee status would be protected. However, the settlement draft was made payable to plaintiff attorney's client who then refused to pay anything to plaintiff. Plaintiff brought an action against the other attorney and his client for interference with a contingent fee contract and recovered a judgment, which was then appealed.

The court of appeal found that proof of the existence of the contingent fee contract, notice of the contract to the defendants, and defendants' interference with the contract had been sufficiently established by admissible evidence in the trial court. The defendants argued that there must be some specific reference to a lien in the contingent fee contract negotiations for one to eventuate, but the court held that this was not necessary if the parties manifested an intent that the attorney should look to the judgment as security even though the word "lien" had not been used (10 Cal. App. 3d 844, 865) .

In Bartlett v. Pacific Nat. Bank (1952) 110 Cal. App. 2d 683, 244 P.2d 91 , an attorney who had been retained to enforce bondholder's rights drew up a contingent fee contract that provided for one fourth of the money recovered to be paid as the attorney's fee. Plaintiff attorney performed services under the contract by establishing his client's ownership of certain bonds and obtained a judgment for the value of his services. The client's only source of funds with which to pay attorney's fees was through the sale of the bonds that were being held in an escrow account by defendant bank. The bank appealed from the judgment in favor of the attorney, arguing that the attorney had no lien on the sale proceeds of the bonds.

The court of appeal affirmed, stating that it was obvious at the time of the making of the contract that the parties contemplated that the plaintiff's compensation could come only from sale of the bonds because the client had no other funds. From the start of the proceedings, plaintiff had claimed an equitable interest in the bonds and had notified all parties that he claimed one fourth of all monies they might receive. All parties to the sale, including the bank, knew of the attorney's claim and never attacked his claim of a lien, and defendant bank actually told the attorney on several occasions that it would withhold for him the amount claimed. The court found that the behavior of the parties showed an intent that the attorney look to the recovery as security for his fee and that a valid attorney's lien had been created (110 Cal. App. 2d 683, 689-690) .

[c] Lien Survives Discharge

In Weiss v. Marcus (1975) 51 Cal. App. 3d 590, 124 Cal. Rptr. 297 , a client employed an attorney on a contingent fee basis to prosecute a claim against two insurance companies and granted him a written lien on all amounts recovered as security for payment of attorney's fees. The contingent fee contract was oral. The attorney performed legal services on the client's behalf for over two years and was then discharged by the client, who subsequently received $35,000 as settlement of his claim. The attorney alleged that he was entitled to the reasonable value of his services in the amount of $6,750 and notified the client's new attorneys and the defendant insurance companies of his lien. All the settlement money was disbursed to the client, and the attorney brought an action against the client, his new attorneys and the insurance companies to recover the reasonable value of his legal services. The trial court sustained defendant attorneys' demurrer to the complaint, and the plaintiff attorney appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the judgement and held that there was a contractual relationship between attorney and client and that the attorney had a lien for the reasonable value of his services. Defendants contended that the contract of employment between an attorney and a client (including a lien agreement) is terminated on the attorney's discharge, but the court disagreed, stating that a discharged attorney is entitled to enforce his lien to the extent of the reasonable value of his services performed to the date of discharge (51 Cal. App. 3d 590, 598) .

[d] Attorney Lien Survives Client's Later Bankruptcy Absent Its Disallowance or Avoidance During Bankruptcy

The facts and procedural background of Saltarelli & Steponovich v. Douglas (1995) 40 Cal. App. 4th 1, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 683 are discussed in § 25.40[4][a]. In Saltarelli, the court of appeal concluded that under California law, a contractual attorney's lien is, in effect, created and perfected at the time of the agreement, if the agreement is otherwise valid. If the former client later files for bankruptcy, any obligation already incurred to pay fees, which is secured by the attorney's lien, is not automatically discharged in the bankruptcy proceeding. The bankruptcy proceeding thus does not prevent enforcement of the lien, unless the lien itself was disallowed or avoided in the bankruptcy proceeding (40 Cal. App. 4th 1, 5) .

[e] Attorney's Contractual Lien on Proceeds of Judgment Has Priority Over Subsequent Judgment Creditor Liens Cetenko v. United California Bank (1982) 30 Cal. 3d 528, 179 Cal. Rptr. 902, 638 P.2d 1299 is discussed in § 25.40[4][a].

Haupt v. Charlie's Kosher Market (1941) 17 Cal. 2d 843, 112 P.2d 627 , is discussed in § 25.40[4][a].

In Waltrip v. Kimberlin (2008) 164 Cal. App. 4th 517, 524-525, 79 Cal. Rptr. 3d 460 , a bank made two loans totaling $600,000 to the plaintiff. One loan for $500,000 was secured by a commercial security agreement by which the plaintiff granted the bank a security interest in all its inventory, equipment and general intangibles. The bank perfected the security interest by filing a Uniform Commercial Code Financing Statement (UCC-1) form. The plaintiff failed to repay the first loan. The bank filed suit and in August 2001 obtained a money judgment against the plaintiff for $685,909.08.

In August 2001, the plaintiff sued various defendants for breach of contract, breach of fiduciary duty, and fraud and deceit arising from a business dispute (the business litigation). A few days after the lawsuit was filed, the bank filed a judgment lien for $685,909.08 against the plaintiff's personal property pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. §§ 697.510 and 697.530. Shortly thereafter, the plaintiff failed to repay the second loan from the bank. The bank obtained a money judgment for $108,727.64 and filed a judgment lien for this amount in September 2002 against the plaintiff's personal property.

In December 2002, the plaintiff entered into a contingency fee agreement with new counsel in the business litigation providing that the plaintiff would assign a lien to its attorney on any recovery from that case to cover the attorney's fees.

In April 2003, the bank filed a notice of lien in the business litigation pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 708.410 et seq. for its two money judgments.

In August 2005, the plaintiff settled with some of the defendants in the business litigation for $2.5 million. The court approved the settlement, and the bank ultimately agreed to a $1,250,000 distribution from this amount.

The remaining portion of the business litigation proceeded to trial and resulted in a defense verdict. The plaintiff moved, pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 708.440, for an order authorizing disbursement of the entire remaining settlement proceeds to his counsel. The bank opposed the motion. Asserting it was both a secured creditor and a judgment creditor of the plaintiff, the bank argued it was entitled to recover the full value of its claim from the settlement proceeds.

The trial court held that the bank's lien had priority over the attorney lien. Applying equity principles, the court divided the settlement $1,726,632 to the attorney and $773,368 to the bank. The plaintiff appealed, arguing that the attorney lien had priority over the bank's creditor lien.

The court of appeal agreed. It held that an attorney's contractual lien is created and takes effect when the fee agreement is executed [164 Cal. App. 4th 517, 525] . The court held that under Civ. Code § 2897, if there are competing liens, the general rule is that, all things being equal, liens have priority according to the time of their creation. An attorney lien on a judgment for services prevails over later encumbrances [164 Cal. App. 4th 517, 525] . The court held further that public policy and equitable considerations favor the priority of an attorney lien [164 Cal. App. 4th 517, 525].

The bank argued that it had three overlapping liens on the business litigation proceeds, so its lien was prior in time to the attorney lien. It argued that in 1996, it obtained a security interest in the plaintiff's inventory, equipment, and general intangibles. The court held that the 1996 security interest did not cover the settlement proceeds at issue because the proceeds arose from the settlement of commercial tort claims, and thus the bank's lien on the plaintiff's personal property was inapplicable [164 Cal. App. 4th 517, 530]. In addition, the court held that the bank's April 2003 judgment lien did not relate back under Code Civ. Proc. § 697.020(b) because the earlier lien did not attach to the plaintiff's commercial tort claims [164 Cal. App. 4th 517, 531]. Accordingly, the court held that the attorney lien had priority over the bank's lien.

[f] Debtor With Notice of Attorney's Lien Not Discharged by Payment to Client

In Siciliano v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. (1976) 62 Cal. App. 3d 745, 133 Cal. Rptr. 376 , there was a written retainer agreement between plaintiff attorney and a client that provided for a contingent fee of 40 percent of any recovery in a personal injury action and also expressly created a lien in favor of plaintiff on any recovery. Plaintiff brought suit in the personal injury action on behalf of the client but was subsequently discharged by the client. The client proceeded in propia persona and eventually obtained a settlement in his favor with the insurer of the defendant in the personal injury action. Prior to the settlement, plaintiff attorney had notified the insurer of his discharge and of the lien he had under the retainer contract. When the settlement funds were paid directly to the client by the insurer, the attorney brought an action against the client and the insurer to enforce his lien on the settlement funds. The trial court sustained the insurer's general demurrer and entered an order of dismissal as to the insurer. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that the attorney's allegations of performance of services were sufficient as against a general demurrer (62 Cal. App. 3d 745, 752) . The court stated that the fact that plaintiff's prayer was for a sum that equalled the percentage agreed to in the contingent contract did not alter the fact that on trial the court would grant the reasonable value of services according to proof (62 Cal. App. 3d 745, 759) . The court also found that plaintiff had a valid lien on the judgment proceeds of the settlement and that the insurer had been given notice of the lien. Therefore, neither the client nor an opposing party with knowledge of the attorney's lien could compromise the litigated subject matter so as to defeat the attorney's rights, and the insurer was not discharged from its obligation to the attorney by subsequent performance rendered to the client (62 Cal. App. 3d 745, 757) . The court held that the attorney's complaint sufficiently alleged an intentional interference by the insurer with the contract lien, and the order of dismissal was reversed.

The facts and procedural background of Skelly v. Richman (1970) 10 Cal. App. 3d 844, 89 Cal. Rptr. 556 are discussed in § 25.40[4][b]. The court found that the defendants had notice of plaintiff attorney's contingent fee arrangement because it had been discussed at the first settlement conference and the defendant attorney had been reminded of it on subsequent occasions. It was not necessary that the defendants have knowledge of the exact percentage figure of plaintiff attorney's fee contract (10 Cal. App. 3d 844, 859) . Therefore, the payment of a settlement draft directly to plaintiff's client did not discharge the defendant in the underlying action (10 Cal. App. 3d 844, 866) .

[g] Lien On Proceeds of Unrelated Litigation

Bluxome Street Associates v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 1149, 254 Cal. Rptr. 198 , was an action to determine the priorities of six groups of lien claimants in the settlement proceeds from a legal malpractice action. The trial court determined the priorities of the claimants. Under the court's order, funds were only to be disbursed to the first- through third-priority claimants, there being no funds remaining from the proceeds for the fourth- through sixth-priority claimants. The fourth- and sixth-priority claimants appealed, asserting that their liens should have been given priority over the third-priority claimant, the law firm of Flynn and Stewart. The settling plaintiff in the legal malpractice action had hired Flynn and Stewart to provide services in an unrelated case; the law firm and the party had executed a security agreement granting the firm a security interest in the plaintiff's recovery from the legal malpractice action. The sixth-priority claimant asserted, inter alia, that this agreement was unenforceable because its purpose was to secure payment of attorney fees for services that were rendered unrelated to the litigation and that did not generate the settlement proceeds. The claimant further argued that the lien was equitable, and that an equitable or implied attorney's lien would arise only to ensure that an attorney whose labors have created a fund for his or her client's benefit will not be deprived of his or her compensation.

The court of appeal affirmed the distribution order (206 Cal. App. 3d 1149, 1159) . It remarked that the sixth-priority claimant misconstrued the Flynn & Stewart lien as a purported equitable attorney's lien. The court noted that the Flynn & Stewart lien was based on contract, not equitable grounds. It noted that the status of Flynn & Stewart as a law firm and the purpose of the loan (to secure payment of attorney fees) were both immaterial to the creation and enforceability of the lien under Civ. Code § 2881(1). The lien, said the court, would be enforceable, barring other factors, even if Flynn and Stewart were not a law firm and the obligation secured were not payment of legal fees (206 Cal. App. 3d 1149, 1154) .

[h] Notice of Lien Not Required

The facts and procedural background of Saltarelli & Steponovich v. Douglas (1995) 40 Cal. App. 4th 1, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 683 , are discussed in § 25.40[4][a]. In Saltarelli, the trial court dismissed the plaintiff law firm's independent action to enforce an attorney's lien on the ground that the law firm failed to perfect its lien before a bankruptcy proceeding filed by the firm's former client. Citing Bluxome Street Associates v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 1149, 1156-1157, 254 Cal. Rptr. 198 , discussed below, the court of appeal stated that it was unnecessary for the law firm to file a notice of lien to perfect its lien because the agreement for an attorney's lien is decisive as to the lien's existence. As a consequence, the court reversed the trial court's order dismissing the action (40 Cal. App. 4th 1, 6-7) .

The facts and procedural background of Bluxome Street Associates v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 1149, 254 Cal. Rptr. 198 , are discussed in § 25.40[3][g]. In Bluxome, the appealing fourth- and sixth-priority claimants asserted that the third-priority (Flynn & Stewart) lien was unenforceable because there was no notice of the lien. The court rejected this argument, noting that there is no authority, statute, or case law requiring notice to create a contractual lien under Civ. Code § 2881 on a litigant's interest in a tort claim (206 Cal. App. 3d 1149, 1156-1157) . The court also found that although the fourth-and sixth-priority claimants did provide written notice (unlike Flynn and Stewart), this fact would not alter the priority of the liens vis-a-vis Flynn & Stewart's earlier unrecorded lien (206 Cal. App. 3d 1149, 1158-1159) .

[i] Lien Exists Without Judgment From Independent Action

The facts and procedural background of Saltarelli & Steponovich v. Douglas (1995) 40 Cal. App. 4th 1, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 683 , are discussed in § 25.40[4][a]. In Saltarelli, the court of appeal reviewed California law relating to the nature, extent, and validity of an attorney lien in an action after a bankruptcy court had discharged the client's debt to the law firm. The trial court had dismissed the law firm's independent action with prejudice concluding that the law firm had failed to perfect its lien before the bankruptcy proceeding. The court stated that a retainer agreement providing for an attorney's lien, if otherwise valid, creates the lien. While a discharged attorney must file an independent action to establish the amount of the lien and to enforce it, a judgment on the lien is not a condition precedent to its existence or viability (40 Cal. App. 4th 1, 6) .

[j] Recovery of Fee Is Permitted Even if Lien Is Invalid.

In Shopoff & Cavallo LLP v. Hyon (2008) 167 Cal. App. 4th 1489, 1522-1524, 85 Cal. Rptr. 3d 268 , an attorney referral provider recruited counsel for clients in exchange for a contingent fee. The clients later retained another attorney who negotiated a global settlement agreement of pending litigation and who sought to resolve disputes regarding the settlement proceeds by interpleader. The trial court awarded percentage shares in the proceeds and awarded attorney's fees against a defendant client and in favor of the plaintiffs, another client, several attorneys, and the attorney referral provider. With respect to the judgment in favor of the attorneys, the defendant argued that the attorneys violated Cal. Rules of Prof. Conduct, Rule 3-300 by acquiring attorney liens on the recovery proceeds in their retainer agreements without complying with the disclosure and consent requirements specified in the rule.

The Court of Appeal disagreed. It held that the attorneys' recovery did not depend on the validity of their liens under Cal. Rules of Prof. Conduct, Rule 3-300, because the contingent fee agreements were valid and severable. It held that granting recovery under a contingent fee agreement although the charging lien may be invalid is consistent with the law of severability of contracts. The court held that the overarching inquiry is whether the interests of justice would be furthered by severance. Thus, the court held, even if the liens were invalid, the attorneys were still permitted to recover their fee [167 Cal. App. 4th 1489, 1522-1524].

[k] Attorney's Contractual Lien on Proceeds of Judgment Has Priority Over Medical Lien

In Gilman v. Dalby (2009) 176 Cal. App. 4th 606, 616-620, 98 Cal. Rptr. 3d 231 , a motorist was injured in a car accident. The motorist and his health care provider signed a contractual lien to the plaintiff granting him reimbursement for the motorist's medical expenses. The motorist subsequently hired an attorney. The motorist settled his case for less than the litigation costs his attorney incurred. His attorney used the settlement for reimbursement of her litigation expenses and waived her fee. The plaintiff sued the motorist's attorney for conversion for not honoring his lien. The trial court granted the attorney's summary judgment motion dismissing the conversion claim.

On appeal, the court held that attorney lien for the costs of litigation takes priority over a medical lien, against the proceeds of a settlement, regardless of which was first in time [176 Cal. App. 4th 606, 616-620]. The court first held that, under Civ. Code § 2897, all things being equal, liens have priority among themselves according to the date of their creation. However, the court held, despite the similarity of equities favoring the priority of medical liens and attorney liens, as a matter of public policy, a medical lien against the recovery in a personal injury lawsuit is not equal in equity to an attorney lien for fees and costs created by a retainer agreement to litigate the lawsuit [176 Cal. App. 4th 606, 618]. The court based this conclusion on the fact that without an attorney, a patient is not likely to obtain any monetary recovery and the medical lien will remain unpaid [176 Cal. App. 4th 606, 618-619]. In addition, giving priority to an attorney's lien provides an incentive to attorneys to take on cases [176 Cal. App. 4th 606, 619].

[l] Contingency Fee Agreement Need Not Comply With Cal. Rules of Prof. Conduct, Rule 3-300 to Create Valid Lien

The facts of Plummer v. Day/Eisenberg*, LLP (2010) 184 Cal. App. 4th 38, 48-50, 108 Cal. Rptr. 3d 455* , are discussed in § 25.40[3][a]. The defendant argued that the plaintiff's lien was invalid because it did not comply with Cal. Rules of Prof. Conduct, Rule 3-300. The court of appeal noted that In Fletcher v. Davis (2004), 33 Cal.4th 61, 71, 14 Cal. Rptr. 3d 58, 90 P.3d 1216 , the California Supreme Court held that an attorney who secures a charging lien against a client's future judgment or recovery has acquired an interest adverse to the client, and so must comply with Cal. Rules of Prof. Conduct, Rule 3-300. Rule 3-300 requires attorneys who acquire interests adverse to their clients to do so on "fair and reasonable" terms and, in writing, disclose those terms and advise the clients they may seek independent counsel.

The court of appeal observed that Fletcher applied only to hourly fee agreements and that the California Supreme Court had expressly declined to apply the ruling to contingency fee agreements [184 Cal. App. 4th 38, 48-49] . The court further noted that the California State Bar had concluded that a charging lien in a contingency fee agreement does not create an "adverse interest" to the client within the meaning of Cal. Rules of Prof. Conduct, Rule 3-300 (State Bar Standing Com. on Prof. Responsibility and Conduct, Formal Opn. No. 2006-170, p. 7 (Formal Opinion 2006-170). The court adopted the State Bar's ruling, holding that hourly fee agreements differ from contingency fee agreements in that in contingency fee agreements the attorney and the client have agreed that the attorney's fee will be limited to a percentage of, and derived only from, a successful recovery created by the attorney's work. Further, the attorney and the client share the risk of a recovery, and any fee the attorney receives is delayed until the client obtains a recovery, usually at the end of the representation. In addition, in a contingency fee arrangement, the client's recovery often represents the only source of funds from which the attorney can ever be paid [184 Cal. App. 4th 38, 49] .

[a] Lien Created by Express Contract

In Tracy v. Ringole (1927) 87 Cal. App. 549, 262 P. 73 , plaintiff attorney agreed to represent a client in a personal injury action in exchange for a contingent fee of one third of any recovery. The written contract included a clause giving the attorney a lien on any judgement rendered in favor of the client and also provided that no substitution of attorneys could be made without first paying plaintiff, absent any misconduct. After the attorney had performed certain services for the client in the action, the client discharged him and substituted other counsel. The new attorney obtained a settlement for the client, and the first attorney brought an action against the second attorney to enforce his lien against the judgement. The defendant's demurrer to the complaint was sustained, and the plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal stated that the sole issue on appeal was whether an attorney may, by contract with a client, provide for a lien on an anticipated judgment for the amount of the attorney's contingent fee. The court said that a lien may be created by contract of the parties and that here the contingent fee contract did provide for a lien, of which the defendant had full knowledge. The court stated that in such a case it has been held that the agreement for a lien is decisive as to its existence and amount and that it constitutes a valid equitable assignment of the judgment pro tanto and creates a lien on the specific fund. Thus, because of the contract, plaintiff became the equitable owner of one third of whatever sum was recovered, and a lien was created in favor of plaintiff. The defendant took the settlement funds subject to the plaintiff's interest and a constructive trustee of any funds recovered in the action (87 Cal. App. 549, 550-552) .

[b] Attorney's Lien May Be Created by Implication

In Wagner v. Sariotti (1943) 56 Cal. App. 2d 693, 133 P.2d 430 , the court held that in order to create a lien for the payment of attorney's fees, the parties are not required to use the word "lien" in their contract. The court said that the real question in each case is whether or not the parties have contracted that the lawyer is to look to the judgment he may secure as security for his fee. If so, an equitable lien is created (56 Cal. App. 2d 693, 697) .

[c] Debtor With Notice of Attorney's Lien Not Discharged by Payment to Client

In Pearlmutter v. Alexander (1979) 97 Cal. App. 3d Supp. 16, 158 Cal. Rptr. 762 , plaintiff attorney was retained to represent a client in the client's claim against a union. The client authorized the attorney to negotiate a $4,000 settlement with the union and then refused to go forward with the settlement when an agreement was reached between his attorney and the union attorney. Plaintiff was authorized by the court to withdraw as attorney for the client after securing a written lien for $1,500 additional attorney's fees from the client. Plaintiff notified the union, the union attorney, and the client's new attorney of his lien. The union attorney and the client's attorney negotiated another settlement for $4,250. The union attorney paid the money to the new attorney, who retained $250 for his services and disbursed the balance to the client. When they refused to honor his lien, plaintiff brought an action against the union, the union attorney, the client, and the client's attorney for interference with prospective economic advantage. The trial court found that plaintiff had waived his lien by withdrawing as attorney and that there was no bad motive, malice, or conspiracy among defendants to deprive plaintiff of his fee. Plaintiff appealed.

The appellate department of the superior court reversed, finding that the attorney's withdrawal did not constitute a waiver of his lien. Although plaintiff was not legally compelled to withdraw from the case, his withdrawal was not improper because the client's conduct made it unreasonably difficult for plaintiff to carry out his employment effectively, and the withdrawal was made on order of the court without opposition from the client. Defendants had paid out settlement funds in disregard of a known lien, thus tortiously interfering with plaintiff's rights (97 Cal. App. 3d Supp. 16, 19-20).

The Superior Court Appellate Department's decision in Pearlmutter is arguably persuasive in that the court approved the attorney's withdrawal from the prior action with no objection from the former clients. Note, however, that one court of appeal has since held that a client's exercise of the right to reject a settlement does not justify withdrawal by the attorney, expressly rejecting a contrary assertion made in the Pearlmutter decision [Estate of Falco (1987) 188 Cal. App. 3d 1004, 1018, 233 Cal. Rptr. 807] .

PART II. FORMS

2A-25 California Points & Authorities § 25.41

§ 25.41 Supporting Contention That Attorney Has Valid Claim for Compensation for Costs of Lawsuit and Other Reasonable Expenses

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF IS ENTITLED TO REIMBURSEMENT FOR COSTS OF THE LAWSUIT ADVANCED BY PLAINTIFF AND FOR OTHER SPECIFIC REASONABLE EXPENSES AGREED TO BY PLAINTIFF AND DEFENDANT.

A. Reimbursement for Costs of Lawsuit. An attorney is entitled to reimbursement for costs of suit such as filing fees and witness fees that the attorney has advanced on behalf of the client (Cooley v. Miller & Lux (1909) 156 Cal. 510, 525-526, 105 P. 981 ; Tasker v. Cochrane (1928) 94 Cal. App. 361, 369, 271 P. 503).

[Optional] B. Reimbursement for Specific Reasonable Expenses Agreed to by Parties. An attorney is entitled to reimbursement for specific expenses incurred during the course of the attorney's employment by a client when attorney and client have agreed that such expenses will be reimbursed (Darnell v. Woodruff (1936) 14 Cal. App. 2d 628, 634, 58 P.2d 975 ; Tasker v. Cochrane (1928) 94 Cal. App. 361, 368-369, 271 P. 503).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of an attorney's contention that he or she is entitled to reimbursement for costs of a lawsuit and any other specific and reasonable expenses agreed on by the attorney and client. This form may be used any time an attorney seeks to enforce a fee agreement and may be used in conjunction with § 25.40 (supporting contention that attorney has valid contractual lien on judgment or recovery), § 25.30 (supporting contention that attorney has valid contractual claim for compensation), or see §§ 25.32 -25.38 (supporting contention that attorney has valid claim for compensation based on reasonable value of services rendered to client). The argument supported by this form may be raised any time the opposing party alleges that the attorney is not entitled to reimbursement for costs of suit advanced by the attorney, or when the parties enter into a fee agreement that provides that the attorney be reimbursed for specific contemplated expenses but the client then refuses to pay for such expenses. The argument would be most likely to arise in support of an attorney's independent action against a client for breach of contract to pay attorney's fees or in an action in quantum meruit to recover the reasonable value of services rendered.

This form may be combined with a form relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the right of an attorney to reimbursement for costs of suit advanced and for other specific and reasonable expenses agreed on by the parties. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the nature and the amount of any costs of suit advanced by the attorney and show that they are normal litigation costs. Counsel should show that the client has been presented with a bill for reimbursement of such costs by the attorney and that the client has refused to pay. If the attorney is claiming reimbursement for specific expenses agreed on by the parties at the onset of the attorney-client relationship, the nature and amount of such expenses and the reason for their incurrence should be shown. Counsel must also show that the attorney and client had an agreement, either express or implied, that such expenses would be reimbursed by the client.

[b] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the memoranda set out in § 25.59 may be used to oppose the contention supported by the memoranda in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Reimbursement for Costs of Lawsuit

In Cooley v. Miller & Lux (1909) 156 Cal. 510, 105 P. 981 , an attorney agreed to represent a group of absent heirs in settling an estate. The fee agreement stated that in exchange for representing the heirs throughout the administration of the estate, the attorney would receive a certain percentage of whatever the heirs received from the estate. The agreement also provided that any partial advance distributions made to the attorney by the probate court on behalf of the absent heirs should be first applied to reimburse the attorney for costs of suit and the balance retained by the attorney and credited to the heirs on final settlement of the estate, as an advance of the attorney's contingent fee. The attorney was reimbursed for his outlays from the advance distributions, but after the final settlement the absent heirs refused to pay his contingent fee from their share of the estate. The attorney's grantee brought an action to recover the interest in the estate from successors in interest of the heirs. After judgment in favor of defendants, plaintiff appealed from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The Supreme Court reversed, finding that plaintiff did have an interest in the estate based on the agreement made between the attorney and the heirs. The Court ordered the case remanded for a new trial to determine the exact nature of plaintiff's interest in the estate. In regard to the outlays made by the attorney during his representation of the heirs, the court noted that in the absence of a special agreement to the contrary, a client is bound to repay his attorney for all outlays made by the attorney in the payment of the expenses of conducting the litigation, not including the attorney's personal and travel expenses (156 Cal. 510, 525-526) .

In Tasker v. Cochrane (1928) 94 Cal. App. 361, 271 P. 503 , the assignee of a law firm brought an action for attorneys' fees and reimbursement of costs of litigation. Defendant refused to pay more than a small portion of the fee and denied responsibility for any of the attorneys' costs. After judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant's motion for a new trial was granted and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the order granting a new trial, finding that the trial court's jury instructions were erroneous in that they failed to make a distinction between the costs of litigation, for which an attorney may be reimbursed, and the personal and travelling expenses of the attorney, which are not reimbursable (94 Cal. App. 361, 366) . The court held that the attorneys were entitled to recover all court costs necessarily incurred (94 Cal. App. 361, 369) .

[b] Reimbursement for Specific Reasonable Expenses Agreed to by Parties

In Darnell v. Woodruff (1936) 14 Cal. App. 2d 628, 58 P.2d 975 , plaintiff attorney, an income tax specialist, was retained by defendant to represent him before the Internal Revenue Service for failure to file income tax returns. Plaintiff had represented defendant in the past on a similar matter, and on that occasion had been reimbursed for his travel, hotel, telephone, and telegram expenses. At the time of the second employment, there was no fee agreement between attorney and client, but the client sent a telegram to the attorney asking him to represent the client in the current matter "as in the past." The attorney made several cross-country trips during the months in which he was putting defendant's financial records in order and negotiating on his behalf with the Internal Revenue Service. During the course of the employment, defendant advanced plaintiff $8,000 to cover his travel and other expenses. Plaintiff was successful in lowering the amount of tax assessed against defendant and in persuading the government not to prosecute defendant for tax fraud or to impose the maximum civil penalties for tax evasion. Defendant then hired another attorney and, utilizing new evidence that had not been available to plaintiff, succeeded in lowering the tax assessment even further. Defendant refused to pay any additional amount to plaintiff, and plaintiff brought an action in quantum meruit for the reasonable value of his services. The trial court found that there was due plaintiff from defendant for services rendered a balance of $24,000, not including the amount already received in advance for hotel and traveling expenses. Defendant appealed the judgment, and in particular complained of the allowance for hotel and travel expenses.

The court of appeal affirmed, finding that the fee awarded plaintiff was reasonable and that the attorney was entitled to be paid for his hotel and travel expenses because plaintiff had been employed to represent defendant as he had done in the past, when hotel and travel expenses had been paid without demur by the client. In the absence of any specific agreement to the contrary, the attorney could reasonably expect to be paid for his expenses in the current matter as he had been in the past (14 Cal. App. 2d 628, 634) .

The facts and procedural background of Tasker v. Cochrane (1928) 94 Cal. App. 361, 271 P. 503 are discussed in § 25.59[3][a]. There, the court of appeal held that jury instructions were erroneous if they failed to include an instruction stating that an attorney's expenses, outside of the normal costs of litigation, can only be recovered when there is a special or express agreement between attorney and client to that effect. The court also found that the trial court was not in error when it refused to give a jury instruction that contracts or agreements between attorneys and clients relative to reimbursement of costs and expenditures are presumptively void. The court held that the attorneys were entitled to recover all court costs necessarily incurred, as well as the reasonable value of all their expenses that were authorized or ratified by the client (94 Cal. App. 361, 368-369) .

§ 25.50 Opposing Contention That Contingent Fees for Medical Malpractice Plaintiff's Attorney Are Limited by Bus. & Prof. Code § 6146--Plaintiff Gave Knowing Consent to Alternative Litigation Strategies

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT IS ENTITLED TO RETAIN ALL THE FEES THUS FAR OBTAINED BECAUSE PLAINTIFF KNOWINGLY CONSENTED TO A CONTINGENT FEE IN EXCESS OF THE AMOUNT SET FORTH IN SECTION 6146 OF THE BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONS CODE AFTER DEFENDANT SPECIFICALLY ADVISED PLAINTIFF OF THE PROS AND CONS OF ALTERNATIVE LITIGATION STRATEGIES, INCLUDING POTENTIAL ATTORNEY'S FEES.

A. Contingency Fee Limitation on Action for Professional Negligence. An attorney may not contract for or collect a contingency fee in excess of statutory limits in an action based on the professional negligence of a health care provider (Bus. & Prof. Code § 6146).

B. Limitation Exclusive to Actions Based on Professional Negligence. Section 6146 of the Business and Professions Code does not limit the fee an attorney may earn on a cause of action based on a theory other than professional negligence, nor does it limit the fee in an action involving multiple causes of action, including one not based on professional negligence (see Waters v. Bourhis (1985) 40 Cal. 3d 424, 436-437, 220 Cal. Rptr. 666, 709 P.2d 469).

C. Knowing Consent as Result of Attorney Disclosure. An attorney may recover fees in excess of those permitted under Section 6146 of the Business and Professions Code after the client knowingly consents to the pursuit of a cause of action based on something other than professional negligence. Knowing consent occurs after the attorney has specifically advised the client of the pros and cons of alternative litigation strategies, including potential attorney's fees, and obtained the client's consent to pursue and settle all causes of action (Waters v. Bourhis (1985) 40 Cal. 3d 424, 438, 220 Cal. Rptr. 666, 709 P.2d 469).

[2] Comments

This form may be used by an attorney to oppose the contention by a client that the attorney has recovered fees in excess of the amount allowed by Bus. & Prof. Code § 6146 in an action for the professional negligence of a health care provider. The argument supported by the foregoing memorandum may be raised when the client brings an independent action against the attorney to recover fees after a settlement, arbitration, or judgment pursuant to which the attorney received funds on behalf of the client, and retained a portion of those funds as attorney's fees [see, e.g., Waters v. Bourhis (1985) 40 Cal. 3d 424, 220 Cal. Rptr. 666, 709 P.2d 469] .

This form may be combined with a form of memorandum relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the client's knowing consent to the litigation strategy and fee arrangement. This argument may arise in opposing a motion for summary judgment [see, e.g., Waters v. Bourhis (1985) 40 Cal. 3d 424, 220 Cal. Rptr. 666, 709 P.2d 469] . This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

In an appropriate case, this form may be used to oppose the contention supported by the memoranda contained in § 25.71.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Limitation Exclusive to Actions Based on Professional Negligence

In Waters v. Bourhis (1985) 40 Cal. 3d 424, 220 Cal. Rptr. 666, 709 P.2d 469 , plaintiff patient alleged that her psychiatrist had entered into a sexual relationship with her and brought an action for damages against him. After the psychiatrist's insurer settled the case without admitting liability, plaintiff brought an action against the attorney who had represented her in that suit, alleging that his contingency fee exceeded the maximum fee permitted by Bus. & Prof. Code § 6146. The trial court granted defendant attorney's motion for summary judgment. Plaintiff appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed, based on the uncertainty of plaintiff's consent. The Court explained that Bus. & Prof. Code § 6146 limitations on attorney's fees do not apply to all types of actions against health care providers. Bus. & Prof. Code § 6146 is part of the Medical Injury Compensation Reform Act of 1975 (MICRA) and only applies to actions based on the provider's professional negligence. Defendant contended that the recovery was based on the psychiatrist's intentional misconduct engaged in for personal, rather than professional, motives, and that it was not within the scope of MICRA professional negligence. The Court disagreed, saying that the complaint was based on both professional negligence and intentional tortious conduct; it noted that "professional negligence" within the meaning of Bus. & Prof. Code § 6146 may include conduct that is an intentional departure from professional standards and the same conduct may support an action for professional negligence under MICRA and an action for an intentional tort (40 Cal. 3d 424, 433-435) . There is nothing in Bus. & Prof. Code § 6146 that purports to limit the fee an attorney may earn outside of the MICRA context, and when MICRA and non-MICRA causes of action are properly joined in one proceeding there is no basis for limiting the fee that an attorney may permissibly obtain for successfully litigating the non-MICRA claim. When a plaintiff pursues and recovers on a non-MICRA cause of action, the fee limits should not apply, even if plaintiff at the same time also succeeds on a separate MICRA cause of action. The Court noted the difficulty of determining the influence of the non-MICRA cause of action when a MICRA action is also involved, and concluded that when a plaintiff knowingly chooses to proceed on both non-MICRA and MICRA causes of action, and obtains a recovery that may be based on a non-MICRA theory, the limitations of Bus. & Prof. Code § 6146 should not apply (40 Cal. 3d 424, 436-437) . However, the ability of the attorney to recover fees in excess of those permitted under Bus. & Prof. Code § 6146 requires the client to knowingly consent to the pursuit of a non-MICRA cause of action. Because the amount of a client's attorney's fees may be affected by whether an action is pursued on a MICRA or non-MICRA basis and because there may be a potential conflict of interest between the attorney and client on this matter, an attorney who seeks to collect a larger fee than that authorized by Bus. & Prof. Code § 6146 must specifically advise the client or potential client of the pros and cons of alternative litigation strategies, including potential attorney's fees, and obtain the client's consent to pursue and settle a non-MICRA action as well as a MICRA claim (40 Cal. 3d 424, 438) .

[b] Knowing Consent as Result of Attorney Disclosure

Waters v. Bourhis (1985) 40 Cal. 3d 424, 220 Cal. Rptr. 666, 709 P.2d 469 is discussed in § 25.50[3][a].

§ 25.51 Opposing Contention That Attorney Has Valid Contractual Claim for Compensation--Attorney Has Not Performed Under Terms of Contract

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT IS NOT REQUIRED TO PAY THE ATTORNEY'S FEE SPECIFIED IN THE CONTRACT ENTERED INTO BY PLAINTIFF AND DEFENDANT BECAUSE PLAINTIFF HAS NOT PERFORMED UNDER THE TERMS OF THE CONTRACT.

Attorney Has Not Performed Under Terms of Contract. An attorney who has not performed under the terms of the employment contract is not entitled to the specified contract fee, but only the reasonable value of any services rendered (see Abbott v. Hauschild (1952) 113 Cal. App. 2d 383, 388-389, 248 P.2d 41 ; Brydonjack v. Rieck (1935) 5 Cal. App. 2d 219, 224, 42 P.2d 336).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used by a client to oppose the contention that an attorney has a valid contractual claim for compensation on the ground that the attorney has not performed under the terms of the contract and is therefore entitled only to the reasonable value of any services rendered.

Counsel may wish to refer to additional memoranda for use in actions for breach of contract, which are found in Ch. 50, Contracts . If the interpretation of the contract terms is at issue, counsel may use this form in conjunction with § 25.70 (supporting contention that attorney-client employment contract drafted by attorney is construed in favor of client). The argument supported by this memorandum would be most likely to arise in support of a client's defense against an attorney's action to collect a stipulated contractual fee, or in support of a client's independent action brought to prevent an attorney from asserting a lien on any judgement or recovery in favor of the client or on money or property of the client in the attorney's possession that the attorney alleges is due him or her in satisfaction of attorney's fees.

This form may be combined with a form of memorandum relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the attorney's failure to perform under the terms of the contract. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Attorney Has Not Performed Under Terms of Contract

In Abbott v. Hauschild (1952) 113 Cal. App. 2d 383, 248 P.2d 41 , an attorney was retained by a client for the purpose of recovering real property that was threatened with foreclosure. The client agreed in writing that if the attorney brought "a proper action" to get the property back he would pay him 50 percent of any money realized from the sale of the property, assign him a one-half interest in the property, and pay him a reasonable fee for getting the property back from the client's wife, who was a joint tenant. The attorney filed an action to quiet title against the mortgagee of the property and the wife, but the complaint was never served on the wife, whose claim against the property was the reason for the litigation. The mortgagee demurred to the complaint, and the attorney failed to appear on the hearing of the demurrer. After being notified that he had 20 days to amend his complaint, the attorney failed to amend and the demurrer was then sustained without leave to amend. The client discharged the attorney and refused to pay his fee. The attorney then brought actions for breach of contract and to quiet title in himself to an asserted one-half interest in the client's real property and to enforce an attorney's lien on one half the proceeds of the sale of the property. The trial court ruled that the attorney was not entitled to any interest in the client's property but could recover $150 as reasonable attorney's fees, and the attorney appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, finding that the plaintiff had failed to show that he had performed the duties required of him under the purported agreement. The terms of the contract were ambiguous in that it was unclear what would constitute a proper action and whether the client was to pay a 50 percent contingent fee in addition to a reasonable fee. If the client was to pay 50 percent of any money remaining after a foreclosure sale in addition to a reasonable fee, as argued by plaintiff, there would be virtually nothing left for the client. The court stated that any ambiguity in the contract should be construed against the attorney, but that in any event the award of $150 was not inadequate for the very limited services performed by plaintiff (113 Cal. App. 2d 383, 388) .

In Brydonjack v. Rieck (1935) 5 Cal. App. 2d 219, 42 P.2d 336 , the client signed a letter prepared by an attorney that stated that the attorney was retained as the client's chief counsel for one year in exchange for a retainer fee of $3,500 and $150 monthly salary. The client was incapable of attending to her affairs, and the attorney promised to represent her in her father's estate, get money due the client from her former husband and others, and straighten out a situation relating to some real property owned by the client. The only legal services performed by the attorney for the client were a trip to see the real property and a two-hour conference with the client in his office. Four months later, after paying $2,300 to the attorney, the client sent him a letter cancelling the contract and stating that the amount paid to him was more than sufficient compensation for his services rendered to date. The attorney waited until the end of one year and then filed suit on the contract, alleging that a balance of $3,000 was due. The trial court found for defendant, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, finding that the contract was presumptively invalid because the attorney-client relationship had existed prior to the execution of the formal retainer contract (5 Cal. App. 2d 219, 223) . To overcome the presumption, the attorney had the burden of showing that the contract was fair and equitable and that the client was fully informed of all matters relating to the transaction. The court found that he failed to meet his burden since he was able to show only that the contract was executed (5 Cal. App. 2d 219, 223) . The client was justified in terminating the contract because there was a complete failure of consideration and utter failure on the part of the attorney to perform any of the terms of the contract (5 Cal. App. 2d 219, 224) .

2A-25 California Points & Authorities § 25.52

§ 25.52 Opposing Contention That Attorney Has Valid Contractual Claim for Compensation--Fees Were Incurred for Work Performed in California by Attorney or Firm Not Licensed to Practice Law in California [Bus. & Prof. Code § 6125]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief and may be combined with a general form of memorandum opposing the contention that defendant is liable under a contract for attorney fees (see, e.g., § 25.30)].

DEFENDANT IS NOT REQUIRED TO PAY THE ATTORNEY'S FEE SPECIFIED IN THE CONTRACT ENTERED INTO BY PLAINTIFF AND DEFENDANT BECAUSE PLAINTIFF PERFORMED WORK IN CALIFORNIA BUT WAS NOT LICENSED TO PRACTICE LAW IN CALIFORNIA WHILE PERFORMING THAT WORK.

An Out-of-State Law Firm or Attorney Not Licensed to Practice Law in California May Not Recover Contractual Attorney's Fees for Performing Legal Services in California. An out-of-state law firm or attorney, who is not licensed to practice law in California, violates Bus. & Prof. Code § 6125 when performing legal services in California. Thus, to the extent that a fee agreement between the out-of-state law firm or attorney authorizes compensation for legal services performed in California, it is invalid and unenforceable (Birbrower, Montalbano, Condon & Frank v. Superior Court of Santa Clara County (ESQ Business Services) (1998) 17 Cal. 4th 119, 70 Cal. Rptr. 2d 304, 949 P.2d 1).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to the contention that an out-of-state attorney or law firm has a valid contractual claim for compensation for legal services performed in California under a contract entered into by the attorney or law firm and the client, on the ground that the attorney or law firm was not licensed to practice law in California at the time the legal services were rendered, in violation of Bus. & Prof. Code § 6125. This argument may arise in any of several procedural situations. For example, it may be made in support of a demurrer, or a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication.

This form may be adapted to oppose the contention that an attorney has a claim for compensation for the reasonable value of services rendered under a contract that is partially invalid when the attorney rendered some services that were not compensable because of the attorney's violation of Bus. & Prof. Code § 6125, but some services that were compensable because they were rendered out-of-state and did not constitute unauthorized practice of law in California [see § 25.38].

This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should discuss evidence pointing to defendant's failure to be licensed to practice law in California or to associate California counsel at the time of performing legal services in California.

[c] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the memoranda set out in § 25.30 or 25.38 may be used to oppose the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] "Practicing Law" in California

In Birbrower, Montalbano, Condon & Frank v. Superior Court of Santa Clara County (ESQ Business Services, Inc.) (1998) 17 Cal. 4th 119, 70 Cal. Rptr. 2d 304, 949 P.2d 1 , attorneys from a New York law firm performed legal services in California and New York relating to the firm's representation of a California corporation under a contingency fee agreement. None of the attorneys in the firm was licensed to practice law in California during the firm's representation of the California client. The fee agreement covered all matters pertaining to the investigation and prosecution of all claims and causes of action against another corporation related to a software development and marketing contract between the two corporations, which was governed by California law. In the course of the representation, the attorneys traveled to California several times to meet with the client and with representatives of the other corporation. The matter eventually settled. After settlement, the client sued the firm for legal malpractice and related claims, including causes of action seeking declaratory relief as to the validity of the fee agreement. The law firm counterclaimed for attorney's fees for work performed in California and New York under the agreement and, alternatively, for quantum meruit for the reasonable value of legal services provided. The trial court granted the client's motion for summary adjudication on its causes of action based on the fee agreement and on the counterclaim on the ground that by practicing law without a license in California and failing to associate California counsel while doing so, the law firm violated Bus. & Prof. Code § 6125, which rendered the fee agreement unenforceable. The trial court left open the firm's claim for quantum meruit and opined that it believed that the firm was only precluded from collecting in California the fees generated by virtue of work performed in California and not work performed in New York.

The California Supreme Court affirmed the trial court and held that because the firm practiced "substantial law" in California in violation of Bus. & Prof. Code § 6125, it could not receive compensation under the fee agreement for any services performed in California. Although previous cases had defined "practice law" within the meaning of Bus. & Prof. Code § 6125, Birbrower presented a case of first impression on the meaning of "in California." Mere fortuitous or attenuated contacts do not constitute the practice of law in California; however, sufficient contact with a California client by an out-of-state law firm or attorney to render the nature of the legal service a clear legal representation does constitute practicing law in California within the meaning of Bus. & Prof. Code § 6125. The primary question is whether the unlicensed attorney engaged in sufficient activities in California or created a continuing relationship with a California client that included legal duties and obligations. Physical presence in California is only one factor to consider in determining a violation of Bus. & Prof. Code § 6125; the determination does not necessarily depend on or require physical presence. One may practice law in California without being physically present by advising a California client on California law in connection with a California legal dispute by telephone, fax, computer or other modern technological means. On the other hand, the Court declined to find that a person automatically practices law in California whenever that person practices California law anywhere or "virtually" enters California by technological means. Each case must be decided on its individual facts. Exceptions to Bus. & Prof. Code § 6125 are narrowly drawn and strictly interpreted and generally limited to allowing out-of-state attorneys to make brief appearances before a state court or tribunal. In this case, the firm's in-state activities clearly constituted unauthorized law practice in California, which fell under none of the exceptions (17 Cal. 4th 119, 135, 140) .

However, the Court held that the fee agreement was enforceable to the extent it was possible to sever the portions of the consideration attributable to services illegally rendered in California from those attributable to New York services and that the firm could recover fees under the agreement for the limited legal services performed in New York to the extent they did not constitute practicing law in California, even though the services were performed for a California client. Although the fee agreement became illegal when the firm performed legal services in violation of Bus. & Prof. Code § 6125, the law of contract severability [Civ. Code § 1599] allows courts to enforce the valid parts of contracts that are only partially void when the contract has several distinct objects, of which one at least is lawful. The object of the fee agreement in this case may not have been entirely illegal, assuming the client was to pay compensation based in part on work the firm performed in New York that did not amount to the practice of law in California (17 Cal. 4th 119, 140) .

In citing Birbrower as authority, attorneys should be aware of a court of appeal case, decided shortly after Birbrower, that applies and further clarifies the holding in Birbrower. The facts and procedural background of Estate of Condon (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 1138, 76 Cal. Rptr. 2d 922 , are discussed in § 25.30, under [3], Legal Services Performed by Attorney or Firm Not Licensed in California. There the court held that, in a probate matter, where a Colorado lawyer, not licensed in California, provided legal services to a Colorado client regarding California law, the lawyer was not "practicing law" in California for purposes of Bus. & Prof. Code § 6125 and was entitled to attorney's fees regardless of the lawyer's physical or virtual presence in California relating to the matter (65 Cal. App. 4th 1138, 1148) .

2A-25 California Points & Authorities § 25.53

§ 25.53 Opposing Contention That Attorney Has Valid Claim for Compensation Based on Contingent Fee Contract--Failure to Comply With Bus. & Prof. Code § 6147(a)

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF IS NOT ENTITLED TO THE CONTINGENT FEE STATED IN THE EMPLOYMENT CONTRACT BETWEEN PLAINTIFF AND DEFENDANT BECAUSE OF FAILURE TO COMPLY WITH BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONS CODE SECTION 6147(a) AND IS ENTITLED ONLY TO THE REASONABLE VALUE OF SERVICES RENDERED ON BEHALF OF DEFENDANT.

A. Contract Voidable for Failure to Comply With Statute. A contingent fee contract that does not comply with Business and Professions Code Section 6147 is voidable at the client's option, and the attorney is entitled to collect only a reasonable fee (Bus. & Prof. Code § 6147(b); Alderman v. Hamilton (1988) 205 Cal. App. 3d 1033, 1038, 252 Cal. Rptr. 845).

[EITHER]

B. Writing Requirement. A contingent fee contract between an attorney and his or her client shall be in writing (Bus. & Prof. Code § 6147(a)).

[AND/OR]

C. Copy of Contract. An attorney who contracts to represent a client on a contingency fee basis shall, at the time the contract is entered into, provide a duplicate copy of the contract, signed by both the attorney and the client, or the client's guardian or representative, to the client, or to the client's guardian or representative (Bus. & Prof. Code § 6147(a)).

[AND/OR]

D. Contingency Fee Rate. A contingent fee contract shall include a statement of the contingency fee rate that the attorney and client have agreed on (Bus. & Prof. Code § 6147(a)(1)).

[AND/OR]

E. Effect of Disbursements and Costs. A contingent fee contract must include a statement explaining how disbursements and costs incurred in connection with the prosecution or settlement of the claim will affect the contingency fee and the client's recovery (Bus. & Prof. Code § 6147(a)(2); Alderman v. Hamilton (1988) 205 Cal. App. 3d 1033, 1038, 252 Cal. Rptr. 845).

[AND/OR]

F. Payment for Related Matters Not Covered by Contract. A contingent fee contract must include a statement as to what extent, if any, the client could be required to pay any compensation to the attorney for related matters that arise out of the attorney-client relationship and that are not covered by their contingency fee contract. This may include any amounts collected for the client by the attorney (Bus. & Prof. Code § 6147(a)(3); Alderman v. Hamilton (1988) 205 Cal. App. 3d 1033, 1038, 252 Cal. Rptr. 845).

[AND/OR]

G. Negotiable Fee. Unless the claim is subject to Business and Professions Code Section 6146, a contingent fee contract must include a statement that the fee is not set by law but is negotiable between attorney and client (Bus. & Prof. Code § 6147(a)(4); Alderman v. Hamilton (1988) 205 Cal. App. 3d 1033, 1038, 252 Cal. Rptr. 845).

[AND/OR]

H. Medical Malpractice Claim. If the claim is subject to Business and Professions Code Section 6146, the contingent fee contract must include a statement that the rates set forth in that section are the maximum limits for the contingent fee agreement, and that the attorney and client may negotiate a lower rate (Bus. & Prof. Code § 6147(a)(5)).

[AND/OR]

I. Statement of Errors and Omissions Coverage or Written Guarantee Agreement. An attorney who (1) does not maintain errors and omissions insurance coverage, (2) has not filed with the State Bar an executed copy of a written agreement guaranteeing payment of all claims established against the attorney by his or her clients for errors or omissions arising out of the practice of law by the attorney in the amount specified in State Bar Law Corp. Rules, Rule IV(B)(1)(c), or (3) if a law corporation, has not filed with the State Bar an executed copy of the written agreement required pursuant to State Bar Law Corp. Rules, Rule IV(B)(1)(a), (b), or (c) must disclose that fact in the contingent fee contract (Bus. & Prof. Code § 6147(a)(6)).

[AND/OR]

J. Modifications. Modifications to a contingency fee contract must comply with Bus. & Prof. Code § 6147 [Stroud v. Tunzi (2008) 160 Cal. App. 4th 377, 382-383, 72 Cal. Rptr. 3d 756].

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used by a client to oppose the contention that an attorney is entitled to the contingent fee stipulated in the attorney-client employment contract on the ground that there is failure to comply with Bus. & Prof. Code § 6147(a), and that the attorney is therefore entitled to only the reasonable value of services rendered. Bus. & Prof. Code § 6147 does not apply to contingent fee contracts for the recovery of workers' compensation benefits [Bus. & Prof. Code § 6147(c)]. The argument supported by this form may be raised any time the contingent fee contract does not comply with the statutory requirements and the client opts to treat the contract as voidable and pay the attorney only the reasonable value of services rendered. The argument would be most likely to arise in defense to an attorney's independent action against the client to recover for breach of a contingent fee contract.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the terms of the contingent fee contract between the client and attorney to show the manner in which the contract does not meet the statutory requirements. If the client alleges that any of the required statements in the contract are misleading or deficient in any way, counsel should discuss the statements and show how they are misleading or deficient. If the client alleges that the attorney failed to explain or fully explain the significance of the required statements, or that the attorney deliberately misled the client regarding the significance or meaning of the required statements, counsel should discuss the manner in which this occurred. Counsel should discuss the nature of the services performed by the attorney and the reasonable value of those services. If the client has offered to pay the attorney a reasonable fee, and the attorney has refused to accept a reasonable fee in lieu of the contingent fee, counsel should so indicate.

This form may be combined with a memorandum relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the voidability of a contingent fee contract for failure to comply with Bus. & Prof. Code § 6147(a). This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

In an appropriate case, the memoranda set out in this may be used to oppose the contentions in §§ 25.30, 25.31, and 25.40.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Contract Voidable for Failure to Comply With Statute

The contract is required to be in writing, and must contain all of the elements listed in Bus. & Prof. Code § 6147(a). Failure to comply with the statutory provisions renders the contingent fee contract voidable at the option of the client, and the attorney is then entitled to a reasonable fee for services rendered [Bus. & Prof. Code § 6147(b)]. The statute does not apply to contingent fee contracts for the recovery of workers' compensation benefits [Bus. & Prof. Code § 6147(c)].

In Alderman v. Hamilton (1988) 205 Cal. App. 3d 1033, 252 Cal. Rptr. 845 , plaintiff attorney sued client defendants, alleging that the defendants breached a contingent attorney fee agreement. The parties disputed plaintiff's entitlement to compensation for services relating to the sale of certain joint tenancy property. Plaintiff argued that he was entitled under the fee agreement to a percentage of the net proceeds received on the sale of the joint tenancy property. Defendants claimed that the fee agreement was unenforceable, and that it owed plaintiff no moneys from the sale of the joint tenancy property. The trial court held that the defendants only owed plaintiff a reasonable fee based on the work plaintiff expended on the joint tenancy property, rather than a percentage of the proceeds of the sale. Plaintiff appealed from the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed. It found that the fee agreement relied on by plaintiff did not meet all the statutory requirements of Bus. & Prof. Code § 6147. Even though the agreement contained many of the statutory requirements, it was not complete. The agreement did not include a statement of how disbursements would affect the contingency fee, it did not discuss related matters, and it did not state that the fee was negotiable. Thus, defendants had an absolute right to void the contract provision regarding the joint tenancy property (205 Cal. App. 3d 1033, 1037-1038) .

[b] Effect of Disbursements and Costs

The facts and procedural background of Alderman v. Hamilton (1988) 205 Cal. App 3d 1033, 252 Cal. Rptr. 845 are discussed in § 25.54[3][a]. In that case, the appellate court upheld a trial court judgment entitling plaintiff attorney to a reasonable fee, rather than a contingent fee, for work expended for his clients, because the purported contingent fee agreement did not include, among other items required by statute, a statement of how disbursements would affect the contingency fee (205 Cal. App 3d 1033, 1038) .

[c] Payment for Related Matters Not Covered by Contract

The facts and procedural background of Alderman v. Hamilton (1988) 205 Cal. App 3d 1033, 252 Cal. Rptr. 845 are discussed in § 25.54[3][a]. In that case, the appellate court upheld a trial court judgment entitling plaintiff attorney to a reasonable fee, rather than a contingent fee, for work expended for his clients, because the purported contingent fee agreement did not include, among other items required by statute, a statement of the extent to which, if any, the clients could be required to pay any compensation to their attorney for related matters arising out of the attorney-client relationship not covered by the contingent fee contract (205 Cal. App 3d 1033, 1038) .

[d] Negotiable Fee

The facts and procedural background of Alderman v. Hamilton (1988) 205 Cal. App 3d 1033, 252 Cal. Rptr. 845 are discussed in § 25.54[3][a]. In that case, the appellate court upheld a trial court judgment entitling plaintiff attorney to a reasonable fee, rather than a contingent fee, for work expended for his clients, because the purported contingent fee agreement did not include, among other items required by statute, a statement that the fee was negotiable (205 Cal. App 3d 1033, 1038) .

[e] Statement of Errors and Omissions Coverage or Written Guarantee Agreement

Bus. & Prof. Code § 6147(a)(6) is repealed on January 1, 1997, unless the Legislature extends or deletes that date [Bus. & Prof. Code § 6147(d); Stats. 1993, ch. 982, §§ 4, 5].

[f] Modifications

In Stroud v. Tunzi (2008) 160 Cal. App. 4th 377, 382-383, 72 Cal. Rptr. 3d 756 , the defendant had sued his former employer and hired the plaintiff attorneys to represent him in his lawsuit. The defendant signed a contingency fee agreement with the plaintiffs, agreeing to pay them a flat fee of $75,000 if the lawsuit settled before trial and 40 percent of any recovery if the matter went to trial. Before going to trial, he settled his lawsuit for $600,000. Prior to the settlement, the defendant had signed a handwritten document that stated: "I, Dominick Tunzi, agree to pay Stroud & Do $300,000 out of my settlement of $600,000 ...". The plaintiffs sued and moved for summary adjudication, arguing that the handwritten document modified the original contingency fee agreement and entitled them to $300,000. The defendant opposed summary adjudication, arguing the handwritten memo did not modify the original contingency fee agreement because it did not comply with the Bus. & Prof. Code § 6147 governing contingency fee agreements between an attorney and client. The trial court denied the motion.

The court of appeal agreed and held the modification was invalid. The court held that modifications to a contingency fee agreement must comply with Bus. & Prof. Code § 6147. Specifically, the modification must be signed by the attorney, state the contingency rate, discuss costs, and disclose that the attorney's fees were negotiable and not established by law [160 Cal. App. 4th 377, 382].

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF IS NOT ENTITLED TO THE FEE STATED IN THE EMPLOYMENT CONTRACT BETWEEN PLAINTIFF AND DEFENDANT BECAUSE OF FAILURE TO COMPLY WITH THE PROVISIONS OF BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONS CODE SECTION 6148 AND IS ENTITLED TO COLLECT ONLY A REASONABLE FEE FOR SERVICES RENDERED ON BEHALF OF DEFENDANT.

A. Contract Voidable for Failure to Comply With Statute. A fee contract that does not comply with Business and Professions Code Section _____ [6148(a) or 6148(b) or 6148(c)] is voidable at the option of the client, and the attorney is entitled to collect only a reasonable fee (Bus. & Prof. Code § 6148(c); Iverson, Yoakum, Papiano & Hatch v. Berwald (1999) 76 Cal. App. 4th 990, 995-997, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 665).

[EITHER]

B. Contract Must Be in Writing. In any case not coming under Business and Professions Code Section 6147 (contingency fee contract) in which it is reasonably foreseeable that the total expense to a client, including attorney's fees, will exceed $1,000, the contract for services in the case must be in writing (Bus. & Prof. Code § 6148(a)).

[AND/OR]

C. Contents of Contract. In any case not coming under Business and Professions Code Section 6147 (contingency fee contract) in which it is reasonably foreseeable that the total expense to a client, including attorney's fees, will exceed $1,000, the contract for services in the case must contain (1) any basis of compensation, including, but not limited to, hourly rates, statutory fees or flat fees, and other standard rates, fees, and charges applicable to the case, (2) the general nature of the legal services to be provided to the client, (3) the respective responsibilities of the attorney and the client as to the performance of the contract, and, if applicable, (4) a statement disclosing that the attorney (a) does not maintain errors and omissions insurance coverage, (b) has not filed with the State Bar an executed copy of a written agreement guaranteeing payment of all claims established against the attorney by his or her clients for errors or omissions arising out of the practice of law by the attorney in the amount specified in State Bar Law Corp. Rules, Rule IV(B)(1)(a), (b), or (c) (Bus. & Prof. Code § 6148(a)).

[AND/OR]

D. Bills for Services. All bills rendered by an attorney to a client must clearly state the basis thereof. [Bills for the fee portion of the bill must include the amount, rate, basis for calculation, or other method of determination of the attorney's fees and costs]. [Bills for the cost and expense portion of the bill must clearly identify the costs and expenses incurred and the amount of the costs and expenses.] [On request by the client, the attorney must provide a bill to the client no later than 10 days following the request unless the attorney has provided a bill to the client within 31 days following the date the most recent bill was provided.] [The client is entitled to make similar requests at intervals of no less than 30 days following the initial request] (Bus. & Prof. Code § 6148(b), (e)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used by a client to oppose the contention that an attorney is entitled to the fee stipulated in a noncontingency fee attorney-client employment contract, on the ground that the contract or attorney failed to comply with Bus. & Prof. Code § 6148(a) or (b), and that the attorney is therefore entitled to collect only a reasonable fee for services rendered. However, counsel should note that Bus. & Prof. Code § 6148 only applies to those contracts entered into on or after January 1, 1987 [Bus. & Prof. Code § 6148(e)]. The statutory requirements also do not apply to certain fee contracts, as discussed in § 25.30[3][c].

The argument supported by this form may be raised any time the fee contract does not comply with the statutory requirements, and the client opts to treat the contract as voidable and pay the attorney only a reasonable fee for services rendered. The argument would be most likely to arise in defense to an attorney's independent action against the client to recover for breach of a fee contract.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the terms of the noncontingency fee contract between the client and attorney to show the manner in which the contract does not meet the statutory requirements. Counsel should discuss the nature of the services performed by the attorney and the reasonable value of those services. If the client has offered to pay the attorney a reasonable fee, and the attorney has refused to accept a reasonable fee in lieu of the stated contract fee, counsel should so indicate.

This form may be combined with a form of memorandum relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the voidability of a contingent fee contract for failure to comply with Bus. & Prof. Code § 6148(a) or (b). The memoranda may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

§ 25.53 should be used instead of this form if the fee contract is a contingent fee contract.

In an appropriate case, the memoranda set out in this form may be used to oppose the contentions in § 25.30.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Contract Voidable for Failure to Comply With Statute

In Iverson, Yoakum, Papiano & Hatch v. Berwald (1999) 76 Cal. App. 4th 990, 995, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 665 , plaintiff law firm sued former clients for fees. Plaintiff had represented defendant in suits from July 1988 to May 1992. In May, 1992, plaintiff prepared, and one of the defendants signed, a promissory note for payment of the outstanding fees. However, in all three places on the note where the balance amount was stated, this figure was crossed out and initialed by the defendant signatory, who noted under his signature on the note that the amount was incorrect and did not reflect reductions due to billing errors. Under the terms of the note, defendants agreed to make installment payments on the balance until it was paid in full. Defendants made several installment payments until January 1995. In April 1997 plaintiff notified defendants in writing that they still owed a balance of $45,477, and also sent them a notice of their right to arbitrate the fee dispute. In May 1998, plaintiff filed a verified complaint alleging two common counts: one for damages for services rendered, and the other for an account stated. Both counts alleged a balance owing or an indebtedness of $44,890. Defendants demurred to the complaint on the ground that the plaintiff's failure to allege a valid written fee agreement under Bus. & Prof. Code § 6148(a) barred plaintiff from collecting fees under a contract theory. Plaintiff was entitled to recover only under claims for common counts, which claims were barred in turn by lapse of the applicable statutory period of limitation that began to run in 1992. Defendants argued that the promissory note, attached as an exhibit to the complaint, did not constitute a written agreement and could not be the basis of a common count for account stated. The note revealed on its face that there was no definite amount agreed upon in that the stated amount typed by plaintiff were crossed out by the defendant signatory and no other amount appeared on the note in its place. Plaintiff argued that the common counts were based on the promissory note, not a fee agreement, and that by signing the note defendants waived any right to complain about noncompliance with Bus. & Prof. Code § 6148. Moreover, a four-year limitation period applicable to the note did not begin to run until the date of the last of the last installment payment made in 1995, and this period therefore had not lapsed before the filing of the complaint. The trial court sustained the demurrer and entered a dismissal, and plaintiff appealed (76 Cal. App. 4th 990, 992-994) .

The court of appeal affirmed. The court concluded that the promissory note, as a matter of law, did not comply with Bus. & Prof. Code § 6148, were voidable, and had been voided by the client. Plaintiff's only resulting claim, based on quantum meruit for service rendered, was barred the applicable two-year period of limitation (76 Cal. App. 4th 990, 996-997) .

[b] Contents of Contract

Bus. & Prof. Code § 6148(a)(4), regarding the statement about the lack of errors and omissions coverage or a filed guarantee agreement, is repealed on January 1, 1997, unless the Legislature extends or deletes that date [Bus. & Prof. Code § 6148(f); Stats. 1993, ch. 982, §§ 5.5, 6].

§ 25.55 Opposing Contention That Discharged Attorney Entitled to Reasonable Value of Services Rendered Under Contingent Fee Contract--Stated Contingency Has Not Occurred

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF IS NOT ENTITLED TO THE REASONABLE VALUE OF ANY SERVICES RENDERED UNDER THE CONTINGENT FEE CONTRACT BETWEEN PLAINTIFF AND DEFENDANT BECAUSE PLAINTIFF HAS BEEN DISCHARGED AND THE CONTINGENCY STATED IN THE CONTRACT HAS NOT OCCURRED.

Stated Contingency Has Not Occurred. When an attorney is discharged under a contingent fee contract, his or her cause of action for reasonable compensation does not accrue until the stated contingency, the client's recovery by either settlement or judgment, has occurred (Fracasse v. Brent (1972) 6 Cal. 3d 784, 792, 100 Cal. Rptr. 385, 494 P.2d 9 ; Bandy v. Mt. Diablo Unified Sch. Dist. (1976) 56 Cal. App. 3d 230, 234, 126 Cal. Rptr. 890).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used by a client to oppose the contention that a discharged attorney is entitled to the reasonable value of services rendered under a contingent fee contract on the ground that the stated contingency has not occurred. The argument supported by the form may be raised any time the client has discharged an attorney under a contingent fee contract, the stated contingency has not occurred, and the attorney alleges that he or she has a cause of action for the reasonable value of services performed up to the time of discharge. The argument would be most likely to arise in defense to an attorney's independent action against the client to recover in quantum meruit.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the terms of the contingent fee agreement between the client and attorney and state the nature of the contingencies. Counsel may wish to discuss the reasons for the attorney's discharge by the client and should state the date of discharge and the manner in which the client notified the attorney of the discharge. Counsel should indicate that the stated contingencies have not yet occurred, through no fault of the client, in order to show that the attorney's cause of action for reasonable compensation has not accrued.

This form may be combined with a form of memorandum relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the prematurity of a discharged attorney's cause of action for reasonable compensation under a contingent fee agreement when the stated contingency has not occurred. The memoranda may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the memoranda set out in § 25.34 may be used to oppose the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Stated Contingency Has Not Occurred

The facts and procedural background of Fracasse v. Brent (1972) 6 Cal. 3d 784, 100 Cal. Rptr. 385, 494 P.2d 9 are discussed in § 25.34[3][a]. In Fracasse, the Supreme Court held that a client has the absolute right to discharge an attorney at any time with or without cause (6 Cal. 3d 784, 790), and that the attorney is entitled to recover the reasonable value of services rendered up to the time of discharge (6 Cal. 3d 784, 792). However, in the case of a contingent fee contract, the attorney's cause of action for reasonable compensation accrues only when the stated contingency, the client's recovery by either settlement or judgment, has occurred (6 Cal. 3d 784, 792). One of the significant factors in determining the reasonableness of an attorney's fee is the amount involved and the result obtained, and thus any determination of the amount involved is highly speculative, and any determination of the result obtained is impossible until the matter has finally been resolved. The Court also stated that it would be improper to burden the client with an absolute obligation to pay a former attorney regardless of the outcome of litigation, especially when the client may no longer have trust and confidence in the discharged attorney, and that the attorney will be denied compensation if the client does not obtain a recovery (6 Cal. 3d 784, 792).

In Bandy v. Mt. Diablo Unified Sch. Dist. (1976) 56 Cal. App. 3d 230, 126 Cal. Rptr. 890 , an attorney was employed to prosecute three separate personal injury claims on behalf of several clients. The attorney and clients entered into a contingent fee contract providing the attorney with a lien on any recovery for fees and costs advanced. The clients subsequently discharged the attorney, while the cases were still pending. The attorney then filed a motion in each of the actions for a lien for attorney's fees and costs. The trial court granted the attorney a lien for reasonable attorney's fees and costs advanced in stated amounts in each of the actions. The clients' motion to vacate the court's orders was denied and the clients appealed.

The court of appeal found that the attorney did have a valid contractual lien on any recovery, but that the orders granting the liens were premature because the contingency stated in the contract, recovery by the client, had not occurred (56 Cal. App. 3d 230, 234) . The court stated that the significant factors in determining the reasonableness of an attorney's fee are the amount involved and the result obtained and that these factors cannot be ascertained until the matter has been finally resolved (56 Cal. App. 3d 230, 233-234) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Stated Contingency Has Not Occurred

In Kroff v. Larson (1985) 167 Cal. App. 3d 857, 213 Cal. Rptr. 526 , defendants retained plaintiff attorney to represent them in a personal injury action. The arrangement provided for a percentage attorney fee and the reimbursement of costs advanced by the attorney, contingent on recovery by the clients. Plaintiff filed a lawsuit, but before any recovery was obtained, was discharged by defendants. Plaintiff wrote defendants seeking reimbursement for costs advanced. After defendant failed to pay, plaintiff filed a suit to collect attorney fees and costs. The trial court sustained defendants' general demurrer and the court of appeal affirmed. An attorney discharged by a client without cause has a quantum meruit cause of action for the reasonable value of services rendered to the date of discharge. That cause of action does not accrue until recovery by the client either by settlement or judgment. The court refuted plaintiff's attempt to distinguish an action for costs from case law pertaining to attorney fees. The obligation to reimburse the attorney for costs advanced matures, if at all, only on the occurrence of the agreed contingency, recovery by the client. Plaintiff's action was premature (167 Cal. App. 3d 857, 860-861) .

The Court of Appeals in Jalali v. Root (2003) 109 Cal. App. 4th 624, 633-634, 135 Cal. Rptr. 2d 168 held that, regardless of the work done, only in the event of the contingency contemplated would a discharged attorney have a right to quantum meruit recovery. Citing to Justice Sullivan's dissent in Fracasse v. Brent (1972) 6 Cal. 3d 784, 100 Cal. Rptr. 385, 494 P.2d 9 , the Court interpreted this to mean that a client has the power to "stiff" attorneys working under contingency fee contracts.

PLAINTIFF IS NOT ENTITLED TO THE REASONABLE VALUE OF ANY SERVICES RENDERED UNDER THE CONTINGENT-FEE CONTRACT BETWEEN PLAINTIFF AND DEFENDANT, BECAUSE PLAINTIFF VOLUNTARILY ABANDONED DEFENDANT'S CASE WITHOUT JUSTIFIABLE CAUSE.

Attorney Voluntarily Abandoned Case Without Justifiable Cause. An attorney who voluntarily abandons employment under a contingent fee contract without justifiable cause cannot thereafter recover the reasonable value of his or her services if the stated contingency occurs (Hensel v. Cohen (1984) 155 Cal. App. 3d 563, 564, 567-568, 202 Cal. Rptr. 85).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used by a client to oppose the contention that a former attorney is entitled to the reasonable value of services rendered under a contingent fee contract, on the ground that the attorney was not discharged but voluntarily abandoned the client's case without justifiable cause. The argument supported by this memorandum may be raised any time the attorney abandons the client's case without justifiable cause but nonetheless asserts the right to recover the reason able value of services rendered up to the time of abandonment if or when the stated contingency ultimately occurs. The argument would most likely arise in defense to an attorney's independent action against the client to recover in quantum meruit.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Thus, counsel should show that the attorney was not discharged by the client but voluntarily abandoned his or her employment under the contingent fee contract without justifiable cause.

This form may be combined with memoranda pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the attorney's voluntary and unjustifiable abandonment of the client's case. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the memoranda set out in § 25.34 may be used to support the contention opposed by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Attorney Voluntarily Abandoned Case Without Justifiable Cause

In Hensel v. Cohen (1984) 155 Cal. App. 3d 563, 202 Cal. Rptr. 85 , plaintiff retained defendant attorney to handle a personal injury claim on a contingent-fee basis. After investigation, defendant concluded that the claim was a "dead-blank loser" and notified plaintiff that he would do no further work on it. Defendant later claimed that he had a lien on any eventual recovery for the value of services rendered and costs advanced. Plaintiff filed for declaratory relief, denying the validity of the lien in any amount over costs advanced. The trial court held for plaintiff, and defendant appealed (155 Cal. App. 3d 563, 564-567) .

The court of appeal affirmed. The court stated that a client who discharges an attorney retained under a contingent-fee contract becomes liable to the discharged attorney for the reasonable value of services rendered when the stated contingency occurs, regardless of whether the client had good cause to discharge the attorney. The court reasoned that this rule did not apply to permit recovery by an attorney who discharges a client yet cannot point to any action of the client which provided justifiable cause for abandonment of the case (155 Cal. App. 3d 563, 567) . The court held that defendant had no right to recover quantum meruit, because, while he employed the proper procedure for withdrawal, his conclusion that the case was a "loser" did not constitute justifiable cause for abandonment of his employment (155 Cal. App. 3d 563, 567-568) .

[a] Attorney Voluntarily Abandoned Case Without Justifiable Cause

In Estate of Falco (1987) 188 Cal. App. 3d 1004, 233 Cal. Rptr. 807 , the court of appeal held that a client's exercise of the right to reject a settlement does not justify withdrawal by the attorney and does not constitute cause for the purpose of recovering in quantum meruit (188 Cal. App. 3d 1004, 1018) . The court held, however, that an attorney may be compensable in quantum meruit after withdrawal for ethical reasons, if the attorney can prove that the withdrawal was justified (188 Cal. App. 3d 1004, 1016) .

DEFENDANT IS NOT REQUIRED TO PAY THE ATTORNEY'S FEE SOUGHT BY PLAINTIFF BECAUSE THE FEE IS UNREASONABLE IN RELATION TO THE SERVICES PERFORMED BY PLAINTIFF.

A. Attorney's Fees Are Excessive. Fees that are unreasonable in relation to the services performed will not be upheld (see Jackson v. Campbell (1932) 215 Cal. 103, 106, 8 P.2d 845 ; Sayble v. Feinman (1978) 76 Cal. App. 3d 509, 515, 142 Cal. Rptr. 895 ; Denton v. Smith (1951) 101 Cal. App. 2d 841, 844, 226 P.2d 723).

App. 3d 290, 300, 149 Cal. Rptr. 918*).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used by a client to oppose the attorney's contention that attorney's fees sought are reasonable on the ground that the fee sought is excessive in relation to the legal services actually performed. This form may be used when the client contends that the attorney is entitled only to the reasonable value of services rendered because the specified fee in the contract is so high as to be unconscionable, or the client did not fully understand the fee agreement and therefore mistakenly consented to unreasonable terms. The form may also be used when an attorney is seeking to recover in quantum meruit for the reasonable value of his or her services and the client contends that the fee sought is excessive. In appropriate circumstances, counsel may wish to include memoranda contending that the trial court may use its discretion in determining the reasonable value of legal services (optional Paragraph B). This form may be used in conjunction with § 25.59 (supporting contention that client is not required to pay for attorney's personal and travel expenses or of costs other than normal costs of lawsuit).

Counsel may wish to refer to additional memoranda for use in actions for breach of contract, which are found in Ch. 50, Contracts . When the client alleges that the fee agreement was obtained by fraud, duress, or undue influence on the part of the attorney, counsel should refer to additional memoranda found in Ch. 92, Duress, Menace, Fraud, Undue Influence, and Mistake .

The argument supported by this memorandum would be most likely to arise in support of a client's defense against an attorney's action to collect a stipulated contractual fee, or against an attorney's action in quantum meruit. The argument may also be used in support of a client's independent action brought to prevent an attorney from asserting a lien on any judgment or recovery in favor of the client or on money or property of the client in the attorney's possession that the attorney alleges is due him or her in satisfaction of attorney's fees.

This form may be combined with a form of memorandum relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the reasonableness of attorney's fees. The memoranda may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, if the attorney seeks to recover a contractual fee, counsel should discuss the terms of the employment contract between attorney and client to show the excessiveness of the stipulated fee. Regardless of whether the attorney seeks to recover a contractual fee or the reasonable value of services rendered, counsel should discuss the attorney's performance to show that the fee sought is excessive in relation to the legal services rendered. If the client contends that the attorney is entitled only to the reasonable value of his or her services, factors that enter into the determination of a reasonable fee should be discussed. These factors are discussed in § 25.39[3][a]. If applicable, counsel should indicate that the client has offered to pay a certain amount for the reasonable value of legal services rendered, and that the offer has been refused by the attorney.

[b] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the memoranda set out in § 25.39 may be used to oppose the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Attorney's Fees Are Excessive

In Jackson v. Campbell (1932) 215 Cal. 103, 8 P.2d 845 , an attorney agreed to represent a client in a wrongful death action in exchange for a contingent fee. The written contract provided that if the attorney collected the client's claim for damages without suit, he would receive 20 percent of the total recovery. If the case went to trial, the client would advance all costs of suit and the attorney would receive 35 percent of any recovery. If the claim was settled after bringing suit, the attorney would receive 35 percent of the amount received in settlement. If the action was appealed, the client would advance all costs and the attorney would receive 35 percent of the amount recovered on appeal. The client obtained a judgment in her favor in the wrongful death action that was affirmed on appeal. Thereafter, a dispute arose between the attorney and the client over the attorney's fee. The attorney claimed that he was entitled to a 35 percent fee for his work in the trial court and an additional 35 percent for his services on appeal, while the client contended that he was entitled to only 35 percent for his services at both the trial and the appeal. The attorney waived his right to receive more than 50 percent of the judgment and offered to pay the client one half of the recovery, which she accepted. The client then brought an action to recover an additional 15 percent of the judgment from the attorney. Following a judgment in the client's favor, the attorney appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the attorney was entitled to only 35 percent of the total recovery because the only reasonable construction of the contract was that the attorney was to receive no more than 35 percent for his work on both the trial and the appeal. The Court stated that the contract terms were rather ambiguous and that any ambiguity would be resolved in favor of the client, but that even if the contract expressly stipulated that the attorney was to receive a total fee of 70 percent for his services in the trial and appellate courts, such a fee would be so grossly excessive and unconscionable as to raise the question of its enforceability (215 Cal. 103, 106) .

In Sayble v. Feinman (1978) 76 Cal. App. 3d 509, 142 Cal. Rptr. 895 , a law firm brought a declaratory relief action against a client for interpretation of a contingent fee agreement that provided that the law firm would be paid 28.3 percent of any money recovered in a wrongful death action. The attorneys obtained an out-of-court settlement for the client in which she received a cash payment plus a monthly annuity for her lifetime. Neither of the parties had contemplated a form of payment other than a lump sum of cash, but plaintiffs claimed they were entitled immediately to 28.3 percent of the cash payment plus 28.3 percent of the present cash value of the annuity portion of the settlement. The trial court ruled in favor of defendant's interpretation of the contract that plaintiffs were entitled to the stated percentage of the cash payment plus the percentage of the life annuity as and when it was received by defendant.

The court of appeal affirmed, finding that the trial court's interpretation of the phrase "any money recovered" in the contingent fee contract was correct. "Money" was defined as cash proceeds, distinguishable from other forms of personal property, and therefore defendant did not receive any "money" from her annuity until she actually received her monthly check (76 Cal. App. 3d 509, 514) . The court stated that to agree with plaintiffs would mean that they were entitled to some 80 percent of the money recovered so far and that this interpretation of a contingent fee contract would be unreasonable and absurd (76 Cal. App. 3d 509, 515) .

In Denton v. Smith (1951) 101 Cal. App. 2d 841, 226 P.2d 723 , an attorney agreed to provide legal services in the probate of an estate in exchange for a sum equal to one fourth of the appraised value of the part of the estate recovered. The attorney advised the client that the client was entitled to be appointed as administrator of the estate in place of the client's son and provided his legal services in securing such appointment for the client. When the estate was distributed, the probate court found that the attorney was entitled to $310 as statutory attorney's fees and an additional $200 for extraordinary legal services rendered. The attorney filed a petition in probate court to revoke the letters of administration, alleging that the client had refused his demands for payment of the contingent fee. The client then retained another attorney, and the probate court in its final order settling the estate awarded the original attorney $100 as a statutory fee and $50 for further services in the estate matter. The attorney then brought an action against the client to recover the one-fourth interest in the estate that he claimed as his fee. The trial court held that the contract sued on was without consideration, invalid, and unenforceable and that plaintiff should recover nothing under the contract. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, finding that the client did not understand the terms of the contract because he was never informed by plaintiff that the fees allowed an attorney in the probate of an estate were much less than the contingent fee asked by plaintiff and that the client would not have agreed to pay such a fee if he had known. Plaintiff knew or should have known that the client's interest in the estate was readily ascertainable and recoverable with a minimum of legal assistance. The fees awarded to plaintiff by the probate court were more than reasonable since his services to the client amounted to no more than what would have been done by the attorney for the previous administrator of the estate (101 Cal. App. 2d 841, 844) .

[b] Court May Rely on Own Experience in Determining Value of Services

In Estate of Straus (1904) 144 Cal. 553, 77 P. 1122 , the decedent's will left his estate, which consisted mainly of a business, to his widow. The executor of the estate continued to manage and conduct the business for one year and then closed it after realizing a profit for the estate. The executor did not file an accounting of the estate until seven years later, when he revealed that he had over $3,000 belonging to the estate. The decedent's widow had assigned her interest in the estate to her son, who applied for a partial distribution to him of $2,000. The court found that $1,500 could be paid to the son without damage to the estate, and that more than enough would remain in the hands of the executor to pay his commissions, together with a reasonable attorney's fee and the charges of closing the estate. The executor appealed from the court's order, claiming that the amount remaining was not sufficient to pay his commissions, an attorney's fee, and other administration charges.

The Supreme Court affirmed, finding that the lower court had ample data on which to properly determine the matter. In regard to attorney's fees, the Court stated that all the proceedings in the estate and all matters in which the executor could have required the services of an attorney were before the court, and from these the court of its own knowledge and experience could determine what would be a reasonable fee. It was not necessary that any evidence of a professional nature be introduced (144 Cal. 553, 557-558) .

In In re Marriage of Cueva (1978) 86 Cal. App. 3d 290, 149 Cal. Rptr. 918 , the court of appeal reversed as to an award of $16,000 in attorney's fees in a dissolution action. The trial court had awarded the wife's attorney the $16,000 in addition to $5,000 previously ordered. The court of appeal found that there was nothing before the trial court disclosing legal services that could reasonably support an award of $21,000 (86 Cal. App. 3d 290, 297) . The court reiterated the rule concerning a trial court's discretion to determine the reasonableness of attorney's fees, stating that when the trial court is informed of the extent and nature of services rendered, it may rely on its own experience and knowledge in determining their reasonable value (86 Cal. App. 3d 290, 300) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Attorney's Fees Are Excessive

Warner v. State Bar (1983) 34 Cal. 3d 36, 192 Cal. Rptr. 244, 664 P.2d 148 , involved several incidents of misconduct by an attorney. The State Bar recommended disbarment, and the Supreme Court upheld the recommendation. After the attorney represented the client in a litigation, the client invested $25,000 in an unrelated real estate venture formed by the attorney. When the venture failed, a written agreement was executed by the attorney converting the amount of the client's investment into a loan payable over five years at ten percent interest. The agreement provided that interest on the loan accruing before a certain date would be deemed payment in full for any uncompensated legal work previously done by the attorney for the client. The parties also orally agreed that interest accruing after that date could be credited against future fees earned by the attorney. Over the next three years the attorney failed to perform substantial work on the underlying prior litigation and also failed to pay interest on the loan. The attorney refused to respond adequately to the client's requests for accounting for the attorney's time and costs expended, and the prior litigation was ultimately dismissed for lack of prosecution. In the disciplinary hearings before the State Bar, the attorney denied that he had agreed to pay interest on the loan or account annually for his time, and that the fee arrangement was that a fee accommodation was to be reached when the loan matured, at which time all monies would be accounted for and paid. The attorney claimed that he withheld the interest on the loan as security for or as his attorney's fees.

In adopting the State Bar's recommendation of disbarment, the Supreme Court found that the attorney's action in unilaterally withholding interest on the loan as security for or payment of fees constituted the charging of an unconscionable fee under the circumstances in violation of both former Rule 2-107 of the Rules of Professional Conduct [now see Rule 4-200 of the Rules of Professional Conduct] and the duties of an attorney under Bus. & Prof. Code § 6103. The financial transaction between the attorney and his client was more than a simple loan between creditor and debtor, because of the oral agreement tying interest and attorney's fees. The attorney withheld $2,500 in interest each year, ostensibly as attorney's fees, while refusing to account for his time and failing to provide services justifying fees in the amount withheld. The Supreme Court stated that it is settled that gross overcharge of a fee by an attorney may warrant discipline, and that most cases warranting discipline on this ground involve an element of fraud or overreaching by the attorney, so that the fee charged, under the circumstances, constituted a practical appropriation of the client's funds (34 Cal. 3d 36, 43) .

In Goldstone v. The State Bar of California (1931) 214 Cal. 490, 6 P.2d 513 , the attorney was asked by the client to assist him in obtaining workers' compensation for job-related injuries. The attorney agreed to represent the client in return for 40 percent of any recovery. The client had already been awarded compensation in proceedings before the Industrial Accident Commission, but was ignorant of the fact. The attorney did nothing on behalf of the client until four months later, when the attorney learned of the client's award. The attorney then contacted the client and accompanied him to the office of the insurance carrier, where the client received a check for part of the award. The attorney was paid 40 percent of this sum and then claimed that he should also receive 40 percent of the weekly compensation checks sent to the client. The client refused to pay the additional amount and there was eventually a hearing before the Industrial Accident Commission, which determined that the attorney was entitled to a fee of $20 for services rendered and that the remainder of the fee should be returned to the client. The attorney did not return the money and ultimately the State Bar recommended that he be suspended from practice for three months.

In proceedings to review the State Bar's order, the Supreme Court found that the attorney had charged a fee wholly disproportionate to the services performed and that his suspension was warranted (214 Cal. 490, 497) . The attorney had stated that the original contingent fee contract had been destroyed by him, and that he was not charging a contingent fee for his services. The Supreme Court stated that if the attorney did not act in reliance on the contingent fee contract, then payment for his services was not made on a contingent basis, but was paid after the services had been rendered, and in full realization that such service was so slight as scarcely to deserve the name of "service" (214 Cal. 490, 497) . The attorney's disclaimer of the contingent fee contract removed the slightest justification for the amount of the fee (214 Cal. 490, 497) . The Court stated that the exaction of such a substantial fee for a most trivial service amounted to misconduct on the part of the attorney which would subject him to the disciplinary power of the Court (214 Cal. 490, 498) .

In Werschkull v. United California Bank (1978) 85 Cal. App. 3d 981, 149 Cal. Rptr. 829 , participants in an employees' pension plan brought a class action against their employer bank, who was also trustee of the plan, for wrongful diversion of pension funds. Attorneys for plaintiffs obtained a favorable judgment in the class action and were awarded $400,000 in attorneys' fees. Defendant appealed the judgment on several grounds, including the claim that the award of attorneys' fees was excessive.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment as to the award of attorneys' fees and remanded the matter for redetermination by the trial court. Plaintiffs' attorneys had devoted a total of 1,398 hours to the case and the award of $400,000 compensated them at a rate of $268 per hour. The attorneys had stated that any further legal services performed for plaintiffs would be billed at rates of between $60 and $100 per hour. The court held that the award appeared to bear no relationship to the rate of compensation and number of hours spent by the attorneys (85 Cal. App. 3d 981, 1007) .

[b] Court May Rely on Own Experience in Determining Value of Services

The facts and procedural background of Elconin v. Yalen (1929) 208 Cal. 546, 282 P. 791 are discussed in § 25.32[3][a]. In Elconin, the Supreme Court upheld a trial court's finding that the reasonable value of an attorney's services was $300 rather than $1,500. The Court stated that the trial court had before it detailed evidence regarding the nature and extent of the services rendered and could use its own experience and judgment to determine the reasonable value, with or without the aid of witnesses' testimony (208 Cal. 546, 549-550) .

CHAPTER 25 ATTORNEY'S FEES
PART II. FORMS

2A-25 California Points & Authorities § 25.58

§ 25.58 Opposing Contention That Attorney Has Lien on Judgment or Recovery

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

_____ [Specify party seeking to enforce lien, e.g., PLAINTIFF] HAS NO LIEN ON THE JUDGMENT OR RECOVERY OBTAINED BY _____ [specify party resisting lien, e.g., DEFENDANT] BECAUSE THE CONTRACT OF EMPLOYMENT BETWEEN PLAINTIFF AND DEFENDANT DOES NOT EXPRESSLY OR IMPLIEDLY PROVIDE FOR ANY LIEN ON, OR SECURITY INTEREST IN, THE JUDGMENT OR RECOVERY AND THERE IS NO SHOWING OF ANY INTENT ON THE PART OF PLAINTIFF AND DEFENDANT TO CREATE A LIEN.

A. Attorney's Lien Not Created as Matter of Law. An attorney's fee contract containing no words as to a lien, security interest, or assignment does not as a matter of law create a lien on the judgment or recovery obtained as a result of his or her services (Fletcher v. Davis (2004) 33 Cal. 4th 61, 69-70, 14 Cal. Rptr. 3d 58, 90 P.3d 1216 (charging lien must comply with Cal. Rules of Prof. Conduct, Rule 3-300); Gelfand, Greer, Popko & Miller v. Shivener (1973) 30 Cal. App. 3d 364, 370, 105 Cal. Rptr. 445).

[Optional] B. Enforceable Lien Dependent on an Existing Obligation. An attorney must show the liability of the client to the attorney for the fee before the attorney's lien can be enforced (Gostin v. State Farm Ins. Co. (1964) 224 Cal. App. 2d 319, 325-326, 36 Cal. Rptr. 596).

[Optional] C. No Retaining Lien on Property Placed in Trusteeship. An attorney cannot claim a retaining lien on property coming into the attorney's hands as trustee (Hulland v. State Bar (1972) 8 Cal. 3d 440, 447, 105 Cal. Rptr. 152, 503 P.2d 608 ; Severdia v. Alaimo (1974) 41 Cal. App. 3d 881, 891, 116 Cal. Rptr. 405).

[Optional] D. Attorney Cannot Unilaterally Determine Fee. In the absence of an express employment contract providing for compensation, an attorney cannot unilaterally determine his or her own fee (Silver v. State Bar (1974) 13 Cal. 3d 134, 142, 117 Cal. Rptr. 821, 528 P.2d 1157 ; Trafton v. Youngblood (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 17, 26, 69 Cal.

Rptr. 568, 442 P.2d 648).

[Optional] E. Discharged Attorney's Independent Action Barred by Collateral Estoppel. When the question of the reasonable amount of attorney fees to be awarded a discharged attorney is erroneously determined in the main action, and the discharged attorney fails to attack directly that adverse determination by appeal, the discharged attorney is barred from later reopening the fee dispute by collateral attack in an independent action, by application of the principles of collateral estoppel, disfavor of collateral attack, and res judicata (see Law Offices of Stanley J. Bell v. Shine, Browne & Diamond (1995) 36 Cal. App. 4th 1011, 1021, 1027).

[2] Comments

This form may be used to oppose the contention that an attorney who represents a client has a lien on the proceeds of any judgment or recovery in favor of the client. Optional Paragraph C may be used when the client contends that the attorney has no retaining lien on the client's property that is in the possession of the attorney. Optional Paragraph D may be used when the client contends that the attorney has no contractual lien for fees and does not have the right to unilaterally determine a fee and withhold that amount from client's funds held by the attorney.

The argument supported by this form may be raised any time an attorney alleges that he or she has a lien on the proceeds of a client's judgment or recovery, or on property of the client in the attorney's possession. The argument would be most likely to arise in support of a client's defense against an attorney's lien claim or in support of a client's independent action to recover money or property in the possession of, or claimed by, an attorney.

The argument supported by this form may also be used by a client's creditor to oppose the claim of an attorney seeking to establish priority of the attorney's contractual lien over liens or attachments of the client's judgment creditors. The form may also be used by a client's debtor to oppose the claim of an attorney seeking to charge the amount of a lien for attorney's fees against the debtor who has made payment directly to the client.

This form may be combined with other form relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the existence of a lien for attorney's fees. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the employment contract, if any, between the attorney and client in order to show that there is no express or implied language to indicate the creation of an attorney's lien for fees. Counsel should also show that the parties did not intend that the attorney have a lien on any judgment or recovery in favor of the client. If the attorney seeks to assert a retaining lien, counsel should discuss the manner in which the attorney gained possession of the property that is the subject of the lien in order to show that the property came into the attorney's hands as a trustee and not as security for fees. Counsel may also wish to show that the attorney's continued possession of the property is an act that is against the client's best interests and therefore a violation of the attorney's professional ethics and a violation of public policy [see Cal. Rules of Professional Conduct, Rules 3-700(A)(2), 4-100(B)(4)]. If appropriate, counsel should also discuss the attorney's performance or non performance under the contract, in order to show that there is no existing obligation on the part of the client to pay the attorney's fee, and thus no basis for the existence of an attorney's lien for fees.

If an attorney seeks to enforce a lien against a judgment creditor of the client, or against a debtor of the client, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 342, Liens and Wage Preferences (Matthew Bender), for a discussion of priority between lien claimants and equitable liens.

[b] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the memoranda set out in § 25.40 may be used to oppose the contentions supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Attorney's Lien Not Created as Matter of Law

In Fletcher v. Davis (2004) 33 Cal. 4th 61, 14 Cal. Rptr. 3d 58, 90 P.3d 1216 , a client retained plaintiff, attorney Freddie Fletcher, to defend a breach-of-lease action and to institute a conversion action for damages. The client orally agreed to pay all costs plus Fletcher's fee of $200 per hour. In lieu of a cash retainer, the client agreed to grant Fletcher a lien on any judgment or settlement in its litigation. If the judgment or settlement was insufficient, the client agreed to pay the difference from the income it earned once it resumed operations. The client also promised Fletcher an extra unspecified percentage of any judgment obtained if extensive litigation or trial was required and if the recovery in the case was "large." Fletcher also agreed to do additional, personal legal work on behalf of the client's president and his mother. In each matter, the president orally granted Fletcher a lien on the client's prospective recovery in the conversion action.

After the conversion trial resulted in a mistrial, the client fired Fletcher and hired a new attorney. With the new attorney in charge, the client obtained a judgment for $504,000 plus interest. The judgment proceeds were disbursed to various people, but not Fletcher, with claims against the client.

Fletcher claimed he did not learn about the disbursement until the day after the funds had been disbursed. Fletcher then filed an action against the client and the others who received part of the judgment proceeds to collect on his lien.

The defendants filed a demurrer against Fletcher, arguing that Fletcher had not perfected his lien against the client. The trial court granted the demurrer, holding that no valid lien existed because, under Cal. Rules of Prof. Conduct, Rule 3-300, a client must consent in writing to an attorney's charging lien against the client's future recovery. The court of appeal reversed, holding that Rule 3-300 was inapplicable in that an attorney's charging lien is not "adverse" within the meaning of Hawk v. State Bar (1988) 45 Cal. 3d 589, 247 Cal. Rptr. 599 . The California Supreme Court granted review.

The Court held that in California a charging lien is created by contract only. Unlike a service lien or a mechanic's lien, an attorney's lien is not created by the mere fact that an attorney has performed services for a client (33 Cal. 4th 61, 66-67) . The Court also held that it was reasonably foreseeable the charging lien could become detrimental to the client. Although a charging lien does not grant an attorney the power to summarily extinguish the client's interest in any recovery, a charging lien could significantly impair the client's interest by delaying payment of the recovery or settlement proceeds until any disputes over the lien can be resolved (33 Cal. 4th 61, 68-69) . Thus, the Court held that a charging lien is an adverse interest within the meaning of Cal. Rules of Prof. Conduct, Rule 3-300 and therefore requires the client's informed written consent (33 Cal. 4th 61, 69) .

In Gelfand, Greer, Popko & Miller v. Shivener (1973) 30 Cal. App. 3d 364, 105 Cal. Rptr. 445 , an attorney was retained by a client to represent him in his action to obtain his share of a wrongful death settlement. The client agreed to pay a contingent fee of 50 percent of all sums awarded to him. The attorney was successful in establishing that the client was entitled to 20 percent of the $100,000 settlement. The client's ex-wife had previously obtained a judgment against him for $26,000 in delinquent support payments and she now served a writ of execution on the law firm that was holding the settlement money pending a court apportionment among the heirs of the decedent. The client's attorney notified the law firm of his contingent fee claim and directed them not to release more than one half of the $20,000 on the ex-wife's claim. The law firm filed an interpleader action against the ex-wife and the client's attorney. The attorney's motion for summary judgment was granted, and the court ordered that the client's share be divided equally between the attorney and the ex-wife. The ex-wife appealed.

The court of appeal reversed solely on the ground that it was a triable issue of fact whether the parties to the contingent fee contract intended to, and did give, the attorney a lien on the fund. The court stated that an attorney's contingent fee contract containing no words regarding a lien, security, or assignment does not as a matter of law automatically create a lien for attorney's fees. In the absence of express language declaring a lien, giving security, or assigning the proceeds, the question whether the contract creates a lien is one of fact involving a determination of the intention of the parties (30 Cal. App. 3d 364, 370) . The court discussed at length the various cases relating to the creation of attorney's liens and concluded that it could not be said as a matter of law that a lien was not created in the instant case, but that the question was one of fact (30 Cal. App. 3d 364, 375) .

[b] Enforceable Lien Dependent on an Existing Obligation

In Gostin v. State Farm Ins. Co. (1964) 224 Cal. App. 2d 319, 36 Cal. Rptr. 596 , several attorneys were retained to prosecute a client's personal injury claim against an insurance company. The client signed an agreement stating that in consideration of the legal services to be rendered by the attorneys he assigned to them a lien of 33.3 percent on any amounts recovered. The attorneys were subsequently discharged by the client, and the client was paid by the insurance company in settlement of his claim. The attorneys then brought suit against the client and the insurance company to recover an amount equal to one third of the settlement. The client was not served and did not appear in the action. Judgment for one third of the settlement was rendered in favor of the attorneys, and the insurance company appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, finding that although the attorneys had notified the insurance company that they represented the client on his claim and that they had performed legal services on his behalf, there was insufficient evidence presented to show that they actually had rendered such services (224 Cal. App. 2d 319, 323) . The court stated that the agreement creating the lien does not necessarily create the act for the performance of which the property subject to the lien is made security. Unless an attorney is entitled to a fee for services that he has rendered, there is no obligation in his favor that can be the subject of an action to enforce performance of the obligation by way of a lien against the client's recovery (224 Cal. App. 2d 319, 325) .

[c] No Retaining Lien on Property Placed in Trusteeship

In Hulland v. State Bar (1972) 8 Cal. 3d 440, 105 Cal. Rptr. 152, 503 P.2d 608 , a client contacted an attorney to discuss obtaining a divorce and was told that the fee for complete legal representation in a contested divorce was $650 and the fee for an uncontested divorce was $130. The client stated that the divorce would probably be contested. The client signed a confession of judgment in the amount of $650 for "money justly due for legal services" and paid $130 as an initial fee. Subsequently the client informed the attorney that her husband would not contest the divorce, and she asked for a fee reduction. The attorney told her that the charges for the work necessary to complete the divorce would probably equal the $650 fee anyway. The client had received an income tax refund check for $500 and was told by the attorney to leave the check with him for safekeeping. She left the check, unsigned, in his office, and when he later demanded that she endorse the check over to him for his fees she refused to do so and took back the check. The attorney had the default divorce hearing taken off the calendar without notifying the client and then filed the confession of judgment and was awarded a judgment for $650. He later caused a writ of execution to issue and unsuccessfully tried to garnish the client's wages. The client filed a complaint with the State Bar and the Disciplinary Board voted to publicly reprove the attorney.

In its review of the disciplinary proceedings, the Supreme Court concluded that the attorney's willful failure to render legal services to the client and the use of the confession of judgment to collect his fees was improper. The Court did not agree with the attorney's contention that he had a right to treat his duties as at an end because he had an agreement with his client that the tax refund check would be used for his fees and that by regaining possession of the check the client demonstrated a refusal to pay his fees. The attorney claimed that he had a possessory lien on the check, but the Court stated that even if a possessory lien does exist in California, it does not attach to property coming into the attorney's hands as trustee, and that the attorney acquired possession of the check as a trustee, not as security for his fees (8 Cal. 3d 440, 447) .

In Severdia v. Alaimo (1974) 41 Cal. App. 3d 881, 116 Cal. Rptr. 405 , an attorney who had represented the wife in a dissolution proceeding retained a percentage of the proceeds from a sale of community property on which he claimed he had a lien for fees. The check for one fourth of the proceeds was made payable to the client and the attorney and was delivered to the attorney. The attorney refused to endorse the check and to turn it over to the client, and the client filed an order to show cause. In the course of the proceedings the check was cashed, and the attorney deducted his alleged fee and costs and paid the remainder to the client. After the hearing of the order to show cause, the attorney was ordered to pay the entire balance of the money retained by him to the client, and he appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, finding that an attorney has neither a retaining nor a charging lien for compensation in the absence of a contract containing an agreement for a lien, and that in the present case there was no evidence to show that there was such an agreement (41 Cal. App. 3d 881, 890) . The court stated that the attorney could not acquire a common law retaining lien even if one existed in California because the funds in question came into the attorney's possession pursuant to a court order regarding the division of his client's community property and were held by him as a trustee, and that if a possessory lien or a common law retaining lien does exist in California it does not attach to property coming into an attorney's hands as trustee (41 Cal. App. 3d 881, 891) .

[d] Attorney Cannot Unilaterally Determine Fee

In Silver v. State Bar (1974) 13 Cal. 3d 134, 117 Cal. Rptr. 821, 528 P.2d 1157 , an attorney agreed to prosecute an appeal from the property division portion of a client's interlocutory judgment of divorce. The property awarded to the client's former husband included the family residence and a rental duplex. The attorney's law partner procured a court order that the ex-husband pay attorney's fees and costs as they were incurred and the attorney then obtained two writs of execution against the ex-husband's real property. One writ was in the attorney's name for $994 in fees and costs and the other was in the client's name for $1,504, the unpaid balance of the judgment in the dissolution action. The attorney advised the client to have the marshal execute on the attorney's unsatisfied writ rather than the client's unsatisfied writ and a marshal's sale of the duplex was scheduled. The attorney then purchased the property at the sale and arranged to resell the property, receiving $3,121 as the proceeds remaining after escrow. The attorney never notified the client that the property had been sold and that he had received the money. When she learned of the sale and contacted the attorney, he informed her that she was entitled to only $900 of the proceeds. The attorney failed to give the client the $900 and after one year she learned that he had deducted $1,000 for his legal services and a further $1,000 to pay his law partner. Subsequently, disciplinary proceedings were initiated against the attorney by the State Bar for his conduct in this and several other matters. The disciplinary board recommended that the attorney be suspended from the practice of law for two years with one year actual suspension, and the attorney appealed the decision.

On review, the Supreme Court determined that even more severe discipline was warranted and ordered that the attorney be suspended from practice for three years, with one year actual suspension. The Court stated that in regard to the matter of the attorney's method of collecting his fee, the attorney had a legal duty to hold the money received from the sale of the property in trust for his client. Since the attorney had no contractual lien for attorney's fees, he had no right to unilaterally determine that he was entitled to $1,000 for his services and that his partner was entitled to $1,000, and to withhold the money, even if the services were actually worth that amount. The attorney was entitled to withhold only money advanced for the actual costs of litigation and should have paid the client the balance. If she refused to pay his requested fee, his sole remedy consisted of an action for the reasonable value of his services (13 Cal. 3d 134, 142) .

In Trafton v. Youngblood (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 17, 69 Cal. Rptr. 568, 442 P.2d 648 , an attorney agreed to represent a client in settling disputes arising out of the payment of a fire loss to a building owned by the client. The insurance company made the check payable jointly to the client and two other persons, one of whom refused to endorse the check.

The attorney brought several actions to settle the dispute and eventually obtained an agreement placing the insurance proceeds in escrow. The client authorized the attorney to disburse the escrow funds as needed to satisfy mechanics' liens and other claims and withdrew an amount sufficient to reimburse himself for his payment to a contractor who had worked on the building. The attorney then withdrew the balance of $11,886, paid out $4,672 in satisfaction of various lien claims and kept the remainder as payment for his legal services in the fire loss dispute and several other unrelated matters. He sent the client an itemized bill indicating that he had paid himself $6,800 for his legal services, with a balance due from the client of $609. The client acknowledged receipt of the statement but said he wished to check his files as to the authenticity of the attorney's claims. The client ignored several later bills from the attorney for the outstanding balance and then brought an action against the attorney two years later, alleging that the attorney had improperly diverted that portion of the escrow funds that he had paid to himself without the consent of the client. The trial court held in favor of plaintiff, and defendant appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed, finding that defendant had wrongfully applied the balance of the escrow funds to his claim for monies due him for legal services and costs advanced on behalf of plaintiff. The Court stated that although an attorney is entitled to recover the reasonable amount of his services if there is no express employment contract providing for his compensation, he may not unilaterally determine his own fee and withdraw funds held in trust for his client in order to satisfy it without the knowledge or consent of the client (69 Cal. 2d 17, 26) . Defendant argued that the failure of plaintiff for two years to object to plaintiff's itemized bill created an account stated to which defendant acquiesced, but the Court stated that the rendering of an account, although not objected to, cannot create a liability when no liability existed before. Since there was no agreement between attorney and client either providing for a fixed fee or allowing defendant to withdraw funds to satisfy the fee, the alleged statement of account sent to the client was really a memorandum of the accomplishment of an erroneous, mistaken, and wrongful act, namely the attorney's withdrawal of the escrow funds to satisfy his fee, and did not represent a preexisting liability (69 Cal. 2d 17, 26) .

[e] Discharged Attorney's Independent Action Barred by Collateral Estoppel

In Law Offices of Stanley J. Bell v. Shine, Browne & Diamond (1995) 36 Cal. App. 4th 1011 , plaintiff attorney filed a complaint in an independent action seeking declaratory relief as to his claim for the reasonable value of his efforts rendered in a prior action seeking damages for personal injuries to a minor. Plaintiff had contracted with the injured party's attorney in the prior action but was later discharged. In the prior action, the injured party's counsel attempted to compromise plaintiff's claim and petitioned the trial court for an order authorizing the proposed compromise; the petition also included a request that the court determine that plaintiff had waived his right to fees by failing to supply information about the alleged fees. Plaintiff made a general appearance in the prior action, objecting to the court's jurisdiction to make an order with respect to his fees, and reasserted his claim for fees under a quantum meruit theory. The trial court denied with prejudice any lien by plaintiff for attorney's fees in the prior action.

Plaintiff did not appeal in the prior action, but filed the independent action for declaratory relief. The injured party's attorneys demurred, and the trial court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend. Plaintiff appealed, and the court of appeal affirmed. The appellate court stated that, while the trial court has in fact exceeded its jurisdiction in making an order or judgment regarding plaintiff's attorney fees, a litigant who has stipulated to procedure in excess of jurisdiction may be estopped to question it, particularly in a collateral attack is involved. After reviewing facts that disclosed the extent to which plaintiff had "embraced" the procedure in the prior action, as well as facts and principles relating to res judicata, the court concluded that the trial court was correct in not permitting the discharged attorney to reopen the fee dispute (36 Cal. App. 4th 1011, 1023-1027) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Attorney's Lien Not Created as Matter of Law

In Echlin v. Superior Court of San Mateo County (1939) 13 Cal. 2d 368 , a client sought to discharge her attorney and petitioned for a writ of mandate compelling the superior court to make an order substituting attorneys. The Supreme Court granted the writ and in discussing the issue of the discharged attorney's compensation, stated that an attorney has no lien in the absence of an agreement therefore (13 Cal. 2d 368, 373) .

In Norman v. Berney (1965) 235 Cal. App. 2d 424, 45 Cal. Rptr. 467 , the court of appeal stated that a contingent fee contract that provided that the attorney undertake the client's case on a one-third contingent basis, with no fee in the event of no recovery, and 50 percent in event of appeal, was conspicuously lacking in any language indicative of an intent to create a lien on or an equitable assignment of a portion of any recovery. The court held that any interest that the attorney acquired under his contract would attach only to the actual proceeds realized by the client (235 Cal. App. 2d 424, 433) .

[b] Enforceable Lien Dependent on an Existing Obligation

In Trimble v. Steinfeldt (1986) 178 Cal. App. 3d 646, 224 Cal. Rptr. 195 , a former associate of plaintiff's attorney filed a notice of lien claiming a lien on any recovery obtained by plaintiff on the basis of an attorney's agreement between the associate and plaintiff's attorney regarding compensation to the associate for work done in connection with various cases. The associate's name was not included in the retainer agreement between plaintiff and plaintiff's attorney. Moreover, the associate's name never appeared as an attorney of record in any action involving plaintiff. The court of appeal ruled that the trial court had erred in denying plaintiff's motion to expunge the lien. The court noted that there was no agreement between plaintiff and the associate. Accordingly, there was no express or implied basis for impressing a lien against plaintiff in favor of the associate. If the associate was entitled to any compensation at all for work on plaintiff's case, the associate must recover it from plaintiff's attorney and not from plaintiff (178 Cal. App. 3d 646, 650-651) .

[c] No Retaining Lien on Property Placed in Trusteeship

In Academy of Calif. Optometrists v. Superior Court (1975) 51 Cal. App. 3d 999, 124 Cal. Rptr. 668 , an attorney was employed by a client to litigate a case, and the retainer agreement provided for an hourly fee at prevailing rates and a percentage of any recovery. The litigation was lengthy and complex, and the client was billed and paid a total of $27,500 in attorney's fees. Before trial, the client, displeased at what it considered excessive fees, discharged the attorney. The attorney refused to sign a substitution of attorneys or turn over his files until the alleged balance of his fee ($9,300) was paid. The client's new counsel motioned for an order granting substitution, which the court granted. However, the court accorded the first attorney the right to retain the files pending payment of the disputed fee, and the client sought a writ of mandate, claiming that it could not bring the case to trial without the records and that the mandatory dismissal period would soon expire.

The court of appeal granted the writ. The court found that there was a contractual retaining lien because the written retainer agreement executed by the parties stated that the attorney was entitled to all general, possessory, or retaining liens, and all special or charging liens known to the common law. However, the court held that to enforce the consensually created possessory lien would be to condone a violation of an attorney's ethical duties to the client and contrary to the public policy (51 Cal. App. 3d 999, 1006) . The court found that the records were of no inherent economic value to the attorney and that by retaining them he would prejudice his former client's ability to go forward with the litigation (51 Cal. App. 3d 999, 1005) . The court held that when the subject matter of an attorney's retaining lien is of no economic value to him, but is used only to extort disputed fees from his client, the lien is void (51 Cal. App. 3d 999, 1006) . The concurring opinion criticized the distinction made regarding the pecuniary value of the property, and stated that the retaining lien provision should be illegal because it offends important tenets of professional ethics, regardless of the economic value of the withheld material (51 Cal. App. 3d 999, 1007) .

In Spencer v. Spencer (1967) 252 Cal. App. 2d 683, 60 Cal. Rptr. 747 , several attorneys were employed to represent the wife in a dissolution action. Twenty-two thousand dollars, the balance due on a promissory note in favor of the husband, was deposited in a bank account that had been opened in the names of the attorneys for both parties. When the wife discharged her attorneys, they refused to release the bank account, claiming that they had a common law retaining lien on the account for their legal services. The trial court held that the attorneys were correct in asserting their right of lien, but the court of appeal reversed, finding that the money was received by the attorneys as joint trustees with the husband's attorneys in an obvious effort to place it in an account beyond the control of the litigants until such time as their property rights were settled. The court stated that to allow an attorney to acquire a retaining lien on property held in trusteeship would violate the ethical standards of both attorneys and trustees (252 Cal. App. 2d 683, 693) .

[d] Attorney Cannot Unilaterally Determine Fee

The facts and procedural background of Warner v. State Bar (1983) 34 Cal. 3d 36, 192 Cal. Rptr. 244, 664 P.2d 148 , are discussed in § 25.57, under [4], Attorney's Fees Are Excessive. In Warner, a client made a $25,000 loan to his attorney, at ten percent annual interest. The attorney and client orally agreed that interest on the loan accruing after a certain date could be credited against future fees earned by the attorney. The attorney failed to perform substantial legal work for the client and also failed to pay interest on the loan, and claimed that he withheld $2,500 interest on the loan each year as security for or payment of fees. The Supreme Court adopted the State Bar's recommendation for disbarment, stating that the attorney's action in unilaterally withholding interest on the loan constituted the charging of an unconscionable fee under the circumstances (34 Cal. 3d 36, 43) .

In Most v. State Bar (1967) 67 Cal. 2d 589, 63 Cal. Rptr. 265, 432 P.2d 953 , the Supreme Court ordered the suspension from practice for two years of an attorney who had appropriated a client's trust funds for his own personal use. The attorney, who was also a licensed insurance adjuster, had been retained to prosecute the client's fire loss claim against several insurance companies. The written fee agreement provided that the client employed the attorney as a fire adjuster for a fee of 10 percent of the insurance settlement, but the parties were in dispute as to whether the fee included legal services. The attorney brought an action on behalf of his client and eventually settled the claim for $36,000. When the settlement checks were received, the attorney placed them in his trust account and later withdrew most of the funds for his own use. The client demanded that the money be paid out to satisfy the claims of creditors and the remainder released to him. The attorney claimed that he was entitled to $15,000 in attorney's fees and had withdrawn that amount from the trust account.

Disciplinary proceedings were initiated against the attorney, and he sought review of the State Bar's recommendation that he be suspended from practice. The Court held that the attorney had misappropriated the funds and that he was entitled to withdraw no more than $3,600 as his 10 percent fee because no more than 10 percent had been agreed to by the client. The Court stated that an attorney may not unilaterally determine his own fee and withdraw funds held in trust without the consent or knowledge of the client (67 Cal. 2d 589, 597) .

PART II. FORMS

2A-25 California Points & Authorities § 25.59

§ 25.59 Opposing Contention That Attorney Entitled to Reimbursement for Expenses Other Than Normal Costs of Lawsuit

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

_____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] IS NOT ENTITLED TO REIMBURSEMENT FOR ANY EXPENSES INCURRED WHILE RENDERING PROFESSIONAL SERVICES ON BEHALF OF _____ [DEFENDANT or PLAINTIFF] EXCEPT FOR THE NORMAL COSTS OF SUIT AND ANY OTHER EXPENSES THAT WERE SPECIFICALLY CONTEMPLATED AND AGREED ON BY PLAINTIFF AND DEFENDANT.

A. Reimbursement for Costs of Lawsuit. In the absence of any other agreement, an attorney is entitled only to reimbursement for costs of lawsuit such as filing fees and witness fees that the attorney has advanced on behalf of the client (Cooley v. Miller & Lux (1909) 156 Cal. 510, 525-526, 105 P. 981 ; Tasker v. Cochrane (1928) 94 Cal. App. 361, 366, 368, 271 P. 503).

B. No Reimbursement for Attorney's Personal and Travel Expenses. Unless there is an agreement to that effect, an attorney is not entitled to reimbursement for personal and travelling expenses (Tasker v. Cochrane (1928) 94 Cal. App. 361, 366, 368, 271 P. 503 ; Darnell v. Woodruff (1936) 14 Cal. App. 2d 628, 634, 58 P.2d 975).

[Optional] C. No Implied Authority to Hire Others on Behalf of Client. An attorney who hires other persons on behalf of the client cannot claim reimbursement for the expense of their services unless the client authorized such employment (Porter v. Elizalde (1899) 125 Cal. 204, 207-208, 57 P. 899 ; Davis v. Mackay (1920) 50 Cal. App. 251, 256, 194 P. 738).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used to oppose the contention that an attorney is entitled to reimbursement for expenses other than the normal costs of suit on the ground that the client has not expressly authorized other expenses. This form may be used any time an attorney claims reimbursement for nonauthorized expenses and may be used in conjunction with § 25.55 (opposing contention that attorney's fees are reasonable) or § 25.57 (opposing contention that attorney has lien on client's recovery). The argument supported by this memorandum may be raised any time an attorney claims reimbursement for nonauthorized expenses incurred while rendering professional services to the client. The argument would be most likely to arise in support of a client's defense in an action brought by the attorney to collect attorney's fees and other expenses incurred on behalf of the client, or in support of a client's action brought to recover money or property in the attorney's possession that the client alleges is due the client.

This form may be combined with a form of memorandum relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the right of an attorney to be reimbursed only for costs of suit in the absence of an agreement to the contrary. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the nature and amount of any costs and expenses advanced by the attorney that the attorney alleges are reimbursable. If it is alleged that the client authorized the expenses, counsel should discuss the authorization agreement to show that it either does not exist or that by its terms the client did not expressly or impliedly agree to be liable for any expenses other than the usual costs of suit. Counsel should seek to show that the client never assented, in any manner, to other expenses.

In an appropriate case, the memoranda set out in this form may be used to oppose the contention supported by the memoranda set out in § 25.41.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Reimbursement for Costs of Lawsuit

The facts and procedural background of Cooley v. Miller & Lux (1909) 156 Cal. 510, 105 P. 981 are discussed in § 25.41[3][a]. In Cooley, the Supreme Court stated that in the absence of a special agreement to the contrary, a client must reimburse the attorney for litigation costs, but the attorney is bound to pay his own personal and travelling expenses (156 Cal. 510, 525-526) .

The facts and procedural background of Tasker v. Cochrane (1928) 94 Cal. App. 361, 271 P. 503 are discussed in § 25.41[3][a]. The court in Tasker reiterated the rule that expenditures of counsel for the costs of litigation, such as clerk's fees, filing fees, witness fees and jury fees, are reimbursable while personal and travelling expenses are not (94 Cal. App. 361, 366) . The court stated that the ordinary rule is that the overhead expense of counsel in maintaining their offices, the cost of their travelling expenses, and outlays of that kind are matters to be taken into consideration in determining the value of an attorney's services and in fixing his or her fees for such services. However, counsel are not entitled to have all of those matters taken into consideration in the fixing of fees, and then maintain an action to recover their personal expenses, unless there has been an agreement to that effect, and counsel must prove the existence of such an agreement by a preponderance of the evidence (94 Cal. App. 361, 368) .

[b] No Reimbursement for Attorney's Personal and Travel Expenses

Tasker v. Cochrane (1928) 94 Cal. App. 361, 271 P. 503 is discussed in § 25.59[3][a].

The facts and procedural background of Darnell v. Woodruff (1936) 14 Cal. App. 2d 628, 58 P.2d 975 are discussed in § 25.41[3][b]. The court in Darnell referred to the general rule that an attorney is bound to bear his own travelling expenses in the absence of a special agreement to the contrary, but found that there was an agreement that the attorney's travel expenses be paid by the client (14 Cal. App. 2d 628, 634) .

[c] No Implied Authority to Hire Others on Behalf of Client

In Porter v. Elizalde (1899) 125 Cal. 204, 57 P. 899 , two attorneys were hired by a client to file a contest against the probate of her husband's will. The attorneys agreed that they would advance and pay all the costs and expenses incurred in the will contest, and their compensation was to be one half of any property recovered by the client. Several months later, one of the attorneys hired another attorney to assist him at the trial. The client did not consent to the employment of additional counsel and did not learn of his involvement with the case until a few days before trial. The new attorney had various conversations with the client during the trial regarding testimony and witnesses, but the subject of his compensation was never discussed. The trial resulted in a favorable verdict for the client, and the original attorneys received their contingent fee. The new attorney did not request compensation from the client until two years after the trial, and she replied by telling him to speak with her original attorneys. The new attorney then brought an action to collect his fee and obtained a verdict in his favor. The client's motion for a new trial was denied, and she appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed the judgment, holding that the evidence did not sustain a finding that she had employed plaintiff. The Court stated that an attorney has no general authority by virtue of his or her retainer to employ counsel or other assistants at the expense of his or her client without previous authority or assent on the part of the client, and the fact that the client knows of the third person and accepts his or her services without objection is not sufficient to establish liability for the expense of such services (125 Cal. 204, 207-208) . The Court stated that because the original attorney had no authority to engage additional counsel at the client's expense and because he had agreed to pay all the costs of the litigation, her mere silence could not create an implied promise to pay for the additional services (125 Cal. 204, 208) .

In Davis v. Mackay (1920) 50 Cal. App. 251, 194 P. 738 , several attorneys were hired by a client to defend a will contest. Without the knowledge and consent of the client, the attorneys hired a private detective to assist in the preparation of the case. The detective's assignee sued the client to recover the amount alleged to be due from defendant for the detective's services. The trial court found for defendant, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that there was sufficient evidence to support a finding that defendant never authorized her attorneys to employ a detective (50 Cal. App. 251, 255) . The court also stated that an attorney has no implied authority to employ a detective at the expense of the client to assist the attorney in securing evidence and preparing the case for trial, just as an attorney has no implied authority to hire associate counsel at the expense of the client. The detective's fee was over $5,000, and the court stated that the act of the attorneys in making the contract for the payment of such a large sum of money could be deemed within the well-recognized rule that the client is liable for the normal costs of suit (50 Cal. App. 251, 256) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No Implied Authority to Hire Others on Behalf of Client

In Eaton v. Thieme (1936) 15 Cal. App. 2d 458, 59 P.2d 638 , an attorney was hired to prosecute a client's claim to a share in a probate estate. The written contract provided that the attorney would advance money for court costs and other necessary expenses and that his compensation would be a one-third share of the client's recovery. The court of appeal held that the attorney was not entitled to claim the fees of other counsel hired to assist in the case as reimbursable court costs (15 Cal. App. 2d 458, 463-464) .

§ 25.70 Supporting Contention That Attorney-Client Employment Contract Construed in Favor of Client

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

AMBIGUOUS TERMS IN THE EMPLOYMENT CONTRACT BETWEEN PLAINTIFF AND DEFENDANT DRAFTED BY PLAINTIFF ARE CONSTRUED AGAINST PLAINTIFF AND IN FAVOR OF DEFENDANT.

Construction of Contract in Client's Favor. A contract of employment between an attorney and client that is drafted by the attorney will be construed against the attorney and in favor of the client (see Reynolds v. Sorosis Fruit Co. (1901) 133 Cal. 625, 630, 66 P. 21 ; Sayble v. Feinman (1978) 76 Cal. App. 3d 509, 515, 142 Cal. Rptr. 895).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in favor of a client's contention that any ambiguous terms in an attorney-client employment contract drafted by the attorney should be construed against the attorney and in favor of the client. This form may be used when a client objects to the attorney's interpretation of an employment contract in relation to the payment of attorney's fees. It may be used in conjunction with § 25.57 (opposing the contention that an attorney's fees are reasonable), § 25.58 (opposing the contention that an attorney has a valid lien on a judgment or recovery), and § 25.59 (opposing the contention that an attorney is entitled to reimbursement for expenses other than the normal costs of a lawsuit).

The argument supported by the foregoing memorandum would be most likely to arise in support of a client's defense against an attorney's action to collect a stipulated contractual fee, or in support of a client's independent action brought to prevent an attorney from asserting a contractual lien on any judgment or recovery in favor of the client, or on money or property of the client in the attorney's possession that the attorney alleges is due him or her in satisfaction of attorney's fees.

This form may be combined with a form of memorandum relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of construction of the attorney-client contract. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Construction of Contract in Client's Favor

In Reynolds v. Sorosis Fruit Co. (1901) 133 Cal. 625, 66 P. 21 , plaintiff attorney entered into a written contract with a client in which the attorney agreed to advise the client on certain matters and to make four trips, if necessary, for the sum of $400, the final payment to be made when the business was successfully completed. The attorney advised the client, made the trips, and also commenced several suits on behalf of the client and defended the client in a lawsuit. The client knew of the attorney's additional services in the various lawsuits, but did not request the attorney to institute or conduct the lawsuits and did not expressly promise to pay for such services. The attorney claimed that the reasonable value of his services was $5,000, but the client refused to pay more than the contracted fee of $400. The attorney brought an action to collect the reasonable value of his services, the trial court found in favor of the client, and the attorney appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the parties must abide by the terms of the written contract. The fact that the services performed by plaintiff were reasonably worth more than the price for which he agreed to perform was irrelevant, and plaintiff would not be relieved for making a bad bargain. The Court found that services performed were fairly included within the terms of the contract since the provision that the fee would be paid when the business was successfully concluded could not reasonably be interpreted to refer to "business" as legal advice only (133 Cal. 625, 628-629) . Plaintiff said nothing to the client about any extra charge until the suits had been terminated, and the Court stated that if plaintiff contemplated such charges it would have been only fair to notify the client (133 Cal. 625, 629) . The Court stated that when the written contract between an attorney and client is ambiguous, it is the duty of the attorney to see that the client understands and agrees with the attorney's interpretation of the contract. It is also the attorney's duty to have any contract for further professional services clearly and definitely stated and understood, not only in its language, but also in its spirit, legal consequences, and practical results (133 Cal. 625, 630) .

The facts and procedural background of Sayble v. Feinman (1978) 76 Cal. App. 3d 509, 142 Cal. Rptr. 895 are discussed in § 25.57[3][a]. In that case, the court of appeal held that plaintiff attorneys' interpretation of a contingent fee contract would result in a fee of 80 percent of the client's recovery and that such a construction of the contract would be unfair and unreasonable. Since the attorneys prepared the contract, any ambiguity in it should be construed against them (76 Cal. App. 3d 509, 515) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Construction of Contract in Client's Favor

The facts and procedural background of Jackson v. Campbell (1932) 215 Cal. 103, 8 P.2d 845 are discussed in § 25.57[3][a]. In Jackson, the Supreme Court held that if the language of an attorney-client employment contract is ambiguous, any ambiguity should be resolved in favor of the client and the contract should be given such interpretation as would render it valid, reasonable, conscionable, and enforceable (215 Cal. 103, 106) .

In Bennett v. Potter (1919) 180 Cal. 736, 183 P. 156 , the Supreme Court found that the provisions of an attorney-client employment contract regarding compensation were uncertain and ambiguous. The Court reiterated the rule that an ambiguous contract is interpreted most strongly against the party who caused the uncertainty to exist. Since the attorney had drawn up the contract, any ambiguity would be interpreted against him. The Court stated that this rule of interpretation is accentuated by the fact that the plaintiffs were attorneys at law and presumably familiar with legal terms and proceedings and accustomed to the use of language appropriate to the framing of contracts, while the defendant was a business man with no special knowledge of, or familiarity with, these subjects (180 Cal. 736, 740) .

The facts and procedural background of Abbott v. Hauschild (1952) 113 Cal. App. 2d 383, 248 P.2d 41 are discussed in § 25.51[3][a]. In that case, the court of appeal held that the terms of a written contract were ambiguous in that it was unclear if the client was to pay a 50 percent contingent fee in addition to a reasonable fee, and that any ambiguity in the contract should be construed against the attorney (113 Cal. App. 2d 383, 388) .

§ 25.71 Supporting Contention That Contingent Fees for Medical Malpractice Plaintiff's Attorney Are Limited by Bus. & Prof. Code § 6146--Excessive Fees Retained by Attorney After Settlement, Arbitration, or Judgment

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF IS ENTITLED TO RECOVER FEES RETAINED BY DEFENDANT IN EXCESS OF THE LIMITATIONS SET FORTH IN SECTION 6146 OF THE BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONS CODE, AND THE LIMITATIONS DO NOT VIOLATE THE CONSTITUTIONAL GUARANTEES OF DUE PROCESS, EQUAL PROTECTION, OR SEPARATION OF POWERS.

A. Contingency Fee Limitations. A medical malpractice plaintiff's attorney cannot contract for or collect a contingency fee in excess of the statutory limits (see Bus. & Prof. Code § 6146).

B. Constitutionality of Limitations. The contingency fee limitations set forth in Section 6146 of the Business and Professions Code are constitutional on the grounds of due process, equal protection, and separation of powers (Roa v. Lodi Medical Group, Inc. (1985) 37 Cal. 3d 920, 925-932, 211 Cal. Rptr. 77, 695 P.2d 164).

[Optional] C. Limitations Not Waivable By Client. A client who hires an attorney to prosecute a medical malpractice action cannot waive the provisions of Section 6146 of the Business and Professions Code and thereby cannot agree to a pay a contingency fee in excess of statutory limits. A client who attempts such a waiver is entitled to recover any contingency fees later collected by the attorney in excess of the statutory limits (see Fineberg v. Harney & Moore (1989) 207 Cal. App. 3d 1049, 1055, 255 Cal. Rptr. 299).

[2] Comments

This form may be used by a client to support the contention that the client is entitled to recover fees received by a medical malpractice attorney in excess of the limitations set forth in Bus. & Prof. Code § 6146. The argument supported by the foregoing memorandum may be raised any time the contingent fee contract provides a fee in excess of the limitations. The argument would most likely arise in support of a client's independent action against an attorney to recover fees after a settlement, arbitration, or judgment pursuant to which the attorney received funds on behalf of the client, and retained a portion of those funds as attorney's fees in an excessive amount according to statute. For example, this form could be used in support of plaintiff's motion for summary judgment, asserting that, as a matter of law, the fees were excessive and should be distributed to the client.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Therefore, counsel should discuss the terms of the contingent fee contract, the amount awarded by settlement, arbitration, or judgment, and the portion thereof retained by the attorney. Counsel should apply the percentages set forth in Bus. & Prof. Code § 6146 to the amount of plaintiff's recovery, and show that the fees under the contract are in excess of the statutory limitations.

This form may be combined in a memorandum relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of fee limitations under Bus. & Prof. Code § 6146. This form may also be adapted for use in trial or appellate brief.

For further discussion of Bus. & Prof. Code § 6146, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 72, Attorney Practice and Ethics and Ch. 414, Physicians and Other Medical Personnel (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Contingency Fee Limitations

Bus. & Prof. Code § 6146 provides that an attorney shall not contract for or collect a contingency fee for representing any persons seeking damages in connection with an action for injury or damage against a health care provider based on that person's alleged professional negligence in excess of the following limits: (1) forty percent of the first $50,000 recovered; (2) thirty-three and one-third percent of the next $50,000; (3) twenty-five percent of the next $500,000; and (4) fifteen percent of any amount on which the recovery exceeds $600,000.

[b] Constitutionality of Limitations

In Roa v. Lodi Medical Group, Inc. (1985) 37 Cal. 3d 920, 211 Cal. Rptr. 77, 695 P.2d 164 , plaintiffs brought a medical malpractice action individually and on behalf of their minor child for damages sustained at his birth. The court approved a settlement in the action. Plaintiffs requested that the court approve payment of fees to their attorney from the net proceeds of the settlement in an amount pursuant to a contingency fee arrangement that was in excess of the limitations set forth in Bus. & Prof. Code § 6146. Plaintiffs' attorneys filed memoranda asserting that Bus. & Prof. Code § 6146 was unconstitutional on the grounds that it denies due process and equal protection, and violates the separation of powers doctrine. The trial court rejected the constitutional challenges and awarded fees within the statutory limitations. Plaintiffs appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed the order. It rejected the challenge on due process grounds by holding that Bus. & Prof. Code § 6146 does not abrogate the right to retain counsel, but simply limits the compensation that an attorney may obtain in representing an injured party under a contingency fee arrangement (37 Cal. 3d 920, 926) . It further held that legislative ceilings on attorney's fees generally are neither constitutionally suspect nor subject to strict judicial scrutiny (37 Cal. 3d 920, 927) . With respect to the particular fee schedule of Bus. & Prof. Code § 6146, the Court held that the limitations were not unusually low when compared to fees authorized by other statutory fee schemes, and that the sliding scale nature of the schedule did not create a conflict of interest problem by encouraging the attorney to settle cases quickly (37 Cal. 3d 920, 927-929) . In rejecting the challenge on the ground of denial of equal protection, the Court held that the fee limitations are rationally related to the objectives of the legislative scheme to curb medical malpractice premiums, as well as the possible additional objectives to deter institution of frivolous suits or seek unrealistic settlements, and to protect the diminishing compensation of malpractice plaintiffs (37 Cal. 3d 920, 930-933) . Bus. & Prof. Code § 6146 does not violate the separation of powers doctrine because the Legislature has the power to impose limits on attorney's fees, and the determination of fees is not within the sole province of the judicial branch (37 Cal. 3d 920, 933) .

[c] Limitations Not Waivable by Client

In Fineberg v. Harney & Moore (1989) 207 Cal. App. 3d 1049, 255 Cal. Rptr. 299 , plaintiff agreed to "waive" the provisions of Bus. & Prof. Code § 6146 if defendant attorneys would represent him in a medical malpractice action. The fee agreement, in contravention of Bus. & Prof. Code § 6146, provided that defendants would take a flat 40 percent contingency fee. On the settlement of the malpractice action, the attorneys took 40 percent of the recovery in accordance with the fee agreement. Plaintiff then requested a refund in the amount of the 40 percent fee that exceeded the amount permitted by Bus. & Prof. Code § 6146. The defendants refused to refund the excess amount, and plaintiff filed suit against them. The trial court entered judgment in favor of defendants, ruling that there was no public policy factor pertaining to the limitations on contingency fee agreements set forth in Bus. & Prof. Code § 6146, and that plaintiff waived the protection of the statute. The plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court concluded that there is nothing in the statutory scheme or its legislative history indicating that the Legislature intended to permit waiver of the provisions of Bus. & Prof. Code § 6146 by parties to a contingency agreement in a medical malpractice case. It noted that Bus. & Prof. Code § 6146 is a part of the Medical Compensation Reform Act of 1975 (MICRA), which was enacted to reduce medical malpractice insurance premium costs and thereby ensure continued delivery of quality health care to California citizens. Because the purpose of MICRA is a public purpose, Civ. Code § 3315, providing that "a law established for a public reason cannot be contravened by private agreement," would preclude waiver of the fee limitations in Bus. & Prof. Code § 6146 (207 Cal. App. 3d 1049, 1055) .

[a] Contingency Fee Limitations

In Yates v. Law Offices of Samuel Shore (1991) 229 Cal. App. 3d 583, 280 Cal. Rptr. 316 , an attorney who successfully represented six heirs in a wrongful death action based on medical malpractice divided the recovery amount into six equal shares and applied the Bus. & Prof. Code § 6146 percentages to each. The attorney also charged the clients for moneys paid to an outside attorney he engaged to handle the wrongful death appeal at an hourly rate. The court of appeal affirmed a trial court judgment providing the clients with reimbursement for a portion of the fees paid, holding that the Bus. & Prof. Code § 6146 sliding-scale formula should have been applied to the entire recovery in the wrongful death case, not separately to each client (229 Cal. App. 3d 583, 588-590) . In addition, the attorney could not charge additional fees for the appeal; the statutory limitations may not be avoided by charging separate fees for segments of the case or by charging both contingent and hourly fees (229 Cal. App. 3d 583, 591-592) .

In Schneider v. Kaiser Foundation Hospitals (1989) 215 Cal. App. 3d 1311, 264 Cal. Rptr. 227 , a medical malpractice case, the court of appeal reversed the judgment of the trial court with directions to correct an arbitration award and to confirm the corrected award. The initial award included periodic payments but neglected to place a total value on the award for purposes of calculating the attorney's contingent fee, as required by Bus. & Prof. Code § 6146(b). Plaintiff's attorney requested the arbitration panel to amend the award to reflect that value; the panel did, albeit erroneously, by basing the value of the award on the arithmetic sum of the periodic payments. The court of appeal held that the appropriate measure of the recovery, for purposes of determining the contingent fee, is the present value of the future periodic payments, not the arithmetic sum of all future payments required by the award (215 Cal. App. 3d 1311, 1314)

In Hathaway v. Baldwin Park Community Hospital (1986) 186 Cal. App. 3d 1247, 231 Cal. Rptr. 334 , a medical malpractice case, plaintiffs' attorney hired two other attorneys for consultation and trial purposes. The trial court rejected plaintiffs' petition seeking either to compensate their attorney at a higher rate than that allowed under Bus. & Prof. Code § 6146, or to voluntarily pay the attorney hired to conduct the trial. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that a trial court does not have the power to award extraordinary attorney's fees under Bus. & Prof. Code § 6146, since the Legislature, in enacting MICRA, intended to preclude that possibility (186 Cal. App. 3d 1247, 1253) .

[b] Constitutionality of Limitations

The facts and procedural background of Fineberg v. Harney & Moore (1989) 207 Cal. App. 3d 1049, 255 Cal. Rptr. 299 are discussed in § 25.71[3][c]. In Fineberg, the court of appeal rejected an argument by defendants that the Bus. & Prof. Code § 6146 fee limitations at the time of its representation of plaintiff would preclude retention by injured persons of adequate counsel. Defendants contended that no lawyer would undertake the representation of medical malpractice plaintiffs under the statutory fee limitation, but the court found this assumption to be purely speculative. Defendants also contended that lawyers engaged in the representation of medical malpractice plaintiffs might lower the standard of representation afforded such clients because of the fee limitation; the court also rejected this assumption, on the ground that it assumed a willingness on the part of medical malpractice lawyers, as a group, to violate their duty to their clients (207 Cal. App. 3d 1049, 1054-1055) .

§ 25.72 Supporting Contention That Client May Assert Attorney's Malpractice as Offset to Attorney's Fee Claim

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF MAY ASSERT HIS/HER/ITS LEGAL MALPRACTICE CLAIM AS AN OFFSET AGAINST DEFENDANT'S CLAIM FOR ATTORNEY'S FEES[, EVEN THOUGH PLAINTIFF WOULD BE BARRED BY THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS FROM BRINGING THE MALPRACTICE CLAIM IN AN INDEPENDENT ACTION AGAINST THE ATTORNEY].

Attorney Malpractice as Offset to Fee Claim. If an attorney's fee claim coexisted with a client's legal malpractice claim against the attorney at a time when neither claim would have been barred by the statute of limitations, the client may assert the attorney's malpractice as a defense in his or her answer to the attorney's complaint for recovery of fees. If the statute of limitations has run on the malpractice claim at the time the answer was filed, the malpractice claim may nevertheless be allowed up to an amount not exceeding the amount of fees found to be owing to the attorney (see Safine v. Sinnott (1993) 15 Cal. App. 4th 614, 618-619, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 52 ; Code Civ. Proc. § 431.70).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted by an attorney's client in support of the contention that the client's legal malpractice claim against the attorney should be permitted as an offset against any fees found to be owing to the attorney. If both the malpractice claim and the fee claim coexisted at a time when neither was barred by the statute of limitations, the malpractice claim may be allowed as an offset against any fees due, even if the malpractice claim was barred by the statute of limitations at the time it was alleged in the client's answer to the fee claim [see Safine v. Sinnott (1993) 15 Cal. App. 4th 614, 618-619, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 52 ; Code Civ. Proc. § 431.70].

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should refer to facts showing that the client has a valid legal malpractice claim against the attorney and that this claim coexisted with the attorney's fee claim at a time when neither was barred by the statute of limitations. For memoranda pertaining to legal malpractice, see Ch. 24A, Attorneys at Law: Malpractice .

This form may be combined with memoranda pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel is raising the issue of the offsetting legal malpractice claim, such as a plaintiff-attorney's demurrer or motion for summary judgment asserting that a defendant-client's cross complaint for legal malpractice is barred by the statute of limitations. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Attorney Malpractice as Offset to Fee Claim

In Safine v. Sinnott (1993) 15 Cal. App. 4th 614, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 52 , plaintiff attorney filed an action against his client for legal fees and costs incurred while representing the defendant client in a civil action. The defendant client cross complained for damages resulting from plaintiff's alleged negligence in handling the underlying action. The trial court apparently found for both parties and subtracted the attorney's fee claim from the malpractice claim, entering a net judgment for the defendant client. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal agreed with plaintiff that the malpractice cross claim was barred by the statute of limitations (15 Cal. App. 4th 614, 617-618) . The court also ruled, however, that the client was not entirely without recourse. Code Civ. Proc. § 431.70, the court observed, provides that when cross-demands for money have existed between persons at any point in time when neither demand was barred by the statute of limitations, and an action is later commenced by one such person, the other person may assert in the answer the defense of payment in that the two demands are compensated so far as they equal each other, even though an independent action would, at the time of filing the answer, be barred by the statute of limitations. Section 431.70 further provides that if the cross-demand would otherwise be barred by the statute of limitations, the relief provided under that section may not exceed the value of the relief granted to the other party (15 Cal. App. 4th 614, 618) . The court noted that in this case, the defendant-client's answer included the affirmative defense that the plaintiff-attorney was indebted to defendant. The court noted that plaintiff's fee claim and defendant's malpractice claim coexisted at a time when neither was barred by the statute of limitations and that the trial court had determined that the value of defendant's claim was greater than the value of plaintiff's claim. Therefore, under Code Civ. Proc. § 431.70, although defendant could not maintain an independent action against plaintiff to recover money damages from plaintiff (because the malpractice claim was barred by the statute of limitations), defendant was entitled to have plaintiff's claim against him offset by his claim against plaintiff. Thus, the court concluded, defendant was not entitled to recover anything from plaintiff, and plaintiff was not entitled to recover anything from defendant. The court ordered the judgment modified to reflect this conclusion (15 Cal. App. 4th 614, 618-619) .

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DISMISSAL OF PLAINTIFF'S ACTION PURSUANT TO SECTION 6201(a) OF THE BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONS CODE IS PROPER BECAUSE PLAINTIFF FAILED TO FORWARD TO DEFENDANT A WRITTEN NOTICE CONCERNING THE RIGHT TO ARBITRATION EITHER BEFORE OR AT THE TIME OF SERVICE OF SUMMONS.

A. Dismissal for Failure to Provide Notice of Right to Arbitration. An attorney must forward a written notice to the client prior to or at the time of service of summons in an action against the client for recovery of fees, costs, or both, covered by Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 6200-6206. The written notice must be in such form as prescribed by the State Bar Board of Governors, and must include a statement of the client's right to arbitration under Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 6200-6206. Failure to provide this notice is ground for dismissal of the action (Cal. State B. Rules Proc. Hearing Fee Arb., Rule 4.0; see Bus. & Prof. Code § 6201(a)). However, the notice shall not be required prior to initiating mediation of the dispute (Bus. & Prof. Code § 6201(a)).

[Optional] B. Notice of Right to Arbitration Ineffective Where Given Before Actual Fee Dispute Arises. A notice of right to arbitration given by an attorney to a client pursuant to Bus. & Prof. Code § 6201(a) is effective only if given after an actual fee dispute has arisen between the attorney and client (Huang v. Cheng (1998) 66 Cal. App. 4th 1230, 1234, 78 Cal. Rptr. 2d 550).

[Optional] C. Notice of Right to Arbitration Must be Given to Attorney's Debtor on Account of Services. Where a person other than the client has agreed to pay the client's legal bills, and has become the attorney's debtor on account of legal services, notice under Bus. & Prof. Code § 6201(a) must be given by the attorney to that person (Wager v. Mirzayance (1998) 67 Cal. App. 4th 1187, 1190).

[2] Comments

This memorandum may be used in support of the contention that dismissal of an attorney's action for recovery of fees, costs, or both, is proper because the attorney failed to serve the client with a written notice of the client's right to arbitrate. The argument supported by this form may be raised in support of a motion to dismiss.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law raised. Thus, counsel should insert facts showing that the attorney failed to forward to the client (or any person responsible for payment of the client's fees) written notice of the right to arbitration before at the time of service of summons.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Attorney's Failure to Provide Notice Does Not Deprive Court of Jurisdiction

Counsel should note that an attorney's failure to provide a client with notice of the client's right to arbitration (as required by Bus. & Prof. Code § 6201) does not deprive the court of jurisdiction over the attorney's action to recover fees or costs. Dismissal for failure to provide the notice required under Bus. & Prof. C. § 6201(a) is discretionary rather than mandatory [Law Offices of Dixon R. Howell v. Valley (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 1076, 1086-1091, 29 Cal. Rptr. 3d 499] . The burden is on the defendant-client to move for dismissal based on the plaintiff-attorney's failure to give the required notice [Aheroni v. Maxwell (1988) 205 Cal. App. 3d 284, 294-295, 252 Cal. Rptr. 369 (finding that trial court had jurisdiction in fee action to enter default judgment against client, notwithstanding lack of notice)].

[b] Notice of Right to Arbitration Ineffective Where Given Before Actual Fee Dispute Arises

In Huang v. Cheng (1998) 66 Cal. App. 4th 1230, 1234, 78 Cal. Rptr. 2d 550 , the trial court dismissed an attorney's action to collect fees, based on the attorney's failure to comply with Bus. & Prof. Code § 6201(a), which requires that an attorney provide notice of a client's right to arbitrate a fee dispute to the client "prior to or at the time" of service of summons or claim in a fee action against the client. Here, the attorney sent his clients a notice of right to arbitrate more than two years prior to filing his fee action against them.

The court of appeal affirmed the dismissal, holding that Bus. & Prof. Code § 6201(a) requires attorneys to give notice to clients of their right to arbitrate only after an actual fee dispute has arisen between the attorney and client (66 Cal. App. 4th 1230, 1234) . The court determined that this interpretation of the statutory language "prior to or at the time" of service of summons or claim was the only reasonable interpretation given the legislature's apparent purpose to ensure the fair resolution of attorney-client fee disputes (66 Cal. App. 4th 1230, 1234) . The attorney's fee action was properly dismissed, because although the attorney had, upon ending representation, sent his clients a notice of the right to arbitrate, the actual fee dispute did not arise until later, at which point the attorney filed his fee action against his clients without providing notice of their right to arbitrate the fee dispute.

[c] Notice of Right to Arbitration Must be Given to Attorney's Debtor on Account of Services

In Wager v. Mirzayance (1998) 67 Cal. App. 4th 1187 , the trial court dismissed an attorney's action to collect fees and costs against a husband and wife who signed an agreement with the attorney to be responsible for paying the attorney's fees and costs in defending their son on a murder charge, on the basis that the attorney failed to provide notice to the couple of their right to arbitrate their fee dispute as required by Bus. & Prof. Code § 6201(a). The trial court determined that the attorney's lawsuit was "an action against the client" within the meaning of Bus. & Prof. Code § 6201(a) and, as such, the attorney was required to provide the couple with notice of their right to arbitrate under Section 6201 (67 Cal. App. 4th 1187, 1189) .

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that where a person other than the client has agreed to pay the client's legal bills, and has become the attorney's debtor on account of legal services, notice of the right to arbitrate must be given by the attorney to that person pursuant to Bus. & Prof. Code § 6201(a) (67 Cal. App. 4th 1187, 1190) .

No Entitlement to Mandatory Fee Arbitration When Claim or Dispute Is of Type Excluded by Statute. Sections 6200 to 6206 of the Business and Professions Code, permitting a client to compel arbitration of a fee or cost dispute with an attorney, do not apply to any of the following: (1) disputes in which a member of the State Bar of California is also admitted to practice in another jurisdiction or in which an attorney is only admitted to practice in another jurisdiction, and he or she maintains no office in California, and no material portion of the services was rendered in California; (2) claims for affirmative relief against the attorney for damages or otherwise based on alleged malpractice or professional misconduct; or (3) disputes in which the fee or cost to be paid by the client or on his or her behalf has been determined pursuant to statute or court order (Bus. & Prof. Code § 6200(b)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of memorandum may be submitted in support of a contention that an attorney-client fee or cost dispute is not subject to arbitration under Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 6200-6206.

The contention may be asserted in support of a motion to vacate a stay of an action, when the action has been automatically stayed pending fee arbitration [see Bus. & Prof. Code § 6201(c)], or in support of an attorney's reply to a client's request for arbitration [see Cal. State B. Rules Proc. for Hearing Fee Arb., Rule 17.0].

The contention may also be used to oppose a client's motion to dismiss an action for fees or costs, when the motion is made on the ground that the attorney failed to provide notice to the client of the client's right to arbitration [see Bus. & Prof. Code § 6201(a) and § 25.73]. No notice of the right to arbitration is required to be provided to the client when the fee action is one of the types of actions excepted from mandatory arbitration under Bus. & Prof. Code § 6200(b) [see Bus. & Prof. Code § 6201(a) (stating that notice must be provided in action for fees covered by the provisions of Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 6200-6206)].

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law raised.

[b] Evidence Relating to Claims of Malpractice and Professional Conduct

Claims for malpractice and professional misconduct are generally excluded from mandatory fee arbitration under Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 6200-6206, except as provided under Bus. & Prof. Code § 6203(a) [Bus. & Prof. Code § 6200(b)(2)]. Bus. & Prof. Code § 6203(a) provides that evidence relating to claims of malpractice and professional misconduct is admissible only to the extent that those claims bear on the fees, costs, or both, to which the attorney is entitled. The arbitrators may not award affirmative relief in the form of damages or offset or otherwise, for injuries underlying any claim [Bus. & Prof. Code § 6203(a); see also Bus. & Prof. Code § 6201(d) (client waives right to arbitrate when he or she seeks affirmative relief based on alleged malpractice or professional misconduct)]. The exclusion of claims for damages does not prevent the award to a client of a refund of unearned fees, costs, or both, previously paid to the attorney [Bus. & Prof. Code § 6203(a)].

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used by an attorney to support the contention that a client has waived the right to mandatory fee arbitration. They may be used to oppose a client's motion to confirm an arbitration award, or to support a motion to vacate an arbitration award, when the award was made following a waiver by the client of the right to arbitrate. In addition, they may be used to support a motion to vacate a stay of the attorney's action for fees or costs.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Client Sought Judicial Resolution of Fee Dispute or Other Affirmative Relief

In Juodakis v. Wolfrum (1986) 177 Cal. App. 3d 587, 223 Cal. Rptr. 95 , plaintiff-client requested arbitration of a fee that he had paid to defendant attorney some time earlier. Arbitration was commenced pursuant to plaintiff's request. Before any award had been announced in the proceeding, plaintiff filed a complaint against defendant alleging negligence, intentional tort, and breach of contract, all arising out of a relationship based on the sued-on fee agreement. Several months later, the arbitration panel ordered defendant to refund part of the fee to plaintiff. Plaintiff noticed a petition to confirm the arbitration award. Defendant asked that the award be vacated, arguing that, pursuant to Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 6200(a), 6201(d), the arbitration panel had no jurisdiction to conduct any proceedings after plaintiff had filed his complaint. After a hearing, the trial court ordered the award vacated as required by Bus. & Prof. Code § 6201(d). Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. It first noted the applicability of Bus. & Prof. Code § 6201(d), which provides that a client waives the right to maintain a State Bar arbitration by commencing or filing a pleading seeking "judicial resolution of a fee dispute," or "affirmative relief against the attorney for damages" (177 Cal. App. 3d 587, 591) . The court distinguished Manatt, Phelps, Rothenberg & Tunney v. Lawrence (1984) 151 Cal. App. 3d 1165, 199 Cal. Rptr. 246 , a case in which the clients tried to use Bus. & Prof. Code § 6201(d) to relieve them of the fee arbitration that they had requested after their attorneys had filed a judicial action to collect their fees (discussed in § 25.76[3][b]). In the instant case, Bus. & Prof. Code 6201(d) was invoked by the attorney as a defense to an arbitration that he had not requested. There was no attempt by the attorney here, as there was by the clients in Manatt, to have "two bites at the same apple at the same time." Thus, the court concluded that the decision in Manatt was not relevant to the instant case. Plaintiff also at tempted to rely on Reisman v. Shahverdian (1984) 153 Cal. App. 3d 1074, 201 Cal. Rptr. 194 , which stated that State Bar arbitration is a nonjudicial alternative to dispute resolution whether the arbitration occurs before a lawsuit is filed or after a lawsuit is stayed or ceased. The court of appeal stated that such language is consistent with the trial court's finding that plaintiff waived the arbitration by filing his suit. Plaintiff also contended that his filing of the suit against defendant was not inconsistent with his intent to proceed with arbitration, because the proceedings involved different issues and remedies. The court rejected this argument, noting that the quality of defendant's services was involved in both proceedings, in that plaintiff claimed at the arbitration hearing that he was entitled to a refund of the entire fee because he received no benefit from defendant's services. Furthermore, the issue of intent is irrelevant to a waiver under Bus. & Prof. Code § 6201(d), because a waiver occurs when the client files the complaint, irrespective of his or her intention in doing so (177 Cal. App. 3d 587, 592) .

In Law Offices of Dixon R. Howell v. Valley (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 1076, 29 Cal. Rptr. 3d 499 , a law firm filed a complaint for fees against a client. The complaint alleged that the client executed a promissory note in favor of the law firm and breached the obligations under the note. The client filed a general denial to the complaint and included an affirmative defense that the law firm was estopped from obtaining any recovery because it failed to comply with Bus. & Prof. C. § 6201(a). The trial court dismissed the law firm's complaint on this ground, holding that it had no discretion and that dismissal was mandatory under this ground.

The court of appeals reversed. It held that dismissal for a law firm's failure to send notice of arbitration rights under Bus. & Prof. C. § 6201(a) was discretionary, not mandatory (129 Cal. App. 4th 1076, 1086-1091) . The court of appeal held that a client could waive its right to arbitrate an attorney's fees dispute even if the client did not receive the notice. The court held that the following nonstatutory factors may determine whether a client has waived its arbitration rights (129 Cal. App. 4th 1076, 1097) :

(1) Whether the party's actions are inconsistent with the right to arbitrate;

(2) Whether the litigation machinery has been substantially invoked and the parties were well into preparation of a lawsuit before the party notified the opposing party of an intent to arbitrate;

(3) Whether a party either requested arbitration enforcement close to the trial date or delayed for a long period before seeking a stay;

(4) Whether important intervening steps, such as taking advantage of judicial discovery procedures not available in arbitration, had taken place; and

(5) Whether the delay affected, misled, or prejudiced the opposing party.

Looking at those factors, the court of appeal held that the client had waived its rights to arbitrate.

Lawrence (1984) 151 Cal. App. 3d 1165, 1172-1175, 199 Cal. Rptr. 246*).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be used in support of the contention that a client, once he or she has opted for binding arbitration of a fee dispute, may not transfer the case to a trial court by filing a pleading seeking affirmative relief.

The argument supported by the form may be used in opposition to a motion to lift a stay on judicial proceedings. It may also be used in support of a motion to strike a client's pleading seeking affirmative relief. For general memoranda supporting motions to strike, see Ch. 160, Motions to Strike .

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Counsel should point out that the client initially sought the arbitration. In addition, the argument may indicate that the client only sought redress in the courts when it appeared that the arbitration would not turn out favorably to him or her.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Arbitrator May Continue Arbitration Proceedings When Client Attempts to File Pleading Seeking Affirmative Relief

Manatt, Phelps, Rothenberg & Tunney v. Lawrence (1984) 151 Cal. App. 3d 1165, 199 Cal. Rptr. 246 involved a fee dispute between plaintiff law firm and defendant clients. Initially, plaintiff brought an action for recovery of fees against the defendants. Defendants requested binding arbitration of the dispute, pursuant to Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 6200-6206. The court stayed the judicial proceedings pending resolution of the arbitration proceeding. Several months into the arbitration process, following two arbitration hearings, defendants purported to file an answer and cross complaint in the judicial action that had been stayed pending arbitration, seeking damages based on various causes of action in tort. Defendants notified the arbitration panel of this filing, and asserting that they considered the arbitration matter to be terminated. The arbitrators rejected defendant's attempt to stop arbitration, and held two more hearings, finally issuing an award in favor of plaintiff. Meanwhile, the trial court granted plaintiff's motion to strike defendant's purported answer and cross complaint. Plaintiff filed a petition in superior court to confirm the arbitrator's award. Defendants filed a petition to vacate the award and a motion for leave to file a cross complaint. The court granted the petition to confirm the arbitration award and denied defendant's petition and motion. Judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff. Defendants appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. Reviewing a challenge by defendant to the authority of the arbitration panel to decide that the arbitration was not terminated, the court found that the panel clearly had authority to make a determination concerning its jurisdiction. Furthermore, the court concluded that the arbitrator did not accord an irrational construction to Bus. & Prof. Code § 6201(d). Defendant's interpretation of Bus. & Prof. Code § 6201(d) would allow a client to withdraw unilaterally from arbitration proceedings by filing a pleading seeking affirmative relief against the attorney in superior court, even though the client had requested and begun arbitration, had agreed that arbitration of the fee dispute would be binding, and had filed the pleading only after the arbitrators had received evidence in the form of testimony and documents. Such a procedure, the court said, would rob the fee arbitration of any potential for fairness. A client has the statutory right to compel an attorney to arbitrate a fee dispute. If the client also has the power to force the attorney back to court at any time during the arbitration proceeding, a client who is dissatisfied with or uneasy or fearful of an apparent unfavorable outcome of the arbitration simply could file a pleading for affirmative relief and start over in the superior court to try for a better result under a claim that he had "waived" his or her right to arbitrate. The court determined this result to be unreasonable (151 Cal. App. 3d 1165, 1171) .

[b] Court May Decline to Terminate Arbitration Proceedings When Client Attempts to File Pleading Seeking Affirmative Relief

The facts and procedural background of Manatt, Phelps, Rothenberg & Tunney v. Lawrence (1984) 151 Cal. App. 3d 1165, 199 Cal. Rptr. 246 are discussed in § 25.76[3][a]. In Manatt, the defendant clients, who had originally requested arbitration, sought termination of arbitration by a motion directed to the superior court to lift the stay on the superior court action and to remove the cause from arbitration. The trial court had refused to terminate the arbitration. The court of appeal found that the trial court had the authority to terminate the arbitration proceedings if it found the matter not amenable to arbitration (151 Cal. App. 3d 1165, 1172-1173) . However, the appellate court could find no abuse of judicial discretion in the trial court's refusal to terminate the arbitration (151 Cal. App. 3d 1165, 1174) . The court of appeal noted that claims of waiver are closely scrutinized, arbitration is strongly favored, and every intendment should be indulged to give effect to arbitration proceedings (151 Cal. App. 3d 1165, 1173) . It stated that it was appropriate to consider defendants as having waived their right to return to the trial court prior to the end of the arbitration they elected to invoke and sought to make binding on plaintiff (151 Cal. App. 3d 1165, 1174) . The court rejected defendants' argument that denial of their motion to terminate the arbitration was contrary to the purposes of the arbitration statutes (151 Cal. App. 3d 1165, 1174-1175) .

§ 25.77 Supporting Contention That Relief From Fee Arbitration Award Under Code Civ. Proc. § 473 Is Proper

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

RELIEF SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE THE _____ [AWARD or JUDGMENT] WAS TAKEN AGAINST _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] THROUGH _____ [PLAINTIFF'S or DEFENDANT'S] _____ [insert ground(s) for relief pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 473, e.g., MISTAKE].

Relief From Fee Arbitration Award Available. Relief from a fee arbitration award may be granted pursuant to Section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure if the award was taken against the moving party through his or her mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect (Simpson v. Williams (1987) 192 Cal. App. 3d 285, 290-291, 238 Cal. Rptr. 566).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be used to support the contention that a fee arbitration award made pursuant to Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 6200-6206 may be vacated when it was based on mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect. The argument may be used in support of a motion to vacate a fee arbitration award, or in opposition to a motion to confirm an arbitration award.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

CAUTION:
Rule Has Been Criticized. Counsel should note that at least one later case criticized and rejected the rule stated in this form, that relief from a fee arbitration award may be available under Code

Civ. Proc. § 473*, if the award was taken against the moving party through his or her mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect [see Shiver, McGrane & Martin v. Littell (1990) 217 Cal. App. 3d 1041, 1047-1049, 266 Cal. Rptr. 298] . In Shiver, the court noted that the California Supreme Court, in Pressler v. Donald L. Bren Co. (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 831, 834 n.5, 187 Cal. Rptr. 449, 654 P.2d 219 found Code Civ. Proc. § 473 inapplicable in the context of an appeal from arbitration under the Labor Code. The court in Shiver criticized the opinion in Simpson v. Williams (1987) 192 Cal. App. 3d 285, 290-291, 238 Cal. Rptr. 566 , as being "supported by little analysis" and noted that Simpson failed to distinguish or otherwise account for the conflicting Pressler opinion [see Shiver, McGrane & Martin v. Littell (1990) 217 Cal. App. 3d 1041, 1049, 266 Cal. Rptr. 298 (First Appellate District)] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Relief From Fee Arbitration Award Available

Simpson v. Williams (1987) 192 Cal. App. 3d 285, 238 Cal. Rptr. 566 involved an attorney's attempt to challenge a fee arbitration award that was entered in his client's favor. Thirty-one days after the mailing of the notice of the award, the attorney filed an action for declaratory relief challenging the award. The client petitioned to confirm the arbitrator's award, alleging that the attorney's filing was one day late under Bus. & Prof. Code § 6204, which required filing suit "within 30 days after mailing of the award" (now see Bus. & Prof. Code § 6204(c), requiring filing suit within 30 days after "service" of notice of award) The attorney argued that Code Civ. Proc. § 1013 (extension of time when service is by mail) extended the filing deadline under Bus. & Prof. Code § 6204 by five days. The trial court disagreed, holding that Code Civ. Proc. § 1013 does not extend the 30-day limit of Bus. & Prof. Code § 6204. The trial court granted the client's motion to confirm the award.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that, although Code Civ. Proc. § 1013 did not extend the 30-day limit in Bus. & Prof. Code § 6204, the court excused the attorney's late filing based on Code Civ. Proc. § 473 (relief from judgment for mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect) (192 Cal. App. 3d 285, 288-289, 291) . The court could find no justification for denying relief under Code Civ. Proc. § 473 in the general context of mandatory fee arbitration. It further determined that relief was proper in the instant case, due to the attorney's mistaken interpretation of Code Civ. Proc. § 1013 (192 Cal. App. 3d 285, 290-291) .

§ 30.01 Scope of Chapter

This chapter contains memoranda of points and authorities governing the discharge of personal liability in bankruptcy. It includes forms for contentions supporting and opposing various issues, both procedural and substantive, relating to dischargeability.

Part A of the forms [see §§ 30.20, 30.21], contains points and authorities addressing the jurisdiction of state courts and bankruptcy courts to determine dischargeability and the time within which determinations of dischargeablility of particular types of debts must be sought. These forms also contain the statutory descriptions of each type of dischargeable debt.

Part B of the forms [see §§ 30.40 -30.42] addresses the remedies available to a debtor for a creditor's attempt to enforce or collect a discharged debt, including points and authorities supporting and opposing contentions that the order of discharge constitutes a permanent injunction against collection of discharged debts and that monetary sanctions may be awarded to the debtor for a creditor's violation of the discharge order.

Part C of the forms [see §§ 30.60 -30.74] addresses the substantive elements necessary to establish dischargeability of specific debts enumerated in 11 U.S.C. § 523(a). It includes memoranda of points and authorities supporting and opposing various contentions that dischargeability has been established in a particular situation: e.g., whether debt was timely and properly scheduled; whether debt arose from fiduciary defalcation; whether debt represents property settlement obligations in marital dissolutions, spousal or child support obligations, or nonmarital support obligations; whether debt represents liability for malicious and willful injury, or arises from restitution orders in criminal cases, and whether a particular type of punitive damage award is dischargeable.

For corresponding discussion and forms relating to dischargeability and other bankruptcy issues that may arise in state court actions, see Ch. 94, Bankruptcy , in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender). § 30.02 Governing Law

[1] Discharge in General

Discharges in Chapter 7, 11, 12, and 13 bankruptcies are governed by 11 U.S.C. §§ 727, 1141(d), 1228, and 1328, respectively. The types of debts that remain undischarged differ depending on the chapter, and in a Chapter 12 or 13 case, depending on whether the plan was completed or the debtor obtained a hardship discharge despite failure to complete payments under the plan. The effect of discharge is set forth in 11 U.S.C. § 524. Nondischargeable debts are enumerated at 11 U.S.C. §§ 523(a) and (b), 1141(d)(2) and (3), 1228, and 1328. Jurisdiction to determine dischargeability is governed by 11 U.S.C. § 523, 28 U.S.C. §§ 157(a) and (b)(2)(I), 1334, and 1452, and Fed. R. Bankr. P., Rule 4007. Bankruptcy does not discharge valid liens [American Improvement Co. v. Lilienthal (1919) 43 Cal. App. 80, 84, 184 P. 692 ; see Dewsnup v. Timm (1992) 502 U.S. 410, 417-419, 112 S. Ct. 773, 116 L. Ed. 2d 66 (creditor's right to foreclose that remains after discharge of debtor's personal liability on debt in Chapter 7 case as includable in Chapter 13 plan)]. The scope of discharge is broad and includes contingent and unliquidated claims.

[2] Discharge in Chapter 7 Cases

A discharge under Chapter 7 discharges an individual debtor from all debts that arose before the date of the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, except any debt of the type specified as nondischargeable by 11 U.S.C. § 523(a) [11 U.S.C. § 727(b)].

Only an individual may be discharged from debt in a Chapter 7 case [11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(1); see N.L.R.B. v. Better Bldg. Supply Corp. (9th Cir. 1988) 837 F.2d 377, 379 (corporate debt not dischargeable in Chapter 7, and survives against corporation or corporation's alter ego that resumes operations)].

[3] Discharge in Chapter 11 Cases

The provisions of a confirmed Chapter 11 plan bind all creditors, whether or not their claims are impaired by the plan and whether or not they accepted the plan [11 U.S.C. § 1141(a); see 11 U.S.C. § 1141(d)(2), (3) (exceptions)].

Except as otherwise provided for in the plan, or the order confirming it, the confirmation of a plan in a Chapter 11 case discharges the debtor from all debts that arose before the date of the confirmation and debts of the types specified in 11 U.S.C. § 502(g) (claim arising from rejection of executory contract or unexpired lease after filing of petition), 11 U.S.C. § 502(h) (claim arising from recovery of property after filing of petition), and 11 U.S.C. § 502(i) (claim for taxes arising after filing of petition) [11 U.S.C. § 1141(d)(1)]. However, confirmation does not discharge an individual debtor from any debt excepted from discharge by 11 U.S.C. § 523 [11 U.S.C. § 1141(d)(2)]. Confirmation does not discharge a debtor if [11 U.S.C. § 1141(d)(3)]:

- The plan provides for liquidation of all or substantially all of the property of the estate;
- The debtor does not engage in business after the consummation of the plan; and
- The debtor would be denied a discharge under 11 U.S.C. § 727(a) if the case were brought under Chapter 7.

The court can approve a written waiver of discharge executed by a debtor in a Chapter 11 case [11 U.S.C. § 1141(d)(4)].

In a case in which the debtor is an individual, confirmation of the plan does not discharge any debt provided for in the plan until the court grants a discharge on completion of all payments under the plan, unless after notice and a hearing the court orders otherwise for cause [11 U.S.C. § 1141(d)(5)(A)]. However, at any time after the confirmation of the plan, and after notice and a hearing, the court may grant a discharge to a debtor who has not completed payments under the plan if the value, as of the effective date of the plan, of property actually distributed under the plan on account of each allowed unsecured claim is not less than the amount that would have been paid on that claim if the estate of the debtor had been liquidated under Chapter 7 on that date, provided modification of the plan under 11 U.S.C. § 1127 is not practicable [11 U.S.C. § 1141(d)(5)(B)].

The confirmation of a plan does not discharge a debtor that is a corporation from any debt of a kind specified in 11 U.S.C. § 523(2)(A) or (B) (fraud) that is owed to a domestic governmental unit, or owed to a person as the result of an action filed under 31 U.S.C. § 3721 et seq. (claims against the federal government) or any similar state statute. The corporation also is not discharged from any debt for a tax or customs duty with respect to which the corporation made a fraudulent return or willfully attempted in any manner to evade or to defeat [11 U.S.C. § 1141(d)(6)].

[4] Discharge in Chapter 12 Cases

A Chapter 12 discharge does not discharge debts specified in 11 U.S.C. § 523(a) [11 U.S.C. § 1228(a), (c)]. If the debtor completed all payments under a Chapter 12 plan, other than those provided for under 11 U.S.C. § 1222(b)(5) (debts on which the last payment is due after the date on which the final payment under the plan is due) or 11 U.S.C. § 1222(b)(9) (revesting), the order of discharge discharges the debtor from all debts provided for by the plan allowed under 11 U.S.C. § 503 or disallowed under 11 U.S.C. § 502, except any debt specified nondischargeable by 11 U.S.C. § 523(a) and those provided for in 11 U.S.C. § 1222(b)(5) and (9). In the case of a debtor who is required by a judicial or administrative order, or by statute, to pay a domestic support obligation, the debtor must certify that all amounts payable under that order or statute and due on or before the date of the certification (including amounts due before the petition was filed, but only to the extent provided for by the plan) have been paid [11 U.S.C. § 1228(a)].

A "hardship discharge" under 11 U.S.C. § 1228(b) discharges the debtor from all unsecured debts provided for by the plan or disallowed under 11 U.S.C. § 502, except any debt of a type specified as nondischargeable by 11 U.S.C. §

523(a) and those provided for under 11 U.S.C. § 1222(b)(5) and (9) [11 U.S.C. § 1228(c)].

In any case, on request of a party in interest before one year after a discharge under 11 U.S.C. § 1228 is granted, and after notice and a hearing, the court may revoke the discharge if it was obtained by the debtor through fraud and if the requesting party did not know of the fraud until after the discharge was granted [11 U.S.C. § 1228(d)].

The court can approve a written waiver of discharge executed by a debtor in a Chapter 12 case [see 11 U.S.C. § 1228(a)].

[5] Discharge in Chapter 13 Cases

If the debtor has completed all payments under a Chapter 13 plan, the order of discharge discharges the debtor from all debts provided for by the plan or disallowed under 11 U.S.C. § 502, except the following [11 U.S.C. § 1328(a)]:

- Debts provided for under 11 U.S.C. § 1322(b)(5) (debts on which the last payment is due after the date on which the final payment under the plan is due).

- Debts specified nondischargeable by 11 U.S.C. § 507(a)(8)(C) (a tax required to be collected or withheld and for which the debtor is liable in whatever capacity) and by 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(1)(B) and (C), (2)-(5), (8) and (9) [see §§ 30.20, 30.21].

- Debts for restitution included in a sentence on the debtor's conviction of a crime [see H.R. Rep. No. 681(I), 101st Cong., 2d Sess. (1990) (amendment making restitution nondischargeable in Chapter 13 case was intended to abrogate Pennsylvania Dep't of Public Welfare v. Davenport (1990) 495 U.S. 552, 556-567, 110 S. Ct. 2126, 109 L. Ed. 2d 588 , and thus effectively annuls People v. Goulart (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 71, 85, 273 Cal. Rptr. 477 , which followed Davenport)].

- Debts for restitution, or damages, awarded in a civil action against the debtor as a result of willful or malicious injury by the debtor that caused personal injury to an individual or the death of an individual.

A "hardship discharge" under 11 U.S.C. § 1328(b) discharges the debtor from all unsecured debts provided for by the plan or disallowed under 11 U.S.C. § 502, except any debt of a type specified as nondischargeable by*11 U.S.C. § 523(a)* and those provided for under 11 U.S.C. § 1322(b)(5) [11 U.S.C. § 1328(c)].

In the case of a debtor who is required by a judicial or administrative order, or by statute, to pay a domestic support obligation, the debtor must certify that all amounts payable under that order or statute and due on or before the date of the certification (including amounts due before the petition was filed, but only to the extent provided for by the plan) have been paid [11 U.S.C. § 1328(a)].

Notwithstanding any other provision of 11 U.S.C. § 1328, a discharge does not discharge the debtor from any debt based on an allowed claim filed under 11 U.S.C. § 1305(a)(2) if prior approval by the trustee of the debtor's incurring the debt was practicable and was not obtained [11 U.S.C. § 1328(d)].

The court can approve a written waiver of discharge executed by a debtor in a Chapter 13 case [see 11 U.S.C. § 1328(a)].

§ 30.03 Definitions

[1] Claim and Community Claim

"Claim" is a right to payment or a right to an equitable remedy for breach of performance if the breach gives rise to a right to payment, whether that right is reduced to judgment, liquidated, unliquidated, fixed, contingent, matured, unmatured, disputed, undisputed, legal, equitable, secured, or unsecured [11 U.S.C. § 101(5)]. A "community claim" is one that arose before the commencement of the case and for which community property of the debtor or the debtor's spouse is liable, even if no community property actually exists at the commencement of the case [11 U.S.C. §§ 101(7), 541(a)(2)].

[2] Creditor

"Creditor" means an entity that has a claim of the following type [11 U.S.C. § 101(10)]:

- A claim against the debtor that arose at the time of or before the order for relief concerning the debtor, which in a voluntary case, is the same date as that of the filing of the petition [11 U.S.C. §§ 301(b), 302(a)];

- A claim against the estate arising under 11 U.S.C. §§ 348(d) and 502(f)-(i) (conversion of case; involuntary case; rejection of executory contract or unexpired lease; recovery of property including avoidance of preferential transfers and setoffs; post-petition tax claims); or

- A community claim.

"Claim against the debtor" includes a claim against the property of the debtor [11 U.S.C. § 102(2)].

[3] Debt and Consumer Debt

"Debt" means liability on a claim [11 U.S.C. § 101(12)]. A "consumer debt" is a debt incurred by an individual primarily for a personal, family, or household purpose [11 U.S.C. § 101(8)].

[4] Debtor

A "debtor" is a person or municipality concerning which a case under Title 11 has been commenced [11 U.S.C. § 101(13)].

[5] Order for Relief

In a voluntary case, the terms "order for relief" and "entry of an order for relief" are synonymous with the commencement of the case. A voluntary case is commenced by the filing of the petition [11 U.S.C. §§ 102(6), 301(a), 302(a)]. An involuntary case is commenced by the filing of a petition by the proposed debtor's creditors. That petition is served on the proposed debtor, who may answer or acquiesce. If the debtor does not answer or after it has been established at trial that the case should proceed, an actual order for relief is entered [11 U.S.C. § 303(b), (d), (h)].

[1] Page Limits on Points and Authorities

One of the more significant drafting requirements to keep in mind are page limits: supporting and opposing memoranda may not exceed 15 pages. A reply or closing memorandum may not exceed 10 pages. Exhibits, declarations, attachments, the table of contents, the table of authorities, and the proof of service are excluded from these page limits [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113(d)]. Any party must obtain leave of court to file a longer memorandum [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113(e)]. These and other drafting requirements are discussed in further detail in Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[2] Using the Forms to Build a Draft Memorandum

The forms in this chapter are contentions based on procedural and substantive points of the law of dischargeability in bankruptcy. The contentions may be combined with each other, as appropriate, according to the facts of the case. Substantive contentions may be combined with procedural contentions, depending on the context in which the argument is raised. A contention supporting a particular proposition may also be used to oppose the proposition. For instance, although § 30.60 supports the contention that a certain debt was discharged because it was properly scheduled, the same authorities may be used with factual evidence that the debt was not properly scheduled, to oppose the contention that the debt was discharged.

When appropriate under the circumstances of the particular case, the contentions in this chapter may be used to support or oppose a specific motion or request. For example, in state court, discharge could be asserted by a debtor in a motion to recall and quash execution of a judgment obtained by a creditor on a debt subsequently discharged in bankruptcy, or, in a creditor's action on the debt, by motion for summary judgment. In bankruptcy court, dischargeability is most likely to be raised by a complaint to determine dischargeability or by a motion to reopen a case to allow filing of such a complaint. In addition, the contentions in this chapter may be combined, when appropriate, with points and authorities from other chapters supporting or opposing specific procedures, such as demurrers or motions for summary judgment [see, e.g., Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings , and Ch. 221, Summary Judgments]. Finally, the contentions may be adapted for use in a trial or an appellate brief.

For a discussion of how to use the forms in this chapter to draft a memorandum of points or authorities or a trial or appellate brief, and for a sample of a complete memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

§ 30.20 Supporting Contention That Debt Is Nondischargeable and That State Court Has Concurrent Jurisdiction to Determine Dischargeability of Debts [11 U.S.C. § 523]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE DEBT IN QUESTION IS ONE FOR _____ [specify, e.g., CHILD SUPPORT], WHICH IS NONDISCHARGEABLE UNDER PARAGRAPH _____ [specify, e.g., (5)] OF SECTION 523(a) OF TITLE 11 OF THE UNITED STATES CODE, AND THE STATE COURT HAS JURISDICTION TO DETERMINE DISCHARGEABILITY.

A. Concurrent State Court Jurisdiction. State courts have concurrent jurisdiction with the bankruptcy court to determine the dischargeability of any debt except a debt of the kinds specified in Section 523(c)(1) of Title 11 of the United States Code, under which the bankruptcy court has exclusive jurisdiction to determine the dischargeability of a debt for fraud or deception, a debt for fiduciary fraud, embezzlement, or larceny, or a debt for willful and malicious injury to a person or property (see 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2), (4), (6)). When there is concurrent jurisdiction, contests to dischargeability can be brought in either an appropriate state court or the bankruptcy court [and can be brought before or after discharge has been granted to the debtor] (In re Aldrich (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1983) 9 Collier Bankr. Cas. 2d 1073, 1077-1078, 34 B.R. 776, 780) .

[Optional] B. Taxes and Customs Duties. The following taxes or customs duties are nondischargeable in bankruptcy (11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(1)):

1. Those of the kind and for the periods specified in Paragraphs (3) and (8) of Section 507(a) of Title 11 of the United States Code (priority of payment of claims in bankruptcy), whether or not a claim for such tax was filed or allowed.

2. Those with respect to which a return, or equivalent report or notice, if required, either was not filed or given, or was filed or given after its due date (including any extensions) and after two years before the date of the filing of the petition in bankruptcy.

3. Those with respect to which the debtor made a fraudulent return or willfully attempted in any manner to evade or defeat the tax.

[Optional] C. Unscheduled or Improperly Scheduled Debts. A debt is excepted from discharge in bankruptcy if it was neither listed nor scheduled under Section 521(a)(1) of Title 11 of the United States Code, with the name, if known to the debtor, of the creditor to whom such debt is owed, in time to permit timely filing of a proof of claim _____ [if debt is one specified at 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2), (4), or (6), add: and, if the debt is of a kind specified in Paragraph (2), (4), or (6) of Section 523(a) of Title 11 of the United States Code, timely request for a determination of dischargeability of the debt], unless the creditor had notice or actual knowledge of the case in time for such timely filing [and request] (11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(3)).

[Optional] D. Domestic Support. A debt for domestic support is not dischargeable in bankruptcy (11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(5)). Such a debt is one that accrues before, on, or after the date of the order for relief in a bankruptcy case, including interest that accrues on that debt as provided under applicable nonbankruptcy law notwithstanding any other provision of the Bankruptcy Code, and that meets the following four criteria (11 U.S.C. § 101(14A)):

1. It is owed to or recoverable by either a governmental unit or a spouse, former spouse, or child of the debtor or such child's parent, legal guardian, or responsible relative.

2. It is in the nature of alimony, maintenance, or support (including assistance provided by a governmental unit) of that spouse, former spouse, or child of the debtor or that child's parent, without regard to whether the debt is expressly so designated.

3. It is established or subject to establishment before, on, or after the date of the order for relief in a bankruptcy case by reason of applicable provisions of a separation agreement, divorce decree, or property settlement agreement, or of an order of a court of record, or of a determination made in accordance with applicable nonbankruptcy law by a governmental unit.

4. It is not assigned to a nongovernmental entity, unless the obligation is assigned voluntarily by the spouse, former spouse, child of the debtor, or that child's parent, legal guardian, or responsible relative for the purpose of collecting the debt. Thus, a domestic support debt is dischargeable to the extent that it was assigned to a nongovernmental entity, except for a voluntary assignment for collection, but is not dischargeable to the extent that it was assigned to a governmental entity (see In re Marriage of Henderson (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 531, 533-534, 275 Cal. Rptr. 226).

[Optional] E. Fines, Penalties, and Forfeitures. A debt is nondischargeable in bankruptcy to the extent that it is for a fine, penalty, or forfeiture payable to and for the benefit of a governmental unit, and is not compensation for actual pecuniary loss [if debt is tax penalty, continue as applicable: other than a tax penalty _____ (relating to a tax of a kind not specified in Paragraph (1) of Section 523(a) of Title 11 of the United States Code and/or imposed with respect to a transaction or event that occurred before three years before the date of the filing of the petition in bankruptcy)] (11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(7)).

[Optional] F. Student Loans. Unless excepting the debt from discharge would impose an undue hardship on the debtor and the debtor's dependents, a debt is nondischargeable if it is for either (1) an educational benefit overpayment or loan made, insured, or guaranteed by a governmental unit, or made under any program funded in whole or in part by a governmental unit or nonprofit institution, (2) an obligation to repay funds received as an educational benefit, scholarship, or stipend, or (3) any other educational loan that is a qualified education loan, as defined in Section 221(d)(1) of the Internal Revenue Code, incurred by a debtor who is an individual (11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(8); see In re Nunn (9th Cir. 1986) 788 F.2d 617, 618-619 (payments during applicable pre-petition period do not prohibit discharge)).

[Optional] G. Liability From Drunk Driving or Piloting. A debt for death or personal injury caused by the debtor's operation of a motor vehicle, vessel, or aircraft is nondischargeable if that operation was unlawful because the debtor was intoxicated from using alcohol, a drug, or another substance (11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(9); see In re Hudson (9th Cir. 1988) 859 F.2d 1418, 1419 (even under prior law, pre-petition judgment not required in order to have declared nondischargeable a debt arising from damages caused by drunk driving)).

[Optional] H. Debts Not Discharged in Prior Bankruptcy. A debt that was or could have been listed or scheduled by the debtor in a prior bankruptcy case concerning the debtor is nondischargeable if in the prior case the debtor waived discharge or was denied a discharge under Paragraph (2) through (7) of Section 727(a) of Title 11 of the United States Code or under Paragraphs (1)-(4), (6), or (7) of Section 14c of the Bankruptcy Act (11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(10)).

[Optional] I. Marital Settlement Debts. A debt is not dischargeable to the extent that it is owed to a spouse, former spouse, or child of the debtor, and is not a debt for domestic support (see 11 U.S.C. §§ 101(14A), 523(a)(5)), provided it was incurred by the debtor in the course of a divorce or separation or in connection with a separation agreement, divorce decree or other order of a court of record, or a determination made in accordance with State or territorial law by a governmental unit (11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(15)).

[Optional] J. Housing Association Fees and Assessments. A debt for a fee or assessment that becomes due and payable, after the order for relief, to a membership association with respect to the debtor's interest in _____ [a unit that has condominium ownership or a share of a cooperative housing corporation or a lot in a homeowners association] is nondischargeable for as long as the debtor or the trustee has a legal, equitable, or possessory ownership interest in that _____ [unit or corporation or lot] (11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(16)).

[Optional] K. Court Filing Fees and Costs Imposed on Prisoner. A debt for a fee imposed on a prisoner by any court for the filing of a case, motion, complaint, or appeal, or for other costs and expenses assessed with respect to such a filing, is nondischargeable, _____ [add, if appropriate: regardless of an assertion of poverty by the debtor under Section 1915(b) or (f)(2) of Title 28 of the United States Code or a similar nonfederal law and] regardless of the debtor's status as a prisoner, as defined in Section 1915(h) of Title 28 of the United States Code or a similar nonfederal law] (11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(17)).

[Optional] L. Loan Repayable to Retirement Plan. A debt is not dischargeable if it is owed to a pension, profit-sharing, stock bonus, or other plan established under Section 401, 403, 408, 408A, 414, 457, or 501(c) of the Internal Revenue Code under either (1) a loan permitted under Section 408(b)(1) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act or subject to Section 72(p) of the Internal Revenue Code or (2) a loan from a thrift savings plan that satisfies the requirements of Section 8433(g) of Title 5 of the United States Code (11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(18)).

[Optional] M. Securities Fraud. A debt is nondischargeable if it is for violation of any of the federal securities laws (as that term is defined in Paragraph (47) of Section 78(a) of Title 15 of the United States Code), any of the state securities laws, or any regulation or order issued under a federal or state securities law, or is for common law fraud, deceit, or manipulation in connection with the purchase or sale of any security, and, in either case, the debt resulted, before, on, or after the date on which the petition was filed, from a judgment, order, consent order, or decree entered in a federal or state judicial or administrative proceeding, or from a settlement agreement entered into by the debtor, or from a court or administrative order for damages, fine, penalty, citation, restitutionary payment, disgorgement payment, attorney's fee, cost, or other payment owed by the debtor [11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(19)].

[Optional] N. Both Compensatory and Punitive Damages Nondischargeable. The statutory exceptions to dischargeability are measured by the nature of the act and apply to all liability resulting from the act. Both compensatory and punitive damages are nondischargeable [under Paragraphs (6) and (9) of Section 523(a) of Title 11 of the United States Code] (In re Adams (9th Cir. 1985) 761 F.2d 1422, 1427-1428) .

[Optional] O. Debtor's Initial Burden of Proof. [See § 30.60, Paragraph E.]

[Optional] P. Creditor's Burden of Proof. [See § 30.60, Paragraph F.]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the state court has jurisdiction to determine dischargeability of debts other than debts described in 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2), (4), and (6), that is, other than debts for fraud or deception, debts for fiduciary fraud, embezzlement, or larceny, and debts for willful and malicious injury to a person or property, and that the debt is nondischargeable. Counsel may combine Paragraph A with the optional paragraph setting forth the criteria for nondischargeability of the particular debt in question.

There are additional types of debts with respect to which state courts have concurrent jurisdiction to make determinations of dischargeability:

- Liabilities arising from any act of fraud or defalcation while acting in a fiduciary capacity committed with respect to any depository institution or insured credit union [11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(11)];

- Liabilities for malicious or reckless failure to fulfill any commitment to a federal depository institution's regulatory agency to maintain the capital of an insured depository institution [11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(12)];

- Liabilities arising from an order of restitution issued under Title 18 of the United States Code [11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(13)];

- Liabilities incurred to pay delinquent taxes to the United States that would be nondischargeable [11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(14); see 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(1) (taxes that are nondischargeable)];

- Debts incurred to pay a tax to a governmental unit, other than the United States, that would be nondischargeable [11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(14A); see 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(1) (taxes that are nondischargeable)]; and

- Debts incurred to pay fines or penalties imposed under federal election law [11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(14B)].

Counsel should insert argument showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should describe the debt in question and any judgment or agreement from which it arises. The factual description should cover each element necessary to establish nondischargeability, or if these points and authorities are being used to support the contention that the debt in question has been discharged, the factual description and argument should emphasize the nondischargeability criteria that have not been satisfied.

The authority in optional Paragraph N applies only to punitive damages based on debts that are nondischargeable under 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(6) (willful and malicious injury) or 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(9) (operating a motor vehicle, vessel, or aircraft while intoxicated). Punitive damages based on fraud (11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2)) are dischargeable; for discussion and authorities, see § 30.61. For additional authorities addressing nondischargeability of debts based on willful and malicious injury, see § 30.71.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue that the state court has jurisdiction to determine nondischargeability. Counsel should also point out that the dischargeability of the particular debt was not determined in the bankruptcy court because such a determination would be res judicata [Martin v. Martin (1970) 2 Cal. 3d 752, 759 n.9, 87 Cal. Rptr. 526, 470 P.2d 662] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Concurrent State Court Jurisdiction

The 1974 dissolution agreement of parties to the adversary proceeding in In re Aldrich (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1983) 9 Collier Bankr. Cas. 2d 1073, 34 B.R. 776 , provided that the creditor spouse would receive $1 per month as support from the debtor spouse, that each spouse had a half interest in certain real properties in Maine and New Hampshire, and that the creditor spouse had a 36-percent interest in the debtor spouse's military pension and was to receive 36 percent of each monthly payment of those benefits. The debtor spouse sold the real properties without the consent of the creditor spouse, who commenced an action in state court for damages for breach of the property settlement agreement. Thereafter, the debtor spouse filed a Chapter 7 petition in bankruptcy. The creditor spouse filed an order to show cause in the state dissolution action to require that the military retirement arrearages be brought current. The debtor spouse brought an adversary proceeding in the bankruptcy court to enforce the automatic stay of 11 U.S.C. § 362 to enjoin the state court proceedings. The bankruptcy court stayed the state court damage action and the state court proceeding for arrearages, but granted the creditor spouse relief from the stay in order to determine entitlement to future retirement benefits in state court.

The creditor spouse then filed an adversary proceeding in the bankruptcy court to have the conveyances of the real properties set aside as fraudulent or placed in a resulting trust or to have the proceeds of those conveyances placed in a constructive trust and for orders that the debts for failure to pay the retirement benefits and for wrongful conveyance of the real properties were nondischargeable. After discharge was granted, the debtor spouse moved in the bankruptcy court to enjoin further state proceedings. On the hearing of that motion, the stay was lifted as to any and all state court proceedings in which the creditor spouse was pursuing any action arising out of the dissolution. The debtor appealed the lifting of the stay.

The Bankruptcy Appellate Panel (hereinafter B.A.P.) for the Ninth Circuit reversed the order and remanded for proceedings consistent with its decision. In reversing, the B.A.P. first reviewed the jurisdiction of both the state court and the bankruptcy court to determine dischargeability, saying that 11 U.S.C. § 523(c)(1) gives the bankruptcy courts exclusive jurisdiction to determine dischargeability of debts enumerated at 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2), (4), and (6) (fraud or deception; fiduciary fraud, embezzlement, or larceny; willful and malicious injury to person or property). With respect to all other subsections of 11 U.S.C. § 523(a), the bankruptcy court has concurrent rather than exclusive jurisdiction to determine whether a debt is excepted from discharge. When there is concurrent jurisdiction, contests to dischargeability can be brought in either an appropriate state court or in the bankruptcy court and can be brought before or after discharge has been granted to the debtor (34 B.R. 776, 780) .

Next, the B.A.P. noted that after discharge had been granted, the bankruptcy court no longer had jurisdiction to lift the stay of 11 U.S.C. § 362. The stay imposed by that section was no longer applicable, but had been replaced by the stay of 11 U.S.C. § 524 on the date discharge was ordered (34 B.R. 776, 780) . If the creditor spouse's claim of nondischargeability were based solely on 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(5) (domestic support), the state court had concurrent jurisdiction with the bankruptcy court and could proceed on that basis even after entry of the discharge (34 B.R. 776, 781) . Despite the seeming specificity of the dissolution decree, the retirement benefit payments could in actuality be support and alimony (34 B.R. 776, 780-781) . Similarly, entitlement to the benefit payments accruing after bankruptcy was a state court matter (34 B.R. 776, 781) .

The B.A.P. said that the basis of the claim to the real property or its proceeds was not clear, but if it was based on 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2), (4), or (6), the bankruptcy court would have exclusive jurisdiction to determine dischargeability (34 B.R. 776, 781) . The B.A.P. concluded that interests of judicial economy were best served by consideration of all grounds of dischargeability in the bankruptcy court on remand (34 B.R. 776, 781-782) .

[b] Domestic Support

The court of appeal in In re Marriage of Henderson (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 531, 275 Cal. Rptr. 226 , affirmed a judgment renewing a county's judgment against appellant but remanded for recalculation of the amount owing. On dissolution of appellant's marriage, appellant had been ordered to pay $50 per month child support directly to the "Humboldt County Family Trust Fund." By May 1981, the county had a judgment against appellant for $13,250 in arrearages. Appellant filed Chapter 7 bankruptcy in September 1981, and listed the county as an unsecured creditor without priority. Appellant was granted discharge in the Chapter 7 case, and when the county sought to renew its judgment in 1989, appellant sought to vacate the renewal on the ground that the obligation had been discharged. Some of it had been satisfied through payments, but the judgment was renewed. The court of appeal noted that under 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(5) even debts for child support that have been assigned to a state or political subdivision are nondischargeable (225 Cal. App. 3d 531, 533-534) .

[c] Student Loans

In In re Nunn (9th Cir. 1986) 788 F.2d 617 , the bankruptcy court denied discharge of the debtor's student loan under former 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(8)(A), holding that a five-year period referred to in that statute began when the last payment was actually made. (Under former 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(8), which applied before May 28, 1991, the first payment could not have come due within five years before the petition was filed.) In this case, the first installment had come due more than five years before the filing of the bankruptcy petition, but the debtor had made installment payments within two years prior to filing bankruptcy. The district court had reversed in part, allowing discharge only of those installments that had come due more than five years before the filing of the bankruptcy case.

The Ninth Circuit reversed, adopting the majority position that the entire unpaid loan balance, not just those installments that came due within five years immediately before filing of bankruptcy petition, is dischargeable if the first installment came due more than five years before date of filing of petition (788 F.2d 617, 618-619) .

[d] Liability From Drunk Driving or Piloting

Before November 15, 1990, 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(9) specified that in order for liability for driving while intoxicated to be nondischargeable, it had to be based on a judgment or consent decree and on operation of a motor vehicle while legally intoxicated. Nevertheless, in the Ninth Circuit, this requirement was not strictly construed [see In re Hudson (9th Cir. 1988) 859 F.2d 1418, 1419-1424 (discussed below)].

Before the original enactment of 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(9) in 1984, liability arising from the operation of a motor vehicle while intoxicated was nondischargeable under 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(6) if it could be shown that the injury was willfully and maliciously inflicted. For discussion on 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(6), see § 30.21. For authorities describing the standard for determining when an act is willful and malicious, see § 30.71.

In In re Hudson (9th Cir. 1988) 859 F.2d 1418 , the debtor filed a Chapter 7 bankruptcy petition the day before a pending drunk driving lawsuit against him was to be tried. The drunk driving lawsuit was stayed. The debtor filed a complaint to determine dischargeability of the drunk driving claim. The bankruptcy court held that the debt arising from the drunk driving claim would be discharged because 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(9), by its literal terms, exempts from discharge only those drunk driving claims that have been reduced to judgment before the filing of bankruptcy. The Bankruptcy Appellate Panel affirmed the bankruptcy court's decision. The plaintiffs in the drunk driving suit appealed the decision in their capacity as creditors of the bankruptcy estate.

The Ninth Circuit reversed. It noted that the instant case was the first time a federal appeals court had been called on to interpret the dischargeability provision of 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(9) (859 F.2d 1418, 1419) . The court examined the construction that other bankruptcy courts had given to 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(9), and found that these courts uniformly followed the rule that a drunk driving claim need not be reduced to judgment before the debtor files for bankruptcy, in order for the debt to be declared nondischargeable under 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(9). Any other conclusion, noted these courts, would encourage a drunk driver to file preemptively for bankruptcy once it became clear that he or she would be held civilly accountable for his or her actions (859 F.2d 1418, 1420-1421) . The court of appeals also examined the legislative history of 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(9), and found that Congress had drafted the statute to deter drunk driving, to ensure that those who caused injury by driving drunk did not escape civil liability through the bankruptcy laws, and to protect the victims of drunk driving. The appellate panel's interpretation of 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(9), noted the court, would advance none of these legislative goals (859 F.2d 1418, 1423) . The court remanded the case for further proceedings consistent with its opinion that a pre-petition judgment is not required for having a drunk driving-related debt declared nondischargeable (859 F.2d 1418, 1424) .

[e] Both Compensatory and Punitive Damages Nondischargeable

In re Adams (9th Cir. 1985) 761 F.2d 1422 considered the standard for nondischargeability under 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(6) of liability for injuries inflicted by a debtor who was driving while intoxicated, which, before the effective date of the 1984 amendments, was the only basis on which drunk driving liability was nondischargeable. The injuries involved were inflicted in 1979, and the complaint to determine dischargeability was filed in 1983. The district court found the liability to be nondischargeable. The debtor appealed, and the court of appeals affirmed.

Appellant contended that because punitive damages are designed to punish a wrongdoer for conduct that is intentional, willful, and malicious, only punitive damages are nondischargeable. The court quoted from Coen v. Zick (9th Cir. 1972) 458 F.2d 326, 329-330 , to the effect that the statutory exceptions to dischargeability are measured by the nature of the act and apply to all liability resulting from the act. The court concluded that both compensatory and punitive damages were subject to the findings of nondischargeability, whether pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(6) or (9) (761 F.2d 1422, 1427-1428) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Domestic Support

In Leibowitz v. County of Orange (In re Leibowitz) (9th Cir. 2000) 217 F.3d 799 , the appellant was an absent parent who owed money to the county for child support payments made by the county prior to the entry of a child support order. He filed a Chapter 7 bankruptcy petition, listing the county as a creditor. After the bankruptcy court granted him a discharge of all dischargeable debts, he filed a complaint seeking to determine whether his reimbursement debt to the county was dischargeable. The county moved for summary judgment, arguing that recent amendments to the Bankruptcy Code rendered the debt nondischargeable. Specifically, the county cited former 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(18), which prohibited the discharge of a debt owed under state law to a municipality, if the debt is "in the nature of support" and "enforceable under Part D of title IV of the Social Security Act." (The nondischargeability of such a debt is now covered, with more-general language, in 11 U.S.C. §§ 101(14A) and 523(a)(5).) The parent opposed the motion, arguing that his debt to the county was neither "in the nature of support" nor enforceable under Title IV-D. The bankruptcy court granted the county's motion for summary judgment. On appeal to the bankruptcy appellate panel, the parent reasserted his arguments. The panel rejected those arguments, and the parent appealed. The Ninth Circuit affirmed. The court noted that in Visness v. Contra Costa County (9th Cir. 1995) 57 F.3d 775 and In re Ramirez (9th Cir. 1986) 795 F.2d 1494 , an absent parent was held entitled to have such a debt discharged. However, in the Welfare Reform Act [Pub. L. No. 105-33 (Aug. 5, 1997)], Congress changed the bankruptcy and welfare laws to provide that a bankrupt debtor may not discharge a debt that is (1) owed under state law; (2) owed to a state or municipality; (3) in the nature of support; and (4) enforceable under Title IV-D of the Social Security Act (217 F.3d 799, 802-803) . That subsequent legislation led the court to conclude that now an absent parent who owes money to the county for child support payments is not entitled to discharge any portion of the debt, including the portion that may have accumulated before the entry of a court order (217 F.3d 799, 800) . The debt was "in the nature of support" even though it was no longer owed to the former spouse or children, since it derived from AFDC payments made to the former spouse and children (217 F.3d 799, 803-804) .

Because Title IV-D established a general framework for the collection and enforcement of child and spousal support debts by the states, it was unclear what Congress meant by the term "enforceable under Part D of Title IV" in former 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(18). No other circuit had yet addressed the issue, and it was one of first impression before the Ninth Circuit (217 F.3d 799, 804) . The parent argued that a debt is enforceable under Title IV-D only if it falls within the parameters of 11 U.S.C. § 656(a)(1). The court of appeals held that a debt need not meet the criteria of 11 U.S.C. § 656(a) in order to be enforceable under Title IV-D. 11 U.S.C. § 656(a) is one of 21 sections within Title IV-D, and nothing in the language of the Welfare Reform Act or in the legislative history suggests that when Congress said "enforceable under Part D of Title IV," it really meant "enforceable under one small section of Title IV-D." The court said, "Indeed, it is hard to believe that Congress would use such broad language to refer to such a narrow provision. We think the more plausible interpretation is that when Congress used the term 'enforceable under Part D of Title IV,' it was referring to the type of debts the states are instructed to enforce and collect under Title IV-D, namely, debts for child and spousal support. This interpretation is more consistent with the broad language used by Congress and is supported by several structural characteristics of Title IV-D" (217 F.3d 799, 805) . Explaining one of those characteristics, the court said, "If Congress had intended this provision to apply only to debts that are enforceable under section 656(a), it seems likely [that Congress] would have used the language 'enforceable under this section.' But instead, Congress referred to debts that are 'enforceable under this part.' This is strong evidence that Congress intended to include all child and spousal support debts that the states are instructed to collect and enforce under Part D of Title IV" (217 F.3d 799, 806) .

In County of Santa Cruz v. Cervantes (In re Cervantes) (9th Cir. 2000) 219 F.3d 955 , the court extended the rationale of Leibowitz v. County of Orange, discussed above, to a proceeding under Chapter 13 of the Bankruptcy Code. The debtor sought discharge of a debt owed to the county for pre-judgment AFDC payments, on the ground that governing provisions in Chapter 13 failed to make the debt nondischargeable. The bankruptcy court accepted that argument and granted the debtor's motion for summary judgment on the issue, which a bankruptcy appellate panel upheld on a procedural technicality. The county appealed. The Ninth Circuit reversed on the procedural technicality and reversed on the substantive issue. Although the governing Chapter 13 provisions might be construed as the debtor argued, those provisions do not exclusively control. The Social Security Act, as amended, provides that debts of the kind in question (debts "in the nature of support" and "enforceable under this part [Title IV-D]"), in other words, debts owed to counties for pre-judgment AFDC payments, are "not released by a discharge in bankruptcy under title 11 of the United States Code" (42 U.S.C. § 656(b)). Bankruptcy courts may not ignore that provision simply because it is not in the Bankruptcy Code. That provision is an independent basis on which to find a child-support debt nondischargeable in any bankruptcy proceeding (219 F.3d 955, 962) .

§ 30.21 Supporting Contention That Debt Is Nondischargeable and That Bankruptcy Court Has Exclusive Jurisdiction to Determine Dischargeability of Debts [11 U.S.C. § 523]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE DEBT IN QUESTION IS BASED ON _____ [specify, e.g., FIDUCIARY DEFALCATION], WHICH IS NONDISCHARGEABLE UNDER PARAGRAPH _____ [specify, e.g., (4)] OF SECTION 523(a) OF TITLE 11 OF THE UNITED STATES CODE, AND THE BANKRUPTCY COURT THEREFORE HAS EXCLUSIVE JURISDICTION TO DETERMINE DISCHARGEABILITY.

A. Bankruptcy Court Jurisdiction. District courts have original but not exclusive jurisdiction of all civil proceedings arising under, in, or related to cases under the Bankruptcy Code. Both bankruptcy cases and proceedings arising under, in, or related to them may be referred by the district court to the bankruptcy court, which has jurisdiction to enter final judgments only in bankruptcy cases and "core proceedings." A proceeding to determine the dischargeability of a particular debt is a core proceeding (28 U.S.C. §§ 157(b)(1), (2)(I), 1334(a), (b)).

B. Bankruptcy Court's Exclusive Jurisdiction. The bankruptcy courts have exclusive jurisdiction to determine dischargeability of debts enumerated at Section 523(a)(2), (4), and (6) of Title 11 of the United States Code, that is, debts for fraud or deception, debts for fiduciary fraud, embezzlement, or larceny, and debts for willful and malicious injury to a person or property (11 U.S.C. § 523(c)(1); In re Houtman (9th Cir. 1978) 568 F.2d 651, 653 ; In re Aldrich (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1983) 9 Collier Bankr. Cas. 2d 1073, 34 B.R. 776, 779).

[Optional] C. Fraud. A debt for money, property, services, or an extension, renewal, or refinancing of credit is not dischargeable in bankruptcy to the extent obtained by false pretenses, a false representation, or actual fraud, other than a statement respecting the debtor's or insider's financial condition (11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2)(A); see Cohen v. De La Cruz (1998) 523 U.S. 213, 217-219, 118 S. Ct. 1212, 140 L. Ed. 2d 341 (phrase "to the extent obtained by" in 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2)(A) modifies "money, property, services, or ...#x2026; credit", not "any debt", so that exception encompasses "any debt ...#x2026; for money, property, [etc.], to the extent [that the money, property, etc., was] obtained by" fraud; phrase thereby makes clear that share of money, property, or whatever that was so obtained gives rise to nondischargeable debt); Field v. Mans (1995) 516 U.S. 59, 74-75, 116 S. Ct. 437, 133 L. Ed. 2d 351 (test of fraud is debtor's "justifiable reliance")).

[If debtor engaged in a pre-filing "credit card spree," add:]

[EITHER]

For purposes of Paragraph (2)(A) of Section 523(a) of Title 11 of the United States Code, consumer debts owed to a single creditor and aggregating more than $500 for luxury goods or services incurred by an individual debtor on or within 90 days before the order for relief are presumed to be nondischargeable (11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2)(C)(i)(I)). "Luxury goods or services" do not include goods or services reasonably necessary for the support or maintenance of the debtor or a dependent of the debtor (11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2)(C)(ii)(II)).

[OR]

For purposes of Paragraph (2)(A) of Section 523(a) of Title 11 of the United States Code, cash advances aggregating more than $750 that are extensions of consumer credit under an open end credit plan obtained by an individual debtor on or within 70 days before the order for relief are presumed to be nondischargeable (11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2)(C)(i)(II)). An extension of consumer credit under an open-end credit plan is to be defined in this context as it is defined in Section 103 of the Truth in Lending Act (11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2)(C)(ii)(I)).

[CONTINUE]

[Optional] D. Fraudulent Representation of Financial Condition. A debt for money, property, services, or an extension, renewal, or refinancing of credit is not dischargeable in bankruptcy to the extent obtained by use of a statement in writing that is materially false, respecting the debtor's or an insider's financial condition, on which the creditor to whom the debtor is liable for the money, property, services, or credit justifiably relied, and which the debtor made or caused to be published with intent to deceive (11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2)(B); see Cohen v. De La Cruz (1998) 523 U.S. 213, 217-219, 118 S. Ct. 1212, 140 L. Ed. 2d 341 (phrase "to the extent obtained by" in 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2)(A) modifies "money, property, services, or ...#x2026; credit", not "any debt", so that exception encompasses "any debt ...#x2026; for money, property, [etc.], to the extent [that the money, property, etc., was] obtained by" fraud; phrase thereby makes clear that share of money, property, or whatever that was so obtained gives rise to nondischargeable debt)).

[Optional] E. Fiduciary Defalcation. A debt for fraud or defalcation while acting in a fiduciary capacity, embezzlement, or larceny is not dischargeable in bankruptcy (11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(4)).

[Optional] F. Willful and Malicious Injury. A debt for willful and malicious injury by the debtor to another entity or to the property of another entity is not dischargeable in bankruptcy (11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(6)).

[Optional] G. Both Compensatory and Punitive Damages Nondischargeable. [See § 30.20, Paragraph M.]

[Optional] H. Creditor Action Required. Except as provided in Section 523(a)(3)(B) of Title 11 of the United States

Code (unscheduled debts), the debtor is discharged from a debt of the kind specified in Paragraph (2), (4), or (6) of Section 523(a) of Title 11 of the United States Code, unless, on the request of the creditor to whom that debt is owed, and after notice and a hearing, the bankruptcy court determines the debt to be excepted from discharge under Paragraph (2), (4), or (6), as the case may be (11 U.S.C. § 523(c)(1); In re Marriage of Williams (1984) 157 Cal. App. 3d 1215, 1222, 203 Cal. Rptr. 909).

[Optional] I. Time for Filing Complaint to Determine Dischargeability. A complaint to determine dischargeability of any debt pursuant to Section 523(c)(1) of Title 11 of the United States Code must be filed not later than 60 days following the first date set for the meeting of creditors held pursuant to Section 341(a) of Title 11 of the United States Code (Fed. R. Bankr. P., Rule 4007(c); In re Rhodes (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1987) 71 B.R. 206, 207).

[Optional] J. Time for Filing Complaint to Determine Dischargeability in Chapter 13 Case. On motion by a debtor for a discharge under Section 1328(b), the court must enter an order fixing a time for the filing of a complaint to determine the dischargeability of any debt pursuant to Section 523(a)(6) of Title 11 of the United States Code and must give not less than 30 days notice of the time fixed to all creditors (Fed. R. Bankr. P., Rule 4007(d)).

[Optional] K. Authority to Reopen Case. A bankruptcy case may be reopened in the court in which it was closed to consider a complaint to determine the dischargeability of a debt (11 U.S.C. § 350(b); Fed. R. Bankr. P., Rule 4007(a), (b); In re Wright (Bankr. N.D. Ala. 1980) 3 Collier Bankr. Cas. 2d 284, 7 B.R. 197, 200).

[Optional] M. Preponderance Standard. To preserve a debt[, including a debt based on fraud], from discharge, the creditor need only prove its claim by a preponderance of the evidence (Grogan v. Garner (1991) 498 U.S. 279, 286-287, 111 S. Ct. 654, 112 L. Ed. 2d 755).

[Optional] N. Collateral Estoppel Effect of [Fraud] Judgment. In determining whether a debt that is reduced to judgment [in state court] is nondischargeable, the bankruptcy court can give collateral estoppel effect to those elements of the claim that are identical to the elements required for nondischargeability and that were actually litigated and determined in the prior action [Grogan v. Garner (1991) 498 U.S. 279, 285, 111 S. Ct. 654, 112 L. Ed. 2d 755 (abrogating cases that barred application of collateral estoppel to debts for which bankruptcy court had exclusive jurisdiction to determine dischargeability, that is, fraud, fiduciary defalcation, embezzlement, larceny, and willful and malicious injury, including In re Houtman (9th Cir. 1978) 568 F.2d 651, 654-656) ; see In re Nourbakhsh (9th Cir. 1995) 67 F.3d 798 (fraud nondischargeability proceeding not excepted from collateral estoppel effect of prior state court fraud default judgment); but see In re Daley (9th Cir. 1985) 776 F.2d 834, 837-839 (doctrine not applied to state court judgment based on stipulation); In re Silva (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1995) 190 B.R. 889 (doctrine not applicable to federal court judgment resulting to unopposed summary judgment motion)].

This form may be submitted in support of the contention that the bankruptcy court has jurisdiction to determine dischargeability of all debts (Paragraph A) and exclusive jurisdiction to determine the dischargeability of debts enumerated in 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2), (4), and (6) (fraud or deception; fiduciary fraud, embezzlement, or larceny; willful and malicious injury to person or property) (Paragraph B). Counsel may combine Paragraph A or B with any of the optional Paragraphs C through G in this form or an optional paragraph in § 30.20 setting forth the statutory criteria for nondischargeability of the particular debt in question.

Paragraph C cites the "justifiable reliance" standard established by the United States Supreme Court in Field v. Mans (1995) 516 U.S. 59, 74-75 ; see § 30.68, Discussion of Authorities, Fraud Other Than in Financial Statement. Before Field was decided, there were Ninth Circuit cases holding that a single "reasonable reliance" standard, as specified in 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2)(B) [see Paragraph D], applied for exempting a claim from discharge under 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2)(A) [see In re Siriani (9th Cir. 1992) 967 F.2d 302, 304] . There were also Ninth Circuit cases holding that the common-law "justifiable reliance" standard should be applied under 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2)(A) (other than in a written financial statement) because that provision does not specify a standard [see Paragraph C; In re Kirsh (9th Cir. 1992) 973 F.2d 1454, 1458].

The authority in optional Paragraph G applies only to punitive damages based on debts that are nondischargeable under 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(6) (willful and malicious injury) or 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(9) (driving while intoxicated). Punitive damages based on fraud (11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2)) are dischargeable; for authorities addressing that issue, see § 30.61. For additional authorities addressing nondischargeability of debts based on willful and malicious injury, see § 30.71.

Optional Paragraph H is for use when a debt of the type specified at 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2), (4), or (6) has been discharged because of the creditor's inaction. Optional Paragraphs I and J may be used to establish that the time for filing the complaint to determine nondischargeability is past or that a complaint was not timely filed [but see 11 U.S.C. § 523(c)(2) (exception for depository institution receiver not appointed in time)]. Although a complaint to determine dischargeability must be filed within the applicable period, no trial will be held until the debtor has been granted a general discharge, because dischargeability of a particular debt will be moot if general discharge is denied [see Collier on Bankruptcy (15th ed.) § 523.21 (Matthew Bender)].

Optional Paragraph I may be used in any Chapter 7, 11, 12, or 13 case. Except as noted in the next sentence, in any Chapter 7, 11, 12, or 13 case, a complaint to determine dischargeability under 11 U.S.C. § 523(c) must be filed within 60 days of the first date set for the meeting of creditors [Fed. R. Bankr. P., Rule 4007(c)]. An exception exists when a Chapter 13 debtor moves for a hardship discharge [see 11 U.S.C. § 1328(b)] and the dischargeability of a debt arising from willful and malicious injury [see 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(6)] is at issue. In that situation, Optional Paragraph J is appropriate, and the court will enter an order fixing the time to file a complaint to determine the dischargeability of the debt and must give all creditors not less than 30 days notice of the time fixed [Fed. R. Bankr. P., Rule 4007(d)].

Optional Paragraph K may be submitted in support of the contention that the bankruptcy court should reopen the case to allow the filing and trial of a complaint to determine dischargeability of a debt. Either the debtor or a creditor may petition to reopen the case to determine dischargeability [see 11 U.S.C. § 350(b); Fed. R. Bankr. P., Rule 4007(a)], but the time for filing a complaint to determine dischargeability of debts enumerated at 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2), (4), and (6) will usually have expired by the time the case is closed [see Fed. R. Bankr. P., Rule 4007(b)-(d); see also In re Daniels (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1983) 34 B.R. 782, 783-784] .

Optional Paragraphs L, M and N may be applicable in a particular situation when the burden of proof for the collateral estoppel effect of any earlier judgment is at issue. The collateral estoppel effect of judgments (Paragraph N) is an unsettled area of law. Note that when the judgment against the debtor is based solely on the debtor's "deemed admissions" in a case that the debtor started but then made no further attempt to pursue, the issues embraced by the judgment cannot be treated as "actually litigated" [United States IRS v. Palmer (In re Palmer) (9th Cir. 2000) 207 F.3d 566, 568] .

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should describe the debt in question and any judgment or agreement from which it arises. The factual description should cover each element necessary to establish nondischargeability, or, if these points and authorities are used to support the contention that the debt in question is discharged, the factual description and argument should emphasize the nondischargeability criteria that have not been satisfied.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the bankruptcy court has jurisdiction to determine nondischargeability.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Bankruptcy Court's Exclusive Jurisdiction

11 U.S.C. § 523(c)(1) does not apply to a federal depository institution's regulatory agency seeking (in its capacity as conservator, receiver, or liquidating agent for an insured depository institution) to recover a debt described in 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2), (4), (6), or (11) owed to the institution by an institution-affiliated party unless the receiver, conservator, or liquidating agent (or the federal depository institution's regulatory agency acting in its capacity as a successor to that receiver, conservator, or liquidating agent) was appointed in time to comply with those requirements reasonably [11 U.S.C. § 523(c)(2)].

In re Houtman (9th Cir. 1978) 568 F.2d 651 , which was decided before the effective date of the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1978, considered an appeal from a district court order affirming a bankruptcy court decision that a state court judgment was nondischargeable on the ground that it represented liability for money or property obtained by false pretenses or false representations. The issues before the court of appeals were whether the bankruptcy court had given conclusive weight to the documents depicting the state court proceeding and, if it had, did its action amount to failure to exercise its exclusive jurisdiction to determine dischargeability. In considering that contention, the court of appeals reviewed the history of the bankruptcy court's exclusive jurisdiction, noting that the 1970 Amendments to the Bankruptcy Act imposed on the bankruptcy courts exclusive jurisdiction to determine dischargeability of those debts then enumerated at Section 17(a)(2) (fraud or deception), (4) (fiduciary fraud, embezzlement, or larceny), and (8) (willful and malicious injury to person or property) of the Bankruptcy Act (former 11 U.S.C. § 35(a)(1), (2), (8)) (568 F.2d 651, 653) .

In re Aldrich (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1983) 9 Collier Bankr. Cas. 2d 1073, 34 B.R. 776 is discussed in § 30.20[3][a].

[b] Creditor Action Required

The facts and procedural background of In re Marriage of Williams (1984) 157 Cal. App. 3d 1215, 203 Cal. Rptr. 909 are discussed in § 30.21[4][a]. After noting that the bankruptcy court had exclusive jurisdiction to determine dischargeability of the debts in question since they were based on fraud, the court of appeal noted the further requirement of former 11 U.S.C. § 523(c) [now see 11 U.S.C. § 523(c)(1)] that a creditor who is owed a debt that may be excepted from discharge under 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2), (4), or (6) initiate proceedings in the bankruptcy court for determination as to whether the debt will be excepted from discharge. The creditor must request that this determination be made. If the creditor fails to request that this determination be made, the debt is discharged (157 Cal. App. 3d 1215, 1222) .

[c] Time for Filing Complaint to Determine Dischargeability

In In re Rhodes (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1987) 71 B.R. 206 , the Bankruptcy Appellate Panel affirmed the bankruptcy court's dismissal of a complaint to determine dischargeability of a debt under former 11 U.S.C. § 523(c) [now see 11 U.S.C. § 523(c)(1)]. The complaint was filed one day after the deadline for filing complaints. The creditors' attorney sent the complaint by messenger on the last day for filing complaints, but did not instruct the messenger that the complaint had to be filed that day. It was filed the next day. The creditors argued that the court had authority to extend the time for filing the complaint based on excusable neglect. The court disagreed and said that unlike former law, the current Bankruptcy Rules, specifically Fed. R. Bankr. P., Rule 4007(c), do not permit an extension for excusable neglect unless the extension itself is sought before the time has expired (71 B.R. 206, 208) .

[d] Authority to Reopen Case

The creditor that had made a student loan to the debtor in In re Wright (Bankr. N.D. Ala. 1980) 3 Collier Bankr. Cas. 2d 284, 7 B.R. 197 , filed a motion in the bankruptcy court to set aside the discharge. That motion was treated as a petition to reopen the case to seek a determination of the dischargeability of the student loan. The bankruptcy court first considered the debtor's contention that the time allowed for determination of the dischargeability of the loan had passed. The court disagreed and stated that student loans are not within the limitation of 11 U.S.C. § 523(c)(1) (7 B.R. 197, 199-200) . The bankruptcy court stated that its authority under 11 U.S.C. § 350(b) to "accord relief to the debtor" even after the case was closed also allows it to provide relief to the creditor and required the debtor to answer (7 B.R. 197, 200) .

11 U.S.C. § 350(b) provides that a case may be reopened in the court in which it was closed to administer assets, to accord relief to the debtor, or for other cause.

Fed. R. Bankr. P., Rule 4007(a) provides that a debtor or any creditor may file a complaint with the bankruptcy court to obtain a determination of the dischargeability of any debt.

Fed. R. Bankr. P., Rule 4007(b) provides that a complaint to determinate dischargeability other than under 11 U.S.C. § 523(c)(1) may be filed at any time and that a case may be reopened without payment of an additional filing fee for the purpose of filing a complaint to determine dischargeability.

[e] Preponderance Standard

Plaintiff in Grogan v. GarnerGrogan v. Garner (1991) 498 U.S. 279 sued defendant alleging fraud in connection with the sale of securities and was awarded a judgment, including punitive damages, based on jury instructions that authorized recovery based on the preponderance of evidence. The Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals reduced the damages award, but affirmed the judgment. Plaintiff then filed a complaint in the bankruptcy court requesting a determination that the judgment was nondischargeable. In support of the complaint, plaintiff introduced portions of the record in the fraud case. The bankruptcy court found that all of the elements required to establish fraud under 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2) had been proved and that the doctrine of collateral required a holding that the debt was not dischargeable. Defendant appealed to the District Court, contending that collateral estoppel did not apply because the jury instructions in the original trial only required the fraud to be proved by a preponderance of the evidence while 11 U.S.C. § 523(a) requires proof by clear and convincing evidence. The district court rejected that argument, but the court of appeals reversed.

The Eighth Circuit reasoned that although the Code was silent regarding the burden of proof required to establish discharge, the clear and convincing standard had always been applied in fraud cases and that tougher standard was required in keeping with the policy of bankruptcy to provide the debtor a fresh start. The U.S. Supreme Court granted certiorari to resolve the conflict among the circuits and reversed the court of appeals.

The Supreme Court first noted that there is a distinction between the standard of proof a creditor must satisfy in order to establish its claim and the standard it must satisfy to establish the nondischargeability of its claim (112 L. Ed. 2d 755, 762-763) . The validity of the creditor's claim is determined by rules of state law. However, the issue of nondischargeability is a matter of federal law (112 L. Ed. 2d 755, 763) . The silence of 11 U.S.C. § 523 regarding the appropriate standard of proof is inconsistent with the view that Congress intended to require a special, heightened standard (112 L. Ed. 2d 755, 764). If the preponderance standard governs the question of dischargeability, the bankruptcy court could properly give collateral estoppel effect to the original fraud judgment. If the clear and convincing standard applies, the prior judgment could not be given collateral estoppel effect. Then, creditors from jurisdictions that required fraud to be proved by clear and convincing evidence would be entitled to have prior judgments given collateral estoppel effect, but creditors from jurisdictions that allowed fraud recovery on a preponderance of the evidence would have to establish their claim again in the bankruptcy court. Because the preponderance of the evidence standard results in roughly equal allocation of the risk or error between litigants, the Court presumed this standard applies in civil actions between private litigants unless particularly important individual interests or rights are at stake. The Court was unpersuaded that the clear and convincing standard was necessary to support the policy of bankruptcy to give debtors a fresh start (112 L. Ed. 2d 755, 764-765) . Nor did the Court think it appropriate that the dischargeability of one type of debt be determined by a different standard than the other types of debts enumerated in 11 U.S.C. § 523(a) (112 L. Ed. 2d 755, 765) .

The Court discussed the historical basis for requiring clear and convincing evidence to except a fraud claim from discharge. Before the 1970 amendments, many courts applied a preponderance standard to fraud claims. The 1970 amendments made the question of nondischargeability a question of federal law (112 L. Ed. 2d 755, 766) . Following the 1970 amendments but before enactment of 11 U.S.C. § 523 in 1978, courts remained about evenly split over the appropriate standard of proof. The Court said it was not reasonable to conclude that in enacting 11 U.S.C. § 523 Congress silently endorsed a background rule that clear and convincing evidence is required to establish exemption from discharge. Thus, the Court held that the standard of proof for the dischargeability of exceptions in 11 U.S.C. § 523(a) is the ordinary preponderance of the evidence standard (112 L. Ed. 2d 755, 767) .

[f] Collateral Estoppel Effect of [Fraud] Judgment

Grogan v. Garner (1991) 498 U.S. 279, 111 S. Ct. 654, 112 L. Ed. 2d 755 is discussed in*§ 30.21[3][e]*.

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Bankruptcy Court's Exclusive Jurisdiction

The court in In re Marriage of Williams (1984) 157 Cal. App. 3d 1215, 203 Cal. Rptr. 909 reversed the trial court's quashing of a writ of execution and allowance of offset. One spouse (the "debtor spouse") levied on the creditor spouse's savings account to satisfy his obligation to pay her a portion of his retirement benefits. The debtor spouse had obtained discharge in bankruptcy of the community debts assigned to her and of her debt payable to the creditor spouse equalizing the division of community property. The creditor spouse sought to quash the levy and to offset the amount of the discharged debts against the arrearages in retirement income payments. The trial court found that the debtor spouse had committed fraud in the dissolution action by failing to disclose transfers of certain property, allowed the setoff, and quashed execution. The court of appeal reversed, concluding that 11 U.S.C. § 524(a)(2) prohibits the allowance of an offset against a discharged debt (157 Cal. App. 3d 1215, 1223-1224) . Before reaching that conclusion, the court of appeal, citing Houtman and noting that the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1978 renumbered Section 17(a)(2), (4), and (8) of the Bankruptcy Act as 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2), (4), and (6), determined that since the only basis for denying dischargeability of the debts in question was fraud, the bankruptcy court had exclusive jurisdiction to determine dischargeability (157 Cal. App. 3d 1215, 1221-1222) .

[b] Fraud

The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals in In re Franklin (9th Cir. 1991) 922 F.2d 536 affirmed a Bankruptcy Appellate Panel reversing the bankruptcy court's summary judgment in favor of the debtor and remanding for trial to determine dischargeability of a lender's fraud claim [see 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2)]. The fraud claim was based on misrepresentations relating to the validity of accounts receivable that secured a loan. After an additional advance, the debtor's residence was also pledged as security. The lender foreclosed on the debtor's residence, and the debtor claimed that further action by the creditor was barred by Code Civ. Proc. § 580a (antideficiency). The Ninth Circuit disagreed (922 F.2d 536, 543) .

The Ninth Circuit in In re Lansford (9th Cir. 1987) 822 F.2d 902 , reversed the Bankruptcy Appellate Panel's determination of dischargeability of a community claim under 11 U.S.C. § 524 with respect to a debt incurred by submitting a false financial statement. The debt was not discharged as against either the spouse who actually submitted the false financial statement or the other spouse. The other spouse had signed other documents comprising the transaction that contained misrepresentations, including repetition of one of the more egregious misrepresentations contained in the financial statement (822 F.2d 902, 904-905) . The bankruptcy court's original finding of nondischargeability as against both spouses was never challenged on the basis of insufficient evidence against the nonsubmitting spouse, and a challenge on appeal was too late (822 F.2d 902, 905) .

The United States Supreme Court has resolved a dispute among the circuits regarding reliance in fraud cases. The standard for excepting a debt from discharge as fraudulent under 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2)(A) is justifiable reliance [Field v. Mans (1995) 516 U.S. 59, 116 S. Ct. 437, 133 L. Ed. 2d 351, 365 ; see discussion in § 30.68].

[c] Authority to Reopen Case

In affirming the dismissal of a complaint to determine dischargeability under 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2), which had been filed too late, the bankruptcy appellate panel in In re Daniels (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1983) 34 B.R. 782 noted its authority under 11 U.S.C. § 350(b) to reopen the case, but held that reopening the case did not extend the time for filing the complaint to determine dischargeability (34 B.R. 782, 784) .

§ 30.40 Supporting Contention That Creditor Is Enjoined From Attempting to Enforce Debt Against Discharged Debtor or Community Property [11 U.S.C. § 524]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE JUDGMENT THAT PLAINTIFF SEEKS TO ENFORCE ESTABLISHED DEFENDANT'S PERSONAL LIABILITY WITH RESPECT TO A DEBT THAT WAS DISCHARGED IN BANKRUPTCY, AND THE JUDGMENT IS TO THAT EXTENT VOID. ALL ATTEMPTS TO COLLECT THAT DEBT, INCLUDING BY ENFORCEMENT OF THAT JUDGMENT, ARE PERMANENTLY ENJOINED BY OPERATION OF LAW.

A. Discharge Operates as Injunction. A discharge in a bankruptcy case voids any judgment obtained before, during, or after the bankruptcy, to the extent that the judgment is a determination of the personal liability of the debtor with respect to any discharged debt _____ [add, if appropriate:, whether or not discharge of the debt was waived, expressly or by conduct]. The discharge operates as an injunction against the commencement or continuation of an action, the employment of process, or any other act, to collect, recover, or offset any discharged debt as a personal liability of the debtor _____ [add, if appropriate:, whether or not discharge of the debt was waived] (11 U.S.C. § 524(a)(1), (2); Lone Star Security & Video, Inc. v. Gurrola (In re Gurrola) (9th Cir. BAP 2005) 328 B.R. 158, 164 ; Mathews Cadillac, Inc. v. Phoenix of Hartford Ins. Co. (1979) 90 Cal. App. 3d 393, 396-397, 153 Cal. Rptr. 267).

B. Injunction of Collection Attempts or State Court Proceeding. If a creditor institutes a state court action, or otherwise attempts to collect a discharged debt, the bankruptcy court can enjoin the _____ [state court _____ (action or proceeding) or collection attempts] (In re Whitaker (Bankr. M.D. Tenn. 1982) 5 Collier Bankr. Cas. 2d 1566, 16 B.R. 917, 920-921).

[Optional] C. Affirmative Defense Not Required. A debtor who has been discharged is not required to assert the discharge as an affirmative defense in a state court action (Mathews Cadillac, Inc. v. Phoenix of Hartford Ins. Co. (1979) 90 Cal. App. 3d 393, 396-397, 153 Cal. Rptr. 267).

[Optional] D. Discharge of Community Claims. A discharge granted to a debtor in bankruptcy operates as an injunction against the commencement or continuation of an action, the employment of process, or an act, to collect, recover from, or offset against, community property of the debtor and the debtor's spouse of the kind specified in Section 541(a)(2) of Title 11 of the United States Code that is acquired after the commencement of the case, on account of any allowable community claim, except a community claim that is excepted from discharge under Section 523, 1228(a)(1), or 1328(a)(1) of Title 11 of the United States Code, or that would be so excepted, determined in accordance with Section 523(c) and (d) of Title 11 of the United States Code, in a case concerning the debtor's spouse commenced on the date of the filing of the petition in the case concerning the debtor, whether or not discharge of the debt based on the community claim is waived (11 U.S.C. § 524(a)(3)).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that debtor's discharge in bankruptcy renders a judgment on a discharged debt void and constitutes a permanent injunction against any and all attempts to collect discharged debts (Paragraph A), thus allowing the bankruptcy court to enforce that injunction (Paragraph B). Paragraph C may be used to establish that a debtor is no longer required to plead the discharge as an affirmative defense. Paragraph D is for use when the creditor seeks to satisfy the obligation from the community property of the spouse of the bankrupt.

Note that the discharge does not operate as an injunction against an act by a creditor that is the holder of a secured claim. If the creditor retains a security interest in real property that is the principal residence of the debtor, the act by the creditor is in the ordinary course of business between the creditor and the debtor, and that act is limited to seeking or obtaining periodic payments associated witha valid security interest in lieu of pursuit of in rem relief to enforce the lien [11 U.S.C. § 524(j)]. If there is a willful failure of a creditor to credit payments received under a plan confirmed under the Bankruptcy Code, unless the order confirming the plan is revoked, the plan is in default. If the creditor has not received payments required to be made under the plan in the manner required by the plan (including crediting the amounts required under the plan), this will constitute a violation of the implicit injunction under 11 U.S.C. § 524(a)(2) if the act of the creditor to collect and failure to credit payments in the manner required by the plan caused material injury to the debtor [11 U.S.C. § 524(i)].

Counsel should insert argument linking these points and authorities with the facts of the case; for example, argument that the debt in question was scheduled in the bankruptcy case, that no proceedings were had or are pending to except the particular debt from discharge, that the order of discharge was granted, attaching a copy, and that notice of discharge was given to the particular creditor pursuant to Fed. R. Bankr. P., Rule 4004(g).

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the debtor's discharge in bankruptcy voids any judgment constituting personal liability against the debtor and constitutes a permanent injunction against the collection of discharged debts.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Discharge Operates as Injunction

In Lone Star Security & Video, Inc. v. Gurrola (In re Gurrola) (9th Cir. BAP 2005) 328 B.R. 158 , a homeowner sued a business, charging breach of a contract for installation and monitoring of a home alarm system. While the action was pending, the homeowner filed a Chapter 7 petition. The contract lawsuit was properly listed in a schedule, but the defendant company inadvertently was omitted from the list of creditors, and consequently the company never received notice of the bankruptcy proceeding. Although the homeowner did not further prosecute the action, in due course the company filed a counterclaim to collect sums allegedly due under the contract, which the homeowner had withheld. The court, being unaware of the bankruptcy proceeding, subsequently entered a default judgment against the homeowner on the counterclaim. After learning about the bankruptcy proceeding, the company took the position that the homeowner had waived his right to rely on the bankruptcy discharge, and the company persisted in efforts to enforce the judgment. Eventually the bankruptcy court was drawn into the controversy through the present adversary proceeding by the company, and that court ruled that the homeowner could not be estopped to assert his discharge. The company appealed.

The bankruptcy appellate panel affirmed and stated that as a matter of plain English, the language of 11 U.S.C. § 524(a)(1) is both unambiguous and absolute as to questions of effect, time, and waiver. The status of a judgment as void implies that it is a judgment that may be disregarded as a nullity and cannot be enforced. Such a judgment is subject to collateral attack whenever and wherever it might be invoked. The phrase "at any time obtained" plainly means that judgments voided by the discharge include judgments obtained before, during, and after the bankruptcy. The phrase "whether or not discharge of such debt is waived" similarly nullifies all putative waivers of specific debts and appears to encompass both express waivers and waivers by conduct (328 B.R. 158, 164) . The court gave a thorough review of cases and legislation, starting in the nineteenth century, to show how the current statutory policy evolved. Before 1970, the bankruptcy discharge was merely an affirmative defense that was waived if not timely asserted in subsequent litigation. Creditors could flout the discharge by suing and hoping that the defense was not timely raised. However, a major purpose of the Bankruptcy Act enacted in 1970 (which created the predecessor of the current statute) was to change the discharge from being an affirmative defense to being an absolute defense (328 B.R. 158, 165-170) .

Mathews Cadillac, Inc. v. Phoenix of Hartford Ins. Co. (1979) 90 Cal. App. 3d 393, 153 Cal. Rptr. 267 is discussed in § 30.40[3][c].

Counsel should note that there is some authority that the prohibition in 11 U.S.C. § 524(a)(2) against setoff only applies to post-petition debts and that a mutual pre-petition debt owed by a creditor may be offset against a discharged pre-petition debt [see In re Conti (Bankr. E.D. Va. 1985) 12 Collier Bankr. Cas. 2d 1472, 50 B.R. 142, 149 ; see § 30.41[4][a]].

A bank can place a temporary administrative hold on a debtor's account without creating an impermissible "setoff" that violates the automatic stay provisions of 11 U.S.C. § 362(a)(7) [Citizens Bank of Maryland v. Strumpf (1995) 516 U.S. 16, 19-20, 116 S. Ct. 286, 133 L. Ed. 2d 258] .

[b] Injunction of Collection Attempts or State Court Proceeding

In re Whitaker (Bankr. M.D. Tenn. 1982) 5 Collier Bankr. Cas. 2d 1566, 16 B.R. 917 , was an adversary proceeding in the bankruptcy court commenced by the debtor after discharge to enjoin a creditor and a district attorney from continuation of a criminal proceeding arising out of a bad check given by the debtor to the creditor. The creditor was scheduled in the debtor's bankruptcy, but did not request a determination of dischargeability of the debt. The creditor argued that the charge was grounded in fraud. The bankruptcy court concluded without discussion that the dischargeability of the claim was determined in the bankruptcy court (16 B.R. 917, 921 n.4), and determined that it had authority under 11 U.S.C. § 105(a), which provides that it may issue any order necessary or appropriate to carry out the provisions of Title 11, to issue temporary and permanent injunctions (16 B.R. 917, 920-921) . Even though this case arose during the transition period (October 1, 1979 through March 31, 1984) during which a bankruptcy court could not enjoin another court, the creditor and the district attorney were the entities enjoined (16 B.R. 917, 920, 920 n.2, 921-923) .

The bankruptcy court cited legislative history of 11 U.S.C. § 524(a)(2) to the effect that the changes made by the 1978 amendments were to ensure that the debtor would not be pressured "in any way" (16 B.R. 917, 921) . Because the district attorney had offered to drop the charges if the debtor would make restitution to the creditor, the bankruptcy court concluded that the primary purpose of the criminal prosecution was to recover a dischargeable debt. That being the case, the bankruptcy court found that the issuance of the injunction was necessary to effectuate the judgment of discharge (16 B.R. 917, 922) .

Counsel should note that Whitaker may represent a minority opinion. One federal court of appeals has held that a criminal prosecution may be enjoined only in extraordinary circumstances when a subversion of the criminal process to collect debt is found [see Barnette v. Evans (11th Cir. 1982) 673 F.2d 1250, 1252 (prosecution on grand jury indictment for bad checks)]. Other courts have rejected the "primary motivation" test and have refused to enjoin the criminal prosecution unless there is a showing of bad faith or harassment [In re Davis (3d Cir. 1982) 691 F.2d 176, 179 ; In re Taylor (Bankr. D. Md. 1984) 11 Collier Bankr. Cas. 2d 1028, 1031, 44 B.R. 548, 549] .

[c] Affirmative Defense Not Required

Plaintiff in Mathews Cadillac, Inc. v. Phoenix of Hartford Ins. Co. (1979) 90 Cal. App. 3d 393, 153 Cal. Rptr. 267 sought to recover damages for construction defects from the construction company and its insurer. The construction company did not answer and its default was taken, although no judgment was entered against it. The construction company had obtained a discharge in bankruptcy, although it had not listed plaintiff as a creditor. More than five years after the complaint was filed, the insurer moved for dismissal under former Code Civ. Proc. § 581a(c). The motion was granted and a judgment of dismissal was entered. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court of appeal reviewed the legislative history and the effect of the 1970 amendments to the Bankruptcy Act, setting forth the provisions added as former 11 U.S.C. § 32(f), which have been carried forward as 11 U.S.C. § 524(a)(1), (2). The court noted that the primary reason for the amendment was so that a discharged debtor would no longer have to plead the discharge as an affirmative defense in a state court action. Any judgment obtained in violation of the discharge order and injunction is void as a determination of personal liability of the bankrupt, though valid liens can still be enforced against the discharged debtor's property (90 Cal. App. 3d 393, 396-397, 397 n.4). The court continued by stating that judgment could be entered against the discharged debtor, but that the state court would then be required to enter a perpetual stay of execution in favor of the discharged debtor. Such a judgment would be necessary in order to fix the liability of the insurer (90 Cal. App. 3d 393, 397-398) . Regarding the failure to list the plaintiff as a creditor in the bankruptcy, the court said that was further reason to support the dismissal (90 Cal. App. 3d 393, 399) . The implication was that dischargeability should have been raised by the plaintiff in the state court action.

[d] Discharge of Community Claims

11 U.S.C. § 524(a)(3) is qualified by 11 U.S.C. § 524(b), which provides that 11 U.S.C. § 524(a)(3) does not apply if the debtor's spouse has commenced a bankruptcy case within six years before the date of the filing of the petition in the debtor's case and the court does not grant the debtor's spouse a discharge in that case [11 U.S.C. § 524(b)(1)], or if the debtor's spouse would have been denied a discharge had the spouse commenced a Chapter 7 case at the same time the debtor commenced his or her case, and a determination that the court would not grant such a discharge is made by the bankruptcy court within the time and in the manner provided for a determination under 11 U.S.C. § 727 of whether a debtor is granted a discharge [11 U.S.C. § 524(b)(2)].

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Discharge Operates as Injunction

In re Marriage of Williams (1984) 157 Cal. App. 3d 1215, 203 Cal. Rptr. 909 (see § 30.21, Additional Authorities, Bankruptcy Court's Exclusive Jurisdiction) is authority for the contention that 11 U.S.C. § 524(a)(2) prohibits the allowance of an offset against a discharged debt (157 Cal. App. 3d 1215, 1223-1224) .

[b] Injunction of Collection Attempts or State Court Proceeding

In Hurley v. Bredehorn (1996) 44 Cal. App. 4th 1700, 52 Cal. Rptr. 2d 615 , creditors had successfully recovered attorney fees from the debtor and filed an appeal in state court from an order granting the debtor's motion to tax costs, before the debtor filed a petition for relief under Chapter 7. The creditors conceded that the discharge order released the debtor from personal liability for the attorney fee award which was the subject of the appeal. However, they argued that because the bankruptcy court had the power to modify the discharge order to allow the state court action to proceed, the state court appeal was not rendered moot. The court of appeal granted the creditors 60 days to obtain a modification of the discharge order in the bankruptcy court and enjoined the appeal pending the bankruptcy court's order (44 Cal. App. 4th 1700, 1705-1706) .

§ 30.41 Supporting Contention That Debtor Is Entitled to Sanctions Against Creditor for Attempt to Collect Discharged Debt [11 U.S.C. § 524]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

_____'s [name of creditor] ATTEMPT TO COLLECT THIS DEBT AMOUNTS TO CIVIL CONTEMPT AND ENTITLES _____ [name of debtor] TO MONETARY SANCTIONS.

A. Discharge Operates as Injunction. [See § 30.40, Paragraph A.]

B. Violation Is Basis for Sanctions. Civil contempt is an appropriate sanction for a creditor's violation of the implicit injunction resulting from the order of discharge, when the creditor attempts to collect a discharged debt. [Such contempt may arise from the creditor's use of criminal process to aid in or coerce the collection of a discharged debt.] A creditor who is guilty of violating that injunction may be required to pay the debtor an amount equal to the debtor's costs of defending any action on the discharged debt and of seeking relief in the bankruptcy court, as well as reasonable attorney's fees, and in egregious cases, additional monetary sanctions (In re Myers (Bankr. E.D. Va. 1982) 6 Collier Bankr. Cas. 2d 347, 18 B.R. 362, 363-364 ; In re Whitaker (Bankr. M.D. Tenn. 1982) 5 Collier Bankr. Cas. 2d 1566, 16 B.R. 917, 923).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the debtor is entitled to costs and sanctions for a creditor's violation of the injunction of the discharge order by attempting to collect a discharged debt. If the creditor has instituted criminal proceedings arguably to coerce collection of a discharged debt, the optional sentence regarding criminal proceedings should be used [see In re Whitaker (Bankr. M.D. Tenn. 1982) 5 Collier Bankr. Cas. 2d 1566, 16 B.R. 917] .

Counsel should insert argument linking these points and authorities with the facts of the case; for example, argument that the debt in question was scheduled in the bankruptcy case, that no proceedings were had or are pending to except the particular debt from discharge, that the order of discharge was granted, attaching a copy, and that notice of discharge was given to the particular creditor pursuant to Fed. R. Bankr. P., Rule 4004(g).

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the bankruptcy court can assess sanctions for violation of the injunction of the discharge order.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Violation Is Basis for Sanctions

The debtors in In re Myers (Bankr. E.D. Va. 1982) 6 Collier Bankr. Cas. 2d 347, 18 B.R. 362 reopened their case after discharge to seek an injunction and contempt against a finance company, holder of a claim on a debt that had been discharged. Although the debt was secured by a nonpossessory, nonpurchase-money lien on household furniture, which could have been avoided by the debtors under 11 U.S.C. § 522(f), the debtors had not sought to avoid the lien during the pendency of the case. The bankruptcy court noted that a case may be reopened after discharge to allow filing of a complaint to avoid a lien (18 B.R. 362, 362) . The finance company had commenced a state court action for possession of the property, or, alternatively, its value. Of special concern to the court was the fact that the finance company had checked not the "actual value of the items" blank of the state action but the one marked "amount due under a written contract of sale," and entered there $3,389.10, which the court referred to as a grossly exaggerated figure (representing the value of the property at the time the loan was made) agreed to by the debtors at the time the loan was granted. Even more scandalous, the bankruptcy court noted, was the representation of debtor's counsel that this was a practice the creditor had followed in other cases (18 B.R. 362, 363) .

The bankruptcy court found that the finance company had willfully violated the stay and was in contempt. The fact that the state court action was nonsuited did not alter matters. The court said the abuse could not be washed away after the hand had been caught in the proverbial cookie jar (18 B.R. 362, 363) . The court noted that the finance company was a sophisticated creditor and knows better. A discharge order is not to be thwarted. The bankruptcy courts mean for their discharge orders to be honored, and they will not be unless the point is emphasized, which the court found it would be by imposition of $10,000 in sanctions and an injunction against pursuing any action for money related to the bankruptcy case (18 B.R. 362, 363-364) .

The facts and procedural background of In re Whitaker (Bankr. M.D. Tenn. 1982) 5 Collier Bankr. Cas. 2d 1566, 16 B.R. 917 are discussed in § 30.40, Discussion of Authorities, Injunction of Collection Attempts or State Court Proceeding.

After discussing its authority to enjoin the criminal prosecution, the bankruptcy court held that the creditors had failed to comply with the discharge order and that civil contempt was an appropriate sanction for such noncompliance. The bankruptcy court also required the creditor to pay the debtor's cost of defending the criminal action and pursuing the adversary proceeding in bankruptcy court, including reasonable attorney's fees, noting that the $250 limit of former Fed. R. Bankr. P., Rule 920(a)(3) [see now Fed. R. Bankr. P., Rule 9020 (no limit)] did not apply because that rule governed only punitive sanctions (16 B.R. 917, 923 n.9).

[a] Violation Is Basis for Sanctions

The bankruptcy court in In re Rhyne (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 1986) 14 Collier Bankr. Cas. 2d 778, 59 B.R. 276 struck a state court judgment, found the creditor's law firm in contempt, and required it to pay debtor's attorney's fees after the firm obtained a judgment against the debtor based on a wrongful death claim that had been discharged. The court said that not every case is appropriate for contempt or sanctions. The creditor was not found to be in contempt because he lacked the requisite intent (59 B.R. 276, 278-279) .

The bankruptcy court in In re Conti (Bankr. E.D. Va. 1985) 12 Collier Bankr. Cas. 2d 1472, 50 B.R. 142 found the IRS to be in civil contempt for violation of 11 U.S.C. § 524(a)(2) by sending past due notices to the debtor regarding a discharged tax liability for 1977. The court said that the IRS's claim of sovereign immunity was expressly waived by the provisions of 11 U.S.C. § 106(c) (50 B.R. 142, 145-146) . The court held that the burden of inconvenience for the IRS to segregate discharged accounts from others did not excuse its failure to do so (50 B.R. 142, 146) . The court awarded $750 as attorney's fees and damages, but refused to award punitive damages (50 B.R. 142, 147) . The court also allowed the IRS to offset against the discharged debt a refund owing to the debtor for a pre-petition year (1982), even though no refund was sought until 1984, a year after discharge. The court reasoned that the 11 U.S.C. § 524(a)(2) prohibition against offset has to be construed in light of 11 U.S.C. § 553 and refers only to post-petition debts; a pre-petition debt owed by a discharged creditor may be offset against a discharged debt (50 B.R. 142, 147-150) .

The bankruptcy court in In re Olson (Bankr. N.D. Iowa 1984) 10 Collier Bankr. Cas. 2d 864, 38 B.R. 515 , found a medical clinic to be in violation of 11 U.S.C. §§ 362 and 524 for refusing to treat the debtor until the debtor paid a discharged pre-petition account. The fact that a representative of the clinic testified that "nonpays" were refused treatment until outstanding bills were paid whether or not the "nonpay" had filed bankruptcy provided the requisite intent and willfulness for imposition of sanctions. The court stayed imposition of sanctions or damages for 20 days during which time the parties were to present a stipulation regarding sanctions or damages (38 B.R. 515, 518-519) .

The credit union creditor in In re Holland (Bankr. N.D. Ind. 1982) 6 Collier Bankr. Cas. 2d 1307, 21 B.R. 681 received money from the debtor under a pre-petition payroll deduction agreement to be applied in payment of a loan it had made to the debtor. The loan was scheduled; the creditor received notice of the filing of the bankruptcy and of the discharge. After discharge, the debtor executed and forwarded to his employer a request to stop the payroll deductions, but the creditor union refused to return the payments it had received after the date of the filing of the petition. The debtor had not made a "stop deduction request" earlier, he testified, because he had not understood that it was necessary. Contrary to credit union practice, he had not been given the appropriate form when he visited the credit union to inform it of the bankruptcy and to request the cessation of the deduction. The credit union maintained that since the debtor had not initiated a stop deduction request, the post-petition payments were voluntary and it could keep them. The bankruptcy court found the creditor to have violated both the stay of 11 U.S.C. § 362(a)(6) and the permanent injunction of 11 U.S.C. § 524(a)(2) and to be in contempt. The creditor was required to return the post-petition payments to the debtor, with interest at the rate those sums would have earned in the debtor's creditor union share account and to pay the debtor's costs and reasonable attorney's fees (21 B.R. 681, 684, 688-689) .

The debtor in In re Goodman (Bankr. Ore. 1983) 34 B.R. 23 had given his landlord two bad checks of $700 each. The rental arrearages covering that period were listed and discharged in bankruptcy. The creditor requested criminal prosecution during the pendency of the bankruptcy case, in violation of the stay order of 11 U.S.C. § 362(a)(6), and had the debtor arrested on bad check charges after discharge, although by that time one check had been paid and sufficient funds to cover the other had been tendered. The bankruptcy court was unconvinced by the creditor's testimony that he was confused and had made bookkeeping errors at the time he demanded the debtor's arrest. The court noted its authority to require the creditor to pay the debtor's attorney's fees and out-of-pocket costs as sanctions for civil contempt, and said that those sanctions did not preempt an award of general or punitive damages in a private action arising out of misuse of process. The bankruptcy court imposed sanctions of $3,500 (34 B.R. 23, 24-25) .

§ 30.42 Opposing Contention That Debtor Is Entitled to Sanctions [11 U.S.C. § 524]--Good-Faith Controversy Exists Concerning Whether Debt Has Been Discharged

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

_____'s [name of creditor] ATTEMPT TO COLLECT THIS DEBT DOES NOT CONSTITUTE CIVIL CONTEMPT BECAUSE THERE HAS BEEN NO PRIOR ADJUDICATION OF THE DISCHARGEABILITY OF THE DEBT, _____ [IT WAS NOT SCHEDULED and/or IT IS NOT ONE WHICH IS AUTOMATICALLY DISCHARGED UNDER SECTION 523(c) OF TITLE 11 OF THE UNITED STATES CODE], AND A GOOD-FAITH CONTROVERSY EXISTS CONCERNING WHETHER IT HAS BEEN DISCHARGED.

Sanctions Are Not Appropriate. Civil contempt sanctions serve either a coercive or compensatory function, by compelling a person to obey a court's order or compensating a person for the losses sustained due to the violation of a court order. When the debt in question is _____ [arguably excepted from discharge because it is _____ (specify, e.g., for child support) or facially excepted from discharge because it was not listed anywhere in the debtor's schedules] and there has been no [previous] determination of dischargeability [until the proceeding for which contempt sanctions are sought], the court is free to assume, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, that the creditor will not persist in collection efforts _____ [once or if] the debt is determined to be discharged, and the coercive function that sanctions normally serve is not applicable. As the debtor will incur the same legal fees whether dischargeability is challenged in the bankruptcy case or in a later action, the compensatory need usually fulfilled by contempt sanctions does not arise from the same proceeding in which dischargeability is determined (In re Worthing (Bankr. D. Conn. 1982) 24 B.R. 774, 778) .

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that the debtor is entitled to costs and sanctions for a creditor's violation of the injunction of the discharge order by attempting to collect a discharged debt on the ground that the attempt is in fact an effort to determine dischargeability. This form is not appropriate if the debt sought to be collected was scheduled and is one of the kind specified by 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2), (4), or (6).

Counsel should insert argument linking these points and authorities with the facts of the case. For example, argument should include whether the debt in question was scheduled in the bankruptcy case, that no proceedings to except the particular debt from discharge were had or are pending, and the grounds on which the creditor contends the debt is nondischargeable.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that sanctions are not appropriate since the debt in question has never clearly been within the discharge order.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Sanctions Are Not Appropriate

In re Worthing (Bankr. D. Conn. 1982) 24 B.R. 774 involved an adversary proceeding in the bankruptcy court brought by a debtor after discharge seeking contempt sanctions against a bank that had levied on the debtor's wages to collect a loan. The parties agreed that the bankruptcy court should also determine whether the debt for the loan was discharged. It had not been scheduled, although a credit card debt owed to the same bank had been scheduled. The credit card debt had been scheduled with the bank's main address. The bank contended that it did not have actual knowledge or notice of the case in time to file timely a proof of claim, as required by 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(3)(A). The bankruptcy court held that the bank was not entitled to notice addressed to its commercial loan department as specified in the note and that an employee's testimony that no notice had been received was insufficient to rebut the presumption of receipt arising from the bankruptcy clerk's certificate of mailing and the fact that the envelope containing the bank's notice was not returned to the clerk's office. Hence, the debt arising from the loan was discharged (24 B.R. 774, 776-777) .

Regarding the contempt sanctions, the bankruptcy court first pointed out that willfulness of the offending party need not be shown in order for a finding of contempt (24 B.R. 774, 777) . The court then noted that the debt in question was not facially excepted from discharge (because it was not listed), but was only held to be discharged after the court's ruling that the debtor had sustained the burden of proof regarding the bank's notice of the case. Thus, there was no specific and definite order enjoining collection of the subject debt. Civil contempt sanctions serve either a coercive or compensatory function, by compelling a person to obey a court's order or compensating a person for the losses sustained due to the violation of a court order. In this case, no coercive purpose could be served, the court continued, because there is no claim or evidence that the bank will persist in collection efforts in the face of the discharge finding. Nor were attorney's fees appropriate, because the bank could have challenged discharge of the debt, in which event the debtor would have incurred the same legal expense without any basis for reimbursement (24 B.R. 774, 778) .

§ 30.60 Supporting Contention That Debt Has Been Discharged--Debt Was Duly Scheduled or Creditor Had Notice or Actual Knowledge of Bankruptcy Case [11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(3)]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE DEBT AT ISSUE HERE HAS BEEN DISCHARGED IN BANKRUPTCY BECAUSE _____ [IT WAS LISTED OR SCHEDULED and/or THE CREDITOR HAD NOTICE OR ACTUAL KNOWLEDGE OF THE BANKRUPTCY CASE] IN TIME TO PERMIT TIMELY FILING OF A PROOF OF CLAIM [AND A TIMELY REQUEST FOR A DETERMINATION OF DISCHARGEABILITY].

[EITHER]

A. Duly Scheduled Debt. A debt that is duly scheduled in time to permit the creditor to file a timely proof of claim _____ [if debt is one specified in 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2), (4), or (6) add: and, if the debt is of a kind specified in Paragraph (2), (4), or (6) of Section 523(a) of Title 11 of the United States Code, to make a timely request for a determination of dischargeability of the debt], is discharged[, even though the creditor may never have received notice or actual knowledge of the debtor's bankruptcy case, because the creditor is charged with constructive notice of the case] (11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(3); [Dill v. Hamilton (1946) 73 Cal. App. 2d 881, 887-888, 167 P.2d 497]).

[OR]

A. Actual Notice of Bankruptcy Case. A debt is dischargeable, although it had not been duly scheduled in time to permit timely filing of a proof of claim _____ [if debt is one specified in 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2), (4), or

(6) add: and timely request for a determination of dischargeability of the debt], if the creditor had notice or actual knowledge of the case in time for such a timely filing [and request] (11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(3); In re Price (9th Cir. 1989) 871 F.2d 97, 99) .

[Optional] B. Receipt of Distribution. A claim that is not [properly] scheduled is nevertheless discharged if the holder of that claim learns of the bankruptcy case in time to file a late claim with leave of the court and receives a distribution of assets from the bankruptcy estate (Van Denburgh v. Goodfellow (1941) 19 Cal. 2d 217, 224-225, 120 P.2d 20).

[Optional] C. Sufficiency of Address. There is no general rule that the designation of the creditor's address by the city of residence, without the street and number, renders a debt not duly scheduled. Thus, in the absence of a showing that the debtor did not use due diligence in attempting to ascertain the street and number of the creditor, a debt scheduled with only the city and state designated in the address is discharged (Dill v. Hamilton (1946) 73 Cal. App. 2d 881, 884-886, 167 P.2d 497).

[Optional] D. Assignor's Knowledge of Bankruptcy Case. If creditor has knowledge of the debtor's bankruptcy case before he or she assigns the debt, that knowledge is sufficient to discharge the debt even though it is not scheduled and the assignee did not know of the bankruptcy case (Ray v. Schubach (1935) 10 Cal. App. 2d 122, 123, 50 P.2d 1073).

[Optional] E. Establishing Discharge. A certified copy of the order of discharge establishes discharge of any debt owed by the debtor at the time the bankruptcy petition was filed (Kreitlein v. Ferger (1915) 238 U.S. 21, 26-27, 35 S. Ct. 685, 59 L. Ed. 1184).

[Optional] F. Creditor's Burden of Proof. Once a certified copy of the order of discharge is in evidence, the creditor must prove that the debt is excepted from discharge (United States Credit Bureau, Inc. v. Digoras (1959) 169 Cal. App. 2d 673, 680, 337 P.2d 866).

[Optional] G. Notice to Counsel of Record for Creditor Is Sufficient. For a debt of a type specified in Title 11 of the United States Code, Section 523(a)(2), (4), or (6), to be discharged, notice of a scheduled debt provided to the creditor's attorney of record is sufficient to give notice to the creditor (In re Price (9th Cir. 1989) 871 F.2d 97, 98-99) .

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a particular debt has been discharged either because it was duly scheduled (first alternative Paragraph A) or because the creditor had notice or actual knowledge of the bankruptcy case in time to file its claim, and if the debt is one of the kind specified at 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2), (4), or (6), to make a timely request for determination of dischargeability (second alternative Paragraph A) [see 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(3)]. Descriptions of the types of debts specified at 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2), (4), and (6) are in § 30.21 at Paragraphs C, D, E, and F. Generally, a creditor whose claim is one of the kind specified in 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2), (4), or (6) must receive at least 30 days' notice of the last date to file complaints to determine dischargeability [see In re Dewalt (9th Cir. 1992) 961 F.2d 848, 850-851 ; see § 30.67, Discussion of Authorities, under 30 Days Notice Generally Required].

Paragraph B is for use when the creditor received notice in time to obtain approval for filing a late claim and received a distribution on that claim [see 11 U.S.C. § 726(a)(2), (3) (participation of late claimants in distribution)]. Paragraph C will apply if the debtor could not determine the creditor's street address and so scheduled the claim with only the creditor's city and state as address. Paragraph D is applicable if the original creditor knew of the bankruptcy case and then assigned the claim to someone who did not know of the case. Paragraph E may be used to show that the introduction of a certified copy of the order of discharge satisfied the debtor's initial burden of proof of the defense of discharge. Paragraph F should be used when arguing that the creditor has not carried its burden of proving the debt to be within an exception to discharge. Paragraph G should be used when arguing that the creditor has received notice of a scheduled debt through its counsel of record.

Counsel should insert argument linking these points and authorities with the facts of the case; for example, either the attachment of a certified copy of the order of discharge (see Paragraph E) and of the schedule on which the debt was listed, or, if the debt was not scheduled, argument that the creditor had actual notice of the bankruptcy case before the time for filing claims expired.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the debt has been discharged because it was duly scheduled or because creditor had notice of the bankruptcy case.

This form may also be used, with distinguishing facts, to oppose the contention that a debt has been discharged because it was duly scheduled or because the creditor had notice of the bankruptcy case.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Duly Scheduled Debt

Plaintiffs in Dill v. Hamilton (1946) 73 Cal. App. 2d 881, 167 P.2d 497 sued to enforce a judgment against a debtor who asserted discharge in bankruptcy as a defense. The underlying judgment was in the names of two people as executors and one of them individually. Unbeknownst to the debtor, the individually named creditor had remarried and changed her name. The debt was listed under the names of the judgment creditors (the former name in the case of the remarried creditor), with no mention of their representative capacities with San Francisco, California, as the only address. The street addresses were unknown to defendant, and a San Francisco directory was not available to him. The schedule did not recite that the street addresses were unknown to the debtor [see Sufficiency of Address]. Notice of the first meeting of creditors was mailed to both creditors. The bankruptcy file did not disclose that the notices had been returned, but the plaintiff never received them and never had notice of the bankruptcy case. Judgment was for plaintiffs on the ground that the debt had not been duly scheduled and that they had not had actual or constructive notice of the bankruptcy case. The defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that the judgment was duly scheduled and thus was discharged in bankruptcy [see § 30.60[3][d]]. With regard to the question of notice, the court of appeal noted that actual knowledge of the bankruptcy case was not necessary and held the trail court's finding that plaintiffs did not have constructive notice to be error. Once a debt is duly scheduled, the creditor is charged with constructive notice of the bankruptcy case, even if the creditor does not receive the written notice mailed to him or her (73 Cal. App. 2d 881, 887) . Proper scheduling of the debt imparts constructive notice to the creditor (73 Cal. App. 2d 881, 888) .

[b] Actual Notice of Bankruptcy Case

In In re Price (9th Cir. 1989) 871 F.2d 97, 99 , a creditor had brought a suit against the debtor in state court in regard to a contract dispute. Before the suit was resolved, debtor filed a petition for Chapter 7 bankruptcy relief. The creditor was not listed on the debtor's schedule of creditors and thus was not notified by the bankruptcy court of the bar date for the filing of dischargeability complaints pursuant to former 11 U.S.C. § 523(c) [now see 11 U.S.C. § 523(c)(1)]. However, on May 21, 1986, the creditor's attorney in the state court action against the debtor did receive a Notice of Injunction from the debtor's counsel that stated that a bankruptcy petition had been filed and that the state court suit would be subject to the automatic stay. The notice did not contain any deadline dates, and the creditor's counsel assumed that further notices would be forthcoming from the bankruptcy court. The creditor's attorney took no action, and the deadline for filing of dischargeability complaints passed on July 22, 1986. After the deadline passed, the creditor's attorney filed a Motion for Leave to File Late Complaint to Determine Dischargeability of Debt, claiming excusable neglect. The bankruptcy court granted the motion, finding that creditor's attorney reasonably assumed that further notice of the bar date would be received from the court. The Bankruptcy Appellate Panel reversed, holding that notice to the creditor's attorney constituted notice to creditor, and that it was sufficient to apprise the creditor of the pendency of the dischargeability deadline date. The creditor appealed.

The Ninth Circuit court of appeals affirmed. It found that the creditor's attorney was given actual notice of the bankruptcy proceedings in time to file a complaint, or at least to file a timely motion for extension of time. At the time of actual notice, the attorney was pursuing the same claim in state court that the creditor sought to have declared nondischargeable. The court held that under the circumstances of the case, notice to the creditor's attorney constituted notice to the creditor. The fact that the debtor failed to list the creditor in the filing did not relieve the creditor of his obligation to take timely action to protect his claim (871 F.2d 97, 99) .

The statement in Price that notice is timely if the creditor has the opportunity to request an extension of the time to file a complaint to determine dischargeability has been disapproved to the extent provided in In re Dewalt (9th Cir. 1992) 961 F.2d 848, 850-851 ; see § 30.67[3][k].

[c] Receipt of Distribution

In Van Denburgh v. Goodfellow (1941) 19 Cal. 2d 217, 120 P.2d 20 , defendants quashed a writ of execution plaintiff had secured to enforce his judgment against them. Each defendant had filed a separate bankruptcy case. Both had been discharged. Plaintiff's claim had been improperly scheduled and the notice intended for plaintiff was returned to the bankruptcy court. Plaintiff learned of defendants' bankruptcy cases. In one bankruptcy case, plaintiff obtained leave to file a late claim and took a distribution. No claim was filed in the other bankruptcy case. Plaintiff appealed the quashing of the writ.

The Supreme Court affirmed as to the defendant from whose bankruptcy estate the plaintiff had received distribution and reversed as to the other defendant [see § 30.67[3][a]]. The Court stated that if the creditor elects to file a late claim with leave of the bankruptcy court, he or she waives any rights arising from defects in the schedule or notice or from any detriment he or she may suffer because of the lack of the opportunity to participate in the administration of the estate and receives in return the right to share in the distribution of assets (19 Cal. 2d 217, 224-225) .

[d] Sufficiency of Address

The facts and procedural background of Dill v. Hamilton (1946) 73 Cal. App. 2d 881, 167 P.2d 497 , are discussed in § 30.60[3][a]. In support of its holding that the plaintiff's judgment was duly scheduled, the court stated that all authorities, including the leading case of Kreitlein v. Ferger (1915) 238 U.S. 21, 33-34, 35 S. Ct. 685, 59 L. Ed. 1184 , have adopted the position that the designation of the city of the creditor's residence, without the street and number, is sufficient (73 Cal. App. 2d 881, 884) . Although the debtor must use due diligence to ascertain the correct address of the creditor, plaintiffs had failed to show that defendant had not used due diligence in ascertaining the street and number of their residences (73 Cal. App. 2d 881, 886) . There is no presumption that debtors in bankruptcy have access to directories containing street addresses of their creditors (73 Cal. App. 2d 881, 884) . Quoting from Kreitlein, the court noted that the debtor's schedules must not only include claims of recent origin but debts that have accrued many years before that are owed to creditors who may have changed their residences. To lay down a general rule that the schedule must give the name of the creditor and the city and street number of the residence of those living in the largest cities would, in a multitude of cases, destroy the beneficent effect of bankruptcy (73 Cal. App. 2d 881, 884-885) .

[e] Assignor's Knowledge of Bankruptcy Case

Ray v. Schubach (1935) 10 Cal. App. 2d 122, 50 P.2d 1073 , was an action by an assignee on a promissory note in which defendant pleaded as one defense discharge in bankruptcy. The note was not listed in defendant's schedules in bankruptcy, but plaintiff's assignor, while still holder of the note, had discussed with defendant his pending bankruptcy case. Judgment was for plaintiff on the ground that the debt had not been listed. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, stating that because the payee, while holder of the note, had actual notice of the bankruptcy case, the debt was discharged (10 Cal. App. 2d 122, 123) .

[f] Establishing Discharge

See § 30.40, Paragraphs A--C.

Kreitlein v. Ferger (1915) 238 U.S. 21, 35 S. Ct. 685, 59 L. Ed. 1184 , was a creditor's action on a judgment in which the defendant pleaded as an affirmative defense his discharge in bankruptcy. The debt arose in 1895 from the defendant's purchase of flour. Plaintiff sued in trover and obtained judgment in 1897, though findings in the case show that defendant made no fraudulent concealment or misrepresentation as to his financial condition. The bankruptcy case was initiated in 1905 and the debt was scheduled as "1895, $271.85 for merchandise, to C. Ferger, Indianapolis, Indiana." The trial court ruled for the plaintiff as did the Appellate Court of the State of Indiana. The United States Supreme Court granted review.

The Supreme Court reversed. The Court set forth the respective burdens of proof of the parties, holding that the initial burden of proof is on the debtor, but that the burden is met, and a prima facie defense of discharge is established as to any debt existing against the debtor at the time the petition in bankruptcy was filed, by the introduction of a certified copy of the order of discharge (238 U.S. 21, 26-27) .

[g] Creditor's Burden of Proof

In United States Credit Bureau, Inc. v. Digoras (1959) 169 Cal. App. 2d 673, 337 P.2d 866 , the defendant moved in the trial court for an order under former Code Civ. Proc. § 675b directing the cancellation and discharge of a judgment obtained by the assignee of a 1946 judgment creditor. The defendant had received a discharge in bankruptcy in 1955. At that time, if the underlying judgment was based on willful and malicious injuries to property, it would not be discharged by the defendant's discharge in bankruptcy. The trial court found that part of the judgment was based on willful withholding of property but that part of it arose from an accounting. The trial court denied the motion and defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court stated that, as defendant had filed a certified copy of her discharge in bankruptcy in support of the motion to cancel the judgment, plaintiff had the burden of showing that the judgment, or part of it, was nondischargeable. As it could not be determined from the record how much of the judgment related to willful injury and how much did not, the court concluded that the plaintiff had not sustained its burden of proof (169 Cal. App. 2d 673, 680) .

§ 30.61 Supporting Contention That Debt Has Been Discharged--Punitive Damages Based on Fraud [11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2)] Are Dischargeable

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PUNITIVE DAMAGE LIABILITY BASED ON FRAUD IS SUBJECT TO DISCHARGE IN BANKRUPTCY.

Punitive Damages for Fraud Are Dischargeable. Punitive damages for fraud debts are dischargeable in bankruptcy (In re Levy (9th Cir. 1991) 951 F.2d 196, 199 (construing 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that punitive damages based on fraud are dischargeable under 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2). Note, however, that if the creditor can prove that the punitive damages were based on a malicious and willful injury, the damages will not be dischargeable [see § 30.71].

Counsel should insert argument linking these points and authorities with the facts of the case; for example, reference to the record in any underlying action and in the proceeding to determine dischargeability for facts to support the absence of intent to injure, malice, or willfulness.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the judgment for punitive damages based on fraud has been discharged.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Punitive Damages for Fraud Are Dischargeable

In re Levy (9th Cir. 1991) 951 F.2d 196 was an individual's Chapter 7 case. The debtor was one of three principals of a real estate development corporation that reneged on promises to one of its salespersons. A state court judgment was entered in favor of the salesperson for compensatory damages of $53,540, $46,612 of which was based on fraud and misrepresentation, and $250,000 punitive damages. The judgment creditor brought a complaint to determine dischargeability. The bankruptcy court held that the $46,612 was nondischargeable, and that it had discretion to, and did, discharge the punitive damage award. The creditor appealed, and the bankruptcy appellate panel affirmed, holding that 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2) excepted from discharge only actual damages for fraud. The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed.

The creditor argued that case law had upheld the nondischarge of punitive damages under 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(4) and (6) (fiduciary defalcation; willful and malicious injury), and that punitive damages for fraud should not be treated any differently. The court of appeals disagreed, noting that the Ninth Circuit had never addressed the question, although the Ninth Circuit Bankruptcy Appellate Panel had considered the issue and determined that 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2) did not except discharge of punitive damages [see In re Ellwanger (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1989) 105 B.R. 551, 555] (951 F.2d 196, 197-198) . The court first considered the language of § 523(a)(2) itself and pointed out that the subsection was amended in 1984 to add the language "to the extent obtained by." That phrase is meant to limit the nondischargeable debt to the amount "obtained by actual fraud," that is, the amount of benefit to the debtor or loss to the creditor created by the the act of fraud itself. Thus, the language of 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2) does not preclude discharge of punitive damages (951 F.2d 196, 198) .

Next, the court considered the structure of § 523 as a whole. The court reviewed Ellwanger's reasoning, which was based in part on the United States Supreme Court opinion in Kelly v. Robinson (1986) 479 U.S. 36, 107 S. Ct. 353, 93 L. Ed. 2d 216 (see § 30.72, Discussion of Authorities, under Restitution Order in Criminal Action), considering the scope of 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(7), which excepts a debt from discharge "to the extent such debt is a fine, penalty, or forfeiture payable to and for the benefit of a government unit, and is not compensation for actual pecuniary loss." The Supreme Court had said in a footnote that the limitation imposed by the quoted language was likely intended to prevent application of that subsection to wholly private penalties such as punitive damages. While the Ellwanger court believed that the footnote compelled the conclusion that non-compensatory damages be excepted from discharge only when they are owed to a government entity, the court of appeals said that conclusion was overly broad. Even if creditors could not avail themselves of 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(7), they can still rely on other subsections of § 523. Moreover, Ellwanger's suggestion that no subsection of § 523 bars discharge of punitive damages conflicts with the Ninth Circuit holding in In re Adams (9th Cir. 1985) 761 F.2d 1422 (see § 30.20, Discussion of Authorities, under Both Compensatory and Punitive Damages Nondischargeable), excepting punitive damages from discharge under 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(6) (951 F.2d 196, 199) .

The court also relied on the Supreme Court's analysis in Grogan v. Garner (1991) 498 U.S. 279, 111 S. Ct. 654, 112 L. Ed. 2d 755 (see § 30.21[3][f]) to reinforce the notion that distinctions should be made among the subsections of § 523. The court concluded that while a creditor should seek non-dischargeability of a debt for fraud alone under 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2), if the debtor inflicted willful or malicious injury which was the basis of a punitive damage award, the creditor could establish nondischargeability of the punitive damages under 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(6) (951 F.2d 196, 199) .

§ 30.62 Supporting Contention That Debt Has Been Discharged--Creditor's Reliance Was Not Justifiable so as to Except Loan Obligation From Discharge [11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2)(A)]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

A DISCHARGE IN BANKRUPTCY DISCHARGES A CREDIT OBLIGATION INDUCED BY THE DEBTOR'S FRAUDULENT MISREPRESENTATIONS IN A LOAN APPLICATION IF THE LENDER'S RELIANCE ON THOSE REPRESENTATIONS WAS NOT JUSTIFIABLE.

A. Fraud. [See § 30.21, Paragraph C.]

B. Justifiable Reliance. For a debt to be nondischargeable in bankruptcy, it must have been induced by the creditor's justifiable reliance on fraudulent misrepresentations of the debtor. When the debtor makes fraudulent misrepresentations, but the creditor extends credit without justifiably relying on those misrepresentations, the debt is discharged (Field v. Mans (1995) 516 U.S. 59, 74-75, 116 S. Ct. 437, 133 L. Ed. 2d 351 ; In re Kirsh (9th Cir. 1992) 973 F.2d 1454, 1457-1461) .

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a loan induced by a debtor's misrepresentations is nondischargeable under 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2)(A) only if the creditor's reliance on the misrepresentation was justifiable. Paragraph A sets forth the elements of fraud [see § 30.21, Paragraph C]. Paragraph B states that the debt is nondischargeable only if the creditor justifiably relied.

Counsel should insert argument linking these points and authorities with the facts of the case; for example, reference to the record in the underlying action to determine dischargeability for facts to show that the creditor's reliance on the debtor's misrepresentations was not justifiable, and accordingly, that the loan is discharged.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Justifiable Reliance

The facts and procedural background of Field v. Mans (1995) 516 U.S. 59, 116 S. Ct. 437, 133 L. Ed. 2d 351 are discussed in § 30.68[3][a]. Following a dispute among the circuits, the United States Supreme Court confirmed that the "justifiable reliance" standard, rather than the "reasonable reliance" standard, is the standard to be applied in excepting a fraud debt from discharge under 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2)(A) (133 L. Ed. 2d 351, 365) .

In re Kirsh (9th Cir. 1992) 973 F.2d 1454 involved a claim by a pension plan that a loan made to debtors was nondischargeable because of misrepresentations inducing the plan to make the loan. Although the loan agreement contained written representations by the debtors that the deed of trust securing the loan was junior to only one other deed of trust and that the condominium securing the loan had a market value of $240,000, in fact the condominium was encumbered by two senior deeds of trust. The plan ordered no title search, and apparently simply accepted the debtors' representations about the state of the property. The debtors defaulted, and when the condominium was foreclosed upon, the value realized was insufficient to pay off the two senior deeds of trust, much less the plan's third deed of trust. The plan received very little return on its investment before the debtors declared bankruptcy. The plan claimed it had been defrauded, and sought to exempt the debt from discharge (973 F.2d 1454, 1455-1456) .

The bankruptcy court found that the pension plan, which was established and managed by the debtors' long-time friend and attorney, did not rely on those representations, but made the $40,000 loan to debtors knowing they were having financial problems and knowing they did not always pay their legal fees on time. The plan sought a determination of nondischargeability in the bankruptcy court, which held for the debtor based on its finding that the attorney, who founded and managed the plan and was probably its main beneficiary, had not relied on those false representations. The bankruptcy court found that the debtors had not defrauded the plan. The district court affirmed, and the plan appealed (973 F.2d 1454, 1456) .

The Ninth Circuit first noted that its review, being one of a bankruptcy court's findings of fact, was subject to the clearly erroneous standard, while its review of the bankruptcy court's conclusions of law was de novo. The majority characterized the issue as one of law (the law of dischargeability), which is determined by federal law, in this case the Bankruptcy Code (973 F.2d 1454, 1456) . The court then said that the criteria for nondischargeability under 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2)(A) and (B) are mutually exclusive, the former referring to representations other than those in financial statements, and the latter referring specifically to written statements of financial condition (973 F.2d 1454, 1457) . The court continued its analysis of the distinction, determining that the statements in the loan agreement were not statements "in respect of the debtor's financial condition" and so those were not the type of "misrepresentations in a financial statement" covered by 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2)(B), so the analysis proceeded under 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2)(A), which provides that debts for false pretenses, false representations, or actual fraud other than a statement respecting the debtor's or an insider's financial condition, are nondischargeable (973 F.2d 1454, 1457) .

The court then had to determine the legal standard of reliance applicable. The court recognized that three possible standards existed ("actual reliance," "reasonable reliance," and "justifiable reliance") and that district courts were split on the application of the standard to these circumstances (973 F.2d 1454, 1457-1458) . The court then reviewed the history of the application of the various standards, concluding that a creditor must prove justifiable reliance on the representations of a debtor. In determining that issue, a court must look to all of the circumstances of the transaction, considering in particular the subjective effect of the circumstances on the creditor (973 F.2d 1454, 1459-1460) . In applying this standard, the court found that while the bankruptcy court had incorrectly applied the reasonable reliance standard, its conclusion that the plan had not relied on the debtors' representation in making the loan was correct. Accordingly, the court of appeals affirmed the bankruptcy court's finding that the debt was dischargeable under 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2)(A) (973 F.2d 1454, 1461) .

[b] Elements Necessary to Preclude Discharge of Debt

A bankruptcy discharge does not discharge an individual debtor from a debt for money, property, services, or an extension, renewal, or refinancing of credit to the extent it is obtained by false pretenses, a false representation, or actual fraud, other than a statement respecting the debtor's or an insider's financial condition [11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2)(A)].

In Kirsh, the court stated that to preclude discharge in bankruptcy of a debt under 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2)(A), a creditor must prove all of the following (973 F.2d 1454, 1457) :

- The debtor made the representations.
- The debtor knew the representations were false when made.
- The debtor made the representations with the intention and purpose of deceiving the creditor.
- The creditor relied on the representations.
- The creditor sustained the alleged loss and damage as a proximate result of the representations.

The creditor has the burden of proving each of the elements by a preponderance of the evidence (973 F.2d 1454, 1457) . In Kirsh, the creditor could not prove the element of reliance, and accordingly, the creditor's attempted preclusion of discharge failed (973 F.2d 1454, 1460-1461) .

§ 30.63 Supporting Contention That Debt Has Been Discharged--Nonmarital Support Obligation Is Dischargeable [11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(5)]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

A DISCHARGE IN BANKRUPTCY DISCHARGES NONMARITAL SUPPORT OBLIGATIONS.

A. Domestic Support. A debt for domestic support is not dischargeable in bankruptcy (11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(5)). Such a debt is one that accrues before, on, or after the date of the order for relief in a bankruptcy case, including interest that accrues on that debt as provided under applicable nonbankruptcy law notwithstanding any other provision of the Bankruptcy Code, and that meets four criteria, one of which is the debt is in the nature of alimony, maintenance, or support (including assistance provided by a governmental unit) of the spouse, former spouse, or child of the debtor or that child's parent, without regard to whether the debt is expressly so designated (11 U.S.C. § 101(14A)). Thus, a debt for support is dischargeable to the extent that it is not in the nature of alimony, maintenance, or support, even if it is so designated.

B. Nonmarital Support Obligation Is Discharged. A judgment for nonmarital support is a dischargeable debt that is not "in the nature of alimony" as that term is used in the Bankruptcy Code (In re Doyle (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1986) 70 B.R. 106, 107-109, 16 Collier Bankr. Cas. 2d 761).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be used to support the contention that a nonmarital support obligation is dischargeable [see 11 U.S.C. §§ 101(14A), 523(a)(5)]. Paragraph A sets forth the statutory criteria for nondischargeability. Paragraph

B sets forth case authority refusing to extend 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(5) to nonmarital obligations.

Counsel should insert argument linking these points and authorities with the facts of the case; for example, argument that the debtor and the creditor were not married.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the debt is dischargeable because it is does not rest on a marital relationship.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Nonmarital Support Obligation Is Discharged

In re Doyle (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1986) 16 Collier Bankr. Cas. 2d 761, 70 B.R. 106 arose from a bankruptcy court's dismissal of a creditor's complaint seeking a declaration that a debt was not discharged. The debtor and creditor lived together for five years in a home owned by the creditor, but were never married. The creditor borrowed at least $50,000 for use in the debtor's business. The loan was secured by a second mortgage on the creditor's home. After the relationship ended, the creditor obtained a stipulated judgment for quasi-marital support. The judgment required, in part, that the debtor make payments on the second mortgage. The bankruptcy court dismissed the complaint as a matter of law for failure to state a cause of action. The bankruptcy appellate panel affirmed.

The appellate panel cited Marvin v. Marvin (1976) 18 Cal. 3d 660, 684 n.24, 134 Cal. Rptr. 815, 557 P.2d 106 , and said that footnote 24 implied that any obligation owing to the nonmarried partner arises from contractual obligations rather than from any inherent right, and expressly provides that the unmarried person does not have rights to support under the Family Law Act. The court concluded that there was no California authority to suggest that the stipulated judgment was a support obligation or one arising from the Family Law Act (70 B.R. 106, 108) . 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(5) (as now construed in view of the definition of domestic support in 11 U.S.C. § 101(14A)) is unique in that it specifies the persons to whom an obligation must be payable in order to be nondischargeable. The persons specified do not include nonmarital partners. Although nondischargeability has been extended to include illegitimate children and other child-related expenses, it has never been extended beyond family duties. When there is no obligation arising from parental or marital duties, the debt is dischargeable (70 B.R. 106, 108-109) .

§ 30.64 Supporting Contention That Debt Has Been Discharged--Damages for Nontortious Breach of Contract as Not "Injury to Property" so as to Except Damage Claim From Discharge [11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(6)]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

A DISCHARGE IN BANKRUPTCY DISCHARGES ANY OBLIGATION FOR NONTORTIOUS BREACH OF CONTRACT[, SUCH AS FAILURE TO HONOR A RIGHT OF FIRST REFUSAL UNDER A CONTRACT OF SALE].

A. Willful and Malicious Injury. A debt for willful and malicious injury by the debtor to another entity or to the property of another entity is not dischargeable in bankruptcy (11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(6)).

B. Simple Breach of Contract Claim Is Dischargeable. A simple breach of contract is not the type of injury addressed by Paragraph (6) of Section 523(a) of Title 11 of the United States Code. Only tortious liabilities are excepted from discharge by Paragraph (6), not debts stemming from ordinary breach of contract (In re Riso (9th Cir. 1992) 978 F.2d 1151, 1154) .

[Optional] C. Right of First Refusal Is Not Property Interest. A limited right of first refusal is merely a contract right, not a property interest, and as such, a claim for damages for breach of that contract right is not the type of claim that is excepted from discharge under Paragraph(6) of Section 523(a) of Title 11 of the United States Code (In re Riso (9th Cir. 1992) 978 F.2d 1151, 1154) .

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that an ordinary breach of contract does not result in the type of claim that is excepted from discharge under 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(6). Optional Paragraph C is for use when the contract breached is a right of first refusal [see In re Riso (9th Cir. 1992) 978 F.2d 1151, 1154 (right of first refusal not security interest in property)]. The contention is based in part on the distinction between property interests, injury to which amounts to conversion and may result in claims for damages that are excepted from discharge if done intentionally, and contract rights, injury to which ordinarily results only in dischargeable claims (Paragraph B).

Counsel should insert argument linking these points and authorities with the facts of case; for example, argument that incorporates the specific contract language or provision breached, pointing out that it does not grant the creditor any "security interest" or other interest in property.

[b] Related Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in this form generally oppose those in § 30.71.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Simple Breach of Contract Claim Is Dischargeable

In re Riso (9th Cir. 1992) 978 F.2d 1151 involved a creditor's adversary proceeding to determine dischargeability of a debt arising from breach of a contract that granted the creditor a right of first refusal on resale of debtors' property. In 1982, S sold an apartment building to W, and took back a note, secured by a deed of trust and a right of first refusal on resale. In 1984, with S's knowledge and consent, W resold the building to the Risos, who sold it again in 1985 to M. The Risos concealed their sale to M from S by prohibiting the escrow agent from ordering a beneficiary statement from S and by having M make payments to the Risos, who made payments to S. S did not learn of the sale until February 1989. After negotiations between the Risos and S broke down in March, 1989, S filed an action against them for foreclosure and damages. The Risos brought payments under the deed of trust current through March 1989. The final payment under the note was due in April 1989, but it was never paid. The Risos filed bankruptcy in June 1989. S claimed that had the Risos given proper notification of the sale, S would have purchased the building in 1985 for $300,000 less than its worth in 1989. Even if S had not purchased the building in 1985, but only accelerated the loan then (apparently for failure to make the last payment), S would have saved approximately $62,000 in income taxes under capital gains treatment that was no longer available when S learned of the sale.

Both the bankruptcy court and the appellate panel held for the Risos, that breach of a right of first refusal is not the sort of willful property damage excepted from discharge under 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(6). The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal affirmed, agreeing that a limited right of first refusal is merely a contract right, not a property interest, and as such is not a protected interest in property that is excepted from discharge under Paragraph (6) (978 F.2d 1151, 1153-1154) . An intentional breach of contract is excepted from discharge under 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(6) only when it is accompanied by malicious and willful tortious conduct, which was not indicated in the record before the court (978 F.2d 1151, 1154) . The court went on say that it was not bound by a 1967 Washington Supreme Court case, holding a surreptitious sale of a patent interest in violation of a first option to purchase to be a willful and malicious injury to property. It is true that injury to property includes conversion of property subject to a creditor's security interest. However, S's right of first refusal is not a security interest. The restriction on the use of the apartment building imposed by the right of first refusal is not an obligation that is "secured" by the apartment building in the bankruptcy context. The Risos' sale of the property breached their contract with S, but nothing in the record indicated that the sale was a tortious violation of S's property interest in the apartment building, so the debt evidenced by the cause of action is dischargeable (978 F.2d 1151, 1154) .

§ 30.65 Supporting Contention That Debt Has Been Discharged--Reaffirmation Agreement Unenforceable When Rescinded by Debtor or Not Approved by Bankruptcy Court [11 U.S.C. § 524(c)]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

ALTHOUGH THE DISCHARGED DEBT SOUGHT TO BE COLLECTED IS THE SUBJECT OF A REAFFIRMATION AGREEMENT, THAT AGREEMENT WAS _____ [NOT APPROVED BY THE BANKRUPTCY COURT or RESCINDED BY THE DEBTOR _____ (BEFORE DISCHARGE or WITHIN 60 DAYS AFTER IT WAS FILED WITH THE BANKRUPTCY COURT)].

[EITHER, if individual debtor entered into agreement without attorney]

Bankruptcy Court Must Approve Individual Debtor's Reaffirmation Agreement. An agreement between an individual debtor in bankruptcy and the holder of a claim against the debtor, the consideration for which, in whole or in part, is based on a dischargeable debt, is not enforceable if all of the following conditions exist (11 U.S.C. § 524(c)(5), (6)):

1. The consideration for the agreement is based in whole or in part on a consumer debt that is not secured by real property of the debtor.

2. The individual debtor was not represented by an attorney during the course of negotiating the agreement.

3. The agreement was not approved by the bankruptcy court as not imposing an undue hardship on the debtor or a dependent of the debtor and as being in the best interest of the debtor.

[OR, if debtor rescinded agreement]

Rescission of Reaffirmation Agreement. An agreement between a debtor in bankruptcy and the holder of a claim against the debtor, the consideration for which, in whole or in part, is based on a dischargeable debt, is not enforceable if the debtor rescinded it at any time before discharge or within 60 days after it was filed with the bankruptcy court, whichever occurs later, by giving notice of rescission to the holder of the claim (11 U.S.C. § 524(c)(4)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a debt remains discharged because a reaffirmation agreement relating to the discharged debt is unenforceable, either because it was not approved by the bankruptcy court as required (in certain cases) [see 11 U.S.C. § 524(c)(5), (6)] or because it was rescinded by the debtor [see 11 U.S.C. § 524(c)(4)]. (Nothing in 11 U.S.C. § 524(c)(4)-(6) prevents a debtor from voluntarily repaying any debt [11 U.S.C. § 524(f)].)

Counsel should insert argument linking these points and authorities with the facts of the case; for example, argument that specifies the nature of the debt in question (consumer or commercial) and attachment of a copy of the notice of rescission or argument in detail regarding the particular defect that renders the reaffirmation agreement unenforceable.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the reaffirmation agreement is unenforceable.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Bankruptcy Court Must Approve Individual Debtor's Reaffirmation Agreement

A reaffirmation agreement is not enforceable in any case unless it was made before the granting of the discharge and was filed with the court, and unless the debtor received extensive disclosures [see 11 U.S.C. § 524(k)] at or before the time the debtor signed the agreement [11 U.S.C. § 524(c)(1)-(3)]. Nevertheless, a creditor may accept payments from a debtor before and after the filing of a reaffirmation agreement with the court, and may accept payments from a debtor under a reaffirmation agreement that the creditor believes in good faith to be effective. The requirements of 11 U.S.C. § 524(c)(2) and (k) are satisfied if disclosures required under those subsections are given in good faith [11 U.S.C. § 524(l)].

In a case concerning an individual, if a discharge has been granted and the debtor desires to make a reaffirmation agreement, and the debtor was not represented by an attorney during the course of negotiating the agreement, then the bankruptcy court must hold a hearing at which the debtor must appear in person. At the hearing the court must inform the debtor that such an agreement is not required under the Bankruptcy Code, nonbankruptcy law, or any agreement not made in accordance with the provisions of 11 U.S.C. § 524(c). Further, the court must inform the debtor of the legal effect and consequences of a reaffirmation agreement and a default under such an agreement. If the consideration for the agreement is based in whole or in part on a consumer debt that is not secured by real property of the debtor, the court must approve the agreement as not imposing an undue hardship on the debtor or a dependent of the debtor and as being in the best interest of the debtor [11 U.S.C. § 524(c)(5), (6), (d); see In re Avis (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 1980) 1 Collier Bankr. Cas. 2d 667, 3 B.R. 205, 206 (best interests of debtor is strictly financial or economic); see also 11 U.S.C. § 524(m) (presumption, for 60 days after agreement was filed with court, that agreement imposes undue hardship on debtor, in certain cases)].

When an attorney represented the individual debtor during the course of negotiating the reaffirmation agreement, no such hearing is necessary, and the bankruptcy court's approval is not required. Assuming that other requirements for enforceability are met, the agreement is enforceable if it is filed with the court along with the attorney's declaration that (1) the agreement represents a fully informed and voluntary agreement by the debtor, (2) it does not impose an undue hardship on the debtor or a dependent of the debtor, and (3) the attorney has fully advised the debtor of the legal effect and consequences of the agreement and of a default under the agreement [11 U.S.C. § 524(c)(3)].

§ 30.66 Supporting Contention That Debt Has Been Discharged--Claim Based on Environmental Cleanup Obligation May Be Discharged

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or a trial or appellate brief.]

A DISCHARGE IN BANKRUPTCY DISCHARGES A CLAIM BASED ON AN OBLIGATION FOR ENVIRONMENTAL CLEANUP COSTS.

A. Contingent Environmental Cleanup Cost Recovery Is "Claim." A contingent claim for environmental cleanup cost recovery is a "claim" within the meaning of 11 U.S.C. § 101(5) (In re Jensen (9th Cir. 1993) 995 F.2d 925, 928, 931) .

B. Claim for Environmental Cleanup Costs Discharged. A claim for environmental cleanup costs may be discharged in bankruptcy if the responsible creditor government agency had sufficient pre-petition knowledge of the debtor's potential liability to give rise to a contingent claim (In re Jensen (9th Cir. 1993) 995 F.2d 925, 929-931) .

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that an environmental cleanup obligation is discharged if the government agency responsible for policing the cleanup had sufficient knowledge of the debtor's potential liability to give rise to a contingent claim before a bankruptcy petition was filed. Paragraph A states that a contingent claim of potential liability is a "claim" within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act. Paragraph B states the contention that the claim is discharged if the agency had pre-petition knowledge of potential liability.

Counsel should insert argument linking these points and authorities with the facts of the case; for example, argument that refers to findings, or includes the order sought to be enforced, showing that the cleanup claim in question was discharged because the government agency was aware of potential liability before a bankruptcy petition was filed.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Claim Based on Environmental Cleanup Obligation May Be Discharged

In In re Jensen (9th Cir. 1993) 995 F.2d 925 , the obligation at issue was the duty to clean up lumber fungicide at a disused lumberyard site. The lumberyard operator had ceased doing business at the location, filed a Chapter 11 bankruptcy petition, and later converted the bankruptcy case to Chapter 7. A California Water Board inspector discovered a tank of lumber fungicide at the disused site, which contained, among other harmful agents, PCP. Based on the fungicide's threat to fish and downstream water users, the Water Board requested that the Jensens clean up the site. When the Jensens stated they were unable to do so, the California Department of Health Services (DHS) cleaned up the site, at a cost of over $900,000. In the mean time, the Jensens' bankruptcy debts had been discharged. Later, the bankruptcy proceedings were reopened to permit the listing of DHS and other interested parties from the cleanup as creditors. In a following adversarial bankruptcy proceeding, the bankruptcy court determined that DHS's cleanup recovery claim arose post-petition and was not subject to discharge. The BAP reversed, finding that the claim arose pre-petition, and was therefore discharged in the bankruptcy. DHS appealed the decision (995 F.2d 925, 926-927) .

The court of appeals focused on the definition of "claim" in the Bankruptcy Act, finding that the broadest possible interpretation of the definition of "claim" set forth in 11 U.S.C. § 101(5)(A) is designed to ensure that all legal obligations of the debtor, no matter how remote or contingent, will be able to be dealt with in the bankruptcy case (995 F.2d 925, 929-930) (see § 30.03[1]). Based on this determination, the court found that the two state agencies involved in the cleanup had sufficient knowledge of potential liability in time to give rise to a contingent claim for cleanup costs before the Jensens filed their bankruptcy petition. Accordingly, the court held that the claim was discharged in the bankruptcy, and the BAP's decision was affirmed (995 F.2d 925, 931) .

§ 30.67 Opposing Contention That Debt Has Been Discharged--Debt Was Not Duly Scheduled and Creditor Had No Actual Knowledge of Bankruptcy Case [11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(3)]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE DEBT AT ISSUE IN THIS CASE HAS NOT BEEN DISCHARGED IN BANKRUPTCY BECAUSE _____ [IT WAS NOT LISTED OR SCHEDULED and/or THE CREDITOR HAD NO NOTICE OR ACTUAL KNOWLEDGE OF THE BANKRUPTCY CASE] IN TIME TO PERMIT TIMELY FILING OF A PROOF OF CLAIM [AND A TIMELY REQUEST FOR A DETERMINATION OF DISCHARGEABILITY].

A. Unscheduled or Improperly Scheduled Debts. [See § 30.20, Paragraph C.]

[Optional] B. Incorrect Address Insufficient. A debt is not duly scheduled if the creditor's address is incorrectly stated. [A debtor is under a duty to use reasonable diligence to ascertain the address of the creditor. If a debtor cannot discover the creditor's address, the schedule should state that the creditor's address is unknown] (Van Denburgh v. Goodfellow (1941) 19 Cal. 2d 217, 222, 120 P.2d 20).

[Optional] C. No Address. A debt scheduled without the creditor's address [or a statement that the debtor does not know the creditor's address] is not discharged (Marlenee v. Warkentin (1945) 71 Cal. App. 2d 177, 179-180, 162 P.2d 321).

[Optional] D. Incorrect Name Insufficient. A debt is not duly scheduled if the creditor's name is incorrectly stated (United States Credit Bureau, Inc. v. Claus (1947) 79 Cal. App. 2d 85, 88-89, 179 P.2d 36).

[Optional] E. Unknown Debt. A debt that is not scheduled because it was not known to the debtor at the time he or she [Optional] F. [When a judgment has been entered, the duties of an attorney come to an end unless the terms of employment require the attorney to collect the judgment. Without a showing that the scope of employment includes authority to receive notice of bankruptcy, receipt by the attorney of notice of the debtor's bankruptcy case does not constitute notice to the (former) client] (*Mizrahi v. [Optional] G. Miscione (1967) 252 Cal. App. 2d 673, 676-677, 60 Cal. Rptr. 680*).

[Optional] H. Actual Knowledge Required. Title 11 of the United States Code, Section 523(a)(3), which excepts an _____ [unscheduled or improperly scheduled] claim from discharge unless the creditor had notice or actual knowledge of the bankruptcy case, does not contemplate constructive notice to the creditor. The term "actual knowledge" explains the word "notice," and actual knowledge, [obtained in time for the creditor to protect his or her rights in the bankruptcy case], is required in order for the debt to be discharged (Ismay v. Tyler (1959) 169 Cal. App. 2d Supp. 883, 885, 337 P.2d 257).

[Optional] I. Timeliness of Knowledge. When a debt was not duly scheduled [in time for the creditor to file a timely proof of claim _____ (if debt is one specified in 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2), (4), or (6) add: and to request a determination of dischargeability of the debt timely)], for the debt to be discharged by the creditor's notice or actual knowledge of the bankruptcy case, the creditor must have notice early enough to enable him or her to take advantage of the benefits of the bankruptcy law and to give him or her an equal opportunity with other creditors. However, just a few days' notice may be sufficient to satisfy due process requirements (In re Green (10th Cir. 1989) 876 F.2d 854, 855-856) . It may not come so late as to deprive the creditor of participation in the administration of the affairs of the estate, even though such participation would have made no difference (Van Denburgh v. Goodfellow (1941) 19 Cal. 2d 217, 223, 120 P.2d 20 ; Brown v. Tropp (1930) 106 Cal. App. 605, 608-609, 289 P. 648).

[Optional] J. Notice to Assignor After Assignment. If a debt has been assigned and the debtor knows of the assignment, the debt must be scheduled in the name and at the address of the assignee. If the assigned debt is _____ [listed in the name and at the address of the assignor or unscheduled], notice or actual knowledge of the debtor's bankruptcy case, obtained by the assignor after the assignment has been made, is not sufficient to discharge the debt (Ismay v. Tyler (1959) 169 Cal. App. 2d Supp. 883, 885, 337 P.2d 257).

[Optional] K. Late Claim Not Required. A creditor who holds a debt that is _____ [improperly or not] scheduled, and who learns of the debtor's bankruptcy case after the time for filing claims has expired, is not required to [seek leave to] file a late claim. If the creditor does not file a claim and takes no distribution from the bankruptcy estate, he or she will retain the debt unimpaired (Van Denburgh v. Goodfellow (1941) 19 Cal. 2d 217, 224, 120 P.2d 20).

[Optional] L. 30 Days Notice Generally Required. For a debt of a type specified in Title 11 of the United States Code, Section 523(a)(2), (4), or (6) to be discharged, a creditor whose claim was not properly scheduled generally must receive notice or actual knowledge of the case 30 days before the last date to file a complaint to determine dischargeability (11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(3)(B); In re Dewalt (9th Cir. 1992) 961 F.2d 848, 851) .

[Optional] M. Request for Extension Not Required. A creditor whose claim is represented by a debt of a type specified in Title 11 of the United States Code, Section 523(a)(2), (4), or (6), and was not properly scheduled is not required to file a request for extension of time to file a complaint to determine dischargeability if it receives notice or actual knowledge of the case less than 30 days before the last date to file a complaint to determine dischargeability (In re Dewalt (9th Cir. 1992) 961 F.2d 848, 850-851) .

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be used to oppose the contention that a particular debt has been discharged on the ground that it was not scheduled, or that there was some defect in the scheduling, and the creditor did not have actual knowledge of the bankruptcy case in time to file a claim, seek a determination of dischargeability if one was necessary under 11 U.S.C. § 523(c)(1), or otherwise participate in the bankruptcy case [see 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(3)]. Paragraph A sets forth the statutory criteria for excepting a debt from discharge on this basis. The other paragraphs are optional and should be used as the particular situation warrants. If the claim is based on a debt of a type specified in 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2), (4), or (6), the 30-day standard set forth in Optional Paragraph L will be applicable instead of, or in addition to, the standard set by the earlier authorities in Optional Paragraph I.

Counsel should insert argument linking these points and authorities with the facts of the case; for example, argument that specifies whether the debt in question was scheduled, explains in detail the defects in scheduling, denies actual timely notice on the part of the creditor, or sets forth facts showing the insufficiency of any late notice or knowledge of a third person.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the debt has not been discharged because it was not duly scheduled, and the creditor had no notice of the bankruptcy case.

This form may also be used, with distinguishing facts, to oppose the contention that a debt has been discharged because it was duly scheduled or because creditor had notice of the bankruptcy case.

[b] No-Asset Cases

In the Ninth Circuit, a debtor may not reopen a no-asset, no-bar-date case to amend the debt schedule. After a no-asset, no-bar-date case has been closed, dischargeability is unaffected by scheduling; amendment is therefore pointless. If the omitted debt is of a type covered by 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(3)(A), it has already been discharged pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 727. If the debt is of a type covered by 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(3)(B), it has not been discharged and is nondischargeable [Beezley v. California Land Title Co. (9th Cir. 1993) 994 F.2d 1433, 1434] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Incorrect Address Insufficient

The facts and procedural background of Van Denburgh v. Goodfellow (1941) 19 Cal. 2d 217, 120 P.2d 20 are discussed in § 30.60[3][c].

The underlying judgment (for deficiency after foreclosure) had been scheduled in both bankruptcies but the address given was the incorrect office number, though the correct building, of the plaintiff's attorney of record in the underlying action. Plaintiff neither resided nor had an office there. Plaintiff's correct address did appear in an available directory. When discussing the improper scheduling of the claim, the California Supreme Court stated that it was well settled that a debt is not duly scheduled if the bankrupt has listed the creditor's address incorrectly (19 Cal. 2d 217, 222) . The Court added that the debtor is under duty to use reasonable diligence to ascertain the residence of the creditor. [Note that the former Bankruptcy Act required the residence address to be given. Now Official Bankruptcy Form No. 6, the schedules of creditors, requires the creditor's full mailing address, including zip code.] If he or she thereby acquires knowledge of the residence, he or she must state it correctly, and if he or she fails to ascertain such residence, he or she must state that the residence is unknown. Furthermore, it is implicit in a schedule that fails to state that the creditor's residence is unknown that the residence is known (19 Cal. 2d 217, 222) .

[b] No Address

Marlenee v. Warkentin (1945) 71 Cal. App. 2d 177, 162 P.2d 321 was an action to renew a judgment in which the defendant pleaded his discharge in bankruptcy as a defense. The trial court's findings included that the debt in question was included in the schedule of bankruptcy, but notwithstanding the fact that the plaintiff's place of residence was known to defendant at the time he filed his schedule, no address was included in the schedule, nor was there any statement that the plaintiff's address was unknown to the defendant. The plaintiff did not have actual knowledge of the bankruptcy case. Judgment was for plaintiff, and defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, quoting from Van Denburgh the holding that a debt is not duly scheduled unless the creditor's address is listed correctly (71 Cal. App. 2d 177, 180) .

[c] Incorrect Name Insufficient

In United States Credit Bureau, Inc. v. Claus (1947) 79 Cal. App. 2d 85, 179 P.2d 36 , the plaintiff's assignor was surety for defendant under a contractor's bond. The assignor, the Indemnity Insurance Company of North America, had made payments on the defendant's default that it was entitled to recover from defendant by the terms of the contract. Defendant raised the defense of his discharge in bankruptcy. Plaintiff introduced defendant's schedule A-3 in bankruptcy, which listed "North American Bonding Co.--Obligation upon a Bond, contracts covering Anderson, Country Club Estate, Fresno, May, 1940." Defendant testified that the foregoing entry on the schedule was intended to identify the plaintiff's assignor's claim. The trial court gave judgment for plaintiff, and the defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, saying that a claim listed under a wrong name is not duly scheduled (79 Cal. App. 2d 85, 88-89) .

[d] Unknown Debt

Santa Rosa Bank v. White (1903) 139 Cal. 703, 73 P. 577 was an action on a promissory note in which defendant pleaded his discharge in bankruptcy as a defense. Plaintiff's debt had not been listed in defendant's bankruptcy schedules because it was not known to defendant when he prepared the schedules. The court ruled for the plaintiff, and defendant appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed, stating that the exception from discharge for unscheduled debts applied to all debts not scheduled, whether known or unknown to the bankrupt (139 Cal. 703, 704-705) .

[e] Address Care of Third Person Insufficient

Mizrahi v. Miscione (1967) 252 Cal. App. 2d 673, 60 Cal. Rptr. 680 was an action to establish a claim against an estate in which the decedent's administrator raised the decedent's discharge in bankruptcy as a defense. The underlying debt was a judgment that was scheduled as "Morris I. Mizzachi [sic], $4,500.00, c/o Louis Most, Attorney at Law, 328 S. Beverly Dr., Beverly Hills, Calif. Action for damages filed, etc." The debtor used that address because Most was the first name in the name of the firm that represented plaintiff in the underlying action, although he was from the Los Angeles office of the firm. Most was not plaintiff's attorney when the notice of the first meeting of creditors was sent.

Most testified that he did not remember seeing the notice, did not know plaintiff, had nothing to do with the case in which the underlying judgment was rendered, and that it was his custom to throw into the wastebasket notices of first meetings of creditors of a bankrupt. Judgment was for plaintiff, and defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court stated that mail addressed to a third party that comes to the office of an attorney is mail of the addressee, not of the attorney, and imparts no notice to the attorney (252 Cal. App. 2d 673, 676) . At that time the bankruptcy code defined "creditor" to include the duly authorized agent, attorney, or proxy of the holder of a claim. Defendant failed to show that Most had plaintiff's authority to represent him for the purpose of filing a claim in bankruptcy. The court said that when a judgment has been entered, the duties of an attorney come to an end unless the terms of employment require the attorney to collect the judgment. Without a showing that the scope of employment includes authority to receive notice of bankruptcy, receipt by the attorney of notice of the debtor's bankruptcy case does not constitute notice to the (former) client (252 Cal. App. 2d 673, 677) . Further, the court of appeal noted that defendant knew plaintiff's business address and that plaintiff's residence address was available to him (252 Cal. App. 2d 673, 678) .

Brown v. Tropp (1930) 106 Cal. App. 605, 289 P. 648 involved a judgment debtor's attempt to quash execution on the basis of an intervening discharge in bankruptcy. The judgment was scheduled but the address given was in care of an attorney in Los Angeles. Defendant's affidavits stated that he did not know plaintiff's address and believed plaintiff to be acquainted with the attorney whose address he used. Plaintiff's affidavits stated that he did not know the third person to whom the notice was addressed, had no actual notice of the bankruptcy until after the election of the trustee, and had no formal notice or notice to file his claim until one day before the expiration of the time for filing claims. The trial court believed the plaintiff and did not quash the writ. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, saying that an incorrect address is insufficient, and that this false address was also insufficient (106 Cal. App. 605, 607-608) .

[f] Debtor's Burden of Proof

The facts and procedural background of Mizrahi v. Miscione (1967) 252 Cal. App. 2d 673, 60 Cal. Rptr. 680 , are discussed in § 30.67[3][e]. In discussing the defendant debtor's burden of proof, the court of appeal stated that once it is established that a debt was not duly scheduled, in order to prove that the debt was discharged, the burden is on the debtor to prove that the creditor had notice or actual knowledge of the bankruptcy case (252 Cal. App. 2d 673, 677) .

[g] Actual Knowledge Required

In Ismay v. Tyler (1959) 169 Cal. App. 2d Supp. 883, 337 P.2d 257 , plaintiff (a collection agency) was the assignee of the original creditor and obtained judgment in its own name in 1955. Defendant sought to quash a writ of execution on the ground of a 1957 discharge in bankruptcy. Plaintiff was not listed as a creditor in the bankruptcy case and received no notice of it. The original creditor was listed and received notice. The court denied the application to quash, and defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. Defendant contended that the assignment to plaintiff created the relationship of principal and agent and that under Civ. Code § 2332, which provides that as against a principal, both principal and agent are deemed to have notice of whatever either has notice of, and ought in good faith and the exercise of ordinary care and diligence to communicate to the other, the assignor's notice of the bankruptcy case constituted constructive notice to plaintiff, its agent. The court of appeal disagreed, stating that the more specific rule governing the relationship among plaintiff, assignor, and defendant was that after defendant had notice of the assignment, he dealt with the assignor at his peril. The underlying action established that defendant knew of the assignment prior to filing bankruptcy (169 Cal. App. 2d Supp. 883, 885). The court said that as used in the applicable section of the former Bankruptcy Act [now see 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(3)], the term "actual knowledge" explains the word "notice," and actual knowledge is required to exclude an unscheduled debt from the exception to discharge. It followed then that Civ. Code § 2332 should not be applied to meet the requirement of actual knowledge (169 Cal. App. 2d Supp. 883, 885). The court distinguished the case of Ray v. Schubach (1935) 10 Cal. App. 2d 122, 123, 50 P.2d 1073 (see § 30.60, Discussion of Authorities, Assignor's Knowledge of Bankruptcy Case), in which the assignor's knowledge of the bankruptcy case was imputed to the assignee. The court noted that in Ray, the assignor had actual knowledge of the bankruptcy case before the assignment and the suit on the assigned claim (169 Cal. App. 2d Supp. 883, 885-886).

[h] Timeliness of Knowledge

The facts and procedural background of Van Denburgh v. Goodfellow (1941) 19 Cal. 2d 217, 120 P.2d 20 are discussed in § 30.60[3][c]. The underlying debt was represented by a deficiency judgment after foreclosure.

Defendants contended that, as plaintiff had sought and obtained leave to file a late claim in one bankruptcy case, he could have done so in the other, and that therefore the late notice was sufficient. The Supreme Court disagreed, saying that in order to be sufficient to discharge a debt that was not duly scheduled, the creditor must have notice early enough to enable him or her to take advantage of the benefits of the bankruptcy law and to give him or her an equal opportunity with other creditors to participate in the administration of the estate. The Supreme Court cited Brown v. Tropp (1930) 106 Cal. App. 605, 289 P. 648 for the rule that the right to participate, including the right to vote for the trustee, cannot be disregarded on the theory that it would have made no difference in the administration of the affairs of the estate (19 Cal. 2d 217, 223) .

The facts and procedural background of Brown v. Tropp (1930) 106 Cal. App. 605, 289 P. 648 are discussed in § 30.67[3][e]. The underlying debt was represented by a judgment on a note.

In discussing what notice is sufficient to discharge the unscheduled debt, the court quoted from Birkett v. Columbia Bank (1904) 195 U.S. 345, 350, 25 S. Ct. 38, 49 L. Ed. 231 , that actual knowledge of the bankruptcy case is a knowledge in time to avail a creditor of the benefits of the law, in time to give him or her an equal opportunity with other creditors, not a knowledge that may come so late as to deprive him or her of participation in the administration of the affairs of the estate, or to deprive the creditor of dividends (106 Cal. App. 605, 608) . The trustee in bankruptcy had submitted affidavits saying that no dividends were declared before the last day to file claims and that his election was unanimous, so it would have made no difference even if plaintiff had voted against his election. The court disagreed, stating that the right of plaintiff to the equal opportunity with other creditors to participate in the administration of the affairs of the estate is not to be disregarded on the surmise or conjecture that his or her participation in the proceedings would have made no difference (106 Cal. App. 605, 609) .

[i] Notice to Assignor After Assignment

Ismay v. Tyler (1959) 169 Cal. App. 2d Supp. 883, 337 P.2d 257 is discussed in*§ 30.67[3][g]*.

[j] Late Claim Not Required

The facts and procedural background of Van Denburgh v. Goodfellow (1941) 19 Cal. 2d 217, 120 P.2d 20 are discussed in § 30.60[3][c].

Defendants contended that because plaintiff had sought and obtained leave to file a late claim in one bankruptcy case, he was required to have done so in the other. Leave to file the late claim was granted in the one case on the theory that it was an amendment of the claim shown to exist by the schedules and by the debtor's testimony at the first meeting of creditors. Defendants contended that the schedules and testimony must therefore be considered a claim in the other case. The Supreme Court disagreed with both contentions. The Court said that information supplied by the debtor can be considered a claim only for the purpose of allowing the creditor to file an amended claim when equity and good conscience require that the creditor be allowed to participate in the case, but that there is nothing in the former Bankruptcy Act that requires a creditor to petition for leave to file such an amended claim (19 Cal. 2d 217, 225) .

[k] 30 Days Notice Generally Required

In 1986, debtor in In re Dewalt (9th Cir. 1992) 961 F.2d 848 executed an installment note and security agreement in the amount of $4,066 in favor of Finance One of California, Inc. In June 1986, the creditor notified the debtor that it would pursue collection of the note. In July 1987, the debtor filed a Chapter 7 petition but did not list Finance One, which was then known as Manufacturers Hanover, on its schedules. Debtor's Notice of Intent (to surrender or redeem property or reaffirm debt that it secures) listed the creditor as "Finance One Manufacturers Hanover, South Dakota, 92010." That address was incorrect, and the creditor received no initial notice of the bankruptcy filing, or of the creditors' meeting, which was held on September 2, 1987. The last date to file claims to determine dischargeability was set for November 2, 1987. The creditor had commenced a state court action against the debtor in which it requested entry of a default judgment. The debtor was served with the Request to Enter Default on October 21, 1987, and five days later, the secretary for the debtor's attorney telephoned the office of creditor's counsel and left a cryptic message with the secretary of the creditor's counsel that the debtor had previously filed for bankruptcy. The creditor did not file a complaint to challenge dischargeability or a request for extension of time to do so before the bar date. The creditor's counsel examined the bankruptcy file and informed the debtor's counsel that it was not listed on the schedules. The debtor agreed to amend the schedules and did so on November 25, 1987, but again listing the creditor at an incorrect South Dakota address with a California zip code. Consequently, the creditor did not receive any notice of the amended schedules from the court. On March 21, 1988, the creditor filed a complaint to determine dischargeability, alleging that the debtor made material misrepresentations of financial condition in writing [see 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2)(B)]. The debtor moved to dismiss the complaint as untimely, and the bankruptcy court granted the request, holding that the creditor had actual notice of the case in time to file a request for extension of time before the bar date. A divided Bankruptcy Appellate Panel affirmed. Creditor appealed.

The court of appeals reversed. The court first evaluated the rule enunciated in In re Price (9th Cir. 1989) 871 F.2d 97, 99 (see § 30.60[3][b]), that a creditor has sufficient notice if it learns of the bankruptcy case in time to file a request for extension of time to file a complaint to determine dischargeability. The Dewalt court stated that this rule unfairly punishes creditors, holding them to the highest standard of diligence in a situation caused by the debtor's negligence. Further, it appears to be contrary to the statutory language to place a creditor in the position where a motion for extension is its only option. 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(3)(B) refers to actual notice in time to file a request for determination of dischargeability. A complaint to determine dischargeability is such a request; a motion for an extension of time is not (961 F.2d 848, 850) . If the claim is small, filing a request for extension may consume a good portion of the creditor's litigation budget. In addition, the creditor could be forced to file a request for extension before if had time to determine the merits of the nondischargeability claim. The court found guidance as to the sufficient amount of notice in Fed. R. Bankr. P., Rule 4007(c), which directs the court to give creditors at least 30 days' notice of the bar date. Properly scheduled creditors will receive at least 80 days' notice in most cases (that is, 20 days' notice of creditors' meeting plus 60 days' notice from meeting to bar date). The court acknowledged that under 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(3)(B), actual knowledge of the case is sufficient, but the 30-day notice provision in Fed. R. Bankr. P., Rule 4007(c) provides a guide to the minimum time within which it is reasonable to expect a creditor to act (961 F.2d 848, 851) . Even 30 days' notice may not be sufficient in truly extraordinary circumstances, for example, if a truly unsophisticated creditor not represented by counsel receives only the sketchiest notice that a bankruptcy case has been filed. On the other hand, a somewhat lesser period may be sufficient if there is clear evidence that the creditor had enough advance knowledge of the bar date to file the complaint or request an extension and has purposefully chosen to lie in wait. Neither of those situations existed in this case. The court concluded that in the great majority of cases, 30 days' advance knowledge of the case is both necessary and sufficient to satisfy 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(3)(B) (961 F.2d 848, 851) .

[l] Request for Extension Not Required

In re Dewalt (9th Cir. 1992) 961 F.2d 848 is discussed in*§ 30.67[3][k]*.

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Unscheduled or Improperly Scheduled Debts

The court of appeal in Tarakjian v. Krone (1987) 196 Cal. App. 3d 1243, 242 Cal. Rptr. 435 affirmed the trial court's nunc pro tunc amendment of a default judgment entered against defendant during the pendency of defendant's bankruptcy case. The nunc pro tunc amendment was to correct the spelling of defendant's name. The action was filed before defendant filed bankruptcy. Defendant did not list the action or the underlying debt in the bankruptcy schedules, and plaintiffs claimed not to know of the bankruptcy proceeding. The court of appeal said that defendant's failure to list the debt was tacit consent to state court jurisdiction. As the bankruptcy case had since been dismissed, it was also too late for defendant to claim the benefit of an automatic stay (196 Cal. App. 3d 1243, 1247) .

[b] Address Insufficient

The debt involved in Miller v. Guasti (1912) 226 U.S. 170, 33 S. Ct. 49, 57 L. Ed. 173 had been scheduled with the address of the creditor given as "Unknown, California" although the findings of the trial court indicated that the debtor knew the creditor's residence and post office address. On writ of error from the New York Court of Appeals, the United States Supreme Court affirmed that the debt had not been discharged (226 U.S. 170, 171) .

§ 30.68 Opposing Contention That Debt Has Been Discharged--Damages Based on Fraud [11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2)]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE DEBT AT ISSUE IN THIS CASE IS BASED ON FRAUD AND THUS IS NOT DISCHARGEABLE IN BANKRUPTCY.

A. Fraud. [See § 30.21, Paragraph C.]

[Optional] B. Fraud Other Than in Financial Statement. To establish nondischargeability of debts for money, property, or services obtained by false pretenses, false representations, or "actual frauds" other than in a financial statement (see 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2)(A)), the creditor must show all of the following (Field v. Mans (1995) 516 U.S. 59, 74, 116 S. Ct. 437, 133 L. Ed. 2d 351 ; In re Apte (9th Cir. 1996) 96 F.3d 1319, 1322-1324 ; In re Britton (9th Cir. 1991) 950 F.2d 602, 604 ; In re Rubin (9th Cir. 1989) 875 F.2d 755, 759) :

(1) The debtor made representations;

(2) At the time, the debtor knew those representations were false;

(3) The debtor made the representations with the intent to deceive the creditor;

(4) The creditor justifiably relied on the representations; and

(5) The creditor sustained loss and damage as a proximate result of the representations having been made.

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted to oppose the contention that liability based on fraud has been discharged [see 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2)(A)].

Paragraph B sets forth the criteria for establishing fraud. If the fraud was based on malicious and willful acts, punitive damages will also be nondischargeable [In re Britton (9th Cir. 1991) 950 F.2d 602, 605-607 ; see § 30.71]. This paragraph contains the "justifiable reliance" standard established by the United States Supreme Court [see Field v. Mans (1995) 516 U.S. 59, 74, 116 S. Ct. 437, 133 L. Ed. 2d 351] . Before Field was decided, there were Ninth Circuit cases holding that a single "reasonable reliance" standard as specified in 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2)(B) applied, regardless of whether the claim is exempted from discharge under paragraph (A) or paragraph (B) of 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2) [see In re Siriani (9th Cir. 1992) 967 F.2d 302, 304 and other authorities in § 30.20]. There were also Ninth Circuit cases holding that the common-law "justifiable reliance" standard applied under 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2)(A) (other than in a written financial statement) because that subparagraph does not specify a standard [see In re Kirsh (9th Cir. 1992) 973 F.2d 1454, 1458] .

Counsel should insert argument linking these points and authorities with the facts of the case; for example, argument that refers to the record in any underlying action and in the proceeding to determine dischargeability to develop facts relating to the five criteria.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue. Paragraphs A, B, and J through O in § 30.21 may be particularly appropriate to establish the procedural and evidentiary requirements for establishing nondischargeability of a debt based on fraud.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Fraud Other Than in Financial Statement

After the debtor in Field v. Mans (1995) 516 U.S. 59, 116 S. Ct. 437, 133 L. Ed. 2d 351 filed for relief under Chapter 11, creditors alleged that debtor had made fraudulent representations in letters on which they relied in extending credit to a corporation controlled by debtor. Creditors contended debtor's obligation to them as guarantor of the corporation's debt should be excepted from discharge under 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2)(A) as a debt resulting from fraud. The bankruptcy court found debtor's letters were false representations, but followed circuit precedent in requiring creditors to show reasonable reliance. The bankruptcy court found their reliance unreasonable, and held the debt dischargeable (133 L. Ed. 2d 351, 357) . The district court and court of appeals affirmed. Because there was a conflict on this point among the circuits, the Supreme Court granted certiorari (133 L. Ed. 2d 351, 358) .

With no standard of reliance specified in 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2)(A), the Supreme Court stated that it would look to the generally shared common law for assistance when (as here) common law terms are used without further specification. Accordingly, the court held that 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2)(A) requires justifiable reliance, not reasonable reliance, to except a debt from discharge (133 L. Ed. 2d 351, 358-365) .

In re Apte (9th Cir. 1996) 96 F.3d 1319 involved a Chapter 7 debtor whose debt was held to be nondischargeable under 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2)(A) because it was incurred by fraud. The debtor, Apte, leased office space, fell behind in payments, and was served with an unlawful detainer action. Japra approached Apte about a sublease, without knowledge that Apte was in default. Apte told Japra that the lessor had approved the sublease and Japra's improvement plans, although these representations were false. After Japra's construction was almost complete, Apte's master lease was terminated and Japra was evicted. Apte then filed a chapter 7 petition. Japra filed a proof of claim based on rent paid and damages incurred, and filed an action to have the debt declared nondischarageable. The bankruptcy court found that Japra's reliance on Apte's misrepresentations was unreasonable and unjustifiable. The bankruptcy appellate panel reversed.

The Ninth Circuit affirmed. It stated that a person is justified in relying on a representation of fact although the falsity of the representation might have been ascertained through investigation. The sublessee's reliance on the debtor/lessee's misrepresentations was justifiable, and thus debt for rent paid and construction costs incurred by the sublessee was nondischargeable under the fraud exception, even though the sublessee could have discovered that the lessee had misrepresented the lessor's approval of the sublease. The sublessee, who was well-educated but not highly experienced in real estate, may have been negligent in continuing construction without the lessor's written approval, but negligence in failing to discover a misrepresentation is not a defense to fraud (96 F.3d 1319, 1322-1324) .

The debtor in In re Britton (9th Cir. 1991) 950 F.2d 602 (decided before Field v. Mans,) was a physician's employee who misrepresented himself to a patient as a physician, examined the patient, and induced the patient to have surgery, which was so negligently performed that infection developed and additional corrective surgery was required. State court judgments were entered against both the debtor and the surgeon, and included an award of $50,000 in punitive damages against the debtor/employee. The proceeding to determine dischargeability of the judgment against the debtor/employee resulted in a finding that the debt, including the liability for punitive damages, was nondischargeable under 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2) (fraud) and 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(6) (willful and malicious injury). The bankruptcy appellate panel reversed the bankruptcy court in part, holding that nondischargeability of the punitive damages could not be based on 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2). The Ninth Circuit affirmed the appellate panel's decision, finding that the debtor's conduct was sufficiently willful and malicious to render the punitive damage judgment nondischargeable under 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(6).

Citing In re Houtman (9th Cir. 1978) 568 F.2d 651, 655 (see § 30.21[3][a]), and In re Taylor (9th Cir. 1975) 514 F.2d 1370, 1373 , each decided before the effective date of the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1978, the court said the Ninth Circuit has employed a five-part test for determining whether a debt is nondischargeable under 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2)(A). The creditor must show that (950 F.2d 602, 604) :

(1) The debtor made representations;

(2) At the time, he or she knew those representations were false;

(3) The debtor made the representations with the intent to deceive the creditor;

(4) The creditor reasonably relied on the representations; and

(5) The creditor sustained loss and damage as a proximate result of the representations having been made.

The court acknowledged that there were inconsistencies in the creditor's testimony and conflicts between the creditor's version of events and the debtor's, but concluded that the bankruptcy court's findings with respect to the debtor's conduct were not clearly erroneous (950 F.2d 602, 604) .

The court stated that proximate cause is sometimes dependent on whether the conduct has been so significant and important a cause that the defendant should be legally responsible. But both significance and importance turn on conclusions in terms of legal policy, so that they depend on whether the policy of the law will extend the responsibility for the conduct to the consequences which in fact have occurred (950 F.2d 602, 604) . Again, the court concluded that the bankruptcy court's findings on the issue of proximate cause were not clearly erroneous. Malpractice can be seen as a foreseeable consequence of any medical procedure, including plastic surgery. The debtor employed fraud to convince the creditor to submit to surgery. Moreover, the court said, on these facts, there appears to be no policy argument for limiting the extent of the debtor's liability for the creditor's injuries. The debtor cannot escape the consequences of his intentional conduct by arguing that the injuries the creditor suffered were not the proximate result of the fraud the debtor committed (950 F.2d 602, 605) .

The portion of the opinion addressing nondischargeability of the punitive damage award is discussed in § 30.71[3][b].

In re Rubin (9th Cir. 1989) 875 F.2d 755 , another case before Field, was an individual's Chapter 7 proceeding. In 1976, when the creditors' home was in foreclosure, the debtor, a real estate broker, told them there was no time to refinance the house before the foreclosure sale, but that he would buy it from them for $4,000, allowing them to rent it back until they could secure financing to repurchase it from him for $38,000, its then appraised value, pursuant to an option to repurchase. Debtor promised to help them obtain that refinancing, but never did. Instead, the debtor obtained several loans using the home as security, selling it to one of the lenders, and evicted the creditors. The home was eventually transferred back to the debtor, who transferred it to other creditors. In 1977, the creditors sued the debtor for fraud, eventually obtaining a state court verdict for $90,000 in compensatory damages and $500,000 in punitive damages. That verdict was set aside and a new trial granted on the basis of passion and prejudice shown by the jury. In 1982, immediately before the new trial, the matter was settled for $125,000. The creditors brought a complaint to determine dischargeability. Both the bankruptcy court and the Bankruptcy Appellate Panel found the debt nondischargeable, as did the Ninth Circuit.

The Ninth Circuit began its discussion by holding that the bankruptcy court's determinations with respect to debtor's intent to defraud and proximate cause were findings of fact, even though a proximate cause finding may depend to some extent on law. Further, those findings could not be overturned unless they were clearly erroneous (875 F.2d 755, 758) .

The court said the elements of a claim for fraudulent misrepresentations under 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2)(A) are (875 F.2d 755, 759) :

(1) A representation of fact by the debtor;

(2) That was material;

(3) That the debtor knew at the time to be false;

(4) That the debtor made with the intention of deceiving the creditor;

(5) On which the creditor relied;

(6) That the creditor's reliance was reasonable; and

(7) That damage proximately resulted from the representation.

The court identified two misrepresentations: saying that there was no time to obtain a loan before the foreclosure and saying that he would help them obtain a loan, which he never did. Although the debtor claimed the first was merely an opinion, the court said an opinion about a future even which the declarant does not hold, or which is made with reckless indifference for the truth, may be fraudulent. Further, although debtor could characterize the second misrepresentation as a promise, a promise made with a positive intent not to perform or without a present intent to perform satisfies 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2)(A). Both representations were material. The court said that the debtor's realization of substantial profits on creditors' home while ignoring their legitimate interests strengthened the finding that the debtor intended to defraud the creditors (875 F.2d 755, 759) .

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE DEBT AT ISSUE IN THIS CASE ARISES FROM FIDUCIARY DEFALCATION AND AS SUCH IS NOT DISCHARGEABLE IN BANKRUPTCY.

A. Fiduciary Defalcation. [See § 30.21, Paragraph E.]

B. Federal Law Determines Nature of Relationship. Whether a relationship is "fiduciary" within the meaning of Section 523(a)(4) of Title 11 of the United States Code is a question of federal law (Ragsdale v. Haller (9th Cir. 1986) 780 F.2d 794, 795) .

C. Federal Definition of Fiduciary. The broad, general definition of fiduciary, a relationship involving confidence, trust, and good faith, is inapplicable in the discharge context. The trust giving rise to the fiduciary relationship must be imposed prior to any wrongdoing; the debtor must have been a trustee before the wrong and without reference to it. These requirements eliminate constructive, resulting, or implied trusts (Ragsdale v. Haller (9th Cir. 1986) 780 F.2d 794, 796) .

[Optional] D. State Law Determines When Trust Exists. Although the concept of fiduciary is to be narrowly defined as a matter of federal law, state law is to be consulted to determine when a trust in this strict sense exists (Ragsdale v. Haller (9th Cir. 1986) 780 F.2d 794, 796) .

[Optional] E. No Trust Under Corp. Code § 16404. Corporations Code Section 16404(b)(1) provides that a partner's duty of loyalty to the partnership and the other partners includes the duty to account to the partnership and hold as trustee for it any property, profit, or benefit derived by the partner in the conduct and winding up of the partnership business or derived from a use by the partner of partnership property or information, including the appropriation of a partnership opportunity. Because the trust arises under this statute only when a partner derives profits without consent of the partnership, it is the sort of trust ex maleficto not included in the purview of Section 523(a)(4) of Title 11 of the United States Code (Ragsdale v. Haller (9th Cir. 1986) 780 F.2d 794, 796 (applying former Corp. Code § 15021, substantially identical)).

[Optional] F. Partners or Joint Venturers Are Fiduciaries. California case law has made all partners trustees over the assets of the partnership. Therefore, California partners are fiduciaries within the meaning of Section 523(a)(4) of Title 11 of the United States Code with respect to partnership assets and profits. [The same rule applies to joint ventures and joint venturers] (Ragsdale v. Haller (9th Cir. 1986) 780 F.2d 794, 796-797 [n.3]).

These points and authorities may be used to oppose the contention that a debt arising from fiduciary defalcation is dischargeable [see 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(4)]. Paragraph A sets forth the statutory criteria of nondischargeability for this type of debt. Paragraph B sets forth the requirement that federal law is determinative. Paragraph C sets forth a general federal definition of fiduciary relationship. Optional Paragraph D establishes that state law is used to determine whether a trust exists. Optional Paragraph E is a particular example of one of the trusts imposed by law after wrongdoing that do not fall within the fiduciary definition of 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(4). Optional Paragraph F applies the nondischargeability criteria to debts arising from partnerships or joint ventures. The bracketed text should be used if a joint venture is involved.

Counsel should insert argument linking these points and authorities with the facts of the case; for example, argument that shows the connection between the debt and the fiduciary relationship.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the debt is nondischargeable because it arose from a fiduciary defalcation.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Federal Law Determines Nature of Relationship

The debtor and the creditor in Ragsdale v. Haller (9th Cir. 1986) 780 F.2d 794 cooperated in an Alaskan fishing venture. They owned the boat together, but after the first two years, the fishing permit was taken only in the debtor's name. Therefore, all payments were made to him. The debtor did not pay the creditor all the profits to which the creditor was entitled for the third and fourth seasons. The dispute was not resolved, and the creditor filed a state court action. The debtor filed bankruptcy. The creditor filed a complaint to determine dischargeability of the accrued but unpaid profit distribution. The bankruptcy court found the debt to be nondischargeable. The federal district court affirmed, as did the court of appeals.

The court of appeals first recited that the issue of whether the relationship is "fiduciary" within the meaning of 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(4) is determined by federal law (780 F.2d 794, 795) . The court then went on to discuss the federal definition of fiduciary in the discharge context, saying that the broad, general definition of fiduciary, a relationship involving confidence, trust, and good faith, is inapplicable. The trust giving rise to the fiduciary relationship must be imposed prior to any wrongdoing; the debtor must have been a trustee before the wrong and without reference to it. These requirements eliminate constructive, resulting, or implied trusts (780 F.2d 794, 796) . Nevertheless, the court concluded, even though the concept of fiduciary is to be narrowly defined as a matter of federal law, state law is to be consulted to determine when a trust in this strict sense exists (780 F.2d 794, 796) .

[b] Federal Definition of Fiduciary

Ragsdale v. Haller (9th Cir. 1986) 780 F.2d 794 is discussed in § 30.69[3][a].

[c] State Law Determines When Trust Exists

Ragsdale v. Haller (9th Cir. 1986) 780 F.2d 794 is discussed in § 30.69[3][a].

[d] No Trust Under Corp. Code § 16404

The facts and procedural background of Ragsdale v. Haller (9th Cir. 1986) 780 F.2d 794 and other portions of the opinion are discussed in § 30.69[3][a]. The court considered whether former Corp. Code § 15021 [see now Corp. Code § 16404(b)(1)] established the requisite trust relationship. Former Corp. Code § 15021 provided that every partner must account to the partnership for any benefit, and hold as trustee for it any profits he or she derived without the consent of the other partners from any transaction connected with the partnership or from any partnership property. In Ragsdale, the profits were not derived without consent, but were retained without consent. Because the trust arose under former Corp. Code § 15021 only when the partner derived profits without consent of the partnership, it was the sort of trust ex maleficio not included within the purview of 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(4) (780 F.2d 794, 796) .

[e] Partners or Joint Venturers Are Fiduciaries

The facts and procedural background of Ragsdale v. Haller (9th Cir. 1986) 780 F.2d 794 and other portions of the opinion are discussed in § 30.69[3][a] and [d]. The court continued by citing Gunter v. Leff (1982) 33 Cal. 3d 508, 514, 189 Cal. Rptr. 377, 381, 658 P.2d 740 and several other cases (780 F.2d 794, 796 n.2) [see generally Ch. 170, Partnerships and Joint Ventures .] and noting that California case law has made all partners trustees over the assets of the partnership. Therefore, California partners are fiduciaries within the meaning of 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(4) with respect to partnership assets and profits (780 F.2d 794, 796-797) . The court also noted that the bankruptcy court had never determined whether the enterprise in question was a partnership or a joint venture, and said that determination would not effect the outcome because joint venturers have the same responsibilities to one and other as partners (780 F.2d 794, 797 n.3).

§ 30.70 Opposing Contention That Debt Has Been Discharged--Debt Is for Spousal or Child Support [11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(5)]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

A DISCHARGE IN BANKRUPTCY DOES NOT DISCHARGE DEBTS PAYABLE TO THE DEBTOR'S [FORMER] SPOUSE OR CHILD FOR SPOUSAL OR CHILD SUPPORT.

A. Domestic Support. [See § 30.20, Paragraph D.]

[Optional] B. Federal Law Determines Nature of Debt. Because of the federal interests reflected in the bankruptcy law, federal rather than state law determines whether an obligation is actually in the nature of alimony, support, or maintenance (Shaver v. Shaver (9th Cir. 1984) 736 F.2d 1314, 1316 ; see Stout v. Prussel (9th Cir. 1982) 691 F.2d 859, 860-861) .

[Optional] C. Construction of Agreement. In construing an agreement made between [former] spouses, the nature of the obligation created is determined by the intention of the parties, as expressed in the agreement, and by the substance of the obligation (Stout v. Prussel (9th Cir. 1982) 691 F.2d 859, 860-861 ; Sloan v. Mitchell (1972) 28 Cal. App. 3d 47, 51, 104 Cal. Rptr. 418).

[Optional] D. Extrinsic Evidence Required. In determining whether an obligation is intended for support of a former spouse, the court must look beyond the language of the decree to the intent of the parties and to the substance of the obligation (Shaver v. Shaver (9th Cir. 1984) 736 F.2d 1314, 1316) .

[Optional] E. Inadmissibility of Parol Evidence. When there is no uncertainty or ambiguity in a judgment providing for a property settlement, extrinsic evidence may not properly be considered by a trial court to vary the terms of the agreement, and the obligations are dischargeable in the debtor spouse's bankruptcy (Yarus v. Yarus (1960) 178 Cal. App. 2d 190, 196-203, 3 Cal. Rptr. 50).

[Optional] F. Obligation Extending Beyond Remarriage. The fact that an obligation continues beyond remarriage of the recipient does not prevent it from being support and thus nondischargeable in bankruptcy (In re Sternberg (9th Cir. 1996) 85 F.3d 1400, 1406-1407 ; Sloan v. Mitchell (1972) 28 Cal. App. 3d 47, 51-52, 104 Cal. Rptr. 418).

[Optional] G. Nonmodifiable Payments. One spouse's relinquishment of his or her right to a modifiable allowance does not imply that he or she also gave up his or her statutory right to keep the allowance nondischargeable in bankruptcy (Myhers v. Myhers (1970) 6 Cal. App. 3d 855, 858, 86 Cal. Rptr. 356 ; see Sloan v. Mitchell (1972) 28 Cal. App. 3d 47, 49, 52, 104 Cal. Rptr. 418).

[Optional] H. Attorney's Fees. When the obligation of one [former] spouse to pay the other's attorney's fees is for the purpose of maintaining and supporting the economically disadvantaged spouse and enabling that spouse to secure adequate legal representation and does not arise from the division of the community assets, the debtor spouse's obligation for the other spouse's attorney's fees is not dischargeable in bankruptcy (Jones v. Tyson (9th Cir. 1975) 518 F.2d 678, 680-681 ; In re Gwinn (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1982) 6 Collier Bankr. Cas. 2d 1114, 20 B.R. 233, 235).

These points and authorities may be used to oppose the contention that a particular debt payable to a debtor's former spouse or child is dischargeable when the debt is in the nature of support [see 11 U.S.C. §§ 101(14A), 523(a)(5)]. Paragraph A sets forth the statutory distinction between obligations for support and those in settlement of property rights. Optional Paragraph B sets forth requirement that federal law is determinative. The other optional paragraphs may be used as the particular situation warrants.

Counsel should insert argument linking these points and authorities with the facts of the case; for example, attachment of a copy of the judgment and any agreement establishing the obligation.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the debt is not dischargeable because it is in the nature of support.

This form may also be used, with distinguishing facts, to support the contention that a debt is dischargeable when it represents a division of property.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Federal Law Determines Nature of Debt

In Shaver v. Shaver (9th Cir. 1984) 736 F.2d 1314 , the obligation at issue arose from the parties' Indiana divorce decree, which provided that three of the couple's four minor children would live with the wife and that the husband would pay her $1,500 per month in child support and $150,000 over a 75-month period at the rate of $2,000 per month in settlement of her property rights. The decree was later amended to increase the $150,000 to $197,300 payable over 10 years. The increase was to provide for the taxes that the wife would have to pay on the original amount. The amended decree referred to the debt as her marital and dower rights. The bankruptcy court and the district court found the obligation to be in the nature of support and therefore nondischargeable. The husband appealed. The court of appeals affirmed.

The court first noted that, although Indiana does not provide for alimony in the circumstances of this case, the bankruptcy court was not bound by treatment of the obligation in the Indiana courts. Citing Stout v. Prussel (9th Cir. 1982) 691 F.2d 859, 861 , the court held that because of the federal interests reflected in the Bankruptcy Act, federal rather than state law determines whether an obligation is actually in the nature of alimony, support, or maintenance (736 F.2d 1314, 1316) .

In Stout v. Prussel (9th Cir. 1982) 691 F.2d 859 , the obligation at issue arose from the property settlement agreement of the parties in which the wife took the family residence subject to the existing encumbrances and agreed to hold the husband harmless from any claims related to those encumbrances, while he took the family business and agreed to hold her harmless on the SBA loan that had been obtained jointly to finance the business. The SBA loan was secured in part by the family residence. Under the agreement, the husband was to remove the SBA lien on the residence. He filed bankruptcy and sought to discharge the obligations to remove the lien and to hold the wife harmless. The bankruptcy court found those obligations to be in settlement of property rights and dischargeable. The district court reversed the bankruptcy court, finding the obligations to be in the nature of support and nondischargeable. The husband appealed. The court of appeals reversed, reinstating the determination that the debt was in settlement of property rights and therefore dischargeable.

Although it never decided the issue because it concluded the result would be the same under state or federal law, the court of appeals first discussed former 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(5)(B), which provided that a debt is nondischargeable only if it is "actually in the nature of alimony, maintenance, or support," and cited a congressional report to the effect that in enacting the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1978, Congress abrogated prior law and dictated that federal rather than state law should determine whether an obligation is actually in the nature of alimony, support, or maintenance (736 F.2d 859, 860-861) .

In a dispute regarding a lien on a homestead granted to a debtor's former spouse to secure the value of a former interest under a divorce decree, the United States Supreme Court held that 11 U.S.C. § 522(f)(1) requires a debtor to have possessed an interest to which a lien attached, before it attached, to avoid fixing of the lien on that interest. A lien that attached to a former spouse's fee simple interest only after the extinguishment of a couple's joint tenancy in homestead property could not be avoided [Farrey v. Sanderfoot (1991) 500 U.S. 291, 300-301, 111 S. Ct. 1825, 114 L. Ed. 2d 337] .

[b] Construction of Agreement

The facts and procedural background of Stout v. Prussel (9th Cir. 1982) 691 F.2d 859 , are discussed in § 30.70[3][a]. The court of appeals noted that the bankruptcy judge had relied solely on the agreement in determining the nature of the obligation. Since the paragraph of the agreement that contained the hold harmless provision began "[t]o equalize the division of community property," and the agreement had other provisions designated as support payments, the court of appeals concluded that, viewing the agreement as a whole, the determination that the obligation was in settlement of property rights was not such a gross abuse of discretion that reversal was required (691 F.2d 859, 861-862) .

Sloan v. Mitchell (1972) 28 Cal. App. 3d 47, 104 Cal. Rptr. 418 was an action for declaratory relief in which plaintiff sought a determination that an obligation of a marital settlement agreement was dischargeable in bankruptcy. The agreement provided that in consideration for 18 years of married life, the husband agreed to pay the wife $500 per month for the remainder of their joint lives. The payments were to continue in the case of the wife's remarriage, and could only be modified if certain contingencies occurred reducing the husband's average monthly earnings. In addition, the agreement provided that, in consideration for the support of the wife and division of property, the wife waived all claims to alimony, support, or maintenance that she otherwise might have had over and above the amounts expressly provided for in the agreement. The trial court found the obligation constituted spousal support and was not dischargeable in bankruptcy. Plaintiff appealed the judgment and the court of appeal affirmed.

The court of appeal held that the nature of the obligation is to be determined by the intention of the parties, as expressed in their agreement. Here the court found the agreement to be unambiguous in its recitation that the payments were "in consideration of the years of married life, to-wit: eighteen (18) years" and of the wife's waiver of "any and all claims to alimony, support or maintenance which she otherwise might have over and above the amounts herein expressly provided for" (28 Cal. App. 3d 47, 51) .

[c] Extrinsic Evidence Required

The facts and procedural background of Shaver v. Shaver (9th Cir. 1984) 736 F.2d 1314 are discussed in § 30.70[3][a]. The court of appeals stated that the court must look beyond the language of the decree to the intent of the parties and to the substance of the debt. If an agreement does not explicitly provide for support, a court may presume that a so-called property settlement is intended for support when the circumstances of the case indicate that the recipient spouse needs support. Factors indicating the need for support include the presence of minor children and the imbalance of the relative income of the parties (736 F.2d 1314, 1316) . The court of appeals said that W was unemployed and had no special job-related skills at the time of the divorce, and that the trial judge had so noted. Those considerations would have been irrelevant to a true property settlement but are of primary importance to a settlement intended for support, the court said, concluding that the debt was for support (736 F.2d 1314, 1317) .

[d] Inadmissibility of Parol Evidence

Yarus v. Yarus (1960) 178 Cal. App. 2d 190, 3 Cal. Rptr. 50 was an action for declaratory relief. The interlocutory judgment of the parties provided that the husband was to pay the wife $16,200 according to a prescribed schedule, and that the payment of this sum was solely by way of a property settlement, and not as payment of alimony or support and maintenance. The opinion mentioned no other provision of the agreement that addressed support. Based on extrinsic evidence, the trial court found that despite this provision of the judgment, the parties intended this provision to be in the nature of alimony and support and maintenance of the wife and that, therefore, the obligation was not discharged in defendant's bankruptcy. Defendant appealed and the court of appeal reversed.

The court of appeal stated the same rules of interpretation apply to judgments as apply to any other writing (178 Cal. App. 2d 190, 197) . Because there was no uncertainty or ambiguity in the judgment before the court, the trial court had erred in receiving extrinsic evidence (178 Cal. App. 2d 190, 200-201) . In the light of the precise terms the parties used in their agreement, the court held that what may have motivated them to include those terms was immaterial, and that the payments were discharged in bankruptcy (178 Cal. App. 2d 190, 202-203) .

[e] Obligation Extending Beyond Remarriage

The settlement agreement at issue in In re Sternberg (9th Cir. 1996) 85 F.3d 1400 provided that payments made by the husband were not taxable to the wife and were to survive her remarriage. The wife of the Chapter 11 debtor brought an action to determine the dischargeability of the debt owed to her pursuant to the agreement. The bankruptcy court determined that the obligation was nondischargeable as spousal support, and the debtor husband appealed. He argued that the court clearly erred in finding an intent to create spousal support because the payments were to survive the wife's remarriage. The Ninth Circuit disagreed, stating that survival of the debt after remarriage is not viewed as a dispositive factor, and noting that Fam. Code § 4337 allows divorcing spouses to agree to extend spousal support payments beyond the recipient spouse's remarriage. It found, therefore, that the couple's election to extend the support payments beyond remarriage was not in conflict with an intent to provide spousal support under California law. The court held that the debtor's obligation was nondischargeable as spousal support (85 F.3d 1400, 1406-1407) .

The facts and procedural background of Sloan v. Mitchell (1972) 28 Cal. App. 3d 47, 104 Cal. Rptr. 418 are discussed in § 30.70[3][b]. The husband contended that the obligation could not be support because it extended beyond remarriage. The court quoted former Civ. Code § 4801(b) [see now Fam. Code § 4337], which provides that except as otherwise agreed by the parties in writing, the obligation of any party under any order or judgment for the support and maintenance of the other party shall terminate on the death of either party or the remarriage of the other party, and held that the husband's express undertaking was provided for by the emphasized portion of that section and was nondischargeable (28 Cal. App. 3d 47, 51-52) .

[f] Nonmodifiable Payments

The decree at issue in Myhers v. Myhers (1970) 6 Cal. App. 3d 855, 86 Cal. Rptr. 356 , incorporated the terms of a separation agreement that provided that defendant agreed to pay plaintiff for her support and maintenance the sum of $300 per week, together with all medical expenses incurred by her, for a period of 121 months, unless plaintiff remarried or died before that time. The weekly payment was to cover all plaintiff's expenses and, in return, she released defendant from all obligations and rights arising from the marital relationship. The trial court found the obligation to be nondischargeable as support. Defendant appealed, and the court of appeal affirmed.

Defendant contended on appeal that, despite the language of the agreement, the payments under the agreement were nonmodifiable because the agreement implicitly so provided, and because plaintiff had waived all marital rights except those under the agreement. Therefore, defendant contended, they were payments under a property settlement agreement and dischargeable in bankruptcy. The court disagreed, stating that the character of the payments is not exclusively determined by modifiability, and that viewing the agreement in its entirely, it was clear that the payments were designed for plaintiff's support and maintenance (6 Cal. App. 3d 855, 858-859) .

The facts and procedural background of Sloan v. Mitchell (1972) 28 Cal. App. 3d 47, 104 Cal. Rptr. 418 are discussed in § 30.70[3][b].

[g] Attorney's Fees

The judgment of dissolution at issue in Jones v. Tyson (9th Cir. 1975) 518 F.2d 678 divided the community property equally, ordered the husband to pay $600 per month spousal support for 72 months, and ordered him to pay $3,500 in legal fees to respondent, the wife's attorney. He listed the obligation for legal fees as an unsecured claim in his bankruptcy case and sought a determination of dischargeability in the bankruptcy court. The bankruptcy court held the debt nondischargeable, a determination that was upheld by the district court. The husband appealed. The court of appeals affirmed. This case was decided under former 11 U.S.C. § 35(a)(7), which, unlike 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(5) (as now construed in view of the definition of domestic support in 11 U.S.C. § 101(14A)), did not include a debt "to a spouse [or] former spouse."

The husband contended that the attorney's fees were on account of legal services that related to the division of the community property. The court held that Civ. Code § 4370 makes no distinction between fees awarded for services related to the dissolution, child custody, and spousal support, and those related to the division of community property (518 F.2d 678, 680-681) . Further, the court said the purpose of a fee award is to maintain and support the economically disadvantaged spouse and to enable that spouse to secure adequate legal representation. The award is to be made on a showing of necessity, taking into account the respective incomes of the two spouses. Although the court recognized that in some instances the spouses could agree to consider legal fees as community liabilities and take them into account in dividing the community property, in which case they would be dischargeable, in this case there was no indication that the award was based on anything other than the wife's need (518 F.2d 678, 681) .

In re Gwinn (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1982) 6 Collier Bankr. Cas. 2d 1114, 20 B.R. 233 involved an appeal of a bankruptcy court's dismissal of an attorney's complaint to determine nondischargeability of a debt owed him by his client's former spouse. The original judgment on which the debt was based characterized it as "additional spousal support." The bankruptcy court required strict construction of the language of 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(5) (as now construed in view of the definition of domestic support in 11 U.S.C. § 101(14A)), excepting from discharge "any debt to a spouse, former spouse, or child of the debtor," and since the debt was payable to the attorney, concluded that it was discharged. Between the time the bankruptcy court made its decision and the time the bankruptcy appellate panel considered the matter, the Second Circuit Court of Appeals had decided In re Spong (2d Cir. 1981) 661 F.2d 6 , which held that 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(5) did not require discharge of one spouse's obligation to pay the attorney's fees of the other spouse. The Spong court found the arrangement to be a third-party beneficiary contract, not an assignment that would render the debt dischargeable. The Ninth Circuit followed Spong and held the debt nondischargeable (20 B.R. 233, 234-235) .

The foregoing holdings are to be distinguished from those applicable in situations like that involved in In re Linn (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1984) 10 Collier Bankr. Cas. 2d 1049, 38 B.R. 762 . There, fees for an attorney and a psychiatrist appointed by the court during custody litigation were dischargeable. Because the initial court order required their payment by the debtor spouse, the nondebtor spouse was never liable for the fees, so the fees were not in the nature of support (38 B.R. 762, 763) .

AUTHOR: Reviewed By John A. Vos

§ 30.71 Opposing Contention That Debt Has Been Discharged--Debt Was for Willful and Malicious Injury [11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(6)]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE DEBT AT ISSUE IN THIS CASE IS NOT DISCHARGEABLE IN BANKRUPTCY BECAUSE IT ARISES FROM WILLFUL AND MALICIOUS INJURY.

A. Willful and Malicious Injury. A debt for willful and malicious injury by the debtor to another entity or to the property of another entity is not dischargeable in bankruptcy (11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(6)).

B. Intent to Injure Is Required. Title 11 of the United States Code, Section 523(a)(6), does not extend to acts that are merely done intentionally and cause injury; rather, it is limited to acts done with the actual intent to cause injury. The word "willful" in that paragraph of the statute modifies the word "injury," indicating that nondischargeability requires a deliberate or intentional injury, not merely a deliberate or intentional act that leads to injury. The acts covered by that paragraph are in the category of intentional torts. Intentional torts generally require that the actor intend the consequences of an act, not simply the act itself. Debts arising from recklessly or negligently inflicted injuries do not fall within the compass of that paragraph (Kawaauhau v. Geiger (1998) 523 U.S. 57, 60, 118 S. Ct. 974, 978, 140 L. Ed. 2d 90).

[Optional] C. Punitive Damages for Willful and Malicious Injury Are Nondischargeable. Both compensatory and punitive damages for willful and malicious injury are nondischargeable under Paragraph (6) of Section 523(a) of Title 11 of the United States Code (In re Britton (9th Cir. 1991) 950 F.2d 602, 605-607 ; In re Adams (9th Cir. 1985) 761 F.2d 1422, 1423, 1428) .

These points and authorities may be used when a debt arises from malicious and willful injury, to oppose the contention that the debt is dischargeable [see 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(6)]. Paragraph A sets forth the statutory criteria for excepting a debt from discharge on this basis, and Paragraph B states the Supreme Court's construction of the statutory language. Paragraph C is optional and should be used if the particular situation warrants. If the injury giving rise to liability was driving a motor vehicle or operating a vessel or an aircraft while intoxicated, the creditor should rely on 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(9) to establish nondischargeability; see § 30.20.

Counsel should insert argument linking these points and authorities with the facts of the case; for example, argument detailing the facts giving rise to the debt and demonstrating that the debtor acted intentionally without any justification, in disregard of the creditor's rights, and that the injury followed necessarily from the intentional act.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the debt is not dischargeable because it is within the exception of 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(6). Paragraphs A, B, and J through O in § 30.21 which may be particularly appropriate to establish the procedural and evidentiary requirements for establishing nondischargeability of a debt based on willful and malicious injury.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Intent to Injure is Required

In Kawaauhau v. Geiger (1998) 523 U.S. 57, 118 S. Ct. 974, 140 L. Ed. 2d 90 , the plaintiff obtained a malpractice judgment against defendant physician, who declared bankruptcy after the plaintiff began efforts to collect the judgment amount. The judgment was based on defendant's professional negligence. The Bankruptcy Court, concluding that defendant's treatment of the plaintiff "fell far below the appropriate standard of care" and therefore ranked as "willful and malicious," held the judgment debt to be nondischargeable. The Eighth Circuit reversed. The exemption from discharge under 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(6), the court held, is confined to debts "based on what the law has for generations called an intentional tort." Therefore, a judgment debt for malpractice, being based on conduct that is negligent or reckless rather than intentional, must remain dischargeable.

The United States Supreme Court affirmed, holding that debts arising from recklessly or negligently inflicted injuries do not fall within the scope of 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(6) (523 U.S. 57, 64, 118 S. Ct. 974). The pivotal question concerning the scope of the "willful and malicious injury" exception was this: Does 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(6) cover acts, done intentionally, that cause injury (as the plaintiff urged), or only acts done with the actual intent to cause injury (as the Eighth Circuit ruled)? The words of the statute strongly support the Eighth Circuit's reading. The word "willful" in 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(6) modifies the word "injury," indicating that nondischargeability takes a deliberate or intentional injury, not merely a deliberate or intentional act that leads to injury. Had Congress meant to exempt debts resulting from unintentionally inflicted injuries, it might have described instead "willful acts that cause injury." Or, Congress might have selected additional words, such as "reckless" or "negligent," to modify "injury." Moreover, as the Eighth Circuit observed, the 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(6) formulation triggers in the lawyer's mind the category "intentional torts," as distinguished from negligent or reckless torts. Intentional torts generally require that the actor intend the consequences of an act, not simply the act itself. Furthermore, reading 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(6) as the plaintiff urged would obviate the need for 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(9), which specifically exempts debts "for death or personal injury caused by the debtor's operation of a motor vehicle, vessel, or aircraft if such operation was unlawful because the debtor was intoxicated from using alcohol, a drug, or another substance." In addition, 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(12) exempts debts for "malicious or reckless failure" to fulfill certain commitments owed to a federal depository institutions regulatory agency (523 U.S. 57, 62, 118 S. Ct. 974).

The Court specifically clarified Tinker v. Colwell (1904) 193 U.S. 473, 24 S. Ct. 505, 48 L. Ed. 754 as providing no warrant for departure from the current statutory instruction that, to be nondischargeable, the judgment debt must be "for willful and malicious injury" (523 U.S. 57, 63, 118 S. Ct. 974).

[b] Punitive Damages for Willful and Malicious Injury Are Nondischargeable

The facts and procedural background of In re Britton (9th Cir. 1991) 950 F.2d 602 are discussed in § 30.68[3][a].

Regarding nondischargeability under 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(6), the debtor argued that 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(6) bars discharge of only actual damages for willful and malicious injury, not of punitive damages. The Court first pointed out that In re Adams (9th Cir. 1985) 761 F.2d 1422 (see § 30.20[3][e]) held that the exception to discharge in 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(6) is measured by the nature of the act, and that if the act was willful and malicious, all liabilities resulting from it are nondischargeable. Debtor argued that punitive damages are not "a debt for injury caused by a debtor's willful and malicious acts," but the Court found that argument unpersuasive, relying in part on Coen v. Zick (9th Cir. 1972) 458 F.2d 326, 329-330 .

The debtor also argued that the language in 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(7) that a debt will not be discharged "to the extent such debt is a fine, penalty, or forfeiture payable to and for the benefit of a government unit, and is not compensation for actual pecuniary loss" is intended to be applied so that other exceptions to discharge not encompass punitive damages. But, as in In re Levy (9th Cir. 1991) 951 F.2d 196 (see § 30.61[3][a]), the Court rejected that argument, saying that injured private plaintiffs are not precluded from relying on the exceptions set forth in other subsections of 11 U.S.C. § 523 merely because one subsection precludes discharge of certain liabilities owed to governments (950 F.2d 602, 606) . The Court also declined to implement debtor's theory that allowing discharge of punitive damages would frustrate the "fresh start" goals of the bankruptcy process, saying that the "fresh start" concept applies to honest but unfortunate debtors and should not be extended to favor giving perpetrators of fraud a fresh start over the interest in protecting victims of fraud. 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(6) reflects a similar concern for the victims of willful and malicious injury (950 F.2d 602, 606) .

The debtor's last argument was that because states have different standards for imposing liability for punitive damages, holding punitive damages nondischargeable under 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(6) would frustrate the policy of uniform bankruptcy law. The Court disagreed, saying that since 1970 the issue of nondischargeability has been a matter of federal law governed by the terms of Bankruptcy Code. Thus, there is no uniformity problem (950 F.2d 602, 607) .

In re Adams (9th Cir. 1985) 761 F.2d 1422 is discussed in § 30.20[3][e].

§ 30.72 Opposing Contention That Debt Has Been Discharged--Debt Required by Restitution Order in Criminal Case [11 U.S.C. §§ 523(a)(7), 1328(a)(3)]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE DEBT AT ISSUE IN THIS CASE IS BASED ON A RESTITUTION ORDER IN A CRIMINAL ACTION AND AS SUCH IS NOT DISCHARGEABLE IN BANKRUPTCY.

[EITHER, in Chapter 7, 11, or 12 case or after hardship discharge in Chapter 13 case]

A. Fines, Penalties, and Forfeitures. A debt is nondischargeable in bankruptcy to the extent that it is for a fine, penalty, or forfeiture payable to and for the benefit of a governmental unit, and is not compensation for actual pecuniary loss [if debt is tax penalty, continue as applicable: other than a tax penalty _____ (relating to a tax of a kind not specified in Paragraph (1) of Section 523(a) of Title 11 of the United States Code and/or imposed with respect to a transaction or event that occurred before three years before the date of the filing of the petition in bankruptcy)] (11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(7)).

B. Restitution Order in Criminal Action. The qualifying phrases "to and for the benefit of a governmental unit" and "not compensation for actual pecuniary loss" in Paragraph (7) of Section 523(a) of Title 11 of the United States Code do not allow discharge of a criminal judgment that takes the form of restitution, even if the amount of restitution payable is the same amount that would be required to make the victim whole. Because criminal proceedings focus on the state's interests in rehabilitation and punishment, rather than the victim's desire for compensation, restitution orders imposed in criminal proceedings operate "for the benefit of" the state and are not assessed "for compensation" of the victim (11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(7); Kelly v. Robinson (1986) 479 U.S. 36, 51-53, 107 S. Ct. 353, 93 L. Ed. 2d 216, 230-231) .

[OR, after nonhardship discharge in Chapter 13 case]

Restitution Order in Chapter 13. A debt for restitution included in a sentence in the debtor's conviction of a crime is not dischargeable in a Chapter 13 case (11 U.S.C. § 1328(a)(3)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be used when the debt in question is based on a restitution order in a criminal proceeding to oppose the contention that the debt is dischargeable [see 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(7)]. Paragraph A sets forth the general ground of nondischargeability of fines and penalties generally and is applicable in all bankruptcies in which all debts enumerated in 11 U.S.C. § 523(a) are excepted from discharge. Paragraph B sets forth the Supreme Court's interpretation of the statutory authority as it relates to restitution orders arising from criminal cases. Counsel should note that the debt represented by the restitution order is distinct from any debt the victim may have on the underlying crime [see In re Heincy (Bankr. S.D. Cal. 1986) 14 Collier Bankr. Cas. 2d 870, 58 B.R. 930, 933-936 (embezzlement)]. The second alternative sets forth the statutory criteria for nondischargeability of restitution orders in nonhardship Chapter 13 cases.

Counsel should insert argument linking these points and authorities with the facts of the case; for example, attachment or a request for judicial notice of any records or transcripts from the criminal action, including the order or a transcript of the hearing at which the restitution order was made.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that a debt based on a restitution order is not dischargeable.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Restitution Order in Criminal Action

Kelly v. Robinson (1986) 479 U.S. 36, 107 S. Ct. 353, 93 L. Ed. 2d 216 arose out of a Chapter 7 proceeding in which the debtor listed the obligation represented by a restitution order from a criminal proceeding as a debt. The crime involved was wrongful receipt of welfare payments. The Connecticut agencies to which restitution was payable did not file claims or objections to discharge, but took the position that the bankruptcy would not effect the conditions of debtor's probation. Almost three years after discharge, the probation office wrote debtor claiming restitution was still payable. Debtor filed an adversary proceeding in the bankruptcy court seeking an injunction and a declaration that the restitution obligation had been discharged. The bankruptcy court decided that the restitution order was not a debt and had not been discharged. The United States District Court for the District of Connecticut adopted the bankruptcy court's decision.

The Second Circuit reversed (776 F.2d 30), holding that the restitution obligation was a debt within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Code and that it was discharged under 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(7) because it was actually compensation. The United States Supreme Court accepted Connecticut's petition for writ of certiorari and reversed.

The Supreme Court first noted that its interpretation must reflect the deep conviction that federal bankruptcy courts should not invalidate the results of state criminal proceedings (93 L. Ed. 2d 216, 227) . The Court declined to address the issue of whether criminal penalties are debts within the meaning of former 11 U.S.C. § 101(4) [now see 11 U.S.C. § 101(5), (12)] (93 L. Ed. 2d 216, 229) . Then the Court turned to the interpretation of the phrases "to and for the benefit of a governmental unit" and "not compensation for actual pecuniary loss," and said that the criminal justice system is not operated for the benefit of victims, but for society as a whole and that one of its goals is to rehabilitate the criminal. The amount of restitution is usually based not only on the victim's injury but on the defendant's situation (93 L. Ed. 2d 216, 230) . The Court concluded that because criminal proceedings focus on the state's interests in rehabilitation and punishment, rather than the victim's desire for compensation, restitution orders imposed in criminal proceedings operate "for the benefit of" the state and are not assessed "for compensation" of the victim (93 L. Ed. 2d 216, 230-231) .

11 U.S.C. § 1328(a)(3) was added to abrogate Pennsylvania Dep't of Public Welfare v. Davenport (1990) 495 U.S. 552, 564, 110 S. Ct. 2126, 109 L. Ed. 2d 588 [see H.R. Rep. No. 681(I), 101st Cong., 2d Sess. (1990)], and thus effectively annuls People v. Goulart (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 71, 85, 273 Cal. Rptr. 477 , which followed Davenport.

§ 30.73 Opposing Contention That Debt Has Been Discharged--Order for Conveyance Is Not Debt Within Meaning of Bankruptcy Code

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE ORDER REQUIRING CONVEYANCE OF _____ 'S [name of party, e.g., PLAINTIFF] INTEREST IN _____ [specify property, e.g., THE PROPERTY COMMONLY KNOWN AS _____ (street address)] TO _____ [name of party, e.g., DEFENDANT] HAS NOT BEEN DISCHARGED IN BANKRUPTCY, AND COMPLIANCE WITH THE ORDER MAY BE COMPELLED.

Nonmonetary Obligation Is Not "Claim." A "debt" for bankruptcy purposes is liability on a "claim" as defined in Section 101(5) of Title 11 of the United States Code (11 U.S.C. § 101(12)). Thus, a right to payment is involved in the determination of whether there is a debt that has been discharged in bankruptcy. Because a stipulation or order requiring a conveyance does not involve a right to payment, it is not dischargeable in bankruptcy and compliance with such a stipulation or order may be compelled (Rayan v. Dykeman (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 1629, 1636, 274 Cal. Rptr. 672 ; see Farrey v. Sanderfoot (1991) 500 U.S. 291, 300-301, 111 S. Ct. 1825, 114 L. Ed. 2d 337).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be used when the obligation contended to have been discharged is not a "debt" or "claim" within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Code because it is not a right to payment [see 11 U.S.C. § 101(5)].

Counsel should insert argument linking these points and authorities with the facts of the case; for example, argument of facts or reference to findings showing that the obligation is not equivalent to a right to payment.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Nonmonetary Obligation Is Not "Claim"

Rayan v. Dykeman (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 1629, 274 Cal. Rptr. 672 began as a proceeding under the Domestic Violence Prevention Act (Code Civ. Proc. § 540 et seq.) by one joint tenant of residential real property against another. In that proceeding, plaintiff stipulated that she would execute a quitclaim deed to the property transferring title to defendant effective June 1, 1988. The stipulation was entered into on January 9, 1988. On January 22, 1988, plaintiff filed a petition in bankruptcy, listing defendant as an unsecured creditor, with the following notations: "No liability admitted. Listed for information only." and a sum of "0.00" as the amount of defendant's claim. An order of discharge was entered in May, 1988. In March, 1989, elisors were appointed to execute the deed. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. Plaintiff contended that the court had no authority to make the order because the obligation had been discharged in bankruptcy, equating the obligation to transfer title under the stipulation and order with a "debt." The court noted that a "debt" for bankruptcy purposes is liability on a claim. Claim is defined as (1) a right to payment, whether or not that right is reduced to judgment, liquidated, unliquidated, fixed, contingent, matured, unmatured, disputed, undisputed, legal, equitable, secured, or unsecured [11 U.S.C. § 101(5)(A)], or (2) a right to an equitable remedy for breach of performance if the breach gives rise to a right to payment, whether or not that right to an equitable remedy is reduced to judgment, liquidated, unliquidated, fixed, contingent, matured, unmatured, disputed, undisputed, secured, or unsecured [11 U.S.C. § 101(5)(B)]. Thus, a right to payment is involved in the determination of whether there is a debt, or a liability on a claim, which has been discharged in bankruptcy. The court distinguished Ohio v. Kovacs (1985) 469 U.S. 274, 278-283, 105 S. Ct. 705, 83 L. Ed. 2d 649 , which held that an injunctive order that is reduced to a monetary obligation is a dischargeable debt in bankruptcy. In this case, the court said, the order requiring a conveyance does not involve a right to payment. The trial court did not err in compelling compliance with the stipulation or in refusing to declare its order void (224 Cal. App. 3d 1629, 1636) .

In a dispute regarding a lien on a homestead granted to a debtor's former spouse to secure the value of a former interest under a divorce decree, the United States Supreme Court held that 11 U.S.C. § 522(f)(1) requires a debtor to have possessed an interest to which a lien attached, before it attached, to avoid fixing of the lien on that interest. A lien that attached to a former spouse's fee simple interest only after the extinguishment of a couple's joint tenancy in homestead property could not be avoided (Farrey v. Sanderfoot (1991) 500 U.S. 291, 300-301, 111 S. Ct. 1825, 114 L. Ed. 2d 337).

These points and authorities may be used in opposition to the contention that a preexisting lien has been discharged by discharge of the underlying debt in bankruptcy.

Counsel should insert argument linking these points and authorities with the facts of the case; for example, argument of facts, reference to findings, or inclusion of the order sought to be enforced, showing that the lien was valid and preexisting at the time the bankruptcy petition was filed.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Discharge of Debt Does Not Discharge Lien That Secured Debt

In re Connor (9th Cir. 1994) 27 F.3d 365 involved the issue of whether a federal tax lien had attached to retirement benefits before a debtor filed a bankruptcy petition. Connor retired from his job as an associate justice of a state supreme court in 1983. On retirement, he began receiving monthly retirement payments to which he was unconditionally entitled. In 1985, the IRS assessed Connor more than $65,000 for unpaid back taxes and filed a federal tax lien. Connor filed a Chapter 7 bankruptcy petition in 1988, when he paid approximately $12,000 of the IRS debt. Connor's personal liability for the remainder of the debt was discharged in bankruptcy. The bankruptcy court ruled that Connor's personal liability for back taxes was discharged in bankruptcy, but that the federal tax lien remained valid as against future payments, which constituted "property" at the time of bankruptcy. The BAP reversed, finding the retirement benefits to be "reduced salary" for continuing future service. The IRS appealed (27 F.3d 365, 365-366) .

On appeal, the Ninth Circuit reversed, agreeing with the bankruptcy court that the retirement payments were "property" under I.R.C. § 6231 to which the federal tax lien applied, because the right to retirement payments was unconditional and fully vested before bankruptcy. Because the discharge in bankruptcy affected only Connor's personal liability, and not the tax lien, the lien remained in effect (27 F.3d 365, 366-367) .

Crucial to the outcome of this case is the proposition that a preexisting lien on property remains enforceable against the property even after an individual's personal liability has been discharged (27 F.3d 365, 366 ; In re Isom (9th Cir. 1990) 901 F.2d 744, 745 ; see Dewsnup v. Timm (1992) 502 U.S. 410, 417-419, 112 S. Ct. 773, 116 L. Ed. 2d 903).

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Discharge of Debt Does Not Discharge Lien That Secured Debt

In Concannon v. Imperial Capital Bank (In re Concannon) (Bankr. 9th Cir. 2006) 2006 Bankr. LEXIS 214, 338 B.R. 90 , the court addressed a question not expressly settled by the Supreme Court in Dewsnup v. TimmDewsnup v. Timm (1992) 502 U.S. 410 . That case had involved a consensual lien (under a mortgage), which was important to the Supreme Court's analysis leading to the conclusion that a lien normally would survive in a Chapter 7 bankruptcy (except in a few situations delineated in the Bankruptcy Code). The unaddressed question was whether the rule that emerged from that case should be applied as well in the case of a nonconsensual lien. The mortgagor bank had a pre-existing judgment lien on property at the time the property owners began their Chapter 7 proceeding. Because the bank's lien was junior to several liens securing claims that aggregated to more than the evident value of the property, the bankruptcy court correctly concluded that the bank's claim had a zero value and therefore became an unsecured claim under 11 U.S.C. § 506(a). This conclusion raised the question whether the bank's lien therefore was void under 11 U.S.C. § 506(d), which provides, "To the extent that a lien secures a claim against the debtor that is not an allowed secured claim, such lien is void" (emphasis added), subject to exceptions not applicable in this case. The bankruptcy appellate panel concluded that, because under Dewsnup a consensual lien cannot be deemed void--cannot be "stripped off" by the debtor--using that provision in a Chapter 7 case, the bank's nonconsensual lien could not be stripped off but would pass through the bankruptcy case unaffected (338 B.R. 90, 97).

THE DEBT WAS DULY ADJUDGED AS NONDISCHARGEABLE BY THE _____ [BANKRUPTCY COURT FOR THE _____ DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA or SUPERIOR COURT FOR _____ COUNTY] IN A JUDGMENT ENTERED _____ [date], BY WHICH THE ISSUE OF DISCHARGEABILITY WAS CONCLUSIVELY DETERMINED.

Nondischargeability Conclusively Determined. Once a debt has been duly adjudged as nondischargeable, in a valid and final judgment by a court with jurisdiction and from which there was an opportunity to appeal, the debt is always nondischargeable on the basis determined in the judgment (Moncur v. Agricredit Acceptance Co. (In re Moncur) (9th Cir. BAP 2005) 328 B.R. 183, 186).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be used in opposition to the contention that a debt has been discharged in bankruptcy when the debt in question was previously adjudged to be nondischargeable in another action.

Counsel should insert argument linking these points and authorities with the facts of the case; for example, argument of facts, reference to findings, or inclusion of the judgment sought to be enforced, showing that the debt was duly adjudged as nondischargeable.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Nondischargeability Conclusively Determined

In Moncur v. Agricredit Acceptance Co. (In re Moncur) (9th Cir. BAP 2005) 328 B.R. 183 , a creditor sought to renew a money judgment, which the bankruptcy court had adjudged as nondischargeable under 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2) and (6) pursuant to a stipulation by the debtors in their Chapter 12 case, and as to which the creditor, relying on the bankruptcy court's judgment, did not seek an adjudication of nondischargeability in the debtors' subsequent Chapter 7 case. The court's judgment in the Chapter 7 case excepted the debt in question from discharge, on the basis of the prior judgment under which the debt was nondischargeable. The debtors appealed and argued that the creditor was bound to litigate the issue of dischargeability in the Chapter 7 case, notwithstanding the court's prior adjudication of the issue in the earlier Chapter 12 case.

The bankruptcy appellate panel affirmed. A general common law rule, as applied in the bankruptcy context, is that if a particular debt is determined to be nondischargeable in a valid and final judgment by a court with jurisdiction and from which there was an opportunity to appeal, then the debt is always nondischargeable on the basis determined in the judgment. In other words: once nondischargeable, a debt is always nondischargeable (328 B.R. 183, 186) . (The Bankruptcy Code creates a few exceptions to the applicability of this rule in the bankruptcy context [see 11 U.S.C. § 523(b)], but they were not relevant in this case.) Therefore (unless 11 U.S.C. § 523(b) requires a different result), once a debt has been duly adjudged to be nondischargeable, the creditor is not obliged to litigate the issue in any subsequent proceeding. In this case, the creditor was not required "to refresh ...#x2026; [its] nondischargeable status with a timely adversary proceeding in the second bankruptcy in order to preserve the claim- and issue-preclusive effects" of the valid and final judgment entered in the first bankruptcy case, "the precise question having been [previously] litigated and decided" (328 B.R. 183, 187) .

In addition, if the debt is one described in 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2), (4), or (6), the statutory mandate for the bankruptcy court to determine whether it is nondischargeable [see 11 U.S.C. § 523(c)(1)] neither requires nor permits the court in a subsequent bankruptcy proceeding to adjudicate the issue again after nondischargeability of the debt was once duly adjudged in a prior bankruptcy proceeding (328 B.R. 183, 189-191) .

PART I. INTRODUCTION

2A-31 California Points & Authorities § 31.01

§ 31.01 Scope of Chapter

This chapter contains forms of points and authorities relating to brokers and salespersons.

Subpart A of Part II, pertaining to the recovery of a commission or damages by a broker or salesperson, is divided into three sub-subparts that include the following types of forms:

- In Sub-subpart 1, supporting (see §§ 31.20 -31.22) and opposing (see §§ 31.23 -31.28) the contention that recovery is barred if the broker or salesperson is not licensed or certified.

- In Sub-subpart 2, supporting (see §§ 31.40 -31.46) and opposing (see §§ 31.47 -31.61) the contention that the statute of frauds (Civ. Code § 1624(a)(4)) bars recovery of a commission.

- In Sub-subpart 3, supporting (see §§ 31.80 -31.94) and opposing (see §§ 31.96 -31.108) the contention that a commission may be recovered under a listing agreement.

Subpart B of Part II, relating to the broker or salesperson's liability to an owner, includes the following forms:

- Supporting (see § 31.120) and opposing (see § 31.123) the contention that an owner may recover secret profits acquired through the agency.

- Supporting the contention that a property owner may recover damages for fraud (see § 31.121).

- Supporting the contention that an owner may recover a commission paid to a broker when the broker has failed to make certain required disclosures (see § 31.122).

Subpart C of Part II, covering the seller's liability to a purchaser for the acts of the broker or salesperson, includes the following forms:

- Supporting (see §§ 31.140, 31.141) and opposing (see § 31.143) the contention that the purchaser has a right to rescission and restitution based on fraud.

- Supporting (see § 31.142) and opposing (see §§ 31.144 -31.146) the contention that the purchaser may recover damages for nondisclosure.

PART I. INTRODUCTION

2A-31 California Points & Authorities § 31.02

§ 31.02 Governing Law

The primary provisions relating to the license or certificate requirements applicable to brokers and salespeople are:

- Bus. & Prof. Code § 10136, relating to the recovery of a commission by a licensed real estate broker or salesperson.
- Food & Agric. Code § 56181, pertaining to the licensing of farm brokers.
- Corp. Code § 25210(a), requiring securities brokers/dealers to have a certificate of authorization.

The basic statute of frauds provision requiring agreements employing real estate brokers and agents to be in writing is set forth in Civ. Code § 1624(a)(4).

A broker is an agent for the person employing him or her [Rhode v. Bartholomew (1949) 94 Cal. App. 2d 272, 278, 210 P.2d 768] . The general provisions governing an agency are set forth in Civ. Code §§ 2079.12-2079.14, 2295 et seq. The obligations imposed on a real estate broker are the same as those imposed on a trustee [Smith v. Zak (1971) 20 Cal. App. 3d 785, 792, 98 Cal. Rptr. 242 ; Buckley v. Savage (1960) 184 Cal. App. 2d 18, 27, 7 Cal. Rptr. 328] . The obligations of a trustee are set forth in Prob. Code § 16000 et seq.

PART I. INTRODUCTION

2A-31 California Points & Authorities § 31.03

§ 31.03 Real Estate Listing Agreements

Part I, A, 3 of this chapter deals with the recovery of damages or a commission under the various types of real estate listing agreements. The listing agreement creates the agency between the real estate broker and the property owner [Charles B. Webster Real Estate v. Rickard (1971) 21 Cal. App. 3d 612, 614, 98 Cal. Rptr. 559] . There are three types of listing agreements. One type is the general listing in which the owner is free to list his or her property with other brokers or to sell it himself or herself without incurring liability to the broker. The other two types of listings, an exclusive agency and an exclusive right to sell, are both exclusive agreements. An exclusive agency allows the owner to sell his or her property personally without incurring liability but prohibits the owner from selling it through another broker. The exclusive right-to-sell agreement prohibits the owner from selling the property either personally or through another broker [see Tetrick v. Sloan (1959) 170 Cal. App. 2d 540, 546-547, 339 P.2d 613] .

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF REAL ESTATE _____ [BROKER or SALESPERSON] CANNOT RECOVER A COMMISSION BECAUSE HE/SHE WAS NOT LICENSED AT THE TIME THAT _____ [THE CAUSE OF ACTION FOR A COMMISSION ALLEGEDLY AROSE and/or THE SERVICES WERE PERFORMED and/or THE UNDERLYING TRANSACTION WAS CONSUMMATED].

[EITHER]

A. Real Estate Broker Defined. A real estate broker is defined as a person who engages in any of the acts set out in Business and Professions Code Sections 10131, 10131.1-10131.45, excluding those persons defined in Business and Professions Code Section 10131.01 (Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 10131, 10131.01).

[AND/OR]

B. Real Estate Salesperson Defined. A real estate salesperson is a natural person who, for compensation or in expectation of a compensation, is employed by a licensed real estate broker to do one or more of the acts set forth in Business and Professions Code Sections 10131, 10131.1, 10131.2, 10131.3, 10131.4, and 10131.6 (Bus. & Prof. Code § 10132).

[EITHER]

C. License Required When Cause of Action Arose. A person acting in the capacity of a real state broker or salesperson within the State of California cannot maintain any action in the state of California for the recovery of compensation for the performance of any acts mentioned in Sections 10130-10148 of the Business and Professions Code (statutes regulating brokers and salespersons) without alleging and proving that he or she was duly licensed at the time the cause of action arose (Bus. & Prof. Code § 10136).

[AND/OR]

D. License Required When Services Performed or Underlying Transaction Consummated. Recovery of a commission is barred by Section 10136 of the Business and Professions Code if, although the broker or salesperson has a license at the time that the cause of action arose (when the commission is due and payable), he or she did not have a license during the period that the services were performed or the underlying transaction was consummated (Davis v. Chipman (1930) 210 Cal. 609, 621-623, 293 P 40).

[Optional] E. Sale of Business Opportunity [by Sale of Stock] Requires License. "Business opportunity" as used in Section 10030 of the Business and Professions Code encompasses any transfer of ownership of an entire ongoing business in corporate form, whether accomplished by transfer of all the corporate stock or by transfer of all assets. A person negotiating such a transaction is required to have either a real estate broker's license or a security broker's or dealer's license in order to maintain an action for commission (Bus. & Prof. Code § 10008.5; All Points Traders, Inc. v. Barrington Associates (1989) 211 Cal. App. 3d 723, 731, 734, 737-739, 259 Cal. Rptr. 780).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that a real estate broker or salesperson may not recover a commission. The argument may be used when the broker or salesperson was not licensed. Alternative Paragraph C is for use when the broker or salesperson was not licensed at the time that the cause of action for a commission arose. Alternative Paragraph D is for use when the broker or salesperson has a license at the time that the commission is due and payable (time when cause of action arose) but did not have a license during the period that the services were performed or the underlying transaction was consummated. Optional Paragraph E is for use to oppose the recovery of a commission for the sale of a business opportunity by an unlicensed person.

Aside from the fact that there can be no recovery for services rendered, it is unlawful to engage in the business, act in the capacity of, or advertise or assume to act as a real estate broker or salesperson without first obtaining a real estate license [Bus. & Prof. Code § 10130].

These points and authorities may be combined with a form of memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue of the requirement of a license. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in §§ 31.23 -31.28 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Real Estate Broker Defined

A real estate broker is defined in Bus. & Prof. Code § 10131 as a person who, for compensation or in the expectation of a compensation, regardless of the form or time of payment, does or negotiates to do one or more of the following acts for another or others:

(1) Sells or offers to sell, buys or offers to buy, solicits prospective sellers or purchasers of, solicits or obtains listings of, or negotiates the purchase or sale of exchange of real property or a business opportunity [see Bus. & Prof. Code § 10030 (defining "business opportunity")];

(2) Leases or rents or offers to lease or rent, or places for rent, or solicits listings of places for rent, or solicits for prospective tenants, or negotiates the sale, purchase or exchange of leases on real property, or on a business opportunity, or collects rents from real property, or improvements thereon, or from business opportunities;

(3) Assists or offers to assist in filing an application for the purchase or lease of, or in locating or entering on, lands owned by the state or federal government;

(4) Solicits borrowers or lenders for or negotiates loans or collects payments or performs services for borrowers or lenders or note owners in connection with loans secured directly or collaterally by liens on real property or a business opportunity; and

(5) Sells or offers to sell, buys or offers to buy, or exchanges or offers to exchange a real property sales contract or a promissory note, secured directly or collaterally by a lien on real property or on a business opportunity, and performs services for the holders thereof.

"Business opportunity" includes the sale or lease of a business and goodwill of an existing business enterprise or opportunity [Bus. & Prof. Code § 10030].

The provisions of Bus. & Prof. Code § 10131(b) do not apply to the manager of a hotel, motel, auto and trailer park, to the resident manager of an apartment building, apartment complex, court, or to the employees of such a manager [Bus. & Prof. Code § 10131.01].

The definition of a real estate broker also includes a person who engages as a principal in the business of making loans or buying from, selling to, or exchanging with the public, real property sales contracts, or who makes agreements with the public for the collection of payments or for the performance of services in connection with real property sales contracts or promissory notes secured directly or collaterally by liens on real property [Bus. & Prof. Code § 10131.1(a)].

In addition, a real estate broker is a person who engages in the business of claiming, demanding, charging, receiving, collecting, or contracting for the collection of an advance fee in connection with any employment undertaken to promote the sale or lease of real property or of a business opportunity by advance fee listing, advertisement or other offering to sell, lease, exchange, or rent property or a business opportunity, or to obtain a loan or loans thereon [Bus. & Prof. Code § 10131.2].

A real estate broker also includes a person who, for another or others, for compensation or in expectation of compensation, issues or sells, solicits prospective sellers or purchasers of, solicits or obtains listings of, or negotiates the purchase, sale, or exchange of securities as specified in Corp. Code § 25206 (real estate broker transactions exempt from requirement of broker-dealer certificate). This, however, does not apply to a broker-dealer or agent of a broker-dealer licensed by the Commissioner of Corporations under the provisions of the Corporate Securities Law of 1968 (Corp. Code § 25000 et seq.) [Bus. & Prof. Code § 10131.3].

[b] License Required When Services Performed or Underlying Transaction Consummated

In Davis v. Chipman (1930) 210 Cal. 609, 293 P 40 , plaintiff sought recovery of one half of a 10 percent commission on the purchase price of real property sold by defendant. Plaintiff had originally brought defendant together with a third party who executed an option to purchase the property. In connection with the option agreement, plaintiff, defendant, and the holder of the option entered into an agreement whereby a commission of 10 percent of the purchase price would be payable to plaintiff and the option holder even though the option was not exercised if, within the term of the option, plaintiff and the option holder interested someone who purchased the property within one year after expiration of the option. Plaintiff found a party who later purchased the property and an agreement was entered into for the payment of the 10 percent commission on an installment basis because the purchase price was paid. After a few payments defendant stopped paying and plaintiff brought the action. Judgment was rendered for plaintiff and defendant appealed, contending that plaintiff was not licensed at the time of the sale or of the original commission agreement. The Supreme Court, after holding that plaintiff was acting as a broker, held that plaintiff could not recover because he was not licensed at the time he interested the prospective purchaser in the property or at the time the sale was consummated (210 Cal. 609, 623) . Plaintiff argued that, although he had no license at the time of the negotiations or sale, he did obtain a license afterward and that because a license was required only at the time the cause of action arose, all payments payable at the time he was licensed were recoverable. The court stated that to interpret the statute this way would be to nullify the purpose of the real estate licensing requirements that were designed to protect the public from unscrupulous operators. The court pointed out that under plaintiff's version, an unlicensed broker could perform all of the acts requiring a license and recover a commission by providing for the payment of the commission at a future date when the broker secured a license (210 Cal. 609, 621-622) .

[c] Sale of Business Opportunity by Sale of Stock Requires License

Bus. & Prof. Code § 10008.5 provides that solely with regard to any transaction involving the sale, lease, or exchange of a business opportunity occurring before, on, or after September 30, 1989 (the effective date of Bus. & Prof. Code § 10008.5), Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 10000-11200 do not apply to any person licensed at the time of the transaction as a securities broker or securities dealer under any law of California or of the United States, or to any employee, officer, or agent of that person while acting under the direction of, and within the scope of, his or her employment with that person in connection with the transaction. However, "any transaction involving the sale, lease, or exchange of a business opportunity" does not include any of the acts described in Bus. & Prof. Code § 10131 or 10131.2 (both set forth in § 31.20[3][a]) if the substance of the transaction is to transfer, sell, lease, or exchange an interest in real property for the purpose of evading the licensing requirements [see Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 10000-10580].

Bus. & Prof. Code § 10008.5 was enacted, apparently in response to All Points Traders, Inc. v. Barrington Associates (1989) 211 Cal. App. 3d 723, 259 Cal. Rptr. 780 . The statement of legislative intent provides that Bus. & Prof. Code § 10008.5 was enacted to clarify existing law regarding licensing requirements, and to restore and clarify the basis for practice by which both licensed real estate brokers and licensed securities broker-dealers may participate in transactions involving business opportunities without unnecessary duplicate licensing requirements [Stats. 1989, ch. 1116, § 8]. Bus. & Prof. Code § 10008.5 does not affect the rights and obligations of the parties determined in All Points Traders, Inc. v. Barrington Associates (1989) 211 Cal. App. 3d 723, 259 Cal. Rptr. 780 [Stats. 1989, ch. 1116, § 8].

Plaintiff in All Points Traders, Inc. v. Barrington Associates (1989) 211 Cal. App. 3d 723, 259 Cal. Rptr. 780 , was an investment banking firm organized as a partnership and specializing in mergers and acquisitions. Plaintiff had neither a real estate and business opportunity broker's license nor a security broker's license, believing itself exempt from the security broker's licensing requirements by virtue of 10 Cal. Code Reg. § 260.204.5 (211 Cal. App. 3d 723, 735, fn. 13). Plaintiff sued defendant for its commission after defendant found its own purchaser for its entire corporate stock during the term of an exclusive right-to-assist arrangement with plaintiff. The transaction also involved a lease and option to purchase the land on which the business was located and payment of consulting fees to the principals of defendant. The matter was referred to arbitration, and an award entered for plaintiff. Defendant filed a petition to vacate the award on the ground that plaintiff did not have a real estate broker's license, but the motion was denied, as was defendant's later motion for a new trial. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. Bus. & Prof. Code § 10131 defines real estate broker to include anyone who negotiates the sale or exchange of a business opportunity. Business opportunity as defined in Bus. & Prof. Code § 10030 includes the sale or lease of the business and goodwill or an existing enterprise or opportunity (211 Cal. App. 3d 723, 729) . The court said that the term "business opportunity" as used in Bus. & Prof. Code § 10030 encompasses any transfer of ownership of an entire ongoing business in corporate form, whether accomplished by transfer of all the corporate stock or by transfer of all assets (211 Cal. App. 3d 723, 731) .

The court said that most cases that had addressed the issue did not address the issue of the business opportunity licensing requirement, but rather the question of the need for a securities broker's license in addition to the real estate broker's license, including (1) Owen v. Off (1951) 36 Cal. 2d 751, 753, 227 P.2d 457 , which denied recovery of a commission to a licensed real estate broker because the broker did not also have a securities broker's license; (2) Stoll v. Mallory (1959) 173 Cal. App. 2d 694, 696, 699, 343 P.2d 970 (discussed in § 31.28[4][a]), which allowed a licensed real estate and business opportunity broker to recover a commission without a securities broker's license on the theory that the decision to effect the sale of the business by transfer of the stock was not made until after the broker had brought the parties together; (3) Weber v. Jorgensen (1971) 16 Cal. App. 3d 74, 77, 82-83, 93 Cal. Rptr. 668 (discussed in § 31.28[4][a]), which also allowed a licensed real estate broker to recover a commission without a securities broker's license on the theory that the transfer of stock was only incidental to the sale of the real and personal property, licenses, and permits comprising the business opportunity, and because the stock transfer agreement was drafted and handled by an attorney, not by the broker; (4) Lyons v. Stevenson (1977) 65 Cal. App. 3d 595, 603, 135 Cal. Rptr. 457 (see § 31.28[3][a]), another case that allowed recovery to a licensed real estate broker to recover who did not hold a securities broker's license on the theory that the broker was engaged to effect the sale of the business and neither party considered how the business would be transferred; and (5) Nationwide Investment Corp. v. California Funeral Service, Inc. (1974) 40 Cal. App. 3d 494, 499, 114 Cal. Rptr. 77 , which denied recovery of the commission to a plaintiff who held neither a real estate broker's license nor a security broker's license (211 Cal. App. 3d 723, 730-731) . In All Points Traders, Inc., the court said that even though this transfer was accomplished through transfer of corporate shares, the person negotiating it was required to have a real estate broker's license (211 Cal. App. 3d 723, 734) . The court noted that in this case, only the real estate license requirement was at issue, because defendant did not contest the claim of exemption from the security broker licensing requirement, and said that whether the transaction also fell within the scope of the securities regulations was irrelevant (211 Cal. App. 3d 723, 734-735) .

The court then considered whether this was a type of illegality that prohibited recovery by plaintiff. The court acknowledged that there may be special circumstances when the purposes of a legal requirement would not be advanced by denying relief, but this case was not one of them. Enforcement of a contract for a commission would be in direct contravention of the statute, against public policy, and contrary to the explicit mandate of Bus. & Prof. Code § 10136 (211 Cal. App. 3d 723, 737-738) . Further, the equitable principle of unjust enrichment was not applicable here (211 Cal. App. 3d 723, 739) .

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF FARM BROKER CANNOT RECOVER COMPENSATION UNDER THE AGREEMENT BECAUSE HE/SHE WAS NOT LICENSED.

A. Farm Broker Defined. A farm broker is any person who negotiates the purchase or sale of any farm product (see Food & Agric. Code § 56103).

B. License Required. Except for the resale of raw products to prevent waste, pursuant to Section 55610 of the Food and Agricultural Code, any person engaged in the business of buying, receiving on consignment, soliciting for sale or commission, or negotiating the sale of farm products from a licensee or producer for resale must be licensed as a broker (*Food & Agric. C. No Recovery of Compensation by Unlicensed Farm Broker. A farm broker cannot recover compensation under an agreement made in violation of the licensing requirement of Section 56181 of the Food and Agricultural Code because such an agreement is void (California Chicks, Inc. v. Viebrock (1967) 254 Cal. App. 2d 638, 641, 62 Cal. Rptr. 269 (construing former Food & Agric. Code § 1263 [now see Food & Agric. Code § 56181]).

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that a farm broker cannot recover compensation under an agreement made in violation of Food & Agric. Code § 56181.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that recovery of compensation under an agreement is barred by Food & Agric. Code § 56181. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Recovery of Compensation by Unlicensed Farm Broker

In California Chicks, Inc. v. Viebrock (1967) 254 Cal. App. 2d 638, 62 Cal. Rptr. 269 , a produce dealer was denied recovery of money due under a contract on the basis that the dealer was required to be licensed by former Ag C § 1263 (now Food & Agric. Code § 56181) and was unlicensed at the time of the transactions under the contract. The court of appeal affirmed and held that although the former Agricultural Code (now Food and Agricultural Code) contained no provision prohibiting an unlicensed dealer from maintaining an action on a contract, such contract was nevertheless void. Quoting from prior case law, the court stated that purported contracts in direct violation of the terms of an express prohibition are void (254 Cal. App. 2d 638, 640-642) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No Recovery of Compensation by Unlicensed Farm Broker

The court of appeal in La Rosa v. Glaze (1936) 18 Cal. App. 2d 354, 63 P.2d 1181 , reversed a judgment in favor of plaintiffs who entered into an agreement with defendant's wife to purchase defendant's grape crop. The court's reversal was based in part on the ground that, at the time of the agreement, plaintiffs were unlicensed in violation of Ag C § 1263 (now Food & Agric. Code § 56181). The court stated that the licensing of agents, brokers, and commission merchants pursuant to former Ag C § 1263 is clearly intended for the regulation of traffic in farm commodities for the general protection of the public and that it has been uniformly held that contracts procured in violation of such regulatory licensing provisions are void (18 Cal. App. 2d 354, 359) .

§ 31.22 Supporting Contention That Recovery of Commission Barred If Securities Broker-Dealer Has No Certificate [Corp. Code § 25210]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF BROKER CANNOT RECOVER A COMMISSION BECAUSE RECOVERY IS BARRED WHEN A PERSON ACTS AS A SECURITIES BROKER-DEALER WITHOUT A CERTIFICATE OF AUTHORIZATION.

A. Broker-Dealer Defined. A "broker-dealer" is any person engaged in the business of effecting transactions in securities in California for the account of others or for his or her own account, and the term includes any person engaged in the regular business of issuing or guaranteeing options with regard to securities not of his or her own issue (Corp. Code § 25004).

B. Requirement of Certificate. Unless exempted by Sections 25200-25207 of the Corporations Code, no broker-dealer shall effect any transaction in, or induce or attempt to induce the purchase or sale of, any security in this state unless such broker-dealer has first applied for and secured from the commissioner a certificate, then in effect, authorizing such person to act in that capacity (Corp. Code § 25210(a)).

C. No Recovery of Commission When Agreement in Violation of Licensing Requirement. A contract employing a broker-dealer to perform services in connection with the sale of securities that requires a certificate pursuant to Section 25210(a) of the Corporations Code is void if the broker-dealer has no certificate and the agreement will not support an action to recover a commission (Rhode v. Bartholomew (1949) 94 Cal. App. 2d 272, 272, 282, 210 P.2d 768 (construing former Section 6 of the Corporate Securities Act [now see Corp. Code § 25210(a)]).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that recovery of a commission by an unlicensed securities broker-dealer is barred by the certificate requirement of Corp. Code § 25210(a).

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that recovery of a commission is barred by Corp. Code § 25210(a). These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in §§ 31.27 -31.28 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Recovery of Commission When Agreement in Violation of Licensing Requirement

In Rhode v. Bartholomew (1949) 94 Cal. App. 2d 272, 210 P.2d 768 , plaintiff brought an action for compensation earned in procuring a purchaser for defendants of the capital stock of a manufacturing company and for assisting in the sale. The jury returned a verdict for plaintiff at the original trial and on retrial. Defendant appealed, contending that the services performed by plaintiff were those of a broker and that plaintiff did not have a broker's license as required by former § 6 of the Corporate Securities Act, now Corp. Code § 25210(a). The court of appeal reversed the judgment and held that plaintiff was acting as a broker and, being unlicensed, was not entitled to recovery. The court stated that the provision of the former Corporate Securities Act (now Corporate Securities Law of 1968, Corp. Code §§ 25000-25706), requiring a broker of stock to first secure a license, was designed to protect the public against unscrupulous operators and that the efforts of plaintiff to sell stock were illegal and therefore would not support a promise to pay. Thus, the court stated, a contract employing a broker to sell corporate stock is void when the broker is not licensed to sell the stock, and the broker may not recover a commission (94 Cal. App. 2d 272, 282) .

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a party's contention that recovery of a commission is barred pursuant to Bus. & Prof. Code § 10136 because the broker seeking recovery was not licensed at the time the cause of action arose. This form sets out the point that a broker may recover a commission, even though he or she was not licensed when the cause of action arose, if he or she was licensed when the services requiring a license were rendered.

These points and authorities may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel is responding to the contention that Bus. & Prof. Code § 10136 bars recovery of a commission. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the facts showing that the broker or salesperson was licensed at the time that the services were rendered, even though he or she was not licensed when the cause of action arose.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 31.20.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Commission Recoverable When Licensed at Time Services Rendered

In Cline v. Yamaga (1979) 97 Cal. App. 3d 239, 158 Cal. Rptr. 598 , plaintiff, a real estate broker, sought recovery of a commission in connection with the exercise of an option to lease six acres of real property. Plaintiff located for defendants a lessee who was to assist in developing the land owned by them. In 1964, an agreement was entered into for the lease of six of defendants' acres with an option to lease the remaining six. This agreement provided for a commission. The agreement was modified in 1965 and provided for the payment of one half of the commission in consideration for the option and provided that no commission would be payable if the option was not exercised. In 1972 and 1973, leases were entered into but plaintiff was not paid a commission and thus brought an action for recovery of the same. Defendants contended in part that, although plaintiff ceased performing services for defendants in 1965, Bus. & Prof. Code § 10136 barred recovery of the commission because plaintiff was not licensed at the time the cause of action arose in 1973. The trial court agreed, but the court of appeal reversed and held that Bus. & Prof. Code § 10136 did not bar recovery (97 Cal. App. 3d 239, 246) . The court noted that a broker's cause of action arises when the commission becomes due and payable and that a literal interpretation of the statute would bar recovery by plaintiff because he was not licensed in 1973. However, the court stated, the purpose of the real estate licensing requirement is to protect the public from the perils in dealing with incompetent and untrustworthy practitioners. Accordingly, this purpose would not be served by barring plaintiff's recovery because the protection of the public requires that the broker or salesperson be duly licensed at the time that the services are rendered (97 Cal. App. 3d 239, 245) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Commission Recoverable When Licensed at Time Services Rendered

In Koeberle v. Hotchkiss (1935) 8 Cal. App. 2d 634 , the court of appeal affirmed a judgment for plaintiff who was receiving, as a commission on oil leases obtained for defendants, 10 percent of the royalties as they were received by defendants. Defendants contended in part that plaintiff was barred from recovery of the commission because he did not plead and prove that he was a duly licensed real estate broker at the time that the commissions were to have been received. The court held that the services as a real estate broker were fully performed by plaintiff while he had a license and that a payee under a contract such as plaintiff's need not maintain a license throughout the term of the contract in order to bring an action for recovery of the commission payments (8 Cal. App. 2d 634, 640-641) .

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that recovery of a commission is barred by the license requirement of Bus. & Prof. Code § 10136 when the services performed by the party seeking recovery were those of a finder or middleman.

These points and authorities may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel is responding to the contention that recovery of a commission is barred because the party seeking recovery was not licensed. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the nature of the services performed and the facts showing that the party seeking recovery was merely acting as a finder.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 31.20.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Finder or Middleman Not Barred From Recovering Commission

In Tyrone v. Kelley (1973) 9 Cal. 3d 1, 106 Cal. Rptr. 761, 507 P.2d 65 , plaintiff brought an action to recover a fee earned in connection with finding a lender for a construction project on defendants' property. The trial court rendered judgment for plaintiff and defendants appealed, contending in part that plaintiff had performed services as a real estate broker and was not licensed and was therefore barred from recovering a commission pursuant to Bus. & Prof. Code § 10136 (9 Cal. 3d 1, 8) . The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment and stated that plaintiff was acting as a mere finder and did not participate in the negotiations in any way. Thus, the court held that recovery of the commission was not barred by Bus. & Prof. Code § 10136, but on the contrary, plaintiff came within the long-established finder's exception to the real estate licensing requirements (9 Cal. 3d 1, 8-12) . The court pointed out that a finder is a person whose employment is limited to bringing the parties together so that they may negotiate their own contract, and that the distinction between a finder and a broker turns on whether or not the intermediary has been invested with authority and duties beyond merely introducing the parties, which is usually the authority to participate in negotiations (9 Cal. 3d 1, 9) . Because a finder merely introduces and does not negotiate, the Court noted that there is no reason for the finder to be licensed, since he or she does not need to possess the degree of learning and expertise required of a broker (9 Cal. 3d 1, 11-12) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Finder or Middleman Not Barred From Recovering Commission

In Shaffer v. Beinhorn (1923) 190 Cal. 569, 213 P 960 , the Supreme Court reversed a dismissal of an action for a commission following the sustaining of a demurrer to the complaint. The demurrer was based on the ground that there was no allegation that plaintiffs had licenses. The complaint alleged that plaintiffs entered into an agreement with defendant, a licensed real estate broker, whereby defendant agreed to pay plaintiffs a portion of defendant's commission if they found someone interested in buying a ranch for which defendant had a listing. The Court held that the actions of plaintiffs, as alleged, did not require a license (190 Cal. 569, 573-574) .

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a party's contention that recovery of a commission is barred by the license requirement of Bus. & Prof. Code § 10136. The contention may be used when the broker did not have a license at the time of the execution of the listing agreement but did have a license at the time of the performance of services.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to respond to the contention that recovery of a commission is barred because the broker did not have a license. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the facts showing that the broker had a license at the time that the services were performed, even though he or she did not have a license at the time of execution of the agreement under which recovery is sought.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 31.20.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Commission Recoverable If Licensed When Services Performed

In Houston v. Williams (1921) 53 Cal. App. 267, 200 P 55 , plaintiff, a real estate broker, obtained a judgment for a commission earned in procuring a purchaser for defendant's property. Defendant appealed, contending in part that the listing agreement was void because at the time of its execution plaintiff did not have a real estate license, although plaintiff was licensed at the time the services were rendered. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment and held that Stats. 1919, ch. 605, § 20 (now contained in Bus. & Prof. Code § 10136) only required that a broker, to recover a commission, allege and prove that he or she had a license at the time the cause of action arose and that any earlier time was excluded by implication. Since the cause of action arose at the time a purchaser was procured and it was not disputed that plaintiff had a license at that time, plaintiff was not barred from recovering a commission (53 Cal. App. 267, 271-272) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Commission Recoverable If Licensed When Services Performed

The court of appeal in Radich v. Cernokus (1924) 65 Cal. App. 452, 224 P 124 , relied on Houston v. Williams (1921) 53 Cal. App. 267, 200 P 55 , discussed in § 31.25[3][a] in affirming a judgment for a real estate broker. In Radich, plaintiff and defendant entered into a listing agreement in December, which was dated for the following January due to the fact that defendant had a listing with another agent that expired in January. Plaintiff was not licensed until January, and defendant contended that the listing agreement was void because plaintiff had no license when it was executed. The court held that because plaintiff was licensed when he procured a purchaser, the contention was without merit and plaintiff could recover the commission (65 Cal. App. 452, 454) .

Unlicensed Broker May Recover Compensation When Certain Conditions Satisfied. An unlicensed farm broker may recover compensation under an agreement made in violation of Section 56181 of the Food and Agricultural Code when the transaction has been consummated, no serious moral turpitude is involved, the broker is not the one guilty of the greatest moral fault, and the party urging the unenforceability of the agreement will be unjustly enriched at the expense of the broker (Southfield v. Barrett (1970) 13 Cal. App. 3d 290, 294, 91 Cal. Rptr. 514).

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a party's contention that recovery of compensation under an agreement is barred when a farm broker is unlicensed in violation of Food & Agric. Code § 56181. The argument may be made when the agreement has been fully performed, there is no serious moral turpitude, the party contending that it is void is the one guilty of the greatest moral fault, and unjust enrichment would result at the expense of the broker if the agreement were not enforced.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to respond to the contention that a farm broker's recovery of compensation is barred by Food & Agric. Code § 56181. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts showing that (1) the transaction in which the services were performed and for which compensation is sought has been completed, (2) there is no serious moral turpitude involved, (3) the party urging the unenforceability of the agreement is the one guilty of the greatest moral fault, and (4) the party urging the unenforceability of the agreement would be unjustly enriched at the expense of the broker.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 31.21.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Unlicensed Broker May Recover Compensation When Certain Conditions Satisfied

In Southfield v. Barrett (1970) 13 Cal. App. 3d 290, 91 Cal. Rptr. 514 , the court of appeal reversed a judgment rendered against plaintiff in the trial court. The trial court based its holding on the ground that plaintiff was acting as a commission merchant in violation of Agric. Code § 1263 (now Food & Agric. Code § 56181) and that the contract under which plaintiff sought payment was void. The court of appeal held that, although plaintiff was unlicensed, the agreement under which plaintiff sought compensation was not void and plaintiff should not be denied compensation under the contract (13 Cal. App. 3d 290, 294) . The court stated that the rule requiring the courts to withhold relief under the terms of an illegal contract is not an inflexible one to be applied in its fullest rigor under any and all circumstances. Thus, when the public cannot be protected because the transaction was completed, no serious moral turpitude was involved, defendant was the one guilty of the greatest moral fault and defendant would be unjustly enriched at the expense of plaintiff if the rule were applied, then the general rule should not be applied (13 Cal. App. 3d 290, 294) .

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a party's contention that recovery of a commission is barred by the licensing requirement of Corp. Code § 25210(a). The argument may be used when the party seeking recovery was acting solely as a finder or middleman.

Code § 25210(a)*. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Commission Recoverable When Acting as Finder or Middleman

In Lyons v. Stevenson (1977) 65 Cal. App. 3d 595, 135 Cal. Rptr. 457 , plaintiff, a licensed real estate broker, sought recovery of a commission from defendants, a mortgage company and its controlling stockholder, for procuring a buyer of the mortgage company. The sale of the mortgage company included the sale of all of the stock of the business. Judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff and defendant stockholder appealed, contending in part that plaintiff was not licensed to act as a broker or agent under the Corporate Securities Law of 1968 (Corp. Code §§ 25000-25706). The court of appeal affirmed and held that the sale of stock was incident to the sale of the property and thus, plaintiff was not required to be licensed as a real estate broker. In addition, the court held that plaintiff acted as a mere finder or middleman and was not required to be licensed under the Corporate Securities Law of 1968 (Corp. Code §§ 25000-25706) (65 Cal. App. 3d 595, 604-606) . The court pointed out that, although there is no statutory definition of a finder or middleman, a finder or middleman is one who merely brings the buyer and seller together so that they may make their own contract and does not participate in the negotiations of the transaction (65 Cal. App. 3d 595, 605-606) . The court noted that the evidence clearly disclosed that plaintiff was acting as a finder or middleman because he did not participate in any negotiations but merely acted as a conduit in informing the buyer of the terms of the sale before buyer and seller were introduced and thereafter had no contact with either the buyer or seller (65 Cal. App. 3d 595, 606) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Commission Recoverable When Acting as Finder or Middleman

In Freeman v. Jergins (1954) 125 Cal. App. 2d 536, 271 P.2d 210 , plaintiff sought compensation under an oral agreement allegedly providing that if a sale of stock were effected, defendants would pay plaintiff the reasonable value of plaintiff's services in finding and arranging an introduction. The court of appeal upheld the trial court's finding that plaintiff was acting as a finder and therefore was not required to be licensed under former Corp. Code § 25700 (now Corp. Code § 25210). The court agreed that plaintiff had done nothing to bring about the sale other than to introduce the buyer and seller (125 Cal. App. 2d 536, 546-548) .

Commission Recoverable When Sale of Securities Incident to Sale of Property or Business. When a person is not retained primarily to sell securities, but to sell property or a business, and the sale of securities is incident to the sale of property or a business, Section 25210 of the Corporations Code does not require a certificate in order to recover a commission (Lyons v. Stevenson (1977) 65 Cal. App. 3d 595, 602-603, 135 Cal. Rptr. 457).

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a party's contention that recovery of a commission is barred by Corp. Code § 25210. This argument may be used when the party seeking recovery was retained primarily to sell property or a business and the sale of securities was merely incidental to the sale of the business.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel is responding to the contention that recovery of a commission is barred by Corp. Code § 25210. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the facts showing that the party seeking recovery of a commission was retained primarily to sell property or a business and that the sale of the securities was merely incidental to this sale.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 31.22.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Commission Recoverable When Sale of Securities Incident to Sale of Property or Business

The facts and procedural background of Lyons v. Stevenson (1977) 65 Cal. App. 3d 595, 135 Cal. Rptr. 457 , are discussed in § 31.27[3][a]. In Lyons, plaintiff sought recovery of a commission under a contract that employed plaintiff to procure a purchaser for defendant mortgage company. The sale of the mortgage company involved the sale of all the stock of the company, but plaintiff was not told that the agreement involved the sale of stock and it did not occur to defendant, the controlling shareholder of the company, whether or not plaintiff had a license to sell securities. The trial court granted judgment for plaintiff, and the judgment was affirmed by the court of appeal (65 Cal. App. 3d 595, 607) . The court of appeal relied on Stoll v. Mallory (1959) 173 Cal. App. 2d 694, 343 P.2d 970 , and Weber v. Jorgensen (1971) 16 Cal. App. 3d 74, 93 Cal. Rptr. 668 , both discussed in § 31.28[4][a]. The court stated that these two cases point to the principle that when the party seeking recovery is retained primarily to sell property or a business and the party was not specifically retained to sell securities, there is no public policy objection to recovery of a commission even though the party is not licensed (65 Cal. App. 3d 595, 603) . In addition, the court noted that after the decisions in Stoll and Weber, revisions by the Corporate Securities Law of 1968 (Corp. Code §§ 25000-25706), adding the phrase "or induce or attempt to induce the sale of" a security to the prohibition on acting without a license contained in Corp. Code § 25210, did not alter the principle contained in these decisions. The court stated that prior to the addition the statute had been defined to include participation in negotiations that involved the transfer of stock, and thus the change did not subsume the finder or middleman exception (65 Cal. App. 3d 595, 604) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Commission Recoverable When Sale of Securities Incident to Sale of Property or Business

In Weber v. Jorgensen (1971) 16 Cal. App. 3d 74, 93 Cal. Rptr. 668 , the court of appeal reversed a judgment of dismissal, entered after a demurrer to plaintiff's complaint for a commission on the sale of defendant's resort and marina business was sustained, and plaintiff did not amend the complaint (16 Cal. App. 3d 74, 86) . One of the grounds in support of the demurrer was that plaintiff did not have a securities broker's certificate and therefore the agreement under which plaintiff sought compensation was void. The listing agreement did not mention the transfer of stock, but defendant told plaintiff that transfer of title would be accomplished by transferring the stock of the corporation to the buyer. An offer was presented to defendant, which defendant let expire, and the sale was not consummated. The court of appeal held that the transaction proposed was essentially a real estate transaction and that plaintiff was not entering into a contract to sell stock. Thus, the fact that plaintiff was not licensed was not a bar to recovery of a commission (16 Cal. App. 3d 74, 84-86) .

In Stoll v. Mallory (1959) 173 Cal. App. 2d 694, 343 P.2d 970 , plaintiff, a real estate broker, brought an action for the recovery of a commission in procuring a purchaser of a radio station. The proposed sale involved the transfer of stock. Judgment was rendered for plaintiff and defendants appealed, contending in part that recovery of a commission was barred because plaintiff was not licensed under the Corporate Securities Law of 1968 (Corp. Code § 25000-25706). The court of appeal affirmed the judgment and held that plaintiff was not required to be licensed (173 Cal. App. 2d 694, 700) . The court stated that plaintiff was retained to secure a purchaser of the business and not to find a buyer for the stock, that plaintiff did not participate in any negotiations for the sale of the stock, and that the memorandum of agreement between the sellers and buyers recited that the sale of stock was incidental to the sale of the radio station (

PLAINTIFF MAY NOT RECOVER A COMMISSION BECAUSE AN ORAL AGREEMENT EMPLOYING OR AUTHORIZING A BROKER, AGENT, OR ANY OTHER PERSON FOR COMPENSATION TO _____ [specify nature of services falling within the statute of frauds, e.g., PURCHASE REAL ESTATE] IS INVALID UNDER THE STATUTE OF FRAUDS.

A. Agreement Required to Be in Writing to Be Valid. An agreement authorizing or employing an agent, broker, or any other person to purchase or sell real estate, or to lease real estate for a longer period than one year, or to procure, introduce, or find a purchaser or seller of real estate or a lessee or lessor of real estate when such lease is for a longer period than one year, for compensation or a commission, is invalid unless the agreement, or some note or memorandum of it, is in writing and signed by the party to be charged or by his or her agent (*Civ. B. No Recovery of Commission If Agreement Not in Writing. An agreement that falls within the statute of frauds is voidable, and once the defense of the statute is raised against the enforcement of the contract, there can be no recovery of a commission (*Zimmerman v. [a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that the statute of frauds (Civ. Code § 1624(a)(4)) bars recovery of a commission for the purchase or sale of real estate, the procurement, introduction, or finding of a purchaser or seller of real estate, or the lease of real property for more than one year when the agreement on which recovery is sought is oral.

These points and authorities may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the statute of frauds. These points and authorities may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should discuss the facts showing that the agreement, pursuant to which a recovery of a commission is sought, is oral and that the commission is sought for the alleged performance of a service under the agreement that is required to be in writing.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities set out in § 31.41 relating to quantum meruit recovery.

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

[a] No Recovery of Commission If Agreement Not in Writing

The facts and procedural background of Zimmerman v. Bank of America (1961) 191 Cal. App. 2d 55, 12 Cal. Rptr. 319 , are discussed in § 31.60[3][a]. In Zimmerman, plaintiff, a real estate broker, brought an action against the owners of property for interference with an oral broker's agreement. The court of appeal held that an agreement for the payment of a commission that was unenforceable, due to the statute of frauds, can properly be the subject of a tort action for interference with a contract. The court observed that an agreement that falls within the statute of frauds is voidable, and once the defense is raised there can be no recovery of a commission under the contract (191 Cal. App. 2d 55, 57) .

Statute of Frauds Bars Recovery in Quantum Meruit. When an agreement for a commission is unenforceable due to the statute of frauds, there can be no recovery in quantum meruit for the reasonable value of services performed pursuant to the agreement (*Beazell v. These points and authorities may be combined with a form of memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the statute of frauds as a bar to recovery in quantum meruit.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Statute of Frauds Bars Recovery in Quantum Meruit

In Beazell v. Schrader (1963) 59 Cal. 2d 577, 30 Cal. Rptr. 534, 381 P.2d 390 , plaintiff real estate broker sought to recover a commission of $10,000 pursuant to written escrow instructions that specified the commission as $2,500 based on the facts that a prior oral agreement was reached regarding the higher commission and that parol evidence should be allowed to show the prior agreement. Plaintiff also sought recovery in quantum meruit for the reasonable value of services rendered. There was no dispute over whether or not plaintiff was entitled to the smaller amount, but the action was brought in superior court, where a demurrer to the complaint was sustained without leave to amend and the action thereafter dismissed on the basis that recovery of anything higher than $2,500 was barred by the statute of frauds and the amount sought was below the jurisdictional level of the court.

The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment (59 Cal. 2d 577, 582) . The Court reasoned that because parol evidence could not be introduced to change the terms of the written agreement, both the cause of action for recovery under the agreement and the cause of action for recovery of the reasonable value of services in quantum meruit were barred by the statute of frauds (59 Cal. 2d 577, 581-582) . As to the cause of action for quantum meruit, the Court stated that recovery on this theory also required proof of the broker's employment for his services and that such proof can only be made pursuant to the requirements of the statute of frauds (59 Cal. 2d 577, 582) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Statute of Frauds Bars Recovery in Quantum Meruit

In Wm. E. Doud & Co. v. Smith (1967) 256 Cal. App. 2d 552, 64 Cal. Rptr. 222 , plaintiff's real estate brokers sought to recover a commission and also sought recovery in quantum meruit. The written agreement provided for a commission on the sale of defendant's land to one of two specified buyers. The land was eventually sold to two different buyers, although one of the eventual buyers was previously connected with one of the specified buyers. A demurrer to the second amended complaint was sustained without leave to amend on the ground that the action was barred by the statute of frauds. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment of dismissal. The court held that the parol evidence was not admissible to vary the terms of the written agreement and that when an agreement is unenforceable due to the statute of frauds, there can be no recovery in quantum meruit (256 Cal. App. 2d 552, 558-559) .

In Ford v. Palisades Corp. (1950) 101 Cal. App. 2d 491, 225 P.2d 545 , plaintiff, a real estate broker, appealed from a judgment in favor of defendant in an action to recover a real estate commission or, in the alternative, the reasonable value of services rendered. The evidence disclosed that plaintiff had failed to produce a ready, willing, and able buyer within the time set forth in the written agreement of employment and thus the trial court concluded that action was barred by the statute of frauds. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment and in so doing held that when an agreement to pay a broker's commission is unenforceable due to the statute of frauds, the broker cannot recover the reasonable value of his or her services (101 Cal. App. 2d 491, 498) .

[a] Commission Not Recoverable When Agreement Not in Writing

In Pac. etc. Dev. Corp. v. Western Pac. R. R. Co. (1956) 47 Cal. 2d 62, 301 P.2d 825 , plaintiff sought to recover a commission for services rendered in connection with the procurement of an option to purchase real property by defendant. The trial court rendered judgment for defendant on the ground that the agreement for the recovery of the commission was not in writing as required by the statute of frauds. Plaintiff appealed and contended, among other things, that an agreement employing a broker to obtain an option to purchase real property was not within the provisions of the statute of frauds. Plaintiff argued that an option itself conveys no interest in land but is merely a right to buy the property on the terms and within the time set forth in the option. However, the Supreme Court held that an agreement employing a broker to obtain an option to purchase real property is within the statute of frauds and affirmed the judgment for defendant (47 Cal. 2d 62, 71) . The Court quoted earlier cases holding that the phrase "to purchase or sell," within the meaning of the statute of frauds (citing former Civ. Code § 1624(5); now see Civ. Code § 1624(a)(4)), included "to aid or assist in the purchase or sale," and that the procurement of an option to purchase real property aids or assists in the purchase of real property (47 Cal. 2d 62, 67-68) .

[a] No Recovery of Commission If Agreement Not in Writing

In King v. Tilden Park Estates (1958) 156 Cal. App. 2d 824, 320 P.2d 109 , plaintiff, a real estate broker, sought recovery of a commission for the procurement of an assignment to defendant of a contract to purchase real property. There was never any signed written agreement for the payment of a commission, but plaintiff contended that the assignment of a contract right to purchase real property was not an interest in real property and was not within the statute of frauds. A nonsuit was granted at the close of plaintiff's case and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the granting of the nonsuit and held that plaintiff could not recover a commission because an agreement employing a broker or agent to procure an assignment of a contract to purchase real property came within the provisions of the statute of frauds. The court quoted from Pac. etc. Dev. Corp. v. Western Pac. R. R. Co. (1956) 47 Cal. 2d 62, 301 P.2d 825 , discussed in § 31.42[3][a]. [b] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the memorandum set out in § 31.47 may be used to oppose the contention supported by this memorandum.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Commission Not Recoverable If No Written Evidence of Employment Relationship

In Franklin v. Hansen (1963) 59 Cal. 2d 570 , the plaintiff, a real estate broker, had acted as a rental agent for defendant in the rental of a piece of property owned by defendant and had approached defendant concerning the sale of the property. A purchase price was agreed on, and plaintiff obtained an offer and telephoned defendant with a request for an authorization to sell. In response, defendant sent a telegram stating in essence that it was confirmation that defendant would sell the property. The telegram also included the address of the property, the cash price, and the date of expiration of the offer. Defendant later refused to go through with the sale and plaintiff sued for breach of the commission agreement. Judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff.

The Supreme Court reversed and held that the statute of frauds barred plaintiff's recovery because the telegram, the writing on which plaintiff relied, was insufficient to satisfy the statute as it did not contain evidence of an employment relationship (59 Cal. 2d 570, 577). The Court pointed out that written evidence of an employment relationship has always been deemed an essential requirement of the statute of frauds (59 Cal. 2d 570, 576). The Court reasoned that a writing, to satisfy the statute, must contain the essentials of the agreement sought to be enforced and if it does so, parol evidence can be used to explain the circumstances surrounding the making of the writing. The Court noted that while the telegram in the instant case would be a sufficient memorandum of an agreement to sell the property, it was insufficient to show an agreement to pay a commission because the writing failed to use any words in recognition of a contractual obligation for a commission (59 Cal. 2d 570, 574).

In its opinion the Court stated as a basic rule, "The sufficiency of a writing to satisfy the statute of frauds cannot be established by evidence which is extrinsic to the writing itself" (59 Cal. 2d 570, 573-574) . In Sterling v. Taylor (2007) 40 Cal. 4th 757, 55 Cal. Rptr. 3d 116, 152 P.3d 420 , the Court disapproved of that statement (40 Cal. 4th 757, 769-770) and held the basic rule to be "that if a memorandum includes the essential terms of the parties' agreement, but the meaning of those terms is unclear, the memorandum is sufficient under the statute of frauds if extrinsic evidence clarifies the terms with reasonable certainty and the evidence as a whole demonstrates that the parties intended to be bound. Conflicts in the extrinsic evidence are for the trier of fact to resolve, but whether the evidence meets the standard of reasonable certainty is a question of law for the court" (40 Cal. 4th 757, 771) .

[a] Commission Not Recoverable If No Written Evidence of Employment Relationship

The facts and procedural background of Pac. etc. Dev. Corp. v. Western Pac. R. R. Co. (1956) 47 Cal. 2d 62, 301 P.2d 825 , are discussed in § 31.42[3][a]. Plaintiff, a real estate broker, sought to recover a commission for obtaining an option to purchase real property for defendant. The evidence disclosed that there were negotiations among plaintiff, defendant, and the owner of a piece of real property, and during these negotiations, defendant sent plaintiff a letter stating a purchase price that he was willing to pay for the property, the price of an option, and the length of the option. The letter also stated that if plaintiff felt that it was worth the trip he was to let defendant know, and defendant would arrange a meeting in order to "maybe get a deal signed" (47 Cal. 2d 62, 68) . However, defendant eventually concluded the deal with the owner without going through plaintiff and refused to pay the commission. Plaintiff sued, and judgment was rendered for defendant on the ground that the action was barred by the statute of frauds. The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment and held that the letter written by defendant was insufficient to satisfy the statute because it failed to mention the fact of employment. The court noted that a writing must unequivocally show the fact of the employment of the broker seeking to recover the commission (47 Cal. 2d 62, 69) .

In Barcelon v. Cortese (1968) 263 Cal. App. 2d 517, 69 Cal. Rptr. 657 , plaintiff real estate broker sought to recover a commission from defendant for locating a seller from whom defendant eventually purchased a piece of real property. Plaintiff was involved in negotiations for the purchase of the property when, in response to a letter sent by plaintiff to defendant, defendant wrote to plaintiff and told him that another agent would represent defendant in the future, because defendant was dissatisfied with plaintiff. Judgment was rendered in favor of defendant on the ground that the letter on which plaintiff relied was insufficient to satisfy the statute of frauds. The court of appeal affirmed and held that plaintiff was not entitled to a commission. The court stated that the crucial fact that must be in writing is the broker's authority to act for the principal. The court noted that the writing on which plaintiff relied not only did not contain this but negated any authority that may have previously been granted orally. Therefore, it did not satisfy the statute of frauds (263 Cal. App. 2d 517, 525-527) .

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that the statute of frauds bars recovery of a commission from a broker pursuant to an oral agreement between brokers to share a commission when the commission has not been paid and there is no binding written contract between the broker from whom recovery is sought and the owner. These points and authorities should be combined with the points and authorities set out in § 31.40 relating to the general statute of frauds provision.

These points and authorities may be combined with a form of memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue of the statute of frauds. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should discuss the facts showing that the agreement to share a commission is oral, that there is no binding written agreement between the broker from whom recovery is sought and the broker's principal, and that the commission has not been paid.

In an appropriate case, counsel may wish to combine these points and authorities with the points and authorities set out in § 31.41 relating to quantum meruit recovery.

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 31.52 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Recovery of Commission By One Broker From Another Broker

In Aldis v. Schleicher (1908) 9 Cal. App. 372, 99 P 526 , plaintiff sought recovery of compensation for services rendered in effecting a sale. Defendant, a real estate broker, was the owner of an undivided one-third interest in a piece of property, and plaintiff alleged that defendant promised him a commission if he would effect a sale of the property. Plaintiff alleged that defendant was acting as agent for the other two owners and sought recovery solely in connection with the sale of their interests. Judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff, and defendant appealed. The court of appeal reversed and held that because there was no written binding agreement between defendant broker and his principals for payment of a commission to defendant, there was no commission that could be the subject of an oral agreement between plaintiff and defendant (9 Cal. App. 372, 374) .

The facts and procedural background of Iusi v. Chase (1959) 169 Cal. App. 2d 83, 337 P.2d 79 , are discussed in § 31.52[3][a]. In Iusi, the court held that the statute of frauds did not bar recovery under an oral agreement to share a commission when the commission had in fact been paid. The court of appeal recognized the rule enunciated in Aldis v. Schleicher (1908) 9 Cal. App. 372, 99 P 526 that there must be a binding written agreement between the broker from whom recovery is sought and the owner in order for the broker to recover a commission pursuant to an oral agreement to share a commission. However, the court held that when the commission has in fact been paid, the commission can be recovered regardless of whether or not the agreement between the broker and his or her principal was in writing (169 Cal. App. 2d 83, 86).

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF BROKER MAY NOT CLAIM THAT DEFENDANT IS ESTOPPED FROM ASSERTING THE STATUTE OF FRAUDS BASED ON AN ORAL PROMISE TO PAY COMMISSION.

Oral Promise to Pay Commission Cannot Be Basis of Broker's Claim of Estoppel to Rely on Statute of Frauds. Although a person other than a real estate licensee may use the other party's oral promise to estop that person from relying on the statute of frauds, brokers are presumed to know that contracts for real estate commissions are invalid unless put in writing and cannot rely on oral promises (Phillippe v. Shapell Industries (1987) 43 Cal. 3d 1247, 1259-1269, 241 Cal. Rptr. 22, 743 P.2d 1279 ; *Tenzer v. Superscope, Inc. (1985) 39 Cal. 3d 18, 27-28, 216 Cal. [a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that a broker may not claim that the other party is estopped to assert the statute of frauds because of an oral promise to pay a commission.

These points and authorities may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue that a real estate broker may not ground its claim that the other party is estopped to rely on the statute of frauds on the other party's oral promise to pay a commission. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Oral Promise to Pay Commission Cannot Be Basis of Broker's Claim of Estoppel to Rely on Statute of Frauds

In Phillippe v. Shapell Industries (1987) 43 Cal. 3d 1247, 241 Cal. Rptr. 22, 743 P.2d 1279 , a real estate broker was employed by a developer, who was also a broker. The broker informed the developer of a certain property and wrote a letter stating that he expected a commission. The developer did not respond but purchased the property one and one-half years later. The broker brought an action and obtained a jury verdict, and the developer appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed. It held that a writing was required because the broker was acting as a broker and that a writing referring to a commission on another property was not sufficient. It held that the fact that the principal was a broker did not preclude the writing requirement (43 Cal. 3d 1247, 1259-1262) .

The Court then held that a licensed broker cannot rely on equitable estoppel to recover on an oral agreement for a commission. A broker does not suffer an unconscionable injury in performing under an oral agreement. Reliance on an oral contract was not reasonable, because of the broker's knowledge that a writing is required under the statute of frauds. Such reliance was especially unreasonable when the principal was also a licensed broker. Nor was the principal unjustly enriched even when the broker was the procuring cause of the sale. Such a holding would eviscerate the statute of frauds and go counter to the rule that a broker who performs without a writing cannot recover in quantum meruit. Sound policy reasons exist to require a writing to recover a real estate commission. The Legislature has repeatedly required writings as a method of consumer protection. It is fair to require brokers to obtain a writing. Only licensed brokers can recover commissions, and licensed brokers must be aware of the statute of frauds requirement. A disparity of bargaining power or a commercial setting was not a reason for disregarding the statute of frauds, which is clearly set forth by statute (43 Cal. 3d 1247, 1259-1269) .

Tenzer v. Superscope, Inc. (1985) 39 Cal. 3d 18, 216 Cal. Rptr. 130, 702 P.2d 212 , involved a corporate director who had extensive personal and business contacts among investors in the real estate field, but who was not licensed as a broker or salesman. The director brought an action against the corporation for a 10 percent finder's fee on the sale of the corporate headquarters for $1.6 million. The fee had been orally agreed to by defendant's chairman and plaintiff before plaintiff introduced the buyer to the corporation. The sale of the headquarters was approved by the board, with plaintiff abstaining. Discussion was had at that meeting about the payment of the finder's fee, but a final decision was deferred until the next meeting. At the second meeting the proposal was defeated. Plaintiff's interpretation of the discussion and vote at the second meeting was that it concerned payment of finder's fees to directors in future transactions and that his fee had been approved when the sale was approved. Plaintiff stated three causes of action: (1) breach of contract and unjust enrichment; (2) estoppel; and (3) fraud. Defendant's motion for summary judgment was granted, and plaintiff appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed. The Court found that the finder's fee agreement was required by former Civ. Code § 1624(5) (now see Civ. Code § 1624(a)(4)) to be in writing (39 Cal. 3d 18, 25-27) and that a question of fact existed as to whether plaintiff's activities had gone beyond mere introductions and included matters for which a license would be required (39 Cal. 3d 18, 31). The Court considered the holdings of Pacific Southwest Development Corp. v. Western P. R. Co. (1956) 47 Cal. 2d 62, 70 , and Keely v. Price (1972) 27 Cal. App. 3d 209, 212, 103 Cal. Rptr. 531 (both discussed below), that estoppel to assert the statute of frauds based on an oral agreement to pay a commission is not available to licensed brokers, and declined to expand those cases to cover a claim for a finder's fee by an unlicensed person (39 Cal. 3d 18, 27-28) .

Pacific Southwest Development Corp. v. Western P. R. Co. (1956) 47 Cal. 2d 62 , is discussed in § 31.42[3][a].

The facts and procedural background of Keely v. Price (1972) 27 Cal. App. 3d 209, 103 Cal. Rptr. 531 , are discussed in § 31.57[3][a]. In Keely, plaintiff, a real estate broker, brought an action for fraud against the purchasers of real property and their representative, alleging that the purchasers had orally agreed to pay plaintiff's commission and to reduce this agreement to writing. The court in Keely cited Kroger v. Baur (1941) 46 Cal. App. 2d 801, 117 P.2d 50 , and held that if there was no cause of action for a false promise to pay a commission, there was no cause of action for a false promise to reduce an oral commission agreement to writing (27 Cal. App. 3d 209, 215) .

It should be noted that much of Keely 's reasoning has been overruled by Tenzer (discussed above), which specifically abrogated Kroger and held that a fraud cause of action could be stated when the alleged fraudulent promise was a contract that was unenforceable because of the statute of frauds (39 Cal. 3d 18, 29-31). Still, Tenzer specifically approved the holdings of Pacific Southwest Dev. Corp. and Keely for the proposition that a real estate licensee may not base a claim of estoppel to assert the statute of frauds on an oral agreement to pay a commission (39 Cal. 3d 18, 27-28).

§ 31.47 Opposing Contention That Statute of Frauds [Civ. Code § 1624(a)(4)] Bars Recovery of Commission--Memorandum Sufficient When Fact of Employment Can Be Inferred From Writing Evidencing Agreement to Pay Commission

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF BROKER IS NOT BARRED FROM RECOVERING A COMMISSION BY THE STATUTE OF FRAUDS, BECAUSE THE MEMORANDUM RELIED ON INCLUDES A PROVISION FOR PAYMENT OF A COMMISSION, AND THE FACT OF EMPLOYMENT MAY BE INFERRED FROM THIS PROVISION.

Recovery of Commission Not Barred When Fact of Employment Implied. A memorandum satisfies the requirement of the statute of frauds and recovery of a commission is not barred when the memorandum evidences a provision for payment of a commission, because the fact of employment may be inferred from the commission provision (Seck v. Foulks (1972) 25 Cal. App. 3d 556, 567-568, 102 Cal. Rptr. 170).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a party's contention that recovery of a commission is barred by the statute of frauds because the memorandum relied on to establish the right to a commission does not show the fact of employment. The argument set out in this form may be made when the memorandum relied on contains a provision for payment of a commission from which the fact of employment may be inferred.

These points and authorities may be combined with a form of memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to respond to the contention that the memorandum is insufficient to satisfy the statute of frauds. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should discuss the facts showing that there is a provision for a commission in the memorandum from which the employment relationship can be inferred.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in §§ 31.40 and 31.44.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Recovery of Commission Not Barred When Fact of Employment Implied

In Seck v. Foulks (1972) 25 Cal. App. 3d 556, 102 Cal. Rptr. 170 , plaintiff real estate broker brought an action against defendant sellers for the recovery of a commission. Plaintiff had been approached by one of the defendants, who was representing the other two, about selling defendants' ranch. Plaintiff testified that defendant did not want to sign a formal listing agreement for fear of raising the value of his neighbor's property by virtue of the listing agreement. Plaintiff, however, wrote the terms and condition of the sale down on the back of his business card and included the provision "6% comm." (25 Cal. App. 3d 556, 562) . The back of the business card was dated and it was initialed by defendant. After plaintiff found a purchaser and after extensive negotiations, an agreement was reached, but defendants refused to go through with the sale. Defendants later sold the property to another buyer. At the close of plaintiff's case, the trial court on motion entered judgment for defendants on the ground that plaintiff failed to procure a ready, willing, and able buyer on the terms set forth in the listing agreement (business card). Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed (25 Cal. App. 3d 556, 575) . The court agreed with the trial court's finding that the business card constituted a written listing of the property with plaintiff as broker. One of the grounds on which this finding was attacked by defendants was that the card failed to show on its face the fact of employment and therefore, was insufficient to satisfy the statute of frauds. However, the court held that when the writing relied on evidences a provision for a commission, the broker's authority to act may be inferred and extrinsic evidence may be used to explain the full meaning of the memorandum (25 Cal. App. 3d 556, 568) . The court distinguished the case of Franklin v. Hansen (1963) 59 Cal. 2d 570, 30 Cal. Rptr. 530, 381 P.2d 386 (discussed in § 31.44[3][a]). The court pointed out that in Franklin there was no reference to the existence of an employment relationship or to any compensation from which an employment relationship could be inferred (25 Cal. App. 3d 556, 567) .

PLAINTIFF BROKER IS NOT BARRED BY THE STATUTE OF FRAUDS FROM RECOVERING A COMMISSION BECAUSE A MEMORANDUM IS SUFFICIENT TO SATISFY THE STATUTE WHEN IT SHOWS THE EMPLOYMENT RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN THE PLAINTIFF AND DEFENDANT, EVEN THOUGH IT DOES NOT CONTAIN EITHER THE AMOUNT OF THE COMMISSION OR THE SPECIFIC PROMISE TO PAY THE COMMISSION.

A. Promise to Pay and Amount of Commission Not Required. The statute of frauds does not bar the recovery of a commission when the memorandum relied on shows an employment relationship, although neither the amount of the commission nor the specific promise to pay the commission is in writing (*Barcelon v. [a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a party's contention that recovery of a commission is barred by the statute of frauds. The argument may be used when the memorandum relied on shows an employment relationship, but the promise to pay a commission or the amount of the commission is not in writing. The optional paragraph may be used when there is no parol agreement regarding the amount of commission, in which case a reasonable amount may be implied.

These points and authorities may be combined with a form of memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel is responding to the contention that the statute of frauds bars recovery of a commission. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should discuss facts showing an employment relationship and that there was an agreement, although not written, that a commission would be paid.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 31.40.

[b] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities relating to the sufficiency of a memorandum to satisfy the statute of frauds, see Ch. 216, Statute of Frauds .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Promise to Pay and Amount of Commission Not Required

In Barcelon v. Cortese (1968) 263 Cal. App. 2d 517, 69 Cal. Rptr. 657 , two real estate brokers, Barcelon and Merriman, brought suit separately against defendant buyer and the corporation of which defendant was president for the recovery of commissions. Plaintiffs stipulated that each would share in the recovery of any judgment recovered by the other, and both actions were consolidated for trial. The evidence disclosed that defendants employed both brokers to locate a suitable piece of property for a subdivision. Barcelon was employed first and then Merriman was brought in with the knowledge of Barcelon. Barcelon's employment was terminated by defendants, and Merriman thereafter continued to represent defendants. However, when defendant buyer finally purchased the property that both Barcelon and Merriman were involved with, defendant buyer refused to pay the commission. A nonsuit was rendered against plaintiff Barcelon on the basis that the statute of frauds barred recovery and Barcelon appealed. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff Merriman and defendants appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed both judgments (263 Cal. App. 2d 517, 530) . Defendants contended that the statute of frauds barred recovery of the commission by Merriman because there was no written evidence of an agreement to pay a commission. The court noted, however, that there was ample written evidence of the employment relationship that was sufficient to satisfy the statute of frauds, and stated that a memorandum is deemed sufficient if it shows the fact of employment and the memorandum need not contain a promise to pay a commission or state the amount thereof (263 Cal. App. 2d 517, 525) .

[b] Reasonable Commission Implied

In Bruner v. Van's Markets (1951) 103 Cal. App. 2d 135, 229 P.2d 56 , plaintiff, a real estate broker, sought recovery of a commission on a renegotiated sale and lease-back of a warehouse from defendant seller. Defendant wanted to build a warehouse and plaintiff, at that time a member of a company, offered to obtain a sale and lease-back as a way of financing the construction of the warehouse. Plaintiff secured a buyer and was paid a commission. However, defendant thereafter realized that because the cost of construction was greater than anticipated, the contract with the buyer would have to be renegotiated. A letter addressed to plaintiff, who was now acting individually and not associated with his former company, and signed by defendant specified the terms to be renegotiated with the buyer. There was no statement that any commission was to be paid. The transaction between the buyer and seller was consummated and defendant refused to pay plaintiff a commission on the renegotiated sale. At trial, judgment was rendered for plaintiff and defendant appealed, contending that the letter was insufficient to satisfy the statute of frauds.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment and held that the letter was sufficient, although it did not contain any agreement regarding compensation. The court stated that in the absence of any agreement regarding commission, the agent, if authorized in writing to negotiate a sale, is entitled to reasonable compensation for his or her services (103 Cal. App. 2d 135, 141) .

The facts and procedural background of Beazell v. Schrader (1963) 59 Cal. 2d 577, 30 Cal. Rptr. 534, 381 P.2d 390 , are discussed in § 31.41[3][a]. In Beazell, the Supreme Court held that plaintiff could not recover a commission in excess of the amount provided in the signed escrow instructions. The Court cited Bruner v. Van's Markets (1951) 103 Cal. App. 2d 135, 229 P.2d 56 , above, and stated that in the absence of any agreement regarding compensation, a reasonable commission may properly be inferred (59 Cal. 2d 577, 581).

[a] Promise to Pay and Amount of Commission Not Required

The facts and procedural background of Beazell v. Schrader (1963) 59 Cal. 2d 577, 30 Cal. Rptr. 534, 381 P.2d 390 , are discussed in § 31.41[3][a] and in § 31.48[3][b]. In Beazell, plaintiff attempted to recover a higher commission than the escrow instructions provided and contended that parol evidence should be allowed to show this. The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment of dismissal and held that parol evidence was not admissible to change the terms of the escrow instructions. The Court noted that a memorandum is deemed sufficient when the fact of employment is shown, although the agreement to pay the commission or the amount of the commission is expressed (59 Cal. 2d 577, 580) . The Court cited with approval Moore v. Borgfeldt (1939) 96 Cal. App. 306, 273 P 1114 , discussed below.

In Moore v. Borgfeldt (1939) 96 Cal. App. 306, 273 P. 1114 , plaintiff, a real estate broker, sought to recover a commission on the exchange of real property. The written memorandum mentioned the terms of the offer of partial exchange and stated that the commission was the amount that exceeded the stated terms of the exchange. The jury returned a verdict in favor of plaintiff and defendant appealed, contending, among other things, that the writing relied on was insufficient to satisfy the statute of frauds. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment and stated that when the memorandum shows authority to act, other terms, including the amount of compensation and the agreement to pay the commission, can be shown by parol evidence (96 Cal. App. 306, 311) .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Recovery of Commission Not Barred When More Than One Document

In Spitler v. Avery (1961) 189 Cal. App. 2d 811, 11 Cal. Rptr. 724 , plaintiff, a real estate broker, sought recovery of a commission in connection with the sale of defendant's farm land. Plaintiff relied on a series of six letters attached to the complaint to satisfy the requirement of the statute of frauds. A general demurrer to plaintiff's fourth amended complaint was sustained without leave to amend and the action dismissed. Plaintiff appealed, contending that the letters attached to the complaint were insufficient to comply with the statute of frauds.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment and held that the letters taken as a whole satisfied the statute of frauds. One of the letters told plaintiff to "go ahead with the deal" and the court stated that this letter, in view of the prior letters setting forth the terms of the transaction and amount of the commission, supported an inference of employment so that the complaint stated a cause of action for recovery of the commission (189 Cal. App. 2d 811, 814-815) .

The facts and procedural background of Seck v. Foulks (1972) 25 Cal. App. 3d 556, 102 Cal. Rptr. 170 , are discussed in § 31.47[3][a]. In Seck, the trial court rendered judgment for defendants against plaintiff in an action to recover a commission. The court of appeal reversed and held that there was a writing sufficient to satisfy the statute of frauds because the notations on the back of the business card on which plaintiff relied referred to a commission, and from this the fact of plaintiff's employment could be implied. The court pointed out that its holding was also supported by the surrounding memoranda such as flyers and brochures advertising the property, which not only aided in clarifying the terms on the back of the business card but showed the employment of plaintiff and his authority to act for defendants (25 Cal. App. 3d 556, 567-568) .

In Rader Co. v. Stone (1986) 178 Cal. App. 3d 10, 223 Cal. Rptr. 806 , plaintiff real estate broker brought an action for recovery of a commission against a landlord. The broker had brought a prospective tenant to see the premises. Prior to the visit the broker had received a brochure describing the property and offering to pay a commission. The broker filled out a client registration form that was executed by an agent of the landlord. The trial court sustained a demurrer based on failure to satisfy the statute of frauds. The court of appeal reversed. It held that the combination of the brochure and the registration statement was sufficient to show employment to procure a buyer because there was no other reason for the registration statement. The court held that the broker did not have to show employment to negotiate, and that employment to procure a buyer was sufficient (178 Cal. App. 3d 10, 24-26) .

In Herring v. Fisher (1952) 110 Cal. App. 2d 322, 242 P.2d 963 , the court of appeal reversed a judgment awarding plaintiff commissions on seven separate transactions but affirmed the award on one. Plaintiff relied on four letters from the president of defendant corporation to satisfy the statute of frauds, and the court stated that the letters, taken together, evidenced an employment relationship between the parties for the sale of the property referred to (110 Cal. App. 2d

PLAINTIFF BROKER IS NOT BARRED BY THE STATUTE OF FRAUDS FROM RECOVERING A COMMISSION BECAUSE ANY DEFECT, AMBIGUITY, OR UNCERTAINTY IN THE DESCRIPTION OF THE REAL PROPERTY CONTAINED IN THE MEMORANDUM MAY BE CURED BY ALLEGATIONS AND PROOF OF EXTRINSIC FACTS AND CIRCUMSTANCES.

Recovery of Commission Not Barred When Defect in Description of Property. A broker is not barred from recovering a commission by the statute of frauds merely because of a defect, ambiguity, or uncertainty in the description of the property to be sold when the defect, ambiguity, or uncertainty can be cured by the allegation and proof of extrinsic facts (*Russell v. [a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a party's contention that the statute of frauds bars recovery of a commission. This argument may be used when there is a defect in the description of the property that can be cured by the allegation and proof of extrinsic facts and circumstances.

These points and authorities may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel is responding to the contention that the statute of frauds bars recovery of a commission. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should discuss the facts showing that the defect in the description of the property can be cured by extrinsic facts and circumstances. For example, if appropriate, counsel should state that the seller owned only one piece of property and that both the buyer and the seller understood what property was referred to by the writing.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 31.40.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Recovery of Commission Not Barred When Defect in Description of Property

In Russell v. Ramm (1927) 200 Cal. 348, 254 P 532 , plaintiff, after a jury trial, was awarded a commission earned by procuring a ready, willing, and able buyer for defendant, although defendant refused to go through with the sale assertedly because his wife would not sign the real estate contract. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment and the Supreme Court also affirmed the judgment and adopted the opinion of the court of appeal. One of defendant's contentions on appeal was that the description of the real property contained in the listing agreement was so vague and ambiguous that it rendered uncertain the particular tract of land to which the agreement related. The listing agreement described the land as "60 acres located one mile from Dinuba" (200 Cal. 348, 354) . In addition, at trial plaintiff had moved to amend the complaint to provide a specific description of the property by metes and bounds.

The court of appeal cited prior cases in which the descriptions of property were held adequate and were no more definite than the instant description. Furthermore, the court stated that the evidence disclosed that defendant physically pointed out to both plaintiff and the prospective purchaser the property he wanted sold and that it was not shown that defendant owned any other land situated one mile from Dinuba. Thus, it was clear that nobody connected with the transaction was uncertain of the particular property referred to in the listing agreement (200 Cal. 348, 368-369). The court, relying on prior case law, stated that because the terms of employment are the central part of a broker's contract as far as the statute of frauds is concerned, the contract will not be declared void merely because of a defect, ambiguity, or uncertainty in the description of the property to be sold or exchanged when such a defect can be cured by allegation or proof of extrinsic facts and circumstances (200 Cal. 348, 370).

In Babcock v. Houston (1973) 33 Cal. App. 3d 858, 109 Cal. Rptr. 454 , the trial court denied plaintiffs' recovery of a real estate commission, based in part on insufficiency of the memorandum to satisfy the statute of frauds. In Babcock, one of the contentions urged by defendants in support of the judgment against plaintiffs was that the description of the property as "Pacific Island Village No. III" was insufficient to satisfy the statute of frauds. The court of appeal held that the description was sufficient and, relying on prior case law, stated that it has been uniformly held that the essential part of a broker's contract, as far as the statute is concerned, is the matter of employment, and that a broker's contract is not to be declared void merely because of a defect, ambiguity, or uncertainty in the description if it can be cured by allegation and proof of extrinsic facts. The court of appeal stated that the trial court expressly found that all parties to the agreement had known the exact location and boundaries of the property described as "Pacific Island Village III" (33 Cal. App. 3d 858, 864).

In Herring v. Fisher (1952) 110 Cal. App. 2d 322, 242 P.2d 963 , the court of appeal reversed a judgment awarding plaintiff commissions on seven separate transactions but affirmed the award on one. On appeal, it was contended that the property described in the documents as "Alameda" was insufficient. The court stated that the communications between plaintiff and defendant left no doubt that both parties knew the exact properties intended and that a contract employing a broker is not void for uncertainty when the defect can be cured by pleading and proof of extrinsic facts (110 Cal. App. 2d 322, 329-330).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Recovery Not Barred When Agreement Severable

In Marks v. Walter G. McCarty Corp. (1949) 33 Cal. 2d 814, 205 P.2d 1025 , plaintiff sought recovery of a commission in connection with the sale of a hotel and its furnishings. Defendant seller had listed the property with plaintiff, and plaintiff contacted and negotiated with the eventual buyer concerning the purchase of the property by a syndicate in which the buyer would have an interest. When these negotiations failed, the buyer purchased the property directly from the defendant, and defendant refused to pay the commission. At trial, judgment was rendered for plaintiff and defendant appealed.

The Supreme Court modified the judgment, allowing plaintiff to recover his commission for the sale of the personal property in the hotel (33 Cal. 2d 814, 824) . As to the portion of the commission for the sale of the real property, the Court held that recovery was barred by the statute of frauds. The Court stated that the commission could be apportioned, although the sale price was indivisible, because the broker's right to a commission depends not on whether the real property and the personal property could have been separately sold but on whether the sale price of the personal property could be reasonably ascertained. In Marks, the sale price of the personal property was allotted separately in the final escrow instructions (33 Cal. 2d 814, 823-824) .

The facts and procedural background of Owen v. National Container Corp. of Cal. (1952) 115 Cal. App. 2d 21, 251 P.2d 765 , are discussed in § 31.59[3][a]. In Owen, the court of appeal, in holding that the agreement as alleged was not required to be in writing, stated that if it had been determined at trial that a written agreement was required regarding some but not all of the agreed services, the questions of whether or not the contract was severable and whether or not the compensation for those severable portions was ascertainable would arise. The court stated that facts might be found that would render applicable the doctrine, enunciated in Marks v. Walter G. McCarty Corp. (1949) 33 Cal. 2d 814, 205 P.2d 1025 (discussed in § 31.51[3][a]), that compensation can be recovered for services rendered pursuant to a severable portion of the agreement not required to be in writing (*115 Cal. Recovery Under Agreement to Share Commission Not Barred. A broker is not barred by the statute of frauds from recovering a commission pursuant to an oral agreement between brokers to share a commission when there is a written agreement between the owner and the listing broker or when the commission has already been paid (*Iusi v. These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a party's contention that the statute of frauds bars recovery of a commission. This argument should be used when recovery of a portion of an earned commission is sought from a broker, pursuant to an oral agreement between two brokers, to share a commission. Before there can be a recovery of a portion of a commission from a cooperating broker, it must be shown that either (1) there was a binding written contract between the other broker and the owner, or (2) the commission has already been paid by the owner to the broker [Iusi v. Chase (1959) 169 Cal. App. 2d 83, 86, 337 P.2d 79] .

These points and authorities may be combined with a form of memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel is responding to the contention that the statute of frauds bars recovery of a commission. Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should discuss the facts showing that the commission is sought, pursuant to an oral agreement with the broker to share the commission earned. Counsel should also discuss the fact that the commission has either been received by the broker against whom recovery is sought or that there was a valid agreement between the broker and the owner or purchaser of the property.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in §§ 31.40 and 31.45.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Recovery Under Agreement to Share Commission Not Barred

In Iusi v. Chase (1959) 169 Cal. App. 2d 83, 337 P.2d 79 , two real estate brokers, a listing broker and a middleman broker, sought recovery of a portion of a commission earned by defendant, the procuring broker, on the sale of real property in separate actions that were consolidated for trial. Judgment was entered in favor of the listing broker and against the procuring broker for 50 percent of the commission already paid and half of the remaining commission as paid to defendant. Judgment was entered against the middleman on the basis that custom and usage in the trade dictated that he look to the listing broker for his share of the commission. Both judgments were appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed (169 Cal. App. 2d 83, 88) . The evidence in Iusi disclosed that the property owner orally granted a listing to plaintiff listing broker and that all agreements for the sharing of the commission were oral. Defendant contended that the statute of frauds barred recovery of half of the commissions by the listing broker. The court of appeal stated that the general rule is that the statute of frauds does not bar recovery under agreements between brokers to share commissions earned when there is a valid written agreement between one of the brokers and the principal. In addition, when the commission has in fact been paid by the owner to one broker, even though there was no written contract between them, the second broker can recover on the oral contract with the first broker (169 Cal. App. 2d 83, 86) .

In Grant v. Marinell (1980) 112 Cal. App. 3d 617, 169 Cal. Rptr. 414 , plaintiff sought from defendant, a licensed real estate broker, compensation for introducing defendant to two prospective customers. Plaintiff contended that there was an oral agreement between plaintiff and defendant, whereby defendant agreed to pay plaintiff a finder's fee of 10 percent of any income earned by defendant as a result of plaintiff introducing to defendant any parties interested in securing the services of a real estate broker. A demurrer to the complaint on the ground that the action was barred by the statute of frauds was sustained without leave to amend. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that the statute did not bar recovery under oral agreements such as the one alleged (112 Cal. App. 3d 617, 621). The court stated that the alleged agreement was analogous to agreements between brokers, and that it is well-settled that the statute does not bar oral contracts between brokers or between brokers and salespersons to cooperate in procuring a sale or purchase of property and to share any commission earned as a result (112 Cal. App. 3d 617, 619).

[a] Recovery Under Agreement to Share Commission Not Barred

In Holland v. Morgan & Peacock Properties (1959) 168 Cal. App. 2d 206, 335 P.2d 769 , plaintiffs recovered a portion of a commission from defendants pursuant to an oral agreement to share a commission if plaintiffs found a buyer. Defendants had written contracts with the owner, employing them to sell properties, and had actually received the commissions. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment. One of the contentions on appeal was that recovery under the agreement was barred by the statute of frauds, but the court stated that it was clear that the statute does not apply to a contract between brokers to share commissions (168 Cal. App. 2d 206, 210) .

[a] Recovery Not Barred Under Finder's Agreement

The facts and procedural background of Grant v. Marinell (1980) 112 Cal. App. 3d 617, 169 Cal. Rptr. 414 , are discussed in § 31.52[3][a]. In Grant, the court held that an agreement between a broker and a person who is neither a buyer nor a seller to find prospective customers for a broker in return for a finder's fee is not within the statute of frauds. The court noted that the statute of frauds was designed to protect buyers and sellers of property from unfounded claims of brokers and, like agreements between brokers to share commissions, a finder's agreement between a broker and one who is not a buyer or seller was never meant to be covered by the statute of frauds (112 Cal. App. 3d 617, 621) .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Recovery Permitted Under Written Promise Executed After Performance

In Estate of Rule (1944) 25 Cal. 2d 1, 152 P.2d 1003 , the executors of the estate appealed from an order of the probate court awarding a broker's commission. The broker and his salesperson became aware that the estate was attempting to sell a ranch and wrote to the attorney for the estate asking for more information in order to interest purchasers in the property. The attorney responded by sending the broker information on the property. The broker and his salesperson negotiated with the eventual purchaser for the sale of the ranch of the estate, and the purchaser submitted a bid on the property without going through the broker. Thereafter, the executors signed an authorization agreeing to pay the broker's commission out of the proceeds of a sale to any purchaser secured by the broker. One of the contentions on appeal was that the agreement to pay a commission should have been construed as one to pay a commission for future services.

The Supreme Court affirmed the order of the probate court (25 Cal. 2d 1, 17). Based on the evidence, the Court stated that the trial court could have properly construed the agreement as one to pay a commission for services performed by the broker prior to the execution of the agreement. The court stated that it has been consistently held that the moral obligation to pay for services rendered as a broker in selling real estate under an oral contract, when the statute requires such a contract to be in writing, will support a new promise to pay executed after the services have been performed. Thus, the court held, the contract executed after the services were performed was legally sufficient to satisfy the requirement, if any, of a written authorization (25 Cal. 2d 1, 11-12).

In Fellom v. Adams (1969) 274 Cal. App. 2d 855, 79 Cal. Rptr. 633 , plaintiffs sought recovery of the remainder of a commission earned on the sale of real property owned by defendant. There was no written listing agreement or any other agreement employing plaintiffs. A portion of plaintiffs' commission was paid through escrow and defendant signed a promissory note for the balance. Judgment was rendered for plaintiffs and defendant appealed, contending in part that the court improperly failed to make a finding on the issue of whether or not plaintiff rendered services pursuant to an agreement in writing. Defendant contended that these findings should have been made because they would have shown that there was a lack of consideration for the promissory note, because it was given for an obligation unenforceable under the statute of frauds.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment and held that the promissory note was enforceable and that plaintiffs were not required to prove a prior written agreement (274 Cal. App. 2d 855, 868). The court stated that the moral obligation to perform an agreement otherwise unenforceable due to the statute of frauds furnishes sufficient consideration for a subsequently executed promissory note (274 Cal. App. 2d 855, 867).

[a] Recovery Permitted Under Written Promise Executed After Performance

In Hillman v. Koch (1949) 92 Cal. App. 2d 163, 206 P.2d 434 , plaintiffs, real estate brokers, sought recovery of a commission on a sale of real property. Plaintiffs, although having no written listing or agreement to act as defendant's brokers, did have an oral authorization to find a purchaser for defendant's property. After the purchaser was found, an agreement of sale, which provided for the payment of a commission, was signed by both the purchaser and defendant.

The trial court rendered judgment for plaintiffs and defendant appealed, contending that the agreement was insufficient to satisfy the statute of frauds because it failed to show the employment of plaintiffs, thus leaving the court powerless to reform it. The court affirmed the award of damages, stating that it is well-settled that if the seller, after services are performed, promises in writing to pay a commission, the agreement meets the requirement of the statute of frauds even though there was no previous employment of the broker. The court reasoned that acceptance of the benefits creates a moral obligation sufficient to furnish consideration for a promise (92 Cal. App. 2d 163, 166) .

PLAINTIFF BROKER IS NOT BARRED BY THE STATUTE OF FRAUDS FROM RECOVERING A COMMISSION FROM DEFENDANT BECAUSE A BROKER MAY RECOVER A COMMISSION FROM A SPOUSE WHO HAS NOT SIGNED THE LISTING AGREEMENT WHEN THE NONSIGNING SPOUSE RATIFIES THE ACTIONS OF THE SPOUSE WHO SIGNED THE AGREEMENT AND HAS ACCEPTED THE BENEFITS OF THE COMPLETED TRANSACTION.

Recovery From Nonsigning Spouse Not Barred. A broker is not barred by the statute of frauds from recovering a commission against a spouse who did not sign the listing agreement when the nonsigning spouse ratifies the actions of the agent spouse and accepts the benefits of the completed transaction (Davinroy v. Thompson (1959) 169 Cal. App. 2d 63, 65-66, 336 P.2d 1028).

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a party's contention that the statute of frauds bars recovery of a commission from a nonsigning spouse. This argument may be used when the nonsigning spouse has ratified the actions of the agent spouse and has accepted the benefits of the completed transaction.

These points and authorities may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel is responding to the contention that the statute of frauds bars recovery of a commission. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

The Supreme Court affirmed the order of the probate court (25 Cal. 2d 1, 17) . Thus, counsel should discuss the facts showing that the signing spouse was acting as the agent of the nonsigning spouse and that the nonsigning spouse ratified the actions of the signing spouse and accepted the benefits of the completed transaction.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 31.40.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Recovery From Nonsigning Spouse Not Barred

In Davinroy v. Thompson (1959) 169 Cal. App. 2d 63, 336 P.2d 1028 , plaintiff broker brought an action for the recovery of a real estate broker's commission from defendants, husband and wife, in connection with the exchange of real property. Plaintiff relied on the written agreement of exchange and the escrow instructions that were signed only by defendant husband, although the documents were typed out for both the husband and wife to sign. Judgment was rendered for plaintiff and defendants appealed, contending in part that because neither of the documents was signed by the wife there was no evidence to support the finding that the plaintiff performed services for her as a real estate broker and at her written request and authorization.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment and stated that there was ample evidence to support the finding that the husband was acting as his wife's agent. She knew about the transaction, her signature appeared on the deed and some escrow instructions, and she testified that her husband handled the transaction for her. In addition, the court stated that when a broker spends his or her time and money for the benefit of a spouse, assuming he or she has given proper authority to the other spouse to act as his or her agent, and the spouse signs deeds and accepts the benefits of the completed transaction, the courts will not permit the nonsigning spouse to use the statute of frauds to deprive the broker of his or her commission. In support of its conclusion, the court cited Laack v. Dimmick (1928) 95 Cal. App. 456, 273 P 50 , discussed in § 31.55[4][a] (169 Cal. App. 2d 63, 65-66) .

[a] Recovery From Nonsigning Spouse Not Barred

In Laack v. Dimmick (1928) 95 Cal. App. 456, 273 P 50 , the court of appeal reversed a judgment against plaintiffs and in favor of defendant husband and wife in an action to recover a commission (95 Cal. App. 456, 475). One of the questions on appeal was whether or not the exclusive agency agreement was binding on defendant wife whose name was signed on the agreement by her husband. The evidence disclosed that the wife signed the deed, acknowledged the contract in writing by attempting to revoke it, and accepted the deposit of the purchase price. The court discussed the doctrines of ratification and estoppel and concluded that the wife was bound under the exclusive agency agreement. The court noted that even if the wife had not ratified the original action by her husband in signing the exclusive agency agreement, she was certainly estopped to deny the authority of the husband (95 Cal. App. 456, 466-470, 475) .

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should discuss the facts showing misrepresentation by the opposing party that prejudicially led the party seeking to enforce the agreement to believe that a writing existed.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 31.40.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Commission Recoverable When Existence of Writing Misrepresented

The facts and procedural background of Phillippe v. Shapell Industries (1987) 43 Cal. 3d 1247, 241 Cal. Rptr. 22, 743 P.2d 1279 , are discussed in § 31.46[3][a]. In dicta, the Supreme Court stated that the statute of frauds does not preclude an action for actual fraud. To recover for actual fraud, the broker must show that he or she reasonably relied on misrepresentations. A broker cannot reasonably rely on an oral promise to pay a commission or an oral promise to later execute a writing. However, a broker might reasonably rely on a representation that the necessary contract had actually been executed (43 Cal. 3d 1247, 1269-1270) .

In Owens v. Foundation for Ocean Research (1980) 107 Cal. App. 3d 179, 165 Cal. Rptr. 571 , plaintiff, a real estate broker, sought to recover a commission earned pursuant to an oral agreement with defendant corporation based on a number of different theories, including equitable estoppel and fraud. The action was dismissed on the ground that the complaint did not state a cause of action because the entire action was barred by the statute of frauds. Plaintiff had orally agreed to act as the defendant's broker to sell a tract of land belonging to defendant and was assured by defendant's attorney that the agreement had been reduced to writing and adopted by defendant's board of directors. Plaintiff found a purchaser and the sale went through but defendant refused to pay the commission.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment of dismissal regarding three causes of action, two of them being equitable estoppel and fraud (107 Cal. App. 3d 179, 185) . The court held that an oral agreement is enforceable, despite the statute of frauds, under the equitable estoppel exception to the statute when one party is prejudicially led to believe that a writing exists because of a misrepresentation by the other party. In support of this conclusion, the court cited Civ. Code § 1623, which provides that a contract otherwise required to be in writing is enforceable against the fraudulent party if it is prevented from being put into writing by fraud. The court distinguished cases in which it was held that an oral promise to pay a commission or put a commission agreement in writing would not support an estoppel action because a broker is presumed to know a writing is required. The court stated that these cases were distinguishable because a broker should be able to trust the other party and thus, the broker's reliance on a misrepresentation that a writing exists may be reasonable even though the broker knows that a writing is required for recovery (107 Cal. App. 3d 179, 183) . The court also held that the facts pleaded for equitable estoppel would support a cause of action for fraud because the broker's reliance was reasonable (107 Cal. App. 3d 179, 184) .

It should be noted that Tenzer v. Superscope, Inc. (1985) 39 Cal. 3d 18, 216 Cal. Rptr. 130, 702 P.2d 212 , affects part of the ruling in Owens. Tenzer, which is discussed in § 31.46, involved an unlicensed person claiming a finder's fee. The Supreme Court in Tenzer overruled Kroger v. Baur (1941) 46 Cal. App. 2d 801, 803, 117 P.2d 50 , and its progeny, including Owens, to the extent that they held a cause of action for fraud could not be based on an alleged fraudulent promise unenforceable as a contract because of the statute of frauds. Nevertheless, the Court affirmed the rule of Keely v. Price (1972) 27 Cal. App. 3d 209, 212, 103 Cal. Rptr. 531 , that the claim that the other party is estopped to assert the statute of frauds because of an oral agreement for commission is not available to licensed brokers [Tenzer v. Superscope, Inc. (1985) 39 Cal. 3d 18, 27-31, 216 Cal. Rptr. 130, 702 P.2d 212] .

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a party's contention that the statute of frauds bars recovery of a commission. This argument may be used when a broker, in reliance on the oral promise to pay the commission, has released another party from a binding obligation to pay.

These points and authorities may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel is responding to the contention that the statute of frauds bars recovery of a commission. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should discuss the facts showing that there was an oral agreement to pay a commission and, in reliance on this agreement, another party was released from a binding obligation to pay the commission.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 31.40.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Commission Recoverable When Party Released in Reliance on Oral Promise

In Le Blond v. Wolfe (1948) 83 Cal. App. 2d 282, 188 P.2d 278 , plaintiff, a real estate broker, sought recovery of a commission from defendant, the prospective purchaser of property who failed to complete the transaction. The evidence disclosed that plaintiff was employed by the owners of the property to obtain a purchaser. Defendant agreed to purchase the property if he could do so at the asking price minus plaintiff's commission of $5,000. Defendant asked plaintiff to release the owners of the property from their obligation to pay the commission and to obtain a net listing price exclusive of plaintiff's commission. Defendant agreed to pay to plaintiff $2,500 as a commission if this was done. Plaintiff released the sellers and an escrow was opened that defendant eventually refused to close. At trial, judgment was rendered for plaintiff and defendant appealed, contending in part that the statute of frauds barred recovery of the commission.

The court of appeal affirmed and held that defendant was estopped from relying on the statute of frauds. The court stated that when a party, in reliance on a parol contract that should have been reduced to writing, has changed his or her position or parted with value so that it would be an injustice to permit the other party to rely on the statute of frauds, the doctrine of equitable estoppel will be invoked and the statute of frauds is not available to perpetrate a fraud (83 Cal. App. 2d 282, 286) . The court noted that plaintiff's reliance on the oral promise of defendant, in irremediably changing his position to his detriment by releasing the owners of the property from any obligation to pay a commission, was sufficient to support the court's conclusion that the statute of frauds was not available to defendant as a defense (83 Cal. App. 2d 282, 287) .

In Keely v. Price (1972) 27 Cal. App. 3d 209, 103 Cal. Rptr. 531 , plaintiff, a real estate broker, brought an action for breach of contract, fraud, and for interference with an advantageous economic relationship against defendant, an attorney representing a group of buyers who purchased some real property located by plaintiff. Plaintiff had made an oral agreement with the seller of the property to find a buyer, and the seller agreed to pay plaintiff's commission. Defendant offered less than the asking price and the seller agreed to the lower price if the buyers would pay plaintiff's commission. Defendant orally agreed on behalf of the buyers to pay the commission and the sale went through at the lower price. However, plaintiff was not paid his commission. The trial court sustained a demurrer without leave to amend on the ground that estoppel does not apply when the only arrangement with the seller is oral.

The court of appeal reversed the dismissal regarding the cause of action for intentional interference with an advantageous economic relationship. It agreed with the trial court, however, regarding the breach of contract and fraud causes of action (27 Cal. App. 3d 209, 217) .

Regarding the breach of contract action, the court in Keely held that estoppel will not lie when a broker releases a party from an oral promise as opposed to a binding obligation to pay a commission. The court discussed Le Blond v. Wolfe (1948) 83 Cal. App. 2d 282, 188 P.2d 278 (discussed above), and stated that, although the court in Le Bond did not expressly state that the contract from which the broker released the sellers was written, the court did focus on the fact that the sellers at one time had an obligation to pay the broker a commission. Thus, the court concluded, in order for plaintiff to successfully allege under the Le Blond exception that defendant is estopped from asserting the statute of frauds, plaintiff broker must be able to allege that he or she gave up an enforceable right to collect his or her commission from the seller in reliance on defendant's oral promise to pay a commission (27 Cal. App. 3d 209, 214).

It should be noted that the extent, if any, to which Le Blond v. Wolfe (1948) 83 Cal. App. 2d 282, 188 P.2d 278 , and Keely v. Price (1972) 27 Cal. App. 3d 209, 103 Cal. Rptr. 531 , on which § 31.57 is based, are affected by Tenzer v. Superscope, Inc. (1985) 39 Cal. 3d 18, 216 Cal. Rptr. 130, 702 P.2d 212 , is unclear. Tenzer, which is discussed in § 31.46, involved an unlicensed person claiming a finder's fee. While overruling Kroger v. Baur (1941) 46 Cal. App. 2d 801, 803, 117 P.2d 50 , and its progeny to the extent that they held a cause of action for fraud could not be based on an alleged fraudulent promise unenforceable as a contract because of the statute of frauds, Tenzer affirmed the rule of Keely v. Price (1972) 27 Cal. App. 3d 209, 212, 103 Cal. Rptr. 531 , that the claim that the other party is estopped to assert the statute of frauds based on an oral agreement for commission is not available to licensed brokers [Tenzer v. Superscope, Inc. (1985) 39 Cal. 3d 18, 27-31, 216 Cal. Rptr. 130, 702 P.2d 212] .

PLAINTIFF BROKER IS NOT BARRED BY THE STATUTE OF FRAUDS FROM RECOVERING A COMMISSION, ALTHOUGH THE WRITTEN TERMS OF THE CONTRACT SHOW THAT IT HAS EXPIRED, BECAUSE WHEN AN OWNER ENCOURAGES A BROKER TO CONTINUE TO ACT ON THE CONTRACT AFTER ITS EXPIRATION, THE TIME LIMITATION IN THE CONTRACT IS WAIVED.

Recovery Permitted When Time Limitation Waived. The statute of frauds does not bar a broker's recovery of a commission for producing a purchaser after the expiration of listing agreement because when an owner, after the time limit in the contract has expired, continues to encourage the broker to continue efforts to find a purchaser, and the broker does so with the knowledge, approval, and encouragement of the owner, and as a result of the broker's efforts the property is sold, the time limit in the contract must be considered waived, and the broker is entitled to a commission (Kraemer v. Smith (1960) 179 Cal. App. 2d 52, 55-56, 3 Cal. Rptr. 471 ; Baker v. Curtis (1951) 105 Cal. App. 2d 663, 668-670, 234 P.2d 153).

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a party's contention that the statute of frauds bars recovery of a commission. This argument may be used when, although the written terms of the contract evidence that the contract expired prior to the time a purchaser was produced by the broker, it is contended that this time limitation has been waived by the owner's encouragement of continued activities.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel is responding to the contention that the statute of frauds bars recovery of a commission. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should discuss facts showing that a purchaser was produced after expiration of the listing agreement and that the owner has orally waived the time limitation in the contract of employment by encouraging continued activities by the broker.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 31.40.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Recovery Permitted When Time Limitation Waived

In Kraemer v. Smith (1960) 179 Cal. App. 2d 52, 3 Cal. Rptr. 471 , plaintiff was given an exclusive agency agreement that terminated on May 23, 1955. During the term of the listing, defendants agreed to sell to a purchaser who was given until August 1, 1955, to meet the conditions of the contract of sale but who failed to meet the conditions on that date. At this time, plaintiff asked defendants to sign another listing and, although defendants refused to sign, defendants told plaintiff to keep working on the property. Plaintiff eventually contacted a party who was interested in the property only if the freeway did not pass through it, but this condition was rejected by defendants. Later, when plaintiff learned that the freeway was not going to pass through defendants' property, plaintiff contacted the same party and a sale was eventually consummated. Defendants refused to pay a commission and plaintiff brought an action for recovery. The trial court found that there had been an oral waiver or extension of time and awarded plaintiff a commission. Defendants appealed, contending that recovery of a commission was barred because the contract had expired, there was no oral waiver or extension of time, and any authorization between the parties after expiration was oral and unenforceable under the statute of frauds.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that there was sufficient evidence to sustain the trial court's finding that there was an oral waiver or extension of time by defendants sellers (179 Cal. App. 2d 52, 57). The court stated that when an owner, after the time limit in the contract has expired, continues to encourage the broker to continue efforts to find a purchaser and the broker does so with the knowledge, approval, and encouragement of the owner, and as a result of the broker's efforts the property is sold, the time limit in the contract must be considered waived, and the broker is entitled to a commission. To hold otherwise, the court continued, would permit the use of the statute of frauds to perpetrate a fraud (179 Cal. App. 2d 52, 55-56).

In Baker v. Curtis (1951) 105 Cal. App. 2d 663, 234 P.2d 153 , defendant owner gave to plaintiff broker an exclusive right to sell listing that expired within 30 days. Plaintiff was unable to effect a sale of the property during the listing period but plaintiff was told by defendant to keep working on the sale. The property was eventually sold to a purchaser who contacted plaintiff, and defendant refused to pay a commission. At trial, the jury returned a verdict in favor of plaintiff and defendant appealed, contending that because the original agreement had expired, the statute of frauds barred recovery of a commission.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment and stated that when the owner, after the time limit provided in the contract has expired, urges and encourages the broker to continue efforts to find a purchaser for the property, and the broker does so with the knowledge, approval, and encouragement of the owner, and as a result of the broker's efforts, a purchaser is found, the time limit must be considered waived. To hold otherwise, the court stated, would be to permit the use of the statute of frauds to perpetrate a fraud (105 Cal. App. 2d 663, 669-670) .

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a party's contention that the statute of frauds bars recovery of compensation by a broker. This argument may be used when the employment agreement calls for the rendition of personal services that do not aid or assist in the sale of real property.

These points and authorities may be combined with a form of memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel is responding to the contention that the statute of frauds bars recovery of a commission. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should discuss the facts showing that the agreement calls for the performance of personal services that do not aid or assist in the purchase or sale of personal property and therefore, is not within the statute of frauds.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the points and authorities set forth in § 31.40.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Compensation Recoverable When Agreement for Personal Services

In Owen v. National Container Corp. of Cal. (1952) 115 Cal. App. 2d 21, 251 P.2d 765 , a demurrer on the ground of the statute of frauds was sustained without leave to amend to plaintiff's third amended complaint for recovery of compensation under an express contract and for recovery of the reasonable value of services rendered. The complaint alleged that plaintiff, a real estate broker, was hired by defendants to locate a suitable industrial site, to develop surveys concerning labor conditions, transportation matters, and financial arrangements, to aid in the engineering plans for a proposed factory, and to aid in the negotiations for the construction of the plant proposed by defendants.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment of dismissal and held that the alleged agreement was not within the statute of frauds (115 Cal. App. 2d 21, 28). The court stated that, although an agreement employing a person to negotiate and assist in effecting a purchase of real property for compensation would be within the statute, a valid oral agreement could be made for special services such as those alleged by plaintiff (115 Cal. App. 2d 21, 25-27).

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Compensation Recoverable When Agreement for Personal Services

Carey v. Cusack (1966) 245 Cal. App. 2d 57, 54 Cal. Rptr. 244 , involved a suit brought by two real estate brokers to recover in quantum meruit for services rendered in subdividing property owned by defendants. Plaintiffs recovered, and defendants appealed. In affirming the judgment, the court of appeal pointed out that the trial court properly concluded that the statute of frauds was not applicable for two reasons, one of them being that the agreement was for the subdivision of property and not for the sale of the property (245 Cal. App. 2d 57, 69) .

In Arbuckle v. Clifford F. Reid, Inc. (1931) 118 Cal. App. 272, 4 P.2d 978 , plaintiff sought recovery of compensation earned pursuant to a contract that employed plaintiff to oversee his salesmen in marketing defendant's subdivided property. Judgment was rendered for plaintiff and defendant appealed, contending in part that the statute of frauds barred recovery. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment and held that the contract was not within the statute of frauds because it contained no authorization to either purchase or sell property but simply made plaintiff the business manager for the purpose of aiding and assisting the salesmen in disposing of defendant's land (118 Cal. App. 272, 277-278) . It should be noted that Arbuckle was distinguished in Duckworth v. Schumacher (1933) 135 Cal. App. 661, 666, 27 P.2d 919 , which held that a broker assisting in the subdivision and sale of real property was actually aiding and assisting in the sale of real estate and thus, the employment contract was within the statute of frauds.

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a party's contention that the statute of frauds bars recovery of damages by a broker for inducing a breach of contract. This argument may be made when opposing the contention that the statute of frauds bars an action for damages for intentional interference with a contract because the contract is oral.

These points and authorities may be combined with a form of memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel is responding to the contention that the statute of frauds bars recovery in the action. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should discuss the facts showing that there was an oral agreement.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Damages Recoverable for Inducing Breach of Oral Contract

In Zimmerman v. Bank of America (1961) 191 Cal. App. 2d 55, 12 Cal. Rptr. 319 , plaintiff, a real estate broker, entered into oral contracts with two sets of owners of property, whereby he was employed to procure a purchaser for their property. He arranged an exchange of the two pieces of property but defendant, Bank of America, advised both sets of owners not to pay plaintiff his full commission. The full commission was not paid and plaintiff sued the bank for inducing breach of contract. Plaintiff also sued both sets of owners for conspiring with Bank of America to breach the contract, but this portion of the complaint was not involved in the appeal. A judgment of dismissal was entered after Bank of America's demurrer to the cause of action for inducing breach of contract was sustained without leave to amend.

Plaintiff appealed and the court of appeal reversed. The court held that defendant bank could not use the statute of frauds as a defense to plaintiff's action for inducing breach of contract (191 Cal. App. 2d 55, 61) . The court reasoned that the actionable wrong of the tort of interference with an advantageous relationship or with a contract lies in the inducement to break the contract or sever the relationship and not in the kind of contract or relationship disrupted, whether it is written or oral, enforceable or not enforceable (191 Cal. App. 2d 55, 57) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Damages Recoverable for Inducing Breach of Oral Contract

In Friedman v. Jackson (1968) 266 Cal. App. 2d 517, 72 Cal. Rptr. 129 , a real estate broker had an oral listing with a seller to obtain a purchaser. After plaintiff had initially negotiated with defendants buyers, defendants told plaintiff that they were not interested in the property. Thereafter, defendants contacted the seller, told the seller they heard about the property through a party other than plaintiff, and consummated a sale. Plaintiff sued the buyers and the trial court granted judgment on the pleadings in favor of defendants. The trial court apparently relied on prior case law that did not actually reach the issue of whether or not purchasers who induced a seller to breach an oral commission contract were liable to the broker. In reversing, however, the court of appeal pointed out that the buyer was ignorant of defendants' fraudulent conduct and thus, a cause of action for inducing breach of contract would lie (266 Cal. App. 2d 517, 523) . The court quoted from Zimmerman v. Bank of America (1961) 191 Cal. App. 2d 55, 12 Cal. Rptr. 319 (discussed in § 31.60[3][a]), in determining that the oral contract would support a cause of action in tort for interference (266 Cal. App. 2d 517, 520) .

In Golden v. Anderson (1967) 256 Cal. App. 2d 714, 64 Cal. Rptr. 404 , plaintiff real estate broker sued Forest Lawn Company, three connected corporations, and various individual officers and employees of Forest Lawn for interference with a contract. Plaintiff had orally agreed with the seller to list the property and was first approached by defendant Forest Lawn about purchasing the property. Thereafter, defendant Forest Lawn carried out negotiations directly with the seller through third parties and eventually bought the property. Summary judgment was granted regarding some of the defendants and the court of appeal reversed in part. The court observed that a cause of action could be stated, although the listing agreement was oral, and quoted with approval the rule from Zimmerman v. Bank of America (1961) 191 Cal. App. 2d 55, 12 Cal. Rptr. 319 (discussed in § 31.60[3][a]) (256 Cal. App. 2d 714, 719) .

§ 31.61 Opposing Contention That Statute of Frauds [Civ. Code § 1624(a)(4)] Bars Recovery of Damages--Statute Not a Defense to Action for Intentional Interference With Prospective Economic Advantage

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF BROKER IS NOT BARRED BY THE STATUTE OF FRAUDS FOR RECOVERING DAMAGES IN THIS ACTION BECAUSE THE STATUTE OF FRAUDS IS NOT A DEFENSE TO AN ACTION FOR INTENTIONAL INTERFERENCE WITH A PROSPECTIVE ECONOMIC ADVANTAGE.

Recovery for Interference With a Prospective Economic Advantage Not Barred. A broker is not barred by the statute of frauds from recovering damages for intentional interference with a prospective economic advantage when there is no written agreement employing the broker (*Buckaloo v. [a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a party's contention that the statute of frauds bars recovery of damages for intentional interference with a prospective economic advantage. This argument may be used to oppose the contention that a broker's recovery of damages for interference with prospective economic advantage is barred because the transaction was not in writing.

This memorandum of points and authorities may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel is responding to the contention that the statute of frauds bars recovery in an action for intentional interference with a prospective economic advantage. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Recovery for Interference With a Prospective Economic Advantage Not Barred

In Buckaloo v. Johnson (1975) 14 Cal. 3d 815, 122 Cal. Rptr. 745, 537 P.2d 865 , plaintiff real estate broker brought an action for breach of implied contract and intentional interference with a prospective economic advantage against the buyers of a piece of real property, the buyers' real estate broker, and the seller. Plaintiff had an exclusive listing agreement with defendant owner of the property that expired four years prior to the actions that were the subject of the complaint. However, through this listing plaintiff had become familiar with the property and when plaintiff was approached by a representative of the buyers in response to a sign erected by the owner indicating that the property was for sale and anyone interested should contact his or her local broker, plaintiff discussed the attributes of the property as well as the purchase price. The property was eventually purchased, but not through plaintiff, and plaintiff sued. With the exception of the seller, all defendants demurred, apparently on the ground that there was no agreement complying with the writing requirements of the statute of frauds. The demurrer was sustained and the action dismissed after plaintiff refused to amend (14 Cal. 3d 815, 819, 822) . The Supreme Court reversed, regarding the cause of action for intentional interference with a prospective economic advantage, and stated that the action was a tort theory of recovery rather than contract and was based on interference with a relationship between parties irrespective of the enforceability of the underlying agreement (14 Cal. 3d 815, 822, 830) . Thus, the Court concluded that plaintiff had stated a cause of action for intentional interference with prospective advantage (14 Cal. 3d 815, 829-830) .

§ 31.80 Supporting Contention That Broker May Recover Commission--Broker Procures Ready, Willing, and Able Buyer

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF BROKER MAY RECOVER A COMMISSION BECAUSE A BROKER EARNS A COMMISSION WHEN HE/SHE PROCURES A READY, WILLING, AND ABLE BUYER WITHIN THE LIFE OF THE BROKER'S CONTRACT AND _____ [A BINDING CONTRACT IS EXECUTED or THE OPPORTUNITY TO EXECUTE A BINDING CONTRACT IS GIVEN TO THE SELLER or THE BUYER VERBALLY ACCEPTS THE SELLER'S TERMS AND OFFERS TO ENTER INTO A BINDING CONTRACT].

A. Commission Earned When Ready, Willing, and Able Buyer Procured. In the absence of any contrary agreement, a broker earns a commission when, within the life of the contract or any extension thereof, the broker has procured a person who is ready, willing, and able to purchase the property on terms satisfactory to the seller and has obtained a binding and valid contract for sale on the terms proposed by the seller, or has brought the seller and buyer together and enabled them to enter into a contract of sale, or has produced a purchaser who has verbally accepted the seller's terms and offered to enter into a written contract that embodies the seller's terms and is binding on both parties (Twogood v. Monnette (1923) 191 Cal. 103, 107, 215 P 542 ; Born v. Koop (1962) 200 Cal. App. 2d 519, 530, 19 Cal. Rptr. 379).

[Optional] C. Buyer Conclusively Presumed to Be Ready, Willing, and Able. A buyer is conclusively presumed to Moorehouse (1961) 197 Cal. App. 2d 76, 79, 17 Cal. Rptr. 28* ; Chism v. Agazzoni (1961) 195 Cal. App. 2d 189, 191, 15 Cal. Rptr. 700).

[Optional] D. Right to Commission Not Defeated by Unwilling or Unable Seller. If a ready, willing, and able buyer has been procured by a broker, a broker's right to a commission accrues when the contract of sale is executed, or when the opportunity to make a contract is given the seller, and the broker is entitled to a commission although the seller is unable or unwilling to complete the sale (Twogood v. Monnette (1923) 191 Cal. 103, 107, 215 P. 542 ; Seck v. Foulks (1972) 25 Cal. App. 3d 556, 573, 102 Cal. Rptr. 170).

Cooperating Broker Has Standing to Recover Commission From Seller. A cooperating broker who procured a ready, willing, and able buyer has standing to sue the seller for an unpaid commission, when the listing agreement authorized the listing agent to cooperate with other brokers and to divide any commission due under the agreement with them; the listing agent entered into a written agreement with the cooperating broker providing that the commission would be divided if the cooperating broker procured a buyer for the property; and the language of the listing agreement was sufficient to authorize the listing broker to appoint subagents who could bind the principal, thus making the seller directly responsible for the commission (Steve Schmidt & Co. v. Berry (1986) 183 Cal. App. 3d 1299, 1311-1313, 228 Cal. Rptr. 689).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that a broker may recover a commission. This argument may be made when the broker has procured a ready, willing, and able buyer and a contract of sale is entered into, or the buyer and seller are given the opportunity to enter into a binding contract, or the buyer has verbally accepted the seller's terms and offered to enter into a binding contract.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the broker's right to a commission. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 31.102 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Commission Earned When Ready, Willing, and Able Buyer Procured

In Twogood v. Monnette (1923) 191 Cal. 103, 215 P. 542 , defendant owner of a majority of stock in an oil company, together with his family, agreed to pay plaintiff a commission if plaintiff procured a purchaser of the stock. Plaintiff presented a prospective purchaser to defendant and after negotiations concerning the purchase price and terms of payment, defendant and the prospective purchaser came to an agreement. They later met and agreed on all terms of the sale and agreed to have these terms put in writing. A contract of sale was drawn up but defendant refused to sign, indicating that the minority stockholders had agreed to buy the stock. Plaintiff sued to recover his commission, judgment was rendered for plaintiff, and defendant appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment, holding that plaintiff had earned his commission (191 Cal. 103, 109) . The Court stated that it is well established that in the absence of any specific agreement to the contrary, a broker employed to sell real or personal property earns a commission when, within the life of the contract or any extension thereof, the broker procures a person who is ready, willing, and able to purchase the property on terms satisfactory to the seller. Additionally, the broker must obtain a binding and valid contract for a sale on the terms proposed by the seller, or bring the seller and buyer together and thus enable them to enter into a contract of sale, or produce such a purchaser who has verbally accepted the seller's terms and offered to enter into a written contract that embodies the seller's terms and is binding on both parties (191 Cal. 103, 107) .

In Born v. Koop (1962) 200 Cal. App. 2d 519, 19 Cal. Rptr. 379 , defendant gave plaintiff, a real estate broker, a written listing agreement for the sale of defendant's property that specified the terms and conditions of the sale. Plaintiff obtained a proposed purchaser who executed a deposit receipt that contained the proposed buyer's terms. The sale never went through and plaintiff brought an action for a commission. Although the terms of the listing agreement and deposit receipt were different, the trial court held that plaintiff had earned his commission by producing a ready, willing, and able buyer and that defendant had waived any objections to the differences.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment, holding that the terms of the deposit receipt were materially different from the listing agreement and that defendant had not waived these differences. Accordingly, plaintiff had not earned his commission (200 Cal. App. 2d 519, 533) . The court quoted Twogood v. Monnette (1923) 191 Cal. 103, 215 P. 542 (discussed above), as setting out the rule governing the right to a commission. The court in Born stated that a broker employed to sell real or personal property earns a commission when, within the life of the contract or any extension thereof, the broker produces a person who is ready, willing, and able to purchase the property on terms satisfactory to the seller. Additionally, the broker must obtain a binding and valid contract for a sale on the terms proposed by the seller, bring the seller and buyer together and thus enable them to enter into a contract of sale, or produce such a purchaser who has verbally accepted the seller's terms and offered to enter into a written contract that embodies the seller's terms and is binding on both parties (200 Cal. App. 2d 519, 530) .

[b] Commission Recoverable Although Terms of Sale Different From Listing Agreement

The facts and procedural background of Seck v. Foulks (1972) 25 Cal. App. 3d 556, 102 Cal. Rptr. 170 , are discussed in § 31.80[3][d]. In Seck the court of appeal reversed a judgment against plaintiff real estate broker in an action for a commission earned in procuring a purchaser. The purchase agreement submitted by the purchaser differed from the listing agreement but the parties later met and came to a verbal agreement as to the terms of the sale. In reversing the trial court's holding that plaintiff had not earned his commission, the court of appeal relied on Levy v. Wolf (1905) 2 Cal. App. 491, 84 P. 313 (discussed in § 31.106[4][a]). The court stated that it is well established that a change in the terms of a listing agreement becomes, on ratification by the seller, a part of the original contract, the compensation fixed in the original contract governs, and the broker is entitled to recover in accordance therewith (25 Cal. App. 3d 556, 573) .

[c] Buyer Conclusively Presumed to Be Ready, Willing, and Able

In Cardoza v. Moorehouse (1961) 197 Cal. App. 2d 76, 17 Cal. Rptr. 28 , plaintiff, a real estate broker, brought an action to recover a commission for procuring a ready, willing, and able buyer of defendant's property. Plaintiff procured a buyer and the buyer and defendant entered into a deposit receipt agreement for the sale of the property but the buyer subsequently defaulted. The trial court granted judgment for plaintiff and defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment and stated that a broker earns a commission when the vendee and vendor execute a binding agreement between them on the terms provided in the broker's contract of employment and the vendee is ready, willing, and able to perform in the prescribed terms. Relying on prior law, including Malmstedt v. Stillwell (1930) 110 Cal. App. 393, 294 P. 41 (discussed in § 31.80[4][c]), the court further stated that the readiness, willingness, and ability of the buyer is conclusively presumed, in a suit by a broker to recover a commission, on proof that the vendor had entered into a valid contract of purchase and sale with the vendee (197 Cal. App. 2d 76, 78-79) .

In Chism v. Agazzoni (1961) 195 Cal. App. 2d 189, 15 Cal. Rptr. 700 , the court of appeal affirmed a judgment for plaintiffs in an action to recover a broker's commission earned in procuring a buyer of defendants' property (195 Cal. App. 2d 189, 194) . The buyers executed a written offer to buy the property and defendants executed a counter offer that was accepted by the buyers. However, defendants refused to open an escrow. Relying on prior case law, including Malmstedt v. Stillwell (1930) 110 Cal. App. 393, 294 P. 41 (discussed in § 31.80[4][c]), the court stated that the readiness, willingness, and ability of the vendee is conclusively presumed, in a suit by a broker to recover a commission, on proof that the vendor has entered into a valid contract of purchase and sale with the vendee (195 Cal. App. 2d 189, 191) .

[d] Right to Commission Not Defeated by Unwilling or Unable Seller

The facts and procedural background of Twogood v. Monnette (1923) 191 Cal. 103, 215 P. 542 , are discussed in § 31.80[3][a]. The Supreme Court affirmed a judgment in favor of plaintiff and stated that when the broker procures a ready, willing, and able buyer, the broker's right to a commission accrues when the contract of sale is executed or when the opportunity to make such a contract is given. The Court noted that the broker becomes entitled to a commission even though the seller is unable or unwilling to complete the sale (191 Cal. 103, 107)

In Seck v. Foulks (1972) 25 Cal. App. 3d 556, 102 Cal. Rptr. 170 , plaintiff, a real estate broker, brought an action to recover a commission earned in procuring a purchaser for defendant's property. Plaintiff procured a purchaser and submitted a purchase agreement to defendant, who rejected it because the purchase agreement did not conform to the listing agreement. Thereafter, attorneys for both defendant and the proposed purchaser met and came up with a proposed agreement. Later, there was a final meeting at which both parties verbally agreed to the sale. After the meeting, defendant asked that plaintiff and a cobroker take their commission on an installment basis. Plaintiff refused to do so and the deal never went through. The trial court rendered judgment for defendant, holding that the demand that plaintiff take his commission out in installments was a condition to the sale that was never met and that the offer by the purchasers differed from the terms of the listing agreement.

The court of appeal reversed and held that plaintiff had produced a ready, willing, and able purchaser who had verbally accepted the seller's terms and had offered to enter into a written contract embodying those terms, which was binding on the seller. Further, the court held that plaintiff's entitlement to the commission was fixed prior to the time defendant imposed the condition that plaintiff take his commission on an installment basis. The court stated that a broker's right to a commission accrues when the contract of sale is executed, or when the opportunity to make such a contract is given to the seller, and the broker becomes entitled to the commission even though the seller is unwilling or unable to complete the sale (25 Cal. App. 3d 556, 573-574) .

[e] Cooperating Broker Has Standing to Recover Commission From Seller

In Steve Schmidt & Co. v. Berry (1986) 183 Cal. App. 3d 1299, 228 Cal. Rptr. 689 , plaintiff was the cooperating broker and defendant was the seller of the property. Defendant had entered into an exclusive listing agreement with a broker to sell the property. That listing broker entered into a written agreement with plaintiff stating that plaintiff would be paid a commission if it found a buyer for the property on certain terms and conditions. Plaintiff, acting individually and not on behalf of his company, offered to buy the property on the exact terms of the original listing agreement. Defendant refused to sell the property on those terms. Plaintiff then sued defendant for its commission. The trial court granted summary judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court held that plaintiff was entitled to a commission because it had produced a ready, willing, and able buyer (183 Cal. App. 3d 1299, 1309-1311) . The court then concluded that plaintiff, as the cooperating broker, had standing to sue defendant for a commission. The listing agreement provided that defendant authorized the listing agent to cooperate with other brokers and to divide any commission due under the agreement (183 Cal. App. 3d 1299, 1311) . The listing agent had entered into a written agreement with plaintiff providing for a division of the commission if plaintiff procured a buyer for the property. The court held that the language of the listing agreement was sufficient to authorize the listing broker to appoint subagents who could bind the principal, thus making defendant (the principal) directly responsible for the commission (183 Cal. App. 3d 1299, 1311) .

In addition to the direct contract theory, the court also held that defendant could be held liable on a third-party beneficiary theory because plaintiff was a member of a class that was intended to be directly benefitted by defendant's promise to pay a commission (183 Cal. App. 3d 1299, 1313) .

Steve Schmidt & Co. v. Berry was distinguished in Colbough v. Hartline (1994) 29 Cal. App. 4th 1516 . In that case, plaintiffs sued the sellers of real property to recover a commission allegedly due plaintiffs as cooperating brokers who were the procuring cause of the sale of the property. The trial court granted defendants' motion for a nonsuit, and plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court held that plaintiffs could not bring an action against the sellers because the listing broker had only been authorized to cooperate with subagents, not to contract to divide the commission with cooperating brokers; there was no written agreement between the listing broker and the cooperating broker; and the full commission had been paid to the listing agent (29 Cal. App. 4th 1516, 1523-1524) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Commission Earned When Ready, Willing, and Able Buyer Procured

In Richardson v. Walter Land Co. (1953) 118 Cal. App. 2d 459, 258 P.2d 42 , the court of appeal affirmed a judgment in favor of a real estate broker in an action for a commission in connection with a loan transaction. Plaintiff had obtained a loan for defendant on the pledge of defendant's land and some stocks. An escrow agreement was drawn up but defendant refused to go through with the transaction. The court stated that plaintiff's right to a commission in a loan transaction was governed by the rule set forth in Twogood v. Monnette (1923) 191 Cal. 103, 107, 215 P. 542 (discussed in § 31.80[3][a]) (118 Cal. App. 2d 459, 463) .

[b] Commission Recoverable Although Terms of Sale Different From Listing Agreement

In Johnson v. Rahlves (1931) 114 Cal. App. 319 , the court of appeal affirmed a judgment in favor of plaintiff, a real estate broker, in an action for a commission earned in connection with the sale of defendant's property. Plaintiff and defendant entered into an exclusive listing agreement for the sale of defendant's property for $9,500. Later, defendant and the purchaser agreed on a lower price. Defendant contended on appeal that plaintiff was not entitled to a commission because the selling price was less than the listing price. The court held that plaintiff was entitled to a commission, and stated that the appeal could be disposed of on the authority of prior case law, including Levy v. Wolf (1905) 2 Cal. App. 491, 84 P 313 (discussed below) (114 Cal. App. 319, 320) .

In Levy v. Wolf (1905) 2 Cal. App. 491, 84 P. 313 , the court of appeal affirmed a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action to recover a commission. Plaintiff was given an exclusive right to sell listing by defendant for five days. Plaintiff found a buyer and communicated the offer to defendant on the fifth day. The offer was less than the price in the listing but defendant agreed to accept. Thereafter, defendant sold the property through another broker to the purchaser procured by plaintiff. In holding that plaintiff was entitled to a commission, the court stated that a departure by a real estate broker from the terms of his or her authority in effecting a sale becomes, on ratification by the principal, a part of the original contract, the compensation fixed therein governs, and the broker is entitled to a commission (2 Cal. App. 491, 494) .

[c] Buyer Conclusively Presumed to Be Ready, Willing, and Able

In Malmstedt v. Stillwell (1930) 110 Cal. App. 393, 294 P. 41 , plaintiffs, real estate brokers, brought an action for the recovery of a commission in connection with the sale of defendant's cafeteria. Plaintiffs procured a buyer and the property was sold. The trial court rendered judgment for plaintiffs and defendant appealed, contending, in part, that the finding that plaintiffs procured a ready, willing, and able buyer within the life of the employment contract was unsupported by the evidence. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment and stated that the execution by the owner of a contract of sale is conclusive proof that the owner is satisfied with the qualifications of the purchaser and the purchaser's ability to carry out the terms of the contract (110 Cal. App. 393, 398-399) .

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF BROKER MAY RECOVER A COMMISSION UNDER THE GENERAL LISTING AGREEMENT, ALTHOUGH THE SALE WAS NOT MADE THROUGH PLAINTIFF, BECAUSE HE/SHE WAS THE PROCURING CAUSE OF THE SALE.

A. Commission Recoverable When Broker Procuring Cause Under General Listing. A broker under a general listing is entitled to a commission when the broker was the procuring cause of a sale that was made without going through the broker (Oaks v. Brahs (1955) 132 Cal. App. 2d 182, 184, 281 P.2d 562).

B. Broker Procuring Cause When Broker Creates Interest That Results in Sale. A broker is a procuring cause when the broker creates an interest in the buyer's mind that becomes a motivating force causing the buyer to act and that continues without cessation until it brings about the consummation of the sale (Oaks v. Brahs (1955) 132 Cal. App. 2d 182, 184, 281 P.2d 562).

This argument may be used when the property was listed with the broker under a general listing agreement and the broker was the procuring cause of a sale made by the owner personally or through another broker.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the broker's right to a commission. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the facts showing that the listing agreement was a general listing, the property was sold by the owner personally or through another broker, and the broker was the procuring cause of the sale.

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 31.96 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Commission Recoverable When Broker Procuring Cause Under General Listing

In Oaks v. Brahs (1955) 132 Cal. App. 2d 182, 281 P.2d 562 , plaintiff, a real estate broker, brought an action to recover a commission under a general listing agreement providing that plaintiff was entitled to a commission if plaintiff succeeded in making a sale of defendants' ranch. Plaintiff contacted the eventual purchaser of the property, who plaintiff knew was interested in acquiring a ranch, and told him about the property. After plaintiff contacted the purchaser numerous times and requested that he look at the property, the purchaser looked at the property and a sale was consummated by the purchaser and defendants without going through plaintiff broker. The trial court rendered judgment for plaintiff and defendants appealed. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment and held that the evidence was sufficient to justify the finding that plaintiff was the procuring cause of the sale and thus entitled to a commission (132 Cal. App. 2d 182, 184) .

[b] Broker Procuring Cause When Broker Creates Interest That Results in Sale

The facts and procedural background of Oaks v. Brahs (1955) 132 Cal. App. 2d 182, 281 P.2d 562 , are discussed in § 31.81[3][a]. In Oaks, plaintiff broker, after obtaining a listing from defendant owners, told the eventual purchaser about the property. The purchaser, after being told about the property, looked at the property and talked to defendants. Thereafter, he bought it without going through plaintiff. The trial court granted judgment for plaintiff, holding that plaintiff was the procuring cause of the sale. The court of appeal affirmed (132 Cal. App. 2d 182, 185) . The court quoted the trial court's definition of procuring cause as a condition or interest created in another person's mind that becomes a motivating force that causes the person to act, and the motivating force continues without cessation until it brings about the consummation of the act. The court noted that the person who created such interest in the other person's mind that resulted in the act is said to be the procuring cause of the act (132 Cal. App. 2d 182, 184) .

[a] Commission Recoverable When Broker Procuring Cause Under General Listing

The facts and procedural background of Nelson v. Mayer (1954) 122 Cal. App. 2d 438, 265 P.2d 52 , are discussed in § 31.96[3][a]. In Nelson, the court affirmed a judgment in favor of defendant owner in an action brought by plaintiff under a general listing. The property was sold through another broker and the court stated that plaintiff could recover if the evidence disclosed that plaintiff's efforts were the procuring cause of the sale (122 Cal. App. 2d 438, 445) .

PLAINTIFF BROKER MAY RECOVER A COMMISSION BECAUSE A BROKER IS ENTITLED TO A COMMISSION WHEN THE PROPERTY IS SOLD THROUGH ANOTHER BROKER DURING THE TERM OF AN EXCLUSIVE AGENCY AGREEMENT.

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

Commission Recoverable When Property Sold During the Term of Exclusive Agency. A broker is entitled to a commission under an exclusive agency agreement, whether or not he or she produced a buyer or was the procuring cause of a sale, when the owner of the property sells it through another broker during the term of the agreement (Lowe v. Loyd (1949) 93 Cal. App. 2d 684, 685-687, 209 P.2d 851).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that a broker may recover a commission. The argument may be used when the property is listed with the broker under an exclusive agency agreement and the owner sells the property through another broker during the term of the agreement. There are two types of exclusive broker's agreements: an exclusive agency agreement and an exclusive right-to-sell agreement. Under an exclusive agency agreement, the owner may not sell the property through another broker during the term of the agreement without becoming liable to the broker for a commission but is free to sell the property personally through his or her own unaided efforts. Under an exclusive right-to-sell agreement, however, the owner may not sell the property either personally or through another broker during the term of the agreement without becoming liable to the broker for a commission [see E. A. Strout Western Realty v. Gregoire (1950) 101 Cal. App. 2d 512, 517-518, 225 P.2d 585] .

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the broker's right to a commission. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 31.100 may be used to oppose the contention supported by this form of points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Commission Recoverable When Property Sold During the Term of Exclusive Agency

In Lowe v. Loyd (1949) 93 Cal. App. 2d 684, 209 P.2d 851 , plaintiff, a real estate broker, brought an action for breach of an exclusive agency agreement when defendants consummated an exchange of the property through another broker during the term of the agreement. The trial court granted judgment for plaintiff and defendants appealed. The court stated that it was immaterial that plaintiff did not procure a ready, willing, and able purchaser of the property or bring about the exchange, because an agent may recover damages for the breach of an exclusive agency contract by the principal when the breach consists of selling the property before the agreement has expired (93 Cal. App. 2d 684, 686) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Commission Recoverable When Property Sold During the Term of Exclusive Agency

The facts and procedural background of Carlsen v. Zane (1968) 261 Cal. App. 2d 399, 67 Cal. Rptr. 747 , are discussed in § 31.83[3][a]. In Carlsen, the court of appeal noted the distinction between an exclusive agency agreement and an exclusive right-to-sell agreement. The court stated that there are two types of exclusive listings and that an exclusive agency agreement is interpreted as prohibiting the owner from selling the property through the agency of another broker during the listing period, but the owner may sell the property through his or her own efforts (261 Cal. App. 2d 399, 401-402) .

The facts and procedural background of E. A. Strout Western Realty v. Gregoire (1950) 101 Cal. App. 2d 512, 225 P.2d 585 , are discussed in § 31.101[3][a]. In Gregoire, the court of appeal, in discussing the distinction between an exclusive agency agreement and an exclusive right-to-sell agreement, quoted from prior case law and stated that in an exclusive agency agreement the owner has the right to sell the property by his or her own unaided efforts without becoming liable to the broker for a commission, and that the only effect of such a contract is to prevent the owner from placing the property in the hands of another agent (101 Cal. App. 2d 512, 516) . The court held that the agency agreement was not an exclusive right to sell because this was not expressly stated in the agreement and such an interpretation was not implied by necessity (101 Cal. App. 2d 512, 518) . The court concluded that because the agreement was not an exclusive right to sell and defendant was free to sell the property through his own efforts, defendant was not liable to plaintiff for a commission (101 Cal. App. 2d 512, 519) .

PLAINTIFF BROKER IS ENTITLED TO A COMMISSION BECAUSE, DURING THE TERM OF THE EXCLUSIVE RIGHT-TO-SELL AGREEMENT, THE PROPERTY WAS SOLD BY _____ [THE OWNER PERSONALLY or THROUGH ANOTHER BROKER].

A. Commission Recoverable When Property Sold by Another. A broker is entitled to a commission under an exclusive right-to-sell agreement, whether or not the broker produced a ready, willing, and able buyer or was the procuring cause of a sale, when the property is sold during the term of the agreement by the owner personally or through another broker (Civ. Vasquez (1996) 41 Cal. App. 4th 888, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that a broker is entitled to a commission because the property was listed with the broker under an exclusive right-to-sell agreement and the property was sold by the owner personally or through another broker during the term of the agreement. The second (optional) authority paragraph may be used when the seller terminated the agreement prior to its expiration and to the sale of the property during the original listing term.

This form may be combined with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that a broker is entitled to a commission under an exclusive right to sell. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should refer to the allegations in the complaint that establish that the listing agreement was an exclusive right-to-sell agreement and that a sale by another person took place during the original listing term. Counsel can then argue the broker is entitled to a commission based on the authorities set forth above.

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 31.101 may be used to oppose the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Commission Recoverable When Property Sold by Owner or Through Different Broker

Civ. Code § 1086(f)(1) provides in part that an "exclusive right to sell listing" is a listing under which the owner grants to an agent, for a specified period of time, the exclusive right to sell or to find or obtain a buyer for the property, and the agent is entitled to the agreed compensation if during that period of time the property is sold, no matter who effected the sale.

In Fleming v. Dolfin (1931) 214 Cal. 269 , plaintiff real estate brokers were given an exclusive right to sell subject to a 20-day cancellation notice by defendant's agent. Prior to the notice of termination and during the term of the listing, an escrow was opened for the sale of the property and the property was eventually sold through another agent. Plaintiffs sued both the agent and the principal and judgment was rendered against plaintiffs. Plaintiffs appealed and the Supreme Court reversed the judgment, holding that plaintiffs were entitled to a commission because defendant principal had breached the exclusive right-to-sell agreement, thus entitling plaintiffs to the agreed commission (214 Cal. 269, 271) .

Defendant in Fleming had contended that plaintiffs could not recover a commission in the absence of showing that plaintiffs had produced a ready, willing, and able purchaser, but the Court rejected this contention. The court stated that plaintiffs were entitled to the exclusive right to sell the property during the period specified in the agreement and that the sale through another broker before the conclusion of that period destroyed plaintiffs' right and made performance by them impossible. Thus, the Court added, on defendant's breach, plaintiffs were entitled to sue for the benefits they might have received under the contract, namely, the agreed commission (214 Cal. 269, 270-271) .

In Carlsen v. Zane (1968) 261 Cal. App. 2d 399, 67 Cal. Rptr. 747 , plaintiff real estate brokers were given an exclusive right to sell defendants' 15-acre parcel of unimproved property for a period of 90 days and defendants agreed to pay a commission of 10 percent of the selling price. Within the term of the listing agreement, defendants sold 10 acres of the property to a friend. Plaintiff filed suit to recover the commission and the trial court awarded judgment to defendants, holding that plaintiffs had not used due diligence in procuring a purchaser. The court of appeal reversed and held that plaintiffs were entitled to a commission under the exclusive right to sell agreement when the owner sold the property, either personally or through another broker, and that plaintiffs were not required to have procured a ready, willing, and able purchaser on terms specified in the listing agreement in order to recover (261 Cal. App. 2d 399, 401-402) .

[b] Commission Recoverable When Property Sold by Another Following Termination of Agency But During Listing Term

In Century 21 Butler Realty, Inc. v. Vasquez (1996) 41 Cal. App. 4th 888, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1 , plaintiff real estate broker was given an exclusive authorization to sell agreement, which was scheduled to expire on March 10, 1993. In November of 1992, the sellers sent a letter to the broker terminating the listing. In February of 1993, the property was sold through another broker. Plaintiff brought an action for the commission. The trial court entered a summary judgment for defendant sellers.

The court of appeal reversed. The court initially examined the relevant provisions of Civ. Code § 1086(f)(1) (discussed in § 31.83[3][a]), and then stated that whether the broker may recover compensation depends on the terms of the particular listing contract. It noted that the listing agreement at issue provided that defendants agreed to compensate plaintiff irrespective of agency relationships if the property was sold during the term of the listing agreement by the broker or through any other person. Defendants had the right to terminate the agency relationship before the agreement expired, but doing so did not eviscerate plaintiff's right to compensation. The agreement provided that plaintiff would earn the commission if the listed property was sold during the listing term, and plaintiff earned its commission because such a sale occurred (41 Cal. App. 4th 888, 891-892) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Commission Recoverable When Property Sold by Owner or Through Different Broker

The facts and procedural background of Walter v. Libby (1945) 72 Cal. App. 2d 138, 164 P.2d 21 , are discussed in § 31.88[3][a]. In Walter, plaintiff was given an exclusive right to sell defendant's property but during the term of the agreement defendant revoked the agency and sold the property himself. The court of appeal, in affirming the judgment for plaintiff, stated that when an agent or broker is given an exclusive right to sell, as distinguished from an exclusive agency in which the owner retains the right to sell the property, the broker is entitled to compensation for a sale made by the principal and it is immaterial that the broker is not the procuring cause thereof (72 Cal. App. 2d 138, 141-142) .

In Wright v. Vernon (1947) 81 Cal. App. 2d 346, 183 P.2d 908 , the court of appeal affirmed a judgment for plaintiff for breach of an exclusive right-to-sell agreement when, during the term of the agreement, defendant exchanged the property through another broker. The court stated that the authorities in California follow the rule that an agency contract carries the implication that the owner reserves the right to sell without obligation to pay the stipulated commission to the broker but the rule is contrary when the contract gives the agent the exclusive right to sell and the owner sells through another agent. The court stated that the action of the owner in dealing through another broker was a plain breach of the conditions of the contract and fully supports the judgment for damages (81 Cal. App. 2d 346, 347) .

§ 31.84 Supporting Contention That Broker May Recover Commission--Recovery Permitted When Exclusive Right-to-Sell Contract Contains Withdraw-From-Sale Clause

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF BROKER MAY RECOVER A COMMISSION UNDER THE WITHDRAW-FROM-SALE CLAUSE CONTAINED IN THE EXCLUSIVE RIGHT-TO-SELL LISTING AGREEMENT BECAUSE THE PROPERTY WAS _____ [specify act making property unmarketable, e.g., WITHDRAWN FROM SALE] BY DEFENDANT OWNER AND BECAUSE SUCH CLAUSE IS ENFORCEABLE AND IS NOT VOID AS AN ILLEGAL PENALTY.

Commission Recoverable Under Withdraw-From-Sale Clause. A broker is entitled to recover a commission under a withdraw-from-sale clause contained in an exclusive right-to-sell listing agreement when the owner withdraws the property from sale prior to expiration of the listing agreement because such a clause is enforceable and is not an unlawful penalty (Blank v. Borden (1974) 11 Cal. 3d 963, 969-973, 115 Cal. Rptr. 31, 524 P.2d 127).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that a broker is entitled to recover a commission. The argument may be used when recovery is sought under a withdraw-from-sale clause in an exclusive right-to-sell listing agreement. Generally, a withdraw-from-sale clause provides that if the property is withdrawn from sale, transferred, conveyed, or leased without the consent of the listing broker, or is otherwise made unmarketable by the owner's voluntary act, the broker would receive a commission based on the sale price of the property [see Blank v. Borden (1974) 11 Cal. 3d 963, 966 n.1, 115 Cal. Rptr. 31, 524 P.2d 127] .

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of a broker's recovery of a commission. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Commission Recoverable Under Withdraw-From-Sale Clause

In Blank v. Borden (1974) 11 Cal. 3d 963, 115 Cal. Rptr. 31, 524 P.2d 127 , defendant owner gave plaintiff broker an exclusive right-to-sell listing agreement, which provided that if the property was withdrawn from sale, transferred, conveyed, or leased without the consent of plaintiff, or otherwise made unmarketable by the owner's voluntary act, plaintiff would receive a commission of six percent of the price for the property. The property was withdrawn from sale during the term of the listing agreement and plaintiff sued to recover a commission. Judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff and defendant appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment and held that a withdraw-from-sale clause is not an unlawful liquidated damages penalty but is enforceable and that plaintiff was entitled to recover a commission (11 Cal. 3d 963, 973) . The court reasoned that a withdraw-from-sale clause is not a liquidated damages provision because a claim for compensation under the clause is not a claim for a breach of contract but a claim for indebtedness under the terms of the contract (11 Cal. 3d 963, 969-973) .

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that a broker may recover a commission. This argument may be used when the broker procures a ready, willing, and able buyer during the term of the listing agreement, but negotiations between the buyer procured by the broker and the seller continue and are finally concluded after expiration of the agreement.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the contention that a real estate broker may recover a commission. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the facts showing that a buyer was procured who was ready, willing, and able by the broker, that negotiations were ongoing at the time of expiration of the listing agreement, and that the negotiations were concluded between the buyer and the seller after the termination of the agreement.

In an appropriate case, counsel may wish to combine these points and authorities with the points and authorities set out in § 31.80.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Commission Recoverable Although Negotiations Concluded After Expiration of Agreement

In E. A. Strout Western Realty Agency, Inc. v. Lewis (1967) 255 Cal. App. 2d 254, 62 Cal. Rptr. 918 , plaintiff was given a general listing for the sale of defendants' property. The duration of the agreement was three years unless terminated sooner by defendants on 30 days' notice. Plaintiff advertised the property and was contacted by the brother and sister-in-law of the eventual buyers. Plaintiff showed and discussed the property with them and they appeared to be interested, although they were having trouble with financing. Thereafter, defendants gave plaintiff notice of cancellation of the listing and proceeded to offer the property to the same people plaintiff had found. Eventually, the property was sold to the brother and sister-in-law. The trial court found that plaintiff was the procuring cause of the sale and awarded judgment to plaintiff. Defendants appealed and the court of appeal affirmed, holding that plaintiff was the procuring cause of the sale. The court stated that it was immaterial that negotiations between the buyer and seller continued or concluded, without plaintiff's participation, after expiration of the listing agreement (255 Cal. App. 2d 254, 258-260) .

In Wilson v. Roppolo (1962) 207 Cal. App. 2d 276, 24 Cal. Rptr. 437 , plaintiff real estate broker sought recovery of a commission from the owners of property under a listing agreement that expired on July 9, 1956. During the term of the agreement, plaintiff's salesman received an inquiry from one of the eventual purchasers and discussed the property with him. Plaintiff set up an appointment for defendants to show the property to the purchaser and after it was shown, the purchaser expressed interest. Before expiration of the listing agreement, one of the defendants negotiated the sale of the property himself and told plaintiff that he had sold the property to someone "who just knocked on the door" (207 Cal. App. 2d 276, 279) . The negotiations were concluded after expiration of the listing agreement and the property was sold to the purchaser introduced by plaintiff. The trial court rendered judgment for plaintiff and defendants appealed. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment. The court held that plaintiff had procured a ready, willing, and able buyer before expiration of the listing agreement and was entitled to a commission even though negotiations between plaintiff's buyer and the seller continued and finally concluded after expiration of the agreement (207 Cal. App. 2d 276, 280-282) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Commission Recoverable Although Negotiations Concluded After Expiration of Agreement

In De La Questa v. Armstrong Holdings Co. (1920) 48 Cal. App. 487, 192 P 135 , the court of appeal reversed a judgment dismissing plaintiff's action following a demurrer to the complaint for recovery of a commission. Plaintiff was given an exclusive right and option to purchase defendants' property with a stipulation in the agreement that plaintiff would receive a commission if plaintiff procured a purchaser within the time limit of the option. Plaintiff procured a purchaser but defendants delayed closing the transaction until after expiration of the agreement and thereafter consummated the sale with plaintiff's purchaser. The court held that since a ready, willing, and able buyer had been produced, the delay in closing the transaction until after expiration of the time limit in the agreement and the fact that the final negotiations were between the buyer and seller without plaintiff's participation could not defeat plaintiff's right to a commission (48 Cal. App. 487, 493) .

PLAINTIFF BROKER MAY RECOVER A COMMISSION BECAUSE HE/SHE PROCURED A READY, WILLING, AND ABLE BUYER UNDER A GENERAL LISTING, EVEN THOUGH THE OWNER CONDUCTED THE FINAL NEGOTIATIONS AND SOLD THE PROPERTY AT A LOWER PRICE THAN THE SALES PRICE STATED IN THE LISTING AGREEMENT.

Commission Recoverable Although Broker Procures Buyer at Lower Price. If a broker procures a ready, willing, and able buyer under a general listing, the broker is entitled to recover a commission even though the purchaser was willing to pay only a lower price than that set forth in the listing agreement, and the owner cannot deprive the broker of a commission by conducting the final negotiations and selling at the lower price to the purchaser procured by the broker (Palmtag v. Danielson (1947) 30 Cal. 2d 517, 521, 183 P.2d 265).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that a broker is entitled to recover a commission. This argument may be used when the broker has procured a ready, willing, and able buyer under a general listing, but the buyer is willing to pay only a price that is lower than the sales price in the listing agreement and the owner attempts to avoid paying a commission by conducting the final negotiations personally and selling the property to the procured purchaser at a lower price without going through the broker.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the broker's right to recover a commission. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should combine these points and authorities with the points and authorities set forth in §§ 31.80 and 31.81.

[a] Commission Recoverable Although Broker Procures Buyer at Lower Price

In Palmtag v. Danielson (1947) 30 Cal. 2d 517, 183 P.2d 265 , defendant owner gave plaintiff a general listing on real property, which provided that the price was $40,000 and stated that "I will pay you 5% commission or net to me of $38,000" (30 Cal. 2d 517, 519) . Plaintiff discussed the property with the ultimate purchaser who was willing to pay $35,000 as his top price. At a meeting between the purchaser and defendant, prices were discussed but no agreement was reached. Shortly after the meeting, defendant terminated plaintiff's agency and the property was eventually sold to the buyer procured by plaintiff for $35,000. Plaintiff sued for a commission and the court found that because plaintiff had procured a buyer that was ready, willing, and able to pay the sale price of $35,000 under the general listing, plaintiff was entitled to recover a five percent commission. Defendant appealed, contending that plaintiff was not entitled to recover a commission because the contract was a net listing instead of a general listing. Under a net listing, plaintiff broker's commission would be limited to any amount that the purchaser's payment exceeded a fixed net amount that the contract specified for the owner. The Supreme Court held that the contract was not a net listing because the words "or net to me" were merely illustrative of the amount that defendant would receive if plaintiff sold the property for $40,000 (30 Cal. 2d 517, 522) . Since the contract was not a net listing, the Court held that the owner could not deprive the broker of a commission by selling at a lower price than the asking price when the broker had procured a purchaser who was willing to pay the lower sale price (30 Cal. 2d 517, 523) . The Court stated that ordinarily under a general listing, the price at which a broker is authorized to sell the property is merely an asking price to guide the broker and if the broker procures a purchaser willing to pay a lower price, the owner cannot deprive the broker of a commission by conducting the final negotiations and selling at a lower amount to the purchaser procured by the broker (30 Cal. 2d 517, 521) .

[a] Commission Recoverable Although Broker Procures Buyer at Lower Price

In Filante v. Kikendall (1955) 134 Cal. App. 2d 695, 286 P.2d 448 , the court of appeal affirmed a judgment for plaintiff in an action for a broker's commission. The asking price in the listing agreement was $110,000 and plaintiff procured a purchaser who was willing to buy for $100,000 but later became worried about a new freeway being constructed near the property. The property was finally sold at $98,000. In addition to holding that there had been a waiver of the time limitation of the contract, the court held that defendant could not deprive the broker of a commission by selling at a lower price to the purchaser who was procured by the broker. The court stated that ordinarily, the price at which a broker is authorized to sell the property is merely an asking price to guide the broker and that if the broker procures a purchaser willing to pay a lower price, the owner cannot deprive the broker of a commission by conducting the final negotiations and selling at a lower figure to the purchaser who was procured by the broker (134 Cal. App. 2d 695, 701) .

In Rutherford v. Berick (1947) 82 Cal. App. 2d 331, 186 P.2d 23 , the court of appeal affirmed a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action for a commission. The court noted that the listing agreement was not a net listing, that plaintiff was entitled to a commission when he procured a purchaser who was willing to pay a price lower than that specified in the listing agreement, and that the property was eventually sold for this lower price (82 Cal. App. 2d 331, 336) .

[EITHER]

A. Listing Agreement Signed by Only One Spouse Enforceable. A contract employing a broker to sell property jointly owned by both spouses is enforceable against the signing spouse and will support recovery of a commission although only one spouse signs the contract (*see Tamimi v. [a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that a broker may recover a commission. This argument may be used when the broker has procured a ready, willing, and able buyer but only one spouse has signed the listing agreement and/or a coowner spouse refuses to join in the conveyance of the property.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the broker's right to recover a commission. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the facts showing that the broker procured a ready, willing, and able buyer but that the listing agreement was signed by only one spouse and/or that the coowner spouse refused to join in the conveyance.

In an appropriate case counsel may wish to combine these points and authorities with the points and authorities set forth in § 31.80.

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 31.104 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Listing Agreement Signed by Only One Spouse Enforceable

In Tamimi v. Bettencourt (1966) 243 Cal. App. 2d 377, 52 Cal. Rptr. 273 , plaintiff brought an action to recover a commission under an exclusive listing, which provided that if the property was sold by the owners or by another agent during the listing period, plaintiff would be entitled to a commission. Defendants, husband and wife, jointly owned the community property but only the wife signed the listing agreement. During the term of the listing, the property was sold by the defendants. The trial court granted judgment for defendants and plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal reversed the judgment as to defendant wife, who had signed the agreement, and held that plaintiff was entitled to recover a commission from her under the listing agreement. The court noted that defendants had not pleaded that the wife's signature on the listing was conditioned on the husband also signing or that the contract was otherwise incomplete or conditional (243 Cal. App. 2d 377, 379, 380) .

[b] Right to Commission Not Defeated by Refusal of Spouse to Convey Property

In Russell v. Ramm (1927) 200 Cal. 348, 254 P. 532 , plaintiff brought an action to recover a real estate commission for procuring purchasers under an agreement signed by only defendant husband. Defendant refused to go through with the sale of the property on the ground that his wife refused to join in the sale and execution of the contract of sale. The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment of the lower courts and held that the wife's refusal to go through with the sale did not defeat the broker's right to a commission. The Court stated that when the owner of property refuses to sell to the purchaser procured by the broker on any ground other than the inability of the purchaser to purchase, the owner cannot use such ground as a defense to an action for a commission unless this ground is included as a condition in the employment agreement. Thus, the Court stated, it follows that the fact that defendant's wife refuses to join her husband in transferring the properties does not affect or impair plaintiff's right to a commission. The Court also stated that it is the general rule that the refusal of a wife to join in the conveyance of property to the proposed vendee does not, in and of itself, operate to deprive the broker of the right to compensation (200 Cal. 348, 366) .

In Dixon v. Malloy (1945) 70 Cal. App. 2d 322, 160 P.2d 896 , the court of appeal affirmed a judgment in favor of a real estate broker in an action to recover a commission. The broker contended that there was insufficient evidence to support the finding of the trial court that the real property was separate property. The court, however, stated that it was unnecessary to determine whether or not it was community property because even if the property was community property, neither the fact that the wife did not sign the agency agreement nor the fact that she refused to join in the sale of the property would avail the defendant as a defense to the action by the broker. The court reasoned that the obligation to pay the commission became fixed when the broker found a ready, willing, and able purchaser on defendant's terms (70 Cal. App. 2d 322, 329) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Right to Commission Not Defeated by Refusal of Spouse to Convey Property

In Kaufman v. Haney (1947) 80 Cal. App. 2d 249, 182 P.2d 250 , the court of appeal affirmed a judgment for plaintiff in an action against defendant husband for a commission in procuring purchasers of property owned in joint tenancy by defendant and his wife. Only defendant signed the agreement of sale and the wife refused to go through with the sale. The court held that defendant was liable for the commission and the fact that the cotenant spouse refused to join in the conveyance did not defeat the broker's right to a commission (80 Cal. App. 2d 249, 251-254) .

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that a broker may recover a commission. This argument may be used when the agreement employing the broker was revoked in bad faith for the purpose of depriving the broker of a commission.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the broker's right to recover a commission. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the facts showing that the owner revoked the agency in bad faith in order to deprive the broker of his or her commission.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Commission Recoverable When Revocation in Bad Faith

In Elms v. Merryman Fruit etc. Co. (1929) 207 Cal. 747, 279 P. 781 , plaintiff, a real estate broker, brought an action to recover a commission against defendant, the owner of timber land. Plaintiff was not given an exclusive agency but the terms of the agency contract provided that plaintiff was to receive a commission if he could produce a buyer. Plaintiff's agency was revoked by defendant after defendant became dissatisfied with plaintiff's plans for financing a sale. Thereafter, the land was sold. The trial court granted a directed verdict for defendant and plaintiff appealed, contending in part that the agency was not revoked in good faith. The Supreme Court disagreed and affirmed the judgment. The Court stated the recognized rule that revocation must be made in good faith and not for the purpose of defeating the agent's rights (207 Cal. 747, 752) .

In Walter v. Libby (1945) 72 Cal. App. 2d 138, 164 P.2d 21 , plaintiff was given an exclusive right to sell defendant's land that was to continue for a minimum period of 30 days and thereafter until cancelled by the principal. The agreement also provided that if defendant sold the land while the agency was in effect, defendant would pay a commission to plaintiff. After the listing agreement had been in effect a little over a month and plaintiff had talked to numerous purchasers, defendant cancelled the contract, stating that he wanted to wait until the trees on the property were in bloom in the hopes of getting more money. However, shortly after the cancellation, defendant sold the property. The trial court found that the termination was induced by fraud and was not effective; thus the contract was in full force and plaintiff was entitled to recover a commission. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment. The court stated that the principal may revoke the agency in accordance with the terms of the agreement, but that he or she may not do so in bad faith merely for the purpose of depriving the agent of rights that he or she would otherwise have under the contract (72 Cal. App. 2d 138, 144) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Commission Recoverable When Revocation in Bad Faith

In Heffernan v. Merrill Estate Co. (1946) 77 Cal. App. 2d 106 , the court of appeal reversed a judgment awarding plaintiff real estate broker a commission for procuring a buyer. The court held that the agency was revoked in good faith prior to performance by plaintiff and stated that in the absence of a provision in the agreement granting a specified time for performance, the owner may revoke in good faith at any time before complete performance by the broker (77 Cal. App. 2d 106, 113) .

PLAINTIFF BROKER MAY RECOVER A COMMISSION BECAUSE A BROKER IS ENTITLED TO A COMMISSION WHEN THE OWNER ARBITRARILY REFUSES TO COMPLETE THE TRANSACTION ON WHICH THE BROKER'S COMMISSION DEPENDS.

Commission Recoverable When Owner Arbitrarily Refuses to Complete Transaction. A broker is entitled to recover a commission when the transaction on which the broker's right to a commission depended was not completed due to the arbitrary refusal of the owner to perform (Collins v. Vickter Manor, Inc. (1957) 47 Cal. 2d 875, 881, 306 P.2d 783 (provision for commission in deposit receipt); *see Coulter v. These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that a broker may recover a commission. This argument may be used when the party employing the broker arbitrarily refused to complete the transaction on which the broker's commission depended.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of a broker's right to recover a commission. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Commission Recoverable When Owner Arbitrarily Refuses to Complete Transaction

In Collins v. Vickter Manor, Inc. (1957) 47 Cal. 2d 875 , plaintiff real estate brokers sought to recover a commission from defendant corporation seller and damages for wrongful interference with a contract from individual defendants. Plaintiffs' complaint alleged that the provision regarding the payment of the commission was contained in the deposit receipt signed by defendant and the buyers procured by plaintiffs, and that the buyers agreed to the sale subject to the seller furnishing a satisfactory soil compaction report and a contour map subject to the buyers' approval. The complaint further alleged that these documents were never furnished by the seller, that the buyers were at all times ready, willing, and able to perform, and that defendant seller cancelled the escrow. A demurrer to plaintiffs' second amended complaint was sustained without leave to amend and plaintiffs appealed. The Supreme Court reversed the judgment of dismissal. The Court recognized the rule that when the only provision for payment of a commission is contained in an agreement between the buyer and seller, a broker is entitled to the commission only when the underlying transaction is completed. The Court also stated that the issue of whether or not the deposit receipt required consummation of the transaction before the right to a commission arose was unnecessary to decide because the complaint disclosed that the buyers did everything that the agreement required of them and that the consummation of the transaction was prevented solely by the arbitrary refusal of defendant corporation and its officers to proceed. Thus, the court stated that in these circumstances, defendants would not be allowed to take advantage of their own remissness to defeat plaintiffs' recovery (47 Cal. 2d 875, 881) .

In Coulter v. Howard (1927) 203 Cal. 17, 262 P 751 , plaintiff, a real estate broker, brought an action to recover a commission. The provision for the payment of plaintiff's commission was contained in the escrow instructions and provided that plaintiff was to be paid a commission of five percent at the close of escrow. After a mix-up in the amount of the deposit to be paid into escrow, the purchaser deposited the correct amount. However, on the same day that the check was received in escrow, defendant attempted to cancel the escrow, having already contracted the day before to sell the property to someone else. The trial court rendered judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court reversed the judgment and stated that if the escrow instructions provided for payment at the close of escrow, the failure of escrow to close would preclude a payment of the commission if defendant were free from fault. The Court noted that in this case, however, defendant repudiated the transaction and the commission was due at the date of repudiation. The Court stated that the law requires of a vendor good faith and the performing of no intentional act to discourage, embarrass, or prevent the completion of the purchase (203 Cal. 17, 23) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Commission Recoverable When Owner Arbitrarily Refuses to Complete Transaction

In Stoll v. Mallory (1959) 173 Cal. App. 2d 694, 343 P.2d 970 , the court of appeal affirmed a judgment in favor of plaintiff, a real estate broker, for services rendered in the sale of a radio station. The court did not agree with defendants' contention that the agreement for the commission depended on completion of the sale, which never occurred. The court stated that even if this were so, plaintiff would be entitled to a commission because of defendants' arbitrary rescission of the agreement. The court stated that when a broker is not to receive a commission until consummation of a final agreement between the seller and the buyer, the agent who has done everything required in bringing them together is entitled to a commission when the failure to consummate the sale is due to the seller's arbitrary refusal to proceed with the sale (173 Cal. App. 2d 694, 698) .

These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Commission Recoverable When Duty of Good Faith Breached

In Nystrom v. First Nat. Bank of Fresno (1978) 81 Cal. App. 3d 759, 146 Cal. Rptr. 711 , plaintiff, a real estate broker, brought an action for breach of contract against defendant bank that was in possession of rental property during foreclosure proceedings after default on a loan made by defendant. Defendant and plaintiff entered into an agreement whereby plaintiff was to collect rents on the property and if defendant obtained a deed to the property through a trustee's sale, plaintiff would have an exclusive listing on the property. An offer of purchase was submitted by plaintiff but rejected by defendant. Thereafter, defendant obtained a deed in lieu of foreclosure and sold the property through another broker. The trial court granted a summary judgment for defendant on the ground that the exclusive listing was illegal and unenforceable under Bus. & Prof. Code § 10176(f) because it contained no definite termination date. The court of appeal reversed, holding that the agreement was not illegal and that the promise to give an exclusive listing did not become inoperable because defendant obtained a deed in lieu of foreclosure as opposed to a trustee's deed on foreclosure (81 Cal. App. 3d 759, 766-768) . The court stated that defendant could not prevent or make impossible the performance of a condition, as defendant attempted here, and escape liability. The court stated that there is an implied covenant in every contract by each party not to do anything that will deprive the other parties thereto of the benefits of the contract and that this covenant not only imposes on each contracting party the duty to refrain from doing anything that would render performance of the contract impossible by any act of his or her own, but also the duty to do everything that the contract presupposes that he or she will do to accomplish its purpose (81 Cal. App. 3d 759, 767) .

In Colwell Co. v. Hubert (1967) 248 Cal. App. 2d 567, 56 Cal. Rptr. 753 , plaintiff was employed by defendant to procure a lease from a food market chain for a shopping center that defendant was in the process of developing. Plaintiff procured a prospective tenant and drew up a proposed lease that defendant and his attorney agreed to in whole but in which they wanted to make a few changes. Defendant agreed to supply these changes to plaintiff but never did and terminated the agency. Later, defendant entered into a lease with the same tenant that plaintiff had procured. Plaintiff sued for a commission and the trial court granted judgment for plaintiff in the amount of the commission agreed on, holding that defendant had acted in bad faith and that plaintiff was the procuring cause of the lease. On a motion for a new trial, the judgment was reduced in amount. Defendant appealed from the judgment and plaintiff cross appealed from the reduction. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, holding that defendant had acted in bad faith and prevented the performance of the agency agreement by failing to submit the proposed objections as promised, thereby making plaintiff's further performance impossible (248 Cal. App. 2d 567, 575-578) . The court stated that in every contract there is an implied covenant of good faith that neither party will do anything that will prevent the other party from realizing the fruits of the contract and that the covenant not only imposes on each party the duty to refrain from doing anything that would render performance of the contract impossible but also the duty to do everything that the contract presupposes the party to do (248 Cal. App. 2d 567, 575) .

PLAINTIFF BROKER MAY RECOVER A COMMISSION BECAUSE AN EXCLUSIVE AGREEMENT WITH NO DEFINITE TERMINATION DATE IS NOT VOID WHEN THE TRANSACTION IS COMPLETED, THERE IS NO MORAL TURPITUDE INVOLVED, PLAINTIFF IS NOT THE ONE GUILTY OF THE GREATEST MORAL FAULT, AND UNJUST ENRICHMENT WOULD RESULT AT PLAINTIFF'S EXPENSE IF RECOVERY OF A COMMISSION IS DENIED.

Exclusive Agreement Without Definite Termination Date Not Void Under Certain Circumstances. The rule under Section 10176(f) of the Business and Professions Code that a broker's agreement is void for lack of a definite termination date should not apply to prevent a broker's recovery of a commission when the public cannot be protected because the transaction has been consummated, no serious moral turpitude is involved, the broker is not the one guilty of the greatest moral fault, and the party urging its unenforceability will be unjustly enriched at the expense of the broker (Babcock v. Houston (1973) 33 Cal. App. 3d 858, 862-863, 109 Cal. Rptr. 454).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that a broker may recover a commission. This argument may be used when recovery is sought pursuant to an exclusive agency agreement or exclusive right-to-sell agreement with no definite termination date when the agreement has been fully performed, there is no serious moral turpitude, the party contending that it is void is the one guilty of the greatest moral fault, and unjust enrichment would result at the expense of the broker if the agreement were not enforced.

These points and authorities may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of a broker's right to a commission. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the facts showing that (1) the transaction in which the services were performed and for which compensation is sought has been completed, (2) there is no serious moral turpitude involved, that is, the broker was unaware that he or she was violating Bus. & Prof. Code § 10176(f), (3) the party urging the unenforceability of the agreement is the one guilty of the greatest moral fault, that is, the broker has in good faith performed the agreement fully and the party urging the unenforceability of the agreement unjustifiedly refuses to perform, and (4) unjust enrichment would result to the party urging the unenforceability of the agreement at the expense of the broker.

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 31.106 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Exclusive Agreement Without Definite Termination Date Not Void Under Certain Circumstances

In Babcock v. Houston (1973) 33 Cal. App. 3d 858, 109 Cal. Rptr. 454 , plaintiff real estate brokers entered into an agreement with one of the individual defendants, which gave plaintiffs an exclusive right to sell lots in a tract of real property owned by defendants, husband and wife, but later acquired by a corporation in which the individual defendants were the sole stockholders. The agreement lacked a definite termination date. Defendants terminated the services of plaintiffs at the time that seven lots were in escrow and the escrow instructions contained written authorizations signed by defendant corporation to pay commissions on the sale. An eighth lot was not in escrow but a buyer had been found. Plaintiffs sought commissions on all lots and the trial court awarded judgment for plaintiffs and against the corporation on the seven lots in escrow, relying on the escrow instructions as sufficient to support the actions for commissions. The court denied recovery for plaintiffs against the individual defendants on the ground that the only authorization binding the individual was the exclusive agency agreement with no termination date, which was void. Recovery on the eighth lot was also denied. The court of appeal reversed as to the judgment that the individual husband defendant was not liable and held that the exclusive agreement was enforceable despite Bus. & Prof. Code § 10176(f) and that the agreement supported the action for commissions against the individual defendant. The court relied on prior case law, including Wilson v. Stearns (1954) 123 Cal. App. 2d 472, 267 P.2d 59 , and Nichols v. Boswell-Alliance Constr. Corp. (1960) 181 Cal. App. 2d 584 (discussed in § 31.91[4][a]). The court stated that the rule that courts will not lend aid in enforcement of an illegal contract is subject to exception when the public cannot be protected because the transaction has been completed, no serious moral turpitude is involved, defendant is the one guilty of the greatest moral fault, and to apply the rule would permit the defendant to be unjustly enriched at the expense of the plaintiff (33 Cal. App. 3d 858, 862) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Exclusive Agreement Without Definite Termination Date Not Void Under Certain Circumstances

In Nichols v. Boswell-Alliance Constr. Corp. (1960) 181 Cal. App. 2d 584 , the court of appeal affirmed a judgment awarding commissions to plaintiff on the sale of houses sold before defendant terminated the broker's agreement, but the court reversed a judgment awarding damages to plaintiff for anticipatory breach measured by the commissions that would have been earned if the agreement had not been terminated (181 Cal. App. 2d 584, 589) . Regarding the commissions earned, the court, relying on prior case law, stated that the rule that courts should not aid in the enforcement of illegal contracts should not be applied when the public cannot be protected because the transaction has been completed, no serious moral turpitude is involved, the defendant is the one guilty of the greatest moral fault, and an application of the rule would result in unjust enrichment to defendant at the expense of plaintiff (181 Cal. App. 2d 584, 589) .

In Wilson v. Stearns (1954) 123 Cal. App. 2d 472, 267 P.2d 59 , the court of appeal refused to apply the rule that an exclusive listing was void and unenforceable unless there was a definite, specified termination date and reversed, in part, a judgment denying recovery to a real estate agent based on this rule. Relying on prior case law, the court stated that the rule that courts will not aid in the enforcement of illegal contracts should not be applied when the public cannot be protected because the transaction has been completed, no serious moral turpitude is involved, the defendant is the one guilty of the greatest moral fault, and an application of the rule would result in unjust enrichment to defendant at the expense of plaintiff (123 Cal. App. 2d 472, 482) .

It should be noted that at the time of the decision in Wilson, Bus. & Prof. Code § 10176(f) provided for disciplinary action when a real estate broker was engaged in "the practice of" claiming, demanding, or receiving compensation under an exclusive agreement with no definite termination date. It was argued in Babcock v. Houston (1973) 33 Cal. App. 3d 858, 863, 109 Cal. Rptr. 454 (see § 31.91[4][a]), that the 1955 amendment to Bus. & Prof. Code § 10176(f) eliminating these words nullified the decision in Wilson v. Stearns (1954) 123 Cal. App. 2d 472, 267 P.2d 59 . The court in Babcock however, stated that the rationale of Wilson was not changed by the amendment.

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF BROKER MAY RECOVER A COMMISSION UNDER THE AGREEMENT WITH DEFENDANT BROKER BECAUSE THE ILLEGALITY OF AN EXCLUSIVE LISTING AGREEMENT WITH NO DEFINITE TERMINATION DATE UNDER SECTION 10176(f) OF THE BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONS CODE MAY NOT BE USED AS A DEFENSE IN AN ACTION BETWEEN BROKERS TO SHARE A COMMISSION THAT HAS ALREADY BEEN PAID TO ONE BROKER BY THE OWNER.

Absence of Definite Termination Date Not Defense in Action Between Brokers. A broker may recover from another broker a portion of a commission that has already been paid, although the agreement between the listing broker and the owner violates the definite termination date requirement of Section 10176(f) of the Business and Professions Code because the defense of the illegality of an exclusive agreement with no termination date does not apply to an action between brokers to recover a portion of a commission already paid (Iusi v. Chase (1959) 169 Cal. App. 2d 83, 87, 337 P.2d 79).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that one broker may recover a commission from another broker. This argument may be used when the commission has already been paid by the owner to the procuring broker under an exclusive agency or exclusive right-to-sell listing agreement that did not contain a definite termination date, as required by Bus. & Prof. Code § 10176(f), and the procuring broker asserts the absence of a definite termination date as a defense to paying the listing broker his or her portion of the commission.

These points and authorities may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that a broker may recover commission. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the facts showing that the procuring broker has already received payment of the commission from the owner.

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 31.107 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Absence of Definite Termination Date Not Defense in Action Between Brokers

The facts and procedural background of Iusi v. Chase (1959) 169 Cal. App. 2d 83, 337 P.2d 79 , are discussed in § 31.52[3][a]. In Iusi, the court of appeal affirmed a judgment awarding the listing broker, under an agreement to share a commission, a portion of a commission that had been paid by the owner to the procuring broker. One of the procuring broker's contentions on appeal was that the agreement between the listing broker and the owner was illegal and thus void because it was an exclusive agreement without a definite, specified termination date. The court held, however, that there was no indication that Bus. & Prof. Code § 10176(f) was designed to protect brokers. Instead, the court noted, the clients of brokers are the protected class. Thus, the court concluded that because the commissions had already been paid, the modern rule would not strain to establish illegality as a defense that would permit one broker to retain all the fruits of the transaction (169 Cal. App. 2d 83, 87) .

A broker who has contracted with a purchaser for the payment of a commission may recover the commission from the purchaser when the purchaser breaches the implied duty of good faith by not consummating an executed sales agreement (*see R. [3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Commission Recoverable When Duty of Good Faith Breached

In R. J. Kuhl Corp. v. Sullivan (1993) 13 Cal. App. 4th 1589, 1601-1604, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 425 , plaintiff broker entered into a contract with defendant buyer to find a site for a car dealership. Defendant buyer agreed to pay a six percent commission. Defendant buyer also agreed to deposit in escrow or furnish all the necessary documents after execution of a purchase agreement. Plaintiff found a property for defendant and after extensive negotiations, a contract of purchase was executed. During the negotiations, defendant buyer was also negotiating with another defendant to buy the existing car dealership and that other defendant became interested in the property defendant buyer had agreed to purchase. Finally, the other defendant agreed to purchase the property under the same terms as those in the defendant buyer's contract. Defendant buyer consented to the assignment of the contract, and agreed with the other defendant that if plaintiff made a claim for the commission, they would jointly defend and pay the costs. Defendant buyer was also given an option to purchase half of the property in partial consideration of assignment of the rights in the contract. Plaintiff sued defendant buyer and the other defendant for the commission. The trial court entered a judgment for plaintiff, and the defendants appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. It held that generally a broker for a purchaser earns the commission on the principal's entry into a binding contract regardless of whether the sale is consummated. However, both parties agreed that the brokerage contract at issue made the payment of the commission conditional on consummation of the sales contract. In such a situation, the law requires of the purchaser good faith and the doing of no intentional act to prevent the completion of the purchase. Also, there was a specific clause in the contract that defendant buyer would cooperate by making timely deposits in escrow. The court concluded that defendant buyer's obligation to pay a commission if the transaction was not consummated at his bequest was subject to the covenant of good faith and fair dealing (13 Cal. App. 4th 1589, 1598-1601) . The court found that the rule that the principal may not prevent the consummation of the purchase contract would have little meaning if the principal could avoid liability because he reevaluated the wisdom of the contract. If a buyer under an executory contract sold the right to receive title to another for money exceeding the amount of the commission and refused to pay the commission, there would be bad faith. The court found that defendant buyer sold its contract right for a valuable consideration and profited unfairly from plaintiff's services. Defendant buyer could not have evaded the commission by purchasing the property and selling the property to the other defendant, which is effectively what happened. The failure to consummate the transaction was a breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing (13 Cal. App. 4th 1589, 1602-1604) .

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a broker is entitled to a commission if the listing agreement is ambiguous and extrinsic evidence establishes that a commission is warranted.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Commission Recoverable When Extrinsic Evidence Establishes Broker Is Entitled to Recover

In John B. Kilroy Co. v. Douglas Furniture of Cal., Inc. (1993) 21 Cal. App. 4th 26, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 752 , Douglas entered into a listing agreement with Kilroy to lease property. The agreement provided for commissions as a percentage of the yearly rental at successively lower rates for up to 30 years. It also provided that if the lease included an option, the commission would be calculated as though the option was part of the initial lease transaction. Kilroy procured Hughes Aircraft, who entered into a five-year lease with a five-year option. After the lease was executed, Kilroy sent Douglas a letter that stated that it was understood that the commission agreement was applicable to any modifications or extensions of the lease. Douglas accepted the letter by signing in the space provided. The commission was paid on the initial lease and the exercise of the option. Then, Hughes signed separate lease agreements for a further period. Douglas refused to pay commissions on the new leases, and Kilroy brought an action. The trial court entered a judgment for Kilroy, and the Court of Appeal affirmed.

The Court of Appeal held that when the meaning of a contract is ambiguous, extrinsic evidence is admissible to prove the contract's meaning (21 Cal. App. 4th 26, 33) . The Court of Appeal also found that the contract was ambiguous in that it contemplated commission payments for up to 30 years and did not limit commissions to the initial lease agreement. It was also ambiguous when it provided that commissions on option periods would be calculated as though the option period was part of the original lease. The court found that the letter sent after the lease's execution reflected the intention of the parties that commissions would be earned on modifications or extensions of the original lease. The parties were free to agree to such a continuing commission contract. The trial court did not err when it held that Kilroy was entitled to continuing commissions for up to 30 years (21 Cal. App. 4th 26, 34) .

The court then held that the trial court properly found, based on expert testimony, that the new leases were extensions of the original lease. The leases were with the same parties, for the same property, and for the same use (21 Cal. App. 4th 26, 35-36) .

PLAINTIFF BROKER MAY RECOVER A COMMISSION BECAUSE, AFTER DEFENDANT OWNER EXECUTED A COUNTEROFFER PROVIDING IN PART FOR A COMMISSION, DEFENDANT REMAINED OBLIGATED TO PAY THE COMMISSION WHEN HE/SHE ENTERED INTO A SUBSEQUENT AGREEMENT WITH THE SAME BUYER AND ON THE SAME TERMS EXCEPT THAT IT OMITTED A COMMISSION PROVISION.

J. P. Enterprises (1997) 52 Cal. App. 4th 1250, 1256*).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a real estate broker is entitled to a commission because the seller (1) signed a counteroffer providing for the payment of a commission, and (2) after expiration of the counteroffer, consummated the sale on the same terms with the same buyer, except for the agreement to pay a commission.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the argument that a broker is entitled to a commission. It may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should discuss the facts showing the execution of a counteroffer and the terms of the subsequent agreement between the same seller and buyer.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Commission Recoverable When Owner and Buyer Negotiate Subsequent Separate Agreement That Deprives Broker of Commission

In Torelli v. J. P. Enterprises (1997) 52 Cal. App. 4th 1250, 1252 , the real estate broker had a listing agreement to sell certain commercial property, but the agreement expired. A month later the broker found a purchaser for the property, and presented to the seller a standard real estate purchase contract signed by the purchaser that called for the broker to receive a 2.5 percent commission. The seller signed a counteroffer, which essentially accepted the terms of the offer set out in the purchase contract, including the commission arrangement with the broker. The counteroffer included an expiration date, and it was not accepted within that time. After the expiration of the counteroffer, the purchaser and seller began negotiating on their own, and came to an agreement that was identical to the counteroffer, except that it did not include a commission for the broker. The trial court granted the seller's motion for summary judgment, agreeing that the expiration of the counteroffer ended any obligation to pay the broker a commission.

The court of appeal reversed, stating that the promise to pay the broker a commission did not expire with the counteroffer. When the seller signed the counteroffer, it became bound by an implied promise not to deprive the broker of the benefits of the bargain to pay the commission. The law does not allow a broker to be cheated out of his or her commission by the simple artifice of entering into direct negotiations and making substantially the same bargain, but without the broker's commission (52 Cal. App. 4th 1250, 1252) . As far as the broker's right to a commission is concerned, the broker-seller contract set forth in the counteroffer must be distinguished from the seller-purchaser contract that would be formed if the purchaser signed the counteroffer. Any other rule would lead to a gross inequity if the purchaser did not sign the particular piece of paper setting forth the counteroffer, but nevertheless bought the property on substantially the same terms as the counteroffer (52 Cal. App. 4th 1250, 1254-1255) . Because it is established law that a broker may recover when a sale is not consummated due to the seller's fault, it naturally follows that a broker may recover when a sale is consummated because the purchaser and seller, having been brought together by the broker, entered into direct negotiations (52 Cal. App. 4th 1250, 1256) .

The court acknowledged that the direct negotiations in this case were instigated by the buyer, so that, strictly speaking, it was not the seller's fault that the counteroffer was not signed by the buyer prior to its expiration date. But just because the seller was not at fault for the nonacceptance of the counteroffer did not mean the seller could, with impunity, breach its existing contact to pay the broker a commission. Every contract has an implied covenant not to do anything that injures the right of the other party to receive the benefits of the agreement. Having made an agreement to pay the broker a commission, the seller could not thereafter, consistent with the implied covenant of good faith, made a deal with the buyer on substantially the same terms as it contemplated in the counteroffer without paying the broker the agreed commission. The omission of a provision for the broker's commission in the final agreement between the purchaser and seller was the functional equivalent of a with-fault repudiation of the entire sale. Although no writing expressly prohibited the seller from entering into direct negotiations with the buyer, the implied covenant of good faith meant that the seller still had no right to use those negotiations to deprive the broker of his commission for having found the buyer in the first place (52 Cal. App. 4th 1250, 1256-1257) .

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a party's contention that a broker may recover a commission. This argument may be used when opposing the contention that a broker was the procuring cause of the sale. The question of whether or not a broker is a procuring cause of a sale will most likely arise when (1) the owner or another broker sells the property while the broker has a general listing on the property and the broker claims that the sale was due to the broker's efforts, entitling him or her to a commission, (2) the owner sells the property while the broker has an exclusive agency listing and the broker claims that the sale was due to the broker's efforts, entitling him or her to a commission, or (3) the broker attempts to recover a commission under a clause in a contract providing that a commission is earned if the broker procures a buyer.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel is responding to the contention that a broker is entitled to recover a commission. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the facts showing that the broker did not set in motion a chain of events that, without a break in their continuity, caused the buyer and seller to come to terms as the proximate result of plaintiff broker's particular activities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Commission Not Recoverable When Broker Not Procuring Cause of Sale

In Schiro v. Parker (1955) 137 Cal. App. 2d 503, 290 P.2d 634 , plaintiff real estate broker brought an action for a commission against another broker. Defendant was given a listing by the owner of a piece of property and defendant and plaintiff entered into an agreement providing that plaintiff would receive 60 percent of any commission earned by defendant if plaintiff "procured a purchaser" (137 Cal. App. 2d 503, 505) . The eventual purchaser of the property responded to plaintiff's ad and plaintiff made two offers to the owner, both of which were refused. The purchaser at that time refused to meet the owner's lowest asking price. Later, defendant broker approached the purchaser and began negotiations again between the owner and the purchaser that resulted in a sale when the purchaser met the owner's lowest asking price. The trial court found that plaintiff broker was not the procuring cause of the sale and granted judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appealed and the court of appeal affirmed, stating that in order for plaintiff to recover, the evidence must show that his efforts were the procuring cause of the sale and not merely one in a chain of causes. The court noted that to constitute the predominating cause, it is not enough that the broker contributes indirectly or incidentally to the sale by imparting information that tends to arouse interest, but the broker must set in motion a chain of events that, without a break in their continuity, cause the buyer and seller to come to terms as the proximate result of the broker's particular efforts. Here, the court stated, that it was through defendant broker's efforts that the final offer of the purchaser was made, and this was evidenced by the fact that at the time the purchaser was initially approached by defendant broker, the purchaser believed that the deal through plaintiff broker was off (137 Cal. App. 2d 503, 507) .

In Nelson v. Mayer (1954) 122 Cal. App. 2d 438, 265 P.2d 52 , plaintiff, a real estate broker, sought recovery of a commission from the owner of the real property that was sold through another broker. Plaintiff was given a general listing on the property and contacted the attorney for the eventual purchaser who stated that he was not interested in the property. Later, another broker approached the purchaser's attorney and the purchaser, and the property was sold. The trial court directed a verdict in favor of defendant and plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment and stated that in order for plaintiff to recover a commission, the evidence must show that plaintiff's efforts were the procuring cause of the sale and not merely one in a chain of causes. The court further stated that to constitute the predominating effective cause, it is not enough that the broker contributes indirectly or incidentally to the sale by imparting information that tends to arouse interest, but the broker must set in motion a chain of events that, without a break in their continuity, cause the buyer and seller to come to terms as the proximate result of the broker's particular activities (122 Cal. App. 2d 438, 445) .

PLAINTIFF BROKER MAY NOT RECOVER A COMMISSION, ALTHOUGH THE BUYER PROCURED BY PLAINTIFF WAS ACCEPTED BY DEFENDANT OWNER, BECAUSE AN OWNER'S ACCEPTANCE DOES NOT ADMIT THE READINESS, WILLINGNESS, AND ABILITY OF A BUYER TO CONSUMMATE THE SALE WHEN A BROKER ACTS IN BAD FAITH AND WITHHOLDS KNOWLEDGE OF THE BUYER'S FINANCIAL INABILITY FROM THE OWNER.

Commission Not Recoverable When Broker Withholds Knowledge of Buyer's Financial Inability. Although the owner accepted the buyer produced by the broker, a broker may not recover a commission because an owner's acceptance does not admit the readiness, willingness, and ability of the buyer to consummate the sale when the broker acts in bad faith and withholds knowledge of the buyer's financial inability from the owner (*Bay Shore Homes, Inc. v. [a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a party's contention that a broker is entitled to recover a commission. This argument may be used when the buyer produced by the broker was accepted by defendant owner but the broker acted in bad faith and withheld knowledge of the financial inability of the buyer from the owner. The readiness, willingness, and ability of the buyer to complete the sale will be an issue when the sale was never completed and the broker contends that nevertheless, he or she is entitled to recover a commission.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel is responding to the contention that the broker is entitled to recover a commission. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Commission Not Recoverable When Broker Withholds Knowledge of Buyer's Financial Inability

In Bay Shore Homes, Inc. v. San Diego Trust & Sav. Bk. (1969) 276 Cal. App. 2d 108, 80 Cal. Rptr. 849 , the court of appeal affirmed a judgment denying a real estate commission to cross defendant and cross complainant real estate broker. The action began as a suit by a prospective purchaser against the representatives of the sellers for the return of a deposit. The real estate broker had submitted an offer on the property to the sellers' representatives and the offer was accepted. Unbeknownst to the sellers, however, the broker had made a deal with the buyer to return the broker's commission for the buyer's use as part of the purchase price on the property. The sale never went through although the buyer did find another purchaser for the property. The real estate broker appealed the decision of the trial court denying his commission. The court of appeal affirmed and stated that the broker's lack of right to a commission was established by the fact that he withheld information from the sellers that was material to the question of the ability of the buyer to purchase on the offered terms. The court stated that while it was true that the sellers accepted the purchaser and that the general rule is that by doing so the ability of the purchaser to consummate the sale is admitted, this rule is subject to qualifications. One of the qualifications, the court stated, was that in order to be entitled to a commission under the rule, the broker must have acted in good faith and without knowledge of the financial inability of the purchaser (276 Cal. App. 2d 108, 115-116) .

§ 31.98 Opposing Contention That Broker May Recover Commission--General Listing Agreement Allows Owner to Revoke Agency or to Dispose of Property Prior to Broker's Performance Without Incurring Liability to Broker for Commission

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF BROKER MAY NOT RECOVER A COMMISSION BECAUSE WHEN A BROKER IS EMPLOYED UNDER A GENERAL LISTING AGREEMENT, THE OWNER RETAINS THE RIGHT, PRIOR TO THE BROKER'S PERFORMANCE, TO REVOKE THE AGENCY, TO SELL THE PROPERTY PERSONALLY OR THROUGH ANOTHER BROKER, OR TO WITHDRAW THE PROPERTY FROM SALE WITHOUT BECOMING LIABLE FOR A COMMISSION.

Commission Not Recoverable Under General Listing When Owner Disposes of Property. A broker is not entitled to recover a commission under a general listing when, prior to the broker's performance, the agency is revoked, the property is sold by the owner personally or through another broker, or the owner withdraws the property from sale (see Tetrick v. Sloan (1959) 170 Cal. App. 2d 540, 546, 339 P.2d 613 ; Nelson v. Mayer (1954) 122 Cal. App. 2d 438, 445, 265 P.2d 52).

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a party's contention that a broker is entitled to recover a commission. This argument may be used when the listing under which the broker was employed was a general listing and, prior to the listing broker's performance, the agency was revoked, the property was sold by the owner personally or through another broker, or the property was withdrawn from sale.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel is responding to the contention that the broker is entitled to recover a commission. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Commission Not Recoverable Under General Listing When Owner Disposes of Property

The facts and procedural background of Tetrick v. Sloan (1959) 170 Cal. App. 2d 540, 339 P.2d 613 , are discussed in § 31.99[3][a]. In Tetrick, the court of appeal construed the listing agreement as a general listing and held that because the listing was revocable by defendant in good faith prior to performance by plaintiff, defendant was not liable to plaintiff for a commission (170 Cal. App. 2d 540, 548) . The court discussed the types of brokerage listings and noted that a general listing is revocable at the will of the owner in good faith at any time before performance, regardless of the efforts expended by the broker, and leaves the owner free to list the property with other brokers, to sell it himself or herself, or to withdraw it from the market (170 Cal. App. 2d 540, 546) .

The facts and procedural background of Nelson v. Mayer (1954) 122 Cal. App. 2d 438, 265 P.2d 52 , are discussed in § 31.96[3][a]. In Nelson, the court of appeal affirmed a directed verdict in favor of defendant owner in an action brought by plaintiff to recover a broker's commission. The listing agreement was a general listing and the property was sold through another broker. The court noted that under a general listing, defendant reserved the right to sell the property by his own unaided efforts or through another agent or broker without becoming liable for a commission (122 Cal. App. 2d 438, 446) .

[The following should be combined with the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 31.98 and may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF BROKER MAY NOT RECOVER A COMMISSION BECAUSE A BROKER'S AUTHORITY TO SELL REAL PROPERTY IS A GENERAL AGENCY UNLESS THE EMPLOYMENT AGREEMENT PROVIDES FOR AN EXCLUSIVE AGENCY IN UNEQUIVOCAL TERMS OR ARISES BY NECESSARY IMPLICATION.

Exclusive Agency Must Be Unequivocally Stated or Arise by Necessary Implication. A broker's authority to sell real property is a general agency unless the contract of employment provides for an exclusive agency in unequivocal terms or by necessary implication (*Tetrick v. [a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a party's contention that a broker is entitled to recover a commission and should be combined with the points and authorities set out in § 31.98. This argument may be used when contending that an agreement is a general listing because it fails to provide for an exclusive agency in unequivocal terms or by necessary implication. A general listing agreement allows the owner, prior to performance by the broker, to sell the property personally or through another broker, or to withdraw the property from sale, or revoke the agreement without incurring liability to the broker for a commission [see Tetrick v. Sloan (1959) 170 Cal. App. 2d 540, 547-548, 339 P.2d 613 ; Nelson v. Mayer (1954) 122 Cal. App. 2d 438, 445, 265 P.2d 52] .

These points and authorities may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to oppose the contention that the broker is entitled to recover a commission. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the facts showing that the listing agreement does not unequivocally provide for an exclusive agency agreement and that this cannot necessarily be implied from the agreement.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Exclusive Agency Must Be Unequivocally Stated or Arise by Necessary Implication

In Tetrick v. Sloan (1959) 170 Cal. App. 2d 540, 339 P.2d 613 , plaintiff broker was employed by defendant to negotiate an oil lease on defendant's property. Plaintiff had introduced defendant to the eventual lessee but when defendant discovered that the eventual lessee would not agree to defendant's price for the lease, defendant refused to discuss the matter further. Defendant terminated plaintiff's employment, a lessee not having been found, and almost a year later entered into an oil lease with the lessee previously introduced by plaintiff. Plaintiff brought an action to recover a commission and the trial court rendered judgment for defendant. Plaintiff contended on appeal that defendant had no right to revoke the agreement once plaintiff had partly performed. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment and held that defendant had the right to cancel the general listing in good faith at any time prior to plaintiff's performance by procuring a ready, willing, and able purchaser (170 Cal. App. 2d 540, 545-548) . The court construed the listing agreement as a general listing and because the agreement was a general listing, defendant was free to revoke the authority of plaintiff at any time without becoming liable for a commission. The court stated that a real estate broker's authority to sell real property is not exclusive unless made so by the contract of employment in unequivocal terms or by necessary implication (170 Cal. App. 2d 540, 548) .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Commission Not Recoverable Under Exclusive Agency When Owner Sells Property

The facts and procedural background of E. A. Strout Western Realty v. Gregoire (1950) 101 Cal. App. 2d 512, 225 P.2d 585 , are discussed in § 31.101[3][a]. In Gregoire, plaintiff sought damages from defendant owners under an agreement that employed plaintiff to procure a ready, willing, and able buyer in return for a commission. Attached to the agreement was an amendment, which stated that the agreement was amended to give plaintiff "the sole and exclusive right to procure a purchaser" for the property (101 Cal. App. 2d 512, 513) . Defendants thereafter sold the property themselves and refused to pay plaintiff's commission. The trial court interpreted the agreement as an exclusive agency agreement and held for defendants. On appeal, plaintiff contended that he was entitled to a commission, although plaintiff did not procure a purchaser, because the agreement was an exclusive right to sell as opposed to an exclusive agency. The court of appeal affirmed and discussed the distinction between an exclusive agency agreement and an exclusive right-to-sell agreement. The court stated that an exclusive agency contract only prevents the owner from placing the property in the hands of another agent, and the owner retains the right to sell the property through his or her own unaided efforts. The court noted, however, that under an exclusive right to sell, the broker is entitled to be compensated when a sale is made by the owner (101 Cal. App. 2d 512, 515-516) .

Exclusive Right to Sell Must Be Expressly Provided or Arise by Necessary Implication. A broker's exclusive agreement to sell real property is an exclusive agency instead of an exclusive right to sell, unless the agreement expressly provides for an exclusive right to sell or such construction arises by necessary implication from the terms used (*E. [a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a party's contention that a broker is entitled to recover a commission and should be combined with the points and authorities set out in § 31.100. This argument may be used when contending that the agreement employing the broker was an exclusive agency instead of an exclusive right to sell because an exclusive right to sell was not stated expressly or did not arise by necessary implication from the terms used. An exclusive agency agreement allows the owner personally to sell the property without liability prior to the broker's performance, but under an exclusive right to sell, the owner of the property becomes liable to the broker for a commission if the property is sold during the term of the agreement either by the owner personally or through another broker [see E. A. Strout Western Realty v. Gregoire (1950) 101 Cal. App. 2d 512, 517-518, 225 P.2d 585] .

These points and authorities may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to respond to the contention that the broker is entitled to recover a commission. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the facts showing that an exclusive right to sell was not stated expressly and does not arise by necessary implication from the terms used in the agreement.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Exclusive Right to Sell Must Be Expressly Provided or Arise by Necessary Implication

In E. A. Strout Western Realty v. Gregoire (1950) 101 Cal. App. 2d 512, 225 P.2d 585 , plaintiff sought damages from defendants who were the owners of real property and with whom plaintiff had a broker's agreement. The agreement employed plaintiff to procure a ready, willing, and able buyer in return for a commission. Attached to the agreement was an amendment, which stated that the agreement was amended to give plaintiff the sole and exclusive right to procure a purchaser for the property (101 Cal. App. 2d 512, 513) . Defendants thereafter sold the property themselves and refused to pay plaintiff's commission. The trial court held for defendants and plaintiff appealed, contending in part that plaintiff was entitled to a commission although plaintiff did not procure a purchaser because the agreement was an exclusive right to sell as opposed to an exclusive agency. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment and held that the agreement was an exclusive agency agreement and not an exclusive right to sell, thus entitling defendants to sell the property themselves without incurring liability as long as the property was sold through the unaided efforts of defendants and not to a purchaser procured by plaintiff (101 Cal. App. 2d 512, 519) . The court pointed out that California courts recognize the distinction between an exclusive agency in which the owner retains the right to sell the property through the owner's own efforts without incurring liability to the broker, and an exclusive right to sell in which the owner contracts away this right (101 Cal. App. 2d 512, 517) . The court stated that because an incident of ownership of property is a right to dispose of the same, the right of the owner to dispose of the property through the owner's own efforts will not be considered to have been contracted away by the grant of an exclusive right to sell unless the language of the agreement expressly so states or such a construction is a necessary implication from the terms used (101 Cal. App. 2d 512, 518) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Exclusive Right to Sell Must Be Expressly Provided or Arise by Necessary Implication

In Snook v. Page (1915) 29 Cal. App. 246, 155 P 107 , plaintiff brokers appealed from a judgment of nonsuit entered in an action for a real estate commission. Plaintiffs entered into an agency agreement and while the agreement was in effect, defendant sold the property without going through plaintiffs. Plaintiffs appealed, contending that they were entitled to recover a commission because the agreement was an exclusive right to sell. The court of appeal affirmed the nonsuit and held that the agreement was an exclusive agency because the contract did not in express terms confer on plaintiffs the exclusive right to sell the property or provide for a commission in case the owner should sell it (29 Cal. App. 246, 248) . Under an exclusive agency agreement, the court stated, the owner has the right to sell the property by his or her own unaided efforts without becoming liable to the broker for a commission and the only effect of such a contract is to prevent the owner from placing the property in the hands of another broker (29 Cal. App. 246, 247) .

PLAINTIFF BROKER MAY NOT RECOVER A COMMISSION BECAUSE THE CONTRACT OF SALE ENTERED INTO BETWEEN THE BUYER AND THE SELLER WAS CONDITIONAL AND THE CONDITION WAS NOT PERFORMED.

A. Accepted Buyer Not Admitted to Be Ready, Willing, and Able When Contract Conditional. Although the general rule is that an owner who enters into a contract with a buyer admits the readiness, willingness, and ability of the buyer to complete the contract, this rule does not apply when the contract entered into was conditional (*Kopf v. B. Commission Not Recoverable When Contract Conditional and Condition Not Performed. [a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that a broker is not entitled to recover a commission. This argument may be used when the contract entered into between the buyer and the seller is conditional and the condition was not performed.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel is responding to the contention that a broker is entitled to recover a commission. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the facts showing that the contract between the buyer and the seller was conditional and the condition was not performed.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Accepted Buyer Not Admitted to Be Ready, Willing, and Able When Contract Conditional

In Kopf v. Milam (1963) 60 Cal. 2d 600, 35 Cal. Rptr. 614, 387 P.2d 390 , plaintiff brought an action to recover a broker's commission for procuring a buyer for defendants' property. The deposit receipt agreement that was signed by defendants and the prospective purchasers stated that the sale was subject to the buyers' assuming an existing loan on the property. An escrow was opened and a down payment made but the buyers did not complete escrow. The trial court found that the condition regarding the assumption of the loan was for the defendants' benefit, that the buyers never undertook to assume the loan or the other conditions in the deposit receipt agreement, that they were not ready, willing, and able to complete the contract, and that defendants were not estopped to deny that they were ready, willing, and able to complete the contract.

The Supreme Court affirmed and held that because the contract was conditional, no presumption as to the readiness, willingness, and ability of the buyers arose. Thus, the finding of the trial court was conclusive. The court stated that the rule providing that the buyer is conclusively presumed to be ready, willing, and able only applies when the contract entered into between the buyer and seller is unconditional (60 Cal. 2d 600, 605) .

[b] Commission Not Recoverable When Contract Conditional and Condition Not Performed

In Britschgi v. McCall (1953) 41 Cal. 2d 138, 257 P.2d 977 , three separate actions against defendant sellers were consolidated for trial. The first action was brought by the broker employed by defendants to sell the property. The second an action was brought by the broker employed under the agreement and a second broker for services rendered. The final action was brought by the prospective purchasers for specific performance of the contract of sale. Plaintiff brokers procured an offer on the property that was not accepted by defendants because there was a third party who had a lease with an option to buy on defendants' property. Defendants counteroffered by agreeing to accept the purchasers' offer contingent on the elimination of the third party's interest. The interest was never eliminated and the sale did not go through.

The trial court granted judgments for defendants, and plaintiffs appealed. The court of appeal affirmed and held that the contract of sale was subject to the condition precedent that the sellers would be able to eliminate the interest of the holder of the option on the property and this condition could not be waived by the buyers alone (41 Cal. 2d 138, 144-145) . Thus, the court held that plaintiffs brokers were not entitled to a commission because defendant sellers were under no obligation to consummate the sale (41 Cal. 2d 138, 145) .

In Keystone Mortgage Co. v. MacDonald (1967) 254 Cal. App. 2d 808, 62 Cal. Rptr. 562 , the court of appeal affirmed a judgment denying a real estate broker a commission for obtaining a trust deed loan on defendants' property. A loan commitment was obtained from a life insurance company but it was conditioned on the approval of the terms of the lease on the property. The terms of the lease were never renegotiated to meet the approval of the company and the loan was never made. The trial court granted judgment for defendants and plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment (254 Cal. App. 2d 808, 815) . The court stated that the loan commitment was not unconditional and thus, defendants were not estopped from asserting that the company making the commitment was ready, willing, and able to complete the transaction. The court reasoned that when a contract is conditional and the condition is not performed, as in the instant case, there can be no recovery of a commission. However, the court noted, if the contract is conditional and the condition is performed, the broker becomes entitled to a commission only when the condition is met and the buyer becomes ready, willing, and able (254 Cal. App. 2d 808, 812-813) . Because the condition was never met, the court held that plaintiff was not entitled to a commission (254 Cal. App. 2d 808, 815) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Accepted Buyer Not Admitted to Be Ready, Willing, and Able When Contract Conditional

In Wiseman v. Ross (1961) 202 Cal. App. 2d 138, 20 Cal. Rptr. 565 , the court of appeal reversed a judgment in favor of plaintiff, a real estate broker, in an action for a commission. Defendant sellers made a counteroffer to the buyers' original offer and the buyers accepted. The counteroffer set forth the amount of cash that defendants required out of the transaction. An escrow was opened but the sale did not go through. The trial court found that the buyers were at all times ready, willing, and able to perform the contract. The court of appeal, however, stated that it was understood by all parties that the buyers' acceptance of defendants' counteroffer was subject to the buyers' ability to finance the purchase along the lines set forth in the counteroffer. Because of this condition, the court stated that it could not apply the rule that a seller who accepts the buyer procured the broker admits the readiness, willingness, and ability of the buyer to complete the transaction. The court noted that while the general rule is that when the owner accepts a buyer procured by the broker the owner admits the readiness, willingness, and ability of the buyer, the rule does not apply when at the time of the execution of the written agreement, it is understood by the parties that the buyers' acceptance of the sellers' offer was subject to the buyers' ability to finance their purchase along the lines required by the agreement (202 Cal. App. 2d 138, 142) .

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a party's contention that a broker is entitled to a commission. The argument may be used when the only provision for payment of a commission is contained in the agreement between the buyer and the seller and the agreement is not performed through no fault of the party employing the broker.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel is responding to the contention that a broker is entitled to a commission. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should discuss the fact that the only provision for the payment of a commission is contained in an agreement between the buyer and seller and that the agreement was not performed. Counsel should also discuss the fact that the nonperformance of the contract was not due to any fault on the part of the party employing the broker.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Commission Not Recoverable When Provision for Commission Contained in Agreement Not Performed

In Paulsen v. Leadbetter (1968) 267 Cal. App. 2d 148, 72 Cal. Rptr. 819 , plaintiff brought an action for a broker's commission for procuring a buyer for defendants' property. The sale never went through but there was no evidence that this was due to any fault of the buyer or seller. A motion for a nonsuit made by defendants was denied and thereafter judgment awarding a commission to plaintiff was entered on a jury verdict. Defendants appealed the denial of the motion but the court of appeal treated the appeal as one from the judgment and reversed. The court found that the only documents providing for a commission that were sufficient to satisfy the statute of frauds were the deposit receipt and the escrow instructions between the buyer and seller and that because the sale was never consummated and the failure to consummate the sale was not due to the fault of defendant sellers, plaintiff could not recover a commission (267 Cal. App. 2d 148, 153-154) . The court noted that plaintiff would be able to recover a commission, despite nonperformance of the sales contract, if the transaction had not been completed because of the arbitrary refusal of defendants to perform. The court stated that when the only agreement to pay a commission is contained in a contract between the broker's principal and the customer, the broker's right to compensation depends on performance of that contract (267 Cal. App. 2d 148, 153-154) .

In Billings v. Rexford Park Apts. (1966) 244 Cal. App. 2d 317, 52 Cal. Rptr. 914 , plaintiff sued both the seller and the buyer for a commission under a provision contained in escrow instructions for the payment of plaintiff's commission. The instructions stated that the escrow officer was authorized and instructed to deduct plaintiff's commission from the funds deposited in escrow. The escrow was never performed. A demurrer to plaintiff's first amended complaint was sustained without leave to amend. Plaintiff appealed but only the prospective purchaser, who was not plaintiff's employer, was a party to the appeal. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment. The court, quoting form prior case law, stated that when the only agreement to pay a broker's commission is contained in the contract between the broker's principal and the customer, the broker's right to compensation is dependent on performance of that contract. The court noted that if the customer refuses to perform, or if the contract is cancelled or rescinded, the broker cannot recover because the broker, not having the ordinary broker's contract of compensation, must stand or fall on the contract actually entered (244 Cal. App. 2d 317, 322) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Commission Not Recoverable When Provision for Commission Contained in Agreement Not Performed

In Lawrence Block Co. v. Palston (1954) 123 Cal. App. 2d 300, 266 P.2d 856 , the court of appeal reversed a judgment for plaintiff in an action for a broker's commission when the provision for the commission was contained in defendant's acceptance of a prospective purchaser's offer. The court held that defendant's acceptance was in fact a counteroffer and that a binding contract of sale, on which plaintiff's commission depended, was never formed (123 Cal. App. 2d 300, 312) . The court stated that when the only agreement to pay a broker's commission is contained in the contract between the broker's principal and the customer, the broker's right to compensation depends on performance of that contract and if the customer refuses to perform, or if the contract is cancelled or rescinded, the broker cannot recover (123 Cal. App. 2d 300, 306-307) .

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF BROKER MAY NOT RECOVER A COMMISSION BECAUSE THE CONSENT OF _____ [DEFENDANT or DEFENDANT'S] SPOUSE TO THE SALE OF THE PROPERTY WAS A CONDITION PRECEDENT TO THE LISTING AGREEMENT AND THE CONSENT WAS NOT OBTAINED.

Commission Not Recoverable When Consent of Nonsigning Spouse Condition Precedent. When a spouse's consent to the sale of property is a condition precedent to the effectiveness of the listing agreement that is signed by only one spouse, and the nonsigning spouse refuses to join in the conveyance, a broker may not recover a commission under the listing agreement (Tolson v. Griset (1960) 186 Cal. App. 2d 497, 499, 500, 9 Cal. Rptr. 110).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a party's contention that a broker is entitled to recover a commission. The argument may be used when a spouse refuses to agree to the sale of the property, and the consent of the nonsigning spouse was a condition precedent to the effectiveness of the listing agreement employing the broker.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel is responding to the contention that a broker is entitled to recover a commission although only one coowner spouse has signed the listing agreement. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 31.87.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Commission Not Recoverable When Consent of Nonsigning Spouse Condition Precedent

In Tolson v. Griset (1960) 186 Cal. App. 2d 497, 9 Cal. Rptr. 110 , plaintiff broker brought an action against defendants, husband and wife, for a commission earned in procuring a purchaser of defendants' property under a listing agreement that was signed by only the husband. An escrow was opened by the broker and the purchaser, but both the husband and wife refused to go through with the sale. A nonsuit was granted regarding the wife and at the close of all the evidence the trial court rendered a judgment for defendant. The trial court found that the wife's consent to the sale of the property was a condition precedent to the effectiveness of the listing agreement and that because such consent was not given, plaintiff was not entitled to recover a commission. The evidence disclosed that all parties knew that the property was owned in joint tenancy and that defendant husband had signed the listing with the understanding that it would not be effective unless his wife agreed to the sale. On plaintiff's appeal, the court of appeal affirmed the judgment (186 Cal. App. 2d 497, 501) . The court stated that the trial court could have properly found that the wife's consent to the sale of the property was a condition precedent to the effectiveness of the listing agreement and denied recovery to plaintiff on this basis (186 Cal. App. 2d 497, 500) .

§ 31.105 Opposing Contention That Broker May Recover Commission--Broker's Failure to Use Due Diligence Under Exclusive Listing Agreement Justifies Revocation of Agency

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF BROKER MAY NOT RECOVER A COMMISSION BECAUSE THE FAILURE OF A BROKER TO USE DUE DILIGENCE WHEN EMPLOYED UNDER AN EXCLUSIVE LISTING AGREEMENT ALLOWS THE OWNER TO REVOKE THE AGENCY WITHOUT INCURRING LIABILITY TO THE BROKER.

Exclusive Agency Revocable for Failure to Use Due Diligence. An owner may revoke an exclusive listing agreement without incurring liability for a commission when the broker fails to use due diligence in the performance of the agreement (Coleman v. Mora (1968) 263 Cal. App. 2d 137, 148-152, 69 Cal. Rptr. 166).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a party's contention that a broker may recover a commission. This argument may be used when the broker is employed pursuant to an exclusive listing agreement and the owner revoked the listing because the broker failed to diligently perform.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel is responding to the contention that a broker is entitled to recover a commission. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

exclusive agency or an exclusive right to sell and that the broker failed to use due diligence in the performance of the agreement.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Exclusive Agency Revocable for Failure to Use Due Diligence

In Coleman v. Mora (1968) 263 Cal. App. 2d 137, 69 Cal. Rptr. 166 , plaintiff, a real estate broker, brought an action for a commission against defendant, the owner of a business who sold the business through another broker during the term specified in the exclusive listing agreement with plaintiff but after defendant had revoked the agency. The trial court rendered judgment for defendant and plaintiff appealed. The trial court found that plaintiff had not presented any offers to defendant at the listing price or produced any prospective purchasers prior to the termination but had merely listed the property along with other properties. The court of appeal affirmed and held that plaintiff had not used due diligence in the performance of the exclusive listing and that defendant was entitled to revoke the agency without incurring liability to plaintiff (263 Cal. App. 2d 137, 152, 155) . Because the property was sold through another broker, the court stated that it was unnecessary to decide if the exclusive listing agreement was an exclusive right to sell or an exclusive agency, but that in either case, the exclusiveness of the agreement implied a promise on the part of plaintiff to use due diligence in the performance of the agreement and the failure to do so was a material breach justifying rescission by the owner (263 Cal. App. 2d 137, 146-152) .

§ 31.106 Opposing Contention That Broker May Recover Commission--Exclusive Listing Void When No Definite Termination Date [Bus. & Prof. Code § 10176(f)]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF BROKER MAY NOT RECOVER A COMMISSION UNDER THE EXCLUSIVE LISTING AGREEMENT BECAUSE AN EXCLUSIVE LISTING AGREEMENT WITH NO DEFINITE DATE OF FINAL TERMINATION IS VOID AND WILL NOT SUPPORT RECOVERY OF A COMMISSION.

A. Disciplinary Action When No Date of Termination. A real estate license may be suspended or revoked when the licensee claims, demands, or receives a fee, compensation, or commission under an exclusive agreement employing the licensee to perform any acts set forth in Section 10131 of the Business and Professions Code (acts customarily performed by a real estate broker) and the agreement does not contain a definite, specified date of final and complete termination (Bus. & Prof. Code § 10176(f)).

B. Commission Not Recoverable Under Exclusive Agreement With No Termination Date. Because a licensed real estate broker is subject to discipline under Section 10176(f) of the Business and Professions Code when the broker claims, demands, or receives compensation under an exclusive broker's agreement that does not contain a definite, specified date of final termination, such an agreement is void and there can be no recovery of a commission (Dale v. Palmer (1951) 106 Cal. App. 2d 663, 666-668, 235 P.2d 650).

[Optional] C. Termination Date Must Be Definite at Execution of Agreement. The date of termination must be definitely provided for in the agreement at the time of its execution and cannot depend on the occurrence of a future event (Dale v. Palmer (1951) 106 Cal. App. 2d 663, 667, 235 P.2d 650).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a party's contention that a broker is entitled to recover a commission. This argument may be used when the agreement is an exclusive listing that does not contain a definite termination date. The optional paragraph is for use when contending that the termination date contained in the agreement must be definite at the time of the execution of the agreement and must not depend on the occurrence of a future event.

These points and authorities may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel is responding to the contention that a broker is entitled to recover a commission. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the facts showing that the agreement falls within the prohibition of Bus. & Prof. Code § 10176(f) because it employs a broker to perform an act set forth in Bus. & Prof. Code § 10131 and it does not contain a specific, definite date of final termination.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 31.91.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Commission Not Recoverable Under Exclusive Agreement With No Termination Date

In Dale v. Palmer (1951) 106 Cal. App. 2d 663, 235 P.2d 650 , plaintiff entered into an agreement with defendant in which defendant agreed to employ plaintiff to sell homes to be constructed by defendant. The agreement also provided that the listing was to start when construction began and continue exclusively until 30 days after the notice of completion had been filed. After one house was sold defendant discharged plaintiff and employed another broker who sold the rest. Plaintiff sued defendant for damages for anticipatory breach of contract and the trial court rendered judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appealed, contending that the agreement was void because it did not contain a definite, specified date of final termination, in violation of Bus. & Prof. Code § 10176(f). The court of appeal agreed with defendant and reversed the judgment. The court stated that the general rule is that when a statute imposes a penalty for the performing of an act, it implies a prohibition on the act and a contract founded on such act is void (106 Cal. App. 2d 663, 667) .

[b] Termination Date Must Be Definite at Execution of Agreement

The facts and procedural background of Dale v. Palmer (1951) 106 Cal. App. 2d 663, 235 P.2d 650 , are discussed in § 31.106[3][a]. In Dale, the court of appeal, in holding that the contract was void, first addressed the issue of whether or not the provision that the listing was to terminate 30 days after the notice of completion had been filed was a definite, specified termination date. The court held that it was not because the termination date must be set forth in the contract at the time of execution and must not be computed by reference to the occurrence of a future event. The court cited Castleman v. Scudder (1947) 81 Cal. App. 2d 737, 185 P.2d 35 , discussed in § 31.106[4][a] as interpreting an analogous provision in an agreement as one that did not set forth a definite termination date (106 Cal. App. 2d 663, 666-667) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Termination Date Must Be Definite at Execution of Agreement

Castleman v. Scudder (1947) 81 Cal. App. 2d 737, 185 P.2d 35 , involved an appeal from a judgment entered pursuant to the trial court's order sustaining a demurrer to a petition for a writ of mandate to compel the real estate commissioner to restore petitioners' licenses as business opportunity brokers. The licenses had been revoked pursuant to former Bus. & Prof. Code § 10301(f) for making claims for brokers' commissions under exclusive agreements with no definite, specified termination dates. Petitioners contended that the agreements, which stated that the exclusive agency was for a minimum period of 30 days but was to terminate in no event earlier than three days after receipt of a notice of termination from the owners, contained definite, specified termination dates. The court of appeal disagreed and held that former Bus. & Prof. Code § 10301 required that the termination date be definitely set forth at the time of execution of the agreement and must not depend on the occurrence of a future event (81 Cal. App. 2d 737, 741) .

PLAINTIFF BROKER MAY NOT RECOVER A COMMISSION BECAUSE A COOPERATING BROKER MAY NOT RECOVER FROM A LISTING BROKER UNDER AN AGREEMENT TO SHARE A COMMISSION WHEN THE COMMISSION HAS NOT BEEN PAID BY THE OWNER TO THE LISTING BROKER.

A. No Recovery of Shared Commission When Not Paid by Owner. A cooperating broker may not recover a commission from a listing broker under the agreement between the brokers to share a commission when the commission has not been paid by the owner to the listing broker (Olsen v. Spomer (1961) 192 Cal. App. 2d 99, 102, 13 Cal. Rptr. 392 ; Smith v. Wright (1961) 188 Cal. App. 2d 790, 792, 10 Cal. Rptr. 675).

[Optional] B. No Implied Promise to Sue for Commission. A contract between brokers that provides for sharing a commission does not contain an implied promise on the part of the listing broker to sue for a commission (Olsen v. Spomer (1961) 192 Cal. App. 2d 99, 103-104, 13 Cal. Rptr. 392).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a cooperating broker's contention that he or she is entitled to recover a portion of a commission from a listing broker. This argument may be used when the cooperating broker seeks recovery under an agreement to share a commission with a listing broker and the commission has not been paid by the owner to the listing broker.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel is responding to the contention that a cooperating broker is entitled to recover a commission. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the facts showing that there was an agreement between the brokers to share a commission paid and that the commission has not been paid by the owner.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Recovery of Shared Commission When Not Paid by Owner

In Olsen v. Spomer (1961) 192 Cal. App. 2d 99, 13 Cal. Rptr. 392 , plaintiffs brought an action against defendants to recover a commission, alleging that defendant listing broker agreed to split a commission with plaintiffs and also had agreed to sue the listing broker's principal for the commission. Defendant had procured a listing from the owner of property, and defendant and plaintiffs agreed that plaintiffs would cooperate with defendant in finding a purchaser and would receive a share of the commission derived from the sale of the property. Plaintiffs procured a purchaser but the seller refused to go through with the sale. The trial court rendered judgment for defendant and plaintiffs appealed. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, holding that a condition precedent to payment of the commission to plaintiffs was the existence of a commission (192 Cal. App. 2d 99, 102) .

In Smith v. Wright (1961) 188 Cal. App. 2d 790, 10 Cal. Rptr. 675 , plaintiffs brought an action against the owners of property and against the listing brokers, seeking recovery of one third of a commission against the listing brokers. The complaint alleged that plaintiffs and defendants entered into an agreement whereby defendants agreed to pay plaintiffs one third of the total commission if plaintiffs produced a buyer. Plaintiffs procured a buyer but the owner of the property refused to sell and a commission was never paid. A demurrer to the complaint was sustained and a judgment of dismissal entered. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment of dismissal as to the causes of action against the brokers, holding that since the commission was never paid, plaintiffs could not maintain an action against the brokers under the agreement to share a commission (188 Cal. App. 2d 790, 792) .

[b] No Implied Promise to Sue for Commission

The facts and procedural background of Olsen v. Spomer (1961) 192 Cal. App. 2d 99, 13 Cal. Rptr. 392 , are discussed in § 31.107[3][a]. In Olsen, plaintiffs contended that the agreement between the brokers to share a commission contained an implied-in-law promise that the listing brokers would sue for a commission if it was not paid. The court recognized that every contract contains an implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing but stated that this covenant did not require defendant to sue its principal for a commission (192 Cal. App. 2d 99, 103-104) .

§ 31.108 Opposing Contention That Broker May Recover Commission--Broker Failed to Provide Statutory Form of Disclosure of Dual Agency [Civ. Code §§ 2079.14, 2079.16]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF _____ [name of broker] MAY NOT RECOVER A COMMISSION, BECAUSE HE/SHE/IT DID NOT PROVIDE [DEFENDANT] SELLER WITH THE DISCLOSURE OF DUAL AGENCY REQUIRED BY CIVIL CODE SECTIONS 2079.14, 2079.16 PRIOR TO EXECUTION OF THE LISTING AGREEMENT.

A. Dual Agency Must Be Disclosed by Statutory Form. A listing broker must provide the seller with a statutory form of disclosure of dual agency prior to entering into a listing agreement (Civ. Code §§ 2374, 2375).

B. Remedy Is No Liability for Commission. The remedy for the listing broker's failure to provide the statutory form of disclosure of dual agency to the seller prior to execution of the listing agreement is that the seller is not liable for the commission (Huijers v. DeMarrais (1992) 11 Cal. App. 4th 676, 684-686).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that a seller is not liable for a commission when the broker failed to provide the seller with the required disclosure of dual agency prior to execution of the listing agreement [see Civ. Code §§ 2079.14, 2079.16].

These points and authorities may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the argument that a seller is not liable for a commission when the broker has failed to provide the seller with the statutorily required disclosure of dual agency prior to execution of the listing agreement. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Remedy Is No Liability for Commission

In Huijers v. DeMarrais (1992) 11 Cal. App. 4th 676 , a broker was retained to obtain property for a nursery. The broker contacted a person who owned a nursery property and informed him that she had a client who was interested in purchasing his property. The broker signed a listing agreement with the seller but did not provide the seller with an agency disclosure form as required by former Civ. Code §§ 2374, 2375 (now see Civ. Code §§ 2079.14, 2079.16). The required form includes a disclosure of dual agency and describes the duties of a broker with a dual agency. During negotiations, the buyer told the seller that he could not raise the asking price over the price in the listing agreement because, under his understanding of California law, the seller would be liable for a commission on the listing price once the broker had found a ready, willing, and able buyer. The seller agreed to sell at the listing price and was provided with the disclosure form. The next day the seller rescinded the sales contract. The buyer filed a complaint against the seller for specific performance. The seller cross-complained against the buyer and the broker. The trial court awarded specific performance plus damages to the buyer. The seller appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court found that there was no dispute that the broker failed to provide the required disclosure form prior to execution of the listing agreement. The court also found that providing the disclosure statement when the purchase agreement was executed did not constitute substantial compliance with the statute (11 Cal. App. 4th 676, 684) . The court noted that there were no specific remedies in the disclosure statute but that former Civ. Code § 2382 (now see Civ. Code § 2079.24) provided that it did not diminish the duty of disclosure owed by brokers or relieve brokers from liability. Thus, the statute left common-law remedies for failure to disclose intact. The court held that the remedy for failure to disclose dual representation of both buyer and seller is that the principal is not liable to pay the broker's commission and may avoid the transaction. The court held that it is not enough to disclose the fact of dual agency, but that the agent must disclose all facts that would affect the judgment of the parties, and that the Legislature has determined that the information in the statutory disclosure form must be disclosed to alert the parties to the potentially harmful consequences of dual representation so the parties may make an informed judgment (11 Cal. App. 4th 676, 685-686) . The court found that the failure to disclose relieved the seller from liability for the commission but did not necessarily relieve the seller from liability to the buyer on the sales contract because the disclosure statement was given to the seller just prior to execution of the sales agreement. However, the seller may be entitled to rescind because the buyer's statement that the seller would be liable for a commission on the listing price was incorrect. Because the trial court had erroneously found that the statement was correct, the court reversed for further findings (11 Cal. App. 4th 676, 686) .

§ 31.120 Supporting Contention That Owner May Recover From Broker Secret Profits Acquired Through Agency--Owner Entitled to All Profits Excluding Broker's Agreed Compensation

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF OWNER MAY RECOVER FROM DEFENDANT BROKER THE SECRET PROFITS REALIZED FROM THE RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN PLAINTIFF AND DEFENDANT BECAUSE ALL BENEFITS AND ADVANTAGES ACQUIRED BY AN AGENT AS AN OUTGROWTH OF THE AGENCY, EXCLUSIVE OF THE AGREED COMPENSATION, ARE DEEMED TO HAVE BEEN ACQUIRED FOR THE BENEFIT OF THE PRINCIPAL, WHO IS ENTITLED TO RECOVER THEM.

A. Broker Is Agent of Owner. A real estate broker is an agent for the owner employing the broker (Charles B. Webster Real Estate v. Rickard (1971) 21 Cal. App. 3d 612, 614-618, 98 Cal. Rptr. 559).

B. Secret Profits Prohibited. An agent is not permitted to make any secret profit out of the subject of his or her agency (Crogan v. Metz (1956) 47 Cal. 2d 398, 404, 303 P.2d 1029).

C. Owner May Recover Secret Profits From Broker. A property owner is entitled to recover from a broker secret profits realized from the agency relationship between the broker and the owner because all benefits and advantages acquired by an agent as an outgrowth of the agency, exclusive of the agent's agreed compensation, are deemed to have been acquired by the broker for the benefit of the principal (Crogan v. Metz (1956) 47 Cal. 2d 398, 404, 303 P.2d 1029 ; Roberts v. Lomanto (2003) 112 Cal. App. 4th 1553, 1563-1564, 5 Cal. Rptr. 3d 866 ; Bate v. Marsteller (1965) 232 Cal. App. 2d 605, 616-617, 43 Cal. Rptr. 149).

[Optional] D. Secret Profits Recoverable Although Broker Acting Gratuitously. A broker acting as a gratuitous agent is held to the same standards as an agent for hire and may not make any secret profit from the transaction without being held accountable to the owner (Ramey v. Myers (1952) 111 Cal. App. 2d 679, 685, 245 P.2d 360).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that a property owner is entitled to recover from a real estate broker secret profits that are an outgrowth of the broker's agency. The word "owner" is used because the majority of cases deal with the relationship between a real estate broker and a property owner who is either attempting to sell his or her property or is attempting to purchase property. Thus, as appropriate, counsel may substitute the term "seller" or "purchaser" for the word "owner" in these points and authorities.

It appears that a party seeking to recover secret profits from a broker may do so in an action for money had and received or in an action for fraud [see Crogan v. Metz (1956) 47 Cal. 2d 398, 404, 303 P.2d 1029 (money had and received); Bate v. Marsteller (1965) 232 Cal. App. 2d 605, 616-617, 43 Cal. Rptr. 149 (fraud)].

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the owner's right to recover secret profits from a broker. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should discuss the facts showing that the owner seeks to recover secret profits that arose out of the agency of the real estate broker and thus, belong to the owner.

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 31.123 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Broker Is Agent of Owner

In Charles B. Webster Real Estate v. Rickard (1971) 21 Cal. App. 3d 612, 98 Cal. Rptr. 559 , plaintiff real estate broker brought an action to recover a commission pursuant to an exclusive right to sell listing agreement. The husband owner died prior to expiration of the term of the agreement and thereafter, defendant, the executor of the will of decedent husband, sold the property without going through plaintiff broker. Plaintiff filed a claim against the estate for the commission, which was rejected by defendant. Plaintiff then sued defendant and judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff. Defendant appealed, contending that the exclusive right to sell listing agreement terminated at the death of the owner.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment, agreeing that the listing agreement terminated on the death of the owner (21 Cal. App. 3d 612, 620) . The court stated that the relationship between a real estate broker and an owner is an agency relationship, and as such it terminated on the death of the owner (21 Cal. App. 3d 612, 614-615) .

[b] Secret Profits Prohibited

In Crogan v. Metz (1956) 47 Cal. 2d 398, 303 P.2d 1029 , plaintiff purchaser of real property brought an action for fraud and for money had and received against her real estate broker, his wife, and two other brokers who shared an office with her broker. To complete an exchange transaction involving three different parties, which would allow all three brokers to recover commissions on all the transactions, plaintiff's broker sold property to plaintiff at a price higher than the amount the broker knew the owner was willing to accept. The trial court granted judgment for plaintiff for the amount of the excess price paid ($15,000) and for interest and punitive damages. Defendants appealed, contending that there was no evidence to support the award of damages because the proper measure of damages for a purchaser defrauded in the purchase of property pursuant to Civ. Code § 3343 is the difference between the value of that parted with, and the value of that received, and that the trial court had refused to permit evidence on the value of the property purchased by plaintiff.

The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment for plaintiff regarding the $15,000, but reversed the judgment regarding the punitive damages (47 Cal. 2d 398, 406) . The Court noted that an agent is not permitted to make any secret profit out of the subject of his or her agency (47 Cal. 2d 398, 404) .

[c] Owner May Recover Secret Profits From Broker

The facts and procedural background of Crogan v. Metz (1956) 47 Cal. 2d 398, 303 P.2d 1029 , are discussed in § 31.120[3][b]. In affirming a judgment for plaintiff, the Court held that the award of $15,000 was supported by the cause of action for money had and received because it represented the secret profits that plaintiff's broker received as a result of the agency (47 Cal. 2d 398, 404) . The Court stated that the principal may waive the tort of the agent and assert a right to recover any secret profits made by the agent out of the agency, and plaintiff's right to do this is well recognized. Quoting from prior case law, the Court stated that an agent is not permitted to make any secret profit out of his or her agency, and all benefits and advantages acquired by the agent as an outgrowth of the agency, exclusive of the agent's agreed compensation, are deemed to have been acquired for the benefit of the principal, and the principal is entitled to recover such benefits in an appropriate action. The Court further noted that the measure of damages for fraud provided by Civ. Code § 3343 was not applicable to limit plaintiff's recovery because a principal's right to recover does not depend on any deceit of the agent but is based on the duties incident to the agency relationship and on the fact that all profits resulting from that relationship belong to the principal. Thus, the Court concluded, Civ. Code § 3343 does not operate to limit a principal's recovery to damages for fraud, even though the profits may have been acquired through the broker's fraudulent representations (47 Cal. 2d 398, 404-405) .

In Roberts v. Lomanto (2003) 112 Cal. App. 4th 1553, 5 Cal. Rptr. 3d 866 , a broker who entered into a written contract of purchase and sale with her principal, who subsequently assigned her rights to a third party with the principal's consent, did not notify the principal that she would receive an assignment fee until he was signing papers to close escrow, and refused to disclose the amount of the $1.2 million fee, breached her fiduciary duty to the principal by refusing to disclose the details of the assignment transaction (112 Cal. App. 4th 1553, 1568) . Execution of the purchase agreement did not complete the purpose of the broker's agency toward the principal and end the broker's duty toward him. The broker's contract of assignment with the third party, under which she in effect substituted the third party for herself as the buyer, became an essential part of the transaction, as did the principal's consent to the assignment. Thus, the broker's duty of disclosure extended to the assignment (112 Cal. App. 4th 1553, 1566-1567) . Because the broker's $1.2 million assignment fee was a form of compensation to her that was not disclosed to the principal until after the sale of the property was consummated, it was by definition a secret profit that the broker could not legally retain (112 Cal. App. 4th 1553, 1570) . The fact that the transaction yielded the principal his full asking price did not change that result (112 Cal. App. 4th 1553, 1570) . Thus, the court of appeal reversed a summary judgment for the broker and remanded the action, but did not direct the trial court to enter summary judgment for the seller, because the seller sought other remedies in addition to recovery of the broker's assignment fee as damages (112 Cal. App. 4th 1553, 1570-1571) .

In Bate v. Marsteller (1965) 232 Cal. App. 2d 605, 43 Cal. Rptr. 149 , plaintiff sellers brought an action against several defendants for fraud, one of the defendants being plaintiffs' real estate broker. Plaintiffs listed their property with defendant broker for $50,000. Defendant broker told the eventual purchasers that the property was listed for $37,000 and did not try to get a better price for plaintiffs. A purchase agreement was signed and an escrow opened but the eventual purchasers became dissatisfied with the transaction and were willing to lose their deposit rather than complete it. Defendant broker and the remaining defendants helped the purchasers to complete the transaction, with defendant broker obtaining an interest in the property. After the transaction was completed, the property was resold to a third party for a higher price. The trial court awarded plaintiffs $14,000 and punitive damages. Defendants appealed, contending that the special interrogatory given to the jury concerning the amount of the secret profits realized on the resale was improper because secret profits could not be recovered in the fraud cause of action but only in the equitable cause of action that was barred by the statute of limitations. The court of appeal held that the interrogatory was proper because secret profits are recoverable in a fraud cause of action (232 Cal. App. 2d 605, 617) .

The court stated that an agent is not entitled to make any secret profit out of the subject of his or her agency. Quoting prior case law, the court stated that all benefits and advantages acquired by the agent as an outgrowth of the agency, exclusive of the agent's agreed compensation, are deemed to have been acquired for the benefit of the principal, and the principal is entitled to recover such benefits in an appropriate action. The court noted that the principal's right to recover does not depend on any deceit of the agent but is based on the duties incident to the agency relationship and on the fact that all profits resulting from the relationship belong to the principal. The court stated that Civ. Code § 3343, which provides the measure of damages for fraud in the sale of property, does not operate to limit a principal's recovery to those damages, even though the profits may have been acquired through fraudulent representations. Thus, the court concluded, there can be a full recovery of any secret profits in an action for damages for fraud (232 Cal. App. 2d 605, 616-617) . For a discussion of issues raised on a previous appeal in this case, see § 31.121[3][a].

[d] Secret Profits Recoverable Although Broker Acting Gratuitously

In Ramey v. Myers (1952) 111 Cal. App. 2d 679, 245 P.2d 360 , plaintiffs, husband and wife, brought an action against their real estate broker and his associate for fraud. Plaintiffs had been friends with one of the brokers for many years and asked him for his help in acquiring some income property. A piece of property was shown to plaintiffs and they were told that the asking price on the property was $70,000. Plaintiffs agreed to buy the property by exchanging their property in which they had an equity of $30,000 and assuming two trust deeds in the amount of $40,000. However, unknown to plaintiffs, their broker's associate had an option to buy the property plaintiffs eventually purchased. The broker exercised this option and purchased the property at a much lower price than the price plaintiffs were going to pay and then turned around and sold it to plaintiffs at the price of $70,000.

The trial court instructed the jury on two theories of the case: (1) agency and the plaintiffs' right to recover secret profits; and (2) fraud on the part of the seller. The jury awarded judgment to plaintiffs. Defendants appealed, contending that the complaint was for fraud and the trial court should not have admitted any evidence on the subject of agency and secret profits. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment (111 Cal. App. 2d 679, 686) . The complaint essentially alleged that one of the defendants was an old friend of plaintiffs'; plaintiffs were inexperienced in real estate matters; plaintiffs asked for help in locating some property to buy; and plaintiffs, in purchasing the property, were relying on the friendship and confidential relationship between them and the broker who was the old friend. The court held that, although the complaint did not directly plead that defendants were the agents of plaintiffs, it sufficiently alleged the existence of a gratuitous agency between plaintiffs and defendants (111 Cal. App. 2d 679, 685) . The court stated that while a gratuitous agent cannot be compelled to perform under an agency nor be held liable in damages for a failure to do so, when the gratuitous agent does enter into such performance he or she is, in common with other agents, bound to exercise the utmost good faith in dealing with his or her principal. The court further stated that a gratuitous agent cannot, while acting for his or her principal, make any secret profit out of the transaction being conducted by the agent without being accountable to the principal (111 Cal. App. 2d 679, 685) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Owner May Recover Secret Profits From Broker

In Menzel v. Salka (1960) 179 Cal. App. 2d 612, 4 Cal. Rptr. 78 , the court of appeal affirmed a judgment in favor of plaintiffs sellers and against defendant broker for secret profits and recovery of a commission paid (179 Cal. App. 2d 612, 624) . Plaintiffs entered into an agreement to sell their real property to a buyer procured by defendant. After depositing $6,200 in escrow, the buyer told defendant that she did not want to complete the transaction and was willing to forfeit $5,000 of the deposit to plaintiffs. Defendant did not disclose this fact to plaintiffs. Instead, defendant purchased the property from the buyer as soon as plaintiffs made the sale to the buyer by paying the buyer the purchase price, less the $5,000 deposit. The court of appeal stated that defendant failed to disclose to plaintiffs the fact that the buyer was willing to, in effect, sell her deposit of $6,200 to plaintiffs for $5,000, and as a result acquired the $5,000 for himself. Thus, the court held that defendant was liable to the owner for the secret profit of $5,000 (179 Cal. App. 2d 612, 622-623) .

The facts and procedural background of Ramey v. Myers (1952) 111 Cal. App. 2d 679, 245 P.2d 360 , are discussed in § 31.120[3][d]. In Ramey, the court held defendants real estate brokers liable for secret profits earned on the sale of the property to plaintiffs. The court stated that in the absence of special circumstances, moneys received by a person acting as agent do not belong to the agent but the law implies a promise to pay them to the principal on demand. The court further noted that the principal's right to recover secret profits does not depend on any deceit of the agent but is based on the duties incident to the agency relationship. Thus, Civ. Code § 3343, which sets forth the measure of damages recoverable in an action for fraud in the sale of real property, does not limit a principal's recovery of profits, even if the profits were acquired through fraudulent representations (111 Cal. App. 2d 679, 685) .

§ 31.121 Supporting Contention That Owner May Recover Damages for Fraud [Civ. Code § 1710(3)] From Real Estate Broker When Broker Fails to Disclose Material Facts

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF OWNER MAY RECOVER DAMAGES FOR FRAUD FROM DEFENDANT BROKER BECAUSE A BROKER WHO FAILS TO DISCLOSE ALL MATERIAL FACTS, WITHIN THE BROKER'S KNOWLEDGE THAT MIGHT AFFECT THE OWNER'S DECISION TO ENTER INTO THE TRANSACTION, IS LIABLE FOR FRAUD.

A. Owner May Recover Damages for Fraud When Broker Fails to Disclose Material Facts. A real estate broker owes to an owner a duty to disclose all material facts concerning the transaction within the broker's knowledge that might affect the owner's decision, and a failure to do so is fraud for which the owner may recover damages (see Civ. Code § 1710(3); Jorgensen v. Beach 'N' Bay Realty, Inc. (1981) 125 Cal. App. 3d 155, 159 ; Bate v. Marsteller (1959) 175 Cal. App. 2d 573, 581-583, 346 P.2d 903).

[Optional] B. Owner May Recover Damages for Constructive Fraud When Broker Breaches Fiduciary Duty by Not Investigating Material Representations Made By Seller. A real estate broker is liable for constructive fraud when he or she breaches fiduciary duties by failing (1) to investigate material representations made by the seller or (2) to notify the client of the reliance on the seller's representation (Salahutdin v. Valley of California, Inc. (1994) 24 Cal. App. 4th 555, 561-563).

[Optional] C. Owner May Recover Damages for Constructive Fraud When Broker Breaches Fiduciary Duty by Failing to Disclose Defects of Property Listed in Notes Taken by Broker's Colleague. A real estate broker is liable for constructive fraud when he or she breaches fiduciary duties by failing to disclose material information within its possession (Michel v. Moore & Associates, Inc. (2007) 156 Cal. App. 4th 756, 763, 67 Cal. Rptr. 3d 797).

[Optional] D. Fact That Broker Is Purchaser Must Be Disclosed. The fact that the broker is the purchaser, either directly or indirectly, of the property sold by the owner must be disclosed to the owner (Batson v. Strehlow (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 662, 675-676).

[Optional] E. Purchaser Related to Broker Must Be Disclosed. The fact that the broker is related to the buyer in any way, which would suggest a reasonable possibility that the broker is acquiring an interest in the property, is material and must be disclosed (Sierra Pacific Industries v. Carter (1980) 104 Cal. App. 3d 579, 582, 163 Cal. Rptr. 764 ; Loughlin v. Idora Realty Co. (1968) 259 Cal. App. 2d 619, 631, 66 Cal. Rptr. 747).

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a party's contention that a property owner may recover damages for fraud from a broker who fails to disclose material facts, concerning the transaction and within the broker's knowledge, that might affect the owner's decision to enter into the transaction [see Judicial Council of California Civil Jury Instructions, CACI No. 4107, "Duty of Disclosure by Real Estate Broker" (LexisNexis Matthew Bender, official publisher)].

This memorandum may be combined with memoranda pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the owner's right to recover damages for fraud for the broker's failure to disclose material facts. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts showing that the broker failed to disclose facts within the broker's knowledge that would have been material to the owner's decision to enter into the transaction.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Owner May Recover Damages for Fraud When Broker Fails to Disclose Material Facts

In Jorgensen v. Beach 'N' Bay Realty, Inc. (1981) 125 Cal. App. 3d 155 , plaintiff brought an action for fraud, misrepresentation, breach of fiduciary duty, and negligence against her real estate broker and the agents working in the broker's office. Plaintiff had listed her residential property with defendant broker for $214,500. At about the same time, defendants were looking for investment property for a family from Mexico and showed them plaintiff's property. Defendants obtained an offer of $200,000 from them that plaintiff reluctantly agreed to accept after defendants told her that if plaintiff made any higher counteroffer, she would risk losing the deal. During the time the property was in escrow, one of the defendant agents obtained a listing on the property from the purchasers. After escrow closed, the property was sold to a third party for $27,000 more than plaintiff's sales price.

The trial court granted a nonsuit and plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal reversed the judgment, holding that there was sufficient evidence on all four causes of action to allow the case to go to the jury (125 Cal. App. 3d 155, 165) . The trial record showed that defendants had disclosed to plaintiff that they were engaged in a dual agency representing both the purchasers and plaintiff in the transaction. However, the court stated, defendants owed to plaintiff a duty to disclose all material facts within their knowledge that might have affected plaintiff's decision to accept the purchasers' offer. The court stated that the fact that the purchasers intended to use the property for investment purposes and the fact that defendants had a personal stake in striking a good bargain for the purchasers could be considered by a jury to be material facts that could have influenced plaintiff's decision to accept the purchasers' offer (125 Cal. App. 3d 155, 160-161) . It also appeared from the trial record that defendants intentionally misled plaintiff to believe that the purchasers intended to reside on the property by telling plaintiff that they would make good neighbors. The court stated that all of these facts could support a jury verdict for fraud, intentional and/or negligent misrepresentation, and/or breach of fiduciary duty (125 Cal. App. 3d 155, 160) .

In Bate v. Marsteller (1959) 175 Cal. App. 2d 573, 346 P.2d 903 , plaintiffs sellers of real property brought an action to recover damages for fraud against defendants, a broker, his agents and employees, and the husband and wife purchasers of plaintiffs' real property. Plaintiffs listed their property with defendant broker for $50,000. Defendants found a husband and wife willing to purchase the property and told them that if they made an offer of $37,000, plaintiffs would accept it. Thereafter, plaintiffs entered into a purchase agreement with defendants for $37,000. However, in the middle of the transaction, defendants husband and wife wanted to back out and forfeit their deposit and, to this end, refused to deposit the rest of the requested money in escrow. Defendants, without telling this to plaintiffs, deposited the money into escrow and acquired an interest in the property.

The trial court granted judgment for defendants and plaintiffs appealed. The court of appeal reversed the judgment for defendant broker and his agents and servants but affirmed as to the husband and wife purchasers (175 Cal. App. 2d 573, 584) . The court held that defendants failed to disclose to plaintiffs the following material facts: (1) the fact that defendants told the husband and wife to offer the property for $37,000; (2) the fact that the husband and wife wanted to back out of the transaction and forfeit their deposit; (3) the fact that defendants put up the balance of the deposit; and (4) the fact that defendants acquired an interest in the property (175 Cal. App. 2d 573, 580) . The court stated that the relationship between a broker and his or her principal is fiduciary in nature and a broker has the duty to act in the highest good faith toward his or her principal. This duty of good faith, the court stated, places a legal obligation on the broker to disclose to his or her principal all facts within the broker's knowledge that are material to the matter in which the broker is employed (175 Cal. App. 2d 573, 580-581) . The court held that, although the evidence supported the trial court's finding that the sales price was fair, plaintiffs were still damaged in the amount of the commission paid, to which defendants were not entitled (175 Cal. App. 2d 573, 583-584) . For a discussion of issues raised on a later appeal in this case, see § 31.120[3][c].

In Salahutdin v. Valley of California, Inc. (1994) 24 Cal. App. 4th 555, 561-563 , plaintiffs, purchasers of real property, filed a negligent misrepresentation action against their real estate broker. Plaintiffs had told their broker that they wanted to purchase property that could be subdivided into two parcels. The broker told plaintiffs that the property in question could be subdivided if it was more than one acre. The broker found the property listed in the multiple listing sheet as one acre plus. The broker then told plaintiffs he would have no problem subdividing in the future. However, the broker's representations were not true. The property was less than one acre in size. The broker failed to tell plaintiff that he had not independently verified the information on the multiple listing sheet. Plaintiffs filed suit.

The trial court found in the plaintiff's favor and the court of appeals affirmed. The appellate court held that the broker breached his fiduciary duty and committed constructive fraud (24 Cal. App. 4th 555, 561) . The court found that a broker who is merely an innocent conduit of the seller's fraud may be innocent of actual fraud, but in this situation the broker may be liable for negligence on a constructive fraud theory if he or she passes on the misstatements as true without personally investigating them (24 Cal. App. 4th 555, 562) . The broker in this case thus had a duty to his clients to refrain from advising them that the parcel was more than an acre and that it could therefore be subdivided when he did not know that to be the case and when he knew these facts to be material to plaintiffs' decision to purchase the property. Although the broker was not required to investigate the sellers' representations or the truth of the description contained in the multiple listing service sheet before showing the property to plaintiffs, he was at least required to tell plaintiffs that he had not verified the information he was passing on to them and that he was simply relying on the description provided by the sellers (24 Cal. App. 4th 555, 563) .

In Michel v. Moore & Associates, Inc. (2007) 156 Cal. App. 4th 756, 67 Cal. Rptr. 3d 797 , Kirkpatrick was a real estate agent working for defendant licensed real estate broker (Moore). Kirkpatrick inspected a home owned by a friend's parents. Kirkpatrick hoped to become the listing agent if the parents decided to sell their house, and took notes of the property's defects, including possible water leaks, cracked interior walls, and damage to the pool. Kirkpatrick planned to use his notes to identify needed repairs and possible disclosure to potential buyers. The house went on the market. Kirkpatrick, who had not received the sellers' listing, showed the house to plaintiffs, who were represented by an agent (Lagudis) who was also working for Moore. During the home tour, Kirkpatrick did not point out any of the defects from his notes.

Plaintiffs and the sellers agreed on the terms of sale and entered escrow. Plaintiffs' agent visually inspected the property and gave plaintiffs her obligatory transfer disclosure statement (TDS). In accord with Kirkpatrick's notes, the TDS noted that cracks had been patched and painted. The TDS did not, however, disclose other defects listed in Kirkpatrick's notes. One of Kirkpatrick's tasks as Moore's "transaction coordinator" was reviewing the sales files of Moore's agents to ensure that paperwork was in order before escrows closed. Accordingly, Kirkpatrick reviewed Lagudis's TDS to plaintiff. Kirkpatrick did not tell Lagudis about his notes, nor did he augment her TDS with anything from those notes. Plaintiffs thus did not know the contents of Kirkpatrick's notes before escrow closed.

Cracks appeared in the walls of the house after plaintiffs moved in. A soils engineer discovered poor topsoil and fill had caused significant instability and ground movement on the property. He found the movement had tilted the house's foundation about 3.5 inches from level, which in his opinion caused the repeated cracks in the walls. To stabilize the house, he recommended placing caissons under its foundation down to solid bedrock. Plaintiffs subsequently met with Kirkpatrick and told him about the soil instability and cracks in the walls, which would likely cost about $500,000 to repair. Kirkpatrick replied that during his inspection before the house was put on the market he had seen cracks big enough to slip a coin into. Plaintiffs learned about Kirkpatrick's notes at that time, and asked for a copy, which he provided. Thereafter, plaintiffs brought an action against defendants including Moore. The trial court granted Moore's motion for a judgment of nonsuit on plaintiffs' cause of action for negligent nondisclosure. The jury returned a verdict for defendants on plaintiffs' causes of action for violation of Civ. Code § 2079 (seller's agent has duty to visually inspect property and disclose results of that inspection to buyer) and fraudulent concealment. The court of appeal reversed the judgment of nonsuit and remanded the action (156 Cal. App. 4th 756, 765) .

The court of appeal stated that the fiduciary duty owed by a broker to his or her client is greater than the negligence standard of due care under Section 2079 (Civ. Code § 2079.2 (standard of care is of a "reasonably prudent real estate licensee")). Thus, a broker can be professionally competent under Section 2079 without satisfying the greater duty of a trusted fiduciary (156 Cal. App. 4th 756, 762) . The court stated that a fiduciary must tell its principal about all information it possesses that is material to the principal's interests. A fiduciary's failure to share material information with the principal is constructive fraud, a term of art obviating actual fraudulent intent (Civ. Code § 1573) (156 Cal. App. 4th 756, 762-763) .

The court held that the trial court's dismissal of plaintiffs' cause of action for negligent nondisclosure was error because it involved elements different from their Civ. Code § 2079 and fraudulent concealment causes of action. For those latter two causes of action, Lagudis might have been competent in her visual inspection of the property in preparing her TDS for plaintiffs and Kirkpatrick might have had no fraudulent intent in not telling plaintiffs about his inspection and notes before escrow closed, thus justifying the jury's verdict. However, that did not mean that Moore did not injure plaintiffs by not telling them about Kirkpatrick's notes before they bought their house (156 Cal. App. 4th 756, 762) .

[b] Fact That Broker Is Purchaser Must Be Disclosed

In Batson v. Strehlow (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 662 , the executrix of the husband seller's estate brought an action against numerous defendants, including defendant broker, to recover a commission paid to defendant broker. The guardian of the estate of the incompetent husband seller mailed a listing on property owned by the husband and wife to numerous brokers, and defendant responded with a bid on the property made by San Antonio Development Co., Inc., signed by defendant broker as president. Defendant broker and his wife were the only shareholders in the corporation, but this fact was not disclosed to the guardian. The bid was accepted, the sale went through, and a commission was paid to defendant broker. However, the purchase price on the property was not paid by San Antonio Development Co., Inc. but by defendant and two of his business associates in an investment company. Shortly after the sale was completed, the property was conveyed to the investment company, and on the following day, one third was conveyed to defendant broker, and to each one of his two associates.

The trial court granted judgment for plaintiff against all defendants except the guardian of the husband's estate, and only defendant broker appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment (68 Cal. 2d 662, 677) . The Court stated that defendant broker failed to disclose the facts that defendant and his wife owned all stock in San Antonio Investment Co., Inc. and that defendant and his associates, and not San Antonio Investment Co., Inc., were the actual buyers of the property (68 Cal. 2d 662, 674) . Because of this, the Court held that defendant violated his fiduciary duty as a real estate agent by failing to disclose all the material facts of the transaction and becoming an undisclosed purchaser of his principal's property (68 Cal. 2d 662, 676) . The Court stated that a real estate agent is charged with a duty of fullest disclosure of all material facts concerning the transaction that might affect the principal's decision (68 Cal. 2d 662, 674-675) . The Court noted that the rule that an agent employed to sell the principal's property may not become the purchaser without the principal's full knowledge and consent is aimed at an indirect or collusive sale or transfer, as well as at a direct sale or transfer to the agent, and extends to the agent's spouse; or at an indirect or collusive sale to some other relative of the agent, or to his or her partner or employee. The Court stated that the rule also applies when the transfer is made to a corporation in which the agent has a large concealed interest (68 Cal. 2d 662, 675-676) .

[c] Purchaser Related to Broker Must Be Disclosed

In Sierra Pacific Industries v. Carter (1980) 104 Cal. App. 3d 579, 163 Cal. Rptr. 764 , plaintiff seller of real property brought an action against a broker for fraud. Defendant broker obtained a listing for $85,000 to sell plaintiff's 10-acre piece of property. Defendant broker sold it to his daughter and son-in-law and received a $5,000 commission. The fact that the purchasers were related to defendant broker was not disclosed to plaintiff. The jury returned a verdict for defendant broker and plaintiff moved for a new trial. The motion was granted on the basis of inadequacy of damages, insufficient evidence, and that the verdict was against the law. Defendant appealed from the order granting the new trial.

The court of appeal affirmed the order granting a new trial with instructions to the court below to direct a verdict against defendant as to duty and breach of duty and to try the issue of damages (104 Cal. App. 3d 579, 583) . The court stated that an agent bears a fiduciary relationship to his or her principal, which requires among other things, disclosure of all information in the agent's possession relevant to the subject matter of the agency. The court noted that a real estate agent must refrain from dual representation in a transaction unless he or she obtains the consent of both principals after full disclosure. This means, the court stated, that under most circumstances if the agent is related to the buyer in a way that suggests a reasonable possibility that the agent himself or herself could indirectly be acquiring an interest in the subject of the property, then the relationship is a material fact that must be disclosed (104 Cal. App. 3d 579, 581-582) .

In Loughlin v. Idora Realty Co. (1968) 259 Cal. App. 2d 619, 66 Cal. Rptr. 747 , plaintiffs, husband and wife sellers, brought an action for fraud against defendant broker, defendant broker's wife and mother-in-law, and defendant broker's real estate agent. Plaintiffs listed their property with defendant for $15,000. Thereafter, defendant presented plaintiffs with an offer of $12,000 from defendant's mother-in-law, which plaintiffs accepted. While the property was in escrow, defendant negotiated a resale of the property to a third party for $14,000. Both sales went through the same escrow at approximately the same time. Defendant received a commission on plaintiffs' sale, which he split with his agent. The proceeds from the resale were deposited in defendant's trust account to be held for his mother-in-law, and defendant charged the account for his commission.

The trial court granted judgment for all defendants and held that defendants did not commit a fraud on plaintiffs or make any secret profits. Plaintiffs appealed, and the court of appeal reversed (259 Cal. App. 2d 619, 633) . The court stated that a real estate agent has, among other duties, the duty to make to the principal the fullest disclosure of all material facts concerning the transaction that might affect the principal's decision (259 Cal. App. 2d 619, 629) . Defendant broker, the court pointed out, did not disclose the $14,000 resale and the fact that the proposed buyer was defendant broker's mother-in-law. The court held that when the seller's real estate agent is obligated to disclose to his or her principal the identity of the buyer, and when the buyer is not the agent but occupies with the agent a blood, marital, or other relationship that would suggest a reasonable possibility that the agent could be indirectly acquiring an interest in the property, such relationship is a material fact that the agent must disclose to the principal (259 Cal. App. 2d 619, 631) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Owner May Recover Damages for Fraud When Broker Fails to Disclose Material Facts

In Zikratch v. Stillwell (1961) 196 Cal. App. 2d 535, 16 Cal. Rptr. 660 , plaintiffs' sellers brought an action against their broker for damages. Defendant secured a listing on plaintiffs' property for $1,500 per acre and eventually purchased the property himself with two other businessmen after disclosure to plaintiffs. Defendant did not, however, disclose that he had been negotiating with another group of businessmen to resell the property to them for $3,500 an acre. Defendant eventually sold the property he purchased from plaintiffs for this higher price. The jury returned a verdict for plaintiffs, and defendant appealed. The court of appeal affirmed (196 Cal. App. 2d 535, 544) . The court stated that defendant was acting as a fiduciary and was clearly obligated to fully disclose all facts within his knowledge that were cogent to the sale and that might influence plaintiffs' willingness to sell, and thus defendant should have disclosed that there was a higher offer on the property (196 Cal. App. 2d 535, 541) . Defendant contended that his liability should not be in damages but in the amount that he personally received on the sale. The court of appeal rejected this contention and pointed out that plaintiffs clearly brought an action for damages, not secret profits. The court stated that in the case of fraud by a fiduciary, the measure of damages is not necessarily limited to the amount defendant was unjustly enriched but may be the amount that will compensate the injured party for all detriment proximately caused (196 Cal. App. 2d 535, 543) .

[b] Purchaser Related to Broker Must Be Disclosed

In Smith v. Zak (1971) 20 Cal. App. 3d 785, 98 Cal. Rptr. 242 , the court of appeal reversed a judgment in favor of defendants in consolidated actions brought by plaintiff seller against defendants broker and his wife. The actions were for fraud, rescission, declaratory relief, and to quiet title to plaintiff's property that was held in the name of defendants. Plaintiff listed the property with defendant, and a purchase and sale agreement was eventually entered into between plaintiff and a real estate salesman by the name of Martin, or his nominee, for less than the listing price. Martin was a close personal friend of defendant broker and in fact was in the process of applying for a real estate license under the sponsorship of defendant broker at the time. It turned out that defendant and his wife were the actual purchasers of the property. The court of appeal, in reversing the judgment of the trial court, stated that defendant failed to disclose to plaintiff the facts of defendants' personal and professional relationship with Martin or the fact that defendant himself was the actual purchaser of the property. Relying on Loughlin v. Idora Realty Co. (1968) 259 Cal. App. 2d 619, 66 Cal. Rptr. 747 , discussed in § 31.121[3][c], the court stated that among the material facts that must be disclosed to the owner is the fact that the buyer occupies a close relationship to the broker. The court quoted Loughlin and stated that when the buyer is not the agent but occupies a blood, marital, or other relationship with the agent that would suggest the reasonable possibility that the agent could be indirectly acquiring an interest in the property himself or herself, such a relationship is a material fact that must be disclosed (20 Cal. App. 3d 785, 794) .

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF OWNER MAY RECOVER FROM DEFENDANT BROKER THE COMMISSION PLAINTIFF PAID TO DEFENDANT BECAUSE DEFENDANT BROKER FORFEITED THE RIGHT TO A COMMISSION BY FAILING TO DISCLOSE THAT _____ [THE BROKER IS PURCHASING THE PROPERTY or THE PURCHASER IS RELATED IN SOME WAY TO THE BROKER SO AS TO SUGGEST THE POSSIBILITY THAT THE BROKER IS ACQUIRING AN INTEREST IN THE PROPERTY].

Owner May Recover Commission Paid. An owner may recover the commission paid to a broker when the broker fails to disclose to the owner that the broker is purchasing the property or that the purchaser is in some way related to the broker so as to suggest the possibility that the broker is acquiring an interest in the property (Batson v. Strehlow (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 662, 675-676 (broker as purchaser); Sierra Pacific Industries v. Carter (1980) 104 Cal. App. 3d 579, 582-583, 163 Cal. Rptr. 764 (purchaser related to broker)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that an owner may recover from a broker the commission paid to the broker when the broker either (1) fails to disclose that he or she is the purchaser, or (2) fails to disclose that the purchaser is related to the broker in some way so as to suggest the possibility that the broker is acquiring an interest in the property. It appears that recovery of the commission paid can be an element of damages that are recoverable for fraud for failure to disclose material facts [see Sierra Pacific Industries v. Carter (1980) 104 Cal. App. 3d 579, 582, 163 Cal. Rptr. 764 ; Bate v. Marsteller (1959) 175 Cal. App. 2d 573, 584, 346 P.2d 903] . Therefore, in an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities set out in § 31.121.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the owner's right to recover the commission paid to a broker. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the facts showing that the broker either failed to disclose that he or she was the purchaser of the property or that he or she was related in some way to the purchaser so as to suggest a possibility that the broker was acquiring an interest in the property.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Owner May Recover Commission Paid

The facts and procedural background of Batson v. Strehlow (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 662 , are discussed in § 31.121[3][b]. In Baston, the executrix of the estate of decedent husband seller brought an action to recover a commission paid to defendant broker. Defendant broker submitted an offer on the husband's and wife's property to the guardian of the incompetent husband's estate. The offer was signed by defendant broker, as president of the company that was supposedly purchasing the property. The company was, however, owned solely by defendant broker and his wife and it turned out that the purchase money was paid solely by defendant and two other associates who were eventually deeded the property. The trial court granted judgment to plaintiff and defendant appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment (68 Cal. 2d 662, 677) . The Court stated that it is clear that defendant violated his fiduciary duty as an agent by failing to fully disclose all material facts of the transaction and by becoming an undisclosed purchaser of his principal's property. Therefore, the court stated, defendant was not entitled to compensation for acting for the estate when he was indeed acting for himself and plaintiff had a right to recover the commission paid (68 Cal. 2d 662, 676) .

The facts and procedural background of Sierra Pacific Industries v. Carter (1980) 104 Cal. App. 3d 579, 163 Cal. Rptr. 764 , are discussed in § 31.121[3][c]. In Carter, plaintiff seller brought an action against defendant broker for fraud. Defendant broker obtained a listing on plaintiff's property and eventually sold it to his daughter and son-in-law without disclosing this to plaintiff. The jury returned a verdict for defendant and plaintiff's motion for a new trial was granted. The court of appeal affirmed the order for a new trial (104 Cal. App. 3d 579, 583) . The court held that defendant had breached his duty to disclose because if a broker is related to the purchaser in such a way as to suggest a reasonable possibility that the broker could directly be acquiring an interest in the property, this must be disclosed to the owner (104 Cal. App. 3d 579, 582) . The court further stated that plaintiff was entitled to recover a minimum of $5,000 in damages, representing the amount of the commission, because the broker forfeited his right to a commission by breaching the duty of disclosure (104 Cal. App. 3d 579, 582-583) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Owner May Recover Commission Paid

The facts and procedural background of Bate v. Marsteller (1959) 175 Cal. App. 2d 573, 346 P.2d 903 , are discussed in § 31.121[3][a]. In Bate, defendant broker and his agents and employees acquired an interest in plaintiffs' property without disclosing this fact to plaintiffs. Plaintiffs brought an action for fraud and the trial court granted judgment for defendants. The court of appeal reversed (175 Cal. App. 2d 573, 584) . The court held that defendant breached his duty to disclose material facts to plaintiffs (175 Cal. App. 2d 573, 580) . The court stated that, although the trial court found that plaintiffs' property was worth the sale price, the trial court erred in concluding that plaintiffs were not damaged. The court of appeal held that plaintiffs were damaged in the amount of the commission paid, to which defendant and his agents and employees were not entitled (175 Cal. App. 2d 573, 581-582) .

§ 31.123 Opposing Contention That Owner May Recover From Broker Secret Profits Acquired Through Agency--Broker Owes No Duty to Disclose That Broker Is Purchasing Property When Listing Is Net Listing

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF OWNER MAY NOT RECOVER SECRET PROFITS ACQUIRED BY DEFENDANT BROKER AS AN OUTGROWTH OF THE AGENCY BECAUSE A BROKER OWES NO DUTY TO AN OWNER TO DISCLOSE THE FACT THAT THE BROKER IS PURCHASING THE PROPERTY WHEN THE LISTING IS A NET LISTING.

A. Net Listing Defined. A net listing contract is one in which the owner agrees to accept a specified net price of the property to be sold, and the broker's compensation for negotiating the sale is any amount in excess of the specified figure (Loughlin v. Idora Realty Co. (1968) 259 Cal. App. 2d 619, 626-627, 66 Cal. Rptr. 747).

B. Owner May Not Recover Broker's Profits Under Net Listing. A broker is not liable to an owner for secret profits when the broker fails to disclose that he or she is purchasing the property because a broker does not owe a duty to disclose this fact when the agreement is a net listing (Pascal v. Cotton (1962) 205 Cal. App. 2d 597, 600-601, 23 Cal. Rptr. 357).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a party's contention that a property owner may recover profits acquired by a broker as an outgrowth of the agency. This argument may be used when the broker has purchased the property without disclosure of this fact and the listing was a net listing. Only when the property owner has arrived at the net listing price without influence by the broker and the property was sold for the full net price, however, does the broker owe no duty to disclose the fact that he or she is purchasing the property under a net listing [see Sierra Pacific Industries v. Carter (1980) 104 Cal. App. 3d 579, 582, 163 Cal. Rptr. 764 ; Loughlin v. Idora Realty Co. (1968) 259

Cal. App. 2d 619, 627-628, 66 Cal. Rptr. 747] .

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel is responding to the contention that a property owner may recover profits from a broker. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 31.120.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Net Listing Defined

The facts and procedural background of Loughlin v. Idora Realty Co. (1968) 259 Cal. App. 2d 619, 66 Cal. Rptr. 747 , are discussed in § 31.121[3][c]. In Loughlin, the court of appeal reversed a judgment in favor of defendant broker in an action brought by plaintiffs owners to recover secret profits (259 Cal. App. 2d 619, 633) . The property was sold to defendant's mother-in-law without disclosure of the relationship and then was resold at a much higher price. Defendant contended that the two contracts under which the property was listed were net sale contracts and therefore, that defendant owed to plaintiffs no duty of disclosure. The court of appeal held that defendant owed a duty to disclose because the price specified in the first contract was not realized by plaintiffs and the evidence did not show that plaintiffs independently arrived at the net price set in the second contract (259 Cal. App. 2d 619, 627-628) . The court defined a net listing as one in which the owner agrees to accept a specified net price for the property to be sold and the agent's compensation for negotiating a sale is any amount received in excess of the specified figure (259 Cal. App. 2d 619, 626) .

[b] Owner May Not Recover Broker's Profits Under Net Listing

In Pascal v. Cotton (1962) 205 Cal. App. 2d 597, 23 Cal. Rptr. 357 , plaintiffs, husband and wife sellers, brought an action against defendant broker and his associate to recover secret profits allegedly received on two transactions, one of them being a sale of property under a net listing. Plaintiffs gave defendant a listing on their property and told him that they wanted $37,500 net to them. The evidence disclosed that plaintiffs decided themselves on the selling price without influence by defendant and did not care what kind of commission defendant made as long as plaintiffs received the asking price. Defendant, his associate, and the associate's wife bought the property. This was not disclosed to plaintiffs. The trial court granted judgment for defendants and plaintiffs appealed. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment (205 Cal. App. 2d 597, 602) .

The court held that the listing was a net listing and that the net price was arrived at without influence by defendants. Thus, defendants had not breached any fiduciary obligation of disclosure by buying the property themselves without disclosing this fact to plaintiffs (205 Cal. App. 2d 597, 600-601) . Relying on prior case law, the court stated that when an owner authorizes an agent to sell his or her property for a fixed price net to the owner, with the understanding that the agent selling the property shall be entitled to any excess thereover as a commission or shall look to the purchaser for the payment of the commission, the agent may, without violating any trust relationship, purchase the property on his or her own account or act as the agent of others in acquiring the same (205 Cal. App. 2d 597, 600) .

§ 31.140 Supporting Contention That Purchaser Under Fraudulently Induced Real Estate Sales Contract May Rescind and Obtain Restitution or Recover Damages for Fraud From Seller--Seller-Owner Responsible for Fraudulent Representations of Broker or Salesperson

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF PURCHASER _____ [MAY RECOVER DAMAGES FOR FRAUD FROM DEFENDANT OWNER-SELLER or IS ENTITLED TO RESCIND THE REAL ESTATE SALES CONTRACT BETWEEN PLAINTIFF AND DEFENDANT OWNER-SELLER AND TO OBTAIN RESTITUTION AS THE RESULT OF FRAUD] BECAUSE DEFENDANT SELLER-OWNER IS RESPONSIBLE FOR FRAUDULENT MISREPRESENTATIONS MADE BY HIS/HER BROKER OR SALESPERSON ACTING WITHIN THE AUTHORITY OF THE AGENCY.

A. Seller-Owner Responsible for Fraudulent Misrepresentations of Agent. A seller-owner is responsible to the purchaser of the property for the fraudulent misrepresentations of the seller's broker or salesperson that are made while the broker or salesperson is acting within his or her authority (see Civ. Code §§ 2338, 2339; Miller v. Wood (1961) 188 Cal. App. 2d 711, 714, 10 Cal. Rptr. 770 ; Wilbur v. Wilson (1960) 179 Cal. App. 2d 314, 317, 3 Cal. Rptr. 770).

B. Damages or Restitution Based on Rescission for Fraudulent Inducement. A purchaser who has been induced by fraud to enter into a contract to purchase property may, on discovery of the fraud, either rescind the contract and sue for the return of the consideration paid or allow it to stand and sue for damages (see Civ. Code §§ 1689, 1692 (rescission), 3343 (damages); Richard v. Baker (1956) 141 Cal. App. 2d 857, 861, 297 P.2d 674 ; Williamson v. Clapper (1948) 88 Cal. App. 2d 645, 653, 199 P.2d 337).

[Optional] C. False Statement Without Sufficient Information Is Actionable Fraud. A broker's or salesman's false statement made without sufficient information to warrant it is actionable as a fraudulent misrepresentation (see Civ. Code § 1572(2); Richard v. Baker (1956) 141 Cal. App. 2d 857, 861, 297 P.2d 674).

[Optional] D. Fact That Broker Agent for Both Parties No Defense to Fraud. The fact that the broker is the agent for both parties to the real estate transaction is no defense to an action by one party to hold the other party responsible for the broker's misrepresentations with regard to the other party's property (Miller v. Wood (1961) 188 Cal. App. 2d 711, 714, 10 Cal. Rptr. 770).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that a purchaser of property may recover damages for fraud from the owner-seller or is entitled to obtain restitution based on rescission of a fraudulently induced sales contract between the owner-seller and the purchaser. This argument may be used when the owner's broker or salesperson has, within his or her authority, made fraudulent misrepresentations that induced the purchaser to enter into the contract.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of a purchaser's right to recover damages for fraud from the seller-owner or to obtain restitution based on rescission of the sales contract. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts showing that the broker made fraudulent misrepresentations to the purchaser while acting within his or her authority and that such representations induced the purchaser to enter into a sales contract for the property.

[b] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities relating to actions for fraud, see Ch. 105, Fraud and Deceit in this set. For additional points and authorities relating to the liability of a principal for acts of an agent, see Ch. 182, Principal and Agent , in this set.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Seller-Owner Responsible for Fraudulent Misrepresentations of Agent

In Miller v. Wood (1961) 188 Cal. App. 2d 711, 10 Cal. Rptr. 770 , plaintiffs, two separate purchasers of real property from defendants' sellers, sued defendants' sellers and defendants' broker for restitution after rescission and for damages for fraud. The two separate actions were consolidated for trial, and the trial court granted judgment against defendant broker for fraud but judgment in favor of defendants sellers. Plaintiffs appealed, contending that defendants' sellers were vicariously responsible for defendant broker's representations because the broker was acting within his authority in negotiating the sales when he made the fraudulent representations. The court of appeal reversed both judgments so that there could be a complete and orderly disposition of the entire matter in the lower court (188 Cal. App. 2d 711, 715) . The court stated that if defendant broker was acting as the agent of defendants' sellers in negotiating the contracts of purchase, defendants' sellers would be vicariously responsible for the broker's representations in the course of negotiation. The court pointed out that the trial court found that defendant broker was employed by defendants' sellers to handle the property dealings for them as their broker. Because one of the primary functions of a broker is to negotiate a sale, the court stated that the implication that the broker had authority to negotiate the terms of the sale was inescapable (188 Cal. App. 2d 711, 713-714) .

In Wilbur v. Wilson (1960) 179 Cal. App. 2d 314, 317, 3 Cal. Rptr. 770 , plaintiffs purchasers brought an action against defendants sellers to reform a deed to the property purchased by plaintiffs and to abate the purchase price. The basis for the action was that defendants sellers falsely represented the acreage of the property and/or that there was mutual mistake of fact regarding the number of acres. The trial court granted judgment for plaintiffs and one of the defendants appealed. The court of appeal affirmed (179 Cal. App. 2d 314, 318) . One of defendant's contentions on appeal was that the finding of fraud could not stand because the brokers, as opposed to defendants, had actually communicated to plaintiffs the representation regarding the number of acres. The court disagreed and stated that if in fact the brokers were the agents of defendants, as the trial court found, defendants were responsible for their broker's statements (179 Cal. App. 2d 314, 317) .

[b] Damages or Restitution Based on Rescission for Fraudulent Inducement

In Richard v. Baker (1956) 141 Cal. App. 2d 857, 297 P.2d 674 , plaintiffs purchasers brought an action against defendant owner for damages for fraud and misrepresentation. Plaintiffs alleged that when defendant's agent showed them the unimproved lot that they eventually purchased, he misrepresented the boundary lines. Plaintiffs also alleged that they purchased and improved the property and later found out that the boundary line was not as represented. The trial court refused to admit plaintiffs' evidence of the fraudulent representations concerning the boundary line on the ground that the oral evidence would alter the terms of the written agreement of sale in violation of the parol evidence rule. The trial court granted a nonsuit and plaintiffs appealed. The court of appeal reversed the judgment, holding that plaintiffs' offered evidence should not have been excluded (141 Cal. App. 2d 857, 865) . The court stated that a vendee who has been induced to purchase property by fraud or deceit may, on discovery, either rescind the contract or allow it to stand and sue for damages (141 Cal. App. 2d 857, 861) .

In Williamson v. Clapper (1948) 88 Cal. App. 2d 645, 199 P.2d 337 , plaintiffs purchasers sued defendants sellers for damages for fraud. Plaintiffs alleged that either defendants or a real estate salesman for defendants' broker falsely represented to plaintiffs that the property plaintiffs purchased was zoned for use as a trailer court. As a result, plaintiffs alleged that they purchased the property and started building a trailer court only to discover that the property was restricted against this use. The trial court granted judgment for defendants and plaintiffs appealed. The court of appeal reversed (88 Cal. App. 2d 645, 649) . One of the contentions of defendants on appeal was that plaintiffs waived the fraud by completing the purchase after they learned that the property was restricted. The court held that plaintiffs had not done so because they had a right to elect whether to rescind the agreement on the ground of fraud and obtain restitution or to complete their purchase and sue for damages (88 Cal. App. 2d 645, 653) .

[c] False Statement Without Sufficient Information Is Actionable Fraud

The facts and procedural background of Richard v. Baker (1956) 141 Cal. App. 2d 857, 297 P.2d 674 , are discussed in § 31.140[3][b]. In Richard, the court of appeal reversed a nonsuit granted by the trial court after the trial court refused to admit plaintiffs' evidence of oral misrepresentations regarding the boundary of the property (141 Cal. App. 2d 857, 865) . Plaintiffs alleged in their complaint, and offered to introduce evidence to show, that defendants' broker falsely represented the boundary lines on the property. The court of appeal held the evidence of fraud admissible and stated that defendants' agent either knew of the true location of the boundaries and knew, therefore, that he was telling an untruth, or should have known the true boundaries; and a representation made with the intent that the recipient thereof shall act in reliance thereon is actionable when falsely made or when made without sufficient information to warrant it (141 Cal. App. 2d 857, 863) .

[d] Fact That Broker Agent for Both Parties No Defense to Fraud

The facts and procedural background of Miller v. Wood (1961) 188 Cal. App. 2d 711, 10 Cal. Rptr. 770 , are discussed in § 31.140[3][a]. In Miller, the court of appeal reversed a judgment in favor of defendants' sellers in an action brought by plaintiff purchasers against defendant sellers and defendants' broker for fraud (188 Cal. App. 2d 711, 715) . The trial court found that the broker had induced plaintiffs to purchase defendants' property through a series of fraudulent representations. One of defendants' sellers' contentions on appeal was that the broker was acting as the agent for plaintiffs as well as for defendants and that therefore, the broker's statements were also chargeable to plaintiffs. The court of appeal disagreed with this contention and stated that the fact that the broker or agent is the agent for both parties is no defense to an action by one party to hold the other party responsible for the broker's or agent's misrepresentations with regard to the other party's property (188 Cal. App. 2d 711, 714) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Seller-Owner Responsible for Fraudulent Misrepresentations of Agent

The facts and procedural background of Williamson v. Clapper (1948) 88 Cal. App. 2d 645, 199 P.2d 337 , are discussed in § 31.140[3][b]. In Williamson, the court of appeal reversed a judgment in favor of defendants sellers in an action brought by plaintiffs purchasers for false representations regarding the condition of the title of the property purchased (88 Cal. App. 2d 645, 653) . The evidence disclosed that defendants and the real estate agent working for defendants' broker both falsely represented that the property could be used as a trailer court when in fact this use was prohibited. The court held that defendants' sellers were responsible for the representations of their broker's agent because the representations were made within the agent's authority and defendants' sellers knew of the false representations (88 Cal. App. 2d 645, 650) . The court stated that the language of the listing was sufficient to authorize the agent to act for defendants in negotiating a sale and to render defendants responsible for any misrepresentations made by the agent regarding the condition of defendants' title (88 Cal. App. 2d 645, 650) .

§ 31.141 Supporting Contention That Purchaser Entitled to Restitution Based on Rescission for Fraudulent Representations of Seller's Broker or Salesperson--Restitution Based on Rescission Permitted Although Contract Contains Exculpatory Clause

[The following should be combined with § 31.140 and may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF PURCHASER MAY RESCIND THE REAL ESTATE SALES CONTRACT WITH DEFENDANT SELLER AND RECOVER THE CONSIDERATION PAID BASED ON FRAUDULENT REPRESENTATIONS BY DEFENDANT'S _____ [BROKER or SALESPERSON], ALTHOUGH THE CONTRACT CONTAINS AN EXCULPATORY CLAUSE LIMITING THE AGENT'S AUTHORITY TO MAKE BINDING REPRESENTATIONS, BECAUSE AN EXCULPATORY CLAUSE DOES NOT PREVENT RESCISSION OF A CONTRACT FOR FRAUDULENT REPRESENTATIONS OF A SELLER'S _____ [BROKER or SALESPERSON].

Restitution Based on Rescission Available Despite Exculpatory Clause. A seller is entitled to rescind a contract of sale and recover consideration paid under the contract when the contract was entered on the basis of the fraudulent representations of the seller's broker or salesperson, although the contract contains an exculpatory clause limiting the agent's authority to make binding representations, because an exculpatory clause does not prevent rescission for fraudulent representations of a seller's broker or salesperson (see Greenberg v. Du Bain Realty Corp. (1935) 2 Cal. 2d 628, 629, 42 P.2d 628 ; Speck v. Wylie (1934) 1 Cal. 2d 625, 627-628, 36 P.2d 618).

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that a party may rescind the contract of sale entered into on the basis of the fraudulent representations of the seller's broker. The argument may be used when the contract contains an exculpatory clause limiting the broker's or salesperson's authority to make binding representations. This should be combined with the points and authorities set out in § 31.123.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the purchaser's right to rescind the contract of sale and to the return of the consideration paid. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Restitution Based on Rescission Available Despite Exculpatory Clause

In Greenberg v. Du Bain Realty Corp. (1935) 2 Cal. 2d 628, 42 P.2d 628 , plaintiff purchaser sued defendant seller for restitution based on rescission, alleging that the contract of sale was entered due to the fraudulent representations of a salesman for defendant's realty company. The trial court sustained a demurrer to the complaint and the court of appeal affirmed the judgment, holding in part that defendant was not liable for the representations of defendant's agent because of the provision in the contract limiting the authority of the agent to make such representations. The Supreme Court reversed the judgment (2 Cal. 2d 628, 630) . Citing earlier Supreme Court decisions, the Court stated that the rule is now firmly established that restitution based on rescission of a contract for an agent's unauthorized misrepresentations may be had even against an innocent principal, even though the rescinding party had notice of the agent's lack of authority. The Court pointed out that the reason for holding the principal responsible in such an instance was equitable rule against unjust enrichment (2 Cal. 2d 628, 629) .

In Speck v. Wylie (1934) 1 Cal. 2d 625, 36 P.2d 618 , plaintiff purchaser brought an action for restitution based on rescission against defendants sellers for material misrepresentations by defendants' selling agent. The contract between plaintiff and defendants contained an exculpatory clause limiting the agent's authority to alter or change the terms of the contract and providing that neither party was to be bound by representations not in conformity with the contract. The trial court granted judgment for plaintiff and the Supreme Court affirmed (1 Cal. 2d 625, 628) . The Court carved out an exception to the rule, announced earlier by the Court in Gridley v. Tilson (1927) 202 Cal. 748, 262 P. 322 , that parol evidence would not be admitted to show fraudulent representations by an agent to induce the making of a contract when the defrauded party knew that the representations were unauthorized. The exception to this rule, the Court held, allows the purchaser to obtain restitution based on rescission, but not damages for fraud, when the purchaser is induced to enter into the contract of sale by the fraudulent representations of the seller's agent, even though the purchaser knows that the representations are unauthorized because of a provision in the contract (1 Cal. 2d 625, 627-628).

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Restitution Based on Rescission Available Despite Exculpatory Clause

In Herzog v. Capital Co. (1945) 27 Cal. 2d 349, 164 P.2d 8 , plaintiffs' purchasers sued defendants' sellers for damages for fraud after the house that plaintiffs purchased began to leak badly and an inspection revealed that the leak was due to the use of defective materials and bracing. The evidence disclosed that plaintiffs were taken on a tour of the house by the real estate agent for defendants and told that the house was in perfect repair when, in fact, the agent knew from past experience with the house that it leaked badly. In addition, the agent had caused the house to be refinished and newly painted, concealing the structural defects. The trial court granted judgment for plaintiffs and defendants appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed (27 Cal. 2d 349, 354) . One of defendants' contentions on appeal was that the agreement of sale provided that there were no promises, representations, verbal understandings, or agreements except those contained in the contract and that because of this clause, defendants could not be held liable for the broker's statements. The Court held that this clause had no application to a failure to disclose material facts (27 Cal. 2d 349, 354) . The Court, in dicta, discussed the effect of the exculpatory clause and stated that the provision will relieve an honest seller from liability for damages for the misrepresentations of his or her agent but it will not prevent a defrauded purchaser from rescinding the contract and pursuing the innocent seller far enough to secure a return of the consideration paid. The Court also stated that the rule does not exempt the principal from liability for his or her own conduct (27 Cal. 2d 349, 353) .

PART II. FORMS
C. Seller's Liability to Purchaser for Acts of Real Estate Broker or Salesperson

2A-31 California Points & Authorities § 31.142

§ 31.142 Supporting Contention That Transferee May Recover Damages for Failure of Transferor to Make Statutory Disclosure on Basis of Information Known to Transferor's Agent [Civ. Code § 1102.4]

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined with appropriate portions of §§ 31.140 and 31.141 and may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

A TRANSFEREE MAY RECOVER DAMAGES FOR FAILURE OF THE TRANSFEROR TO DISCLOSE _____ [specify condition, e.g., PERMITLESS ROOM ADDITIONS] KNOWN TO THE TRANSFEROR'S AGENT.

A. Duty to Disclose Specified Conditions. Except as otherwise provided in Civil Code Section 1102.2, a transferor of any real property or residential stock cooperative containing at least one but not more than four residential units, whether the transfer is made by sale, exchange, installment land sale contract, lease with option to purchase, any other option to purchase, or ground lease coupled with improvements, must deliver to the prospective transferee the written disclosure statement set forth in Civil Code Section 1102.6, stating at Item _____ [specify, e.g., II. C. 4.] whether or not _____ [specify, e.g., room additions, structural modifications, or other alterations or repairs were made without necessary permits] (Civ. Code §§ 1102(a), 1102.3, 1102.6).

B. Agent's Knowledge as Basis for Statutory Liability. For a transferor and the transferor's agent [including any cooperating agent] to escape liability for any error, inaccuracy, or omission in the disclosure required by Civil Code Section 1102 et seq., the error, inaccuracy, or omission must not have been within the personal knowledge of the transferor or the transferor's agent [including any cooperating agent], and must have been based on information timely provided by public agencies or other persons providing information required to be disclosed. Further, ordinary care must have been exercised in obtaining and transmitting the information (Civ. Code § 1102.4(a)).

C. Actual Damages for Violation. Any person who willfully or negligently violates or fails to perform any duty prescribed by any provision of Civil Code Section 1102 et seq. is liable in the amount of actual damages suffered by a transferee (Civ. Code § 1102.13).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that a transferee of real property or a residential stock cooperative containing up to four units is entitled to damages from the transferor and the transferor's agent for failure to give, or inaccuracy in giving, the disclosures required by Civ. Code § 1102 et seq. Liability under Civ. Code § 1102.13 attaches for both willful and negligent violations and omissions, but does not include liability for the transferee's attorney's fees (Paragraph C). In the case of a transaction covered by Civ. Code § 1102.4(a), the term "transferor's agent" as used in Paragraph B includes both the listing agent and any other broker cooperating through a multiple listing service who sells, or finds and obtains a buyer for, the property [Civ. Code §§ 1086(g), (h), 1102.4(a), 1102.14].

This form should be combined with the appropriate portions of §§ 31.140 and 31.141 relating to (1) the general rule imputing agent's knowledge to the principal [see § 31.140[1], P A], and (2) whichever other remedies are being sought by the transferee.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of transferee's entitlement to damages based on transferor's agent's personal knowledge or lack of care. It may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

This form may be modified to apply to a resale transaction entered into on or after January 1, 2000, for a manufactured home [see Health & Safety Code § 18007] or mobilehome [see Health & Safety Code § 18008] that is classified as personal property and intended for use as a residence. As of the above date, such a resale transaction is subject to the disclosure requirements of Civ. Code § 1102 et seq. [Civ. Code § 1102(b); see Civ. Code §§ 1102.1(b), 1102.3a; see also Civ. Code § 1102.6(d) (statutory disclosure form for these resale transactions)].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should refer to the allegations in the complaint that establish that the required disclosure(s) specified in Paragraph A of this form was/were not given by the transferor and the transferor's agent. Counsel can then argue transferee's entitlement to damages based on the authorities set forth above.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Duty to Disclose Specified Conditions

The disclosure required by Civ. Code §§ 1102, 1102.3, and 1102.6 is to be made as soon as is practicable before transfer of title in the case of a sale. In all other cases, disclosure is to be made as soon as is practicable before execution of the contract. For these purposes, "execution" means the making or acceptance of an offer [Civ. Code § 1102.3]. Any waiver of these requirements is void as against public policy [Civ. Code § 1102(c)].

Part II. A. of the statutory disclosure form provides a checklist of over 40 appliances, appurtenances, and systems (e.g., rain gutter, septic tank, air conditioning) and requires the seller to check those that exist and to describe items that are not in operating condition. Part II. B. asks if the seller is aware of any significant defects or malfunctions in any listed structural components and requires an explanation of any items checked. Item II. C. consists of 16 questions regarding seller's awareness of specific situations, including encroachments, flooding, fill on the property, slide, slippage, noisy neighbors or other nuisances, and noncompliance with building codes.

Part III of the statutory disclosure form requires the seller's agent to disclose the results of his or her reasonably competent and diligent visual inspection of accessible areas of the property and inquiry of the sellers [see also Easton v. Strassburger (1984) 152 Cal. App. 3d 90, 98-107, 199 Cal. Rptr. 383 (duty of listing broker to inspect and disclose)]. Part IV of the statutory disclosure form requires any other agent who obtained the offer to disclose the results of his or her reasonably competent and diligent visual inspection of accessible areas [see also Civ. Code §§ 2079-2079.5 (duty of listing and cooperating broker to inspect and disclose)].

Additional disclosure requirements apply to brokers and their clients with regard to real estate transactions. A seller of residential real property who knows that any release of an illegal controlled substance has come to be located on or beneath the real property must give written notice advising of that condition to the buyer before sale of the property. Notice is given by checking "yes" on the appropriate question on the Real Estate Transfer Disclosure Statement [see Civ. Code § 1102.6] and attaching a copy of any notice received from law enforcement or any other entity, such as the Department of Toxic Substances Control, the county health department, or the local environmental health officer [Civ. Code § 1102.18(b)(1)]. "Illegal controlled substance" means a drug, substance, or immediate precursor listed in specified schedules [Civ. Code § 1102.18(a)(1), (b)(1); see Health & Safety Code §§ 11054-11058], or an emission or waste material resulting from the unlawful manufacture or attempt to manufacture of an illegal controlled substance, which does not include marijuana [Civ. Code § 1102.18(a)(1); see Civ. Code § 1102.18(b)(1) ("release" defined)].

The seller of any real property subject to the disclosure requirements of Civ. Code § 1102 et seq. must make disclosures if the property being transferred is subject to a continuing lien securing the levy of special taxes pursuant to the Mello-Roos Community Facilities Act [Gov. Code § 53111 et seq.] or to a fixed lien assessment collected in installments to secure bonds issued under the Improvement Bond Act of 1915 [Sts. & Hy. Code § 8500 et seq.] which concerns street improvements [Civ. Code § 1102.6b(a)]. The seller must make a good faith effort to obtain and deliver to the transferee a disclosure notice concerning the special Mello-Roos tax provided in Gov. Code § 53340.2, and the assessment installment provided in Gov. Code § 53754 from each local agency that levies the special tax or that collects the assessment installments [Civ. Code § 1102.6b(b)]. A seller may satisfy the disclosure notice requirements by delivering a disclosure notice obtained from a nongovernmental source that satisfies the specified requirements [Civ. Code § 1102.6b(d)(1); see Civ. Code § 1102.6b(d)(3) (provision does not change ability to make disclosures pursuant to Civ. Code § 1102.4)]. With regard to each type of required disclosure, a notice provided by a private entity other than a designated office, department, or bureau of the levying entity may be modified as needed to clearly and accurately describe either of the following [Civ. Code § 1102.6b(d)(2)]:

- A special tax pursuant to the Mello-Roos Community Facilities Act levied against the property, or clearly and accurately consolidated information about two or more districts that levy or are authorized to levy a special tax pursuant to the Mello-Roos Community Facilities Act against the property. This notice must include the name of the Mello-Roos levying taxes against the property, the annual tax due for the Mello-Roos for the current tax year, the maximum tax that may be levied against the property in any year, the percentage by which the maximum tax for the Mello-Roos may increase per year, the date until that the tax may be levied against the property for the Mello-Roos, and a contact telephone number, if available, for further information about the Mello-Roos.

- Special assessments and bonds pursuant to the Improvement Bond Act of 1915 levied against the property, or clearly and accurately consolidated information about two or more districts that levy or are authorized to levy special assessments and bonds pursuant to the Improvement Bond Act of 1915 against the property. This notice must include the name of the special assessments and bonds issued pursuant to the Improvement Bond Act of 1915, the current annual tax on the property for the special assessments and bonds issued pursuant to the Improvement Bond Act of 1915, and a contact telephone number, if available, for further information about the special assessments and bonds issued pursuant to the Improvement Bond Act of 1915.

If these required disclosures have been delivered to the transferee, the seller or the seller's agent is not required to provide additional information concerning the special tax or assessment installments, and the disclosure information is deemed to satisfy the responsibility of the seller or the seller's agent to provide this information to the transferee. In any case, these disclosure requirements do not impose a duty agent to discover a special tax or assessment installments, or the existence of any levying district not actually known to the agents [Civ. Code § 1102.6b(e)].

In the future, the Toxic Mold Protection Act of 2001 [Health & Safety Code §§ 26100-26156] may eventually require a seller to provide written disclosures to potential buyers concerning mold problems in specified types of real property [see Health & Safety Code §§ 26140-26153]. However, these disclosure duties and requirements will not apply until the January 1 or July 1 that occurs at least six months after the Department adopts the requisite standards and guidelines [see Health & Safety Code § 26154; see also Health & Safety Code § 26156 (funding contingency)].

[b] Agent's Knowledge as Basis for Statutory Liability

Although the disclosures are to be based on the personal knowledge of the transferor, liability is imposed on any person who willfully or negligently violates or fails to perform any duty prescribed by the applicable provisions [Civ. Code § 1102.13]. Civ. Code §§ 1102.4, 1102.5 state when a transferor or his or her agent will not be liable for errors, inaccuracies, or omissions in the disclosure. However, these sections have not yet been judicially interpreted and it is not clear what liability will be established on the part of the broker or for the failure to seek public agency information.

[c] Actual Damages Available for Violation

In cases of violations, in addition to any other remedies provided by law, the transferee may recover actual damages. However, no transfer may be set aside solely because of the failure to provide the required disclosures [Civ. Code § 1102.13]. However, Civ. Code § 1102.13 is applicable only when the buyer has gone through with the transaction despite the seller's failure to comply with the statutory disclosure requirements. If no transfer has taken place, § 1102.13 does not apply. Prior to transfer, the failure to provide a disclosure statement gives rise to a right to rescission in the buyer [Realmuto v. Gagnard (2003) 110 Cal. App. 4th 193, 202-205, 1 Cal. Rptr. 3d 569] .

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF PURCHASER MAY NOT RECOVER DAMAGES FROM DEFENDANT SELLER-OWNER FOR FRAUDULENT REPRESENTATIONS ALLEGEDLY MADE BY DEFENDANT'S _____ [BROKER or SALESPERSON] BECAUSE THE CONTRACT OF SALE CONTAINS AN EXCULPATORY CLAUSE LIMITING THE AUTHORITY OF THE AGENT TO MAKE BINDING REPRESENTATIONS CONCERNING THE SUBJECT MATTER OF THE CONTRACT, AND THAT CLAUSE PRECLUDES RECOVERY OF DAMAGES AGAINST AN INNOCENT SELLER.

No Recovery of Damages for Fraud Under Exculpatory Clause. When the sales contract between the purchaser and seller contains a provision limiting the authority of the seller's real estate broker or salesperson to make binding representations concerning the subject matter of the contract, the purchaser cannot recover damages from the innocent seller for fraudulent representations of his or her agent (see Herzog v. Capital Co. (1945) 27 Cal. 2d 349, 353, 164 P.2d 8 ; Speck v. Wylie (1934) 1 Cal. 2d 625, 627-628, 36 P.2d 618).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a party's contention that a purchaser may recover damages for fraud from a seller for alleged fraudulent representations of the seller's broker or salesperson. This argument may be used when the sales contract contains a provision limiting the authority of the broker or salesperson to make binding representations concerning the subject matter of the contract.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel is responding to the contention that a purchaser may recover damages from the seller for the fraudulent representations of the seller's broker or salesperson. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the facts showing that the contract of sale limited the authority of the broker or salesperson to make binding representations concerning the subject matter of the contract and that the seller was unaware of the fraudulent representations.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Recovery of Damages for Fraud Under Exculpatory Clause

The facts and procedural background of Herzog v. Capital Co. (1945) 27 Cal. 2d 349, 164 P.2d 8 , are discussed in § 31.141[4][a]. In Herzog, the Supreme Court affirmed a judgment for damages for fraud against defendant sellers based on the failure of the sellers' real estate broker to disclose defects in selling defendants' house (27 Cal. 2d 349, 354) . Plaintiffs were told by defendants sellers' real estate agent that the house they eventually bought was in perfect condition when, in fact, the agent knew from past experience that it leaked badly. The agent also painted and refinished the house, thereby covering up the defects. The contract of sale contained a provision that there were no promises, representations, verbal understandings, or agreements except those contained in the contract, and defendants contended that they were therefore not liable for the representations of the agent. The Supreme Court stated that such a provision will relieve an honest seller from liability for damages for the fraudulent representations of his or her negotiating agent. The Supreme Court held, however, that this clause did not limit defendants sellers' liability for the agent's failure to disclose known defects. The agent's knowledge was imputed to the seller (27 Cal. 2d 349, 353) .

The facts and procedural background of Speck v. Wylie (1934) 1 Cal. 2d 625, 36 P.2d 618 , are discussed in § 31.141[3][a]. In Speck, the Supreme Court affirmed a judgment for plaintiffs purchasers for the recovery, after rescission, of consideration paid under a contract (1 Cal. 2d 625, 628) . The contract of sale contained a provision stating that the agent did not have authority to alter or change the terms of the agreement and that the property was not purchased as the result of representations by the seller or the selling agent. The purchase of the property was induced by a material misrepresentation of defendants' real estate agent. The Court held that, despite the provision limiting the authority of the agent, the defrauded purchaser could rescind the contract and recover from the seller the consideration paid (1 Cal. 2d 625, 627-628) . The Court stated that, although rescission is not precluded by the provision, an action for fraud and deceit would not be allowed (1 Cal. 2d 625, 628) .

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF PURCHASER MAY NOT RECOVER DAMAGES FROM DEFENDANT FOR ALLEGED NONDISCLOSURES BECAUSE THE MATTERS ALLEGEDLY NOT DISCLOSED RELATE TO THE LEGAL RAMIFICATIONS OF THE FACTUAL NATURE OF REALTY AND A CONCLUSION AS TO HOW THE RAMIFICATIONS MAY ADVERSELY IMPACT VALUE, AND THESE MATTERS ARE NOT "FACTS" SUBJECT TO COMMON LAW OR STATUTORY DISCLOSURE REQUIREMENTS.

No Duty to Make Disclosures Relating to Factual Nature of Realty. Although common law and statutory disclosure requirements require the seller of real estate and his or her broker to reveal to purchasers all factual matters bearing on the quality of the property being sold that might be detrimental to value, the legal ramifications of the factual nature of realty, and a conclusion as to how they may adversely impact value, are not "facts" subject to required disclosure (Sweat v. Hollister (1995) 37 Cal. App. 4th 603, 608-609, 43 Cal. Rptr. 2d 399).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a seller is liable for nondisclosure under either a theory of common-law fraud or under statutory disclosure requirements, such as those set forth in § 31.142. The form is for use when the "fact" allegedly not disclosed consists of information concerning the legal ramifications of a disclosed fact concerning the property and its effect on the value of the property.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue concerning the extent of the seller or seller's broker to make disclosures to purchasers relating to the factual nature of realty. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Duty to Make Disclosures Relating to Factual Nature of Realty

In Sweat v. Hollister (1995) 37 Cal. App. 4th 603, 43 Cal. Rptr. 2d 399 , plaintiffs-purchasers brought suit against the sellers of a house and their brokers. The complaint alleged that the brokers participated in misrepresentations or failures to disclose certain material information in their representations, and particularly in the preparation and delivery of the statutory real estate transfer disclosure statement. The false statement alleged to have been included in the disclosure statement was the statement that there was no "nonconforming use" relative to the property. The disclosure statement did indicate that the property was in a designated flood plain. The plaintiffs asserted that a local ordinance prevented property located in a flood plain from being altered or enlarged in the event of destruction, that this restriction constituted a defect or nonconforming use, and that this "concealed defect" caused the value of the house to be reduced by $215,000. The superior court granted summary judgment in favor of the defendants and awarded them attorney's fees, and the purchasers appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the award of attorney's fees to the sellers' brokers, but affirmed the remainder of the judgment. The court held that the sellers and their brokers, having disclosed that the house was in a flood plain, had no further obligation to disclose that the property, because of its location in the flood plain, was subject to restrictions on improvement or alteration in the event of partial destruction. The court stated that the common law disclosure requirements imposed on the seller of real estate and his or her broker, as well as the more recent statutory disclosure requirements (Civ. Code § 1102 et seq.), require revelation of all factual matters bearing on the quality of the property being sold that might be detrimental to value. These factual matters would include, for instance, that the property was constructed on filled land, that the structure was in violation of building codes or zoning ordinances, that the structure had been condemned, or that it was termite-ridden. The legal ramifications of the factual nature of the realty, however, and a conclusion as to how they may adversely impact value, is not a fact subject to required disclosure. If the buyer of property is accurately informed as to the zoning, for instance, it is not necessary for the seller also to advise concerning the detrimental aspects of any specific zoning. The court concluded by stating that this principle applies as well to the disabilities associated with owning a house located in a flood plain; in that situation, the existence of disabilities should be obvious to any buyer. Thus, it is not the obligation of the seller to research local land use ordinances and advise a buyer as to their effect on the realty (37 Cal. App. 4th 603, 608-609) .

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF PURCHASER MAY NOT RECOVER DAMAGES FROM DEFENDANT BROKER FOR AN ALLEGED FAILURE TO INSPECT _____ [INACCESSIBLE AREAS and/or OFF-SITE AREAS and/or PUBLIC RECORDS and/or UNAFFECTED UNITS] BECAUSE BROKER DID NOT HAVE A DUTY TO INSPECT SUCH _____ [AREAS and/or RECORDS].

No Duty to Inspect Inaccessible or Off-site Areas or Public Records. The inspection to be performed by a broker pursuant to Civil Code Section 2079 et seq. does not include or involve an inspection of areas that are reasonably and normally inaccessible to such an inspection, nor an affirmative inspection of areas off the site of the subject property or public records or permits concerning the title or use of the property (Civ. Code § 2079.3).

No Duty to Inspect More Than Unit Offered for Sale. If property for sale comprises a unit in a planned development, a condominium, or a stock cooperative, the inspection to be performed by a broker pursuant to Civil Code Section 2079 et seq. does not include an inspection of more than the unit offered for sale, if the seller or the broker complies with the requirements of Civil Code Section 1368 (Civ. Code § 2079.3; Padgett v. Phariss (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 1270, 1282, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 373).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a seller's broker is liable for failure to inspect public records or areas that are inaccessible, off-site, or, in the case of a unit in a common-interest development, do not consist of the particular unit offered for sale.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue concerning the extent of the duty of the seller or the seller's broker to make disclosures to the purchasers. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should discuss the facts showing that the alleged nondisclosure involved areas or records that fall within the scope of Civ. Code § 2079.3.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Duty to Inspect More Than Unit Offered for Sale

If property for sale comprises a unit in a planned development as defined in Bus. & Prof. Code § 11003, a condominium as defined in Civ. Code § 783, or a stock cooperative as defined in Bus. & Prof. Code § 11003.2, the inspection to be performed by a broker pursuant to Civ. Code § 2079 et seq. does not include an inspection of more than the unit offered for sale, if the seller or the broker complies with the requirements of Civ. Code § 1368 (Civ. Code § 2079.3; see Civ. Code § 1368) (requiring owner of a separate interest in a common interest development to provide specified documents to a prospective purchaser as soon as practicable before transfer of title).

In Padgett v. Phariss (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 1270, 1277, 1282, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 373 , the plaintiff entered into a contract to purchase a house in a planned unit development. The portion of the statutory real estate transfer disclosure statement completed by the sellers stated that there were no lawsuits against the sellers threatening or affecting the real property. The sellers' agent and the plaintiff's agent filled out their parts of the disclosure statements, noting no evident problems with the property. In fact, the homeowners' association for the development had filed an action for construction defects against the developer approximately one month before the plaintiff signed the contract of sale. The plaintiff brought an action for rescission and damages against the sellers, and for damages against the two real estate agents involved. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of the defendants on all claims.

The court of appeal affirmed. Three of the causes of action were based on statutes governing an agent's duty to inspect and make related disclosures [see Civ. Code §§ 1102.6, 1102.13, 2079, 2079.3], and alleged the agents intentionally or negligently failed to make the required written disclosures about the property and failed to investigate and disclose the condition of the property. The plaintiff claimed that because of the agents' knowledge that construction problems were common in planned unit developments, the agents had the duty to make inquiries of the homeowners' association about lawsuits based on construction defects, which would have disclosed the existence of the lawsuits. The court noted that the home inspection report disclosed no defects in the property, and there was no evidence that the agents knew of any defects or pending litigation. There was no justifiable basis for imposing on them a duty of inquiry of the homeowners' association. Further, the 1994 amendment to Section 2079.3 made it clear that the inspection need not include areas off the site of the property or public records or permits regarding title or use of the property, nor an area greater than the actual unit offered for sale. In conclusion, the plain language of § 2079.3 controlled so that the extended inspection described by the plaintiff was not required (54 Cal. App. 4th 1270, 1282) .

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF PURCHASER MAY NOT RECOVER DAMAGES FOR FAILURE OF DEFENDANT BROKER TO INDEPENDENTLY VERIFY OR DISCLAIM ACCURACY OF SELLER'S REPRESENTATIONS.

Broker Has No Duty to Independently Verify or Disclaim Accuracy of Seller's Representations. A broker's disclosure duty under Civil Code Section 2079 does not include a duty to independently verify or disclaim the accuracy of the seller's representations; the seller's agent is required only to act in good faith and not convey the seller's representations without a reasonable basis for believing them to be true (Robinson v. Grossman (1997) 57 Cal. App. 4th 634, 641-642, 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 380).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a seller's agent or broker is liable for nondisclosure of information that would have come to light if the seller's agent had attempted to independently verify or disclaim the accuracy of the seller's representations on the statutory disclosure form.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue concerning the extent of the duty of the seller or the seller's broker to make disclosures to the purchasers. It may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Broker Has No Duty to Independently Verify or Disclaim Accuracy of Seller's Representations

In Robinson v. Grossman (1997) 57 Cal. App. 4th 634, 637, 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 380 , the plaintiff-purchasers brought an action against the sellers and the sellers' broker and agent for professional negligence and negligent and intentional misrepresentation based on the agent's failure to disclose defects in the property. On the real estate transfer disclosure statement, the sellers represented that they were unaware of any significant defects in the foundation and exterior walls. The agent inspected the property and noticed hairline stucco cracks, which the sellers said were only cosmetic. The agent did not note them on her portion of the disclosure statement. When the purchasers looked at the home, they saw the stucco cracks. Their agent recommended that they have the home professionally inspected. One of the sellers advised them that the cracks were in the finish of the house. The purchasers made an offer, which was accepted. It was conditioned on inspections by a home inspector and geologist. The home inspector opined that the house was well built, after noting the cracks and some water stains. The Robinsons bought the property. Several weeks later, when they attempted to have a swimming pool installed, the excavation collapsed, requiring backfilling and recompaction. They brought the action mentioned above. In a special verdict, the jury found that the sellers' broker and agent did not breach the professional standard of care. With regard to the claim of negligent misrepresentation, the jury found the seller's broker and agent misrepresented a past or existing material fact, but the misrepresentation was made with a reasonable ground for believing it to be true.

The court of appeal affirmed. Initially it noted that Easton v. Strassburger (1984) 152 Cal. App. 3d 90, 199 Cal. Rptr. 383 first pronounced the duty of the seller's broker to potential purchasers to both inspect and disclose. This duty is set forth in Civ. Code § 2079, which provides that it is the duty of the broker or salesperson to a prospective purchaser of residential real property to conduct a reasonably competent and diligent visual inspection of the property and to disclose to the prospective purchaser all facts materially affecting the value or desirability of the property that an investigation would reveal. The court then stated that it found no support for the argument that the disclosure duty imposed by Section 2079 includes a duty to independently verify or disclaim the accuracy of the seller's representations. To the contrary, in enacting Section 2079, the Legislature sought to foster availability of professional negligence insurance by eliminating the implication in Easton v. Strassburger that a seller's agent could have negligence liability for (1) relying in good faith on the seller's representations, or (2) failing to discharge a vague obligation to obtain professional inspections or reports to confirm the representations. Thus, once the sellers and their agent make the required disclosures, potential purchasers must investigate and make an informed decision based thereon. In making the required disclosures, the seller's agent is required only to act in good faith and not convey the sellers' representations without a reasonable basis for believing them to be true (57 Cal. App. 4th 634, 643-644).

PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT FAILS TO STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION IN THAT IT SHOWS ON ITS FACE THAT IT IS BARRED BY THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.

A. Objection by Demurrer. The party against whom a complaint has been filed may object to the complaint by demurrer on the ground that it does not state facts sufficient to state a cause of action where such ground appears on the face of the complaint [or from any matter of which the court is required to or may take judicial notice] (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 430.10(e), 430.30(a)).

B. Failure to State Cause of Action. The objection that an action is barred by a statute of limitations may be set up by demurrer (Baillargeon v. Department of Water & Power (1977) 69 Cal. App. 3d 670, 675, 138 Cal. Rptr. 338) and must be deemed to be included in the ground of demurrer that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action (Bell v. Bank of Cal. (1908) 153 Cal. 234, 245, 94 P. 889).

C. Applicable Statute of Limitations. The time for the commencement of an action for damages caused by personal injuries to a passenger of a carrier is limited by the two-year limitations period of Code of Civil Procedure Section 335.1 (*see Basler v. [a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint for injuries to or wrongful death of a passenger of a carrier where the demurrer asserts that the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in that it appears on the face thereof, or from a matter of which the court is required to or may take judicial notice, that the action is barred by the statute of limitations in Code Civ. Proc. § 335

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, these points and authorities may be used to support a defendant's motion for summary judgment [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c; Graham v. Bank of Cal. (1961) 197 Cal. App. 2d 438, 439-444, 17 Cal. Rptr. 279] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Failure to State Cause of Action

In Baillargeon v. Department of Water & Power (1977) 69 Cal. App. 3d 670, 138 Cal. Rptr. 338 , plaintiff brought an action against defendant for breach of contract, infliction of mental distress, and declaratory relief. Defendant's answer included the affirmative defense of the statute of limitations. After discovery, the trial court granted defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings, apparently on the basis that the action was barred by the statute of limitations. The court of appeal reversed the decision on the cause of action for breach of contract. The court stated that the defense of the statute of limitations may be raised by demurrer and noted that since judgment on the pleadings is similar to a judgment following the sustaining of a demurrer, the standard of appellate review is the same (69 Cal. App. 3d 670, 675) .

Bell v. Bank of Cal. (1908) 153 Cal. 234, 94 P. 889 , was an action for the recovery of shares of stock. The defendant asserted in a general demurrer that the action was barred by a statute of limitations, and the trial court sustained the demurrer and dismissed the action. The method of asserting the defense or bar of a statute of limitations was apparently not at issue in the trial court or on appeal. The Supreme Court, however, noted that the bar of the statute of limitations is not specified in the Code of Civil Procedure as a ground of demurrer. That particular objection to a complaint, while required to be stated in the demurrer, must be deemed to be included within the ground of lack of facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action (153 Cal. 234, 235) .

[b] Applicable Statute of Limitations

In Basler v. Sacramento Elec., Gas & Ry. Co. (1913) 166 Cal. 33, 37, 134 P. 993 , plaintiff husband sought damages for the loss of his wife's services and for expenses for her medical care as a result of injuries she received while a passenger on a streetcar operated by defendant corporation. The complaint was filed almost two years from the date of the wife's injuries, and contained allegations of negligence of defendant and its agents. The trial court dismissed the action for want of prosecution following its sustaining of a demurrer based on the bar of the one-year statute of limitations of former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1 (two-year statute of limitations beginning in 2003)] for personal injuries. On appeal, plaintiff contended that his causes of action were based on an oral contract and were governed by the two-year limitation period of Code Civ. Proc. § 339(1). However, the Supreme Court affirmed. The Court found that since the breach of duty and consequent injury to the passenger were set forth, the violation of defendant common carrier's obligation was the gravemen of the action, which arose in tort, and that the contract of carriage was only alleged as a matter of inducement (166 Cal. 33, 37) .

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint for injuries to or loss of freight, where the demurrer asserts that the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in that it appears on the face thereof, or from a matter of which the court is required to or may take judicial notice, that the action is barred by the statute of limitations in Code Civ. Proc. § 338(a).

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, these points and authorities may be used tosupport a defendant's motion for summary judgment [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c; *Graham v. Bank of Cal. (1961) 197 Cal. They also may be used, with appropriate modifications, by a plaintiff to oppose a demurrer brought on the ground that the cause of action is barred by the two-year statute of limitations contained in Code Civ. Proc. § 339 governing oral contracts [see BBD Transp. Co. v. Buller (1975) 49 Cal. App. 3d 124, 128-129, 122 Cal. Rptr. 357] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Applicable Statute of Limitations

In BBD Transp. Co. v. Buller (1975) 49 Cal. App. 3d 124, 122 Cal. Rptr. 357 , plaintiff, a prime hauler, brought an action against a subhauler for damages incurred when a trailer load of pipe being carried intrastate fell into a ravine. The complaint was filed two years and six weeks after the accident. On appeal from a judgment in favor of the prime hauler, defendant subhauler contended that the action was barred by the two-year statute of limitations of Code Civ. Proc. § 339, which governs actions based on oral contracts.

The court of appeal stated that Civ. Code § 2194, by its terms, makes an inland common carrier strictly liable for loss or injury of freight from any cause whatever, with certain specified exceptions. The statute therefore goes beyond ordinary tort or contract liability and creates the liability of the carrier. Though defendant's capacity as an inland common carrier which is necessary for the applicability of Civ. Code § 2194 usually arises out of a contract, the contract only defines the relationship of the parties. This relationship gives rise to the statutory obligation, and the action is governed by the three-year limitation of former Code Civ. Proc. § 338(1) (obligation based on statute) [now see Code Civ. Proc. §

338(a)]. The court of appeal therefore held that the trial court had not erred in finding that the complaint was not barred by a statute of limitations (49 Cal. App. 3d 124, 128-129) .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Applicability of Civil Code Section 2100

Coon v. Joseph (1987) 192 Cal. App. 3d 1269, 237 Cal. Rptr. 873 , was an action against a city and a city bus driver for damages for emotional distress resulting from witnessing the driver's intentional assault on plaintiff's homosexual lover. The driver had denied plaintiff entry to the bus, but permitted his lover to enter and then assaulted the lover in plaintiff's immediate presence. The complaint contained four causes of action: (1) intentional infliction of emotional distress; (2) negligent infliction of emotional distress; (3) negligence under Civ. Code § 2100; and (4) violation of civil rights under Civ. Code § 51.7. Defendants' demurrer to the complaint was sustained with leave to amend and, on plaintiff's election not to amend, a judgment of dismissal was entered. The court of appeal affirmed. With respect to the Civ. Code § 2100 cause of action, the court said that Civ. Code § 2100 codifies the duty of "utmost care" owed by a commercial carrier to provide "safe carriage" to its passengers (192 Cal. App. 3d 1269, 1277) .

NOTE:

The lead opinion in Coon was authored by Justice Scott, who ruled that a significant, stable, and exclusive homosexual relationship between two men, as a matter of law, is not a close relationship within the meaning of Dillon v. Legg (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 728, 69 Cal. Rptr. 72, 441 P.2d 912 , that warrants recovery of damages for negligent infliction of emotional distress based on one's witnessing an intentional assault on the other. Justice Barry-Deal concurred in this ruling, but invited the legislature to reconsider the matter. Presiding Justice White concurred in the judgment, but dissented from the holding that an intimate homosexual relationship cannot be a significant relationship as a matter of law for stating a cause of action for negligent infliction of emotional distress.

[b] Failure to State Cause of Action

The facts and procedural background of Coon v. Joseph (1987) 192 Cal. App. 3d 1269, 237 Cal. Rptr. 873 , are discussed in § 33.22[3][a]. In affirming the judgment of dismissal, the court of appeal, with respect to the Civ. Code § 2100 issue, pointed out that: (1) the verified complaint stated that the bus driver refused to allow plaintiff to board the bus and, accordingly, plaintiff never became a passenger; and (2) the duty of care codified in Civ. Code § 2100, therefore, never arose in plaintiff's favor, and defendants consequently never breached any duty of safe carriage owing to passengers with respect to plaintiff (192 Cal. App. 3d 1269, 1277) .

[c] No Heightened Duty Once Passenger Has Exited Carrier

In McGettigan v. Bay Area Rapid Transit Dist. (1997) 57 Cal. App. 4th 1011, 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 516 , plaintiff sued a rapid transit district for negligence based on the following facts: he was asleep on a train and when it reached the end of the line was awakened by a train operator who, knowing that plaintiff was obviously inebriated, ordered him to leave and left him standing on the edge of the station platform, after which plaintiff injured himself by falling off the platform or getting in the way of a moving train. The trial court sustained defendants demurrer, plaintiff filed a motion for reconsideration, and attached an amended complaint to it. Judgment dismissing the complaint was entered and the motion was denied. Plaintiff appealed after his motion to set aside the judgment was also denied.

The court of appeal affirmed on the basis of the rule enunciated in Marshall v. United Airlines (1973) 35 Cal. App. 3d 84, 86, 110 Cal. Rptr. 416 , that theheightened duty of care owed by a common carrier to a passenger [see Civ. Code § 2100] only applies while passengers are in transit and until they have safely departed the carrier's vehicle. According to the court, once plaintiff had safely exited the train, the relationship of carrier-passenger had terminated and plaintiff was in a place of relative safety. Thus, defendant had no duty to remove plaintiff from the train platform based on the existence of the carrier-passenger relationship (57 Cal. App. 4th 1011, 1017) . Plaintiff also contended that, because the train operator had advised him that he could catch a return train on another platform, the carrier-passenger relationship had not terminated: he was either a passenger on the first leg of his trip, a passenger who had begun the second leg, or a passenger during the entire journey which included the transfer between trains. In order to hold the rapid transit district liable under this theory plaintiff would have had to allege facts showing that the carrier took some action indicating acceptance of the passenger as a traveler. The court found that plaintiff failed to do this, that merely advising him of the return train did not manifest acceptance of him as a traveler (57 Cal. App. 4th 1011, 1019) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Applicability of Civil Code Section 2100

In Orr v. Pacific Sw. Airlines (1989) 208 Cal. App. 3d 1467, 257 Cal. Rptr. 18 , the plaintiff brought suit against a carrier for failure to exercise the utmost degree of care in failing to prevent her being injured by being knocked down at a security checkpoint and failing to collect and preserve information regarding the event for her use in future civil litigation. The court pointed out that ordinary rules of negligence generally apply to the condition and maintenance of equipment and premises at the carrier's station, but that the doctrine of the highest degree of care applies to the contract of carriage (208 Cal. App. 3d 1467, 1472) . The court held that at the time the accident occurred, the relationship between plaintiff and the carrier was no more than carrier and prospective passenger, because plaintiff was not in the custody or control of the carrier, the carrier had not assumed the responsibility of conducting the plaintiff to the point of departure, the carrier had not restricted the plaintiff's mobility, and the carrier had not yet accepted the plaintiff for carriage because such acceptance occurred only when passengers surrendered their tickets at the boarding gate (208 Cal. App. 3d 1467, 1473-1474) .

THE COURT MAY TRANSFER AN ACTION AGAINST A COMMON CARRIER FOR _____ [PERSONAL INJURIES or WRONGFUL DEATH] TO THE COUNTY OF DEFENDANT'S RESIDENCE AS A PROPER COUNTY UNDER SECTION 395(a) OF THE CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE.

A. Statutory Authority for Motion. The court may, on motion, change the place of trial when the court designated in the complaint is not the proper court (Code Civ. Proc. § 397(a)).

B. Transfer Mandatory on Proper Showing. The court must order the action transferred to the proper court when it appears at the hearing of the motion for change of venue that the action was not commenced in the proper court (Code Civ. Proc. § 396b).

C. Venue of Tort Actions. A tort action must be tried in the county where the defendant resides or where the injury occurred (Code Civ. Proc. § 395(a)).

D. Determining Nature of Action. This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion made by a defendant carrier for transfer of an action for personal injuries brought by a passenger in a county which is neither the place of the injury nor the defendant's residence.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Determining Nature of Action

In Williamson v. Pacific Greyhound Lines (1944) 67 Cal. App. 2d 250, 153 P.2d 990 , plaintiff alleged that while riding from Napa to San Francisco as a passenger in defendant's bus, she was injured as a result of the negligence of defendant carrier's employees. The complaint incidentally alleged that plaintiff paid her fare and that defendant agreed to exercise utmost care to safely convey plaintiff to her destination. The injuries were sustained in either Sonoma or Marin County. The trial court granted defendant carrier's motion to transfer the action from Napa County, where the action was filed, to San Francisco, the county where defendant carrier resided. Plaintiff had contended that the action was based on the contract to safely convey plaintiff, and that Napa County, the county where the contract was entered into, was the proper place for trial under Code Civ. Proc. § 394. In reviewing the trial court's order, the court of appeal stated that if the complaint is uncertain as to the nature of an action, on a motion for change of venue the court may be justified in construing the complaint against the pleader in determining whether the action is based on breach of contract or tort. Actions for damages to a passenger for negligence of the carrier usually sound in tort and not in contract. In upholding the lower court's transfer of venue to San Francisco, the county of defendant's residence [former Code Civ. Proc. § 395, now Code Civ. Proc. § 395(a)] the court of appeal stated that it was convinced that the action was one for damages for personal injury based on the alleged negligence of the carrier's employees. The action sounded in tort, even though the contract was incidentally alleged (67 Cal. App. 2d 250, 256) .

[b] Venue of Action Against Carrier for Personal Injuries

Williamson v. Pacific Greyhound Lines (1944) 67 Cal. App. 2d 250, 153 P.2d 990 , is discussed in § 33.23[3][b].

In Rushing v. Pickwick Stages Sys. (1931) 113 Cal. App. 240, 298 P. 150 , the court of appeal reversed an order of the trial court denying defendant's motion to transfer venue of an action from San Francisco County to defendant's principal place of business, Los Angeles County. Plaintiffs had alleged a contract to carry plaintiff's wife safely from Los Angeles to San Francisco and a breach of that contract in that the defendant so carelessly and negligently operated its bus that the bus ran off the highway injuring plaintiff's wife. Plaintiffs contended that venue was proper since the action was based on the breach of contract of safe carriage. The court of appeal held that former Code Civ. Proc. § 395 [now Code Civ. Proc. § 395(a)], which provides that actions for tort be tried in the county where the defendant resides or where the injury occurred, applied since the injuries resulting from defendant's alleged negligence were the gravamen of the action pleaded and the action was therefore in tort. It stated that in an action for damages arising out of the contractual relationship between a carrier and passenger, the tort which is the basis of the claim for damages lies in the breach of the duty imposed by law, and the allegations of the contract relationship between the parties are merely for the purpose of showing that the plaintiff wasnot a trespasser or of showing that the plaintiff was lawfully in the position at the time of the defendant's breach (113 Cal. App. 240, 242) .

SUMMARY JUDGMENT FOR DEFENDANT CARRIER IS PROPER IF DEFENDANT DOES NOT OWE A DUTY OF CARE TO _____ [PLAINTIFF or PLAINTIFF'S DECEDENT].

A. Summary Judgment. A defendant may move for summary judgment in any action or proceeding if it is contended that the action has no merit. Such motion must be granted if all of the papers submitted show that there is no triable issue as to any material fact and that defendant is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law (Code Civ. Proc. § 437c).

B. Summary Judgment Proper Where No Duty. It is proper for the court to grant a defendant carrier's motion for summary judgment where defendant did not owe a duty of care to _____ [plaintiff or plaintiff's decedent] (Marshall v. United Airlines (1973) 35 Cal. App. 3d 84, 88, 92, 110 Cal. Rptr. 416).

C. Carrier's Duty of Care. A common carrier owes its passengers the highest degree of care only while the passengers are in transit and until they have safely departed from the carrier's vehicle. Once the passenger reaches a place outside thesphere of any activity of the carrier which might constitute a mobile hazard, the care required of a carrier for the protection of a passenger on its premises is only reasonable care (Marshall v. United Airlines (1973) 35 Cal. App. 3d 84, 87, 110 Cal. Rptr. 416).

D. No Duty to Maintain. In the absence of an agreement or other special circumstances, where the carrier does not own or have a right of control or management of the property, it has no duty to maintain the property and therefore has no liability for its negligent maintenance (Marshall v. United Airlines (1973) 35 Cal. App. 3d 84, 87-88, 110 Cal. Rptr. 416).

[Optional] E. Duty Carrier by Bus or Streetcar. A carrier of passengers by bus or streetcar is not responsible for injuries which occur after the passenger safely alights from the vehicle, such as injuries caused by the condition of the street which the person must cross. The carrier does not have a duty to maintain sidewalks in a safe condition merely because patrons alight from its vehicles on the sidewalk (Kotronakis v. City & County of San Francisco (1961) 192 Cal. App. 2d 624, 627, 13 Cal. Rptr. 709 ; MacLean v. City & County of San Francisco (1954) 127 Cal. App. 2d 263, 271, 273 P.2d 698).

[Optional] F. No Duty to Disembarked Incapacitated Passenger. Common carriers owe a duty to assist a passenger with special needs only when the passenger is boarding or alighting from its trains or cars. Once the passenger has safely disembarked there is no such duty (McGettigan v. Bay Area Rapid Transit Dist. (1997) 57 Cal. App. 4th 1011, 1020, 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 516).

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for summary judgment in an action which has been brought for the personal injuries, or wrongful death, of a passenger of a common carrier. The form is for use when defendant carrier is contending that it owed no duty to plaintiff, or plaintiff's decedent, since the injuries occurred at a time when or a place where the carrier-passenger relationship had terminated.

[b] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications these points and authorities may be used to support a demurrer to a complaint for personal injuries to, or wrongful death of, a passenger where the complaint fails to establish on its face the carrier-passenger relationship [*see Grier v. [3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Summary Judgment Proper Where No Duty

In Marshall v. United Airlines (1973) 35 Cal. App. 3d 84, 110 Cal. Rptr. 416 , plaintiff had purchased an airline ticket from United Airlines for air passage from Berkeley, California to New York and return. After her return to San Francisco Airport, she was to take an SFO Airlines' helicopter to Berkeley. While walking along a corridor in the San Francisco Airport toward the SFO Airlines' facility, plaintiff fell down some stairs and was injured. In support of a motion for summary judgment, United's declaration stated that it did not use, lease, maintain, own, or control the area of the airport where plaintiff was injured at the time of the accident. Plaintiff's declaration in opposition did not state whether the city, United, or SFO, or any or all of them had control of the airport building where she fell. Her declaration also did not indicate that the relationship between United and SFO was any other than that of two independent carriers, where one, for the convenience of the carriers and the passenger, sells a ticket for through passage on both carriers.

In affirming the lower court's summary judgment in favor of United, the courtof appeal found that a common carrier airline company does not have a duty to a passenger to exercise care in the maintenance of an airport building area over which it has no ownership or right of control, but which must be traversed by the passenger when changing planes to an independent connecting airline (35 Cal. App. 3d 84, 88) . The court also found that United was under no duty to warn plaintiff of the defect in the stairs, and that United did not expressly or impliedly contract to furnish plaintiff with nonnegligent passage from New York until her departure from the SFO Airlines' helicopter at Berkeley (35 Cal. App. 3d 84, 92) .

[b] Carrier's Duty of Care

In McGettigan v. Bay Area Rapid Transit Dist. (1997) 57 Cal. App. 4th 1011, 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 516 , the plaintiff sued a rapid transit district for negligence based on the following facts: he was asleep on a train and when it reached the end of the line was awakened by a train operator who, knowing that plaintiff was obviously inebriated, ordered him to leave and left him standing on the edge of the station platform, after which plaintiff injured himself by falling off the platform or getting in the way of a moving train. The trial court sustained defendants demurrer, plaintiff filed a motion for reconsideration, and attached an amended complaint to it. Judgment dismissing the complaint was entered and the motion was denied. Plaintiff appealed after his motion to set aside the judgment was also denied.

The court of appeal affirmed on the basis of the rule enunciated in Marshall v. United Airlines (1973) 35 Cal. App. 3d 84, 86, 110 Cal. Rptr. 416 , that the heightened duty of care owed by a common carrier to a passenger, Civ. Code § 2100, only applies while passengers are in transit and until they have safely departed the carrier's vehicle. According to the court, once plaintiff had safely exited the train, the relationship of carrier-passenger had terminated and plaintiff was in a place of relative safety. Thus, defendant had no duty to remove plaintiff from the train platform based on the existence of the carrier-passenger relationship (57 Cal. App. 4th 1011, 1017) .

The court dismissed plaintiff's argument, under the reasoning in Marshall that his special relationship with defendant continued after he left the train because he remained in a hazardous sphere of activity associated with the journey while he was on the train platform. In Marshall, the court determined that the carrier owed a plaintiff who was injured while walking in an airport terminal between flights a duty of ordinary or reasonable care because the plaintiff had reached a place outside the sphere of any activity of the carrier which might reasonably constitute a mobile or animated hazard to the passenger. The court concluded that plaintiff was not within a sphere of activity as envisioned by Marshall. There are no mobile hazards on a train platform because the train is on a fixed track, and there are no freely moving vehicles that might strike a passenger while on the platform (57 Cal. App. 4th 1011, 1018) .

The facts of Marshall v. United Airlines (1973) 35 Cal. App. 3d 84, 110 Cal. Rptr. 416 , are discussed in § 33.24[3][a]. In discussing a common carrier's duty of care to its passengers, the court of appeal stated that the general rule is that a carrier owes its passengers the highest degree of care, but that this rule applies while the passengers are in transit and until they have safely departed from the carrier's vehicle. The duty ends when the passenger is discharged into a relatively safe space, but not when the passenger alights safely from the carrier's vehicle if the passenger is discharged into a dangerous area. Once the passenger enters the carrier's station, the carrier is bound to exercise only a reasonable degree of care for the passenger's safety. Thus, in this case the duty of care owed to plaintiff, if any, was no greater than ordinary or reasonable care (35 Cal. App. 3d 84, 86-87) .

[c] No Duty to Maintain

The facts of Marshall v. United Airlines (1973) 35 Cal. App. 3d 84, 110 Cal. Rptr. 416 , are discussed in § 33.24[3][a]. The court of appeal stated that liability for the negligent maintenance of property arises from the rule that everyone is responsible for injuring another by his want of ordinary care or skill in the management of his property [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1714]. In the absence of agreement or other special circumstances, there is no duty to maintain property. Therefore, if there is no ownership or right of control or management of the property, there is no liability for its negligent maintenance. United was under no duty to maintain the stairway which caused plaintiff's injuries since United was not the owner or lessee of the stairway and had no right of control over it (35 Cal. App. 3d 84, 88) .

[d] Duty of Carrier by Bus or Streetcar

In MacLean v. City & County of San Francisco (1954) 127 Cal. App. 2d 263, 273 P.2d 698 , plaintiff brought an action against the City and County of San Francisco, and others, for injuries she allegedly sustained while alighting from a municipal bus. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's judgment in favor of defendant city and county after granting its motion for nonsuit. The bus on which plaintiff had been riding had stopped with its front door five to eight feet from the curb. The court of appeal stated that the testimony showed that plaintiff did not step directly from the bus onto the mortar on which she slipped. Since plaintiff was not alighting from the bus when she was injured, the rule that the high degree of care required of a carrier toward a passenger ends when the passenger safely alights from the bus and that the carrier is not responsible for injuries occuring thereafter from the condition of the street which the passenger had to cross to get to the sidewalk applied. This rule was established for streetcars in Choquette v. Key Sys. Transit Co. (1931) 118 Cal. App. 643, 654-655, 5 P.2d 921 (127 Cal. App. 2d 263, 271) . The court also stated that the fact that the bus stopped away from the curb but as near to it as possible under the circumstances did not constitute negligence.

In Kotronakis v. City & County of San Francisco (1961) 192 Cal. App. 2d 624, 13 Cal. Rptr. 709 , plaintiff was approaching a bus stop to wait for a city bus which was also approaching the stop. He stepped in a puddle on the sidewalk near the curb and fell. There was no evidence that plaintiff signified his desire to board the bus to the driver, or that the bus driver knew that plaintiff wished to board the bus. The court of appeal held that the evidence was insufficient to sustain the verdict for plaintiff on the theory of the city's liability as a common carrier. Though the court felt that plaintiff had probably not yet become a passenger, it rested its ruling on the ground that the municipal railway as a common carrier did not have any duty to maintain the sidewalks in a safe condition merely because patrons of the line boarded and alighted from its buses on the sidewalk (192 Cal. App. 2d 624, 627) . The court approved the holding in Choquette v. Key Sys. Transit Co. (1931) 118 Cal. App. 643, 653-655, 5 P.2d 921 , that a streetcar company does not have the same duty as a commercial railway to provide a passenger with safe passage to and from a car, since the streetcar company does not have control over the streets or traffic on the streets.

[e] No Duty to Disembarked Incapacitated Passenger

In McGettigan v. Bay Area Rapid Transit Dist. (1997) 57 Cal. App. 4th 1011, 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 516 ; plaintiff sued a rapid transit district for negligence based on the following facts: he was asleep on a train and when it reached the end of the line was awakened by a train operator who, knowing that plaintiff was obviously inebriated, ordered him to leave and left him standing on the edge of the station platform, after which plaintiff injured himself by falling off the platform or getting in the way of a moving train. The trial court sustained defendants demurrer, plaintiff filed a motion for reconsideration, and attached an amended complaint to it. Judgment dismissing the complaint was entered and the motion was denied. Plaintiff appealed after his motion to set aside the judgment was also denied.

The court of appeal affirmed. Plaintiff contended that defendant, as a common carrier, should have assumed responsibility for his care as a passenger because he was obviously incapacitated and unable to care for himself. In support of this argument plaintiff cited McBride v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. (1955) 44 Cal. 2d 113, 119, 279 P.2d 966 , which held that a common carrier must render the necessary assistance in boarding or alighting from its trains or cars, to persons with special needs. The court distinguished McBride because in this case plaintiff was not injured as he exited the train, but sometime after he had safely exited. Therefore, defendant was not liable for plaintiff's injuries under the reasoning of this case (57 Cal. App. 4th 1011, 1020) .

IT IS PROPER FOR A COURT TO GRANT A MOTION FOR A NEW TRIAL FOR AN ERROR OF LAW CONSISTING OF ITS FAILURE TO INSTRUCT THE JURY ON THE DOCTRINE OF RES IPSA LOQUITUR WHEN THE [AN] INSTRUCTION[S] IS/ARE PROPER.

A. Granting Motion for New Trial. A trial court may grant a new trial for an error of law (Code Civ. Proc. § 657(7)) consisting of the failure to give an instruction thereby misleading the jury (Kimball v. Whetzel (1970) 10 Cal. App. 3d 836, 842, 89 Cal. Rptr. 373).

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for a new trial in an action for damages for injuries to or wrongful death of a passenger brought against a common carrier where the court did not give instructions on res ipsa loquitur although plaintiff produced evidence sufficient to support findings that the conditions requisite to drawing an inference of res ipsa loquitur exist.

Where appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Counsel should also consider adding points and authorities relating to standards for granting motions for new trial, generally [see Ch. 155, Motions After Trial].

With appropriate modifications, these points and authorities may be used to oppose a motion for a new trial brought by a defendant on the ground that instructions regarding res ipsa loquitur should not have been given.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Granting Motion for New Trial

In Kimball v. Whetzel (1970) 10 Cal. App. 3d 836, 89 Cal. Rptr. 373 , plaintiff brought an action for personal injuries sustained when defendant's vehicle rear-ended her vehicle. After a jury verdict for defendant, the trial court granted a new trial based on its failure to give an instruction concerning the law governing the manner of signaling. Defendant contended that the trial court improperly granted the motion for a new trial because its error in instructing the jury was not prejudicial and because plaintiff had not made an objection. In affirming the order, the court of appeal stated that the trial court's discretion in granting a new trial should be upheld even if the error in instructions was minor or debatable.

There is no requirement that an appellate court determine whether the error was prejudicial. Rather, the issue is whether or not the failure to give the instruction was sufficiently misleading so that the trial court, having seen and heard the witnesses, could find that the instructions were improper. The court affirmed the order, finding that the rules governing waiver have no application to an appellate court's consideration of propriety of an order granting a new trial (10 Cal. App. 3d 836, 842) .

[b] When Doctrine of Res Ipsa Loquitur Applies

In Hardin v. San Jose City Lines, Inc. (1953) 41 Cal. 2d 432, 260 P.2d 63 , plaintiff brought an action for damages for injuries she sustained while riding in a bus operated by defendant. Plaintiff testified that she was waiting at the front of the bus to get off at her stop when the bus came to a sudden stop about 150 feet from the regular stopping place and that as a result she was thrown forward and injured. The jury returned a verdict for plaintiff, and defendant appealed from the judgment, asserting that the court erred in giving its instruction on the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur. In discussing the propriety of the instruction, the Supreme Court stated that an inference of negligence based on res ipsa loquitur arises in cases in which a passenger on a common carrier is injured as the result of the operation of the vehicle. Therefore, the trial court could properly instruct the jury that if the accident happened as described by plaintiff, an inference arose that her injury was caused by defendant's negligence and that it was incumbent on defendant to rebut the inference by showing that it exercised the utmost care and diligence. Although the Court found that the instruction was improperly worded in that it assumed that the accident occurred in the manner claimed by plaintiff, it affirmed the judgment, because the error was not prejudicial in that other instructions clarified this point (41 Cal. 2d 432, 436) .

[c] Refusal of Proper Res Ipsa Loquitur Instructions as Error

In Keena v. Scales (1964) 61 Cal. 2d 779, 40 Cal. Rptr. 65, 394 P.2d 809 , the Supreme Court reversed a judgment for defendant in an action for personal injuries suffered by plaintiff in a fall from a chair in defendant's office. The only issue before the court was whether or not the trial court had committed prejudicial error in failing to give plaintiff's requested instruction on the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur. Citing Di Mare v. Cresci (1962) 58 Cal. 2d 292, 298, 23 Cal. Rptr. 772, 373 P.2d 860 , the Court stated that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applies when the accident is of such a nature that it can be said, in the light of past experience, that it probably was the result of negligence by someone, and that the defendant is probably the one responsible. The Court found sufficient evidence to warrantfindings supporting the application of the doctrine. Although there was also evidence that would support a finding that plaintiff's negligent use of the chair was the cause of the accident, the Court stated that if a plaintiff has produced evidence sufficient to support findings that the conditions requisite to the drawing of the inference are present, the trial court's refusal to allow the inference by refusing a proper instruction is error, because a proper instruction would have made clear to the jury that the doctrine could not apply unless the plaintiff was free from fault in causing the accident. Since plaintiff's instruction, although lacking in clarity, appeared proper to the Court, the Court reversed the judgment for defendant (61 Cal. 2d 779, 783) .

§ 33.26 Supporting Contention That Carrier's Liability Is Limited in Action for Loss of or Damage to Baggage or Freight [Civ. Code §§ 2182, 2194, 2195]--Limitation by Special Contract [Civ. Code § 2174]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial appellate brief].

THE AMOUNT OF DAMAGES, IF ANY, RECOVERABLE BY PLAINTIFF IS LIMITED TO $_____ PURSUANT TO AN ENFORCEABLE SPECIAL CONTRACT LIMITING THE OBLIGATIONS OF DEFENDANT AS A COMMON CARRIER.

A. Limitation of Carrier's Obligations. The obligations of a common carrier may be limited by special contract (Civ. Code § 2174; Morville v. United Parcel Serv. (1983) 144 Cal. App. 3d 552, 554, 192 Cal. Rptr. 779).

[EITHER]

B. Agreed Valuation Contract. An agreed valuation contract, whose primary purpose is to set an actual valuation of the property for determination of freight rates, which valuation is agreed by the parties to be the actual value for all purposes, is enforceable as a reasonable contract under which the carrier cannot be held responsible for loss in an amount exceeding the agreed valuation (Donlon Bros. v. Southern Pac. Co. (1907) 151 Cal. 763, 768-769, 776, 91 P. 603).

[OR]

B. Implied Acceptance of Limitation. A passenger, consignor, or consignee, by accepting a ticket, bill of lading, or written contract for carriage, with knowledge of its terms, assents to the limitation stated regarding the amount of the carrier's liability if property carried in packages, trunks, or boxes is lost or damaged, when the value of the property is not named, and also to the limitation stated regarding the carrier's liability for loss or injury to live animals carried (Civ. Code § 2176).

[CONTINUE]

[Optional] C. Limitation of Liability in Bill of Lading. Damages may be limited by a term in a bill of lading or transportation agreement that the carrier's liability may not exceed a value stated in the bill or transportation agreement, if the carrier's rates are dependent upon value, the consignor is afforded an opportunity to declare a higher value, and the consignor is advised of the opportunity (Com. Code § 7309(b)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the damages recoverable in an action against a carrier are limited by a special contract between the parties [see Civ. Code §§ 2174, 2176]. Optional Paragraph C is for use when damages are limited by a provision in a bill of lading [see Com. Code § 7309(b)].

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the carrier's obligation is limited by virtue of a special contract. For example, if no triable issue of material fact remains, these points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities in support of a motion for summary judgment [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 33.32 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Limitation of Carrier's Obligations

In Morville v. United Parcel Serv. (1983) 144 Cal. App. 3d 552, 192 Cal. Rptr. 779 , a mail order stamp dealer contracted with a company (the consignor) that agreed to convert his mailing lists of customers to a card system for use in an addressing machine. After performing the contracted service, the consignor delivered the cards and the list to United Postal Service (UPS), which lost the package. The contract between UPS and the consignor included a $100 limitationof liability unless excess value was declared. The consignor delivered the packageto UPS without a declaration of added value. The stamp dealer brought an action against UPS and the consignor, seeking damages for breach of contract, negligence, and conversion for loss of unique and irreplaceable goods. Plaintiff did not contest the existence of the contract between UPS and the consignor, but rather asserted that it was void. The trial court granted the motion by UPS for summary judgment, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that Civ. Code § 2174 applied to limit the carrier's liability to the stated amount in the contract (144 Cal. App. 3d 552, 554-556) . The court rejected plaintiff's argument that pursuant to Civ. Code § 2176, the consent of both the consignor and consignee is required. The court stated that the term "or" as used in that statute is a disjunctive participle used to express an alternative. Consequently, the consent of the consignor to the terms of the limitation was sufficient to bind plaintiff (144 Cal. App. 3d 552, 554-555) . The court further stated that a consignor with authority to deliver goods to a carrier for shipment has the authority to enter into a special contract limiting liability (144 Cal. App. 3d 552, 555) . Moreover, the same rule applies when actual authority is absent but the facts do not place the carrier on notice that the consignor is without authority to limit liability (144 Cal. App. 3d 552, 555) . In the instant case, UPS had shipped an average of 52 packages per day for the consignor, and had made daily pickups from that company for ten years. The court noted that a rule requiring UPS to inquire into the consignor's authority on each and every package would cause the precise uncertainties and costs that the rate structure is designed to eliminate. Although plaintiff alleged that the contract between him and the consignor provided that the consignor's agent would personally pick up and deliver the lists, UPS had no notice of that contract, and the $100 limitation was therefore binding on plaintiff with regard to UPS (144 Cal. App. 3d 552, 556) . The court also noted that its conclusion does not exonerate the consignor from any breach of its agreement with plaintiff (144 Cal. App. 3d 552, 556 n.7).

[b] Agreed Valuation Contract

In Donlon Bros. v. Southern Pac. Co. (1907) 151 Cal. 763, 91 P. 603 , plaintiffs brought an action for damages against defendant railway common carrier for injury to one racehorse and for the death of another, alleging that while transporting the horses, the defendant committed gross negligence. The contract between plaintiffs and defendant established a special rate for transportation based on an agreed valuation, and stated that the amount claimed for loss or damage for each animal was to be adjusted on the basis of the value at the time and place of shipment, not exceeding the declared valuation set forth in the contract, which was $20 for each horse. The jury found that defendant was grossly negligent, and returned a verdict in favor of plaintiffs for $350 for the horse that was killed and $200 for the horse that was injured. Defendant appealed, asserting that the trial court improperly refused to instruct the jury that if they found for plaintiff, their verdict should not exceed $20 damages for each horse.

The Supreme Court reversed and ordered a new trial, holding that the court erred in refusing to give the proffered instruction (151 Cal. 763, 776) . The Court found that because the rates of transportation charged by the carrier were measured by the valuation of the property shipped, the primary purpose of the contract was to fix an agreed valuation of the horses as a basis on which freight rates should be charged and paid, on the condition that in case of loss the responsibility of the carrier would be measured by the agreed valuation. The contract was therefore not one limiting liability for gross negligence within the meaning of Civ. Code § 2175, which would be unenforceable under the provisions of that statute (151 Cal. 763, 774-776) .

NOTE:

In Muelder v. Western Greyhound Lines (1970) 8 Cal. App. 3d 319, 330, 87 Cal. Rptr. 297 [see § 33.32[3][a]], which did not uphold the limitation provision before it, the court noted in dictum that a contract described in Donlon is valid only if the shipper had a choice of rates and a fair opportunity to obtain higher valuation by paying a higher rate.

For example, if no triable issue of material fact remains, these points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities in support of a motion for summary judgment [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Therefore, counsel should set forth facts showing that the carrier's liability is governed by a particular statute.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Statute of Limitations Tolled

Plaintiffs in Allred v. Bekins Wide World Van Serv. (1975) 45 Cal. App. 3d 984, 120 Cal. Rptr. 312 , brought an action for personal injuries and property damages suffered as a result of the existence of microscopic vermin which lived and bred in the packing straw which defendant carrier used to pack plaintiffs' personal belongings which it carried. The trial court sustained defendants' general demurrers on the ground that the action was barred by the statute of limitations. The court of appeal found that the action for personal injury was barred by the statute of limitations, but that the action for property damage was not barred and that the judgment of dismissal entered on the property damage cause of action should be reversed.
