The court of appeal held that the false-statement charge was not time-barred. The court acknowledged that at least one other court has held that an officer's dishonesty in denying an underlying charge after the expiration of the one-year limitations period on the underlying charge does not constitute separately chargeable misconduct (see Alameida v. State Pers. Bd. (2004) 120 Cal. App. 4th 46, 62-63, 15 Cal. Rptr. 3d 383). In such circumstances, to allow the dishonesty charge to survive would effectively resuscitate the underlying charge, which would need to be proven in order to demonstrate that the officer's denial was dishonest. That would defeat the purpose of the limitations period, which is to ensure a speedy adjudication of conduct that could result in discipline (175 Cal. App. 4th 249, 256-257) .

In this case, however, the court of appeal found it significant that the one-year period had not expired when the officer made the allegedly false statement. Under this scenario, there was no danger that the police department would be using the allegedly false statement to resuscitate a charge that had been time-barred. As a result, the policy concern about impermissibly reviving an already-expired charge by questioning the officer about was not present in this case (175 Cal. App. 4th 249, 257) .

[c] Notice of Disciplinary Action Need Not Identify Person Who Decided to Impose Discipline

The factual background of Benefield v. Department of Corrections & Rehabilitation (2009) 171 Cal. App. 4th 469, 89 Cal. Rptr. 3d 608 , is discussed in [a], above. The disciplined officers claimed that they were entitled to relief under the Public Safety Officers Procedural Bill of Rights Act (see Gov. Code § 3309.5) because the notice of disciplinary action was "misleading" in that it did not specify the person who decided to impose discipline on the officers. The court of appeal rejected this contention, explaining that "[n]owhere in the [Public Safety Officers Procedural Bill of Rights Act] is there any requirement that a notice of proposed discipline or a notice of adverse action identify the decisionmaker" (171 Cal. App. 4th 469, 477) .

PART II. FORMS

2-36 California Points & Authorities § 36.60

§ 36.60 Opposing Petition for Writ of Mandate to Review Discipline of Civil Service Employee--Employee's Constitutional Right Against Self-Incrimination Does Not Bar Disciplinary Action for Refusal to Answer Employer's Job-Related Questions

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

A WRIT OF MANDATE SHOULD NOT ISSUE TO SET ASIDE THE DISCIPLINE IMPOSED ON THE PETITIONER, BECAUSE THE PETITIONER'S CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHT AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION DOES NOT PREVENT THE RESPONDENT FROM DISCIPLINING THE PETITIONER FOR A REFUSAL TO ANSWER JOB-RELATED QUESTIONS.

Privilege Against Self-Incrimination Does Not Prevent Employer From Requiring Public Employee To Answer Job-Related Questions. A public employer may discipline, and even dismiss, a public employee for refusing, on grounds of the constitutional privilege against self-incrimination, to answer the employer's job-related questions, as long as the employee is not required, as a condition of remaining in the job, to waive or surrender his or her constitutional protection against criminal use of the statements thus obtained, at least when the employee is specifically advised that he or she retains that protection (Spielbauer v. County of Santa Clara (2009) 45 Cal. 4th 704, 725-730, 88 Cal. Rptr. 3d 590, 199 P.3d 1125).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used to oppose a contention that a public employer violated an employee's constitutional protection against self-incrimination by compelling the employee to answer job-related questions under threat of disciplinary action. In an appropriate case, this form may be used in opposition to the form set forth in § 36.37.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should show that, although the public employer threatened disciplinary action if the employee refused to answer questions, the employee was not required to waive his or her constitutional right not to have the compelled answers used against him or her in a criminal prosecution.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Privilege Against Self-Incrimination Does Not Prevent Employer From Requiring Public Employee To Answer Job-Related Questions

In Spielbauer v. County of Santa Clara (2009) 45 Cal. 4th 704, 88 Cal. Rptr. 3d 590, 199 P.3d 1125 , the plaintiff had been a deputy public defender employed by the defendant county. During an investigation of allegations that the plaintiff had made deceptive statements to the court while representing a criminal defendant, a supervising attorney directed the plaintiff to answer questions about the incident and told the plaintiff that a refusal to cooperate would be deemed insubordination warranting discipline up to and including dismissal. The supervisor also accurately advised the plaintiff that his constitutional right against the use of compelled self-incrimination (see U.S. Const. amend. V, cl. 3; Cal. Const. art. I, § 15) meant that his answers could not be used in any criminal proceeding. Nevertheless, the plaintiff refused to answer, and the county terminated the plaintiff's employment, in part for insubordination in refusing to answer questions about his job performance.

The plaintiff sought mandamus relief. Among other things, he insisted he could not be dismissed for refusing, on grounds of his constitutional right against self-incrimination, to answer the county's potentially incriminating questions unless he received, in advance, a formal grant of immunity from criminal use of his answers. The trial court denied the petition, ruling that the plaintiff was not entitled to formal immunity before being compelled to answer his employer's questions. After the court of appeal reversed the trial court's judgment, the California Supreme Court granted review.

The Supreme Court agreed with the trial court and reversed the court of appeal's judgment on the question whether a formal grant of criminal-use immunity is required before a public employee can be compelled, under threat of dismissal, to answer job-related questions. The Supreme Court began with the settled proposition that under the relevant federal and state constitutional provisions, incriminating answers coerced from a public employee under threat of dismissal cannot be used against the employee in a criminal proceeding (45 Cal. 4th 704, 715) . On the other hand, the constitutional privilege against compelled self-incrimination in a criminal case does not protect against the nonpenal adverse use of officially compelled answers. Thus, incriminating answers given by a public employee under threat of job discipline for refusal to answer may themselves form the basis for job discipline, including termination, as long as the employee is protected against the use of such statements in criminal proceedings (45 Cal. 4th 704, 715) .

The Supreme Court also noted that lower federal courts and most California courts have concluded that the federal and state Constitutions do not require a public employer to obtain and provide an affirmative grant of criminal-use immunity before using the threat of job discipline to compel answers from its employee in the course of an investigation of job performance. Rather, the employee may be punished for a refusal to answer such questions, provided that he or she is not required to waive or surrender the constitutional privilege against criminal use of the answers (45 Cal. 4th 704, 718-719) .

The Supreme Court agreed with these courts, explaining that the state and federal self-incrimination clauses say one cannot be made an involuntary witness against himself, or herself, in a criminal proceeding. Thus, they do not prohibit officially compelled admissions of wrongdoing as such; they only forbid the use of such statements in a criminal proceeding against the declarant. Thus, the constitutional provisions afford a public employee no right to refuse to account for his or her job performance, or to avoid dismissal as punishment for such a refusal. They simply forbid the use of the compelled statements, or the fruits thereof, in a criminal prosecution against the employee (45 Cal. 4th 704, 727) .

The Supreme Court concluded that a public employer need not provide a formal grant of criminal-use immunity before it can discipline and even dismiss a public employee for refusing to answer the employer's job-related questions, so long as the employee is not required to waive or surrender his or her privilege against self-incrimination, at least where, as in this case, the employee is specifically advised that he or she retains that right (45 Cal. 4th 704, 725, 730). Accordingly, the Court reversed the court of appeal's judgment to the extent that that judgment had required the plaintiff to receive a formal grant of criminal-use immunity before he could be dismissed for refusing to answer the county's job-related questions (45 Cal. 4th 704, 730) .

A DEMURRER TO PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT FOR POSSESSION OF PERSONAL PROPERTY SHOULD BE SUSTAINED ON THE GROUND THAT THE COMPLAINT FAILS TO STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION IN THAT IT DOES NOT ALLEGE THE PLAINTIFF'S RIGHT TO IMMEDIATE POSSESSION AT THE TIME OF THE COMMENCEMENT OF THE ACTION.

A. Objection by Demurrer. The party against whom a complaint has been filed may object to the complaint by demurrer on the ground that it fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action when such ground appears on the face of the complaint [or from any matter of which the court is required to or may take judicial notice] (Code Civ.

B. Plaintiff as Required to Have Right to Immediate Possession of Property Claimed. To sustain an action for the recovery of specific personal property, the plaintiff must have the right to immediate and exclusive possession of the property at the time of the commencement of the action (*Commercial Discount Co. v. [a] Use of Form

The foregoing memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a demurrer to a complaint for possession of personal property when the complaint fails to allege that the plaintiff is entitled to immediate possession of the property at the time the action for its recovery is commenced.

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[i] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, the foregoing points and authorities may be used to support a motion for summary judgment or new trial.

[b] Related Points and Authorities

For memoranda of points and authorities supporting demurrers to complaints, generally, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff as Required to Have Right to Immediate Possession of Property Claimed

Commercial Discount Co. v. Cowen (1941) 18 Cal. 2d 610, 116 P.2d 599 , was an action in claim and delivery to recover certain personal property located at defendant's place of business. Plaintiff alleged that he was entitled to immediate possession of this property and demanded possession thereof from defendant, which was refused. Plaintiff's alleged right to possession stemmed from a contract for the liquidation of a debt owing from defendant to plaintiff. The contract provided that in the event defendant breached the agreement, any and all of theassets located at defendant's place of business were to be assigned and transferred to plaintiff and liquidated, and the proceeds thereof would be credited toward defendant's indebtedness. The trial court found that the agreement did not give plaintiff the right to immediate possession and entered judgment for defendant.

On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The Court noted the well-established rule that in order to maintain an action for recovery of specific personal property, the plaintiff must have the right to immediate and exclusive possession of the property at the time of the commencement of the action, although it is not essential that he or she show that he or she ever had actual possession of it. The plaintiff need not show absolute ownership of the property; a special property interest therein entitling plaintiff to immediate and exclusive possession of the property is sufficient (18 Cal. 2d 610, 613) . The Court held, however, that the contract in this case did not give plaintiff the right to immediate possession of the property (18 Cal. 2d 610, 615-616) .

[b] Complaint Fatally Insufficient Where Right to Possession Not Alleged

In Vanalstine v. Whelan (1901) 135 Cal. 232, 67 P. 125 , plaintiff brought an action to recover personal property seized by one defendant, a sheriff, for the benefit of other defendants who had maintained successful attachment suits. Defendants answered, and at the conclusion of the trial, judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff. Defendants appealed on the ground that the complaint was insufficient for failure to allege that plaintiff was the owner and entitled to possession of the property when the action was commenced. Plaintiff argued that this defect in the complaint was cured by the allegation in defendants' answer that plaintiff was not the owner and was not entitled to possession of the goods at the time alleged in the complaint or at any other time. The Supreme Court reversed the judgment for insufficiency of the complaint. It stated that a complaint in an action for possession of personal property was fatally insufficient if it failed to allege plaintiff's ownership and right to possession of the property at the time the action was commenced (135 Cal. 232, 233) . It also stated that when a complaint fails to state material facts, those facts may be supplied by the answer. However, the answer before the Court did not supply the omitted facts because it alleged the converse of the allegation that plaintiff ought to have made in the complaint (135 Cal. 232, 234) .

In Truman v. Young (1898) 121 Cal. 490, 53 P. 1073 , plaintiff brought an action for possession of a diamond. Defendant demurred on the ground that the complaint did not state sufficient facts to constitute a cause of action. The demurrer was overruled. Following trial, the trial court found for plaintiff. Defendant appealed from the trial court's adverse judgment and its denial of defendant's motion for a new trial. The Supreme Court found that the demurrer should have been sustained and reversed the judgment, granting plaintiff leave to amend the complaint (121 Cal. 490, 490) . It held that the allegation that the plaintiff was the owner of the personal property and entitled to its possession on a specified date prior to the commencement of the action was insufficient in that it did not imply plaintiff's continued ownership at the time of commencement of the action, which is a necessary element giving plaintiff the right to bring the action. Therefore, a complaint in an action for possession of personal property is fatally insufficient if it fails to allege plaintiff's ownership and right to possession of the property at the time the action is commenced (121 Cal. 490, 491) .

Counsel should note that although both the Truman and Vanalstine cases imply that plaintiff must allege both ownership and right to possession of the property at the time the action is commenced, the Supreme Court subsequently held that it is not essential to an action for possession of personal property that plaintiff be the absolute owner of the property, provided that he or she is entitled to its immediate possession at the time the action is commenced [see Commercial & Sav. Bank v. Foster (1930) 210 Cal. 76, 79, 290 P. 583] . Thus it appears that while plaintiff must allege his or her right to immediate possession of the property at the commencement of the action, plaintiff need not allege ownership of the property.

A DEMURRER TO PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT FOR POSSESSION OF PERSONAL PROPERTY SHOULD BE SUSTAINED ON THE GROUND THAT THE COMPLAINT FAILS TO STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION IN THAT IT APPEARS FROM THE COMPLAINT THAT DEFENDANT OBTAINED POSSESSION OF THE PROPERTY LAWFULLY, BUT THE COMPLAINT FAILS TO ALLEGE THAT PLAINTIFF DEMANDED RETURN OF THE PROPERTY AT A TIME WHEN DEFENDANT HAD POSSESSION OF THE PROPERTY.

A. Objection by Demurrer. [See § 40.20[1], P A].

B. When Demand Necessary. If defendant has lawfully obtained possession of personal property, plaintiff must make a demand on him or her for return of the property before bringing an action in claim and delivery for its possession (Commercial & Sav. Bank v. Foster (1930) 210 Cal. 76, 82, 290 P. 583 ; Home Payment Jewelry Co. v. Smith (1914) 24 Cal. App. 486, 488, 141 P. 933).

C. Failure to Allege Demand. If it appears from the complaint that defendantobtained possession of the property rightfully, then the complaint must allege the making of a demand on defendant for return of the property during the time when defendant had possession thereof, and if the complaint does not contain such an allegation, a demurrer to the complaint may properly be sustained (*Home Payment Jewelry Co. v. [a] Use of Form

The foregoing memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a demurrer to a complaint for possession of personal property when it appears from the complaint that defendant obtained possession of the property lawfully, but the complaint fails to allege that plaintiff made a demand on defendant for return of the property.

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[i] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, the foregoing points and authorities may be used in support of a motion for new trial on the ground that the evidence is insufficient to support a verdict or decision for plaintiff because plaintiff failed to prove that a demand was made on defendant at a time when defendant had possession of the property [see Code Civ. Proc. § 657(6); Commercial & Sav. Bank v. Foster (1930) 210 Cal. 76, 82, 290 P. 583] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] When Demand Necessary

Commercial & Sav. Bank v. Foster (1930) 210 Cal. 76, 290 P. 583 , was an action in claim and delivery brought by plaintiff to recover possession of certain dairy stock or its value. Plaintiff claimed right to possession of the cattle by virtue of a chattel mortgage executed by defendant to secure a promissory note payable to plaintiff. The mortgage gave plaintiff the right to take possession of the cattle if defendant defaulted. The trial court entered a judgment for the plaintiff. On appeal, defendant contended, inter alia, that plaintiff could not maintain the action for possession of the cattle because it had failed to make demand on her for the cattle before bringing the action. The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment. The Court stated that where property has lawfully come into possession of a party, he or she cannot be sued for possession unless a demand has been made on him or her. The Court observed, however, that in this case, the uncontradicted evidence showed that when levying officers came to defendant's property to hold the foreclosure sale, defendant absolutely refused to admit them and thereby refused to deliver the cattle, indicating that a formal demand would be useless. The Court held that where, under the circumstances, a demand would be useless, the necessity for making a demand is dispensed with (210 Cal. 76, 82) . The Court also noted that the case was tried on behalf of defendant on the theory that she had title and was entitled to possession, that plaintiff's claim was based on a void mortgage, and that a demand was also unnecessary for that reason (210 Cal. 76, 82-83) .

In Home Payment Jewelry Co. v. Smith (1914) 24 Cal. App. 486, 141 P. 933 , plaintiff sued to recover possession of personal property consisting of certain articles of jewelry and to recover damages. The complaint alleged that plaintiff lessor had delivered the property to Ames under a lease contract, which provided that the lessee could not transfer possession of the property without plaintiff's written consent, and that plaintiff had the right to retake possession of the property in the event of any failure to make a payment under the lease. The complaint further alleged that after obtaining possession of the property, Ames defaulted on her payments under the lease and that she had transferred the property to other persons without plaintiff's consent. Plaintiff alleged that, prior to commencement of the action, defendants had obtained possession of the property from Ames, either directly or indirectly, and that they were still in possession of the property without plaintiff's consent. Plaintiff also alleged that it had demanded possession of the property from defendants prior to commencement of the action, but the defendants refused to deliver possession of the property to plaintiff. The trial court sustained a demurrer to the complaint and entered a judgment of dismissal.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court held that if defendants obtained possession rightfully, then it was necessary that demand be made on them requiring that the property be returned to the lessor before an action for claim and delivery could be brought. The court stated that since a demand was necessary, it was essential that plaintiff should have alleged the making of such a demand during the time that defendants held possession of the property. The court concluded that plaintiff had not done so because although the complaint alleged that a demand was made prior to the commencement of the action, the complaintdid not allege at what date defendants obtained possession of the property. The demurrer was therefore properly sustained (24 Cal. App. 486, 488) .

Home Payment Jewelry Co. v. Smith (1914) 24 Cal. App. 486, 141 P. 933 , is discussed in § 40.21[3][a].

[a] Use of Form

The foregoing memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a demurrer to a complaint for possession of personal property when the complaint seeks to recover possession of intangible property.

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Recovery of Corporate Stock

Optional Paragraph C should be included when plaintiff's complaint seeks to recover possession of corporate stock without identifying any particular certificates representing the stock. Corporate stock itself is intangible property which cannot be recovered in an action for possession of personal property [see Ashton v. Heydenfeldt (1899) 124 Cal. 14, 16, 56 P. 624 (discussed in § 40.22[3] [b])]. A possessory action may be brought, however, to recover the certificates which represent the stock [see Englert v. Ivac Corp. (1979) 92 Cal. App. 3d 178, 184, 154 Cal. Rptr. 804] .

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities set out in § 40.27 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a demurrer supported by the foregoing memorandum.

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For memoranda of points and authorities supporting demurrers to complaints, generally, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings in this set.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Intangible Property as Not Recoverable

Lamus v. Engwicht (1919) 39 Cal. App. 523, 179 P. 435 , was an action by plaintiff, on behalf of a minor, to recover possession of shares of stock in a bank. The shares were allegedly given to the minor by his uncle shortly before the uncle's death and kept in a safe deposit box to which the uncle gave the minor the key. The complaint alleged that the minor was owner and entitled to possession of the stock but that the bank had refused to deliver possession of the stock to the minor on demand. The trial court overruled demurrers to the complaint and, after a trial, entered a judgment for plaintiff awarding him possession of the stock.

On appeal, the court of appeal reversed. The court noted that the complaint did not refer to, describe, or identify the certificate evidencing the stock referred to in the complaint. The court stated the rule that the mere reference in the complaintin an action to recover possession of corporate stock to the stock, without describing or referring to the certificate representing the stock, does not state a cause of action in claim and delivery (39 Cal. App. 523, 528) . The rationale of the rule, held the court, is that because an action in replevin or claim and delivery is adapted to the recovery of specific personal property, the property sought to be recovered must exist in some concrete or tangible form which is capable of identification and seizure (39 Cal. App. 523, 528-529) . Since stock in a corporation is an incorporeal, intangible thing which is incapable of identification and seizure, the proceeding must be aimed at the certificate representing the shares, if there is one (39 Cal. App. 523, 529) .

[b] Corporate Stock Not Identified by Certificate as Not Recoverable

Ashton v. Heydenfeldt (1899) 124 Cal. 14, 56 P 624 , involved an appeal from a judgment of dismissal entered after the trial court sustained a demurrer to the complaint in an action for possession of personal property. The complaint described the property sought to be recovered as 4,674 shares of the capital stock of a certain corporation. The Supreme Court held that the complaint did not state a cause of action in claim and delivery because stock in a corporation is an incorporeal, intangible thing which is incapable of identification and seizure. The Court noted that this proceeding was not aimed at the certificate representing the shares, nor was the certificate mentioned or described in the complaint (124 Cal. 14, 16) . The Court also held that the complaint did not state a cause of action for conversion, but reversed the judgment on other grounds.

Lamus v. Engwicht (1919) 39 Cal. App. 523, 179 P. 435 , is discussed in § 40.22[3][a].

THE DEMURRER TO PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT FOR POSSESSION OF PERSONAL PROPERTY SHOULD BE SUSTAINED BECAUSE THE COMPLAINT IS UNCERTAIN IN THAT IT FAILS TO SUFFICIENTLY DESCRIBE THE PROPERTY SOUGHT TO BE RECOVERED.

A. Objection by Demurrer. The party against whom a complaint has been filed may object to the complaint by demurrer on the ground that the pleading is uncertain where such ground appears on the face of the complaint [or from any matter of which the court is required to or may take judicial notice] (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 430.10(f), 430.30(a)).

B. Insufficient Description of Personal Property as Raised by Demurrer. A demurrer to a complaint for possession of personal property is proper when the complaint fails to describe the property sought to be recovered with a reasonable degree of certainty (Hawley v. Kocher (1898) 123 Cal. 77, 82, 55 P. 696 ; Orchardson v. Christie (1916) 30 Cal. App. 8, 9, 157 P. 547).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Insufficient Description of Personal Property as Raised by Demurrer

In Hawley v. Kocher (1898) 123 Cal. 77, 55 P. 696 , plaintiff, the assignee of an insolvent debtor, brought an action for possession of personal propertytransferred by the insolvent debtor to defendant. The defendant filed a demurrer on the ground of uncertainty, in that the complaint did not contain a sufficient description of the property sought to be recovered. The trial court sustained the demurrer and rendered judgment for defendant after plaintiff failed to file a timely amended complaint. Plaintiff appealed, and the Supreme Court affirmed the judgment of the trial court, holding that the demurrer to the complaint was properly sustained. The Court stated the rule that, in any suit involving personal property, the property should be described with a reasonable degree of certainty. It noted that this rule was especially applicable in actions for possession of personal property because the property must be specifically returned to a prevailing plaintiff on execution if a return can be made, and a defendant has the right to make a return of the property in the event of an adverse judgment (123 Cal. 77, 82) . The Court found that the complaint contained lists of articles, that each item on the list contained several different kinds of property with an aggregate value attached, and that no quality, quantity, value, or price was given to any particular kind of property named. In addition, the complaint failed to allege where the property was located at the commencement of the action in order to identify it. A demurrer on the ground of uncertainty was thus proper in light of the insufficient description of the property sought to be recovered (123 Cal. 77, 83) .

In Orchardson v. Christie (1916) 30 Cal. App. 8, 157 P. 547 , plaintiff brought an action to recover possession of 110 paintings and other pictures from defendant. Some of the pictures were not named in the complaint. The defendant did not demur to the complaint but met the issues raised by the complaint in an answer. Subsequently, the trial court entered judgment in favor of plaintiff for 105 pictures. These pictures were named in the judgment. In addition, the judgment referred to those pictures not named in the complaint as pictures made by plaintiff and held by defendant. It alleged that the subjects of the pictures were not named or described in the judgment because the subjects of the pictures could not be recalled by plaintiff, and because defendant denied plaintiff access to the pictures. Defendant appealed from the adverse judgment, in part, on the ground that some of the pictures were not named in the complaint. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment and held, inter alia, that a demurrer to a complaint for possession of personal property is proper when the complaint insufficiently describes the property sought to be recovered. Thus, defendant's objection based on defects in the description of the property sought to be recovered should have been raised in a demurrer for uncertainty (30 Cal. App. 8, 9) .

A MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE THE EVIDENCE IS INSUFFICIENT TO SHOW THAT DEFENDANT HAD POSSESSION OF OR THE POWER TO DELIVER THE PROPERTY AT THE TIME THE ACTION WAS COMMENCED.

A. Motion for New Trial. On the application of the party aggrieved, the verdict or decision may be vacated, in whole or in part, and a new trial may be granted, on all or some of the issues, on the ground that the evidence is insufficient to justify the decision or verdict, the verdict or decision is against the law, or the damages are excessive, if substantial rights of the aggrieved party are materially affected thereby (*Code Civ. B. Possession by Defendant Required. [3] Discussion of Authorities

Stockton M.P. Co. v. Mariposa County (1950) 99 Cal. App. 2d 210, 221 P.2d 232 , was an action for possession of a piece of road equipment brought against an individual defendant and the county. Plaintiff's complaint alleged that plaintiff's assignor had sold the property to the individual defendant under a conditional sales contract on which a balance remained unpaid. The contract provided that if defendant failed to pay the required installments, plaintiff, as seller's assignee, could take immediate possession of the property. The complaint further alleged that the individual defendant had made no payments, that the county now had possession of the equipment, that plaintiff had right to immediate possession of the property, and that the county had refused to deliver it to plaintiff after written demand. The trial court granted the county's motion for judgment on the pleadings as to the county and, after making findings of fact and conclusions of law, entered judgment on the merits for the individual defendant. Plaintiff appealed from both judgments.

The court of appeal affirmed as to the individual defendant. The court noted that the only relief which plaintiff had sought against that defendant was recovery of the chattel, of which the county had possession at all times. The trial court had found, as a matter of fact, that the county had possession of the property and that the individual defendant did not have possession; the court noted that these findings were supported by substantial evidence. In an action for recovery of personal property, held the court, defendant's nonpossession is a complete defense (99 Cal. App. 2d 210, 215) .

In Ramacciotti v. Galiano (1943) 59 Cal. App. 2d 8, 137 P.2d 722 , plaintiffs, who were engaged in farming operations on a ranch, executed a mortgage to one of defendants to secure certain money advances made from that defendant to plaintiffs. The mortgage covered certain personal property located on the ranch and contained a provision that prohibited plaintiffs from moving the property without defendant mortgagee's consent. On one occasion, one of the plaintiffs attempted to remove certain items of personal property from the ranch in violation of the terms of the mortgage but was prevented from doing so by defendant mortgagee's watchman. Plaintiffs were in possession of the ranch and the property thereon at the time the incident occurred. Thereafter, plaintiffs brought an action against defendants to recover possession of the property. The trial court entered judgment for plaintiffs.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment. The court held that an action to recover possession of personal property will not lie unless at the time the action is commenced, defendant has possession of the property or the power to deliver it in satisfaction of a judgment for its possession. Because of this rule, a person who himself or herself is in possession cannot, while such possession continues, bring an action of this kind. The court noted that in this case, it appeared that none of the property was in the possession of defendants at the time of the commencement of the action; it remained at all times in the possession of plaintiffs on the ranch. Thus, concluded the court, there was no factual basis for an action in claim and delivery against defendants (59 Cal. App. 2d 8, 12) .

In Simonian v. Patterson (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 773, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 722 , plaintiff brought an action against his ex-fiancee's father for claim and delivery and various other causes of action, arising out of his efforts to retrieve various items of personal property from his fiancee after their relationship had ended. Thedefendant father had helped his daughter move various items of personal property from the apartment that plaintiff and the daughter had shared to the daughter's new apartment. Plaintiff alleged that certain of these items (record albums and Christmas decorations) were moved without his permission and against his wishes, and that defendant had failed to return them on demand or to assist plaintiff in securing their return from defendant's daughter. The trial court sustained defendant's demurrer to all causes of action and dismissed the action, and the court of appeal affirmed.

The court of appeal held that the trial court had not abused its discretion in granting defendant's demurrer to the claim and delivery cause of action without leave to amend. Plaintiff contended that under California law, a cause of action to recover possession of personal property may be maintained if, at the time the action is commenced, the defendant has the power to deliver the property in satisfaction of the judgment. Plaintiff argued that a father's power to persuade or coerce his adult daughter to return property was a question of fact that the trial court could not resolve by taking judicial notice of facts outside the pleading. The court of appeal, as a matter of law, rejected plaintiff's argument that the defendant had the power to deliver possession of the property. The court observed that plaintiff's theory was "premised on the antiquated notion that adult women are legally inferior beings who can be ordered around by men as though they were servants." The court held that there was "no point in permitting a trial based on an archaic legal theory that should remain dead and buried" (27 Cal. App. 4th 773, 783) .

THE MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL SHOULD BE GRANTED ON THE GROUND THAT DAMAGES FOR DETENTION ARE _____ [specify, e.g., EXCESSIVE AS A MATTER OF LAW], BECAUSE _____ [specify, e.g., THE COURT REFUSED TO ADMIT DEFENDANT'S EVIDENCE REGARDING ITS EXPENDITURES FOR UPKEEP AND MAINTENANCE OF THE PROPERTY, AND DEDUCTION FOR THOSE ITEMS IS PART OF THE PROPER CALCULATION OF DAMAGES FOR LOSS OF USE OF THE PROPERTY].

A. Motion for New Trial. [See § 40.24[1], P A.]

B. Damages for Detention Authorized. In an action to recover the possession of personal property, judgment for plaintiff may be for the possession or the value of the property, in case delivery cannot be had, and damages for its detention (Code Civ. Proc. § 667).

C. Formula for Damages Based on Rental Value. Damages for wrongful detention of personal property are to be calculated on the basis of the net usable value of the property, less the expense of maintaining it (Guerin v. Kirst (1949) 33 Cal. 2d 402, 414-415, 202 P.2d 10 ; Mutch v. Long Beach Imp. Co. (1920) 47 Cal. App. 267, 269, 190 P. 638).

[Optional] D. Damages Calculated by Application of Flat Rental Rate Over Time Is Error. Because the net rental value of personal property usually decreases over time, reflecting normal deterioration[, especially in the case of machinery or similar property], damages for detention should not be calculated by applying a flat rental rate over the entire period of detention, without some reduction over time in recognition of depreciation. When calculation of damages for detention based on a flat rental rate results in an award that is disproportionate compared to the value of the property, the award is excessive (Guerin v. Kirst (1949) 33 Cal. 2d 402, 415, 202 P.2d 10 ; Fran-Well Heater Co. v. Robinson (1960) 182 Cal. App. 2d 125, 131-133, 5 Cal. Rptr. 900).

[Optional] E. Failure to Take Expenditures Into Account Is Error. It is error to refuse admission of evidence of the expenditures for upkeep and maintenance of the property during the period of detention, or to fail to take those expenditures into consideration in calculating damages for detention or loss of use (Guerin v. Kirst (1949) 33 Cal. 2d 402, 415, 202 P.2d 10 ; Fran-Well Heater Co. v. Robinson (1960) 182 Cal. App. 2d 125, 133, 5 Cal. Rptr. 900).

[Optional] F. Damages for Detention That Grossly Exceed Value of Property Is Error. Damages for detention that are disproportionately large compared to the value of the property itself are excessive (Guerin v. Kirst (1949) 33 Cal. 2d 402, 415, 202 P.2d 10 ; Fran-Well Heater Co. v. Robinson (1960) 182 Cal. App. 2d 125, 133, 5 Cal. Rptr. 900).

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 40.32 may be used to oppose the motion supported by the foregoing form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Damages for Detention Authorized

Code Civ. Proc. § 667 also provides that if the property has been delivered to the plaintiff, and the defendant claims a return of it, judgment for defendant may be for a return of the property or its value, in case a return cannot be had, and damages for taking and withholding the property [Code Civ. Proc. § 667].

[b] Formula for Damages Based on Rental Value

Plaintiff in Guerin v. Kirst (1949) 33 Cal. 2d 402, 202 P.2d 10 , sought recovery of a Caterpillar tractor or its value, and damages for its detention. Defendant had purchased the tractor from a third party to whom plaintiff had delivered possession under a lease and financing arrangement. Judgment was for defendant, and plaintiff appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed because the evidence established that plaintiff was entitled to a judgment for possession. The Court also discussed the evidence and law regarding damages. The evidence established the value of the tractor at $6,000 to $7,000, and defendant stipulated that its reasonable rental value was $825 per month. The Court said that in an action for claim and delivery, the owner may recover the value of the use of his or her property when that amount exceeds the interest on the value of the property, because then interest alone would not furnish adequate compensation for the wrongful detention. However, in computing those damages, it is only the net usable value less the expense of keeping the property up that can be recovered by the aggrieved party. Under this rule, defendant should have been allowed to introduce evidence of a $2,170 overhaul made to the tractor when defendant purchased it and before defendant learned of plaintiff's claim (33 Cal. 2d 402, 414) . Similarly, defendant should be permitted to show whatever expenditures he made with regard to the tractor after he knew of plaintiff's claim (33 Cal. 2d 402, 414-415) . In addition, appropriate allowance should be made for the decline in the rental value of the tractor over the years, perhaps to the vanishing point, consistent with the normal deterioration of a piece of machinery that reduces its capacity to perform effective work. All this is necessary, the Court said, citing Civ. Code § 3359, to compensate plaintiff fully without subjecting defendant to unconscionable and grossly oppressive damages (33 Cal. 2d 402, 415) . Thus, application of the stipulated rental value at a flat rate over the entire period of detention would amount to damages for detention of $9,900 per year, an obviously grossly excessive and disproportionate amount of damages when correlated to the value of the tractor (33 Cal. 2d 402, 415) .

The court of appeal in Mutch v. Long Beach Imp. Co. (1920) 47 Cal. App. 267, 190 P. 638 , reversed judgment for plaintiff on the ground that damages were excessive. There was undisputed evidence that the value of the car was $400 at the time of the taking. The automobile was returned to plaintiff before trial. Judgment confirmed plaintiff's ownership and awarded damages of the $1,298 as rental value over the 86-week period of detention, plus another $203 for loss of tools and appliances, the cost of cleaning after recovery, and depreciation during the period of detention. The court said that one deprived of the use of an automobile cannot recover the gross rental value of a fully maintained car, free from all expense of maintenance, repairs, and natural wear and tear to which a rented car would naturally be subject (47 Cal. App. 267, 268) . Damages for detention of property equal to three times its value are grossly excessive, unconscionable, and contrary to Civ. Code § 3359 (47 Cal. App. 267, 268-269) . While damages for detention are allowed according to the market value of the use of the property, it is the net usable value less the expense of keeping up the property that may be recovered (47 Cal. App. 267, 269) . In applying the foregoing rule, care should be taken not to permit the fixing of an amount out of all proportion to the value of the thing itself (47 Cal. App. 267, 269) .

The decision in Mutch has been criticized by the court of appeal in Harris v. Dixon Cadillac Co. (1982) 132 Cal. App. 3d 485, 183 Cal. Rptr. 299 , discussed in § 40.32[3][b].

[c] Damages Calculated by Application of Flat Rental Rate Over Time Is Error

Guerin v. Kirst (1949) 33 Cal. 2d 402, 202 P.2d 10 , is discussed in § 40.25[3][b].

Fran-Well Heater Co. v. Robinson (1960) 182 Cal. App. 2d 125, 5 Cal. Rptr. 900 , was an action for recovery of subsurface drilling equipment, or its value, and damages for its detention. Both surface and subsurface equipment for two wells were leased to defendant by plaintiff. After plaintiff removed the surface equipment, the monthly rental rate for the subsurface equipment was $100 per month per well. Judgment was for plaintiff, for the return of the equipment, or $1,679 as its value, plus $5,160 as damages for detention for approximately two years and seven months. Defendant appealed on the grounds that the court applied an erroneous measure of damages and that they were excessive as a matter of law.

The court of appeal agreed and reversed. The $5,160 was calculated at the rate of $200 per month for the entire period of detention. The court said that assessment of damages for detention at a flat rate based solely on the gross rental value of chattel is erroneous as a matter of law (182 Cal. App. 2d 125, 132) . The correct measure of damages is the net usable value less the expense of keeping the property up, and must be determined by appropriate allowance for the decline inrental value over the years (182 Cal. App. 2d 125, 133) . No pleading or proof of these elements was made or offered by plaintiff. Because no attempt was made to fix the net usable value, there was no proper evidence to support the judgment for damages for wrongful detention. Furthermore, the damage award was excessive as a matter of law because it resulted in a total award of more than three times the value of the equipment (182 Cal. App. 2d 125, 133) .

[d] Failure to Take Expenditures Into Account Is Error

Guerin v. Kirst (1949) 33 Cal. 2d 402, 202 P.2d 10 , is discussed in § 40.25[3][b].

Fran-Well Heater Co. v. Robinson (1960) 182 Cal. App. 2d 125, 5 Cal. Rptr. 900 , is discussed in § 40.25[3][c].

[e] Damages for Detention That Grossly Exceed Value of Property Is Error

Guerin v. Kirst (1949) 33 Cal. 2d 402, 202 P.2d 10 , is discussed in § 40.25[3][b].

Fran-Well Heater Co. v. Robinson (1960) 182 Cal. App. 2d 125, 5 Cal. Rptr. 900 , is discussed in § 40.25[3][c].

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Formula for Damages Based on Rental Value

Judgment in Bonestell v. Automotive F. Corp. (1924) 69 Cal. App. 719, 232 P. 734 , was for plaintiff, for return of a car valued at $2,500 plus $600 for damages for detention during a period of over 48 days. The court of appeal reversed the damage award and remanded for retrial on that issue. According to plaintiff's witness, the value of the use of the car was $25 per day. That was the gross value, the court of appeal said (69 Cal. App. 719, 728) . In order for damages for detention to be reasonable, as required by Civ. Code § 3359, damages for detention must be limited to the net usable value of the property detained less the expense of keeping up the property. In determining the value of use under this rule, care should be taken not to permit the fixing of an amount out of all proportion to the value of the thing itself (69 Cal. App. 719, 727) . The only evidence of net usable value was that of defendant's witness who testified that the gross value of the car was $10 per day, which would yield a thirty percent net profit. That thirty percent would yield $3 per day or $145.50 as damages for detention (69 Cal. App. 719, 728) .

[b] Damages for Detention That Grossly Exceed Value of Property Is Error

The trial court in Booth v. People's Finance Etc. Co. (1932) 124 Cal. App. 131, 12 P.2d 50 , gave judgment for plaintiff against defendant and its agent for return of a car or $650 as its value, $1,350 as damages for nine months loss of use, and $1,500 punitive damages after allegedly wrongful repossession. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment for possession or $650, but unless plaintiff accepted remittitur to $607 detention damages and $500 punitive damages, the portion of the judgment relating to those issues would be reversed and remanded for a new trial (124 Cal. App. 131, 145-146) . Although there was testimony that the rental value of the car was $10 to $15 per day, the court did not find that the witness was experienced enough to be credible. Further, damages calculated at that rate would result in a total detention award of $4,050, which, compared to the value of the car, would be grossly excessive (124 Cal. App. 131, 137-138, 143) . The only testimony the court found credible was that of the defense witness who said a car like plaintiff's could be rented for $1.75 to $2.25 per day, which would result in a total award for damages for detention of $607 (124 Cal. App. 131, 138-140) . The court also seemed to take into consideration the fact that the car was not used during the period of detention (124 Cal. App. 131, 138) . The court discussed and compared other cases and concluded that it was error to award damages for detention equal to more than two times the value of the car (124 Cal. App. 131, 140-143) . The court also noted that here, no attempt was made to ascertain net usable value (124 Cal. App. 131, 140) . That was not error, however, because defendant itself failed to request correction of the jury instruction to refer to net usable value (124 Cal. App. 131, 143) . The punitive damage award was based on conflicting evidence of whether plaintiff had tendered the payment that defendant alleged to be in default. There was also evidence that defendant, knowing there was no default, intentionally took possession of the automobile to teach plaintiff a lesson, but the court of appeal felt that the jury had abused its discretion in awarding $1,500 (124 Cal. App. 131, 143-146) .

Bonestell v. Automotive F. Corp. (1924) 69 Cal. App. 719, 232 P. 734 , discussed in § 40.25[4][a] and Mutch v. Long Beach Imp. Co. (1920) 47 Cal. App. 267, 268-269, 190 P. 638 , discussed in § 40.25[3][b], are also authority for the rule that damages for detention that far exceed the value of the property detained are excessive.

[a] Use of Form

The foregoing memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a demurrer to a complaint for possession of personal property based on plaintiff's failure to sufficiently allege right to possession of the property at the commencement of the action. The ground of opposition is that the complaint alleges the ultimate fact of such right of possession; the source of plaintiff's asserted rights need not be alleged.

In an appropriate case, this form may be used in opposition to a demurrer supported by the points and authorities set out in § 40.20.

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff Need Not Allege Source of Right to Possession

Commercial Credit Co. v. Peak (1924) 195 Cal. 27, 231 P. 340 , was an action for recovery of possession of personal property. The trial court entered judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appealed. In affirming, the Supreme Court rejected defendant's contention that plaintiff should not be permitted to recover on an assigned claim without pleading the assignment. The Court held, inter alia, that plaintiff was not required to plead the source of its asserted ownership of the property in question; it was sufficient to plead the ultimate fact of its ownership of the property at the time of the commencement of the action. The Court stated that if ownership rested on an assignment, that was a probative fact to be shown at the trial, and that plaintiff had shown that fact (195 Cal. 27, 32-33) .

Counsel should note that although the language in the Peak case implies that ownership of the property must be alleged, the Supreme Court subsequently held that a party need not be the absolute owner of personal property in order to bring an action for its possession, provided that he or she is entitled to immediate possession of the property at the time the action is commenced [see Commercial & Sav. Bank v. Foster (1930) 210 Cal. 76, 79, 290 P. 583] . However, the point made in the Peak case appears applicable to plaintiff's right to possession of the property as well as his or her ownership of the property, that is, it is sufficient for plaintiff to plead the ultimate fact of his or her right to immediate possession of the property at the time the action was commenced, without pleading the sourceof his or her asserted right to possession.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff May Recover Certificates Representing Shares of Corporate Stock

Englert v. Ivac Corp. (1979) 92 Cal. App. 3d 178, 154 Cal. Rptr. 804 , was an action by plaintiff to recover certain stock certificates which he alleged that defendant had wrongfully retained. The trial court found that plaintiff was entitled to recover the certificates on payment of a certain sum of money, and the trial court entered judgment accordingly. On appeal, defendant contended, inter alia, that the judgment for plaintiff was erroneous as a matter of law because shares of stock are considered intangible personal property and cannot be replevied. In affirming, the court of appeal held that shares of stock, a person's intangible ownership interest in a company which cannot be replevied, must be distinguished from the certificates of stock which represent those shares and which can be replevied. Since plaintiff prayed for redelivery of the pledged collateral, that is, the share certificates, the action for possession of personal property was proper (92 Cal. App. 3d 178, 184) .

With appropriate modifications, the foregoing form may be submitted in opposition to a demurrer to a complaint, such as one supported by the points and authorities set out in § 40.20.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Absolute Ownership of Property Not Necessary

The procedural and factual background of Commercial & Sav. Bank v. Foster (1930) 210 Cal. 76, 290 P. 583 , is discussed in § 40.21[3][a]. In affirming the judgment for plaintiff, the Supreme Court rejected defendant's contention that plaintiff could not recover unless it pleaded and proved a conversion by defendant.The Court stated that an action for replevin is strictly distinguishable from an action for conversion in that the former has as its purpose recovery of the property itself, while the latter has as its purpose the recovery of damages for conversion of the property. To maintain an action for recovery of personal property, the plaintiff must have the right to immediate and exclusive possession of the property at the commencement of the action. However, the Court held, the plaintiff need not be the absolute owner of the property, provided that he or she is entitled to its immediate possession (210 Cal. 76, 79) . The Court observed that a chattel mortgagee under a mortgage conferring a right of possession on default may, after default, recover possession of the mortgaged chattel in a replevin action such as this. Hence, plaintiff, a mortgagee, had pleaded and proved all the facts necessary to sustain the action (210 Cal. 76, 80) .

[b] Qualified Interest as Sufficient

In International Airports, Inc. v. Finn (1955) 132 Cal. App. 2d 293, 282 P.2d 102 , defendants owned an airplane which they wanted to operate commercially. They entered into an agreement with plaintiff, by which plaintiff agreed to perform the work necessary to license the plane for this purpose and defendants agreed to pay for that work. As part of the agreement, plaintiff also lent defendants a sum of money which was secured by a chattel mortgage on the plane. In addition, plaintiff agreed to lease the plane from defendants for the period the work was in progress, with the payments on the lease to be offset against the amounts which defendants owed to plaintiff. Pursuant to this agreement, possession of the aircraft was delivered to plaintiff. Thereafter, after defendants had defaulted, defendants entered plaintiff's hangar and removed the plane. Plaintiff brought an action for claim and delivery and for foreclosure of the chattel mortgage. The trial court entered judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that plaintiff had a possessory lien on the aircraft for labor performed and materials furnished in improving it at the time it was taken by defendants. The court noted that an action for claim and delivery may be maintained by one who has a qualified interest in the property which is the subject of the litigation, providing he or she has a right to its possession. Accordingly, one who holds property by virtue of a lien may maintain an action to recover it if it is wrongfully taken from him or her (132 Cal. App. 2d 293, 297) .

International Airports, Inc. v. Finn (1955) 132 Cal. App. 2d 293, 282 P.2d 102 , is discussed in § 40.28[3][b].

[a] Use of Form

The foregoing memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted by a plaintiff in opposition to a motion for a new trial brought by an unsuccessful defendant in an action for possession of personal property when the objectionurged by the defendant is the insufficiency of the plaintiff's evidence to show a demand on the defendant for a return of the property before commencing the action. The ground of opposition is that such a demand is not necessary when, under the circumstances, the making of such a demand would be useless, such as when defendant has asserted his or her right to possession of the property [see optional Paragraph C].

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[i] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, the foregoing points and authorities may be used to oppose a demurrer to a complaint for possession of personal property when it is argued in the demurrer that the complaint is insufficient in that it fails to allege a demand on the defendant for the return of the property which he or she obtained lawfully [see § 40.22].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Showing of Demand Not Required If Demand Useless

Commercial & Sav. Bank v. Foster (1930) 210 Cal. 76, 290 P. 583 , is discussed in § 40.21[3][a]. In that case, the Supreme Court rejected defendant's contention that plaintiff could not maintain an action to recover possession of personal property because it had failed to make demand on defendant for recovery of the property before bringing the action, noting that in this case, the uncontradicted evidence showed that a formal demand for return of the property would have been useless. The Court held that when, under the circumstances, a demand would be useless, the necessity for making a demand is dispensed with (210 Cal. 76, 82) .

[b] Showing of Demand Not Required When Defendant Asserts Ownership

Godfrey v. Godfrey (1927) 85 Cal. App. 204, 259 P. 71 , was an action by plaintiff to recover furniture which defendant allegedly removed from plaintiff's home and which allegedly belonged to plaintiff. Defendant had denied plaintiff's title and insisted throughout her testimony that she was the owner of the property. The trial court entered judgment awarding possession of this furniture to plaintiff. On appeal, defendant contended, inter alia, that the judgment should be reversed because there was no evidence that plaintiff had made any demand on defendant for return of the property prior to commencing the action. The court of appeal held that when, as here, property is in the possession of one claiming to be the owner, a demand would be unavailing and, hence, need not be pleaded or proved by plaintiff (85 Cal. App. 204, 207) .

A MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL ON THE GROUND THAT THE EVIDENCE IS INSUFFICIENT TO SHOW THAT DEFENDANT HAD POSSESSION OF THE PROPERTY AT THE TIME THE ACTION WAS COMMENCED SHOULD BE DENIED BECAUSE THE EVIDENCE WAS SUFFICIENT TO SHOW THAT DEFENDANT, ALTHOUGH NOT IN ACTUAL PHYSICAL POSSESSION OF THE PROPERTY, HAD THE POWER TO DELIVER THE PROPERTY TO PLAINTIFF.

[a] Use of Form

The foregoing memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion for a new trial brought by an unsuccessful defendant in an action for possession of personal property when the defendant's objection is insufficiency of the evidence to show that the property sought to be recovered was in defendant's possession at the time the action was commenced. The ground of opposition is that plaintiff need not show that defendant had actual physical possession of the property if defendant had control over the property and thepower to deliver it to plaintiff. In an appropriate case, the foregoing form may be submitted in opposition to a motion for new trial supported by the points and authorities set out in § 40.24.

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Actual Physical Possession by Defendant Unnecessary

In Taylor v. Bernheim (1922) 58 Cal. App. 404, 209 P. 55 , defendant, after commencing an action against plaintiff's son to collect an indebtedness, procured a writ of attachment which was given to the sheriff for service. The sheriff levied the writ on an automobile stored in a public garage under the name of plaintiff's son. Thereafter, plaintiff, claiming to be the true owner of the car, filed a verified third-party claim on the sheriff, who retained possession of the automobile, and plaintiff commenced an action to recover possession of the automobile. The trial court rendered a judgment for plaintiff.

On appeal, defendant contended, inter alia, that there was no evidence to sustain the judgment because it was the sheriff and not defendant who seized the car and detained it from the possession of plaintiff. In affirming the judgment, the court of appeal rejected this contention. The court noted that although the general rule is that an action for claim and delivery will lie only against the persons who have possession of the property in dispute at the time of the commencement of the action, the term "possession" as used in these cases has been construed to mean either actual or constructive possession. Thus, the court held, if it is shown that the property sought to be recovered is under the control of a person, or if it is shown that the person has the power to deliver the property, then the person is liable, although the property is not in his or her actual physical possession. The court concluded that the evidence in this case showed that the sheriff was acting merely as the agent of defendant and that defendant had the power to release the property if he cared to do so by giving the sheriff instructions to that effect. Thus, defendant was in ostensible and actual control of the property and was consequently liable for any damages resulting from its unlawful detention (58 Cal. App. 404, 408) .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Possession by Defendant Unnecessary if Defendant Has Wrongfully Disposed of Property Prior to Commencement of Action

In Faulkner v. First Nat'l Bank (1900) 130 Cal. 258, 62 P. 463 , plaintiff brought an action to recover possession of promissory notes deposited with defendant as collateral security for a promissory note made to plaintiff by a third person. The trial court found that prior to commencement of the action defendant had delivered these notes to the third person and that it had no right to do so. The trial court entered judgment for plaintiff for the value of the notes.

On appeal, defendant contended that the judgment was erroneous because an action of claim and delivery cannot be maintained where the defendant is not in possession of the property sued for at the time of the commencement of the action. The Supreme Court rejected this contention and affirmed the judgment. The court stated that the cause of action in this case was based on a bailment contract; the original taking was not unlawful but the detention of the property was. At common law, the Court noted, an action of detinue was an appropriate remedy for such a wrong, and the complaint in this case contained the allegations necessary in such an action. The Court held that, in such a case, it was no defense that the defendant had wrongfully disposed of the property before the commencement of the action and was therefore not in possession of it (130 Cal. 258, 263-265) .

B. Damages for Detention Authorized. [See § 40.25[1], P B.]

[EITHER]

C. Interest Recoverable as Damages for Detention. The ordinary measure of damages for loss of use and other injuries resulting from the taking and withholding of personal property is interest at the legal rate on the value of the property from the time of the taking, or when demand for its return is made, to the date of the verdict. This measure applies unless the property detained has a usable value in excess of that amount of interest (Drinkhouse v. Van Ness (1927) 202 Cal. 359, 379, 260 P. 869 ; Brandenburger v. Hanner (1929) 96 Cal. App. 396, 399, 274 P. 390).

[OR]

C. Rental Value Recoverable as Damages for Detention. When the property detained has a usable value, damages for detention under Section 667 of the Code of Civil Procedure means the reasonable value of the use of the property during the period of the wrongful detention up until the rendition of judgment. The owner is entitled to recover damages on the basis of rental value, whether or not he or she hired other property to take the place of the property that was wrongfully withheld (Drinkhouse v. Van Ness (1927) 202 Cal. 359, 379, 260 P. 869 ; Harris v. Dixon Cadillac Co. (1982) 132 Cal. App. 3d 485, 491, 183 Cal. Rptr. 299 ; *Tucker v. Hagerty (1918) 37 Cal. [Optional] D. Damages for Detention May Include Lost Profits. Damages for the detention of property under Section 667 of the Code of Civil Procedure may be awarded for all the detriment proximately caused by the detention. Thus, damages may include business losses such as employee salaries that had to be paid while the business was closed until replacement property could be obtained, and profits lost during and after the replacment period (McFaddin v. H. S. Crocker Co. (1963) 219 Cal. App. 2d 585, 588-589 ; Ruzanoff v. Retailers Credit Asso. (1929) 97 Cal. App. 682, 686-687).

[Optional] E. Depreciation During Period of Detention. Depreciation, or loss of value, of the property during the period of its wrongful detention is an element of general damages for detention, and may be recovered without having been specifically pleaded (Spencer Kennelly, Ltd. v. Bk. of Amer. (1942) 19 Cal. 2d 586, 589, 122 P.2d 552 ; Berry v. Bank of Bakersfield (1918) 177 Cal. 206, 210-211, 170 P. 415).

[Optional] F. Damages for Detention May Exceed Value of Property. Damages for the detention of property under Section 667 of the Code of Civil Procedure may exceed the value of the property withheld as long as they are provable and reasonable (Harris v. Dixon Cadillac Co. (1982) 132 Cal. App. 3d 485, 491-493, 183 Cal. Rptr. 299 ; Tucker v. Hagerty (1918) 37 Cal. App. 789, 793, 174 P. 908).

[Optional] G. Punitive Damages May Be Awarded. Punitive damages may be awarded under Section 3294 of the Civil Code to a successful plaintiff in a claim and delivery action when malice, fraud, and oppression on the part of defendant are established by clear and convincing evidence (Livestock G.P. Co. v. Union Etc. Co. (1896) 114 Cal. 447, 450, 46 P. 286 ; Harris v. Dixon Cadillac Co. (1982) 132 Cal. App. 3d 485, 493-494, 183 Cal. Rptr. 299).

The foregoing memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion for a new trial in an action for claim and delivery when the moving party contends that damages awarded for detention of the personal property are not supported by sufficient evidence or are against the law [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(6)], or are excessive [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(5)]. The foregoing form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

In an appropriate case, the foregoing form of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion for new trial supported by the points and authorities set out in § 40.25.

Counsel should insert agrument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Interest Recoverable as Damages for Detention

Drinkhouse v. Van Ness (1927) 202 Cal. 359, 260 P. 869 , was an action for claim and delivery of a horse alleged to be worth $10,000. Defendant also claimed ownership, and obtained redelivery of the horse after posting bond. Before trial, defendant became insolvent, and the horse died. Judgment was for plaintiff for $15,000: $7,500 as the value of the horse, and $7,500 as damages for its detention. Intervener, defendant's surety, appealed.

The Supreme Court reduced the damages for detention to $7,000, but otherwise affirmed the judgment. Ordinarily, the Court said, loss of use and other injuries resulting from the taking and withholding of personal property may be compensated by allowing the successful party to recover interest on the value of the property from the time of the taking to the date of the verdict. However, if the property has a usable value and the value of the use of the property exceeds that interest, the successful party may recover as damages for detention the reasonable value of the property's use during the period of detention up to the time of the rendition of judgment (202 Cal. 359, 379) . Evidence of the horse's value as a stud for breeding purposes was sufficient to support the award in this case (202 Cal. 359, 379-380) . Although damages are recoverable for the time and money expended in pursuit of the horse, attorney's fees were not properly includable as incurred in pursuit of the property. For this error, the award was reduced by $500 (202 Cal. 359, 380) .

Judgment in Brandenburger v. Hanner (1929) 96 Cal. App. 396, 274 P. 390 , was for plaintiff for return of part of a herd of cattle plus $345 as damages for their detention. Defendant, who was awarded possession of the remainder of the herd, appealed.

The court of appeal modified language in the judgment describing the appropriate division of the herd, and affirmed the judgment as so modified. One of defendant's contentions on appeal was that there was no evidence to support the finding that plaintiff had been damaged in that amount by the detention. The $345 was equivalent to the legal rate of interest on the value of plaintiff's portion of the herd for the period that possession was withheld from plaintiff (96 Cal. App. 396, 398-399). The court said that the law is well settled that unless greater damages are shown, Code Civ. Proc. § 667 entitles a successful plaintiff to compensation for detention in an amount equal to interest on the value of the property from the time of the taking, or of the demand for return, until the date of the verdict (96 Cal. App. 396, 399).

[b] Rental Value Recoverable as Damages for Detention

Drinkhouse v. Van Ness (1927) 202 Cal. 359, 260 P. 869 , is discussed in § 40.32[3][a].

Plaintiff in Harris v. Dixon Cadillac Co. (1982) 132 Cal. App. 3d 485, 183 Cal. Rptr. 299 , sought return of her car and general and punitive damages from defendant. Defendant had performed repair work on plaintiff's car without giving the written estimate required by Bus. & Prof. Code § 9884.9 and without obtaining plaintiff's prior authorization for the repairs. Plaintiff was a nursing student and part-time waitress. Without the car, plaintiff had to quit her job and school and move in with her brother. Eventually she moved back to Kansas to live with her parents. Defendant cross complained for repair and storage costs. Judgment was for plaintiff, for $10,000 general and $45,000 punitive damages. Defendant appealed.

The judgment was modified to provide for return of the car, which the parties stipulated had a value of $2,500, and reduction of general damages to $7,500. In all other respects the judgment was affirmed. Defendant contended that thecompensatory damage award was unsupported by sufficient evidence, and was excessive and erroneous, relying on Mutch v. Long Beach Imp. Co. (1920) 47 Cal. App. 267, 190 P. 638 (discussed in § 40.25[3][b]), for the proposition that compensatory damages far in excess of the value of the property withheld are invalid (132 Cal. App. 3d 485, 490) . The court of appeal said the better rule was enunciated in Tucker v. Hagerty (1918) 37 Cal. App. 789, 174 P. 908 (discussed below), and Stanley W. Smith, Inc. v. Pilgrim (1931) 117 Cal. App. 244, 3 P.2d 573 (discussed in § 40.32[4][a]). Under that rule, damages for detention under Code Civ. Proc. § 667 means the reasonable value of the use of the property detained during the period of the wrongful detention up until the rendition of judgment (132 Cal. App. 3d 485, 491) . The reason for this rule in replevin is that the interest or value of the property does not furnish adequate compensation for the wrongful detention. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 667, when the property detained has a usable value, the owner is entitled to recover damages on the basis of rental value, whether or not he or she hired other property to take the place of the property that was wrongfully withheld. Reversal is not required by the fact that the rental value allowed amounts to more than the value of the property withheld (132 Cal. App. 3d 485, 491) .

The court of appeal compared the damages that could be awarded under Civ. Code § 3333 if the property had been negligently destroyed. Then, the owner could recover the value of the property at the time of destruction and for the loss sustained by being deprived of its use during the time reasonably required for replacement or repairs. The analogy is clear, the court said. It is not the value of the property that controls the amount of compensatory damages for wrongful detention. Damages are allowable for the detriment proximately caused by a wrongful detention as long as they are provable and reasonable (132 Cal. App. 3d 485, 492) .

Defendant also claimed that Civ. Code § 3359, which provides that damages must be reasonable in all cases, prevented the $7,500 award. The court disagreed, noting that the only evidence of value of use was plaintiff's testimony that the reasonable use-value of the car was $10 to $15 dollars per day, and that the $7,500 award represented less than $5 per day (132 Cal. App. 3d 485, 492-493) .

Plaintiff in Tucker v. Hagerty (1918) 37 Cal. App. 789, 174 P. 908 , sought return of a car wrongfully retained by defendant sheriff after release of the writ of attachment under which the car was seized. Plaintiff alleged the value of the car to be $650 and the value of its use to be $10 per day. Judgment was for plaintiff for the return of the car, or $450 as its value, plus $5 per day during the period of detention, which amounted to $585 by the time judgment was entered. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. Defendant contended that because there was no showing of aggravation or malice, plaintiff's damages were limited to interest at the legal rate. The court of appeal said that the ordinary measure of damages for wrongful detention of property is interest (37 Cal. App. 789, 791) . However, when the property has a usable value that exceeds interest at the legal rate, the successful party is entitled to recover as damages for the detention the value of the use of the property during the period of the wrongful detention. This value may be estimated by the ordinary market price of the use of the property (37 Cal. App. 789, 792) . The reason for this rule is that interest or the value of the property does not furnish adequate compensation for the wrongful detention. In some cases the wrongdoer may even make a profit from the use of the property during the wrongful detention. This the law will not tolerate, and it would deny plaintiff damages that naturally and certainly follow a wrongful invasion of his or her rights (37 Cal. App. 789, 792) . In some cases, the court conceded, damages may be speculative, but that was not the case here. There was nothing so startling in the fact that the rental value allowed by the court amounts to more than the value of the machine as to compel a reversal of the judgment (37 Cal. App. 789, 793) .

[c] Damages for Detention May Include Lost Profits

McFaddin v. H. S. Crocker Co. (1963) 219 Cal. App. 2d 585 , was the second action between the parties. In the former action, H. S. Crocker Co. v. McFaddin (1957) 148 Cal. App. 2d 639 , defendant H. S. Crocker Co. had obtained possession of plaintiff's inventory of Christmas cards for over two years during the pendency of the action. That action was resolved in plaintiff's favor (as defendant in the former action), who was awarded return of the inventory or its value, but not damages for its detention. In this action, plaintiff sought recovery of damages for loss of profits for three Christmas seasons and damage to the cards by exposure, dirt, and poor handling while in defendant's possession. Judgment of dismissal was entered in favor of defendant in this second action on the grounds that it was barred by res judicata and the statute of limitations.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court discussed the extent of the relief that was available to plaintiff in the first action. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 667, the court said, a defendant who is successful in establishing his or her right to return of the property is entitled to damages for its taking and withholding (219 Cal. App. 2d 585, 588-589) . Deterioration is a proper element of damages for detention. Moreover, under appropriate circumstances, recovery of damages may be had for business losses arising out of the wrongful detention. Attorney's fees, however, are not a proper element of damages (219 Cal. App. 2d 585, 589) .

Ruzanoff v. Retailers Credit Asso. (1929) 97 Cal. App. 682 , was an action for claim and delivery in which plaintiffs sought damages for business losses. The property involved was used in plaintiffs' grocery business. Because of the wrongful taking and detention, plaintiffs had to close the store for a week while replacement property was found and delivered. During this time plaintiffshad to continue to pay an employee's salary. Also, not all plaintiffs' customers returned when they reopened, and monthly gross sales dropped about $1,000 per month. Plaintiffs quit the business about two and one-half months after the taking. Judgment was for plaintiffs. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment. The court of appeal said that ordinarily, loss of use and other injuries resulting from the taking and withholding of personal property are adequately compensated for by allowing the successful party to recover interest at the legal rate on the value of the property from the time of the taking to the date of the verdict, or the value of the use of the property if it exceeds the interest. This does not mean that recovery for wrongful detention is limited to interest or usable value. The plaintiff is entitled to all damages necessary to compensate him or her for all the detriment proximately caused by the detention (97 Cal. App. 682, 686) . Plaintiffs were entitled to compensation for the usable value of the property taken even if they did not hire replacement property. They were entitled to recover the amount paid to the employee during the week their business was closed and loss of profits during and after that week (97 Cal. App. 682, 687) . Lost profits during and after that week could not be measured with mathematical accuracy, but that did not bar recovery (97 Cal. App. 682, 687) .

[d] Depreciation During Period of Detention

Plaintiff automobile dealer in Spencer Kennelly, Ltd. v. Bk. of Amer. (1942) 19 Cal. 2d 586, 122 P.2d 552 , was awarded possession of a certificate of ownership of an automobile. Defendant was awarded the balance owing under a conditional sale contract. There had been a dispute about the amount of the last payment due under the financing contract. During the time the certificate was held by defendant, plaintiff was unable to sell the automobile because it could not supply evidence of title. There was uncontradicted evidence that the vehicle depreciated $155 in value during the time the certificate was wrongfully withheld. Plaintiff appealed, contending it was error for the court not to have awarded it compensatory damages. The Supreme Court modified the judgment to include an award of compensatory damages for plaintiff in the amount established by the evidence, and affirmed the judgment as modified. The Court cited Drinkhouse v. Van Ness (1927) 202 Cal. 359, 374, 260 P. 869 (discussed in § 40.32[3][a]), for the general rule that when a party who is found to have been entitled to possession of the property both before and after the bringing of an action for claim and delivery proves compensatory damages, those damages should be awarded as a matter of course (19 Cal. 2d 586, 589) . Moreover, the Court said, when plaintiff prevails and the personal property involved has diminished in value, depreciation is a proper element of damages (19 Cal. 2d 586, 589) . After considering defendant's contention that plaintiff had waived its right to those damages by certain statements its attorney made in argument, the Court concluded that the judgment should be modified to provide for award of those damages to plaintiff (19 Cal. 2d 586, 593-594) .

Berry v. Bank of Bakersfield (1918) 177 Cal. 206, 170 P. 415 , was an action for claim and delivery of a certificate for 82,144 shares of stock originally deposited with defendant allegedly as security for payment of a note. There was a dispute regarding whether anything was still owing on the note, and defendant refused to return the stock certificate. The shares were held by the named plaintiff as trustee for himself and others. The court found that the named plaintiff was owner of 27,381 shares; that there was a balance owing on the note; that the shares were never pledged as security by plaintiff; that the stock was worth fifty cents per share at the commencement of the case and ten cents per share at the time of trial. Judgment was for plaintiff, for the return of the certificate or the value of his shares, plus $10,952.40 as damages for the decrease in the value of the shares, less the amount owed in the note. Defendant appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed. One of defendant's contentions on appeal was that the damages for decrease in the value of the stock were special damages and could not be recovered, because they had not been specially pleaded. The Court disagreed, saying that depreciation in value of unlawfully detained property is an element of damage that is naturally to be anticipated and therefore is covered by an averment of general damage (177 Cal. 206, 210) . Further, no supplemental pleading was required to warrant recovery of damages resulting after the commencement of the action (177 Cal. 206, 211) .

[e] Damages for Detention May Exceed Value of Property

Both Harris v. Dixon Cadillac Co. (1982) 132 Cal. App. 3d 485, 183 Cal. Rptr. 299 , and Tucker v. Hagerty (1918) 37 Cal. App. 789, 174 P. 908 , are discussed in § 40.32[3][a].

[f] Punitive Damages May Be Awarded

Plaintiff in Livestock G.P. Co. v. Union Etc. Co. (1896) 114 Cal. 447, 46 P. 286 , was awarded the right to possession of the property, or its value, but the trial court found that plaintiff was not damaged by its detention, and that defendant was not guilty of oppression, fraud, or malice. Contending that there was uncontradicted evidence of substantial damage, plaintiff moved for a new trial. The motion was granted, and defendant appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed the grant of the motion for new trial. If plaintiff proved oppression, fraud, and malice, it could be awarded exemplary damages (114 Cal. 447, 450) . But even if it did not, the Court said, citing Civ. Code § 3333, plaintiff was entitled to sufficient damages to compensate it for all the detriment caused by the wrong complained of (114 Cal. 447, 450-451) .

The facts and portion of the opinion in Harris v. Dixon Cadillac Co. (1982) 132 Cal. App. 3d 485, 183 Cal. Rptr. 299 , addressing compensatory damages is discussed in § 40.32[3][a]. The court also affirmed the award of $45,000 of punitive damages to plaintiff. The court noted that the requisite state of mind may be proved by direct evidence or by implication (132 Cal. App. 3d 485, 493-494) . The court said this case was quite similar to Zhadan v. Downtown Los Angeles Motor Distributors Inc. (1979) 100 Cal. App. 3d 821, 831-833, 161 Cal. Rptr. 225 , an action for conversion based on detention of the vehicle for repairs made without compliance with Bus. & Prof. Code § 9884.9 and in which a $90,000 punitive damage award was upheld (132 Cal. App. 3d 485, 494) . Both cases involved serious violations of a policy designed to protect consumers. In this case, the violation was characterized as flagrant. Defendant had also apparently falsified authorization signatures, including plaintiff's, on copies of the invoices it sent to the California Bureau of Automotive Repairs in response to the Bureau's investigation of a complaint plaintiff filed with it. As a result of this action, the Bureau dropped the complaint. The most salient indication of defendant's misconduct, the court said, was the lien sale notice it sent to plaintiff in Kansas after it knew of the pendency of the action, in which defendant stated that it had no knowledge of any valid defense to the claim that gave rise to its lien (132 Cal. App. 3d 485, 494) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Rental Value Recoverable as Damages for Detention

Both parties in Stanley W. Smith, Inc. v. Pilgrim (1931) 117 Cal. App. 244, 3 P.2d 573 , claimed the right to possession of a car. Plaintiff had deprived defendant of the car for more than three years, and disposed of it. Judgment for defendant, for the value of the automobile at the time of trial and for its usable value, based on a reasonable rental until that time, was affirmed. Expert testimony placed the market rental value of the car at $200 per month during the first year of the detention declining to $125 per month during the third year and $20 to $25 per week during the remaining period of detention, with proper upkeep and allowing for usual depreciation. The jury were instructed that the reasonable rental value, if any, was the net usable value less the expense of upkeep and maintenance. The court of appeal said that in an action for claim and delivery of personal property, the aggrieved party is entitled to the usable value regardless of whether or not he or she hired other property to take the place of the property that was wrongfully withheld (117 Cal. App. 244, 246, 247) . Compensation based on reasonable value of the use of the property need not be limited by the value of the property. If the property detained has a usable value, its owner is entitled to recover damages equivalent to the reasonable value of its use during the period of detention up until the rendition of judgment (117 Cal. App. 244, 246) .

[b] Depreciation During Period of Detention

Plaintiff in Anglo-California Trust Co. v. Collins (1923) 192 Cal. 315, 219 P. 982 , was awarded return of a farm tractor, or $350 as its value, but was denied damages for detention, and appealed. The Supreme Court reversed the judgment. The trial court found that the tractor, which remained in defendant's possession under a redelivery bond during the pendency of the action, was worth $1,700 on the day action was commenced and $350 when judgment was rendered. On the basis of those findings, it was error not to award $1,350 as damages for detention (192 Cal. 315, 317-318) . Plaintiff was entitled to damages for deterioration or depreciation, which are proper elements of damages for the detention of property. A finding of a specific amount of deterioration is equivalent to a finding of damages in that amount (192 Cal. 315, 317) .

The court of appeal in Morris v. Allen (1911) 17 Cal. App. 684, 121 P. 690 , affirmed judgment for plaintiff for return of a vehicle, or $600 as its value, and $250 damages for its detention over an 18-month period. Defendant's primary contentions on appeal were that evidence of the car's decrease in value should not have been admitted and that that evidence established special damages, which plaintiff was barred from recovering because only general damages were pleaded. The evidence objected to established without conflict that the car was worth $600 at the time of the taking, but decreased in value to $400 during the pendency of the action. The court of appeal noted that Code Civ. Proc. § 667 specifically authorizes damages for detention, which may be either general or special (17 Cal. App. 684, 688) . The court said that the manufacture of cars was still in its infancy and that by reason of the many changes and improvements from year to year, an automobile manufactured and marketed in any one year necessarily decreases in value as a salable commodity with each succeeding year of its existence (17 Cal. App. 684, 688-689) . Thus, damage from depreciation by reason of lapse of time was the direct and necessary result of the wrongful detention, rightfully proven and assessed under a general damage allegation (17 Cal. App. 684, 689) .

[c] Punitive Damages May Be Awarded

Booth v. People's Finance Etc. Co. (1932) 124 Cal. App. 131, 12 P.2d 50 (discussed in § 40.25[4][b]), upheld a punitive damage award in an action for claim and delivery, albeit in a reduced amount (124 Cal. App. 131, 143-146) .

CHAPTER 41 CLASS AND REPRESENTATIVE ACTIONS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

§ 41.01 Scope of Chapter

This chapter contains memoranda for use in class actions and representative actions. The chapter includes memoranda supporting a motion to certify an action as a proper class action [see § 41.30], supporting a motion for an order declaring an action inappropriate as a class action [see § 41.31], supporting a motion to decertify the class in a class action [see § 41.32], opposing a motion to decertify the class in a class action [see § 41.33], and supporting [see §§ 41.34, 41.34A] and opposing [see § 41.35] defendant's demurrer to a class-action complaint on the ground of failure to state a cause of action.

The chapter contains additional memoranda supporting [see §§ 41.36 -41.52] and opposing [see §§ 41.52A -41.62] the existence of the requirements for maintaining a proper class or representative action. The chapter also contains a memorandum supporting [see § 41.63] the contention that the trial court may impose costs of notice to class members on the adverse party in a class action. In addition, the chapter includes memoranda supporting [see §§ 41.64 -41.65] and opposing [see §§ 41.66 -41.68] the contention that the trial court may not adjudicate the substantive merits of an action without prior determination of procedural class-action issues. Also included are a memorandum supporting [see § 41.69] and opposing [see § 41.70] the contention that a representative action by an association on behalf of its members is proper, and a memorandum supporting the contention that a fluid class recovery is proper [see § 41.71].

CHAPTER 41 CLASS AND REPRESENTATIVE ACTIONS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

4-41 California Points & Authorities § 41.02

§ 41.02 Governing Law

[1] Applicable State and Federal Law

Class actions and representative actions are governed in general by Code Civ. Proc. § 382, which provides that when the question is one of common or general interest, of many persons, or when the parties are numerous and it is impracticable to bring them all before the court, one or more may sue or defend for the benefit of all.

Procedural rules for the management of class actions in California trial courts are set forth in Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.760 et seq. The rules apply in class actions brought under Code Civ. Proc. § 382 (authorizing class actions generally) and in class actions brought under the Consumers Legal Remedies Act (Civ. Code § 1750 et seq.) [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.760(a)]. As to matters not covered by the rules, the statutory procedures for class actions under the Consumers Legal Remedies Act [see Civ. Code § 1781] and the rule governing class actions in federal courts, Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23, may be used as procedural guidelines to ensure fairness in class action suits generally [see Richmond v. Dart Industries, Inc. (1981) 29 Cal. 3d 462, 469-470 n.7, 174 Cal. Rptr. 515, 629 P.2d 23 ; see also B.W.I. Custom Kitchen v. Owens-Illinois, Inc. (1987) 191 Cal. App. 3d 1341, 1347, 235 Cal. Rptr. 228 ; for discussion of procedure under the Consumers Legal Remedies Act, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 504, Sales: Consumers Legal Remedies Act (Matthew Bender)]. Absent controlling California authority, federal cases construing Fed. R. Civ. P., Rule 23, are particularly persuasive authority when the California rule involved is identical to the rule construed in the federal case [Danzig v. Superior Court (1978) 87 Cal. App. 3d 604, 610, 151 Cal. Rptr. 185 , cert. denied, 474 U.S. 819, 106 S. Ct. 67, 88 L. Ed. 2d 55 (1985)] .

The Judicial Council has preempted local rules relating to pleadings, demurrers, ex parte applications, motions, discovery, provisional remedies, and the form and format of papers. Thus, all local rules regulating these matters in class actions are null and void unless otherwise permitted or required by statute or Judicial Council rule [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.20(a)]. There are some exceptions to the general preemption of local rules, most significantly for local rules enacted under the Trial Court Delay Reduction Act [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.20(b); see Gov. Code § 68600 et seq.].

The federal Class Action Fairness Act of 2005 [Pub. L. No. 109-2, 119 Stat. 4], which took effect February 18, 2005, enacted new provisions to facilitate the removal of certain class actions from state court to federal court. Under these provisions, a class action filed in a California superior court may be removed to, and ultimately adjudicated in, federal district court, even if the complaint asserts only state-law claims and complete diversity of citizenship among the parties is lacking [see 28 U.S.C. §§ 1332(d), 1453]. For discussion of removal of class actions under these provisions, see § 41.03[2]. For coverage of the general procedures for the removal of actions to federal court, see 16 Moore's Federal Practice--Civil, Ch. 107, Removal (Matthew Bender). For coverage of class-action procedures applicable in federal court, see 5 Moore's Federal Practice--Civil, Ch. 23, Class Actions (Matthew Bender).

Federal law may prevent California courts from adjudicating certain class claims, even if asserted solely on the basis of state law. For example, the Securities Litigation Uniform Standards Act of 1998 (SLUSA) provides that no "covered class action" based on the statutory or common law of any state may be maintained in state or federal court by any private party alleging fraud in connection with the purchase, sale, or holding of a "covered security" [15 U.S.C. § 78bb(f)(1); Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc. v. Dabit (2006) 547 U.S. 71, 126 S. Ct. 1503, 164 L. Ed. 2d 179, 190-194 (SLUSA's preemption of state-law class actions alleging fraud "in connection with the purchase or sale" of securities bars state-law claims not just by purchasers and sellers of securities, but also by holders of securities, even though holders lack standing to pursue privatesecurities-fraud claims under federal law)]. A "covered class action" for SLUSA purposes is a lawsuit in which damages are sought on behalf of more than 50 people [15 U.S.C. § 78bb(f)(5)(B)]. A "covered security" is a security traded nationally and listed on a regulated national exchange [15 U.S.C. § 78bb(f)(5)(E)]. SLUSA exempts from its operation certain class actions based on the law of the state in which the issuer of the covered security is incorporated, actions brought by a state agency or state pension plan, actions under contracts between issuers and indenture trustees, and derivative actions brought by shareholders on behalf of a corporation [15 U.S.C. § 78bb(f)(3)(A)-(C), (5)(C)]. SLUSA also expressly preserves state jurisdiction over state agency enforcement proceedings [15 U.S.C. § 78bb(f)(4)]. After SLUSA is found applicable, the court may allow the plaintiffs to amend the complaint to assert state-law claims for a group of fewer than 50 plaintiffs or to exclude allegations that trigger SLUSA preclusion [Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. v. Superior Court (2008) 159 Cal. App. 4th 381, 394, 71 Cal. Rptr. 3d 506].

[1A] Procedure for Determining Propriety of Class Action

A motion for class certification should be filed when practicable [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.764(b); see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.764(c) (notice and format requirements for motion to certify class)], and the propriety of permitting the action to proceed as a class action should be decided at an early stage of the proceedings [Danzig v. Jack Grynberg & Associates (1984) 161 Cal. App. 3d 1128, 1136, 208 Cal. Rptr. 336] . In its discretion, the court may establish a deadline for the filing of the motion as part of a case conference or as part of other case management proceedings [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.764(b); see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 3.762, 3.763 (case conference)]. Any such deadline must take into account discovery proceedings that may be necessary to the filing of the motion [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.764(b); see Stern v. Superior Court (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 223, 232-233, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 275 (each party must have opportunity to conduct discovery on class action issues before filing documents to support or oppose class action certification motion)]. The court rules also authorize the filing of motions to determine the existence of and certify subclasses, to amend or modify an order certifying a class, and to decertify a class [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.764(a)(2)-(4)].

Another method by which a defendant may test the propriety of a class action is by filing a demurrer to a class-action complaint on the ground that it fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 430.10(e), 430.30(a)]. When the complaint on its face fails to contain sufficient allegations of fact to establish a class interest, the class issue may be properly disposed of by demurrer [Rose v. Medtronics, Inc. (1980) 107 Cal. App. 3d 150, 154, 166 Cal. Rptr. 16 ; see Pinnacle Holdings, Inc. v. Simon (1995) 31 Cal. App. 4th 1430, 1435, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 778 ; see also TJX Cos., Inc. v. Superior Court (2001) 87 Cal. App. 4th 747, 749-754, 104 Cal. Rptr. 2d 810 (if there is real and genuine dispute over whether complaint alleges facts sufficient for class action, trial court may not summarily dispose of demurrer without conducting oral hearing)]. When there is a reasonable possibility that the plaintiff can establish a community of interest among potential claimants, however, the preferred course is to defer decision on the propriety of the class action until an evidentiary hearing has been held on the appropriateness of class litigation [Vasquez v. Superior Court (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 800, 813, 94 Cal. Rptr. 796, 484 P.2d 964 ; Arce v. Kaiser Found. Health Plan, Inc. (2010) 181 Cal. App. 4th 471, 487, 496, 104 Cal. Rptr. 3d 545 (because there was reasonable possibility that plaintiff could demonstrate predominance of common issues, trial court erred in sustaining demurrer).]

If the court certifies a class, at that time or as soon thereafter as practicable, the court must make an order determining whether notice to the class is necessary, and if so, the time, manner, and content of the notice, and the parties responsible for the cost of notice [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.766(c); see Hernandez v. Vitamin Shoppe Indus. Inc. (2009) 174 Cal. App. 4th 1441, 1454-1461, 95 Cal. Rptr. 3d 734 (trial court did not abuse its discretion by enjoining class member's attorney from unilaterally contacting other class members, after attorney sent argumentative letters to class members urging them to opt out of class, after court had reviewed proposed settlement and counsel's arguments, preliminarily approved settlement and conditionally certified class, and ordered claims administrator to send notice to class)]. The court may require either party to notify the class of the action in the manner specified by the court [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.766(a); see Civ. Code § 1781(d), (e) (notice requirements under Consumers Legal Remedies Act)]. The difficulty of notifying individual class members does not authorize the court to require that class members--even those with a substantial stake in the case--acknowledge personal notification by affirmatively requesting inclusion in the class. Such an "opt-in" procedure is permitted only after liability has been determined, as a means of apportioning the class's recovery [Hypertouch, Inc. v. Superior Court (2005) 128 Cal. App. 4th 1527, 1542 n.5, 1546-1547 (after liability is determined, court may require class members to establish their entitlement to portions of recovery by filing proofs of claim)].

Before the determination of liability, an "opt-in" procedure is not required by constitutional due-process principles [Hypertouch, Inc. v. Superior Court (2005) 128 Cal. App. 4th 1527, 1537-1543, 27 Cal. Rptr. 3d 839 (difficulty of providing notice may be reason to deny class certification, but once class is certified, due process does not require use of opt-in procedure to limit class to those who have received actual notice)], and it is not permitted by the applicable federal or California court rules, which require only the best notice practicable under the circumstances [Hypertouch, Inc. v. Superior Court (2005) 128 Cal. App. 4th 1527, 1544-1550, 27 Cal. Rptr. 3d 839 ; see Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(c)(2); Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.766(f)].

There is no general authorization for, or requirement of, pre-certification notice to prospective class members. However, if prospective class members' identifying information is disclosed in precertification discovery, it may be appropriate for the court to order that notice be provided to prospective class members so that they may take steps to protect their privacy [see, e.g., Pioneer Elecs. (USA) Inc. v. Superior Court (2007) 40 Cal. 4th 360, 373-375, 53 Cal. Rptr. 3d 513, 150 P.3d 198 (approving trial court's order to notify defendant's customers and giving them opportunity to object to transmission of their identifying information in discovery)].

When a court has denied certification, the proper remedy is appeal, and successive certification motions are not available [Stephen v. Enterprise Rent-A-Car (1991) 235 Cal. App. 3d 806, 813, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 130] . Thus, after time for direct appeal has expired, a plaintiff may not "renew" a certification motion under Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(b) (renewal of motion on different state of facts) [Stephen v. Enterprise Rent-A-Car (1991) 235 Cal. App. 3d 806, 811-812, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 130] . For a form of memorandum opposing a renewed motion after an order denying class certification, see Ch. 158, Motions to Reconsider and Renewed Motions .

[2] Determination of Procedural Issues Prior to Substantive Issues

California court decisions have focused on the timing of motions seeking determination of procedural class action issues. Ordinarily, the trial court may not adjudicate any substantive issues, such as motions for summary judgment, prior to determination of the procedural class action issues, such as suitability of the action as a class action, determination of the composition of the class, and appropriate notification of members of the class. Similarly, the trial court ordinarily may not resolve procedural class-action issues after an adjudication on the substantive merits [Green

v. Obledo (1981) 29 Cal. 3d 126, 146, 172 Cal. Rptr. 206, 624 P.2d 256 ; see §§ 41.64, 41.65]. The purpose of resolving procedural issues first is to protect the defendant from "one-way intervention," under which potential class members could elect to stay in the class after a favorable merits ruling but opt out after an unfavorable merits ruling [see Fireside Bank v. Superior Court (2007) 40 Cal. 4th 1069, 1074, 1081, 56 Cal. Rptr. 3d 861, 155 P.3d 268] . It has even been said that the defendant has a due-process right to avoid one-way intervention [Fireside Bank v. Superior Court (2007) 40 Cal. 4th 1069, 1083, 56 Cal. Rptr. 3d 861, 155 P.3d 268 ; Home Sav. & Loan Assn. v. Superior Court (1976) 54 Cal. App. 3d 208, 214, 126 Cal. Rptr. 511] . The general requirement that procedural issues be resolved first is not rigid, however, and is subject to the following rules [Fireside Bank v. Superior Court (2007) 40 Cal. 4th 1069, 1083, 56 Cal. Rptr. 3d 861, 155 P.3d 268] :

- First, a defendant must actively preserve its protection against one-way intervention by objecting to any adjudication of the merits before class certification. If the defendant fails to timely object, or affirmatively seeks resolution of the merits before certification, it will be deemed to have waived its rights [see, e.g., Employment Development Dept. v. Superior Court (1981) 30 Cal. 3d 256, 262, 262-265, 178 Cal. Rptr. 612, 636 P.2d 575 ; Civil Service Employees Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1978) 22 Cal. 3d 362, 373-374, 149 Cal. Rptr. 360, 584 P.2d 497 ; see also § 41.66].

- Second, plaintiffs should seek certification before moving for any resolution of the merits [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.764(b) ("A motion for class certification should be filed when practicable")]. If the plaintiffs seek certification after seeking resolution of the merits, in the absence of a waiver by the defendant, they must demonstrate changed circumstances or other good cause justifying the belated motion before the trial court may consider it.

- Third, in the absence of a waiver by the defendant, the trial court should not resolve the merits in a putative class action before resolving class certification and notice issues, absent a compelling justification for doing so.

[3] Consumer Class Actions

The Consumers Legal Remedies Act (CLRA) [Civ. Code §§ 1750-1784] provides for class actions by consumers against unethical sellers of goods or services for unfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices [Civ. Code §§ 1770, 1780(a); see Fairbanks v. Superior Court (2009) 46 Cal. 4th 56, 61, 92 Cal. Rptr. 3d 279, 205 P.3d 201 (life insurance is not "good" or "service" within scope of remedial provisions of CLRA)]. The court must permit an action if all of the following conditions exist [Civ. Code § 1781(b)(1)-(4)]:

(1) It is impracticable to bring all members of the class before the court;

(2) The questions of law or fact common to the class are substantially similar and predominate over the questions affecting the individual members;

(3) The claims or defenses of the representative plaintiffs are typical of the claims or defenses of the class; and

(4) The representative plaintiffs will fairly and adequately protect the interests of the class.

Class actions brought under the CLRA are subject to the procedural rules generally applicable to class actions [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.760(a)]. In addition, the Act provides that the court must, on any party's motion that is supported by an affidavit (or declaration under penalty of perjury [Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) of a person or persons having knowledge of the facts, hold a hearing after 10 days' notice of the hearing has been served on the other parties to the action. At the hearing the court will determine [Civ. Code § 1781(c)]:

(1) Whether or not the four conditions necessary for maintenance of a class action exist;

(2) Whether or not the action is without merit or there is no defense to the action; and

(3) Whether or not published notice of the action should be given to each member of the alleged class.

To have standing to bring a class action under the CLRA, a representative plaintiff must be a consumer and must have suffered "any damage" as a result of the defendant's violation of the Act [Civ. Code § 1780(a)]. The statutory reference to "any damage" in this context indicates a category that includes, but is greater than, actual pecuniary damages. Thus, a representative plaintiff who has not suffered pecuniary damages may nevertheless have standing to sue if he or she has incurred transaction costs or opportunity costs as a result of an alleged violation of the Act [Meyer v. Sprint Spectrum L.P. (2009) 45 Cal. 4th 634, 640 & n.1, 88 Cal. Rptr. 3d 859, 200 P.3d 295 (transaction costs are costs associated with forming, maintaining, and enforcing contracts; opportunity costs are benefits forgone by entering contract, such as forgone opportunity to contract with third party)]. However, the existence of a violation of the Act (e.g., inclusion of unconscionable term in consumer contract [see, e.g., Civ. Code § 1770(a)(14), (19)]) does not by itself constitute a form of damage. Therefore, the existence of a violation, without more, will not confer standing on a consumer exposed to the violation (e.g., consumer who enters into contract that includes unconscionable term), unless some kind of damage has resulted [Meyer v. Sprint Spectrum L.P. (2009) 45 Cal. 4th 634, 641-643, 88 Cal. Rptr. 3d 859, 200 P.3d 295 (plaintiff suffered no damage because defendant had not attempted to enforce allegedly unconscionable contract term); see Steroid Hormone Prod. Cases (2010) 181 Cal. App. 4th 145, 156-157, 104 Cal. Rptr. 3d 329 (named plaintiff had standing to proceed under CLRA based on claim that, in reliance on defendant's deceptive conduct, he bought illegal product he would not have bought had he known it was illegal)]. A class action under the CLRA requires a showing of actual injury as to each class member [Steroid Hormone Prod. Cases (2010) 181 Cal. App. 4th 145, 155-156, 104 Cal. Rptr. 3d 329] .

Like the CLRA, California's statutory unfair competition and false advertising law also broadly proscribes unlawful, unfair, or fraudulent business practices and unfair, deceptive, untrue, or misleading advertising [Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 17200 et seq., 17500 et seq.; see Civ. Code § 1752 (remedies under CLRA are not exclusive)].

Formerly, a class action for relief under the unfair competition and false advertising law could be brought by a private plaintiff, even if that representative plaintiff had not suffered any injury or damage [see former Bus. & Prof. Code § 17204]. However, with the enactment of Proposition 64 on November 2, 2004, a private representative plaintiff lacks standing to maintain a class action unless he or she suffered injury in fact and lost money or property as a result of the alleged unfair competition or false advertising [Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 17203, 17204, 17535; see Californians for Disability Rights v. Mervyn's, LLC (2006) 39 Cal. 4th 223, 227, 46 Cal. Rptr. 3d 57, 138 P.3d 207 (standing requirements of Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 17203, 17204, and 17535, which took effect with passage of Proposition 64 on November 2, 2004, apply to cases pending on that date)]. For example, a labor union that has not suffered actual injury under the Unfair Competition Law lacks standing to bring a representative action as the assignee of employees who suffered injuries or as an association whose members have suffered injuries [Amalgamated Transit Union, Local 1756, AFL-CIO v. Superior Court (2009) 46 Cal. 4th 993, 1002, 95 Cal. Rptr. 3d 605, 209 P.3d 937] .

Proposition 64's requirement that the class representative have suffered injury in fact and have lost money or property "as a result of" alleged unfair competition [see Bus. & Prof. Code § 17204] means, in the context of an alleged fraudulent business practice, that the class representative must demonstrate actual reliance on the allegedly deceptive or misleading statements of the defendant, in accordance with settled principles regarding the element of reliance in ordinary fraud actions. Thus, the representative plaintiff need not plead or prove with an unrealistic degree of specificity that the plaintiff relied on particular misrepresentations or false statements when the alleged unfair practice is an extensive and long-term advertising campaign [In re Tobacco II Cases (2009) 46 Cal. 4th 298, 306, 324-328, 93 Cal. Rptr. 3d 559, 207 P.3d 20 ; but see Pfizer Inc. v. Superior Court (2010) 182 Cal. App. 4th 622, 633-634, 105 Cal. Rptr.

3d 795 (named plaintiff who had limited experience with only one label used in defendant's advertising campaign, and who had not seen other labels and television commercials that were part of campaign, was inadequate class representative)].

The standing requirements imposed by Proposition 64 apply only to the class representative, and unnamed class members need not show injury in fact or actual loss of money or property [In re Tobacco II Cases (2009) 46 Cal. 4th 298, 306, 314-324, 93 Cal. Rptr. 3d 559, 207 P.3d 20 ; see also Arias v. Superior Court (2009) 46 Cal. 4th 969, 975, 977-980, 95 Cal. Rptr. 3d 588, 209 P.3d 923 (employee who sues employer on behalf of self and other employees under Unfair Competition Law, Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq., must satisfy class-action requirements)]. However, in such a case the class definition must not include persons who were not exposed to the alleged fraudulent business practice and could not possibly have lost money or property as a result of the alleged unfair competition [Pfizer Inc. v. Superior Court (2010) 182 Cal. App. 4th 622, 631-633, 105 Cal. Rptr. 3d 795] .

The named plaintiff's lack of standing in a class action brought under the unfair competition law does not necessarily require dismissal of the action. In this case, the court has discretion to allow precertification discovery designed to ascertain a suitable class representative, after identifying any potential abuses of the class-action procedure that may be created if discovery is allowed, and weighing those potential abuses against the rights of the parties under the circumstances of the case [Parris v. Superior Court (2003) 109 Cal.App. 4th 285, 300-301, 135 Cal. Rptr. 2d 90 ; see In re Tobacco II Cases (2009) 46 Cal. 4th 298, 328, 93 Cal. Rptr. 3d 559, 207 P.3d 20 (if named plaintiff lacks standing, proper procedure is not to decertify class but to grant leave to amend to redefine class or add new class representative); see, e.g., CashCall, Inc. v. Superior Court (2008) 159 Cal. App. 4th 273, 284-296, 71 Cal. Rptr. 3d 441 (trial court properly authorized precertification discovery to find suitable class representative even though named plaintiff lacked standing to bring suit); First Am. Title Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (2007) 146 Cal. App. 4th 1564, 1573-1578, 53 Cal. Rptr. 3d 734 (trial court abused its discretion in allowing precertification discovery to find appropriate class representative, when named plaintiff who initiated unfair-business-practices action on behalf of class was not member of class); see also Branick v. Downey Savings & Loan Assn. (2006) 39 Cal. 4th 235, 239, 46 Cal. Rptr. 3d 66, 138 P.3d 214 (amendment of class-action complaint to add representative plaintiff who meets standing requirements of Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 17203, 17204, and 17535 is subject to ordinary rules governing pleading amendments and their relation back)].

[4] Review of Certification Order

The procedure available to review an order of a trial court regarding the propriety of a class action depends on the particular result of the order. If the certification order permits the class action to proceed, the order is reviewable by mandate and prohibition proceedings [see Chance v. Superior Court (1962) 58 Cal. 2d 275, 277, 23 Cal. Rptr. 761, 373 P.2d 849] .

When the legal effect of the certification order is to virtually demolish the class action, the order is appealable as a "final judgment" [Daar v. Yellow Cab Co. (1967) 67 Cal. 2d 695, 698-699, 63 Cal. Rptr. 724, 433 P.2d 732 ; see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 904.1, 904.2 (appealable orders)]. This principle is sometimes called the "death knell" doctrine, because the denial of class certification is "tantamount to a dismissal of the action as to all members of the class other than plaintiff," effectively sounding the "death knell" of the action as to the putative class members [Farwell v. Sunset Mesa Property Owners Assn., Inc. (2008) 163 Cal. App. 4th 1545, 1547, 78 Cal. Rptr. 3d 666]. Under the "death knell" doctrine, for example, a decision by a trial court denying certification to an entire class is an appealable order [Richmond v. Dart Industries, Inc. (1981) 29 Cal. 3d 462, 466, 470, 479, 174 Cal. Rptr. 515, 629 P.2d 23 ; see also Stephen v. Enterprise Rent-A-Car (1991) 235 Cal. App. 3d 806, 811-812, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 130 (because order denying certification is final, it may not be renewed after it is final)]. However, an order sustaining a demurrer but granting leave to amend is not appealable under the "death knell" doctrine, because it does not have the effect of terminating the class action, since the complaint can be amended in a way that would permit class certification [Farwell v. Sunset Mesa Property Owners Assn., Inc. (2008) 163 Cal. App. 4th 1545, 1551-1552, 78 Cal. Rptr. 3d 666] .

One court has held that a denial of class certification cannot be appealed if dismissal of the class action is operative only against the class and not against the named plaintiff [Rosack v. Volvo of America Corp. (1982) 131 Cal. App. 3d 741, 745, 749, 182 Cal. Rptr. 800] . Another has held that an order certifying a statewide, rather than a national, class was not appealable, reasoning that the order did not have a "death knell" effect of making further proceedings in the action impractical because of denial of class action status [General Motors Corp. v. Superior Court (1988) 199 Cal. App. 3d 247, 249, 250-252, 244 Cal. Rptr. 776 ; contra Clothesrigger, Inc. v. GTE Corp. (1987) 191 Cal. App. 3d 605, 609-611, 619, 236 Cal. Rptr. 605] .

[5] Procedure for Settlement

A settlement or compromise of an entire class action, or of a cause of action in a class action, or as to a party, requires the approval of the court after a hearing [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.769(a); see Civ. Code § 1781(f) (consumer class actions); Marcarelli v. Cabell (1976) 58 Cal. App. 3d 51, 53, 129 Cal. Rptr. 509 (named plaintiff in class action is not permitted to settle action without court approval)]. Before final approval, the court must conduct an inquiry into the fairness of the proposed settlement [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.769(a)]. If the court has certified the action as a class action, notice of the final approval hearing must be given to the class members in the manner specified by the court. The notice must contain an explanation of the proposed settlement and procedures for class members to follow in filing written objections to it and in arranging to appear at the settlement hearing to state any objections to the proposed settlement [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.769(f); see Civ. Code § 1781(f); see also Martorana v. Marlin & Saltzman (2009) 175 Cal. App. 4th 685, 694-698, 96 Cal. Rptr. 3d 172 (once court's order approving settlement notice procedure becomes final, class member may not maintain malpractice action against class counsel for failure to negotiate different settlement notice procedure or failure to give class member more notice than that required by judicially approved notice procedure)]. The notice must include an unambiguous class definition, so that persons receiving the notice will be able to determine whether they are members of the class [Cho v. Seagate Tech. Holdings, Inc. (2009) 177 Cal. App. 4th 734, 745-748, 99 Cal. Rptr. 3d 436 (vacating order approving settlement so that trial court could provide unambiguous definition of class and re-notice settlement)].

[6] Fluid Class Recovery

Ordinarily, once a class action is resolved, the members of the class will be notified to file individual claims to establish their shares of the recovery. However, this may be impractical when there is a large class of consumers with relatively small individual claims. In such cases, it is likely that only a fraction of the class will have the desire and documentation to file individual claims and, as a result, there will be a substantial amount of remaining damages. Therefore, the court may order that damages be distributed according to one of several methods known collectively as "fluid class recovery" or "cy pres remedy." This type of distribution, which may, for example, take the form of a future price rollback, benefits as many of the class members as possible, but most probably, some injured class members will receive no compensation and some people not in the class will benefit from the distribution [Bruno v. Superior Court (1981) 127 Cal. App. 3d 120, 123-124, 179 Cal. Rptr. 342] .

Fluid recovery is ordinarily implemented in three steps [State of California v. Levi Strauss & Co. (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 460, 472-473, 224 Cal. Rptr. 605, 715 P.2d 564] :

(1) The defendant's total damage liability is paid over to a class fund;

(2) Individual class members are given an opportunity to collect their individual shares by proving their particular damages, usually according to a lowered standard of proof; and

(3) Any residue remaining after individual claims have been paid is distributed by one of several practical procedures that have been developed by the courts.

When fluid class recovery is implemented by a price rollback, under some circumstances the rollback may be more accurately characterized as an alternative to creation of the residue [see State of California v. Levi Strauss & Co. (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 460, 488 n.1, 224 Cal. Rptr. 605, 715 P.2d 564 (concurring opn. of Grodin, J.)].

Under appropriate circumstances, fluid class recovery may result in the entire recovery being distributed to charitable, governmental, and nonprofit organizations, with no direct payments to any class members. Distribution of the recovery in this manner may be appropriate, for example, if the distribution and administration costs for class members' claims will exceed the recovery [In re Vitamin Cases (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 820, 826-832, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 425] .

However, fluid class recovery cannot be used simply to surmount problems in certifying a class action and does not give a cause of action to anyone without a right to recover damages [Bruno v. Superior Court (1981) 127 Cal. App. 3d 120, 135, 179 Cal. Rptr. 342] . If a class is not ascertainable because no individual member can prove the harm he or she is alleged to have suffered, the possibility of fluid recovery does not salvage the class action [see, e.g., Collins v. Safeway Stores, Inc. (1986) 187 Cal. App. 3d 62, 74, 231 Cal. Rptr. 638] .

[7] Page Limits on Supporting and Opposing Memoranda

An opening or responding memorandum supporting or opposing a motion for class certification must not exceed 20 pages. A reply memorandum must not exceed 15 pages. Otherwise, memoranda submitted on motions in class actions are subject to the requirements that generally apply to supporting and opposing memoranda [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.764(c)(2); see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113 (general requirements)].

For further discussion of basic format requirements of supporting and opposing memoranda, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs, § 1.05.

CHAPTER 41 CLASS AND REPRESENTATIVE ACTIONS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

4-41 California Points & Authorities § 41.03

§ 41.03 Removal of Class Action to Federal Court

[1] Overview of Class Action Fairness Act of 2005

The federal Class Action Fairness Act of 2005 (CAFA), which took effect February 18, 2005, added new provisions to facilitate the removal of class actions from state court to federal court [Pub. L. No. 109-2, 119 Stat. 4; see 28 U.S.C. §§ 1332(d), 1453].

CAFA applies to all class actions commenced in any court on or after February 18, 2005 [Pub L. No. 109-2, § 9]. Thus, CAFA does not apply to a case commenced in state court before February 18, 2005 [see Pritchett v. Office Depot, Inc. (10th Cir. 2005) 404 F.3d 1232, 1235-1238 (class action is "commenced" for CAFA purposes when it is filed in state court, not when it is removed to federal court); see also McAtee v. Capital One, F.S.B. (2007) 479 F.3d 1143, 1145-1148 (action filed in California state court is commenced for purposes of CAFA when complaint is filed, irrespective of any later amendment to add new causes of action or to add or replace plaintiffs or defendants, including substitution of named defendant for fictitiously sued defendant)].

[2] Authority for Removal of Class Action

CAFA authorizes removal of a class action by any defendant, without regard to whether any defendant is a citizen of the state in which the action was filed, and without the consent of other defendants [28 U.S.C. § 1453(b); see United Steel, Paper & Forestry, Rubber Mfg. Energy, Allied Indus. & Serv. Workers Int'l Union v. Shell Oil Co. (9th Cir. 2008) 549 F.3d 1204, 1208-1209 (one defendant's timely notice of removal pursuant to CAFA accomplishes removal of entire case and is not vitiated by another defendant's untimely notice of removal)]. The new provision also makes the usual one-year limit on removal inapplicable to the removal of a class action [28 U.S.C. § 1453(b)]. Before the enactment of this provision, removal of a class action was subject to the general rules governing removal, which ordinarily require the defendants to act unanimously to effect removal, and which prohibit removal more than one year after commencement of the action [see 28 U.S.C. §§ 1441(a), 1446(a), (b)].

CAFA does not change the long-standing rule that a removing defendant has the burden of establishing federal jurisdiction [Abrego v. Dow Chem. Co. (9th Cir. 2006) 443 F.3d 676, 685-686 (per curiam) (plaintiff not required to establish lack of federal jurisdiction)]. However, once the removing defendant has met its initial burden of establishing federal jurisdiction under CAFA's minimal-diversity provision [see 28 U.S.C. § 1332(d)(2); see [3], below], a plaintiff seeking remand has the burden of showing that a statutory exception to minimal-diversity jurisdiction applies [Serrano v. 180 Connect, Inc. (9th Cir. 2007) 478 F.3d 1018, 1021-1024 (party seeking remand has burden of proving applicability of "local controversy" and "home-state controversy" exceptions to minimal-diversity jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1332(d)(4); see also [6], below].

The new removal provision does not apply to any class action that solely involves a claim [28 U.S.C. § 1453(d)]:

> (1) Concerning a "covered security" as defined under Section 16(f)(3) of the Securities Act of 1933 [15 U.S.C. § 78p(f)(3)] and Section 28(f)(5)(E) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 [15 U.S.C. § 78bb(f)(5)(E)];
> (2) That relates to the internal affairs or governance of a corporation orother form of business enterprise and that arises under or by virtue of the laws of the state in which the corporation or business enterprise is incorporated or organized; or
> (3) That relates to the rights, duties (including fiduciary duties), and obligations relating to or created by or pursuant to any security, as defined under Section 2(a)(1) of the Securities Act of 1933 [15 U.S.C. § 77b(a)(1)] and the regulations issued under that provision.

[3] Minimal-Diversity Jurisdiction of Federal Court

Facilitated removal under CAFA is available only if the federal court would have original subject-matter jurisdiction of the action [see 28 U.S.C. §§ 1441(a), 1446(a), (b), 1453(b)]. The federal court's jurisdiction generally may be based either on the presence of a federal question or on the diversity of citizenship of the parties [see 28 U.S.C. §§ 1331, 1332]. If the claims asserted in a case are all based on state law, therefore, the case can be removed to federal court only if the case satisfies the requirements of diversity jurisdiction.

In most cases, a federal court may exercise subject-matter jurisdiction based on diversity of citizenship only if there is complete diversity (that is, only if no plaintiff and defendant are citizens of the same state) and if the amount in controversy exceeds $75,000, exclusive of costs [28 U.S.C. § 1332(a), (c); Ruhrgas AG v. Marathon Oil Co. (1999) 526 U.S. 574, 580 n.2, 119 S. Ct. 1563, 143 L. Ed. 2d 760] . Before the enactment of CAFA, therefore, diversity jurisdiction over a class action did not exist unless there was complete diversity of citizenship between all named representatives of the plaintiff class and all defendants [see State Farm Fire & Casualty Co. v. Tashire (1967) 386 U.S. 523, 530-531, 87 S. Ct. 1199, 18 L. Ed. 2d 270] .

CAFA added a new subsection to the federal diversity jurisdiction statute, allowing federal courts to exercise jurisdiction over certain class actions based on minimal diversity [see 28 U.S.C. § 1332(d)]. Under the new provision, federal district courts generally have original jurisdiction over any class action in which [28 U.S.C. § 1332(d)(2)]:

> (1) The matter in controversy exceeds $5 million, exclusive of interest and costs; and
> (2) Either:
> > (a) Any member of a plaintiff class and any defendant are citizens of different states;
> > (b) Any member of a plaintiff class is a foreign state, or a citizen or subject of a foreign state, and any defendant is a citizen of a state; or
> > (c) Any member of a plaintiff class is a citizen of a state and any defendant is a foreign state or a citizen or subject of a foreign state.

For purposes of minimal-diversity jurisdiction, citizenship of the members of the proposed plaintiff classes is determined as of the date of filing of the complaint or amended complaint, or, if the case stated by the initial pleading is not subject to federal jurisdiction, as of the date of service by the plaintiffs of an amended pleading, motion, or other paper that indicates the existence of federal jurisdiction [28 U.S.C. § 1332(d)(7)]. CAFA does not specify a time for determining the citizenship of defendants.

For purposes of minimal-diversity jurisdiction, an unincorporated association is deemed a citizen of the state where it has its principal place of business and the state under whose laws it is organized [28 U.S.C. § 1332(d)(10)].

If otherwise applicable, minimal-diversity jurisdiction can be exercised before or after the entry of a class-certification order [28 U.S.C. § 1332(d)(8)].

Class members' claims may be aggregated for purposes of determining whether the $5 million threshold is met [28 U.S.C. § 1332(d)(6)]. Before the enactment of CAFA, in cases other than those in which in the class members' rights were joint in nature, the federal courts were split over whether plaintiff class members could aggregate their claims to meet the generally applicable $75,000 amount-in-controversy threshold [see Del Vecchio v. Conseco, Inc. (7th Cir. 2000) 230 F.3d 974, 977-978 (noting circuit split and holding that court could exercise supplemental jurisdiction over class members whose claims fell below jurisdictional minimum); Trimble v. Asarco, Inc. (8th Cir. 2000) 232 F.3d 946, 960-962 (district courts could not exercise supplemental jurisdiction over claims of class members who did not themselves satisfy jurisdictional minimum); Mehlenbacher v. Akzo Nobel Salt, Inc. (2d Cir. 2000) 216 F.3d 291, 296-297 & n.10 (in property owners' class action, members could not aggregate claims based on property damage and economic losses to meet jurisdictional minimum); Tortola Restaurants, L.P. v. Kimberly-Clark Corp. (N.D. Cal. 1997) 987 F. Supp. 1186, 1189-1190, 1190 n.2 (claims of plaintiffs suing as class cannot be aggregated for purpose of satisfying amount-in-controversy requirement)].

[4] Diversity Jurisdiction Over "Mass Actions"

Special rules apply to a "mass action," which is any civil action, other than a class action [see 28 U.S.C. § 1711(2)], in which monetary relief claims of 100 or more persons are proposed to be tried jointly on the ground that the plaintiffs' claims involve common questions of law or fact [28 U.S.C. § 1332(d)(11)(B)(i)]. For purposes of minimal-diversity jurisdiction and removal to federal court, a mass action is treated as a class action, except that in a mass action minimal-diversity jurisdiction does not exist over any plaintiff whose individual claim does not satisfy the generally applicable $75,000 jurisdictional minimum for diversityjurisdiction [28 U.S.C. § 1332(d)(11)(A), (B)(i)]. A "mass action" for this purpose does not include any civil action in which (1) all of the claims arise from an alleged event or occurrence in the state in which the action was filed, with the allegedly resulting injuries in that state or in states contiguous to that state; (2) the claims are joined on motion of a defendant; (3) all claims in the action are asserted on behalf of the general public, and not on behalf of individual claimants or members of a purported class, pursuant to a state statute specifically authorizing such an action; or (4) the claims have been consolidated or coordinated solely for pretrial proceedings [28 U.S.C. § 1332(d)(11)(B)(ii)].

A mass action may be removed to federal court based on minimal diversity [28 U.S.C. § 1332(d)(11)(A)], but thereafter it may not ordinarily be transferred to any other court for consolidated or coordinated pretrial proceedings [see 28 U.S.C. § 1407] unless a majority of the plaintiffs in the action request transfer for that purpose [28 U.S.C. § 1332(d)(11)(C)(i)].

This apparently would prevent the Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation from transferring such a mass action for consolidated treatment with other similar cases. However, this restriction on transfer does not apply if the mass action has been certified as a class action under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23, or if the plaintiffs propose that the action proceed as a class action under Rule 23 [28 U.S.C. § 1332(d)(11)(C)]. The limitations periods on any claims asserted in a mass action that is removed to federal court based on minimal diversity are tolled during the period that the action is pending in federal court [28 U.S.C. § 1332(d)(11)(D)].

A mass action is not necessarily the same thing as a mass tort.

[5] Exceptions to Minimal Diversity

Minimal-diversity jurisdiction is inapplicable under several circumstances. For example, minimal-diversity jurisdiction is not available in any class action in which [28 U.S.C. § 1332(d)(5)]:

> (1) The primary defendants are states, state officials, or other governmental entities against which the federal district court may be foreclosed from ordering relief (i.e., because of Eleventh Amendment immunity); or
> (2) There are fewer than 100 members of all proposed plaintiff classes in the aggregate.

Minimal-diversity jurisdiction is also inapplicable to any class action that solely involves a claim [28 U.S.C. § 1332(d)(9)]:

> (1) Concerning a "covered security" as defined under Section 16(f)(3) of the Securities Act of 1933 [15 U.S.C. § 78p(f)(3)] and Section 28(f)(5)(E) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 [15 U.S.C. § 78bb(f)(5)(E)];
> (2) That relates to the internal affairs or governance of a corporation or other form of business enterprise and that arises under or by virtue of the laws of the state in which the corporation or business enterprise is incorporated or organized; or
> (3) That relates to the rights, duties (including fiduciary duties), and obligations relating to or created by or pursuant to any security, as defined under Section 2(a)(1) of the Securities Act of 1933 [15 U.S.C. § 77b(a)(1)] and the regulations issued under that provision.

[6] When Federal Court Must or May Decline to Exercise Minimal-Diversity Jurisdiction

A federal district court must decline to exercise minimal-diversity jurisdiction if two thirds or more of the members of all proposed plaintiff classes in the aggregate, and the primary defendants, are citizens of the state in which the action was originally filed [28 U.S.C. § 1332(d)(4)(B); see Serrano v. 180 Connect, Inc. (9th Cir. 2007) 478 F.3d 1018, 1021-1024 (party seeking remand to state court has burden of proving applicability of "home-state controversy" exception to minimal-diversity jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1332(d)(4)(B))]. The court must also decline to exercise minimal-diversity jurisdiction if [28 U.S.C. § 1332(d)(4)(A); see Serrano v. 180 Connect, Inc. (9th Cir. 2007) 478 F.3d 1018, 1021-1024 (party seeking remand to state court has burden of proving applicability of "local controversy" exception to minimal-diversity jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1332(d)(4)(A))]:

> (1) More than two-thirds of the members of all proposed plaintiff classes in the aggregate are citizens of the state in which the action was originally filed;
> (2) At least one defendant from whom significant relief is sought and whose alleged conduct forms a significant basis for the claims asserted by the proposed plaintiff class is a citizen of the state in which the action was originally filed;

(3) Principal injuries resulting from the alleged conduct or any related conduct of each defendant were incurred in the state in which the action was originally filed; and

(4) During the three years preceding the filing of the class action, no other class action has been filed asserting the same or similar factual allegations against any of the defendants on behalf of the same or other persons.

In this context, it is not clear from the text of CAFA whether a "primary" defendant [see 28 U.S.C. § 1332(d)(4)(B)] is the same as a defendant "fromwhom significant relief is sought" and "whose alleged conduct forms a significant basis for the claims asserted by the proposed plaintiff class" [see 28 U.S.C. § 1332(d)(4)(A)].

A federal district court has discretion, in the interests of justice and looking at the totality of the circumstances, to decline to exercise minimal-diversity jurisdiction if more than a third but less than two thirds of the members of all proposed plaintiff classes in the aggregate, and the primary defendants, are citizens of the state in which the action was originally filed [28 U.S.C. § 1332(d)(3)]. In deciding whether to decline to exercise jurisdiction, the court must consider whether [28 U.S.C. § 1332(d)(3)]:

(1) The claims asserted involve matters of national or interstate interest;

(2) The claims asserted will be governed by the laws of the state in which the action was originally filed or by the laws of other states;

(3) The class action has been pleaded in a manner that seeks to avoid federal jurisdiction;

(4) The action was brought in a forum with a distinct nexus with the class members, the alleged harm, or the defendants;

(5) The number of citizens of the state in which the action was originally filed in all proposed plaintiff classes in the aggregate is substantially larger than the number of citizens from any other state, and the citizenship of the other members of the proposed class is dispersed among a substantial number of states; and

(6) During the three years preceding the filing of the class action, one or more other class actions asserting the same or similar claims on behalf of the same or other persons have been filed.

In ascertaining whether the one-third or two-thirds threshold is met, the court will count the number of class members, without regard to the amount of damages claimed by each class member [see 28 U.S.C. § 1332(d)(3), (4)].

[7] Federal Appellate Review of Remand Orders

If a removed class action is remanded to state court, the general prohibition against appellate review of remand orders [see 28 U.S.C. § 1447(d)] does not apply. Thus, the federal court of appeals has discretion to hear an appeal from the grant or denial of a remand order if an application is made to the court of appeals not more than seven days after the entry of the order [28 U.S.C. § 1453(c)(1); Amalgamated Transit Union Local 1309 v. Laidlaw Transit Servs., Inc. (9th Cir. 2006) 435 F.3d 1140, 1145-1146 (although 28 U.S.C. § 1453(c)(1) literally requires application for permission to appeal "not less than 7 days after entry" of remand order, only reasonable interpretation of statute is that it requires that application be filed "not more than" 7 court days after entry of remand order); but see Amalgamated Transit Union Local 1309 v. Laidlaw Transit Servs., Inc. (9th Cir. 2006) 448 F.3d 1092, 1094-1100 (Bybee, J., dissenting from denial of rehearing en banc) (although illogical, "not less than 7 days" language of 28U.S.C. § 1453(c)(1) is not absurd and should be applied as written)].

If the court accepts the appeal, it is ordinarily required to complete its review and enter judgment within 60 days after the date of the order granting leave to appeal [28 U.S.C. § 1453(c)(2) (requiring court of appeals to render judgment no later than 60 days after the "appeal was filed"); see Amalgamated Transit Union Local 1309 v. Laidlaw Transit Servs., Inc. (9th Cir. 2006) 435 F.3d 1140, 1144-1145 (petition for permission to appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 1453(c) is subject to Fed. R. App. P. 5(d)(2), which provides that entry of order granting permission to appeal serves as filing of appeal for all timing issues)]. The court may extend the 60-day period for an additional 10 days if good cause is shown and the extension is in the interests of justice, or for any additional period if all parties agree to the extension [28 U.S.C. § 1453(c)(3)]. If the court of appeals fails to enter a final judgment on the appeal within the 60 days, plus any extensions, the appeal will be deemed denied [28 U.S.C. § 1453(c)(4)].

[8] Consumer Protection in Federal Court

CAFA includes the Consumer Class Action Bill of Rights and Improved Procedures for Interstate Class Actions [see 28 U.S.C. §§ 1711-1715]. This part of CAFA, which applies to class actions filed in or removed to federal district court [see 28 U.S.C. § 1711(2)], contains special requirements for attorney's fees and court approval of "coupon settlements," in which the class recovery consists of an award of coupons to class members [28 U.S.C. § 1712], as well as other provisions designed to protect individual class members when a class action is settled. For example, if a proposed settlement would obligate any class member to pay sums to class counsel that would result in a net loss to the class member, the federal court may approve the settlement only if the court makes a written finding that nonmonetary benefits to the class member substantially outweigh the monetary loss [28 U.S.C. § 1713]. Also, the federal court lacks authority to approve any proposed settlement that provides for the payment of greater sums to some class members than to others solely on the basis that the class members to whom the greater sums are to be paid are located in closer geographic proximity to the court [28 U.S.C. § 1714]. CAFA imposes special notice requirements for the settlement of class actions. Not later than 10 days after a proposed settlement of a class action is filed in federal district court, each defendant that is participating in the proposed settlement must serve notice of the proposed settlement on the attorney general or other appropriate state official of each state in which a class member resides, and on the Attorney General of the United States or other appropriate federal official [28 U.S.C. § 1715(b), (c); see 28 U.S.C. § 1715(a) ("appropriate officials" defined)].

The foregoing provisions of the Consumer Class Action Bill of Rights and Improved Procedures for Interstate Class Actions apply to any "proposed settlement," which is defined as an agreement regarding a class action that is subject to federal-court approval and that, if approved, would be binding on some or all class members [28 U.S.C. § 1711(6)]. Therefore, because court approval of a settlement is required only after class certification [Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(e)], these requirements are inapplicable to pre-certification settlements.

A MOTION TO CERTIFY THE CLASS IS PROPER BECAUSE SUCH A MOTION MAY BE MADE AS SOON AS PRACTICABLE AFTER THE COMMENCEMENT OF AN ACTION BROUGHT AS A CLASS ACTION.

A. Class Actions Authorized. When the question is one of common or general interest, of many persons, or when the parties are numerous and it is impracticable to bring them all before the court, one or more may sue or defend for the benefit of all (Code Civ. Proc. § 382).

B. Propriety of Class Action Should Be Determined at Early Stage. A motion for class certification should be filed when practicable (Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.764(b)), and the propriety of permitting the action to proceed as a class action should be decided at an early stage of the proceedings (Danzig v. Jack Grynberg & Associates (1984) 161 Cal. App. 3d 1128, 1136, 208 Cal. Rptr. 336 , cert. denied, 474 U.S. 819, 106 S. Ct. 67, 88 L. Ed. 2d 55 (1985)) . In its discretion, the court may establish a deadline for the filing of the motion, as part of a case conference or as part of other case management proceedings (Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.764(b); see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 3.762, 3.763). Any such deadline must take into account discovery proceedings that may be necessary to the filing of the motion (Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.764(b); see Stern v. Superior Court (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 223, 232-233, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 275 (each party must have opportunity to conduct discovery on class action issues before filing documents to support or oppose class action certification motion)).

This form may be submitted in support of a motion to certify an action as a proper class action or to determine the class issues in a class action. The form is a general one that sets out the authority supporting the procedure for determining class issues. The motion to certify is sometimes referred to as a motion for an order determining class issues.

Counsel should attach to this general form points and authorities supporting the existence of the requirements for maintaining a proper class action [see §§ 41.36 -41.51]. Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of motion for an order determining class issues, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 120, Class Actions (Matthew Bender).

[c] Opposing Memorandum

The memorandum set out in § 41.31 may in an appropriate case be modified for use in opposing a motion to certify the class action supported by this memorandum.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Propriety of Class Action Should Be Determined at Early Stage

In Danzig v. Jack Grynberg & Associates (1984) 161 Cal. App. 3d 1128, 208 Cal. Rptr. 336 , cert. denied, 474 U.S. 819, 106 S. Ct. 67, 88 L. Ed. 2d 55 (1985) , the defendant made a public offering of limited partnership interests in a business in which he was the sole general partner. The purpose was to explore for oil and gas drilling prospects on oil and gas leases held either by the defendant or his wife. After an active solicitation program, consisting of an often-amended writtenprospectus, 55 persons became limited partner investors. The plaintiffs, limited partners, brought an action based on alleged violations of the partnership agreement. The action was certified as a class action. At the pretrial conference the plaintiffs were permitted to amend their complaint to seek rescission and restitution on an alternative theory. The defendant's demurrer was overruled, and a trial was held on the issues as framed in the amended complaint. The trial court found that fraudulent misrepresentations and nondisclosures were intentionally and willfully made to induce the plaintiff class to subscribe and contribute to partnership interests. The trial court entered judgment for the plaintiff class, and the defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The defendant argued that once the complaint was amended, changing its focus from enforcement of the partnership agreement to avoidance based on allegations of fraud, the original class certification was vitiated and a class judgment was improper. The court disagreed and found that the defendant's failure to move timely to decertify the class after the complaint had been amended constituted a waiver of any objections to the certification. The proper time to challenge the procedural propriety of a class action is before proceedings have been undertaken on the merits; the propriety of a class action must be decided at the earliest possible stage (161 Cal. App. 3d 1128, 1136) .

In Stern v. Superior Court (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 223, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 275 , the plaintiffs sued an accounting firm and its members, alleging that one of the defendants, an employee of the firm, performed accounting services for the plaintiffs and other consumers while he was unlicensed. The complaint contained causes of action for violation of the California Consumers Legal Remedies Act (see Civ. Code § 1750 et seq.), unlawful and fraudulent business practices (see Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq.), and misrepresentation. These claims were asserted on behalf of the class of consumers who had used the unlicensed accountant's services during the three-plus years that he was unlicensed. At the initial status conference, the trial court observed that the action had not been certified as a class action. The plaintiffs' attorney conceded it was not certified. Then, without giving the plaintiffs notice or an opportunity to present evidence, the trial court found that the matter was not a class action and ordered the matter reclassified as a limited civil case because the plaintiffs had not shown that on their individual claims they could recover more than the $25,000 limit for limited civil cases (see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 85, 403.040(a)).

The court of appeal held that the trial court abused its discretion in deciding the case was not a class action without giving the parties notice, discovery, or an opportunity to brief issues and present evidence (105 Cal. App. 4th 223, 232-233) . The court explained that whether an action may proceed as a class action is customarily decided after a noticed hearing. This is true whether the issue arises on a motion by plaintiff, on a motion to dismiss class action allegations by a party opposing the class, or on the court's own motion. Due process requires that an order concerning class certification not be made without a full opportunity for the parties to brief issues and present evidence. In this case, one of the causes of action was asserted under the Consumers Legal Remedies Act (Civ. Code § 1750 et seq.), which requires at least 10 days' notice before a hearing on a class-certification motion (Civ. Code § 1781(c)) (105 Cal. App. 4th 223, 232) .

The appellate court also emphasized that each party must have an opportunity to conduct discovery on class-action issues before filing documents to support or oppose a class-certification motion, so the trial court can realistically determine if common questions are sufficiently pervasive to permit adjudication in a class action. In this case, the trial court had ruled that the action was not a class action just nine days after the second amended complaint was filed, a period that was not adequate for discovery on class-certification issues (105 Cal. App. 4th 223, 232-233) .

THE MOTION IS PROPER BECAUSE THE PROPRIETY OF A CLASS ACTION SHOULD BE DETERMINED AS SOON AS PRACTICABLE, AND ANY PARTY MAY BRING A MOTION TO DETERMINE CLASS ISSUES.

A. Propriety of Class Action Should Be Determined at Early Stage. [See § 41.30, Paragraph B.]

B. Defendant May Move for Order Determining Propriety of Class Action. Although the California Rules of Court do not expressly authorize motions to declare class actions inappropriate, any party, including the defendant, may file a motion to certify or decertify a class, to determine the existence of subclasses, or to amend or modify a class certification order (Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.764(a); Stern v. Superior Court (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 223, 232, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 275). Further, a determination of whether a class action is appropriate may be made on the court's own motion (San Jose v. Superior Court (1974) 12 Cal. 3d 447, 453, 115 Cal. Rptr. 797, 525 P.2d 701).

C. Plaintiff's Required Showing on Motion to Certify. On a motion to certify class status of an action, it is the plaintiff's burden to establish that the requisites for continuation of the litigation in that format are in fact present. Satisfaction of this burden requires that the plaintiff establish more than a reasonable possibility that class action treatment is appropriate (Hamwi v. Citinational-Buckeye Inv. Co. (1977) 72 Cal. App. 3d 462, 471, 140 Cal. Rptr. 215).

D. Plaintiff's Burden on Demurrer Distinguished. When a class action complaint is tested on demurrer, plaintiff must establish only a reasonable possibility that class action treatment is appropriate. When the court determines the issue of class propriety at a hearing on an appropriate motion at which evidence is presented, however, the issue of community of interest is determined on the merits, and the plaintiff must establish the community as a matter of fact (Hamwi v. Citinational-Buckeye Inv. Co. (1977) 72 Cal. App. 3d 462, 471-472, 140 Cal. Rptr. 215).

These points and authorities may be used in support of a motion for an order declaring an action inappropriate as a class action. The form is a general one that sets out the authority supporting the procedure for determining class issues on the motion of the defendant in a class action.

With appropriate modification, This form may be submitted in opposition to a motion to certify an action as a proper class action supported by the points and authorities set out in § 41.30. Counsel should attach to this general form points and authorities opposing the existence of requisites for maintaining a proper class action [see §§ 41.53 -41.59]. Counsel should also insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

The memorandum set out in § 41.30 may in an appropriate case be modified for use in opposing a motion for an order declaring an action inappropriate as a class action supported by this memorandum.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defendant May Move for Order Determining Propriety of Class Action

The facts and procedural background of Stern v. Superior Court (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 223, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 275 , are discussed in § 41.30[3][a]. In making the point that class certification is customarily decided after a noticed hearing, the court of appeal recognized that a motion to consider the appropriateness of a class action may be made by a defendant (105 Cal. App. 4th 223, 232) .

San Jose v. Superior Court (1974) 12 Cal. 3d 447, 115 Cal. Rptr. 797, 525 P.2d 701 , involved an action for nuisance and inverse condemnation on behalf of all real property owners situated in the flight pattern of San Jose Municipal Airport. Following discovery, defendant moved the trial court for an order declaring the action inappropriate as a class action. After affidavits were filed and a hearing held, the court found the action appropriate and ordered notification of class members. Defendant then filed for a writ of mandate, contending that the court had no jurisdiction to certify the class on a motion to declare the action inappropriate as a class action. Defendant also contended that the plaintiffs did not adequately represent the class and had failed to show a sufficient community of interest among the purported class members. The Supreme Court ruled that the trial court had jurisdiction to certify the class but had abused its discretion in doing so because plaintiff had failed to prove the necessary requirements. The Court also noted that the trial court had jurisdiction to determine the propriety of a class action on the motion of the plaintiff or defendant, or on the court's own motion (12 Cal. 3d 447, 453) .

[b] Plaintiff's Required Showing on Motion to Certify

Hamwi v. Citinational-Buckeye Inv. Co. (1977) 72 Cal. App. 3d 462, 140 Cal. Rptr. 215 , was a class action on behalf of past and present tenants of defendant for breaches of a lease and fiduciary duty. After discovery, plaintiffs filed a notice of motion for determination of class issues pursuant to the Class Action Manual of the Los Angeles Superior Court. The trial court denied plaintiffs' motion and dismissed the action without prejudice as to the unnamed members of the class. Plaintiffs then appealed to the court of appeal.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment of dismissal, holding that the trial court had properly determined that plaintiffs had failed to sustain their burden of establishing the community of interest necessary to maintain the litigation as a class action. Relying on San Jose v. Superior Court (1974) 12 Cal. 3d 447, 460, 115 Cal. Rptr. 797, 525 P.2d 701 (discussed in § 41.31[3][a]), and Vasquez v. Superior Court (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 800, 813, 94 Cal. Rptr. 796, 484 P.2d 964 , the court noted that on a motion to certify class status of an action, it is the plaintiff's burden to establish that the requisites for continuation of the litigation in that format are in fact present. Furthermore, to satisfy this burden, the plaintiff must establish more than a reasonable possibility that class-action treatment is appropriate (72 Cal. App. 3d 462, 471) .

[c] Plaintiff's Burden on Demurrer Distinguished

The facts and procedural background of Hamwi v. Citinational-Buckeye Inv. Co. (1977) 72 Cal. App. 3d 462, 140 Cal. Rptr. 215 , are discussed in § 41.31[3][b]. The court in Hamwi, citing Vasquez v. Superior Court (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 800, 813, 94 Cal. Rptr. 796, 484 P.2d 964 , distinguished the plaintiff's burden on a motion to certify from the required showing on defendant's demurrer. The court stated that when a class action complaint is tested on demurrer, plaintiff must establish only a reasonable possibility that class action treatment is appropriate. When the court determines the issue of class propriety at a hearing on an appropriate motion at which evidence is presented, however, the issue of community of interest is determined on the merits, and the plaintiff must establish the community as a matter of fact (72 Cal. App. 3d 462, 471-472) .

The memorandum set out in § 41.33 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a motion to decertify the class supported by Optional Paragraph C. of this memorandum.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Certification Order May Be Altered

Occidental Land, Inc. v. Superior Court (1976) 18 Cal. 3d 355, 134 Cal. Rptr. 388, 556 P.2d 750 , was a class action by a group of subdivision homeowners against the developer for fraudulently misrepresenting the cost and extent of maintenance of the project. Subsequent to discovery following the court's certification of the class, defendant moved for an order decertifying the class. The motion was denied and defendant then sought a writ of mandate to overturn the order refusing to decertify the class.

Based on the facts of the case, the Supreme Court ruled that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to decertify the action as a class action (18 Cal. 3d 355, 364) . The Court recognized, however, that the procedure followed by the defendant seeking decertification was authorized by the decision in Vasquez v. Superior Court (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 800, 821, 94 Cal. Rptr. 796, 484 P.2d 964 . Relying on Vasquez and Fed. R. Civ. P., Rule 23(c)(1), the Court reasoned that its decisions clearly contemplated the possibility of successive motions concerning certification. The court noted with its approval that the defendant had conducted discovery proceedings in order to support a motion to decertify the action and then filed its motion based on evidence not before the court in the prior proceeding (18 Cal. 3d 355, 360) .

[b] Decertification Proper After Decision on Merits When Changed Circumstances

Grogan-Beall v. Ferdinand Roten Galleries, Inc. (1982) 133 Cal. App. 3d 969, 184 Cal. Rptr. 411 , was a class action seeking damages for defendants' failure to comply with the disclosure-disclaimer provisions of the California Sale of Fine Prints Act (Civ. Code §§ 1740-1745). The class was conditionally certified over defendants' objections. After the jury returned a special verdict finding that defendants had nonwillfully violated the Act, the court granted defendants' motion to decertify the class, which had been made prior to submission of the case to the jury. The individual plaintiff then filed an appeal from the order decertifying the class.

The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's order decertifying the conditional class of plaintiffs (133 Cal. App. 3d 969, 979) . Before addressing the question of the timing of the decertification order, the court concluded that it was not reasonably possible to establish the necessary community of interest among the class members because each claimant would be required to litigate a number of substantial fact questions peculiar to his or her right of recovery (133 Cal. App. 3d 969, 976) . Second, distinguishing the decision in Green v. Obledo (1981) 29 Cal. 3d 126, 146, 172 Cal. Rptr. 206, 624 P.2d 256 (discussed in § 41.33[3][a]), the court ruled that the trial court's decertification order was proper. The court noted that while the Supreme Court in Green held that generally a motion to decertify must be determined before the decision on the merits, it also declined to make this an absolute rule. The court of appeal then stated that the trial court retains jurisdiction to decertify a class even after a decision on the merits, providing that there has been a showing of changed circumstances or newly available evidence making continued class action treatment improper (133 Cal. App. 3d 969, 977) .

Green was also distinguished factually. The court in Grogan-Beall noted that defendants in Green failed to contest plaintiffs' original motion for class certification and did not move for decertification until after a determination against them on the merits. The court pointed out that, in sharp contrast, defendants in Grogan-Beall both objected to the original certification and moved to decertify prior to submission of the case to the jury. In addition, the court stated that the trial court's original certification order was only conditional. Finally, the court noted that defendants had renewed their opposition to certification prior to submission of the case to the jury, arguing that the evidence at trial showed that uncommon questions of fact were central to a determination of defendants' liability (133 Cal. App. 3d 969, 977) .

THE MOTION TO DECERTIFY THIS ACTION AS A CLASS ACTION SHOULD NOT BE GRANTED BECAUSE THE COURT MAY NOT ORDER DECERTIFICATION OF THE CLASS AFTER ITS DECISION ON THE MERITS UNLESS CHANGED CIRCUMSTANCES MAKE CONTINUED CLASS ACTION TREATMENT IMPROPER.

A. Procedural Class Issues Resolved Before Merits. California appellate courts have held that procedural class action issues, including the composition of the class, must ordinarily be resolved before a decision on the merits is reached (*Green v. [a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to a motion for an order decertifying a class action when the decertification motion has been filed after the court has determined the substantive merits or a substantive issue of an action. For example, this memorandum may be filed in opposition to a motion to decertify that is filed after the court has denied or granted a motion for summary adjudication of an issue.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Procedural Class Issues Resolved Before Merits

Green v. Obledo (1981) 29 Cal. 3d 126, 172 Cal. Rptr. 206, 624 P.2d 256 , was an action by recipients of benefits under the program for aid to families with dependent children (AFDC), seeking to invalidate a state regulation because of conflict with federal and state law. On plaintiff's motions for class certification and summary judgment, the court ordered the class certified and declared the regulation invalid. On defendant's subsequent motion to decertify the class, the court altered its original certification order and limited the class to present and future AFDC recipients, thereby denying retroactive relief. Plaintiffs then filed an appeal.

The Supreme Court held that the trial court had erred in partially decertifying the class after the court had granted plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment (29 Cal. 3d 126, 148-149) . The Court noted that the California class action statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 382) is silent on the question of when a court may order a class to be certified or decertified. Fed. R. Civ. P., Rule 23(c)(1), provides, however, that class issues shouldbe determined as soon as practicable after commencement of an action and, further, that a court's order determining the issues may be altered or amended before the decision on the merits. Citing Home Sav. & Loan Assn. v. Superior Court (1976) 54 Cal. App. 3d 208, 214, 126 Cal. Rptr. 511 and Home Sav. & Loan Assn. v. Superior Court (1974) 42 Cal. App. 3d 1006, 1015, 117 Cal. Rptr. 485 (discussed in § 41.64[3][a]), the Court stated that California courts have given effect to the phrase "before the decision on the merits" by holding that class action issues, including the composition of the class, must ordinarily be resolved before a decision on the merits is reached. The Court noted that although this rule had previously been applied only for the benefit of defendants, there appeared to be no reason prohibiting application at the request of plaintiffs (29 Cal. 3d 126, 146) .

[b] Defendant Must Show Changed Circumstances

The facts and procedural background of Green v. Obledo (1981) 29 Cal. 3d 126, 172 Cal. Rptr. 206, 624 P.2d 256 , are discussed in § 41.33[3][a]. In Green, the Supreme Court ruled that, based on the facts of the case, the defendants could not escape application of the general rule that decertification must occur, if at all, prior to a decision on the merits (29 Cal. 3d 126, 148) . The Court refused, however, to fashion an iron-clad standard removing all jurisdiction from a trial court to decertify a class or part thereof after a decision on the merits. Citing Vasquez v. Superior Court (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 800, 821, 94 Cal. Rptr. 796, 484 P.2d 964 , the Court in Green noted that trial courts should retain some measure of flexibility in handling a class action. Relying on federal court decisions, the Court concluded that after a decision on the merits, a class should be decertified only when it is clear that there are changed circumstances making continued class action treatment improper (29 Cal. 3d 126, 148) .

[c] Waiver of Right to Seek Decertification

The facts and procedural background of Green v. Obledo (1981) 29 Cal. 3d 126, 172 Cal. Rptr. 206, 624 P.2d 256 , are discussed in § 41.33[3][a]. In Green, the Supreme Court ruled that the trial court had erred in partially decertifying the class after it had granted plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment, a decision on the merits. The Court noted that by failing to contest plaintiffs' motion for class certification when it was filed and by waiting until after a determination on the merits before acting, the defendants had in effect waived any right to move for decertification. The court reasoned that defendants' arguments in support of their motion for decertification had not been based on changed circumstances. Furthermore, defendants had not produced new evidence that became available to them only after the merits had been decided (29 Cal. 3d 126, 148) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Procedural Class Issues Resolved Before Merits

In Danzig v. Jack Grynberg & Associates (1984) 161 Cal. App. 3d 1128, 208 Cal. Rptr. 336 , defendant made a public offering of limited partnership interests in a business in which he was the sole general partner. The purpose was to explore for oil and gas drilling prospects on oil and gas leases held either by defendant or his wife. After an active solicitation program, consisting of an often amended written prospectus, 55 persons became limited partner investors. Plaintiffs, limited partners, brought an action based on alleged violations of the partnership agreement. The action was certified as a class action. At the pretrial conference plaintiffs were permitted to amend their complaint to seek rescission and restitution on an alternative theory. Defendant's demurrer was overruled, and the trial was held on the issues as framed in the amended complaint. The trial court found that fraudulent misrepresentations and nondisclosures were intentionally and willfully made to induce plaintiff class to subscribe and contribute to partnership interests. The trial court judgment was for plaintiff class, and defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. Defendant argued that once the complaint was amended changing its focus from enforcement of the partnership agreement to avoidance based on allegation of fraud, the original class certification was vitiated and a class judgment was improper. The court disagreed and found that defendant's failure to move timely to decertify the class certification after the complaint had been amended constituted a waiver of any objections to that certification. The proper time to challenge the procedural propriety of a class action is before proceedings have been undertaken on the merits; judicial review, if necessary, is available by extraordinary writ. The propriety of a class action must be decided at the earliest possible stages. Once the initial determination has been made, a motion to decertify the class action may be used whenever changed circumstances render class status no longer appropriate. As to the issue of waiver, the court stated that defendant neither registered a formal objection to the initial class certification nor moved to decertify the class after the amendment to the complaint. Defendant challenged the certification in his objections to the proposed findings of fact, claiming that it was timely since formal judgment had not been entered. The court disagreed, explaining that the purpose of pretrial determination of class issues is to avoid passive acquiescence to class certification awaiting results of the trial, and if unfavorable, then belatedly attacking the class certification order as improper. The failure to move timely to decertify or recertify the class effectively waived any objections to the class certification based on a claim of changed circumstances (161 Cal. App. 3d 1128, 1136-1137) .

THIS DEMURRER TO THE COMPLAINT SHOULD BE SUSTAINED BECAUSE PLAINTIFF HAS FAILED TO ALLEGE FACTS SUFFICIENT TO ESTABLISH A REASONABLE POSSIBILITY THAT CLASS ACTION TREATMENT IS APPROPRIATE.

A. Objection by Demurrer. The party against whom a complaint has been filed may object to it by demurrer on the ground that it fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action when the ground for objection appears on the face of the complaint or from any matter of which the court must or may take judicial notice (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 430.10(e), 430.30(a)).

B. Challenging Class Action by Demurrer. The complaint must contain sufficient allegations of class interest before a hearing may be held to offer proof of the propriety of a class action. When sufficient allegations are absent, the pleading is vulnerable to a general demurrer (Bartlett v. Hawaiian Village, Inc. (1978) 87 Cal. App. 3d 435, 437-438, 151 Cal. Rptr. 392).

C. Insufficient Allegations of Class Interest. When the complaint on its face fails to contain sufficient allegations of fact toestablish a class interest, the class issue may be properly disposed of by demurrer (Rose v. Medtronics, Inc. (1980) 107 Cal. App. 3d 150, 154, 166 Cal. Rptr. 16).

D. Standard for Evaluating Class Action on Demurrer. When the class action complaint is tested on demurrer, the plaintiff must establish a reasonable possibility that class action treatment is appropriate (Vasquez v. Superior Court (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 800, 813, 94 Cal. Rptr. 796, 484 P.2d 964 ; Newell v. State Farm Gen. Inc. Co. (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 1094, 1101-1106, 13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 343 ; *Hamwi v. [a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be used in support of a defendant's demurrer on the ground that no cause of action is stated because plaintiff's allegations are insufficient to establish the requisites for a class action. The form is a general one that sets out the authority supporting the use of a demurrer to challenge the propriety of a purported class action. Counsel should attach additional points and authorities opposing the existence of the requisites for maintaining a proper class action [see §§ 41.53 -41.59].

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities set out in § 41.35 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a demurrer supported by this memorandum.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Challenging Class Action by Demurrer

Bartlett v. Hawaiian Village, Inc. (1978) 87 Cal. App. 3d 435, 151 Cal. Rptr. 392 , was an action for damages and injunctive relief by a group of homosexual men on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated for unlawful exclusion from public baths in violation of the Unruh Civil Rights Act (Civ. Code §§ 51-52). The trial court sustained a general demurrer without further leave to amend for failure to sufficiently plead an ascertainable class or community of interest and entered a judgment of dismissal as to the class allegations. Plaintiffs then filed their appeal.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment of dismissal and dismissed the appeal. The court ruled that the complaint must contain sufficient allegations of class interest before a hearing may be held to offer proof of the propriety of a class action. When the sufficient allegations are absent, the pleading is vulnerable to a general demurrer (87 Cal. App. 3d 435, 437-438) . The court rejected the plaintiffs' contention that it was error to determine the propriety of the class action during the pleading stage, thus denying them the chance to develop facts at a later evidentiary hearing (87 Cal. App. 3d 435, 437) .

[b] Insufficient Allegations of Class Interest

Rose v. Medtronics, Inc. (1980) 107 Cal. App. 3d 150, 166 Cal. Rptr. 16 , was a class action for damages from personal injuries allegedly caused by the defective manufacture of a cardiac pacemaker. The trial court sustained a demurrer to the amended complaint without leave to amend, concluding that individual issues would predominate over the common issues. Plaintiff then filed his appeal, contending that the trial court erred procedurally in making its determination at the pleading stage, thereby denying an opportunity to establish the propriety of the class action at an evidentiary hearing.

The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's dismissal of the class action, holding that the factual questions and legal issues were preponderantly diverse rather than common (107 Cal. App. 3d 150, 157) . The court noted that when there is a reasonable possibility that the plaintiff can establish a community of interest among potential claimants, the preferred procedural course is to defer decision on the propriety of the class action until an evidentiary hearing has been held on the appropriateness of class litigation. Citing Bartlett v. Hawaiian Village, Inc. (1978) 87 Cal. App. 3d 435, 437-438, 151 Cal. Rptr. 392 (discussed in § 41.34[3][a]), the court stated, however, that when the complaint on its face fails to contain sufficient allegations of fact to establish a class interest, the class issue may be properly disposed of by demurrer (107 Cal. App. 3d 150, 154) .

[c] Standard for Evaluating Class Action on Demurrer

Vasquez v. Superior Court (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 800, 94 Cal. Rptr. 796, 484 P.2d 964 , was an action by a group of consumers who had purchased frozen food and freezers under installment contracts. The consumers sought rescission of the contracts, for fraudulent misrepresentation on behalf of themselves and others similarly situated, against both the seller and the finance company to which the installment contracts had been assigned. Defendants demurred to the complaint on the ground that it did not state a cause of action, and the demurrers were sustained without leave to amend insofar as the complaint alleged a class action for fraud. Plaintiffs then sought a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to vacate its order sustaining the demurrers and to allow plaintiffs to try the cause of action for fraud as a class action. In granting the writ, the Supreme Court noted that under Daar v. Yellow Cab Co. (1967) 67 Cal. 2d 695, 63 Cal. Rptr. 724, 433 P.2d 732 (discussed in § 41.36[3][a]), plaintiff must establish an ascertainable class and a well-defined community of interest in the questions of law and fact in order to sustain a class action. The Court ruled that for purposes of determining whether demurrers should be overruled, it is sufficient that there is a reasonable possibility that plaintiffs can establish a prima facie community of interest among the class members (4 Cal. 3d 800, 813) .

The plaintiffs in Newell v. State Farm Gen. Inc. Co. (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 1094, 13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 343 , were homeowners who were insured by the defendant insurance companies at the time of an earthquake. The complaint alleged that the named plaintiffs and members of the class they proposed to represent were wrongfully denied policy benefits for damage caused to their homes by the earthquake. Asserting causes of action for declaratory relief, breach of contract, breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and unfair competition, the plaintiffs sought compensatory and punitive damages, injunctive relief, attorney's fees, and prejudgment interest and costs. The defendants filed a demurrer to the class-action allegations, and the trial court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend.

The court of appeal affirmed, finding that the plaintiffs could not possibly satisfy the commonality or superiority requirements for class certification, because the ability of each member of the putative class to recover clearly depended on separate set of unique facts (118 Cal. App. 4th 1094, 1102-1106) . Moreover, the trial court had not abused its discretion in denying leave to amend, because the plaintiffs had suggested no additional facts they could allege to satisfy the commonality and superiority requirements for class certification (118 Cal. App. 4th 1094, 1106) .

In affirming the trial court's decision, the court of appeal noted that class-certification issues properly and routinely are decided on demurrer.The court explained that if class certification is challenged by demurrer, the trial court must determine whether there is a reasonable possibility that the plaintiffs can plead a prima facie community of interest among class members. The ultimate question is whether, given an ascertainable class, the issues that may be jointly tried, compared with those requiring separate adjudication, are so numerous or substantial that the maintenance of a class action would be advantageous to the judicial process and to the litigants. If the ability of each member of the class to recover clearly depends on individualized proof, then all of the policy considerations that justify class actions equally compel the dismissal of such an inappropriate action at the pleading stage (118 Cal. App. 4th 1094, 1101, 1106) .

The facts and procedural background of Hamwi v. Citinational-Buckeye Inv. Co. (1977) 72 Cal. App. 3d 462, 140 Cal. Rptr. 215 , are discussed in § 41.31[3][b]. The court stated that when a class action complaint is tested on demurrer, plaintiff must establish only a reasonable possibility that class action treatment is appropriate. When the court determines the issue of class propriety at a hearing on an appropriate motion at which evidence is presented, however, the issue of community of interest is determined on the merits, and the plaintiff must establish the community as a matter of fact (72 Cal. App. 3d 462, 471-472) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Insufficient Allegations of Class Interest

In Brown v. Regents of University of California (1984) 151 Cal. App. 3d 982, 198 Cal. Rptr. 916 , an order sustaining a demurrer to class-action allegations in a complaint for negligent and intentional factual concealment and misrepresentation, and for failure to provide adequate coronary care, was upheld by the court of appeal. Beyond the questions common to all the allegations, the court found that there were many difficult factual questions which could only be resolved by individual proof. Problems in common proof of reliance, complexity of damages, and the differing extent of duty owed to each individual all combined to indicate that individual issues would substantially predominate over common questions. The court found that it was not reasonably possible that plaintiffs would be able to establish a sufficient community of interest to warrant a class action (151 Cal. App. 3d 982, 989-991) .

§ 41.34A Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)] on Ground of Failure to State Cause of Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Class Action Is Barred by Prior Judgment Denying Class Certification

[1] FORM Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)] on Ground of Failure to State Cause of Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Class Action Is Barred by Prior Judgment Denying Class Certification

[The following may be combined with a general form of memorandum supporting defendant's demurrer on the ground that class action treatment is not appropriate (see § 41.34). It may also be submitted in opposition to a motion to certify a, action for class treatment or in support of a motion for an order declaring the action inappropriate for class treatment (see § 41.31)].

THIS ACTION MAY NOT PROCEED AS A CLASS ACTION BECAUSE THE PLAINTIFFS ARE BOUND BY A PREVIOUS JUDGMENT DENYING CLASS CERTIFICATION.

Judgment Denying Class Certification May Have Issue-Preclusive Effect on Subsequent Putative Class Action. A judgment denying class certification in one action will preclude relitigation of the class-certification issue in a subsequent action brought by a different plaintiff, if (1) the issue is identical to the one decided in the earlier case, (2) the issue was actually litigated in the earlier case, (3) the issue was necessarily decided in the earlier case, (4) the earlier decision is final and was rendered on the merits, and (5) the plaintiff in the current was in privity with or virtually represented by the plaintiff in the earlier case (Alvarez v. May Dept. Stores Co. (2006) 143 Cal. App. 4th 1223, 1233-1239, 49 Cal. Rptr. 3d 892).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of a contention that class certification should be denied because the question of class certification was already decided in another case and that relitigation of that question is barred by issue preclusion (also known as collateral estoppel).

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Counsel should, for example, identify the previous case so that the present court can take judicial notice of the earlier decision [see Evid. Code § 451(a)], and should show how the circumstances of the previous case establish that the present plaintiff is in privity with, or was virtually represented by, a party in the previous case concerning the class-certification issue [see Alvarez v. May Dept. Stores Co. (2006) 143 Cal. App. 4th 1223, 1237-1238, 49 Cal. Rptr. 3d 892] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Judgment Denying Class Certification May Have Issue-Preclusive Effect on Subsequent Putative Class Action

Alvarez v. May Dept. Stores Co. (2006) 143 Cal. App. 4th 1223, 49 Cal. Rptr. 3d 892 , was a putative class action filed by 56 current and former "Area Sales Managers" employed by the defendant. The plaintiffs alleged individual and class claims for failure to pay overtime compensation (see Lab. Code §§ 1194, 1198),conversion, violation of the unfair practices law (Bus. § Prof. Code § 17200 et seq.), and violation of the Labor Code Private Attorneys General Act of 2004 (Lab. Code § 2698 et seq.). Based on the doctrine of issue preclusion (also called collateral estoppel), the trial court sustained, without leave to amend, the defendant's demurrer to the complaint's class action allegations. Specifically, the trial court held that because class certification had been denied for the same class on the same claims in a prior case, the plaintiffs in the present case were precluded from relitigating the question of class certification, even though the prior case had been brought by different named plaintiffs.

The plaintiffs appealed (an order that has the effect of denying class certification is appealable; see Morrissey v. City and County of San Francisco (1977) 75 Cal. App. 3d 903, 907, 142 Cal. Rptr. 527). The plaintiffs contended on appeal that, because class certification had been denied in the prior case, the denial of certification in that case was not binding on putative class members who were not named parties to the prior case.

The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's application of issue preclusion. The court of appeal first noted that the trial court had appropriately resolved the class-certification question on demurrer. It is generally proper at the pleading stage to strike class allegations if the face of the complaint and other matters subject to judicial notice (such as a prior judgment supporting the application of issue preclusion) reveal the invalidity of the class allegations (143 Cal. App. 4th 1223, 1231) .

The appellate court next observed that the definitions of the putative class in the prior case and of the putative class in the present case were substantially identical, as were the class claims in the two cases (143 Cal. App. 4th 1223, 1232) . The court then reviewed the elements of issue preclusion, the doctrine that prevents relitigation of issues previously argued and resolved in a prior proceeding. In order to apply the doctrine, (1) the issue must be identical to that decided in the prior proceeding; (2) the issue must have been actually litigated in the prior proceeding; (3) the issue must have been necessarily decided in the prior proceeding; (4) the decision must have been final and on the merits; and (5) preclusion must be sought against a person who was a party or in privity with a party to the prior proceeding (143 Cal. App. 4th 1223, 1233) .

The court pointed to a Seventh Circuit decision that had applied issue preclusion to bar absent class members from seeking certification of a national class in successive state-court actions, after the certification question had been fully litigated and resolved in federal court. In that case, the Seventh Circuit explained that the earlier federal suit was commenced as a class action, and one vital issue was litigated and resolved on a class-wide basis: whether a national class was tenable. Absent class members were therefore bound by the federal court's decision on that issue, provided that the named representatives and their lawyers furnished adequate representation, which they did in that case (Bridgestone/Firestone, Inc. v. Tires Prods. (7th Cir. 2003) 333 F.3d 763, 769) .

The court of appeal in the present case found the Seventh Circuit's reasoning persuasive. When a prevailing party seeks to enforce a ruling denying class certification against an absent putative class member, the general principles of issue preclusion apply. Those principles ensure that the absent party's interest was adequately represented in the prior proceeding. In other words, if the elements of issue preclusion are satisfied, the fact that the prior judgment did not result in certification of a class does not prevent the judgment from binding absent class members on the issue actually litigated and decided in that prior action (143 Cal. App. 4th 1223, 1236) .

Turning to the specifics of the present case, the court of appeal found that the elements of issue preclusion were satisfied. The court emphasized that the plaintiffs in the prior action were the "virtual representatives" of the plaintiffs in the present case. The interested parties, their claims, and their counsel were the same in both cases. Also, the plaintiffs in the prior action had the same interest as the plaintiffs in the present case and the motive to present the same claim. The plaintiffs in the prior case had a full opportunity to present their case for class certification. Under the circumstances, the present plaintiffs should reasonably have expected to be bound by the prior decision (143 Cal. App. 4th 1223, 1236-1238) .

The court of appeal noted that the application of issue preclusion in this case would not eliminate the plaintiffs' substantive right to pursue their lawsuit; it would only deny them the ability to serve as representatives of other potential claimants (143 Cal. App. 4th 1223, 1233, 1238) .

The court of appeals specifically rejected the plaintiffs' claim that they could not be bound by the prior judgment because a class has not yet been certified, or that notice to potential class members of the prior litigation was necessary before any absent potential class member could be bound by the prior judgment. The court pointed out that there is no statutory mandate or equitable principle that demands that notice of an unsuccessful attempt to certify a class be sent to all putative class members prior to binding a litigant who seeks to certify the same class. Rather, the court concluded that due process is satisfied when an absent class member's interest is adequately represented (143 Cal. App. 4th 1223, 1238-1239) .

A GENERAL DEMURRER TO THIS COMPLAINT ON THE GROUND THAT IT CONTAINS INSUFFICIENT ALLEGATIONS TO ESTABLISH THE REQUISITES OF A CLASS ACTION SHOULD BE OVERRULED BECAUSE THE ALLEGATIONS SHOW A REASONABLE POSSIBILITY THAT CLASS ACTION TREATMENT IS APPROPRIATE.

A. Class Action Should Survive Pleading Stages If Possible. California's judicial policy favors allowing potential class action plaintiffs to have their action measured on its merits. In order to effect this policy, the California Supreme Court has mandated that a class action complaint be allowed to survive the pleading stages of litigation if at all possible (Prince v. CLS Transp., Inc. (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 1320, 1325-1326, 13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 725 ; Becksteadv. Superior Court (1971) 21 Cal. App. 3d 780, 783, 98 Cal. Rptr. 779).

B. Decision on Propriety Deferred Until Evidentiary Hearing. When there is a reasonable possibility that the plaintiff can establish a community of interest among potential claimants, the preferred course is to defer decision on the propriety of the class action until an evidentiary hearing has been held on the appropriateness of class litigation (Vasquez v. Superior Court (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 800, 813, 94 Cal. Rptr. 796, 484 P.2d 964 ; Rose v. Medtronics, Inc. (1980) 107 Cal. App. 3d 150, 154, 166 Cal. Rptr. 16

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be used in opposition to a defendant's demurrer for failure to state a cause of action. The ground of opposition presented is that plaintiff's allegations show a reasonable possibility of establishing the requisites for a class action. The form is a general one that sets out the authority favoring the survival of class action allegations beyond the pleading stage until a hearing on the merits. Counsel should attach additional points and authorities supporting the existence of the requisites for maintaining a proper class action (see §§ 41.36 -41.51). Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

In an appropriate case, this memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a demurrer supported by the points and authorities set out in § 41.34.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Class Action Should Survive Pleading Stages If Possible

Prince v. CLS Transp., Inc. (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 1320, 13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 725 , was a wage-and-hour class action brought by a truck driver on behalf of himself and more than 500 drivers employed by the defendant. The complaint alleged a variety of wage law violations, including the defendant's alleged failure to pay overtime compensation, to pay compensation for all hours worked, to reimburse the drivers for certain expenses, to provide required meal and rest periods, to provide itemized wage statements, and to pay its former employees all wages due at the time of discharge. The defendant demurred, contending that the plaintiff could not establish a well-defined community of interest among the potential class members. It also claimed that class treatment was not a superior method of adjudicating the case because each class member's recovery would depend on highly individualized determinations of actual work performed, waiting time, standby time, overtime compensation, meal and rest periods, gratuities, and expenses incurred in the course and scope of employment. The trial court sustained the defendant's demurrer without leave to amend the class allegations.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that class suitability in this case should not have been determined by demurrer. Citing Beckstead v. Superior Court (1971), 21 Cal. App. 3d 780, 98 Cal. Rptr. 779 (discussed below), the court explained that because the sustaining of a demurrer without leave to amend represents the earliest possible determination of the propriety of class action litigation, it should be looked upon with disfavor. Absent a strong factual showing that negates the possibility of satisfying the requirements for class treatment, all that is normally required for a complaint to survive a demurrer to the propriety of class litigation is that the complaint allege facts that tend to show (1) an ascertainable class of plaintiffs, and (2) questions of law and fact that are common to the class. If the complaint is allowed to survive the demurrer, then the judge may proceed with the suit, deferring the determination of the propriety of class action until a time more appropriate to making the decision. Ordinarily, therefore, only in mass tort actions, or other actions that are equally unsuited to class treatment, should class suitability be determined at the pleading stage. In other cases, including wage-and-hour claims, class suitability should be determined at a later stage (118 Cal. App. 4th 1320, 1325-1326) . Finally, the court of appeal noted that in this case, the plaintiff alleged institutional practices by the defendant that affected all class members in the same manner, so that it appeared that all liability issues could be determined on a class-wide basis. At the pleading stage, no more is required (118 Cal. App. 4th 1320, 1329) .

Beckstead v. Superior Court (1971) 21 Cal. App. 3d 780, 98 Cal. Rptr. 779 , involved a class action seeking declaratory relief and enforcement of contracts. The trial court sustained demurrers to the original complaint without leave to amend and entered a judgment dismissing the class action. Plaintiffs then filed for a writ of mandate in the court of appeal.

The court of appeal granted the writ, holding that plaintiffs had pleaded facts which tend to show both an ascertainable class and questions of law and fact common to the class (21 Cal. App. 3d 780, 784) . Relying on prior appellate court decisions, the court stated that California's judicial policy favors allowing potential class action plaintiffs to have their action measured on its merits. The court noted that in order to effect this policy, the California Supreme Court has mandated that a class action complaint be allowed to survive the pleading stages of litigation if at all possible (21 Cal. App. 3d 780, 783) .

[b] Decision on Propriety Deferred Until Evidentiary Hearing

The facts and procedural background of Vasquez v. Superior Court (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 800, 94 Cal. Rptr. 796, 484 P.2d 964 , are discussed in § 41.34[3][c]. The Supreme Court ruled that for purposes of determining whether or not demurrers should be overruled, it is sufficient that there is a reasonable possibility that plaintiffs can establish a prima facie community of interest among the class members (4 Cal. 3d 800, 813) .

The facts and procedural background of Rose v. Medtronics, Inc. (1980) 107 Cal. App. 3d 150, 166 Cal. Rptr. 16 , are discussed in § 41.34[3][b]. Although the court of appeal held on the facts in Rose that the demurrers had been properly sustained, it noted that when there is a reasonable possibility that the plaintiff in a class action can establish a community of interest among potential claimants, the preferred procedural course is to defer decision on the propriety of the class action until an evidentiary hearing has been held on the appropriateness of class litigation (107 Cal. App. 3d 150, 154) .

§ 41.35A Opposing Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)] on Ground of Failure to State Cause of Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Class Action Is Not Barred by Prior Judgment Denying Class Certification

[1] FORM Opposing Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)] on Ground of Failure to State Cause of Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Class Action Is Not Barred by Prior Judgment Denying Class Certification

[The following may be combined with a general form of memorandum opposing defendant's demurrer on the ground that class action treatment is not appropriate (see § 41.35). It may also be submitted in support of a motion to certify an action for class treatment (see § 41.30).]

THIS ACTION MAY PROCEED AS A CLASS ACTION BECAUSE THE PLAINTIFFS ARE NOT BOUND BY ANY PREVIOUS JUDGMENT DENYING CLASS CERTIFICATION.

Judgment or Order Denying Class Certification Does Not Have Issue-Preclusive Effect in Subsequent Action That Does Not Present Identical Class-Certification Issues. A judgment denying class certification in one action will not preclude litigation of the class-certification issue in a subsequent action in which the class-certification issues are not identical to those presented in the earlier action (Johnson v. GlaxoSmithKline, Inc. (2008) 166 Cal. App. 4th 1497, 1512-1517, 83 Cal. Rptr. 3d 607). For example, a denial of class certification will not preclude certification in a later action that involves a narrower class, if the narrowed class definition attempts to correct flaws identified in the earlier action, with the result that the issues presented on class certification are different (Bufil v. Dollar Fin. Group, Inc. (2008) 162 Cal. App. 4th 1193, 1202-1204, 76 Cal. Rptr. 3d 804).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used in a memorandum opposing a contention that the question of class certification was already decided in another case and that relitigation of that question is barred by issue preclusion (also known as collateral estoppel).

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Counsel should, for example, explain how the class definition in the present case is narrower than that of the class for which certification was sought in the previous case.

In an appropriate case, this form may be used to oppose the contention made in the form set out in § 41.34A.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Judgment or Order Denying Certification of Class Does Not Have Issue-Preclusive Effect in Subsequent Action Involving Narrower Class

Johnson v. GlaxoSmithKline, Inc. (2008) 166 Cal. App. 4th 1497, 83 Cal. Rptr. 3d 607 , was a putative class action brought against a drug manufacturer, alleging that the defendant had violated California's Unfair Competition Law (UCL) (Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq.). The defendant moved to preclude class certification, claiming that certification was collaterally estopped because a federal district court had twice denied class certification in a separate action raising similar UCL claims (see In re Paxil Litig. (C.D. Cal. 2003) 218 F.R.D. 242 ; In re Paxil Litig. (C.D. Cal. 2003) 212 F.R.D. 539). The trial court granted the defendant's motion.

The court of appeal reversed, finding that not all the elements of issue preclusion (collateral estoppel) were met. Those elements are as follows: (1) the issue sought to be precluded from relitigation must be identical to that decided in a former proceeding; (2) the issue must have been actually litigated in the former proceeding; (3) the issue must have been necessarily decided in the former proceeding; (4) the decision in the former proceeding must be final and on the merits; and (5) the party against whom preclusion is sought must be the same as, or in privity with, the party to the former proceeding (166 Cal. App. 4th 1497, 1508) . In this case, the court of appeal found that although the last four elements might have been met, the first element had not been met: the issue decided by the federal court in denying class certification had not been identical to the class-certification issue presented in this case (166 Cal. App. 4th 1497, 1512-1513) .

The court of appeal explained that the federal court's denials of class certification occurred before the voters approved Proposition 64, which significantly restricted the previously broad standing requirements for pursuing a private cause of action under the UCL. Before the amendment by Proposition 64, the UCL permitted any person acting for the general public to sue for relief from unfair competition and did not predicate standing on a showing of injury or damage. As amended by Proposition 64, Bus. & Prof. Code § 17204 limits standing in a UCL action to certain specified public officials and to "any person who has suffered injury in fact and has lost money or property as a result of ... unfair competition." In the federal litigation, the district court had denied class certification, finding that persons who had never seen or heard the defendant's allegedly deceptive advertisements would not be adequate representatives of the putative class (even though the pre-Proposition 64 version of the UCL apparently allowed such persons to sue) (166 Cal. App. 4th 1497, 1513-1514) .

Unlike the named plaintiffs in the federal litigation, the plaintiff in the present case asserted a post-Proposition 64 UCL claim, based on his own injury and loss of money or property as a result of the defendant's allegedly deceptive advertising. In contrast to the federal plaintiffs, the plaintiff in the present case alleged that he had seen and heard the defendant's advertisements. Thus, because of the significant change in the legal landscape in which UCL claims may be asserted as a result of Proposition 64, the single issue on which the district court denied class certification was materially different from the issue of adequacy of representation in the present case. Therefore, the court of appeal concluded that the federal court's denial of class certification did not have issue-preclusive effect in the present case (166 Cal. App. 4th 1497, 1514-1515) .

Bufil v. Dollar Fin. Group, Inc. (2008) 162 Cal. App. 4th 1193, 76 Cal. Rptr. 3d 804 , was an action against an employer, alleging that the defendant had denied its employees meal periods and rest breaks required by California law. In an earlier action, one employee had sought to represent a class comprising all hourly employees employed by the defendant in California during a specified period "who were denied meal periods and rest breaks in compliance with California law." The trial court denied class certification, and the court of appeal affirmed, on the ground that common questions of fact and law did not predominate over individualized issues, since there was no evidence that the defendant had a uniform policy regarding meals and breaks, and each employee would have had to testify regarding the circumstances in which he or she had been denied the meal periods and rest breaks (162 Cal. App. 4th 1193, 1199-1201) .

Less than four months later, a different employee brought the present action, seeking to represent two subclasses of employees for whom the defendant's records depicted a meal period or rest break not taken because the class member either (1) was the sole employee on a work shift, or (2) was giving in-store training to other employees. The defendant contended that the judgment in the earlier case barred class certification in the present case, under the doctrine of collateral estoppel. The trial court agreed and dismissed the plaintiff's class allegations (162 Cal. App. 4th 1193, 1201) .

The court of appeal reversed, finding collateral estoppel inapplicable because the classes in the two cases were different and thus the issues were different (unlike the situation presented in Alvarez v. May Dept. Stores Co. (2006) 143 Cal. App. 4th 1223, 49 Cal. Rptr. 3d 892 , which is discussed in § 41.34A[3][a]). For example, in the earlier action it was significant that each class member would have had to testify as to his or her understanding of the meal-period waiver. But that was not an issue in the present case, which proceeded on the theory that the two circumstances--single employee on duty or providing training--did not come within the "nature of the work" exception to the meal-period and rest-break requirements under the relevant Industrial Wage Order. The court of appeal explained that this was a legal question concerning the liability of the defendant to each putative class member; the plaintiff did not contend that any class member had signed a meal-period waiver, and was not litigating the intent and understanding of the parties regarding any waiver or agreement regarding meal periods and rest breaks. Thus, in the present case the court could identify the class from the defendant's records and determine liability as a matter of law. In essence, the plaintiff was defining the class more narrowly, in a way that corrected the flaws that resulted in the denial of class certification in the earlier action. Accordingly, because the present case did not implicate any of the problems involving liability that resulted in the denial of class certification in the earlier action, the trial court erred in concluding that issue preclusion (collateral estoppel) should bar class certification in this case (162 Cal. App. 4th 1193, 1202-1204) .

§ 41.36 Supporting Contention That Class Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 382] Proper--Class Is Ascertainable

[1] FORM Supporting Contention That Class Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 382] Proper--Class Is Ascertainable

[The following may be combined with a general form of memorandum in support of a motion to certify an action as a class action (see, e.g., § 41.30). The following may also be combined with a general form of memorandumopposing a demurrer to a complaint on the ground that class action treatment is not appropriate (see, e.g., § 41.35).]

THE CLASS IN THIS ACTION IS ASCERTAINABLE BECAUSE POTENTIAL CLASS MEMBERS MAY BE EASILY LOCATED AND IDENTIFIED AND BECAUSE JOINDER WOULD NOT BE PRACTICABLE DUE TO THE SIZE OF THE CLASS.

A. Class-Action Requirements. Although Section 382 of the Code of Civil Procedure appears to speak in the alternative, it has uniformly been held that two requirements must be met in order to sustain a class action. There must be both an ascertainable class and a well-defined community of interest in the questions of law and fact involved affecting the parties to be represented (Daar v. Yellow Cab Co. (1967) 67 Cal. 2d 695, 704, 63 Cal. Rptr. 724, 433 P.2d 732).

B. Determination of Ascertainability. The class is readily ascertainable when potential class members are easily located and identified and the size of the class makes joinder impracticable (see Richmond v. Dart Industries, Inc. (1981) 29 Cal. 3d 462, 478, 174 Cal. Rptr. 515, 629 P.2d 23). The need for individualized analysis to ascertain each class member's damages does not mean that the class is not ascertainable, so long as the class can be defined in terms of objective characteristics and common transactional facts (Hicks v. Kaufman & Broad Home Corp. (2001) 89 Cal. App. 4th 908, 913-916, 107 Cal. Rptr. 2d 761 ; see Lee v. Dynamex, Inc. (2008) 166 Cal. App. 4th 1325, 1334-1336, 83 Cal. Rptr. 3d 241).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of a plaintiff's contention that the potential class is ascertainable because potential members may be easily located and identified and because joinder would not be practicable due to the size of the class. The plaintiff must prove both an ascertainable class and a well-defined community of interest in questions of law and fact in order to establish a proper class action.

This memorandum may be combined, where appropriate, with points and authorities relating to specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to invoke the contention. A plaintiff might make an argument supported by this memorandum under the following circumstances: (1) when supporting a motion to certify an action as a proper class action (see, e.g., § 41.30); (2) when opposing a motion by the defendant to declare an action inappropriate as a class action; (3) when opposinga motion by the defendant to decertify the class (see, e.g., § 41.33); and (4) when opposing a demurrer to the complaint made on the ground that class action treatment is not appropriate (see, e.g., § 41.35). This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Counsel should refer to facts showing that persons falling within the definition of the class can easily be located and identified. Counsel should also note that joinder would not be practicable because the potential class is too large.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Class Action Requirements

Daar v. Yellow Cab Co. (1967) 67 Cal. 2d 695, 63 Cal. Rptr. 724, 433 P.2d 732 , was a class action for damages due to excessive charges for defendant's taxicab services during the four years preceding commencement of the action. Defendant demurred, contending in part that the complaint did not contain the elements of a proper class action and thus failed to state a cause of action. The superior court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend on the basis of lack of jurisdiction, but gave no reason for its action. The court ordered the case transferred to municipal court because plaintiff's individual action did not state a cause of action for damages in excess of the jurisdictional amount for superior courts under former Code Civ. Proc. § 89. Plaintiff then filed an appeal.

In reversing, the Supreme Court held that the complaint set forth sufficient facts to establish a proper class action (67 Cal. 2d 695, 717) . The Court stated the general rule that although Code Civ. Proc. § 382 appears to speak in the alternative, courts have uniformly held that two requirements must be met to sustain any class action. There must be both an ascertainable class and a well-defined community of interest in the questions of law and fact affecting the parties to be represented (67 Cal. 2d 695, 704) .

[b] Determination of Ascertainability

Richmond v. Dart Industries, Inc. (1981) 29 Cal. 3d 462, 174 Cal. Rptr. 515, 629 P.2d 23 , was an action on behalf of all past and present lot owners in a subdivision for compensatory and punitive damages, rescission, declaratory relief, and creation of a constructive trust to ensure that sufficient funds would be available to provide adequate water and sewage facilities. Plaintiffs filed a motion for class certification, claiming that theclass action was proper because they had established an ascertainable class and a well-defined community of interest among the class members. The trial court denied certification, stating that plaintiffs had not carried the burden of proving that the representative party had interests which were compatible with, and not antagonistic to, the interests of the class members to be represented. Plaintiffs then filed an appeal.

The Supreme Court reversed the order denying certification, holding that plaintiffs had met the legal tests for class certification (29 Cal. 3d 462, 479) . The Court noted that the issue of ascertainability of the class was a relatively simple matter because the record owners of the subdivision lots could easily be identified and located. Furthermore, joinder of all the potential plaintiffs would not be practicable in a case involving over 2,600 sales of lots (29 Cal. 3d

In Hicks v. Kaufman & Broad Home Corp. (2001) 89 Cal. App. 4th 908, 107 Cal. Rptr. 2d 761 , the plaintiffs were homeowners who alleged that the defendant developers had used inferior materials in constructing the concrete-slab foundations under the plaintiffs' homes. On behalf of themselves and all other similarly situated homeowners, the plaintiffs alleged causes of action for strict liability, negligence, and breach of express and implied warranties. The complaint sought damages for the repair or replacement of the foundations. After the defendants filed an answer, the plaintiffs moved for certification of a class identified as the owners of homes in specified developments that had been constructed by the defendants using the specified defective product. The trial court denied certification and dismissed the class allegations of the complaint, holding that the members of the class were not reasonably ascertainable and that the causes of action lacked common issues of fact. The court of appeal reversed in part, holding that the class was indeed ascertainable and that, on the breach-of-warranty causes of action, common questions of law and fact predominated over individual questions, justifying class treatment of those causes of action (89 Cal. App. 4th 908, 911-913) .

On the question of ascertainability of the class, the court of appeal held that the trial court had applied an improper criterion in determining ascertainability of the class. The trial court had concluded that the class was not reasonably ascertainable because class membership depended on the existence of foundation damage to each putative class member's home, which would require individualized analysis. The court of appeal pointed out that, by linking class membership to the extent of damage, the trial court's analysis improperly made class membership dependent on a determination of the merits of the case. The court of appeal explained that the existence of damage to a foundation was not a precondition to classmembership. Rather, if anything, it was an element in the proof of the defendants' liability and related to the existence of common questions of law and fact, not ascertainability of the class (89 Cal. App. 4th 908, 913-915) .

The court of appeal noted that ascertainability of the class and identification of its members can be better achieved by defining the class in terms of objective characteristics and common transactional facts. The class certification order and notice to class members are the proper places to explain the relationship between the defined class and the legal claims made in the case. Accordingly, the court of appeal found that homeowners in the specified developments constructed and marketed by the defendants and in whose homes the specified defective product was used constituted an ascertainable class. This class was precise and objective, and it could be determined from public records and the defendants' own records (89 Cal. App. 4th 908, 915-916) .

Lee v. Dynamex, Inc. (2008) 166 Cal. App. 4th 1325, 83 Cal. Rptr. 3d 241 , was a putative class action alleging that the defendant, a parcel-delivery company, had improperly reclassified its drivers from employees to independent contractors. The plaintiff sought to certify a class consisting of all persons classified as independent contractors who, during a specified time span, personally picked up and delivered parcels and other items for the defendant using their personal vehicles. In response to the defendant's objection, the plaintiff refined the class definition to exclude individuals who (1) were not affiliated with a third-party administrator for the purpose of providing services to the defendant, (2) provided services to the defendant through their own employees or subcontractors more than half the time, (3) concurrently picked up or delivered shipments for the defendant and another package delivery service that did not have a business relationship with the defendant, or (4) concurrently picked up or delivered shipments for the defendant and their own customers. The trial court denied the motion for class certification, determining that the putative class was not sufficiently ascertainable. In making this finding, the court focused on the four exclusions offered by the plaintiff as a means of refining the categories of drivers to be included. Stating "it is unclear how to deal with hybrid drivers [those who perform services for their own customers or an independent package delivery service] or how to determine whether ... someone is excluded altogether ... by the language of the exclusions," the court concluded the plaintiff had failed to define the class in terms of "objective characteristics and common transactional facts" (166 Cal. App. 4th 1325, 1334) .

The court of appeal reversed, holding that because the basic parameters of the class proposed by the plaintiff could be readily ascertained through the defendant's records, the trial court's rejection of the proposed class on this ground was unjustified. The appellate court explained that a class is not inappropriate merely because each member at some point may be required to make an individual showing as to eligibility for recovery. Quoting Hicks v. Kaufman & Broad Home Corp. (discussed immediately above), the court observed that rather than focusing the ascertainability question on the ultimate fact class members would have to prove to establish liability, this element is "better achieved by defining the class in terms of objective characteristics and common transactional facts making the ultimate identification of class members possible when that identification becomes necessary" (166 Cal. App. 4th 1325, 1334-1335) . The court of appeal concluded that the trial court's analysis unnecessarily confused issues of ascertainability with the merits of the underlying claims. The defendant's records were adequate to identify those persons classified as independent contractors who qualified for membership in the proposed class. At the class-certification stage of the proceeding, nothing more is required; appropriate exclusions can be implemented at a later stage (166 Cal. App. 4th 1325, 1336) .

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of a plaintiff's contention that the potential class is ascertainable because the members of the designated class may be readily identified by reference to defendant's existing records.

This form may be combined, where appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to invoke the contention. A plaintiff might make an argument supported by this memorandum under the following circumstances: (1) when supporting a motion to certify an action as a proper class action (see, e.g., § 41.30); (2) when opposing a motion by the defendant to declare an action inappropriate as a class action; (3) when opposing a motion by the defendant to decertify the class (see, e.g., § 41.33); and (4) when opposing a demurrer to the complaint on the ground that class action treatment is not appropriate (see, e.g., § 41.35). This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Counsel should refer to facts showing that members of the class could be identified by reference to defendant's existing records. Counsel should also note that the identification of potential class members from defendant's records would not involve unreasonable time or expense.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Class Identified by Defendant's Records

Hypolite v. Carleson (1975) 52 Cal. App. 3d 566, 125 Cal. Rptr. 221 , was a class action challenging the validity of an aid to families with dependent children (AFDC) program regulation under which minor plaintiffs had been denied benefits. Defendant did not challenge the propriety of the action as a class action by demurrer or motion, nor was the issue raised in his answer. The trial court originally ruled in favor of defendant on the merits, but the judgment was reversed on appeal. After defendant's unsuccessful attempts to obtain a hearing before the California Supreme Court and a writ of certiorari for review by the United States Supreme Court, the case proceeded on remand to the trial court, which entered a judgment granting plaintiffs' writ of mandate. Subsequently, the courtgranted plaintiffs' motions to amend the judgment on substantive grounds and for certification of the class. Defendant then filed an appeal, contending that plaintiffs had failed to establish the requisites for a class action and that plaintiffs were precluded from obtaining the order certifying the class because they had not moved for it until after the substantive issues had been litigated to finality.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, holding that a class of persons wrongfully denied benefits under the aid to families with dependent children (AFDC) program was ascertainable (52 Cal. App. 3d 566, 579) . Adopting the trial court's reasoning, the court of appeal noted that members of the designated class could readily be identified, or their claims substantiated (or both), by reference to the defendant's existing records and, further, that the two functions would not involve unreasonable time or expense (52 Cal. App. 3d 566, 578-579) . The trial court's decision had noted that fair-hearing decisions at which individuals were wrongfully denied benefits had been coded so that persons denied benefits pursuant to a specific regulation were readily ascertainable (52 Cal. App. 3d 566, 578) .

[1] FORM Supporting Contention That Class Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 382] Proper--Class Is Ascertainable--Individual Members Need Not Be Identified

[The following may be combined with a general form of memorandum in support of a motion to certify an action as a class action (see, e.g., § 41.30). The following may also be combined with a general form of memorandum opposing a demurrer to a complaint on the ground that class action treatment is not appropriate (see, e.g., § 41.35).]

THIS ACTION IS A PROPER CLASS ACTION BECAUSE EACH INDIVIDUAL CLASS MEMBER DOES NOT HAVE TO BE IDENTIFIED IN ORDER TO ESTABLISH THE EXISTENCE OF AN ASCERTAINABLE CLASS.

A. Ascertainable Class and Community of Interest in Questions of Law and Fact Essential for Proper Class Action. [See § 41.36, Paragraph A.]

B. Individual Class Members Need Not Be Identified. If the existence of an ascertainable class has been shown, there is no need to identify its individual members in order to bind all members by the judgment. The fact that the class members are unidentified at this point will not preclude a complete determination of the issues affecting the class (Daar v. Yellow Cab Co. (1967) 67 Cal. 2d 695, 706, 63 Cal. Rptr. 724, 433 P.2d 732 ; Estrada v. FedEx Ground Package Sys., Inc. (2007) 154 Cal. App. 4th 1, 14, 64 Cal. Rptr. 3d 327).

[a] Use of Form

The foregoing form may be submitted in support of plaintiff's contention that an action is properly maintained as a class action. This argument may be made in response to defendant's contention that class action treatment is not proper because each individual member of the potential class has not been identified. The argument may also be made in anticipation of such a contention by defendant.

This form may be combined, as appropriate, with forms relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to invoke the contention. A plaintiff might make an argument supported by this memorandum under the following circumstances: (1) when supporting a motion to certify an action as a proper class action (see, e.g., § 41.30); (2) when opposing a motion by the defendant to declare an action inappropriate as a class action; (3) when opposing a motion by the defendant to decertify the class (see, e.g., § 41.33); and (4) when opposing a demurrer to the complaint on the ground that class action treatment is not appropriate (see, e.g., § 41.35). The foregoing form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Counsel should refer to facts showing that members of the class can be located and identified. Counsel should also note that each individual member need not be identified in order to find that the class is ascertainable.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Individual Class Members Need Not Be Identified

The facts and procedural background of Daar v. Yellow Cab Co. (1967) 67 Cal. 2d 695, 63 Cal. Rptr. 724, 433 P.2d 732 , are discussed in § 41.36[3][a]. The Court in Daar held that a class of taxicab users was ascertainable in an action for overcharges (67 Cal. 2d 695, 717) . The Court noted that the defendant had apparently failed to distinguish between the necessity of establishing the existence of an ascertainable class and the necessity of identifying the individual members as a prerequisite to a class suit. If the existence of an ascertainable class has been shown, the Court reasoned, there is no need to identify its individual members in order to bind all members by the judgment. The fact that class members are not identified at that point will not preclude a complete determination of the issues affecting the class (67 Cal. 2d 695, 706) .

In Estrada v. FedEx Ground Package Sys., Inc. (2007) 154 Cal. App. 4th 1, 64 Cal. Rptr. 3d 327 , the plaintiffs sued on behalf of a class of drivers who worked for the defendant delivery service. The plaintiffs sought to recover reimbursement of work-related expenses under Lab. Code § 2802, which makes an employer liable for business expenses incurred by employees. In opposing class certification, the defendant contended, among other things, that the class was not ascertainable. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's certification order, which limited the class to drivers who worked full-time for the defendant in single work areas and who did not subcontract their service areas out to others for reasons other than vacation, sick leave, or other commonly excused employment absences. The trial court found, and the court of appeal agreed, that the members of that class could reasonably be ascertained from the defendant's records and through discovery. Although the defendant suggested that the members of the class shifted "in and out, sometimes on a day-to-day basis," the court of appeal rejected any claim that all members of the class had to be identified at the outset (154 Cal. App. 4th 1, 14 (citing Daar v. Yellow Cab Co. (1976) 67 Cal. 2d 695, 706) (discussed above)). Rather, a class isascertainable if it identifies a group of unnamed plaintiffs by describing a set of common characteristics sufficient to allow a member of that group to identify himself or herself as having a right to recover based on the description (154 Cal. App. 4th 1, 14) .

A COMMUNITY OF INTEREST EXISTS AMONG THE CLASS MEMBERS IN THIS ACTION BECAUSE THE COMMON QUESTIONS ARE SUFFICIENTLY IMPORTANT TO PERMIT ADJUDICATION IN A CLASS ACTION RATHER THAN IN A MULTIPLICITY OF SEPARATE SUITS.

A. Ascertainable Class and Community of Interest in Questions of Law and Fact Essential for Proper Class Action. [See § 41.36, Paragraph A.]

B. Sufficiently Important Common Questions. A community of interest exists among the class members when the common questions are sufficiently important to permit adjudication in a class action rather than in a multiplicity of separate suits (*Daar v. C. Common Questions of Liability Generally Justify Class Adjudication. As a general rule, if the defendant's liability can be determined by facts common to all members of a class, class certification is proper, even if the members must individually prove their damages (*Hicks v. [a] Use of Form

The foregoing form may be submitted in support of a plaintiff's contention that there is a community of interest among the class members in the questions of law and facts because the common questions are sufficiently important to permit adjudication in a class action rather than in a multiplicity of separate suits.

This form may be combined, as appropriate, with forms relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to invoke the contention. A plaintiff might make an argument supported by this memorandum under the following circumstances: (1) when supporting a motion to certify an action as a proper class action (see, e.g., § 41.30); (2) when opposing a motion by the defendant to declare an action inappropriate as a class action; (3) when opposing a motion by the defendant to decertify the class (see, e.g., § 41.33); and (4) when opposing a demurrer to the complaint on the ground that class action treatment is not appropriate (see, e.g., § 41.35). The foregoing form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Counsel should refer to facts showing the existence of common questions of law and facts, the substantial benefits of class litigation to both the litigants and the court, and the advantages of litigating the issues in a class suit as opposed to a multiplicity of separate actions.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Sufficiently Important Common Questions

The facts and procedural background of Daar v. Yellow Cab Co. (1967) 67 Cal. 2d 695, 63 Cal. Rptr. 724, 433 P.2d 732 , are discussed in § 41.36[3][a]. In Daar, the Supreme Court held that a class of taxicab users seeking damages for overcharges had a well-defined community of interest in the questions of law and fact (67 Cal. 2d 695, 717) . The Court stated that substantial benefits resulting from class litigation, both to the litigants and the court, should be found before the imposition of a judgment binding on absent parties can be justified. The Court noted that the community of interest determination depends on whether or not the common questions are sufficiently important to permit adjudication in a class action rather than in a multiplicity of separate suits (67 Cal. 2d 695, 713) . The Court reasoned that if a class suit was not permitted, a multiplicity of legal actions dealingwith identical basic issues would be required (67 Cal. 2d 695, 714-715) . In addition, the Court noted that absent a class suit, recovery by any of the individual taxicab users would be unlikely due to the relatively small loss to each individual class member (67 Cal. 2d 695, 715) .

[b] Common Questions of Liability Generally Justify Class Adjudication

The facts and procedural background of Hicks v. Kaufman & Broad Home Corp. (2001) 89 Cal. App. 4th 908, 107 Cal. Rptr. 2d 761 , are discussed in § 41.36[3][b]. On the question of whether common issues predominated, the court of appeal applied the general rule that if a defendant's liability can be determined by facts common to all members of a class, the class will be certified even if the members must individually prove their damages. As to the contractual breach-of-warranty claims, the court noted that the failure or malfunctioning of the allegedly defective product was not an element of the cause of action; whether the product had malfunctioned was relevant to the remedy for a breach of warranty, not to the existence of the breach itself. Therefore, even though each class member would have to provide individualized proof of the extent of damages, such individualized proof was not necessary to establish the defendants' liability. Instead, liability (that is, breach of warranties) would be established by showing that the foundations of plaintiffs' homes contained an inherent defect that was substantially certain to result in malfunction during the useful life of the foundations. Such a showing would involve predominantly common questions of law and fact, since individualized showings of actual malfunction would be unnecessary. Accordingly, the court of appeal held that the trial court had erred in refusing to certify the class on the breach-of-warranty claims (89 Cal. App. 4th 908, 916-923) .

The court of appeal went on to affirm the trial court's holding that the plaintiffs' tort claims for negligence and strict liability were not appropriate for class treatment. Under these tort causes of action, no remedy is available in the absence of actual damage. Thus, to establish the liability of the defendants, each class member would have to establish that damage had resulted from the malfunction of his or her foundation. Given this need for individualized proof, commonality of facts was lost, and the case could not be adjudicated as a class action (89 Cal. App. 4th 908, 923-924) .

THE REQUISITE OF A WELL-DEFINED COMMUNITY OF INTEREST IN QUESTIONS OF FACT IS SATISFIED IN THIS ACTION BECAUSE EACH INDIVIDUAL'S ENTITLEMENT DEPENDS ON THE EXISTENCE OF A SINGLE COMMON FACT.

A. Ascertainable Class and Community of Interest in Questions of Law and Fact Essential for Proper Class Action. [See § 41.36, Paragraph A.]

B. Common Questions of Fact. When each individual's entitlement depends on the existence of a single fact common to all class members, and not on a separate set of facts applicable only to him or her, the requisite of a well-defined community of interest in the questions of fact has been satisfied (Hypolite v. Carleson (1975) 52 Cal. App. 3d 566, 580, 125 Cal. Rptr. 221).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of a plaintiff's contention that there is a community of interest among the class members in the questions of fact because each individual's entitlement depends on the existence of a single fact common to all class members.

This form may be combined, where appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to invoke the contention. A plaintiff might make an argument supported by this memorandum under the following circumstances: (1) when supporting a motion to certify an action as a proper class action (see, e.g., § 41.30); (2) when opposing a motion by the defendant to declare an action inappropriate as a class action; (3) when opposing a motion by the defendant to decertify the class (see, e.g., § 41.33); and(4) when opposing a demurrer to the complaint on the ground that class action treatment is not appropriate (see, e.g., § 41.35). This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Counsel should refer to the issues of fact that are common among the class members. Counsel should also note that the representative plaintiffs must show common questions of law as well as facts.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Common Questions of Fact

The facts and procedural background of Hypolite v. Carleson (1975) 52 Cal. App. 3d 566, 125 Cal. Rptr. 221 , are discussed in § 41.37[3][a]. In Hypolite, the court held that a class of plaintiffs seeking to invalidate a regulation under the program for aid to families with dependent children had established the requisite community of interest in questions of fact. The defendants conceded that class members shared common questions of law but contended that common questions of fact were absent because of the many factors which influenced an individual's eligibility for benefits. The court rejected this argument, noting that the designated class consisted only of the persons who had been rendered ineligible under the regulation for a single reason. Thus, the court noted, each claimant's entitlement to benefits depended on the existence of a single fact, not on a separate set of facts applicable only to him or her. Because all members of the class had the single fact in common, the court concluded, they shared the requisite element of a well-defined community of interest in the questions of fact involved affecting the parties to be represented (52 Cal. App. 3d 566, 579-580) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Common Questions of Fact

In Rose v. City of Hayward (1981) 126 Cal. App. 3d 926, 179 Cal. Rptr. 287 , a class action seeking a writ of mandate to compel the state retirement system to include fringe benefits in its calculation of pension benefits, the court of appeal held that the action was suitable for class action disposition. Relying on Hypolite v. Carleson (1975) 52 Cal. App. 3d 566, 580, 125 Cal. Rptr. 221 (discussed in § 41.40[3][a]), the court noted that resolution of each applicant's claim requires no inquiry into any peripheral issues. The court stated that the single, decisive issue for all class members is whether the pertinent allowances should be included in the computation of retirement benefits (126 Cal. App. 3d 926, 932-934) .

Community of Interest Sufficient in Action Alleging Fraud. In a class action alleging fraud or misrepresentation, a community of interest sufficient to permit determination of the issue of liability on a class basis exists when material misrepresentations have been made to class members who thereafter act consistently with reliance, so as to raise an inference of reliance as to the entire class (Occidental Land, Inc. v. Cases (2010) 181 Cal. App. 4th 145, 156-157, 104 Cal. Rptr. 3d 329).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of the plaintiff's contention that a class action alleging fraud or misrepresentation is proper because a community of interest sufficient to permit determination of the issue of liability on a class basis exists when material misrepresentations have been made to class members who thereafter actconsistently with reliance, so as to raise an inference of reliance as to the entire class.

This form may be combined, as appropriate, with forms relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to invoke the contention. A plaintiff might make an argument supported by this memorandum under the following circumstances: (1) when supporting a motion to certify an action as a proper class action (see, e.g., § 41.30); (2) when opposing a motion by the defendant to declare an action inappropriate as a class action; (3) when opposing a motion by the defendant to decertify the class (see, e.g., § 41.33); and (4) when opposing a demurrer to the complaint on the ground that class action treatment is not appropriate (see, e.g., § 41.35). This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Counsel should refer to facts showing that material representations were made to class members in the form of a standard contract or other common basis. If appropriate, counsel should point out that oral representations were made to class members at the same time and place [see Collins v. Rocha (1972) 7 Cal. 3d 232, 237, 102 Cal. Rptr. 1, 497 P.2d 225] . In addition, counsel should refer to facts showing that plaintiffs acted consistently with reliance after the representations were made.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Community of Interest Sufficient in Action Alleging Fraud

The facts and procedural background of Occidental Land, Inc. v. Superior Court (1976) 18 Cal. 3d 355, 134 Cal. Rptr. 388, 556 P.2d 750 , are discussed in § 41.32[3][a]. In Occidental, a class action by subdivision homeowners seeking damages for the developer's allegedly fraudulent misrepresentation of the costs for maintaining the project, the Supreme Court held that the trial court had not abused its discretion in refusing to decertify the action as a class action (18 Cal. 3d 355, 364) . The Court rejected defendant's contention that even if alleged written misrepresentations were made to each homeowner, a class suit was not appropriate because at trial each plaintiff would be required to separately prove justifiable reliance. Citing Vasquez v. Superior Court (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 800, 814, 94 Cal. Rptr. 796, 484 P.2d 964 (discussed below), the Court stated that an inference of reliance arises if a material false representation was made to persons whose acts thereafter were consistent with reliance on the representation. The Court concluded that because plaintiffs' purchases of homes were acts consistent with their reliance on the subdivision report that set out maintenance fees, the trial court had not erred in inferringthat justifiable reliance may be established on a common basis (18 Cal. 3d 355, 363) .

The facts and procedural background of Vasquez v. Superior Court (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 800, 94 Cal. Rptr. 796, 484 P.2d 964 , are discussed in § 41.34[3][c]. In Vasquez, a class action seeking rescission because of fraudulent misrepresentation by consumers who had purchased frozen food and freezers under installment contracts, the Supreme Court held that the trial court had erred in sustaining demurrers on the ground that plaintiffs had not alleged a proper class action (4 Cal. 3d 800, 815) . The Court noted that if material representations were made to the class members, at least an inference of reliance would arise as to the entire class (4 Cal. 3d 800, 814) . Thus, the Court stated, if plaintiffs could establish without individual testimony that the representations were made to each plaintiff and that they were false, it should not be unduly complicated to sustain their burden of proving reliance thereon as a common element (4 Cal. 3d 800, 814) .

The named plaintiff in Steroid Hormone Prod. Cases (2010) 181 Cal. App. 4th 145, 104 Cal. Rptr. 3d 329 , claimed that the defendant had violated the unfair competition law (UCL) (Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq.) and the Consumers Legal Remedies Act (CLRA) (Civ. Code § 1750 et seq.) by selling products that contained a controlled substance illegal to possess without a prescription (see Health & Safety Code §§ 11377, 11379). The complaint sought restitution and injunctive relief, and the plaintiff moved to certify a class of all persons who had purchased the products during a particular period of time. The trial court denied the motion, finding that common issues did not predominate, because class members would be required to individually litigate issues of causation and injury.

The court of appeal reversed. On the UCL claim, the court observed that although a named plaintiff in a UCL class action must show that he or she suffered injury in fact and lost money or property as a result of the unfair competition, once the named plaintiff meets that burden, no further individualized proof of injury or causation is required to impose restitution liability against the defendant in favor of absent class members (181 Cal. App. 4th 145, 154 (citing In re Tobacco II Cases (2009) 46 Cal. 4th 298, 321, 93 Cal. Rptr. 3d 559, 207 P.3d 20)).

On the CLRA claim, the court of appeal acknowledged that the CLRA requires a showing of actual injury as to each class member (see Civ. Code §§ 1780(a), 1781(a)). Under the circumstances of this case, however, the need for each class member to show actual injury did not mean that individual issues would predominate. The court explained that the "damage" the plaintiff alleged in this case was that, in reliance on the defendant's deceptive conduct, he bought an illegal product he would not have bought had he known it was illegal. He did not seek actual damages, but instead sought restitution. Thus, he was entitled to show that the defendant's alleged deceptive conduct caused the same damage to the class by showing that the alleged misrepresentation was material, even if the defendant might be able to show that some class members would have bought the products even if they had known they were unlawful to sell or possess without a prescription. In other words, if the plaintiff could show that material misrepresentations were made to the class members, at least an inference of reliance--i.e., causation and injury--would arise as to the entire class (181 Cal. App. 4th 145, 156-157) . In this kind of case, a misrepresentation is deemed material if a reasonable person would attach importance to its existence or nonexistence in determining whether to purchase the product. The court of appeal noted that "[i]t requires no stretch to conclude that the proper answer is 'yes'--we assume that a reasonable person would not knowingly commit a criminal act of purchasing a controlled substance without the requisite prescription" (181 Cal. App. 4th 145, 157) .

The court of appeal distinguished this case from In re Vioxx Class Cases (2009) 180 Cal. App. 4th 116, 103 Cal. Rptr. 3d 83 (discussed in § 41.53[3][b]). Vioxx involved claims of actual damages suffered by class members who had purchased the medication Vioxx believing it to be safe and more effective than a less-expensive generic medication, based on misleading information provided by the manufacturer of Vioxx. Common issues did not predominate in Vioxx because each class member's claim was dependent on a showing of the individual's specific medical needs and history. The present case was significantly different, however, because in this case the relief sought was not actual damages, but rather restitution of the purchase price paid by class members, and as explained above, materiality and reliance could be established on a class-wide basis (181 Cal. App. 4th 145, 159-160) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Community of Interest Sufficient in Action Alleging Fraud

In Richmond v. Dart Industries, Inc. (1981) 29 Cal. 3d 462, 174 Cal. Rptr. 515, 629 P.2d 23 (discussed in § 41.36[3][b]), a class action by subdivision lot owners for compensatory and punitive damages, rescission, declaratory relief, and creation of a constructive trust to ensure that sufficient funds would be available to provide adequate water and sewage facilities, the Supreme Court reversed a trial court order denying certification of the class (29 Cal. 3d 462, 479) . With respect to the issue of community of interest, the Court noted that written misrepresentation claims provide an adequate basis for a finding of common questions within the class (29 Cal. 3d 462, 478) .

In Collins v. Rocha (1972) 7 Cal. 3d 232, 102 Cal. Rptr. 1, 497 P.2d 225 (discussed in § 41.50[3][a]), a class action on behalf of farm laborers for compensatory and punitive damages based on fraud and breach of an oral employment contract, the Supreme Court held that if representations were made at one time and place to all class members, and if they thereon simultaneously accepted employment, a persuasive inference that each of them relied on the representations arises without separate proof of reliance by each plaintiff (7 Cal. 3d 232, 237) . The Court noted that plaintiffs were allegedly gathered together to learn the details of the job with defendant and that the representations were made at that time (7 Cal. 3d 232, 237) .

In Danzig v. Jack Grynberg & Associates (1984) 161 Cal. App. 3d 1128, 208 Cal. Rptr. 336 , the court of appeal affirmed the trial court's judgment in favor of plaintiff class in an action for rescission based on fraudulentmisrepresentations and nondisclosures willfully and intentionally made by defendant to induce plaintiff class to subscribe to limited partnership interests. Defendant challenged the findings related to justifiable reliance on the grounds that there was insufficient evidence to support them and that independent proof of individual reliance of all class members was required. The court of appeal found that there was substantial evidence to support the trial court's findings. Regarding the need for independent proof of individual reliance, the court cited Vasquez v. Superior Court (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 800, 94 Cal. Rptr. 796, 484 P.2d 964 , for the rule that if the trial court finds, as it did here, that material misrepresentations were made to class members, at least an inference of reliance would arise concerning the entire class (161 Cal. App. 3d 1128, 1137-1138) .

§ 41.42 Supporting Contention That Class Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 382] Proper--Community of Interest Among Class Members Who Are Parties to Separate Versions of Standardized Contract That Violates Statute

[1] FORM Supporting Contention That Class Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 382] Proper--Community of Interest Among Class Members Who Are Parties to Separate Versions of Standardized Contract That Violates Statute

[The following may be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities in support of a motion to certify an action as a class action (see, e.g., § 41.30). The following may also be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities opposing a demurrer to a complaint on the ground that class action treatment is not appropriate (see, e.g., § 41.35).]

IN THIS ACTION, ALLEGING THAT DEFENDANT'S STANDARDIZED CONTRACT VIOLATES _____ [specify statute, e.g., SECTION 17200 OF THE BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONS CODE], THERE EXISTS AMONG THE CLASS MEMBERS, WHO CONTRACTED SEPARATELY WITH DEFENDANT USING THIS CONTRACT, A COMMUNITY OF INTEREST THAT IS SUFFICIENT TO PERMIT DETERMINATION OF THE ISSUE OF LIABILITY NOTWITHSTANDING POSSIBLY VARYING UNDERSTANDINGS OR INTERPRETATIONS OF THE CONTRACT BY THE INDIVIDUAL CLASS MEMBERS.

Certification of Class of Parties to Separate Versions of Standardized Contract Violating Statute Is Not Barred by Individual Members' Knowledge or Interpretation of Contract. Certification of a class, in an action alleging that standardized provisions in defendant's contracts violate a statute, is not barred by the differingunderstanding, knowledge, or interpretation of the offending provision by individual plaintiffs. Allowing a class action to proceed is an effective method of accomplishing the disgorgement of property obtained by illegal means so long as neither numerous nor substantial individual issues have to be litigated after a class judgment has determined questions common to the class (McConnell v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc. (1983) 33 Cal. 3d 816, 823, 191 Cal. Rptr. 458, 662 P.2d 916 ; Fletcher v. Security Pacific National Bank (1979) 23 Cal. 3d 442, 449-451, 454, 153 Cal. Rptr. 28, 591 P.2d 51 ; MacManus v. A. E. Realty Partners (1987) 195 Cal. App. 3d 1106, 1115-1117, 241 Cal. Rptr. 315).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of plaintiff's contention that a class action is proper, based on a standardized contract provision or practice in violation of a statute, regardless of the individual class members' understanding or interpretation of the provision or practice or its effect [see Fletcher v. Security Pacific National Bank (1979) 23 Cal. 3d 442, 449-451, 454, 153 Cal. Rptr. 28, 591 P.2d 51] .

This form may be combined with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to invoke the contention [see § 41.30 (supporting a motion to certify), § 41.33 (opposing a motion to decertify), § 41.35 (opposing a demurrer claiming that class action treatment is not appropriate)].

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the particular statute that is alleged to have been violated, including any provision for restitution or imposition of penalties that does not require findings based on plaintiff's understanding or interpretation of the offending provision, and should stress the common issues that establish the violation.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Certification of Class of Parties to Separate Versions of Standardized Contract Violating Statute Is Not Barred by Individual Members' Knowledge or Interpretation of Contract

McConnell v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc. (1983) 33 Cal. 3d 816, 191 Cal. Rptr. 458, 662 P.2d 916 , was a class action bycustomers of defendant broker seeking redress for violation of § 2 of the Usury Law (Deering's Ann Uncod measures 1919-1, § 2; 10 West's Ann Civ. Code foll § 1916), which prohibits compounding of interest unless an express agreement allowing compounding is signed by the party to be charged. Compound interest was charged on customers' debit-balance accounts. The written agreements only provided that interest would be charged in accordance with defendant's usual custom. After receiving evidence regarding the monthly statements provided to customers, the industry practice regarding such charges, and four customers' expectations, the trial judge decertified the class because individual issues predominate over class issues, and dismissed the action as a class action. Plaintiffs appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed. The Court discussed Fletcher v. Security Pacific National Bank (1979) 23 Cal. 3d 442, 449-451, 454, 153 Cal. Rptr. 28, 591 P.2d 51 , at length. The Court concluded that no evidence at all could be admitted to explain the customers' understanding of the meaning of the agreement because the agreement was clearly in violation of the usury statute in that it did not expressly provide for compounding. Further, the Court said that its conclusion not only safeguards the interests of the borrower, which is an important objective of the usury law, but it also furthers the remedial purposes of that law. If evidence of borrowers' understanding of the contract language was admissible, not only would a cause of action for violation of the statute often be rendered inappropriate for prosecution as a class action, but lenders who had violated the law would be shielded from liability (33 Cal. 3d 816, 821-823) .

Fletcher v. Security Pacific National Bank (1979) 23 Cal. 3d 442, 153 Cal. Rptr. 28, 591 P.2d 51 , was an opinion in consolidated actions by loan customers of defendant for breach of contract and violation of Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200, which prohibits use of misleading statements to induce a person to enter into a contract. The loan papers merely stated that a specified interest rate was changed per annum. Defendant's practice was to calculate interest using a 360-day year rather than a 365-day year, a practice which, though common in the industry, was held to be an unfair trade practice under Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 in Chern v. Bank of America (1976) 15 Cal. 3d 866, 127 Cal. Rptr. 110, 544 P.2d 1310 . After the decision in Chern, defendant moved for dismissal of this action as a class action, claiming that the practice was only unfair to borrowers who did not know what industry custom was and that knowledge of each borrower would have to be determined individually. The motion was granted, and plaintiff appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed the breach of contract cause of action but reversed on the unfair trade practice cause of action. The Court agreed that each borrower would have to be examined about his or her prior knowledge of the meaning of "per annum" in order to sustain recovery on the breachof contract claim (23 Cal. 3d 442, 446) . The same issues are not relevant to the unfair practices claim. Noting that Bus. & Prof. Code § 17535 authorizes a court to order restitution in the absence of proof of lack of individual knowledge in order to deter future violations of the unfair trade practice statute and to foreclose retention by the violator of its ill-gotten gains, the Court concluded that the unfair practice cause of action should be allowed to go forward as a class action without individualized proof of lack of knowledge on the ground that that would be an effective means to accomplish disgorgement (23 Cal. 3d 442, 449-451) . The fact that some members of the class may have known that a 360-day denominator was used does not preclude the trial court from affording a remedy for recovery by those who had no such knowledge (23 Cal. 3d 442, 454) .

MacManus v. A. E. Realty Partners (1987) 195 Cal. App. 3d 1106, 241 Cal. Rptr. 315 , was a class action against a real estate developer and an affiliated escrow company for violation of California's antitrust statute (Bus. & Prof. Code § 16720) and for violation of Civ. Code § 2995, which prohibits a developer from requiring as a condition of a single family residential real property transfer that the buyer use an escrow entity in which the developer has a financial interest. The issue involved the construction and coercive effect of standardized provisions in defendant-developer's sales contracts relating to the use of the defendant-escrow. Summary judgment was granted on the antitrust cause of action on the ground that the defendants were not separate entities and thus could form a conspiracy, contract, or combination as referred to in the statute. The trial court denied certification as a class on the remaining cause of action. Plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the summary judgment and the order denying certification. Defendants argued that individual questions predominated because there were many individual transactions and each plaintiff may have had a different understanding of the contract provision. The court of appeal discussed McConnell v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc. (1983) 33 Cal. 3d 816, 823, 191 Cal. Rptr. 458, 662 P.2d 916 , and Fletcher v. Security Pacific National Bank (1979) 23 Cal. 3d 442, 449-451, 454, 153 Cal. Rptr. 28, 591 P.2d 51 , and concluded that here, when a violation of statute was alleged, knowledge of the individual class members is no obstacle to certification. Citing Vasquez v. Superior Court (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 800, 809, 94 Cal. Rptr. 796, 484 P.2d 964 (discussed in § 41.45[3][a]), the court stated that separate transactions are no bar to certification, so long as every member of the alleged class would not be required to litigate numerous and substantial questions to determine his or her individual right to recover following a class judgment determining the questions common to the class. Nor did the variation in the prices charged for escrow services present an insurmountable obstacle to certification, the court said, citing Occidental Land, Inc. v. Superior Court (1976) 18 Cal. 3d 355, 360, n.3, 134 Cal. Rptr. 388, 556 P.2d 750 (discussed in § 41.32[3][a]) (195 Cal. App. 3d 1106, 1116-1117) .

[b] Individual Member's Understanding or Knowledge Does Not Bar Sufficient Commonality

Rosack v. Volvo of America Corp. (1982) 131 Cal. App. 3d 741, 182 Cal. Rptr. 800 , involved an alleged price fixing conspiracy by one manufacturer and its United States distributors. The dealers were not named as defendants. The court of appeal reversed the trial court's denial of certification as a class and dismissed the action as a class action. In antitrust terminology, price fixing is a per se violation; thus, everyone who purchased the item whose price was fixed is presumed to have suffered some impact or injury. The fact that certain class members may not have been injured does not defeat class certification (131 Cal. App. 3d 741, 752-754) . The complexity of the pricing scheme and the number of variables, although they may prove fatally unmanageable for damage calculation, will rarely inhibit generalized proof of impact (131 Cal. App. 3d 741, 754) . Nevertheless, the trial court had denied certification in part on the ground that the presumption of injury could not be maintained in the retail automobile market, which it described as notorious for haggling and bargaining. The court of appeal said that the effectiveness of any purchaser's negotiations had to be seen as relative, depending on whether the negotiation commenced from a price that was set by a competitive market or from an artificially inflated price. If base prices are raised, generalized injury results regardless of the purchaser's individual negotiating abilities. As the price fixing conspiracy could be proved on a class-wide basis, class certification should not have been denied because of the possibility that some plaintiffs might have been injured to a lesser extent or not at all (

[1] FORM Supporting Contention That Class Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 382] Proper--Community of Interest Among Class Members in Action Alleging Price-Fixing Conspiracy

[The following may be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities in support of a motion to certify an action as a class action (see, e.g., § 41.30). The following may also be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities opposing a demurrer to a complaint on the ground that class action treatment is not appropriate (see, e.g., § 41.35).]

A COMMUNITY OF INTEREST EXISTS AMONG THE CLASS MEMBERS VICTIMIZED IN A CONSPIRACY ACTION BROUGHT UNDER _____ [THE CARTWRIGHT ACT (SECTIONS 16700-16770 OF THE BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONS CODE) and/or SECTIONS 17200-17208 OF THE BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONS CODE] BECAUSE THE COMMON, PREDOMINANT ISSUE CENTRAL TO THE ACTION IS THE EXISTENCE, IMPLEMENTATION, AND EFFECT OF THE ALLEGED CONSPIRACY.

A. Existence of Conspiracy Is Common Issue. In a class action alleging a price-fixing conspiracy, the existence of the conspiracy is an issue common to the class when the complaint credibly pleads allegations of anticompetitive behavior embracing all of the various products purchased by class members and distribution patterns involving class members (B.W.I. Custom Kitchen v. Owens-Illinois, Inc. (1987) 191 Cal. App. 3d 1341, 1349-1350, 235 Cal. Rptr. 228).

B. Injury to Class Members Is Common Issue. In a class action alleging a price-fixing conspiracy, injury to class members is an issue common to the class because, if the conspiracy is proven and plaintiffs establish they purchased the price-fixed goods, a jury can infer damage to the plaintiffs, even when prices for the goods were individually negotiated (B.W.I. Custom Kitchen v. Owens-Illinois, Inc. (1987) 191 Cal. App. 3d 1341, 1350, 1352-1353, 235 Cal. Rptr. 228).

[Optional] C. Injury to Indirect Purchasers. Injury to a class of indirect purchasers of price-fixed goods can be proven on a class-wide basis when the product ultimately sold to the consumer was largely unchanged in form from the price-fixing manufacturer to the indirect purchaser, and therefore, in the vast majority of cases, at least a portion of the illegal overcharge was "passed on" to class members in the form of higher prices (B.W.I. Custom Kitchen v. Owens-Illinois, Inc. (1987) 191 Cal. App. 3d 1341, 1352-1353, 235 Cal. Rptr. 228).

D. Individual Damages Issues Do Not Overshadow Common Issues. In a class action alleging a price-fixing conspiracy, the mere presence of separate individual damages issues does not overshadow issues common to the class when the class members were likely to have kept records of purchases, the size of the class is manageable, and a bifurcated trial or division into subclasses or other methods can be employed to simplify the proceedings (B.W.I. Custom Kitchen v. Owens-Illinois, Inc. (1987) 191 Cal. App. 3d 1341, 1354, 235 Cal. Rptr. 228).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of the plaintiff's contention that a class action is proper, in that it alleges a price-fixing conspiracy under either the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 16700-16770) or California's unfair competition statutes (Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 17200-17208), or both, and a community of interest exists sufficient to permit determination of the issues of the existence, implementation, and effect of the alleged conspiracy.

This form may be combined, when appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to invoke the contention [see § 41.30 (supporting a motion to certify), § 41.33 (opposing a motion to decertify), § 41.35 (opposing a demurrer that claims that class action treatment is not appropriate)].

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should refer to facts showing that all of the various products purchased by class members and distribution patterns involving class members are embraced by the allegations pleaded in the complaint. In addition, counsel should refer to facts showing that class members were likely to have kept records and that the size of the class is manageable.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Existence of Conspiracy Is Common Issue

In B.W.I. Custom Kitchen v. Owens-Illinois, Inc. (1987) 191 Cal. App. 3d 1341, 235 Cal. Rptr. 228 , a business that bought its food jars from an independent distributor brought a class action against a group of glass container manufacturers, alleging they engaged in a conspiracy to set noncompetitive prices for glass containers in violation of the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 16700-16770) and state unfair competition statutes (Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 17200-17208). Plaintiff sought certification of a class of several thousand California businesses that indirectly purchased glass containers from defendant manufacturers and paid inflated prices because of defendants' alleged price-fixing conspiracy. Like plaintiff, members of the proposed class had purchased the containers from independent distributors, who purchased them from defendants and other glass container manufacturers. The trial court refused to certify the class, holding that common questions of law and fact did not predominate over questions affecting only individual class members. The trial court determined that the alleged conspiracy was not susceptible of class-wide proof, because defendants manufactured different kinds of glass containerseventually purchased by many different kinds of businesses; the alleged price increase paid by indirect purchasers was too remote from the source of the overcharge and too individualized to be susceptible of class-wide proof; and, even if liability were shown, individual questions predominated with respect to factual determination of damages. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that action could proceed on a class-wide basis because the common, predominant issue central to the action was the existence, implementation, and effect of the alleged conspiracy. The court recognized that individual issues existed: the different type of glass containers involved in the alleged conspiracy, the different pricing policies of the independent distributors, and the difficulties in proving the precise amount of overcharge that was "passed on" to each class member. Nevertheless, the court held that they did not present a predominant core of individual questions (191 Cal. App. 3d 1341, 1355) . Addressing the question of the existence of the conspiracy, the court reasoned that the proof required to demonstrate defendants' conspiratorial agreements was the same regardless of whether plaintiff purchased food jars or wine bottles. The court held that the trial court should look past surface distinctions among the products purchased by class members or the marketing mechanisms involved when allegations of anticompetitive behavior embracing all of the various products and distribution patterns have been credibly pleaded (191 Cal. App. 3d 1341, 1349-1350) .

[b] Injury to Class Members Is Common Issue

The factual and procedural background of B.W.I. Custom Kitchen v. Owens-Illinois, Inc. (1987) 191 Cal. App. 3d 1341, 235 Cal. Rptr. 228 , is discussed in § 41.43[3][a]. Rejecting the trial court's determination that injury could only be proved on a highly individualized basis, the court of appeal held that when a conspiracy to fix prices is proven and plaintiffs establish they purchased the price-fixed goods, injury to the plaintiffs can be inferred by a jury, even when prices for the goods are individually negotiated. Therefore, the issue of injury usually can be proven on a class-wide basis (191 Cal. App. 3d, 1341, 1350-1353) .

[c] Injury to Indirect Purchasers

The factual and procedural background of B.W.I. Custom Kitchen v. Owens-Illinois, Inc. (1987) 191 Cal. App. 3d 1341, 235 Cal. Rptr. 228 , is discussed in § 41.43[3][a]. Defendants contended that the necessity of tracing the allegedly price-fixed product through the chain of distribution to indirect purchasers presented such complex individual issues that injury could not be proven on a class-wide basis (191 Cal. App. 3d 1341, 1346-1347) . The court of appeal acknowledged that to prove injury, class members would have to establish that the independent distributors "passed on" defendant's illegal overcharges to them in the form of higherprices for glass containers (191 Cal. App. 3d 1341, 1351) . However, the court found that the class could show on a generalized basis that its members absorbed at least some portion of the alleged overcharges because the product ultimately sold to the consumer was largely unchanged in form from the price-fixing manufacturer to the indirect purchaser (191 Cal. App. 3d 1341, 1352) . The court further held that even if it were shown that certain class members escaped having to pay any of the overcharge because of their superior market positions, if in the vast majority of cases at least a portion of the illegal overcharge was passed on by the independent distributors to class members in the form of higher prices, the issue of injury could be proven on a class-wide basis (191 Cal. App. 3d 1341, 1353) . In the instant case, plaintiff showed that each distributor whose deposition had been taken testified that price increases by the defendant manufacturers were completely passed on to plaintiff and the members of the class (191 Cal. App. 3d 1341, 1352 n.8).

[d] Individual Damages Issues Do Not Overshadow Common Issues

The factual and procedural background of B.W.I. Custom Kitchen v. Owens-Illinois, Inc. (1987) 191 Cal. App. 3d 1341, 235 Cal. Rptr. 228 , is discussed in § 41.43[3][a]. The court of appeal held that the problem of ascertaining individual damages does not preclude class action when the parties are business entities that presumably kept records, the size of the class (several thousand members) is manageable, and bifurcated trial or division into subclasses or other methods could be employed to simplify the proceedings (191 Cal. App. 3d 1341, 1354) .

[1] FORM Supporting Contention That Class Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 382] Proper--Community of Interest Among Class Members--Neither Common Fund Nor Request for Common Relief Is Essential to Establish Community of Interest

[The following may be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities in support of a motion to certify an action as a class action (see, e.g., § 41.30). The following may also be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities opposing a demurrer to a complaint on the ground that class action treatment is not appropriate (see, e.g., § 41.35).]

THIS ACTION IS A PROPER CLASS ACTION BECAUSE PLAINTIFF NEED NOT SHOW THE EXISTENCE OF A COMMON FUNDOR REQUEST COMMON RELIEF IN ORDER TO SATISFY THE COMMUNITY OF INTEREST REQUIREMENT.

A. Ascertainable Class and Community of Interest in Questions of Law and Fact Essential for Proper Class Action. [See § 41.36, Paragraph A.]

B. Common Fund or Common Relief Not Required. It is not essential to the establishment of a class action that a common fund exist (Daar v. Yellow Cab Co. (1967) 67 Cal. 2d 695, 707, 63 Cal. Rptr. 724, 433 P.2d 732). Nor is the seeking of common relief required in order to establish a community of interest (see Richmond v. Dart Industries, Inc. (1981) 29 Cal. 3d 462, 477, 174 Cal. Rptr. 515, 629 P.2d 23 ; Daar v. Yellow Cab Co. (1967) 67 Cal. 2d 695, 707, 63 Cal. Rptr. 724, 433 P.2d 732).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of plaintiff's contention that an action is properly maintained as a class action.

This argument may be made in response to defendant's contention that class action treatment is not proper because plaintiff has failed to show the existence of a common fund or to request common relief on behalf of the class, and thus, has not satisfied the community of interest requirement. The argument may also be made in anticipation of such a contention by defendant.

This form may be combined, where appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to invoke the contention. A plaintiff might make an argument supported by this memorandum under the following circumstances: (1) when supporting a motion to certify an action as a proper class action (see, e.g., § 41.30); (2) when opposing a motion by the defendant to declare an action inappropriate as a class action; (3) when opposing a motion by the defendant to decertify the class (see, e.g., § 41.33); and (4) when opposing a demurrer to the complaint on the ground that class action treatment is not appropriate (see, e.g., § 41.35). This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Common Fund or Common Relief Not Required

The facts and procedural background of Daar v. Yellow Cab Co. (1967) 67 Cal. 2d 695, 63 Cal. Rptr. 724, 433 P.2d 732 , are discussed in § 41.36[3][a]. The Court in Daar held that the representative plaintiffs must show an ascertainable class and a well-defined community of interest in the questions of law and fact affecting the parties to be represented in order to sustain a class action (67 Cal. 2d 695, 704) .

In discussing the community of interest requirement, the Court rejected defendant's contention that class members must request a common remedy (67 Cal. 2d 695, 707) . The Court noted that as a practical matter, a requirement of common relief has no compelling importance and its absence presents no insuperable difficulties. In addition, the Court stated that a determination of the interest of each class member in any damages recovered does not seem dissimilar to a determination of each member's interest in a common trust fund, which is sometimes required after the common issues have been resolved in a class action. Only at the final stages of litigation, the Court continued, do the individual interests become critical and does the community of interest requirement lose significance. Thus, the court concluded, it is not unusual for class actions to involve subsidiary questions wherein individuals contest issues among themselves after common questions as to basic liability have been settled (67 Cal. 2d 695, 709) .

The Court in Daar, relying on prior appellate court decisions, also noted that a common fund is not essential to the establishment of a class action. The Court stated that under proper circumstances, the existence of a common fund is merely one way to satisfy the community of interest requirement (67 Cal. 2d 695, 707) .

The facts and procedural background of Richmond v. Dart Industries, Inc. (1981) 29 Cal. 3d 462, 174 Cal. Rptr. 515, 629 P.2d 23 , are discussed in § 41.36[3][b]. In Richmond, the Court held that a class of subdivision lot owners was ascertainable and had established the requisite community of interest for maintaining an action against the developer for compensatory and punitive damages, rescission, declaratory relief, and the creation of a constructive trust (29 Cal. 3d 462, 479) . Relying on Daar v. Yellow Cab Co. (1967) 67 Cal. 2d 695, 707, 63 Cal. Rptr. 724, 433 P.2d 732 (discussed in § 41.36[3][a]), the Court noted that because the seeking of common relief is no longer a prerequisite to a class suit, a prayer for relief that included rescission and a request for punitive damages should not bar certification of the action as a proper class action (29 Cal. 3d 462, 477) .

[1] FORM Supporting Contention That Class Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 382] Proper--Community of Interest Among Class Members--Mere Separate Transactions Do Not Preclude Finding Requisite Community of Interest When Class Members Not Required to Litigate Numerous and Substantial Individual Questions

[The following may be combined with a general form of memorandum in support of a motion to certify an action as a class action (see, e.g., § 41.30). The following may also be combined with a general form of memorandum opposing a demurrer to a complaint on the ground that class action treatment is not appropriate (see, e.g., § 41.35).]

THIS ACTION IS A PROPER CLASS ACTION BECAUSE MERE SEPARATE TRANSACTIONS DO NOT PRECLUDE A FINDING OF THE REQUISITE COMMUNITY OF INTEREST SO LONG AS CLASS MEMBERS WOULD NOT BE REQUIRED TO LITIGATE NUMEROUS AND SUBSTANTIAL QUESTIONS TO DETERMINE THEIR INDIVIDUAL RIGHTS TO RECOVER FOLLOWING A JUDGMENT DETERMINING THE COMMON CLASS ISSUES.

A. Ascertainable Class and Community of Interest in Questions of Law and Fact Essential for Proper Class Action. [See § 41.36, Paragraph A.]

B. Absence of Numerous and Substantial Individual Questions. The mere fact that a class action involves separate transactions does not of itself preclude a finding of the requisite community of interest so long as every member of the alleged class would not be required to litigate numerous and substantial questions to determine his or her individual right to recover, subsequent to the rendering of any class judgment which determined in plaintiffs' favor whatever questions were common to the class (Sav-on Drug Stores, Inc. v. Superior Court (2004) 34 Cal. 4th 319, 332-340, 17 Cal. Rptr. 3d 906, 96 P.3d 194 ; Vasquez v. Superior Court (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 800, 809, 94 Cal. Rptr. 796, 484 P.2d 964 ; see Gattuso v. Harte-Hanks Shoppers, Inc. (2007) 42 Cal. 4th 554, 576, 67 Cal. Rptr. 3d 468, 169 P.3d 889 ; see also Capitol People First v. Department of Developmental Servs. (2007) 155 Cal. App. 4th 676, 694-696, 66 Cal. Rptr. 3d 300 ; Estrada v. FedEx Ground Package Sys., Inc. (2007) 154 Cal. App. 4th 1, 13-14, 64 Cal. Rptr. 3d 327).

[Optional] C. Separate Proof of Damages or Other Remedy. That each class member must ultimately prove his or her separate claim to a portion of any recovery by the class, or that the court may fashion different remedies for individual class members based on the applicability of equitable defenses, does not necessarily preclude the maintenance of a class action (Vasquez v. Superior Court (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 800, 815, 94 Cal. Rptr. 796, 484 P.2d 964 ; Daar v. Yellow Cab Co. (1967) 67 Cal. 2d 695, 713, 63 Cal. Rptr. 724, 433 P.2d 732 ; Ticconi v. Blue Shield of Cal. Life & Health Ins. Co. (2008) 160 Cal. App. 4th 528, 543-546, 72 Cal. Rptr. 3d 888).

The foregoing form may be submitted in support of plaintiff's contention that an action is properly maintained as a class action. This argument may be made in response to defendant's contention that class action treatment is not appropriate because the class members' claims involve separate transactions. The argument may also be made in anticipation of such a contention by defendant.

This form may be combined, as appropriate, with forms relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to invoke the contention. A plaintiff mightmake an argument supported by this memorandum under the following circumstances: (1) when supporting a motion to certify an action as a proper class action (see, e.g., § 41.30); (2) when opposing a motion by the defendant to declare an action inappropriate as a class action; (3) when opposing a motion by the defendant to decertify the class (see, e.g., § 41.33); and (4) when opposing a demurrer to the complaint on the ground that class action treatment is not appropriate (see, e.g., § 41.35). The foregoing form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Counsel should refer to facts showing that although separate transactions are involved, each class member would not be required to litigate numerous and substantial questions subsequent to a class judgment determining class issues.

[b] Opposing Memoranda

The form set out in § 41.53 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a contention supported by this memorandum.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Absence of Numerous and Substantial Individual Questions

In Sav-on Drug Stores, Inc. v. Superior Court (2004) 34 Cal. 4th 319, 17 Cal. Rptr. 3d 906, 96 P.3d 194 , the plaintiffs sued their employer, for themselves and a class of fellow employees, alleging a violation of overtime-wage requirements. The trial court granted the plaintiffs' motion for class certification. The court of appeal then issued a writ of mandate commanding the trial court to deny class certification, and the Supreme Court granted review.

The Supreme Court reversed the judgment of the court of appeal and held that class certification was appropriate. The specific issue before the Supreme Court was whether the trial court erred in concluding that common issues predominated. The defendant argued that individual issues predominated because whether any individual member of the class was exempt or nonexempt from the overtime requirements depended on which tasks that person actually performed and the amount of time actually spent on given tasks. The Supreme Court rejected this argument, explaining that the "predominant common questions" factor does not require that all class members have uniform or identical claims (34 Cal. 4th 319, 338) , and a class action is not inappropriate simply because each class member may at some point be required to make an individual showing of eligibility for recovery or amount of damages. Rather, to determine whether common questions predominate, a court must compare the costs and benefits of adjudicating the plaintiffs' claims in a class action with the costs and benefits of proceeding by numerous separate actions (34 Cal. 4th 319, 332-334, 339 n.10). In this case, the theory of recovery advanced by the plaintiffs was based largely on the defendant's class-wide policies and practices. Therefore, many of the issues likely to be most vigorously contested in this case were common ones. Absent class treatment, each individual plaintiff would be required to present in separate, duplicative proceedings the same, or essentially the same, arguments and evidence, including expert testimony. The result would be a multiplicity of trials conducted at enormous expense to both the judicial system and the litigants. Accordingly, the Supreme Court concluded that the trial court had not abused its discretion in finding that common issues predominated (34 Cal. 4th 319, 340) .

The facts and procedural background of Vasquez v. Superior Court (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 800, 94 Cal. Rptr. 796, 484 P.2d 964 , are discussed in § 41.34[3][c]. In Vasquez, the Supreme Court held that the representative plaintiffs had stated facts sufficient to show an ascertainable class and a community of interest in an action seeking rescission of installment contracts because of fraudulent misrepresentation (4 Cal. 3d 800, 815) . Relying on Daar v. Yellow Cab Co. (1967) 67 Cal. 2d 695, 63 Cal. Rptr. 724, 433 P.2d 732 (discussed in § 41.36[3][a]), the Court stated that the mere fact that separate transactions are involved does not of itself preclude a finding of the requisite community of interest so long as every member of the alleged class would not be required to litigate numerous and substantial questions to determine his or her individual right to recover, subsequent to the rendering of any class judgment which determined in plaintiffs' favor whatever questions were common to the class (4 Cal. 3d 800, 809) .

In Gattuso v. Harte-Hanks Shoppers, Inc. (2007) 42 Cal. 4th 554, 67 Cal. Rptr. 3d 468, 169 P.3d 889 , the plaintiffs sued their employer on behalf of a class of outside sales representatives, claiming that the defendant's payment of increased wages or commissions did not satisfy the employer's obligation to reimburse its employees for automobile expenses incurred in carrying out employment duties (see Lab. Code § 2802(a)). The trial court denied class certification, finding that the plaintiffs' claims would turn on individualized determinations of (1) whether each sales representative had an agreement about the manner in which he or she would be compensated for automobile expenses, and (2) whether the compensation paid to each sales representative was reasonable.

The Supreme Court reversed and remanded for reconsideration of the class-certification issue. The Court emphasized that the defendant claimed that it had fulfilled its reimbursement obligation by paying the outside sales representatives higher commission rates and higher base salaries than it paid to other sales representatives. The Court therefore instructed the trial court to consider whether the following questions were appropriate for resolution on a class-wide basis: (1) whether the defendant had adopted a practice or policy of reimbursing outside sales representatives for automobile expenses by paying them higher commission rates and base salaries than it paid to inside sales representatives; if so, (2) whether the defendant established a method to apportion the enhanced compensation payments between compensation for labor performed and expense reimbursement, and (3) whether the amount paid for expense reimbursement was sufficient to fully reimburse the employees for the automobile expenses they reasonably and necessarily incurred (42 Cal. 4th 554, 576) .

In Capitol People First v. Department of Developmental Servs. (2007) 155 Cal. App. 4th 676, 66 Cal. Rptr. 3d 300 , the plaintiffs sought certification of a class consisting of all California residents who had developmental disabilities and who were institutionalized or at risk of being institutionalized in congregate residential facilitieswith a capacity of 16 or more individuals. The action sought to enforce class members' rights, under the Lanterman Developmental Disabilities Services Act, to live in least restrictive community settings (see Welf. & Inst. Code § 4500 et seq.). Specifically, the action focused on the systemic failure of state agencies and regional centers to provide proper oversight of the placement of class members. Only injunctive and declaratory relief were sought. The trial court denied class certification, holding that the plaintiffs had failed to demonstrate commonality, adequacy of class representation, and the superiority of proceeding as a class action.

The court of appeal reversed. Regarding commonality, the appellate court cited Sav-on Drug Stores, Inc. v. Superior Court (2004) 34 Cal. 4th 319, 17 Cal. Rptr. 3d 906, 96 P.3d 194 , discussed above, for the principle that the community-of-interest requirement does not require that all class members have uniform or identical claims. In this case, the plaintiffs were not seeking individual relief for each class member; rather, they sought systemic relief by compelling state and local entities to implement policies and procedures that would allow class members to receive the least restrictive, most integrated residential placements consistent with their needs and choices. In support of certification and the underlying assertion that proof of systemic deficits in the defendants' policies and practices was amenable to class treatment, the plaintiffs submitted pattern-and-practice evidence including testimony from the defendants about their policies and practices, admissions by the defendants, documents, statistics, expert testimony, and sampling. For example, challenging the legal sufficiency of the process of assessing class members' needs, the plaintiffs identified as a common factual issue whether the defendants used proper standards and criteria for conducting the assessments. They presented expert testimony and deposition testimony from the ranks of defendants' professionals on that point (155 Cal. App. 4th 676, 694) .

The court of appeal held that the plaintiffs' approach--to focus initially on evidence of the defendants' patterns and practices--was proper, and that the plaintiffs' pattern-and-practice evidence had indeed demonstrated sufficient commonality of legal and factual issues. Thus, the trial court erred in assuming that significant individual inquiries would be necessary to provide class relief. Citing Sav-on and other precedents, the court of appeal noted that courts have approved the use of statistics, sampling, policies, administrative practices, anecdotal evidence, deposition testimony, and the like to prove classwide behavior on the part of defendants (155 Cal. App. 4th 676, 695-696) . Moreover, at the class-certification stage, it was not the trial court's role to determine whether the plaintiffs' experts and evidence will ultimately be more persuasive than the defendants' experts and evidence. Rather, the focus at the class-certification stage is whether the evidence the plaintiffs will offer is sufficiently generalized in nature to make class treatment suitable (155 Cal. App. 4th 676, 696) .

In Estrada v. FedEx Ground Package Sys., Inc. (2007) 154 Cal. App. 4th 1, 64 Cal. Rptr. 3d 327 , the plaintiffs sued on behalf of a class of drivers who worked for the defendant delivery service. The plaintiffs sought to recover reimbursement of work-related expenses under Lab. Code § 2802(a), which makes an employer liable for business expenses incurred by employees. A major issue in the case was whether the defendant treated the drivers as employees even though the parties' "Operating Agreement" characterized the drivers as independent contractors. On appeal, the defendant contended, among other things, that class certification was inappropriate because individual facts predominated over common issues. Specifically, the defendant argued that the drivers had presented "anecdotal evidence"--i.e., individual facts--about the defendant's treatment of individual drivers to establish that those individuals were treated as employees. The court of appeal rejected this argument and affirmed the trial court's certification order (154 Cal. App. 4th 1, 13-14) .

The court of appeal explained that it was clear that common issues--whether the drivers were employees and, if so, which expenses would be reimbursable--predominated. The anecdotal evidence was admitted to show the defendant's power to apply the Operating Agreement so as to treat the drivers as employees, and thus it was relevant to the class as a whole, not just to the individual who happened to be the subject of a particular anecdote. Under these circumstances, therefore, the use of anecdotal evidence did not establish that individual issues predominated (154 Cal. App. 4th 1, 14) .

[b] Separate Proof of Damages or Other Remedy

The facts and procedural background of Vasquez v. Superior Court (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 800, 94 Cal. Rptr. 796, 484 P.2d 964 , are discussed in § 41.34[3][c]. In Vasquez, the Supreme Court held that the representative plaintiffs had stated facts sufficient to show an ascertainable class and a community of interest in an action seeking rescission of installment contracts because of fraudulent misrepresentation (4 Cal. 3d 800, 815) . Relying on Daar v. Yellow Cab Co. (1967) 67 Cal. 2d 695, 63 Cal. Rptr. 724, 433 P.2d 732 (discussed in § 41.36[3][a]), in discussing the community of interest requirement, the Court noted that although ultimately each class member will be required in some manner to establish his or her individual damages, this circumstance does not preclude the maintenance of the suit as a class action (4 Cal. 3d 800, 809, 815) .

The facts and procedural background of Daar v. Yellow Cab Co. (1967) 67 Cal. 2d 695, 63 Cal. Rptr. 724, 433 P.2d 732 , are discussed in § 41.36[3][a]. In Daar, the Supreme Court held that the representative plaintiffs must show an ascertainable class and well-defined community of interest in the questions of law and fact affecting the parties to be represented in order to sustain a class action (67 Cal. 2d 695, 704) . In discussing the community of interest requirement, the Court noted that the fact that each individual must ultimately prove his or her separate claim to a portion of any recovery by the class is only one factor to be considered in determining whether a class action is proper (67 Cal. 2d 695, 713) .

In Ticconi v. Blue Shield of Cal. Life & Health Ins. Co. (2008) 160 Cal. App. 4th 528, 72 Cal. Rptr. 3d 888 , the plaintiff sued a health-insurance provider under the Unfair Competition Law (UCL) (Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq.), alleging that the defendant had unlawfully engaged in postclaims underwriting by rescinding the plaintiff's and other disability insurance policies based on alleged misrepresentations in the applications for insurance (see Ins. Code § 10384 ("postclaims underwriting" means the rescinding, canceling, or limiting of policy due to insurer's failure to complete medical underwriting and resolve all reasonable questions arising from written information submitted on or with application before issuing the policy)). Thetrial court denied the plaintiff's motion for class certification on the ground that the defendant's defenses of fraud and unclean hands raised individual issues that predominated over the common issues related to liability. The plaintiff appealed, and the court of appeal reversed.

The court of appeal noted that the defendant had issued class members' insurance policies without attaching to them, or endorsing on them, the applications for insurance. The court found this significant because the Insurance Code prohibits incorporating an application into a disability insurance policy by reference unless it is endorsed upon or attached to the policy when issued (Ins. Code § 10113). If a copy of an application for a policy is not attached to or endorsed on the policy when the policy is issued, then the insured is not bound by statements made in that application (Ins. Code § 10381.5). Thus, an insurer may not invoke the defense of misrepresentations or omissions in an application that was not attached to or endorsed on the policy (160 Cal. App. 4th 528, 540-541) .

The court of appeal found that the liability issues in this case--whether the defendant had rescinded policies after claims were filed based on statements made in insurance applications that were not attached to or endorsed on the policies--were universal to all class members, with the result that common issues of law and fact would predominate on the question of liability (160 Cal. App. 4th 528, 543) . The appellate court rejected the trial court's rationale for denying class certification, that issues concerning the defenses of fraud and unclean hands outweighed those related to liability. The appellate court explained that the equitable defense of unclean hands is not a defense to an unfair trade or business practices claim based on a statutory violation such as the violations of the Insurance Code alleged in this case. Accordingly, the defendant could not raise the unclean-hands defense to defeat the motion for class certification. Similarly, because class members were not bound by statements made in applications that were not attached to or endorsed on the policies, fraud was not available as a defense to defeat class certification. Thus, although the trial court could fashion different equitable remedies for individual class members based on the defenses of unclean hands or fraud (see Bus. & Prof. Code § 17203), those defenses did not prevent class certification on the question of the defendant's liability (160 Cal. App. 4th 528, 543-546) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Absence of Numerous and Substantial Individual Questions

In La Sala v. American Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1971) 5 Cal. 3d 864, 97 Cal. Rptr. 849, 489 P.2d 1113 (discussed in § 41.46[3][a]), a class action seeking to declare an acceleration clause in defendant's form of trust deed invalid as a restraint on alienation, the Supreme Court reversed the trial court's dismissal in favor of the defendant. The Court held that plaintiffs' claim that the trust deeds were adhesive contracts did not per se negate a finding of community of interest and make the suit unfit for class litigation (5 Cal. 3d 864, 876-877) . The Court noted that controversies involving contracts of adhesion present ideal cases for class adjudication because the contracts are uniform, the same principles of interpretation apply to each contract, and all members of the class will share a common interest in the interpretation. The Court rejected the defendant's assumption that proof of the adhesive character of the trust deed would necessarily require the individual testimony of each borrower. The Court noted, however, that the trial court would need to determine whether or not the facts presented individualized issues and evidence (5 Cal. 3d 864, 877) .

In Mendoza v. Tulare County (1982) 128 Cal. App. 3d 403, 180 Cal. Rptr. 347 , a class action by a group of prisoners seeking injunctive and declaratory relief with respect to adverse jail conditions, the court of appeal reversed the trial court's decision dismissing the class action allegations on defendant's demurrer to the complaint (128 Cal. App. 3d 403, 419) . The trial court had ruled that the community of interest necessary for a class action was lacking because each prisoner would be required to litigate factual and legal issues peculiar to his own case (128 Cal. App. 3d 403, 416) . In reversing the trial court, the court of appeal noted that although the complaint revealed some questions of fact and law that were inapplicable to the class as a whole, common questions substantially outweighed the individual issues. In addition, the court concluded that each member of the class would not be required to litigate numerous and substantial questions in order to establish a right to the remedy sought. The court reasoned that if the trial court ultimately found statutory and/or constitutional violations, declaratory and injunctive relief would lie to redress violations common to the class even though some violations applied only to individuals. Individual damages to class members did not present a problem, the court noted, because the complaint sought only declaratory and injunctive relief (128 Cal. App. 3d 403, 418) .

In Cavanaugh v. California (1978) 85 Cal. App. 3d 354, 149 Cal. Rptr. 453 , a class action by tenants within a redevelopment area seeking relocation benefits, the court of appeal reversed the trial court's dismissal of the class action allegations. The court held that the plaintiffs' complaint had stated the essential elements to support a class suit. The court stated that the class was limited, easily ascertainable, and revealed a readily identifiable community of interest (85 Cal. App. 3d 354, 360) . The court noted that proof of expenses in at least some of the plaintiff groups could easily be computed after liability was established, and that the class proceeding under the circumstances would foster and accomplish substantial judicial economy (85 Cal. App. 3d 354, 360-361) .

[b] Proof of Separate Damages

See also MacManus v. A. E. Realty Partners (1987) 195 Cal. App. 3d 1106, 1117, 241 Cal. Rptr. 315 , discussed in § 41.42[3][a].

In B.W.I. Custom Kitchen v. Owens-Illinois, Inc. (1987) 191 Cal. App. 3d 1341, 235 Cal. Rptr. 228 , the court of appeal reversed an order refusing certification of a class of indirect purchasers of glass containers. The complaint against numerous defendants alleged a price-fixing conspiracy. The trial court found that common questions did not predominate. The court of appeal said that most courts hold that when a conspiracy to fixprices has been alleged, common questions predominate over any questions affecting individual members only (191 Cal. App. 3d 1341, 1348-1354) . Evidence proving the conspiracy will concentrate on the relationship among the alleged conspirators (191 Cal. App. 3d 1341, 1348-1354) . Because price fixing is a per se violation of both California and federal anti-trust laws, once a conspiracy to fix prices is proved, injury to plaintiffs who purchased the price-fixed goods or services is inferred. Accordingly, impact or injury can be treated as a common question for certification purposes (191 Cal. App. 3d 1341, 1348-1354) . The presence of individual damage issues cannot bar certification (191 Cal. App. 3d 1341, 1348-1354) .

[The following may be combined with memoranda relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to invoke the contention. For example, the following may be combined with a general form of memorandum opposing a demurrer to a complaint on the ground that class action treatment is not appropriate (see, e.g., § 41.35).]

THIS ACTION IS PROPERLY MAINTAINED AS A CLASS ACTION BECAUSE PLAINTIFF'S NONMEMBERSHIP IN THE CLASS DUE TO AN ARBITRARY AND INADVERTENT MISDEFINITION DOES NOT CONSTITUTE GROUNDS FOR DISMISSAL WHEN AN ORDER OF DISMISSAL WOULD IN EFFECT DENY THE OPPORTUNITY TO CORRECT THE DEFECT BY AMENDING THE COMPLAINT.

Plaintiff's Nonmembership in Class. The plaintiff's nonmembership in the class because of an arbitrary and inadvertent misdefinition does not constitute grounds for dismissal if the error can readily be corrected by amending the complaint (La Sala v. American Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1971) 5 Cal. 3d 864, 875-876, 97 Cal. Rptr. 849, 489 P.2d 1113 ; LaLiberte v. Pacific Mercantile Bank (2007) 147 Cal. App. 4th 1, 6-8, 53 Cal. Rptr. 3d 745).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of plaintiff's contention that an action is properly maintained as a class action. This argument may be made in response to defendant's contention that class action treatment is not proper because the class has been defined to exclude the named plaintiff as a member. The argument may also be made in anticipation of such a contention by defendant.

This form may be combined, when appropriate, with memoranda relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to invoke the contention. A plaintiff might make an argument supported by this memorandum under the following circumstances: (1) when opposing a motion by the defendant to declare an action inappropriate as a class action; (2) when opposing a motion by the defendant to decertify the class (see, e.g., § 41.33); and (3) when opposing a demurrer to the complaint on the ground that class action treatment is not appropriate (see, e.g., § 41.35). This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Counsel should refer to facts showing that the class was inadvertently misdefined to exclude plaintiff as a member. Counsel should also include facts showing that the error can be corrected by an amendment to the complaint.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff's Nonmembership in Class

La Sala v. American Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1971) 5 Cal. 3d 864, 97 Cal. Rptr. 849, 489 P.2d 1113 , was a class action seeking to declare an acceleration clause in defendant's form of trust deed invalid as a restraint on alienation. Defendant demurred to the complaint, but prior to a hearing on the demurrer, defendant's counsel offered to waive the acceleration clause as to the named plaintiffs. The trial court then ordered the matter placed off its calendar for lack of a justiciable issue. Subsequently, the court granted defendant's motion to dismiss for lack of a representative party. Plaintiffs had opposed the dismissal without prior notice to the class. After the dismissal, plaintiffs filed their appeal.

The Supreme Court reversed the order dismissing the class action, holding that a waiver of the acceleration clause as to the named plaintiffs did not mechanically render them unfit per se to represent the class (5 Cal. 3d 864, 871) . The Court rejected defendant's argument that the action failed because plaintiffs had never been members of the class defined in the complaint (5 Cal. 3d 864, 874) . Plaintiffs did not fall within the confines of the class as defined in their complaint due to an error by their counsel (5 Cal. 3d 864, 875, 875 n.9).

In rejecting defendant's argument, the Court noted that prior appellate cases uniformly hold that a plaintiff seeking to maintain a class action must be a member of the class he or she claims to represent. This requirement derives from the principle that joinder of plaintiffs in a class action should consist of those sharing a well-defined community of interest in the questions of law and fact involved (5Cal. 3d 864, 875) . In the present case, plaintiffs' nonmembership in the class stemmed not from the lack of a community of interest between the plaintiffs, but from arbitrary and inadvertent limitation of the class (5 Cal. 3d 864, 875) . The Court concluded that the action should not be dismissed because the error could readily be corrected by an amendment to the complaint (5 Cal. 3d 864, 875-876) .

In LaLiberte v. Pacific Mercantile Bank (2007) 147 Cal. App. 4th 1, 53 Cal. Rptr. 3d 745 , the plaintiffs initially asserted only individual claims, alleging that the defendant bank had violated the Truth in Lending Act (TILA) (15 U.S.C. § 1601 et seq.). The plaintiffs' suit was filed in May 2003, based on alleged TILA violations in connection with the plaintiffs' refinancing of their home loans in April 2002. On November 21, 2003, the plaintiffs amended their complaint to include class allegations; after further amendment, the complaint defined the class as including persons who had obtained certain loans from the defendant "from November 21, 2002, to the present." (The November 21, 2002, date was determined by applying the one-year statute of limitations period for seeking statutory damages under TILA, 15 U.S.C. § 1640(e), to the date on which the complaint first included class allegations.) The trial court sustained the defendant's demurrer to the class allegations, and refused to grant the plaintiffs leave to amend, on the sole ground that the plaintiffs were not members of the class they purported to represent, since their refinancing transaction had occurred before the November 21, 2002, date specified in the class definition. The trial court's ruling did not affect the plaintiffs' individual claims.

The court of appeal reversed. The court acknowledged that the plaintiffs alleged that they obtained their loans in April 2002 and defined the class members as those obtaining loans after November 21, 2002. However, the complaint alleged the same TILA violations as to both the named plaintiffs and the class members. Because the loan dates did not in any way affect the community of interest alleged between the named plaintiffs and class members, the court of appeal concluded that they were of no significance. For example, the plaintiffs could amend their complaint to define the class as including the named plaintiffs plus all persons who had obtained the relevant loans from the defendant "from November 21, 2002, to the present." The court emphasized that in this case the named plaintiffs' adequacy as class representatives derived from the community of interest in the law and facts involved in the case, not merely because of the addition of their names to the class definition. Accordingly, the court of appeal concluded that the trial court had abused its discretion in denying the plaintiffs leave to amend the class definition (147 Cal. App. 4th 1, 6-8) .

[The following may be combined with memoranda relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to invoke the contention. For example, the following may be combined with a general form of memorandum opposing a demurrer to a complaint on the ground that class action treatment is not appropriate (see, e.g., § 41.35).]

THIS ACTION IS PROPERLY MAINTAINED AS A CLASS ACTION BECAUSE THERE IS A SUFFICIENT COMMUNITY OF INTEREST TO DEFINE A CLASS, AND THUS THERE IS NO STRICT REQUIREMENT TO HAVE A NAMED PLAINTIFF WITH AN INTEREST IN _____ [describe entities that are subjects of plaintiffs' action, e.g., EACH INDIVIDUAL REAL ESTATE LIMITED PARTNERSHIP] THAT IS ALLEGED TO HAVE RECEIVED FALSE OR MISLEADING SOLICITATION MATERIALS.

Community-of-Interest Requirement as Predominant. The community of interest defines the class, not whether each individual partnership has a former investor named as a plaintiff. When the representatives allege that a single prospectus was mailed to all the partnerships, and therefore the defendant's alleged misconduct is the single, common issue, then there is no strict requirement to have a named plaintiff with an interest in each individual partnership (Daniels v. Centennial Group, Inc. (1993) 16 Cal. App. 4th 467, 472-473, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1).

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of plaintiff's contention that an action is properly maintained as a class action. This argument may be made in response to defendant's contention that class action treatment is not proper because a named plaintiff does not have an interest in each individual partnership that is alleged to have received false or misleading solicitation material.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of the law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Community-of-Interest Requirement as Predominant

In Daniels v. Centennial Group, Inc. (1993) 16 Cal. App. 4th 467, 21 Cal.Rptr. 2d 1 , six real estate limited partnerships and other private companies were consolidated into a single corporate entity. Plaintiff representatives were former limited partners. Plaintiffs sued the former general partners and the new corporate entity on behalf of themselves and approximately 28,000 partnership investors for money damages or rescission of the consolidation. Plaintiffs alleged that the former general partners fraudulently induced approval of the consolidation by disseminating false and misleading solicitation materials, and issued to themselves a disproportionate share of stock in connection with the consolidation. The trial court denied plaintiffs' motions for class certification because (1) a possible conflict of interest was created when the representatives agreed to waive individual claims for rescission but those allegations remained in the complaint, and presumably applied to unnamed putative class members, and (2) none of the representatives had invested in one of the six partnerships. Plaintiffs appealed from the order denying class certification.

The appellate court ordered the certification to be granted, but also left the trial court the discretion to reexamine the propriety of certification, including the creation of subclasses or exclusion of certain class members if discovery warranted a reappraisal (16 Cal. App. 4th 467, 474) . In discussing the trial court's second ground for denial of certification, the appellate court referred to the well-known rule as state in La Sala v. American Sav. & Loan Assn. (1971) 5 Cal. 3d 864, 879, 97 Cal. Rptr. 849, 489 P.2d 1113 (discussed in § 41.46[3][a]), that a plaintiff seeking to maintain a class action must be a member of the class he or she claims to represent. But the requirement that the representative be a member of the class derives from the principle that joinder of plaintiffs in a class action should consist of those sharing a well-defined interest in the questions of law and factinvolved. Thus, it is the community of interest that defines the class, not whether each individual partnership has a former investor as a named plaintiff (16 Cal. App. 4th 467, 472-473) . The focus should be on the typicality rather than the number of partnerships. The representatives alleged that a single prospectus was mailed to all six partnerships, and therefore defendants' alleged misconduct was the single, pivotal, and common issue. There was a sufficient community of interest to define the class, and thus there was not strict requirement to have a named plaintiff with an interest in each individual partnership (16 Cal. App. 4th 467, 473) .

For discussion regarding whether a conflict of interest was created by waiver of the rescission claims, see § 41.49[3][d].

[The following may be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities in support of a motion to certify an action as a class action (see, e.g., § 41.30). The following may also be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities opposing a demurrer to a complaint on the ground that class action treatment is not appropriate (see, e.g., § 41.35).]

THIS REAL PROPERTY DAMAGE ACTION IS A PROPER CLASS ACTION BECAUSE A SUFFICIENT COMMUNITY OF INTEREST IS PRESENT AND DAMAGES MAY BE DETERMINED ON A CLASS BASIS WHEN THE DIMINISHED VALUE OF EACH PARCEL CAN BE CALCULATED ACCORDING TO A STANDARD FORMULA.

Damages to Real Property Determined on Class Basis. The mere fact that a dispute involves damages to real property presents no obstacle to finding a sufficient community of interest and determining damages on a class basis when the diminished value of each parcel can be calculated according to a standard formula (Occidental Land, Inc. v. Superior Court (1976) 18 Cal. 3d 355, 363-364, 134 Cal. Rptr. 388, 556 P.2d 750).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of plaintiff's contention that an action is properly maintained as a class action. This argument may be made in response to defendant's contention that class action treatment is not proper because damages with respect to real property may not be determined on a class basis due to factors unique with respect to each parcel. The argument may also be made in anticipation of such contention by defendant.

This form may be combined with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to invoke the contention. A plaintiff might make an argument supported by this memorandum under the following circumstances: (1) when supporting a motion to certify an action as a proper class action (see, e.g., § 41.30); (2) when opposing a motion by the defendant to declare an action inappropriate as a class action; (3) when opposing a motion by the defendant to decertify the class (see, e.g., § 41.33); and (4) when opposing a demurrer to the complaint on the ground that class action treatment is not appropriate (see, e.g., § 41.35). This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Counsel should refer to facts showing that damages can be calculated based on a standard formula applicable to all class members' parcels of land. Counsel should also point out that the questions of liability and damage would not vary with respect to each parcel of land.

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities set out in § 41.53 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a contention supported by this memorandum.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Damages to Real Property Determined on Class Basis

The facts and procedural background of Occidental Land, Inc. v. Superior Court (1976) 18 Cal. 3d 355, 134 Cal. Rptr. 388, 556 P.2d 750 , are discussed in § 41.32[3][a]. The Court in Occidental held that the trial court had not abused its discretion in refusing to decertify the action as a class action (18 Cal. 3d 355, 364) . The class of subdivision homeowners sought damages for the developer's allegedly fraudulent misrepresentation of the costs for maintaining the project. Relying on San Jose v. Superior Court (1974) 12 Cal. 3d 447, 115 Cal. Rptr. 797, 525 P.2d 701 , (discussed in § 41.49[3][a] and § 41.53[3][b]), defendant contended that damages could not be established on a common basis because each parcel of land was unique and the diminution in value attributable to each class member's property would depend on specific factors unique to each parcel (18 Cal. 3d 355, 363) .

In upholding the class action in Occidental, the Supreme Court distinguished the decision in San Jose. The Court noted that in San Jose, the plaintiffs had sought damages for diminution in the market value of real property located in the flight pattern of an airport. The questions of liability and damages varied with respect to each parcel according to its location relative to flight paths, the topography of the land, and the physical condition of each structure (18 Cal. 3d 355, 363) .

The Court noted that in contrast to San Jose, the problems of liability and the calculation of the diminished value of each parcel in Occidental did not depend on such variables because plaintiffs had not alleged damage to the land itself. Thus, the uniqueness of each parcel presented no obstacle to class treatment (18 Cal. 3d 355, 363) . The Court stated that plaintiffs had alleged a standard claim of fraudulent misrepresentations, the terms of which were common to the class, and further, that damages could be calculated according to a standard formula based on the difference between the promised maintenance costs and the actual costs subsequently required (18 Cal. 3d 355, 363-364, 134 Cal. Rptr. 388, 556 P.2d 750). Therefore, the Court concluded, the mere fact that the dispute involved the cost of maintaining real property presented no obstacle to a determination of damages on a class basis (18 Cal. 3d 355, 364) .

§ 41.49 Supporting Contention That Class Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 382] Proper--Named Plaintiffs Adequately Represent Interests of Absent Class Members--Representation Adequate Unless Conflict of Interest or Overwhelming Disapproval Within Class

[1] FORM Supporting Contention That Class Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 382] Proper--Named Plaintiffs Adequately Represent Interests of Absent Class Members--Representation Adequate Unless Conflict of Interest or Overwhelming Disapproval Within Class

[The following may be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities in support of a motion to certify an action as a class action (see, e.g., § 41.30). The following may also be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities opposing a demurrer to a complaint on the ground that class action treatment is not appropriate (see, e.g., § 41.35).]

REPRESENTATION OF THE CLASS BY THE NAMED PLAINTIFFS IN THIS ACTION IS ADEQUATE BECAUSE THERE IS NOCONFLICT OF INTEREST OR OVERWHELMING DISAPPROVAL OF THE LAWSUIT WITHIN THE CLASS THAT WOULD DEFEAT THE PURPOSE OF CLASS ADJUDICATION.

A. Named Plaintiff Must Adequately Represent Class. To maintain a class action, the representative plaintiff must adequately represent and protect the interests of other members of the class (San Jose v. Superior Court (1974) 12 Cal. 3d 447, 463, 115 Cal. Rptr. 797, 525 P.2d 701 ; Classen v. Weller (1983) 145 Cal. App. 3d 27, 46-47, 192 Cal. Rptr. 914).

B. Factors in Determining Adequacy of Representation. Adequacy of representation depends on whether or not the plaintiff's attorney is qualified to conduct the proposed litigation and whether or not plaintiff's interests are antagonistic to the interests of the class (McGhee v. Bank of America (1976) 60 Cal. App. 3d 442, 450, 131 Cal. Rptr. 482).

C. Representation Adequate Unless Conflict or Overwhelming Disapproval. The named plaintiffs' representation is adequate unless the defendants establish either a conflict of interest or overwhelming disapproval of the lawsuit within the class which would defeat the purpose of class adjudication (see Richmond v. Dart Industries, Inc. (1981) 29 Cal. 3d 462, 474-475, 174 Cal. Rptr. 515, 629 P.2d 23).

[Optional] D. Potential Conflict Does Not Warrant Denial of Certification. A potential, but not irreconcilable, conflict between the representatives and the class does not warrant denial of class certification for a whole action. If a conflict does arise, the trial court can create subclasses or exclude any members with conflicting claims (see Daniels v. Centennial Group, Inc. (1993) 16 Cal. App. 4th 467, 472, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of the named plaintiffs' contention that they adequately represent the interests of absent class members because there is neither a conflict of interest nor overwhelming disapproval of the lawsuit within the class which would defeat the purpose of class adjudication. This argument may also be made in response to defendant's contention, or in anticipation of the contention, that plaintiffs' representation is inadequate.

This form may be combined with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to invoke the contention. A plaintiff might make an argument supported by this memorandum under the following circumstances: (1) when supporting a motion to certify an action as a proper class action (see, e.g., § 41.30); (2) when opposing a motion by the defendant to declare an action inappropriate as a class action; (3) when opposing a motion by the defendant to decertify the class (see, e.g., § 41.33); and (4) when opposing a demurrer to the complaint on the ground that class action treatment is not appropriate (see, e.g., § 41.35). This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Counsel should refer to facts showing his or her qualifications to conduct the litigation. Counsel should also point out that any antagonism against the lawsuit by potential class members is insignificant compared to support for the action. In addition, counsel should state facts showing that there is no conflict of interest between the representative plaintiffs and members of the class. Finally, if appropriate, counsel should show that the court can accommodate dissident class members by permitting them to intervene on the defendant's side of the action, or by establishing well-defined subclasses [see Richmond v. Dart Industries, Inc. (1981) 29 Cal. 3d 462, 474, 174 Cal. Rptr. 515, 629 P.2d 23] .

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities set out in § 41.58 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a contention supported by this memorandum.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Named Plaintiff Must Adequately Represent Class

San Jose v. Superior Court (1974) 12 Cal. 3d 447, 115 Cal. Rptr. 797, 525 P.2d 701 , involved an action for nuisance and inverse condemnation on behalf of all real property owners situated in the flight pattern of San Jose Municipal Airport. Following discovery, defendant moved the trial court for an order declaring the action inappropriate as a class action. After affidavits were filed and a hearing held, the court found the action appropriate and ordered notification of class members. Defendant then filed for a writ of mandate, contending that the court had no jurisdiction to certify the class on a motion to declare the action inappropriate as a class action. Defendant also contended that the plaintiffs did not adequately represent the class and had failed to show a sufficient community of interest among the purported class members. The Supreme Court ruled that the trial courthad jurisdiction to certify the class but had abused its discretion in doing so because plaintiff had failed to prove the necessary requirements. The Court also held that plaintiffs inadequately represented a class of landowners seeking damages for nuisance and inverse condemnation resulting from airport flight patterns. The representation was inadequate, the Court reasoned, because the named plaintiffs had failed to raise claims reasonably expected of the class members and thus, had pursued a course which would deprive class members of many elements of damage (12 Cal. 3d 447, 464) .

Relying on La Sala v. American Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1971) 5 Cal. 3d 864, 871-872, 97 Cal. Rptr. 849, 489 P.2d 1113 (discussed in § 41.46[3][a]), the Court stated that to maintain a class action, the representative plaintiff must adequately represent and protect the interests of other members of the class (12 Cal. 3d 447, 463) . The Court noted that the representative party bore a fiduciary duty to protect the interests of the absent class members. To fulfill this duty, the Court concluded, the representative plaintiff must raise those claims reasonably expected to be raised by the members of the class (12 Cal. 3d 447, 464) .

In Classen v. Weller (1983) 145 Cal. App. 3d 27, 192 Cal. Rptr. 914 , a real estate broker brought an action to recover a commission from a home builder to whom he had sold a lot in an exclusive development. Defendant cross complained on behalf of himself and all other builders who had purchased property in the development. The class action was brought for alleged antitrust violations pertaining to the requirement that all builders who purchased lots in the development were required as a condition of the purchase to use the services of the broker on the sale of the houses constructed. The trial court granted the broker's motion for summary judgment, and defendant appealed from the judgment.

The court of appeal reversed. Among other issues, the appellate court reviewed the propriety of the builder's representation of the purported class and found it proper. In an antitrust action, the basic considerations are the illegality of the alleged actions and their impact on plaintiffs. The court held that the builder had stated claims of illegality and impact that could be proved predominantly with facts applicable to the class as a whole and had met the requirements of showing predominant, common questions of law or fact, claims typical of the class, and adequate representation of the class (145 Cal. App. 3d 27, 46-47) .

[b] Factors in Determining Adequacy of Representation

McGhee v. Bank of America (1976) 60 Cal. App. 3d 442, 131 Cal. Rptr. 482 , involved several consolidated class actions against lending institutions by holders of deeds of trust. Plaintiffs sought payment of interest on funds set aside by defendants for payment of taxes and insurance onplaintiffs' residences. In two of the actions, the trial court granted defendants' motions to vacate prior certification of the classes. In the remaining action, the trial court denied plaintiffs' motion to certify the class. Plaintiffs then filed an appeal.

The court of appeal reversed the orders vacating and denying certification of the classes, holding that there was no showing that the plaintiffs would not adequately and fairly represent the interests of the class (60 Cal. App. 3d 442, 451) . The court noted that adequacy of representation depends on whether or not the plaintiffs' attorney is qualified to conduct the proposed litigation and whether or not the plaintiffs' interests are antagonistic to the interests of the class. The court found that neither of these factors applied to prevent plaintiffs from being adequate representatives (60 Cal. App. 3d 442, 450) .

In upholding the adequacy of plaintiffs' representation, the court rejected several arguments by the defendants. First, the court stated that alleged financial inability to represent the class, due to insufficient funds for notification costs, would not necessarily defeat the action because the trial court has discretionary power to set the proper form of notice. There was no showing that an effective requirement of notice, with which plaintiffs could comply, could not be devised (60 Cal. App. 3d 442, 450-451) .

Second, the court rejected two arguments of potential conflicts of interest between the named plaintiffs and their class. The court noted that dual representation by plaintiffs' attorneys, the concept that the attorneys become the true representatives of the class because of the named plaintiffs' inexperience, lack of knowledge, and lack of financial resources, has been implicitly sanctioned in California subject to the court's authority to prevent overreaching (60 Cal. App. 3d 442, 451) . Finally, the court dismissed defendants' argument that plaintiffs' financial difficulties could force them to settle the action on terms unfavorable to other class members. The court noted that a class action may not be dismissed without court approval, and thus the trial court could protect the other class members' interests should the named plaintiffs request dismissal. Thus, there was no showing that plaintiffs would not adequately and fairly represent the interests of the class (60 Cal. App. 3d 442, 451) .

[c] Representation Adequate Unless Conflict or Overwhelming Disapproval

The facts and procedural background of Richmond v. Dart Industries, Inc. (1981) 29 Cal. 3d 462, 174 Cal. Rptr. 515, 629 P.2d 23 , are discussed in § 41.36[3][b]. In Richmond, the Supreme Court held that because defendants had not established in the trial court that there was either a conflict of interest or overwhelming disapproval of the lawsuit within the class which would defeat the purpose of class adjudication, the trial courthad erred when it refused certification (29 Cal. 3d 462, 474-475) . The Court noted that the results of a survey presented by defendants showed that no more than six percent of the potential class members were antagonistic to the suit, while a sizable number of persons had chosen to join the action as named plaintiffs (29 Cal. 3d 462, 475) .

The Supreme Court relied on two prior appellate court decisions to support its conclusion. The Court noted that in Fanucchi v. Coberly-West Co. (1957) 151 Cal. App. 2d 72, 311 P.2d 33 , the court of appeal held that a class action suit could not be barred even though one third of the potential class members had signed affidavits stating that they did not wish to participate (29 Cal. 3d 462, 471) . In addition, the Court cited Hebbard v. Colgrove (1972) 28 Cal. App. 3d 1017, 105 Cal. Rptr. 172 , in which the court of appeal held that several antagonistic class members out of a total of 50 could not defeat class certification (29 Cal. 3d 462, 472) . The Richmond Court noted that in both of these cases, the court of appeal stated that the antagonistic members' desire to forego any share of the recovery could not defeat an action on behalf of the remaining class members (29 Cal. 3d 462, 471-472) .

Relying on procedural provisions of Fed. R. Civ. P., Rule 23(c)(2), the Court in Richmond noted that when a class contains various viewpoints, the court may ensure that these viewpoints are represented by allowing persons to join as interveners or as additional representatives of subclasses within the full class (29 Cal. 3d 462, 473-474) . Additional protection is afforded to absent class members, the Court stated, by the provisions of Fed. R. Civ. P., Rule 23(c)(2), that allow a class member to opt out of the class if he or she does not wish to be bound by the result of the suit. The Court reasoned that a rule holding that any antagonism is sufficient to defeat class treatment would bar a large number of class suits and encourage defendants to seek out or to improperly sow dissension within a class. The Court repeated that divergent viewpoints can be brought into the litigation when the trial court allows intervention and/or well-defined subclasses within the class (29 Cal. 3d 462, 474) . Therefore, the Court concluded, when plaintiffs meet the legal tests set forth for class certification, a motion for certification should not be denied by a trial court because some members of the potential class are antagonistic to the lawsuit (29 Cal. 3d 462, 479) .

Counsel should note that in some decisions, including Richmond, California appellate courts have discussed the necessity of adequate representation as being part of the community of interest requirement (29 Cal. 3d 462, 470) . These decisions rely on the Consumers Legal Remedies Act [Civ. Code § 1750 et seq.], which states that the community of interest requirement embodies three factors [Civ. Code § 1781(b)(2)-(4)]:

(1) Predominant common question of law or fact;

(2) Class representatives with claims or defenses typical of the class; and

(3) Class representatives who can adequately represent the class.

In some cases, however, the adequacy of representation has been discussed independently of the community of interest requirement [see, e.g., San Jose v. Superior Court (1974) 12 Cal. 3d 447, 464, 115 Cal. Rptr. 797, 525 P.2d 701 (discussed in § 41.57[3][b])]. Because the authorities discussing this requirement are not uniform, counsel should discuss adequacy of representation as an independent requirement for maintaining a class action.

[d] Potential Conflict Does Not Warrant Denial of Certification

The facts and procedural background of Daniels v. Centennial Group, Inc. (1993) 16 Cal. App. 4th 467, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1 , are discussed in § 41.47[3][a]. The appellate court observed that at the time of the last motion for certification, many, if not most, putative class members could no longer seek rescission because they had sold their stock in the new corporation. Money damages were more likely to be favored because the new corporation was doing well. As a result, the putative class representatives agreed to waive any rescission claims. Nonetheless, the trial court was concerned that the representatives had not amended their complaint to delete the rescission claim. The appellate court described the denial of certification for the entire action on that basis to be "much like using a nuclear weapon to kill a fly." If the presence of the rescission claim created a conflict between the class representatives and the class (of which the reviewing court was not convinced), the remedy was to certify a damages class, not dismiss the whole action. A potential conflict existed, not an irreconcilable one. Defendants failed to present any evidence contradicting the assessment that the rescission claim was likely to go away on its own because damages was a more lucrative remedy. Even if a conflict did arise, the trial court could create subclasses or exclude any members seeking rescission (16 Cal. App. 4th 467, 471-472) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Named Plaintiff Must Adequately Represent Class

In La Sala v. American Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1971) 5 Cal. 3d 864, 97 Cal. Rptr. 849, 489 P.2d 1113 (discussed in § 41.46[3][a]), a class action seeking to declare an acceleration clause in defendant's form of trust deed invalid as a restraint on alienation, the Supreme Court reversed the trial court's judgment of dismissal in favor of defendant. The Court held that a waiver of acceleration as to the named plaintiffs did not mechanically render them unfit per se to continue to represent the class. A plaintiff whosues on behalf of a class assumes a fiduciary obligation to the class members, surrendering any right to compromise the group action in return for an individual gain (5 Cal. 3d 864, 871) . The issue of whether or not the named plaintiffs will fairly and adequately protect the class rests in the discretion of the trial court, which may consider the fact that the named plaintiffs have already obtained their individual benefits from the action (5 Cal. 3d 864, 871-872) . The Court concluded that if the trial court finds that named plaintiffs can no longer suitably represent the class, the plaintiffs should be allowed to amend their complaint to redefine the class or to add new individual plaintiffs, or both, in order to establish a suitable representative (5 Cal. 3d 864, 872) .

Potential Recovery Larger Than Nominal Sum. The possibility of a potential recovery for each class member larger than a nominal sum does not militate against the maintenance of a class action (*Collins v. [a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of plaintiff's contention that an action is properly maintained as a classaction. This argument may be made in response to defendant's contention that class action treatment is not proper because the potential recovery for each class member is an amount larger than a nominal sum. The argument may also be made in anticipation of such a contention by defendant.

This form may be combined with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to invoke the contention. A plaintiff might make an argument supported by this memorandum under the following circumstances: (1) when supporting a motion to certify an action as a proper class action (see, e.g., § 41.30); (2) when opposing a motion by the defendant to declare an action inappropriate as a class action; (3) when opposing a motion by the defendant to decertify the class (see, e.g., § 41.33); and (4) when opposing a demurrer to the complaint on the ground that class action treatment is not appropriate (see, e.g., § 41.35). This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Potential Recovery Larger Than Nominal Sum

Collins v. Rocha (1972) 7 Cal. 3d 232, 102 Cal. Rptr. 1, 497 P.2d 225 , was an action on behalf of a group of farm laborers for compensatory and punitive damages based on fraud and breach of an oral employment contract. Defendant demurred on the ground that the causes of action did not constitute a proper class action. The trial court sustained the demurrer on the ground that there was no ascertainable class with the same community of interest. The trial court reasoned that each member of the alleged class would be required to show that he or she relied on the representations made and that separate bases might exist for the discharge of each class member from employment. The court transferred the action to municipal court, apparently because the damages sought were below the amount required for the jurisdiction of the superior court if the action could not proceed as a class suit. Plaintiffs then filed their appeal.

The Supreme Court reversed the trial court's order. Relying on Vasquez v. Superior Court (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 800, 814, 94 Cal. Rptr. 796, 484 P.2d 964 (discussed below), the Court held that if representations were made at one time and place to all class members, and if they thereon simultaneously accepted employment, a persuasive inference that each of them relied on the representations arises without separate proof of reliance by each plaintiff (7 Cal. 3d 232, 237) . The Court rejected defendant's argument that a class action was inappropriate because each class member's alleged damages were sufficient to make individual suits practical (7 Cal.3d 232, 237-238) . Again relying on Vasquez v. Superior Court (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 800, 816, 94 Cal. Rptr. 796, 484 P.2d 964 (discussed below), the Court noted that while the impracticability of bringing an individual action for comparatively small potential recovery was a consideration in favor of permitting a class action, the converse was not necessarily controlling. In other words, the Court stated, the possibility of a potential recovery for each class member of an amount larger than a nominal sum does not militate against the maintenance of a class action. Thus, the amount requested by plaintiffs did not per se render a class action inappropriate (7 Cal. 3d 232, 238) .

The facts and procedural background of Vasquez v. Superior Court (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 800, 94 Cal. Rptr. 796, 484 P.2d 964 , are discussed in § 41.34[3][c]. In Vasquez, the Supreme Court held that the trial court had erred in sustaining demurrers to the complaint for fraud on the ground that it did not allege a proper class action (4 Cal. 3d 800, 815) . The Court rejected defendant's argument that a class action was inappropriate because each plaintiff's claim was sufficiently large to justify separate actions. The Court noted that while the impracticability of bringing an individual action for comparatively small potential recovery is a consideration in favor of allowing a class action, it cannot be said that a potential recovery for each class member larger than a nominal sum necessarily militates against maintenance of such a suit. The Court cited its decision in Jones v. H. F. Ahmanson & Co. (1969) 1 Cal. 3d 93, 121, 81 Cal. Rptr. 592, 460 P.2d 464 , as an example of its approval of a class action in which the relief requested was substantially more than the amount sought in Vasquez (4 Cal. 3d 800, 816) .

§ 41.51 Supporting Contention That Class Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 382] Proper--Class Treated as Claimant for Purposes of Satisfying Claims Statutes in Actions Against Government Entities

[1] FORM Supporting Contention That Class Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 382] Proper--Class Treated as Claimant for Purposes of Satisfying Claims Statutes in Actions Against Government Entities

[The following may be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities in support of a motion to certify an action as a class action (see, e.g., § 41.30). The following may also be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities opposing a demurrer to a complaint on the ground that class action treatment is not appropriate (see, e.g., § 41.35).]

THIS ACTION IS PROPERLY MAINTAINED AS A CLASS ACTION BECAUSE, FOR PURPOSES OF SATISFYING CLAIMS STATUTES IN ACTIONS AGAINST GOVERNMENT ENTITIES, EACH MEMBEROF THE PURPORTED CLASS NEED NOT FILE AN INDIVIDUAL CLAIM AS LONG AS THE NAMED PLAINTIFFS HAVE SUBSTANTIALLY COMPLIED WITH THE CLAIMS STATUTES.

Satisfying Claims Statutes as a Class. For purposes of satisfying claims statutes requirements in actions against government entities, the term "claimant" is equated with the class, and therefore each member of the purported class need not file an individual claim (San Jose v. Superior Court (1974) 12 Cal. 3d 447, 457, 115 Cal. Rptr. 797, 525 P.2d 701).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of plaintiff's contention that an action is properly maintained as a class action. This argument may be made in response to defendant's contention that class action treatment is not proper because class members have not filed claims with the appropriate government entity under applicable claims statutes. The argument may also be made in anticipation of such a contention by defendant.

This form may be combined, where appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to invoke the contention. A plaintiff might make an argument supported by this memorandum under the following circumstances: (1) when supporting a motion to certify an action as a proper class action (see, e.g., § 41.30); (2) when opposing a motion by the defendant to declare an action inappropriate as a class action; (3) when opposing a motion by the defendant to decertify the class (see, e.g., § 41.33); and (4) when opposing a demurrer to the complaint on the ground that class action treatment is not appropriate (see, e.g., § 41.35). This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Counsel should refer to facts showing that the representative plaintiffs filed claims under applicable claims statutes which contain the name, address, and other specified information concerning the representative plaintiffs, as well as sufficient information to identify and make ascertainable the class itself. Counsel should also refer to facts showing that plaintiffs' claims meet the test for substantial compliance with the applicable claims statutes [see San Jose v. Superior Court (1974) 12 Cal. 3d 447, 456-457, 115 Cal. Rptr. 797, 525 P.2d 701] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Satisfying Claims Statutes as a Class

The facts and procedural background of San Jose v. Superior Court (1974) 12 Cal. 3d 447, 115 Cal. Rptr. 797, 525 P.2d 701 , are discussed in § 41.49[3][a]. In San Jose, a class action by property owners against the city for nuisance and inverse condemnation resulting from airport flight patterns, the Supreme Court held that a sufficient community of interest had not been shown because the action depended on facts peculiar to each prospective plaintiff (12 Cal. 3d 447, 460-461) . The Court rejected defendant's contention that a class claim could never fulfill the requirements of claims statutes, because the claims statutes prohibit maintenance of class actions against government entities for inverse condemnation and nuisance (12 Cal. 3d 447, 457) . The Court stated that in actions for damages against local public entities, the claims statutes (in this case, Gov. Code § 910) require timely filing of a proper claim as a condition precedent to the maintenance of the action (12 Cal. 3d 447, 454) . The Court noted that in determining the quantity of information required to satisfy the statutes, the trial court must inquire whether or not there is some compliance with all of the statutory requirements, and if so, whether or not the compliance is sufficient to constitute substantial compliance (12 Cal. 3d 447, 456-457) .

The Court concluded that the term "claimant" in the applicable claims statute (Gov. Code § 910) must be equated with the class itself, and the Court rejected the suggested necessity for filing an individual claim for each member of the purported class (12 Cal. 3d 447, 457) . The Court reasoned that to require such detailed information in advance of the complaint would severely restrict the maintenance of appropriate class actions contrary to recognized policy favoring them and that the claims statutes were not intended to thwart class relief (12 Cal. 3d 447, 457) .

Thus, to satisfy the claims statutes, the Court noted, the class claim must provide the name, address, and other specified information concerning the representative plaintiff, as well as sufficient information to identify and make ascertainable the class itself (12 Cal. 3d 447, 457) . The Court refused, however, to decide whether the claim in San Jose was sufficient to meet the tests of compliance, noting that extraordinary relief is not available to remedy defective compliance with claims statutes (12 Cal. 3d 447, 458) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Satisfying Claims Statutes as a Class

In Schoderbek v. Carlson (1980) 113 Cal. App. 3d 1029, 170 Cal. Rptr. 400 , a class action challenging property tax assessments, the court heldthat plaintiffs' failure to file a claim for refund with the appropriate administrative body under Rev. & Tax. Code §§ 5096 and 5097 barred their court action (113 Cal. App. 3d 1029, 1037) . Relying on San Jose v. Superior Court (1974) 12 Cal. 3d 447, 457, 115 Cal. Rptr. 797, 525 P.2d 701 (see § 41.71[3]), the court noted that plaintiffs could have filed a claim for a refund with the county on behalf of themselves and on behalf of the members of the class they represent (113 Cal. App. 3d 1029, 1033) . Citing prior appellate court authority approving application of the San Jose tests in cases seeking refunds with respect to income and sales and use taxes, the court concluded that there was no reason not to apply the San Jose substantial compliance test to class claims for refunds of ad valorem property taxes (113 Cal. App. 3d 1029, 1036) .

In Lattin v. Franchise Tax Board (1977) 75 Cal. App. 3d 377, 142 Cal. Rptr. 130 , a class action for recovery of personal income tax paid under protest, the court of appeal affirmed the trial court's dismissal of class action allegations (75 Cal. App. 3d 377, 383) . The court noted that as a mandatory condition precedent to the commencement of a class action against the state, there must be the filing of an appropriate claim by, or on behalf of, the class (75 Cal. App. 3d 377, 381) . The representative plaintiffs had filed a claim for refund on behalf of themselves, but no claim was made on behalf of the class which they sought to represent under former Rev. & Tax. Code § 19055 [see now Rev. & Tax. Code § 19322] (75 Cal. App. 3d 377, 380) .

In Santa Barbara Optical Co. v. State Bd. of Equalization (1975) 47 Cal. App. 3d 244, 120 Cal. Rptr. 609 , a class action for refund of sales tax, the court of appeal reversed the trial court's dismissal of the action (47 Cal. App. 3d 244, 251, 120 Cal. Rptr. 609). Relying on San Jose v. Superior Court (1974) 12 Cal. 3d 447, 457, 115 Cal. Rptr. 797, 525 P.2d 701 (discussed in § 41.51[3][a]), the court noted that plaintiffs had filed a claim for refund on behalf of themselves and the absent class members (47 Cal. App. 3d 244, 246, 247, 120 Cal. Rptr. 609). The court rejected defendant's argument that a claim that did not contain the claimant's correct name, account, and specific amount of refund requested failed to meet requirements for a proper claim under Rev. & Tax. Code §§ 6902 and 6905 (47 Cal. App. 3d 244, 247-248, 120 Cal. Rptr. 609).

§ 41.52 Supporting Contention That Class Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 382] Proper--Merit of Underlying Claim Generally Not Factor in Certification Proceeding

[1] FORM Supporting Contention That Class Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 382] Proper--Merit of Underlying Claim Generally Not Factor in Certification Proceeding

[This form may be combined with a general form of memorandum in support of a motion to certify an action as a class action (see, e.g., § 41.30). This form may alsobe combined with a general form of memorandum opposing a demurrer to a complaint on the ground that class action treatment is not appropriate (see, e.g., § 41.35).]

A CHALLENGE BASED ON THE MERITS OF THE UNDERLYING CLAIM IS GENERALLY NOT A PROPER CONSIDERATION WHEN DETERMINING WHETHER THE CLASS IS CERTIFIABLE.

A. Merit Assessment Generally Not Appropriate in Certification Proceeding. Certification of a class should not be conditioned on a showing that the class claims for relief are likely to prevail. The trial court may deviate from this rule only in exceptional cases when there is no other reasonable pretrial means to challenge the merits, after giving the parties notice and an opportunity to brief the merits (Linder v. Thrifty Oil Co. (2000) 23 Cal. 4th 429, 443, 97 Cal. Rptr. 2d 179, 2 P.3d 27).

B. Inability to Reach Merits Does Not Prevent Class Certification. The general rule against evaluating the merits of the plaintiff's claims in deciding whether class treatment is appropriate does not mean that the court must deny certification because it cannot reach the merits. Rather, the court must evaluate whether the theory of recovery advanced by the plaintiff is likely to prove amenable to class treatment (Ghazaryan v. Diva Limousine, Ltd. (2008) 169 Cal. App. 4th 1524, 1531, 87 Cal. Rptr. 3d 518).

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of plaintiff's contention that an action is properly maintained as a class action. The argument in this form may be made in response to a defendant's contention that class action treatment is not proper because the claim to be asserted by the proposed class lacks merit.

This form may be combined with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to invoke the contention. For example, a plaintiff might argue the contention in reply to a defendant's opposition to a motion to certify a class [see, e.g., § 41.30], or in opposition to a defendant's motion to declare the claim inappropriate as a class action, or to decertify the class [see, e.g., § 41.33]. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Merit Assessment Generally Not Appropriate in Certification Proceeding

In Linder v. Thrifty Oil Co. (2000) 23 Cal. 4th 429, 97 Cal. Rptr. 2d 179, 2 P.3d 27 , the plaintiff filed an action on behalf of herself and all others similarly situated, alleging that the defendant oil company violated provisions of the Song-Beverly Credit Card Act of 1971 (Civ. Code § 1747 et seq.), by charging cash-paying customers an illegal surcharge (the "surcharge" class action) and by using forms with a preprinted space for cardholder's telephone numbers in violation of the law (the "penalty" class action). Following a proceeding to certify the class, the trial court issued an order denying certification. The court's minute order addressed only the issue of the "surcharge" class, concluding that plaintiff could not establish a class community interest as a matter of law. On appeal by plaintiff from the order of denial, the court of appeal affirmed the trial court's order, holding in addition that certification of the "penalty" class was properly denied because the aggregate amount of penalties were either too small to justify the burdens of class treatment or too onerous in relation to the alleged wrongdoing. The Supreme Court granted plaintiff's petition for review.

The Supreme Court reversed the judgment of the court of appeal. With respect to certification of the "surcharge" class, the Court initially noted that the trial court had denied certification based on its rejection of the merits of plaintiff's claim, which hinged on giving a particular construction to the applicable statute. The court of appeal, in turn, affirmed, finding that its own interpretation of the statute suggested that plaintiff could not prevail on the surcharge claim as a matter of law (23 Cal. 4th 429, 436-437) .

The Court held that a denial of certification may not stand when it is based upon improper criteria and incorrect legal assumptions (23 Cal. 4th 429, 448) . The Court viewed the question of certification as essentially a procedural one that does not ask whether an action is legally or factually meritorious (23 Cal. 4th 429, 439-440) . The defendant argued that a court's decision whether to certify a class should be informed by an evaluation of the merits of the proposed class claims. The Court agreed that the important interests of fairness and efficiency sometimes may be served better when class causes of action are screened for legal sufficiency before the matter of certification is decided, but nothing prevents a court from weeding out legally meritless suits prior to certification by, for example, a defendant's demurrer or pretrial motion (23 Cal. 4th 429, 440) . Were it to condone merit-based challenges as part and parcel of the certification process, stated the Court, similar procedural protections would be necessary to ensure that an otherwise certifiable class is not unfairly denied the opportunity to proceed on legitimate claims. Substantial discovery also may be required if plaintiffs are expected to make meaningful presentations on the merits. All of that is likely to render the certification process more protracted and cumbersome (23 Cal. 4th 429, 440-441) .

The Court concluded that certification should not be conditioned on a showing that class claims for relief are likely to prevail. Nonetheless, in keeping with the principle that trial courts should be afforded flexibility in dealing with class actions, this does not foreclose the possibility that, in an exceptional case, when the defense has no other reasonable pretrial means to challenge the merits of a claim to be asserted by a proposed class, the trial court may, after giving the parties notice and an opportunity to brief the merits question, refuse class certification because the claim lacks merit as a matter of law. Furthermore, nothing prevents the trial court from considering the legal sufficiency of claims during a certification proceeding when both sides have jointly requested that it do so (23 Cal. 4th 429, 443) .

The Court stated that nothing in its opinion was intended to preclude a court from scrutinizing a proposed class cause of action to determine whether, assuming its merit, it is suitable for resolution on a class-wide basis. Indeed, issues affecting the merits of a case may be enmeshed with class action requirements, such as whether substantially similar questions are common to the class and predominate over individual questions or whether the claims or defenses of the representative plaintiffs are typical of class claims or defenses. Moreover, although the Court recognized that defendants may mount precertification challenges on the merits, the Court did not suggest they necessarily are entitled to a merit determination before a ruling on certification. As before, trial courts retain broad discretion to conduct the proceedings in an orderly and just manner (23 Cal. 4th 429, 443) .

In this case, reversal of the order denying certification was necessary because it was based on improper criteria. The lower courts improperly considered and prejudged the legal merit of the "surcharge" claim (23 Cal. 4th 429, 448) .

The Court went on to consider two additional issues, and with respect to these held that the trial court and court of appeal had improperly evaluated the benefits and burdens of the class action under incorrect legal standards (23 Cal. 4th 429, 444-446) , and the court of appeal had engaged in a flawed analysis of the applicable statute in determining that the "penalty" class should not be certified (23 Cal. 4th 429, 446-448) .

Although these errors required reversal of the court of appeal's judgment, the Court emphasized that this did not necessarily mean that certification was in fact justified in this particular case. The trial court, to which the cause was remanded, might conclude certification was proper after eliminating improper criteria, or it might find valid reasons for denying certification (23 Cal. 4th 429, 448-449) .

[b] Inability to Reach Merits Does Not Prevent Class Certification

Ghazaryan v. Diva Limousine, Ltd. (2008) 169 Cal. App. 4th 1524, 87 Cal. Rptr. 3d 518 , was a compensation action brought on behalf of limousine drivers against their employer. In particular, the complaint alleged that the defendant's practice of not paying its drivers for time spent on call between assignments during the workday constituted a violation of California's wage and hour laws. The trial court denied the plaintiff's motion for class certification, finding that there were too many individualized issues.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that the trial court had applied improper criteria in deciding the motion for class certification. For example, the trial court had suggested that, if the plaintiff's claims were valid, class treatment of those claims would be appropriate. On the question of numerosity, the trial court stated that "[i]f all the employees were on-the-clock [during their on-call time] and not paid, then the proposed class would be ascertainable and then probably numerous. However, here it would be necessary to first determine an ultimate issue in the case, which this Court cannot do to determine the class." Similarly, as to ascertainability the trial court asserted that it "first must ... determine if [the defendant's] practices are improper and, if so, which drivers fit into an appropriate class" (169 Cal. App. 4th 1524, 1530-1531) .

The court of appeal acknowledged that the trial court was correct that the certification question is essentially a procedural one that does not ask whether an action is legally or factually meritorious. But the trial court fundamentally misconceived the import of the rule against evaluating the merits of the plaintiff's claims in deciding whether class treatment is appropriate. Rather than denying certification because it cannot reach the merits, the trial court should have (1) focused on the kind of questions--common or individual--that were likely to arise in the case, and (2) evaluated whether the theory of recovery advanced by the plaintiff was, as an analytical matter, likely to prove amenable to class treatment (169 Cal. App. 4th 1524, 1531) .

[1] FORM Opposing Contention That Class Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 382] Proper--In Appropriate Case, Merit of Underlying Claim May be Considered at Certification Stage

[This form may be submitted in opposition to a motion to certify a class action. It may also be combined with a general form of memorandum supporting defendant's demurrer on the ground that the complaintfails to state a cause of action (see, e.g., § 41.34).]

CLASS CERTIFICATION IS INAPPROPRIATE IN THIS ACTION BECAUSE THE COMPLAINT DOES NOT PRESENT A VIABLE CAUSE OF ACTION ON BEHALF OF THE PROPOSED CLASS.

Under Appropriate Circumstances, Court May Deny Class Certification Based on Finding That Class Claims Lack Merit. Although class certification generally should not be conditioned on a showing that the class claims for relief are likely to prevail, in appropriate circumstances the court may consider the legal sufficiency of claims when ruling on certification. For example, the court may consider the merits if requested to do so by both sides, if the issue raised is one of continuing importance, or if the defense has no other reasonable pretrial means to challenge the merits of the class claims (Linder v. Thrifty Oil Co. (2000) 23 Cal. 4th 429, 443, 97 Cal. Rptr. 2d 179, 2 P.3d 27 ; Conley v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co. (2005) 131 Cal. App. 4th 260, 268, 31 Cal. Rptr. 3d 719).

[2] Comments

This form may be submitted in support of a contention that class certification should be denied because the claims asserted on behalf of the proposed class lack merit.

This form may be combined, when appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the contention. For example, a defendant might make an argument supported by the foregoing memorandum (1) in support of a motion for an order declaring an action inappropriate as a class action (see, e.g., § 41.31); (2) in support of a motion to decertify the class (see, e.g., § 41.32); (3) in opposing a motion to certify an action as a proper class action; or (4) in support of a demurrer on the ground that class action treatment is not appropriate (see, e.g., § 41.34). In an appropriate case, this memorandum may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 41.52.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Counsel should, for example, show that the plaintiff has also asked the court to address the merits, that the substantive issues raised by the complaint are of continuing importance, or that the defense has no other reasonable pretrial means to challenge the merits of the class claims [Linder v. Thrifty Oil Co. (2000) 23 Cal. 4th 429, 443, 97 Cal. Rptr. 2d 179, 2 P.3d 27 ; Conley v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co. (2005) 131 Cal. App. 4th 260, 268, 31 Cal. Rptr. 3d 719] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Under Appropriate Circumstances, Court May Deny Class Certification Based on Finding That Class Claims Lack Merit

In Linder v. Thrifty Oil Co. (2000) 23 Cal. 4th 429, 97 Cal. Rptr. 2d 179, 2 P.3d 27 , the background of which is discussed in § 41.52[3][a], the Supreme Court held that class certification generally should not be conditioned on a showing that the class claims for relief are likely to prevail (23 Cal. 4th 429, 443) . However, the Court also observed that there is nothing to prevent a court from considering the legal sufficiency of claims when ruling on certification where both sides jointly request such action. In addition, the Supreme Court declined to "foreclose the possibility that, in the exceptional case where the defense has no other reasonable pretrial means to challenge the merits of a claim to be asserted by a proposed class, the trial court may, after giving the parties notice and an opportunity to brief the merits question, refuse class certification because the claim lacks merit as a matter of law" (23 Cal. 4th 429, 443) .

In Conley v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co. (2005) 131 Cal. App. 4th 260, 268, 31 Cal. Rptr. 3d 719 , the plaintiffs sought to pursue claims against their employer for unpaid overtime compensation on behalf of several classes of employees. One of the proposed classes (the "salary-basis" class) consisted of employees classified by the defendant as exempt from overtime-pay requirements. As to this class, the plaintiffs claimed that the defendant's practice of making deductions from the employees' vacation-leave banks for partial-day absences constituted a reduction in compensation based on the quantity of work performed. The plaintiffs contended that this practice prevented the employees from qualifying as exempt employees under applicable statutes and regulations.

The trial court denied the plaintiffs' motion for class certification in its entirety. As to the salary-basis class, the trial court ruled that the case presented common factual and legal questions that were common to all members of the proposed class. However, the court denied certification, solely on the ground that the class members did not have a plausible cause of action. At the same time, the court denied the defendants' motion for summary adjudication, on the ground that such a motion can be granted only if it completely disposes of a cause of action, an affirmative defense, a claim for damages, or an issue of duty (see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f)).

The court of appeal affirmed the denial of certification as to this class. The court of appeals acknowledged that in Linder v. Thrifty Oil Co. (see above and § 41.52[3][a]), the California Supreme Court had held that class certification generally should not be conditioned on a showing that class claims for relief are likely to prevail. However, the Linder Court also observed that there is nothing to prevent a court from considering the legal sufficiency ofclaims when ruling on certification if both sides jointly request such action. In this case, the court of appeal found it appropriate to consider the merits both because the parties had requested that the court do so for their further guidance, and because the issue raised was one of continuing importance in wage and hour litigation in California (131 Cal. App. 4th 260, 268) .

In addition, the Linder Court had expressly declined to foreclose the possibility that, in an exceptional case in which the defense has no other reasonable pretrial means to challenge the merits of a claim to be asserted by a proposed class, the trial court may, after giving the parties notice and an opportunity to brief the merits question, refuse class certification because the claim lacks merit as a matter of law. The court of appeal found that this case appeared to be an "exceptional case" of the type referred to in Linder. The defendant had attempted to use a summary adjudication motion to raise its defense to the proposed class's claim, but had been unable, for purely procedural reasons, to secure an adjudication of that issue before the class certification ruling. Also, as required by Linder, the trial court had permitted discovery and ample briefing on the merits of the issue prior to adjudicating it in connection with the class certification motion (131 Cal. App. 4th 260, 268) . Accordingly, the court of appeal concluded that in this case it was appropriate for the merits of the case to be considered in deciding the certification motion (131 Cal. App. 4th 260, 269) .

[1] FORM Opposing Contention That Class Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 382] Proper--Class Is Not Ascertainable

[This form may be submitted in opposition to a motion to certify a class action. It may also be combined with a general form of memorandum supporting defendant's demurrer on the ground that class action treatment is not appropriate (see, e.g., § 41.34).]

CLASS CERTIFICATION IS INAPPROPRIATE IN THIS ACTION BECAUSE THE PROPOSED CLASS IS NOT ASCERTAINABLE, SINCE THE CLASS DEFINITION IS BASED NOT ON OBJECTIVE CRITERIA, BUT RATHER ON THE ULTIMATE ISSUE OF LIABILITY.

Proposed Class Definition That Rests on Determination of Liability Is Not Objective. Class certification is not appropriate when the proposed class definition is not based on objective criteria, but instead requires a merits-based determination in order to establish whether a particular person is a member of the class. The members of such a class are not readily identifiable so as to permit appropriate notice to be given (Sony Elecs. Inc. v. Superior Court (2006) 145 Cal. App. 4th 1086, 1094-1097, 52 Cal. Rptr. 3d 139).

[2] Comments

This form may be submitted in support of a contention that class certification should be denied because the class is not ascertainable by objective factors that do not involve merits determinations for each potential class member.

This form may be combined, when appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the contention. For example, a defendant might make an argument supported by the foregoing memorandum (1) in support of a motion for an order declaring an action inappropriate as a class action (see, e.g., § 41.31); (2) in support of a motion to decertify the class (see, e.g., § 41.32); (3) in opposing a motion to certify an action as a proper class action; or (4) in support of a demurrer on the ground that class action treatment is not appropriate (see, e.g., § 41.34). In an appropriate case, this memorandum may be submitted in opposition to the contentions supported by the points and authorities set out in §§ 41.36, 41.37, 41.38.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Counsel should, for example, show that under the proposed class definition, a determination of some liability issue would be necessary to decide whether any particular person is a member of the class [see, e.g., Sony Elecs. Inc. v. Superior Court (2006) 145 Cal. App. 4th 1086, 1096-1097, 52 Cal. Rptr. 3d 139 (proposed class consisted not of all purchasers of defendant's product, but only of those purchasers who received defective products)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Proposed Class Definition That Rests on Determination of Liability Is Not Objective

In Sony Elecs. Inc. v. Superior Court (2006) 145 Cal. App. 4th 1086, 52 Cal. Rptr. 3d 139 , the plaintiff had purchased a laptop computer manufactured by the defendant. After experiencing repeated problems with the computer, the plaintiff filed suit, asserting claims for false advertising and breach of express warranty, and for violations of the Unfair Competition Law (Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq.), the Consumer Legal Remedies Act (Civ. Code § 1750 et seq.), and the Song-Beverly Consumer Warranty Act (Civ. Code § 1790 et seq.). Specifically, the complaint alleged that the defendant had marketed and distributed a series of laptop computers knowing that the computers had defective memory chip sockets (specifically, inadequate soldering of the memory slot connector pins), but without disclosing such defects to consumers.

Ruling on the plaintiff's motion for class certification, the trial court certified a class consisting of all persons in the United States who had purchased computers with inadequate soldering of the memory slot connector pins (excepting persons who were associated with the defendant or whose computers had already been repaired by the defendant).

The court of appeal granted the defendant's petition for a writ of mandate to vacate to trial court's certification order. The court of appeal began its analysis by noting that the party seeking certification has the burden to establish the existence of both an ascertainable class and a well-defined community of interest among class members. Ascertainability is required to ensure that all putative class members receive notice of the action and that the resulting judgment will have claim-preclusive (res judicata) effect as to those class members. Thus, ascertainability requires a class definition that is precise, objective and currently ascertainable. Although a proposed class plaintiff need not establish the existence and identity of class members at the certification stage of the proceedings, the plaintiff must show that there are objective criteria by which class members can later be identified and given notice of the proceedings (145 Cal. App. 4th 1086, 1094) .

The defendant in this case contended that the class certified by the trial court was not ascertainable because the class definition was not based on objective criteria, but instead on the issue of ultimate liability: whether a particular person's laptop computer had the defect that the plaintiff complained of. The court of appeal agreed. The court explained that a proposed class definition that rests on a liability question cannot be objective, nor can the class members be currently ascertained. When the class definition is framed as a legal conclusion, the trial court has no way of ascertaining whether a given person is a member of the class until after a determination of ultimate liability as to that person is made (145 Cal. App. 4th 1086, 1095-1096) .

The court of appeal concluded that the class certified by the trial court was flawed: the class consisted of purchasers of the particular series of laptop computers that had inadequate soldering of the memory slot connector pins. However, because there was no evidence showing that this alleged manufacturing defect was universal to all computers of that series, the class definition required a merits-based determination in order to establish whether a purchaser was a member of the class. The members of such a class were thus not readily identifiable so as to permit appropriate notice to be given, and the definition would not permit persons who receive notice of this action to determine whether they were part of the class (145 Cal. App. 4th 1086, 1096-1097) .

The court of appeal went on to reject a suggestion that it could salvage the class definition by excising the liability-based component, a change that would effectively define the class as all purchasers of the relevant series of laptop computers. The trial court had already specifically declined to certify that class. Noting the complete lack of evidence that all such computers contained the complained-of defect, the court of appeal found that the trial court had acted within its discretion in refusing to certify the broad class of all purchasers. Thus, since class certification is a matter within the trial court's discretion, the court of appeal had no basis to approve the broad class definition that the trial court had properly refused to adopt (145 Cal. App. 4th 1086, 1097) .

Accordingly, the court of appeal granted the defendant's petition and issued a writ directing the trial court to vacate its order certifying the class as defined, and to conduct further proceedings to determine whether certification of a different class would be appropriate (145 Cal. App. 4th 1086, 1098) .

§ 41.53 Opposing Contention That Class Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 382] Proper--No Community of Interest Among Class Members--Numerous and Substantial Individual Questions

[1] FORM Opposing Contention That Class Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 382] Proper--No Community of Interest Among Class Members--Numerous and Substantial Individual Questions

[This form may be combined with a general form of memorandum in support of a motion for an order declaring an action inappropriate as a class action (see, e.g., § 41.31) or a motion to decertify the class (see, e.g., § 41.32). It may also be combined with a general form of memorandum supporting defendant's demurrer on the ground that class action treatment is not appropriate (see, e.g., § 41.34).]

THE COMMUNITY OF INTEREST REQUIREMENT IS NOT SATISFIED IN THIS ACTION BECAUSE EVERY MEMBER OF THE ALLEGED CLASS WOULD BE REQUIRED TO LITIGATE NUMEROUS AND SUBSTANTIAL QUESTIONS DETERMINING HIS OR HER INDIVIDUAL RIGHT TO RECOVER FOLLOWING THE CLASS JUDGMENT DETERMINING COMMON CLASS ISSUES.

A. Ascertainable Class and Community of Interest in Questions of Law and Fact Essential for Proper Class Action. [See § 41.36, Paragraph A.]

B. Class Action Must Be Advantageous. The issues which may be jointly tried, when compared with those requiring separate adjudication, must be sufficiently numerous and substantial to make the class action advantageous to the judicial process and to the litigants (San Jose v. Superior Court (1974) 12 Cal. 3d 447, 460, 115 Cal. Rptr. 797, 525 P.2d 701 ; Collins v. Rocha (1972) 7 Cal. 3d 232, 238, 102 Cal. Rptr. 1, 497 P.2d 225).

C. Numerous and Substantial Individual Questions. A class action cannot be maintained when each member's right to recover depends on facts peculiar to his or her case, because the community of interest requirement is not satisfied if every member of the alleged class would be required to litigate numerous andsubstantial questions determining his or her individual right to recover following the class judgment determining issues common to the purported class (Lockheed Martin Corp. v. Superior Court (2003) 29 Cal. 4th 1096, 1108-1111, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1, 63 P.3d 913 ; San Jose v. Superior Court (1974) 12 Cal. 3d 447, 459, 115 Cal. Rptr. 797, 525 P.2d 701 ; Gerhard v. Stephens (1968) 68

Cal. 2d 864, 913, 69 Cal. Rptr. 612, 442 P.2d 692 ; In re Vioxx Class Cases (2009) 180 Cal. App. 4th 116, 133-134, 136, 103 Cal. Rptr. 3d 83 ; Dunbar v. Albertson's, Inc. (2006) 141 Cal. App. 4th 1422, 1431-1432, 47 Cal. Rptr. 3d 83).

[Optional] D. Real Property Damage Action Not Proper. A class action for damages to real property is not proper when the determination of each plaintiff's recovery would depend on the characteristics of his or her particular parcel of land (San Jose v. Superior Court (1974) 12 Cal. 3d 447, 460-461, 115 Cal. Rptr. 797, 525 P.2d 701 ; Knox v. Streatfield (1978) 79 Cal. App. 3d 565, 574, 145 Cal. Rptr. 39).

[Optional] E. National Class Action Subject to Different States' Laws. The court should not grant certification of a nationwide class without first determining the effect of choice-of-law agreements under which the claims of class members would be governed by different states' laws. The party seeking nationwide class certification bears the burden of identifying variations in state law and demonstrating how a trial on the class causes of action can be conducted fairly and efficiently in light of those variations (Washington Mutual Bank v. Superior Court (2001) 24 Cal. 4th 906, 915-928, 103 Cal. Rptr. 2d 320, 15 P.3d 1071).

[Optional] F. Class Action Must be Superior to Individual Litigation. Even if questions of law or fact predominate, a class should not be certified unless a class action would be superior to individual lawsuits. In determining whether a class action is superior, the court should consider (1) the interest of each member in personally controlling his or her own case, (2) any difficulties that are likely to be encountered in managing a class action, (3) the nature and extent of any individual class members' litigation already in progress involving the same controversy, and (4) the desirability of consolidating all claims in a single action before a single court (Basurco v. 21st Century Ins. Co. (2003) 108 Cal. App. 4th 110, 122, 133 Cal. Rptr. 2d 367).

This form may be submitted in opposition to the contention that class action treatment is proper. Defendant may use this form when arguing that the community of interest requirement is not satisfied because every member of the alleged class would be required to litigate numerous and substantial questions determining his or her individual right to recover following the class judgment determining common issues.

This form may also be combined with a form contending that the trial court would be required to adjudicate issues involving different rules of law from the various states, and there is no special obligation for the court to do so [see § 41.54].

This form may be combined, as appropriate, with forms relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to oppose class action treatment. A defendant might make an argument supported by this memorandum under the following circumstances: (1) when supporting a motion for an order declaring an action inappropriate as a class action (see, e.g., § 41.31); (2) when supporting a motion to decertify the class (see, e.g., § 41.32); (3) when opposing a motion to certify an action as a proper class action; and (4) when supporting a demurrer on the ground that class action treatment is not appropriate (see, e.g., § 41.34). This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Counsel should refer to facts showing that each class member would be required to present evidentiary facts to support his or her claim of liability. If appropriate, counsel should also point out that the use of subclassifications would not be practicable because of the large number of subclasses that would be required.

In an appropriate case, this form may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the forms set out in §§

41.41[1] and 41.45[1]. Optional Paragraph D of this form may, in an appropriate case, be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the form set out in § 41.48[1].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Class Action Must Be Advantageous

The facts and procedural background of San Jose v. Superior Court (1974) 12 Cal. 3d 447, 115 Cal. Rptr. 797, 525 P.2d 701 , are discussed in § 41.49[3][a]. In San Jose, a class action by property owners for nuisance and inverse condemnation resulting from noise caused by airport flight patterns, the Supreme Court held that a community of interest was not present because the action depended on facts peculiar to each prospective plaintiff (12 Cal. 3d 447, 460-461) . The Court stated that before the imposition of a judgment binding on absent class members can be justified, plaintiff must show that there will be substantial benefits both to the litigants and to the court. The Court noted that each class member must not be required to individually litigate numerous and substantial questions to determine his or her right to recover following the class judgment. Relying on Collins v. Rocha (1972) 7 Cal. 3d 232, 238, 102 Cal. Rptr. 1, 497 P.2d 225 (discussed below), the Court stated that the issues that may be jointly tried, when compared with those requiring separate adjudication, must be sufficiently numerous andsubstantial to make the class action advantageous to the judicial process and to the litigants (12 Cal. 3d 447, 460) .

The facts and procedural background of Collins v. Rocha (1972) 7 Cal. 3d 232, 102 Cal. Rptr. 1, 497 P.2d 225 , are discussed in § 41.50[3][a]. In Collins, the Supreme Court held that the trial court had erred in sustaining defendant's demurrer on the ground that plaintiffs had not stated a proper class action (7 Cal. 3d 232, 238) . The Court noted that, assuming the existence of an ascertainable class, the ultimate question is whether or not the issues that may be jointly tried, when compared with those requiring separate adjudication, are so numerous or substantial that the maintenance of a class action would be advantageous to the judicial process and to the litigants. In reversing the trial court's decision, the Court stated that there was a substantial likelihood that only the issue of damages would require separate proof for each class member (7 Cal. 3d 232, 238) .

[b] Numerous and Substantial Individual Questions

Lockheed Martin Corp. v. Superior Court (2003) 29 Cal. 4th 1096, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1, 63 P.3d 913 , was an action seeking medical monitoring of the residents of a geographic area affected by the defendants' discharge of toxic chemicals that allegedly contaminated drinking water. The plaintiffs moved for certification of a class of people who were exposed to water contaminated by any of a lengthy list of chemicals. The trial court certified the class, finding that the plaintiffs had met the criteria for class treatment. Specifically, the court found that the plaintiffs had established a realistic chance of success on the merits, that the class was ascertainable, that members of the class had a well-defined community of interest, and that common questions of law and fact predominated in the action. However, the court of appeal issued a writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate its class-certification order because individual issues raised by plaintiffs' claims predominated, making class certification inappropriate.

The Supreme Court granted review and affirmed the judgment of the court of appeal. The Court began its analysis by noting that the plaintiffs' claims sounded generally in negligence and would therefore require proof of duty, breach of duty, proximate cause, and damages. Determination of whether questions common to the class predominated over questions affecting class members individually, therefore, required consideration of those elements (29 Cal. 4th 1096, 1106) .

The first element of the negligence cause of action--the existence of duty--is a question of law for the trial court. Therefore, the Supreme Court concluded that the trial court rationally could conclude that the duty element of the plaintiffs' claims would be based on common proof (29 Cal. 4th 1096, 1106) . Also, the second element--breach of duty--would involve proof of how and when the defendants disposed of toxic chemicals and whether the defendants' conduct was negligent. Therefore, that element also involved significant common issues (29 Cal. 4th 1096, 1107) .

Turning to the final two elements of the negligence cause of action--causation and damage--the Supreme Court acknowledged that the plaintiffs clearly were in a position to address some aspects of causation and damages on a class basis. For example, the toxicity of the chemicals allegedly discharged and the seriousness of any disease for which a plaintiff was at risk could be established by common proof. Also, the amount of contaminants that entered the groundwater and, when, where, and at what levels contaminants entered the domestic water system were significant common issues of fact in this case (29 Cal. 4th 1096, 1107) .

The Supreme Court pointed out, however, that the plaintiffs' burden on moving for class certification is not merely to show that some common issues exist, but, rather, to place substantial evidence in the record that common issues predominate. Thus, the Court found that each class member's actual toxic dosage would be relevant, even if the plaintiffs could establish that medical monitoring (the relief sought in the case) was required for all potential class members who received a certain "minimum dosage." Furthermore, each plaintiff would have to demonstrate that the need for future monitoring for that plaintiff was a reasonably certain consequence of the toxic exposure, as opposed to some other cause. The Court found it significant that the plaintiffs' experts could not categorically state that mere membership in the class would demonstrate a need for medical monitoring irrespective of actual chemical dosages received (29 Cal. 4th 1096, 1108-1111) .

The Supreme Court found, therefore, that the causation and damages issues raised by the plaintiffs' claims would have to be litigated individually, even if the case were to proceed on a class basis. Especially when considered in light of the trial court's finding that the class would consist of an estimated 50,000 to 100,000 people, the Court opined that the individual issues fatally undermined the trial court's finding that common issues predominated (29 Cal. 4th 1096, 1111) . The Supreme Court concluded that the questions regarding each individual class member's right to recover that would remain following any class judgment appeared so numerous and substantial as to render any efficiencies attainable through joint trial of common issues insufficient, as a matter of law, to make a class action advantageous to the judicial process and the litigants. Accordingly, the Court affirmed the court of appeal's judgment requiring vacatur of the class certification order (29 Cal. 4th 1096, 1111) .

The facts and procedural background of San Jose v. Superior Court (1974) 12 Cal. 3d 447, 115 Cal. Rptr. 797, 525 P.2d 701 , are discussed in § 41.49[3][a]. In San Jose, a class action by property owners for nuisance and inverse condemnation resulting from airport flight patterns, the Court held that a community of interest was not present because the action depended on facts peculiar to each prospective plaintiff (12 Cal. 3d 447, 460-461) . Relying on Weaver v. Pasadena Tournament of Roses (1948) 32 Cal. 2d 833, 841, 198 P.2d 514 , the Court reaffirmed the rule that a class action cannot be maintained when each member's right to recover depends on facts peculiar to his or her case. The Court stated that the rule exists because the community of interest requirement is not satisfied if every member of the alleged class would be required to litigate numerous and substantial questions determining his or her individual right to recover following the class judgment determining issues common to the purported class (12 Cal. 3d 447, 459) .

The Court reasoned that a sufficient community of interest was not present because an approaching or departing aircraft may or may not give rise to actionable nuisance or inverse condemnation depending on a myriad of individualized evidentiary factors. The Court also noted that the development, character, and uses of the geographic region of the proposed class were diverse (12 Cal. 3d 447, 461) .

Finally, the Court in San Jose rejected the plaintiffs' efforts to avoid the rule in Weaver by dividing the parcels of land into subclassifications and determining as a group the diminution in value for all members in each subclass. First, the Court stated that the purported scheme would require plaintiffs to disregard liability for some forms of damage, such as actual physical injury to property, resulting in a breach of fiduciary duty by the representative plaintiffs. Second, the Court noted that the scheme was incompatible with the fundamental maxim that each parcel of land is unique (12 Cal. 3d 447, 461) . The Court reasoned that the number of subclasses would be substantial given the numerous unique factors with respect to each parcel. Under such circumstances, the class action would become unmanageable. In addition, the uniqueness factors weighed heavily in favor of requiring independent litigation of the liability with respect to each parcel and its owner (12 Cal. 3d 447, 462) . Thus, the Court concluded, the class action could not proceed because the proposed subclassification system had failed (12 Cal. 3d 447, 463) .

Gerhard v. Stephens (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 864, 69 Cal. Rptr. 612, 442 P.2d 692 , involved four consolidated actions to quiet title to undivided mineral interests underlying a certain portion of land. Plaintiffs claimed their interests as successors of stockholders in two defunct corporations which had previously obtained the mineral rights. Plaintiffs in one of the cases brought their action on behalf of a class consisting of the owners of the remaining undivided fractional interest in the mineral rights. The trial court held that claims of purported class members presented many individual problems, and further, that potential class members were not so numerous as to require a class action instead of intervention. Plaintiffs then filed an appeal.

The Supreme Court affirmed the trial court's ruling, holding that the questions raised in the cases were not appropriate for a class action (68 Cal. 2d 864, 912) . The Court noted that although many common questions of law and fact had to be resolved before a court could determine the ownership issues, every member of the class would have to litigate numerous and substantial questions determining his or her individual right to recover against the named defendants following the rendering of a class judgment determining the common class questions (68 Cal. 2d 864, 912-913) .

The Court reasoned that each alleged class member would be required to establish his or her proof of title from the shareholders, which would be a difficult task because the plaintiffs had not used the recording system. In addition, the Court noted that defendants' defense of abandonment of the mineral interests would create a factual issue as to each class member's intent (68 Cal. 2d 864, 913) . Finally, the Court could find no substantial advantage which would result from maintaining the action as a class action (68 Cal. 2d 864, 913-914) . In support of this conclusion, the Court noted that the representative plaintiffs had been unable to locate most of the remaining shareholders or potential class members (68 Cal. 2d 864, 914) .

In In re Vioxx Class Cases (2009) 180 Cal. App. 4th 116, 103 Cal. Rptr. 3d 83 , the plaintiffs asserted claims under the unfair competition law (UCL) (Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq.) and the Consumers Legal Remedies Act (CLRA) (Civ. Code § 1750 et seq.) based on allegations that the manufacturer of the medication Vioxx knew about cardiovascular risks associated with the medication but engaged in a campaign to hide or explain away those risks. The plaintiffs asserted that Vioxx was no more effective and less safe than a less-expensive generic medication. The complaint sought to recover the difference between the cost of Vioxx and the cost of the generic medication. The trial court denied class certification, finding that common issues did not predominate. The court found that whether Vioxx was no more effective and less safe than the generic medication was dependent on each individual's specific medical needs and history (180 Cal. App. 4th 116, 126-127) .

The court of appeal affirmed. On the CLRA claim, the court of appeal reasoned that, in light of the individualized issues regarding Vioxx's effectiveness and safety, the trial court was correct that the plaintiffs could not establish materiality and reliance on a classwide basis (180 Cal. App. 4th 116, 133-134) . On the UCL claim, the appellate court noted that the plaintiffs needed to be able to show the existence of a "measurable amount" of restitution supported by the evidence. The plaintiffs' assertion that that amount was the difference between the cost of Vioxx and the cost of the generic medication failed, because the generic medication was not a valid comparator due to the differences among patients who take those kinds of medications (180 Cal. App. 4th 116, 136) .

Dunbar v. Albertson's, Inc. (2006) 141 Cal. App. 4th 1422, 47 Cal. Rptr. 3d 83 , was an action seeking overtime compensation based on a claim that a putative class of grocery managers had been misclassified as executive employees exempt from the overtime wage laws. The trial court denied class certification, concluding that, although many prerequisites for class certification were met, common issues did not predominate over individual issues, and that a class action was not the superior means of resolving the litigation.

The court of appeal affirmed, noting that the trial court's decision was based not on the mere presence of individual liability issues (i.e., the need to establish that each grocery manager had been misclassified as an executive), but on the nature of those issues. Specifically, the record established that there was a significant variation in the grocery managers' work from store to store, and from week to week. This variation required very particularized individual liability determinations that predominated over common issues (141 Cal. App. 4th 1422, 1431-1432) .

The court of appeal went on to reject the plaintiff's contention that the trial court had failed to take into account a variety of procedural tools--such as the use of exemplar plaintiffs, survey results, subclassing, mini-trials, or special masters--that the plaintiff had suggested might enable the court to manage the individual issues while proceeding with the class litigation. The court of appeal found that the record did not establish that the trial court had failed to consider those procedural tools. Further, the court of appeal remarked that it is not sufficient for a plaintiff simply to mention a procedural tool that might facilitate the management of individual issues. Rather, the party seeking class certification must explain how the procedure will effectively manage the issues in question, and the plaintiff in this case had failed to do so (141 Cal. App. 4th 1422, 1432-1433) .

[c] Real Property Damage Action Not Proper

San Jose v. Superior Court (1974) 12 Cal. 3d 447, 115 Cal. Rptr. 797, 525 P.2d 701 , is discussed in § 41.53[3][b].

Knox v. Streatfield (1978) 79 Cal. App. 3d 565, 145 Cal. Rptr. 39 , was a class action for damages and injunctive relief by a group of subdivision property owners against other owners allegedly in violation of a declaration of restrictions. Defendants' demurrers to the complaint were sustained by the trial court, which entered a judgment dismissing the action. Plaintiffs then filed their appeal.

The court of appeal affirmed the dismissal as to the class action allegations, but reversed the dismissal of the named plaintiffs' individual actions (79 Cal. App. 3d 565, 574, 576) . The court noted that although plaintiffs in this case did not allege damage to the land itself, as did the plaintiffs in San Jose v. Superior Court (1974) 12 Cal. 3d 447, 115 Cal. Rptr. 797, 525 P.2d 701 (discussed § 41.53[3][b]), the uniqueness of each parcel presented an obstacle to class treatment in this case. Each plaintiff's recovery, the court stated, would depend on the characteristics of his or her particular parcel of land, such as the distance from lots where alleged violations had occurred and the condition of the property. The court noted that all of these factors would have to be determined individually (79 Cal. App. 3d 565, 574) . The court stated that not only the issue of damages, but also the issue of liability on the part of each defendant would have to be individually litigated because plaintiffs had alleged that different defendants had violated the declaration of restrictions in different ways and some of the alleged violations may not have caused damage to some of the class members by virtue of location (79 Cal. App. 3d 565, 572) .

[d] National Class Action Subject to Different States' Laws

In Washington Mutual Bank v. Superior Court (2001) 24 Cal. 4th 906, 103 Cal. Rptr. 2d 320, 15 P.3d 1071 , the trial court certified a nationwide class without determining the force and effect of contractual agreements that would have made the laws of different states applicable in the case. The court of appeal found that certification was proper because the defendant had failed to show that the contractually selected laws were conflicting. The Supreme Court reversed, finding that the lower courts had applied an incomplete and erroneous analysis.

The Supreme Court held that a court should not grant certification of a nationwide class without first determining the effect of choice-of-law agreements under which the claims of different class members would be governed by different states' laws. The court should deny certification if it determines that the degree of complexity arising from the application of different states' laws results in common legal questions not predominating, or makes nationwide class litigation unmanageable (24 Cal. 4th 906, 915) .

The trial court's analysis should proceed as follows when the parties have a contractual choice-of-law clause. The trial court should first examine the choice-of-law clause and ascertain whether the advocate of the clause has met the burden of establishing that the various claims of putative class members fall within its scope (24 Cal. 4th 906, 916) . If the trial court finds that the class claims fall within the scope of a choice-of-law clause, it must next evaluate the clause's enforceability according to the approach reflected in Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws, § 187(2). The court must determine whether the chosen state has a substantial relationship to the parties or their transaction, or whether there is any other reasonable basis for the parties' choice of law. If neither of these tests is met, that is the end of the inquiry, and the court need not enforce the parties' choice of law (24 Cal. 4th 906, 916) .

If, however, either test is met, the court must next determine whether the chosen state's law is contrary to a fundamental policy of California. If there is no such conflict, the court must enforce the parties' choice of law. If, however, there is a fundamental conflict with California law, the court must then determine whether California has a materially greater interest than the chosen state in the determination of the particular issue. If California has a materially greater interest than the chosen state, the choice-of-law clause should not be enforced (24 Cal. 4th 906, 916-917) . If the choice-of-law clause is inapplicable or not enforceable, the court mayapply California law on a class-wide basis so long as its application is not arbitrary or unfair with respect to nonresident class members, and so long as the interests of other states are not found to outweigh California's interest in having its law applied (24 Cal. 4th 906, 919-921) .

If the trial court finds that the laws of multiple states are applicable in the action, the party seeking nationwide class certification then bears the burden of identifying any variations in the states' laws and meaningfully demonstrating how a trial can be conducted in light of those variations. To meet this burden, the class action proponent must credibly demonstrate, through a thorough analysis of the applicable state laws, that state law variations will not swamp common issues and defeat predominance. Additionally, the proponent's presentation must be sufficient to permit the trial court, at the time of certification, to make a detailed assessment of how any state law differences could be managed fairly and efficiently at trial, for example, through the creation of a manageable number of subclasses (24 Cal. 4th 906, 922-928) .

[e] Class Action Must be Superior to Individual Litigation

In Basurco v. 21st *Century Ins. Co. (2003) 108 Cal. App. 4th 110, 133 Cal. Rptr. 2d 367 , the plaintiffs sought to certify a class consisting of homeowners who were allegedly denied insurance benefits by the defendant insurance companies after the January 1994 Northridge earthquake. The trial court denied the plaintiffs' class certification motion, finding that common questions of law and fact did not predominate over individual issues, and that a class action would not be superior to individual lawsuits.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court began its analysis with a brief review of the requirements for class certification. To obtain certification, a party must establish the existence of both an ascertainable class and a well-defined community of interest among the class members. The community of interest requirement involves three factors: (1) predominant common questions of law or fact, (2) class representatives with claims or defenses typical of the class, and (3) class representatives who can adequately represent the class. The court found that common questions of law did not predominate because the existence of damage, the cause of damage, and the extent of damage would have to be determined on a case-by-case basis for each homeowner (108 Cal. App. 4th 110, 117-120) .

The court of appeal then turned to the question of superiority of class treatment. The court observed that because a class should not be certified unless substantial benefits accrue both to litigants and the courts, it was necessary to consider whether a class action would be superior to individual lawsuits. Even if questions of law or fact predominate, if class treatment would not be superior to individual lawsuits, the lack of advantage providesan alternative ground to deny class certification. In determining whether a class action is superior, the court should consider (1) the interest of each member in controlling his or her own case personally, (2) any difficulties that are likely to be encountered in managing a class action, (3) the nature and extent of any litigation by individual class members already in progress involving same controversy, and (4) the desirability of consolidating all claims in a single action before a single court (108 Cal. App. 4th 110, 120-121) .

Applying the first factor, the court found that putative class members had a strong interest in controlling their own cases, given the nature of the relief sought--the repair of substantial damage to their homes and the payment of expenses for having to live elsewhere during repairs. Considering the second factor, the court concluded that a class action would be extremely difficult to manage because individual issues predominated over common questions of law and fact, because the existence, type, and extent of damage varied from case to case. As to the third factor, there were at least 287 separate actions against these defendants, with over 1,500 plaintiffs. Regarding the fourth factor, the court opined that the complexity of the issues in the pending cases made it impractical and thus undesirable to consolidate all 287 actions into a single proceeding. In this connection, the court of appeal noted with approval that the trial court had already adopted special procedures to manage all of the individual insurance lawsuits arising out of the 1994 earthquake, including those brought against other defendants not involved in the present action. Accordingly, the court of appeal concluded that class treatment would not be superior to individual lawsuits, and the court affirmed the trial court's denial of class certification (108 Cal. App. 4th 110, 121-122) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Numerous and Substantial Individual Questions

In Caro v. Procter & Gamble Co. (1993) 18 Cal. App. 4th 644, 22 Cal. Rptr. 2d 419 , the court of appeal affirmed a trial court decision denying class certification in a case in which a plaintiff was suing a company for misleading consumers into believing its product was pure orange juice. The denial was proper because (1) damages would have been insignificant; (2) the defendant's practices had ceased; (3) persons with claims would have been too numerous and too difficult to find; (4) individual remedies for statutory violations were available; (5) class treatment would have clogged courts; (6) the plaintiff failed to demonstrate that his claims were typical of class members' claims, because he had only read the top portion of the label on the product and not the conflicting bottom; thus he was not misled in the manner the class was allegedly deceived; and (7) individual issues involving the existence and nature of any material misrepresentationwould have predominated over common issues (18 Cal. App. 4th 644, 657-669) .

In Osborne v. Subaru of America, Inc. (1988) 198 Cal. App. 3d 646, 243 Cal. Rptr. 815 , the trial court refused to certify a nationwide class of plaintiffs who were current or former owners of 1973, 1974, and 1976 Subaru automobiles and who sought damages for the alleged defective design of the vehicles. The damages sought included compensation for repair costs, costs for additional service, maintenance, and replacement transportation, diminution in value due to the defects, and punitive damages of not less than $5,000 per vehicle. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's decision, finding no abuse of discretion. It agreed with the trial court's holding that certification of a nationwide class would require the adjudication of issues by applying numerous rules of law from different states (198 Cal. App. 3d 646, 659) , and would result in numerous individual adjudications of fact (198 Cal. App. 3d 646, 662) . Finally, the court found that California had no special obligation to adjudicate the issues, since the only connection between the automobiles and California was that some vehicles arrived through a California port of entry (198 Cal. App. 3d 646, 663) .

In Brown v. Regents of University of California (1984) 151 Cal. App. 3d 982, 198 Cal. Rptr. 916 (discussed in § 41.34[4][a]), an order sustaining a demurrer to class-action allegations in a complaint for negligent and intentional factual concealment and misrepresentation, and for failure to provide adequate coronary care, was upheld by the court of appeal. The court noted that class actions will not be permitted when there are diverse factual issues to be resolved, even though there may be many common questions of law. If the ability of each member of the class to recover clearly depends on a separate set of facts applicable only to him or her, then all of the policy considerations that justify class actions equally compel the dismissal of such inappropriate actions (151 Cal. App. 3d 982, 989) .

In Grogan-Beall v. Ferdinand Roten Galleries, Inc. (1982) 133 Cal. App. 3d 969, 184 Cal. Rptr. 411 , a class action seeking damages for defendant's failure to comply with the disclosure-disclaimer provisions of the California Sale of Fine Prints Act (Civ. Code §§ 1740-1745), the court of appeal affirmed the trial court's order decertifying the conditional class of plaintiffs (133 Cal. App. 3d 969, 976-979) . The court noted that determining violations of the act's disclosure or disclaimer requirements would involve substantial individual factual issues. In concluding that decertification of the class was proper, the court stated that since each claimant must litigate a number of substantial fact questions peculiar to his or her right of recovery, it is not reasonably possible to establish the necessary community of interest among the class members (133 Cal. App. 3d 969, 976-979) .

In D'Amico v. Sitmar Cruises, Inc. (1980) 109 Cal. App. 3d 323, 167 Cal. Rptr. 254 , an action for damages on behalf of a class of passengers whobecame ill during a pleasure cruise, the court of appeal affirmed a trial court decision striking class action allegations (109 Cal. App. 3d 323, 327) . The court apparently found validity in respondents' argument that liability could be established only through the individual testimony of each class member, because after discussion of the general rule stated in Paragraph B of this form, the court affirmed the trial court's decision without additional comments (109 Cal. App. 3d 323, 325-327) .

In Rose v. Medtronics, Inc. (1980) 107 Cal. App. 3d 150, 166 Cal. Rptr. 16 (discussed in § 41.34[4][a]), an action for medical negligence by a class of persons allegedly implanted with defective pacemakers, the court of appeal held that the trial court had properly dismissed the class action allegations because the factual questions and legal issues were preponderantly diverse rather than common (107 Cal. App. 3d 150, 157) . The court noted that defendant's liability could vary from claim to claim, claimants' damages could vary from nonexistent to damages for wrongful death, and further, that the activities and skills of intermediaries (physicians and surgeons) could have different degrees of relevancy for each claim (107 Cal. App. 3d 150, 156-157) . In addition, the questions of law would be more individual than common (107 Cal. App. 3d 150, 157) .

In Bartlett v. Hawaiian Village, Inc. (1978) 87 Cal. App. 3d 435, 151 Cal. Rptr. 392 (discussed in § 41.34[3][a]), the court of appeal upheld the trial court's dismissal of a class action by a group of homosexual men for unlawful exclusion from public baths (87 Cal. App. 3d 435, 440) . The court noted that the class members possessed only the common legal issue of whether or not defendants were liable for the wrongful exclusion of any person with certain personal characteristics. Each claimant, the court concluded, would still be required to litigate a number of substantial fact questions peculiar to his right of recovery. Thus, the community of interest requirement was not fulfilled (87 Cal. App. 3d 435, 440) .

In Altman v. Manhattan Savings Bank (1978) 83 Cal. App. 3d 761, 148 Cal. Rptr. 100 , a class action for breach of fiduciary duty and damages based on negligence, the court of appeal upheld the trial court's dismissal of the class action allegations (83 Cal. App. 3d 761, 769) . The court noted that the testimony of each class member would be required to demonstrate substantial damage to either property or person as a condition precedent to recovery on plaintiffs' additional claim for emotional distress. Also, complex proof would be required to establish individual damages (83 Cal. App. 3d 761, 767) . Thus, the court found the requisite community of interest lacking because damages could not be easily calculated and each member would be required to litigate numerous and substantial questions to determine his or her right to recovery (83 Cal. App. 3d 761, 769) .

In Hamwi v. Citinational-Buckeye Inv. Co. (1977) 72 Cal. App. 3d 462, 140 Cal. Rptr. 215 (discussed in § 41.31[3][b]), a class action by past and present tenants for breaches of a lease and fiduciary duties, the court of appeal held that thetrial court had properly determined that plaintiff had failed to establish the requisite community of interest (72 Cal. App. 3d 462, 473) . The court noted that the community of interest is not present when each class member would be required to individually litigate numerous and substantial questions to determine his or her right to recover. Thus, the court concluded, if a class action will splinter into individual trials, common questions do not predominate, and litigation of the action in the class format is inappropriate (72 Cal. App. 3d 462, 471) . In Hamwi, the interpretation of ambiguous portions of the lease would have involved separate trials as to the meaning of extrinsic evidence of discussions with the individual class members (72 Cal. App. 3d 462, 473) .

In Stilson v. Reader's Digest Ass'n, Inc. (1972) 28 Cal. App. 3d 270, 104 Cal. Rptr. 581 , cert. denied, 411 U.S. 952, 93 S. Ct. 1928, 36 L. Ed. 2d 414 (1973) , a class action for unauthorized use of plaintiffs' names for commercial exploitation, the court of appeal sustained the trial court's order striking class action allegations (28 Cal. App. 3d 270, 275) . The court noted that a showing of plaintiffs' mental anguish from the unauthorized use would involve evidence of the mental and subjective state of each plaintiff who sought more than nominal damages (28 Cal. App. 3d 270, 274) . These requirements, the court concluded, when combined with the large size of the potential class, would impose an unjustified and intolerable burden on the court and the parties (28 Cal. App. 3d 270, 274-275) .

[1] FORM Opposing Contention That Class Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 382] Proper--No Community of Interest Among Class Members--No Special Obligation to Adjudicate Nationwide Class Action

[The following may be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities in support of a motion for an order declaring an action inappropriate as a class action (see, e.g., § 41.31) or a motion to decertify the class (see, e.g., § 41.32). The following may also be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities supporting defendant's demurrer on the ground that class action treatment is not appropriate (see, e.g., § 41.34).]

THE COMMUNITY OF INTEREST REQUIREMENT IS NOT SATISFIED IN THIS ACTION BECAUSE THE TRIAL COURT WOULD BE REQUIRED TO ADJUDICATE ISSUES BY APPLICATION OF NUMEROUS DIFFERENT RULES OF LAW FROM THE VARIOUS STATES, AND THERE IS NO SPECIAL OBLIGATION IMPOSING A BURDEN ON THE COURT TO DO SO.

A. Need for Diverse Legal Rulings Constitute Individual Questions. When legal questions vary from state to state and hence require the trial court to make diverse legal rulings on an emerging theory of recovery in a multitude of jurisdictions, the questions of law necessarily would be more individual than common to all (Osborne v. Subaru of America, Inc. (1988) 198 Cal. App. 3d 646, 655, 243 Cal. Rptr. 815).

B. Court Has No Special Obligation to Adjudicate Nationwide Class Action. California courts should not, absent a "special obligation" to do so, undertake the massive burden of adjudicating nationwide class action lawsuits when to do so would require the trial court to adjudicate issues by application of numerous different rules of law from the various states (Osborne v. Subaru of America, Inc. (1988) 198 Cal. App. 3d 646, 664, 243 Cal. Rptr. 815).

[Optional] C. Special Obligation Determination Made at Pleading Stage. The trial court should, at the pleading stage, consider factors set forth in Osborne v. Subaru of America, Inc. (1988) 198 Cal. App. 3d 646, 663-664, 243 Cal. Rptr. 815 , whether certification of nationwide class would require trial court to adjudicate issues by application of numerous different rules of law from various states, and whether California has "special obligation" to undertake litigation (Canon U.S.A., Inc. v. Superior Court (1998) 68 Cal. App. 4th 1, 8, 79 Cal. Rptr. 2d 897).

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to the contention that class action treatment is proper. Defendant may use these points and authorities when arguing that the community of interest requirement is not satisfied because the trial court would be required to adjudicate issues by application of numerous different rules of law from the various states, and there is no special obligation imposing a burden on the court to do so.

This form may be combined, when appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to invoke the contention. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

This form may also be combined with a form contending that there are numerous and substantial individual questions [see § 41.53].

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Counsel shouldrefer to facts showing that the trial court would be required to adjudicate issues by application of numerous different rules of law from various states, and that the facts of the case do not indicate a "special obligation" on the part of the court to undertake a massive burden of adjudicating a nationwide class action lawsuit, requiring the court to adjudicate issues by application of numerous different rules of law from the various states [see Osborne v. Subaru of America, Inc. (1988) 198 Cal. App. 3d 646, 664, 243 Cal. Rptr. 815] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Need for Diverse Legal Rulings Constitute Individual Questions

In Osborne v. Subaru of America, Inc. (1988) 198 Cal. App. 3d 646, 243 Cal. Rptr. 815 , the trial court refused to certify a nationwide class of plaintiffs who were current or former owners of 1973, 1974, and 1976 Subaru automobiles and who sought damages premised on the asserted defective design of their automobiles. The owners all experienced various engine breakdowns in their Subarus which they attributed to a defect in the design of the head gasket and valve system. Although plaintiffs themselves own Subarus in only three model years, they sought to certify a nationwide class on behalf of owners of new or used Subarus of model years 1969 through 1976, claiming all those models use the same defective engine design. Approximately 180,000 of these automobiles were sold by Subaru.

Plaintiffs sought damages to compensate for repair costs, costs for additional maintenance and service, costs for replacement transportation during repairs, and diminution in value due to the defects. Plaintiffs also sought punitive damages of not less than $5,000 per vehicle. After a hearing, the trial court denied certification of the class. The court ruled that while plaintiffs had framed an ascertainable class, separate questions of law and fact outweighed the common issues. The court noted that the action undeniably raises certain issues which would appear to underlie all of the individual claims, but they are far outweighed by the peculiarities of each case alone. The allegation that the head gaskets were inherently defective in all the model years and the use of national advertising may be common themes. But beyond these starting points the individual cases branched off in their own separate directions with a multitude of varying legal and factual issues. On the law to be applied, the national scope of the purported class immediately raised choice of law issues concerning the statute of limitations, liability, and recovery of damages. The trial court stated that the rules on these issues throughout the states were not only inharmonious but were flatly contradictory in many respects. The trial court concluded that the case had so many difficult and peculiarlyindividual issues that treating it as a class action would be disadvantageous to the judicial process and, ultimately, to the litigants themselves.

The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's decision, finding no abuse of discretion. It agreed with the trial court's holding that certification of a nationwide class would require the adjudication of issues by applying numerous rules of law from different states (198 Cal. App. 3d 646, 659) , and would result in numerous individual adjudications of fact (198 Cal. App. 3d 646, 662) . The court cited its prior decision in Baltimore Football Club, Inc. v. Superior Court (1985) 171 Cal. App. 3d 352, 363, 215 Cal. Rptr. 323 that when legal questions vary from state to state and hence require the trial court to make diverse legal rulings on an emerging theory of recovery in a multitude of jurisdictions, the questions of law necessarily would be more individual than common to all (198 Cal. App. 3d 646, 655) .

[b] Court Has No Special Obligation to Adjudicate Nationwide Class Action

The facts and procedural background of Osborne v. Subaru of America, Inc. (1988) 198 Cal. App. 3d 646, 243 Cal. Rptr. 815 , are discussed in § 41.54[3][a]. The court of appeal concluded that California courts should not, absent a "special obligation" to do so, undertake the massive burden of adjudicating nationwide class action lawsuits when to do so would require the trial court to adjudicate issues by application of numerous different rules of law from the various states. The court found that California had no special obligation to adjudicate the issues, since the only connection between the automobiles and California was that some vehicles arrived through a California port of entry (198 Cal. App. 3d 646, 663) .

[c] Special Obligation Determination Made at Pleading Stage

In Canon U.S.A., Inc. v. Superior Court (1998) 68 Cal. App. 4th 1, 79 Cal. Rptr. 2d 897 , the trial court denied a motion to strike from the complaint all references to a purported nationwide class of purchasers and lessees of certain models of color laser copiers. The copier manufacturer and other parties sought a writ of mandate directing the trial court to set aside its order.

The court of appeal issued a writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate its order denying the motion to strike. The parties seeking certification of the class who opposed the petition read Osborne v. Subaru of America, Inc. (1988) 198 Cal. App. 3d 646, 664, 243 Cal. Rptr. 815 to stand for the proposition that if there is a reasonable possibility that plaintiffs can plead a prima facie community of interest and ascertainable class, the trial court should first allow class-related discovery to be conducted, and then set a class-certification hearing in order to determine whether theevidence garnered during the discovery process is sufficient to meet the plaintiffs' burden of proof. The court stated that while in Osborne the decision not to certify the class was made following an evidentiary hearing during which the plaintiffs were given an opportunity to present evidence garnered during discovery, an Osborne analysis does not turn on matters subject to discovery. Even if the parties seeking certification of the class had been given an opportunity after conducting discovery to present evidence conclusively demonstrating that there exists in this class action lawsuit common questions of fact which outweigh the separate questions of fact, the trial court would still have been required to determine whether the variations of applicable law among the various states would render the purported nationwide class unmanageable, and whether California has a "special obligation" to undertake the burden of a nationwide class action. Such determinations can and should be made at the pleading stage. The only information outside the pleadings needed to resolve the variation-of-law issue is an analysis of the conflicting laws of the 50 states. This is a matter properly considered in an attack on the pleadings (68 Cal. App. 4th 1, 8) .

In deciding whether California has a "special obligation" to undertake the nationwide class action, certain factors must be considered, including whether the nationwide class would promote judicial economy in California courts, whether California claimants would be aided in their recovery by class litigation, and the extent of the connection the parties have with California. These facts are often ascertainable by reference to the allegations contained within the complaint, or by reference to matters subject to judicial notice. Thus, consideration of this issue is proper in connection with a motion to strike (68 Cal. App. 4th 1, 8, 9) .

4-41 California Points & Authorities § 41.55

§ 41.55 Opposing Contention That Class Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 382] Proper--No Community of Interest Among Class Members--Multiplicity of Actions Unlikely When Injury to Sole Aggrieved Party Is Self-Generated

[1] FORM Opposing Contention That Class Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 382] Proper--No Community of Interest Among Class Members--Multiplicity of Actions Unlikely When Injury to Sole Aggrieved Party Is Self-Generated

[The following may be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities in support of a motion for an order declaring an action inappropriate as a class action (see, e.g., § 41.31) or a motion to decertify the class (see, e.g., § 41.32). The following may also be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities supporting defendant's demurrer on the ground that class action treatment is not appropriate (see, e.g., § 41.34).]

THE COMMUNITY OF INTEREST REQUIREMENT IS NOT SATISFIED IN THIS ACTION BECAUSE MULTIPLE LAWSUITS ARE UNLIKELY IN LIGHT OF THE FACT THAT THE ONLY AGGRIEVED PARTY WHO HAD BROUGHT SUIT HAD DELIBERATELY GENERATED HIS/HER OWN INJURY.

Multiplicity of Actions Unlikely When Injury to Sole Aggrieved Party Is Self-Generated. When the only lawsuit on file is based on a self-generated injury, the trial court could reasonably conclude that it would likely not have to adjudicate a multiplicity of actions if the class is not certified (Reese v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. (1999) 73 Cal. App. 4th 1225, 1236, 87 Cal. Rptr. 2d 346).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to the contention that class action treatment is proper. The community of interest determination depends on whether or not the common questions are sufficiently important to permit adjudication in a class action rather than in a multiplicity of separate suits [Daar v. Yellow Cab Co. (1967) 67 Cal. 2d 695, 713, 63 Cal. Rptr. 724, 433 P.2d 732 ; see § 41.39[3][a]]. Thus, Defendant may use these points and authorities when arguing that the community of interest requirement is not satisfied because multiple lawsuits are unlikely in light of the fact that the only aggrieved party who had brought suit had deliberately generated his or her own injury.

This form may be combined, when appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to invoke the contention. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Counsel should refer to facts showing that:

- The only lawsuit on file is that filed by the aggrieved party, and
- The plaintiff had deliberately generated his or her own injury.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Multiplicity of Actions Unlikely When Injury to Sole Aggrieved Party Is Self-Generated

In Reese v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. (1999) 73 Cal. App. 4th 1225, 87 Cal. Rptr. 2d 346 , the complaint was directed at a "Ladies Day" promotionaldiscount at which the defendant store purportedly offered female customers a lower price for a "lube express" oil change at various automotive repair facilities. The plaintiff customer brought suit on behalf of himself, a nationwide class of males who paid for an oil change at the store, and the general public. The trial court denied the customer's motion for class certification. The customer moved for reconsider, and the motion was denied. The customer appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court found that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in finding that the plaintiff failed to demonstrate that substantial benefits would accrue from class treatment in this case. The court stated that there are at least three different benefits from class treatment: redress for numerous aggrieved parties who could not otherwise maintain individual actions; the avoidance of the possibility of multiple actions; and the disgorging of the wrongdoer's unjust enrichment. In this case, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in determining that substantial benefits would not accrue from class treatment when (1) individual claims were viable without class treatment; (2) multiple lawsuits were unlikely in light of the fact that the only aggrieved party who had brought suit the plaintiff had deliberately generated his own injury; (3) class treatment would consume more time and expense than adjudicating the pending case or a limited number of individual suits; (4) some form of effective class-wide relief was available without class certification through the unfair competition claim alleged by plaintiff; and (5) the statutory penalties sought by plaintiff and others could disgorge any unjust enrichment without resort to class certification (73 Cal. App. 4th 1225, 1229) .

Although the complaint alleged that the store's Ladies Day special had been an ongoing promotion over a three year period, at the time the plaintiff moved for class certification, no one other than the plaintiff had filed suit based on these business practices. And the record before the trial court disclosed that plaintiff--the one person who did file suit--had deliberately gone to the store, rather than his normal automotive service, on the day in question for purposes of being denied the Ladies Day discount. And he had done so only after he was introduced to his counsel. The court observed that "Whereas most litigants consult with a lawyer after an injury to seek judicial redress, this client went to his lawyer to seek an injury for which he could claim judicial redress." The court did not express a view here on the propriety of such a practice. But on the record, when the only lawsuit on file was based on a self-generated injury, the court concluded that the trial court could reasonably conclude that it would likely not have to adjudicate a multiplicity of actions if the class was not certified (73 Cal. App. 4th 1225, 1236) .

§ 41.56 Opposing Contention That Class Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 382] Proper--No Community of Interest Among Class Members--Class Representative Does Not Have Cause of Action Against All Defendants

[1] FORM Opposing Contention That Class Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 382] Proper--No Community of Interest Among Class Members--Class Representative Does Not Have Cause of Action Against All Defendants

[The following may be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities in support of a motion for an order declaring an action inappropriate as a class action (see, e.g., § 41.31) or a motion to decertify the class (see, e.g., § 41.32). The following may also be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities supporting defendant's demurrer on the ground that class action treatment is not appropriate (see, e.g., § 41.34).]

THE CLASS REPRESENTATIVE DOES NOT SHARE A COMMUNITY OF INTEREST WITH THE MEMBERS OF THE CLASS BECAUSE HE/SHE DOES NOT HAVE A CAUSE OF ACTION AGAINST ALL THE DEFENDANTS.

A. Ascertainable Class and Community of Interest in Questions of Law and Fact Essential for Proper class Action. [See § 41.36, Paragraph A.]

B. Community of Interest Requirements. The community of interest requirement embodies three factors: (1) predominant common questions of law of fact; (2) class representatives with claims or defenses typical of the class; and (3) class representatives who can adequately represent the class (Baltimore Football Club, Inc. v. Superior Court (1985) 171 Cal. App. 3d 352, 358-359, 215 Cal. Rptr. 323).

C. Class Representative Must Have Cause of Action Against All Defendants. In the absence of a conspiracy between all defendants, a class action may only be maintained against defendants concerning whom the class representative has a cause of action (Hart v. County of Alameda (1999) 76 Cal. App. 4th 766, 775-776, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 386 ; Baltimore Football Club, Inc. v. Superior Court (1985) 171 Cal. App. 3d 352, 359, 215 Cal. Rptr. 323).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to a contention that a class action may be properly maintained. Defendant mayuse these in a case in which there are multiple defendants, and the class representative has not alleged a cause of action against all defendants [see Code Civ. Proc. § 382; see also Baltimore Football Club, Inc. v. Superior Court (1985) 171 Cal. App. 3d 352, 358-359, 215 Cal. Rptr. 323] .

This memorandum may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that a class action may not be properly maintained. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Therefore, counsel should discuss facts showing that the class representative has not alleged a cause of action against all defendants.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Community of Interest Requirements

Baltimore Football Club, Inc. v. Superior Court (1985) 171 Cal. App. 3d 352, 215 Cal. Rptr. 323 , was an action brought by a season ticket holder against all teams in a professional sports league, to recover damages from profits earned by defendants' retention of ticket purchase money during a players' strike. Plaintiffs sought certification as a class action on behalf of all of each league team's season ticket holders. Defendants opposed certification, declaring that each team establishes its own policies regarding season tickets. The league's teams do not pool and divide season ticket purchase money, and after the strike ended, each team responded to its season ticket holders independently. The trial court granted the motion to certify the case as a class action, and defined the class as all persons who purchased a season ticket from one or more defendants for all home games during the affected season, and who paid a valuable consideration therefor. Defendants sought a peremptory writ of mandate directing respondent superior court to vacate its order granting plaintiffs' motion and to enter a new order denying the motion for class certification.

The court of appeal reversed, noting that Code Civ. Proc. § 382 requires a class action to include an ascertainable class, and a well defined community of interest in the questions of law and fact that affect the parties to be represented. The community of interest requirement embodies: (1) predominant common questions of law or fact; (2) class representatives with claimsor defenses typical of the class; and (3) class representatives who can adequately represent the class (171 Cal. App. 3d 352, 358) . The class was therefore improperly certified (171 Cal. App. 3d 352, 361) . Moreover, the class action did not meet the fundamental requirement of predominate common questions of law or fact because each team was responsible for its own policies regarding season tickets, and legal questions varied among the foreign states (171 Cal. App. 3d 352, 363) .

[b] Class Representative Must Have Cause of Action Against All Defendants

In Hart v. County of Alameda (1999) 76 Cal. App. 4th 766, 775-776, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 386 , a plaintiff brought an action on behalf of himself and others similarly situated against 25 California counties, seeking the return of unused jury fee deposits. The central thrust of the plaintiff's second amended complaint was that he and the class members were entitled to a return of their jury deposits because the counties breached a duty to make reasonable efforts to notify the depositors before the jury fees reverted to the counties' general funds. The counties denied they owed a duty to provide such notice. The trial court sustained the counties' demurrer without leave to amend, concluding that the plaintiff was barred from recovery under any theory. The plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment of the trial court. The 22 counties in which the plaintiff did not make jury deposits contended that the plaintiff lacked standing to sue because he did not allege that he made a deposit in those counties and therefore he was not the real party in interest. According to the court, the contention had merit, whether characterized as a "standing" defect or a failure to satisfy the class action "typicality" requirement. The court, citing Baltimore Football Club, Inc. v. Superior Court (1985) 171 Cal. App. 3d 352, 359, 215 Cal. Rptr. 323 , and other cases, stated that under California's class action statute, when a class action is brought against multiple defendants, the action may only be maintained against defendants against whom the class representative has a cause of action. Without such a personal cause of action, the prerequisite that the claims of the representative party be typical of the class cannot be met. If the plaintiff class representative only has a personal cause of action against one defendant and never had any claim of any kind against the remaining defendants, his or her claim is not typical of the class. This requirement is not fulfilled merely because the plaintiffs allege that they suffered injuries similar to those of other parties at the hands of other defendants (76 Cal. App. 4th 766, 775-776) . Because the plaintiff did not allege that he or his assignors deposited jury fees in 22 of the 25 counties, and did not allege any facts to fit within an exception to the rule requiring a personal cause of action, the court concluded that the plaintiff had no standing to sue those 22 counties, and was not a proper class representative in claims against those counties (76 Cal. App. 4th 766, 776) .

The facts and procedural background of Baltimore Football Club, Inc. v. Superior Court (1985) 171 Cal. App. 3d 352, 215 Cal. Rptr. 323 , is discussed in § 41.56[3][a]. The court of appeal held that because the class representatives had not shown that they had purchased season tickets from all defendants, and therefore had not stated causes of action against all defendants, the class action was improperly certified (171 Cal. App. 3d 352, 359) . The fact that plaintiffs allege that they suffered injuries similar to those of other parties at the hands of other defendants does not satisfy the typicality requirement (171 Cal. App. 3d 352, 359) .

CHAPTER 41 CLASS AND REPRESENTATIVE ACTIONS
PART II. FORMS

4-41 California Points & Authorities § 41.57

§ 41.57 Opposing Contention That Class Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 382] Proper--Named Plaintiffs Do Not Adequately Represent Interests of Absent Class Members--Named Plaintiffs Failed to Raise Claims Reasonably Expected by Class Members

[1] FORM Opposing Contention That Class Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 382] Proper--Named Plaintiffs Do Not Adequately Represent Interests of Absent Class Members--Named Plaintiffs Failed to Raise Claims Reasonably Expected by Class Members

[The following may be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities in support of a motion for an order declaring an action inappropriate as a class action (see, e.g., § 41.31) or a motion to decertify the class (see, e.g., § 41.32). The following may also be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities supporting defendant's demurrer on the ground that class action treatment is not appropriate (see, e.g., § 41.34).]

THE NAMED PLAINTIFFS IN THIS ACTION INADEQUATELY REPRESENT THE ALLEGED CLASS BECAUSE THEY FAIL TO RAISE CLAIMS REASONABLY EXPECTED TO BE RAISED BY THE ABSENT CLASS MEMBERS.

A. Proof of Adequacy of Representation. The party seeking class certification has the burden of proving the adequacy of its representation (Richmond v. Dart Industries, Inc. (1981) 29 Cal. 3d 462, 470, 174 Cal. Rptr. 515, 629 P.2d 23).

B. Plaintiffs' Representation Inadequate. The named plaintiffs inadequately represent the alleged class when they fail to raise claims reasonably expected to be raised by the members of the class and thus pursue a course which, even should the litigation be resolved in favor of the class, would deprive class members of many elements of damage (San Jose v. Superior Court (1974) 12 Cal. 3d 447, 464, 115 Cal. Rptr. 797, 525 P.2d 701).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to the contention that the named plaintiffs adequately represent the interests of absent class members. Defendant may use these points and authorities when arguing that representation is inadequate because the named plaintiffs failed to raise claims reasonably expected to be raised by the absent class members.

This form may be combined, when appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to invoke the contention. A defendant might make an argument supported by this memorandum under the following circumstances: (1) when supporting a motion for an order declaring an action inappropriate as a class action (see, e.g., § 41.31); (2) when supporting a motion to decertify the class (see, e.g., § 41.32); (3) when opposing a motion to certify an action as a proper class action; and (4) when supporting a demurrer on the ground that class action treatment is not appropriate (see, e.g., § 41.34). This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Counsel should refer to facts showing that the named plaintiffs have failed to raise claims that could reasonably be expected from absent members of the class.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Proof of Adequacy of Representation

The facts and procedural background of Richmond v. Dart Industries, Inc. (1981) 29 Cal. 3d 462, 174 Cal. Rptr. 515, 629 P.2d 23 , are discussed in § 41.36[3][b]. In Richmond, the Supreme Court held that because defendants had not established in the trial court that there was either a conflict of interest or overwhelming disapproval of the lawsuit within the class which would defeat the purpose of class adjudication, the trial court erred when it refused certification (29 Cal. 3d 462, 474-475) .

Despite its holding that representation was adequate because the defendants had failed to show otherwise, the Court in Richmond also stated that the party seeking class certification has the burden of proving the adequacy of its representation. In addition, the Court noted that when the party opposing certification presents evidence that indicates widespread antagonism to the class suit, the adequacy of representation is called into question (29 Cal. 3d 462, 470) . Although the first statement appears torequire affirmative proof of adequate representation, possibly as an element of plaintiff's action, the second comment infers that the issue arises only when the defendant presents evidence of widespread antagonism to the class suit. In addition, the Court's holding that representation was adequate because defendant had failed to show a conflict or overwhelming disapproval among class members seems to place the burden on defendant to show that representation is inadequate. Thus, although the Court in Richmond stated that the party seeking class certification has the burden of proving the adequacy of its representation, the Court's additional comments and its holding leave this issue unclear.

[b] Plaintiffs' Representation Inadequate

The facts and procedural background of San Jose v. Superior Court (1974) 12 Cal. 3d 447, 115 Cal. Rptr. 797, 525 P.2d 701 , are discussed in § 41.49[3][a]. In San Jose, the Supreme Court held that the named plaintiffs inadequately represented a class of landowners seeking damages for nuisance and inverse condemnation resulting from airport flight patterns. The representation was inadequate, the Court ruled, because the named plaintiffs had failed to raise claims reasonably expected of the class members and thus had pursued a course which would deprive class members of many elements of damage (12 Cal. 3d 447, 464) . The Court reasoned that damages recoverable in a nuisance action for injuries to real property include not only diminution in market value but also damages for annoyance, inconvenience, discomfort, actual injuries to the land, and costs of minimizing future damages. The named plaintiffs, however, sought only recovery for diminution in market value, which effectually waived any possible recovery of potentially substantial present or future damages on behalf of hundreds of class members (12 Cal. 3d 447, 464) .

Relying on La Sala v. American Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1971) 5 Cal. 3d 864, 871-872, 97 Cal. Rptr. 849, 489 P.2d 1113 (discussed in § 41.46[3][a]), the Court stated that it had long been concerned with requiring the representative party to protect the interests of the absent class members, and had even imposed a fiduciary duty to do so on the representative class member. To fulfill this fiduciary duty, the Court stated, the representative plaintiff must raise those claims reasonably expected to be raised by the members of the class. The Court concluded that clearly under the alleged facts in San Jose, the class members would reasonably be expected to seek recovery of damages beyond mere diminution in market values and thus, by certifying the class, the trial court had sanctioned a clear violation of plaintiffs' fiduciary duty (12 Cal. 3d 447, 464) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Plaintiff's Representation Inadequate

In Caro v. Procter & Gamble Co. (1993) 18 Cal. App. 4th 644, 22 Cal. Rptr. 2d 419 , the court of appeal affirmed a trial court decision denying class certification in a case in which a plaintiff was suing a company for misleading consumers into believing its product was pure orange juice. The denial was proper because (1) damages would have been insignificant; (2) the defendant's practices had ceased; (3) persons with claims would have been too numerous and too difficult to find; (4) individual remedies for statutory violations were available; (5) class treatment would have clogged the courts; (6) the plaintiff failed to demonstrate that his claims were typical of class members' claims, because he had only read the top portion of the label on the product and not the conflicting bottom; thus he was not misled in the manner the class was allegedly deceived; and (7) individual issues involving the existence and nature of any material misrepresentation would have predominated over common issues (18 Cal. App. 4th 644, 657-669) .

In Trotsky v. Los Angeles Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1975) 48 Cal. App. 3d 134, 121 Cal. Rptr. 637 , a class action seeking damages and a declaration that provisions of a form of trust deed were invalid, the court of appeal held that the named plaintiffs were not adequate representatives of a portion of the class (48 Cal. App. 3d 134, 146) . The court noted that the plaintiff must be a person who will fairly and adequately protect the interests of the class and whose claims or defenses are typical of the claims or defenses of the class. The named plaintiffs in Trotsky failed to define the class to include borrowers who would have had claims under a certain clause of the trust deeds. In addition, the named plaintiffs had not suffered any monetary damage as a result of the disputed clause because it had never been exercised with respect to their deed (48 Cal. App. 3d 134, 146-147) .

This form may be submitted in opposition to the contention that the named plaintiffs adequately represent the interests of absent class members. Defendant may use this form when arguing that representation is inadequate because there is either a conflict of interest or widespread antagonism among potential class members.

This form may be combined, as appropriate, with forms relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to invoke the contention. A defendant might make an argument supported by this memorandum under the following circumstances: (1) when supporting a motion for an order declaring an action inappropriate as a class action (see, e.g., § 41.31); (2) when supporting a motion to decertify the class (see, e.g., § 41.32); (3) when opposing a motion to certify an action as a proper class action; and (4) when supporting a demurrer on the ground that class action treatment is not appropriate (see, e.g., § 41.34). This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Counsel should refer to facts showing either a conflict of interest or widespread antagonism to the action among potential class members.

In an appropriate case, this memorandum may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the form set out in § 41.49.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Representation Inadequate When Conflict or Overwhelming Disapproval

The facts and procedural background of Richmond v. Dart Industries, Inc. (1981) 29 Cal. 3d 462, 174 Cal. Rptr. 515, 629 P.2d 23 , are discussed in § 41.36[3][b]. In Richmond, the Supreme Court held that because defendants had not established in the trial court that there was either a conflict of interest or overwhelming disapproval of the lawsuit within the class that would defeat the purpose of class adjudication, the trial court erred when it refused certification (29 Cal. 3d 462, 474-475) . The Court noted that when the party opposing certification presents evidence that indicates widespread antagonism to the class suit, the adequacy of representation is called into question. Quoting from federal secondary authority, the Court reasoned that a putative representative cannot adequately protect the class if his or her interests are antagonistic to or in conflict with the objectives of the persons to be represented (29 Cal. 3d 462, 470) . The Court stated, however, that only a conflict that goes to the very subject matter of the litigation will defeat a party's claim of representative status, and further, that if the trial court can use Fed. R. Civ. P., Rule 23(c)(4), to divide the class into subclasses or to separate those issues that merit class action treatment so as to remove any antagonism, then the action need not be dismissed (29 Cal. 3d 462, 470-471) .

The Court in Richmond did not specify the amount of antagonism or the degree of conflict necessary to preclude a class action. In rejecting defendant's argument that only a small amount of antagonism would defeat a class action, however, the Court cited several federal appellate cases in which courts disapproved class actions in the face of opposition by a substantial majority of the potential class members (29 Cal. 3d 462, 472-473) . Thus, although Richmond supports the general rule that a conflict of interest or widespread antagonism among the class members will render the named plaintiffs' representation inadequate, counsel may wish to consult federal authorities to determine the degree of conflict or antagonism that is necessary to support an argument of inadequate representation in his or her case.

Seastrom v. Neways, Inc. (2007) 149 Cal. App. 4th 1496, 57 Cal. Rptr. 3d 903 , was an action against the manufacturer of a product allegedly sold illegally without a prescription. Distribution of the product involved a pyramid sales scheme. The named plaintiffs were upper-level distributors who sought to represent a class consisting of all persons who purchased the product. The trial court denied the plaintiffs' motion for class certification, finding that their claims were not typical of those of other class members and that they would not adequately represent the class.

The court of appeal affirmed, finding that the named plaintiffs had an insurmountable conflict of interest. Specifically, the named plaintiffs, because of their position in the upper level of the distribution scheme, were potential defendants in the case. The plaintiffs' complaint sought forfeiture and restitution of the purchase price of the product, but the plaintiffs themselves had made commissions on the sale of the product. Because the named plaintiffs sought to retain those profits, which their complaint described as illegal, the conflict between their interests and those of other class members went to the very heart of the litigation. Accordingly, the court of appeal concluded that the trial court had properly exercised its discretion in denying class certification (149 Cal. App. 4th 1496, 1502) .

[1] FORM Supporting Contention That Class Counsel Should Be Disqualified for Conflict of Interest--Named Plaintiff Is Member of Law Firm

[This form may be submitted in support of a motion for an order disqualifyingclass counsel. It may also be combined with a general form of memorandum in support of a motion for an order declaring an action inappropriate as a class action (see, e.g., § 41.31) or a motion to decertify the class (see, e.g., § 41.32).]

REPRESENTATION OF THE CLASS BY THE LAW FIRM OF _____ [name of law firm] IS IMPROPER BECAUSE THERE IS A CONFLICT OF INTEREST BETWEEN THE FIRM AND UNNAMED MEMBERS OF THE CLASS.

Named Plaintiff's Position as Attorney for Class Presents Conflict of Interest. An insurmountable conflict of interests usually exists when a named plaintiff acts in the dual roles of class representative and attorney for the class. The conflict arises from the temptation for the attorney for the class to recommend settlement on terms less favorable to class members when a large fee is part of the bargain, particularly when the potential recovery for each class member (including the named plaintiff) is small (Apple Computer, Inc. v. Superior Court (2005) 126 Cal. App. 4th 1253, 1264-1279, 24 Cal. Rptr. 3d 818).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of a contention that the law firm acting as class counsel should be disqualified because one of the named plaintiffs is an attorney in the firm, creating a conflict of interest between class counsel and the unnamed class members.

This form may be combined, as appropriate, with forms relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the contention. For example, a defendant might make an argument supported by this memorandum (1) in support of a motion for an order declaring an action inappropriate as a class action (see, e.g., § 41.31); (2) in support of a motion to decertify the class (see, e.g., § 41.32); (3) in opposing a motion to certify an action as a proper class action; or (4) in support of a demurrer on the ground that class action treatment is not appropriate (see, e.g., § 41.34). In an appropriate case, this memorandum may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the form set out in § 41.49.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Counsel should, for example, cite evidence or allegations showing that the named plaintiff is a member of the law firm that is seeking to act as class counsel.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Named Plaintiff's Position As Attorney for Class Presents Conflict of Interest

In Apple Computer, Inc. v. Superior Court (2005) 126 Cal. App. 4th 1253, 24 Cal. Rptr. 3d 818 , the named plaintiff, an attorney, was represented by the law firm where he worked and by a second firm that served as co-counsel with his firm in other cases. The defendant moved to disqualify both firms based on a conflict of interest. The defendant argued that the conflict arose from the circumstance that as the class representative, the named plaintiff was obligated to seek the maximum recovery for the putative class, but the plaintiff and the firms may have had an interest in maximizing their recovery of attorney's fees. The court of appeal held that the trial court abused its discretion in denying the motion to disqualify the firms, because an insurmountable conflict of interest existed between the class representative and class counsel on one hand, and the putative class on the other hand (126 Cal. App. 4th 1253, 1264-1279) .

The court of appeal explained that for the same individual to attempt representation of the class as named plaintiff and as counsel presents an inherent conflict of interests. The temptation always exists for class counsel to recommend settlement on terms less favorable to the class members because a large fee is part of the bargain. The potential conflict is increased when the attorney is also the named plaintiff who brought the action, and when the potential recoveries by individual class members, including the named plaintiff, are likely to be very small in proportion to the total amount of recovery by the class as a whole (in this case, each class member stood to recover $8 if the defendant was found liable). In such a situation, the named plaintiff may stand to gain little as class representative but may gain very much as attorney for the class (126 Cal. App. 4th 1253, 1264-1267) .

The court of appeal pointed out that, in the context of a potential settlement, fairness to the class members is safeguarded not just by the oversight provided by the court at the time of settlement, but also by the participation and supervision that an independent class representative should provide from start to finish. Both levels of scrutiny are necessary to protect the interests of the putative class (126 Cal. App. 4th 1253, 1268-1271) .

The court of appeal also held that the prohibition against dual roles--serving as class counsel and as class representative--is equally applicable whether the potential attorney's fees would be paid out of a common fund generated by the litigation, or by the defendant under a fee-shifting statute such as Code Civ. Proc. § 1021.5 (126 Cal. App. 4th 1253, 1272) .

Finally, the court of appeal found that the same insurmountable conflict existed not just for the law firm that the named plaintiff worked for, but also for the other law firm, because of the close business connection between the firms, which had served as co-counsel in several other cases. Accordingly, the trial court's refusal to disqualify both firms was an abuse of discretion (126 Cal. App. 4th 1253, 1274-1279) .

PART II. FORMS

4-41 California Points & Authorities § 41.59

§ 41.59 Opposing Contention That Class Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 382] Proper--Action Improper and Without Substantial Benefit When Potential Individual Recovery Small and Distribution Would Require Substantial Time and Expense

[1] FORM Opposing Contention That Class Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 382] Proper--Action Improper and Without Substantial Benefit When Potential Individual Recovery Small and Distribution Would Require Substantial Time and Expense

[The following may be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities in support of a motion for an order declaring an action inappropriate as a class action (see, e.g., § 41.31) or a motion to decertify the class (see, e.g., § 41.32). The following may also be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities supporting defendant's demurrer on the ground that class action treatment is not appropriate (see, e.g., § 41.34).]

THIS CLASS ACTION SHOULD BE DISMISSED AS UNMANAGEABLE AND WITHOUT SUBSTANTIAL BENEFIT TO CLASS MEMBERS BECAUSE THE POTENTIAL INDIVIDUAL RECOVERY IS SMALL AND BECAUSE SUBSTANTIAL TIME AND EXPENSE WOULD BE CONSUMED IN DISTRIBUTION OF THE RECOVERY.

A. Substantial Benefit to Litigants and Court. Because a group action is capable of injustice, the representative plaintiff must show that substantial benefit from the class action will result both to the litigants and the court (Blue Chip Stamps v. Superior Court (1976) 18 Cal. 3d 381, 385, 134 Cal. Rptr. 393, 556 P.2d 755 ; San Jose v. Superior Court (1974) 12 Cal. 3d 447, 459, 115 Cal. Rptr. 797, 525 P.2d 701).

B. Class Action Without Substantial Benefit. A class action is unmanageable and without substantial benefit to class members when the potential recovery to the individual is small and when substantial time and expense would be consumed in distribution of the recovery (Blue Chip Stamps v. Superior Court (1976) 18 Cal. 3d 381, 386, 134 Cal. Rptr. 393, 556 P.2d 755).

[2] Comments

This form may be submitted in opposition to the contention that class action treatment is proper. Defendant may use these points and authorities when arguing that a class action should be dismissed as unmanageable and without substantial benefit to class membersbecause the potential individual recovery is small and because substantial time and expense would be consumed in distribution of the recovery.

This form may be combined, when appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to invoke the contention. A defendant might make an argument supported by this memorandum under the following circumstances: (1) when supporting a motion for an order declaring an action inappropriate as a class action (see, e.g., § 41.31); (2) when supporting a motion to decertify the class (see, e.g., § 41.32); (3) when opposing a motion to certify an action as a proper class action; and (4) when supporting a demurrer on the ground that class action treatment is not appropriate (see, e.g., § 41.34). This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Counsel should refer to facts showing that the potential recovery for individual class members is small. Counsel should also show that substantial time and expense would be required in distribution of the class recovery. If appropriate, counsel should refer to other facts showing that the class action is unmanageable and that there are no substantial benefits to the parties and the court from proceeding in the form of a class action.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Substantial Benefit to Litigants and Court

Blue Chip Stamps v. Superior Court (1976) 18 Cal. 3d 381, 134 Cal. Rptr. 393, 556 P.2d 755 , was a class action seeking recovery of sales tax paid on redemptions of trading stamps. The plaintiffs also requested injunctive relief, punitive damages, and attorney's fees. Following an amendment to correct a defect in the complaint, the trial court certified the class. Defendant then filed for a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to vacate its certification order.

The Supreme Court granted the writ and held that the trial court had abused its discretion in certifying the action as a proper class action (18 Cal. 3d 381, 387) . Relying on San Jose, below, and other prior appellate court decisions, the Court stated that, resting on considerations of necessity and convenience, the class action attempts to further justice. The Court noted, however, that because group action is also capable of injustice, the representative plaintiff must show substantial benefit will result both to the litigants and to the court (18 Cal. 3d 381, 385) .

The facts and procedural background of San Jose v. Superior Court (1974) 12 Cal. 3d 447, 115 Cal. Rptr. 797, 525 P.2d 701 , are discussed in § 41.49[3][a]. In San Jose, a class action by property owners for nuisance and inverse condemnation resulting from airport flight patterns, theSupreme Court held that a sufficient community of interest had not been shown because the action depended on facts peculiar to each prospective plaintiff (12 Cal. 3d 447, 460-461) . The Court stated that despite its general support of class actions, it has not been unmindful of the accompanying dangers of injustice or of the limited scope within which these suits serve beneficial purposes. Instead, the Court noted, trial courts have been consistently admonished to carefully weigh respective benefits and burdens and to allow maintenance of the class action only when substantial benefits accrue both to litigants and the courts (12 Cal. 3d 447, 459) .

[b] Class Action Without Substantial Benefit

The facts and procedural background of Blue Chip Stamps v. Superior Court (1976) 18 Cal. 3d 381, 134 Cal. Rptr. 393, 556 P.2d 755 , are discussed in § 41.59[3][a]. In Blue Chip, the Supreme Court held that the trial court had abused its discretion in certifying the action as a proper class action (18 Cal. 3d 381, 387) . The Court reasoned that a class action should be dismissed as unmanageable and without substantial benefit to class members when the potential recovery to the individual is small and when substantial time and expense would be consumed in distribution of the recovery (18 Cal. 3d 381, 386) . The trial court had noted, in dispensing with the requirement of pretrial notice of the action to class members, that most of the class members had overpaid only very small sums, some as little as 18 cents (18 Cal. 3d 381, 384) . The Supreme Court, in declaring the action improper, stated that while termination of a defendant's alleged wrongdoing is a factor to be considered, it does not warrant group action for damage when the members will not recover damage, and when a simpler remedy, such as mandate, is available. The Court also noted that the assertedly wrongful practice had ended long before the action was filed, rendering its requested termination a rather empty prayer (18 Cal. 3d 381, 386) .

Finally, the Court rejected plaintiffs' request for so-called "fluid recovery" by reducing defendant's future charges in order to obtain repayment of excess tax collections. The Court noted that fluid recovery in this case provides no correlation between those who paid excess tax and those who might benefit from a future reduction in redemption price (18 Cal. 3d 381, 386) .

In Bruno v. Superior Court (1981) 127 Cal. App. 3d 120, 130, 179 Cal. Rptr. 342 , an antitrust class action under the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code § 16700 et seq.), the court of appeal approved a fluid class recovery. Distinguishing Blue Chip Stamps, the court noted that the propriety of fluid class recovery depends on the purposes of the law under which a class action is brought and the facts of each case (127 Cal. App. 3d 120, 129-130) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Class Action Without Substantial Benefit

In Caro v. Procter & Gamble Co. (1993) 18 Cal. App. 4th 644, 22 Cal. Rptr. 2d 419 , the court of appeal affirmed a trial court decision denying class certification in a case in which a plaintiff was suing a company for misleading consumers into believing its product was pure orange juice. The denial was proper because (1) damages would have been insignificant; (2) the defendant's practices had ceased; (3) persons with claims would have been too numerous and too difficult to find; (4) individual remedies for statutory violations were available; (5) class treatment would have clogged the courts; (6) the plaintiff failed to demonstrate that his claims were typical of class members' claims, because he had only read the top portion of the label on the product and not the conflicting bottom; thus he was not misled in the manner the class was allegedly deceived; and (7) individual issues involving the existence and nature of any material misrepresentation would have predominated over common issues (18 Cal. App. 4th 644, 657-669) .

In Bacom v. Merced County (1977) 66 Cal. App. 3d 45, 136 Cal. Rptr. 14 , a class action on behalf of all persons similarly situated in California to recover fines paid for misdemeanor convictions that had subsequently been set aside on constitutional grounds, the court of appeal held that to permit a class action encompassing the entire state and involving every justice and municipal court and many superior courts would so unduly burden the entire judicial system that any benefits of such action would be far outweighed by its burdens (66 Cal. App. 3d 45, 50) . The court also ruled that such an action limited to only Merced County would have a serious detrimental effect on the administration of justice which far outweighs the benefits to be gained (66 Cal. App. 3d 45, 50) .

4-41 California Points & Authorities § 41.60

§ 41.60 Opposing Contention That Class Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 382] Proper--Defendant Class Improper When Inadequate Notice and Representation

[1] FORM Opposing Contention That Class Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 382] Proper--Defendant Class Improper When Inadequate Notice and Representation

[The following may be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities in support of a motion for an order declaring an action inappropriate as a class action (see, e.g., § 41.31) or a motion to decertify the class (see, e.g., § 41.32).]

THIS CLASS ACTION SHOULD BE DISMISSED AS IMPROPER BECAUSE INADEQUATE NOTICE WAS GIVEN TO THOSEPURPORTED TO BE MEMBERS OF THE DEFENDANT CLASS, RESULTING IN THEIR INADEQUATE REPRESENTATION.

A. Notice Must Be Given to Class Members in Accordance With Court's Order. On certification of the class, or as soon thereafter as practicable, the court must make an order determining whether notice is necessary, and if so, the time, manner, and content of the notice, and the parties responsible for the cost of notice (Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.766(c); see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.766(d), (e)).

B. Inadequate Notice Requires Reversal of Judgment Against Class. When adequate notice is not given to the defendant class, the defects in service and notification are jurisdictional and require reversal of a judgment against the alleged class of defendants (Simons v. Horowitz (1984) 151 Cal. App. 3d 834, 846, 199 Cal. Rptr. 134).

C. Adequate Representation of Class Is Necessary for Class Action. Adequacy of representation of a class, whether plaintiff or defendant, is a prerequisite for the maintenance of a class action (Simons v. Horowitz (1984) 151 Cal. App. 3d 834, 847, 199 Cal. Rptr. 134).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to the contention that class action treatment is proper. Defendant may use these points and authorities when arguing that a class action should be dismissed because there was inadequate notice and representation of the defendant class.

This form may be combined, when appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to invoke the contention. A defendant might make an argument supported by this memorandum under the following circumstances: (1) when supporting a motion for an order declaring an action inappropriate as a class action (see, e.g., § 41.31); and (2) when supporting a motion to decertify the class (see, e.g., § 41.32). This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Inadequate Notice Requires Reversal of Judgment Against Class

Simons v. Horowitz (1984) 151 Cal. App. 3d 834, 199 Cal. Rptr. 134 , involved a judgment against the defendant class in which each defendant class member was ordered to account for and pay each member of the plaintiff class commissions due on sales of fine art occurring within a specified time period.

In reversing the judgment against the class of defendants, the court of appeal focused on the notice to the defendant class and the adequacy of its representation. The trial court had issued an order specifying requirements for notice to the plaintiff and defendant classes. The record indicated that this order was not complied with. There was no evidence that any members of the defendant class were actually served, either with process or class notification. The defects in service and notification were jurisdictional and required the reversal of the judgment against the defendant class (151 Cal. App. 3d 834, 846) .

[b] Adequate Representation of Class Is Necessary for Class Action

The facts and procedural background of Simons v. Horowitz (1984) 151 Cal. App. 3d 834, 199 Cal. Rptr. 134 , are discussed in § 41.60[3][a]. In Simons, the appellate court said that the primary criterion for determining whether a class representative has adequately represented a class is whether the representative, through qualified counsel, vigorously and tenaciously protected the interests of the class. Although two attorneys attended a hearing on behalf of one named defendant, they expressly disclaimed any intention or attempt to represent the defendant class. Adequacy of representation of a class, whether plaintiff or defendant, is a prerequisite for the maintenance of a class action; without it a judgment against a class must be reversed (151 Cal. App. 3d 834, 846-847) .

[The following may be combined with a general form of memorandum in support of a motion for an order declaring an action inappropriate as a class action (see, e.g., § 41.31) or a motion to decertify the class (see, e.g., § 41.32). The following may also be combined with a general form of memorandum supporting defendant's demurrer on the ground that class action treatment is not appropriate (see, e.g., § 41.34).]

THIS CLASS ACTION SHOULD BE DISMISSED AS IMPROPER BECAUSE THE COMPLAINT SEEKS NO AFFIRMATIVE RELIEF AGAINST THE DEFENDANT CLASS [OR THEIR NAMED REPRESENTATIVES], AND THE MEMBERS OF THE DEFENDANT CLASS [AND THEIR NAMED REPRESENTATIVES] CANNOT GRANT PLAINTIFF ANY AFFIRMATIVE RELIEF.

Defendant Class Action Improper When No Affirmative Relief Against Defendant Class Is Sought or Possible. A class action against a class of defendants for declaratory relief is improper when no affirmative relief is sought against the class members, and the class members have no power to grant anyaffirmative relief (see Pinnacle Holdings, Inc. v. Simon (1995) 31 Cal. App. 4th 1430, 1436-1437, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 778).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to the contention that class action treatment is proper. Defendant may submit these points and authorities when plaintiff attempts to bring a class action for declaratory relief against a class of defendants against whom no affirmative relief is sought and who have no power to grant plaintiff any affirmative relief.

This form may be combined, as appropriate, with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel seeks to raise the issue. A defendant might make an argument supported by these points and authorities in the following procedural situations: (1) when supporting a motion for an order declaring an action inappropriate as a class action [see, e.g., § 41.31]; (2) when supporting a motion to decertify the class [see, e.g., § 41.32]; when opposing a motion to certify an action as a proper class action [see, e.g., § 41.30]; and (4) when supporting a demurrer on the ground that class action treatment is not appropriate [see, e.g., § 41.34]. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should insert argument demonstrating that the complaint seeks no affirmative relief against the defendant class and that the defendant class has no power to grant any affirmative relief to the plaintiff.

[b] Related Memoranda

For memoranda pertaining to the availability of declaratory relief, see Ch. 67, Declaratory Relief .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defendant Class Action Improper When No Affirmative Relief Against Defendant Class Is Sought or Possible

In Pinnacle Holdings, Inc. v. Simon (1995) 31 Cal. App. 4th 1430, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 778 , a landlord that had unsuccessfully sought authority for a rent increase from a county rent control board brought a proceeding for mandate and for declaratory relief against the rent control board. In the declaratory relief action, the plaintiff landlord also sought to join as defendants four tenants who had spoken in opposition to the proposed rent increase during a hearing before the board. The four tenants were named both as individual defendants and as representatives of a class consisting of all of the plaintiff's tenants. The trial court dismissed the declaratory relief action against the four tenants after sustaining their demurrers without leave to amend and denying plaintiff's motion for certification of the defendant class.

The court of appeal affirmed. The plaintiff had conceded that the tenants were not indispensable parties, but argued including the tenants in the litigation was proper because the determination regarding the propriety of the rent control board's decision would affect the tenants. However, the court disagreed that subjecting the tenants to a lawsuit against their will was necessary to protect their due process rights (31 Cal. App. 4th 1430, 1435) . The court noted that the tenants did not need plaintiff's help to protect their rights since the tenants had their own right to file an action under the rent control ordinance to challenge any unlawful rent increase and could also intervene in any ensuing appeal of the rent board's decision (31 Cal. App. 4th 1430, 1436) . The court also held that the tenants could not be made parties to the action because the action sought no relief against them and because they had no power to grant plaintiff the relief it sought (i.e., approval for the rent increase) (31 Cal. App. 4th 1430, 1436-1437) . The court reasoned to permit the plaintiff to make the tenants unwilling parties to litigation in which no affirmative relief was sought against them and to require them to represent the interests of all similarly situated tenants would have a chilling effect on the provision of the rent control ordinance that permitted interested parties to participate in rent increase hearings (31 Cal. App. 4th 1430, 1437) .

A. Class Action Requirements. [See § 41.36, Paragraph A.]

B. Class Action Improper When Individual Damages Not Provable. Proof of damage is a necessary element of the cause of action and, without some probability that class members will come forward and prove their separate claims,class certification is improper (*Collins v. [2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to the contention that class action treatment is proper. Defendant may use these points and authorities when arguing that a class action should be dismissed on the ground that members of the proposed class will not be able to prove their particular damages and therefore no ascertainable class exists.

This form may be combined, when appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue. A defendant might make an argument supported by this memorandum under the following circumstances: (1) when supporting a motion for an order declaring an action inappropriate as a class action (see, e.g., § 41.31); (2) when supporting a motion to decertify the class (see, e.g., § 41.32); (3) when opposing a motion to certify an action as a proper class action (see, e.g., § 41.30); and (4) when supporting a demurrer on the ground that class action treatment is not appropriate (see, e.g., § 41.34). This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Counsel should refer to facts showing that, although representatives of the proposed class have alleged damages for purposes of pleading, individual class members will be unable to prove they actually sustained any injury.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Class Action Improper When Individual Damages Not Provable

Collins v. Safeway Stores, Inc. (1986) 187 Cal. App. 3d 62, 231 Cal. Rptr. 638 , was an action on behalf of an economic damage class defined as all state residents who, during a specified period, purchased from a grocery store chain and/or consumed, or whose families consumed, eggs supplied by a certain producer. Approximately 20 percent of the eggs sold by the producer to the chain during that period were contaminated with a pesticide. During packaging, the contaminated eggs had been commingled with safe eggs. The grocery chain sold the producer's egg cartons until the producer, unable to ascertain which eggs had been contaminated, instituted a recall of all those cartons it had supplied the chain during the specified time period. The trial court, stating that plaintiffs would be unable to prove that class members suffered any economic harm, denied certification of the class.

The court of appeal upheld the denial on the ground that the economic damage was unprovable, finding that plaintiffs represented no ascertainable class. The court reasoned that since contaminated eggs were commingled with safe eggs, no single member of the economic class would be able to prove he or she purchased a carton of eggs with one or more contaminated eggs in it. The court refused to speculate that all cartons sold to consumers contained one or more contaminated eggs or that 80 percent of the cartons contained no contaminated eggs (187 Cal. App. 3d 62, 71) . The trial court's consideration of whether the proposed class could prevail on the merits was not an improper criterion for denying certification. Proof of damage is a necessary element of the cause of action and a prerequisite to certification, since without it no ascertainable class exists (187 Cal. App. 3d 62, 72) . Relying on Blue Chip Stamps v. Superior Court (1976) 18 Cal. 3d 381, 134 Cal. Rptr. 393, 556 P.2d 755 , the court reiterated that the trial judge properly could weigh the probability that each member of the proposed class would come forward ultimately and prove his or her separate claim to a portion of the total recovery. When not all the products purchased by the class were defective and when class members themselves did not know, and never would know, whether they purchased a defective product, there was no probability of any individual class members ever coming forward and proving their particular damages. Therefore, the trial court had substantial evidence on which to deny certification of the proposed class (187 Cal. App. 3d 62, 71) .

This form may be submitted in support of a party'scontention that the adverse party in a class action should be required to bear the costs of notice to class members.

This form may be combined, as appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to invoke the contention. For example, plaintiff might make an argument supported by these points and authorities in connection with a motion for an order notifying class members of the pending action.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Counsel should refer to facts showing that the opposing party should be required to bear notice costs because of actions by the opposing party making notice difficult or because of that party's more favorable financial position. Counsel should also refer to facts showing that a public policy in favor of class actions would be promoted by requiring the opposing party to bear notice costs, or that this policy would be thwarted unless the opposing party, because of its more favorable position financially or otherwise, is required to pay the cost of notice [see Civil Service Employees Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1978) 22 Cal. 3d 362, 377, 149 Cal. Rptr. 360, 584 P.2d 497 (decided before adoption of predecessor of Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.766(a), (c)(5), which expressly authorizes court to impose cost of notice on any party)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Trial Court May Order Either Party to Provide or Bear Cost of Class Notice

Hypertouch, Inc. v. Superior Court (2005) 128 Cal. App. 4th 1527, 27 Cal. Rptr. 3d 839 , was a class action against a consulting company that allegedly sent unsolicited advertisements by telephone facsimile, in violation of the Telephone Consumer Protection Act of 1991 (47 U.S.C. § 227(b)(1)(C), (3)). After certifying the class, the trial court issued an order approving publication of notice to the class and providing that individual members of the certified class must affirmatively respond to the published notice and "opt" into the litigation, and that the judgment would bind only those class members that opt in.

The trial court's order requiring that class members opt into the litigation was based in part on the fact that notifying class members had been made more difficult by the defendant's assertion that its database of telephone numbers to which it had sent facsimile advertisements was confidential and privileged as a trade secret (see Civ. Code § 3426.1(d)), and also by the defendant's destruction of its database containing the telephone numbers of persons who had called and asked the defendant to stop sending facsimiles (128 Cal. App. 4th 1527, 1534-1536) .

The named plaintiff sought writ relief from the trial court's notice order, contending that the opt-in requirement was not constitutionally required and not permitted by applicable court rules. The court of appeal held that the difficulty of notifying individual class members does not authorize a trial court to require that class members--even those with a substantial stake in the case--acknowledge personal notification by affirmatively requesting inclusion in the class. An opt-in procedure generally is permitted only after liability has been determined, as a means of apportioning the class's recovery (128 Cal. App. 4th 1527, 1542 n.5, 1546-1547 & nn.9, 10). Before the determination of liability, an opt-in procedure is not required by constitutional due-process principles. The court explained that although the difficulty of providing notice may be a reason to deny class certification, once a class is certified, due process does not require the use of an opt-in procedure to limit the class to those who have received actual notice (128 Cal. App. 4th 1527, 1537-1543) . Moreover, the use of an opt-in requirement is not permitted by the applicable federal or California court rules, which require only the best notice practicable under the circumstances (128 Cal. App. 4th 1527, 1544-1550 ; see Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(c)(2); Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.766(f).

Accordingly, the court of appeal vacated the notice order and remanded the case so that the trial court could determine in the first instance the appropriate means of giving notice. In remanding, the court of appeal observed that the forms of notice mentioned in the Rules of Court as alternatives to personal notification--publication in a newspaper or magazine; broadcasting on television, radio or the Internet; or posting or distribution through a trade or professional association, union, or public interest group--are offered simply as examples; the list is not exclusive (see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.766(f). Thus, a trial court has substantial room for creativity in designing an effective means of notifying class members. The court of appeal pointed out that one aspect over which the trial court may exercise discretion is the allocation of the cost of giving notice. Ordinarily the plaintiff has the responsibility of providing the notice and bearing the expense of doing so. However, the trial court has discretion to require the defendant to provide or pay for notice if the defendant's conduct has unnecessarily complicated the problems of identifying and notifying the class, or if the defendant possesses the ability to provide class notice easily and at little cost (128 Cal. App. 4th 1527, 1551-1555) .

[1] FORM Supporting Contention That Trial Court May Not Adjudicate Substantive Merits of Class Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 382] Without Prior Determination of Procedural Class Issues

[The following may be combined with a general form of memorandum in opposition to a motion seeking determination of a substantive issue, e.g., motion for summary judgment, prior to adjudication of procedural class issues (see, e.g.,Ch. 116, Injunctions, and Ch. 221, Summary Judgments). The following may also be combined with a general form of memorandum in opposition to a motion seeking a determination with respect to class issues (see, e.g., § 41.30) when the motion follows a substantive ruling.]

THE COURT SHOULD NOT GRANT _____ [specify substantive ruling sought, e.g., A SUMMARY JUDGMENT] IN THIS ACTION BECAUSE THE COURT GENERALLY MAY NOT ADJUDICATE THE SUBSTANTIVE MERITS OF AN ACTION WITHOUT PRIOR DETERMINATION OF THE PROCEDURAL CLASS ACTION ISSUES, SUCH AS _____ [SUITABILITY OF THE ACTION AS A CLASS ACTION and/or DETERMINATION OF THE COMPOSITION OF THE CLASS and/or APPROPRIATE NOTIFICATION OF THE CLASS MEMBERS], AND THERE ARE NO SPECIAL CIRCUMSTANCES IN THIS CASE JUSTIFYING A DEPARTURE FROM THE GENERAL RULE.

Class Determinations Must Precede Substantive Adjudication. The trial court may not adjudicate the substantive merits of an action without prior determination of procedural class action issues, such as suitability of the action as a class action, determination of the composition of the class, and appropriate notification of the class members, unless the defendant has waived the right to have the procedural issues determined first, or unless there is a compelling justification for resolving the merits issues first (Fireside Bank v. Superior Court (2007) 40 Cal. 4th 1069, 1083, 56 Cal. Rptr. 3d 861, 155 P.3d 268 ; (Home Sav. & Loan Assn. v. Superior Court (1976) 54 Cal. App. 3d 208, 214, 126 Cal. Rptr. 511 ; Home Sav. & Loan Assn. v. Superior Court (1974) 42 Cal. App. 3d 1006, 1015, 117 Cal. Rptr. 485).

This form may be submitted in support of a party's contention that the trial court may not adjudicate the substantive merits of an action without prior determination of procedural class action issues. For example, the argument supported by this memorandum might be raised by the defendant when, before certification of the action as a class action, plaintiff seeks a preliminary injunction, summary adjudication of an issue, or other substantive relief.

A corollary to the contention supported by this memorandum is the argument that procedural class action issues may not be determined after an adjudication of substantive issues [see § 41.65]. A plaintiff might argue, for example, that defendant's motion for decertification must be denied when it is made after the substantive issues of the case have been decided [see § 41.33].

These authorities may be combined, where appropriate, with memoranda relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue of requiring prior determination of procedural class action issues. The points and authorities set forth in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated.

[b] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda set out in §§ 41.66 -41.68 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the contention supported by this memorandum.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Class Determinations Must Precede Substantive Adjudication

In Fireside Bank v. Superior Court (2007) 40 Cal. 4th 1069, 56 Cal. Rptr. 3d 861, 155 P.3d 268 , a bank sued a borrower, claiming sums owed under a conditional sales contract that the borrower had used to finance the purchase of an automobile. The borrower filed an answer asserting the affirmative defense that recovery was barred by the bank's failure to comply with the Rees-Levering Motor Vehicle Sales and Finance Act (Civ. Code §§ 2981-2984.4). The borrower also filed a cross-complaint asserting claims of conversion, as well as claims under the Rees-Levering Act and other statutory provisions. The borrower then moved for judgment on the pleadings on the bank's complaint, but the trial court continued the hearing on that motion to allow the borrower time to decide whether to seek class treatment for the claims asserted in the cross-complaint. Eventually, the borrower filed an amended cross-complaint that included class claims based on alleged violations of the Rees-Levering Act and the unfair-competition law (UCL) (Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq.). The borrower then moved for class certification.

The hearing on class certification occurred on the same date set for the continued hearing on the borrower's motion for judgment on the pleadings. At the hearing, the bank opposed any ruling on the motion for judgment until notice had been given to the class, if any, and the time for class members to opt out had expired. The trial court declined argument on the motion for judgment on the pleadings, indicating that the motion was going to go off calendar pending a ruling on certification, but that a further hearing would be set if the court denied certification.

Despite the trial court's assurances, however, about a month after the hearing the court issued formal orders granting class certification and granting the borrower's motion for judgment on the pleadings as to the bank's complaint.

The bank sought writ relief, arguing that by ruling on the motion for judgmenton the pleadings before notice had been given to the class, the court had impermissibly provided class members with an opportunity for "one-way intervention." After the court of appeal denied writ relief, the California Supreme Court granted review and, in a unanimous decision, reversed the court of appeal's judgment.

The Supreme Court began its analysis with a review of the history and policy considerations underlying the rule against one-way intervention. "One-way intervention," in this context, refers to the following consequence of ruling on the merits before determining whether the case should proceed as a class action. If the merits ruling is favorable to the plaintiff, other members of the class would be able to intervene and "share the spoils"; but if the merits ruling is unfavorable to the plaintiff, other potential class members would opt out and wait for another plaintiff to be victorious. As a result, the defendant could win only against the named plaintiff and might face additional suits by other class members, but any loss to a named plaintiff would result in a loss to all remaining members of the class (40 Cal. 4th 1069, 1078) .

The Supreme Court observed that in the federal system, defendants are protected against one-way intervention by the provisions of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23(c)(1)(A), which requires that class issues be resolved at an early practicable time (40 Cal. 4th 1069, 1078-1079) . In California, the problem has been dealt with judicially, beginning with the court of appeal decisions in Home Sav. & Loan Assn. v. Superior Court (1974) 42 Cal. App. 3d 1006, 1015, 117 Cal. Rptr. 485 and Home Sav. & Loan Assn. v. Superior Court (1976) 54 Cal. App. 3d 208, 214, 126 Cal. Rptr. 511 , both discussed below, which required that the trial court resolve procedural class issues before deciding the merits. The Supreme Court adopted the Home Savings rule in Green v. Obledo (1981) 29 Cal. 3d 126, 146, 172 Cal. Rptr. 206, 624 P.2d 256 , discussed in § 41.33[3][a]. The Green opinion went on to extend the Home Savings rule, holding that it should apply not only to protect defendants from a belated motion for certification, but also to protect plaintiffs from a belated motion for decertification. Thus, a defendant should not be allowed to withhold its best case against certification and then seeking decertification if it suffered an unfavorable merits ruling (40 Cal. 4th 1069, 1079-1081) .

The Court in this case then pointed out that the general Home Savings rule, as adopted in Green and applied in subsequent cases, is not an ironclad standard (40 Cal. 4th 1069, 1081-1083) . Rather, the general requirement that procedural issues be resolved first is subject to the following rules (40 Cal. 4th 1069, 1083) :

- First, a class defendant must actively preserve its protection against one-way intervention by objecting to any adjudication of the merits before class certification. If the defendant fails to timely object, or affirmatively seeks resolution of the merits before certification, it will be deemed to have waived its rights [see, e.g., Employment Development Dept. v. Superior Court (1981) 30 Cal. 3d 256, 262, 262-265, 178 Cal. Rptr. 612, 636 P.2d 575 ; Civil Service Employees Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1978) 22 Cal. 3d 362, 373-374, 149 Cal. Rptr. 360, 584 P.2d 497 ; see also § 41.66].

- Second, plaintiffs seeking to represent a class should move for certification before moving for any resolution of the merits [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.764(b) ("A motion for class certification should be filed when practicable")]. If the plaintiffs seek certification after seeking resolution of the merits, in the absence of a waiver by the defendant, they must demonstrate changed circumstances or other good cause justifying the belated motion before the trial court may consider it.

- Third, in the absence of a waiver by the defendant, the trial court should not resolve the merits in a putative class action before resolving class certification and notice issues, absent a compelling justification for doing so.

The Court next considered the range of substantive motions that implicate the foregoing rules governing one-way intervention. The Court noted that the interest in postponing a substantive ruling in a case until after resolution of class issues depends on the extent to which the ruling gives rise to concerns about one-way intervention. Thus, the relevant question is whether a given ruling affects the merits of the class claims in a way that would create a risk of one-way intervention. In the present case, for example, the fact that the borrower moved for judgment on the merits of the bank's claim--not on the class claims raised in the cross-complaint--did not necessarily immunize the motion from the rules governing one-way intervention. Rather, whenever a class defendant assets its right not to be subject to one-way intervention, the court should consider (1) the degree to which the given motion poses one-way intervention problems, balanced against (2) the compelling justifications proffered by the moving party for nevertheless deciding the given motion in advance of resolving class issues. The greater the concerns, the more compelling the countervailing justification must be. The Court emphasized that the form of a given motion or whether it may leave some issues unresolved do not matter for this purpose; what matters is the extent to which the motion impacts the principal legal issue or issues in a case and thereby poses for the defendant the risk of one-way intervention depending on its outcome (40 Cal. 4th 1069, 1085-1086) .

Applying the foregoing principles to the borrower's motion for judgment on the pleadings in the present case, the Court concluded that although the ruling on the motion left unresolved the bank's affirmative defenses against the class claims raised in the borrower's cross-complaint, it squarely resolved the central issue in the class claims--whether the bank's conduct had violated the Rees-Levering Actand thus whether the bank's conduct was unlawful for purposes of the UCL. The Court found it immaterial that the substantive motion was brought by the borrower as a defendant, while the motion for class certification was brought by her as plaintiff in her cross-action. As a practical matter, because the motion for judgment on the pleadings involved the determination of substantive issues common to both actions, it presented the same one-way intervention concerns that would have been presented by a ruling on the affirmative class claims. Accordingly, the motion for judgment on the pleadings was subject to the rules governing one-way intervention. Therefore, the trial court would have been warranted in deciding the substantive issue before a class had been notified only if it found a compelling justification for doing so. Because there was no compelling justification in this case, the Supreme Court concluded that the trial court had abused its discretion in ruling on the motion for judgment in the pleadings before notice had gone out to the class (40 Cal. 4th 1069, 1086-1087) .

The Supreme Court next turned to the question of the appropriate remedy. The Court observed that the order in which the borrower filed her motions--first seeking judgment on the pleadings, and then moving for class certification--was justified by changed circumstances (the possibility of class treatment did not arise until the bank's belated discovery responses, after the substantive motion had already been filed). Also, the borrower had agreed to have all class issues resolved before any ruling on the merits. The Supreme Court concluded that under the circumstances, to bar the class action would have been inequitable. Instead, the Court decided that vacating the trial court's premature merits ruling, and ordering that any future motion on the merits be decided de novo, would reduce the risk of one-way intervention without unduly punishing the class (40 Cal. 4th 1069, 1087-1089) .

Accordingly, after finding that the trial court's class-certification order was correct (40 Cal. 4th 1069, 1089-1092) , the Supreme Court left that order in place, directed that the trial court's entry of judgment on the pleadings be vacated, and remanded the case for further proceedings (40 Cal. 4th 1069, 1075, 1093) .

Home Sav. & Loan Assn. v. Superior Court (1976) 54 Cal. App. 3d 208, 126 Cal. Rptr. 511 (Home II), involved the combined efforts of plaintiffs in several of the six class actions against defendant (see discussion of Home I, below) to obtain summary judgment and other substantive relief prior to determination of procedural class action issues. Defendant filed opposing motions to stay adjudication of plaintiffs' motions until the suitability of each action as a class action and the composition of its class had been determined and until members of the class had been appropriately notified. After defendant's motions were denied, it sought a writ of prohibition from the court of appeals.

The court of appeal granted the writ, prohibiting the trial court from adjudicating any issues on application for summary judgment, partial summary judgment, specification of issues without substantial controversy, or preliminary injunction prior to adjudication of the procedural class action issues, including determination and notification of the classes involved (54 Cal. App. 3d 208, 214) . The court rejected plaintiffs' contention that this case differed from Home I because the motions did not involve a trial but merely sought an adjudication of matters of law in light of established court precedent. The court noted that the key words in Home I were "substantive merits," not trial, and further, that the controlling factor is not the way that the superior court determines the substantive merits of the case, but whether or not it does so prior to adjudication of procedural class issues and notification of the class (54 Cal. App. 3d 208, 211) .

After supporting its decision by essentially the same reasoning set forth in Home I (discussed below), the court in Home II noted that with respect to consumer class actions under the Consumers Legal Remedies Act, the Legislature had concluded in Civ. Code § 1781(c) that summary judgment is inappropriate prior to determination and notification of the class (54 Cal. App. 3d 208, 213) .

Home Sav. & Loan Assn. v. Superior Court (1974) 42 Cal. App. 3d 1006, 117 Cal. Rptr. 485 (Home I), was one of six class actions filed in state court seeking damages and declaratory relief arising from loan agreement late charges imposed by defendant. On the motion of plaintiffs in this action, the trial court entered an order bifurcating the trial and providing for adjudication of defendant's liability prior to determination of procedural class issues. Defendant then sought a writ of prohibition to prevent the court from conducting its intended procedure.

The court of appeal granted the writ and prohibited the trial court from proceeding to trial on the substantive merits of the case without prior adjudication of the procedural class action issues, including suitability of the action as a class action, determination of the composition of the class, and appropriate notification of members of the class, all pursuant to guidelines set out in Fed. R. Civ. P., Rule 23, and Civ. Code § 1781 (42 Cal. App. 3d 1006, 1015) . The court reasoned that absent notification, no member of the class need be bound by the result of the litigation. In addition, the court stated that under the doctrine of collateral estoppel, a defendant who litigates and loses issues tendered in a class action filed by an individual member of the class may be estopped in subsequent litigation with other members of the class to deny the validity and binding effect of the adverse judgment in the first action. By the same token, if the defendant prevails in the first action involving individual members of the class, the other class members are not bound by the outcome because they were not parties to the lawsuit and received no notification about it (42 Cal. App. 3d 1006, 1011) .

The court also criticized the trial court's procedure as allowing one-way intervention. When the merits are determined first, the potential members of the class can reserve their decision to become part of the class until the validity of the action asserted by the named plaintiffs on behalf of the class has been determined.The court stated that for a defendant, this presents the terrors of an open-ended lawsuit that cannot be defeated, settled, and adjudicated (42 Cal. App. 3d 1006, 1011) .

Finally, the court cited analogous federal and state authority to support its holding. The court noted that federal decisional authority interpreting procedural provisions of Fed. R. Civ. P., Rule 23, has forbidden inquiry into the merits of an action prior to notice to the class (42 Cal. App 3d 1006, 1013) . In addition, the court stated that the class actions provision of the Consumers Legal Remedies Act [Civ. Code § 1781(c)] requires plaintiffs in a class action to prove their status as representatives of a defined class prior to determination of the substantive merits of their claim (42 Cal. App. 3d 1006, 1014) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Class Determinations Must Precede Substantive Adjudication

In People v. Pacific Land Research Co. (1977) 20 Cal. 3d 10, 141 Cal. Rptr. 20, 569 P.2d 125 , an action by the Attorney General and a county district attorney alleging unlawful misrepresentations in the sale of land and seeking injunctive relief, civil penalties, and restitution on behalf of the vendees, the Supreme Court held that consumer protection actions by the People under Bus. & Prof. Code § 17535 are not the equivalent of class actions brought by private parties, requiring the same safeguards to protect a defendant from multiple suits and other harmful consequences (20 Cal. 3d 10, 17) . The Court noted that while a defendant in a class action brought by a private individual may prevent adjudication of the merits prior to a determination of the composition of the class under the rule announced in Home Sav. & Loan Assn. v. Superior Court (1974) 42 Cal. App. 3d 1006, 1015, 117 Cal. Rptr. 485 (discussed in § 41.64[3][a]), the defendant does not have similar rights in an enforcement action under Bus. & Prof. Code § 17535 (20 Cal. 3d 10, 18) .

§ 41.65 Supporting Contention That Trial Court May Not Determine Procedural Class Issues in Class Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 382] Following an Adjudication on the Substantive Merits

[1] FORM Supporting Contention That Trial Court May Not Determine Procedural Class Issues in Class Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 382] Following an Adjudication on the Substantive Merits

[The following may be combined with a general form of memorandum relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue. For example, the following may be combined with a general form of memorandum opposing a motion seeking a determination of class action issues when the motion follows a ruling on the substantive merits.]

_____ [PLAINTIFF'S or DEFENDANT'S] MOTION FOR _____ [specify procedural ruling sought, e.g., CLASS CERTIFICATION] IS NOT PROPER BECAUSE THE COURT GENERALLY MAY NOT DETERMINE PROCEDURAL CLASS-ACTION ISSUES FOLLOWING AN ADJUDICATION ON THE SUBSTANTIVE MERITS OF AN ACTION, AND THERE ARE NO SPECIAL CIRCUMSTANCES IN THIS CASE JUSTIFYING A DEPARTURE FROM THE GENERAL RULE.

A. Court Should Try Class Issues Before Substantive Merits. The law is now firmly established that the trial court in a class action should first try the issue of identity of the class and designate the appropriate form and manner of notice before trying the issue of the defendant's liability, unless the defendant waives the right to such prior determination, or unless there is a compelling justification for resolving the merits issues first (Fireside Bank v. Superior Court (2007) 40 Cal. 4th 1069, 1083, 56 Cal. Rptr. 3d 861, 155 P.3d 268 ; Travelers Insurance Co. v. Superior Court (1977) 65 Cal. App. 3d 751, 756-757, 135 Cal. Rptr. 579).

B. Procedural Class Issues May Not Be Decided After Merits. The trial court may not ordinarily resolve procedural class action issues after an adjudication on the substantive merits (see Green v. Obledo (1981) 29 Cal. 3d 126, 146, 172 Cal. Rptr. 206, 624 P.2d 256 ; Travelers Insurance Co. v. Superior Court (1977) 65 Cal. App. 3d 751, 756-758, 135 Cal. Rptr. 579).

[2] Comments

This form may be submitted in support of a party's contention that the trial court may not determine procedural class issues following an adjudication on the substantive merits of an action. This argument is a corollary of the rule that the trial court may not adjudicate the substantive merits of an action without prior determination of procedural class action issues [see § 41.64].

These authorities may be combined, where appropriate, with memoranda relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue of prohibiting subsequent determination of procedural class action issues. For example, the argument supported by this memorandum might be raised by the defendant when, after obtaining a substantive ruling over the defendant's objection, the plaintiff seeks certification of the class. Alternatively, a plaintiff might raise the argument supported by this memorandum when the defendant seeks decertification of the class after the court has rendered a decision on the merits [see § 41.33].

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Opposing Memoranda

With appropriate modification, the memoranda set out in §§ 41.66 -41.68 maybe used in an argument opposing the contention that procedural class issues may not be decided after adjudication of the substantive merits.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Court Should Try Class Issues Before Substantive Merits

The facts and procedural background of Fireside Bank v. Superior Court (2007) 40 Cal. 4th 1069, 56 Cal. Rptr. 3d 861, 155 P.3d 268 , are discussed in § 41.64[3][a]. The Supreme Court held that the general requirement that procedural issues be resolved first is subject to the following rules (40 Cal. 4th 1069, 1083) :

- First, a class defendant must actively preserve its protection against one-way intervention by objecting to any adjudication of the merits before class certification. If the defendant fails to timely object, or affirmatively seeks resolution of the merits before certification, it will be deemed to have waived its rights [see, e.g., Employment Development Dept. v. Superior Court (1981) 30 Cal. 3d 256, 262, 262-265, 178 Cal. Rptr. 612, 636 P.2d 575 ; Civil Service Employees Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1978) 22 Cal. 3d 362, 373-374, 149 Cal. Rptr. 360, 584 P.2d 497 ; see also § 41.66].

- Second, plaintiffs seeking to represent a class should move for certification before moving for any resolution of the merits [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.764(b) ("A motion for class certification should be filed when practicable")]. If the plaintiffs seek certification after seeking resolution of the merits, then in the absence of a waiver by the defendant, they must demonstrate changed circumstances or other good cause justifying the belated motion before the trial court may consider it.

- Third, in the absence of a waiver by the defendant, the trial court should not resolve the merits in a putative class action before resolving class certification and notice issues, absent a compelling justification for doing so.

Travelers Insurance Co. v. Superior Court (1977) 65 Cal. App. 3d 751, 135 Cal. Rptr. 579 , was a class action to recover disability benefits allegedly wrongfully withheld by defendant. On plaintiff's motion, the trial court severed the issue of liability from the issue of the identity of the class and proceeded to trial on the issue of liability first.

Defendant's attempt to appeal the liability decision was dismissed because the decision was not final. Defendant then moved to dismiss the class action elements in the trial court because the court had erroneously determined the issue of liability before resolving procedural class action issues. After the trial court overruled the motion, defendant filed for writs of mandate and prohibition.

The court of appeal granted the writ of mandate and ordered the trial court to vacate its order determining the substantive issue (65 Cal. App. 3d 751, 763) . Relying on Home Savings & Loan Ass'n v. Superior Court (1974) 42 Cal. App. 3d 1006, 117 Cal. Rptr. 485 (Home I) and Home Savings & Loan Ass'n v. Superior Court (1976) 54 Cal. App. 3d 208, 126 Cal. Rptr. 511 (Home II) (discussed in § 41.64[3][a]), the court stated that the law is now firmly established that the trial court in a class action should first try the issue of identity of the class and designate the appropriate form and manner of notice before trying the issue of the defendant's liability, unless the defendant waives the right to such prior determination (65 Cal. App. 3d 751, 756-757) .

[b] Procedural Class Issues May Not Be Decided After Merits

The facts and procedural background of Green v. Obledo (1981) 29 Cal. 3d 126, 172 Cal. Rptr. 206, 624 P.2d 256 , are discussed in § 41.33[3][a]. The Supreme Court in Green upheld plaintiffs' objections to decertification of the class following the adjudication of substantive issues. The Court noted that California appellate courts, relying on Fed. R. Civ. P., Rule 23(c)(1), have held that procedural class issues must ordinarily be resolved before a decision on the merits is reached. Furthermore, the Court stated that although this rule had previously been applied only for the benefit of defendants, there appeared to be no reason prohibiting application at the request of plaintiffs (29 Cal. 3d 126, 146) .

The Court in Green did not establish a hard-and-fast rule prohibiting decertification after a decision on the merits. Instead, relying on federal court decisions, the Court concluded that after a decision on the merits, a class should be decertified only when it is clear that there are changed circumstances making continued class action treatment improper. Based on the facts of the case, the Court concluded that defendant could not escape application of the general rule that decertification must occur, if at all, prior to a decision on the merits (29 Cal. 3d 126, 148) .

A reasonable inference from the decision in Green is that procedural class issues may not ordinarily be determined after a decision on the substantive merits of the case. This conclusion is a corollary of the general rule that the trial court may not adjudicate the substantive merits of an action without prior determination of procedural class action issues [see § 41.64[1]]. The Court in Green relied on this rule, first announced in Home Sav. & Loan Assn. v. Superior Court (1974) 42 Cal. App. 3d 1006, 1015, 117 Cal. Rptr. 485 (discussed in § 41.64[3][a]), in refusing to allow the procedural determination of decertification after the substantive merits had been decided. The rule stems from Fed. R. Civ. P., Rule 23(c)(1), which provides that an order determining class issues may be altered or amended before the decision on the merits.

The facts and procedural background of Travelers Insurance Co. v. SuperiorCourt (1977) 65 Cal. App. 3d 751, 135 Cal. Rptr. 579 , are discussed in § 41.65[3][a]. The court of appeal in Travelers relied on the general rule forbidding adjudication of the substantive merits prior to a determination of procedural class issues in ordering the trial court to vacate its order determining the substantive issues of the case (65 Cal. Ap. 3d 751, 756-757, 761) . In effect, the court ruled that procedural class issues could not be decided until the trial court's improper procedure was corrected. However, the court refused to use dismissal of the class action allegations as the method of correcting the court's error, choosing instead to order that the substantive order, which was not a final judgment, be vacated. In dictum, the court noted that if the problem had been presented on appeal from a final judgment in a class action, it would have reversed the entire judgment, including the premature provisional determination of the issue of liability (65 Cal. App. 3d 751, 761) . Thus, the decision in Travelers also appears to support the corollary rule that procedural class determinations may not be made after a determination of the substantive merits. If the trial court follows improper procedure, its decision should be overturned so that procedural class issues may be determined first.

§ 41.66 Opposing Contention That Trial Court May Not Adjudicate Substantive Merits of Class Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 382] Without Prior Determination of Procedural Class Issues--Defendant's Waiver of Due Process Rights to Prior Procedural Determination

[1] FORM Opposing Contention That Trial Court May Not Adjudicate Substantive Merits of Class Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 382] Without Prior Determination of Procedural Class Issues--Defendant's Waiver of Due Process Rights to Prior Procedural Determination

[The following may be combined with a general form of memorandum in support of a motion seeking determination of a substantive issue, e.g., motion for summary judgment, prior to adjudication of procedural class issues (see, e.g., Ch. 116, Injunctions, and Ch. 221, Summary Judgments). The following may also be combined with a general form of memorandum in support of a motion seeking a determination with respect to class issues (see, e.g., § 41.30) when the motion follows a substantive ruling on the merits.]

THE COURT SHOULD GRANT _____ [specify substantive or procedural ruling sought, e.g., A SUMMARY JUDGMENT] IN THIS ACTION BECAUSE THE COURT MAY PROPERLY ADJUDICATE THE SUBSTANTIVE MERITS OF AN ACTION WITHOUT PRIOR DETERMINATION OF PROCEDURAL CLASS ACTION ISSUES WHEN DEFENDANT WAIVES THE RIGHT TO A PRIOR PROCEDURAL DETERMINATION.

A. Defendant's Waiver of Due Process Rights. The trial court may properly adjudicate the substantive merits of an action without prior determination of procedural class action issues when defendant waives the right to a prior procedural determination (see Civil Service Employees Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1978) 22 Cal. 3d 362, 373, 149 Cal. Rptr. 360, 584 P.2d 497 ; see also Fireside Bank v. Superior Court (2007) 40 Cal. 4th 1069, 1083, 56 Cal. Rptr. 3d 861, 155 P.3d 268).

[Optional] B. Defendant's Waiver by Failure to Object. The defendant waives its due process rights to object to resolution of a substantive issue prior to notification of the class when it simply contests the substantive motion on the merits and fails to object to the timing of the court's ruling (Civil Service Employees Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1978) 22 Cal. 3d 362, 373, 149 Cal. Rptr. 360, 584 P.2d 497).

[Optional] C. Defendant's Waiver by Obtaining Substantive Ruling. The defendant waives its due process rights to object to resolution of procedural class issues following a ruling on the substantive merits when the defendant has precipitated a precertification ruling on the merits by its own demurrer (Employment Development Dept. v. Superior Court (1981) 30 Cal. 3d 256, 262, 264, 178 Cal. Rptr. 612, 636 P.2d 575).

[Optional] D. Defendant's Waiver by Requesting Bifurcated Trial. Proceeding in a bifurcated trial and considering the liability issue first is proper when the defendant requests such a procedure (Colwell Co. v. Superior Court (1975) 50 Cal. App. 3d 32, 36, 123 Cal. Rptr. 228).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to a party's contention that the trial court may not adjudicate the substantive merits of an action without prior determination of procedural class action issues. The foregoing may also be submitted in opposition to the contention that the trial court may not determine procedural class action issues after adjudication of the substantive merits of an action. The argument may be made when defendant waives the right to a prior procedural determination.

This form may be combined, where appropriate, with memoranda relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to invoke the contention. For example, defendant might raise the argument supported by this memorandum when seeking a substantive ruling prior to certification of the class in connection with a general demurrer or other motions that are typically used for obtaining relief on the merits, such as a request for summary judgment or summary adjudication of an issue. Plaintiff might make an argument supported by this memorandum when opposing defendant's attempt to prevent determination of class issues after defendant has failed to object to or has procured the court's ruling on a substantive issue. The points and authorities set forth in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship betweenthe facts of the case and the points of law stated.

In an appropriate case, this memorandum may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the memorandum set out in § 41.64.

[b] Related Uses

A corollary to the general rule prohibiting adjudication of the substantive merits of an action without prior determination of procedural class action issues [see § 41.64] is the rule that a court may not determine procedural class issues following an adjudication on the substantive merits of an action [see § 41.65]. With appropriate modification, these points of law may be used to oppose the contention that procedural class issues may not be decided after adjudication of the substantive merits.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defendant's Waiver of Due Process Rights

Civil Service Employees Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1978) 22 Cal. 3d 362, 149 Cal. Rptr. 360, 584 P.2d 497 , was a class action for damages resulting from defendant's refusal to pay benefits under an insurance policy for medical expenses allegedly covered by other policies. Plaintiffs filed motions for certification of the class and for summary adjudication of an issue. Defendant responded to the motions but did not claim that the request for summary adjudication of an issue was premature or that its consideration should be postponed until absent class members had been notified of the action. Defendant simply contested the motion on its merits. The court granted both of plaintiffs' motions, certified the case as a class action, and ordered defendant to bear the initial costs of notice to the class. Defendant subsequently moved to limit the partial summary judgment order to the individual plaintiffs because the class had not been notified prior to this substantive determination. After this motion was rejected, defendant filed for a writ of mandate or prohibition to compel the trial court to vacate its orders granting partial summary judgment and directing defendant to pay initial notification costs.

The Supreme Court held that by failing to object to the trial court's determination of plaintiff's motion for partial summary judgment prior to class notification, defendant had waived any right it may have had to postpone such a ruling until after notice had been provided to the class (22 Cal. 3d 362, 371) . In contending that it was entitled to a prior determination of procedural class issues such as notice, defendant had cited Home Sav. & Loan Assn. v. Superior Court (1974) 42 Cal. App. 3d 1006, 1015, 117 Cal. Rptr. 485 (Home I) and Home Sav. & Loan Assn. v. Superior Court (1976) 54 Cal. App. 3d 208, 214, 126 Cal. Rptr. 511 (Home II) (discussed in § 41.64[3][a]) (22 Cal. 3d 362, 372) . The court in Home I and Home II held that a defendant in a class action has a due process right to secure a determination of procedural class issues prior to determination of the merits of the action. The Court in Civil Service noted that it was not necessary to pass on the soundness of the Home decisions' due process analysis because, regardless of the correctness of the analysis, the partial summary judgment had to be upheld due to defendant's waiver of whatever rights may have been afforded by Home (22 Cal. 3d 362, 373) .

The Court noted that previous class action authorities, including the Home II decision, uniformly supported its conclusion that a defendant waives whatever due process rights it may possess when it voluntarily accedes to a trial court's decision on the merits of an issue before notice is provided to absent class members (22 Cal. 3d 362, 373) . The Court stated that a defendant may be willing to forgo class notification prior to adjudication of the merits for several reasons, such as fear of detriment from the notice itself or the desire to avoid discovery or other litigation expenses entailed in notification (22 Cal. 3d 362, 373-374) . The Court reasoned that having chosen to submit the issue to the trial court on the merits, defendant can hardly claim that it is fundamentally unfair in a due process sense to accord binding effect to the trial court's decision. The court noted that the defendant assumed the risk that its motion would not be legally binding on unnotified class members by not raising a timely objection to the court's resolution of the motion before class notification (22 Cal. 3d 362, 374) .

Counsel should note that subsequent to the decision in Civil Service, the Supreme Court in Green v. Obledo (1981) 29 Cal. 3d 126, 146, 148, 172 Cal. Rptr. 206, 624 P.2d 256 (discussed in § 41.33[3][a]), cited with approval the rule announced in the Home decisions. The Court in Green held that the trial court had erred in partially decertifying the class after plaintiff's motion for summary judgment, a decision on the merits, had been granted. However, in Employment Development Dept. v. Superior Court (1981) 30 Cal. 3d 256, 262, 178 Cal. Rptr. 612, 636 P.2d 575 (discussed below), decided after Green, the Court upheld the trial court's finding that the defendant had waived its right to determination of procedural class issues prior to a ruling on the merits. The Court based its decision on the ruling in Civil Service. Thus, it appears that the general rule announced in the Home decisions retains validity, but is subject to exceptions, such as defendant's waiver.

The facts and procedural background of Fireside Bank v. Superior Court (2007) 40 Cal. 4th 1069, 56 Cal. Rptr. 3d 861, 155 P.3d 268 , are discussed in § 41.64[3][a]. The Supreme Court held that the general requirement that procedural issues be resolved first is subject to the following rules (40 Cal. 4th 1069, 1083) :

- First, a class defendant must actively preserve its protection against one-way intervention by objecting to any adjudication of the merits before class certification. If the defendant fails to timely object, or affirmativelyseeks resolution of the merits before certification, it will be deemed to have waived its rights [see, e.g., Employment Development Dept. v. Superior Court (1981) 30 Cal. 3d 256, 262, 262-265, 178 Cal. Rptr. 612, 636 P.2d 575 ; Civil Service Employees Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1978) 22 Cal. 3d 362, 373-374, 149 Cal. Rptr. 360, 584 P.2d 497 ; see also § 41.66].

- Second, plaintiffs seeking to represent a class should move for certification before moving for any resolution of the merits [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.764(b) ("A motion for class certification should be filed when practicable")]. If the plaintiffs seek certification after seeking resolution of the merits, then in the absence of a waiver by the defendant, they must demonstrate changed circumstances or other good cause justifying the belated motion before the trial court may consider it.

- Third, in the absence of a waiver by the defendant, the trial court should not resolve the merits in a putative class action before resolving class certification and notice issues, absent a compelling justification for doing so.

[b] Defendant's Waiver by Failure to Object

Civil Service Employees Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1978) 22 Cal. 3d 362, 149 Cal. Rptr. 360, 584 P.2d 497 , is discussed in § 41.66[3][a].

[c] Defendant's Waiver by Obtaining Substantive Ruling

Employment Development Dept. v. Superior Court (1981) 30 Cal. 3d 256, 178 Cal. Rptr. 612, 636 P.2d 575 , was a class action challenging thevalidity of former Unemp. Ins. Code § 1264, which had denied unemployment benefits to any employee who did not provide the sole or major support of his or her family and who left his or her job because of marital or domestic duties. Defendants demurred to the complaint, challenging both the adequacy of the class action allegations and the request for substantive relief. Prior to argument on the demurrer, defendants submitted supplemental points and authorities which asserted that the challenged statute was not unconstitutional. Without passing on the adequacy of the class action allegations, the court sustained the demurrer with leave to amend on the basis of defendant's substantive contention. Plaintiff elected to stand on the complaint and the trial court dismissed the action. On plaintiff's appeal, the court of appeal concluded that the statute was unconstitutional and reversed the judgment sustaining the demurrer. On remand to the trial court, defendants opposed plaintiff's motion to certify the class on the ground, in part, that certification could not properly be ordered after a decision on the merits. The trial court granted plaintiff's motion, finding that defendants had waived the right to prior determination of class issues by proceeding to litigate the merits on the demurrer without objection. Defendants filed for a writ of mandate, which was granted by the court of appeal. Plaintiff then filed an appeal.

The Supreme Court, relying on Civil Service Employees Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1978) 22 Cal. 3d 362, 149 Cal. Rptr. 360, 584 P.2d 497 (discussed in § 41.66[3][b]), held that the trial court had properly concluded that defendant had waived the right to prior determination of procedural class issues (30 Cal. 3d 256, 262, 178 Cal. Rptr. 612, 636 P.2d 575). The Court rejected the defendants' contention that because they had expressly objected to maintenance of the suit as a class action in the demurrer before any decision on the merits, the trial court could not properly find that they had waived any rights with respect to the class action issue (30 Cal. 3d 256, 262, 178 Cal. Rptr. 612, 636 P.2d 575). The Court explained that defendants had not waived their basic right to oppose class certification on remand from the court of appeal, but they could not complain about the timing of the ruling on class certification because they had not objected to the court's consideration of the merits before class certification when the court initially sustained their demurrer (30 Cal. 3d 256, 263, 178 Cal. Rptr. 612, 636 P.2d 575).

The Court noted that the case against defendants' contention was even stronger than in Civil Service because defendants' demurrer had precipitated a precertification ruling on the merits, while in Civil Service, the plaintiff had sought the prenotice summary adjudication of an issue. The Court concluded that since defendants themselves had triggered the early determination, there could be no suggestion that plaintiff was attempting to manipulate the sequence of rulings to bring about the asserted inequities of one-way intervention (30 Cal. 3d 256, 264, 178 Cal. Rptr. 612, 636 P.2d 575).

[d] Defendant's Waiver by Requesting Bifurcated Trial

Colwell Co. v. Superior Court (1975) 50 Cal. App. 3d 32, 123 Cal. Rptr. 228 , was an action by a group of plaintiffs on behalf of themselves and other persons similarly situated who, in payment for the construction of mountain cabins, executed lien contracts and deeds of trust that were assigned by the builders to defendant. Defendant moved to bifurcate the issues of class determination and liability in order to obtain an early trial on the issues of liability because it feared damage to its business if notification of the class preceded resolution of the merits. Subsequently, the parties entered into a stipulation, approved by the trial court, to bifurcate the trial and try the issue of liability prior to determining the class action issues. After the decision in Home Sav. & Loan Assn. v. Superior Court (1974) 42 Cal. App. 3d 1006, 117 Cal. Rptr. 485 (Home I) (discussed in § 41.64[3][a]), the trial court, on its own motion, vacated the original order approving the stipulation. Defendant then filed for a writ of mandate in the court of appeal.

In granting the writ, the court of appeal held that the decision in Home Sav. & Loan Assn. v. Superior Court (1974) 42 Cal. App. 3d 1006, 117 Cal. Rptr. 485 , did not preclude bifurcated trials when the defendant was willing to forgo the protections against one-way intervention. The court reasoned that in Home I, the defendant had insisted on the protection and objected to a determination of liability prior to resolving the class action issues, whereas in the present case, the defendant had chosen to waive the protection of a judgment binding on all members of the class (50 Cal. App. 3d 32, 34, 123 Cal. Rptr. 228). Relying on federal decisional authority, the court noted that no legal detriment accrues to the class by permitting a determination of the liability issues first. Thus, the court concluded, proceeding in a bifurcated trial and considering the liability issue first are proper when the defendant requests such a procedure (50 Cal. App. 3d 32, 36, 123 Cal. Rptr. 228).

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Defendant's Waiver of Due Process Rights

In Rose v. City of Hayward (1981) 126 Cal. App. 3d 926, 179 Cal. Rptr. 287 , a class action seeking a writ of mandate to compel the state retirement system to include fringe benefits in its calculation of pension benefits, the court of appeal held that the defendant waived its due process right to a pretrial determination of class maintainability when the parties stipulated to the trial court's determination of liability prior to deciding whether or not the action could be maintained as a class action (126 Cal. App. 3d 926, 937, 179 Cal. Rptr. 287). The court stated the rule that when a defendant voluntarily accedes to a trial court hearing on the merits prior to determination of the class issues, he or she thereby waives his or her right to class certification prior to hearings on the substantive merits (126 Cal. App. 3d 926, 937, 179 Cal. Rptr. 287).

§ 41.67 Opposing Contention That Trial Court May Not Adjudicate Substantive Merits of Class Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 382] Without Prior Notice to Absent Class Members--When Action Primarily Seeks Declaratory or Injunctive Relief

[1] FORM Opposing Contention That Trial Court May Not Adjudicate Substantive Merits of Class Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 382] Without Prior Notice to Absent Class Members--When Action Primarily Seeks Declaratory or Injunctive Relief

[The following may be combined with a general form of memorandum in support of a motion seeking determination of a substantive issue, e.g., motion for summary judgment, prior to adjudication of procedural class issues (see, e.g., Ch. 116, Injunctions and Ch. 221, Summary Judgments). The following may also be combined with a general form of memorandum in support of a motion seeking a determination with respect to class issues (see, e.g., § 41.30) when the motion follows a substantive ruling on the merits.]

THE COURT SHOULD GRANT _____ [specify substantive ruling sought, e.g., A SUMMARY JUDGMENT] IN THIS ACTION BECAUSE THE COURT MAY ADJUDICATE THE SUBSTANTIVE MERITS PRIOR TO NOTIFYING CLASS MEMBERS WHEN A CLASS ACTION PRIMARILY SEEKS DECLARATORY OR INJUNCTIVE RELIEF.

A. Trial Court Has Discretion to Determine That Notice to Class Members Is Not Necessary. On certification of the class, or as soon thereafter as practicable, the court must make an order determining whether notice to class members is necessary (Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.766(c)(1)). Therefore, it is within the court's power to forgo class notice in an appropriate case.

B. Prior Adjudication for Declaratory or Injunctive Relief. The trial court may follow federal procedure with respect to class actions seeking declaratory or injunctive relief and allow a decision on the merits without requiring prior notice to absent class members (Lowry v. Obledo (1980) 111 Cal. App. 3d 14, 23, 169 Cal. Rptr. 732).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to a party's contention that the trial court may not adjudicate the substantive merits of an action without prior notice to absent class members. The argument may be used when a class action primarily seeks declaratory or injunctive relief.

This form may be combined, where appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to invoke the contention. For example, a plaintiff might make an argument supported by this memorandum when the defendant seeks to compel determination of a procedural class issue, such as notice, prior to a substantive ruling requested by the plaintiff.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

In an appropriate case, this memorandum may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 41.64.

[b] Related Uses

A corollary to the general rule prohibiting adjudication of the substantive merits of an action without prior determination of procedural class action issues [see § 41.64] is the argument that a court may not determine procedural class issues following an adjudication on the substantive merits of an action [see § 41.65]. With appropriate modification, these points of law may be used in an argument opposing the contention that procedural class issues may not be decided after adjudication of the substantive merits.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Prior Adjudication for Declaratory or Injunctive Relief

Lowry v. Obledo (1980) 111 Cal. App. 3d 14, 169 Cal. Rptr. 732 , was a class action seeking to invalidate a state regulation concerning the aid to families with dependent children (AFDC) program and requesting recalculation of class members' benefits. Plaintiffs simultaneously moved for summary judgment on the declaratory relief and for certification of the class. Defendants objected to consideration of the merits of the case prior to certification of the class and notice to its members, but notwithstanding defendant's objection, the trial court simultaneously certified the class and ruled on the merits. The court certified the class for purposes of declaratory relief only and refused to grant a writ of mandate compelling defendants to recalculate class members' past grants. On appeal, defendants contended that their due process rights were infringed by the trial court's failure to certify the class and require notice to its members prior to reaching the merits of the case.

The court of appeal held that the trial court had appropriately followed the federal procedure of allowing a decision on the merits without prior notice to members of the class (111 Cal. App. 3d 14, 23) . The court relied on federal decisional authority dispensing with the requirement of notice in class actions that primarily seek declaratory or injunctive relief under Fed. R. Civ. P., Rule 23(b)(2) [see Elliott v. Weinberger (9th Cir. 1977) 564 F.2d 1219, 1229 , reversed in part on other grounds sub nom. Califano v. Yamasaki (1979) 442 U.S. 682, 99 S. Ct. 2545, 61 L. Ed. 2d 176] . The court noted that although federal courts have ordered notice to absent class members in actions for declaratory or injunctive relief under Fed. R. Civ. P., Rule 23(b)(2), notice serves no purpose when there are no factual disputes and the plaintiff class is adequately represented by counsel (111 Cal. App. 3d 14, 23) .

In rejecting defendants' contention, the court noted the rule of prior California appellate court decisions, relied on by defendants, that a defendant against whom a class action is brought has a due process right to obtain class certification and notice to class members before determination of the merits of the action (see § 41.64). The court concluded, however, that the reasoning behind the rule did not apply to the case under consideration (111 Cal. App. 3d 14, 22) . The court noted that there was no danger of one-way intervention because if plaintiffs had lost on the merits, the doctrine of stare decisis would have made the likelihood of new litigation by AFDC recipients not bound by notice of the action a remote theoretical possibility (111 Cal. App. 3d 14, 23-24) . In addition, the court stated that the only danger of multiple litigation in the case resulted from the trial court's failure to grant a writ of mandate requiring recalculation of benefits for members of the class (111 Cal. App. 3d 14, 24) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Prior Adjudication for Declaratory or Injunctive Relief

In Frazier v. City of Richmond (1986) 184 Cal. App. 3d 1491, 228 Cal. Rptr. 376 , city employees brought a class action seeking a declaration of their rights under the city charter, and also petitioned for a writ of mandate to compel the payment of proper retirement allowances pursuant to the charter. Defendant moved for summary judgment, contending that a decision in a prior class action involving the parties barred plaintiffs' class action under the doctrine of res judicata. The trial court denied defendant's motion, holding that absent class members in the prior action had not been provided with notice that they were members of the class represented by plaintiffs and that therefore the prior action could not be asserted as res judicata to the instant claim.

The court of appeal reversed, characterizing the prior action as a declaratory action that came within the scope of Fed. R. Civ. P., Rule 23(b)(2),notwithstanding plaintiff's request for monetary relief (184 Cal. App. 3d 1491, 1501) . The court noted that under federal law, notice in actions classified under Fed. R. Civ. P., Rule 23(b)(2) is only discretionary (184 Cal. App. 3d 1491, 1499) . Applying the federal rule, the court found that notice was within the trial court's discretion in the prior class action. Thus, res judicata barred plaintiffs from relitigating the issues resolved in the prior action (184 Cal. App. 3d 1491, 1503) .

In Gonzales v. Jones (1981) 116 Cal. App. 3d 978, 171 Cal. Rptr. 567 , a class action seeking injunctive and declaratory relief on behalf of general assistance (GA) recipients challenging the validity of a county's requirement of an ineligibility period, the court of appeal reversed the trial court's order denying class certification and directed the trial court to certify the class and enter a decision on the merits without prior individual notice to class members (116 Cal. App. 3d 978, 986) . As authority for its conclusion, the court cited Lowry v. Obledo (1980) 111 Cal. App. 3d 14, 23, 169 Cal. Rptr. 732 (discussed in § 41.67[3][a]), and noted that the reasoning applied equally in Gonzales (116 Cal. App. 3d 978, 986) . Counsel should note, however, that the court in Gonzales did not explicitly state that notice was not required because the action requested injunctive or declaratory relief.

Proc. § 382] Without Prior Determination of Procedural Class Issues--Temporary Restraining Order or Preliminary Injunction, or Both, May Be Granted Whether or Not the Class Has Been Certified [Code Civ. Proc. § 527(b)]

[The following may be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities in support of an application for a temporary restraining order or preliminary injunction when the injunctive relief is sought prior to certification of the class (see Ch. 116, Injunctions). The following may also be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities in support of a motion seeking a determination with respect to class issues (see, e.g., § 41.30) when the motion follows a substantive ruling on the merits.]

THE COURT SHOULD GRANT A _____ [TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDER or PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION] IN THIS ACTION BECAUSE THE COURT MAY GRANT A TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDER OR A PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION, OR BOTH,IN A CLASS ACTION IN WHICH ONE OR MORE OF THE PARTIES SUES OR DEFENDS FOR THE BENEFIT OF NUMEROUS PARTIES ON THE SAME GROUNDS AS IN OTHER ACTIONS, WHETHER OR NOT THE CLASS HAS BEEN CERTIFIED.

Preliminary Injunctive Relief Prior to Class Certification. The trial court may properly grant a temporary restraining order or a preliminary injunction, or both, in a class action in which one or more of the parties sues or defends for the benefit of numerous parties on the same grounds as in other actions, whether or not the class has been certified (Code Civ. Proc. § 527(b)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to a party's contention that the trial court may not adjudicate the substantive merits of an action, by granting preliminary injunctive relief, prior to certification of the class. The foregoing may also be submitted in opposition to the contention that the trial court may not determine procedural class action issues, such as certification, after adjudication of the substantive merits of an action. The argument may be used when either party in a class action seeks a temporary restraining order or preliminary injunction, or both, prior to certification of the class.

This form may be combined, when appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to invoke the contention. For example, either party might make an argument supported by this memorandum when applying for a temporary restraining order or preliminary injunction prior to a certification of the class. In addition, either party might make an argument supported by this memorandum when the opposing party seeks to compel determination of class certification issues prior to adjudication of plaintiff's application for preliminary injunctive relief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated.

In an appropriate case, this memorandum may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 41.64.

[b] Related Uses

A corollary to the general rule prohibiting adjudication of the substantive merits of an action without prior determination of procedural class action issues [see § 41.64[1]] is the rule that a court may not determine procedural class issues following an adjudication on the substantive merits ofan action [see § 41.65[1]]. With appropriate modification, these points of law may be used to oppose the contention that procedural class issues may not be decided after adjudication of the substantive merits.

This form may be submitted in support of the contention that a representative action by an association on behalf of its members is proper. These points and authorities should be combined, where appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to invoke the contention. A plaintiff might make an argument supported by this memorandum, for example, when opposing a demurrer to the complaint on the ground that a representative action is not appropriate.

A representative action under Code Civ. Proc. § 382 is very similar to a class action in that plaintiffs must show an ascertainable class and a well-defined community of interest in the questions of law and fact involved affecting the parties to be represented [see Raven's Cove Townhomes, Inc. v. Knuppe Development Co. (1981) 114 Cal. App. 3d 783, 795, 171 Cal. Rptr. 334] . The issue of an association's capacity to sue as a representative usually arises, however, in the procedural context of defendant's demurrer or motion to strike allegations of representative capacity, as opposed to a motion for certification of the class, which is the standard method of proceeding in class actions [see Los Angeles County Class Actions Manual § 404 (association suing as representative will usually be excused from compliance with class action procedures)].

Because of the similarities between class and representative actions, counsel may find §§ 41.36-41.51 useful with respect to establishing the requisites for maintaining a proper representative action. With appropriate modification, counsel should combine these forms, where appropriate, with this form to support the contention that a representative action is proper.

Counsel should also insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Association May Sue in Representative Action

Professional Fire Fighters, Inc. v. City of Los Angeles (1963) 60 Cal. 2d 276, 32 Cal. Rptr. 830, 384 P.2d 158 , was an action for injunctive and declaratory relief based on discrimination brought by a labor union in its representative capacity on behalf of its members. Defendant filed a general demurrer together with an answer denying the charges of discrimination and affirmatively alleging that plaintiff did not have capacity to sue. Before decision on the demurrer, each party moved for summary judgment. The trial court held that plaintiff had no capacity to sue and sustained defendant's motion for summary judgment. Plaintiff then filed an appeal.

The Supreme Court reversed the trial court and held that the union's representative action was proper under Code Civ. Proc. § 382 (60 Cal. 2d 276, 284) . The Court reasoned that unions are organized for the purpose of representing their members and that an action at law on behalf of such members is one form of such representation. Thus, the Court concluded, the plaintiff had a clear beneficial interest in pursuing the action (60 Cal. 2d 276, 284) .

The Court distinguished its decision in Parker v. Bowron (1953) 40 Cal. 2d 344, 254 P.2d 6 , by pointing out that the plaintiff in that case had no beneficial interest in the subject matter and his right of representation was alleged by virtue of his position as secretary-treasurer of an unincorporated association. The labor union in Professional Fire Fighters was an incorporated association (60 Cal. 2d 276, 284) .

Raven's Cove Townhomes, Inc. v. Knuppe Development Co. (1981) 114 Cal. App. 3d 783, 171 Cal. Rptr. 334 , was an action by a homeowner's association against the project developer for strict liability and breach of warranty based on defects in common-area landscaping and in the exterior walls of individual units. The trial court granted defendant's motion for nonsuit, holding, with respect to the actions involving individual units, that the association lacked standing. Plaintiffs then filed an appeal.

The court of appeal reversed the trial court, holding that the association had standing to sue in a representative capacity under Code Civ. Proc. § 382 for the damage to individual units (114 Cal. App. 3d 783, 796) . The court did not deem it necessary to deal with defendant's contention that the association did not have standing to maintain a class action, because the court found that the association had the requisite standing in a representative capacity (114 Cal. App. 3d 783, 793) . Relying on Residents of Beverly Glen, Inc. v. Los Angeles (1973) 34 Cal. App. 3d 117, 109 Cal. Rptr. 724 (discussed in § 41.69[4][a]), the court noted that whether or not a representative plaintiff does and can in fact represent others is a question of fact for the trial court. The court also stated that while all class suits are representative in nature, all representative suits are not necessarily class actions (114 Cal. App. 3d 783, 794) . The court noted that in either instance, justification for the procedural device whereby one may sue for the benefit of many rests on considerations of necessity, convenience, and justice (114 Cal. App. 3d 783, 795) .

Relying on Daar v. Yellow Cab Co. (1967) 67 Cal. 2d 695, 704, 63 Cal. Rptr. 724, 433 P.2d 732 (discussed in § 41.36[3][a]), the court stated that the two requirements for a representative action are an ascertainable class and a well-defined community of interest in the questions of law and fact involved affecting the parties to be represented (114 Cal. App. 3d 783, 795) . The court noted that use of the representative procedural device was justified because the association had filed the action on behalf of itshomeowner members who all had a beneficial interest in the result of the case (114 Cal. App. 3d 783, 795) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Association May Sue in Representative Action

In Del Mar Beach Club Owners Ass'n v. Imperial Contracting Co. (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 898, 176 Cal. Rptr. 886 , an action by an association that was the managing entity and owner of a planned development for strict liability against the developer-builder, the court of appeal held that the association could maintain an action in a representative capacity on behalf of its members (123 Cal. App. 3d 898, 906) . The court noted that when the association's obligations under a declaration of restrictions are well defined and when it has sustained actual damages as owner, there is no question that it has and does intend to fairly and adequately represent the interests of the individual unit owners who are members of the association (123 Cal. App. 3d 898, 907) . The court also stated that because damage to the common areas, such as walkways and stairs, affects all the unit owners, it is not only logical that the common questions of law and fact be resolved in one proceeding, but it is judicially economical and cost beneficial to do so (123 Cal. App. 3d 898, 907) .

In Salton City etc. Owners Ass'n v. M. Penn Phillips Co. (1977) 75 Cal. App. 3d 184, 141 Cal. Rptr. 895 , an action by an association as representative of its members for damages or rescission and restitution of land sale contracts against a number of defendants, the court of appeal held that the association had stated a proper class action on behalf of a self-defined class, despite the association's claim of representative status and disclaimer of interest in class action status (75 Cal. App. 3d 184, 188) . The court noted that in either a representative or class action, there must be an ascertainable class and a well-defined community of interest in the questions of law and fact involved affecting the parties to be represented (75 Cal. App. 3d 184, 189) . The court found both of these requisites satisfied (75 Cal. App. 3d 184, 189-190) . Although it labeled the action as a class action, the court noted that the trial court was vested with ample authority to decide to what extent, if any, ordinary class action requirements should be modified to suit the case (75 Cal. App. 3d 184, 191) .

In Residents of Beverly Glen, Inc. v. Los Angeles (1973) 34 Cal. App. 3d 117, 109 Cal. Rptr. 724 , a representative action to set aside a conditional land use permit and to declare unconstitutional the ordinance under which it was granted, the court of appeal held that the association had standing to maintain a representative action (34 Cal. App. 3d 117). The court noted that it was clearly inferable from the complaint that plaintiff sought to represent its members in the action, although there was not an express allegation that the action was brought in a representative capacity or onbehalf of a certain class of people (34 Cal. App. 3d 117, 128) . The court did not clearly state whether it was upholding the action as a class or a representative suit. It noted only that despite the association's disclaimer of a class action and argument that it had standing to represent its members, the nature of an action is to be judged by what it really is, not by how the parties characterize or label it (34 Cal. App. 3d 117, 128) .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Association Cannot Sue for Inherently Personal Injuries

In Tenants Assn. of Park Santa Anita v. Southers (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 1293, 272 Cal. Rptr. 361 , an unincorporated association of mobilehome tenants brought an action on behalf of its members against the owners and managers of their mobilehome park for allegedly attempting to force the tenants out in order to close and sell the park. The complaint alleged causes of action for fraud and breach of statutory duties and sought an injunction, fines, and damages, including personal injury damages for mental suffering, physical distress, and anxiety. The trial court sustained the defendants' demure on the ground that the association had no standing to sue in a representative capacity and plaintiff appealed the order of dismissal.

The court of appeal reversed in part only, holding that the demurrer was properly sustained on the cause of action for damages for personal injuries to the individual members of the association (222 Cal. App. 3d 1293, 1304-1305) . The court held that the association did not have standing to sue for damages for anxiety, emotional distress, or personal injuries because such injuries were too intangible and too inherently personal to the individual to reasonably constitute a community of interest. What may have caused emotional distress to one tenant, the court explained, may have caused a different degree of distress or no distress at all to another tenant. The court ordered that the association be granted leave to amend the complaint to add the individual members as plaintiffs for recovery ofdamages that were intangible or inherently personal to the individual (222 Cal. App. 3d 1293, 1304) .

§ 41.71 Supporting Contention That Fluid Class Recovery Is Proper Device for Distribution of Damages

[1] FORM Supporting Contention That Fluid Class-Recovery Is Proper Device for Distribution of Damages

[The following may be combined with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to invoke the contention.]

FLUID CLASS-RECOVERY IS PROPER BECAUSE IT FULFILLS THE GOALS OF COMPENSATION, DISGORGEMENT, AND DETERRENCE, WHICH ARE THE PURPOSES OF THE UNDERLYING CAUSE OF ACTION.

A. When Fluid Class-Recovery Is Proper. The propriety of fluid class-recovery in a particular case depends on its usefulness in fulfilling the purpose of the underlying cause of action (State of California v. Levi Strauss & Co. (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 460, 472, 224 Cal. Rptr. 605, 715 P.2d 564).

[EITHER]

B. Common-Law Class Actions. Fluid class-recovery fulfills the purpose underlying the common-law development of class actions when the class has many members with relatively small individual claims and when requiring proof of individual claims will neither compensate injured persons nor deter defendant's unlawful practices (Bruno v. Superior Court (1981) 127 Cal. App. 3d 120, 123, 127, 179 Cal. Rptr. 342).

[AND/OR]

C. Class Actions Under Cartwright Act. Fluid class-recovery fulfills the purpose of the private damages action for violations of the Cartwright Act (Sections 16700-16770 of the Business and Professions Code) if damages are distributed so as to compensate substantially those injured class members who recover damages, especially if that distribution serves to deter violations and disgorge illegal profits, and when most of the injured class members would otherwise get nothing because of the unlikelihood that they could prove their individual claims (Bruno v. Superior Court (1981) 127 Cal. App. 3d 120, 132-133, 179 Cal. Rptr. 342).

[CONTINUE]

D. Distribution of Residue. In choosing the appropriate method of distributing the residue after individual claims have been filed, the trial court should consider the amount of compensation provided to class members, the proportion of class members sharing in the recovery, the size and effect of the "spillover" to nonclass members, and the costs of administration (State of California v. Levi Strauss & Co. (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 460, 479, 224 Cal. Rptr. 605, 715 P.2d 564).

[Optional] E. Price Rollback. Lowering the price of the defendant's product for a specified period is an appropriate form of fluid recovery for remedying overcharges on items that are repeatedly purchased by the same individuals, at least in a monopoly market where the price of the items is set by defendant manufacturer rather than retailers, because the individuals who were overcharged are likely to benefit from the reduced prices (State of California v. Levi Strauss & Co. (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 460, 473-474, 224 Cal. Rptr. 605, 715 P.2d 564).

[Optional] F. Earmarked Escheat. After individual claims have been filed, disbursement of the residue to a responsible governmental organization for use on projects that benefit noncollecting class members and promote the purposes of the underlying cause of action is an appropriate form of fluid recovery because it minimizes administrative costs, provides indirect compensation to "silent" class members, and reduces the risk of future harm (State of California v. Levi Strauss & Co. (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 460, 474, 479-480, 224 Cal. Rptr. 605, 715 P.2d 564).

[Optional] G. Consumer Trust Fund. Administration of the recovery in the interests of the class by a court-appointed board of directors, or by a responsible private organization, is an appropriate form of fluid recovery because it provides indirect compensation to "silent" class members and ensures the residue is used on projects designed to effectuate the aims of the underlying substantive law (State of California v. Levi Strauss & Co. (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 460, 475, 479-480, 224 Cal. Rptr. 605, 715 P.2d 564).

[Optional] H. Claimant Fund Sharing. Division of the residue, or of the fund itself, among the individual claimants is an appropriate form of fluid recovery when a large proportion of class members participate and submit accurate claims (State of California v. Levi Strauss & Co. (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 460, 476, 224 Cal. Rptr. 605, 715 P.2d 564).

[Optional] I. General Escheat. Payment of the residue to a general fund of a governmental body, which spreads the benefits of the recovery among all taxpayers, is an appropriate form of fluid recovery when a more precise remedy cannot be found (State of California v. Levi Strauss & Co. (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 460, 475, 224 Cal. Rptr. 605, 715 P.2d 564).

[Optional] J. Distribution of Entire Fund to Nonclass Members. Under appropriate circumstances, such as when distribution and administration costs for class members' claims will exceed the recovery, the court may order that the entire recovery be distributed to charitable, governmental, and nonprofit organizations, with no direct payments to any class members (In re Vitamin Cases (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 820, 826-832, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 425).

[2] Comments

This form may be submitted in support of the contention that a fluid class-recovery is a proper method for disbursing the award of damages. These points and authorities should be combined with others relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to invoke the contention. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities opposing defendant's motion to strike from the complaint plaintiffs' request that damages be distributed by fluid class-recovery [see Bruno v. Superior Court (1981) 127 Cal. App. 3d 120, 123, 179 Cal. Rptr. 342] . They may be combined with points and authorities supporting an application for approval of a class action settlement [see State of California v. Levi Strauss & Co. (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 460, 470, 224 Cal. Rptr. 605, 715 P.2d 564 ; for discussion of settlement procedures, see § 41.02[5]. They may also be included in an appellate brief on appeal from a judgment entered pursuant to a class action settlement [see State of California v. Levi Strauss & Co. (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 460, 464, 224 Cal. Rptr. 605, 715 P.2d 564 ; see also Trotsky v. Los Angeles Fed. Sav. & Loan Assn. (1975) 48 Cal. App. 3d 134, 139-140, 121 Cal. Rptr. 637 (class member who appears at hearing on proposed settlement and whose objections are overruled has standing to appeal subsequent judgment)].

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Counsel should refer to facts showing that each individual's recovery is too small to make traditional methods of proof worthwhile because, for example, class members were not likely to retain records of small purchases for long periods of time. In addition, counsel should demonstrate how, without fluid recovery, the defendant will be able to keep ill-gottengains simply because their conduct harmed large numbers of people in small amounts [see State of California v. Levi Strauss & Co. (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 460, 471-472, 224 Cal. Rptr. 605, 715 P.2d 564] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] When Fluid Class-Recovery Is Proper

In State of California v. Levi Strauss & Co. (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 460, 224 Cal. Rptr. 605, 715 P.2d 564 , the state attorney general brought a class action, both as a representative of consumers under Code Civ. Proc. § 382, and under Bus. & Prof. Code § 16760 in parens patriae on behalf of the state's residents, against a clothing manufacturer who allegedly maintained artificially high prices in violation of the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 16700-16770). The court certified a class consisting of all current California residents who made retail purchases of defendant's denim jeans during the period from 1972 to 1975, estimated at three to seven million households. The parties negotiated a settlement, which was to be distributed to individuals on a pro rata basis according to the number of pairs of jeans purchased during the relevant period. There was no requirement that claimants prove their purchases; the average individual recovery was projected to be three dollars or less.

Several organizations and individuals, whom the court allowed to intervene, opposed the individual distribution plan. In addition to making other objections, they argued that the plan would produce only small individual returns, and without expensive measures to verify purchases, a large percentage of the fund would be paid out for fraudulent claims. As an alternative, the intervenors proposed that the settlement money be used to establish a nonprofit corporation which would administer a "consumer trust fund" for consumer protection projects, including research and litigation.

Over intervenors' objections, the court approved the distribution plan, and in 1981, the public was notified of the proposed settlement. By the deadline for response, almost one and one-half million claim forms had been received. At the fairness hearing, an individual intervenor renewed the objections to the settlement, arguing that only a minority of class members had bothered to file claims and a large percentage of the recovery went to pay inflated or baseless claims. The court nevertheless approved the settlement and ruled that the top five percent of claims, or those alleging more than 21 purchases per individual from 1972 to 1975, were to be treated as suspect. These individuals were required to resubmit their claims with a sworn and notarized confirmation that their claims were accurate. By the time the court prepared its findings of facts and conclusions of law, 80 percent of the suspect claims had not been resubmitted. A sizeable residue of the recovery remained unallocated, because of theeliminated claims, claimants who could no longer be located, and interest on the settlement money. The trial court entered its final judgment and the intervenor appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment but remanded to the trial court for a determination of how the residue should be distributed, suggesting that the intervenor's plan for a consumer trust fund had "considerable merit" (41 Cal. 3d 460, 479) . Holding that a settlement had to be approved or rejected as a whole, the Court affirmed the judgment so as to honor the more than one million household claims that were already received and processed (41 Cal. 3d 460, 470-471) . However, the Court went on to discuss, for the guidance of the trial court and other courts, the area of fluid recovery in consumer class actions (41 Cal. 3d 460, 472-479) . The equitable doctrine of fluid recovery, the Court summarized, applies when each individual's recovery is too small to make traditional methods of proof worthwhile and when consumers are not likely to retain records of small purchases for long periods of time (41 Cal. 3d 460, 471-472) . The Court approved the holding in Bruno v. Superior Court (1981) 127 Cal. App. 3d 120, 179 Cal. Rptr. 342 (discussed in § 41.70[3][b]), that the propriety of fluid recovery in a particular case depends on its usefulness in fulfilling the purpose of the underlying cause of action. Fluid class-recovery, the Court observed, can be essential to ensure that the policies of disgorgement or deterrence are realized, when defendants otherwise would be permitted to retain ill-gotten gains because their conduct harmed large numbers of people in small amounts instead of small numbers of people in large amounts (41 Cal. 3d 460, 472) . Implementation of fluid recovery, the Court summarized, involves three steps: (1) the defendant's total damage liability is paid over to a class fund; (2) individual class members are given an opportunity to collect their individual shares by proving their particular damages, usually according to a lowered standard of proof; and (3) any residue remaining after individual claims have been paid is distributed by one of several practical procedures that have been developed by the courts (41 Cal. 3d 460, 472-473) .

The Court also rejected the contention that fluid class-recovery was prohibited in a private antitrust action brought under the Cartwright Act. The parens patriae statute (Bus. & Prof. Code § 16760) empowers the Attorney General to sue for violations of the act and provides that the residue must escheat to the state's general fund. However, the Court held, the statute was not intended to impose any restrictions on the conduct of private consumer class actions, such as the one brought and settled by the attorney general in conjunction with a "backup" parens patriae suit (41 Cal. 3d 460, 477-478, 478 n.14).

[b] Common-Law Class Actions

In Bruno v. Superior Court (1981) 127 Cal. App. 3d 120, 179 Cal. Rptr. 342 , plaintiffs brought a class action against three supermarketcorporations on behalf of an estimated one to one and one-half million milk purchasers for price-fixing practices in violation of the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 16700-16770). The average claim of each class member was projected to be $125 or less. Plaintiffs' amended complaint requested that damages be paid on the basis of individual claims presented and, to the extent class members did not present claims, by either (1) lowering of milk prices (price rollback), or (2) depositing the damages with the state for the limited purpose of applying it to charitable purposes benefitting the consuming public in the affected locale (earmarked escheat). Defendants moved to strike from the complaint the proposed methods of distributing the residue of damages, and the trial court granted the motion, finding that the distribution methods were prohibited by case law. Plaintiffs petitioned for a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal granted the writ, holding that the trial court abused its discretion in striking the request for fluid class-recovery, because such methods of distributing damages are not per se improper in state antitrust class actions (127 Cal. App. 3d 120, 122) . The court refused to read Blue Chip Stamps v. Superior Court (1976) 18 Cal. 3d 381, 134 Cal. Rptr. 393, 556 P.2d 755 (discussed in § 41.59) as establishing a broad rule that fluid class-recovery is improper for any class action lawsuit (127 Cal. App. 3d 120, 124) . Fluid class-recovery was rejected in that case, the court reasoned, only because it would not have achieved either (1) disgorgement of illegal profit still held by defendant, or (2) compensation of injured class members, defined as enough of an overlap between the class of individuals injured by defendant's conduct and the class of individuals who would benefit from a future price reduction as to make the distribution method a rational means of compensating class members (127 Cal. App. 3d 120, 125-126) . Under the philosophy of Daar v. Yellow Cab Co. (1967) 67 Cal. 2d 695, 63 Cal. Rptr. 724, 433 P.2d 732 (discussed in § 41.36), and Vasquez v. Superior Court (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 800, 94 Cal. Rptr. 796, 484 P.2d 964 (discussed in § 41.34), the court observed, class actions serve the primary purpose of compensating injured persons, as well as the important purpose, when individual lawsuits are not feasible, of removing ill-gotten gains from the hands of those engaged in unlawful practices. In the absence of fluid class-recovery, class actions in which proof of individual claims is impractical would neither compensate plaintiffs nor deter defendants (127 Cal. App. 3d 120, 127) . The court held that the propriety of using fluid class-recovery largely depends on the purposes of the law under which the class action is brought. The issue is whether a fluid class-recovery will sufficiently further those purposes given the facts of the particular case under consideration (127 Cal. App. 3d 120, 129-130) .

[c] Class Actions Under Cartwright Act

The factual and procedural background of Bruno v. Superior Court (1981) 127 Cal. App. 3d 120, 179 Cal. Rptr. 342 , is discussed in § 41.71[3][b].In its analysis of the Cartwright Act, the court of appeal held that the provisions authorizing private antitrust actions do not prohibit fluid class recovery if damages are distributed so as to compensate substantially the injured class members who have recovered the damages, especially if that distribution serves to deter violations and disgorge illegal profits (127 Cal. App. 3d 120, 132-133) . In addition, the court held, the fact that the act empowers the state to bring parens patriae antirust lawsuits, and specifies the methods for distributing the damages recovered, does not evidence a legislative intent to prohibit fluid class-recovery in private antitrust class actions (127 Cal. App. 3d 120, 133) . However, the court noted, if defendants could show that the "correlation" or "overlap" between those injured and those to be benefitted by a fluid class-recovery would be minimal, that argument could be raised when the trial court considered damages distribution as one of the several factors that it must balance to determine whether or not the suit can be maintained as a class action (127 Cal. App. 3d 120, 135 n.10)

[d] Distribution of Residue

The factual and procedural background of State of California v. Levi Strauss & Co. (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 460, 224 Cal. Rptr. 605, 715 P.2d 564 , is discussed in § 41.71[3][a]. The Court observed that the intervenor who sought review of the settlement in that case was principally concerned not with reversing the settlement but with how to use the sizeable residue that remained unallocated after only a portion of the class submitted individual claims (41 Cal. 3d 460, 471) . Therefore, the Court went on to discuss, for the trial court's guidance on remand and for other courts, the area of fluid recovery in consumer class actions (41 Cal. 3d 460, 472-479) . The disposition of the residue on remand, the court held, is a matter within the discretion of the trial court (41 Cal. 3d 460, 479) . In determining which method to employ, the courts should consider (1) the amount of compensation provided to class members, including nonclaiming or "silent" members; (2) the proportion of class members sharing in the recovery; (3) the extent to which benefits will "spill over" to nonclass members and the degree to which the spillover benefits will effectuate the purposes of the underlying substantive law; and (4) the costs of administration (41 Cal. 3d 460, 473) . The Court then discussed the merits of each of the common types of distribution (41 Cal. 3d 460, 473-476) . It is the correlation or overlap between the injured class of persons and the class to be benefitted, not the absolute number of persons recovering, that provides the principal criterion for assessing the compensatory effectiveness of a distribution plan (41 Cal. 3d 460, 479) . The settlement did not reasonably compensate class members when only 1.2 million of an estimated three to seven million people made claims and when there was a likely high incidence of erroneous or fraudulent claims. The court suggested that the consumer trust fund had considerable merit in this case because (1) up to one half of theoriginal group of claimants might have moved since 1981 and be difficult to locate, and therefore, further attempts to distribute the entire fund to individual claimants would result in an even lower rate of participation than did the original plan, and (2) the consumer trust fund plan, or a plan employing earmarked escheat in place of the fund, would provide some indirect compensation for silent class members, while ensuring that the residue of the recovery is used on projects designed to effectuate the aims of the Cartwright Act (41 Cal. 3d 460, 479-480) .

[e] Price Rollback

The factual and procedural background of State of California v. Levi Strauss & Co. (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 460, 224 Cal. Rptr. 605, 715 P.2d 564 , is discussed in § 41.71[3][a]. The Court stated that lowering the price of the defendant's product for a specified period is an appropriate form of fluid recovery for remedying overcharges on items that are repeatedly purchased by the same individuals, at least in a monopoly market where the price of the items is set by defendant manufacturer rather than retailers, because the individuals who were overcharged are likely to benefit from the reduced prices (41 Cal. 3d 460, 473-474) .

[f] Earmarked Escheat

The factual and procedural background of State of California v. Levi Strauss & Co. (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 460, 224 Cal. Rptr. 605, 715 P.2d 564 , is discussed in § 41.71[3][a]. The Court stated that after individual claims have been filed, disbursement of the residue to a responsible governmental organization for use on projects that benefit noncollecting class members and promote the purposes of the underlying cause of action is an appropriate form of fluid recovery because it minimizes administrative costs, provides indirect compensation to "silent" class members, and reduces the risk of future harm (41 Cal. 3d 460, 474, 479-480) .

[g] Consumer Trust Fund

The factual and procedural background of State of California v. Levi Strauss & Co. (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 460, 224 Cal. Rptr. 605, 715 P.2d 564 , is discussed in § 41.71[3][a]. The Court stated that administration of the recovery in the interests of the class by a court-appointed board of directors, or by a responsible private organization, is an appropriate form of fluid recovery because it provides indirect compensation to "silent" class members and ensures the residue is used on projects designed to effectuate the aims of the underlying substantive law (41 Cal. 3d 460, 475, 479-480) .

[h] Claimant Fund Sharing

The factual and procedural background of State of California v. Levi Strauss & Co. (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 460, 224 Cal. Rptr. 605, 715 P.2d 564 ,is discussed in § 41.71[3][a]. The Court stated that division of the residue, or of the fund itself, among the individual claimants is an appropriate form of fluid recovery when a large proportion of class members participate and submit accurate claims (41 Cal. 3d 460, 476) .

[i] General Escheat

The factual and procedural background of State of California v. Levi Strauss & Co. (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 460, 224 Cal. Rptr. 605, 715 P.2d 564 , is discussed in § 41.71[3][a]. The Court stated that payment of the residue to a general fund of a governmental body, which spreads the benefits of the recovery among all taxpayers, is an appropriate form of fluid recovery when a more precise remedy cannot be found (41 Cal. 3d 460, 475) .

[j] Distribution of Entire Fund to Nonclass Members

In re Vitamin Cases (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 820, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 425 , was a coordinated proceeding that included claims brought on behalf of a class of California consumers who had indirectly purchased vitamin and vitamin products from the defendants during a 10-year period. The coordinated class complaint alleged that the defendants, manufacturers of raw vitamins and related products, had committed price fixing in violation of both the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code § 16700 et seq.) and the Unfair Competition Act (Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq.). The trial court approved a settlement that included certification of a class of consumers who had purchased the relevant products during the relevant period. The settlement agreement provided for the distribution of the entire $38 million consumer settlement fund to charitable, governmental, and nonprofit organizations that promoted the health and nutrition of consumer class members or that otherwise furthered the purposes underlying the lawsuit. The settlement agreement did not provide for the payment of any part of the settlement fund to individual consumers. The trial court approved this fluid recovery for the following reasons: (1) it was impracticable or impossible to compensate direct victims of the alleged wrongdoing because of the disproportionate administrative expenses resulting from the number of potential claimants in relation to the size of the consumer settlement fund, (2) there was a strong correlation between the proposed use of the funds and the consumer class, and (3) the proposed distribution of the settlement fund furthered the purpose of the relevant statutes. Several members of the consumer class appealed, contending that the settlement was barred because it did not allow class members to make individual claims to settlement proceeds.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court observed that because the theory underlying fluid class recovery (or cy pres remedy) is that each class member cannot be compensated exactly for the damage he or she suffered, the best alternative is to pay damages that benefit as many of the classmembers as possible (in the approximate proportion that each member has been damaged), even though some injured class members probably will receive no compensation and some people not in the class will benefit from the distribution (107 Cal. App. 4th 820, 826) .

This case presented the issue of whether Code Civ. Proc. § 384(b) precludes fluid recovery if the class members have not first been given an opportunity to obtain their appropriate share of the settlement. Specifically, Section 384(b) provides that prior to the entry of judgment in a class action, the court must determine the total amount that will be payable to all class members, if all class members are paid the amount to which they are entitled pursuant to the judgment. Then, after the parties report to the court the total amount that was actually paid to the class members, the court must amend the judgment to require distribution of the unpaid residue to nonprofit organizations or foundations for the purposes specified in the statute (107 Cal. App. 4th 820, 826-827) .

The court of appeal found that Section 384 was inapplicable in this case because by its own terms, the statute addresses only a situation in which a "residue" of a class settlement fund remains after the distribution to class members is completed. By requiring that the trial court ensure distribution of the residue to an appropriate nonprofit organization or foundation, Section 384 provides important information needed by class members in deciding whether to accept the benefits of a proposed settlement, opt out and pursue their individual remedies, or object to the settlement. In contrast, Section 384 has no application to the kind of situation presented in this case, in which the settlement agreement provided for the distribution of the entire settlement fund and there would be no residue whose distribution was not disclosed in advance to the class (107 Cal. App. 4th 820, 827-829) .

The court of appeal declined to interpret Section 384 as requiring individual payments to class members in every case. The court explained that such an interpretation would be unreasonable, because in some cases distribution and administration costs will exceed the recovery. In this case, for example, nearly every consumer in California was a class member, given that the defendants' products had been used not only in vitamin supplements but in many food products. In the motion for preliminary approval of the class settlement, the number of potential claimants was estimated to be 30,000,000. Given the size of the class compared to the size of the award (approximately $38 million), the amount of each individual's recovery would be quite small and could well be less than distribution and administration costs (107 Cal. App. 4th 820, 830-832) .

The court of appeal also held that class members were not deprived of due process even though none would receive any of the settlement fund because the terms of the proposed settlement had been fully disclosed to class members. The requirements of due process were met in this case,because the notice provided to class members explained that the proposed settlement provided solely for the distribution of funds to nonprofit organizations and foundations, stated that there would be no payments to individual consumers, and informed the class members of their opportunities of opting out or objecting (107 Cal. App. 4th 820, 829) .

PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT FAILS TO STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION IN THAT THE COMMON COUNT ALLEGED IS BASED ON THE SAME FACTS AS THE SPECIALLY ALLEGED DEFECTIVE COUNT.

A. Objection by Demurrer. The party against whom a complaint has been filed may object by demurrer to the complaint on the ground that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action (Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)) when the ground for that objection appears on the face of the complaint [or from any matter of which the court is required to take judicial note] (Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)).

B. Common Count Pleaded on Same Facts as Special Count as Alternative Method of Recovery. When a common count follows a specially pleaded count and is based on the same facts, the common count is construed as an alternative method of pleading a right to recover and does not constitute a different cause of action (Oakland v. Oakland Unified School Dist. (1956) 138 Cal. App. 2d 406, 411, 291 P.2d 1001).

C. Demurrer to Common Count Proper When Count Is Based on Same Facts as Defective Special Count. It is proper to sustain a demurrer to a common count when it is based on the same facts which are insufficient to entitle plaintiff to recover on a specifically pleaded count (Zumbrun v. University of So. Cal. (1972) 25 Cal. App. 3d 1, 14, 101 Cal. Rptr. 499).

[Optional] D. Amended Common Count Defective if Insufficiencies of Specific Count Are Not Corrected. A plaintiff who has filed a verified specific allegation and common count based on the same facts may not merely amend the complaint to state a cause of action solely as a common count without correcting the prior inconsistencies between the specific allegation and the common count (Neal v. Bank of America National Trust & Savings Assn. (1949) 93 Cal. App. 2d 678, 681-682).

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a demurrer to a complaint pleaded on a common count when the demurrer asserts that the complaint is defective because it is based on the same facts as an insufficient special count.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in §§ 43.34 through 43.38 may be used in opposition to the demurrer supported by this memorandum of points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Common Count Pleaded on Same Facts as Special Count as Alternative Method of Recovery

In Oakland v. Oakland Unified School Dist. (1956) 138 Cal. App. 2d 406, 291 P.2d 1001 , the City of Oakland attempted to recover from defendant school district its proportional share of costs of a city election in which certain school-director vacancies were filled. Although the school district had paid its proportional share of election costs in past elections, it refused on the ground that the statute on which its prior liability was predicated no longer applied due to a boundary change in the school district. The applicable statute required school districts whose boundaries were not coterminous with the boundaries of the city to contribute to the city for elections, whereas the school district boundaries had been changed and were now coterminous. The trial court, however, ordered defendant school district to pay its pro rata share of election costs. Defendant appealed and the court of appeal determined on the basis of the relevant statutory language that the school district had no liability to the city. On appeal the city argued that it had a right to recover from the school district under its second cause of action which was pleaded as a common count for money paid. Such a right to relief was denied by the court, however, since the common count was pleaded on the same facts as the defective special count and therefore was not a different cause of action, but merely an alternative method of alleging plaintiff's right to recover (138 Cal. App. 2d 406, 411) .

[b] Demurrer to Common Count Proper When Count Is Based on Same Facts as Defective Special Count

In Zumbrun v. University of So. Cal. (1972) 25 Cal. App. 3d 1, 101 Cal. Rptr. 499 , plaintiff, a 63-year-old woman, sought to recover damages allegedly suffered when the professor of a class that the plaintiff was taking refused to finish teaching the course and offer a final examination because of a faculty strike to register disapproval of certain United States policies in Cambodia. The students, however, did receive grades, plaintiff receiving a "B." Plaintiff's complaint attempted to allege breach of fiduciary duty, unjust enrichment, fraud, constructive fraud, breach of warranty, misrepresentation, negligence, breach of trust, and conspiracy. The trial court upheld defendant's demurrer to plaintiff's specially pleaded first count on the ground that plaintiff failed to state a cause of action. The second cause of action was for money had and received and was based on the same facts as the first. Since the special count was defective, the trial court sustained the demurrer to the common count on the ground that if the plaintiff is not entitled to recover on a count which is specifically pleaded, recovery under a common count based on the same factual situation is also improper. The court of appeal affirmed (25 Cal. App. 3d 1, 14) .

[c] Amended Common Count Defective if Insufficiencies of Specific Count Are Not Corrected

In Neal v. Bank of America National Trust & Savings Assn. (1949) 93 Cal. App. 2d 678 , plaintiff sought to recover money from defendant bank allegedly due him for certain contracting work. Plaintiff constructed two houses for persons who had obtained building loans from defendant, and defendant allegedly accepted plaintiff as the contractor and authorized construction of the houses. Plaintiff's first two counts attempted to set forth defendant's obligation to plaintiff, and the third consisted of a common count based on the same facts as the first two. Subsequently, the trial court sustained defendant's demurrer to the original complaint on the grounds that it failed to state a cause of action and that it was uncertain since if failed to allege any promise on the part of the defendant to recognize plaintiff as contractor. Plaintiff then filed an amended complaint which attempted to state a cause of action exclusively in the form of a common count for money had and received. The court found that since no new defendants were added and none of the deficiencies of the original complaint had been corrected, the amended complaint pleaded as a common count was also inadequate. The court stated that facts once alleged cannot be withdrawn from consideration by the mere filing of an amended pleading omitting them without any explanation (93 Cal. App. 2d 678, 681-682) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Demurrer to Common Count Proper When Count Is Based on Same Facts as Defective Special Count

In Building Permit Consultants, Inc. v. Mazur (2004) 122 Cal. App. 4th 1400, 1414, 19 Cal. Rptr. 3d 562 , an unlicensed public adjusting firm sued the insured with whom it had contracted to provide funding for pursuit of a claim against an insurance company. When the insurance company settled with the insured but the insured did not pay the adjusting firm the fee called for in the contract, the adjusting firm sued. The court held that because the adjusting firm was not licensed when the contract was signed, not only was its contract voidable by the insured pursuant to Ins. Code § 15006(b), but under the court's interpretation of that section the adjusting firm's common counts claim for recovery was also barred.

In Hays v. Temple (1937) 23 Cal. App. 2d 690, 73 P.2d 1248 , an action was brought against the child actress, Shirley Temple, for breach of an exclusive services contract. The right to recovery was set forth specifically on the contract as well as in a common count for money had and received. The trial court found the specific counts ambiguous, uncertain, and unintelligible and held that they failed to state a cause of action. Likewise, it held that the common count, which obviously sought recovery on the same facts as the insufficient special counts, must also fail. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment sustaining defendant's demurrer without leave to amend.

[b] Amended Common Count Defective if Insufficiencies of Specific Count Are Not Corrected

The court of appeal in Filmservice Laboratories, Inc. v. Harvey Bernhard Enterprises, Inc. (1989) 208 Cal. App. 3d 1297, 256 Cal. Rptr. 735 , affirmed the trial court's judgment of dismissal, based on sustaining of a demurrer to a third amended complaint without leave to amend. The first complaint alleged an express oral contract that was barred by a two-year limitation period (208 Cal. App. 3d 1297, 1304-1306). The first, second, and third amended complaints omitted a count on the express contract but contained counts for account stated and open book account. The court gave two reasons why the common counts were fatally defective. In the absence of any allegation that the debtor agreed to forego the oral contract and proceed on the basis of an account, invoices from the creditor were not evidence of an account but only memorialized the oral contract (208 Cal. App. 3d 1297, 1307-1308) . In addition, the action could not be resurrected by the device of pleading common counts when the common count and the count on the express contract were factually identical in all material aspects and no facts were alleged explaining the omission of the oral contract allegations in the amended complaints (208 Cal. App. 3d 1297, 1308) .

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of demurrer to a complaint pleaded on a common count when the demurrer asserts that the complaint is defective because the common count is based on an express contract. Although the general rule is that a common count will not lie on an express contract, because of the many exceptions to that rule [see §§ 43.34 -43.38], this form is for use only when the complaint shows that the express contract is unexecuted and was never mutually rescinded.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in §§ 43.36 and 43.37 may be used in opposition to the demurrer supported by this memorandum of points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Common Count Improper if Based on Unexecuted, Express Contract

In Barrere v. Somps (1896) 113 Cal. 97, 45 P. 177 , plaintiff and defendant entered into a contract pursuant to which plaintiff was to purchase soda water exclusively from defendant for resale. Defendant provided the necessary horses, wagon, and syphon bottles to plaintiff who deposited the sum of $500 with defendant as security against damages to the wagon or animals. In a subsequent action pleaded as a common count, plaintiff sought return of the $500 deposit. The trial court overruled defendant's demurrer to the complaint and denied defendant's motion for nonsuit. The Supreme Court reversed, finding that a common count was not appropriate where there existed a special contract which was still open, unexecuted in part and not rescinded by mutual consent. It stated that allegations and proof must agree under both code and common law pleading. Thus, where the respective liabilities of the parties as to the deposit remained unsettled and disputed, the common count alleged by plaintiff was not supported by the evidence presented and it was necessary for plaintiff to prove defendant's liability pursuant to the applicable provisions of the contract (113 Cal. 97, 101) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Common Count Improper if Based on Unexecuted, Express Contract

In Castagnino v. Balletta (1889) 82 Cal. 250, 23 P. 127 , plaintiff brought an action against defendants to foreclose a mechanic's lien on buildings plaintiff constructed for defendants pursuant to a written contract. At the second trial, plaintiff stated his cause of action against defendants in three counts: work and labor done in constructing the buildings, extra work done and materials furnished, and special indebtedness for a door and sidewalk furnished at defendants' special request. After a jury trial, the trial court entered judgment in favor of plaintiff. Defendants moved for a new trial and the motion was denied. Defendants then appealed the judgment and order. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed the trial court's decision. In so doing, the Court set forth the general rules regarding the appropriateness of pleading on the common counts. It stated that the election to plead on the common counts, where a special agreement exists, applies only if the contract has been fully performed by the plaintiff, abandoned by mutual consent, or rescinded by the defendant. Otherwise, if the contract is executory, the plaintiff's only remedy is to seek relief pursuant to the express contract. The Court found that plaintiff had fully performed his part of the contract and could appropriately plead his cause of action on the common counts.

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a demurrer to a complaint pleaded in a special count for breach of contract and in a common count when the special count is barred by the statute of frauds and the common count is based on the same facts and the same theory of recovery as the special count. This memorandum sets forth a specific application of the general rule set out in § 43.20 that a demurrer will lie to a common count which is based on the same facts as a specific count alleging an express contract if the specific count does not state a cause of action. Although it has been generally stated that the rule does not apply if the demurrer to the specific count is based on the statute of frauds [see § 43.35], this exception does not apply if the count does not make some reasonable attempt to show the propriety of an action in quantum meruit for the value of the services rendered in reliance on a promise to compensate which is made unenforceable by the statute of frauds [see discussion in § 43.22[3][a]].

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Common Count in Quantum Meruit Must Be for Reasonable Value of Services

In Parker v. Solomon (1959) 171 Cal. App. 2d 125, 340 P.2d 353 , plaintiff attempted to recover one half of her father's estate based on an alleged oral agreement. Plaintiff, the legitimate daughter of the decedent, was abandoned by her father at an early age. As an adult, plaintiff met with her father and expressed an interest in moving to Los Angeles, where he lived, and further demanded that he compensate her for past neglect. Decedent orally agreed that plaintiff would receive one half of his estate on his death if plaintiff agreed not to move to Los Angeles. Although his estate was worth an estimated $1,500,000, decedent left plaintiff a specific bequest for $1,000. Plaintiff's action was in two counts, one based on the oral contract, and the second was in the form of a common count in quantum meruit for services rendered. The trial court sustained defendant's demurrer to the complaint and dismissed the action. The court of appeal affirmed. It held that the first count came within the statute of frauds and did not allege any equitable considerations which would remove it from the purview of the statute, noting in part that the decedent's estate would not be unjustly enriched if the oral contraction which plaintiff relied were not enforced. With respect to the second count, although the court noted that the statute of frauds would not bar plaintiff from recovering the reasonable value of the services rendered to decedent, plaintiff had not alleged a cause of action in which she sought such a value. Rather, because (1) the only consideration for decedent's alleged promise consisted of plaintiff's forbearing to assert a claim against decedent for her support and for her refraining from intruding herself into his life, (2) the counts prayed for the same recovery, and (3) the amount claimed in the common count thus bore no relationship to the reasonable value of any alleged services, the court held that the common count was subject to a general demurrer (171 Cal. App. 2d 125, 134-137) .

[b] Common Count Based on Oral Real Estate Broker's Commission Contract

In Allen v. Powell (1967) 248 Cal. App. 2d 502, 56 Cal. Rptr. 715 , the trial court sustained a demurrer to a common count on the ground that the plaintiff had failed to allege any facts which would estop defendant from asserting the statute of frauds. Plaintiff sought to recover the reasonable value of services rendered as real estate broker for defendant. The court of appeal affirmed, finding that plaintiff had pleaded the necessary elements to constitute a valid common count, but held that a real estate broker's commission contract must be in writing. Since plaintiff had failed to plead facts which would estop defendant from asserting the bar of the statute of frauds, judgment was rendered for defendant.

The court in Allen did not clearly consider the issue of the relationship of the statute of frauds to a common count in quantum meruit when the underlying contract cannot be enforced because it is not in writing. Unlike Parker (discussed in § 43.22[3][a]), in which the court of appeal carefully considered the underlying rationale for the rule that a common count in quantum meruit is not subject to a general demurrer based on the statute of frauds, Allen did not consider a plaintiff's right to recover the reasonable value of services rendered to a defendant when those services are performed pursuant to an unenforceable contract. Nevertheless, there appear to be two bases for supporting the court's holding in Allen. First, as in Parker, the facts show that plaintiff brokers prayed for the same amount as the reasonable value of services rendered that they would have earned had their contract been enforceable. Thus, it was not clear that plaintiffs had made a reasonable attempt to allege the propriety of an action in quantum meruit. Second, and more importantly, Allen has been cited as authority for the proposition that a licensed real estate broker is presumed to know that real estate commission contracts are invalid and unenforceable unless in writing and subscribed by the person to be charged [Rosenbaum v. Rosenbaum (1967) 257 Cal. App. 2d 193, 198, 64 Cal. Rptr. 632] . In other words, a plaintiff broker cannot complain in such a case that a defendant has been unjustly enriched and thus, there is no basis for a recovery in quantum meruit (248 Cal. App. 2d 502, 512) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Common Count in Quantum Meruit Must Be For Reasonable Value of Services

In Maglica v. Maglica (1998) 66 Cal. App. 4th 442, 449-452 , an unmarried cohabitant sought to recover the reasonable value of services rendered to a business solely owned by the other cohabitant. The jury awarded the plaintiff $84 million on her quantum meruit claim. The court of appeal reversed, holding that the trial court erred in allowing the jury to measure quantum meruit recovery on the basis of the impact of plaintiff's services on the business. The trial judge had instructed the jury that the reasonable value of plaintiff's services was either the value of what it would have cost the defendant to obtain those services from someone else, or the value by which defendant had benefitted as a result of those services. The court appeal stated that the legal test for recovery in quantum meruit is not the value of the benefit, but value of the services (66 Cal. App. 4th 442, 449-452) .

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a demurrer to a complaint pleaded on a common count when the demurrer asserts that the complaint fails to allege the essential element of indebtedness in pleading on a common count. Counsel should note that demand was considered a necessary allegation in pleading on the common counts in older California decisions, but that it is no longer stated to be essential in more recent cases [see Pike v. Zadig (1915) 171 Cal. 273, 152 P. 923 ; see also Division of Labor Law Enforcement v. Barnes (1962) 205 Cal. App. 2d 337] .

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Failure to Allege Essential Elements of Common Count

In Allen v. Powell (1967) 248 Cal. App. 2d 502, 56 Cal. Rptr. 715 , plaintiffs, licensed real estate brokers, brought an action against certain lessors and the lessee for the recovery of a commission the lessors had promised to pay plaintiffs from rents to be received from the lessee after plaintiffs had negotiated a long-term lease with the lessee. The lessee was also named as a defendant on the alternative bases that it had tortiously interfered with the contract between plaintiffs and defendant lessors and that the lessors and the lessee had conspired to prevent plaintiffs from recovering their commission. In addition, plaintiffs sought recovery for the lessee's unjust enrichment because of the acts alleged as part of these two alternative theories. The trial court rendered judgment in favor of plaintiffs and against the lessors but sustained the lessee's demurrer to the complaint without leave to amend, and that part of the action was dismissed. Plaintiffs appealed, and the court of appeal reversed, holding that plaintiffs had stated a cause of action against the lessors and lessee on the alternative theories of interference with contract or civil conspiracy. However, the court held that plaintiffs were not entitled to recover anything based on a theory of unjust enrichment. It stated that such a recovery could be upheld neither on the ground that plaintiffs were entitled to the remedy of a constructive trust, since plaintiffs had not alleged and could not show there was an inadequate remedy at law, nor on the ground that plaintiffs had successfully alleged a common count. Although plaintiffs were entitled to waive the tort (interference with contract) and sue in assumpsit, they nevertheless had failed to allege an essential element of a common count, the consideration. Quoting from Witkin, California Procedure, (2d ed) Vol. 3 Pleading, § 431, the court stated that the essential allegations of a common count are (1) the statement of indebtedness in a certain sum; (2) the consideration, that is, goods sold, work done, etc.; and (3) nonpayment. It found that not only was the consideration not pleaded, it could not be pleaded. The court reasoned that the consideration is a fiction when the tort is waived, since there is no intent to give anything as an agreed exchange. But, in order to employ the fiction, there must be something moving to the defendant to support the implied promise to pay therefor. In plaintiffs' case, there was nothing so moving for the plaintiffs to waive the tort (248 Cal. App. 2d 502, 510).

[b] Demurrer to Common Count

In Vaughn v. Certified Life Ins. Co. (1965) 238 Cal. App. 2d 177, 47 Cal. Rptr.619 , plaintiff brought an action against defendant to recover an alleged debt for fraud. After defendant's two demurrers were sustained, plaintiff filed a second amended complaint in two counts, one attempting to plead a common count and the second sounding in fraud. Defendant generally and specially demurred to the second amended complaint. The trial court sustained this demurrer, and, on plaintiff's failure to amend, judgment was entered for defendant. Plaintiff appealed, and the court of appeal affirmed. With respect to the cause of action stated as a common count, the court determined that plaintiff had failed to plead sufficiently the count. Noting the liberality of pleading requirements with common counts, the court still held that plaintiff had failed to state directly or impliedly the relationship between plaintiff and defendant or the express or implied legal principle on which a promise to pay plaintiff was predicated. The court found that plaintiff's mere allegations that he paid $128.25 to defendant as a premium on a policy and that no part of it was repaid to plaintiff were insufficient to establish any legal theory on which there was an obligation on the part of defendant to repay (238 Cal. App. 2d 177, 181-182) .

[c] Common Count Based on Unjust Enrichment Must Show Something Moving to Defendant

Allen v. Powell (1967) 248 Cal. App. 2d 502, 56 Cal. Rptr. 715 , is discussed in § 43.23[3][a].

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Common Count Based on Unjust Enrichment Must Show Something Moving to Defendant

The court of appeal in Enterprise Leasing Corp. v. Shugart Corp. (1991) 231 Cal. App. 3d 737, 282 Cal. Rptr. 620 reversed a judgment for defendant as to plaintiff's cause of action for unjust enrichment. Plaintiff leased computer equipment to a third entity, which sold all its electronics division assets to defendant. The lease prohibited assignment without plaintiff's consent, which was never obtained. Defendant took possession of the computer equipment and made monthly payments to plaintiff for a time. Although the court eventually ruled for plaintiff, it stated the theory of the case as follows: one who has been unjustly enriched at the expense of another is required to make restitution. A critical limitation on this rule is that one who confers a benefit officiously is not entitled to restitution. It must ordinarily appear that the benefits were conferred by mistake, fraud, coercion or request; otherwise, although there is enrichment, it is not unjust (231 Cal. App. 3d 737, 748). At the time defendant took possession of the equipment, the rental payments for the remaining term of the lease totaled $146,243, and the monthly payments required by the lease were based on the lease remaining in effect for its full term of 60 months. Although defendant made monthly payments at the lease rate ($3,179) for a while, in order for defendant to pay the $146,243, it would have had to make monthly payments of $8,006 during the period it used the equipment. Therefore, the court concluded that the facts established that defendant was enriched, that is, benefitted financially, by making only the rental payments specified in the lease during the period it used the equipment, and that such enrichment was unjust because the benefit conferred was the result of plaintiff's lack of knowledge that defendant had the equipment and was making the payments and that the payments would not continue throughout the term of the lease (231 Cal. App. 3d 737, 749) .

In Nibbi Brothers, Inc. v. Home Federal Savings & Loan Assn. (1988) 205 Cal. App. 3d 1415 , a contractor that supplied materials and labor for tenant improvements at the construction lender's request sued the construction lender on theories of unjust enrichment and negligent misrepresentation when the contractor remained unpaid after the construction lender had acquired the property through foreclosure. The court of appeal affirmed judgment for the lender on those causes of action entered after sustaining of demurrers and granting of motions to strike. The court first noted that restitution to avoid unjust enrichment is appropriate when the benefits were conferred by mistake, fraud, coercion, or request, saying that without a showing of mistake, fraud, coercion, or request, though there may be enrichment, it is not unjust (205 Cal. App. 3d 1415, 1422) . Here, the allegations relating to defendant's alleged fraud were fatally defective because they did not allege that defendant promised it would pay for the work. Without a specific promise to pay for the work itself, defendant's promise of payment had to be construed as an optimistic and nonactionable opinion about the original owner-borrower's payment (205 Cal. App. 3d 1415, 1422-1423) .

In Otworth v. Southern Pac. Transportation Co. (1985) 166 Cal. App. 3d 452, 212 Cal. Rptr. 743 , the court of appeal held that a complaint alleging numerous causes of action, including unjust enrichment, failed to allege sufficient facts to support that cause of action. Plaintiff, who challenged withholding of a portion of his wages for income tax purposes by his employer, did not allege how withholding taxes and turning them over to the I.R.S. unjustly enriched defendant. Therefore, the trial court properly sustained a demurrer to this cause of action (166 Cal. App. 3d 452, 460) .

In Gold v. Los Angeles Democratic League (1975) 49 Cal. App. 3d 365, 122 Cal. Rptr. 732 , plaintiff in part sought the recovery of $4,400 under a common count alleging that defendants became indebted to plaintiff for this sum on an open book account. In the fourth count of the complaint, plaintiff had alleged a cause of action based on intentional interference with plaintiff's prospective employment. The cause of action was based on plaintiff's allegations that defendants had published a pamphlet during a campaign in which plaintiff sought political office which gave the false impression that plaintiff's opponent had been officially endorsed by the Democratic Party. The trial court had sustained defendants' demurrers to plaintiff's complaint, but on appeal the court of appeal reversed, holding that the complaint stated a good cause of action for the tort of interference with a prospective advantage alleged in the fourth count. However, based on Allen v. Powell (1967) 248 Cal. App. 2d 502, 510, 56 Cal. Rptr. 715 (discussed in § 43.23[3][c]), the common count was defective because it did not allege any consideration moving from plaintiff to defendants on which to base an implied promise of repayment on their part.

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a demurrer to a complaint based on a common count when the count fails to allege facts showing that defendant expressly or impliedly promised to pay plaintiff. The general rule is that a promise to pay is not an essential allegation of a common count if plaintiff has otherwise pleaded defendant's indebtedness, consideration, and nonpayment. The reason is that, for example, in counts for money had and received, for goods sold and delivered, or for work, labor, and services rendered, the law implies the plaintiff's promise from the allegation that the money was received by, or the goods delivered or services rendered to, plaintiff [see §§ 43.39 -43.42]. This form is for use when other allegations show that the money was received, the goods delivered, or the services rendered under circumstances from which a promise could not be implied, or someone other than the defendant received the money, goods, or services [see also § 43.23].

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Common Count Must Allege Express or Implied Promise

The factual background of Vaughn v. Certified Life Ins. Co. (1965) 238 Cal. App. 2d 177, 47 Cal. Rptr. 619 , is discussed in § 43.23[3][b]. In holding that plaintiff had not sufficiently pleaded a common count to recover the premium paid to defendant on an insurance policy, the court of appeal explained that historically, the common count derives from the writ system of the common law. It is based on an archetypical legal relationship, pleaded as a general conclusion of law, from which a plaintiff's right to the relief he seeks is derived. However liberal the rules permitting common counts maybe, there must be some certainty with respect to the obligation a plaintiff seeks to enforce. Stating the principle set out in Paragraph B of this form, the court found nothing was alleged in the common count which expressly or impliedly created an obligation to repay anything to defendant. Plaintiff had merely alleged that defendant became indebted to him in the sum of $128.25, which was the agreed price paid to defendant as a premium on a certain insurance policy, and that no part of it was paid to him. There was no allegation sufficient to show an implied-in-law contract to repay. Rather, the allegation that the money was paid as an agreed premium showed that defendant had the right to retain the money, a fact buttressed by the legal presumption that money paid by one person to another is due the latter [see Evid. Code § 631] (238 Cal. App. 2d 177, 181) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Common Count Must Allege Express or Implied Promise

Smith v. Bentson (1932) 127 Cal. App. Supp. 789, 15 P.2d 910 , was an action in municipal court on a common count brought against defendants husband and wife for work, labor, and services plaintiff rendered as a dentist to the husband and for which both defendants had become indebted. Plaintiff did not allege that the wife had requested the performance of plaintiff's services or that she promised to pay for them. The trial court sustained her demurrer, defendant appealed, and the superior court affirmed. The court explained that if it were alleged that plaintiff's services were rendered to and received by the wife, the complaint would be good, because a promise to pay could be implied. But because plaintiff alleged that the services were rendered to another, no promise to pay could be implied and the complaint could not be upheld as a common count.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Demurrer to Common Count as Proper Where Count Seeks Relief Other Than Money

In Allen v. Merchants Elec. Co. (1960) 54 Cal. 2d 67, 4 Cal. Rptr. 527, 351 P.2d 799 , plaintiff pleaded a cause of action for damages for breach of express contracts in which defendant promised to install and furnish certain electrical equipment for plaintiff. Plaintiff attempted to obtain a writ of attachment for damages allegedly incurred as a result of the contracts, but the trial court held that a writ would not lie when the breached contract required other than the direct payment of money. The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment finding nothing from which an obligation to pay money could be implied in fact. Moreover, the Court noted, as dictum, that when damages are sought for breach of an express obligation to do other than pay money, neither attachment nor pleading on the common counts is proper (54 Cal. 2d 67, 69) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Demurrer to Common Count as Proper Where Count Seeks Relief Other Than Money

In Willett & Burr v. Alpert (1919) 181 Cal. 652, 185 P. 976 , plaintiff corporation alleged that defendants, as assignees of prior contracts, had a contractual obligation which required them to deliver certain rails to plaintiff. Plaintiff alleged that defendants had failed to deliver the rails to plaintiff's detriment in the amount of $6,562.50 and that defendants were therefore indebted to plaintiff in that amount. Since plaintiff had already paid the contract price, it sought damages and writ of attachment. The trial court denied the writ and plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed, however, finding that the action was not on the contract but rather for breach of contract and, thus, that attachment was not authorized. Plaintiff had attempted to argue that the action was on an implied contract, similar to those on which common counts may be based. Analogizing the action to one on a common count to determine whether attachment was proper, the Court stated that a common count will not lie to recover damages for an unexecuted contract where the obligation breached is other than the payment of money. Further, the Court cited authority for the proposition that a common count is improper even if the obligation owing differs as slightly from money as a promissory note.

PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT IS SUBJECT TO A SPECIAL DEMURRER IN THAT THE COMMON COUNT IS AMBIGUOUS AND UNCERTAIN AS TO THE DATES ON WHICH THE ALLEGED INDEBTEDNESS AROSE.

A. Objection by Demurrer. The party against whom a complaint has been filed may object by demurrer to the complaint on the ground that it is uncertain (Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(f)) when the ground for such objection to the complaint appears on the face thereof [or from any matter of which the court is required to take judicial note] (Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)).

B. Special Demurrer Appropriate When Count Is Ambiguous or Uncertain. A special demurrer for ambiguity or uncertainty is appropriate against a common count to ascertain the true dates on which defendant's indebtedness arose if such dates are ambiguously alleged in a special count and a common count pleaded generally (Miller v. Brown (1951) 107 Cal. App. 2d 304, 307, 237 P.2d 320).

CAUTION:
Special demurrers are not allowed in limited civil cases in which the amount in controversy is $25,000 or less [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 91(a), 92(c)].

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a special demurrer to a complaint pleaded on a common count when the demurrer asserts that the complaint is ambiguous or uncertain as to dates alleged. This special demurrer exists as an exception to the general rule that neither general or special demurrers lie against a common count on grounds of uncertainty [Pike v. Zadig (1915) 171 Cal. 273, 152 P. 923] .

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 43.43 may be used in opposition to the demurrer supported by this memorandum of points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Special Demurrer Appropriate When Count Is Ambiguous or Uncertain

In Miller v. Brown (1951) 107 Cal. App. 2d 304, 237 P.2d 320 , the trial court sustained a special demurrer against a common count for ambiguity and uncertainty despite the general rule that neither special or general demurrers for uncertainty are sufficient against actions pleaded on the common counts [see Pike v. Zadig (1915) 171 Cal. 273, 152 P. 923] . The plaintiff in Miller sought to recover damages in a count for work and labor for breach of an alleged oral contract. The second count of the complaint contained contradictory language with respect to the date of indebtedness. Plaintiff generally alleged that defendant had become indebted to plaintiff within the last two years but specifically alleged that the indebtedness accrued from June 1946 to June 1948. Since the action was filed on June 10, 1948, the uncertainty of the specific allegation raised a question as to the timeliness of the action. The court of appeal upheld the demurrer but carefully stated that its holding was not on the basis that the action was barred by the statute of limitations, since that bar must affirmatively appear on the face of the complaint, but rather, because of the uncertainty and ambiguity of the dates and plaintiff's failure to amend the complaint after repeated opportunities to do so. In accordance with the general rule of construction that specific language controls over general, plaintiff's refusal to delete or clarify by amending the specific dates alleged in the complaint provided a sufficient basis on which to sustain a demurrer for ambiguity (107 Cal. App. 2d 304, 307) .

Counsel should note that another appellate district has limited Miller to its particular facts. In Moya v. Northrup (1970) 10 Cal. App. 3d 276, 88 Cal. Rptr. 783 , plaintiffs set forth a complaint on a common count for money lent and paid. Defendants demurred to the complaint on the grounds that it failed to state a cause of action and that it could not be determined from the complaint whether the contract on which the action was based was oral or written. The trial court sustained the demurrer. The court of appeal reversed. Noting that a common count is not normally subject either to a general or special demurrer due to uncertainty, the court limited the impact of Miller to those cases where the ambiguity in question concerns the timeliness of the action pursuant to the applicable statute of limitations [see also § 43.43[3][b]].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Demurrer Proper if Diverse Common Counts United in One Count

In Buckingham v. Waters (1859) 14 Cal. 146 , plaintiff brought an action to recover $2,000 from defendant. The transaction on which recovery was sought involved the sale by defendant to plaintiff of certain horses and the "good will" of a mercantile house. Apart from the fact that the legal basis on which plaintiff predicated his claim for recovery was not clear, the Supreme Court found that uniting different common counts in one count as one cause of action, without any specification of the sums due under each count, was improper (14 Cal. 146, 147-148) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Demurrer as Proper if Diverse Common Counts United in One Count

See § 43.20[3][b] for the factual setting of Zumbrun v. University of So. Cal. (1972) 25 Cal. App. 3d 1, 101 Cal. Rptr. 499 . In Zumbrun, the court of appeal affirmed the trial court's decision insofar as sustaining the special demurrers of defendants on grounds of uncertainty. The court stated that while the common count for work and labor performed was properly pleaded, it should have been pleaded separately from the common count for money had and received.

A MOTION FOR CHANGE OF VENUE SHOULD BE GRANTED IN AN ACTION ON ACCOUNT STATED WHEN THE COUNT FAILS TO ALLEGE THAT IT WAS STATED IN THE COUNTY OF THE FORUM.

A. Statutory Authority for Motion. The court may, on motion, change the place of trial when the court designated in the complaint is not the proper court (Code Civ. Proc. § 397(a)).

B. Transfer Mandatory on Proper Showing. The court must order the action transferred to the proper court when it appears at the hearing of the motion for change of venue that the action was not commenced in the proper court (Code Civ. Proc. § 396b).

C. Proper Court as in County of Defendant's Residence. Except as otherwise provided by law, the proper court for the trial of an action is a court in the county where the defendant resided when the action was commenced (Code Civ. Proc. § 395(a)).

D. Failure to Allege That Account Stated Was Stated in County of Forum. [a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for change of venue if the action is pleaded on an account stated and the motion asserts that the defendant is entitled to a change of venue since the account was not stated in the county of the forum.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Points and Authorities

A related memoranda of points and authorities that may be useful in cases involving motions for change of venue in actions on account stated may be found in Ch. 238, Venue .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Failure to Allege That Account Stated Was Stated in County of Forum

In Tringali v. Vest (1951) 106 Cal. App. 2d 720, 236 P.2d 171 , plaintiff filed an action against defendant set forth in two counts, one pleaded on an open book account and the second on an account stated. The action was filed in Monterey County where plaintiff had its offices. Defendant moved for a change of venue to San Francisco, the county in which defendant resided. The trial court denied defendant's motion, and defendant appealed. In reversing the denial of defendant's motion, the court of appeal found that defendant was entitled to a change of venue since the count pleaded as account stated failed to allege that the account was actually stated in Monterey County. The court further noted that it was immaterial that the other cause of action pleaded with the account stated count was properly brought in the county of the forum. It held that if defendant is entitled to a change of venue on any cause of action, such change must be granted even if defendant is not entitled to a change of venue on any other counts set forth (106 Cal. App. 2d 720, 721).

[a] Failure to Allege That Account Stated Was Stated in County of Forum

For the factual setting of Crofts & Anderson v. Johnson (1950) 101 Cal. App. 2d 418, 225 P.2d 594 , see § 43.30[4][a]. In Crofts, the court of appeal held that a change of venue was appropriate in an action on an account stated where the count failed to allege that the account stated was made in the county of the forum and if defendant resided in another county. This result was true even if the account stated count was joined with another count properly within the venue of the forum.

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion to exclude evidence for failure to provide an adequate bill of particulars when the motion asserts that defendant has demanded a bill of particulars and plaintiff has failed to comply.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations which support the motion.

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in §§ 43.47 through 43.49 may be used to oppose the motion supported by the memorandum of points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Motion to Exclude as Proper on Failure to Satisfy Timely Demand for Bill of Particulars

In Burton v. Santa Barbara Nat'l Bank (1966) 247 Cal. App. 2d 427, 55 Cal. Rptr. 529 , plaintiff brought suit on a rejected creditor's claim against defendant bank acting as special administrator of an estate. Plaintiff's claim was pleaded in the form of a common count for the reasonable value of services rendered in conjunction with collections plaintiff had made for decedent. Defendant demanded a bill of particulars regarding the services plaintiff allegedly rendered for decedent. After numerous attempts to procure an adequate bill of particulars, defendant requested a further bill of particulars and an order to exclude evidence. When plaintiff failed to provide the further bill, the trial court granted defendant's motion to exclude evidence relating to paragraph 5 of plaintiff's complaint. Plaintiff appealed since the order effectively prevented him from proceeding in that no further issues were left to be determined between plaintiff and defendant. On this basis, the court of appeal heard the appeal. In affirming the trial court's decision, the court held that the lower court had not abused its discretion in excluding evidence relating to paragraph 5 of the complaint. It determined that defendant had properly invoked the statutory provision by which a bill of particulars may be demanded. It further noted defendant's attempts to obtain the requested information by a further bill of particulars. Only when the further bill was ignored did defendant seek to exclude evidence. The court also found that plaintiff's promise to continue to try to locate the records and plaintiff's totally inadequate attempt at furnishing a bill of particulars, which was only a vague restatement of the complaint, did not constitute the requested itemization. The court concluded that the order to exclude was appropriate given plaintiff's numerous opportunities to comply with defendant's request to furnish a bill of particulars, plaintiff's total noncompliance, and defendant's timely filing of a motion to exclude prior to trial (247 Cal. App. 2d 427, 433) . The court noted as dictum that any insufficiency or failure to provide a bill of particulars is waived unless a motion to exclude is filed before trial.

SUMMARY JUDGMENT FOR DEFENDANT IS PROPER IN AN ACTION ON AN ACCOUNT STATED IF THERE IS NO PRIOR INDEBTEDNESS FOR WHICH PLAINTIFF IS LIABLE.

A. Summary Judgment. A defendant may move for summary judgment in any action or proceeding if it is contended that the action has no merit. Such a motion must be granted if all of the papers submitted show that there is no triable issue as to any material fact and that defendant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law (Code Civ. Proc. § 437c).

B. Account Stated Does Not Create Liability. Accounts stated are not intended to create obligations independent of the prior indebtedness, and, therefore, the rendering of an account cannot create a liability where no liability existed before (Trafton v. Youngblood (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 17, 26, 69 Cal. Rptr. 568, 442 P.2d 648).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Account Stated Does Not Create Liability

Trafton v. Youngblood (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 17, 69 Cal. Rptr. 568, 442 P.2d 648 , involved, in part, a defendant attorney's affirmative defense of an account stated in an action to recover money retained by defendant as his fee after he had settled a dispute concerning plaintiff's right to the proceeds of a fire insurance policy. Defendant had sent plaintiff an itemized statement of services rendered and of costs advanced. This statement showed that defendant had retained all the money received from the proceeds of the policy as his fee and that, in fact, there was due and owing an additional sum. (Defendant cross complained for this sum in a cause of action on an account stated.) When plaintiff received this statement, he indicated he would respond in a few months. However, plaintiff never did contact defendant, who had continued to send several statements of the balance due for the legal services. The trial court rendered judgment for plaintiff for the entire sum defendant had retained, finding that defendant had not been authorized to retain the proceeds and that plaintiff had never agreed to the statement sent by defendant. The Supreme Court affirmed. The Court stated in pertinent part that because accounts stated were intended to preserve and protect legitimate demands but not to create obligations independent of prior indebtedness, the rendering of an account, although not objected to, cannot create a liability where no liability existed before. The Court concluded that the trial court had properly found no acquiescence in the statement of account arising from plaintiff's failure to object. Defendant had violated his fiduciary obligation by withholding the proceeds of the policy without plaintiff's authorization. These funds then were not liable for payment of the debt before the rendering of the account, and to imply such a consent by the failure to object would have permitted the creation of the obligation independent of any prior indebtedness (69 Cal. 2d 17, 26).

[b] Underlying Indebtedness Barred by Staute of Frauds

In Swim v. Juhl (1925) 72 Cal. App. 363, 237 P. 552 , plaintiff, as assignee of a claim for medical services allegedly rendered to defendant Dorothy Bradley, joined defendants Ethel and Jesse Juhl in the action on the theory that Mrs. Juhl was the mother of Dorothy Bradley and had promised to pay for the services rendered. Defendants' motion for nonsuit was granted at the close of plaintiff's case and plaintiff appealed. The action had been brought on a common count for the reasonable value of services rendered and on account stated. On appeal, plaintiff acknowledged the invalidity of the count for the reasonable value of services since the mother's oral agreement to pay if her daughter defaulted was void due to the statute of frauds. As to the account stated, plaintiff stated that after Dorothy Bradley was released from the hospital, plaintiff sent bills to the patient and, subsequently, bills for the same account to Mrs. Juhl. Despite the fact that no response was received from Mrs. Juhl, plaintiff based a claim of an account stated on having submitted the invoices. Plaintiff contended that defendants' failure to object constituted a new contract which was not controlled by the statute of frauds. The court of appeal found that mere failure to object does not create an account stated from a bill where no legal indebtedness existed. It further noted that an account stated cannot be used as an instrument to create liability where none existed before, such as in the instant case where the original obligation was void due to the statute of frauds (72 Cal. App. 363, 366) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Underlying Indebtedness Barred by Statute of Frauds

In Crofts & Anderson v. Johnson (1950) 101 Cal. App. 2d 418 , plaintiff, as assignee, brought a cause of action against defendant on two counts. One was a book account for goods, wares, and merchandise, and the other was in the form of an account stated. On a motion for change of venue, defendant averred that he was a resident of Humboldt County and did not become indebted to plaintiff or enter into an account stated with plaintiff in Alameda County as plaintiff claimed. The lower court found that the account stated was not made in Alameda County and granted an order for change of venue from which plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal affirmed, noting that it would not disturb the lower court's determinations of fact where there was a conflict of evidence as offered by affidavits. Moreover, the court observed that to establish an account stated there must be more than a showing that the statement setting forth the account was sent to the debtor. There must be an acknowledgment by the debtor of the correctness of such account. Thus, where there was no evidence on record of an account stated ever having been made, it could not be determined that it was in fact made in Alameda County. Finally, the court determined that in passing on a motion for change of venue in an action on an account stated it is not appropriate to consider the original contract, as contended by plaintiff, since an account stated constitutes a new contract which supersedes the old. In so holding, the court distinguished between inquiring into antecedent facts to determine whether there was a preexisting liability on which the account stated may be based and attempting to rely on the situs of the preexisting liability to fix venue in the action on an account stated. By way of dictum, the court noted the established principle that an account stated cannot be based on a prior indebtedness which is void because of the statute of frauds.

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for summary judgment in an action on an account stated when the motion asserts that defendant is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law because the mere failure of the debtor to object to a statement setting forth the items of account does not create an account stated when there is no assent to the correctness of the statement either directly or by acquiescence.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations supporting the motion [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Failure to Object Does Not Create Account Stated

See Additional Authorities, Underlying Indebtedness Barred by Statute of Frauds, § 43.30, for the factual setting of Crofts & Anderson v. Johnson (1950) 101 Cal. App. 2d 418, 225 P.2d 594 . In Crofts, the court of appeal stated that to establish an account stated there must be more than a showing that the statement setting forth the account was sent to the debtor. The court determined that the debtor, either directly or by acquiescence, must admit the correctness of the account.

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Failure to Object Does Not Create Account Stated

The court of appeal in Maggio, Inc. v. Neal (1987) 196 Cal. App. 3d 745, 241 Cal. Rptr. 883 , modified the trial court's judgment by decreasing the award for plaintiff to eliminate amounts representing advances made more than two years before the action was brought, holding that recovery could only be premised on an oral contract subject to the two-year limitation period (see Code Civ. Proc. § 339). Plaintiff sued its former vice president under an oral contract, for an account stated, and on an open book account to recover what it characterized as loans and what defendant claimed were nonreimbursable advances against bonuses. There was no evidence to establish an agreement by the parties that the transactions would be carried as an account (196 Cal. App. 3d 745, 752-753). The court said that a creditor cannot create an account stated merely by creating a private record of an account without informing the debtor, nor can the creditor bootstrap this private record into an account stated merely by mailing a summary of accounts allegedly due to the debtor and treating the debtor's silence as acceptance (196 Cal. App. 3d 745, 751-752). Although the law will imply an agreement that an account is correct when a statement is rendered to a debtor and no reply is made within reasonable time, failure to reply cannot establish an account stated when the debtor did not know that he or she was indebted or that the creditor was maintaining an account (196 Cal. App. 3d 745, 753) .

See § 43.30[3][b] for the factual setting of Swim v. Juhl (1925) 72 Cal. App. 363, 237 P. 552 . In Swim, the court of appeal held that the mere failure by the debtor to object to a statement sent by the creditor does not create an account stated when no legal indebtedness exists.

SUMMARY JUDGMENT FOR DEFENDANT IS PROPER UNDER THE GENERAL RULE THAT A GUILTY PARTY TO AN _____ [ILLEGAL or UNENFORCEABLE] CONTRACT CANNOT USE A COMMON COUNT TO RECOVER THE BENEFITS HE OR SHE HAS CONFERRED UNDER THAT CONTRACT.

A. Summary Judgment. [See § 43.30[1], Paragraph A.]

B. General Rule Prohibits Recovery Under Common Count. The general rule is that the guilty party to an illegal contract cannot recover through a common count the value of the benefits he or she has conferred under the illegal or unenforceable contract (UFITEC, S.A. v. Carter (1977) 20 Cal. 3d 238, 250, 142 Cal. Rptr. 279, 571 P.2d 990 ; Lewis & Queen v. N.M. Ball Sons (1957) 48 Cal. 2d 141, 146, 150-151, 308 P.2d 713).

[Optional] C. Failure to Give Automotive Repair Estimate. An automotive repair dealer that fails to give its customer the written estimate required by Bus. & Prof. Code § 9884.9 cannot use a common count to recover the value of any repairs made (*Donaldson v. [Optional] E. Test for Severability of Illegal Consideration. The illegal portion of a contract is severable if the court, consistent with the intent of the parties, can reasonably relate the illegal consideration on one side to some specified or determinable portion of the consideration on the other side. If any part of several considerations for a single object is unlawful, the entire contract is void (Lawn v. Camino Heights, Inc. (1971) 15 Cal. App. 3d 973, 980, 93 Cal. Rptr. 621).

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted by a defendant in support of his or her motion for summary judgment in an action on a common count that seeks recovery of the value of the benefits conferred by plaintiff under an illegal or unenforceable contract. A motion for summary judgment also must be supported by statement of material facts that defendant contends are undisputed, as well as by supporting declarations or other evidence [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

This form may also be adapted for use in another procedural context, such as a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should add points of law regarding the particular illegality involved. Counsel should also insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should set forth the facts constituting the particular illegality and plaintiff's knowledge of it.

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 43.52 may be used to oppose a motion supported by the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] General Rule Prohibits Recovery Under Common Count

UFITEC, S.A. v. Carter (1977) 20 Cal. 3d 238, 142 Cal. Rptr. 279, 571 P.2d 990 , was an action by a Swiss banking corporation to recover the amount of losses sustained under a security trading venture. The complaint included causes of action on the contract and common counts. With regard to the transactions involved, plaintiff acted as a broker within the meaning of 15 U.S.C. § 78g and Regulation T (12 C.F.R. Part 220).

The California Supreme Court affirmed the judgment in favor of defendant on the ground that plaintiff violated federal securities law and regulations by extending credit to defendant for the full cost of the stock involved as opposed to the 20-percent legal maximum. Plaintiff contended that the illegality of the loans should not bar recovery on the common counts because the violations were only technical. The Court disagreed and said this came within the general rule that a culpable party to an unlawful agreement may not recover in quasi-contract the value of its performance or the consideration paid (20 Cal. 3d 238, 250) . Plaintiff also claimed that its recovery should not be barred under the doctrine of pari delicto because it acted in good faith, while defendant's actions were allegedly reprehensible. The Court noted that at all relevant times, the federally imposed margin requirements forbade brokers from extending credit, but did not forbid customers from accepting it. The Court cited federal cases which held that Congress placed the responsibility for observing margin requirements on brokers because the original need for margin requirements derived from the common desire of investors to speculate unwisely on credit. Because defendant's conduct violated no law or regulation, while plaintiff's did, the Court said there was no basis for an exception to the pari delicto doctrine (20 Cal. 3d 238, 250) .

Lewis & Queen v. N.M. Ball Sons (1957) 48 Cal. 2d 141, 308 P.2d 713 , was an action by an unlicensed partnership to recover damages for breach of contracts and for the reasonable value of equipment rentals in excess of the term of the written rental agreement. In denying recovery on either cause of action because of the fact that plaintiff was not licensed as required by law, the California Supreme Court discussed the theory and distinctions between denying any recovery and awarding equitable relief. Courts will not enforce an illegal contract nor lend their assistance to a party who seeks compensation for an illegal act. The reason for this refusal is not that the courts are unaware of possible injustice between the parties, or that the defendant may be left in possession of some benefits it should in good conscience turn over to the plaintiff, but that these considerations are outweighed by the importance of deterring illegal conduct (48 Cal. 2d 141, 150) . In some cases, on the other hand, the statute making the conduct illegal, in providing for a fine or administrative discipline, excludes by implication the additional penalty involved in holding the illegal contract unenforceable. In some situations, effective deterrence is best realized by enforcing the plaintiff's claim rather than leaving the defendant in possession of the benefit. In other words, the forfeiture resulting from unenforceability is disproportionately harsh considering the nature of the illegality. In each case, how the aims of the policy can best be achieved depends on the kind of illegality and the particular facts involved (48 Cal. 2d 141, 151) . The Court concluded that the licensing statutes in question represented a Legislative determination that the importance of deterring unlicensed persons from engaging in the contracting business outweighs any harshness between the parties and that deterrence can best be realized by denying the violators the right to maintain any action for compensation (48 Cal. 2d 141, 146, 151) .

[b] Failure to Give Automotive Repair Estimate

Bus. & Prof. Code § 9884.9 provides in part that an automotive repair dealer must give to the customer a written estimated price for labor and parts necessary for a specific job. No work may be done and no charges can accrue before authorization to proceed is obtained from the customer. No charge can be made for work done or parts supplied in excess of the estimated price without the oral or written consent of the customer, which must be obtained at some time after it is determined that the estimated price is insufficient and before the work not estimated is done or the parts not estimated are supplied [Bus. & Prof. Code § 9884.9(a); see Bus. & Prof. Code § 9884.9(d) (customer may designate person, other than repair dealer or insurer, to give authorization for work or parts beyond what was estimated)].

Plaintiffs in Donaldson v. Doe (1987) 194 Cal. App. 3d 817, 239 Cal. Rptr. 801 , had their Maserati towed to defendant's shop for repairs. Although plaintiffs gave oral authorization for some of the repairs, and although defendant was familiar with the law requiring written estimates, no written estimates were given. Plaintiffs made a substantial downpayment on the work, and defendant billed plaintiffs at the completion of the work. Plaintiffs were on the verge of filing bankruptcy and could not pay the final bill. Defendant commenced lien sale proceedings, and plaintiffs sued. Defendant released the car to plaintiffs after they posted a bond. The trial court awarded defendant $5,180. Plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court set forth Bus. & Prof. Code §9884.9 and quoted dicta from Bennett v. Hayes (1975) 53 Cal. App. 3d 700, 704, 125 Cal. Rptr. 825 (discussed below), to the effect that under the general rule, the guilty party to an illegal contract cannot bring an action to enforce the contract and cannot recover through principles of quasi contract or common counts the benefits he or she has conferred under the illegal contract (194 Cal. App. 3d 817, 820) . The court also noted that the issue was not that the plaintiffs never authorized the work in writing but that defendant never gave them an initial written estimate. Finding no reason why defendant should be excused from compliance with the statute, the court reversed the judgment for defendant (194 Cal. App. 3d 817, 818, 821) .

Bennett v. Hayes (1975) 53 Cal. App. 3d 700, 125 Cal. Rptr. 825 , involved an automobile repairer's complaint for breach of written contract and for recovery of agreed price. Defendant orally agreed to specific prices for some of the work involved, but plaintiff never provided defendant with a written estimate for any of the work done. Judgment was for defendant. Plaintiff appealed to the appellate department of the superior court. The case was transferred to the court of appeal pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 911.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment of the municipal court. The court of appeal cited an Attorney General's opinion to the effect that the purpose of the Automotive Repair Act is to foster fair dealing and to eliminate misunderstandings (53 Cal. App. 3d 700, 703) . While recognizing the factor of unjust enrichment, the court said that the primary purpose of the rule of unenforceability is to discourage practices forbidden by law. Because defendant could easily have complied with Bus. & Prof. Code § 9884.9, the court found no reason to decline to follow the general rule of unenforceability in this case, and held that the violation of Bus. & Prof. Code § 9884.9 rendered the contract unenforceable at law (53 Cal. App. 3d 700, 704) .

Plaintiff sought quantum meruit equitable relief for the first time on appeal. The court of appeal said that relief based on quantum meruit was precluded by plaintiff's failure to advance the theory or offer evidence on it earlier. Nevertheless, the court offered as dictum the statement of the general rule that the guilty party to an illegal contract cannot bring an action to enforce the contract and cannot recover through principles of quasi contract or common counts the benefits he or she has conferred under it, and concluded that plaintiff would not have qualified for any exceptions to that general rule (53 Cal. App. 3d 700, 704) .

[c] No Recovery of Amount Paid Under Illegal Contract

Haruko Takeuchi v. Schmuck (1929) 206 Cal. 782, 276 P.345 , involved a contract for the purchase of land, ostensibly by plaintiff, but with the beneficial interest to be held by plaintiff's father, an alien ineligible for citizenship, in violation of the Alien Land Law. All parties to the contract knew of its illegal purpose (206 Cal. 782, 785) . The transaction was never consummated, in part due to the unwillingness of the title insurer and the escrow to participate in a transaction that so strongly appeared to be tainted with illegality. Plaintiff sued to recover the amount of the deposit and taxes paid under the agreement. Judgment for defendants was affirmed by the Supreme Court.

The Court said that it has long been the rule that courts will not compel parties to perform contracts which have for their object the performance of acts against sound public policy by either decreeing specific performance or awarding damages (206 Cal. 782, 786) . This rule is not applied to secure justice between parties who have made an illegal contract, but from regard for a higher interest, that of the public, whose welfare demands that certain transactions be discouraged (206 Cal. 782, 786-787). Although this action was not based on an affirmance of the illegal contract, but on an avoidance or rescission of the illegal contract, the cause of action still arose from an illegal transaction, and the law will not afford relief to either party (206 Cal. 782, 788).

[d] Test for Severability of Illegal Consideration

Lawn v. Camino Heights, Inc. (1971) 15 Cal. App. 3d 973, 93 Cal. Rptr. 621 , is discussed in § 43.52[3][a].

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] General Rule Prohibits Recovery Under Common Count

Tiedje v. Aluminum Taper Milling Co. (1956) 46 Cal. 2d 450, 296 P.2d 554 , is discussed in § 43.52[3][b]. Although holding that plaintiff might recover the consideration already given under the illegal contract, the court also stated the general rule precluding any relief (46 Cal. 2d 450, 453-454) .

Katsura v. City of San Buenaventura (2007) 155 Cal. App. 4th 104, 65 Cal. Rptr. 3d 762 , was an action for recovery, on the quantum meruit theory, of the value of additional services that a contractor rendered to a city in connection with performing an express contract. The trial court gave judgment for the amount remaining unpaid on the express contract but disallowed recovery on the quantum meruit count. The court of appeal affirmed on the ground that the additional work had been requested by city employees who, under the city's charter, were not authorized to bind the city to the implied contract, and that to allow a quantum meruit recovery therefore would be to enforce an unlawful contract. The court cited a general rule that a public entity cannot be liable on the quantum meruit theory (155 Cal. App. 4th 104, 109-110) .

Mansfield v. Hyde (1952) 112 Cal. App. 2d 133, 245 P.2d 577 , was an action for money had and received. The parties had an agreement under which plaintiff's minor grandchild lived with defendant, who was charged with the sole and exclusive care, training, and education of the child. Every month, plaintiff deposited money in a bank account for the child's expenses and defendant's compensation. Defendant was never licensed as a foster home or child care facility. About 10 months into the term of the agreement, plaintiff filed this action seeking return of all sums paid under the contract. Defendant cross complained for arrearages under the contract. Judgment for defendant and cross complainant was reversed with instructions that neither party recover anything, and that plaintiff was entitled to the balance on deposit in the bank account.

The court of appeal stated the general rule that a party to an illegal contract may not obtain the aid of the court either to enforce the illegal agreement directly or to recover any consideration parted with pursuant to the illegal agreement. The law leaves the parties as it finds them. Nor was there any basis for application of the recognized qualification that a party not equally at fault may secure relief from the consequences of an illegal agreement (112 Cal. App. 2d 133, 139) .

Fong v. Miller (1952) 105 Cal. App. 2d 411 , was an action by lessees and restaurant managers for the amount expended for equipment and reconstruction of the restaurant. The lease and management agreement provided that plaintiffs would be paid a percentage of the net profits from the restaurant and related "amusement machines," specifically a blackjack table, a roulette table, punchboards, and slot machines. Judgment for defendant was affirmed. The court stated the general rule that a party to an illegal contract can neither recover damages for its breach, nor by rescinding it recover any performance that he or she has rendered, or its value (105 Cal. App. 2d 411, 413) . There are exceptions when one party is not in paridelicto, but those did not apply in this case (105 Cal. App. 2d 411, 413-414) . Nor was plaintiffs' case advanced by waiver of any claim under the contract for lost profits and limitation of their demand to the cost of the equipment and improvements they added (105 Cal. App. 2d 411, 414-415) .

SUMMARY JUDGMENT FOR DEFENDANT IS PROPER IN AN ACTION FOR QUANTUM MERUIT WHEN PLAINTIFF CANNOT ESTABLISH BOTH THAT HE OR SHE WAS ACTING PURSUANT TO AN EXPRESS OR IMPLIED REQUEST FOR SERVICES FROM DEFENDANT, AND THAT THE SERVICES RENDERED WERE INTENDED TO AND DID BENEFIT THE DEFENDANT.

A. Summary Judgment. [See § 43.30[1], Paragraph A.]

B. Failure to Establish Both Request for Services and Benefit of Services. To recover under a quantum meruit theory, a plaintiff must establish both that he or she was acting pursuant to either an express or implied request for services from the defendant, and that the services rendered were intended to and did benefit the defendant (Day v. Alta Bates (2002) 98 Cal. App. 4th 243, 248-249, 119 Cal. Rptr. 2d 606).

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for summary judgment in an action for quantum meruit that seeks recovery of the value of services performed by plaintiff. Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations that support the motion [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Failure to Establish Both Request for Services and Benefit of Services

In Day v. Alta Bates (2002) 98 Cal. App. 4th 243, 119 Cal. Rptr. 2d 606 , the trial court granted summary judgment for defendant hospital in a quantum meruit action against it by an attorney who, in a previous unsuccessful medical malpractice action, had represented a woman who had been treated at that hospital. The hospital had filed a lien pursuant to Civ. Code § 3045.1. The attorney asserted that the filing of the lien required him to perform, and that he did perform, legal services on the hospital's behalf for which he was entitled to compensation, i.e., the lien filing required him to make an attempt to make a recovery for his client which also would benefit the hospital (98 Cal. App. 4th 243, 246-248). The court of appeal affirmed the summary judgment for defendant, holding that the attorney made no showing that his services either were performed "at the request" of the hospital, or were of "direct benefit" to it. In order to recover under a quantum meruit theory, a plaintiff must establish both that he or she was acting pursuant to either an express or implied request for services from the defendant, and that the services rendered were intended to and did benefit the defendant (98 Cal. App. 4th 243, 248). As the superior court found, the record was devoid of any evidence that fairly could be characterized as creating a disputed issue of material fact as to either the bestowal of any benefit on the hospital by the attorney, or any explicit or implicit request by it for his services in the malpractice action. Regarding the "benefit" requirement, the court of appeal noted that the attorney's lawsuit on behalf of the patient did not make it past the liability phase. Inasmuch as it never reached the damages phase, the hospital got nothing by virtue of either its lien or anything the attorney did in the malpractice action. With respect to the "request" requirement, the hospital's lack of response to the attorney's fax and e-mails regarding the malpractice case, which suggested that he was representing the lien claimant in some way, did not constitute any implied acceptance of his services (98 Cal. App. 4th 243, 249-251) . The court also held that under California Supreme Court precedent, the attorney was representing the injured party in her litigation and could not recover fees against a lien claimant who might arguably have received an incidental benefit from his actions (98 Cal. App. 4th 243, 251-253) .

A. Common Count Sufficient if Plaintiff Entitled to Different Theory of Recovery. Although it is proper to sustain a demurrer to a common count when the recovery under the count is obviously based on the same set of facts specially pleaded in a second defective count, this rule is applied only to prevent a plaintiff from relying on different facts in the common count. A plaintiff may rely on a different theory of recovery in the common count as long as that theory is fully supported in the specific facts pleaded in the other counts (*Crocker-Anglo Nat'l Bank v. [a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a demurrer to a common count submitted on the ground that the common count is based on the same facts as a defectively pleaded special count when the allegations of the complaint or the pleadings show that the common count is not clearly based on the sufficient special count but supports a different and valid theory of recovery.

For a specific application of the rule set out in this form when the specific count is for damages for breach of contract which is unenforceable because of the statute of frauds, see § 43.35.

Where appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used in opposition to a demurrer supported by the points and authorities set out in § 43.20.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Common Count Sufficient if Plaintiff Entitled to Different Theory of Recovery

In Crocker-Anglo Nat'l Bank v. Kuchman (1964) 224 Cal. App. 2d 490, 36 Cal. Rptr. 806 , plaintiffs brought an action against defendants to rescind a sale of capital stock in a certain corporation. Defendants had sold all of their capital stock in Comet Target Company to plaintiffs. (Now plaintiffs were deceased and were represented by the above-named bank as executor.) Plaintiffs pleaded their cause of action in three counts: actual fraud, constructive fraud (which incorporated all of the allegations of count one, except for paragraphs alleging knowledge, intent, and maliciousness), and a common count for money had and received. At trial, plaintiffs' counsel, subsequent to delivering his opening statement, moved the court that he be given an opportunity to reopen his introductory statement to be able to explain to the jury that innocent misrepresentation or mutual mistake were grounds for constructive fraud. The court denied the motion, and defendants moved for an order striking the second cause of action. The court granted the motion and further denied plaintiffs' motion for leave to amend the second cause of action to one for mutual mistake and innocent misrepresentation. When plaintiffs rested their case, defendants moved for a nonsuit, which was granted.

On plaintiffs' subsequent appeal of the judgment, the court of appeal affirmed the judgment in part, holding that innocent misrepresentation is not constructive fraud, but declined to decide whether it was error to refuse to allow plaintiffs to amend the second count, holding that plaintiffs were entitled to prove their theory of innocent misrepresentation under count three, the common count. Defendants argued that even if innocent misrepresentation were a ground for rescission of the contract, plaintiffs were barred from proving it on their count pleaded as a common count since such count was based on the same facts as the defective special count. The court rejected this argument stating that the rule asserted by defendants applies only to prevent a plaintiff from relying on different facts in the common count. It held that plaintiffs were entitled to rely on a different theory of recovery in the common count as long as that theory is fully supported by the specific facts pleaded in other counts.

[b] Common Count Defective Only if Clearly Based on Defective Count

In Weitzenkorn v. Lesser (1953) 40 Cal. 2d 778, 256 P.2d 947 , plaintiff sought damages for unlawful use of literary property. She allegedly submitted a composition to defendants on which they patterned a motion picture without paying plaintiff any compensation. The complaint was stated in three counts: one in contract for breach of a promise to pay plaintiff the reasonable value of the composition if defendants were to use all or any part of it; one in tort for plagiarism; and one on a common count of quantum valebant for the reasonable value of goods sold and delivered. Defendants demurred to all three counts, and the trial court sustained the demurrers. On appeal, however, the Supreme Court reversed, both as to the count for breach of contract and as to the quantum valebant count. The Court held that the breach of contract count stated a good cause of action since, although there was no similarity between the protectable portions of the composition and defendants' production, similarity may nevertheless have existed because of the combination of characters, locale, and myth, which were all questions of fact for the jury. The quantum valebant count therefore was also sufficient. The facts relied on in this count were identical to those set out in the breach of contract count, with the exception that no express promise to pay was alleged. The Court commented that the fact that the facts relied on in the second count were also substantially similar to those in the defective third count would not defeat the common count unless it clearly appeared to be based on the insufficient, rather than the sufficient, specific allegations. The Court added, however, that although plaintiff was not required to distinguish between an implied-in-fact contract and an implied-in-law contract (quasi contract) in the pleading, she would not be entitled to recover under a quasi-contract theory. For the same reasons that the tort count fell (that is, that there was no protectable property interest in the composition), plaintiff would not be able to present evidence tending to support a quasi-contract theory since the same proof was necessary to support recovery in quasi contract as in the tort for plagiarism.

[c] Common Count Sufficient if Pleadings Show Valid Theory of Recovery

In Overholser v. Glynn (1968) 267 Cal. App. 2d 800, 73 Cal. Rptr. 628 , plaintiff alleged that he and defendant Glynn, along with other defendants, had been shareholders in an automobile rental business in which automobiles were financed through Community Bank with promissory notes secured by chattel mortgages on the vehicles. (Plaintiff and the other shareholders also had signed personal guaranties, but this fact was only alleged in defendant's answer.) When the business defaulted on its obligations, Community demanded surrender of the automobiles. All parties to the transaction had agreed that if the automobiles were sold at retail, the deficiency could probably be reduced by half of what would be received if the cars were sold to dealers. Plaintiff, as the only shareholder who possessed collateral acceptable to the bank, deposited with the bank securities in the amount of $15,000 on behalf of himself and his co-guarantors so that the bank would release the automobiles for sale. After the cars had been sold, the bank liquidated these securities, and plaintiff brought an action against his co-guarantors on express contract as assignee of the bank.

But because, as defendant alleged in his answer, plaintiff had no cause of action as assignee of the bank, plaintiff later amended his pleadings to state a cause of action in the form of a common count for money had and received based on an implied contract for contribution. The trial court rendered judgment against defendant, who appealed, arguing in part that because the trial court had concluded that plaintiff was not entitled to recover as the bank's assignee, plaintiff was not entitled to recover on the common count based on the same facts. In affirming, the court of appeal pointed out that in those decisions which have held that the common count falls with the defective specific count, it is clearly demonstrated that the plaintiff was relying on the same defective fact situation to establish the common count. Here, the facts originally pleaded by plaintiff were supplemented by the allegations in the answers showing that plaintiff had a right to contribution based on the joint obligation created by the guaranties. The complaint was properly amended to state a common count in reliance on a different and impregnable theory based on an implied contract for contribution.

In reaching this conclusion, the court also answered defendant's argument that the statute of limitations barred plaintiff's amended claim. The court held that the amendment had related back to the time the complaint was filed because the recovery sought in the amended complaint was based on the same general set of facts alleged in the original complaint. Again the court examined defendant's affirmative defense, that plaintiff had signed guaranties and was liable in the same respects as was defendant, to find a sufficient reference to the general set of facts to permit plaintiff to amend his complaint to set forth a second cause of action on an implied contract. Thus, the court applied an analysis very similar to its holding with respect to plaintiff's common count in holding that the statute of limitations had not run.

§ 43.35 Opposing Demurrer to Complaint--Common Count Generally Sufficient Against Demurrer on Ground That Count Is Barred by Statute of Frauds

[1] FORM 43.35

[The following may be included in a memorandum in opposition to a demurrer, or in an appellate brief.]

THE STATUTE OF FRAUDS IS INAPPLICABLE TO A CAUSE OF ACTION BASED ON A COMMON COUNT, AND A DEMURRER BASED ON THE STATUTE OF FRAUDS WILL NOT LIE WITH RESPECT TO SUCH A CAUSE OF ACTION.

A. Party Who Conferred Benefit on Another Under Contract That Is Invalid Under Statute of Frauds Still May Recover Reasonable Value of Benefit Conferred. When a party has conferred on another with the latter's assent a benefit which was not intended as a gratuity, and the recipient cannot be held on his or her original promise to compensate by virtue of the statute of frauds, the law implies a promise to pay the reasonable value of whatever has been received under the contract (Zellner v. Wassman (1920) 184 Cal. 80, 88, 193 P. 84 , disapproved on other grounds, Sterling v. Taylor (2007) 40 Cal. 4th 757, 769, 770, 55 Cal. Rptr. 3d 116, 152 P.3d 420).

B. Common Count Is Permissible Basis for Unjust Enrichment. No particular form of pleading is necessary to invoke the doctrine of unjust enrichment, and a common count suffices as a basis for the finding of a quasi contract in the award of damages for unjust enrichment (Frank v. Tavares (1956) 142 Cal. App. 2d 683, 689, 298 P.2d 887).

C. Statute of Frauds Does Not Bar Recovery on Common Count. A general demurrer based on the statute of frauds will not lie to a common count in which plaintiff seeks recovery of the reasonable value of services rendered under an otherwise valid contract. The rule that it is proper to sustain a general demurrer to a common count separately pleaded in a complaint when the recovery sought on the common count obviously is based on the same set of facts specifically pleaded in another count of the complaint, and the other count fails to state a cause of action, is inapplicable if the deficiency of the other count is that it pleads a contract that is unenforceable because it is not in writing. White Lighting v. Wolfson (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 336, 346, 66 Cal. Rptr. 697, 438 P.2d 345 ; Parker v. Solomon (1959) 171 Cal.

App. 2d 125, 136, 340 P.2d 353 ; Leoni v. Delany (1948) 83 Cal.App.2d 303, 306-307, 188 P2d 765 .)

[Optional] D. Reasonable Value of Services May Be Recovered. When continuous personal services are performed under an express agreement which is unenforceable because it is not in writing, the reasonable value of the services may be recovered, and the statute of limitations does not commence to run until the termination of the services (Winder v. Winder (1941) 18 Cal. 2d 123, 127, 114 P.2d 347).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a demurrer to a common count when the demurrer is based on the grounds that the recovery sought under the common count arises out of a contract that was invalid under the statute of frauds. When a party who has rendered services or materials under a contract seeks recovery, a common pleading practice is to seek recovery both on the contract and, in the alternative, under a common count for goods or services rendered. The points and authorities in this form assert in substance that even if the purported contract was invalid because it failed to comply with the statute of frauds, the party who rendered the goods or services still may recover their reasonable value on a common count, because the statute of frauds has no application to a common count action. Although there is a general rule that a common count based on the same facts as a defective special count is also defective, that rule is inapplicable when the special count is defective only because it is barred by the statute of frauds. The distinction lies between a count which fails to allege facts sufficient to state a cause of action in contract and one which is barred by the statute of frauds because it is oral but which nevertheless gives the pleader the right to recover under the doctrine of unjust enrichment. For a discussion of opposing a demurrer to a common count based on the same facts as a special count, see § 43.34[2][a].

When appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used in opposition to a demurrer supported by the points and authorities set out in § 43.22.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Party Who Conferred Benefit on Contract That Is Invalid Under Statute of Frauds May Still Recover Reasonable Value of Benefit Conferred

Zellner v. Wassman (1920) 184 Cal. 80, 193 P. 84 , involved an action on an oral agreement to leave property by a will, brought against an administrator and the heirs at law of the decedent. The court of appeal held that the trial court had correctly nonsuited plaintiff on the ground that there was no legal or equitable basis for enforcing the contract that was barred by the statute of frauds. The California Supreme Court reversed, holding that plaintiff was entitled to some relief under the pleadings and that evidence showed that plaintiff had rendered services to decedent and that decedent promised to leave plaintiff a certain sum of money. The court stated the rule set forth in Paragraph A of this form and held that plaintiff had sufficiently pleaded facts showing he was entitled to the reasonable value of those services, having alleged facts showing: (1) the nature of the services performed; (2) a request for the services on the part of decedent; (3) that the services rendered were not gratuitous, but were, to some extent, at least, in expectation of and under a definite arrangement for compensation; and (4) that plaintiff had received no compensation therefor.

Note:

In Sterling v. Taylor (2007) 40 Cal. 4th 757, 769, 770, 55 Cal. Rptr. 3d 116, 152 P.3d 420 , the California Supreme Court disapproved all "statements in California cases barring consideration of extrinsic evidence to determine the sufficiency of a memorandum under the statute of frauds", including the following statement in Zellner v. Wassman: "The preeminent qualification of a memorandum under the statute of frauds is 'that it must contain the essential terms of the contract, expressed with such a degree of certainty that it may be understood without recourse to parol evidence to show the intention of the parties' " (184 Cal. 80, 85-86) . The ruling in Zellner v. Wassman regarding the recoverability of a benefit conferred under a purported contract that was defective for failure to comply with the statute of frauds is established law [see [c], below] and was not affected by the Supreme Court's disapproval.

[b] Common Count Is Permissible Basis for Unjust Enrichment

Frank v. Tavares (1956) 142 Cal. App. 2d 683, 298 P.2d 887 , involved an action on an oral contract for the conveyance of real property pleaded in two causes of action, one for breach of contract and the second in the form of a common count. The instructions to the jury permitted the jury to find for plaintiffs on two bases, one, whether or not the evidence showed that defendant was estopped to plead the statute of frauds, and two, whether or not defendant was unjustly enriched by retaining the property. The jury returned verdicts in favor of plaintiffs, and defendant appealed. The court of appeal affirmed, holding in part that the trial court had not erred in instructing the jury on the theory of unjust enrichment. The court noted that the jury's answers to special interrogatories showed that the basis of the verdict was that defendant was estopped from asserting the statute of frauds. It added that an instruction to the jury on the doctrine of unjust enrichment under the pleading was proper in any event, since there is no particular form of pleading necessary to invoke the doctrine, and a common count is sufficient basis for the finding of a quasi contract in the award of damages for unjust enrichment.

[c] Statute of Frauds Does Not Bar Recovery on Common Count

In White Lighting v. Wolfson (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 336, 66 Cal. Rptr. 697, 438 P.2d 345 , plaintiff corporation sued defendant for money allegedly due and owing. Defendant filed a cross complaint against plaintiff in which he alleged that an oral employment contract had existed between the parties and that plaintiff had breached the contact. Although defendant's cross complaint was amended several times, he essentially sought to recover the reasonable value of services he rendered for plaintiff corporation prior to the alleged breach. The lower court had sustained demurrers to defendant's counts based on the express oral contract as well as his count in quantum meruit. In reversing the demurrer as to the common count, the Supreme Court noted that the general rule that a common count which is based on the same facts as a defective special count is also defective does not apply when the special count is barred by the statute of frauds. The distinction, the court stated, citing Parker v. Solomon (1959) 171 Cal. App. 2d 125, 136, 340 P.2d 353 , discussed below, and Leoni v. Delany (1948) 83 Cal. App. 2d 303, 306-307 , discussed below, is between a count which fails to allege facts sufficient to establish the existence of a contract and one which is barred because it is oral rather than in writing.

In Parker v. Solomon (1959) 171 Cal. App. 2d 125, 136, 340 P.2d 353 , the plaintiff sought quasi-specific performance of an oral agreement by the terms of which her father allegedly promised to transfer one-half of his $1.5 million estate to plaintiff. Plaintiff alleged that the oral agreement was in consideration of her agreement not to move to California and not to assert claims against her father for neglect and failure to support her as a child. In addition, plaintiff sought recovery in quantum meruit for work labor, and services that plaintiff allegedly performed for the decedent during his lifetime. The alleged "services" plaintiff agreed to perform for her father consisted of "supporting, educating and maintaining herself and her mother without the aid of decedent, remaining away from decedent's home and social and business life and not disclosing to decedent's friends and business associates in the Los Angeles community that she was decedent's daughter; all at the special instance and request of ... decedent" (171 Cal. App. 2d 125, 135) . The reasonable value of those "services" was alleged to be $750,000, the same amount sought on the contract claim. A general demurrer was granted, and plaintiff appealed.

The appellate court affirmed that the oral agreement in question was invalid under the statute of frauds and that the demurrer to the contract claim was properly sustained. With respect to plaintiff's claim for services, the court held that her remedy, if any, would lie in quantum meruit and not in an action on the alleged oral contract. The court reviewed the case law and concluded that ordinarily it is proper to sustain a general demurrer to a common count separately pleaded in a complaint when the recovery sought on the common count obviously is based on the same set of facts specifically pleaded in the count which fails to state a cause of action. However, under the rule of Leoni v. Delany (1948) 83 Cal.App.2d 303, 306-307, 188 P.2d 765 , discussed below, if the deficiency of the first count is that it pleads a contract which is unenforceable because it is not in writing, a general demurrer will not lie to a common count in which plaintiff seeks recovery of the reasonable value of the services rendered under the otherwise valid contract (171 Cal. App. 2d 125, 136) .

Nevertheless, the court held that plaintiff failed properly to invoke the quantum meruit remedy because neither plaintiff's creditor's claim nor her action was premised on any right to recover the reasonable value of any actual services that would afford the basis for a recovery in quantum meruit. It appeared to the court that the only consideration for decedent's alleged promise consisted, not of services rendered, but rather of plaintiff's forbearance to assert a claim against decedent for support and for refraining from intruding herself into his life. Thus, plaintiff failed to bring herself within the rule of Leoni v. Delany, and the common count was subject to general demurrer (171 Cal. App. 2d 125, 135-137) .

In Leoni v. Delany (1948) 83 Cal. App. 2d 303, 188 P.2d 765 , plaintiff instituted an action to recover for services she allegedly rendered to the decedent pursuant to an oral agreement. The action was pleaded on the theory of express contract in the first count and on a common count in the second. Testimony corroborated plaintiff's contentions that she had indeed provided food, shelter, clothing, and had generally cared for the decedent while he was ill. In affirming the judgment in favor of the plaintiff, the court stated that the unenforceability of the express oral contract would not defeat the common count. It distinguished between a count which fails to establish the existence of a contract and one which sufficiently pleads a contract which is not enforceable because it is not in writing. The court explained that it is the unenforceability of an otherwise valid contract which gives rise to the right of relief through the medium of a common count, since the law contemplates that when one receives a benefit at the expense or detriment of another, he should compensate the latter to the extent of the reasonable value of the benefit received. The special count was not defective because it failed to state sufficient facts to show a contractual relation; rather, it was defective because it showed an oral contract within the purview of the statute of frauds. In such a case an action generally will lie on a common count. (83 Cal. App. 2d 303, 306, 307) .

[d] Reasonable Value of Services May Be Recovered

Winder v. Winder (1941) 18 Cal. 2d 123, 114 P.2d 347 , involved an action by the son of the decedent on a claim against the decedent's estate for the reasonable value of services rendered to decedent. The plaintiff had judgment, defendant appealed, and the Supreme Court affirmed. Defendant contended in part on appeal that because plaintiff was decedent's son, his services were presumed not to be performed for compensation or reward. However, the trial court had found that plaintiff and decedent had an understanding that in return for the services decedent would leave plaintiff decedent's home. The Court stated that it is settled law in California that when continuous personal services are performed under an express agreement for compensation on termination of those services, and the agreement is unenforceable because it is not in writing, the reasonable value of the services may be recovered, and the statute of limitations does not commence to run until the termination of the services, which, in this case was on the death of decedent. It agreed that the relationship between the parties may repel the idea of contract, and that in order to support a claim for services by a relative who remains with his parents after majority, the circumstances must show either an express contract or that compensation was contemplated by the parties. Nevertheless, the intention to pay and the expectation of compensation may be inferred from conduct where equity and justice require compensation, as well as from direct communications between the parties. The existence of higher motives prompted by affection or the sense of duty does not necessarily exclude the idea of pecuniary compensation.

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Statute of Frauds Does Not Bar Recovery on Common Count

In Shabrick v. Moore (1961) 195 Cal. App. 2d 56, 15 Cal. Rptr. 310 , plaintiff brought a cause of action against decedent's estate to recover for services she rendered decedent during his life. The action was pleaded in a count on an express contract alleged to have existed between plaintiff and decedent and also on a common count for the reasonable value of the services rendered. The trial court sustained defendant's demurrers, and plaintiff appealed from the judgment. The court of appeal reversed the judgment as to the count pleaded in quantum meruit. It found that the general rule, that a common count is defective when pleaded on the same facts as a defective special count, was not applicable, holding specifically that although the statute of frauds may bar a special count on an oral contract, a common count based on the same factual situation is not barred if plaintiff actually rendered the services.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Common Count Based on Express Contract Proper if Only Money Payment Remains

In Castagnino v. Balletta (1899) 82 Cal. 250, 23 P. 127 , plaintiff sought to recover for work done and materials provided according to a construction contract which he had entered into with defendant. The contract provided, among other things, that plaintiff would be entitled to payment on acceptance of the completed houses by the architect. The plaintiff claimed to have fully complied with his part of the bargain. His testimony further established that the architect had been disposed to approve the construction work done until plaintiff had refused to pay the architect a form of kickback to insure the latter's approval. Defendant asserted that plaintiff's cause of action which was pleaded on a common count was improper in that common counts may not be used in an action on an express contract. The court upheld the use of the common count in this case as an exception to the general rule urged by defendant since the contract was fully executed on plaintiff's part and all that remained was payment of money by defendant (82 Cal. 250, 258) .

[b] Measure of Damages for "Extras"

Benson Elec. Co. v. Hale Bros. Assoc., Inc. (1966) 246 Cal. App. 2d 686, 55 Cal. Rptr. 73 , was an appeal from a judgment of the trial court foreclosing a mechanic's lien in favor of plaintiff and intervener. Defendants' contentions on appeal concerned in part whether plaintiffs were entitled to recover any damages for "extras" 'which the trial court had found defendants had authorized plaintiffs to do in addition to the work to be performed under an express contract. Specifically, they contended that the trial court erred in permitting plaintiffs to amend their complaint to conform to proof. The amended complaint in substance was on a common count for the reasonable value of materials and labor furnished for a construction project and no mention was made of work done under an express contract. Defendants argued that a common count was not the proper way to plead a cause of action for "extras" when no recovery is sought on the original fixed-price contract. They pointed out that when a party pleads a common count and an express contract is shown, the measure of damages is the contract price, not reasonable value. However, in affirming the judgment, the court of appeal stated that when an express contract is fully executed and nothing remains but the payment of money, it is proper to plead a common count omitting any mention of the express contract, and there was no reason to apply a different rule when the contract is partly express and partly implied. The fact that plaintiffs did not seek the contract price was not in error since the authorized "extras" were in effect a separate implied contract under which defendants agreed to pay a reasonable price.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Common Count as Properly Pleaded on Express Contract

In Rains v. Arnett (1961) 189 Cal. App. 2d 337, 11 Cal. Rptr. 299 , plaintiff and defendant had entered into a written agreement by which plaintiff leased from defendant a trailer and tractor. The rental payment due defendant consisted of the gross revenue from hauling less particular items of expense, such as commissions and repairs to the vehicles. However, because plaintiff was forced to make extraordinary repairs on the leased equipment, defendant agreed to repay plaintiff for any repair money advanced by the latter. At the end of the lease period defendant surreptitiously took back the truck and trailer and refused to repay plaintiff either for the cost of repairs or other unusual expenditures made by plaintiff for defendant. Thus, in the subsequent action, the trial court rendered judgment for plaintiff for money owed him by defendant. The action was pleaded in the form of a common count for money had and received. On appeal, defendant argued that an action on a common count is improper where the underlying transaction is on an express contract. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment setting forth the exceptions to the general rule that a common count does not lie on an express contract. It stated that one of the exceptions to the general rule is where the express contract has been deviated from or modified by consent of the parties and the plaintiff has fully performed. In such case, a common count is appropriate even though the count is based on an express contract.

[a] Common Count as Properly Pleaded on Express Contract

For the factual setting of Rains v. Arnett (1961) 189 Cal. App. 2d 337, 11 Cal. Rptr. 299 , see § 43.37[3][a], the court of appeal set forth exceptions to the general rule that a common count will not lie on an express contract. Defendant in his appeal contended that an action on a common count is not appropriate where the action is based on an express contract. Holding that the action fell within one of the exceptions to the general rule, the court enumerated several of the exceptions. The court stated that a common count may be pleaded on an express contract if the plaintiff has been prevented from performing completely by the defendant's acts or by the defendant's repudiation of the contract.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Failure to Allege Promise to Pay

In Abadie v. Carrillo (1867) 32 Cal. 172 , plaintiffs brought an action against defendant for goods sold and delivered. The trial court entered a judgment in favor of plaintiffs by default. On appeal defendant argued that a demurrer had been interposed and that it was error to enter a judgment on default. Alternatively, defendant argued that even if no demurrer had been made, it was not proper to enter a default judgment where the complaint does not state a cause of action for failure to allege defendant's promise to pay or the value of the goods allegedly delivered. The Supreme Court affirmed the trial court judgment holding that the complaint for goods sold and delivered was sufficient without any allegations of the value of the goods delivered or defendant's promise to pay.

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Failure to Allege Promise to Pay

In McFarland v. Holcomb (1898) 123 Cal. 84, 55 P. 761 , plaintiff brought an action against the estate of the decedent for nursing and other services plaintiff had allegedly rendered. The action was pleaded on a common count and defendant demurred on grounds of uncertainty. The trial court sustained defendant's demurrer, and plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court in reversing the judgment stated that a claim on a common count is not uncertain or ambiguous where consideration and defendant's promise to pay may be implied from the nature of the transaction as set forth in the complaint. Moreover, the Court found that the promise to pay and the existence of consideration may also be implied in actions for goods sold and delivered or for money loaned.

See § 43.43[3][a] for the factual setting of Pike v. Zadig (1915) 171 Cal. 273, 152 P. 923 . In Pike, the Supreme Court reversed a judgment of the trial court in which the lower court had sustained a demurrer to a common count for money had and received on the ground that plaintiff failed to allege the times at which the indebtedness arose. The court held that the complaint was not subject to demurrer for failure to plead the times when the indebtedness, or elements thereof, accrued as an element of the common count. By way of dictum, the Court suggested that the defendant's remedy, if he or she desired more specificity, was to demand a bill of particulars.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Failure to Allege Request for Services or Promise to Pay

In McFarland v. Holcomb (1898) 123 Cal. 84, 55 P. 761 , plaintiff alleged in her complaint against decedent's estate that decedent had become indebted to plaintiff in a certain sum of money for taking care of decedent for 25 years. Defendants demurred on the ground that the complaint did not allege that plaintiff's services were rendered at decedent's request and therefore failed to state a cause of action against decedent's estate. The demurrer was sustained and judgment entered for defendants, but the Supreme Court reversed. It held that it is not necessary to allege either the consideration or the promise when they are implied as a legal conclusion from the facts alleged. It noted that while counsel and advice are frequently given without any request and may be of no benefit to the party to whom they are given, a complaint which shows that the plaintiff rendered services to the defendant which were received by the defendant in person, and were presumptively at the defendant's request, and of which he has enjoyed the benefit, states facts from which the liability of the defendant is presumed. The Court concluded that plaintiff's nursing of decedent and his acceptance from her of his board and lodging for 25 years was a consideration sufficient to support the promise for compensation which is implied in law and to render defendant liable (123 Cal. 84, 86) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Failure to Allege Request for Services or Promise to Pay

In Smith v. Bentson (1932) 127 Cal. App. Supp. 789, 15 P.2d 910 , plaintiff attempted to recover from Mrs. Bentson for dental services rendered to her husband. The trial court entered a judgment in favor of defendant, and plaintiff appealed. On appeal the Supreme Court affirmed. It found that in a count for work, labor, and services rendered by plaintiff, allegations that defendant requested the services and promised to pay are unnecessary when services are rendered to the defendant in person. Under such circumstances, the law may imply the consideration or promise as a legal conclusion from the facts alleged. When, however, services are not directly rendered to defendant, the Court held that a demurrer will lie to the common count for failure to allege a request and promise to pay for the services rendered.

A COMMON COUNT IS SUFFICIENTLY PLEADED AGAINST BOTH A SPECIAL AND A GENERAL DEMURRER ON GROUNDS OF UNCERTAINTY.

A. Common Count as Sufficient Against General or Special Demurrer. The established rule is that a common count is sufficiently pleaded against both a general and special demurrer on grounds of uncertainty (Pike v. Zadig (1915) 171 Cal. 273, 276-277, 152 P. 923).

B. Special Demurrer for Ambiguity as Lying Only When Dates Ambiguously Alleged. A common count is subject to a special demurrer for ambiguity only if the purpose is to determine the true dates of indebtedness when those dates are ambiguously set forth in the complaint and where the plaintiff has had an opportunity to correct the ambiguity by amendment and failed to do so (Moya v. Northrup (1970) 10 Cal. App. 3d 276, 279, 283-285, 88 Cal. Rptr. 783 , expressly limiting Miller v. Brown (1951) 107 Cal. App. 2d 304, 307, 237 P.2d 320 , to its facts).

[Optional] C. Bill of Particulars as Appropriate Remedy. If a defendant seeks more specificity in a complaint pleaded in the form of a common count, the appropriate remedy is to make a demand for a bill of particulars (Farwell v. Murray (1894) 104 Cal. 464, 466-467, 38 P. 199).

[a] Common Count as Sufficient Against General or Special Demurrer

In Pike v. Zadig (1915) 171 Cal. 273, 152 P. 923 , the Supreme Court set forth the general rule that common counts are sufficient against both general or special demurrers for uncertainty. In Pike, the trial court had sustained the defendants' demurrer to the plaintiff's complaint for money had and received. The demurrer was based on the grounds that the complaint failed to assert facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, that it failed to state when defendants became indebted to plaintiff, when defendants received money for the use of plaintiff, when plaintiff discovered defendants' debt to him or her, and when plaintiff demanded the sum due from the defendants. The Supreme Court held, however, that a common count is not subject to a general demurrer for uncertainty or unintelligibility. The Court based its decision on established case authority approving the use of common counts in California in opposition to the general rules of code pleading (171 Cal. 273, 276-277) .

[b] Special Demurrer for Ambiguity as Lying Only When Dates Ambiguously Alleged

Moya v. Northrup (1970) 10 Cal. App. 3d 276, 88 Cal. Rptr. 783 , limited Miller v. Brown (1951) 107 Cal. App. 2d 304, 237 P.2d 320 , to its facts insofar as it considered the appropriateness of a demurrer to a common count for uncertainty. In Miller, the plaintiff sought to recover damages in a count for work and labor. The second count of the complaint, however, contained contradictory language with respect to the date of indebtedness. Plaintiff generally alleged that defendant had become indebted to plaintiff within the last two years but specifically alleged that the indebtedness accrued from June 1946 to June 1948. The specific allegation raised a question as to the timeliness of the action. The court of appeal upheld the demurrer but based its holding on the ambiguity and uncertainty of the dates alleged and failure of plaintiff to amend the complaint after repeated opportunities to do so. In Moya, plaintiff's complaint was based on the common counts for money lent and for money paid, laid out, and expended. Defendants demurred to the complaint on the grounds that it failed to state a cause of action and that it could not be determined from the complaint whether the contract on which the action was based was oral or written. In holding that a common count is not normally subject to either a general or special demurrer due to uncertainty, the court limited the impact of Miller to those cases in which the ambiguity in question concerns the timeliness of the action pursuant to the applicable statute of limitations. Thus, a special demurrer to a common count on the ground of ambiguity or uncertainty is proper only if there exist on the face of a complaint pleaded as a common count inconsistent dates as to when the cause of action arose (10 Cal. App. 3d 276, 279, 283-285) .

[c] Bill of Particulars as Appropriate Remedy

In Farwell v. Murray (1894) 104 Cal. 464, 38 P. 199 , plaintiffs sought recovery of a certain sum of money allegedly due for work and labor performed for defendant and goods sold and delivered by plaintiffs to defendant. Defendant demurred to the complaint on the ground that it did not state a cause of action due to its uncertainty and unintelligibility as well as its failure to allege sufficient facts. The trial court overruled the demurrer. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed the lower court order overruling the demurrer. In so holding the Court suggested that the defendant's proper remedy was to demand a bill of particulars if he or she desired more particular information as to the items of the complaint (104 Cal. 464, 466-467).

[d] Common Count Not Required to Specify Whether Contract Oral or Written

The factual background of Moya v. Northrup (1970) 10 Cal. App. 3d 276, 88 Cal. Rptr. 783 , is discussed in § 43.43[3][b]. In holding that a special demurrer to a common count is proper only if on the face of the complaint there is an ambiguity as to when the cause of action arose, the court of appeal reasoned that it is no hardship on the defendant to require the defendant to take affirmative action by answer and motion for summary judgment if the defense of limitations of actions in fact exists to an adequately pleaded common count. Otherwise, the pleading of common counts would be rendered uncertain even though they have been used and approved over the years. The court concluded that the provisions of former Code Civ. Proc. § 430(8), now Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(g), governing demurrers on the ground that it cannot be determined whether the underlying contract is oral or written, should not apply to an action based on a recognized common count which is pleaded without an ambiguity on its face.

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Common Count as Sufficient Against General or Special Demurrer

In Jensen v. Dorr (1911) 159 Cal. 742, 116 P. 553 , plaintiff sought to recover from defendant for work and labor performed and materials furnished. The defendant demurred on grounds that the allegations were uncertain and ambiguous in that it could not be ascertained which part of the sum allegedly due was for materials and which part was for services. The Court ruled that the complaint was adequately pleaded on the common counts and that the defendant's remedy, if he or she so desired, was to demand a bill of particulars in order to obtain a precise breakdown of the amounts claimed for work and materials respectively.

[b] Bill of Particulars as Appropriate Remedy

In Dobbins v. Hardister (1966) 242 Cal. App. 2d 787, 51 Cal. Rptr. 866 , plaintiff attempted to recover a certain sum from defendant based on counts of goods sold and delivered and account stated. The defendant filed a general, verified answer denying all charges on the basis of lack of information and belief. Plaintiffs' motion for judgment on the pleadings was subsequently granted, and judgment in favor of plaintiffs was rendered. On appeal, the court determined that the defendant had misconstrued his remedy and that leave to amend the answer, as requested by defendant, should have been granted. In reversing the trial court, the court of appeal noted the similarity between a demurrer for uncertainty and a demand for a bill of particulars: both represent an attempt by a defendant to ascertain how to frame his answer. Since the purpose of a bill of particulars, as enunciated by the court, is to apprise a defendant of the details of the plaintiff's claim so that he is able to intelligently present defenses, a bill of particulars is the appropriate remedy to a complaint pleaded on the common counts. The court found a general denial to be an inappropriate and incorrect answer to a common count since denials on information and belief cannot be made as to matters presumptively within the defendant's knowledge. The court also noted that modern discovery devices could not be effectively substituted for a bill of particulars since the purpose of discovery was to produce evidence for use at trial while the purpose of a bill of particulars was to assist the defendant in framing the issues by pleading.

[a] Failure to Distinguish Work From Materials

See § 43.43[4][a], for the factual setting of Jensen v. Dorr (1911) 159 Cal. 742, 116 P. 553 . In Jensen, the Supreme Court, although reversing the trial court's judgment on the pleadings, held that the lower court had correctly overruled defendant's earlier special demurrer to plaintiff's complaint. It stated that a common count for work done and materials furnished is not subject to a special demurrer for uncertainty for failure to specify which part of the claim is for work and which part is for materials. The Court noted as dictum that defendant's proper remedy, if more specificity is desired, is to demand a bill of particulars.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Failure to Allege Delivery of Goods

In Johnson v. Dixon Farms Co. (1915) 29 Cal. App. 52, 155 P. 134 , plaintiff brought an action against defendant to recover for hay delivered to defendant for which no payment had been received. Plaintiff brought the action in the form of a common count for goods sold and delivered and judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff. On appeal, defendant contended that the trial court erred in overruling his demurrer to the complaint on the ground that the count was uncertain in that it failed to allege, among other things, whether the hay was delivered or whether defendant was required to pay for the hay before or after delivery. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court judgment, holding that a count for goods sold and delivered is sufficient against a demurrer for uncertainty, despite the failure to allege delivery, since delivery may be implied from the averment of sale.

[a] Failure to Specify Nature of Contract

In Preston v. Central Cal. Water & Irrigation Co. *(1909) 11 Cal. Judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff, and defendant appealed. On appeal defendant claimed, among other contentions, that the count was specially demurrable for uncertainty for failure to specify whether the action was on the express contract or for the reasonable value of the goods. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's judgment stating that while it would be better to state whether the indebtedness alleged resulted from an express or implied contract, no prejudice resulted to defendant as evidenced by his answer and the trial proceedings, and therefore, the count was sufficient against a special demurrer for uncertainty.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Nonprejudicial Delivery Beyond Statutory Deadline

In McCarthy v. Tecarte Land & Water Co. (1896) 110 Cal. 687, 43 P. 391 , plaintiff, as assignee of McCarthy & Co., sought to recover from defendant for goods sold and delivered to defendant at the latter's request. Plaintiff alleged having delivered goods valued at $2,500 for which defendant had paid only $250. Prior to trial defendant demanded and was served with a bill of particulars. Some 40 days afterward, trial began; at that time defendant objected to the reception of any evidence on the ground that the bill of particulars had not been delivered within the statutory time limit of Code Civ. Proc. § 454. The trial court rendered judgment for plaintiff and noted that no objection regarding late service of the bill of particulars had been made by defendant prior to trial. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. It found that the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 454 regarding timely delivery of a bill of particulars were discretionary and that the purpose of the statute was to protect the defendant from surprise at trial by enabling the adverse party to obtain in advance a detailed statement of the items of account. Since defendant had received the bill well in advance of trial and had ample time to prepare his defense, the court held that the purpose of the statute had been fulfilled. Defendant's remedy, the Court noted, if the bill had been objectionable or prejudicial in its delay, would have been to obtain an order to exclude evidence prior to trial.

In Burton, the court of appeal stated that the penalty of exclusion of evidence is not mandatory in cases in which a defective bill of particulars is delivered. On the contrary, the court determined that defendant's remedy was a noticed motion for a further bill of particulars. Moreover, a failure by defendant to demand a further account in such a case, the court held, would be construed as a waiver by defendant of any defects in the furnished bill, and the defendant would not be permitted to subsequently make a motion to exclude at trial.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Necessity That Demand Show Entitlement to Account

In Elmore v. Tingley (1926) 78 Cal. App. 460, 248 P. 706 , plaintiff sought to recover on a promissory note allegedly delivered to him by defendant and the partnership of Tingley and Elmore. On dissolution of the partnership, defendant purchased from plaintiff the mercantile business which the partnership had conducted. In exchange, plaintiff was to be freed of all obligations owing under the partnership, except for one certain account, and was to receive specified land and money. In his complaint, plaintiff alleged that certain sums had been paid under the promissory note but that there remained an outstanding balance of $600. Defendant in his answer generally denied plaintiff's allegations and asserted counterclaims for which he prayed for relief against plaintiff in the sum of $1,250.59. The trial court found for plaintiff, and defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, rejecting defendant's contention that the bill of particulars furnished by plaintiff was insufficient in that it was not subscribed in the demandant's handwriting. The court noted that Code Civ. Proc. § 454 does not specify a particular form of demand. Plaintiff's demand contained the name of plaintiff's attorney subscribed in a typewritten form and indicated that the attorney was acting for plaintiff. The court found that the requirements for demanding a bill of particulars had been met since the demand was submitted in writing, in accordance with Code Civ. Proc. § 454, and was signed by a party who gave clear indication of his right to make such demand, even though the demandant was not the plaintiff. The court indicated, however, that a demand for a bill of particulars is insufficient where there is no indication that the party making the demand is entitled to be furnished with information about the account.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Motion to Exclude as Required Before Trial,

In Glogau v. Hagan (1951) 107 Cal. App. 2d 313, 237 P.2d 329 , plaintiff, as assignee, sued for legal services allegedly rendered to defendants. Judgment was rendered for plaintiff, and defendants appealed. Among the errors asserted on appeal, appellants contended that the court erred in denying their motion to preclude evidence for plaintiff's failure to provide a proper bill of particulars. The court of appeal, however, found that the determination of whether a furnished bill of particulars is adequate is within the sound discretion of the court. Moreover, the motion was properly denied because defendants were under an obligation to make a motion prior to trial to exclude introduction of evidence by plaintiff and had failed to do so.

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Motion to Exclude as Required Before Trial

In Conner v. Hutchinson (1861) 17 Cal. 279 , plaintiff sued defendant on a note. Defendant in his answer asserted counterclaims for work and labor and money paid for which plaintiff was allegedly indebted to him. Plaintiff requested a copy of the account of the alleged debts by means of a bill of particulars. Defendant provided plaintiff with a bill, and on request, also furnished a further bill of particulars. At trial defendant introduced evidence relating to the account to which plaintiff objected on the ground that the further bill furnished had not been adequate. The trial court excluded the evidence. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed the judgment. The Court stated that the lower court had erred in not specifying the items to be furnished in the further demand for a bill of particulars. Moreover, it held that even if the further bill furnished by defendant had been defective, plaintiff failed to obtain an order excluding such evidence prior to trial.

See § 43.29[3][a], for the factual setting of Burton v. Santa Barbara Nat'l Bank (1966) 247 Cal. App. 2d 427, 55 Cal. Rptr. 529 . In Burton, the court of appeal stated that a motion to exclude on failure to provide an adequate bill of particulars must be made by the defendant prior to trial in order to invoke the discretionary power of the court to exclude plaintiff's evidence.

PLAINTIFF'S EVIDENCE IMPLIES THE EXISTENCE OF AN ACCOUNT STATED AND THEREFORE PRESENTS ISSUES OF TRIABLE FACT PRECLUDING GRANTING OF DEFENDANT'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT.

A. Rules Governing Summary Judgment Procedure. It is proper for a court to grant a motion for summary judgment only if the supporting papers are sufficient to sustain a judgment as a matter of law in favor of the moving party and the opposing party has not presented any facts that give rise to a triable issue as to any material fact (see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(c)).

B. Implication of Account Stated Presents Issues of Triable Fact. [a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion to grant summary judgment by defendant in a cause of action for account stated if evidence implies the existence of an account stated. This form may be used even if the account stated is not integrated in one written document [see Truestone, Inc. v. Simi West Industrial Park II (1984) 163 Cal. App. 3d 715, 726, 209 Cal. Rptr. 757] .

Counsel should insert argument linking the points with the facts of his or her case. Counsel should therefore discuss the particular evidence or series of transactions that give rise to circumstances implying an account stated. Counsel should attach affidavits or declarations that oppose the motion, along with a separate statement in response to the moving party's statement of undisputed material facts [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)(2), (3)].

[a] Implication of Account Stated Presents Issues of Triable Fact

In Truestone, Inc. v. Simi West Industrial Park II (1984) 163 Cal. App. 3d 715, 209 Cal. Rptr. 757 , plaintiff brought an action for the common count of account stated, among other causes of action, to recover the cost of materials delivered and used in construction on defendant's real property. Plaintiff based its cause of action for account stated on, among other evidence, a letter from defendant to plaintiff in which defendant acknowledged an outstanding debt in a specific sum for materials supplied by plaintiff, but proposed to pay plaintiff a percentage of the sum, contingent on agreement by other creditors to accept reduced amounts in full satisfaction of debts owed. Without specifying its reasons, the trial court granted defendant's motion for summary judgment on all counts and dismissed the complaint. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed summary judgment on a cause of action for unjust enrichment, but reversed with respect to the other causes of action, including the action for the common count of account stated. The court first noted that the motion was granted without any reasons, and that in the absence of a showing of prejudice or a ruling granting a motion to strike, plaintiff's tardily filed counter declarations were a part of the record and raised a triable issue of fact concerning the existence of prior business transactions. Defendant argued that its letter was an offer to compromise, and thus was inadmissible as an admission of liability, even though it was an offer to settle a different lawsuit. The court held that the letter nonetheless may be admitted as an admission against interest, independent of the compromise offer. The letter declared no contingency as to the existence of the underlying debt or its amount. Assuming that defendant agreed to accept past and future materials deliveries on an open account, the entire series of transactions could be reflected in a single balance struck between the parties. Since an account stated may be implied from the circumstances, the letter presented a triable issue of fact based on the showing of an agreement (163 Cal. App. 3d 715, 725-726) .

4-43 California Points & Authorities § 43.52

§ 43.52 Opposing Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] by Defendant--Recovery on Common Count Permitted Even Though Based on Void or Illegal Contract

[Caption. See § 43.51.]

SUMMARY JUDGMENT FOR DEFENDANT ON THE COMMON COUNT IS NOT PROPER EVEN THOUGH THE EXPRESS CONTRACT OF THE PARTIES IS _____ [VOID and/or ILLEGAL], BECAUSE _____ [PLAINTIFF IS NOT IN PARI DELICTO and/or THE SERVICES PERFORMED BY PLAINTIFF AND FOR WHICH PLAINTIFF SEEKS COMPENSATION WERE NOT ILLEGAL].

A. Rules Governing Summary Judgment Procedure. [See § 43.51[1], Paragraph A.]

[EITHER]

B. One Party's Consideration Is Not Intrinsically Illegal. The distinction must be made between an illegal contract and a perfectly legal promise, the consideration for which turns out to be impossible of performance, or unenforceable, or void. Although the law does not imply a promise to pay for services illegally rendered under a contract expressly prohibited by statute, a party may recover on quantum meruit for services rendered under that void contract if the services themselves are not intrinsically illegal (Lawn v. Camino Heights, Inc. (1971)15 Cal. App. 3d 973, 981-983, 93 Cal. Rptr. 621 ; Trumbo v. Bank of Berkeley (1947) 77 Cal. App. 2d 704, 709-710, 176 P.2d 376).

[AND/OR]

C. Parties Not in Pari Delicto. If the particular illegal contract is not malum in se but only malum prohibitum, the general rule barring any recovery based on an illegal contract is subject to an exception recognized in favor of a party who is not in pari delicto with the other party to the contract and who is the more innocent of the two. This exception applies when the illegality of the bargain is due to facts of which the party seeking recovery is justifiably ignorant, and the other party is not, and allows the comparatively more innocent party or one not in pari delicto to repudiate the illegal contract before it is executed and to reclaim any consideration paid under it (Tiedje v. Aluminum Taper Milling Co. (1956) 46 Cal. 2d 450, 453-454, 296 P.2d 554 ; Smith v. Bach (1920) 183 Cal. 259, 263-264, 191 P. 14).

This form of points and authorities may be submitted by a plaintiff in opposition to a defendant's motion for summary judgment in an action in which a common count seeks recovery of the value of the benefits conferred by plaintiff under an illegal or unenforceable contract. The papers opposing the motion must also include a statement of material facts that responds to the moving party's statement, as well as opposing declarations or other evidence [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

This form may also be adapted for use in another procedural context, such as a trial or appellate brief.

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in this form may be used to oppose a motion supported by the points and authorities set out in § 43.32.

Counsel should also insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should set forth the facts establishing either that his or her client is comparatively innocent or that the compensation furnished by his or her client is not illegal.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] One Party's Consideration Is Not Intrinsically Illegal

The individual defendants in Lawn v. Camino Heights, Inc. (1971) 15 Cal. App. 3d 973, 93 Cal. Rptr. 621 , wanted to subdivide and sell their agricultural real estate. Plaintiff, who held real estate broker, general contractor, and underground construction subcontractor licenses, advised them on several aspects of the transaction and suggested that it be accomplished by transferring the property to a corporation. Plaintiff prepared the incorporation papers and informed the individual defendants that a permit would be required before the corporate defendant could issue shares. Plaintiff also drafted a contract by which the corporate defendant hired him as a consultant for the project. Plaintiff's compensation was to be $8,400 per year for two years, payable in the form of stock of the corporate defendant; and five residential lots were to be conveyed to plaintiff. Although the parties intended to obtain a permit for the issuance of shares, and although plaintiff advanced fees for appraisals and other costs associated with the permit application, at no time material to the case did the corporation have a permit. Plaintiff never received any of the compensation called for by the consultancy agreement, and sued for breach of contract and on a common count for services rendered. Judgment on both causes of action was for defendant on the ground that the contract was void, illegal, and unenforceable. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment on the common count. The court first set forth the rule relating to severability of partially illegal contracts that a contract is severable if the court, consistent with the intent of the parties, can reasonably relate the illegal consideration on one side to some specified or determinable portion of the consideration on the other side. If any part of several considerations for a single object is unlawful, the entire contract is void under Civ. Code § 1608. In this case, the promise to convey the lots was not severable from the promise to convey stock and thus recovery for damages under the written contract was barred (15 Cal. App. 3d 973, 980) . However, the court said, distinction must be made between an illegal contract and a perfectly legal promise, the consideration for which turns out to be impossible of performance, or unenforceable, or void. Then, an implied contract to pay the reasonable value of the services arises (15 Cal. App. 3d 973, 981) . The court noted that the fact that plaintiff drafted the contract at issue did not mean he was in pari delicto and cited Trumbo v. Bank of Berkeley (1947) 77 Cal. App. 2d 704, 709-710, 176 P.2d 376 (discussed below), for the proposition that although the law does not imply a promise to pay for services illegally rendered under a contract expressly prohibited by statute, a party may recover on quantum meruit for services rendered under a void contract if the services themselves are not intrinsically illegal. Here, there was nothing illegal or against public policy in the nature of the services plaintiff performed (15 Cal. App. 3d 973, 982) . Further, defendant corporation would be unjustly enriched at plaintiff's expense if plaintiff could not recover from it the reasonable value of his services (15 Cal. App. 3d 973, 983) .

Plaintiff in Trumbo v. Bank of Berkeley (1947) 77 Cal. App. 2d 704, 176 P.2d 376 , performed pre-incorporation services for the corporate defendant at the request of the individual defendants. As compensation, plaintiff was to be a vice-president of the corporate defendant for life at a specified salary. Plaintiff performed extensive pre-incorporation services, but was not made a vice president of the corporate defendant. Plaintiff sued for breach of contract and on a common count for reasonable value of work, labor, and services rendered at the specific request of defendants. Judgment of nonsuit was entered in the contract cause of action and in favor of the corporate defendant on the common count. Plaintiff was awarded $5,000 on the common count against the individual defendants. They appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court noted that a contract by a shareholder or director of an existing corporation to put or maintain another person in office, or any other contract by which the shareholder or director attempts to contract away his or her discretionary vote on the board is violative of public policy and void. Appellants contended that because an illegal contract was relied on, regardless of the form of the action in which it was presented, the court could not enforce it, but, under the doctrine of pari delicto, had to leave the parties a sit found them. The court said that contracts for preincorporation services are not necessarily void (77 Cal. App. 2d 704, 709) . Here, the judgment rested on perfectly legal preincorporation services. There was nothing illegal or against public policy in the nature of the services rendered by plaintiff, and it would be unjust and inequitable to allow the promoters to take the benefits of plaintiff's efforts, all of which were legal, and escape liability on the ground that the consideration they agreed to furnish was illegal. The law does not imply a promise to pay for services illegally rendered under a contract expressly prohibited by statute. But, if a party renders services that are not themselves intrinsically illegal, he or she may recover on quantum meruit for what the other party actually received even if an action on the contract could not be maintained (77 Cal. App. 2d 704, 710) .

[b] Parties Not in Pari Delicto

Tiedje v. Aluminum Taper Milling Co. (1956) 46 Cal. 2d 450, 296 P.2d 554 , was an action for declaratory relief to void an illegal sale of stock by restoring possession of stock, and to quiet title. Plaintiff owned stock in defendant and agreed to sell it back to defendant for money and a car. After plaintiff had delivered the stock to the defendant, plaintiff learned for the first time that the purchase was illegal in that payment of the purchase price would be from capital assets and stated capital, as opposed to earned capital. Judgment was entered for defendant after sustaining of demurrers; and plaintiff appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed. The Court first set forth the general rule that a party to an illegal contract can neither recover damages for its breach, nor by rescinding recover any performance that he or she has rendered, or its value (46 Cal. 2d 450, 453) . A contract made contrary to public policy or against the express mandate of a statute may not serve as the foundation of any action, either in law or in equity (46 Cal. 2d 450, 453-454) . The parties will be left as they are found. These principles are not applied to secure justice between the parties, but from regard for a higher interest--that of the public whose welfare demands that certain transactions be discouraged (46 Cal. 2d 450, 454) . However, the Court noted, there are recognized exceptions to these rules in favor of a party who is not in pari delicto with the other party to the contract and who is the more innocent of the two. One exception applies when the illegality of the bargain is due to facts of which the party who is seeking recovery is justifiably ignorant and the other party is not. Whether the parties are equally guilty is a question of fact (46 Cal. 2d 450, 454-455) . Although plaintiff was chargeable with knowledge of the law prohibiting the transaction, the fact that plaintiff pleaded lack of knowledge of any facts that would bring that law into operation presented an issue of fact. Thus, sustaining the demurrers was improper (46 Cal. 2d 450, 454-456) .

The Supreme Court in Smith v. Bach (1920) 183 Cal. 259, 191 P. 14 , reversed judgment for defendant in an action in assumpsit for money had and received. The money sought to be recovered had been paid under a void contract for the purchase and sale of land. The contract was void because it was for the sale of land by reference to an unrecorded map (183 Cal. 259, 262-263). The Court said that without denying the rule that an illegal contract cannot be enforced whether it is malum in se or malum prohibitum, authorities recognize that all the consequences that attend a contract contrary to public morals do not attend one that is merely malum prohibitum. If the particular contract is only malum prohibitum, the court will take notice of the circumstances of the contract and will give relief if justice and equity require restoration of money received by either party under the contract. Equitable relief may be given to the party who is not in pari delicto and for whose benefit the particular prohibition was designed (183 Cal. 259, 263) . The weight of authority allows the comparatively more innocent party or one not in pari delicto to repudiate an illegal contract before it is executed and to reclaim any consideration paid under the illegal contract. In this situation it is the duty of the court in furtherance of justice to permit recovery of money paid (183 Cal. 259, 263-264) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] One Party's Consideration Is Not Intrinsically Illegal

In Huskinson & Brown, LLP v. Wolf (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 453, 9 Cal. Rptr. 3d 693, 84 P.3d 379 , a potential client approached plaintiff law firm regarding a medical malpractice claim. Plaintiff referred the matter to defendant law firm, but also paid a medical expert $800 and performed 20 hours of legal services on the case. In exchange for the referral, defendant orally agreed to pay plaintiff 25 percent of any attorney fees recovered. Defendant won a judgment in the client's favor but failed to pay plaintiff the referral fee. Plaintiff sued for breach of contract, unjust enrichment, and recovery in quantum meruit. The trial court denied recovery on the breach of contract cause of action, finding the fee-sharing agreement unenforceable because it was not disclosed to the client and her written consent was not obtained. However, it rendered an award on the unjust enrichment cause of action, with an alternative award in quantum meruit. The court of appeal reversed. The California Supreme Court granted plaintiff's petition for review, and reversed the judgment of the court of appeal. It held that even though Cal. Rules Prof. Conduct, Rule 2-200 precluded plaintiff from recovering on its fee-sharing agreement with defendant, plaintiff nonetheless could recover from defendants the reasonable value of the legal services it rendered on the client's behalf (32 Cal. 4th 453, 464) .

In Selten v. Hyon (2007) 152 Cal. App. 4th 463, 60 Cal. Rptr. 3d 896 , the plaintiff's action for breach of contract was unavailing because it was based on a contract that was partly illegal and consequently wholly unenforceable (in violation of Bus. & Prof. Code § 6155, the plaintiff was operating as an unregistered attorney referral service).

However, the plaintiff could recover quantum meruit for lawful services (that is, services other than attorney referrals) performed pursuant to that contract. The court of appeal noted that the plaintiff's recovery could not exceed the amount that the plaintiff would have recovered under the contract if it had been enforceable, and since the contract entitled the plaintiff to a fee only if the referred lawyer won the other party's case, the plaintiff's quantum meruit recovery could be paid only from whatever judgment or settlement proceeds that lawyer obtained for the other party (152 Cal. App. 4th 463, 471-472) .

The court of appeal in Beley v. Municipal Court (1979) 100 Cal. App. 3d 5, 160 Cal. Rptr. 508 , affirmed the denial of a writ to compel summary judgment in defendants' favor. The illegality in the contract for remodeling and home improvements was its failure to include the notice of defendants' statutory right of cancellation within three days of the execution of the contract [Civ. Code § 1689.7]. Defendants canceled the contract after plaintiff had performed about $12,000 worth of work, towards which they had paid almost $9,000. Civ. Code § 1689.11(c) prohibits a contractor from recovering any compensation for work done prior to cancellation and requires the contractor to restore the property to substantially the same condition it was in at the time the services were rendered. Based on comments in the legislative history, the court interpreted Civ. Code § 1689.11(c) to apply to work done or materials furnished within the 3-day cancellation period, rather than to this situation (100 Cal. App. 3d 5, 9-10) . The court said this situation was akin to the one in Trumbo v. Bank of Berkeley (1947) 77 Cal. App. 2d 704, 176 P.2d 376 . Here also, there was nothing illegal or immoral about the contract itself or the nature of the services and material to be furnished under it. Thus, even though plaintiff could not recover on the express contract, recovery on quantum meruit for the reasonable value of the improvements the defendants received was proper (100 Cal. App. 3d 5, 8) .

[Caption. See § 43.30.]

SUMMARY JUDGMENT FOR PLAINTIFF MAY BE AWARDED USING THE AGREED PRICE IN THE UNENFORCEABLE CONTRACT OF THE PARTIES AS EVIDENCE OF THE REASONABLE VALUE OF THE SERVICES RENDERED BY PLAINTIFF.

A. Summary Judgment. [See § 43.30[1], Paragraph A.]

B. Agreed Price Is Evidence of Reasonable Value. An agreed price set forth in an unenforceable or invalid contract is evidence, or a criterion, of the reasonable value of services rendered (*George v. Double-D Foods, Inc. (1984) 155 Cal. [a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted by a plaintiff in support of his or her motion for summary judgment in an action on a common count that seeks recovery of the value of the services performed by plaintiff under an invalid or unenforceable contract. This form is for use when the only factual issue in dispute is the reasonable value of plaintiff's services, and there is evidence of an agreed price, or formula, in the unenforceable or invalid contract. A motion for summary judgment must also be supported by statement of material facts that defendant contends are undisputed as well as by supporting declarations or other evidence [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

This form may also be adapted for use in another procedural context, such as in support of a motion for a new trial, or in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should also insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should set forth the facts constituting the particular agreement regarding price.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Agreed Price Is Evidence of Reasonable Value

George v. Double-D Foods, Inc. (1984) 155 Cal. App. 3d 36, 201 Cal. Rptr. 870 , was an action by an administratrix and widow in quantum meruit to recover the unpaid balance of the reasonable value of decedent's services as an executive employee of defendant for a period of 28 months. According to plaintiff, an oral agreement between decedent and defendant called for decedent to be paid a salary, regular bonuses of 10 percent of defendant's yearly profits in excess of $200,000, and for decedent to have an option to purchase defendant's stock at its book value at the time of decedent's employment. Plaintiff was awarded $96,000; and defendant appealed.

The court of appealed reversed. Defendant contended that the trial court erred in admitting evidence regarding the bonus and the option. The court of appeal first cited Foreman & Clark Corp. v. Fallon (1971) 3 Cal. 3d 875, 886, 92 Cal. Rptr. 162, 479 P.2d 362 (discussed in § 43.53[4][a]) and other cases for the proposition that an agreed price set forth in an unenforceable or invalid contract is some evidence, or a criterion, of the reasonable value of services rendered. In other words, an oral stipulation of the parties regarding compensation to be paid for services rendered is in the nature of an admission by them of the reasonable value of those services. To qualify as an "agreed price," a promise that does not state a sum of money must assign a dollar value to property with which the performing party is to be compensated or provide a formula by which the ultimate agreed-on sum of money is readily ascertainable (155 Cal. App. 3d 36, 42) . The promise regarding the option failed to qualify as an agreed price in two regards. First, it was not a promise of payment, or compensation, but of an opportunity to let decedent purchase shares as an added inducement to accept employment with defendant. Second, and more important, it shed no light on the value of plaintiff's services. The promise provides indicia of the value of plaintiff's services only on the introduction of extrinsic evidence placing a monetary value on the shares in excess of their assigned book value (155 Cal. App. 3d 36, 42-43). Admission of the evidence regarding the option was prejudicial error (155 Cal. App. 3d 36, 43, 44).

Concerning the bonus, however, the court of appeal said that the promise for bonuses contained a precise formula by which the amount of compensation was readily ascertainable by simple mathematical calculation (155 Cal. App. 3d 36, 43) . Thus, the bonus evidence was proper (155 Cal. App. 3d 36, 43-44) .

Defendant also contended that there were errors in the instructions that the terms of an oral or written agreement constitute an admission or out-of-court declaration by a party to the action and that understandings and agreements between the party performing services and the party receiving services could be considered evidence of the reasonable value of the performing party's services. The court held that those instructions were both proper (155 Cal. App. 3d 36, 44) .

Ferrier v. Commercial Steel Corp. (1956) 142 Cal. App. 2d 424, 298 P.2d 555 , was an action for the balance owed under a written contract and for the reasonable value of the work performed beyond the scope of the original contract. The contract was for laundering, extracting, drying, and bundling cotton bags that had been damaged in a flood. The contract rate was .029 cents per pound. After plaintiffs started performing under the contract, defendants asked them also to remove ink from any of the sacks that had ink imprints and to iron the sacks. The judgment for plaintiff was based on a finding that the reasonable value of the imprint removal and ironing was ten percent of the original contract price. The finding was based largely on the testimony of a witness who had been in the industrial laundry business twelve years who said that the prevailing rate for washing, extracting, drying, and bundling was between three and four or four-and-one-half cents per pound; that an additional three percent should be added for removing the ink imprints; and that an additional seven percent should be added for ironing. Plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. Plaintiffs argued that the amount allowed for the extra work was not reasonable because their bid, and thus the contract rate, had been too low. The court disagreed, pointing out that the contract rate was only one mil per pound less than the witness' minimum figure and only amounted to a $48 difference in the amount payable under the entire basic contract (142 Cal. App. 2d 424, 426) . Because the contract price was not too low, that figure could properly be used as a base for calculating the reasonable value for the extra work (142 Cal. App. 2d 424, 426-427) . The court cited numerous authorities and said it was well settled that the price agreed on by the parties for work to be done may be used as a criterion in determining reasonable value of services performed. The contract price of work to be performed furnishes some evidence of its reasonable value. Thus, there was ample basis to support the trial court's finding of the reasonable value of the extra work (142 Cal. App. 2d 424, 427) .

[b] Oral Stipulation as Admission

George v. Double-D Foods, Inc. (1984) 155 Cal. App. 3d 36, 201 Cal. Rptr. 870 , is discussed in § 43.53[3][a].

Plaintiff in Offeman v. Robertson-Cole Studios (1926) 80 Cal. App. 1, 251 P. 830 , sold household and business interests in New York and moved to California in reliance, it is alleged, on an oral agreement which provided that plaintiff should be defendant's general manager for three years at a salary of $500 per week, with defendant providing housing and paying other of plaintiff's expenses. Plaintiff relocated and worked for defendant, which paid some expenses, but payments never amounted to $500 per week. Defendant discharged plaintiff after a year. Judgment was for plaintiff. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, unless plaintiff would accept remittitur to avoid double recovery. One of the contentions on appeal was that it was error to admit proof of the terms of the oral agreement as evidence of the reasonable value of plaintiff's services. The court said that even though an oral contract may be unenforceable, the oral stipulations of the parties as to the compensation to be paid for services rendered under it are in the nature of admissions by them as to the reasonable value of those services, and while not conclusive, are admissible in evidence. In this case, the terms of the oral agreement constitute the only evidence on the question of the value of plaintiff's services (80 Cal. App. 1, 13) .

[a] Agreed Price Is Evidence of Reasonable Value

In Watson v. Wood Dimension, Inc. (1989) 209 Cal. App. 3d 1359, 257 Cal. Rptr. 816 , the plaintiff had orally agreed with defendant to use plaintiff's friendship and influence with an officer of one of defendant's former customers to get the former customer again to place orders with defendant. That customer at one time had accounted for 30 to 50 percent of defendant's business. The parties agreed that plaintiff would be paid three percent of orders received from the customer. The agreement was oral and made no provision for termination. About a year after the customer returned to defendant, defendant unilaterally terminated the agreement. The customer continued to place orders with defendant, but the officer died about eight months after the unilateral termination. The court of appeal said that plaintiff was entitled to post-termination commissions for a reasonable period of time based on quantum meruit (209 Cal. App. 3d 1359, 1364) . The reasonable period of time extended until a few weeks before the officer's death, because after that time, plaintiff would no longer be able to influence his business decisions (209 Cal. App. 3d 1359, 1365) . The commissions awarded were calculated at three percent of orders. The court of appeal cited Ferrier v. Commercial Steel Corp. (1956) 142 Cal. App. 2d 424, 427 , as authority for the proposition that the court may consider the price agreed on by the parties as a criterion in ascertaining the reasonable value of services performed (209 Cal. App. 3d 1359, 1365) . The court of appeal went on to say that the reasonable value was not based on the value of plaintiff taking the officer golfing, but rather on the value of the benefit received by defendant (209 Cal. App. 3d 1359, 1365) .

The court of appeal in LuMetta v. U.S. Robotics (9th Cir. 1987) 824 F.2d 768 , a diversity case applying California law, affirmed a judgment for plaintiff on an implied contract. Plaintiff was a nonexclusive reseller of defendant's products and also had an oral contract with defendant to find computer manufacturers interested in purchasing modems manufactured by defendant. Plaintiff arranged for one computer manufacturer to purchase $14.5 million of defendant's modems. The only issue in dispute was the rate to be used to calculate plaintiff's commission. The jury apparently considered conflicting testimony regarding discussions of commission rates, the rates paid under the reseller's contract, and the value of the benefit conferred on defendant. The court of appeal cited George v. Double-D Foods, Inc. (1984) 155 Cal. App. 3d 36, 42, 201 Cal. Rptr. 870 , for the proposition that the agreed terms of an unenforceable contract are evidence of the reasonable value of the services rendered if the agreed price either assigns a dollar value to the promised performance or provides a formula by which an ultimate sum is readily ascertainable (824 F.2d 768, 770). While this evidence could not establish an exact monetary value to the agreement, it substantially supports the finding of a formula by which the value could be ascertained (824 F.2d 768, 770) .

The Supreme Court in Foreman & Clark Corp. v. Fallon (1971) 3 Cal. 3d 875, 92 Cal. Rptr. 162, 479 P.2d 362 , affirmed a judgment for plaintiff lessor for damages for breach of a commercial lease arising from defendant's failure to deliver possession. The measure of damages for breach of a lease is the difference between the agreed rent and the rental value of the premises during the term of the lease (3 Cal. 3d 875, 884). Plaintiff argued that evidence of the agreed rent should not have been admitted because if that were done in every case, there would never be any damages awarded for the lessor's breach. The Court disagreed, saying there was other evidence of value before the court but that the agreed rental is still evidence of the rental value of the premises (3 Cal. 3d 875, 886) .

The court of appeal in Burgermeister v. Wells Fargo Bank Etc. Co. (1961) 191 Cal. App. 2d 624, 13 Cal. Rptr. 123 , affirmed a $10,000 judgment for plaintiff in an action in quantum meruit for the value of nursing services rendered to decedent over many years. The action was based on a promise by decedent to bequeath plaintiff $10,000 in return for the nursing care. The court of appeal pointed out that plaintiff had a choice of two theories of action: specific performance or quantum meruit (191 Cal. App. 2d 624, 627). Having proceeded in quantum meruit, the vital elements required to be proved were the performance of the services, an oral promise to compensate by will, the failure of the decedent to perform, and the value of the services (191 Cal. App. 2d 624, 627-628) . Regarding the evidence establishing the value of the services, the court said the general rule is that when the services rendered are sufficiently shown, and the services are of a class the value of which is common knowledge, the trier of fact may fix the reasonable value of those services (191 Cal. App. 2d 624, 630) . Here, however, the evidence of the agreement between plaintiff and decedent established the amount agreed to be paid for plaintiff's services, and that alone was sufficient evidence on which the court can base its finding on the reasonable value (191 Cal. App. 2d 624, 631) .

The court of appeal in Parker v. Maier Brewing Co. (1960) 180 Cal. App. 2d 630, 4 Cal. Rptr. 825 , modified regarding interest but otherwise affirmed a judgment for plaintiffs for the value of architectural and engineering services rendered to, and expenses incurred on behalf of, defendant. The contract between the parties provided that plaintiffs would be paid six percent of the construction costs of all work called for by the plans and specifications prepared by plaintiffs. Defendant refused to follow plaintiffs' plans and specification, in accordance with which the low bid for construction was $65,980. The amount of the judgment was exactly equal to six percent of that bid plus the amount of plaintiffs' expenses. Plaintiffs testified that the reasonable value of their services would amounted to almost $1,000 more than the sum derived from the six-percent formula. Although the unaccepted bid patently is not the actual cost of construction, the award was not in error. A written contract providing for an agreed price is admissible in evidence and may be used as a criterion in establishing the reasonable value of the services rendered. When that evidence is admitted, it serves only as an aid to the court in fixing the amount recoverable as damages (180 Cal. App. 2d 630, 635).

This part contains memoranda for use in supporting [see §§ 45.20 -45.24] and opposing [see §§ 45.25 -45.27] motions to consolidate actions pending before the same court. It also contains memoranda for use in supporting [see §§ 45.28 -45.31] and opposing [see §§ 45.32, 45.33] motions to sever causes of action or issues for separate trial.

For discussion relating to the consolidation of actions pending in different courts in the same county, see Part II, Introduction.

This part contains memoranda for use in supporting [see § 45.50] and opposing [see § 45.52] a petition for coordination of actions. It also includes a memorandum for use in supporting a motion for an order staying the proceedings in an action included in a coordination proceeding [see § 45.51].

PART I. INTRODUCTION

4-45 California Points & Authorities § 45.02

§ 45.02 Governing Statutes

The consolidation of civil actions pending before the same court is governed generally by Code Civ. Proc. § 1048(a). Procedure on a motion for consolidation is governed by Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.350. The consolidation of particular actions is governed by Code Civ. Proc. § 377.62(b) (wrongful death and survival actions brought by a decedent's personal representative), Civ. Code §§ 3149, 3175, 3214 (mechanics' lien proceedings), and Lab. Code § 3853 (actions by an employer and employee against a third party).

The severance of causes of action or issues for separate trial is governed by Code Civ. Proc. § 1048 and Cal Rules of Ct, Rule 3.350.

The coordination of civil actions pending in different courts is governed by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 404-404.9 and Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.500 et seq.

CHAPTER 45 CONSOLIDATION, SEVERANCE, AND COORDINATION OF ACTIONS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

4-45 California Points & Authorities § 45.03

§ 45.03 Scope of Consolidation and Severance

[1] In General

Both consolidation and severance are discretionary, and a court's order to consolidate or sever will not be reviewed except on a clear showing of abuse of discretion [see Fisher v. Nash Bldg. Co. (1952) 113 Cal. App. 2d 397, 402, 248 P.2d 466 ; Mellone v. Lewis (1965) 233 Cal. App. 2d 4, 7, 43 Cal. Rptr. 412] . The underlying policies of judicial economy and expediency support the apparent tendency of the courts to grant consolidation whenever possible. However, expedition, economy, and avoidance of prejudice are specifically set forth in the statutory language governing severance and, thus, severance and consolidationshould be viewed as counterbalances to each other and to the increasing liberalization in joinder of parties and causes of action [see Landau v. Salam (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 901, 908, 95 Cal. Rptr. 46, 484 P.2d 1390] . A trial court is entitled to change its mind before judgment and may vacate a prior order for consolidation and order a severance [Omaha Indemnity Co. v. Superior Court (1989) 209 Cal. App. 3d 1266, 1274, 258 Cal. Rptr. 66] . Since the basic underlying policies of consolidation and severance are complementary, counsel may, where appropriate, utilize certain points in motions opposing consolidation to support severance and conversely use points which oppose severance to support motions to consolidate.

[2] Mandate to Compel Consolidation or Severance

A petition for writ of mandate is the appropriate remedy to review a trial court's refusal to consolidate separate actions or sever an action when the petitioner seeks to compel either [see Realty Mfg. Co. v. Superior Court (1913) 165 Cal. 543, 547, 132 P. 1048 ; see also State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1956) 47 Cal. 2d 428, 433, 304 P.2d 13] . However, writ relief would be improper if the trial court denies a motion for severance without prejudice to making the motion at a later time [Omaha Indemnity Co. v. Superior Court (1989) 209 Cal. App. 3d 1266, 1274, 258 Cal. Rptr. 66] . Where mandate is sought, the forms of memoranda in this chapter may be modified to support the writ.

CHAPTER 45 CONSOLIDATION, SEVERANCE, AND COORDINATION OF ACTIONS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

4-45 California Points & Authorities § 45.04

§ 45.04 Coordination Procedure

[1] In General

Civil actions pending in different courts may be coordinated when they share a common question of law or fact and when coordination is deemed to be appropriate after considering specified standards [see Code Civ. Proc. § 404]. These standards are set out in Code Civ. Proc. § 404.1.

Coordination may be initiated by submitting a petition to the Chair of the Judicial Council. The petition may be submitted by the presiding judge of one the of courts, by all the parties plaintiff and defendant in any such action, or after obtaining permission from the presiding judge, by any party to one of the actions [Code Civ. Proc. § 404; see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.521(a)]. A petition for coordination must be supported by a declaration stating facts showing that the actions are complex, as defined by the Judicial Council, and meet the standards stated in Code Civ. Proc. § 404.1 [Code Civ. Proc. § 404] and by points and authorities [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.521(a); see § 45.50] Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.502 directs the court to consider Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.400 et seq. in determining whether a case is complex under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 403 and 404.

On receipt of a petition for coordination, the Chair may assign a judge to determine whether the actions are complex, and if so, whether coordination is appropriate [see Code Civ. Proc. § 404; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 3.521(a), 3.524]. The assigned judge may stay the proceedings of any action being considered for, or affecting an action being considered for, coordination pending his or her determination, on the motion of a party submitted either with the petition for coordination or at any subsequent time prior to the determination [Code Civ. Proc. § 404.5; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.515]. A motion for stay must also be supported by points and authorities [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.515(a); see § 45.51].

Other parties may submit a response in support of the petition for coordination [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.526]. Alternatively, they may submit opposition to the petition, consisting of a memorandum and declarations [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.525; see § 45.52].

The matter is then determined after a hearing on the petition by the assigned judge [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules

3.527-3.529]. If the assigned judge grants coordination, similar proceedings may be initiated subsequently before the coordination trial judge to determine whether another action should be added to the coordinated actions [see Code Civ. Proc. § 404.4; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.544; see also Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 3.542 (subsequent remand of action or claim by coordination trial judge), 3.543 (transfer of action or claim by coordination trial judge)].

[2] Review by Writ of Mandate

Any party, within 20 days after service of notice of entry of an order made in a coordination proceeding under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 404-404.9, may petition the appropriate reviewing court for a writ of mandate for review of the order [Code Civ. Proc. § 404.6]. The superior court may, for good cause, and prior to the expiration of the initial 20-day period, extend the time for one additional period not to exceed 10 days [Code Civ. Proc. § 404.6]. If the actions sought to be coordinated are within the jurisdiction of more than one reviewing court, the judge assigned to determine a petition for coordination selects the reviewing court having appellate jurisdiction [Code Civ. Proc. § 404.2].

§ 45.05 Peremptory Challenge of Assigned Judge

Any motion or affidavit of prejudice, pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 170.6 (providing for the peremptory disqualification of judges on the ground of prejudice), regarding an assigned judge must be submitted in writing to the assigned judge within 20 days after service of the order assigning that judge to the coordination proceeding. All plaintiffs or similar parties in the included or coordinated actions constitute a side, and all defendants or similar parties in the actions constitute a side for the purposes of applying Code Civ. Proc. § 170.6 [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.516]. The 20-day period is extended as provided in Code Civ. Proc. § 1013 when the Judicial Council's order of assignment is served by mail [Citicorp North America, Inc. v. Superior Court (1989) 213 Cal. App. 3d563, 566-571, 261 Cal. Rptr. 668] . GRANTING A MOTION TO CONSOLIDATE IS PROPER FOR THE TRIAL OF RELATED ISSUES IN CONSOLIDATED ACTIONS.

A. Motion to Consolidate. Any party to a civil action containing common questions of law or fact may move the court for an order of consolidation. The motion may seek consolidation for the trial of related issues only with separate findings and judgments as necessary or may seek consolidation for all purposes. The court in its discretion may make any orders concerning the consolidated actions as may tend to avoid unnecessary costs or delays (Code Civ. Proc. § 1048(a)).

B. Consolidation for Trial of Related Issues Only. Consolidation for the purpose of trial of related issues only with separate judgments and findings as necessary is appropriate (McClure v. Donovan (1949) 33 Cal. 2d 717, 722, 205 P.2d 17).

C. Separate Identities of Actions. Where actions are consolidated for trial of related issues, each action maintains its own identity and independent dispositionsof the actions are necessary (McFarland v. Booker (1967) 250 Cal. App. 2d 402, 416, 58 Cal. Rptr. 417).

[Optional] D. Evidence Applicable so far as Relevant. Where pending actions are consolidated for the purpose of trial of related issues, evidence presented in one case is deemed applicable to the other so far as it is relevant (McClure v. Donovan (1949) 33 Cal. 2d 717, 722, 205 P.2d 17).

[Optional] E. Consolidation of Loss of Consortium and Negligence Actions. Separate actions for loss of consortium brought by one spouse and negligence or intentional injury by the other spouse are entitled to be consolidated for trial (Rodriguez v. Bethlehem Steel Corp. (1974) 12 Cal. 3d 382, 407, 115 Cal. Rptr. 765, 525 P.2d 669) (dictum).

[Optional] F. Consolidation of Franchise Fraud Actions. Consolidation of separate fraud actions involving similar misrepresentations made to plaintiff franchises is proper even though all of the testimony is not applicable in each action (Morrell v. Clark (1951) 106 Cal. App. 2d 198, 203, 234 P.2d 774).

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities is a general form which may be submitted in support of a motion to consolidate actions containing common questions of fact or law where consolidation is for trial of related issues only. Some of the decisions cited in the form predate the 1972 amendment to Code Civ. Proc. § 1048(a) which now makes clear that actions may be consolidated either for the trial of related issues only or for all purposes. Where counsel seeks consolidation for trial of related issues only, the points and authorities set forth in §§ 45.22 -45.24 may be used in conjunction with the foregoing memorandum of points and authorities.

Counsel should add argument linking the points and authorities in this form with the facts of his or her case.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Consolidation for Trial of Related Issues Only

In McClure v. Donovan (1949) 33 Cal. 2d 717, 205 P.2d 17 , plaintiff, as sister of Jefferson Caruthers, brought an action to annul his marriage to defendant on the grounds that Caruthers was incompetent and incapable of contracting marriage due to his incompetency. Another proceeding was commenced at the same time for the appointment of a guardian of the estate and person of Mr. Caruthers. The two matters were consolidated for trial, and a judgment of annulment was subsequently entered and a guardian appointed. Defendant appealed from the judgment in the annulment proceeding. She contended, among other points, that the court had erred in ordering consolidation of the actions. The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment of the trial court. It stated that consolidation of actions for the purpose of trial of related issues is proper and that the court had correctly deemed evidence presented in one case applicable to the other insofar as relevant. Where cases are consolidated for trial of related issues, the Court held that separate judgments and findings must be made in each case. Noting that the mental condition of Mr. Caruthers was at issue in both proceedings, the Court determined that consolidation of actions for the limited purpose of receiving mutually relevant evidence and avoiding repetition was proper and nonprejudicial to defendant.

[b] Separate Identities of Actions

In McFarland v. Booker (1967) 250 Cal. App. 2d 402, 58 Cal. Rptr. 417 , plaintiff instituted two actions for personal injuries arising at different times. The first was against the City and County of San Francisco for injuries allegedly sustained in a street car accident; the second against defendant Booker for injuries out of an automobile accident some nine months after the street car incident. The two actions were consolidated on plaintiff's motions, and the jury returned two verdicts, one for plaintiff in her action against the city and county, and the second for defendant Booker in the automobile accident. Defendant city and county moved for a new trial on grounds of insufficiency of evidence to support the verdict and excessive damages. The motion for a new trial was granted, and plaintiff appealed the order. With respect to the Booker action, plaintiff moved for a new trial; the motion was denied, and she appealed from that order. Among plaintiff's contentions on appeal was that the order granting a new trial to defendant city and county also operated to grant a new trial to defendant Booker, given the consolidated nature of the actions. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment in the Booker action as well as the new trial order for the city and county. In so holding, the court distinguished between the two types of consolidation: consolidation of actions for all purposes and consolidation of actions for trial of related issues. Determining that plaintiff's action was of thelatter variety, the court found no error in permitting a new trial as to defendant city and county while denying one in the Booker action. It reasoned that where actions are consolidated solely for the purpose of trial of related issues, the cases retain their separate identity and separate dispositions are necessary. Thus, a new trial as to one consolidated action did not mandate a new trial as to the other.

[c] Evidence Applicable so Far as Relevant

For the factual setting of McClure v. Donovan (1949) 33 Cal. 2d 717, 205 P.2d 17 , see § 45.20[3][a]. In McClure, the Supreme Court affirmed the trial court's decision appointing a guardian for Mr. Caruthers and annulling his marriage with appellant. The Court found that there was no error in receiving mutual evidence in the consolidated issues where the evidence was related, insofar as applicable, to the different issues presented in the cases and where separate dispositions of the matters were made. The Court stated that the evidence presented in one case is deemed applicable in the other, insofar as it is relevant, but that separate findings and judgment must be made in each case to dispose of the particular issues as independently submitted.

[d] Consolidation of Loss of Consortium and Negligence Actions

In Rodriguez v. Bethlehem Steel Corp. (1974) 12 Cal. 3d 382, 115 Cal. Rptr. 765, 525 P.2d 669 , plaintiff sought to recover damages for loss of consortium as a result of a serious work injury suffered by her husband which left him paralyzed and an invalid, unable to care for himself, support her, or fulfill matrimonial obligations. Plaintiff filed her action jointly with one brought by her husband against defendant company in negligence. The trial court severed plaintiff's cause of action from that of her husband on the theory that in California a spouse has no action for loss of consortium where the other spouse has been injured, rather than killed, by the negligence of a third party. In reversing the lower court and expanding the scope of actions for loss of consortium in California, the Supreme Court, as dictum, specifically approved of consolidation of negligence and loss of consortium claims.

[e] Consolidation of Franchise Fraud Actions

In Morrell v. Clark (1951) 106 Cal. App. 2d 198, 234 P.2d 774 , plaintiff sought to recover money paid defendant for the exclusive privilege of selling within a certain territory a new automobile to be manufactured by International Motor Car Company. Plaintiff set forth a cause of action as a common count for money had and received, and based the claim on fraud and failure of consideration. Certain other plaintiffs who had also bought franchises sued for return of their money on the theory of money had and received. The actions were consolidated for trial, and judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiffs. Defendant Clark appealed the judgment contending, in part, that consolidation was improper. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment for plaintiffs finding that the consolidation saved time and expense and that there was no resulting prejudice to defendant even though all of the testimony did not apply in each action.

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Consolidation for Trial of Related Issues Only

In National Elec. Supply Co. v. Mount Diablo Unified School Dist. (1960) 187 Cal. App. 2d 418, 9 Cal. Rptr. 864 , plaintiff sought to foreclose a mechanic's lien for certain materials furnished defendant pursuant to a construction contract. After a stipulation that legal and equitable issues should be tried separately, the trial court received evidence, made findings of fact and conclusions of law, and dismissed the complaint. Plaintiff appealed the judgment in favor of defendant. Plaintiff contended that the trial court had abused its discretion in severing the issues of the complaint and cross complaint and in entering judgment on the complaint at that point in the proceedings. In affirming the trial court's decision, the court of appeal determined that there was no error in dismissing the complaint without rendering separate judgments. The court stated that pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1048, not every severance requires separate judgments as not every consolidation requires only one set of findings and one judgment.

The factual background of McFarland v. Booker (1967) 250 Cal. App. 2d 402, 58 Cal. Rptr. 417 , is set forth in Discussion of Authorities under Separate Identities of Actions. In that case, consolidation for trial of related issues was permitted in two separate automobile accidents occurring at different times and instituted against different defendants, the related issue being which injuries plaintiff sustained in each accident.

In San Diego County v. Bank of America (1955) 135 Cal. App. 2d 143, 286 P.2d 880 , plaintiff began eminent domain proceedings involving numerous parcels of land, one of which belonged to defendant. Plaintiff's motion to consolidate actions was granted, the action was tried, and judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff. Defendant appealed the judgment and jury's award contending, among other issues, that the court erred in consolidating the actions pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1244. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's judgment. The court found that in the absence of proof that the trial court abused its discretion to the prejudice of defendant, the order of consolidation would not be disturbed.

This decision was predicated on Code Civ. Proc. § 1244, which is no longer in effect. Consolidation of condemnation proceedings is no longer governed by a specific statute, but generally by Code Civ. Proc. § 1048(a).

In Walker v. Walker (1960) 177 Cal. App. 2d 89, 1 Cal. Rptr. 871 , the husband filed for divorce and the wife subsequently filed a separate action to quiet title as to certain property. The actions were later consolidated. The husband filed a petition in the divorce case asking for dissolution of a temporary restraining orderand for permission to sell certain of the property in dispute. The petition, however, failed to mention the notice of lis pendens which had been recorded with respect to the property. The trial court granted the petition. A few days later, the court filed an amended order granting the petition and quashing the lis pendens. The wife appealed from the order. In vacating the order, the court of appeal noted that the actions consolidated in this instance were for trial of related issues only. Thus the actions retained their separate identities and independent judgments and findings were necessary. Because the order of consolidation was not a consolidation for all purposes, it was improper for an order from the divorce case to attempt to render ineffectual the order from the quiet title action since the two cases were never totally merged. The actions retained their separate characters except for trial of related issues, and the quiet title action brought by the wife named defendants, other than the husband, who were not parties to the divorce action and could not properly have their rights adjudicated by means of that case.

[b] Evidence Applicable so Far as Relevant

In McCarthy v. Mobile Cranes, Inc. (1962) 199 Cal. App. 2d 500, 18 Cal. Rptr. 750 , three actions arising from the same occurrence were consolidated for trial. The actions arose from the collapse of a crane owned by defendant Mobile Cranes in which one worker, McCarthy, was killed and another, Standridge, was injured. Mobile brought an action against McCarthy's employer Builders Steel Corporation for negligent damage to the crane. McCarthy's widow and infant child brought an action for wrongful death against Mobile, and Standridge sued Builders and Mobile for personal injuries. Judgment in the McCarthy action was entered in favor of defendant Mobile, and McCarthy appealed the decision. Plaintiff contended that the court in a consolidated action erred in refusing to allow plaintiff to cross examine Builders' expert witness on the grounds that plaintiff had technically rested his case and that Builders was not a party to plaintiff's action. The court of appeal reversed. It held that the mere technical resting of a case should not preclude plaintiff from meeting additional evidence or cross examining any party to a consolidated action. The court further found that where several actions are consolidated for trial, the evidence is deemed applicable in its entirety to each of the cases unless the record discloses the contrary or the evidence is found to be immaterial or irrelevant to a particular issue.

In Jud Whitehead Heater Co. v. Obler (1952) 111 Cal. App. 2d 861, 245 P.2d 608 , plaintiff, as an individual and a corporation, sought to recover alleged misappropriations made by defendants. The cause of action brought by plaintiff as an individual attempted to recover money embezzled prior to the incorporation, while plaintiff in its corporate capacity sought to recover subsequent losses. Defendants, husband and wife, answered claiming that the money withdrawn by them from the corporation was with plaintiff's consent and, further, that defendants had made a loan to plaintiff which had not been repaid. Defendant Louis Obler was convicted of grand theft and subsequently stipulated that the sum of $105,434.32 was taken from plaintiff's businesses. The trial court made findings on purchases of personal and real property traceable to the embezzled funds and imposed appropriate liens. Defendants presented various issues on appeal, among them the propriety of consolidating the two actions. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment. With respect to consolidation of the two actions, it found that the defendants had not been prejudiced by consolidation of the individual and corporate actions against them and that there was no evidence of abuse of discretion of the trial court in ordering consolidation. The court of appeal also stated that the fact that evidence which was admissible in one case might not have been admissible in the other did not bar consolidation. The court noted that the actions were appropriate for consolidation since the causes rose out of the same series of transactions, namely, defendants' embezzlement of money from plaintiff and the subsequent corporation. Although evidence pertaining to misappropriations allegedly made by Obler prior to incorporation would not be applicable in the action for embezzlement subsequent to incorporation, the court found that plaintiff's tracing the money would be facilitated by consolidation, rather than separate trials.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Consolidation for All Purposes

In Jaffe v. Albertson Co. (1966) 243 Cal. App. 2d 592, 53 Cal. Rptr. 25 , plaintiff Jaffe appealed from a judgment after the trial court had directed a verdict for defendant as to his first cause of action and a nonsuit as to the second and third causes. The case had been consolidated with two related actions on plaintiff's motion. The causes of action arose out of various negotiations between both defendant Albertson Corporation and its real estate broker, Kittle, and Gottlieb and his real estate broker, Jaffe, for the sale of certain property, owned by Albertson, to Gottlieb. Jaffe as broker for Gottlieb detailed various negotiations between the parties which he alleged as bases for his recovery. Jaffe's first count alleged breach of contract on the Albertson-Gottlieb oral contract to which he claimed to be a third-party beneficiary since the contract had provided for his commission. The second cause of action alleged that Albertson had made a direct oral promise to pay Jaffe a commission, and the third cause of action was against subsequent purchasers of the Albertson property for tortious interference of contract. Gottlieb had also filed several causes of action against Albertson and the subsequent purchasers, and various cross complaints were filed.

Among plaintiff's contentions on appeal was that he was denied his right to have certain issues determined by a jury by virtue of the consolidation of the actions and the determination of equitable issues first. The court of appeal found that plaintiffs Jaffe and Gottlieb had presented a motion to the court for consolidation of the actions. Such consolidation, where plaintiffs could have originally joined together, operated as though plaintiffs had originally joined together in bringing the action (243 Cal. App. 2d 592, 606) . Therefore, one judgment with one set of findings was appropriate and a decision by the trial court that Gottlieb was not entitled to specific performance because of the oral nature of the contract on which his action was based was determinative against Jaffe's action on the same contract. The court stated that since the trial court found in favor of defendant Albertson on the equitable issue of estoppel to assert the statute of frauds with regards to the oral contract with Gottlieb, the same finding was applicable and binding on Jaffe (243 Cal. App. 2d 592, 606-610) .

[b] Complete Consolidation Where No Doubt of Applicability of Findings

In Page v. Bakersfield Uniform & Towel Supply Co. (1966) 239 Cal. App. 2d 762, 49 Cal. Rptr. 46 , plaintiffs as owners of laundry supply companies sued defendant laundry supply company for unfair business practices. Defendants filed suit seeking injunctive relief and alleging virtually the same improper business practices against plaintiffs. The court issued a temporary restraining order against both parties against further violations of the Unfair Practices Act. At a nonjury trial, the issues presented were whether either party (1) had violated the Unfair Practices Act, (2) had violated the temporary restraining order, (3) was entitled to a permanent injunction, and (4) whether treble damages and attorney's fees should be awarded. Rendering one set of findings and judgment, the trial court determined that both parties had performed unlawful trade acts against the other and granted a permanent injunction against each. It declined to award damages since both parties had unclean hands and should be left as they were and, moreover, each sustained equal and proportional damages. It further found that the reasonable cost of attorneys' fees incurred by each were approximately the same. Although the actions had been consolidated for trial, plaintiffs appealed only that portion of the judgment which had been rendered against them and in favor of defendants. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's judgment. Of the six issues presented on appeal, it found no error in the failure of the court to separate issues and make separate findings. The court held that the trial court was correct in making integrated findings covering both cases and in entering one judgment where there could be no possible doubt as to the applicability of the various findings to each of the two cases which had been consolidated for trial (239 Cal. App. 2d 762, 772) .

[c] Consolidated Actions Normally Determined by Single Judgment

Hamilton v. Asbestos Corp. (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 1127, 95 Cal. Rptr. 2d 701, 998 P.2d 403 , involved two separate actions by plaintiff, one seeking to recover compensatory and punitive damages for plaintiff's asbestosis and one seeking to recover compensatory and punitive damages for plaintiff's mesothelioma. After defendant filed its answer in the second action, plaintiff's motion to consolidate the two action was granted. Ultimately, judgment for plaintiff was entered in the trial court and defendant appealed. The court of appeal reversed the judgment in its entirety and the California Supreme Court granted review.

The Supreme Court reversed the judgment of the court of appeal with directions to resolve certain issues in that court (22 Cal. 4th 1127, 1150) . The court concluded that the record supported the trial court's determination that the two actions were consolidated for all purposes and that defendant had made a general appearance in the second action. In so doing, the court noted that the trial court ordered plaintiff's two actions consolidated for all purposes. Code Civ. Proc. § 1048(a) authorizes the trial court, when appropriate, to "order a joint hearing or trial" or to "order all the actions consolidated." Under the statute and case law, there are thus two types of consolidation: a consolidation for purposes of trial only where the actions remain otherwise separate; and a complete consolidation or consolidation for all purposes, where the two actions are merged into a single proceeding under one case number and result in only one verdict or set of findings and one judgment. Consolidation under Code Civ. Proc. § 1048 is permissive, and it is for the trial court to determine whether the consolidation is for all purposes or for trial only (22 Cal. 4th 1127, 1147-1149) .

In Didier v. American Casualty Co. (1968) 261 Cal. App. 2d 742, 68 Cal. Rptr. 217 , plaintiff as administrator of the estate of her deceased husband brought a declaratory judgment action against two separate surety companies with whom her husband had executed surety bonds in conjunction with two school construction projects. On his death, the construction work under the contracts in question was approximately 50 to 70 percent completed. Plaintiff sought a judgment that the two contracts were personal in nature and ceased to exist at the date of her husband's death and that each defendant held funds as constructive trustee of the decedent's probate estate. Defendant surety companies argued that the contracts were not personal in nature and that the contracts continued as obligations of the decedent's estate. The trial court held that the two contracts survived Mr. Didier's death and continued as obligations of the estate. Plaintiff appealed the judgment arguing, in part, that the trial court erred in not making separate findings and conclusions of law in each case since actions had been consolidated at pretrial by stipulation of the parties for all further proceedings. The trial judge had then made a single set of findings of fact and conclusions of law and entered a single judgment. The court of appeal stated that the general rule was that consolidated actions may be determined by a single set of findings and judgment (261 Cal. App. 2d 742, 752) . It held that the trial court's failure to make an individual finding as to the amount of money due Didier at the time of his death on one of the contracts was not error since such finding would not have changed the trial court's decision (261 Cal. App. 2d 742, 752-753) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Consolidation for All Purposes

[i] In Actions to Recover Proceeds of Trust Account

In Kropp v. Sterling Sav. & L. Ass'n (1970) 9 Cal. App. 3d 1033 , plaintiff as sole surviving heir of her sister sought to recover the proceeds of two trust accounts established at Sterling by her sister and her sister's deceased husband. Defendant answered the complaint and filed a cross complaint in interpleader against plaintiff and the First National Bank of Arizona as administrator of the estates. The First National Bank also filed a cross complaint in interpleader and sought a declaratory judgment against plaintiff. The trial court ordered that the funds be paid to the National Bank and plaintiff appealed. One contention on appeal was that consolidation of plaintiff's action with that of the bank was prejudicial. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment noting that consolidation of the actions for all purposes was appropriate where the causes involved the same parties and the cases could be tried as one with one judgment and one set of findings of fact and conclusions of law (9 Cal. App. 3d 1033, 1046-1047) .

[ii] In Conservatorship Proceedings

In Conservatorship of Oliver (1961) 192 Cal. App. 2d 832, 13 Cal. Rptr. 695 , two granddaughters of Elizabeth Ellen Oliver petitioned the court for appointment as conservators of the estate of their grandmother. Objection was filed by Elizabeth's son, Evan D. Oliver, on ground that there was another conservatorship proceeding pending in another court. The actions were consolidated by stipulation of counsel, and one of the granddaughters was appointed conservator. Evan Oliver appealed the appointment, then filed an abandonment of appeal, and subsequently filed a second notice of appeal. In dismissing the appeals, the court of appeal found that the first appeal filed by Evan Oliver sufficiently described both actions so as to include the whole of the judgments and orders entered in the consolidated action and not simply a part as urged by appellant in his attempt to distinguish between the first and second appeals (192 Cal. App. 2d 832, 835-836) . The court, as dictum, noted that where two lawsuits are ordered consolidated for trial and actually tried together, there should be only one set of findings of fact and conclusions of law and one judgment (192 Cal. App. 2d 832, 836) .

[iii] In Actions for Breach of Contract

In Israel v. Campbell (1958) 163 Cal. App. 2d 806, 330 P.2d 83 , plaintiff and defendant sued each other in separate actions for breach of contract arising out of the same transaction. The actions were consolidated and judgment was entered in favor of Campbell; Israel appealed. One of the contentions made by appellant was that the court should have rendered two judgments in the case. The court of appeal affirmed the lower court judgment stating that it would have been improper for the court to grant two separate judgments in this case where both actions involved breach of the same contract. It reiterated the general principle that where actions are consolidated there should be only one set of findings and conclusions of law and one judgment (163 Cal. App. 2d 806, 820-821) .

[a] Use of Form

The foregoing memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion to consolidate actions containing common questions of fact or law even though parties in the actions to be consolidated are not the same.

Where appropriate, counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Consolidation Proper Although Parties Not Identical

The factual setting of Jud Whitehead Heater Co. v. Obler (1952) 111 Cal. App. 2d 861, 245 P.2d 608 , is set forth in § 45.20[4][b]. In Obler, the court of appeal affirmed the lower court's decision stating, among other findings, that the fact that parties to the consolidated actions are not the same does not defeat consolidation. The court explained that the fact that the plaintiffs were different did not affect the propriety of the consolidation since the plaintiff in the second action was a corporation formed by the plaintiff in the first action. The individual action had been brought to follow misappropriations into certain property, while the corporation action was brought to follow other misappropriations into other property. Both causes of action had arisen out of one series of transactions, that is, defendant's embezzlement from the corporation and its predecessor.

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Consolidation Proper Although Parties Not Identical

In People v. Chevalier (1959) 52 Cal. 2d 299, 340 P.2d 598 , judgment was rendered in favor of the city and state in consolidated eminent domain actions against defendants. Defendants appealed the judgment to condemn their land for street and access purposes alleging, among other grounds for error, that consolidation of the actions was an abuse of discretion. Defendants argued that the takings were distinct: the state was taking a right of access to a street which was closed off by the freeway and the city a strip of land for a street extension in the opposite direction. The Supreme Court affirmed the trial court's decision. It found that since the city and state actions were interrelated, there was no error in consolidating the actions to evaluate the combined effect of the city and state projects.

[a] Use of Form

The foregoing memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion to consolidate actions containing common questions of fact or law where such actions present essentially the same or overlapping issues and where consolidation would avoid duplication of time and effort.

Where appropriate, counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Consolidation Where Issues Essentially the Same

In Spector v. Superior Court (1961) 55 Cal. 2d 839, 13 Cal. Rptr. 189, 361 P.2d 909 , petitioner as director and member of a non-profit California corporation sought two writs of mandate, one prohibiting the superior court from proceeding further with the dissolution of the corporation and the second vacating an order denying his motion to modify a preliminary injunction allowing the dissolution. Finding procedural and constitutional errors, the Supreme Court ordered a single writ of mandate to issue encompassing both issues raised by petitioner. The Court sua sponte stated that since the corporate dissolution and the preliminary injunction actions presented essentially the same, or overlapping, issues they should be consolidated and disposed of by the trial court as a single proceeding.

[b] Consolidation to Avoid Duplication of Time and Effort

In Neubrand v. Superior Court (1970) 9 Cal. App. 3d 311, 88 Cal. Rptr. 586 , petitioners sought a writ of mandate to compel respondent court to vacate its previous judgment and orders. The superior court sitting in probate had made and entered both orders and a judgment for partial distribution of the estate of Kitty M. Matthiessen in favor of two nieces who were appointed joint administrators and found to be sole surviving heirs. Subsequently, petitioners, who were relatives of the deceased husband of Kitty Matthiessen, moved to vacate the judgment by which partial distribution was made on the ground of extrinsic fraud, alleging that the administrators knew of the existence of petitioners and their relationship to the deceased. Petitioners further sought a declaratory judgment determining the rights of all parties concerned. The trial court denied the motion to vacate on the ground that the court lacked jurisdiction since the judgment had become final and not void on its face. Petitioners then filed an independent action in superior court setting forth allegations similar to those made in the motion to vacate the partial distribution order. At the same time petitioners filed a petition to determine heirship in the probate proceeding.

The court of appeal held that the probate court lacked jurisdiction to vacate its prior decree on the ground of extrinsic fraud. The court, however, noted petitioners' concern of duplication of time and effort in the preparation and trial of the two separate proceedings--the independent civil action pending in the superior court and the petition to determine heirship in probate. By way of dictum, the court suggested that consolidation for trial of related issues would be an appropriate vehicle to eliminate such duplication.

Counsel should note that although Neubrand concerned consolidation for the purpose of trial of related issues, consolidation of actions for all purposes may also be affected to avoid duplication of time and effort [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1048(b)].

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Consolidation Where Issues Essentially the Same

In Todd-Stenberg v. Dalkon Shield Claimants Trust (1996) 48 Cal. App. 4th 976, 56 Cal. Rptr. 2d 16 , plaintiffs alleged that they had suffered injuries resulting from use of an intrauterine device (IUD) known as the Dalkon Shield. The manufacturer of the Dalkon Shield had filed for relief under chapter 11 of the United States Bankruptcy Code, and as a result of the bankruptcy proceeding the defendant trust was formed. Thereafter, plaintiffs filed their separate actions against the defendant, and ultimately the trial court granted plaintiffs' motions to consolidate their actions for trial. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiffs in differing amounts and the defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment. In holding that the consolidation was appropriate, the court noted that six actions were consolidated, but by the time of trial only three remained. In each, plaintiff claimed that plaintiff sufferedpelvic inflammatory disease (PID) as a result of plaintiff's use of a Dalkon Shield. The trial court had correctly anticipated that a large portion of the trial would be devoted to issues common to the three cases, i.e., how PID occurs, whether the use of a Dalkon Shield can cause it, and what other factors might contribute or cause the disease. The parties were able to use the same witnesses not only to discuss the general issues, but also to address the probable cause, extent and result of the PID in each of the plaintiffs. If there had been three separate trials the same deposition testimony would have been introduced, many of the same expert witnesses would have been called and the much of the same evidence would have been presented. Thus, based on the record before the court, consolidation was appropriate (48 Cal. App. 4th 976, 979) .

The factual setting of McFarland v. Booker (1967) 250 Cal. App. 2d 402, 58 Cal. Rptr. 417 , is set forth in § 45.20[3][b]. In McFarland, the trial court consolidated plaintiff's personal injury actions against two separate defendants arising out of two distinct accidents occurring at different times. On appeal, plaintiff had argued that the trial court's order granting a new trial to one defendant operated to grant a new trial in the other action also since the actions were consolidated. The court of appeal, however, distinguished between consolidation of actions for trial of related issues and consolidation of actions for all purposes with one judgment and one set of findings. The court noted that consolidation in this case had been solely for trial of related issues, in this instance, the issue of plaintiff's injuries.

The factual setting of Jaffe v. Albertson Co. (1966) 243 Cal. App. 2d 592, 53 Cal. Rptr. 25 , is set forth in § 45.21[3][a]. In Jaffe, plaintiff's action for breach of contract and tortious interference of contract was consolidated with two related actions con cerning the sale of the same property brought by other plaintiffs. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's order to consolidate despite plaintiff's contention that consolidation denied him his right to have certain issues determined by a jury. The court found that plaintiffs were relying on the same contract and evidence to establish their cases and that the issues were essentially the same. Where, as here, plaintiffs could have joined together originally to bring a cause of action, consolidation for all purposes including a single judgment was appropriate.

[b] Consolidation to Avoid Duplication of Time and Effort

Todd-Stenberg v. Dalkon Shield Claimants Trust (1996) 48 Cal. App. 4th 976, 56 Cal. Rptr. 2d 16 , is discussed in § 45.23[4][a].

The foregoing memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion to consolidate wrongful death and personal injury actions arising out of the same negligent conduct of the defendant.

Where appropriate, counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Consolidation of Wrongful Death and Personal Injury Actions

In General Motors Corp. v. Superior Court (1966) 65 Cal. 2d 88, 52 Cal. Rptr. 460, 416 P.2d 492 , petitioner, a defendant in a personal injury action, sought a writ of prohibition to restrain the trial court from proceeding in the action on the theory that plaintiff had failed to bring the action to trial within the time prescribed by former Code Civ. Proc. § 583 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 583.310 et seq.] The action against defendant arose from a car accident in which plaintiffs William and Bernice Maraska were injured allegedly due to defendant's negligent design and manufacture of an automobile. During normal pretrial and discovery activities, Bernice died. William Maraska and Martin Parsons, son of the decedent, then instituted an action against defendant for wrongful death alleging that the injuries from which Bernice died were sustained in the automobile accident. Plaintiffs had attempted to consolidate this action with others brought by other plaintiffs against defendant, but that motion was denied. The court did, however, grant their motion to consolidate the personal injury cause of action with the wrongful death action. Defendant's subsequent motion to dismiss the personal injury action for want of prosecution was denied and defendant sought a writ of prohibition.

The Supreme Court denied the writ. It observed that former Code Civ. Proc. § 377, which provided for mandatory consolidation of personal injury and wrongful death actions arising out of the same wrongful act, governed rather than the general consolidation statute, Code Civ. Proc. § 1048(b). It further noted that plaintiffs had proceeded with diligence in both actions, but that the cause of action in wrongful death had not accrued until some three years after the accident and was not yet ready for trial at the time of the hearing for dismissal of the personal injury action. The same issue, the automobile's faulty design, was central to both actions and could be expected to involve complex mechanical and technical factual conflicts requiring the presentation of extensive expert testimony. Given the substantial benefit to be gained by consolidation, the common purpose of §§ 377 and 583 to encourage speedy litigation, and the necessity of implying an exception to one of the statutes, the Court held that judicial economy was best met by implying an exception to § 583 based on the futility of requiring separate and successive trials and on the impracticability of bringing the consolidated actions to trial within five years of filing the personal injury action (pp. 96-97).

CAUTION:

Code Civ. Proc. § 377.62(b), which replaced former Code Civ. Proc. § 377, operative January 1, 1993, provides that wrongful death and survival actions "may be" consolidated for trial as provided in Code Civ. Proc. § 1048. This discretionary language differs from former Code Civ. Proc. § 377, which required consolidation. General Motors Corp., supra , was decided under prior law, and may be cited only as a persuasive rather than controlling authority.

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion to consolidate actions containing common questions of fact or law where the action is in tort and consolidation would not help to defeat the plaintiff's claim but, at best, only lessen the wrongdoer's burden.

The proposition cited in the foregoing form was dictum in General Elec. Co. v. California ex rel. Dep't of Public Works (1973) 32 Cal. App. 3d 918, 925, 108 Cal. Rptr. 543 . Defendants were trying to state causes of action for either contribution or indemnification in cross complaints under former Code Civ. Proc. § 442 (now Code Civ. Proc. § 428.20) against third parties and were not attempting to consolidate two separate personal injury actions. Nevertheless, holding that the cross complaints did not state a cause of action, the court of appeal, quoting from Thornton v. Luce (1962) 209 Cal. App. 2d 542, 551-552, 26 Cal. Rptr. 393 , applied the general principle that despite Code Civ. Proc. § 1048 permitting consolidation, an alleged wrongdoer should not be permitted to bring in other persons whom he feels might in some fashion have contributed to the consequences of his own wrongful conduct since the plaintiff should be able to control the case by proceeding against the party or parties he feels to be most clearly liable [see General Elec. Co. v. California ex rel. Dep't of Public Works (1973) 32 Cal. App. 3d 918, 925, 108 Cal. Rptr. 543] . In addition, the specific holding in General Elec. is no longer valid since the Supreme Court held in American Motorcycle Assn. v. Superior Court of Los Angeles County (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 578, 607 , that Code Civ. Proc. § 428.20 permits a defendant to file a cross complaint against a concurrent tortfeasor for indemnity on a comparative fault basis, even when the tortfeasor was not named a defendant in the original complaint. Plaintiff's right to control his or her case was nevertheless preserved by the Court, which stated that the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 1048(b) permit a trial court to order separate trials of the cause of action asserted in the cross complaint [see American Motorcycle Assn. v. Superior Court of Los Angeles County (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 578, 606 ; § 45.31].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Consolidation Improper If Wrongdoer's Burden Lessened

In General Elec. Co. v. California ex rel. Dep't of Public Works (1973) 32 Cal. App. 3d 918, 108 Cal. Rptr. 543 , defendants in an automobile accident case filed cross complaints against the state and county. Defendants contended that the state and county had contributed to the accident in which plaintiff's car was hit from the rear by failing to provide adequate separation between lanes of traffic moving in opposite directions and that they were liable to cross complainants for indemnity, contribution, and equitable apportionment. The trial court sustaineddemurrers to the cross complaints without leave to amend, and they were dismissed. Defendants appealed and the court of appeal affirmed. With regard to defendants' cross complaint based on contribution under Code Civ. Proc. § 875, the court found that defendants had stated no cause of action. Further, the court cited authority for the proposition that a plaintiff should be able to control his case by proceeding against the party or parties he deems to be most liable. Thus, even considering the consolidation provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 1048, the court noted as dictum that an alleged wrongdoer has no right to bring in other parties who are potentially liable unless the theory asserted is that such other persons would defeat plaintiff's claims and not merely lessen the wrongdoer's burden.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Consolidation Improper if Party Forced to Assume Inconsistent Positions

In State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1956) 47 Cal. 2d 428, 304 P.2d 13 , petitioner insurance company sought a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to sever its declaratory relief action from certain personal injury actions. State Farm began the declaratory relief action against a certain policyholder to determine whether its policy covered an accident occurring when the policyholder was driving. While the declaratory relief action was pending, several personal injury actions were filed against the same policyholder that petitioner was defending. The personal injury actions and the declaratory relief action were subsequently consolidated. One of the two grounds set forth by petitioner in the writ of mandate was that the superior court erred in ordering the consolidation of the declaratory relief and personal injury actions. The Supreme Court sustained petitioner's position with regard to consolidation. It held that the trial court had abused its discretion, even though substantially the same evidence might be presented in the two actions, since the insurance company would be forced into the position of assuming inconsistent positions. The insurance policy in question provided that there was no coverage while the insured used his automobile as a public conveyance or while carrying people for charge. Because there was evidence that the automobile was being used as a public conveyance, in the declaratory relief action, State Farm maintained that its policyholder was carrying people for a charge within the meaning of the policy. However, if that argument were unsuccessful, State Farm could nevertheless urge that the riders were guests within the meaning of the guest statute and that they would have to prove willful misconduct on the part of the policyholder for State Farm to be liable in the personal injury action. Besides forcing the insurer to assume inconsistent positions at trial, the Court also found that consolidation would uquestionably confuse the jury since in the instruction different tests would be set out to apply to the same factual situation.

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion to consolidate actions containing common questions of fact or law where consolidation of a declaratory judgment action with personal injury actions would force disclosure of the existence of insurance. Although the case authority cited involves consolidation of a declaratory judgment action with personal injury actions, consolidation of personal injury actions with other types of causes would also appear improper if the result is to force disclosure of insurance in the tort claims.

By the same token, it would be a prejudicial abuse of discretion by the trial court to refuse an insurer's motion to sever an action against it for declaratory relief from the action against the insureds to establish liability for negligence [see Omaha Indemnity Co. v. Superior Court (1989) 209 Cal. App. 3d 1266, 1273-1275, 258 Cal. Rptr. 66] .

Counsel should add argument linking the points and authorities in this form with the facts of his or her case.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Consolidation Improper if It Discloses Insurance

The factual setting of State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1956) 47 Cal. 2d 428, 304 P.2d 13 , is set forth in § 45.26[3][a]. In State Farm, the superior court on a writ of mandate determined that consolidation of an action had been an abuse of discretion. Along with forcing the insurer to assume inconsistent positions at trial and confusing the jury, the court found that by virtue of the declaratory judgment action the existence of liability insurance would be disclosed to the same jury which would decide the issues in the personal injury actions.

The foregoing memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion to sever actions or issues where there is the possibility of undue prejudice to parties, such as where the defendant is forced to defend a small personal property claim joined with a substantial punitive damages claim.

Where appropriate, counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Severance to Avoid Prejudice

In Bratton & Moretti v. Finerman & Son (1959) 171 Cal. App. 2d 430, 340 P.2d 673 , plaintiffs brought an action on an open book account to recover for fertilizer allegedly sold and delivered to defendant shippers. Defendants by their answer denied generally, though admitting indebtedness in a certain amount, and filed a cross complaint against plaintiffs as well as growers Evans and Allen. Defendants alleged that pursuant to certain written contracts the growers had agreed to pay all charges incurred in connection with growing the crops. Defendants thus alleged that Allen and Evans were solely liable for all fertilizers used on their land and sought a judgment that defendants were not indebted to plaintiffs at all. Allen and Evans filed answers admitting the existence of the contracts but denying the other allegations. At trial at the conclusion of plaintiffs' evidence, Allen and Evans moved for severance of the cross complaint from the action pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1048. The motion was granted. Plaintiffs' action against defendants continued, and judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiffs. Defendants appealed the judgment, one point of error being that the trial court erred in granting the motion for severance.The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's order. It found that plaintiffs were prejudiced by the added burden and cost of having to ferret out the nature of the agreement between defendants and Allen and Evans. It noted that plaintiffs were not relying on the contract between defendants and Allen and Evans in their action and that such contract was personal between those parties. Moreover, the court determined that defendants did not appear to be prejudiced by the order of severance.

[b] Severance When Actual Damage Claim Joined With Punitive Claim

In Stencel Aero Eng'r Corp. v. Superior Court (1976) 56 Cal. App. 3d 978, 128 Cal. Rptr. 691 , plaintiffs were respectively the special administrator of the estate, widow, and minor son of Anthony McCarthy. The suit arose from the death of Anthony McCarthy in an airplane accident. It sought damages from Stencel Aero and other named and fictitiously named defendants who allegedly manufactured the aircraft and component parts of the craft involved in the accident. Stencel sought a judgment on the pleadings with respect to a $10,000,000 punitive damages claim brought by plaintiff heirs and by the decedent's special administrator. The trial court denied the motion for judgment on the pleadings and petitioner sought a writ of mandate to require the trial court to vacate its order and grant petitioner's motion. The court of appeal sustained the trial court order as to the special administrator but issued a peremptory writ as to plaintiff widow and minor son granting judgment on the pleadings since they were statutorily precluded from seeking punitive damages in a wrongful death action. As dictum, however, the court noted the possibility of prejudice to petitioners in that a claim for $10,000,000 in punitive damages was based on a $200 personal property claim. The court suggested, though, that any possible prejudice could be avoided by invoking the discretionary power of the court to sever issues for trial pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1048(b).

Although the court of appeal did not specify in what manner it perceived that petitioners would be prejudiced by joinder of a small property claim with a substantial claim for punitive damages, the force of the court's suggestion that severance of issues would provide an appropriate means of safeguard for petitioners would seem to extend to other situations in which inequities might result by the trial of greatly different actual and punitive claims together.

[a] Use of Form

The foregoing memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion to sever actions or issues where necessary to avoid inconvenience to a party. Specifically, the foregoing memorandum is appropriate where actions have been joined pursuant to the liberalized rules of joinder of actions and where such joinder results in inconvenience to the defendants.

Where appropriate, counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Severance to Avoid Inconvenience Resulting From Joinder

In Landau v. Salam (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 901, 95 Cal. Rptr. 46, 484 P.2d 1390 , plaintiff appealed from a judgment dismissing his action against defendants Salam, Charge A Car Inc., and Madison Properties for misjoinder of parties. The causes arose out of separate personal injury actions occurring respectively on April 28, 1968, and August 12, 1968, when plaintiff was injured in an automobile accident and subsequently suffered injuries on allegedly negligently maintained property. Plaintiff joined defendants pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 379(c) on the theory that he was unable to ascertain whether the injuries, medical costs, and loss of income resulted from the first or second accident. The trial court, however, sustained defendants' demurrer to plaintiff's action and dismissed the action without leave to amend. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. It found that the Legislature had enacted Code Civ. Proc. § 379(a)-(c) with the goal of liberalizing the procedures for permissive joinder of defendants. It held that plaintiff had properly joined defendants pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 379(c) and that the liberalized rules regarding joinder of parties should not be defeated by a narrow interpretation of joinder of causes of action. As dictum, however, the Court noted that when joinder of defendants falls within the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 379(c) yet inconvenience results to such defendants, the proper remedy is a motion for severance under Code Civ. Proc. § 1048(b) or a protective order under Code Civ. Proc. § 379(b) rather than a demurrer for misjoinder.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Severance to Promote Expediency

In McLellan v. McLellan (1972) 23 Cal. App. 3d 343, 100 Cal. Rptr. 258 , plaintiff wife instituted a divorce action against defendant husband on grounds of extreme mental cruelty and adultery. The action was filed prior to the enactment of the no-fault divorce provisions of the Family Law Act. Defendant filed an answer denying the grounds alleged by plaintiff and filed a cross complaint for divorce on the ground of extreme cruelty. After plaintiff's first witness, Lydia M., testified that she had committed adultery with defendant, the trial was continued in the hospital in which plaintiff, who was ill, was admitted. After plaintiff's testimony, plaintiff's counsel rested her case and moved that the court make a finding that plaintiff was entitled to a divorce on the two grounds she had alleged.Despite defendant's objection that he had not been given an opportunity to present his evidence on the issues decided and those raised in his cross complaint, the trial court granted the motion and entered an interlocutory order granting plaintiff a divorce from which defendant subsequently appealed.

Although trial continued with respect to defendant's entitlement to a divorce on the ground of extreme cruelty, defendant failed to present to present any evidence, and the court proceeded on the issues reserved in the interlocutory judgment. In defendant's appeals from the interlocutory judgment and a supplemental judgment awarding certain property and an order awarding plaintiff attorney's fees and costs, defendant contended, in part, that the court exceeded its jurisdiction in granting plaintiff's divorce on the basis of her and Lydia M.'s testimony without first having permitted defendant's presentation of his defense or evidence from his cross complaint. The court of appeal affirmed. It found that defendant had had the opportunity to present evidence on the issue of plaintiff's entitlement to a divorce but had declined to present any witnesses or other proof to rebut plaintiff's allegations. The court further found that the trial court in this instance did not abuse its discretion in treating the complaint and cross complaint as separate actions. It noted that the discretionary order of severance and separate trials of actions by the trial court will not be interfered with unless it clearly constitutes an abuse of discretion.

Although the court of appeal did not specify on what basis it concluded that severance of the complaint and the cross complaint was proper, it appears that severance, made after plaintiff's testimony in the hospital, was effected to promote expediency given the plaintiff's health, the necessity of holding court proceedings in the hospital, and the adequacy of testimony to support plaintiff's alleged grounds for relief. Alternative bases to the court's decision, however, could have been to avoid prejudice to plaintiff or to further convenience [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1048(b)].

The foregoing memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion to sever a cause of action asserted in a cross complaint for partial equitable indemnity brought against third parties when the presence of the third parties in the plaintiff's personal injury action would greatly complicate the action and deprive him or her of the right to control the size and scope of the action.

Where appropriate, counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Right to Sever Cross Complaint for Partial Equitable Indemnity

American Motorcycle Assn. v. Superior Court of Los Angeles County (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 578 , was a landmark California Supreme Court decision in which the Court held that in a personal action a defendant could file a cross complaint against any person, whether already a party to the action or not, from whom defendant sought to obtain total or partial indemnity based on that person's alleged comparative negligence. In so holding, the Court noted plaintiff's andcross defendant's arguments, as real parties in interest, that the effect of permitting a defendant to bring in parties whom the plaintiff declined to join will have the undesirable effect of greatly complicating personal injury litigation and will deprive the plaintiff of the asserted right to control the size and scope of the proceeding. The Court stated that the problem may be partially obviated by the trial court's judicious use of the authority afforded by Code Civ. Proc. § 1048, which, the Court emphasized, permits a trial court to order a separate trial of any cause of action, including a cause of action asserted in a cross complaint. The Court cautioned that the trial court must take into consideration the fact that when the plaintiff is alleged to have been partially at fault for the injury, each of the third party defendants will have the right to litigate the question of the plaintiff's proportionate fault for the accident, the Court recognizing that as a consequence severance may not be an attractive alternative at times.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Untimely Severance in Class Actions

In Home Sav. & Loan Assn v. Superior Court (1974) 42 Cal. App. 3d 1006, 117 Cal. Rptr. 485 , petitioner, defendants in a class action suit, sought a writ of mandate to prohibit the trial court from proceeding to adjudicate the validity of the claims of Lawrence and Rita Deutsch prior to a determination of the suitability of the action as a class action. The complaint alleged that Home had charged against plaintiffs and others similarly situated who had borrowed money from Home Savings and executed promissory notes secured by trust deeds to real property late charges in violation of Civ. Code § 1670. Pursuant to a pretrial motion of plaintiffs, the trial court ordered bifurcated trials on the issues of the validity of the Deutsches' late charges, whether they could recover the late charges plus attorneys' fees under their note, whether Home's affirmative defenses barred the Deutsches' suit, and whether Home was entitled to offset damages. The court of appeal issued the peremptory writ of prohibition restraining the trial court from proceeding to trial on the substantive issues of the case. In so doing, it found that severance of issues for trial prior to a determination of the suitability of the class action and notification of all potential members allowed "one-way intervention" in that potential members could reserve their decision to become part of the class until the validity of the cause brought by the named plaintiffs had already been adjudicated. Such a situation, the court of appeal stated, failed to protect the defendant's rights to a fair trial and due process. Moreover, the court found nothing in the language of Code Civ. Proc. § 1048(b) to suggest that "one-way intervention" in class action suits was sanctioned.

[b] Related Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the foregoing points and authorities may be used in opposition to the motion supported by the points and authorities set out in § 45.31.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Tort Liability Dependent on Codefendant

In Adams Mfg. & Eng'r Co. v. Coast Centerless Grinding Co. (1960) 184 Cal. App. 2d 649, 7 Cal. Rptr. 761 , plaintiff sued for the reasonable value of services rendered and materials furnished. The action was brought against defendant Coast alone in count one and against Coast and Robert Black together as partners in count two. Judgment was rendered against Black by default and in favor of Coast. Plaintiff appealed the judgment. The court of appeal affirmed the portion of the judgment in favor of Coast and reversed the portion against Black. On appeal, plaintiff argued that Black and Coast were partners or joint venturers in the production of oil well equipment and that they were indebted to him for services and materials. The court found that the agreement on which plaintiff based his allegation of the existence of a partnership between defendants did not justify such a conclusion. Moreover, the court determined that since the cause of action against Black was predicated on the argument that a partnership in fact existed, Black's liability, if any, was dependent on a finding of liability of Coast. Thus, even though defendant Black defaulted, he was entitled to the benefit of codefendant Coast's establishing the nonexistence of a partnership. The court therefore reversed the default judgment against Black, holding that the cause ofaction against Black was not severable from that against Coast where one defendant's liability is dependent on that of a codefendant.

The court in Adams cited the well-established rule that where there are two or more defendants and the liability of one is dependent on that of another, the default of one does not preclude his or her having the benefit of the codefendant's establishing the absence of a controlling factor in the cause of action. Extending the principle enunciated in Adams, it is apparent that severance of tort actions where one defendant's liability is predicated on that of another would be prejudicial and in contravention of the goal of judicial economy as set forth in Code Civ. Proc. § 1048(b).

[a] Tort Liability Dependent on Codefendant

In Mirabile v. Smith (1953) 119 Cal. App. 2d 685, 260 P.2d 179 , Steiner, as assignee for collection, brought an action in contract in municipal court against defendants Mirabile, Sherman and Louise Haynes, and others doing business as Sherman's Dine and Dance. The complaint alleged on information and belief that defendants were copartners and that Sherman acted for the other defendants when he entered into the contract. Defendants Haynes filed an answer generally denying the allegations of plaintiff's complaint and alleging payment. Defendant Mirabile failed to file an answer, and a default judgment was entered against him. He did not learn of the judgment until Steiner obtained a writ of execution against him. Mirabile then filed an action in superior court seeking to recover funds obtained by the writ and to restrain the municipal court from enforcing the default judgment. The superior court declared the municipal court default judgment void and vacated it. Smith, as municipal court judge, set aside the order but specified that it did not extend to the default judgment. The municipal court further denied Mirabile's request that the court refrain from entering further judgment against him until the issues raised by codefendants were determined. The court refused and Mirabile sought and obtained from the superior court a writ of prohibition against the municipal court judge. The court of appeal affirmed the order. It stated that where the liability alleged is joint and not several and is predicated on a claim of partnership or joint venture that no judgment should be entered against a defaulting defendant until the merits of the partnership claim are settled.

The decision rests on Section 579 of the Code of Civil Procedure and the concomitant principle that the court may render individual judgments against codefendants when the liability of each is several. Analogously, several judgments, and hence severance pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1048(b), are improper where the liability of codefendants is joint and one defendant's liability is dependent on that of a codefendant. Under such circumstances, severance of actions or issues would contravene the stated purposes of the governing statute, namely judicial economy and avoidance of prejudice.

[OR, when a party has been granted permission to petition]

A. When Petition May Be Made. When civil actions sharing a common question of fact or law are pending in different courts, any party to one of the actions, after obtaining permission from the presiding judge, may submit a petition for coordination to the Chair of the Judicial Council, who on receiving the petition may assign a judge to determine whether the actions are complex, and if so, whether coordination of the actions is appropriate (Code Civ. Proc. § 404; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 3.520(b), 3.521(a)).

[CONTINUE]

B. Complex Action Defined. The court must consider California Rules of Court, Rule 3.400 et seq. in determining whether a case is complex within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 404 (Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.502). Under California Rules of Court, Rule 3.400(a), a complex case is an action that requires exceptional judicial management to avoid placing unnecessary burdens on the court or the litigants and to expedite the case, keep costs reasonable, and promote effective decision making by the court, the parties, and counsel. The actions sought to be coordinated here are complex actions within this definition so as to allow their coordination under Code of Civil Procedure Section 404. These actions _____ [identify factors, including relevant factors listed in Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.400(b) and any appplicable special category of claims listed in Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.400(c), that show that the actions are complex].

C. When Coordination Is Appropriate. Coordination of civil actions sharing a common question of fact or law is appropriate if one judge hearing all of the actions for all purposes in a selected sight or sites will promote the ends of justice, taking into account the following factors (Code Civ. Proc. § 404.1):

(1) whether the common question of fact or law is predominating and significant to the litigation;

(2) the convenience of parties, witnesses, and counsel;

(3) the relative development of the actions and the work product of counsel;

(4) the efficient utilization of judicial facilities and manpower;

(5) the calendar of the courts;

(6) the disadvantages of duplicative and inconsistent rulings, orders, or judgments; and

(7) the likelihood of settlement of the actions without further litigation should coordination be denied.

In this case, _____ [identify each factor present in the instant case that favors coordination].

D. Benefits of Coordination Outweigh Potential Problems. Coordination should be ordered when its benefits outweigh potential complications or problems(McGhan Medical Corp. v. Superior Court (1992) 11 Cal. App. 4th 804, 812-813, 14 Cal. Rptr. 2d 264).

E. Balancing of Factors. The judge has discretion in weighing and balancing the factors to determine whether coordination best serves the ends of justice in a particular case. The judge's discretion is not abused if there is evidence to support the existence of many factors favoring the judge's decision (Pesses v. Superior Court (1980) 107 Cal. App. 3d 117, 126, 165 Cal. Rptr. 680).

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be used to support a petition for coordination submitted to the Chair of the Judicial Council [Code Civ. Proc. § 404; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.521(a)]. The petition either is submitted by all parties plaintiff or defendant to one of the actions to be coordinated, or in other cases is submitted after the petitioner obtains an order granting permission to submit the petition, which must be issued by the presiding judge of the court in which one of the actions to be coordinated is pending [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 3.520(b), 3.521(a); see Code Civ. Proc. § 404]. A memorandum and declarations must be submitted in support of the petition [Code Civ. Proc. § 404; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 3.521(a)].

With appropriate modifications, these points and authorities may be used to support a number of other motions, requests, or other papers to which the standards for coordination set out under Code Civ. Proc. § 404.1 also apply:

- A motion for permission to submit a petition for coordination, when this motion is a necessary prerequisite [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.520(b); see Code Civ. Proc. § 404];

- A response by a party other than the petitioner supporting the petition for coordination [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.526];

- A request for an order coordinating an additional action with other actions previously ordered coordinated [Code Civ. Proc. § 404.4; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.544].

For further discussion, see the Introduction, under Coordination Procedure, above.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should point to facts in the affidavits or declarations supporting the petition that show that the action is complex as defined by Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.400 et seq. [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.502], and that weigh in favor of coordination under the standards set out in Code Civ. Proc. § 404.1.

[b] Service of Memorandum

In coordination proceedings, all memoranda and declarations in support of any petition, motion, or application must be served and submitted at least nine court days before any hearing on the matter, unless otherwise provided in the rules, or directed by the assigned judge [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.513; see also Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.526 (time for response of another party in support of petition for coordination)]. Papers that must be submitted to the Chair of the Judicial Council under Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.511(a), such as petitions for coordination and responses in opposition to petitions for coordination, may be submitted electronically to the Chair of the Judicial Council in San Francisco [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.512].

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of petition for coordination, as well as other forms of notices of motions, supporting declarations, and orders relating to coordination proceedings, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice Ch. 125, Consolidation, Severance, and Coordination of Actions, § 125.10 et seq. (Matthew Bender).

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 45.52 may be used to oppose a petition supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[A] Benefits of Coordination Outweigh Potential Problems

McGhan Medical Corp. v. Superior Court (1992) 11 Cal. App. 4th 804, 14 Cal. Rptr. 2d 264), involved the issue of whether over 300 cases filed in approximately 20 counties should be coordinated. Plaintiffs in these cases were women with breast implants. Defendants were manufacturers of the devices, producers of the implant materials, and physicians who prescribed the implants' use. The trial court found that common questions of fact or law did not predominate (in that the cases involved different implants, designs, warnings, injuries, etc.) and, in light of the sheer number of cases pending and yet to befiled,that coordination would be impractical. The court also concluded that coordination would inconvenience all parties by requiring travel to one county and would unfairly tax the judicial resources of that county. Therefore, the coordination petition was denied (11 Cal. App. 4th 804, 808) .

The court of appeal granted the writ of mandate, reversing the trial court's order and ordering coordination. In reading the coordination statutes together with the rules promulgated by the Judicial Council for coordination, the court concluded that all cases did not have to be heard by the same judge and that the assigned judge had the discretion and flexibility to devise creative solutions such as (1) severing noncommon cases or issues, (2) ordering trial in more than one forum, (3) minimizing travel by all participants by lodging discovery materials in a central location accessible by computer networking or fax, and (4) centralizing motion practice in specific county courts (11 Cal. App. 4th 804, 812-813) . Thus, the benefits of coordination outweighed any potential delay or inequity.

[b] Balancing of Factors

Pesses v. Superior Court (1980) 107 Cal. App. 3d 117, 165 Cal. Rptr. 680 , involved petitions for writs of mandate by plaintiffs in several wrongful death actions in which the plaintiffs had moved to remand or transfer the actions from the county where the actions were coordinated to the county where the actions were originally brought. The trial court denied the motions after weighing considerations of common questions of fact, efficient utilization of judicial facilities and manpower, the courts' calendars, and disadvantages of duplicative and inconsistent rulings, against the convenience of witnesses. Plaintiffs sought the writs to compel the trial court to remand or transfer.

The court of appeal denied the petitions and held that the coordination judge did not abuse his discretion because there was evidence to support the existence of many factors favoring retention. The court stated that the parallel listing of the multiple factors in Code Civ. Proc. § 404.1 (governing coordination generally) and Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.543 (governing transfer of action or claim) necessitates the exercise of discretion in weighing and balancing the factors to determine whether coordination, or severance, best serves the ends of justice in a particular case. The court further stated that there is no reason why the coordination judge's discretion in such matters is any different than that afforded the trial court normally in a trial of factual issues (107 Cal. App. 3d 117, 125-126) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Complex Action Defined

In Thayer v. Wells Fargo Bank (2001) 92 Cal. App. 4th 819, 112 Cal. Rptr. 2d 284 , the court explained that although coordination under Code of Civ. Proc. § 404 is limited to "complex" cases, coordinated actions are not by definition difficult or novel. The criteria that determine whether actions are "complex" within the meaning of section 404 are set forth in the California Rules of Court, which defines a "complex case" as "an action that requires exceptional judicial management to avoid placing unnecessary burdens on the court or the litigants and to expedite the case, keep costs reasonable, and promote effective decision making by the court, the parties, and counsel" (Cal. Rules of Court, Rule 3.400(a)). In this case, the coordinated actions were "complex" within the meaning of the rule only because of the large number of represented parties in related actions pending in different counties. The court did not address the difficulty or novelty of the substantive legal issues presented because the petition to coordinate made no such claim; and the party seeking consolidation did so solely on the grounds the actions "are brought on behalf of overlapping classes, alleging virtually identical facts and legal theories, and involve the same defendant," and that coordination "would advance the convenience of the parties, witnesses and counsel" and thereby "promote the efficient utilization of judicial facilities and manpower ...#x2026; avoid the risk of duplicative and inconsistent rulings ...#x2026; [and] increase the possibility of settlement." The moving party did not allege, and the court did not find or even imply that the actions sought to be coordinated present "difficult or novel legal issues that will be time-consuming to resolve" (92 Cal. App. 4th 819, 836 n.8).

[b] Balancing of Factors

In Keenan v. Superior Court (1980) 111 Cal. App. 3d 336, 168 Cal. Rptr. 561 , shortly after five civil actions had been submitted to a coordination motion judge to consider whether the actions were appropriate for coordination, the trial court in which the actions were pending granted defendants a change of venue in three of the actions. Plaintiff-Petitioners sought a writ of mandate requiring the trial court to vacate its order. The court of appeal issued the writ, holding that the trial court's order was an improper intrusion on cases which had been assigned to the coordination motion judge. The court stated that notwithstanding the fact that the petition for coordination had not yet been granted, the statutory system reflects the legislative intent to give priority to pending coordination proceedings and that the coordination procedure, when applicable, was clearly intended to govern subsequent activities without interference by any judge other than those designated as coordination motion judge or coordination trial judge (111 Cal. App. 3d 336, 342-344) .

THE MOTION OF _____ [specify, e.g., PLAINTIFF] _____ [name] FOR AN ORDER STAYING THE PROCEEDINGS IN THIS ACTION PENDING DETERMINATION OF THE COORDINATION PROCEEDING SHOULD BE GRANTED ON THE GROUND THAT A STAY WILL PROMOTE THE ENDS OF JUSTICE.

[EITHER, if motion is for stay pending determination of petition for coordination]

A. Action May Be Stayed Pending Determination of Petition. Pending any determination of whether coordination is appropriate, the judge making that determination may stay any action being considered for, or affecting an action being considered for, coordination (Code Civ. Proc. § 404.5).

[OR, if motion is for stay to allow sufficient time to submit petition for coordination]

A. All Related Actions May Be Stayed for Time to Petition. To provide sufficient time for a party to submit a petition, the judge may, stay all related actions pending in that court for a reasonable time not to exceed 30 calendar days (Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.520(b)(3)).

B. Standards for Determining Whether Stay Is Appropriate. In ruling on an application for a stay order, the assigned judge must determine whether the stay will promote the ends of justice, considering (1) the imminence of any trial or other proceeding that might materially affect the status of the action to be stayed; and (2) whether a final judgment in that action would have a res judicata or collateral estoppel effect with regard to any common issue of the included actions (Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.515(f)).

These points and authorities may be used to support a motion for an order staying proceedings in an action or actions included in coordination proceedings. Specifically, it may be used to support a motion for a stay of all actions included in the coordination proceeding pending determination of a petition for coordination by a judge assigned for that purpose [Code Civ. Proc. § 404.5; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.515]. Alternatively, it may be used to obtain a stay of up to 30 calendar days of included actions pending in a particular court that grants a motion for leave to submit a petition for coordination to the Chair of the Judicial Council [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.520(b)]. A motion for an order staying proceedings included in a coordination proceeding must be supported by a memorandum and by affidavits [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.515(a)]. For further discussion, see the Introduction under Coordination Procedure, above.

A motion for an order staying proceedings pending determination of a petition for coordination may be made either simultaneously with the petition, or at any later time prior to the determination of the petition [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.515(a)]. If the form is used to support a motion for a stay order that is made after the submission of a petition for coordination, the caption should be modified to reflect the special title and number of the coordination proceeding, which is assigned by the coordination attorney [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.550(c); for a form of caption including such special title and number, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 125, Consolidation, Severance, and Coordination of Actions, § 125.10 et seq. (Matthew Bender)].

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship betweenthe facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should point tofacts in the affidavits establishing that the stay is appropriate under the standards set out in Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.515(f).

[b] Service of Memorandum

In coordination proceedings, all memoranda and declarations in support of any petition, motion, or application must be served and submitted at least nine court days before any hearing on the matter, unless otherwise provided in the rules, or directed by the assigned judge [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.513]. Papers that must be submitted to the Chair of the Judicial Council under Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.511(a), such as a motion for a stay, may be submitted electronically to the Chair of the Judicial Council in San Francisco [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.512].

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For form of motions for an order staying proceedings included in coordination proceedings, as well as related forms of declarations and orders, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 125, Consolidation, Severance, and Coordination of Actions, § 125.10 et seq. (Matthew Bender).

COORDINATION IS NOT APPROPRIATE BECAUSE A TRIAL IS IMMINENT IN ONE OF THE ACTIONS BEING CONSIDERED FOR COORDINATION.

Trial Is Imminent in an Action. The imminence of a trial in any action otherwise appropriate for coordination may be a ground for summary denial of a petition for coordination, in whole or in part (Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.521(d)).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be used to oppose a petition for coordination [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.525]. The ground for opposition is that a trial isimminent in one of the actions being considered for coordination [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.521(d)].

The term "petition for coordination" under Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.521, includes requests for coordination of actions submitted to a coordination trial judge pursuant to Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.544 (add-on cases) [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.501(14)]. Thus, with appropriate modifications, these points and authorities may be used to oppose a request to coordinate an add-on case. Failure to serve and submit a memorandum and declarations in opposition may be a ground for granting the request to coordinate an add-on case [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.544(b)].

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used to oppose a petition for coordination supported by the points and authorities set out in § 45.50.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Service of Memorandum

All memoranda and declarations in opposition to a petition for coordination must be served and filed at least nine court days before the date set for hearing [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.525]. Papers that must be submitted to the Chair of the Judicial Council under Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.511(a), such as petitions for coordination and responses in opposition to petitions for coordination, may be submitted electronically to the Chair of the Judicial Council in San Francisco [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.512].

§ 46.01 Scope of Chapter

This chapter contains memoranda of points and authorities for use in supporting [see §§ 46.20 -46.34] and opposing [see §§ 46.40 -46.51] demurrers to a complaint for damages arising from an alleged civil conspiracy and supporting [see §§ 46.35 -46.38] motions for summary judgment for a defendant in such an action for damages arising from civil conspiracy. It also contains a general form supporting the contention that defendant is liable under the doctrine of concert of action [see § 46.52]. Also included is a memorandum of points and authorities supporting a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict if the acting member of a conspiracy has been exonerated and there has been a judgment against the other alleged conspirator [see § 46.39]. In addition, the chapter contains a memorandum in opposition to the contention that a motion to amend a complaint to add an attorney as a conspirator should be denied for failure to file a verified petition as required by Civ. Code § 1714.10 [see § 46.53], and a memorandum in opposition to the contention that a cause of action may not be included in a complaint against an attorney for civil conspiracy with his or her client because a Civ. Code § 1714.10 order had not been obtained, if the party against whom the conspiracy is charged waived the requirement by failing to object in a timely manner [see § 46.54].

CHAPTER 46 CONSPIRACY
PART I. INTRODUCTION

4-46 California Points & Authorities § 46.04

§ 46.04 Types of Joint Liability

In the law of torts there are five basic theories under which joint liability may be imposed. First, joint liability may be imposed under the doctrine of vicarious liability, under which a person who has personally committed no tortious act may be held liable for tortious acts committed by another. Second, joint liability may be imposed on independent tortfeasors who have each proximately caused an indivisible harm to the plaintiff [see American Motorcycle Assn. v. Superior Court of Los Angeles County (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 578, 586] . Third, joint liability may be imposed under the theory announced in Summers v. Tice (1948) 33 Cal. 2d 80, 199 P.2d 1 . Fourth, joint liability may be imposed under the doctrine of civil conspiracy. Finally, joint liability may be imposed under the doctrine of concerted action liability.

There is a substantial overlap of the common law doctrines that may lead to joint liability. For example, the Restatement (Second) of Torts analyzes liability under the doctrine of civil conspiracy as a subcategory of concerted action liability [see Restatement (Second) of Torts § 876]. Although the California Supreme Court has generally endorsed the Restatement approach to concerted action [see Sindell v. Abbott Labs. (1980) 26 Cal. 3d 588, 604, 163 Cal. Rptr. 132, 607 P.2d 924] , the reported decisions have not discussed the relationship between the doctrines of conspiracy and concerted action. In addition, the doctrine of concerted action liability, to the extent that it applies to persons acting negligently together when only one of the persons directly causes the harm, overlaps with general negligence principles of proximate cause under which a person may be deemed liable for harm caused in an indirect manner [see Agovino v. Kunze (1960) 181 Cal. App. 2d 591, 598-600, 5 Cal. Rptr. 534] . Finally, the relationship of the doctrine of Summers v. Tice to concerted action liability has not been clearly stated by the courts [see Summers v. Tice (1948) 33 Cal. 2d 80, 84-85, 199 P.2d 1] .

For points and authorities relating to the imposition of joint liability on independent tortfeasors who proximately cause an indivisible harm, and for points and authorities relating to the doctrine of Summers v. Tice, see Ch. 165, Negligence .

PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT FOR DAMAGES ARISING FROM AN ALLEGED CIVIL CONSPIRACY FAILS TO STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION IN THAT IT FAILS TO ALLEGE THAT ANY DEFENDANT DID ANYTHING THAT, WITHOUT THE CONSPIRACY, WOULD GIVE RISE TO AN INDEPENDENT CAUSE OF ACTION.

A. Objection by Demurrer. The party against whom a complaint has been filed may object to the complaint by demurrer on the ground that it does not state facts sufficient to state a cause of action where such ground appears on the face of the complaint [or from any matter of which the court is required to or may take judicial notice] (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 430.10(e), 430.30(a)).

B. Elements Essential to Pleading Conspiracy. To state a cause of action for conspiracy, the complaint must allege facts showing: (1) the formation and operation of the conspiracy; (2) the wrongful act or acts done pursuant thereto; and

(3) the damage resulting therefrom (Unruh v. Truck Ins. Exch. (1972) 7 Cal. 3d 616, 631, 102 Cal. Rptr. 815, 498 P.2d 1063 ; Orloff v. Metropolitan Trust Co. (1941) 17 Cal. 2d 484, 488, 110 P.2d 396).

C. No Cause of Action for Civil Conspiracy Alone. A civil conspiracy does not in and of itself give rise to a cause of action unless a civil wrong has been committed resulting in damage (Unruh v. Truck Ins. Exch. (1972) 7 Cal. 3d 616, 631, 102 Cal. Rptr. 815, 498 P.2d 1063 ; Moropoulos v. C.H. & O.B. Fuller Co. (1921) 186 Cal. 679, 683, 200 P. 601).

D. Pleading of Facts Showing Independent Right of Action. In pleading a cause of action for damages based on conspiracy, the pleaded facts must show something was done which, without the conspiracy, would give rise to a right of action (Moropoulos v. C.H. & O.B. Fuller Co. (1921) 186 Cal. 679, 683, 200 P. 601 ; Tietz v. Los Angeles Unified Sch. Dist. (1965) 238 Cal. App. 2d 905, 913, 48 Cal. Rptr. 245).

[Optional] E. Necessity of Alleging Facts Showing Fraud, Not Generalities, Presumptions, and Conclusions. A complaint containing nothing more than bare allegations that the defendants entered into a conspiracy to defraud the plaintiff and committed certain acts in furtherance thereof does not state a cause of action unless those acts are connected with alleged facts which, if true, would support the charge that they were wrongful--inferences, generalities, presumptions, and conclusions are insufficient (Legg v. Ford (1960) 185 Cal. App. 2d 534, 542, 8 Cal. Rptr. 392).

[Optional] F. General Allegations of Restraint of Trade. General allegations of a conspiracy in restraint of trade, without a statement of the facts constituting the conspiracy and its object and accomplishment in the restraint of trade, are legal conclusions, insufficient to constitute a cause of action for damages for civil conspiracy (*Chicago Title Ins. [a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint for damages arising from civil conspiracy where the demurrer asserts that the complaint fails to allege facts showing that any defendant did anything that, without the alleged conspiracy, would give rise to an independent cause of action.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Elements Essential to Pleading Conspiracy

Unruh v. Truck Ins. Exch. (1972) 7 Cal. 3d 616, 102 Cal. Rptr. 815, 498 P.2d 1063 , arose out of acts alleged to have been committed by the workers' compensation insurer of plaintiff's employer in the course of its investigation of plaintiff's workers' compensation claim. The Supreme Court affirmed the trial court's sustaining of a general demurrer to and dismissal of a conspiracy count of that portion of the complaint for damages alleging the negligent failure to control the conduct of the investigation, holding that the count failed to state a cause of action for a civil wrong. The negligence count alleged that after plaintiff had injured her back and undergone surgeries, the insurer's agents placed her under surveillance, befriended her, and enticed her to conduct herself beyond her usual physical capabilities and that on learning of the deception, she suffered a physical and mental breakdown requiring hospitalization.

The complaint for damages for these injuries alleged intentional torts as well, but the conspiracy count against the insurer incorporated only the negligence count. The Court held that the insurer was an alter ego of the employer in this case, rather than a person other than the employer, and was thus immune from suit under Lab. Code §§ 3601 and 3852, providing that a workers' compensation claim is an employee's exclusive remedy against the employer and that the employee may bring suit for job-related injuries only against persons other than the employer. Thus, the Court ruled that the negligence count did not state a cause of action for a civil wrong against the insurer.

As to the conspiracy count, the Court stated that a civil conspiracy, however atrocious, does not per se give rise to a cause of action unless a civil wrong has been committed and damage results. Conspiracy (the agreement) is ordinarily not actionable by itself. To state a cause of action for conspiracy, said the Court, the complaint must allege: (1) the formation and operation of the conspiracy; (2) the wrongful act or acts done pursuant thereto; and (3) the damage resulting. Since the conspiracy count incorporated only the allegations of the negligence count so far as the insurer was concerned, it added nothing to the acts alleged in the negligence count. Therefore, the negligence count did not state a cause of action for a civil wrong against the insurer, and the Court ruled that the conspiracy count, like the negligence count, must succumb to the insurer's demurrer (7 Cal. 3d 616, 631) .

In Orloff v. Metropolitan Trust Co. (1941) 17 Cal. 2d 484, 110 P.2d 396 , the Supreme Court affirmed a trial court's order sustaining general demurrers to a third amended complaint containing a cause of action based on allegations of a civil conspiracy. The complaint alleged a contract for the purchase of stock of a brewery which provided that payments made to an escrow holder would be applied, after the satisfaction of claims of specified creditors, to other creditors, one of whom was plaintiff's assignor. The complaint further alleged a conspiracy by the defendants to defraud plaintiff by paying his assignor through certain dummies the sum due plaintiff under the assignment. The Court ruled that the allegations of the complaint were not sufficient since, to state a cause of action for conspiracy, facts must be alleged showing the formation and operation of a conspiracy and damage resulting from an act or acts done in furtherance of the plan and, since the cause of action is for the damage suffered and not the mere conspiracy, the complaint must state facts which show that a civil wrong was done resulting in damage. The Court added that the damage is the gist of the action. The complaint showed that the assignment gave the plaintiff no rights against anyone but the brewing company. His failure to receive payment from the escrow holder did not discharge the brewing company's obligation. From all that appeared in the complaint, the Court observed, the plaintiff could have recovered the full amount of the claim from the brewery. Thus, said the Court, the pleading lacked the required allegation of damage (17 Cal. 2d 484, 488) .

[b] No Cause of Action for Civil Conspiracy Alone

Unruh v. Truck Ins. Exch. (1972) 7 Cal. 3d 616, 102 Cal. Rptr. 815, 498 P.2d 1063 , is discussed in § 46.20[3][a].

Moropoulos v. C.H. & O.B. Fuller Co. (1921) 186 Cal. 679, 200 P. 601 , was an action alleging that the defendants had defrauded plaintiff of his interest in a partnership dairy farming business by conspiring: (1) to begin foreclosure proceedings under certain preexisting chattel mortgages on personal property on land leased by plaintiff's partner and used by the partnership after plaintiff's partner had defaulted on his payments, and later to purchase the chattels at a foreclosure sale; and (2) to take possession of the leased land from plaintiff, ousting him, and operating the farm to plaintiff's damage. The trial court sustained a demurrer to the complaint. The Supreme Court affirmed as to the first allegation of conspiracy but reversed as to the second allegation.

As to the first allegation, the Court observed that conspiracy is not actionable unless the combination results in the perpetration of an unlawful act or of some injurious act by unlawful means, noting that there was only the bare allegation that defendants entered into a conspiracy to defraud plaintiff and that the various acts alleged were done for the purpose of defrauding plaintiff. The Court found that this was not a sufficient allegation of fraud unless connected with a showing of facts which, if true, would support the charge that they were wrongful. There was no showing of any unlawful or wrongful act on the part of the defendants in the transaction down to and including their purchase of the chattels at the foreclosure sale. Defendants were innocent encumbrancers for value and so far as the foreclosure suit and judgment were concerned, under the facts pleaded, defendants were within their rights. Moreover, they had a perfect right to purchase the chattels at the foreclosure sale (186 Cal. 679, 683) .

As to the second allegation, the Court observed that defendants did not have any right to possession of the land or the partnership business. The allegations in the complaint showed that the leasehold interest which had been held by defendants as security for the partner's debt had been satisfied and assigned to a trustee of plaintiff. Therefore, the right to the use and occupancy of the land was still a partnership asset in the rightful possession of the plaintiff. Under a second assignment by the partner and his subassignee, defendants took no new interest against the plaintiff. At the time of the second assignment, the original assignment had been turned over to plaintiff's trustee and defendants had notice that plaintiff was in possession under a partnership agreement which transferred the use and possession of the premises to the copartnership. Thus, the Court ruled, the transfer was void against the purchaser with notice as to the interests of the nonconsenting partner. Thus, the allegations concerning plaintiff's ouster, that it was done wrongfully in pursuance of the alleged conspiracy and that in pursuance of such purpose defendants took possession of the farm and converted plaintiff's crops to their own use, depriving plaintiff of any further use of the premises under the lease, furnished the basis for a cause of action (186 Cal. 679, 683) .

[c] Pleading of Facts Showing Independent Right to Action

Moropoulos v. C.H. & O.B. Fuller Co. (1921) 186 Cal. 679, 200 P. 601 , is discussed in § 46.20[3][b].

In Tietz v. Los Angeles Unified Sch. Dist. (1965) 238 Cal. App. 2d 905, 48 Cal. Rptr. 245 , the court of appeal affirmed a trial court's judgment of dismissal after sustaining demurrers to a complaint for damages for mental distress, physical injury, and conspiracy by an employee against a city school district. The complaint alleged the use of coercion, threats, and duress to persuade plaintiff to transfer employment from one school to another. The defendants were the public school agencies involved, the school principals, and the principals' wives. The court found that the complaint failed to state a cause of action against both the school agencies, since plaintiff had failed to file a claim for workers' compensation, and the principals, since they were immune from suit for discretionary acts performed within the scope of their authority. As to the allegation that the defendant wives aided, abetted, and conspired with the principals, the Court noted the long-established rule that a conspiracy, in and of itself, however atrocious, does not give rise to a cause of action unless a civil wrong has been committed resulting in damage. Such a rule requires a determination of whether or not the pleaded facts show that something was done which, without the conspiracy, would give rise to a right of action. No right of action was alleged against the actual perpetrators of the alleged wrong, and no facts were pleaded showing any direct action by the wives other than that they aided, abetted, and conspired with their husbands to harm the plaintiff. Thus, the Court held that if no cause of action was stated against the husbands the mere allegation of an act of conspiracy, without more, would not be actionable against the wives (238 Cal. App. 2d 905, 913) .

[d] Necessity of Alleging Facts Showing Fraud, Not Generalities, Presumptions, and Conclusions

In Legg v. Ford (1960) 185 Cal. App. 2d 534, 8 Cal. Rptr. 392 , the court of appeal affirmed the trial court's judgment for defendants after demurrers to the complaint were sustained without leave to amend. The complaint was for fraud and conspiracy--the basic allegation of each cause of action being that defendants had conspired to defraud plaintiff, in her capacity as a judgment creditor, of the benefits due her under an insurance policy issued by one defendant. In the first cause of action, plaintiff alleged that (1) defendants conspired to deprive her of these rights by fraudulently protecting defendant's rights on appeal and in trial proceedings in a certain civil action, and (2) through the concerted acts and motives of defendants to aid the insurer and another defendant in collaboration with a judge, who was also a defendant, her age was improperly determined, thus depriving her of subsidy benefits. Similar allegations were set forth in other causes of action.

In observing that a conspiracy, in and of itself, however atrocious, does not give rise to a cause of action unless a civil wrong has been committed resulting in damage, the court of appeal added that a complaint which contains nothing more than bare allegations that the defendants entered into a conspiracy to defraud the plaintiff and committed certain acts in furtherance thereof does not state a cause of action unless those acts are connected with a showing of facts which, if true, would support the charge that they were wrongful--inferences, generalities, presumptions, and conclusions being insufficient. Moreover, it must be shown in the pleadings that the damage claimed was sustained by reason of the fraud, that is, that the fraud was the cause and the damage the effect. Without discussing the sufficiency of the allegations as to the formation and operation of the conspiracy or as to fraud in general, the court held that the complaint contained no factual allegations showing the relation between the asserted conspiracy to defraud and the damages alleged--that is, how or in what manner the alleged acts of the defendants affected plaintiff's rights as a judgment creditor if such rights existed. For this reason alone, the court held that none of the counts of the complaint stated facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action (185 Cal. App. 2d 534, 542) .

[e] General Allegations of Restraint of Trade

In Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Great W. Fin. Corp. (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 305, 70 Cal. Rptr. 849, 444 P.2d 481 , the facts and background of which are discussed in § 46.20[4][a], the Supreme Court ruled that contracts, combinations, or conspiracies in restraint of trade or commerce cannot be alleged generally in the words of the statute but that the facts which indicate their existence must be set forth. The Court added that general allegations of the existence and purpose of the conspiracy are insufficient and that the plaintiffs must alleged specific overt acts in furtherance thereof (69 Cal. 2d 305, 315) .

[a] Elements Essential to Pleading Conspiracy

In Wilcox v. Superior Court (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 809, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 446 , the plaintiff brought suit against the defendants for unfair business practice, intentional interference with economic advantage, and interference with existing contracts. The defendants filed a cross-complaint against the plaintiff for conspiracy to unlawfully restrain trade through a boycott of the defendants' shorthand reporting services. The trial court denied the plaintiff's motion to strike the cross-complaint, and the plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that the defendants failed to establish a probability that they would prevail. The court held that the defendants had not made a prima facie showing of facts to support the formation and operation of a conspiracy, because they produced no legally sufficient evidence of the plaintiff's agreeing with anyone else to injure their business ventures or reputations (27 Cal. App. 4th 809, 828) . A memo distributed by the plaintiff urging support for a pending lawsuit against the defendants was not unlawful. Nothing unlawful was agreed to in a phone conversation between the plaintiff and the lead plaintiff in this pending litigation. An agreement could not be inferred from claimed similarities between the memo distributed by the plaintiff and another memo distributed by persons other than the plaintiff, which not only supported the lawsuit, but could be construed as calling for a boycott of the defendants' services, because there was no evidence that the plaintiff ever received this other memo, agreed with it, or agreed to take the actions urged in it (27 Cal. App. 4th 809, 829) .

Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Great W. Fin. Corp. (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 305, 70 Cal. Rptr. 849, 444 P.2d 481 , was an action for injunctive relief and damages for unfair trade practices and combinations in restraint of trade in which plaintiffs appealed from the trial court's order of dismissal entered after it sustained without leave to amend demurrers to plaintiffs' fourth amended complaint. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the conspiracy allegations of the complaint were insufficient. The complaint contained allegations to the general effect that one defendant corporation had formed a second corporation at the insistence of a third corporation to divert business from the plaintiffs, and that a fourth corporation had prevailed on two others to send business to the third corporation, to the plaintiff's damage. The plaintiffs conceded that they had not pleaded facts concerning the violations of antitrust statutes alleged to have been committed by defendants but contended that such references were sufficient.

The Court ruled that to state a cause of action for conspiracy, the complaint must allege (1) the formation and operation of the conspiracy, (2) the wrongful act or acts done pursuant thereto, and (3) the damage resulting from such act or acts. The Court noted that general allegations of agreement are sufficient and that the conspiracy allegation is unnecessary, providing the unlawful acts or civil wrongs are otherwise sufficiently alleged. Finding that activities condemned by antitrust law are contracts, combinations, or conspiracies in restraint of trade or commerce, the Court held that they cannot be alleged generally in the words of the statute. Not only must facts which indicate the existence of such contracts, combinations, or conspiracies be set forth, thereby showing the existence of an unlawful trust or combination, but a plaintiff must also allege and prove that his business or property has been injured by the very fact of the existence and prosecution of such unlawful trust or combination 69 Cal. 2d 305, 316-317) .

[b] No Cause of Action for Civil Conspiracy Alone

Bank of Cal. v. Pan Am. Tire Corp. (1982) 132 Cal. App. 3d 843, 183 Cal. Rptr. 470 , is discussed in § 46.40[4][a]. In reversing a summary judgment against the defendants in an action for conspiracy to convert the plaintiff's property, the court of appeal noted that a conspiracy does not in and of itself give rise to a cause of action unless a civil wrong has been committed resulting in damages (132 Cal. App. 3d 843, 848) .

In Minniear v. Tors (1968) 266 Cal. App. 2d 495, 72 Cal. Rptr. 287 , the court of appeal affirmed, in part, a trial court's judgment of nonsuit in an action for conspiracy to defraud plaintiff and convert his literary property to the use of defendants. The complaint sought damages, in part, based on allegations that there was a fraudulent conversion by defendants of a TV pilot film and the story outlines for subsequent episodes of a TV series. Although the court reversed the judgment of nonsuit insofar as it pertained to a cause of action for breach of contract to purchase the literary material, the court held that, nevertheless, there was no protectable property. Thus, in the absence of protectable property right, there could be no conversion of plaintiff's idea. Whatever the defendant learned when the pilot film was screened for him and from the mimeographed synopsis he retained, it was not sufficient to grant any property rights to the plaintiff for the eventual TV series. As to conspiracy, the court held that civil conspiracy is not an independent tort or cause of action. Without a tort or wrong to property, the conspiracy allegations against a defendant in a civil action are meaningless (266 Cal. App. 2d 495, 506) .

Tietz v. Los Angeles Unified Sch. Dist. (1965) 238 Cal. App. 2d 905, 48 Cal. Rptr. 245 , is discussed in § 46.20[3][c].

Orloff v. Metropolitan Trust Co. (1941) 17 Cal. 2d 484, 110 P.2d 396 , is discussed in § 46.20[3][a].

In Beeler v. West Am. Fin. Co. (1962) 201 Cal. App. 2d 702, 20 Cal. Rptr. 190 , the facts and background of which are discussed in § 46.24[3][a], the court of appeal noted that the only allegations which tied the demurring defendant into an alleged conspiracy to defraud plaintiff consisted of general statements. It held that the allegations were merely generalities and conclusions and that they were insufficient as a statement of a cause of action against that defendant (201 Cal. App. 2d 702, 707) .

In Kinney v. Postal Tel.-Cable Co. (1932) 123 Cal. App. 70, 10 P.2d 1043 , the court of appeal affirmed the trial court's sustaining of a general demurrer to a complaint alleging conspiracy to defraud. The complaint was against a telegraph company and others to recover damages for an alleged conspiracy to (1) harass and oppress plaintiff; (2) do him intentional wrong; (3) destroy, injure, and dissipate his property; (4) deprive him of credit and the means of obtaining a livelihood; and (5) acquire his property without consideration by those means. After reviewing the general law governing liability for civil conspiracy, the court commented that a complaint which contains nothing more than bare allegations that defendants entered into a conspiracy to defraud plaintiff and committed certain acts in furtherance thereof does not state a cause of action unless those acts are connected with a showing of facts which, if true, would support the charge that they were wrongful. In such a case, inferences, generalities, presumptions, and conclusions are insufficient. In the case at issue, the court held that the complaint failed to allege any fact or circumstance showing any violation of duty by the defendants (123 Cal. App. 70, 75) .

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint for damages arising from a civil conspiracy where the demurrer asserts that the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in that it appears on the face thereof, or from any matter of which the court is required to or may take judicial notice, that the defendant or defendants had a legal right to do the act complained of and, thus, that the complaint fails to allege an underlying wrong.

Where appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

With appropriate modifications, these points and authorities may be used to support a motion for summary judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] where the use of affidavits or declarations is necessary to establish the legality of the act complained of.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Legal Right to Commit Act Complained of

In Agnew v. Parks (1959) 172 Cal. App. 2d 756, 343 P.2d 118 , the trial court sustained a general demurrer to a cause of action for damages for conspiracy to keep certain doctors from testifying on her behalf in a prior medical malpractice action. The court of appeal affirmed. The plaintiff's allegations of conspiracy were against the doctors and a medical association and were to the effect that the doctors had refused to testify on her behalf because the association threatened to expel them from membership and to report them to their insurers to cause cancellation of their malpractice insurance. Noting that none of the doctors had been retained by the plaintiff to examine or treat her, the court held that there is no legal duty on a doctor's part to agree to serve as an expert witness for one with whom he has no preexisting contractual relationship (although a doctor who has treated or examined a patient may be compelled to testify for the patient). The court then stated that in a civil conspiracy no cause of action can arise if one had a legal right to do the act complained of, no party becomes liable by reason of the fact that he induced one to stand on and assert his legal rights, and it is not actionable coercion or duress to threaten to do what one has a legal right to do. These rules compelled the conclusion that regardless of motive, neither the alleged conduct preventing the doctors from testifying nor the activity of the association in controlling its members was actionable, either alone or in combination (172 Cal. App. 2d 756, 764) .

[b] Evil Motive for Act Not Unlawful

In Union Labor Hosp. Ass'n v. Vance Redwood Lumber Co. (1910) 158 Cal. 551, 112 P. 886 , the Supreme Court reversed a trial court's judgment granting an injunction restraining defendants from conspiring to hinder and destroy plaintiff's hospital business. Plaintiff alleged in its complaint that defendant lumber companies had conspired to collect money from their employees in order to finance the employees' necessary medical treatment and to restrict the hospitals to which the employees could go for treatment to those on a list which excluded plaintiff. The trial court determined that defendants had perpetrated an illegal boycott and enjoined its continuance.

The Supreme Court stated that in the absence of contractual relations between plaintiff and defendants, the latter were under a duty only to refrain from inflicting a legal wrong on plaintiff. It found that defendants has acted solely for the purpose of serving their own interests. Even if their purpose were to injure plaintiff's business, unless they adopted illegal means to that end, their conduct did not render them liable, since an evil motive which may inspire the doing of an act not unlawful will not of itself make the act unlawful. The Court ruled that no illegal means were used in persuading their employees to contribute to the medical payment plan. If further observed that defendants had the undoubted right to deal with any hospital they desired to select and that they did not prohibit their employees from using the plaintiff's hospital. Thus, defendants were within their legal rights and their motive was not a subject for inquiry (158 Cal. 551, 554) .

In Lesperance v. North Am. Aviation, Inc. (1963) 217 Cal. App. 2d 336, 31 Cal. Rptr. 873 , the court of appeal affirmed a trial court's judgment of dismissal of a complaint for damages for conspiracy to cause plaintiff's employment to be terminated after sustaining a demurrer to the second amended complaint. The complaint alleged that in mid-April plaintiff's supervisor informed plaintiff that he, plaintiff, was suffering from mental illness and ordered him to take two weeks off with pay and six months off without pay and to see a psychiatrist; that as a consequence, he did not subsequently report to work; and that in the first week of the next month, he received notice from his employer informing him of the termination of his employment for absence without notification. It further charged that the employer and other defendants entered into a conspiracy to cause the termination of his employment because of animosity toward him.

The court of appeal noted that a conspiracy cannot be made the subject of a civil action unless something is done which, without the conspiracy, would give a right of action and that the complaint must state facts which show that a civil wrong was done resulting in damages. Moreover, the court noted that an evil motive which may inspire the doing of an act not unlawful will not of itself make the act unlawful. Applying these principles to the pleading in this case, the court held that plaintiff had not stated a cause of action. The employer had the right--so far as it appeared--to terminate plaintiff's employment without committing a civil wrong. The fact that the employer may have been inspired by animosity toward the plaintiff would not make the termination unlawful. Likewise, the charge of conspiracy did not transform a legal act into a civil wrong (217 Cal. App. 2d 336, 346) .

[c] Conspiracy to Commit Privileged Act

In Pettitt v. Levy (1972) 28 Cal. App. 3d 484, 104 Cal. Rptr. 650 , the court of appeal affirmed the trial court's order sustaining a demurrer without leave to amend to a complaint that defendants had conspired to prepare and submit a false or forged document to city government authorities, causing plaintiff's application for a zoning variance to be denied. The court of appeal noted that a publication made in any legislative or other official proceeding authorized by law is privileged under former Civ. Code § 47(2) (now see Civ. Code § 47(b)), that underlying the privilege is the important public policy of affording the utmost freedom of access to such proceedings, and that the privilege is absolute. The court then held that contrary to plaintiff's contention the allegation of conspiracy among the defendants to do the privileged acts does not remove the privilege. Where a complaint charges a conspiracy and the commission of a wrongful act, the only significance of the conspiracy charge is that each member may be held responsible as a joint tortfeasor, regardless of whether or not he directly participated in the act. A conspiracy, in and of itself, however atrocious, does not give rise to a cause of action unless a civil wrong has been committed resulting in damage. It requires a determination of whether or not the pleaded facts show that something was done which, without the conspiracy, would give rise to a cause of action. The court concluded that the only acts alleged to have been done pursuant to the conspiracy were the preparation and submission of a false or forged building permit and that because those acts were privileged, the allegation of conspiracy added nothing and did not vitiate the privilege (28 Cal. App. 3d 484, 491) .

[d] Basic Policy Decisions of Governmental Agencies

In Osborne v. Huntington Beach Union High Sch. Dist. (1970) 5 Cal. App. 3d 510, 85 Cal. Rptr. 793 , the court of appeal affirmed a judgment dismissing plaintiff's action, which was entered after the trial court had sustained general demurrers to plaintiff's complaint for damages arising from an alleged conspiracy to breach real estate broker contracts. The complaint alleged that plaintiff had been employed, pursuant to separate oral agreements, both to locate a parcel of real property for defendant school district and to purchase and locate a buyer for a parcel of property owned by defendant water district. It further alleged that on learning of these agreements, each district communicated with the other, "advised" the that there was a way to save money in the transaction by depriving plaintiff of his commission, and "advised" the other to breach its oral contract with the plaintiff. The court noted that the oral contracts were each subject to the statute of frauds, former Civ. Code § 1624(2), (5) (now see Civ. Code § 1624(a)) and were, therefore, unenforceable. The advice given by one governmental agency to another not to perform an unenforceable oral contract, to which the latter agency and a third person are parties, when the contract is an incident of a transaction in which the advising agency has an interest is the product of a basic policy decision to which immunity attaches. Thus, the court concluded that the demurrer had been properly sustained on the ground that the districts were immune from liability. The conspiracy cause of action did not allege that anything was done which, without the conspiracy, would give rise to a cause of action (5 Cal. App. 3d 510, 515) .

NOTE:

Civ. Code § 1624 was amended in 1998 and now provides that notwithstanding the statute of frauds, an agreement that is otherwise enforceable is not invalid for lack of a note, memorandum, or other writing and is enforceable if the agreement or contract is a qualified financial contract, as defined by this section, and there is sufficient evidence to indicate that a contract has been made or the parties agreed to be bound by the terms of the qualified financial contract.

[e] Termination of Contract Terminable at Will

In Patterson v. Philco Corp. (1967) 252 Cal. App. 2d 63, 60 Cal. Rptr. 110 , the court of appeal affirmed a trial court's judgment of dismissal after sustaining a general demurrer to a complaint in an action against an employer for damages for conspiracy to wrongfully discharge the plaintiff. The complaint alleged that a fellow employee and certain others sued by fictitious names acted to induce plaintiff's discharge and that as a result the employer wrongfully discharged him. The court noted that intentional and unjustifiable interference with contractual relations can be actionable and that the mere fact that an employment contract is terminable at will does not preclude damages in all circumstances. Nevertheless, the court held that plaintiff's employment was "at will" and did not come within the class of cases which hold that a conspiracy action will lie against a party to the contract who is included among the defendant conspirators. The court noted that in Wise v. Southern Pac. Co. (1963) 223 Cal. App. 2d 50, 35 Cal. Rptr. 652 , the court of appeal had held that an action for conspiracy to breach a contract would lie against a party thereto but had refused to extend its holding to contracts terminable at will in the absence of a wrongful act. Since plaintiff's complaint did not state facts which would limit the right of the employer to discharge him, that is, that the discharge was prohibited by statute or reasons of public policy, it was not within that class of cases wherein the employer may be held liable for conspiring with third parties to breach the contract of employment. In holding that a cause of action for conspiracy to wrongfully breach a contract or induce the breach of contract will lie against the other party to the contract who is sued as a conspirator, the court of appeal noted the existing rule that where the contract is terminable at will and no wrongful act is alleged, no action can lie against the other party to the contract for conspiracy to do something that party can lawfully do. That rule, said the court, merely echoes the broad principle that a conspiracy is not actionable unless it results in the perpetration of an unlawful act or some injurious act by unlawful means (252 Cal. App. 2d 63, 68) .

[f] Termination of Employment

Lesperance v. North Am. Aviation, Inc. (1963) 217 Cal. App. 2d 336, 31 Cal. Rptr. 873 , is discussed in § 46.21[3][b].

[g] Act of Litigation Is Privileged

In Thompson v. California Fair Plan Assn. (1990) 221 Cal. App. 3d 760 , plaintiff insured brought an action against her insurance company alleging a civil conspiracy between the insurance company and the former owner of her property to deprive her of the proceeds of a fire insurance policy on a structure which had burned. The insurance company demurred on the ground that the claim was barred by the statute of limitations. The trial court overruled the demurrer, finding that the insurer's opposition to an earlier declaratory judgment action was the last overt act in furtherance of the conspiracy and that act was alleged to have been done within the limitation period. The insurer thereafter filed a motion for summary judgment. The motion was granted on the ground that this last overt act was privileged under Civ. Code § 47(b) (allegation in pleading as privileged publication). The plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the summary judgment. The court stated that the issue was the viability of the only overt act that could prevent the statute of limitations from running on the cause of action for conspiracy. This act, the insurer's opposition to the earlier declaratory judgment action, could not be deemed a wrongful act because it was absolutely privileged based on considerations of public policy encouraging free access to the courts. Accordingly, the court held that no conspiracy liability could attach for the defense of the first lawsuit and the defense of the suit could not serve as an overt act sufficient to revive an otherwise time-barred claim on a conspiracy theory (221 Cal. App. 3d 760, 767-768) .

[h] Lack of Capability of Committing Underlying Tort

In Weinbaum v. Goldfarb, Whitman & Cohen (1996) 46 Cal. App. 4th 1310, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 462 , allegedly wrongfully terminated employees brought an action for conspiracy against their employer and a third party. The complaint alleged that the employees were fired for refusing to participate in a fraudulent conspiracy which benefited the employer and the third party. The trial court sustained a demurrer by the third party, and ordered it dismissed.

The court of appeal affirmed the order of dismissal, declaring that tort liability arising from conspiracy presupposes that the coconspirator is legally capable of committing the tort. Since a nonemployer owes no tort duty to refrain from discharging another's employee, it cannot be bootstrapped into tort liability through a plea of conspiracy (46 Cal. App. 4th 1310, 1316-1317) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Legal Right to Commit Act Complained of

In Beeler v. West Am. Fin. Co. (1962) 201 Cal. App. 2d 702, 20 Cal. Rptr. 190 , the facts and background of which are discussed in § 46.24[3][a], the court of appeal affirmed the trial court's sustaining of a general demurrer of a defendant in an action for damages arising from an alleged conspiracy, pointing out that the defendant trustee's act complained of consisted of the assignment of a defaulted note and deed of trust and that this was an act which it had a perfect legal right to do (201 Cal. App. 2d 702, 707) .

[b] Lack of Capability of Committing Underlying Tort

In Klistoff v. Superior Court (2007) 157 Cal. App. 4th 469, 68 Cal. Rptr. 3d 704 , plaintiff city sued a waste hauling business and its principal for conspiracy to violate Gov. Code § 1090, which prohibits public officials from holding financial interests in public contracts. The complaint stemmed from payments made by defendants to a city official in order to ensure that defendants won a contract with the city. Defendants demurred to the cause of action for conspiracy, but the trial court overruled the demurrer. Defendants filed a writ petition, which was granted by the court of appeal. The court of appeal held that private parties could not be liable for conspiracy to violate the provisions of Gov. Code § 1090, which only prohibits public officials from holding financial interests in public contracts. Because the statute did not apply to private parties, defendants could not be held liable for conspiracy to violate the statute (157 Cal. App. 4th 469, 479-480) .

In Everest Investors 8 v. Whitehall Real Estate Ltd. P'ship XI (2002) 100 Cal. App. 4th 1102, 123 Cal. Rptr. 2d 297 , the plaintiffs were limited partners in several limited partnerships. Following a suit brought against the general partners by other limited partners charging breach of fiduciary duty, the general partners agreed to sell the partnerships to a third party for significantly less than their fair market value, without soliciting bids and selling to the highest bidder or otherwise maximizing the return to the limited partners. The plaintiffs then brought their suit against the general partners and the third party buyer, alleging a conspiracy to breach the general partners' fiduciary duties to the limited partners. The third party successfully demurred on the grounds that it did not owe a fiduciary duty to the plaintiffs and thus could not be liable for conspiracy to commit a breach of fiduciary duty. The court of appeal agreed that the third-party buyer, who was not a fiduciary of the plaintiffs, was not liable for conspiring with the fiduciary to commit a breach of fiduciary duty. Although the plaintiffs argued that the third party could be liable for conspiracy because it was acting in its own interests, the court rejected this claim, noting that the plaintiffs were trying to apply an exception to the agent's immunity rule, under which an agent may be liable for conspiracy with its principal if the agent is acting to further its own interests, even though there was no agency relationship between the general partners and the buyer (100 Cal. App. 4th 1102, 1106-1108) .

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint where the demurrer asserts that the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in that it appears on the face thereof, or from any matter of which the court is required to or may take judicial notice, that the action is based on the violation of a criminal statute by one or more of the defendants.

Although this form states a general rule that no civil right can be predicated on a mere violation of a criminal statute involving the common law crime of obstruction of justice (withholding of documentary evidence or the giving or suborning of false testimony) and the statutory crimes of giving or suborning false testimony, it should be noted that, generally, civil liability for conspiracy to commit a civil wrong exists where there is a conspiracy to accomplish a criminal act by concerted action [see § 46.52] and that one is liable as a conspirator, even if he or she joins a criminal conspiracy after the completion of the criminal acts [see § 46.41].

Where appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Civil Right Not Predicated on Violation of Criminal Statute

Babu v. Petersen (1935) 4 Cal. 2d 276, 48 P.2d 689 , involved a suit by plaintiff, an alien, to foreclose a mortgage on certain land which defendant gave to plaintiff as collateral to secure her promissory note made to plaintiff. Defendant's cross complaint alleged that plaintiff was an alien and ineligible legally to own real property or any interest therein under the existing alien land law and that plaintiff and others had conspired to violate the law by colorable transfers of the land to defendant in order to prevent escheat to the state. The cross complaint also sought cancellation of the mortgage and note and quieting of title in the land in her. The trial court found, on evidence the Supreme Court found totally insufficient to support the findings, that all of the defendant's allegations were true and that she owned the land thus notwithstanding her participation in a conspiracy to violate the law. The Court ruled that plaintiff came within the provision of the law that if two or more persons conspire to violate any provision of the alien land law they would be subject to criminal penalties. However, it then held that no civil right can be predicated on the violation of a criminal statute and concluded that the defendant had no title to quiet and, moreover, was barred by the maxim of equity that a claimant cannot prevail on the weakness of his adversary's title but must stand or fall on the strength of his title (4 Cal. 2d 276, 288) .

In Agnew v. Parks (1959) 172 Cal. App. 2d 756, 343 P.2d 118 , the trial court sustained a general demurrer to a cause of action for conspiracy to obstruct the orderly prosecution of a prior civil action through the subornation of perjury and fraud on the trial court in that action. The court of appeal affirmed. The complaint alleged a conspiracy on the part of a medical association and a named doctor, wherein: (1) the association recommended that the court appoint the doctor as an unprejudiced witness to examine plaintiff and to testify that such recommendation was in accord with a plan to recommend a doctor favorable to defendant in that action, (2) after his appointment the named doctor appeared as an alleged disinterested witness for plaintiff but testified falsely and unfavorably to her case, and (3) pursuant to the conspiracy, certain x-ray evidence was concealed. The court noted that the common law crime of obstruction of justice is not recognized by statute, although perjury and subornation of perjury are statutory felonies. However, said the court, no civil right can be predicated on a mere violation of a criminal statute and, on the theory that there must be an end to litigation, aside from defamation and malicious prosecution, no injury is recognized from false testimony on which a civil action for damages can be maintained. Moreover, since one who by perjury has injured another is not answerable civilly, neither is the one procuring the same. Although concealing or withholding documentary evidence is a felony, the court stated that this too is subject to the rule foreclosing the maintenance of a civil action for injury (172 Cal. App. 2d 756, 765) .

[b] Common Law Crime of Obstruction of Justice

Agnew v. Parks (1959) 172 Cal. App. 2d 756, 343 P.2d 118 , is discussed in § 46.22[3][a].

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Civil Right Not Predicated on Violation of Criminal Statute

In Legg v. Ford (1960) 185 Cal. App. 2d 534, 8 Cal. Rptr. 392 , the facts and background of which are discussed in § 46.20[3][d], the court of appeal noted that if plaintiff was attempting to allege that pursuant to the conspiracy pleaded the defendant judge made a finding for the purpose of causing plaintiff to commit perjury, such a theory attempted to charge a conspiracy to commit the crime of subornation of perjury under Penal Code §§ 127 and 182. Subornation of perjury, said the court, being a crime and not a tort, is subject to criminal prosecution brought in the interest of the state and not to redress a private wrong (185 Cal. App. 2d 534, 542-543) .

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint for damages arising from a civil conspiracy, if the demurrer asserts that the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action because it appears on the face of the complaint, or from any matter the court is required to or may take judicial notice of, that the defendant was a party to the contract in question and thus legally incapable of committing the tort of interference with contract, and therefore that the complaint fails to allege an underlying wrong.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should state facts showing that the defendant was a party to the contract in question.

With appropriate modifications, these points and authorities may be used to support a motion for summary judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] if affidavits or declarations are necessary to establish that defendant was a party to the contract.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Contracting Party Legally Incapable of Committing Tort of Interference With Own Contract

In Applied Equip. Corp. v. Litton Saudi Arabia Ltd. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 503, 28 Cal. Rptr. 2d 475, 869 P.2d 454 , plaintiff entered into a subcontract to supply spare parts under which plaintiff was entitled to a markup on the price of items purchased for the contractor, and plaintiff agreed to purchase electron tubes only from defendant, who manufactured them. Plaintiff issued a purchase order for 11 tubes to defendant, who accepted and acknowledged the order. Subsequently, the contractor and defendant agreed that defendant would sell only 6 tubes to plaintiff directly and would sell another 6 tubes at a lower price directly to the contractor. After defendant presented plaintiff with a renegotiated purchase order, which resulted in a reduction in plaintiff's commission, plaintiff sued defendant for breach of the contract created by the original purchase order and for tortious interference with the contract, including conspiracy to interfere. After a jury trial, the trial court entered judgment in plaintiff's favor both for contract damages and for tort damages for conspiracy to interfere with contract.

The court of appeal affirmed the contract awards, but reversed the tort judgment for inconsistency in the jury's verdicts. It rejected defendant's argument that defendant could not, as a matter of law, be held liable for conspiring to interfere with its own contract. Defendant petitioned for review of this issue in the Supreme Court, which reversed and remanded for further proceedings.

The Supreme Court agreed with defendant that a contracting party cannot be liable for conspiracy to interfere with its own contract, because conspiracy requires an underlying wrong and a party to a contract is legally incapable of committing the tort of interference with contract (7 Cal. 4th 503, 514) . In so ruling, the Court rejected a court of appeal decision, Wise v. Southern Pac. Co. (1963) 223 Cal. App. 2d 50, 65-72, 35 Cal. Rptr. 652 , which had concluded that holding a contracting party liable for conspiracy to interfere in its own contract was consistent with the principle that all involved in the common scheme are jointly and severally responsible for the ensuing wrong. The Court rejected the rule of Wise not only because it illogically expanded the doctrine of civil conspiracy by imposing tort liability for an alleged wrong--interference with a contract--that the alleged tortfeasor was legally incapable of committing, but also because it obliterated vital and established distinctions between contract and tort theories of liability by, in effect, permitting recovery of tort damages for an ordinary breach of contract (7 Cal. 4th 503, 510) . The Court noted that a party to a contract, whose duty is simply to perform the contract according to its terms and who owes no tort duty to refrain from interfering with its performance, cannot be bootstrapped into tort liability by pleading conspiracy (7 Cal. 4th 503, 514) .

PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT FOR DAMAGES ARISING FROM AN ALLEGED CIVIL CONSPIRACY FAILS TO STATE FACTS SUFFICIENT TO CONSTITUTE A CAUSE OF ACTION IN THAT IT FAILS TO ALLEGE FACTS SHOWING THAT DEFENDANT KNOWINGLY ENTERED INTO AN AGREEMENT FORMED FOR THE PURPOSE OF DOING A WRONGFUL ACT AGAINST THE PLAINTIFF.

A. Objection by Demurrer. [See § 46.20[1], Paragraph A.]

B. Essential Allegations to Assertion of Conspiracy. The essential allegations to the assertion of a cause of action based on an alleged conspiracy are (1) a concert of action between the defendants to accomplish the purpose of the conspiracy, (2) the illegality of their actions which furthered a common scheme or design to achieve the unlawful purpose of the conspiracy, and (3) knowledge on the part of the alleged conspirators of the conspiracy and its unlawful purpose (*Kidron v. [a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint for damages arising from a civil conspiracy where the demurrer asserts that the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against the demurring defendant in that it fails to allege his or her knowing entry into an actionable conspiracy.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Points and Authorities

For a memorandum of points and authorities in support of a motion for summary judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] asserting the point that summary judgment for the defendant is proper where the defendant merely knew of, acquiesced in, or approved of the alleged conspiracy without cooperating or agreeing to cooperate with the other defendants, see § 46.36.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Essential Allegations to Assertion of Conspiracy

In Kidron v. Movie Acquisition Corp. (1995) 40 Cal. App. 4th 1571, 47 Cal. Rptr. 2d 752 , discussed in § 46.24[3][b], the court stated that to prove a claim of civil conspiracy the plaintiff was required to prove three elements: (1) the formation and operation of the conspiracy, (2) wrongful conduct in furtherance of the conspiracy, and (3) damages arising from the wrongful conduct (40 Cal. App. 4th 1571, 1581) .

In Holder v. Home Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1968) 267 Cal. App. 2d 91, 72 Cal. Rptr. 704 , the court of appeal ruled that the trial court had properly dismissed a conspiracy count after granting a motion for nonsuit in an action for fraudulent concealment and misrepresentation. The complaint sought rescission of an agreement to purchase real property from defendant lender because of alleged fraudulent misrepresentations and concealments (allegedly made by the lender, its agents, and certain sales agents) as to the amount necessary and sufficient to cover a monthly prorating of taxes levied on the property.

The court acknowledged the rule that the existence of a conspiracy may be inferred from circumstances and that it need not be the result of an express agreement but may rest on tacit assent and acquiescence. However, the essentials to the existence of a conspiracy are: (1) concert of action between the conspirators to accomplish the purpose of the conspiracy; (2) the taking of illegal actions in furtherance of a common scheme or design to achieve the unlawful purpose of the conspiracy; and (3) knowledge on the part of the alleged conspirators of the conspiracy and its unlawful purpose. The court stated that the record did not show that any officer of the lender knew of an intent or misrepresent willfully the amount of existing tax liens or liabilities or of an intent to give assurance as a matter of fact of the amounts of any future tax levies and concluded, therefore, that the conspiracy count had properly been dismissed (267 Cal. App. 2d 91, 108) .

In Beeler v. West Am. Fin. Co. (1962) 201 Cal. App. 2d 702, 20 Cal. Rptr. 190 , the court of appeal affirmed a judgment for a corporate trustee under a deed of trust entered by the trial court after it had sustained defendant trustee's demurrer to a complaint for fraud and conspiracy. The court held that the complaint did not allege that the trustee had any knowledge of the alleged fraud or conspiracy or that there was any affirmative and knowing participation therein by the trustee. The complaint alleged that in the sale of the plaintiff's property, another defendant who was plaintiff's agent, learned of a note secured by the deed of trust on the property, that the trustee had recorded its notice of default thereon, and that the note could be substantially discounted to plaintiff's advantage, but that he used the information to aid a third and fourth defendant to obtain an interest in the property adverse to that of plaintiff. It further alleged that this was done in collaboration and conspiracy with the trustee under the deed of trust.

The court of appeal ruled that to assert a valid cause of action, a complaint based on an alleged conspiracy must show (1) a concert of action between the defendants to accomplish the purpose of the conspiracy, (2) the illegality of their actions which furthered a common scheme or design to achieve the unlawful purpose of the conspiracy, and (3) knowledge of the conspiracy and its unlawful purpose. The plaintiff contended that the allegation in his complaint which tied the demurring trustee in as a participant in the alleged conspiracy was that the other defendants acted in collaboration and conspiracy with the trustee. The court noted that no facts were alleged which in any way tied in the demurring defendant as a conspirator. It held that the allegations it cited were merely generalities and conclusions and insufficient to state a cause of action against defendant trustee. The court further observed that plaintiff had not alleged that the trustee had any knowledge of the agent's alleged violation of his fiduciary duty to his principal or of the alleged conspiracy between the agent and those who obtained an interest in the plaintiff's property. It then held that without an allegation of some fact to show the trustee's affirmative and knowing participation in the alleged fraud, the complaint was vulnerable to the trustee's general demurrer. From the record, said the court, it would appear that the trustee, as the owner and holder of the plaintiff's defaulted note and deed of trust, had assigned those instruments to the other defendants and that this was an act which it had a perfect legal right to do (201 Cal. App. 2d 702, 707) .

[b] Necessity of Alleging Defendant's Knowledge of Conspiracy

In Kidron v. Movie Acquisition Corp. (1995) 40 Cal. App. 4th 1571, 47 Cal. Rptr. 2d 752 , the originator of the concept for a television series, sued his producers and a distributor for conspiracy to commit fraud in removing plaintiff from the venture. At the conclusion of plaintiff's case, the distributor moved for nonsuit, and the trial court granted the motion, dismissing the distributor. The court of appeal noted that to prove involvement in a conspiracy by the distributor, plaintiff was required to prove that the distributor knew about the alleged scheme by the producers to defraud plaintiff, and that it intentionally joined them in this scheme (40 Cal. App. 4th 1571, 1597) . However, plaintiff failed to produce any substantial evidence that the distributor either knew or intentionally agreed to join the producers in the perpetration of the alleged scheme. The court thus affirmed the judgment of nonsuit and the dismissal of the distributor as a conspirator (40 Cal. App. 4th 1571, 1598) .

Beeler v. West Am. Fin. Co. (1962) 201 Cal. App. 2d 702, 20 Cal. Rptr. 190 , is discussed in § 46.24[3][a].

[a] Essential Allegations to Assertion of Conspiracy

In Choate v. County of Orange (2000) 86 Cal. App. 4th 312, 103 Cal. Rptr. 2d 339 , the plaintiffs brought a federal civil rights action and charges of a civil conspiracy against a group of sheriff's deputies. The lawsuit stemmed from a fight that occurred late one night after the plaintiffs and their companions attacked the deputies, who were off duty, as they were leaving a party. In the course of the fight, which resulted in several arrests, the off-duty deputies injured the plaintiffs prior to the arrival of two on-duty deputies. In the civil conspiracy claim, the plaintiffs alleged that the two on-duty deputies waited long enough before arriving on the scene for the off-duty deputies to "finish the plaintiffs off," and then subsequently filed knowingly false and misleading police reports to cover up this fact. The trial court granted a nonsuit of the plaintiffs' conspiracy claims and denied a motion for retrial, and the court of appeal affirmed. The court of appeal noted the heavy burden faced a plaintiff alleging a civil conspiracy to show that the defendants had an actual agreement, a meeting of the minds, to commit the wrong forming the basis for the conspiracy claim. Independent actions combined with unsupported conjecture of a conspiracy is insufficient. In this case, the plaintiffs offered no proof that the deputies had agreed to commit battery on the plaintiffs and then intentionally engage in a cover-up (86 Cal. App. 4th 312, 333-335) .

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint that asserts that the complaint alleging a civil conspiracy on the part of a corporation and defendant agent fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in that it appears on the face of the complaint that defendant was sued in his or her capacity as an agent or employee of the corporation rather than as an individual for acts performed for his or her own advantage.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in §§ 46.42 and 46.43 may be used to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Two or More Persons or Entities Required

The facts and procedural background of Applied Equip. Corp. v. Litton Saudi Arabia Ltd. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 503, 28 Cal. Rptr. 2d 475, 869 P.2d 454 , are discussed in § 46.23[3][a]. In that case, the California Supreme Court ruled that a party to a contract cannot be held liable in tort for conspiring to interfere with its own contract, overruling a contrary holding in Wise v. Southern Pac. Co. (1963) 223 Cal. App. 2d 50, 65-72, 35 Cal. Rptr. 652 . However, the Court quoted with approval the definition in Wise of the so-called "agent's immunity rule," under which agents and employees of a corporation cannot conspire with their corporate principal or employer if they are acting in their official capacities on behalf of the corporation and not as individuals for their individual advantage. The Court noted that other Court cases had endorsed and applied that rule and that nothing in its decision was intended to abrogate or impair the rule (7 Cal. 4th 503, 512) .

In Black v. Bank of Am. (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 1, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 725 , plaintiffs had obtained financing, secured by a crop lien, from defendant bank for 17 years for their various agricultural enterprises. Plaintiffs began negotiations with defendant for loans for the 1984-85 operating year. Despite defendant's representations that it would renew existing loans and grant new loans, defendant eventually notified plaintiffs that it would not provide loans for that operating year and called off all guarantees of existing loans. As a result, several of plaintiffs' companies filed for bankruptcy. Plaintiffs filed a complaint alleging that defendant bank and its employees had conspired to conceal from them the decision not to grant them further loans so that plaintiffs would continue to invest in the 1985 crops, making them more valuable when defendant foreclosed on this security. Defendants demurred, asserting that the complaint failed to state a cause of action. The trial court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend and dismissed the action, and plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, citing the long-established rule that agents and employees of a corporation acting in their official capacities on behalf of the corporation and not for their individual advantage cannot conspire with their corporate principal or employer (30 Cal. App. 4th 1, 4) . The court acknowledged the exception to this so-called "agent's immunity" rule for corporate employees that owe a duty to a plaintiff independent of the corporation's duty, but noted that this exception threatens to swallow the rule (30 Cal. App. 4th 1, 4-5) . The court noted that cases applying this exception generally involved agents and employees outside the corporate structure of the principal, whereas the case before it involved a single corporation and its own employees; in the court's view, the agent's immunity rule has particular force in this type of situation (30 Cal. App. 4th 1, 5-6) . If a corporate employee acts on behalf of the corporation in the course of his or her employment, the two entities required to have a conspiracy are lacking because there is no entity with whom the employee can conspire. The court noted the settled rule that a corporation cannot conspire with itself any more than a private individual can; because the acts of its employees are the acts of the corporation, holding that a subordinate employee of a corporation can be liable for conspiring with the corporation would destroy this settled rule (30 Cal. App. 4th 1, 6) . The court also noted that plaintiffs could not rely on the exception to the agent's immunity rule that holds corporate employees liable for conspiracy with the corporation if they either act for their own individual advantage and not solely on the corporation's behalf, or act beyond the scope of their authority; plaintiff's complaint had clearly alleged that defendant bank employees had acted in the course and scope of their employment and agency (30 Cal. App. 4th 1, 6) .

[b] Corporation Cannot Conspire With Itself or Its Agents

Black v. Bank of Am. (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 1, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 725 , is discussed in § 46.25[3][a].

[c] Corporate Agents Cannot Conspire With Corporation

Black v. Bank of Am. (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 1, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 725 , is discussed in § 46.25[3][a].

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Corporate Agents Cannot Conspire With Corporation

In Zumbrun v. University of S. Cal. (1972) 25 Cal. App. 3d 1, 101 Cal. Rptr. 499 , the court of appeal reversed the trial court's sustaining of a general demurrer to a complaint for breach of contract but ruled that plaintiff's cause of action for conspiracy was vulnerable to demurrer. The complaint alleged that the university, certain of its trustees, and certain of its employees had conspired, as part of a faculty strike in protest against United States action in Cambodia, to breach the university's contract to complete the teaching of a required college course. The court of appeal noted that the plaintiff had not received all that she bargained for when she enrolled in the course and ruled that whether or not the partial failure of consideration justified refund of a portion of the tuition and fee allocable to the course was a matter for proof at trial and that it was error to sustain the demurrer as to the university. As to the conspiracy allegations, the court held that the complaint was vulnerable in its allegations pertaining to damages, since there was no allegation which informed defendants of the causal connection between the alleged wrongs and the damages claimed, and allegations of damages without allegations of fact to support them are but conclusions of law. The court added that, moreover, agents or employees of a corporation cannot conspire with the corporation while acting in their official capacities on behalf of the corporation rather than as individuals acting for their individual advantage (25 Cal. App. 3d 1, 12-13) .

PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT FOR DAMAGES ARISING FROM AN ALLEGED CIVIL CONSPIRACY BETWEEN DEFENDANT AND HIS/HER PRINCIPAL FAILS TO STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION BECAUSE THE DUTY DEFENDANT IS ALLEGED TO HAVE CONSPIRED TO VIOLATE IS A DUTY THAT IS BINDING ON THE PRINCIPAL ALONE.

A. Objection by Demurrer. [See § 46.20[1], Paragraph A.]

B. Duty Not Binding on Agent Defendant. A complaint that alleges a conspiracy by an agent to cause his or her principal to violate a duty that is binding on the principal alone, and that does not purport to rely on any other duty on the part of the agent, fails to state a cause of action for conspiracy against the agent (*Doctors' Co. v. [a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint for damages arising from a conspiracy between an agent and a principal to cause the principal to violate a duty that is binding on the principal alone.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the facts showing that the duty that the alleged conspiracy was intended to violate was one binding only on the principal, and not on the agent.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Duty Not Binding on Agent Defendant

In Doctors' Co. v. Superior Court (1989) 49 Cal. 3d 39, 260 Cal. Rptr. 183, 775 P.2d 508 , the plaintiff in a medical malpractice action alleged that his physician's insurer, the insurer's attorney, and an expert witness hired by the insurer conspired to violate the insurer's statutory duty under Ins. Code § 790.03(h)(5) to attempt in good faith to effectuate a prompt, fair, and equitable settlement of a claim in which liability has become reasonably clear. The defendants filed general demurrers to the complaint. The trial court overruled the demurrers, and the defendants petitioned the court of appeal for a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to sustain their demurrers. The court of appeal summarily denied issuance of the writ and the Supreme Court granted review. The Supreme Court issued a peremptory writ of mandate directing the superior court to vacate its order overruling the demurrers and to enter a new order sustaining the demurrers.

The Supreme Court held that an agent or employee may not be held liable for conspiracy to cause their principal to violate a duty that is binding on the principal alone. The Court, citing Gruenberg v. Aetna Ins. Co. (1973) 9 Cal. 3d 566, 576, 108 Cal. Rptr. 480, 510 P.2d 1032 , and Wise v. Southern Pac. Co. (1963) 223 Cal. App. 2d 50, 72, 35 Cal. Rptr. 652 , concluded that because the duty that the defendant agents are alleged to have conspired to violate is imposed by statute solely on persons engaged in the business of insurance under Ins. Code § 790.01, and the noninsurer defendants were acting merely as agents of the insurer and not as individuals for their individual advantage, they cannot be held accountable on a theory of conspiracy. The opinion distinguished, however, those circumstances in which the agent acted in furtherance of his or her own financial gain or in which the agent owed an independent duty to the plaintiff. The Supreme Court explicitly disapproved the contrary holding of Wolfrich Corp. v. United Services Automobile Assn. (1983) 149 Cal. App. 3d 1206, 1211 (49 Cal. 3d 39, 47-49) .

[a] Duty Not Binding on Agent Defendant

In Gruenberg v. Aetna Ins. Co. (1973) 9 Cal. 3d 566, 108 Cal. Rptr. 480, 510 P.2d 1032 , the owner of a business damaged by fire sued his insurance carrier, its law firm, and outside adjusters for conspiracy to violate the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. Defendants filed general demurrers to the complaint, and the trial court sustained the demurrers with leave to amend. The Supreme Court reversed the judgment and remanded with directions to overrule the demurrer with respect to the insurance carrier. The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment sustaining the general demurrers with respect to the noninsurer defendants, and concluded that under Wise v. Southern Pacific (1963) 223 Cal. App. 2d 50, 72 , because the noninsurer defendants were not subject to the implied duty, and the plaintiff contended they breached only the duty of good faith and fair dealing, the complaint did not state sufficient facts to constitute a cause of action against them (9 Cal. 3d 566, 576, 581) .

§ 46.27 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)] for Damages Arising From Civil Conspiracy--Failure to Allege Facts Showing Damage Resulting From Alleged Conspiracy

[Caption. See § 46.20[1].]

PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT FOR DAMAGES ARISING FROM AN ALLEGED CIVIL CONSPIRACY FAILS TO STATE FACTS SUFFICIENT TO CONSTITUTE A CAUSE OF ACTION IN THAT IT FAILS TO ALLEGE THAT THE PLAINTIFF INCURRED DAMAGE RESULTING FROM THE PERPETRATION OF A CIVIL WRONG AGAINST HIM/HER BY THE ALLEGED CONSPIRATORS.

A. Objection by Demurrer. [See § 46.20[1], Paragraph A.]

B. Elements Essential to Pleading Conspiracy. [See § 46.20[1], Paragraph B.]

C. Cause of Action for Resulting Damage. A civil conspiracy does not in and of itself give rise to a cause of action unless a civil wrong has been committed and damage results (Unruh v. Truck Ins. Exch. (1972) 7 Cal. 3d 616, 631, 102 Cal. Rptr. 815, 498 P.2d 1063 ; Orloff v. Metropolitan Trust Co. (1941) 17 Cal. 2d 484, 488, 110 P.2d 396).

D. Facts Showing Causal Connection Between Wrong and Damages Claimed. Allegations of damages not supported by fact are but conclusions of law, which are not admitted by demurrer; thus, a complaint which fails to state fact informing the defendants of the causal connection between the alleged acts on defendants' parts and the damages claimed is vulnerable to a general demurrer (Zumbrun v. University of S. Cal. (1972) 25 Cal. App. 3d 1, 12, 101 Cal. Rptr. 499).

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint for damages arising out of a civil conspiracy when the demurrer asserts that it appears from the face of the complaint that no damage resulted to the plaintiff from the perpetration of the alleged conspiracy or that the complaint fails to state that damage did so result.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Cause of Action for Resulting Damage

Unruh v. Truck Ins. Exch. (1972) 7 Cal. 3d 616, 102 Cal. Rptr. 815, 498 P.2d 1063 , is discussed in § 46.20[3][a].

In Orloff v. Metropolitan Trust Co. (1941) 17 Cal. 2d 484, 110 P.2d 396 (the facts and background of which are discussed in § 46.20[3][a]), the Supreme Court held that a complaint alleging a cause of action based on conspiracy was insufficient because it failed to allege any damage, stating that since the cause of action is for the damage suffered, and not the mere conspiracy, the complaint must state facts that show that a civil wrong was done resulting in damage. The Court noted that because the operation of the conspiracy did not discharge the obligation involved, which was owed to plaintiff by a third party and from whom plaintiff could have recovered, plaintiff suffered no damage by reason of the conspiracy (17 Cal. 2d 484, 488) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Cause of Action for Resulting Damage

In Bank of Cal. v. Pan Am. Tire Corp. (1982) 132 Cal. App. 3d 843, 183 Cal. Rptr. 470 , the court of appeal reversed a summary judgment against defendants in an action for conspiracy to convert plaintiff's property. The court noted that a conspiracy does not in and of itself give rise to a cause of action unless a civil wrong has been committed resulting in damage (132 Cal. App. 3d 843, 848) .

In Straughter v. Safety Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1966) 244 Cal. App. 2d 159, 52 Cal. Rptr. 871 , the court of appeal affirmed a trial court's order dismissing a complaint following the sustaining of a demurrer. The complaint alleged that plaintiff was a licensed real estate broker, that defendants conspired to use his license without his knowledge by listing plaintiff as the broker in a scheme to obtain certain loans and deposits, and that defendants conspired to collect, and did collect, commissions for obtaining such loans and deposits in plaintiff's name, appropriating the commissions to defendants' own use and refusing to pay them to plaintiff after his discovery of the practice. The court ruled, however, that because there was no allegation that (1) plaintiff had rendered any services for, or had any contractual relationship with, defendants or the third persons from whom the commissions had been collected; (2) defendants had collected the commissions unlawfully; (3) plaintiff suffered financial loss, pecuniary damages to his business or reputation, or damage of any kind, as a result of the defendants' alleged misconduct; or (4) plaintiff had performed services or was damaged in his capacity as a real estate broker, the complaint did not show something which, without the purported conspiracy, would give rise to a cause of action (244 Cal. App. 2d 159, 162-163) .

[b] Facts Showing Causal Connection Between Wrong and Damages Claimed

Legg v. Ford (1960) 185 Cal. App. 2d 534, 8 Cal. Rptr. 392 , the facts and background of which are discussed in § 46.20[3][d], involved allegations of conspiracy to defraud plaintiff as a judgment creditor. The court of appeal stated the general principles that fraud without damage furnishes no ground for action and that it must be shown in the pleading that the damage claimed was sustained by reason of the fraud and that there was a relationship between the fraud and the damage alleged. There were no factual allegations in the complaint in this case that showed the relation between the alleged conspiracy to defraud and the damages alleged, that is, how or in what manner the alleged acts of the defendants affected plaintiff's rights, if any, as a judgment creditor (185 Cal. App. 2d 534, 542) .

§ 46.28 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)] for Damages Arising From Civil Conspiracy--Action Based on Alleged Attorney-Client Conspiracy--Failure to Obtain Order Establishing Reasonable Probability of Success [Civ. Code § 1714.10(b)]

[Caption. See § 46.20[1].]

PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT FOR DAMAGES ARISING FROM AN ALLEGED CIVIL CONSPIRACY BETWEEN DEFENDANT ATTORNEY AND HIS/HER CLIENT FAILS TO STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION IN THAT PLAINTIFF DID NOT ESTABLISH, PURSUANT TO THE PROCEDURE SET FORTH IN CIVIL CODE SECTION 1714.10, THAT THERE IS A REASONABLE PROBABILITY THAT HE/SHE/IT WOULD PREVAIL IN THE ACTION.

A. Objection by Demurrer. [See § 46.20[1], Paragraph A.]

B. Court's Permission Required Prior to Filing Complaint. A plaintiff may not include, in a complaint or other pleading, a cause of action against an attorney based on a civil conspiracy between the attorney and the attorney's client, arising from any attempt to contest or compromise a claim or dispute, and which is based on the attorney's representation of the client, unless the court has entered an order allowing the pleading to be filed (Civ. Code § 1714.10(a)).

C. Plaintiff Must Establish Reasonable Probability of Prevailing in Action. A court will allow such a claim for civil conspiracy to be filed only after it determines that the party seeking to file the pleading has established that there is a reasonable probability that the party will prevail in the action (Civ. Code § 1714.10(a)). A reasonable probability is established by plaintiff's prima facie showing (Burtscher v. Burtscher (1994) 26 Cal. App. 4th 720, 726 ; Hung v. Wang (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 908, 933-934, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 113).

D. Failure to Obtain Order Is Defense. The failure to obtain an order when required by Civil Code Section 1714.10(a) is a defense to an action for civil conspiracy filed in violation of that subdivision (Civ. Code § 1714.10(b)).

[Optional] E. Defense of Failure to Obtain Order Applies to Single Conspiracy Action Brought Against Both Attorney and Law Firm. When a single conspiracy cause of action is brought against both an attorney and his or her law firm, the entire cause of action is subject to the defense of failure to meet the prefiling requirements of Section 1714.10, even if one of the exceptions of Civ. Code § 1714.10(c) applies to the conspiracy action as brought against the individual attorney (Evans v. Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 599, 607, 76 Cal. Rptr. 2d 679).

[Optional] F. Requirement to Obtain Order Does Not Violate Due Process Guaranty. Civil Code Section 1714.10 is rationally related to a legislative goal of reducing unmeritorious conspiracy claims against attorneys. The statute provides a plaintiff the opportunity to submit a verified petition and supporting affidavits, and the statute does not impose a higher standard of proof than would be imposed in the trial. Therefore, the statute does not violate the plaintiff's right to due process (Hung v. Wang (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 908, 924-925, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 113).

[Optional] G. Requirement to Obtain Order Does Not Violate Equal Protection Guaranty. Civil Code Section 1714.10 is rationally related to the legislature's goal of relieving a perceived increase in legal malpractice insurance premiums and recusal of counsel resulting from claims that attorneys tortiously conspired with their clients. This is a peculiar harm that does not arise when nonattorneys are joined in a conspiracy cause of action. Therefore, the statute does not violate a plaintiff's right to equal protection of the law (Hung v. Wang (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 908, 926, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 113).

[Optional] H. Requirement to Obtain Order Does Not Violate Guaranty of Jury Trial in Civil Cases. Civil Code Section 1714.10 requires a prefiling procedure to determine only whether the plaintiff's conspiracy pleading is legally sufficient and whether it is supported by sufficient evidence to make a prima facie case for the plaintiff. So construed, the statute does not violate the plaintiff's right to a jury trial (Hung v. Wang (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 908, 931, 933-934, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 113).

[Optional] I. Denial of Order Is Res Judicata to Action. An order denying a petition under Civil Code Section 1714.10(b) that was based on the same primary right as an action for conspiracy is res judicata and a bar to the conspiracy action (Castro v. Higaki (1994) 31 Cal. App. 4th 350, 359, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 84).

[Optional] J. Attorney's Financial Gain Exception Requires More Than Monetary Compensation for Legal Services. For purposes of the exception to the procedural requirements of Civil Code Section 1714.10 found in subsection (c)(2), which excepts pleadings alleging that the attorney's acts go beyond the performance of a professional duty to serve the client and involve a conspiracy to violate a legal duty in furtherance of the attorney's financial gain, the phrase "in furtherance of the attorney's financial gain" requires that the attorney derive economic advantage over and above the monetary compensation received in exchange for professional services actually rendered on behalf of the client, regardless of whether the attorney fees charged are alleged to have been excessive (Berg & Berg Enters. v. Sherwood Partners, Inc. (2005) 131 Cal. App. 4th 802, 835-836, 32 Cal. Rptr. 3d 325).

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint for damages that arises from a conspiracy between an attorney and the attorney's client, that arises from any attempt to contest or compromise a claim or dispute, and that is based on the attorney's representation of the client, if the plaintiff has failed to obtain an order authorizing the action pursuant to Civ. Code § 1714.10. Optional Paragraph I may be used if a basis of the demurrer is that plaintiff had previously attempted to obtain a Civ. Code § 1714.10 order and the court had denied the petition.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, if the plaintiff attempted to obtain a Civ. Code § 1714.10 order by a verified petition, and the order was denied, defendant should set out the details of the application and denial.

In appropriate circumstances, a trial court may permit amendment of the complaint after sustaining a demurrer based on failure to comply with Civ. Code § 1714.10 [Central Concrete Supply Co., Inc. v. Bursak (2010) 182 Cal. App. 4th 1092, 1103, 105 Cal. Rptr. 3d 909] . For example, amendment might be allowed when the plaintiff appears able to allege that the attorney was not providing legal representation at the time of the alleged conspiratorial conduct, as well as when plaintiff appears able to allege that the attorney's acts went beyond the performance of a professional duty to serve the client and involved a conspiracy to violate a legal duty in furtherance of the attorney's financial gain [Central Concrete Supply Co., Inc. v. Bursak (2010) 182 Cal. App. 4th 1092, 1103, 105 Cal. Rptr. 3d 909 ; see Civ. Code § 1714.10(a), (c)]. Thus, as a practical matter, a plaintiff who did not seek a pre-filing order, but who has a compelling argument that the pre-filing order requirement does not apply, should be allowed to amend his or her complaint to specifically allege the facts supporting that conclusion if he or she failed to do so in the original complaint.

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

If appropriate, the points and authorities in § 46.51 may be used to oppose the demurrer supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff Must Establish Reasonable Probability of Prevailing in Action

In Burtscher v. Burtscher (1994) 26 Cal. App. 4th 720, 31 Cal Rptr. 2d 682 , plaintiff filed suit against her ex-husband, his new wife, and their corporation, for their actions regarding certain disputed real and personal property, and later filed a motion for an order under Civ. Code § 1714.10 to amend the complaint to allege civil conspiracy between the original defendants and the ex-husband's attorneys. The trial court issued the order after reviewing evidence that showed that one of the attorneys had accompanied the new wife (who intended to take possession) to the real property, had called a locksmith to open the house, had called a deputy sheriff to threaten the occupant with trespass, and had had plaintiff's personal property removed to a storage company. Defendants appealed from the order allowing plaintiff to add the conspiracy cause of action, and filed a petition for writ of supersedeas.

The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's order, rejecting defendants' argument that a party seeking an order under Civ. Code § 1714.10 must make more than a prima facie showing to meet the requirement of establishing that the party has a reasonable probability of prevailing in the action. The court noted that Hung v. Wang (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 908, 933-934, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 113 , the "seminal" case interpreting Civ. Code § 1714.10, has held that reasonable probability means only a prima facie showing. The court saw no reason to depart from this standard, because trial courts ruling on this type of motion are merely performing a "gatekeeping" function by filtering out frivolous allegations of conspiracy; they are not weighing conflicting evidence, determining credibility, or drawing inferences (26 Cal. App. 4th 720, 725-726) . The court then rejected defendants' claim that plaintiff had failed to make a prima facie showing. The court held that the evidence clearly showed not only that the attorney was an active participant in retaking possession, but also that her resorting to self-help rather than filing an unlawful detainer action was conduct that went far beyond the role of legal representative (26 Cal. App. 4th 720, 726-727) .

The facts and procedural background of Hung v. Wang (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 908, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 113 , are discussed in § 46.28[3][c]. The plaintiff argued that Civ. Code § 1714.10 violates the California Constitution's right to a jury trial in civil cases because it empowers the trial court to weigh the evidence on both sides and precludes the filing of a conspiracy complaint unless the trial court determines that plaintiff probably will prevail in a trial. In considering and rejecting this argument, the court interpreted the statutory language "reasonable probability" as meaning that the court must permit plaintiff to file the complaint if the proposed pleading is legally sufficient and if plaintiff has presented evidence showing that a prima facie case will be established at trial (8 Cal. App. 4th 908, 933-934) .

[b] Defense of Failure to Obtain Order Applies to Single Conspiracy Action Brought Against Both Attorney and Law Firm

In Evans v. Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 599, 76 Cal. Rptr. 2d 679 , plaintiffs filed a cross-complaint in a declaratory relief action, alleging, among other causes of action, a cause of action for civil conspiracy against the law firm seeking declaratory relief and an individual attorney in the firm. The law firm and attorney demurred to the conspiracy cause of action on the ground that it had been filed without compliance with Civ. Code § 1714.10. The cross-plaintiffs responded that the exceptions to the prefiling requirements found in Civ. Code § 1714.10(c) applied to their conspiracy action. The demurrer to the conspiracy cause of action was overruled.

The court of appeal reversed with directions to strike the conspiracy cause of action. The court of appeal held that the exception of Civ. Code § 1714.10(c)(1), which applies when the attorney has an independent legal duty to the plaintiff, did not apply to the conspiracy claim brought against the law firm. The court of appeal also held that the exception of Civ. Code § 1714.10(c)(2), which applies when the attorney's acts go beyond the performance of a professional duty to serve the client and involve a conspiracy to violate a legal duty in furtherance of the attorney's financial gain, also did not apply to the claim brought against the firm. Thus, the court found that the prefiling requirements of Civ. Code § 1714.10 applied to the action as brought against the law firm. However, the court of appeal did conclude that one of the exceptions could be applied to the conspiracy action as brought against the individual attorney. Despite this, the court concluded that when a single conspiracy cause of action is brought against both an attorney and his or her law firm, the entire cause of action is subject to the defense of failure to meet the prefiling requirements of Civ. Code § 1714.10, since Civ. Code § 1714.10(a) directs that "[n]o cause of action against an attorney for a civil conspiracy ... shall be included in a complaint or other pleading unless the court enters an order allowing the pleading" (65 Cal. App. 4th 599, 607) .

[c] Requirement to Obtain Order Does Not Violate Due Process Guaranty

In Hung v. Wang (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 908, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 113 , the plaintiff alleged a conspiracy by attorneys and their clients. The plaintiff deliberately did not seek an order under Civ. Code § 1714.10, because the plaintiff intended to test the constitutionality of the statute. (The plaintiff adopted this tactic after the trial court had denied a petition by the plaintiff under the statute in a related action. The plaintiff did not appeal from the denial but instead petitioned the court of appeal for an extraordinary writ, which the court refused to issue because the denial order was appealable.) The defendants moved to strike the complaint because of violation of the statute. The trial court granted the motion and dismissed the action. On appeal the plaintiff attacked the statute on three constitutional grounds. Regarding two of those grounds, see § 46.28[3][d],[e].

The plaintiff argued that the statutory scheme failed to meet the minimum requirements of due process because of not providing for an impartial decision-maker, not providing an opportunity for discovery, and imposing a higher standard of proof to obtain the order than would be required at a trial. The court of appeal rejected the first argument as patently spurious. The second argument was meritless because plainly the statute provides for a special proceeding of a civil nature, which would be considered as an "action" under the Civil Discovery Act [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2016.020(a)]. The third argument failed for lack of supporting authority and because the court concluded, in analyzing the jury-trial issue, that the argument was simply wrong. The court said, "We conclude that section 1714.10 is rationally related to the legislative goal of reducing unmeritorious conspiracy claims against attorneys. As we have seen, the statute provides a plaintiff the opportunity to submit a verified petition, the proposed complaint, and supporting affidavits. The [trial] court must consider these, as well as any opposing affidavits, prior to determining whether the plaintiff has established that 'there is a reasonable probability that the party will prevail in the action.' This statutory scheme is within the legislature's plenary power to prescribe procedures defining and limiting tort litigation" (8 Cal. App. 4th 908, 924-925) .

[d] Requirement to Obtain Order Does Not Violate Equal Protection Guaranty

The procedural background of Hung v. Wang (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 908, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 113 , is described in § 46.28[3][c].

The plaintiff argued on appeal that Civ. Code § 1714.10 does not serve a compelling state interest and therefore violates the equal protection guaranty. The court of appeal observed that the proper test is not whether the statute serves a compelling state interest but is whether there is a rational relationship between the legislative goal and the class singled out for unequal treatment. The statute's requirement for an order permitting filing of the conspiracy complaint is analogous to the claim-filing procedure required under the California Tort Claims Act, which has been upheld against an equal-protection challenge. The court concluded, "Section 1714.10 is rationally related to the legislature's goal of relieving a perceived increase in legal malpractice insurance premiums and recusal of counsel resulting from claims that attorneys tortiously conspired with their clients. This is a peculiar harm which does not arise when nonattorneys are joined in a conspiracy cause of action. Section 1714.10 does not violate appellant's right to equal protection of the law" (8 Cal. App. 4th 908, 925-926) .

[e] Requirement to Obtain Order Does Not Violate Guaranty of Jury Trial in Civil Cases

The procedural background of Hung v. Wang (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 908, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 113 , is described in § 46.28[3][c].

The plaintiff argued on appeal that Civ. Code § 1714.10 violates the California constitutional right to a jury trial in civil cases because it empowers the trial judge to weigh the evidence on both sides, and it precludes the filing of a conspiracy complaint unless the judge determines that the plaintiff probably will prevail in a trial. The court of appeal first rejected the premise that the statute requires the trial judge to weigh the evidence and make an adjudicative decision. The plaintiff's argument rested on the meaning of the statutory language permitting the filing of a conspiracy complaint only "after the court determines that the party seeking to file the pleading has established that there is a reasonable probability that the party will prevail in the action" [Civ. Code § 1714.10(a)]. The court of appeal concluded that this requires the plaintiff to show that he or she has a case that will survive a motion for nonsuit and, if successful, will be supported by sufficient evidence to warrant affirmance on appeal (8 Cal. App. 4th 908, 929) . The statute "requires a prefiling procedure to determine whether the proposed conspiracy pleading is legally sufficient, and whether it is supported by a sufficient prima facie showing of facts to sustain a favorable decision if the evidence submitted by the petitioner is credited. If either of these requirements is not met, the petition must be denied; if both are satisfied, it must be granted. This is a determination of law, not of fact" (8 Cal. App. 4th 908, 931) .

After determining what the statute requires, the court observed that the procedure under Civ. Code § 1714.10 is similar to the summary judgment procedure, except that the burden of proof is shifted from the defending party to the pleading party. The court concluded, "As we construe section 1714.10, the trial court may not make findings as to the existence of facts based on a weighing of competing declarations. Whether or not the evidence is in conflict, if the petitioner has presented a sufficient pleading and has presented evidence showing that a prima facie case will be established at trial, the trial court must grant the petition. This test meets the high standard required under ... [Walker v. Superior Court (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 257, 269-270, 279 Cal. Rptr. 576, 807 P.2d 418] to avoid infringement of the right to jury trial" (8 Cal. App. 4th 908, 933-934) .

[f] Denial of Order Is Res Judicata to Action

In Castro v. Higaki (1994) 31 Cal. App. 4th 350, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 84 , plaintiff's petition pursuant to Civ. Code § 1714.10 for leave to file a complaint for conspiracy was denied. The original action was one by plaintiff for personal injuries sustained in a bombing, and plaintiff was successful in obtaining a substantial monetary judgment. While an appeal in the personal injury case was pending, plaintiff filed the petition for leave to file a complaint for conspiracy against the defendant's attorneys on the ground that they had conspired to transfer the defendant's assets overseas. The trial court denied the petition, and subsequently denied a motion for reconsideration. Plaintiff then appealed from the order denying the motion for reconsideration. Defendant moved to dismiss this appeal on the grounds that the order denying the motion for reconsideration was nonappealable, and that plaintiff had not prosecuted the appeal with diligence. While the appeal regarding the petition was still pending, the plaintiff filed a complaint which was virtually identical to the proposed complaint in the petition. Defendant demurred to the new complaint on the res judicata ground that plaintiff was attempting to split her cause of action because she was raising the same issue as in the petition to file a complaint for conspiracy. The trial court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend. Subsequently, the court of appeals granted the defendant's motion to dismiss plaintiff's appeal from the order denying the motion for reconsideration. Plaintiff then filed a motion to set aside the order sustaining the demurrer to the new complaint, claiming that she had never had her primary right adjudicated. The trial court denied the motion and dismissed the case, stating that the final determination of the petition to file a conspiracy complaint was res judicata as to the new complaint for conspiracy.

The court of appeal affirmed, concluding that the order denying the petition to file a conspiracy complaint was based on the same primary right as was asserted in the new complaint (31 Cal. App. 4th 350, 359) . The court noted that an adjudication of a petition under Civ. Code § 1714.10 results in a final, appealable order, and that once the time for appeal of such an order has passed, the judgment resulting from the order becomes final (31 Cal. App. 4th 350, 356-357) . The determinative question was thus whether the same primary right was raised in the petition to file the complaint as in the new complaint, and whether the final judgment denying the petition was on the merits and thus res judicata to the new action. Stating that the primary right is determined by the harm suffered, the court concluded that since the new complaint was virtually identical to the proposed complaint under the petition, the new complaint was based on the same primary right (31 Cal. App. 4th 350, 357) . With regard to the question of whether the denial of the petition was a judgment on the merits, the court compared the procedure to the showing needed to survive a motion for nonsuit, and stated the rule that a judgment of nonsuit is an adjudication on the merits unless it is granted on a technical ground not involving the merits, in which case it is not res judicata (31 Cal. App. 4th 350, 358) . Since the petition for leave to file a conspiracy complaint was not denied because of a technicality, but rather because plaintiff failed to show that there was any theory of liability under which she could prevail, the denial of the petition was determined on the merits. Since the order denying the petition was based on the same primary right as the new complaint, and resulted in a final judgment on the merits, it was res judicata as to the new complaint (31 Cal. App. 4th 350, 359) .

[g] Attorney's Financial Gain Exception Requires More Than Monetary Compensation for Legal Services

In Berg & Berg Enters. v. Sherwood Partners, Inc. (2005) 131 Cal. App. 4th 802, 32 Cal. Rptr. 3d 325 , the plaintiff was a real estate developer who agreed to construct two commercial buildings and then lease them to a network router developer company. However, the router developer company repudiated the lease before taking possession of the buildings, prompting a lawsuit by the plaintiff. The parties entered into a settlement in which the developer company agreed to pay the plaintiff $16 million secured by some of the company's assets. The company was unable to meet its financial obligations and assigned its assets to another company for the benefit of its creditors. The plaintiff and two other creditors attempted to force the debtor company into involuntary bankruptcy, but were ultimately unsuccessful. The plaintiff then filed suit against the company that had been assigned the assets of the debtor company, alleging that the defendant's actions had resulted in the depletion of the company's assets that would otherwise have been available to satisfy the debt owed to the plaintiff. In the meantime, the assignee company filed a motion for attorney's fees in the bankruptcy court, but the bankruptcy court denied the motion and excoriated the assignee company's law firm for charging $175,000 in fees in connection with a "straightforward" motion. Seizing on this reprimand by the bankruptcy court, the plaintiff attempted to amend the complaint in its pending lawsuit to add the law firm as a defendant on all causes of action and add a conspiracy claim as well, essentially arguing that the law firm's excessively high fees were part of the attempt to deplete the assets of the debtor company. Although the plaintiff did not comply with the procedural requirements of Civ. Code § 1714.10, the trial court allowed the amendment, treating it as a standard motion to amend. The defendants appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court noted the exceptions to the procedural requirements of Civ. Code § 1714.10 found in subsection (c) of that statute. To come under those exceptions, a complaint must plead either that the attorney had an independent legal duty to the plaintiff, or that the attorney's acts went beyond the performance of a professional duty to serve the client and involved a conspiracy to violate a legal duty in furtherance of the attorney's financial gain. The court first concluded that the law firm did not owe an independent legal duty to the plaintiff. Embracing the rationale applied by courts in the bankruptcy setting, the court held that the attorney for an assignee for the benefit of creditors does not owe an independent duty to the creditors or to any one of them individually (131 Cal. App. 4th 802, 825-833) . The court then concluded that in interpreting the second exception, the phrase "in furtherance of the attorney's financial gain" requires that the attorney derive economic advantage over and above the monetary compensation received in exchange for professional services actually rendered on behalf of the client, regardless of whether the attorney fees charged are alleged to have been excessive. To reach this conclusion, the court relied on the rationale of court opinions that had reached a similar conclusion in applying the "financial advantage" exception to the agent's immunity rule, which predated the statutory exceptions of Civ. Code § 1714.10(c), but were otherwise analogous. Given that all of the law firm's conduct alleged by the plaintiff as a basis for the firm's liability was conduct in the service of the client and in the course of representing the client, and the only financial advantage obtained was the fees charged for these services, the plaintiff's pleading did not meet the requirements of the second exception (131 Cal. App. 4th 802, 835-836) . Because all of the claims against the law firm in the plaintiff's pleading incorporated the facts of the conspiracy claim, the trial court erred in allowing the plaintiff to amend the pleading to add the law firm as a defendant without first meeting the procedural requirements of Civ. Code § 1714.10 (131 Cal. App. 4th 802, 836) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Attorney's Financial Gain Exception Requires More Than Monetary Compensation for Legal Services

In Panoutsopoulos v. Chambliss (2007) 157 Cal. App. 4th 297, 68 Cal. Rptr. 3d 647 , plaintiffs were commercial tenants under a long-term lease with defendant limited partnership. Over the course of several years, the managing general partner engaged in a series of actions designed to either evict the plaintiffs for alleged lease violations or get plaintiffs to agree to increase the monthly rent from $10,000 to $21,320. In the course of defendant's efforts, the partnership's attorneys sent several communications to plaintiffs listing alleged "uncurable" lease violations and, in some cases, demanding that plaintiffs take specified actions or quit the property. In most instances, plaintiffs either sought unsuccessfully to get further information about the alleged breaches from the attorneys, tried to explain their version to the attorneys, or took actions designed to cure the alleged problems. Plaintiffs eventually sued the managing partner for breach of the covenant of quiet enjoyment and intentional infliction of emotional distress. Plaintiffs sought to file an amended complaint to add causes of action against the attorneys for civil conspiracy, but did not first get a court order pursuant to Civ. Code § 1714.10. The trial court granted leave to amend, but the court of appeal reversed. The court of appeal concluded that plaintiffs had failed to follow the procedures for adding a conspiracy claim against the attorneys pursuant to Civ. Code § 1714.10, and neither of the exceptions of Civ. Code § 1714.10(c) applied. The court noted that nothing in plaintiffs' pleadings suggested that the attorneys were acting for their own benefit or expected that their actions would result in any financial advantage beyond the fees they were earning for representing their client. As such, the "financial gain" exception did not apply (157 Cal. App. 4th 297, 306) . The court also held that plaintiffs had not shown that the attorney's owed any actionable independent duty to them based on the attorneys' communications with plaintiffs about their possible lease violations. The court noted that the attorneys were not parties to the lease and owed no duty to plaintiffs under it. Additionally, plaintiffs had not shown any conduct by the attorneys, above and beyond actions taken in a representative capacity on behalf of their client, that had caused actionable harm to plaintiffs (157 Cal. App. 4th 297, 306-308) .

[Caption. See § 46.20[1].]

PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT FOR DAMAGES ARISING FROM AN ALLEGED CIVIL CONSPIRACY TO DEFRAUD HIM/HER FAILS TO STATE FACTS SUFFICIENT TO CONSTITUTE A CAUSE OF ACTION IN THAT IT APPEARS ON THE FACE THEREOF THAT IT IS BARRED BY THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS IN THAT IT WAS NOT COMMENCED WITHIN THREE YEARS AFTER DISCOVERY BY PLAINTIFF OF THE FACTS CONSTITUTING THE ALLEGED FRAUD.

A. Objection by Demurrer. [See § 46.20[1], Paragraph A.]

B. Raising Statute of Limitations by Demurrer. The objection that an action is barred by a statute of limitations may be set up by demurrer (California Safe Deposit & Trust Co. v. Sierra Valleys Ry. Co. (1910) 158 Cal. 690, 697-699, 112 P. 274 ; Stafford v. Union Oil Co. (1959) 173 Cal. App. 2d 307, 314, 343 P.2d 380).

C. Applicable Statute Determined by Nature of Underlying Action. Since there is no cause of action for conspiracy in and of itself, the applicable statute of limitations in an action for damages arising from an alleged conspiracy is determined by the nature of the action in which the conspiracy is alleged (Agnew v. Parks (1959) 172 Cal. App. 2d 756, 765, 343 P.2d 118).

D. Pleading Date of Last Overt Act. Since a cause of action based on civil conspiracy accrues on the date of the commission of the last overt act in pursuance of the conspiracy, it is imperative for the plaintiff to allege when the last overt act took place (Bedolla v. Logan & Frazer (1975) 52 Cal. App. 3d 118, 137, 125 Cal. Rptr. 59).

[Optional] E. Act Alleged to Be Last Overt Act Is Privileged. An act that is absolutely privileged is not sufficient to revive a cause of action for conspiracy that is otherwise barred by the statute of limitation (see Thompson v. California Fair Plan Assn. (1990) 221 Cal. App. 3d 760, 767).

F. Limitation Period Applicable to Fraud Action. An action for damages arising from a conspiracy to defraud the plaintiff is governed by the three-year statute of limitations (Code Civ. Proc. § 338(d)) applicable to an action for relief on the ground of fraud (Agnew v. Parks (1959) 172 Cal. App. 2d 756, 766, 343 P.2d 118).

G. Pleading Discovery Within Three Years of Commencement. When it is apparent on the face of a complaint for damages arising from a conspiracy to defraud the plaintiff that the last fraudulent act occurred over three years before the complaint was filed, the plaintiff must plead the discovery of the fraud within three years prior to the commencement of the action to avoid the bar of the statute of limitations (Agnew v. Parks (1959) 172 Cal. App. 2d 756, 766, 343 P.2d 118).

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a demurrer to a complaint for damages arising from a conspiracy to defraud the plaintiff where the demurrer asserts that it appears from the face of the complaint that the action was not commenced within three years after plaintiff's discovery of the facts constituting the alleged fraud and, thus, that it appears that the statute of limitations bars the action.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in §§ 46.47 and 46.48 may be used to oppose the demurrer supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Raising Statute of Limitations by Demurrer

California Safe Deposit & Trust Co. v. Sierra Valleys Ry. Co. (1910) 158 Cal. 690, 112 P. 274 , was an action to foreclose a deed of trust securing corporate bonds. Although the defendant had failed to demur, he did assert in his answer that a statute of limitations barred the action. On appeal from a judgment on the merits, it was contended that defendant waived the defense of limitation by failing to raise the issue by demurrer. In response, the Supreme Court stated that the only ground of demurrer applicable in the case at issue was the failure to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action and that this ground was, under the express provision of former Code Civ. Proc. § 434 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 430.80(a)), not waived by failure to demur. The true rule, said the Court, is that the defendant may, if the defect appears on the face of the complaint, set up the bar of the statute either by demurrer or by answer. If the complaint does not show that the statute has run, the Court added, the defendant must plead his or her right by answer (158 Cal. 690, 697-699) .

In Stafford v. Union Oil Co. (1959) 173 Cal. App. 2d 307, 343 P.2d 380 , the court of appeal affirmed a trial court's judgment for the defendants following its sustaining of a general demurrer to the fifth amended complaint without leave to amend in an action for the taking or removing of oil and gas from land by means of a slant-drilled well. By its demurrer, the defendant invoked the bar of the then applicable statute of limitations. In this connection, the court noted that whenever it appears on the face of the complaint that any possible cause of action therein alleged is necessarily barred by the statute of limitations, the defense is properly interposed by a general demurrer (173 Cal. App. 2d 307, 314) .

[b] Applicable Statute Determined by Nature of Underlying Action

In Agnew v. Parks (1959) 172 Cal. App. 2d 756, 343 P.2d 118 , the facts and background of which are discussed in § 46.21[3][a], the first cause of action to which the trial court sustained a demurrer, included allegations of a conspiracy to damage plaintiff's rights in an earlier lawsuit by a doctor's false representations to both plaintiff and the court in the earlier action that he was a disinterested and unprejudiced witness, would give independent testimony, knew none of the parties to the action, and had not been on the staff of a particular hospital. Finding that one ground for sustaining the demurrer was that the cause of action was barred by the statute of limitations, the court ruled that since there is no cause of action for conspiracy in and of itself, the statute of limitations is determined by the nature of the action in which the conspiracy is alleged. The court observed that the gist of the alleged conspiracy was fraud, which is governed by the three-year statute of limitations under former Code Civ. Proc. § 338(4) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 338(d)). Since it was apparent on the face of the complaint that the last fraudulent act occurred over three years before the pleading was filed, in order to avoid the bar of the statute of limitations, plaintiff was required to plead that his discovery of the fraud was within three years prior to the commencement of the action. Since the complaint failed to allege facts relating to discovery of the fraud, the court held that the cause of action was barred by the three-year statute (172 Cal. App. 2d 756, 765) .

[c] Pleading Date of Last Overt Act

In Bedolla v. Logan & Frazer (1975) 52 Cal. App. 3d 118, 125 Cal. Rptr. 59 , the court of appeal affirmed a trial court's judgment against cross complainant entered on jury verdicts, finding that the claims raised in a cross complaint based on allegations of fraud and professional negligence against plaintiffs were barred by the statute of limitations. On appeal the cross complainants contended that the trial court had improperly refused to give their instructions on civil conspiracy. In rejecting this contention, the court of appeal noted that there is no cause of action for civil conspiracy itself and that in any action based on civil conspiracy the statute of limitations is determined by the nature of the action in which the conspiracy is alleged. The statutes of limitations applicable to the causes of action stated for fraud and professional negligence are former Code Civ. Proc. §§ 338(4) and 339(1) (now see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 338(d) and 340.5(2)), respectively. In each instance, the statute commences to run only when the wrongful acts are discovered or with reasonable diligence could have been discovered. Although the court noted that cases support the proposition that a cause of action based on civil conspiracy accrues on the date of the commission of the last overt act in pursuance of the conspiracy, the court stated that it is imperative for the plaintiff to allege when the last overt act took place. Since it was alleged that the last overt wrongful acts had been committed on September 14, 1960, and the cross complaint was filed in December 1964, that was by itself indicative that the statutes had already run when the action was filed. Thus, under the circumstances, the giving of instructions on civil conspiracy would have been entirely meaningless and confusing to the jury (52 Cal. App. 3d 118, 137) .

[d] Act Alleged to Be Last Overt Act Is Privileged

Thompson v. California Fair Plan Assn. (1990) 221 Cal. App. 3d 760 , is discussed in § 46.21[3][g]. In that case, the last alleged overt act in plaintiff's cause of action for conspiracy was a defendant's opposition to an earlier declaratory judgment action. Defendant sought and was granted summary judgment on the ground that this act was privileged under former Civ. Code § 47(2) (now see Civ. Code § 47(b)) (allegation in pleading as privileged publication), and that, but for this act, the cause of action was barred by the statute of limitations. The court of appeal affirmed, stating that the act in question was the only overt act that could prevent the statute of limitations from running on the cause of action for conspiracy. This act, however, could not be deemed a wrongful act because it was absolutely privileged based on considerations of public policy encouraging free access to the courts. Thus, the act could not serve as an overt act sufficient to revive an otherwise time-barred claim on a conspiracy theory (221 Cal. App. 3d 760, 767-768) .

[e] Limitation Period Applicable to Fraud Action

Agnew v. Parks (1959) 172 Cal. App. 2d 756, 343 P.2d 118 , is discussed in § 46.29[3][b].

[f] Pleading Discovery Within Three Years of Commencement

Agnew v. Parks (1959) 172 Cal. App. 2d 756, 343 P.2d 118 , is discussed in § 46.29[3][b].

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Applicable Statute Determined by Nature of Underlying Action

Kenworthy v. Brown (1967) 248 Cal. App. 2d 298, 56 Cal. Rptr. 461 , is discussed with respect to this point in § 46.31[3][a].

In Filice v. Boccardo (1962) 210 Cal. App. 2d 843, 26 Cal. Rptr. 789 , the court of appeal affirmed the trial court's judgment of dismissal of an action for damages for alleged perpetration of a fraudulent conspiracy after it had sustained demurrers to the complaint. The complaint alleged a fraudulent conspiracy on the part of attorneys and others to deprive plaintiff of a recovery in an earlier personal injury action. All of the defendants raised the statute of limitations as a bar to the action. The court noted the rule that a conspiracy, in and of itself, does not give rise to a cause of action unless a civil wrong has been committed resulting in damages. Since the complaint alleged a fraudulent conspiracy, the action was governed by the three-year period of limitation in former Code Civ. Proc. § 338(4) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 338(d)). Although the last fraudulent act was alleged to be an attorney's delaying tactics, the court noted that the complaint specifically alleged that that attorney's part in the conspiracy terminated more than five years prior to the filing of the complaint. Where the face of the complaint reveals that the last fraudulent act occurred over three years before the pleading was filed, the plaintiff may avoid the bar of the statute of limitations only if he pleads discovery of the fraud within three years prior to commencement of the action. Since the complaint was entirely silent as to when the plaintiff discovered the existence of the fraudulent conspiracy, the court ruled that the complaint lacked an essential allegation and that the demurrers were properly sustained (210 Cal. App. 2d 843, 846) .

[b] Limitation Period Applicable to Fraud Action

Filice v. Boccardo (1962) 210 Cal. App. 2d 843, 26 Cal. Rptr. 789 , is discussed in § 46.29[4][a].

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint for damages arising from a civil conspiracy in violation of a plaintiff's personal rights if it appears from the face of the complaint that the action was not commenced within the statutorily prescribed period of limitations. For complaints alleging a conspiracy to commit assault, battery, or injury or death caused by the wrongful act or neglect of another, that period is two years (one year, prior to January 1, 2003) after the date of the alleged civil wrong or tortious act [Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1 (see former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3)); see also California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 345, Limitation of Actions, § 345.14]. For complaints alleging a conspiracy to commit libel, slander, false imprisonment, seduction of a minor, payment by a bank of a forged or raised check or one bearing a forged or unauthorized endorsement, or neglect by a veterinarian or any person who boards or feeds an animal or fowl, the prescribed period is one year after the date of the alleged civil wrong or tortious act [Code Civ. Proc. § 340(c)].

A somewhat different rule governs an action for defamation or invasion of privacy when the publication is made in a public medium because, under the Uniform Single Publication Act [Civ. Code §§ 3425.1-3425.5], a cause of action for defamation or invasion of privacy accrues on the date of the first general dissemination of the objectionable matter to the public [Civ. Code § 3425.3; Belli v. Roberts Bros. Furs (1966) 240 Cal. App. 2d 284, 289-290, 49 Cal. Rptr. 625 ; see § 46.38].

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a complaint for damages arising from a conspiracy to induce a breach of contract where it appears from the face of the complaint that the action was not commenced within two years after the last overt act was alleged to have been committed pursuant to the conspiracy.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[a] Limitation Period for Conspiracy to Induce Breach of Contract

In Kenworthy v. Brown (1967) 248 Cal. App. 2d 298, 56 Cal. Rptr. 461 , the court of appeal affirmed the trial court's judgment of dismissal entered after it had sustained a demurrer to the second amended complaint alleging a conspiracy to commit the tort of inducing breach of contract. Defendants demurred on the ground that the action was barred by the statute of limitations. They relied on Code Civ. Proc. § 339(1), which provides for a two-year limitation period on an action on a contract, obligation, or liability not founded on a written instrument. This provision was referred to by the court as a "catch all" for unusual tort actions not otherwise provided for. Plaintiffs claimed, on the other hand, that Code Civ. Proc. § 343, which provides a four-year limitation period for actions not otherwise provide for, was applicable.

There being no cause of action for civil conspiracy itself, the court stated that the applicable statute of limitations is determined by the nature of the action in which the conspiracy is alleged. The complaint alleged in pertinent part that defendants had conspired to deprive plaintiffs of the benefits of a contract they had previously entered into. The court concluded that it alleged a conspiracy to induce a breach of contract and that the statute of limitations applicable to that tort is the two-year period stated in Code Civ. Proc. § 339(1). The cause of action accrued on the date that the last overt act was committed pursuant to the conspiracy, the court ruled, and since the complaint showed that the date of the last overt act necessary to complete the alleged conspiracy was more than two years before the action was commenced, the action was thus barred (248 Cal. App. 2d 298, 301) .

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint for damages arising from a conspiracy to interfere with the plaintiff's trade or business where it appears from the face of the complaint that the action was not commenced within two years from the commission of the wrong and, thus, is barred by the statute of limitations.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Limitation Period for Conspiracy to Interfere With Trade or Business

In McFaddin v. H.S. Crocker Co. (1963) 219 Cal. App. 2d 585, 33 Cal. Rptr. 389 , the court of appeal affirmed the trial court's dismissal of an action for damages arising out of an alleged conspiracy to commit tortious interference with plaintiff's business and contractual relations. The trial court's order was entered after defendants had successfully objected to plaintiff's introduction of evidence on the ground that the complaint failed to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The complaint, which was filed on January 28, 1958, alleged in effect that on or about February 1, 1955, defendants had conspired to injure plaintiff's business reputation, to interfere with her contractual relations, and to deprive plaintiff of her business property by unjustifiably causing seizure thereof by the sheriff for the purpose of interfering with her business and inducing her customers not to deal with her. Noting that the applicable statute of limitations is determined by the nature of the action in which the conspiracy is alleged, the court held that this was an action on a liability not founded on a written instrument, and that it was barred because it was not commenced within two years of the commission of the wrong. The court added that its conclusion that the action was barred was not affected by the allegation that defendants had initiated and carried on a campaign to induce the plaintiff's customers not to deal with her, since the reference in the complaint was to a specific date, which was controlling for the purposes of the running of the statute of limitations, citing Agnew v. Parks (1959) 172 Cal. App. 2d 756, 765, 343 P.2d 118 . In Agnew, the court of appeal observed that, although the pleading asserted that the conspiracy was entered into on May 4, 1945, and continued until November 24, 1948, it alleged no specific act on the latter date. Since the alleged conduct consisted of separate, distinct acts, the statute of limitations applicable in that case commenced to run from the time of their commission (219 Cal. App. 2d 585, 591-592) .

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a demurrer to a complaint for damages arising from a conspiracy to convert property, when the demurrer raises the bar of the statute of limitations by asserting that the complaint, on its face, shows that the action was not commenced within three years after the commission of the last overt act pursuant to the conspiracy [see Code Civ. Proc. § 338(c)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Limitation Period Applicable to Action Based on Conversion

In Maheu v. CBS, Inc. (1988) 201 Cal. App. 3d 662, 247 Cal. Rptr. 304 , a former aide of the celebrated recluse Howard Hughes brought an action in 1985 against several defendants for, among other things, the alleged conversion of letters sent by Hughes to the aide over the course of many years. Plaintiff alleged that two of the defendants allegedly converted the letters in 1974, while other "media" defendants conspired to acquire the letters in 1977, resulting eventually in the 1984 publication of a book about Hughes. Plaintiff did not learn of the conversion until 1984. The trial court sustained demurrers, without leave to amend, to the causes of action based on conversion, on the grounds that the statute of limitations barred them. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court stated that in an action based on civil conspiracy the applicable statute of limitations is determined by the nature of the action in which the conspiracy is alleged. In this case, the conspiracy is based on conversion, for which the limitations period under former Code Civ. Proc. § 338(3) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 338(c)) is three years. Normally, that statute commences to run from the date of the conversion, even though the injured person is ignorant of his or her rights, except when fraudulent concealment is alleged. Plaintiff in this case did not allege any fraudulent concealment. Therefore, the limitations period clearly had expired, if it were calculated either from the initial conversion in 1974 or the subsequent acquisition by the "media" defendants in 1977 (201 Cal. App. 3d 662, 673) . When a conspiracy exists, however, the statute does not commence to run until the date of the commission of the last overt act in pursuance of the conspiracy, a date that must be alleged (201 Cal. App. 3d 662, 673-674) . The court rejected plaintiff's argument that the last overt act in this instance was the publication of the book in 1984; this act did not involve the taking of the property but rather the diminution of its value. The court concluded that there was no allegation of any act in furtherance of a conspiracy to convert property after 1977, and that therefore the causes of action were barred (201 Cal. App. 3d 662, 674) .

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a demurrer to a complaint for damages arising from ordinary tort allegations, when the plaintiff alleges a conspiracy in contravention of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations (RICO) Act, based on those ordinary tort allegations.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Common Law Torts Are Not RICO Causes of Action

In Globe Int'l, Inc. v. Superior Court (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 393, 12 Cal. Rptr. 2d 109 , the plaintiff sued a publishing company and its owners and employees for damages arising from invasion of privacy, defamation, and several other torts, based on the distribution of newspapers containing photographs of the plaintiff, who was a celebrity, and text that allegedly harmed the plaintiff on the several tort theories that were advanced. One count alleged that distribution of the newspapers was a conspiracy by the defendants to derive income from the alleged tortious activities and to reinvest the income in the publishing company so as to continue those activities. This conduct was alleged to constitute "racketeering activities" under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations (RICO) Act. The trial court overruled the defendants' demurrer, but the court of appeal issued a writ of mandate directing that the demurrer be sustained. "[W]e hold [that plaintiff] Collins cannot allege a RICO cause of action based solely upon allegations [that defendant] Globe invaded Collins's privacy by taking photographs of her while she was on private property, by publishing the photographs and accompanying text in a widely circulated tabloid and by distributing the tabloid to the general public, which publication and distribution allegedly caused injury to Collins. The attempt to allege a RICO cause of action is based on ordinary tort causes of action, [such as] libel, damage to reputation, invasion of privacy, false light, public disclosure of private facts, and intentional infliction of emotional distress. We find, as a matter of law, [that] Collins is limited to the relief available in tort and may not seek triple damages through an improper attempt to place a RICO label upon tort claims" (9 Cal. App. 4th 393, 396-397) .

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA, COUNTY OF _____ _____ [name], Plaintiff, vs. _____ [names], Defendants.	)))))))	NO. _____ MEMORANDUM OF POINTS AND AUTHORITIES IN SUPPORT OF MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]

SUMMARY JUDGMENT FOR DEFENDANT IS PROPER WHERE IT APPEARS THAT PLAINTIFF'S ACTION IS FOUNDED ON AN ILLEGAL ACT OR TRANSACTION TO WHICH HE/SHE WAS A PARTY.

A. Summary Judgment. A defendant may move for summary judgment in any action or proceeding if it is contended that the action has no merit. Such motion must be granted if all of the papers submitted show that there is no triable issue as to any material fact and that the defendant is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law (Code Civ. Proc. § 437c).

B. Illegal Act or Transaction. A cause of action for conspiracy does not exist if, in order to establish it, the plaintiff must rely on an illegal act or transaction to which he/she is a party (Huber v. Peek-A-Boot, Inc. (1961) 189 Cal. App. 2d 512, 515, 11 Cal. Rptr. 467).

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for summary judgment for the defendant where it can be shown that the plaintiff is attempting to rely on an illegal act or transaction to which the plaintiff was a party in order to establish his or her cause of action.

Where appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations which support the memorandum [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

CAUTION:
The point made in this form, that summary judgment for the defendant is proper where it appears that the plaintiff's action is founded on an illegal act or transaction, must be contrasted with the point that a conspiracy to induce breach of or to interfere with a voidable or unenforceable contract is actionable [see § 46.31].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Illegal Act or Transaction

In Huber v. Peek-A-Boot, Inc. (1961) 189 Cal. App. 2d 512, 11 Cal. Rptr. 467 , the court of appeal affirmed a trial court's judgment of dismissal after the trial court had sustained a demurrer to a second amended complaint without leave to amend, holding that the action was based on illegal acts plaintiff committed. Plaintiff alleged that while employed he had "borrowed" certain instruments belonging to his defendant employer and that the latter and other defendants induced him to execute a document implicating himself and others in the theft of these materials on the false promise that they would not prosecute him for the "borrowing" of the instruments and that his confession would not be used to his detriment. He further alleged that despite these promises, his confession was used as a basis for two suits against him.

The court found that based on plaintiff's pleading, the confession was false and that plaintiff knew it was false when he made it, and that in fact, he had committed perjury, a felony. The court stated that a court will not lend assistance to one who bases his claim for recovery on his own illegal acts. Whether or not this rule should be applied depends on whether or not the plaintiff can establish his case other than through the medium of an illegal transaction to which he himself is party. If the plaintiff cannot open his case without showing that he has broken the law, the court will not assist him, whatever his claim of justice may be on the defendant (189 Cal. App. 2d 512, 515) .

[b] Contract Unenforceable Because Unlawful

In Mindenberg v. Carmel Film Prod., Inc. (1955) 132 Cal. App. 2d 598, 282 P.2d 1024 , the court of appeal affirmed a judgment of nonsuit for certain defendants and reversed a judgment for plaintiff and against other defendants in an action for damages for fraud and conspiracy. The seventh amended complaint alleged a corporate defendant's wrongful procurement of a breach of contract to purchase its shares from plaintiff. The court determined that the corporation had agreed to purchase its own shares with funds other than its earned surplus and that such a contract was in violation of applicable statutory law. Such a contract cannot be enforced, the court ruled. Thus, the court held that the causing of its breach could not give rise to a cause of action for damages. Although it was alleged that defendants had acted pursuant to a conspiracy to induce is important only for the purpose of showing joint action and joint liability for the commission of a wrong. If no wrong is done, the conspiracy to accomplish the nontortious act does not create a cause of action (132 Cal. App. 2d 598, 602) .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Liability Predicated on Projected Joint Action

In Wetherton v. Growers Farm Labor Ass'n (1969) 275 Cal. App. 2d 168, 79 Cal. Rptr. 543 , the court of appeal reversed the trial court's granting of a motion for summary judgment for defendants. In discussing the liability of an individual defendant, who was the employee of a farm industry association, for an alleged conspiracy among an individual grower, the association and its employee (sued both individually and in his capacity as an employee), and other defendants to violate the rights of plaintiffs under certain Labor Code provisions, the court stated that liability depended on whether or not a plan was shown for concerted action to be taken by the individual defendant and the other defendants to achieve the unlawful purpose of depriving the plaintiffs of their rights under the Labor Code. Liability as a coconspirator depends on projected joint action and, said the court, the mere knowledge or approval of or acquiescence in the act, without cooperation or agreement to cooperate, is not enough. In the case at issue, plaintiffs' opposing declarations showed that the individual defendant had done more than merely advise or approve of the actions of a conspirator in violating the rights of the plaintiffs with respect to union activity. Rather, he had made statements with menacing connotations concerning union activity, specifically stating that plaintiffs would be fired if they joined a union. The court inferred from these circumstances a joint project on the part of the individual defendant and other conspirators to discharge plaintiffs if they should insist on joining a union (275 Cal. App. 2d 168, 176) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Liability Predicated on Projected Joint Action

In Harris v. Capitol Records Distrib. Corp. (1966) 64 Cal. 2d 454, 50 Cal. Rptr. 539, 413 P.2d 139 , the Supreme Court affirmed a trial court's summary judgment for defendants, holding, without determining the existence of triable issues of fact, that there was no legal theory on which the defendants could be held liable to plaintiff in an action for unfair business practices. The plaintiff owned and operated a retail record store, and one defendant was a subdistributor or rack-jobber of records who was entitled not only to the standard 38 percent dealer discount to which plaintiff was entitled but also to an additional 10 percent discount. That defendant opened a retail record store across the street from plaintiff's store and proceeded to sell records 50 percent off list price. Plaintiff thereupon sued that defendant and three record companies. The complaint alleged that the individual defendant was allowed to buy his stock at the rack-jobber's discount and sell as a retailer, thus enabling him to undersell plaintiff and damage his business. Plaintiff contended that the record companies had created an unlawful "locality discrimination" in violation of Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 17031 and 17040, which prohibit and define locality discrimination.

The Court found that plaintiff was contending, in effect, that the record companies had reason to know from various conversations with the rack-jobber that the latter intended to sell at retail the records he bought from them at the rack-jobber's discount, and that they took no action to prevent him from doing so. However, the Court held that the fact that defendants had reason to know that the rack-jobber was selling at retail as well as at wholesale was insufficient as a matter of law to establish that the defendants were guilty of collusion or conspiracy with him in his activity. To be a conspirator, said the Court, one must share a common purpose with another, not merely suspect or have knowledge of the other's own private purpose (64 Cal. 2d 454, 462) .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Corporation Organized After Wrongful Acts Occurred

In General Adver. Agency, Inc. v. Komer (1967) 251 Cal. App. 2d 805, 60 Cal. Rptr. 10 , the court of appeal reversed a trial court's judgment awarding plaintiff damages in an action for damages for unfair competition, holding as to one corporate defendant that it could not be liable since the alleged conspiracy had ended as of the time the corporation was organized. Plaintiff was an advertising agency which handled advertising for another defendant, a large chain store. One of its incorporators and a director of that incorporator was defendant Komer. The complaint charged unfair competition in that Komer had become affiliated with another agency and moved the chain store account to that agency and later formed his own corporate agency to handle that account. The court found that this latter corporation, which was joined as a coconspirator, was organized on June 1, 1963. Although it did handle the chain store account for a time, the court ruled that there could not possibly be any basis for a finding that in July 1962, the corporation conspired with Komer and others to influence the plantiff's clients to withdraw their accounts. Plaintiff argued that the corporation was liable on the theory that one who knowingly joins a conspiracy after its formation becomes a party to it. However, the court ruled that as of the date of the corporation's founding there wasn't any conspiracy since the only wrongful acts of which there was any evidence were committed in July 1962, and the corporation had nothing to do with those acts (251 Cal. App. 2d 805, 812) .

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for summary judgment by a defendant in an action for defamation or invasion or privacy where the plaintiff commenced his or her action more than two years (one year, prior to 2003) [Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1; see former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3); see also California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 345, Limitation of Actions, § 345.14] after the date of the first dissemination of the objectionable matter through the public media (as opposed to the rule applicable to defamation published by means other than the public media set forth in § 46.30). The rule set forth in this form is a limitation on the general rule applicable to the running of the statute of limitations, which is that a cause of action accrues as of the date of the commission of the last overt act in pursuance of the conspiracy [Kenworthy v. Brown (1967) 248 Cal. App. 2d 298, 301, 56 Cal. Rptr. 461 ; Schessler v. Keck (1954) 125 Cal. App. 2d 827, 832-833, 271 P.2d 588 ; see § 46.47].

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations that support the form [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Limitation Period for Conspiracy to Invade Privacy

In Belli v. Roberts Bros. Furs (1966) 240 Cal. App. 2d 284, 49 Cal. Rptr. 625 , the court of appeal affirmed a trial court's grant of summary judgment for defendant in an action for damages allegedly caused by a conspiracy to publish defamatory matter in a newspaper which resulted in an invasion of plaintiff's right of privacy. The complaint, which was filed on February 14, 1963, alleged that defamatory material was published in a newspaper on February 14, 1962, although the matter was actually first published on February 13, 1962. Both parties agreed that the applicable statute was former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3), providing a one-year limitation period (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1 (two-year limitations period beginning in 2003); however, plaintiffs argued that the last overt acts were committed on February 14, when the last two editions of the newspaper in which the matter appeared were sold to the public, citing Schessler v. Keck (1954) 125 Cal. App. 2d 827, 832, 271 P.2d 588 , which held that while a conspiracy to defame is in existence, the statute of limitations does not begin to run until there is a cessation of the wrongful acts committed in furtherance of the conspiracy.

Rejecting this contention, the court of appeal first noted that the newspaper was not a party to the action, which would mean that the cause of action arose at the latest when the first publication of the newspaper was made, that is, on the evening of February 13. However, the court did not rest its decision on this ground. Rather, the court found that the action was governed by the California Uniform Single Publication Act (Civ. Code §§ 3425.1-3425.5), which provides that no more than one cause of action exists for damages for defamation or invasion of privacy founded on any one edition of a newspaper. Since the first edition of the newspaper involved was first sold on February 13, although dated February 14, and the various editions of that newspaper comprised a single, integrated publication, the cause of action accrued on the first general distribution of the publication to the public. Thus, the court concluded that the statute of limitations barred the action (240 Cal. App. 2d 284, 286) .

[b] Defamation or Invasion of Privacy in Public Media

Belli v. Roberts Bros. Furs (1966) 240 Cal. App. 2d 284, 49 Cal. Rptr. 625 , is discussed in § 46.38[3][a].

A. Judgment Notwithstanding the Verdict. [a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict in an action for damages arising from a conspiracy where, after trial, the only defendant found to have committed any overt act or acts in pursuance of the alleged conspiracy has been exonerated by the trier of fact. In such a case, if the party who is alleged to have been the sole actor in the furtherance of the alleged conspiracy is not liable, there is no basis for holding any alleged coconspirators liable.

Where appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations which support the memorandum [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Exoneration of Acting Party

In Vargas v. Giacosa (1953) 121 Cal. App. 2d 521, 263 P.2d 840 , overruled on other grounds, Hardy v. Vial (1957) 48 Cal. 2d 577, 581, 311 P.2d 494 , the court of appeal reversed a trial court's judgment for plaintiff on a conspiracy count, holding that as to one alleged overt act on the part of defendant coconspirators, there could be no liability because the defendant who had committed the alleged act had been exonerated by a jury verdict in the case. The complaint was filed against defendants Edward, Mario, Vincenzo, and Pasqualina for damages resulting from alleged unlawful acts connected with their attempts to evict plaintiff from their property. The conspiracy count alleged eight overt acts and utterances, including words uttered by Pasqualina. The jury awarded damages on the conspiracy count against Edward and Mario but exonerated Pasqualina (Vencenzo had been granted a nonsuit). The court held that the exoneration of Pasqualina on the conspiracy count exonerated her alleged coconspirators from liability for the words Pasqualina uttered. The court ruled that if the actor is not liable, there is no basis for holding the alleged coconspirators liable. The court also concluded that there was insufficient evidence of the other overt acts to support the verdict on the conspiracy count (121 Cal. App. 2d 521, 525) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Exoneration of Acting Party

In Peterson v. Cruickshank (1956) 144 Cal. App. 2d 148, 300 P.2d 915 , in affirming a jury verdict and trial court's judgment entered therein for plaintiff in an action for damages for false imprisonment arising out of an alleged conspiracy, the court of appeal ruled that the existence of the unlawful imprisonment and conspiracy was limited to events which occurred subsequent to the date on which the culpable defendants began to act and on which those defendants exonerated by the jury had ceased to act. The evidence showed that plaintiff became upset at the home of one defendant, was then taken to defendant hospital where she was treated by a third defendant, a doctor, and then transferred to the care of a fourth defendant, a psychiatrist, in another institution. The jury had exonerated the first doctor and hospital but found all other defendants liable. On appeal, the defendant from whose home the plaintiff was taken argued that the existence of any unlawful imprisonment and conspiracy could only be found in the events starting with and subsequent to the date plaintiff was transferred to the care of the psychiatrist and that the only evidence against him as to the latter events was that he paid the bills. The court agreed as to the limitation, stating that the jury must have found either that the plaintiff had consented to go to the hospital or that hospitalization under the circumstances was justified (144 Cal. App. 2d 148, 163-164) .

AN ALLEGATION OF CONSPIRACY TO COMMIT A CIVIL WRONG IS SUFFICIENT TO STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION AGAINST ALL OF THE ALLEGED CONSPIRATORS IF THE ALLEGATIONS IN THE COMPLAINT SHOW THAT EACH OF THEM PARTICIPATED IN THE CONSPIRACY AND THAT ONE OR MORE OF THEM COMMITTED A CIVIL WRONG PURSUANT TO THE CONSPIRACY CAUSING PLAINTIFF ACTUAL DAMAGES.

A. Conditions for Liability for Conspiracy. Civil liability for conspiracy to commit a civil wrong exists where a conspiracy has been formed and operated to accomplish by concerted action a criminal or unlawful purpose or a lawful purpose by criminal or unlawful means which results in actual damage (Taylor v. S & M Lamp Co. (1961) 190 Cal. App. 2d 700, 706, 12 Cal. Rptr. 323 ; Clark v. Lesher (1951) 106 Cal. App. 2d 403, 409, 235 P.2d 71).

B. Liability of Coconspirators. In an action for damages arising from a civil conspiracy, the major significance of the conspiracy lies in the fact that it renders each participant in the wrongful act responsible as a joint tortfeasor for all damages ensuing from the wrong, irrespective of whether or not he/she was a direct actor and regardless of the degree of his/her activity (Unruh v. Truck Ins. Exch. (1972) 7 Cal. 3d 616, 631, 102 Cal. Rptr. 815, 498 P.2d 1063 .)

C. Act of One During Conspiracy Is Act of All. The act of one conspirators during a conspiracy is the act of all of the conspirator if done in furtherance of the conspiracy (de Vries v. Brumback (1960) 53 Cal. 2d 643, 648, 2 Cal. Rptr. 764, 349 P.2d 532).

D. Liability of One Who Committed No Overt Act and Gained No Benefit. Since the act of one during a conspiracy is the act of all if done in furtherance thereof, defendants who are charged with participation in a conspiracy may be held liable who in fact committed no overt act whatsoever and gained no benefit therefrom (Wetherton v. Growers Farm Labor Ass'n (1969) 275 Cal. App. 2d 168, 176, 79 Cal. Rptr. 543 , disapproved on other grounds, *Applied Equip. Corp. v. Litton Saudi Arabia Ltd. [Optional] E. Proposition 51 Did Not Change Rule of Joint and Several Liability Among Conspirators. Despite the passage of the Fair Responsibility Act of 1986 (Proposition 51), joint and several liability for noneconomic damages is still the rule in a case of civil conspiracy, because liability in a case of conspiracy is not allocated based on comparative fault, but is premised on the concerted action of all tortfeasors acting as one in causing a single indivisible injury (Kesmodel v. Rand (2004) 119 Cal. App. 4th 1128, 1143, 15 Cal. Rptr. 3d 118 ; see Civ. Code § 1431.2).

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a general demurrer where the demurrer asserts that the complaint fails to allege that the demurring defendant committed a wrongful act pursuant to the alleged conspiracy, but where the complaint alleges that each defendant participated in the conspiracy and that pursuant to this conspiracy, one or more defendants committed a civil wrong against plaintiff causing him or her actual damages.

In an appropriate case, this memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a general demurrer to a complaint for damages arising from an alleged conspiracy supported by the points and authorities set out in §§ 46.20 -46.22.

Where appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. In addition, if this form is modified for use in opposition to a motion for summary judgment, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations which support the memorandum [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Conditions for Liability for Conspiracy

In Taylor v. S & M Lamp Co. (1961) 190 Cal. App. 2d 700, 12 Cal. Rptr. 323 , the court of appeal reversed a trial court's judgment for defendant, entered after defendant's motion to exclude evidence because of the insufficiency of the complaint was granted. The complaint alleged that plaintiff was a judgment creditor of certain third persons who were possessed of substantial assets and that on a stated date defendant conspired with and assisted them in concealing those assets, thus preventing plaintiff from recovering on his judgment. Defendant contended that the complaint failed to state a cause of action based on conspiracy since conspiracy is not actionable in and of itself and there was no statement of an actionable wrong. However, the court pointed out that it is contrary to public policy for a debtor to conceal his property for the purpose of defrauding his creditors [see Civ. Code § 3439.07, Penal Code §§ 154, 155]. It added that civil liability for conspiracy exists if a conspiracy has been formed and operated to accomplish by concerted action a criminal or unlawful purpose or a lawful purpose by criminal or unlawful means which results in actual damage. Thus, the court held that a debtor and those who conspire with him to conceal his assets for the purpose of defrauding creditors are guilty of committing a tort and each is liable in damages (190 Cal. App. 2d 700, 706) .

Clark v. Lesher (1951) 106 Cal. App. 2d 403, 235 P.2d 71 , is discussed as to this point in § 46.40[4][a].

[b] Liability of Coconspirators

Unruh v. Truck Ins. Exch. (1972) 7 Cal. 3d 616, 102 Cal. Rptr. 815, 498 P.2d 1063 , is discussed in § 46.20[3][a].

[c] Act of One During Conspiracy Is Act of All

In de Vries v. Brumback (1960) 53 Cal. 2d 643, 2 Cal. Rptr. 764, 349 P.2d 532 , the facts and background of which are discussed in § 46.41[3][a], the Supreme Court stated that every one who enters into a civil conspiracy is a party to every act previously or subsequently done by any of the others pursuant to the conspiracy (53 Cal. 2d 643, 648) .

In Wetherton v. Growers Farm Labor Ass'n (1969) 275 Cal. App. 2d 168, 79 Cal. Rptr. 543 , disapproved on other grounds, Applied Equip. Corp. v. Litton Saudi Arabia Ltd. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 503, 521 n.10, 28 Cal. Rptr. 2d 475, 869 P.2d 454 , the facts and background of which are discussed in § 46.36[3][a], in reversing a trial court's granting of summary judgment for defendants, the court noted that liability as a coconspirator depends on projected joint action and the mere knowledge of, acquiescence in, or approval of the act without cooperation or agreement to cooperate is not enough for liability to attach, but once plaintiff shows a plan for joint action, a defendant may be held liable who in fact committed no overt act and gained no benefit therefrom. Thus, the major significance of the conspiracy lies in the fact that it renders each participant in the wrongful act responsible as a joint tortfeasor for all damages ensuing from the wrong, irrespective of whether or not he was a direct actor and regardless of the degree of his activity (275 Cal. App. 2d 168, 176) .

[d] Proposition 51 Did Not Change Rule of Joint and Several Liability Among Conspirators

In Kesmodel v. Rand (2004) 119 Cal. App. 4th 1128, 15 Cal. Rptr. 3d 118 , another tenant in the plaintiff's apartment building placed the plaintiff under citizen's arrest, in the presence of police officers, based on allegations by the other tenant and his mother that the plaintiff had been "peeping" into the mother's apartment window while she was undressed. By law, the police were required to take the plaintiff into custody, where he was kept for 12 hours before being released. Because the incident was the latest in a series of confrontations between the parties, the plaintiff and his wife had been videotaping the incident, and the tape clearly showed that the plaintiff had not been "peeping" into the neighbor's window, but had merely been watering some plants and cleaning off the sidewalk. The district attorney declined to prosecute the plaintiff, and the plaintiff filed a civil action for false imprisonment against the other tenant and his mother. The jury found for the plaintiff, awarded damages against the other tenant for false imprisonment, and awarded damages against the mother for conspiracy for her role in prompting her son to make the false arrest. The compensatory damages awarded consisted of $3,500 in economic damages and $27,000 in noneconomic damages, for which the defendants were held jointly and severally liable. The defendants appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. In reaching its decision, the court first rejected the defendants' contention that their conduct in making a citizen's arrest was absolutely privileged under Civ. Code § 47(b) (119 Cal. App. 4th 1128, 1134-1140) . The court then held that the facts supported imposing liability on the mother for conspiracy in her role in effecting the false arrest (119 Cal. App. 4th 1128, 1141) . Finally, the court rejected the defendants' contention that under Proposition 51 (codified as Civ. Code § 1431.2), their liability for noneconomic damages should have been several liability only. The court noted that the limitations on joint liability imposed by Proposition 51, which are predicated on comparing and allocating fault among multiple tortfeasors, were generally inapplicable if liability is vicarious, because vicariously liable parties are generally viewed as part of a single entity. By extension, the court reasoned that the same principle applied in the case of liability for conspiracy or other concerted action. Because each joint actor is liable for the act of each other joint actor in causing a single indivisible injury to a plaintiff, principles of comparative fault do not apply, and all conspirators are jointly and severally liable for the harm caused to the plaintiff (119 Cal. App. 4th 1128, 1142-1143) . The court also noted that its conclusion was supported by the Restatement (Third) of Torts, adopted in 1999 (119 Cal. App. 4th 1128, 1143) .

[a] Liability of Coconspirators

In Bank of Cal. v. Pan Am. Tire Corp. (1982) 132 Cal. App. 3d 843, 183 Cal. Rptr. 470 , the court of appeal reversed a summary judgment against the defendants in an action for conversion. The plaintiff, a bank, alleged that the defendants had conspired to convert a specified sum of money by issuing nine fraudulent cashier's checks on which the plaintiff became liable. The trial court's decision to grant summary judgment was based on its conclusion that under the doctrine of collateral estoppel, one of the defendants' prior criminal conviction of conspiracy on an indictment that incorporated by reference allegations that the defendants had caused the nine fraudulent checks to be issued conclusively established all of the defendants' liability in this civil action.

The court of appeal stated that if a civil action charges a conspiracy and the commission of a wrongful act, the major significance of the conspiracy charge is that each participant may be held responsible as a joint tortfeasor, whether or not that person directly participated in the wrongful acts and regardless of the degree of that person's activity (132 Cal. App. 3d 843, 848). The court further stated that the gist of an action charging civil conspiracy is not the conspiracy, but the damages suffered, and that a conspiracy does not in and of itself give rise to a cause of action unless a civil wrong has been committed resulting in damages. Therefore, the court held that summary judgment was proper only if there was no triable issue of fact as to (1) the formation and operation of the conspiracy, (2) the wrongful act or acts committed pursuant to the conspiracy, and (3) the damages resulting from those acts (132 Cal. App. 3d 843, 848) . The court noted that, under the doctrine of collateral estoppel, if a civil action follows the criminal prosecution of a defendant, any issue necessarily decided in the prior criminal trial is conclusively determined as to the parties in the subsequent civil action (132 Cal. App. 3d 843, 848) .

Applying these rules to the facts before it, the court noted that the jury in the prior criminal action could have based its guilty verdict on a conclusion that the defendants had caused the issuance of all, some, or only one of the fraudulent checks mentioned in the indictment. Therefore, the court held that the prior conviction did not necessarily determine that the defendants' conspiracy damaged the plaintiff in the amount represented by all nine of the allegedly fraudulent checks, as was alleged in the complaint (132 Cal. App. 3d 843, 850) . Because a triable issue as to damages thus remained despite the prior conviction, the court concluded that summary judgment was improper (132 Cal. App. 3d 843, 850) .

In Clark v. Lesher (1951) 106 Cal. App. 2d 403, 235 P.2d 71 , the court of appeal reversed a trial court's judgment for defendants after the trial court had sustained a demurrer to a complaint for damages suffered as a result of an alleged conspiracy in restraint of trade. The complaint alleged a conspiracy to eliminate the newspaper plaintiff published which was a competitor of a newspaper one defendant owned. It alleged particular acts of the conspirators pursuant to the conspiracy, including one defendant's purchase of the distributive shares in the newspaper from the heirs of the plaintiff's deceased partner, the appointment of a receiver as a means to cease publication of the newspaper, the receiver's procurement of a court order therefor based on false statements to the judge that there were no funds for continued publication, and a subsequent sale of the newspaper's assets to one defendant at a depreciated value. In reversing the judgment, the court commented that it is only when the plaintiff can show that a defendant has united or cooperated with others to inflict a wrong on him that he is entitled to a joint recovery of damages against such defendants. To accomplish this, the plaintiff must show (1) concert of action between the defendants to accomplish the purpose of the conspiracy; (2) the illegality of defendant's actions which furthered a common scheme or design to achieve the unlawful purpose of the conspiracy; and (3) defendant's knowledge of the conspiracy and its unlawful purpose. The court held that the allegations of the complaint measured up to these tests, since the alleged actions of the conspirators were not only unlawful but were of such a nature that if they were successful in their evil design, the damage done would be irremediable in that ceasing publication would destroy an established newspaper with valuable goodwill and would seriously deplete its assets (106 Cal. App. 2d 403, 410-411) .

A DEFENDANT WHO HAS JOINED A CONTINUING CONSPIRACY IS JOINTLY LIABLE FOR ALL INJURIES RESULTING FROM THE CONSPIRACY EVEN THOUGH HE/SHE DID NOT JOIN THE CONSPIRACY AT ITS INCEPTION.

A. Conditions for Liability for Conspiracy. [See § 46.40[1], Paragraph A.]

B. Liability of Coconspirators. [See § 46.40[1], Paragraph B.]

C. Joinder at Inception Unnecessary. To render a person civilly liable for injuries resulting from a conspiracy of which he/she is alleged to be a member, he/she need not have joined the conspiracy at the time of its inception (de Vries v. Brumback (1960) 53 Cal. 2d 643, 648, 2 Cal. Rptr. 764, 349 P.2d 532).

D. Conspirators as Parties to All Acts. Every one who enters into a civil conspiracy is a party to every act any other conspirator has done previously or subsequently pursuant to the common design of the conspiracy (de Vries v. Brumback (1960) 53 Cal. 2d 643, 648, 2 Cal. Rptr. 764, 349 P.2d 532).

E. Liability for Prior Acts of Coconspirators. One who joins and actively participates in a preexisting conspiracy becomes liable as a joint tortfeasor for the previous acts of his/her coconspirators for all damages ensuing from the wrong (de Vries v. Brumback (1960) 53 Cal. 2d 643, 648-650, 2 Cal. Rptr. 764, 349 P.2d 532).

F. Termination of Conspiracy. The time when the common design of the conspirators is fully accomplished depends on the facts and circumstances of each case, and on the nature and purpose of the conspiracy--all matters for the determination of the trier of fact (de Vries v. Brumback (1960) 53 Cal. 2d 643, 647, 2 Cal. Rptr. 764, 349 P.2d 532).

[Optional] G. Termination of Conspiracy to Convert. A conspiracy to convert is a continuing concert of action lasting as long as the agreement to exercise dominion over another's property continues (de Vries v. Brumback (1960) 53 Cal. 2d 643, 647, 2 Cal. Rptr. 764, 349 P.2d 532).

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a general demurrer which asserts that the complaint fails to state a cause of action in that it appears on the face thereof that the alleged wrongful acts occurred before the defendant knowingly entered into the conspiracy, but where the complaint alleges that the defendant joined a continuing conspiracy.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used in opposition to a general demurrer supported by the points and authorities set out in §§ 46.24 and 46.36.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Joinder at Inception Unnecessary

In de Vries v. Brumback (1960) 53 Cal. 2d 643, 2 Cal. Rptr. 764, 349 P.2d 532 , the Supreme Court affirmed a trial court's judgment for plaintiff in an action for damages for civil conspiracy against both the defendants who had robbed plaintiff's assignor pursuant to a criminal conspiracy and the defendant (appellant) who, subsequent to the robbery, received some of the goods stolen by the other defendants. The trial court expressly found that the general purpose of the conspirators was to convert the stolen property, that the conspiracy had not terminated at the time appellant had joined, and that, therefore, he was liable for the value of the unrecovered property. On appeal, appellant contended that he should not be held liable for the value of property which had never been in his possession since all the goods he received had been recovered. Appellant contended that his civil liability was governed by the rule that one who joins a conspiracy after its formation may not be held liable in a criminal action for the unlawful acts of his fellow conspirators committed prior to his entry into the conspiracy.

However, the Court noted that there is a clear distinction between criminal and civil conspiracy: the gist of the crime of conspiracy is the agreement to commit the unlawful act while the gist of the tort is the damage resulting to the plaintiff from an overt act or acts done pursuant to the common design. Furthermore, the Court noted that conversion is a continuing tort and that it does not necessarily end when the original wrongdoer transfers possession of the converted goods to another. A conspiracy to convert is a continuing concert of action which lasts as long as the agreement to exercise dominion over another person's property continues. The findings established that appellant joined the conspiracy within a few hours after the robbery with full knowledge of the prior acts of his coconspirators and actively participated in the overall purpose to convert all of the stolen property. As such an active participant, said the Court, appellant was a joint tortfeasor liable for the entire damage done in pursuance of the common design.

It is the settled rule, said the Court, that to render a person civilly liable for injuries resulting from a conspiracy of which he was a member, it is not necessary that he should have joined the conspiracy at the time of its inception. Every one who enters into such a common design is in law a party to every act previously or subsequently done by any of the others in pursuance of it. Thus, said the Court, having been found to have joined and actively participated in the continuing conspiracy to convert, the appellant became liable for the previous acts of his coconspirators, and the fact that some of the missing goods may never have come into his possession would not absolve him from liability (53 Cal. 2d 643, 648) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Joinder at Inception Unnecessary

In Schick v. Lerner (1987) 193 Cal. App. 3d 1321 , the plaintiff alleged a conspiracy between a woman with whom he had once cohabited and a psychotherapist who treated them as a couple. Subsequent to the treatment, the therapist disclosed privileged and confidential information about the plaintiff in a declaration that was filed in a family law proceeding. The plaintiff further alleged that the therapist's attorney joined the conspiracy and advised the therapist that he could legally execute the declaration. In affirming summary judgment for the attorney, the court of appeal set forth the following requirements for stating a cause of action, on a theory of vicarious liability, against one who joins a conspiracy after its inception: (1) the subsequent joiner had knowledge of the object and purpose of the conspiracy; (2) there was an agreement to injure the plaintiff; (3) there was a meeting of the minds on the objective and course of action; and (4) as a result, one of the conspirators committed an act that resulted in injury to the plaintiff. Although noting that a conspiracy between attorney and client was conceptually possible, the court held that no intent to injure could be inferred from an allegation of the mere rendering of legal advice, however faulty the advice may have been (193 Cal. App. 3d 1321, 1328-1329) .

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a demurrer asserting that the complaint fails to state a cause of action in that the moving defendant acted merely as an agent for another defendant and is sued in that capacity rather than as one who acted on his or her own behalf.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Liability of Person Who Acts as Agent

In Revert v. Hesse (1920) 184 Cal. 295, 193 P. 943 , the Supreme Court affirmed a trial court's judgment for plaintiff following a trial on the merits in an action for damages for fraudulent conversion in securing the possession and releasing of record of two mortgages on certain real property. The complaint alleged the execution of the mortgages in question as security for two promissory notes in favor of plaintiff, their assignment by plaintiff, their subsequent assignment to one defendant and subsequent release, without notice to plaintiff, to other defendants acting as trustees or agents for one of the defendants. The Court ruled that a pledgee of an evidence of debt who sells or releases the debt or security otherwise than on collection may be held for conversion by the pledger. Inasmuch as it was admitted that the assignees acted as trustees for one defendant and were subject to his directions in taking assignments of the pledge and releasing the mortgages, that defendant was liable for the conversion thus accomplished by him through his agents.

As to the liability of one defendant and his agent, the Court observed that although plaintiff was unable to prove any formal agreement between defendant and his agents, a conspiracy may, nevertheless, be inferred from the nature of the acts done, the relation of the parties, the interests of the alleged conspirators, and other circumstances. The fact that two of the defendants acted solely as the trustees or agents of the other defendant did not constitute a valid defense, said the Court, since a person is liable for his participation in a conspiracy to commit a wrongful act, even though he acts only as an agent for another and is unacquainted with the details of the scheme. Moreover, the Court said that it is no defense for any person who participated in a conspiracy to do an unlawful act to show that his participation was unnecessary in order to accomplish the purposes of the conspiracy and that it would have been consummated even if he had not become a conspirator, since each conspirator becomes responsible for the acts done to further the conspiracy. The Court also held that plaintiff's failure to show that the agents received compensation as a result of the conversion was immaterial since those who aid in the commission of a wrongful act by another are liable for the resulting damages, even though they expected no benefit and in fact received none (184 Cal. 295, 302-303) .

In Wetherton v. Growers Farm Labor Ass'n*(1969) 275 Cal. App. 2d 168, 79 Cal. Rptr. 543* , the facts and background of which are discussed in § 46.36[3][a], the court of appeal reversed the trial court's grant of summary judgment for defendants in an action by certain farm laborers for damages arising out of an alleged conspiracy by which they were discharged from their employment as a result of their union activities. As to an individual defendant who was sued for his acts in advising the active member of the conspiracy and in acting as the party's agent, the court of appeal ruled that his participation in the conspiracy could be inferred from what was done to further the conspiracy and other surrounding circumstances. The court stated that if that individual in fact entered into a conspiracy calling for joint action, it would not be a defense that his actual participation amounted only to advising the active member of the conspiracy or acting as his agent (275 Cal. App. 2d 168, 177) .

[b] Acts of Attorney Joining Conspiracy

In Greenwood v. Mooradian (1955) 137 Cal. App. 2d 532, 290 P.2d 955 , the facts and background of which are discussed in § 46.45[4][a], the complaint alleged that one defendant was an attorney for another defendant. The court held that facts were alleged which, if proved, would be sufficient to establish a conspiracy and the attorney's participation in and furtherance of the conspiracy. The defendant's status as attorney for one of the other defendants did not immunize him from liability for either torts committed in person or wrongs done pursuant to the conspiracy he had joined (137 Cal. App. 2d 532, 539) .

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a demurrer asserting that the complaint fails to state a cause of action because it alleges a conspiracy between a corporation and defendant, an agent or employee of the corporation, and it does not appear on the face of the complaint that defendant was acting as an individual for his or her own individual advantage or was acting beyond the scope of his or her authority.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts tending to show that the defendant was acting for his or her individual advantage, and/or facts tending to show that defendant acted beyond the scope of the employment or agency relationship.

If appropriate, these points and authorities may be used to oppose the points and authorities in § 46.25.

[d] Special Issues Relating to Authorities

At least one court of appeal decision [Black v. Bank of Am. (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 1, 4-6, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 725 ; see § 46.25[3][a]] has noted the "conundrum" created by the California Supreme Court's suggestion in Applied Equip. Corp. v. Litton Saudi Arabia Ltd. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 503, 512 n.4, 28 Cal. Rptr. 2d 475, 869 P.2d 454 [see § 46.43[3][a]], that corporate employees may be liable for conspiring with the corporation, despite their acting on behalf of the corporation, if they owe a duty to the plaintiff independent of the corporation's duty. This court noted that the duty cited in Applied Equipment was the duty to abstain from injuring the plaintiff through express misrepresentation; the broadness of this type of duty and the ease with which its violation could be pled created an exception to the rule of agent immunity that, according to this court, threatened to swallow the rule. The court noted further that the Supreme Court in Applied Equipment did not reconcile its approval of this broad exception to the rule with its express affirmation of the rule; in the absence of a clear statement from the Supreme Court that it intended a change in the law, the court refused to apply the exception in a case involving a single corporate entity and its subordinate employees. Distinguishing the case before it from Applied Equipment and the cases on which it based its analysis, which involved agents and employees outside the corporate structure of the principal, the court held that the agent immunity rule has particular force in a single entity situation.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Liability of Corporate Agent or Employee Owing Independent Duty to Plaintiff

The facts and procedural background of Applied Equip. Corp. v. Litton Saudi Arabia Ltd. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 503, 28 Cal. Rptr. 2d 475, 869 P.2d 454 , are discussed in § 46.23[3][a]. In that case, the California Supreme Court ruled that a party to a contract cannot be held liable in tort for conspiring to interfere with its own contract, overruling a contrary holding in Wise v. Southern Pac. Co. (1963) 223 Cal. App. 2d 50, 65-72, 35 Cal. Rptr. 652 . In its discussion, the Court suggested that corporate employees may be liable for conspiring with their corporation, despite acting on behalf of the corporation, if they owe a duty to the plaintiff independent of the corporation's duty, such as a duty to abstain from injuring the plaintiff through express misrepresentation (7 Cal. 4th 503, 511-514) .

In Younan v. Equifax Inc. (1980) 111 Cal. App. 3d 498, 169 Cal. Rptr. 478 , plaintiff sued his insurance company, its representatives, and a doctor hired by the insurance company for bad faith, breach of contract, conspiracy to defraud, intentional infliction of emotional distress, fraud, and constructive fraud. The complaint alleged that defendants had conspired to prepare a false medical report and to improperly deny plaintiff's insurance claim. The trial court sustained a demurrer by some of the defendants and dismissed several of plaintiff's causes of action, including the cause of action for conspiracy. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the order as to each dismissed cause of action except the cause of action for constructive fraud. Regarding the conspiracy cause of action, the court held that defendants could be liable for conspiracy under the facts alleged by plaintiff (111 Cal. App. 3d 498, 511). The court pointed out that no cause of action would lie against the insurer's agents and employees if plaintiff had alleged a conspiracy to breach the duty of good faith and fair dealing, because they were merely corporate agents and not parties to the contract (111 Cal. App. 3d 498, 509-510) . However, because plaintiff alleged that all defendants conspired to commit fraudulent acts, the duty allegedly breached was independent of the contract. Therefore, by joining with the insurer in a plan to defraud plaintiff, the agents and employees could be liable for conspiracy to commit fraud, despite not being parties to the insurance contract (111 Cal. App. 3d 498, 511) .

The facts and procedural background of Black v. Bank of Am. (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 1, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 725 , are discussed in § 46.25[3][a]. The court of appeal declined to apply the exception for breach of an independent duty (such as the duty to abstain from injuring a plaintiff through express misrepresentation) to a case involving defendants who are employees of the corporation with whom they are alleged to have conspired (30 Cal. App. 4th 1, 5-6) . The court stated that liability in such a case would destroy the settled rule that a corporation cannot conspire with itself (30 Cal. App. 4th 1, 6) .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Conspiracy Among Corporate Officers and/or Directors to Harm Third Parties Through Corporation

In Wyatt v. Union Mortgage Co.(1979) 24 Cal. 3d 773, 157 Cal. Rptr. 392, 598 P.2d 45 , defendants were a mortgage loan broker, its affiliated corporations, their principal shareholder, and several corporate officers and directors. Defendant broker carried on an extensive television advertising campaign, including a frequently-aired ad for a loan on favorable terms that was not in fact available. Lured by the ads, plaintiffs asked defendant broker to negotiate a second mortgage loan on their home, and agreed in writing to a loan with monthly payments and a balloon payment that defendant's loan officer described as "small." In contrast to the loan officer's assurances of a 10-day grace period for late charges and an interest rate of 7 or 8 percent, the loan documents actually imposed an interest rate of 10 percent, a five-day grace period for delinquent payments, an estimated balloon payment of nearly $1,000, and a late charge of 1 percent of the original loan balance for every overdue installment. The loan agreement also provided for application of monthly installments first to accrued late charges and interest rather than to reduction of principal, thus deferring unreduced principal until the end of the loan term, accruing additional interest, and increasing the final balloon payment. The loan officer never pointed out significant provisions of the loan agreement to plaintiffs or suggested that they read the documents carefully. After plaintiffs were late with several payments and faced a balloon payment larger than the amount of the original loan principal, defendant broker explained the late charge and interest provisions but refused to extend their loan. Because plaintiffs were unable to find other financing, they agreed to refinance the unpaid balance through defendant broker with a new loan with similar provisions. Although plaintiffs made timely payment of all installments of the new loan, defendant broker assessed late charges. After repeated threats of foreclosure on their home, plaintiffs brought suit alleging a breach of defendant broker's fiduciary duty resulting from a fraudulent conspiracy engaged in by all defendants. At trial, plaintiffs presented as evidence of conspiracy testimony by a former employee that defendant principal shareholder had frequently stated in meetings attended by other individual defendants that it was company policy to pursue late charges vigorously as a prime source of income and that if one payment was late, all subsequent payments were also to be considered late. After a jury verdict in plaintiffs' favor, the trial court denied defendants' motion for a new trial, and defendants appealed.

Before the California Supreme Court, defendants argued that there was no substantial evidence of a conspiracy because no one except defendant broker participated in making loans to plaintiffs. The Court disagreed, noting that as long as two or more persons agree to perform a wrongful act, all of them are civilly liable regardless of whether they actually commit the tort themselves (24 Cal. 3d 773, 784) . The Court held that directors and officers of a corporation may become personally liable for a corporation's torts if they directly ordered, authorized, or participated in the tortious conduct. This personal liability may rest on a conspiracy among the officers and directors to injure third parties through the corporation (24 Cal. 3d 773, 785) . The Court found that the following evidence in the record supported the conclusion that breach of one defendant's fiduciary duty to plaintiffs was undertaken pursuant to established company polices agreed to by all defendants: (1) a company policy of luring potential borrowers through misleading "bait and switch" advertising; (2) instructions from defendant principal shareholder to other company officials to make late charges a prime source of income by treating as late all payments subsequent to the first late payment; (3) a tightly knit, family-oriented operation under the principal shareholder's close personal control; (4) other individual defendants' activity in management positions; and (5) the location in the same building of all headquarters offices of the corporate defendants (24 Cal. 3d 773, 785-786) .

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a demurrer to a complaint for damages arising from a civil conspiracy where the demurrer asserts that the complaint fails to state a cause of action in that it does not allege the formation of the conspiracy, but where plaintiff's complaint alleges in some manner the defendants' responsibility for the underlying wrongful act. It should be noted, however, that although courts have held that a complaint which alleges merely that defendants committed particular acts permits the plaintiff to prove that these acts were committed pursuant to a conspiracy [see Loeb v. Kimmerle (1932) 215 Cal. 143, 151-152, 9 P.2d 199 (discussed in § 46.45[3][a]); Unruh v. Truck Ins. Exch. (1972) 7 Cal. 3d 616, 631, 102 Cal. Rptr. 815, 498 P.2d 1063] , some courts have assumed, nevertheless, that at least where plaintiff seeks to hold a defendant liable for a tort in which he or she took no active part, it is necessary to allege expressly or impliedly the formation and operation of the conspiracy [see Schessler v. Keck (1954) 125 Cal. App. 2d 827, 833, 271 P.2d 588 ; see also § 46.46 for a memorandum of points and authorities opposing a demurrer to a complaint for damages arising from civil conspiracy if the formation and operation of the conspiracy is inferable from other allegations of the complaint].

Where appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[a] Allegation of Conspiracy as Unnecessary

In Loeb v. Kimmerle (1932) 215 Cal. 143, 9 P.2d 199 , defendant Spurlin appealed from a judgment entered against him on a jury verdict, contending that the evidence was insufficient to warrant the implied finding of the jury that he was a conspirator along with another defendant in the assault and battery of plaintiff and that the complaint did not set out facts indicating a conspiracy so as to warn him that he was being held as a party to the assault because he did conspire with the other defendant. In affirming this portion of the judgment, the Supreme Court relied on several decisions and stated that where two or more are sued for a particular wrong, it may be necessary to prove previous combination in order to secure a joint recovery, but it is never necessary to allege it, and if alleged, it is not the gist of the action--that lies in the wrongful and damaging act done. The Court added that the actionable wrong is the tort committed. The liability is determined by the ultimate fact of whether or not the defendant participated in the commission of the wrong. The evidence establishing the conspiracy is merely proof of the ultimate fact (215 Cal. 143, 151-152) .

[a] Allegation of Conspiracy as Unnecessary

In Unruh v. Truck Ins. Exch. (1972) 7 Cal. 3d 616, 102 Cal. Rptr. 815, 498 P.2d 1063 , the facts and background of which are discussed in § 46.20[3][a], the Supreme Court noted that the labeling of an action as one for conspiracy to commit a tort is misleading, since conspiracy, that is, the agreement, is ordinarily not actionable by itself. The cause of action arises out of some wrongful act committed by one or more of the conspirators, and if such a wrongful act is set forth the conspiracy allegation is unnecessary to the statement of a cause of action (7 Cal. 3d 616, 631) .

In Allen v. Powell (1967) 248 Cal. App. 2d 502, 56 Cal. Rptr. 715 , the court of appeals reversed the trial court's dismissal of an action for damages to recover certain real estate commissions after it had sustained a general demurrer. The complaint alleged a tortious conspiracy between a lessee and a lessor to interfere with and frustrate plaintiffs' contractual right to collect a commission for the services he rendered in leasing a specified property. The complaint alleged the formation of the alleged conspiracy in general terms, that is, that the defendants acted collusively and without plaintiffs' knowledge and with a joint intent to deprive plaintiffs of their commission. The court of appeal noted that to state a cause of action for conspiracy, the complaint must allege formation and operation of the conspiracy, the wrongful acts done pursuant thereto, and the damage resulting therefrom. The court determined that the wrongful acts had been properly alleged and that it only remained to be determined if formation and operation was sufficiently alleged. General terms such as "acted collusively," the court observed, have been held sufficient. Moreover, the court added, since the gravamen of the action is the unlawful act or civil wrong done pursuant to the agreement, the conspiracy allegation has been held unnecessary, providing the acts are otherwise sufficiently alleged. Thus, the court concluded that the complaint stated a cause of action (248 Cal. App. 2d 502, 508-509) .

In Hege v. Worthington, Park & Worthington (1962) 209 Cal. App. 2d 670, 26 Cal. Rptr. 132 , the court of appeal reversed the trial court's judgment of dismissal after it had sustained demurrers to a complaint for damages arising out of a conspiracy. The complaint alleged that defendant contractor had failed to perform a contract for the construction of a residence and that plaintiff's former attorney had agreed and conspired with the contractor and its surety to allow the statute of limitations to run on the plaintiff's claim against the contractor. Defendants contended that the complaint failed to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The court noted that to state a cause of action for conspiracy, plaintiff must allege facts which show the formation and operation of a conspiracy, the wrongful acts of any of the conspirators pursuant thereto which, without the conspiracy, would give rise to a cause of action, and damage resulting therefrom. In fact, said the court, if the wrongful act is set out, the conspiracy allegation is unnecessary to the cause of action (209 Cal. App. 2d 670, 678) .

In Greenwood v. Mooradian (1955) 137 Cal. App. 2d 532, 290 P.2d 955 , the court of appeal reversed a trial court's judgment of nonsuit for defendants in an action for damages for conspiracy. The complaint alleged that defendant and others had conspired together to appropriate the benefits and assets of a joint venture which included the plaintiff. Defendants contended that the allegation of conspiracy was too general to allege sufficiently a cause of action and that the acts constituting the conspiracy, as well as those inflicting a wrong pursuant to the conspiracy, must be alleged. The court held that the acts that must be alleged are those which had been done pursuant to the conspiracy and had effectuated an actionable wrong 137 Cal. App. 2d 532, 537-538).

In Ramey v. General Petroleum Corp. (1959) 173 Cal. App. 2d 386, 343 P.2d 787 , the court of appeal reversed a judgment for defendants in an action for damages for conspiracy after the trial court had sustained defendants' demurrer without leave to amend. The complaint alleged a conspiracy between plaintiff's employer, an oil company, and an oil well drilling company to fraudulently conceal and defeat plaintiff's common law action against the drilling company. The latter contended on appeal that plaintiff did not allege that it had done anything other than remain silent. Insofar as this constituted an argument that the acts constituting the conspiracy, as well as those inflicting a wrong pursuant to the conspiracy must be alleged, the court ruled that the cases are to the contrary. Moreover, the court noted that the view that the defendant must be shown to have done some overt and independently tortious act to be liable as a conspirator is a mistaken one because each participant in the wrongful act is responsible as a joint tortfeasor for all damages ensuing from the wrong, regardless of whether or not the participant was a direct actor and regardless of the degree of his or her activity (173 Cal. App. 2d 386, 403-404) .

§ 46.46 Opposing Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)] for Damages Arising From Civil Conspiracy--Formation and Operation of Conspiracy Inferable From Other Allegations of Complaint

[Caption. See § 46.40[1].]

AN ALLEGATION THAT DEFENDANTS CONSPIRED TO COMMIT A CIVIL WRONG IS SUFFICIENT TO ESTABLISH THE EXISTENCE OF A CONSPIRACY WHERE THE FORMATION AND OPERATION THEREOF MAY BE INFERRED FROM ALLEGATIONS SHOWING THE NATURE OF THE ACTS DONE, THE RELATIONS OF THE PARTIES, THE INTERESTS OF THE ALLEGED CONSPIRATORS, AND OTHER CIRCUMSTANCES SUGGESTING CONCERNED ACTION.

A. Express Agreement Not Necessary. A civil conspiracy is not necessarily based on an express agreement among the conspirators (Wagner v. O'Bannon (1969) 274 Cal. App. 2d 121, 132, 79 Cal. Rptr. 44).

B. General Allegation of Agreement. General allegations of "conspiracy," "combination," or "common design," or of the defendants "combining and conspiring," which while standing alone are conclusions, may be aided by other allegations in a complaint which elaborate on the defendants' mutual understanding (Schessler v. Keck (1954) 125 Cal. App. 2d 827, 833, 271 P.2d 588).

C. Allegation of Character and Type of Facts and Circumstances. A complaint which apprises the defendants of the character and type of facts and circumstances on which the plaintiff relies to establish the conspiracy is sufficient as against a general demurrer (Bradley v. Hartford Accident & Indem. Co. (1973) 30 Cal. App. 3d 818, 825, 106 Cal. Rptr. 718 ; Schessler v. Keck (1954) 125 Cal. App. 2d 827, 833, 271 P.2d 588).

D. Inference as to Existence of Conspiracy. In determining the adequacy of a pleading of conspiracy, because of the clandestine nature of the scheme or undertaking engaged in, the existence of the conspiracy must often be inferentially and circumstantially derived from the character of the acts done, the relations of the parties, and other facts and circumstances suggestive of concerted action (Ramey v. General Petroleum Corp. (1959) 173 Cal. App. 2d 386, 404-405, 343 P.2d 787 ; Schessler v. Keck (1954) 125 Cal. App. 2d 827, 833, 271 P.2d 588).

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a demurrer to a complaint for damages arising from a civil conspiracy which asserts that the complaint fails to set forth facts sufficient to show the existence or formation and operation of a conspiracy, but where the complaint alleges that the defendants "conspired together" or "combined" to commit a civil wrong and where the formation and operation of the conspiracy may be inferred from other allegations showing the nature of the acts done, the relations of the parties, the interests of the alleged conspirators, and other circumstances suggestive of concerted action.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used in opposition to a demurrer to a complaint for damages arising from a civil conspiracy supported by the points and authorities set out in § 46.24.

Where appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, where this form is modified for use in connection with a motion for summary judgment [see § 46.35], counsel should attach affidavits or declarations which support the memorandum [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Express Agreement Not Necessary

In Wagner v. O'Bannon (1969) 274 Cal. App. 2d 121, 79 Cal. Rptr. 44 , the court of appeal reversed a trial court's judgment, entered following a trial, denying relief to plaintiffs for an alleged conspiracy to discriminate against them in connection with a real estate transaction. The complaint alleged a conspiracy among real estate brokers, a realty board of which they were members, and the seller of property which plaintiffs had sought to buy. As to the liability of the realty board, the court of appeal noted that the listing agreements used by the brokers specifically mentioned the board and its multiple listing service and stated that the broker was a member of the board. The court cited evidence supporting the inference that the board exercised supervisory influence over the conduct of business by its members and stated that taken as a whole, the evidence supported an inference that the treatment accorded plaintiffs was a part of some kind of group plan or understanding. The court then ruled that the realty board was jointly liable since it was a party to an agreement or concerted action to inflict the wrong complained of. The court commented that a civil conspiracy is not necessarily based on an express agreement and may be shown by circumstantial evidence (274 Cal. App. 2d 121, 132) .

[b] General Allegation of Agreement

In Schessler v. Keck (1954) 125 Cal. App. 2d 827, 271 P.2d 588 , the court of appeal reversed a trial court's judgment of dismissal of an action for conspiracy to defame after it had sustained defendants' general demurrers. The complaint alleged that plaintiff was a cook and caterer in the homes of the wealthy, that one defendant, a nurse in plaintiff doctor's office, discussed her medical condition with her, and that the nurse associated with a wealthy home owner had discussed plaintiff's medical situation with that person and his servants. The complaint charged that those persons "combined and conspired" to discuss plaintiff with others in the community, stating that she was under medical treatment for a loathsome disease and that she should not be employed as a cook and that those statements were false, unprivileged, and damaging.

Defendants contended that the complaint failed to state a cause of action against them in that it should have contained more than a simple allegation that they "combined and conspired." the court of appeal observed that although such allegations, which were interspersed in the pleading, may be conclusions, nevertheless, the entire complaint showed that these terms were aided by other allegations which elaborated on defendants' mutual understanding, and that considering all of the allegations together, they adequately charged defendants with having acted jointly, according to a preconceived plan, to disseminate and publish statements imputing to plaintiff the present existence of an infectious or loathsome disease. Thus plaintiff had done far more than confine her complaint to a naked allegation of conspiracy. A greater quantum of detail was not required. This is particularly true where conspiracy is involved, said the court, since the courts recognized that because of the clandestine nature of the scheme or undertaking engaged in, its existence must often be inferentially and circumstantially derived from the character of the acts done, the relations of the parties, and other facts and circumstances suggesting concerted action. Thus, the court concluded that the complaint sufficiently apprised defendants of the character and type of facts and circumstances on which plaintiff was relying to establish the conspiracy (125 Cal. App. 2d 827, 833) .

[c] Allegation of Character and Type of Facts and Circumstances

In Bradley v. Hartford Accident & Indem. Co. (1973) 30 Cal. App. 3d 818, 106 Cal. Rptr. 718 , the trial court dismissed a defamation action alleging a conspiracy after it had sustained demurrers to the complaint. The court of appeal reversed, holding, in part, that the complaint stated a cause of action for civil conspiracy. The complaint alleged that an insurance company and another defendant, acting jointly and in conspiracy, induced a state prisoner to make false and defamatory statements charging that plaintiffs had colluded and prevailed on a witness to give false testimony in a civil action and that they had manufactured evidence, suborned perjury, and conducted themselves unprofessionally and illegally in that action. The court of appeal ruled that where a cause of action for civil conspiracy to defame the plaintiff is pleaded, explicit details concerning the manner in which the defendants conspired to publish the alleged defamatory matter are not required. If the plaintiff's complaint sufficiently apprises the defendants of the character and type of facts and circumstances on which he relies to establish the conspiracy, the complaint is not vulnerable to a demurrer (30 Cal. App. 3d 818, 825) .

Schessler v. Keck (1954) 125 Cal. App. 2d 827, 271 P.2d 588 , is discussed in § 46.46[3][b].

[d] Inference as to Existence of Conspiracy

In Ramey v. General Petroleum Corp. (1959) 173 Cal. App. 2d 386, 343 P.2d 787 , the facts and background of which are discussed in § 46.45[4][a], the court of appeal stated that the allegations of conspiracy are to be aided by the other allegations of the complaint, and that in plaintiff's complaint allegations were aided by allegations of a hold harmless agreement between the two defendants, by facts showing one defendant's responsibility for the accident to plaintiff, by fraudulent statements of the other defendant, plaintiff's employer, concerning the liability for the accident, and by the failure of defendants to present full information to the Industrial Accident Commission. The court noted that inferences need not be pleaded. The tacit agreement giving rise to the conspiracy was a matter of inference. The law recognizes that persons who are engaged in a conspiracy do not by the nature of things leave a recognizable trail of their activities if they can avoid it. The allegations of conspiracy are treated as matters of inducement leading up to a more particular description of the acts from which conspiracy may be inferred. Thus, the court ruled that conspiracy may sometimes be inferred from the nature of the acts done, the relation of the parties, the interest of the alleged conspirators, and other circumstances (173 Cal. App. 2d 386, 404-405) .

Schessler v. Keck (1954) 125 Cal. App. 2d 827, 271 P.2d 588 , is discussed in § 46.46[3][b].

[a] General Allegation of Agreement

In Allen v. Powell (1967) 248 Cal. App. 2d 502, 56 Cal. Rptr. 715 , the facts and background of which are discussed in § 46.45[4][a], the complaint alleged the information of the alleged conspiracy in general terms, that is, that the defendants "collusively and without plaintiffs' knowledge and with a joint intent to deprive, and for the purpose of depriving" deprived plaintiffs of certain commissions. Such general allegations of agreement, the court observed, have been held sufficient. Accordingly, the court concluded that the complaint stated a cause of action (248 Cal. App. 2d 502, 509) .

In Farr v. Bramblett (1955) 132 Cal. App. 2d 36, 281 P.2d 372 , the court of appeal reversed a trial court's judgment of dismissal after it had sustained general and special demurrers to a complaint alleging a conspiracy to defame plaintiff, who was a politician, and his wife. The complaint alleged the defendants "did agree together" to further plaintiff's opponent's candidacy for public office by libeling plaintiff and his wife--implying affiliation with communist causes--and that they published certain articles pursuant to the conspiracy. A conspiracy to commit libel followed by the publication of libelous matter, said the court, was clearly an actionable tort. With respect to plaintiff's allegation of conspiracy, the court held that plaintiffs could not more clearly have alleged the ultimate fact of conspiracy than by pleading that defendants did agree together (132 Cal. App. 2d 36, 47) .

[b] Inference as to Existence of Conspiracy

In Kimball v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1934) 220 Cal. 203, 30 P.2d 39 , the Supreme Court affirmed a judgment for plaintiff in an action for personal injuries sustained during his employment. Plaintiff initiated his action against both the employer and defendant company, but the trial court has sustained the employer's demurrer, and it was not appealed. At the time of his injury and up until approximately one month prior to bringing suit, plaintiff was unaware that he had been injuried by an employee of defendant. He had accepted compensation under workers' compensation in ignorance of his cause of action against defendant, and at no time did the employer disclose to him or the Industrial Accident Commission the fact that defendant caused the injury or that the two agreed to share the costs involved. On appeal defendant contended that the evidence did not show fraudulent concealment of the character necessary to toll the statute of limitations. However, said the court, when negotiations to settle the claim took place between plaintiff's employer and defendant, the employer had a positive duty to disclose the fact of the negotiations to plaintiff. Because the facts of the accident were concealed from plaintiff, the Court held that the jury was justified in inferring that the employer and defendant were acting in concert and that a tacit agreement existed between them that the defendant's liability should be kept concealed (220 Cal. 203, 219-220) .

In Black v. Sullivan (1975) 48 Cal. App. 3d 557, 122 Cal. Rptr. 119 , the court of appeal reversed a trial court's grant of summary judgment for defendants in action for damages arising from a conspiracy, holding that the existence of a conspiracy could be inferred from certain documents plaintiff filed. Plaintiffs were the debtors and trustors under a deed of trust. They sought damages against the beneficiary payees and the assignees for security of the note the deed of trust for failure to comply with Civ. Code § 2943, which requires the beneficiary or assignee of a trust deed to supply certain information to the trustors, in that the payees and assignees had failed to furnish data as to the unpaid balance causing certain buyers of the property to refuse to complete the sale. Plaintiffs also alleged that the assignees and a law firm representing defendant beneficiaries conspired to prevent the sale of the property so that they could recover it through a trustee's sale.

The court observed that the significance of an action based on conspiracy lies in the fact that it renders each participant in the wrongful act responsible as a joint tortfeasor for all damages ensuing from the wrong, irrespective of whether or not he was a direct actor and regardless of the degree of his activity. A plaintiff is entitled to damages from such defendants as he can show have united, participated, or cooperated in inflicting a wrong on him. Since such participation, cooperation, or unity of action is difficult to prove by direct evidence, it can be inferred from the nature of the act done, the relation of the parties, the interests of the alleged conspirators and other circumstances. It is not necessary that the plaintiffs produce evidence showing that the defendants met and actually agreed to undertake the performance of the unlawful act, the court added. Because it was clear that beneficiaries had failed to comply with Civ. Code § 2943, the fact that the other defendants, including the law firm, were not individually obligated to perform under the statute did not prevent their being liable under the theory that they aided, cooperated, and assisted in the beneficiaries' noncompliance or conspired to interfere with the escrow contract by preventing the close of the escrow (48 Cal. App. 3d 557, 567) .

In Wetherton v. Growers Farm Labor Ass'n (1969) 275 Cal. App. 2d 168, 79 Cal. Rptr. 543 , the facts and background of which are discussed in § 46.36[3][a], the court of appeal reversed the trial court's grant of summary judgment for the defendants in an action by certain farm laborers against their former employer, a farm owner, and two farms industry associations and their employee, for damages arising from an alleged conspiracy among all of the defendants pursuant to which plaintiffs were discharged by the employer. As to the cause of action asserted against the association's employee, the court noted that because no compensable injury resulted from his direct action, plaintiffs' damages being the result of their discharge by the employer, a showing of conspiracy was essential to plaintiffs' claim against that person. Plaintiffs must show a plan for concerted action taken by the employee and the other defendants to achieve the unlawful purpose of depriving plaintiffs of their union organizing rights under the Labor Code. Liability as a coconspirator depends on projected joint action. The mere knowledge of acquiescence in, or approval of the act, without cooperation or agreement to cooperate, is not enough for liability to attach, said the court. However, the scope of a conspiracy may be inferred from what was done in furtherance of the alleged conspiracy and from other surrounding circumstances. In this case the court found that plaintiffs' supporting affidavit showed that defendant employee had done more than advise or approve of the actions of defendant farm owner; rather, he had questioned one plaintiff at length about union activity, told him that he and his coworkers could be fired, and instructed him to warn his coworkers that if they joined the union they would be fired. The court stated that it could be inferred that there was a joint project for the farm owner to discharge plaintiffs and for the association's employe to influence other farm owners in the area not to hire plaintiffs if they should insist on joining the union, adding that it would not be a defense that his actual participation amounted only to advising the active member of the conspiracy or acting as his agent (275 Cal. App. 2d 168, 176-177) .

In Agnew v. Parks (1959) 172 Cal. App. 2d 756, 343 P.2d 118 , the court of appeal reversed the trial court's judgment of nonsuit against plaintiff in an action for damages for conspiracy based on allegations that defendant doctor had conspired with a medical association for the purpose of damaging plaintiff's rights in a malpractice action.

The action of appeal held that the complaint's reference to the acts of "all defendants" and "each of them" not only in furtherance of a conspiracy but in creation of a plan to misrepresent defendant doctor as an unprejudiced witness for the purpose of damaging plaintiff, properly alleged a general conspiracy. Reading the allegation of the complaint as a whole, the court stated that they charged a concert of action among all defendants according to a definite plan, their illegal actions in furtherance of the common scheme or design to achieve the unlawful purpose of their combination, and their knowledge of the conspiracy and its unlawful purpose (172 Cal. App. 2d 756, 769-770) .

In James v. Herbert (1957) 149 Cal. App. 2d 741, 309 P.2d 91 , the court of appeal reversed a trial court's judgment of dismissal after it had sustained general and special demurrers to a complaint for damages alleging a conspiracy to deprive plaintiff of her share of the profits of a joint venture. The complaint alleged that plaintiff had entered into a joint venture agreement with defendants and that defendants thereafter had entered into a "wrongful conspiracy" to exclude her from further participation, to cheat and defraud her, to deprive her of her interest in the venture, and to obtain and retain the business and profits for themselves. The court of appeal stated that a conspiracy may be inferred from the nature of the acts done, the relations of the parties, the interests of the alleged conspirators, and other circumstances. To be entitled to a joint recovery of damages against defendants for inflicting a wrong through a conspiracy, plaintiff must allege and prove that there existed a concert of action between defendants to accomplish the purpose of the conspiracy, that their actions were illegal and in furtherance of a common scheme or design to achieve the unlawful purpose of the conspiracy, and that defendants knew of the conspiracy and its unlawful purpose. Comparing plaintiff's allegations of conspiracy in other cases, the court concluded that the complaint in this case sufficiently alleged a cause of action for conspiracy (149 Cal. App. 2d 741, 746-747) .

§ 46.47 Opposing Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)] for Damages Arising From Civil Conspiracy--Statute of Limitations--Cause of Action Accrues on Date of Last Overt Act

[Caption. See § 46.40[1].]

A CAUSE OF ACTION FOR DAMAGES ARISING FROM A CIVIL CONSPIRACY ACCRUES ON THE DATE THAT THE LAST OVERT ACT IS COMMITTED PURSUANT TO THE CONSPIRACY.

A. Accrual of Cause of Action. While a conspiracy is in existence, the statute of limitations does not begin to run until the wrongful acts committed pursuant to the conspiracy have ceased; thus, a cause of action based on conspiracy accrues on the date the last overt act is committed pursuant to the conspiracy (Wyatt v. Union Mortgage Co. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 773, 786, 157 Cal. Rptr. 392, 598 P.2d 45).

[Optional] B. Period of Limitations May Be Tolled After Discovery of Fraud if Fraud Is Continuing Wrong. Just as the statute of limitations does not run against an action based on fraud so long as the fraud remains concealed, the statute may be tolled even after the fraud is discovered, for so long as the sheer economic duress or undue influence embedded in the fraud continues to hold the victim in place (Wyatt v. Union Mortgage Co. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 773, 788, 157 Cal. Rptr. 392, 598 P.2d 45 ; Aaroe v. First Am. Title Ins. Co. (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 124, 128, 271 Cal. Rptr. 434).

[Optional] C. Statute Runs From Time Disclosure Made. The statute of limitations does not begin to run on a cause of action based on a conspiracy to conceal another cause of action until a disclosure of the existence of the cause of action is made (Ramey v. General Petroleum Corp. (1959) 173 Cal. App. 2d 386, 405, 343 P.2d 787).

[Optional] D. Purposeful Attempts to Conceal Constitute Overt Acts for Purpose of Statute of Limitations. Purposeful attempts to conceal a conspiracy are an integral part of the conspiracy and thus constitute the last overt acts which trigger the statute of limitations period (Livett v. F.C. Financial Associates (1981) 124 Cal. App. 3d 413, 420-421).

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a demurrer to a complaint for damages arising from a civil conspiracy when the ground of the demurrer is that the cause of action is barred by an applicable statute of limitations, but the plaintiff can show that the last overt act committed in furtherance of the conspiracy was within the applicable statutory period.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the demurrer supported by the points and authorities set out in § 46.29. With appropriate modifications, this memorandum may also be used in opposition to the motion supported by the points and authorities set out in § 46.38. When used in the latter manner, counsel should attach supporting affidavits or declarations.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Accrual of Cause of Action

In Wyatt v. Union Mortgage Co. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 773, 157 Cal. Rptr. 392, 598 P.2d 45 , plaintiffs brought an action against a loan broker, its affiliated corporations, their principal shareholder, and several of the corporations' officers and directors alleging breach of duties toward the plaintiffs in connection with the negotiation of a second mortgage loan. Liability of all but one of the defendants was premised on a theory of civil conspiracy. Judgment was for the plaintiffs, imposing on the defendants compensatory and punitive damages, and the defendants appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed. The defendants contended that the trial court erred in concluding that the statute of limitations on the plaintiffs' claims was tolled until the "last overt act" in the conspiracy, arguing that the three-year period allowed for commencing actions based on fraud under former Code Civ. Proc. § 338(4) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 338(d)] had passed. The Court rejected that argument, agreeing with the trial court's conclusion that, when a civil conspiracy is properly alleged and proved, the statute of limitations does not begin to run on any part of a plaintiff's claims until the "the last overt act" pursuant to the conspiracy has been completed. In the case before it, stated the Court, the "last overt act" was the defendants' collection a few weeks before trial of the final payment on the subject loan. This was the culminating act in the conspiracy to defraud the plaintiffs that began with the first tortious act several years preceding. Therefore, held the Court, the trial judgment correctly refused to instruct the jury on the statute of limitations

(24 Cal. 3d 773, 786) . As their general purpose, statutes of limitation have to provide repose and to protect persons against the burden of having to defend against stale claims. So long as a person continues to commit wrongful acts in furtherance of a conspiracy to harm another, he or she can neither claim unfair prejudice at the filing of a claim against him or her, nor disturbance of any justifiable repose built on the passage of time (24 Cal. 3d 773, 787) . The Court also stated that when, as in the case before it, the underlying fraud is a continuing wrong, a convincing rationale exists for delaying the running of statute of limitations. Just as the statute of limitations does not run against an action based on fraud so long as the fraud remains concealed, so ought the statute be tolled even after the fraud is discovered, for so long as the sheer economic duress or undue influence embedded in the fraud continues to hold the victim in place (24 Cal. 3d 773, 788) .

[b] Period of Limitations May Be Tolled After Discovery of Fraud If Fraud Is Continuing Wrong

The facts and procedural background of Wyatt v. Union Mortgage Co. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 773, 157 Cal. Rptr. 392, 598 P.2d 45 , are discussed in § 46.47[3][a]. In holding that the trial judge correctly refused to instruct the jury on the statute of limitations in a case in which the last overt act was defendants' collection of the final payment due on a fraudulent loan a few weeks before trial, the Supreme Court stated that when, as in the case before it, the underlying fraud is a continuing wrong, a convincing rationale exists for delaying the statute of limitations. Just as the statute of limitations does not run against an action based on fraud so long as the fraud remains concealed, so ought the statute be tolled even after the fraud is discovered, for so long as the sheer economic duress or undue influence embedded in the fraud continues to hold the victim in place (24 Cal. 3d 773, 788) .

The facts and procedural background of Aaroe v. First Am. Title Ins. Co. (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 124, 271 Cal. Rptr. 434 , are discussed in § 46.48[3][a]. The court of appeal, holding that a trial court erred in granting a nonsuit on statute of limitation grounds, cited Wyatt v. Union Mortgage Co. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 773, 157 Cal. Rptr. 392, 598 P.2d 45 , for the proposition that the last overt act doctrine prevents the statute of limitations from beginning to run in certain cases, even after the fraud is discovered, until the commission of the last overt act pursuant to the conspiracy (222 Cal. App. 3d 124, 128) .

[c] Statute Runs From Time Disclosure Made

In Ramey v. General Petroleum Corp. (1959) 173 Cal. App. 2d 386, 343 P.2d 787 , the facts and background of which are discussed in § 46.45[4][a], the court of appeal ruled that the statute of limitations does not begin to run in the case of a conspiracy to conceal from plaintiff the facts relating to a cause of action until a disclosure of the cause of action is made, thereby terminating the wrongful concealment. Thus, the court ruled that defendant should not be rewarded for its alleged fraud in concealing from plaintiff his cause of action against a third party for employment-related injury. Since the statute of limitations was adopted to protect defendants against the stale claims of dilatory plaintiffs, it would be unconscionable under the facts alleged, said the court, to hold that plaintiff is unable to proceed with his action against the very parties who affirmatively misled him because his action was not commenced within the statutory period (173 Cal. App. 2d 386, 405) .

[d] Purposeful Attempts to Conceal Constitute Overt Acts for Purpose of Statute of Limitations

In Livett v. F.C. Financial Associates (1981) 124 Cal. App. 3d 413 , an action for conspiracy to defraud, the court of appeal reversed a summary judgment for defendants based on expiration of the three-year statute of limitations period under former Code Civ. Proc. § 338(4) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 338(d)]. Defendants, purchasers of certain real property and the bank which made them a development loan, allegedly conspired to deprive plaintiff, a real estate developer, from compensation for development of the property through a sham foreclosure sale defeating plaintiff's interest in the realty. The trial court granted defendants' motion for summary judgment on the grounds that the period of limitations commences to run on completion of the last overt act in furtherance of the conspiracy, and that in the instant case, that act was the foreclosure sale which had taken place more than three years prior to initiation of the lawsuit.

The court of appeal based its reversal of the summary judgment on the fact that evidence existed demonstrating defendants' attempts to conceal their scheme from plaintiff following the foreclosure sale. The court held that purposeful attempts to conceal a conspiracy constitute an integral part of the initial fraud and serve to extend the time period over which the conspiracy took place. The evidence, which had not been considered by the trial court, raised substantial factual issues concerning the date upon which the statute of limitations period expired, requiring resolution by trial, and therefore the summary judgment had been improper (124 Cal. App. 3d 413, 418, 420-421) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Accrual of Cause of Action

In Rodriguez v. North Am. Aviation, Inc. (1967) 252 Cal. App. 2d 889, 61 Cal. Rptr. 579 , the court of appeal reversed a trial court's judgment of dismissal after it has sustained a demurrer to the complaint. The complaint alleged that defendants conspired, on or about October 9, 1962, to slander plaintiff, that one defendant made slanderous statements about plaintiff on that date, that as a consequence thereof plaintiff was demoted, that other defendants made such statements on October 31, 1963, in effecting the conspiracy, that on December 9, 1963, another person made a republication thereof, which the defendants had reason to believe would be made, and that as a consequence thereof, plaintiff was discharged from his job. The complaint was filed on October 13, 1964. Plaintiff argued that the October 9, 1962, publication was actionable because since there was a civil conspiracy, the statute of limitations did not begin to run until the last overt act pursuant to the conspiracy had been committed. The court of appeal held that the essence of the action was for the damages caused by the October 31 publication and concluded that the judgment of dismissal was erroneous because the applicable statute of limitations, former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 340(c)], did not bar an action based on that publication (252 Cal. App. 2d 889, 892) .

In Kenworthy v. Brown (1967) 248 Cal. App. 2d 298, 56 Cal. Rptr. 461 , the court of appeal affirmed the trial court's judgment of dismissal of an action for damages for an alleged conspiracy after it had sustained a demurrer to the second amended complaint without leave to amend. As to when the cause of action accrued, the court held that a cause of action based on civil conspiracy accrues on the date the last overt act is committed pursuant to the conspiracy. Plaintiff contended that it was not possible to ascertain from the face of the second amended complaint that the applicable limitation period had elapsed since the accrual of the action. However, because the first amended complaint, of which the court took notice, showed that the date on which the last overt act necessary to complete the alleged conspiracy occurred more than two years before the action was filed, the court held that the plaintiffs were barred from proceeding further (248 Cal. App. 2d 298, 302-303) .

In Filice v. Boccardo (1962) 210 Cal. App. 2d 843, 26 Cal. Rptr. 789 , the facts and background of which are discussed in § 46.29[4][a], the court of appeal acknowledged the general rule that the statute of limitations does not begin to run until the last overt act occurs in furtherance of the alleged conspiracy by observing that the last fraudulent act alleged to have been committed by any of the defendants occurred beyond the limitation period (210 Cal. App. 2d 843, 846) .

In Agnew v. Parks (1959) 172 Cal. App. 2d 756, 343 P.2d 118 , which is discussed in § 46.29[4][a], the court of appeal acknowledged the general rule that the statute of limitations does not begin to run until the last overt act occurs in furtherance of the alleged conspiracy when it observed that it was apparent on the face of the complaint that the last fraudulent act occurred more than three years before the pleading was filed (172 Cal. App. 2d 756, 766) .

In Schessler v. Keck (1954) 125 Cal. App. 2d 827, 271 P.2d 588 , the court of appeal held that the trial court had erred in sustaining general and special demurrers to a complaint for damages alleging a conspiracy to defame plaintiff, stating that the action was not barred by the applicable statute of limitations. Defendants contended that it appeared on the face of the complaint that the alleged slander was published beyond the one-year limitation period of former Code Civ. Proc.

§ 340(3) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 340(c)]. However, noting that the complaint alleged an overt act pursuant to defendants' conspiracy within the limitation period, the court ruled that when the complaint alleges that libelous acts were committed pursuant to a conspiracy formed by defendants, the statute of limitations does not commence to run until the last overt act is committed pursuant to the conspiracy (125 Cal. App. 2d 827, 833-834) .

[Caption. See § 46.40[1].]

THE DEFENDANT'S/CROSS DEFENDANT'S DEMURRER TO THE COMPLAINT/CROSS COMPLAINT SHOULD BE OVERRULED BECAUSE THE COMPLAINT/CROSS COMPLAINT ALLEGES THAT THE FRAUD WAS NOT DISCOVERED UNTIL LESS THAN THREE YEARS PRIOR TO COMMENCEMENT OF THE ACTION, AND THE ACTION WAS THEREFORE FILED WITHIN THE LIMITATIONS PERIOD.

A. Delayed Discovery Rule Can Be Basis for Finding of Timeliness Independent of Last Overt Act Doctrine. In cases in which it is alleged that the fraud was not discovered until less than three years prior to the filing of the suit, under Section 338(d) of the Code of Civil Procedure the action may be timely despite the fact that the last overt act is more than three years old (Aaroe v. First Am. Title Ins. Co. (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 124, 128, 271 Cal. Rptr. 434).

B. Allegations of Delayed Discovery Establish Timeliness. If a complaint alleges facts supporting a tolling of the limitations period due to delayed discovery, the allegations establish the timeliness of the action under Section 338(d) of the Code of Civil Procedure (Aaroe v. First Am. Title Ins. Co. (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 124, 128-129, 271 Cal. Rptr. 434).

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a demurrer to a complaint or cross complaint for damages arising from a civil conspiracy when the ground of the demurrer is that the cause of action is barred by the applicable statute of limitations, but the complaint alleges that the plaintiff or cross complaint did not discover the fraud until a date that is less than three years before the commencement of the action.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the demurrer supported by the points and authorities set out in § 46.29.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. That is, counsel should refer to the specific paragraph numbers of allegations in the complaint that allege facts relating to the delayed discovery of the fraud.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

Aaroe v. First Am. Title Ins. Co. (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 124, 271 Cal. Rptr. 434 , involved an action for conspiracy brought by investors against a corporation who ran a trust deed investment program and a title insurance company who prepared title insurance or escrow statements supporting alleged self-dealing deeds of trust. The complaint alleged that the corporation and the title insurance company conspired to defraud plaintiffs of their money, and that they did not learn of the insurance company's participation in the conspiracy until about four months prior to the filing of the complaint. The defendants moved for nonsuit against the claims of the plaintiffs. Although the trial court recognized that suit was filed within three years of the alleged discovery of the fraud as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 338(d), it granted the nonsuit on the ground that the plaintiffs could not have the benefit of that statute of limitations because the last overt act pursuant to the conspiracy to defraud occurred more than three years prior to the filing of the suit. The plaintiffs appealed from the judgment of nonsuit.

The court of appeal reversed and remanded. The court rejected the title insurance company's argument that § 338(d) must be modified and shortened, in a case alleging a conspiracy to defraud, by the last overt act doctrine as enunciated in Wyatt v. Union Mortgage Co. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 773, 157 Cal. Rptr. 392, 598 P.2d 45 . The court stated the last overt act doctrine prevents the statute of limitations from beginning to run in certain cases, even after the fraud is discovered, until the commission of the last overt act pursuant to the conspiracy. However, the court observed that Wyatt also recognized that the statute of limitations for a conspiracy to defraud is otherwise governed by § 338(d). Therefore, the court held that in cases in which it is alleged that the fraud was not discovered until less than three years prior to the filing of the suit, § 338(d) directs the action may be timely despite the fact that the last overt act is more than three years old. Any other rule, according to the court, would simply repeal the three-year discovery rule of § 338(d), which is applicable in fraud and conspiracy to defraud cases, and replace it with a straight three-year statute measured from the last fraudulent act. Thus, although one tolling doctrine--the last overt act doctrine--might not apply to save the action that was before the court, the delayed discovery rule could make the action timely (222 Cal. App. 3d 124, 128) .

[b] Allegations of Delayed Discovery Establish Timeliness

The facts and procedural background of Aaroe v. First Am. Title Ins. Co. (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 124, 271 Cal. Rptr. 434 , are discussed in § 46.48[3][a]. In that case, the court of appeal observed that the plaintiffs relied on the delayed discovery doctrine under Code Civ. Proc. § 338(d), not the last overt act doctrine (222 Cal. App. 3d 124, 128) . They alleged facts in their complaint supporting a tolling of the limitations period due to their delayed discovery. These allegations, concluded the court, established the timeliness of their action in § 338(d). The fact that the plaintiffs did not additionally allege that the action was tolled under the last overt act doctrine was irrelevant because the that omission cannot defeat the delayed discovery tolling that § 338(d) allows. Because the last overt act doctrine was the sole basis on which nonsuit was granted, and the evidence at trial did not negate the plaintiffs' claims to tolling under the delayed discovery rule, the court of appeal reversed the judgment of the trial court and remanded for further proceedings (222 Cal. App. 3d 124, 129) .

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a general demurrer to a complaint for damages arising from a civil conspiracy that asserts that the complaint fails to state a cause of action because plaintiff dismissed all causes of action against a co-defendant, and consequently there is no underlying wrong on which to base the civil conspiracy allegation [see Code Civ. Proc. § 877 (regarding tortfeasors liable for same tort generally)].

This memorandum may also be adapted for use in opposition to defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings, or adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used in opposition to a demurrer supported by the points and authorities in § 46.20.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Release or Dismissal of One Co-Conspirator Does Not Release Others

In Barney v. Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co. (1986) 185 Cal. App. 3d 966, 230 Cal. Rptr. 215 , plaintiff (insured) was involved in a traffic collision, and retained her own attorney, who advised her insurer of her injuries, and of her intent to pursue a claim against the third party. The third party brought an action against insured for damages arising from personal injury and property damage, and served both insured and insurer. The insurer retained another attorney to defend insured, whom it instructed to provide a limited defense and not to file a cross complaint. The insurer, through that attorney, settled the third-party claim and induced the third party to file a dismissal with prejudice, without first notifying the insured or her attorney, nor advising them to file a timely cross complaint. The insured brought an action against the third party, who successfully moved for summary judgment on the ground that the previous dismissal barred the action. The insured then brought an action against the insurer and insurance defense counsel. She then died, and her executor was substituted as plaintiff. The amended complaint stated a cause of action against the insurance defense counsel and the insurer for breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing and civil conspiracy, and against the same counsel for breach of fiduciary duty or legal malpractice. In the first half of the bifurcated trial, the jury found by special verdict that the third party and the insured were comparatively negligent, and assessed the proportion of damages. Subsequently, the insured settled its claim against insurance defense counsel, and dismissed all causes of action against them. The insurer filed motions for judgment on the pleadings on the ground that the complaint failed to state causes of action. With regard to civil conspiracy, insurer contended that dismissal of the cause of action against counsel left no underlying wrong on which to base the civil conspiracy allegation. The trial court granted the motions without leave to amend, and entered judgment for dismissal. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. After disposing of issues regarding the bad-faith cause of action, the court held, with regard to civil conspiracy, that a release or dismissal, with or without prejudice, of one of several defendants does not release the others, pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 877 (effect of release or dismissal on tortfeasors liable for same tort generally). Defendant misperceived the effect of a civil conspiracy allegation and its relation to a dismissal of one of the parties. The pleading of civil conspiracy is merely a procedural method of joining defendants, and is superfluous when, as in the instant case, concurrent or successive acts are alleged, unless the plaintiff cannot show or prove each defendant committed a wrongful act or some part of it. The only significance of a civil conspiracy allegation is that it renders each participant responsible as a contributory tortfeasor whether or not each one actually committed the wrongful act. The effect of a dismissal of a defendant in a civil conspiracy action is similar to that in an action involving the simple joinder of defendants in a single action without benefit of the procedural conspiracy allegation. Code Civ. Proc. § 877 applies expressly to a release given to one or more of a number of tortfeasors claimed to be liable for the same tort, and therefore applies to defendants alleged to have committed separate wrongs (concurrent or successive) as well as to true joint tortfeasors. Plaintiff's dismissal of all causes of action against the attorney in no way affects any liability the insurer may have for plaintiff's damages (185 Cal. App. 3d 966, 983) .

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a demurrer to a complaint for damages arising from a civil conspiracy when the ground of the demurrer is that the cause of action is barred by an applicable statute of limitations. The ground for opposition is that plaintiff can show the running of the statute was tolled while seeking an order under Civ. Code Proc. § 1714.10 permitting the filing of a complaint against an attorney based on a civil conspiracy between the attorney and the attorney's client.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should specify the actions taken by plaintiff that tolled the statute, and mention the dates that these actions were taken.

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a demurrer to a complaint for damages against an attorney for a civil conspiracy with the attorney's client arising from an attempt to contest or compromise a claim or dispute, and that is based on the attorney's representation of the client, when the attorney has an independent legal duty to the plaintiff, or the attorney's acts go beyond the performance of a professional duty to serve the client and involve a conspiracy to violate a legal duty in furtherance of the attorney's financial gain [Civ. Code § 1714.10(c)]. The third alternative point may be used to oppose the contention that the requirements of Civ. Code § 1714.10 apply to a plaintiff bringing a malicious prosecution action against an attorney.

The defense must be raised by the attorney charged with civil conspiracy on that attorney's first appearance by demurrer, motion to strike, or such other motion or application as may be appropriate. Failure to raise the defense will constitute a waiver of the defense [Civ. Code § 1714.10(b); see § 46.54].

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the demurrer supported by the points and authorities set out in § 46.28.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, if the basis for the complaint is that the attorney defendant owes an independent legal duty to the plaintiff, counsel should identify by paragraph number the allegations in the complaint that establish that duty.

In appropriate circumstances, a trial court may permit amendment of the complaint after sustaining a demurrer based on failure to comply with Civ. Code § 1714.10 [Central Concrete Supply Co., Inc. v. Bursak (2010) 182 Cal. App. 4th 1092, 1103, 105 Cal. Rptr. 3d 909] . For example, amendment might be allowed when the plaintiff appears able to allege that the attorney was not providing legal representation at the time of the alleged conspiratorial conduct, as well as when plaintiff appears able to allege that the attorney's acts went beyond the performance of a professional duty to serve the client and involved a conspiracy to violate a legal duty in furtherance of the attorney's financial gain [Central Concrete Supply Co., Inc. v. Bursak (2010) 182 Cal. App. 4th 1092, 1103, 105 Cal. Rptr. 3d 909 ; see Civ. Code § 1714.10(a), (c)]. Thus, as a practical matter, a plaintiff who did not seek a pre-filing order, but who has a compelling argument that the pre-filing order requirement does not apply, should be allowed to amend his or her complaint to specifically allege the facts supporting that conclusion if he or she failed to do so in the original complaint.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Order Establishing Reasonable Probability of Success Not Required in Action Alleging Independent Duty

In Pavicich v. Santucci (2000) 85 Cal. App. 4th 382, 102 Cal. Rptr. 2d 125 , an investor in a limited partnership, the limited partnership itself, and a related corporation filed cross-complaints against an attorney and his former clients, which included claims of a conspiracy between the attorney and his former clients. The cross-complaints alleged that the attorney failed to reveal, at the time that the investor was considering whether to invest in the partnership, that litigation was being threatened by former associates of the parties that had put together the partnership and corporation, and that this litigation dealt directly with the enterprise for which the legal entities had been formed. During the relevant period in which the investor was considering his potential investment in the project, the attorney, as well as the parties seeking the investment, had affirmatively stated in response to the investor's inquiries that the existence of a release precluded any potential claims against the partnership stemming from the early days of the venture, even though they knew that the release was being challenged as having been procured by fraud. The threatened litigation eventually materialized and resulted in the limited partnership agreeing to pay a substantial settlement. The cross-complaints at issue were then filed in subsequent litigation stemming from an indemnification dispute. The attorney demurred to the conspiracy claims brought against him on the grounds that the conspiracy cause of action did not comply with the requirements of Civ. Code § 1714.10. The trial court overruled the demurrer after concluding that the statute was inapplicable. The attorney appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court reviewed the language and legislative history of Civ. Code § 1714.10 and agreed that it was inapplicable to the facts of the case. After noting the exceptions to the pleading requirements provided by Civ. Code § 1714.10(c), which include an exception for cases in which the attorney owes an independent legal duty to the plaintiff, the court questioned whether, in light of those exceptions, the pleading requirements could ever apply to any viable conspiracy action brought against an attorney. According to the court, those exceptions encompassed the only viable conspiracy claims that could be brought against an attorney for action taken in representing a client (85 Cal. App. 4th 382, 394-396) . The court then proceeded to apply the independent duty exception to the case before it. The court held that the attorney had a duty owed directly to the potential investor not to commit fraud through express misrepresentations when soliciting the investment, and that the facts alleged conduct that violated that duty. Therefore, the conspiracy claim brought by the investor fell within the independent duty exception to the pleading requirements (85 Cal. App. 4th 382, 397-398) . The court also held that the conspiracy claims brought by the limited partnership and the corporation were also viable, because the attorney had been acting as their attorney at the time of the alleged conspiracy to defraud and therefore had a fiduciary duty to both entities. Because an independent duty existed, the pleading requirements were inapplicable (85 Cal. App. 4th 382, 398) .

[b] Civ. Code § 1714.10 Does Not Apply to Malicious Prosecution Action Against Attorney

In Westamco Inv. Co. v. Lee (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 481, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 634 , an investment company filed a malicious prosecution action against an attorney, his law firm, and a bank. The malicious prosecution action was based on two underlying complaints and an appeal filed unsuccessfully against the investment company by the attorney, who was representing the bank in the dispute. The malicious prosecution complaint included allegations that the attorney failed to properly investigate the facts and the law relevant to the underlying claims, and this failure led to the filing of claims that were untenable. The attorney responded to the malicious prosecution action by filing a motion to strike under Civ. Code § 1714.10, contending that the malicious prosecution complaint, which alleged that the bank was acting "by and through" the attorney and his law firm, effectively alleged a cause of action against the attorney for conspiracy with the bank and necessitated compliance with the pre-filing court approval provisions of Civ. Code § 1714.10. The trial court denied the attorney's motion to strike and the attorney appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the denial of the motion to strike the complaint. The court held that Civ. Code § 1714.10 does not apply to a malicious prosecution action against an attorney who allegedly prosecuted an action without probable cause and adequate investigation and which any reasonable attorney would have recognized as untenable. The court concluded that a wholly independent malicious prosecution action may be brought against an attorney for his or her wrongful conduct in bringing an untenable action without pleading a civil conspiracy. In the case before the court, the complaint alleged a wholly independent action against the attorney, based on the failure to properly investigate the underlying claim, that was not contingent on any liability on the part of the bank (69 Cal. App. 4th 481, 487-488) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Order Establishing Reasonable Probability of Success Not Required in Action Alleging Independent Duty

In Shafer v. Berger, Kahn, Shafton, Moss, Figler, Simon & Gladstone (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 54, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 777 , the plaintiffs were homeowners who had obtained an arbitration judgment against a home remodeler, then subsequently filed suit against the remodeler's insurer and its attorney. This subsequent lawsuit, which included a claim for conspiracy between the insurer and its attorney, was based on allegedly fraudulent statements made by the attorney concerning the extent of coverage, statements that prompted the plaintiffs to accept much less than the policy limits in satisfaction of the judgment. The trial court sustained the attorney's demurrer to the conspiracy claim based on the plaintiffs' failure to comply with Civ. Code § 1714.10, but the court of appeal reversed. The court of appeal first concluded that the attorney had a legal duty to refrain from misrepresenting the amount of the insurer's liability (107 Cal. App. 4th 54, 74-77) . The court then held that the attorney owed this duty to the plaintiffs by virtue of his status as an attorney and was independent of any duty owed by the insurer. As such, the conspiracy claim fell under the independent duty exception of Civ. Code § 1714.10, and the statutory requirements for obtaining a court order prior to pursuing a conspiracy claim against the attorney did not apply (107 Cal. App. 4th 54, 84) .

[b] Civil Code Section 1714.10 Does Not Apply to Malicious Prosecution Action Against Attorney

In Alden v. Hindin (2003) 110 Cal. App. 4th 1502, 2 Cal. Rptr. 3d 845 , the plaintiff was an attorney who brought an action against a former client and the plaintiff's successor attorneys for malicious prosecution and conspiracy following the plaintiff's successful defense of the former client's action for malpractice and breach of fiduciary duty. The successor attorneys filed a general demurrer on the grounds that the plaintiff had failed to obtain a pre-filing order pursuant to Civ. Code § 1714.10. The trial court sustained the demurrer and dismissed the entire complaint against the successor attorneys. The court of appeal reversed the dismissal of the malicious prosecution claim. The court noted that under Westamco Investment Co. v. Lee, summarized in § 46.51[3][b], Civ. Code § 1714.10 did not apply to the malicious prosecution action. Assuming for the sake of argument that the related conspiracy claim was subject to the statutory requirements of Civ. Code § 1714.10, the court held that the trial court erred in dismissing the malicious prosecution claim merely because it was included in the same complaint. The language of Civ. Code § 1714.10(b) makes clear that only the conspiracy claim was subject to the defense of failure to obtain pre-filing court approval under Civ. Code § 1714.10(a). Therefore, although included in the same pleading, the malicious prosecution claim asserted by the plaintiff was not subject to dismissal for failure to comply with Civ. Code § 1714.10 (110 Cal. App. 4th 1502, 1506-1508) .

§ 46.52 Opposing Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)] for Damages Arising From Civil Conspiracy--Liability May Be Based on Concert of Action [Civ. Code § 1714(a)]

[Caption. See § 46.40[1].]

A CAUSE OF ACTION IS STATED AGAINST DEFENDANT _____ [name] UNDER THE DOCTRINE OF CONCERT OF ACTION BECAUSE THE COMPLAINT ALLEGES THAT HE/SHE _____ [KNEW THAT THE CONDUCT OF THE OTHER DEFENDANT(S) CONSTITUTED A BREACH OF DUTY TO PLAINTIFF AND HE/SHE GAVE SUBSTANTIAL ASSISTANCE OR ENCOURAGEMENT TO DEFENDANT(S) or GAVE SUBSTANTIAL ASSISTANCE IN ACCOMPLISHING A TORTIOUS RESULT AND HIS/HER OWN CONDUCT, SEPARATELY CONSIDERED, CONSTITUTED A BREACH OF DUTY TO PLAINTIFF].

A. Elements of Liability Under Concerted Action Doctrine. For harm resulting to a third person from the tortious conduct of another, a person is liable if he or she (1) knows that the other's conduct constitutes a breach of duty and gives substantial assistance or encouragement to the other, or (2) gives substantial assistance to the other in accomplishing a tortious result and his or her own conduct, separately considered, constitutes a breach to the third person (Orser v. George (1967) 252 Cal. App. 2d 660, 667-668, 60 Cal. Rptr. 708 ; see Sindell v. Abbott Labs. (1980) 26 Cal. 3d 588, 604, 163 Cal. Rptr. 132, 607 P.2d 924).

[Optional] B. Tacit Understanding Is Sufficient. Express agreement is not necessary; all that is required is that there be a tacit understanding in pursuit of a common plan or design to commit a tortious act, actively take part in it, or further it by cooperation or request, or who lend aid or encouragement to the wrongdoer, or ratify and adopt his or her acts done for their benefit, are equally liable with the wrongdoer. Express agreement is not necessary; all that is required is that there be a tacit understanding in pursuit (see Sindell v. Abbott Labs. (1980) 26 Cal. 3d 588, 604, 163 Cal. Rptr. 132, 607 P.2d 924).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a demurrer to a complaint for damages arising from a civil conspiracy when the demurrer asserts that the complaint fails to set forth facts sufficient to show the existence or formation of a conspiracy, but when the facts alleged are sufficient to state a cause of action under the related doctrine of concert of action. For discussion of the overlap between the doctrines of civil conspiracy and concerted action, see § 46.04.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Points and Authorities

For memoranda of points and authorities relating to alternative theories of liability, see Ch. 165, Negligence . These include forms of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant's conduct was a concurrent cause of an indivisible injury to plaintiff, and supporting the contention that, although plaintiff was injured by a single unidentified defendant, defendant was concurrently negligent and so has the burden to show that plaintiff's injury was caused solely by another defendant.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Elements of Liability Under Concerted Action Doctrine

Orser v. George (1967) 252 Cal. App. 2d 660, 60 Cal. Rptr. 708 , was a wrongful death action brought against several hunters, three of whom allegedly shot towards a pond in a direction where their shots could hit someone on the farm across an adjoining road. During the period in which decedent must have been killed, Vierra had been shooting in decedent's direction with a pistol that fired the fatal bullet. It was disputed whether Jacobson also fired the pistol in decedent's direction. James fired alternately with Vierra in decedent's direction but was using a rifle so he could not have killed decedent. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of five defendants, including Jacobson and James, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the summary judgments as to Jacobson and James, holding that triable issues of fact remained (252 Cal. App. 2d 660, 673) . As to Jacobson, there was a possibility that he may have fired the pistol during the time decedent was killed (252 Cal. App. 2d 660, 666 n.3). As to James, summary judgment was improper because the record indicated he was firing alternately with Vierra at the same target, in the same line of fire and possibly tortiously (252 Cal. App. 2d 660, 668) . Therefore, James' conduct possibly came within the rule of concerted action liability set forth in Restatement of Torts § 876(b), (c) and approved in dictum in Summers v. Tice (1948) 33 Cal. 2d 80, 199 P.2d 1 : for harm resulting to a third person from the tortious conduct of another, a person is liable if he or she (1) knows that the other's conduct constitutes a breach of duty and gives substantial assistance or encouragement to the other, or (2) gives substantial assistance to the other in accomplishing a tortious result and his or her own conduct, separately considered, constitutes a breach to the third person (252 Cal. App. 2d 660, 666 n.4, 668-669) . The court cited with approval Prosser's explanation of concerted action liability: those who, in pursuance of a common plan or design to commit a tortious act, actively take part in it, or further it by cooperation or request, or who lend aid or encouragement to the wrongdoer, or ratify and adopt his or her acts done for their benefit, are equally liable with the wrongdoer. The court went on to affirm the summary judgment in favor of the remaining defendants because no evidence suggested that they knew that Vierra, or Jacobson, or James was shooting in the direction where his shots could hit anyone on the farm or the road. Quoting the Comments to Restatement of Torts § 876, the court said the assistance of or participation by the defendant may be so slight that he or she is not liable for the act of the other. In determining this, consideration is given to the nature of the act encouraged, the amount of assistance given by the defendant, his or her presence or absence at the time of the tort, his or her relation to the other, and his or her state of mind. Ordinarily one is not liable for acts which, although done in connection with the intended tortious act, were not foreseeable by him or her. In determining liability, the factors are the same as those used in determining the existence of legal causation when there has been negligence (252 Cal. App. 2d 660, 669) .

In Sindell v. Abbott Labs. (1980) 26 Cal. 3d 588, 163 Cal. Rptr. 132, 607 P.2d 924 , plaintiff, injured as the result of administration of the drug DES to her mother during pregnancy, brought a class action against eleven drug companies on behalf of other women similarly situated. The suit consisted of several causes of action, including negligence, strict liability, violation of express and implied warranties, and false and fraudulent representations. Each cause of action alleged that defendants were jointly liable because they acted in concert. The trial court dismissed the action after sustaining defendants' demurrers on the ground that plaintiff did not and could not identify which defendant had manufactured the drug responsible for her injuries. Plaintiff appealed.

The State Supreme Court reversed on the ground that a cause of action was stated against defendants on a market share liability theory (26 Cal. 3d 588, 611-613) (discussed in Ch. 190, Products Liability). The Court found that the facts did not state a cause of action under a concert of action theory. However, the Court recognized that the elements of the doctrine are prescribed in the rule for concerted action liability set forth in Restatement (Second) of Torts § 876(a)-(c): for harm resulting to a third person from the tortious conduct of another, one is subject to liability if he or she (1) does a tortious act in concert with the other or pursuant to a common design with that other person, or (2) knows that the other's conduct constitutes a breach of duty and gives substantial assistance or encouragement to the other to so conduct himself or herself, or (3) gives substantial assistance to the other in accomplishing a tortious result and his or her own conduct, separately considered, constitutes a breach of duty to the third person (26 Cal. 3d 588, 604) . The gravamen of plaintiff's charge was that defendants failed to test the drug adequately or to give sufficient warning of its dangers and that they relied on the tests performed by one another and took advantage of each other's promotional and marketing techniques. The Court said those allegations do not amount to a charge that there was a tacit understanding or a common plan among defendants to fail to conduct adequate tests or give sufficient warnings, and that they substantially aided and encouraged one another in these omissions (26 Cal. 3d 588, 605) . The Court also rejected plaintiff's contention that the fact that defendants produced DES from a common and mutually agreed-upon formula formed a basis for concerted action liability because, the Court found, DES is a scientific constant with which all pharmacists manufacturing the drug must comply. Similarly, the Court rejected the charge that defendants engaged in parallel or imitative conduct in heir reliance on each others' testing and promotion methods as a basis of a concert claim. It noted that the conduct was a common practice in the industry, and said that application of the concept of concerted action to that practice would expand the doctrine far beyond its intended scope and would render virtually any manufacturer liable for the defective products of an entire industry, even if it could be demonstrated that the product that caused the injury was not made by the defendant (26 Cal. 3d 588, 605) . Finally, the Court noted that there was no allegation that each defendant knew the other defendants' conduct was tortious toward the plaintiff, and that they assisted and encouraged one another to test DES inadequately and to provide inadequate warnings. The Court found it dubious whether liability on the concert of action theory can be predicated on substantial assistance and encouragement given by one alleged tortfeasor to another pursuant to a tacit understanding to fail to perform an act. Thus, there was no concert of action among defendants within the meaning of that doctrine (26 Cal. 3d 588, 606) .

[b] Tacit Understanding Is Sufficient

The facts and procedural background of Sindell v. Abbott Labs. (1980) 26 Cal. 3d 588, 163 Cal. Rptr. 132, 607 P.2d 924 , are discussed in § 46.52[3][a]. The Court cited with approval Prosser's explanation of concerted action liability: those who, in pursuance of a common plan or design to commit a tortious act, actively take part in it, or further it by cooperation or request, or who lend aid or encouragement to the wrongdoer, or ratify and adopt his or her acts done for their benefit, are equally liable with the wrongdoer. Express agreement is not necessary; all that is required is that there be a tacit understanding (26 Cal. 3d 588, 604) . Plaintiff alleged that defendants' wrongful conduct was the result of planned and concerted action, express and implied agreements, collaboration in, reliance on, acquiescence in and ratification, exploitation and adoption of each other's testing, marketing methods, lack of warnings, and other acts or omissions and that acting individually and in concert, defendants promoted, approved, authorized, acquiesced in, and reaped profits from sales of DES. These allegations, plaintiff contended, stated a "tacit understanding" among defendants to commit a tortious act against her (26 Cal. 3d 588, 604-605) . The Court found, however, that the gravamen of plaintiff's charge was that defendants failed to test the drug adequately or to give sufficient warning of its dangers and that they relied on the tests performed by one another and took advantage of each other's promotional and marketing techniques. The Court said those allegations do not amount to a charge that there was a tacit understanding or a common plan among defendants to fail to conduct adequate tests or give sufficient warnings, and that they substantially aided and encouraged one another in these omissions (26 Cal. 3d 588, 605) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Elements of Liability Under Concerted Action Doctrine

Cully v. Bianca (1986) 186 Cal. App. 3d 1172, 231 Cal. Rptr. 279 , was a personal injury action brought against a driver who collided with plaintiff while intoxicated and against two other defendants who were drinking with the driver before the collision. Plaintiffs claimed that all three defendants were liable under the theory of concerted action liability because they were embarked on a joint enterprise to obtain and consume a bottle of tequila and to drive thereafter to some unspecified location. The trial court judgment was in favor of defendants on the ground that plaintiff had stated no cause of action. Plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed on the ground that plaintiffs could not state a cause of action under the concerted action doctrine (186 Cal. App. 3d 1172, 1178) . The court recognized that Restatement (Second) of Torts § 876 and the statement by Prosser, which was quoted in Sindell (discussed in § 46.52[3][a]), set forth the rule for concerted action liability (186 Cal. App. 3d 1172, 1177) . The court ruled that an allegation that the driver drove the other defendants to and from the liquor store and to and from the area where the liquor was consumed, and that one defendant was with defendant driver at the time of the accident fell short of establishing the "substantial assistance or encouragement" required by Restatement (Second) of Torts § 876. The court acknowledged that the driver had been assisted in his decision to operate an automobile while intoxicated by the fact that the other defendants helped obtain the tequila that he consumed. However, the court found, the legislature decided to insulate from civil liability virtually all persons who provide alcohol to persons who thereafter drive while intoxicated. Because plaintiffs could point to no other facts constituting encouragement or assistance, other than the fact the passengers accompanied the driver after the tequila was consumed, the court concluded that the pleading was insufficient to state a cause of action under the concerted action or civil conspiracy theory of Restatement (Second) of Torts § 876 (186 Cal. App. 3d 1172, 1178) .

Agovino v. Kunze (1960) 181 Cal. App. 2d. 591, 5 Cal. Rptr. 534 , was a negligence action brought against a participant in a drag race for injuries to a plaintiff who collided with the car of another racer. After plaintiff's case was presented to the jury, defendant successfully moved for a nonsuit and the trial court entered judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appealed.

The trial court reversed the judgment, finding that it was for the jury to determine the manner of defendant's driving and whether it was done in concert with the driver who actually collided with plaintiff (181 Cal. App. 2d. 591, 596) . There was substantial evidence from which the jury could find that defendant was engaged in an illegal, high speed race through a residential neighborhood. The evidence also established that, whether the two drivers in so many words agreed to race or whether from their conduct a tacit mutual understanding of such an agreement could be inferred, the collision occurred during the time they were racing (181 Cal. App. 2d. 591, 597-598) . Therefore, the court said, the jury could have concluded that the defendant's conduct was the proximate cause of the collision--that is, defendant set in motion the events that led or contributed to the collision (181 Cal. App. 2d. 591, 599) .

§ 46.53 Opposing Contention That Motion to Amend Complaint to Add Attorney as Conspirator Should Be Denied--Requirement of Verified Petition [Civ. Code § 1714.10] Satisfied by Verified Complaint and Sworn Declarations

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF'S MOTION TO AMEND HIS/HER/ITS COMPLAINT TO ADD A CONSPIRACY CAUSE OF ACTION AGAINST DEFENDANT ATTORNEY AND HIS/HER/ITS CLIENT SHOULD NOT BE DENIED FOR FAILURE TO MEET THE REQUIREMENT, UNDER CIVIL CODE SECTION 1714.10, OF FILING A VERIFIED PETITION BECAUSE PLAINTIFF VERIFIED HIS/HER/ITS COMPLAINT AND AMENDED COMPLAINT AND FILED, IN SUPPORT OF THE MOTION, A VERIFIED COMPLAINT AND DECLARATIONS UNDER PENALTY OF PERJURY.

Verified Complaint and Sworn Declaration Sufficient to Meet Requirement of Verified Petition. Although Civil Code Section 1714.10 requires the filing of a verified petition to obtain a court order permitting the filing of a pleading alleging civil conspiracy by an attorney with the attorney's client, verifying the complaint and amended complaint and filing declarations under penalty of perjury in support of a motion for leave to amend are sufficient to meet that requirement (Burtscher v. Burtscher (1994) 26 Cal. App. 4th 720, 727-728).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted to oppose the contention that the trial court should deny plaintiff's motion for leave to amend the complaint to include a conspiracy cause of action against an attorney and the attorney's client, because plaintiff failed to file a verified petition as required by Civ. Code § 1714.10. The basis of opposition is that plaintiff's verifying his/her/its complaint and amended complaint and filing sworn declarations in support of the motion for leave to amend are sufficient to meet the statutory requirement.

Counsel should insert argument in the following form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Verified Complaint and Sworn Declaration Sufficient to Meet Requirement of Verified Petition

The facts and procedural background of Burtscher v. Burtscher (1994) 26 Cal. App. 4th 720 , are discussed in § 46.28[3][a]. Before the court of appeal, defendants claimed that plaintiff's motion to amend her complaint to add the conspiracy cause of action should have been denied because she had not filed a verified petition as required by Civ. Code § 1714.10. The court of appeal held that plaintiff had met that requirement by having verified the complaint and the amended complaint and having filed declarations under penalty of perjury in support of her motion. The court noted that these items have the same effect as a verified petition in tending to discourage frivolous allegations by requiring claimants to make their assertions under oath (26 Cal. App. 4th 720, 727) .

_____ [Identify party charged with civil conspiracy, e.g., DEFENDANT] WAIVED ANY DEFENSE HE/SHE MAY HAVE HAD UNDER SECTION 1714.10 OF THE CIVIL CODE BY FAILING TO RAISE THE DEFENSE ON HIS/HER FIRST APPEARANCE.

A. Failure to Timely Raise Defense Constitutes Waiver. A failure to timely raise the defense that _____ [identify party who filed the pleading, e.g., plaintiff] has not obtained an order determining the reasonable probability of success under Section 1714.10 of the Civil Code constitutes a waiver of the defense (*Civ. B. Defense Must Be Raised on First Appearance. The defense must be raised by the attorney charged with civil conspiracy on that attorney's first appearance by demurrer, motion to strike, or such other motion or application as may be appropriate (Civ. Code § 1714.10(b); Villa Pac. Bldg. Co. v. Superior Court (1991) 233 Cal. App. 3d 8, 12, 284 Cal. Rptr. 227).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that no cause of action against an attorney for civil conspiracy with his or her client that arises from any attempt to contest or compromise a claim or dispute, and that is based on the attorney's representation of the client, shall be included in a complaint or other pleading because the court has not entered an order allowing the pleading as required by Civ. Code § 1714.10. The opposition is based on the failure of the attorney charged with the conspiracy to raise the defense in a timely manner, that is, on the attorney's first appearance [Civ. Code § 1714.10(b)].

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should (1) identify the first appearance of the party charged with the civil conspiracy (for example, the defendant's answer to the complaint), and (2) refer to the documents filed with the court that demonstrate that the party failed to raise the defense on that occasion by demurrer, motion to strike, or other appropriate motion or application.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defense Must Be Raised on First Appearance

Villa Pac. Bldg. Co. v. Superior Court (1991) 233 Cal. App. 3d 8, 284 Cal. Rptr. 227 , involved an action by a corporation against a law firm it had retained to handle a variety of transactions involving the plaintiff's efforts to acquire and develop mobile home parks. The complaint alleged, among other things, that the law firm, another client of the law firm, and the plaintiff's vice president had conspired to interfere with the plaintiff's real estate acquisitions. The defendants answered the complaint, denying the allegations of wrongdoing and raising several affirmative defenses (but not Civ. Code § 1714.10). About a year later, the defendants moved to dismiss the complaint, asserting that the plaintiff's failure to comply with Civ. Code § 1714.10 barred the action. The trial court in effect conditionally granted the motion, ordering the plaintiff to comply with the section within 45 days or suffer dismissal of its action. The plaintiff responded with a petition for writ of mandate.

The court of appeal issued a writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate its order dismissing the complaint, and to issue a new order clarifying that the motion to dismiss was denied, and reinstating the complaint and answer. The court held that when a plaintiff fails to obtain court approval before filing suit against an attorney on a conspiracy theory involving a client, the benefit conferred by § 1714.10 is waived unless the attorney objects at the first available opportunity, which is at the time of the attorney's first appearance, whether by demurrer or motion to strike or such other motion or application as may be appropriate. The court stated that it necessarily follows that by answering and litigating the case for a year before moving to dismiss on the basis of § 1714.10, the defendants waived any rights they might have had under the statute (233 Cal. App. 3d 8, 12) .

NOTE:

In Villa Pacific Building Co. v. Superior Court, the court declined to reach the issue of whether Civ. Code § 1714.10 applied to that action, and instead decided the case on the petitioner's theory that the respondents waited too long to raise the issue and waived any objection they might have had [Villa Pac. Bldg. Co. v. Superior Court (1991) 233 Cal. App. 3d 8, 10-11, 11 n.3, 284 Cal. Rptr. 227 (court assumed § 1714.10 applies in all cases alleging conspiracy by lawyer with client)]. However, the case was based on a version of Civ. Code 1714.10 in effect prior to the 1991 amendment, which restricted the prefiling order requirement to a cause of action against an attorney for a civil conspiracy with his or her client arising from any attempt to contest or compromise a claim or dispute, and based on the attorney's representation of the client.

CHAPTER 47 CONTEMPT
PART I. INTRODUCTION

4-47 California Points & Authorities § 47.03

§ 47.03 Civil and Criminal Contempt Distinguished

When the primary objective of a contempt proceeding under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1209-1222 is to protect the rights of the litigants, the proceeding is civil in character [Morelli v. Superior Court (1969) 1 Cal. 3d 328, 333, 82 Cal. Rptr. 375, 461 P.2d 655 ; see also Share v. Casiano Bel-Air Homeowners Assn. (1989) 215 Cal. App. 3d 515, 523, 263 Cal. Rptr. 753] . When the objective is to vindicate the dignity or authority of the court, the contempt is criminal in character, even though it arises in a civil action [Morelli v. Superior Court (1969) 1 Cal. 3d 328, 333, 82 Cal. Rptr. 375, 461 P.2d 655] .

Civil contempt is remedial and coercive in nature, and the parties chiefly interested are the individuals whose private rights and remedies the proceeding was instituted to protect or enforce [In re Morris (1924) 194 Cal. 63, 67, 227 P. 914] . Criminal contempt is punitive in nature, and the government, the courts, and the people are interested in the prosecution of the proceeding [In re Morris (1924) 194 Cal. 63, 67, 227 P. 914 ; see Code Civ. Proc. § 1218(d) (district attorney or city attorney may initiate contempt action against party who fails to comply with court order entered under Domestic Violence Protection Act, Fam. Code § 6200 et seq.)]. Thus, whether a contempt is civil or criminal depends on whether the punishment imposed is remedial and for the benefit of the complainant or punitive to vindicate the authority of the court [Hicks v. Feiock (1988) 485 U.S. 624, 631, 108 S. Ct. 1423, 99 L. Ed. 2d 721] .

If the punishment is a sentence of imprisonment, it is remedial if the contemner stands committed unless and until he or she performs the affirmative act required by the court's order, and it is punitive if the sentence is limited to imprisonment for a definite period [Hicks v. Feiock (1988) 485 U.S. 624, 632, 108 S. Ct. 1423, 99 L. Ed. 2d 721] .

Ordinarily, if the punishment is a fine, it is remedial when it is paid to the complainant and punitive when it is paid to the court (or a public agency designated by statute) [see, e.g., Code Civ. Proc. § 1218(d) (in contempt action for failure to comply with court order entered under Domestic Violence Protection Act, Fam. Code § 6200 et seq., award of attorney's fees and costs must be paid to California Emergency Management Agency's account established under Penal Code § 13823.15(f) to fund domestic violence shelter services)]. However, a fine that would be payable to the court is also remedial when the defendant can avoid paying it simply by performing the affirmative act required by the court's order [Hicks v. Feiock (1988) 485 U.S. 624, 632, 108 S. Ct. 1423, 99 L. Ed. 2d 721] .

When the penalty is remedial, the conditional nature of the punishment renders the relief civil in nature because the contemner can end the sentence, or suspended sentence, and discharge himself or herself at any moment by doing what he or she had previously refused to do [Hicks v. Feiock (1988) 485 U.S. 624, 633, 637 n.8, 108 S. Ct. 1423, 99 L. Ed. 2d 721] . For example, when the contempt consists of an omission to perform an act which is still within the contemner's power to perform, such as obeying a duly served subpoena in a pending action, a court may treat that contemner's disobedience as a civil contempt by imprisoning the contemner pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1219 until he or she has performed the act [Morelli v. Superior Court (1969) 1 Cal. 3d 328, 332, 82 Cal. Rptr. 375, 461 P.2d 655 (failure of expert witness to appear for deposition); see In re Mark A. (2007) 156 Cal. App. 4th 1124, 1143, 68 Cal. Rptr. 3d 106 (court is not authorized to punish contempt by imposing evidence sanction, such as striking testimony of other witnesses)]. However, punishment may not be imposed in a civil contempt proceeding when it is clearly established that the alleged contemner is unable to comply with the terms of the court's order [Hicks v. Feiock (1988) 485 U.S. 624, 638 n.9, 108 S. Ct. 1423, 99 L. Ed. 2d 721] .

When the contempt consists of an omission to perform an act that is no longer possible for the contemner to perform, such as the inability of a contemner to obey a subpoena to testify in an action that has since terminated, a court may treat the contemner's disobedience as a criminal contempt by imposing a fine not exceeding $1,000, by imprisoning the contemner for a period not to exceed five days, or by imposing both a fine and imprisonment, pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1218 [Morelli v. Superior Court (1969) 1 Cal. 3d 328, 332, 82 Cal. Rptr. 375, 461 P.2d 655 ; see In re Mark A. (2007) 156 Cal. App. 4th 1124, 1143, 68 Cal. Rptr. 3d 106 (court is not authorized to punish contempt by imposing evidence sanction, such as striking testimony of other witnesses)]. When the penalty is punitive, the unconditional nature of the punishment renders the relief criminal in nature because the relief can neither undo or remedy what has been done nor afford any compensation to the complaining party, and the contemner cannot shorten the term by promising not to repeat the offense [Hicks v. Feiock (1988) 485 U.S. 624, 633, 108 S. Ct. 1423, 99 L. Ed. 2d 721 ; see also In re Feiock (1989) 215 Cal. App. 3d 141, 144-145, 263 Cal. Rptr. 437] .

That a determinate sentence is suspended and the contemner put on probation does not make the remedy civil in nature, for a suspended sentence with a term of probation is not equivalent to a conditional sentence that would allow the contemner to avoid or purge the sanctions; rather, it remains a determinate sentence, and a fixed term of probation is itself a punishment that is criminal in nature [Hicks v. Feiock (1988) 485 U.S. 624, 639 n.11, 108 S. Ct. 1423, 99 L. Ed. 2d 721] .

Thus, an unconditional penalty is criminal in nature because it is solely and exclusively punitive in character, whereas a conditional penalty, by contrast, is civil because it is specifically designed to compel the doing of some act [Hicks v. Feiock (1988) 485 U.S. 624, 633, 108 S. Ct. 1423, 99 L. Ed. 2d 721] .

Any sentence must be viewed as remedial and hence civil in nature if the court conditions release on the contemner's willingness to comply with the order or imposes a determinate sentence which includes a purge clause [Hicks v. Feiock (1988) 485 U.S. 624, 634, 635 n.7, 640, 108 S. Ct. 1423, 99 L. Ed. 2d 721] . On the contrary, a criminal contempt proceeding would be characterized by the imposition of an unconditional sentence for punishment or deterrence [Hicks v. Feiock (1988) 485 U.S. 624, 634-635, 108 S. Ct. 1423, 99 L. Ed. 2d 721] . If both civil and criminal relief are imposed in the same proceeding, the criminal feature of the order is dominant and fixes its character for purposes of review by a higher court [Hicks v. Feiock (1988) 485 U.S. 624, 638 n.10, 108 S. Ct. 1423, 99 L. Ed. 2d 721] .

Either form of punishment has an incidental effect. If the case is civil and punishment is purely remedial, there is also a vindication of the court's authority. If the proceeding is for criminal contempt and punishment is solely punitive, to vindicate the authority of the law, the complainant may also derive some incidental benefit from the fact that the punishment tends to prevent a repetition of the disobedience. But such indirect consequences do not change punishment that is merely coercive and remedial into that which is solely punitive in character or vice versa [Hicks v. Feiock (1988) 485 U.S. 624, 635-636, 108 S. Ct. 1423, 99 L. Ed. 2d 721] .

The distinction between civil and criminal contempt is important because punishment that is criminal in nature may not be imposed unless federal constitutional protections are applied in the contempt proceeding [Hicks v. Feiock (1988) 485 U.S. 624, 637, 108 S. Ct. 1423, 99 L. Ed. 2d 721] . These protections include the requirement that the offense be proved beyond a reasonable doubt [Hicks v. Feiock (1988) 485 U.S. 624, 632, 632 n.5, 108 S. Ct. 1423, 99 L. Ed. 2d 721] . However, certain specific constitutional protections, such as the right to trial by jury, have been held inapplicable to those criminal contempts that can be classified as petty offenses [Hicks v. Feiock (1988) 485 U.S. 624, 632 n.5, 108 S. Ct. 1423, 99 L. Ed. 2d 721 (citing Bloom v. Illinois (1968) 391 U.S. 194, 208-210, 88 S. Ct. 1477, 20 L. Ed. 2d 522)].

§ 47.04 Special Limitations Periods for Support and Other Family Law Enforcement Actions

Code Civ. Proc. § 1218.5 sets forth two specific limitations periods for bringing contempt actions in family law matters. First, if the contempt alleged is for the failure to pay child, family, or spousal support, the period of limitations for commencing the contempt action is three years from the date that the payment was due [Code Civ. Proc. § 1218.5(b)].

Secondly, if the contempt action is for the enforcement of any other type of court order made under the Family Code [see, e.g., Code Civ. Proc. § 1218(d) (contempt action initiated by district attorney or city attorney against party who fails to comply with court order entered under Domestic Violence Protection Act, Fam. Code § 6200 et seq.)], the period of limitations for commencing the action is two years from the time that the alleged contempt occurred [Code Civ. Proc. § 1218.5(b)]. For a complete discussion of contempt as a remedy for the enforcement of support and other family law orders, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 258, Family Law Enforcement: General Enforcement Principles and Remedies , Part V, Ch. 135, Contempt (Matthew Bender), and Kirkland, Lurvey & Richmond, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, Ch. 140, General Enforcement Principles and Remedies , pt. G (Matthew Bender).

PART I. INTRODUCTION

4-47 California Points & Authorities § 47.05

§ 47.05 Use of Memoranda in Contempt Proceedings

The use of a memorandum in contempt proceedings depends on whether legal questions have been raised as to the adequacy of the proceedings. When the alleged contempt is not committed in the immediate view and presence of the court or of the judge at chambers, contempt proceedings are commenced by an affidavit (or declaration [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) presented to the court or judge of the facts constituting the contempt [Code Civ. Proc. § 1211(a)]. (In family law proceedings, use of Judicial Council Form FL-410, "Order to Show Cause and Affidavit for Contempt," constitutes compliance with the affidavit requirement under Code Civ. Proc. § 1211(b).)

The accused contemner may submit an affidavit or declaration in response to the initiating affidavit or declaration. This response has been characterized as an answer or plea [see Lyon v. Superior Court (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 446, 452, 67 Cal. Rptr. 265, 439 P.2d 1 ; Freeman v. Superior Court (1955) 44 Cal. 2d 533, 536, 282 P.2d 857] , an answering affidavit [Darden v. Superior Court of Tulare County, (1965) 235 Cal. App. 2d 80, 82, 45 Cal. Rptr. 44 ; Oil Workers Int'l Union v. Superior Court (1951) 103 Cal. App. 2d 512, 524, 230 P.2d 71] , a verified answer [Bailey v. Superior Court (1956) 142 Cal. App. 2d 47, 50, 297 P.2d 795] , an affidavit in opposition [Nutter v. Superior Court (1960) 183 Cal. App. 2d 72, 74, 6 Cal. Rptr. 404] , or a counteraffidavit [Associated Lbr. & Box Co. v. Superior Court (1947) 79 Cal. App. 2d 577, 580, 180 P.2d 389] . In addition, when the responsive affidavit or declaration objected to the initiating affidavit or declaration on the grounds that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in contempt, the Supreme Court considered the sustaining of that objection by the trial court as having the effect of the sustaining of a demurrer [see Taylor v. Superior Court (1942) 20 Cal. 2d 244, 246, 125 P.2d 1] .

In any case, the responsive affidavit or declaration should raise any questions as to the adequacy of the order to show cause or the affidavit or declaration on which the order is based [Morelli v. Superior Court (1968) 262 Cal. App. 2d 262, 266, 68 Cal. Rptr. 572] . When the responsive affidavit or declaration raises legal questions as to the adequacy of the contempt proceedings, such as questions respecting the jurisdiction of the court, the legal sufficiency of the facts contained in the initiating affidavit or declaration, or the clarity, certainty, or intelligibility of the initiating affidavit or declaration, a memorandum should accompany the responsive affidavit or declaration to aid the trial court in determining the legal issues raised by the affidavit or declaration.

In addition, objections to a trial court's jurisdiction to hear a contempt matter may take the form of a motion to dismiss [

Code Civ. Proc. § 581d; see Butler v. Butler (1967) 255 Cal. App. 2d 132, 134, 62 Cal. Rptr. 825] which should also be supported by a memorandum served and filed with the motion [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113(a)].

CHAPTER 47 CONTEMPT
PART I. INTRODUCTION

4-47 California Points & Authorities § 47.07

§ 47.07 Use of Memoranda in Reviewing Contempt Orders

A contempt order may be reviewed by a petition for a writ of review [Mitchell v. Superior Court (1972) 28 Cal. App. 3d 759, 764, 104 Cal. Rptr. 921] , habeas corpus [In re Carvallo (1973) 29 Cal. App. 3d 983, 986, 105 Cal. Rptr. 925] , or prohibition [Safer v. Superior Court (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 230, 235, 124 Cal. Rptr. 174, 540 P.2d 14 ; Koehler v. Superior Court (2010) 181 Cal. App. 4th 1153, 1165, 104 Cal. Rptr. 3d 877 (habeas corpus is appropriate remedy for person imprisoned for contempt, but after release from imprisonment, prohibition lies to determine whether contempt order was invalid, and court of appeal may treat habeas petition as one for prohibition)].

A petition for a writ of review [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1069] or prohibition [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1103] to a reviewing court having original jurisdiction [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.485(a)] must be accompanied by a memorandum [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.486(a)(5)]. When a petition for a writ of prohibition is sought before a superior court, it should be accompanied by a memorandum [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113(a); see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1090 (petition as motion), 1105 (Code Civ. Proc. § 1090 as applicable to proceedings for writ of prohibition)].

Whenever a writ petition seeks review of a trial court's ruling, it must also be accompanied by a record adequate to permit review, including (1) copies of the ruling from which the petition seeks relief, (2) copies of all documents and exhibits submitted to the trial court supporting and opposing the petitioner's position, and (3) any other documents or portions of documents submitted to the trial court that are necessary for a complete understanding of the case and the ruling under review [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.486(b)(1)(A)-(C); see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.486(c) (format for documents and exhibits)]. In exigent circumstances, these documents may be omitted if counsel files a declaration explaining the urgency and the circumstances making the documents unavailable and fairly summarizing their substance [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.486(b)(2)]. The record must also include a reporter's transcript of the oral proceedings that resulted in the ruling under review [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.486(b)(1)(D)]. If a reporter's transcript is unavailable, the record must include a declaration by counsel stating that a transcript has been ordered and is expected to be filed on a certain date, or if no transcript is available, explaining its unavailability and fairly summarizing the proceedings, including the parties' arguments and any statement by the court supporting its ruling [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.486(b)(3)]. If the petitioner does not submit the required record or explanations, or does not present facts sufficient to excuse the failure to submit them, the court may summarily deny the petition [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.486(b)(4)].

The petition must also be accompanied by a Certificate of Interested Entities or Persons [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.488(b), (c); see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 8.208(b), 8.488(a) (certificate not required in family, juvenile, guardianship, and conservatorship cases); see also Cal. Judicial Council Form APP-008]. If the petitioner is an entity, that party's certificate must list any other entity or person the petitioner knows has an ownership interest of 10 percent or more in the petitioner [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.208(e)(1)]. An "entity" for this purpose is a corporation, partnership, firm, or other association, but it does not include a governmental entity or its agencies or a natural person [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.208(c)(2)]. If the petitioner knows of any other person or entity that has a financial or other interest in the outcome of the proceeding that the petitioner reasonably believes the justices of the appellate court should consider in determining whether to disqualify themselves under the Code of Judicial Ethics, the petitioner's certificate must list that entity or person and identify the nature of the interest of the person or entity [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.208(e)(2)]. If the petitioner knows of no entity or person that must be listed, the petitioner must so state in the certificate [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.208(e)(3)]. A failure to file the certificate may result in the striking of the petition [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.488(d)(2); see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.488(d)(1) (if certificate does not accompany petition, clerk will notify petitioner that certificate must be filed)].

If the petition requests a temporary stay, the cover of the document must prominently display the notice "STAY REQUESTED" and identify the nature and date of the proceeding or act sought to be stayed [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 8.116(a), 8.486(a)(7)]. The petition must also (1) identify the trial court and department involved, (2) specify the name and telephone number of the trial judge whose order the request seeks to stay, and (3) explain the urgency [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 8.116(a), 8.486(a)(7)]. If the petitioner fails to comply with these requirements, the reviewing court may decline to consider the request for a stay [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.116(c)].

If a petitioner for a writ of habeas corpus is not represented by an attorney, the petitioner need not file a supporting memorandum [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.380(b); see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.384]. Even if the petition is filed by an attorney for the petitioner, there is no specific requirement that a supporting memorandum be filed [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.384]. Nevertheless, the better practice, when time and circumstances allow, is to include a memorandum supporting the granting of the writ in general and supporting the allegations that the imprisonment or the conditions of the imprisonment are illegal. Any supporting memorandum an attorney submits with the petition must comply with Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.204(a) and (b) (specifying contents and form of briefs), and any supporting documents submitted by the attorney must comply with Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.486(c) (specifying form of supporting documents) [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.384(a)(2), (b)(3)].

CHAPTER 47 CONTEMPT
PART I. INTRODUCTION

4-47 California Points & Authorities § 47.08

§ 47.08 Use of Memoranda in Opposing Petition

Within five days after service and filing of a petition for a writ of review [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1069] or prohibition [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1103], the respondent, any real party in interest, or both, either separately or jointly, may serve and file memoranda in opposition to the petition and, in an appellate court, may state any fact not included in the petition which, in their opinion, is material. In an appellate court, no statement in opposition to the petition is required unless requested by the court. It should also be noted that the appellate court may deny the petition or issue an alternative writ without first requesting the filing of opposition.

Although nominally a respondent, the court that issued the contempt order ordinarily lacks standing to oppose the writ petition, but it may do so if (1) the real party in interest does not respond to the writ petition, and (2) the issue involved directly impacted the operations and procedures of the court or potentially imposed financial obligations that would directly affect the court's operations [Koehler v. Superior Court (2010) 181 Cal. App. 4th 1153, 1166, 104 Cal. Rptr. 3d 877] . If these requirements are not met, however, the reviewing court has discretion to treat a brief filed by the respondent court as an amicus brief filed in support of the real party in interest [see Koehler v. Superior Court (2010) 181 Cal. App. 4th 1153, 1166, 104 Cal. Rptr. 3d 877] .

A. Initiating Affidavit or Declaration as Required to Set Forth Facts Constituting Alleged Contempt. An initiating affidavit or declaration in a proceeding for the adjudication of an indirect contempt must set forth the facts constituting the alleged contempt in order to confer jurisdiction on the court to exercise its contempt powers (In re Liu (1969) 273 Cal. App. 2d 135, 140, 78 Cal. Rptr. 85). A sufficient initiating affidavit or declaration is a jurisdictional prerequisite to a proceeding for the adjudication of an indirect contempt, and without one any contempt order is void (*Koehler v. [Optional] B. Failure to Allege Contemner's Knowledge of Order. An initiating affidavit is defective if it fails to allege any facts showing that the accused contemner had notice or knowledge of the existence of the order which he or she is charged with violating at the time he or she is claimed to have violated it (Freeman v. Superior Court (1955) 44 Cal. 2d 533, 537, 282 P.2d 857 ; Phillips v. Superior Court (1943) 22 Cal. 2d 256, 257, 137 P.2d 838).

[OR]

[Optional] C. Failure to Allege Contemner's Present Ability to Comply With Order. An initiating affidavit or declaration seeking to compel compliance with an order under Code of Civil Procedure Section 1219 must allege that the accused contemner is presently able to comply with the order he or she is accused of violating (In re Liu (1969) 273 Cal. App. 2d 135, 141, 78 Cal. Rptr. 85 ; In re Ny (1962) 201 Cal. App. 2d 728, 731-732, 20 Cal. Rptr. 114 ; *see Koehler v. Superior Court (2010) 181 Cal. App. 4th 1153, 1170, 104 Cal. [2] Comments

This memorandum may be submitted in support of an affidavit or declaration opposing the initiating affidavit or declaration in an indirect contempt proceeding [Code Civ. Proc. § 1211] on the ground that the initiating affidavit or declaration fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action [see Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)] in contempt [In re Liu (1969) 273 Cal. App. 2d 135, 140, 78 Cal. Rptr. 85 (facts essential to establish jurisdiction in contempt as making of order, notice or knowledge of order, contemner's ability to comply with order, and contemner's willful disobedience of order)].

This form should only be used when the objection to the initiating affidavit or declaration involves the factual sufficiency of the affiant's or declarant's case as well as the adequacy of the allegations contained in the affidavit or declaration since Code Civ. Proc. § 1211.5, enacted in 1970, abrogated the rule which made affidavits or declarations fatally defective for failure to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in contempt [see Freeman v. Superior Court (1955) 44 Cal. 2d 533, 537, 282 P.2d 857] . Thus, insufficient affidavits and declarations are not fatally defective and do not deprive a court of jurisdiction to hear a contempt matter [Mossman v. Superior Court (1972) 22 Cal. App. 3d 706, 710, 99 Cal. Rptr. 638] . If no objection is made to the sufficiency of an affidavit or declaration at the contempt hearing, the trial court must amend an insufficient affidavit or declaration to conform to proof [Code Civ. Proc. § 1211.5(a)]. A court may, in addition, order or permit the amendment of an insufficient or defective affidavit or declaration at any stage of the proceedings and further order or permit the proceedings to continue as if the affidavit or declaration had been originally filed as amended [Code Civ. Proc. § 1211.5(b); see Mossman v. Superior Court (1972) 22 Cal. App. 3d 706, 713, 99 Cal. Rptr. 638 (applying Code Civ. Proc. § 1211.5(b) to permit affiant to amend initiating affidavit to allege accused contemner's notice of terms of judgment alleged to be violated)].

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, this memorandum may be used to support a petition for a writ of review [Code Civ. Proc. § 1069], habeas corpus [Penal Code § 1474], or prohibition [Code Civ. Proc. § 1103] attacking the sufficiency of evidence to sustain an order of contempt in a proceeding for indirect contempt.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For further discussion and forms, including a form of petition for a writ based on insufficiency of the evidence to sustain an order of contempt, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 135, Contempt (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Initiating Affidavit or Declaration as Required to Set Forth Facts Constituting Alleged Contempt

In re Liu (1969) 273 Cal. App. 2d 135, 78 Cal. Rptr. 85 , involved contempt proceedings initiated by a spouse's declaration stating that her ex-husband had willfully disobeyed a temporary restraining order and two other custody orders with respect to the couple's minor children. The trial court issued an order to show cause based on the ex-wife's declaration. At the hearing on the order to show cause, the ex-husband was adjudged in contempt and imprisoned pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1219 until he purged himself of the contempts by complying with the orders. The ex-husband petitioned for a writ of habeas corpus to secure his release from custody.

The court of appeal granted the writ, finding that the initiating declaration had alleged the contemner's past ability to perform the acts required by the temporary restraining order and custody orders and that the allegation was sufficient if the contemner were to be punished for past contempts under Code Civ. Proc. § 1218. However, the allegation was insufficient when, as in this case, Code Civ. Proc. § 1219 was invoked to compel future compliance with the orders (273 Cal. App. 2d 135, 141) . Holding that an initiating affidavit or declaration must set forth the facts constituting the alleged contempt in order to confer jurisdiction on the court to exercise its contempt powers (273 Cal. App. 2d 135, 140) , the court specifically held that the ex-wife's declaration was insufficient to confer jurisdiction on the trial court to enforce its orders by imprisonment under Code Civ. Proc. § 1219 since it did not allege that the desired act was yet within the power of the contemner to perform (273 Cal. App. 2d 135, 141-142) . The court also held that the trial court was without jurisdiction to imprison the alleged contemner for the added reason that the act to be compelled--the return of the children to the mother's custody--was not the specific act required to be performed by the terms of the original order he was charged with violating (273 Cal. App. 2d 135, 143-144) .

In Koehler v. Superior Court (2010) 181 Cal. App. 4th 1153, 104 Cal. Rptr. 3d 877, the court of appeal reversed and annulled an order of indirect contempt. Among the reasons for the court of appeal's decision was the fact that the superior court had commenced the contempt proceedings on its own and with no initiating affidavit. The court of appeal explained that a sufficient initiating affidavit is a jurisdictional prerequisite to an indirect-contempt proceeding. Without a sufficient affidavit, any contempt order is void (181 Cal. App. 4th 1153, 1169).

[b] Failure to Allege Contemner's Knowledge of Order

In Freeman v. Superior Court (1955) 44 Cal. 2d 533, 282 P.2d 857 , contempt proceedings arose out of a spouse's failure to pay attorney's fees and court costs in a dissolution action. The proceedings were initiated by an affidavit alleging, in part, that the nonpaying spouse had full knowledge of the provisions of the order requiring him to pay. In his answering affidavit, the nonpaying spouse denied that he had had knowledge of the order at the time he was charged with violating it and alleged that he was not in court when the order was made. At the hearing, the nonpaying spouse was adjudged in contempt. In his petition for a writ of review, he did not attack the sufficiency of the initiating affidavit but, rather, asserted that the evidence did not show he had notice or knowledge of the order. The Supreme Court affirmed the contempt order when it found that sufficient competent evidence had been introduced which showed that the accused contemner's attorney had been present in court when the order was made and had been served with a copy of the order. Because the trial court had merely resolved a conflict of evidence to determine the fact of the contemner's knowledge, its finding of contempt was not open to review by way of a writ challenging its jurisdiction. In passing on the contemner's petition, the Supreme Court reaffirmed the principle that an initiating affidavit is fatally defective if it fails to allege that the alleged contemner had notice or knowledge of the existence of the order which he was charged with violating at the time he was claimed to have violated it (44 Cal. 2d 533, 537) .

In Phillips v. Superior Court (1943) 22 Cal. 2d 256, 137 P.2d 838 , a mother was ordered by the terms of an interlocutory decree in a dissolution to give her child over to the custody of the child's grandmother. When she failed to do so, the grandmother submitted an affidavit alleging that the mother had the child in her custody in violation of the order. An order to show cause re contempt issued on the affidavit and the mother was adjudged guilty of contempt. The mother petitioned for a writ of review on the ground that the trial court lacked jurisdiction to act in the contempt matter because the affidavit on which the order to show cause issued was fatally defective for failing to state any facts showing that the alleged contemner had knowledge of the order she was charged with violating. The Supreme Court annulled the order of contempt when it found that the grandmother's affidavit included no allegation that the accused contemner was served with notice of the order, had actual knowledge of its terms, or was present in court when it was made. The fact that the mother was a party to the litigation did not, of itself, charge her with notice of an order made in connection with the litigation. Since the allegation of the contemner's notice or knowledge of the order was a condition precedent to the trial court's exercise of jurisdiction, the Supreme Court held that the trial court had failed to acquire jurisdiction to hear the contempt (22 Cal. 2d 256, 257) .

[c] Failure to Allege Contemner's Past Ability to Comply With Order

In re Cassil (1995) 37 Cal. App. 4th 1081, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 267 , arose out of foreclosure proceedings involving an office building. In connection with the foreclosure proceedings, the trial court issued a temporary restraining order appointing a receiver for the building and ordering the defendants to turn over any tenant security deposits to the receiver. When defendants failed to pay over any funds to the receiver, the plaintiff initiated contempt proceedings.

After a hearing, the trial court found defendants in contempt.

The court of appeal granted writs of review and habeas corpus and annulled the judgment of contempt. The court stated that an element of indirect contempt is that the person subject to the order has the ability to comply with the order. When a contempt is punitive in nature, as in this case, the court held that due process requires the moving party to prove its case beyond reasonable doubt (37 Cal. App. 4th 1081, 1087) . Defendants had argued that they had no ability to comply with the order because the security deposit funds had long ago been spent and were no longer in existence. Plaintiff argued that defendants nevertheless had the duty to expend their own funds in lieu of the security deposits. Reviewing the record in the case, the court found that, even assuming that defendants did have a duty to utilize their own funds to comply with the order, there was no substantial evidence that defendants had any funds to pay the receiver in lieu of the security deposits. Therefore, the plaintiff had failed to meet its burden of demonstrating that defendants had the ability to comply with the turnover order (37 Cal. App. 4th 1081, 1088) .

In re Liu (1969) 273 Cal. App. 2d 135, 78 Cal. Rptr. 85 is discussed in § 47.30[3][a].

In Koehler v. Superior Court (2010) 181 Cal. App. 4th 1153, 104 Cal. Rptr. 3d 877 , the court of appeal reversed and annulled a superior court's order of indirect contempt based on the contemner's failure to pay previously ordered sanctions. Among the reasons for the court of appeal's decision was the lack of substantial evidence that the contemner had the ability to pay the sanctions. Indeed, the contempt order did not include a finding that the contemner had the ability to pay the sanctions, and there was no initiating affidavit reciting that the contemner had the ability to pay. The court of appeal also noted that, except in child-support cases, where inability to pay is an affirmative defense (see In re Ivey (2000) 85 Cal. App. 4th 793, 798, 102 Cal. Rptr. 2d 447 ; see also § 47.35), the party seeking a contempt order has the burden to prove that the contemner has the ability to pay (181 Cal. App. 4th 1153, 1170 & n.9).

[d] Failure to Allege Contemner's Present Ability to Comply With Order

In In re Ny (1962) 201 Cal. App. 2d 728, 20 Cal. Rptr. 114 , contempt proceedings were initiated when a mother failed to obey a court order to deliver physical custody of her two minor children to the children's father. The initiating affidavit or declaration of the father, on which the order to show cause was issued, alleged that the mother had heard the order as it was made and that she thereafter contemptuously failed to deliver the children to their father. At the hearing on the order to show cause, the mother was adjudged in contempt and ordered imprisoned under Code Civ. Proc. § 1219 until she complied with the order. She then petitioned for a writ of habeas corpus to secure her release from custody. In granting the writ, the court of appeal held that one of the essential facts in establishing jurisdiction in a contempt proceeding is the contemner's ability to render compliance with the order and that the initiating affidavit must state this fact or the court is without jurisdiction (201 Cal. App. 2d 728, 731) . The court of appeal found that the initiating affidavit did not affirmatively show that the alleged contemner had physical custody of the children or that she was then able to comply with the order. Accordingly, in its order of contempt, the trial court's finding of the ability to comply was unsupported, and the order incarcerating her until she complied with the order to deliver the children was unauthorized (201 Cal. App. 2d 728, 732) .

In re Liu (1969) 273 Cal. App. 2d 135, 78 Cal. Rptr. 85 is discussed in § 47.30[3][a]. The pertinent holding of Koehler v. Superior Court (2010) 181 Cal. App. 4th 1153, 104 Cal. Rptr. 3d 877 , is discussed in § 47.30[3][c].

[e] Failure to Allege Contemner's Willful Disobedience of Order

In Warner v. Superior Court (1954) 126 Cal. App. 2d 821, 273 P.2d 89 , contempt proceedings were initiated by a former wife filing an affidavit in which she alleged a delinquency in the sums of money payable to her as spousal and child support. However, the former wife's affidavit did not accuse the former husband of having failed or refused to make any specific payments at any specific times under the support orders. At the contempt hearing, the former husband was adjudged in contempt and sentenced to imprisonment for his contempts. The accused contemner then petitioned for a writ of prohibition to restrain enforcement of the contempt order. The court of appeal issued the writ because it found the initiating affidavit insufficient for failure to state facts constituting the contempt charged. More particularly, the initiating affidavit did not allege that the contemner willfully failed or refused to comply with the support orders (126 Cal. App. 2d 821, 824) . The affidavit was fatally defective in this respect since, in the absence of an allegation of willful disobedience, the failure to make the required payments was presumed to be as a result of the contemner's honest belief that he was not required to make the payments, especially in light of his assertion of ability and willingness to pay whatever sums were found due (126 Cal. App. 2d 821, 826-827) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Failure to Allege Contemner's Present Ability to Comply With Order

In Anderson v. Superior Court (1998) 68 Cal. App. 4th 1240, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 891 , the trial court adjudicated the director of the state Department of Social Services in contempt of court for disobeying the court's order that she cease utilizing certain provisions of the department's manual of to determine eligibility for federal foster care. The court of appeal determined, however, that a later enacted statute divested the director of authority to comply with the trial court's order. Under the under the circumstances of this case, the court held that the trial court erred in its adjudication of contempt and annulled the adjudication of contempt (68 Cal. App. 4th 1240, 1243, 1250) .

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of an affidavit or declaration opposing the initiating affidavit or declaration in an indirect contempt proceeding [Code Civ. Proc. § 1211] on the ground that the order which the accused contemner is alleged to have violated is void [Silvagni v. Superior Court (1958) 157 Cal. App. 2d 287, 291, 321 P.2d 15] .

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[i] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, this memorandum may be used to support a petition for a writ of review [Code Civ. Proc. § 1069], habeas corpus [Penal Code § 1474], or prohibition [Code Civ. Proc. § 1103] attacking the validity of an order of contempt.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Disobedience of Void Orders as Not Contempt

In Silvagni v. Superior Court (1958) 157 Cal. App. 2d 287, 321 P.2d 15 , a trial court, in orally announcing its decision in a declaratory relief action, ordered the defendant in that action to make and deliver an assignment of stock to the plaintiffs before the entry of judgment. In addition, the trial court ordered the defendant to appear personally on a certain date to show cause why he had not assigned the stocks if that was the case. The defendant's attorney appeared at the hearing on the order to show cause and stated that defendant had made no assignment. At the conclusion of the hearing, the trial court directed the issuance of a warrant of attachment against the defendant to bring him personally to answer for contempt. The defendant then petitioned for a writ of prohibition to restrain the trial court from taking further proceedings to enforce its order directing the issuance of the warrant of attachment.

The court of appeal granted the writ. The court of appeal found, in part, that the trial court's oral pronouncement, which the defendant was accused of disobeying, was not a decision or judgment because written and signed findings of fact and conclusions of law were required in the action. Because disobedience of a void order made in excess of a court's jurisdiction does not constitute a contempt, defendant's failure to assign the stock could not become a contempt until a judgment containing a provision directing such an assignment was entered (157 Cal. App. 2d 287, 291) .

[b] Order Ineffective if Not Reduced to Writing or Entered in Minutes

In re Marcus (2006) 138 Cal. App. 4th 1009, 41 Cal. Rptr. 3d 861 , was a marital dissolution proceeding. After entering a status-only judgment of dissolution, the family court issued a written order in February 2003 setting forth a very specific child-custody and timeshare schedule. By this time the mother and daughter had moved to New York, and the father resided in California. The February 2003 order provided that the mother would have primary physical custody of the daughter during the school year and that the father would have primary custody over the summer and during certain school holidays. The order also permitted the father one visit per month during the times the mother had primary custody, and it specified the times and places of those visits. In particular, the order stated that the October 2003 visit was to take place "in New York from October 24 until October 28" (138 Cal. App. 4th 1009, 1012) .

At a settlement conference on August 7, 2003, the parties reached an agreement modifying the custody order, and the agreement was read into the record in open court. Among other things, the parties agreed modify the order concerning the October 2003 visit by striking the words "in New York," although the pickup and return were to take place in New York. (It later became apparent that the parties disagreed about the meaning of this modification: the father contended that it allowed him to travel to California with the daughter during his visit, and the mother contended that it only allowed the father to travel locally with the daughter during his visit.) After the modifications were read into the record, the court stated that the parties' agreement "is an order of the court" and designated the father's attorney to prepare a written order. The written order prepared by the father's attorney specified that pickups and returns were to be in New York, but that the father was free to travel with the child during his monthly visits. The order was signed by the court and filed on October 21; it was served on the mother by mail on October 23, one day before the father's October visit was to begin (138 Cal. App. 4th 1009, 1012-1013) .

Before the mother received the signed order, the father informed her of his intention to bring the daughter to California during his October 2003 visit. Believing that this would violate the custody agreement, the mother went to court in New York and obtained a protective order preventing the removal of the daughter (138 Cal. App. 4th 1009, 1013).

The father then returned to California and filed a petition for an order to show cause why the mother should not be held in contempt for failing to comply with the court's order confirming the parties' August agreement concerning custody. At the hearing on the contempt petition, it was not disputed that the mother had not had notice of the October 21, 2003 written order. Therefore, the matter proceeded on the assumption that the oral ruling of August 7, 2003, was the basis for the alleged contempt. The trial court held that the mother was in contempt, finding that the August 7 order clearly permitted the father to travel with the daughter during his visitation time, that the mother had failed to take the opportunity to seek an emergency order from the California court (which she could have done through her California attorney), and that the mother had failed to alert the New York court of the existence of the California court's order. To punish the contempt, the trial court imposed a fine and jail time and ordered the mother to perform community service (138 Cal. App. 4th 1009, 1013-1014) .

The court of appeal granted the mother's petition for a writ of habeas corpus and annulled the trial court's finding of contempt. The court of appeal explained that the elements of proof necessary to support punishment for contempt are (1) a valid court order of sufficient particularity, (2) the alleged contemnor's knowledge of the order, and (3) noncompliance. Citing Ketscher v. Superior Court (1970) 9 Cal. App. 3d 601, 88 Cal. Rptr. 357 (discussed immediately below), the court noted that in a case of indirect contempt (i.e., committed outside the presence of the court) it is settled that the first two elements cannot be satisfied unless the court's order is made a matter of record, either by a written order signed by the judge and filed with the court, or by a detailed entry in the court's minutes. Either way, a writing is essential to avoid the uncertainty that can arise when attempting to enforce an oral ruling, since an oral ruling is subject to varying memories and may not be clear or specific (see Code Civ. Proc. § 1003 (defining "order" as direction of a court or judge, made or entered in writing")). Moreover, an oral ruling is not necessarily the unequivocal decision of the court, which may change its ruling until such time as it is reduced to writing and becomes the order of the court (138 Cal. App. 4th 1009, 1014-1016) .

Applying these principles to the present case, the court of appeal found that the oral proceedings in this case were ambiguous and could not serve as the basis for a finding of indirect contempt. The only clear, specific, and unequivocal order was the written order filed on October 21, 2003. Since the mother did not have notice of that order when the alleged contempt occurred, the court of appeal concluded that the elements of contempt had not been established (138 Cal. App. 4th 1009, 1016-1017) .

In Ketscher v. Superior Court (1970) 9 Cal. App. 3d 601, 88 Cal. Rptr. 357 , the trial court, in an action for injunctive and other relief concerning disputed real property, orally directed the two parties to the lawsuit, who were brothers, to refrain from attacking one another. The contempt proceeding arose after one brother threw a rock through the window of his brother's automobile during a dispute arising from objections to the removal of a fence from the property. The brother who had thrown the rock was adjudged in contempt at the conclusion of a hearing on an order to show cause. He was then sentenced to five days' imprisonment and petitioned for a writ of prohibition to restrain the trial court's execution of the sentence. In his petition, the brother asserted that the trial court's oral pronouncement was ineffective and, thus, that the trial court lacked jurisdiction to hold him in contempt for violating the order.

The court of appeal granted the writ, agreeing with the brother's assertion of the trial court's lack of jurisdiction. It found that the judge's direction that the brothers refrain from attacking each other was indefinite and, more importantly, was never reduced to writing nor entered in the court's minutes and, therefore, was ineffective. It held that a person could not be held in indirect contempt for willful disobedience of such an ineffective order (9 Cal. App. 3d 601, 604-605) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Disobedience of Void Orders as Not Contempt

In Gates v. Municipal Court (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 45, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 439 , the court of appeal affirmed a superior court's judgment vacating a contempt conviction. The municipal court had adjudged the sheriff guilty of contempt because the sheriff, to comply with a federal court order limiting the number of inmates that could be held in the county jail, had cited and released some inmates who, under a Penal Code provision, were not eligible for a citation-and-release program. The superior court and court of appeal rested their decisions on the absence of evidence that the sheriff had intentionally violated any order of the municipal court or any duty that the municipal court had appointed the sheriff to perform (9 Cal. App. 4th 45, 51-52, 60) . In fact, the municipal court had not issued any order or appointed the sheriff to perform any duty; rather, the presiding judge of the municipal court had merely called the sheriff's attention to the Penal Code violations. In its opinion, the court of appeal pointed out that the sheriff had acted to comply with a federal court order, which he was bound to obey under the Supremacy Clause. If there had been a municipal court order and the sheriff had been in violation of it, the court of appeal observed, his duty to obey the supervening federal court order would have been a complete defense to a charge of contempt based on violating the municipal court order (9 Cal. App. 4th 45, 53-55) .

[b] Order Ineffective if Not Reduced to Writing or Entered in Minutes

In In re Littlefield (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 329, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 703 , a habeas corpus proceeding for review of a contempt conviction of a public defender who refused to obey a trial court's oral order to allow discovery by the prosecutor, the court of appeal observed that the written order adjudging the petitioner to be in contempt provided "a full and complete explanation of the events leading up to and constituting the contempt. Although it would have been preferable for the written order, on its face, to contain the express [oral] order of the court [that the petitioner had disobeyed], its failure to do so does not make the [adjudicating] order jurisdictionally defective. The order [that was disobeyed] is stated with sufficient detail to show that a contempt occurred[], without the aid of extrinsic evidence" (9 Cal. App. 4th 329, 339) .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Allegation of Contemner's Knowledge or Notice of Order Not Required

Mossman v. Superior Court (1972) 22 Cal. App. 3d 706, 99 Cal. Rptr. 638 , concerned a Missouri judgment ordering an ex-husband to pay alimony and child support. That judgment was recognized in an action brought by the ex-wife in California in which the ex-husband was represented by counsel. Notice of entry of the sister state's judgment was also served on the ex-husband's attorney by mail. Thereafter, the ex-wife initiated contempt proceedings by an affidavit in which she alleged that her ex-husband had willfully disobeyed the order to make alimony and child support payments but failed to allege his knowledge or notice of the order. An order to show cause was issued and a hearing held at which the ex-husband's attorney objected to the trial court's jurisdiction, in part, on the ground that it did not appear from the record that the ex-husband had notice of the entry of the California judgment. The order to show cause was continued to another date and, in the interim, the ex-husband petitioned for a writ of prohibition. The court of appeal granted the writ for the purpose of allowing the ex-wife to amend her affidavit as provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 1211.5 before the trial court continued the contempt proceedings against the ex-husband. The court of appeal held that a trial court may not supply allegations missing from an initiating affidavit. However a trial court may take judicial notice of the fact that an accused contemner, although not personally present, was represented in court by an attorney who participated in the hearing at which the order alleged to be violated was made. When a trial court takes judicial notice of this fact, a disputable presumption arises that the accused contemner had notice of the order. In addition, when the accused contemner's attorney is served with the order, a similar disputable presumption of notice to the accused contemner arises.

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of an initiating affidavit or declaration in an indirect contempt proceeding [Code Civ. Proc. § 1211] when the opposing affidavit or declaration states that the initiating affidavit or declaration [Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5] fails to allege the contemner's ability to comply with the order he or she is charged with violating [Sorell v. Superior Court (1967) 248 Cal. App. 2d 157, 163, 56 Cal. Rptr. 222] .

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[i] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, these points and authorities may be used to oppose a petition for a writ of review [Code Civ. Proc. § 1069], habeas corpus [Penal Code § 1474], or prohibition [Code Civ. Proc. § 1103] when the petition attacks the sufficiency of the initiating affidavit or declaration in a proceeding for indirect contempt for failure to allege the contemner's ability to comply with the order he or she is accused of violating.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Allegation of Contemner's Ability to Comply Not Required When Court Has Already Found Ability

In In re Ivey (2000) 85 Cal. App. 4th 793, 102 Cal. Rptr. 2d 447 , the family law court found a father in contempt for failing to pay court-ordered attorneys' fees and expert witness fees in connection with a child-custody and support proceeding. The father petitioned for a writ of habeas corpus, contending that his ability to pay was an element of the contempt that had not been pleaded or proved in the contempt proceeding. The court of appeal denied the petition, holding that if a family law order to pay fees or support includes an implied determination of the ability to pay, the ability to pay will not be an element of the charge of contempt; rather, inability to pay is an affirmative defense that must be raised by the contemner. The only time the ability to pay becomes an element of the offense is when the alleged contempt occurs many years after the underlying order (85 Cal. App. 4th 793, 798-801) . The court rejected a contention that its holding should be limited to orders to pay child support under Code Civ. Proc. § 1209.5, which expressly provides that ability to pay court-ordered child support is not an element of contempt. The court noted that longstanding California precedent makes the principles of § 1209.5 applicable to other family law orders (85 Cal. App. 4th 793, 801-802) .

In Sorell v. Superior Court (1967) 248 Cal. App. 2d 157, 56 Cal. Rptr. 222 , contempt proceedings arose from a husband's failure to obey an order requiring him to pay temporary support to his wife and attorney's fees to her attorney in a dissolution action. The initiating declaration submitted by the wife's attorney alleged, in part, that the husband, an attorney, had received sums of money from various legal matters he had handled since the time the order of payment had been made. The husband submitted no counter declarations or counter affidavits. At the hearing on the order to show cause re contempt, the trial court adjudged the husband in contempt and sentenced him to imprisonment. In its contempt order, the trial court found that the husband had had the ability to comply with the original order. The husband petitioned for a writ of review asserting that the wife's attorney had no standing to seek attorney's fees because he was not a party to the dissolution action and that the initiating declaration was insufficient for failure to allege the husband's ability to comply with the payment order. The court of appeal affirmed the contempt order and held that the wife's attorney had standing to seek attorney's fees by means of a contempt proceeding. With respect to the sufficiency of the initiating declaration, the court of appeal found that an affidavit or declaration was not required to allege that the contemner had the ability to comply with the order he was charged with violating when the court had already found the contemner's ability to comply at the time it issued its original order. In the instant case, the court granting the dissolution had found that the husband had the ability to make the required payments at the time it issued its order so that no allegation of ability to comply was required in the initiating declaration (248 Cal. App. 2d 157, 163) .

A special provision governs the failure to comply with an order for child support. Code Civ. Proc. § 1209.5 provides that when a court of competent jurisdiction makes an order compelling a parent to furnish support, proof that such order was made, filed, and served on the parent or proof that the parent was present in court at the time the order was pronounced and proof of noncompliance therewith shall be prima facie evidence of a contempt of court. It has been held that proof of these basic facts proves the entire contempt, and once contempt is proved, any excuse or justification, such as inability to pay, is a matter of defense [Moss v. Superior Court (1998) 17 Cal. 4th 396, 425, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 215, 950 P.2d 59 ; In re Feiock (1989) 215 Cal. App. 3d 141, 147, 263 Cal. Rptr. 437 ; see In re Ivey (2000) 85 Cal. App. 4th 793, 798-802, 102 Cal. Rptr. 2d 447 (longstanding California precedent makes principles of Code Civ. Proc. § 1209.5 applicable to family law orders other than support orders, such as orders to pay attorneys' fees)].

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Allegation of Contemner's Ability to Comply Not Required When Court Has Already Found Ability

In Mossman v. Superior Court (1972) 22 Cal. App. 3d 706, 99 Cal. Rptr. 638 , an ex-wife initiated contempt proceedings by an affidavit in which she alleged that her ex-husband had willfully disobeyed a judgment ordering him to make alimony and child support payments but failed to allege his ability to comply with the order. At the hearing on the order to show cause, the ex-husband's attorney objected to the trial court's jurisdiction, in part, on the ground that it did not appear from the ex-wife's affidavit that the ex-husband had the ability to comply with the order. In granting a writ of prohibition for the purpose of allowing the ex-wife to amend her affidavit as provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 1211.5, the court of appeal held that the ex-wife's affidavit was sufficient even though it did not allege the ex-husband's ability to make the payments ordered because the court originally making the order had found the ex-husband's ability to make such payments at the time it had the order. Therefore, the ex-wife was only required to allege the making of the order and her ex-husband's disobedience of it. Moreover, the ex-husband had the opportunity to offer any legitimate excuse for noncompliance with the order at the hearing on the order to show cause.

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used to support an initiating affidavit or declaration in an indirect contempt proceeding [Code Civ. Proc. § 1211]. The basis of these points and authorities is that the burden of proof on the issue of an alleged contemner's ability to comply with a court's support order under Code Civ. Proc. § 1209.5 is on the alleged contemner. Therefore, the alleged contemner must prove by a preponderance of the evidence that he or she is not able to comply with the court's support order.

From a tactical standpoint, counsel may wish to use these points and authorities in a reply brief after an alleged contemner has contended that the initiating declaration fails to allege ability to comply or that the petitioner is unable to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the contemner is able to comply with the order.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

With appropriate modifications, these points and authorities may be used to oppose a petition for a writ of review [Code Civ. Proc. § 1069], habeas corpus [Penal Code § 1474], or prohibition [Code Civ. Proc. § 1103] when the petition attacks the sufficiency of the initiating affidavit or declaration in a proceeding for indirect contempt for failure to allege the contemner's ability to comply with the order he or she is accused of violating. This form may also be used in a trial brief or appellate brief.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Contemner Has Burden of Proving Nonability to Comply With Support Order

In Moss v. Superior Court (1998) 17 Cal. 4th 396, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 215, 950 P.2d 59 , a "Declaration for Contempt" was executed by the custodial parent alleging that a judgment of dissolution ordered her noncustodial parent to pay a specified amount of support each month for the two children of the marriage. The declaration alleged that the noncustodial parent had knowledge of the order and was able to comply with each order when it was disobeyed. No payments were made during a specified period of time. The noncustodial parent was unemployed when the support order was made and the amount to be paid was based on his ability to earn a certain gross income per month. The declaration alleged 24 contempt counts and the court treated each of the 24 dates on which a payment had not been made as a separate count. The superior court issued an order to show cause directing the noncustodial parent to appear and show cause why he should not be found guilty of contempt for willful disobedience of the support order. The trial court held that the burden of proving inability to comply lay with the noncustodial parent and observed that there had been no evidence whatsoever that he was not able to work. The court found that the noncustodial parent had the ability to pay something in child support based on evidence before the court, and found him guilty of the 24 counts of contempt.

The noncustodial parent filed a petition for writ of mandate in the court of appeal, seeking to set aside the contempt judgment on the ground that, although he raised the issue of inability to pay, the custodial parent presented no evidence that he had any resources with which to pay child support and therefore had the ability to comply with the order. The court concluded that it was bound by the Supreme Court's decision in Ex parte Todd (1897) 119 Cal. 57 , which was recognized as binding precedent in In re Jennings (1982) 133 Cal. App. 3d 373 , and reluctantly held that to impose a contempt sanction in those circumstances is beyond the power of the court. The court of appeal annulled the trial court's judgment of contempt, and invited the Supreme Court to reconsider Ex parte Todd at least in the context of child support. The Supreme Court granted the custodial parent's petition for review.

The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment of the court of appeal, on the ground that holding that a willfully unemployed, nonsupporting parent subject to contempt sanctions if the parent fails to comply with a child support order might be deemed an unanticipated change in the law, and the custodial parent did not carry her burden of proof under the existing law by showing that the alleged contemner had the actual financial ability to comply with the order. The Court addressed the burden of proof in the contempt proceedings for the Court, however, and concluded that inability to comply with a child support order is an affirmative defense. The alleged contemner must prove inability to comply by a preponderance of the evidence which was not done in the case before the Court (17 Cal. 4th 396, 425) . Ability to comply with a support order is not an element of the contempt which must be proven beyond a reasonable doubt by the petitioner. It is an affirmative defense which must be proven by a preponderance of the evidence by the alleged contemner (17 Cal. 4th 396, 425) .

The apparent basis for Ex parte Todd (1897) 119 Cal. 57 , above, was either an assumption that employment sought under even an indirect threat of imprisonment for violation of the support order constituted involuntary servitude or a belief that imposition of a contempt or criminal sanction for failure to pay support constituted imprisonment for debt. The Supreme Court disapproved Ex parte Todd (1897) 119 Cal. 57 insofar as it might be read to apply to child support orders.

This memorandum asserts that the essential facts constituting a contempt may be contained in several affidavits (or declarations [*Code Civ. [3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Combination of Affidavits or Declarations Permitted to State Cause of Action in Contempt

In In re Morelli (1970) 11 Cal. App. 3d 819, 91 Cal. Rptr. 72 , at a hearing on an order to show cause, an intended nonparty expert witness in a personal injury action was adjudged in contempt of court of failure to appear at a deposition to which he had been validly subpoenaed. The contemner, sentenced to jail and ordered to pay a fine, petitioned for a writ of habeas corpus. One of his contentions was that not one document but several contained the papers supporting the trial court's issuance of the order to show cause. In discussing this contention, the court of appeal cited In re Roth (1934) 3 Cal. App. 2d 226, 39 P.2d 490 , for the proposition that support for issuance of an order to show cause re contempt may be provided by a combination of documents so that the trial court was not deprived of its jurisdiction to try the contempt. Finding no merit in the foregoing contention of the contemner or in other contentions raised by him, the court of appeal denied the writ (11 Cal. App. 3d 819, 828) .

In re Roth (1934) 3 Cal. App. 2d 226, 39 P.2d 490 , involved contempt proceedings initiated by an investigator's affidavit which was based wholly on information and belief except for allegations as to the affiant's status as an investigator. The affidavit recited a series of acts and transactions in which several contemners were alleged to have participated and of which the affiant-investigator had been informed but stated no source for any of the affiant's information. The trial court issued an order to show cause, and, at the hearing on the order, the alleged contemner appeared and objected to the trial court's jurisdiction based on the foregoing affidavit. The trial court found the alleged contemner guilty of contempt and imposed a jail sentence and fine. Thereafter, the contemner sought release by means of a petition for writ of habeas corpus of the ground that the initiating affidavit failed to confer jurisdiction because the statement of facts was based wholly on information and belief. In granting the writ, discharging the alleged contemnor, and exonerating his bail on the foregoing ground, the court of appeal also found that Code Civ. Proc. § 1211 does not require all of the essential facts of a contempt to be alleged in a single affidavit based on a single affiant's knowledge. Rather, several affidavits could be combined or grouped, if necessary, to embrace all of the essential facts in one document or as part of a master affidavit or petition (3 Cal. App. 2d 226, 236) .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Nonappealability of Contempt Order

In In re Buckley (1973) 10 Cal. 3d 237, 110 Cal. Rptr. 121, 514 P.2d 1201 , an attorney was cited for direct contempt for his remark to the judge in a criminal trial that the trial "court obviously doesn't want to apply the law." The court assessed a fine and imposed a jail sentence on the attorney with sentence stayed until the conclusion of the trial. The attorney petitioned for a writ of habeas corpus to annual the contempt order. The attorney contended, in part, that California procedure in contempt matters denied him equal protection of the law because it failed to provide for a stay or appeal as a matter of right. The Supreme Court denied the writ and affirmed that under Code Civ. Proc. § 1222 an order made in a contempt proceeding was not appealable. It disposed of the contemner-attorney's contention of the denial of equal protection when it held that the nonappealability of contempt orders did not discriminate against him. The Supreme Court stated that the procedure for review by means of writs of review or habeas corpus safeguarded the contemner's right to a review of the contempt proceedings just as the usual appellate practice entitled a contemner convicted under Penal Code § 166 (i.e., proceedings for misdemeanor contempt) to a review (10 Cal. 3d 237, 259).

In Butler v. Butler (1967) 255 Cal. App. 2d 132, 62 Cal. Rptr. 825 , a husband and wife dissolved their marriage after agreeing to a property settlement which provided for support of the couple's minor children. Later, the ex-wife filed an order to show cause for a modification of the child support agreement and commenced contempt proceedings by filing a declaration alleging the ex-husband's failure to make required payments under the marriage termination agreement. At the hearing, the ex-husband's motion to dismiss the contempt proceeding for lack of jurisdiction was granted, as was his motion to take the modification matter off the calendar. The ex-wife then filed a notice of appeal. The court of appeal, in dismissing the attempted appeal, held that an order of dismissal of a contempt proceeding was not an appealable order under Code Civ. Proc. § 1222 (255 Cal. App. 2d 132, 135).

[b] When Writ Lies

In Chula v. Superior Court (1962) 57 Cal. 2d 199, 18 Cal. Rptr. 507, 368 P.2d 107 , an attorney failed to appear in court to represent his criminal client. The trial court issued an order to show cause why the attorney should not be punished for contempt for failure to appear. At the hearing on the order to show cause, the attorney was adjudged in contempt and a term of imprisonment imposed. The attorney then petitioned for a writ of review. In affirming the order of contempt, the Supreme Court found that the order was not void for failing to state facts showing him guilty of contempt. In response to the question of whether the attorney's acts were sufficiently contemptuous to give the trial court jurisdiction to punish him for contempt, the Supreme Court answered in the affirmative, holding that the sole function of a writ of review in a contempt matter was to annul proceedings taken in excess of jurisdiction. Whether acts complained of constituted a contempt was, thus, a jurisdictional question. A reviewing court considered evidence only for the purpose of ascertaining whether the trial court had any substantial evidence before it with which to sustain its jurisdiction. Only in the absence of any evidence showing that an actual contempt was committed, should the contempt order be annulled. The Supreme Court examined the record and found there was substantial evidence to support the trial court's finding that the attorney had the ability to appear at the ordered time and place and that he, nevertheless, failed to appear without sufficient reason or excuse (57 Cal. 2d 199, 204).

The factual background of Freeman v. Superior Court (1955) 44 Cal. 2d 533, 282 P.2d 857 , is discussed in § 47.30[3][b]. In affirming the trial court's order of contempt, the Supreme Court restated the rule that a writ of review only lies to review and annul a contempt order rendered without or in excess of a court's jurisdiction. However, because the trial court had merely resolved a conflict of evidence to determine the fact of the contemner's knowledge, the Court held that the trial court's determination was not open to review by way of a writ challenging its jurisdiction to adjudicate the contempt (44 Cal. 2d 533, 536).

[a] When Writ Lies

In Coursey v. Superior Court (1987) 194 Cal. App. 3d 147, 239 Cal. Rptr. 365 , the court of appeal annulled a contempt judgment, holding that there was insufficient evidence that a custodial parent had the ability to comply with a visitation order or that she willfully violated that order. On review of a contempt adjudication, the sole question is one of the trial court's jurisdiction to render the judgment, and in such a case the review of the evidence is limited to determining whether there was any substantial evidence to sustain the trial court's jurisdiction (Coursey v. Superior Court (1987) 194 Cal. App. 3d 147, 154, 239 Cal. Rptr. 365).

In San Diego Teachers Assn. v. Superior Court of San Diego County (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 1 , the court of appeal had summarily denied an application by a union and its president for a writ to review contempt orders finding them both guilty of violating a restraining order and a preliminary injunction by conducting a strike and fining them both and sentencing the president to jail. The Supreme Court granted hearing and ordered issuance of the writ. Petitioners were attacking the validity of the restraining order and preliminary injunction, and the Court stated, citing In re Berry (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 137, 146-149, 65 Cal. Rptr. 273, 436 P.2d 273 , that a contempt conviction may be annulled when issuance of the order was beyond the court's authority. The Supreme Court annulled the contempt orders on the ground that the Public Employment Relations Board (PERB) had exclusive initial jurisdiction to determine whether strikes by public school employee organizations recognized or certified as exclusive representatives [Gov. Code § 3540.1(e)] are unfair labor practices and what, if any, remedies PERB should pursue.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] When Writ Lies

In In re Blaze (1969) 271 Cal. App. 2d 210, 76 Cal. Rptr. 551 , contempt proceedings were initiated by an ex-husband's declaration in support of an order to show cause re contempt alleging that his former wife had violated the terms of orders made in the course of their dissolution proceedings. At the hearing on the order to show cause, the ex-wife was adjudged in contempt and consecutive sentences of imprisonment imposed. She then petitioned for a writ of habeas corpus to review the contempt order. The court of appeal found that a writ of habeas corpus was an appropriate remedy to halt the enforcement of an invalid judgment of contempt and to review the jurisdiction of a trial court to punish and imprison for contempt (In re Blaze (1969) 271 Cal. App. 2d 210, 211, 76 Cal. Rptr. 551).

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] When Writ Lies

In In re De La Parra (1986) 184 Cal. App. 3d 139, 228 Cal. Rptr. 864 , petitioner sought relief from a superior court order imposing a jail term for contempt for refusal to answer four interrogatories relating to his business interests in certain Mexican computers on the ground that Mexican law prevented him from divulging that information. In granting a writ of habeas corpus annulling petitioner's conviction of contempt, the court of appeal pointed out that habeas corpus is a suitable remedy to review a contempt citation and that, while relief in the form of a writ of prohibition is also appropriate to prevent imposition of unauthorized discovery sanctions, habeas corpus is the correct vehicle when the sanction imposed is imprisonment (In re De La Parra (1986) 184 Cal. App. 3d 139, 141, 228 Cal. Rptr. 864).

In In re Jennings (1982) 133 Cal. App. 3d 373, 184 Cal. Rptr. 53 , petitioner sought relief by petition for writ of habeas corpus from a judgment of the superior court imposing a jail term for contempt for failure to pay spousal support and attorney's fees. The court of appeal considered the writ, holding that, while a decision of contempt was not appealable, the judgment may be attacked by writ, and review by habeas corpus was available if the contemner was imprisoned or otherwise deprived of his liberty (In re Jennings (1982)133 Cal. App. 3d 373, 375, 184 Cal. Rptr. 53).

In In re Abrams (1980) 108 Cal. App. 3d 685, 166 Cal. Rptr. 749 , petitioner was convicted of criminal contempt for disobeying a subpoena duces tecum directing him to appear as a witness at the trial of a civil action. The subpoena was served on petitioner's attorney rather than on petitioner. Petitioner sought a writ of habeas corpus to vacate his conviction on the ground the court lacked personal jurisdiction over him. In annulling the conviction of contempt on the ground that Code Civ. Proc. § 1987 requires personal service as a prerequisite to punishment for disobeying a subpoena, the court held that habeas corpus is a proper procedure to challenge the conviction (In re Abrams (1980) 108 Cal. App. 3d 685, 687, 166 Cal. Rptr. 749).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] When Writ Lies

In Safer v. Superior CourtSafer v. Superior Court (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 230, 124 Cal. Rptr. 174, 540 P.2d 14 , various growers proceeded against farm workers, who had set up picket lines around the growers' fields, in an action for injunctive relief and damages. While the action was pending, the growers obtained a temporary restraining order which limited the spacing and number of pickets. Thereafter, the sheriff arrested picketing farm workers who had assembled in violation of the temporary restraining order and charged them with misdemeanor contempt under Penal Code § 166. On the day set for the jury trials of the misdemeanor contempts, the district attorney dismissed the misdemeanor charges and served the accused contemners with orders to show cause in civil contempt proceedings under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1209-1222. The accused contemners demurred and moved to dismiss, arguing, in part, that the district attorney lacked authority to initiate the civil contempt proceedings. The trial court ruled adversely to the accused contemners. They then petitioned for a writ of prohibition. The Supreme Court granted the writ of prohibition and held that a district attorney was without statutory or decisional power to intervene in or prosecute a contempt proceeding stemming from private civil litigation in order to enforce orders obtained by one of the litigants. The Supreme Court also found that, in permitting the district attorney to prosecute the civil contempts contrary to statutorily authorized procedures for such proceedings, the trial court acted in excess of its jurisdiction. Such lack of jurisdiction established the ground for the Supreme Court's issuance of the writ of prohibition because a writ of prohibition lies when a court acts in excess of its jurisdiction in permitting the improper prosecution of contempt proceedings (15 Cal. 3d 230, 242) .

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a petition for a writ seeking relief from an order of contempt proceeding when the order finding the accused contemner in direct contempt fails to recite either the facts constituting the contempt [Chula v. Superior Court (1962) 57 Cal. 2d 199, 203, 18 Cal. Rptr. 507, 368 P.2d 107] or the fact that the contempt was committed in the court's presence [see Boysaw v. Superior Court (2000) 23 Cal. 4th 215, 220-221, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 531, 999 P.2d 748 (if order states facts clearing showing that contempt occurred in court's immediate view and presence, it is sufficient and need not also recite the "statutory formula" that the conduct so occurred)]. If an order punishing a party for direct contempt is found jurisdictionally invalid, contempt proceedings may not be reinstituted against that party [Bloom v. Superior Court (1986) 185 Cal. App. 3d 409, 412-413, 229 Cal. Rptr. 747 ( disapproved on other grounds in Boysaw v. Superior Court (2000) 23 Cal. 4th 215, 221, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 531, 999 P.2d 748)].

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Recital of Facts Constituting Contempt as Jurisdictional

In Chula v. Superior Court (1962) 57 Cal. 2d 199, 18 Cal. Rptr. 507, 368 P.2d 107 , an attorney failed to appear in court to represent his criminal client. The trial court issued an order to show cause why the attorney should not be punished for contempt for failure to appear. At the hearing on the order to show cause, the attorney was adjudged in contempt, and a term of imprisonment was imposed. The attorney then petitioned for a writ of review. The Supreme Court found that the order adjudicating the attorney in contempt was not void for failing to state facts showing him guilty of contempt. The recital of facts showing acts which constitute a contempt is jurisdictional, and an order which assumes to punish summarily a direct contempt is void unless it shows on its face facts sufficient to constitute a legal contempt, such as the failure to appear before a court at the appointed time. The order of the trial court was found to meet the foregoing requirements since the facts were stated showing that the attorney committed a contempt--the failure to appear--in the presence of the court, the absence constituting an affront to the authority of the court (57 Cal. 2d 199, 203) .

[b] Order Required to State Contempt Committed in Court's Presence

In Boysaw v. Superior Court (2000) 23 Cal. 4th 215, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 531, 999 P.2d 748 , a deputy public defender was cross-examining a police officer, and the prosecutor objected. The court directed the public defender to give the witness time to answer and address the witness in a professional tone of voice. The prosecutor objected a second time, and the court sustained this objection. After the court sustained the objection, the public defender continued to argue the issue with the court. The court directed him not to argue, but the attorney persisted. The court excused the jury and called a recess. During the recess, the public defender interrupted the court while the judge was making the record. The trial court issued an order adjudging the public defender in direct contempt of court. According to the order, the allegedly contemptuous conduct consisted of "yelling at the judge in front of the jury in a loud, rude, hostile and disrespectful tone of voice."

The public defender sought a writ of certiorari to review the contempt order, on the ground that the order (1) failed to recite in so many words that the cited behavior occurred in the "immediate view and presence" of the court, and (2) failed to recite that petitioner was properly warned that his tone of voice was objectionable. After the court of appeal summarily denied the petition, the Supreme Court issued a writ of review.

The Supreme Court rejected the argument that the contempt order was invalid merely because it failed to recite "the magic phrase" that the conduct constituting a direct contempt occurred in the "immediate view and presence" of the court. In this case, the facts recited in the order, that the petitioner "yelled at the judge in front of the jury in a loud, rude, hostile, and disrespectful tone of voice," made it clear that the cited conduct did in fact occur in the immediate view and presence of the court. The court concluded that, when the underlying facts cited in an order of direct contempt sufficiently demonstrate that the contumacious conduct occurred in the immediate view and presence of the court, Code

Civ. Proc. § 1211(a) is satisfied in this regard, and the order need not also recited the statutory formula (23 Cal. 4th 215, 220-221) . The Court expressly disapproved of the following court of appeal decisions to the extent that they had held that a recitation of the statutory formula alone was sufficient to satisfy Code Civ. Proc. § 1211(a), and were therefore inconsistent with its conclusion to the contrary: In re Baroldi (1987) 189 Cal. App. 3d 101, 234 Cal. Rptr. 286 ; Bloom v. Superior Court (1986) 185 Cal. App. 3d 409, 229 Cal. Rptr. 747 ; In re Smith (1976) 65 Cal. App. 3d 291, 135 Cal. Rptr. 5 ; In re Rosen (1973) 31 Cal. App. 3d 71, 106 Cal. Rptr. 757 ; Morales v. Superior Court (1966) 239 Cal. App. 2d 947, 49 Cal. Rptr. 173 (23 Cal. 4th 215, 221) .

The Court went to on to hold that the contempt order was invalid because it failed to recite facts showing that it had properly warned the petitioner that his tone of voice was objectionable. For the Court's reasoning on this point, see § 47.53[3][d].

[c] Order Failed to Identify Provision Violated

In Runnion v. Workers' Comp. Appeals Bd. (1997) 59 Cal. App. 4th 277, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 105 , the Workers' Compensation Appeals Board (Board) approved an order by a workers' compensation judge holding an attorney in contempt and sanctioned him for failing to appear at a scheduled hearing. The attorney petitioned the court of appeal for relief from the Board's order.

The court of appeal annulled the Board's contempt award, but sustained the sanctions order. The court stated that the workers' compensation judge's contempt order did not meet the standards for contempt orders. Although the workers' compensation judge discussed in some detail the facts leading to the contempt finding and found that the attorney did not have a valid excuse for missing the hearing, the contempt order did not even identify which provision of Code Civ. Proc. § 1209(a) the attorney violated. If, as implied by the workers' compensation judge's discussion, the attorney was held in contempt under Code Civ. Proc. § 1209(a)(5), for violating an order to appear, the judge's contempt order improperly failed to identify the order directing him to appear, to state that the attorney knew he had been ordered to appear, and to determine that he willfully failed to comply with the order (59 Cal. App. 4th 277, 287) .

[d] Order Fails to Indicate That Warning Was Given

In Boysaw v. Superior Court (2000) 23 Cal. 4th 215, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 531, 999 P.2d 748 , a deputy public defender was cross-examining a police officer, and the prosecutor objected. The court directed the public defender to give the witness time to answer and address the witness in a professional tone of voice. The prosecutor objected a second time, and the court sustained this objection. After the court sustained the objection, the public defender continued to argue the issue with the court. The court directed him not to argue, but the attorney persisted. The court excused the jury and called a recess. During the recess, the public defender interrupted the court while the judge was making the record. The trial court issued an order adjudging the public defender in direct contempt of court. According to the order, the allegedly contemptuous conduct consisted of "yelling at the judge in front of the jury in a loud, rude, hostile and disrespectful tone of voice."

The public defender sought a writ of certiorari to review the contempt order, on the ground that the order (1) failed to recite in so many words that the cited behavior occurred in the "immediate view and presence" of the court, and (2) failed to recite that petitioner was properly warned that his tone of voice was objectionable. After the court of appeal summarily denied the petition, the Supreme Court issued a writ of review.

As discussed more fully under Order Required to State Contempt Committed in Court's Presence, above, the Supreme Court rejected the argument that the contempt order was invalid merely because it failed to recite "the magic phrase" that the conduct constituting a direct contempt occurred in the "immediate view and presence" of the court (23 Cal. 4th 215, 220-221) .

The Supreme Court, however, went on to annul the order on the second ground urged by the petitioner. The Court noted that the petitioner was held in contempt for his tone of voice. The Court held that, when an order of contempt is based on the tone of voice used by the alleged contemnor, the order must recite that he or she was warned his or her tone of voice was objectionable. Although Code Civ. Proc. § 1211(a) does not expressly require the order to recite such a warning, the Court adopted this holding as a requirement correctly drawn from the case law by the authors of the California Judges Benchbook. The Court quoted from Cal. Judges Benchbook: Civil Proceedings Before Trial (CJER 1995), Sanctions & Contempt, § 17.98, that "[u]nless the conduct is outrageous and immediately recognizable as an act of contempt, the judge should warn the person that further similar conduct will result in a citation for contempt ..... [s]uch a warning should be made on the record, and any contempt order should indicate that a warning was given." The Court, citing In re Hallinan (1969) 71 Cal. 2d 1179, 1183, 81 Cal. Rptr. 1, 459 P.2d 255 , added that a contempt order must recite any warning that is required, for example, one that is required because the conduct was not contemptuous on its face (23 Cal. 4th 215, 222) . When conduct is not contemptuous on its face, the Court concluded that something more is necessary to establish a direct contempt. A valid order must describe in detail not only that conduct, but also that the contemnor persisted in the conduct after being admonished that it was offensive (23 Cal. 4th 215, 222-223) . In other words, in the case of conduct not contemptuous on its face, it is the person's disrespectful persistence in that conduct after being apprised of its offensiveness that constitutes the contempt.

Therefore, the Court concluded that to support the finding of direct contempt in this case, the trial court's order should have recited that the attorney was warned that the tone of voice he was using toward the court was objectionable. The reason for this conclusion, stated the Court, is that the order may be the only record immediately available (23 Cal. 4th 215, 223) . The Court directed that the contempt order be annulled due to its failure to do this (23 Cal. 4th 215, 224) .

The Court noted also that, had the trial court rested its finding of contempt on the attorney's direct refusal to obey the court's order directing him not to continue arguing its evidentiary ruling, or on the rude, hostile, and disrespectful content of the attorney's response (e.g., "The Court: Don't argue ..... [Petitioner:] I am arguing."), such a finding would have supported an order of contempt (23 Cal. 4th 215, 223) .

[e] Order Fails to Describe in Detail Conduct Not Contemptuous on Its Face

Boysaw v. Superior Court (2000) 23 Cal. 4th 215, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 531, 999 P.2d 748 is discussed in § 47.53[3][d]. The Court held that an order for direct contempt based on the alleged contemnor's tone of voice, was invalid because it did recite that the alleged contemnor had first been warned that the tone of voice was objectionable. In reaching this conclusion, the Court, citing Gallagher v. Municipal Court (1948) 31 Cal. 2d 784, 797, 192 P.2d 905 , stated that when a contempt adjudication depends on the volume, accent, inflection, or tone of voice, or on manner, facial expression, or demeanor, this aspect must be described in the contempt order in detail (23 Cal. 4th 215, 222) .

[f] Order Fails to Describe Prior Order That Was Violated

In In re Ringgold (2006) 142 Cal. App. 4th 1001, 48 Cal. Rptr. 3d 507 , the superior court entered an order adjudging a former trustee in direct contempt of an oral order to sign a document giving the new trustee access to trust property that was in a storage facility. The duty to sign the document arose from a prior written order to cooperate and turn over documents. The court of appeal annulled the contempt order because it failed to describe the prior written order. The court explained that the need to describe the prior order arose from the statutory requirement that a direct contempt order recite the facts constituting the contempt (see Code Civ. Proc. § 1211(a)). Thus, if a direct contempt is based on the violation of a prior order, the written direct contempt order must describe the prior order. As with other aspects of a written contempt order, the reference to the prior order must (1) recite the facts (what the prior order directed be done); (2) be stated with sufficient particularity that there is no need to refer to any extrinsic document in order to determine what was required by the prior order (except that a transcript may be attached to the order so as to put the contemptuous conduct in context); (3) be described with sufficient particularity to demonstrate on its face that the ensuing contemptuous conduct violated the prior order; and (4) not consist of the judge's conclusions regarding the prior order ( 142 Cal. App. 4th 1001, 1014). Because the recitation-of-facts requirement is jurisdictional (142 Cal. App. 4th 1001, 1011) , the trial court's failure in this case to meet that requirement by describing the prior written order rendered the contempt order void. Therefore, the court of appeal annulled the contempt order (142 Cal. App. 4th 1001, 1017) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Recital of Facts Constituting Contempt as Jurisdictional

McCann v. Municipal Court (1990) 221 Cal. App. 3d 527, 270 Cal. Rptr. 640 , was an appeal from a superior court judgment affirming, on certiorari, a municipal court judgment adjudging a deputy public defender guilty of three instances of contempt, and imposing a separate fine for each, for statements he made in the immediate view and presence of the trial court during closing arguments in a municipal court criminal prosecution.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the objectionable statements made were contemptuous on their face, manifesting an attack on the integrity of the court, and that all proper procedure had been followed. The court stated that an order adjudging a person guilty of contempt in the immediate view and presence of the court must recite facts that constitute a contempt, and that the facts must be stated with sufficient particularity to demonstrate on their face, without the aid of speculation, that the conduct constituted a legal contempt (221 Cal. App. 3d 527, 536) . The court further pointed out that a contempt committed in the immediate view and presence of the court, distinguished as direct contempt, may be treated summarily, and that all that is required is that an order be made reciting the facts, adjudging the person guilty, and prescribing the punishment (221 Cal. App. 3d 527, 538) .

In In re De La Parra (1986) 184 Cal. App. 3d 139, 228 Cal. Rptr. 864 , petitioner sought relief from a superior court order imposing a jail term for contempt for his refusal to answer four interrogatories relating to his business interests in certain Mexican computers on the ground that Mexican law prevented him from divulging that information. In granting a writ of habeas corpus, the court of appeal said that the penalty of imprisonment has been permitted for contemptuous refusal to make payments, such as support payments, and held that to have a valid contempt adjudication, the trial court "must observe the procedures and requirements of Code of Civil Procedure Section 1211 et seq., and specifically, the commitment order must demonstrate on its face that the citee is guilty of contempt" (184 Cal. App. 3d 139, 144) . The court further held that the order must recite the specific facts giving rise to the contempt and a finding of present ability to perform before the citee may be punished for disobeying a court order (184 Cal. App. 3d 139, 144) [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1211, 1218, 1219]. Holding that the brief committal order met none of the above-detailed jurisdictional requirements prerequisite to a valid finding of contempt, the court annulled the petitioner's conviction (184 Cal. App. 3d 139, 144-145) .

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a petition for a writ seeking relief from an order of contempt or a contempt proceeding when the order that the accused contemner is charged with violating is void [Elysium, Inc. v. Superior Court (1968) 266 Cal. App. 2d 763, 764, 72 Cal. Rptr. 355] .

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

With appropriate modifications, this memorandum may be used to support a declaration opposing a declaration charging indirect contempt [see § 47.30].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Void Order May Not Result in Contempt Judgment

In People v. Gonzalez (1996) 12 Cal. 4th 804, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 74, 910 P.2d 1366 , Defendant violated a preliminary injunction issued by a county restricting the activities of gang members in a certain geographical area. The government sought a misdemeanor conviction against Defendant in the municipal court for criminal contempt. Defendant demurred to the complaint, seeking, among other things, to assert, on constitutional grounds, the facial invalidity of the injunction he was accused of violating. Defendant was convicted of four counts of contempt. The appellate department of the superior court affirmed. The court of appeal affirmed.

The Supreme Court reversed the judgment of the court of appeal. The Court recited the general rule, "The rule is well settled in California that a void order cannot be the basis for a valid contempt judgment" (12 Cal. 4th 804, 816) . The Court concluded that settled California law establishes that there can be no contempt of a void injunctive order, and that assertedly unconstitutional injunctive orders are subject to challenge when contempt is charged, and on review of any contempt judgment (12 Cal. 4th 804, 809) .

In Davidson v. Superior Court (1999) 70 Cal. App. 4th 514, 82 Cal. Rptr. 2d 739 , the alleged contemnors were running a junkyard establishment on their property. The city filed a lawsuit to force them to clean it up. A purported settlement was reached, and a settlement agreement was signed by the attorney for the alleged contemners and the city attorney. The agreement was presented ex parte to a judge who signed a judgment confirming the settlement. Later when compliance problems occurred, the alleged contemners were held in contempt and sentenced to five days in jail. The alleged contemners filed a petition for writ of habeas corpus and other appropriate relief.

The court of appeal annulled the judgment of contempt is annulled and issued a writ of mandate to vacate the void order. The court determined that, under the summary procedures of Code Civ. Proc. § 664.6, a written settlement agreement is not enforceable unless it is signed personally by the litigant [see Levy v. Superior Court (1995) 10 Cal. 4th 578, 580, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 878, 896 P.2d 171] . Thus, the stipulated order was in excess of the court's jurisdiction because it was not entered in compliance with section 664.6 or some other settlement enforcement mechanism. Thus, it was void and could not be the basis of a valid contempt order (70 Cal. App. 4th 514, 517-518) .

[b] Violation of Order in Excess of Jurisdiction Is Not Contempt

In Elysium, Inc. v. Superior Court (1968) 266 Cal. App. 2d 763, 72 Cal. Rptr. 355 , Elysium appealed from an injunctive order forbidding it to use the word "Look" as part of the title of its magazine. While the appeal was pending, an order to show cause re contempt was issued, and Elysium was adjudged in contempt for 12 separate violations of the injunctive order. Elysium was assessed and paid a fine for its allegedly contemptuous violations of the injunctive order. On the reversal of the injunctive order, Elysium made a motion in the trial court seeking a refund of the fine it had paid on the invalid judgment. The trial court denied Elysium's motion for a refund and its subsequent motion for reconsideration. Elysium then sought a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to refund the fine. The court of appeal found Elysium entitled to a refund and issued the writ of mandate as requested. The court of appeal stated that no one may be punished in contempt for violation of a void order, noting that one method for challenging the validity of an injunctive order is to disobey the order. If it is later determined that the order was made without or in excess of the court's jurisdiction, the violation of the void order constitutes no punishable wrong. Thus, the contemner, like one convicted of crime who pays a fine, was entitled to a refund of the fine upon reversal of the judgment on appeal (266 Cal. App. 2d 763, 764) .

[c] What Constitutes Order in Excess of Jurisdiction

The facts and procedural background of Davidson v. Superior Court (1999) 70 Cal. App. 4th 514, 82 Cal. Rptr. 2d 739 are discussed in § 47.54[3][a]. In Davidson, the court quoted from People v. Gonzalez (1996) 12 Cal. 4th 804, 816, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 74, 910 P.2d 1366 , discussed in § 47.54[3][a], the principle that an order in excess of the jurisdiction of the issuing court cannot produce a valid judgment of contempt, and that the "jurisdiction" in question extends beyond mere subject matter or personal jurisdiction. Rather, any acts which exceed the defined power of a court in any instance, whether that power be defined by constitutional provision, express statutory declaration, or rules developed by the courts and followed under the doctrine of stare decisis, are in excess of jurisdiction (70 Cal. App. 4th 514, 529) .

In re Nolan W. (2009) 45 Cal. 4th 1217, 91 Cal. Rptr. 3d 140, 203 P.3d 454 , was a juvenile dependency case in which the juvenile court attempted to implement a reunification plan for the minor and his mother. As part of the reunification plan, the juvenile court ordered the mother to enroll in a substance-abuse program. Eventually, because the mother frequently missed recovery sessions, failed to stay in contact with the program, and did not submit to drug testing, the juvenile court found her in contempt and sentenced her to 300 days in custody (5 days each for 60 counts of noncompliance). However, the court stayed imposition of the judgment on condition that the mother enroll in and complete a residential drug-treatment program. When the mother failed to do so and failed to appear at a review hearing, the court terminated reunification services and lifted the stay of the contempt judgment. The mother sought review, contending that the juvenile court lacked the authority to issue the contempt order. The court of appeal declined to reach the merits of that claim, but it did reverse the contempt judgment on the ground that the 300-day sentence, imposed after the termination of reunification services, was an abuse of discretion. The California Supreme Court affirmed, specifically holding that because of the unique nature of reunification orders, the juvenile court may not use its contempt power to incarcerate a parent solely for the failure to satisfy a condition of a voluntary reunification plan (45 Cal. 4th 1217, 1225-1226) .

The Supreme Court began its analysis by acknowledging the settled proposition that, in general, any court has inherent power to enforce compliance with its lawful orders through contempt; and Welf. & Inst. Code § 213 expressly recognizes this power of the juvenile court: "Any willful disobedience or interference with any lawful order of the juvenile court or of a judge or referee thereof constitutes a contempt of court" (45 Cal. 4th 1217, 1230) .

The Supreme Court noted, however, that not every violation of a court order is subject to punishment as a contempt of court. Contempt is generally a summary procedure designed to protect the dignity of the court in the exercise of its jurisdiction. Thus, a court's power to compel compliance with its orders to ensure the orderly administration of justice does not extend to punishing violations of substantive law when such violations do not impair the dignity or functioning of the court. Moreover, when the Legislature has established a specific penalty for a transgression, courts may not impose a contempt punishment that is inconsistent with the legislative scheme (45 Cal. 4th 1217, 1230-1231) .

Turning to the specifics of dependency proceedings and reunification services, the Supreme Court observed that the juvenile court's authority to control the behavior of a parent in dependency proceedings is not direct, but rather ancillary to its jurisdiction over the child. When the court orders a parent to participate in certain services, compliance with the order is a condition the court has placed on the parent's reunification with the child. However, it is not the court's role to force a parent to participate in services. Rather, reunification services are voluntary and cannot be forced on an unwilling or indifferent parent. The Supreme Court therefore construed the statutory provision that a parent "shall be ordered to participate" in reunification services (now see Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(a)(3)) as imposing a duty on the juvenile court to make the order, but not imposing a duty on the parent to participate (45 Cal. 4th 1217, 1233-1234) .

Reviewing the statutory provisions covering reunification services, the Supreme Court concluded that the legislative scheme contemplates that the ultimate penalty for a parent's failure to satisfy a requirement of a reunification plan is the loss of parental rights (see, e.g., Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 361.5(a)(3), 366.21(e), (f), 366.22(a), 366.26). The Court concluded that the use of the juvenile court's contempt power to incarcerate a parent who fails to satisfy a reunification program requirement is inconsistent with the legislative scheme and therefore beyond the court's power (45 Cal. 4th 1217, 1233-1234) .

The Supreme Court closed by emphasizing that its decision in this case was not intended to strip the juvenile court of its well-established contempt authority to control the proceedings before it and protect the dignity of its exercise of jurisdiction. Thus, extreme parental misconduct that jeopardizes a child's safety, such as taking the child without permission or engaging in dangerous acts during visitation, could justify punishment by contempt, because that kind of conduct would interfere with the court's exercise of its own authority over the dependent child. The holding in this case, therefore, is limited to the use of contempt power to punish a parent's failure to satisfy a condition imposed simply to facilitate reunification (45 Cal. 4th 1217, 1234-1238) .

[d] Void Judgment Is Subject to Attack in Review of Contempt Proceedings

In Mitchell v. Superior Court (1972) 28 Cal. App. 3d 759, 104 Cal. Rptr. 921 , contempt proceedings arose out of an action for money due on a promissory note. After security a default judgment, the plaintiff in that action sought the appointment of a receiver of the judgment debtor's share in the assets and profits of a partnership in order to satisfy the judgment. In appointing the receiver as requested, the trial court also ordered the two other partners to deliver to the receiver all assets belonging to the partner who was the judgment debtor. When the two other partners failed to comply, the receiver initiated contempt proceedings by submitting a declaration in which he recited the foregoing facts. An order to show cause was issued, and, at the hearing on the order to show cause, the two other partners were adjudged in contempt. They then petitioned for a writ of review, which the court of appeal granted. The court of appeal found that the trial court had no authorization for the appointment of a receiver because the judgment creditor did not file an action against the debtors of the judgment debtor separate and apart from the supplemental proceedings to the original judgment. The court also found that the trial court exceeded its jurisdiction by going beyond the authorizing statute in appointing the receiver to take over and preserve contested property interests. Finally, the court held that the two other partners could attack the validity of the underlying order in their review of the contempt proceedings. It found that the trial court's judgment was void on its face and, thus, subject to attack for lack of jurisdiction (28 Cal. App. 3d 759, 764-765) .

[a] No Jurisdiction Before Entry of Judgment

In re Blaze (1969) 271 Cal. App. 2d 210, 76 Cal. Rptr. 551 , concerned contempt proceedings in which an ex-wife was found in contempt for violating the terms of orders made in the course of a dissolution proceeding. In granting a writ of habeas corpus to the ex-wife, the court of appeal found that the trial court was without jurisdiction to adjudicate her in contempt. The ex-husband's declaration and the contempt order referred to the ex-wife's alleged disobedience of orders made at a time before the interlocutory judgment has been signed. Any orders made prior to that time were merged into the interlocutory judgment. Thus, the earlier orders could not be a basis for an adjudication of contempt, and the ex-wife could not be held in contempt of nonexistent orders.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Personally Embroiled Trial Judge as Violative of Due Process

In In re Buckley (1973) 10 Cal. 3d 237, 110 Cal. Rptr. 121, 514 P.2d 1201 , a criminal defense attorney, following the trial court's refusal to call the prosecutor as a witness, remarked to the trial judge that the "court obviously doesn't want to apply the law." The court immediately cited the attorney for direct contempt. It likewise assessed a fine and imposed a jail term on him with sentence stayed until the conclusion of the trial. The following day the attorney apologized for his remark of the previous day. However, the trial judge regarded the apology offered by the attorney as further insult to the court. Thereafter, the attorney petitioned for a writ of habeas corpus to annul the order adjudging him in contempt and assessing and sentencing him. His petition asserted, in part, that the trial judge was required to refer the adjudication of the alleged contempt to another judge as a matter of due process.

The Supreme Court denied the writ, relying on the rule that due process required a new and impartial judge to sit in judgment on contemptuous behavior occurring before the court only when there was evidence that the trial judge had become so personally embroiled with the alleged contemner as to make the trial judge unfit to sit in judgment of the contempt charge. It held that the attorney's conduct was disrespectful but did not give rise to a level of personal vilification which would give evidence of the trial judge's probable personal embroilment. The Supreme Court disposed of the attorney's contention that the trial judge demonstrated personal involvement in misconstruing the apology by holding that the mitigating effect, if any, of such an apology rested exclusively in the trial judge's discretion (10 Cal. 3d 237, 256) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Personally Embroiled Trial Judge as Violative of Due Process

In Betsworth v. Workers' Comp. Appeals Bd. (1994) 26 Cal. App. 4th 586, 31 Cal. Rptr. 2d 664 , an attorney made a comment before a workers' compensation referee. Outside the courtroom, the referee approached and admonished her. The next day, the referee telephoned the partners at the attorney's law firm, and asked them what they intended to do to alleviate the problem. The referee also sent them a letter about the matter, and sent a copy to a regular client of the law firm. A few months later, the attorney filed a petition requesting the referee's removal. At that point, the referee filed a formal accusation of contempt against the attorney. The removal petition was denied, the referee heard the matter, and imposed a $1000 sanction on the attorney. The court of appeal reversed, holding that the referee had engaged in a clear pattern of personal embroilment, requiring that another judge hear the contempt matter (26 Cal. App. 4th 586, 597-600) .

In In re Martin (1977) 71 Cal. App. 3d 472, 139 Cal. Rptr. 451 , an attorney was cited for direct contempt for allegedly making false representations to the trial court with respect to the whereabouts of a material witness in a paternity action.

The attorney objected on the ground that the alleged misrepresentation constituted an indirect contempt requiring notice and a hearing. The trial court set aside the judgment of direct contempt and granted a rehearing on the charge. At that time the attorney requested that the charge of indirect contempt be heard before another judge. The trial judge denied this request and, at the hearing on the indirect contempt charge, adjudged the attorney in contempt and sentenced him to a term of imprisonment. The attorney then petitioned for a writ of habeas corpus, asserting a denial of due process. The court of appeal annulled the contempt order and remanded the matter to be heard before another judge. The court of appeal found that the trial judge had remarked at the hearing on the attorney's request for an indirect contempt hearing that the attorney had deliberately deceived him and that this comment suggested bias and a presumption of guilt against the attorney on the part of the trial judge. The court of appeal also found that the trial judge had acted at the hearing on the indirect contempt charge as an adversary of the attorney rather than as a trier of fact, even to the point of becoming a witness against the attorney when the judge offered his own recollection of events relevant to the alleged contempt (71 Cal. App. 3d 472, 481) .

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a petition for a writ seeking relief from an order of contempt or contempt proceedings [Code Civ. Proc. § 1222] when the evidence has not established the contemner's wrongful intent with respect to a certain class of direct contempts [In re Jasper (1973) 30 Cal. App. 3d 985, 988-989, 106 Cal. Rptr. 754] .

Where appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] When Specific Wrongful Intent Required

In In re Jasper (1973) 30 Cal. App. 3d 985, 106 Cal. Rptr. 754 , a mother relieved her son of his knife before they entered a courtroom and placed the knife in her purse. The incident was observed and reported, so subsequently, her purse was searched and the knife discovered. At the hearing for direct contempt following the discovery of the knife, the accused contemner explained that her son used the knife as a screwdriver and had inadvertently placed the knife in his pocket when they left for court, and that she had no place to put the knife other than her purse. The mother was found in contempt and sentenced to five days' imprisonment, with execution stayed for 30 days at her attorney's request. She then petitioned for a writ of habeas corpus, which the court of appeal granted. In its opinion, the court of appeal noted that specific wrongful intent, though not ordinarily an element of an act of contempt, must be shown in order to establish contempt when the allegedly contemptuous act is of a certain class of direct contempts of doubtful propriety, such as the carrying of a concealed weapon, and intent goes to the gravamen of the offense. Because the court found that no direct or indirect evidence contradicted the mother's account of the possession of the knife, it, therefore, held that the mother was not in direct contempt (30 Cal. App. 3d 985, 988) .

[b] Possession of Weapon in Courtroom

In re Jasper (1973) 30 Cal. App. 3d 985, 106 Cal. Rptr. 754 , is discussed in § 47.57[3][a].

In In re Carvallo (1973) 29 Cal. App. 3d 983, 105 Cal. Rptr. 925 , a bailiff discovered the accused contemner carrying a concealed knife into a courtroom and reported the incident to the court. The court held a hearing and found the accused contemner in violation of former Code Civ. Proc. § 1209(4) and (8) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 1209(a)(4), (8), relating to abuse of, or unlawful interference with, the proceedings of a court) even though the accused contemner offered his explanation for carrying the knife. The accused contemner was then sentenced to five days' imprisonment and petitioned for a writ of habeas corpus. In granting the writ, the court of appeal noted that a court is entitled to protect itself from violence and to punish those who carry weapons into a courtroom. However, the court found that the evidence did not establish a case of contempt in that the contemner's knife was folded in a carrying case, its possession was satisfactorily explained by the contemner, and no reasonable inference could be drawn of the contemner's intent to use the knife improperly in the courtroom (29 Cal. App. 3d 983, 987) .

[Caption. See §§ 47.50-47.52.]

THE TRIAL JUDGE HAS BEEN PROPERLY CHALLENGED AND DISQUALIFIED FOR CAUSE IN THE INDIRECT CONTEMPT PROCEEDING, AND THUS MAY NOT HEAR ANY MATTER IN THE PROCEEDING INVOLVING A CONTESTED ISSUE OF LAW OR FACT, AND ANY SUBSEQUENT ORDER HE/SHE MAY RENDER IS VOID.

A. Order of Contempt Final. [See § 47.50, Paragraph A.]

B. Nonappealability of Contempt Order. [See § 47.50, Paragraph B.]

C. Statutory Authority for Writ. [See §§ 47.50 -47.52, Paragraph C.]

D. When Writ Lies. [See §§ 47.50 -47.52, Paragraph D.]

E. Statutory Basis for Challenge for Cause to Disqualify Judge. As provided in Code of Civil Procedure Sections 170 through 170.5, a judge has no power to act in any proceeding, except to the extent permitted by Code of Civil Procedure Section 170.4, when disqualified [Code Civ. Proc. § 170.4(d)]. Grounds for disqualification include the following reasons (Code Civ. Proc. § 170.1(a)):

(1) The judge has personal knowledge of disputed evidentiary facts concerning the proceeding (see Code Civ. Proc. § 170.1(a)(1)(B)).

(2) The judge served as a lawyer in the proceeding, or in any other proceeding involving the same issues he or she served as a lawyer for any party in the present proceeding or gave advice to any party in the present proceeding on any matter involved in the action or proceeding (see Code Civ. Proc. § 170.1(a)(2)(B),(C)).

(3) The judge has a financial interest in the subject matter of, or a party to, the proceeding (see Code Civ. Proc. § 170.1(a)(3)(B),(C)).

(4) The judge, or the spouse of the judge, or a person within the third degree of relationship to either of them, or the spouse of such a person, is a party to the proceeding or an officer, director, or trustee of a party (see Code Civ. Proc. § 170.1(a)(4)).

(5) A lawyer or a spouse of a lawyer in the proceeding is the spouse, former spouse, child, sibling, or parent of the judge or the judge's spouse, or is associated with such a person, or is associated in the private practice of law with a lawyer in the proceeding (see Code Civ. Proc. § 170.1(a)(5)).

(6) For any reason (a) the judge believes that his or her recusal would further the interests of justice, (b) the judge believes that there is a substantial doubt as to his or her capacity to be impartial, or (c) a person aware of the facts might reasonably entertain a doubt that the judge would be able to be impartial (see Code Civ. Proc. § 170.1(a)(6)(A)). Bias or prejudice toward a lawyer in the proceedings may be grounds for disqualification (see Code Civ. Proc. § 170.1(a)(6)(B)).

(7) By reason of permanent or temporary physical impairment, the judge is unable to properly perceive the evidence or conduct the proceeding (see Code Civ. Proc. § 170.1(a)(7)).

(8) The judge has a current arrangement concerning prospective employment or other compensated service as an arbitrator, mediator, or other type of dispute-resolution neutral (see Code Civ. Proc. § 170.1(a)(8)(B)(iii)) or is participating in, or within the last two years has participated in, discussions (see Code Civ. Proc. § 170.1(a)(8)(B)(i)) regarding prospective employment or service as a dispute-resolution neutral, or has been engaged in such employment or service, and either (a) the arrangement is, or the prior employment or discussion was, with a party to the proceeding; (b) the matter before the judge includes issues relating to the enforcement of either an agreement to submit a dispute to an alternative dispute- resolution process or an award or other final decision by a dispute-resolution neutral; (c) the judge directs the parties to participate in an alternative dispute-resolution process in which the dispute-resolution neutral will be an individual or entity with whom the judge has the arrangement, has previously been employed or served, or is discussing or has discussed the employment or service; or (d) the judge will select a dispute-resolution neutral or entity to conduct an alternative dispute-resolution process in the matter before the judge, and among those available for selection is an individual or entity with whom the judge has the arrangement, with whom the judge has previously been employed or served, or with whom the judge is discussing or has discussed the employment or service (see Code Civ. Proc. § 170.1(a)(8)).

A judge who refuses to recuse himself or herself after a party files a statement of disqualification under Code of Civil Procedure Section 170.3(c) may not pass on his or her own disqualification or on the sufficiency in law, fact, or otherwise, of the statement of disqualification, except to order the statement stricken if it is untimely filed or discloses on its face no legal grounds for disqualification [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 170.3(c)(5), 170.4(b)].

F. Power to Disqualify Judge in Indirect Contempt Proceedings. The provisions of Code of Civil Procedure Section 170 governing disqualification of judges for cause, especially those provisions not permitting a judge to sit or pass on his/her own disqualification, apply to indirect contempt proceedings (Briggs v. Superior Court (1931) 211 Cal. 619, 631, 297 P. 3).

G. Orders of Disqualified Judge Void. If a judge is disqualified, every subsequent order by him/her is void (Briggs v. Superior Court (1932) 215 Cal. 336, 341, 10 P.2d 1003 ; Turkington v. Municipal Court (1948) 85 Cal. App. 2d 631, 638, 193 P.2d 795).

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a petition seeking relief from an order of contempt or a contempt proceeding when the trial judge hearing the charge of indirect contempt is challenged for cause [see Briggs v. Superior Court (1931) 211 Cal. 619, 622, 297 P. 3] .

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Peremptory Challenges in Contempt Proceedings

Although no court has passed directly on the issue, a trial judge in indirect contempt proceedings may also be peremptorily challenged for prejudice provided the peremptory challenge is made prior to a contempt hearing and the hearing is not merely a continuation of the action from which it emanates before the same judge [see McClenny v. Superior Court (1964) 60 Cal. 2d 677, 681-687, 36 Cal. Rptr. 459, 388 P.2d 691 (affirming trial judge's denial of accused contemner's motion to disqualify under Code Civ. Proc. § 170.6 in contempt proceedings arising from dissolution action when motion made before same judge as has presided over dissolution action)]. For memoranda in support of a peremptory challenge to a judge not presiding at an earlier proceeding and in opposition to a peremptory challenge in supplementary proceedings which constitute a continuation of the original action, see Ch. 130, Judges .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Power to Disqualify in Indirect Contempt Proceedings

In Briggs v. Superior Court (1931) 211 Cal. 619, 297 P. 3 , an accused contemner appeared for a contempt hearing in response to an order to show cause and moved to disqualify the trial judge for bias under former Code Civ. Proc. § 170 (now see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 170.1(a)(6), 170.3(c)). The judge then proceeded to hear the question of his own disqualification and ruled adversely to the accused contemner. The judge thereafter continued the contempt hearing to permit the accused contemner to seek appellate relief from the adverse ruling. The accused contemner accordingly petitioned for a writ of prohibition to determine the applicability of former Code Civ. Proc. § 170 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 170 et seq.) to an indirect contempt proceeding. The Supreme Court granted the writ, confining its applicability to the judge in question and affirming a judge's inability under former Code Civ. Proc. § 170 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 170.3(c)(5)) to pass on his or her own disqualification to hear a matter. It noted that, in a direct contempt proceeding, the judge acts immediately on his or her own observation and knowledge and administers instant and summary punishment. On the other hand, indirect contempt proceedings follow the usual procedure in both civil and criminal cases. Thus, judges may be disqualified for cause in indirect contempt proceedings and the procedures described by former Code Civ. Proc. § 170 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 170.3(c)) with respect to the challenge for cause and a judge's inability to pass on his or her own disqualifications must be followed (211 Cal. 619, 631) .

[b] Orders of Disqualified Judge Void

In Briggs v. Superior Court (1932) 215 Cal. 336, 10 P.2d 1003 , accused contemners petitioned for a writ of prohibition to determine whether a trial judge could pass on a challenge to his or her qualifications in an indirect contempt proceeding. The Supreme Court held that former Code Civ. Proc. § 170 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 170 et seq., governing disqualification for cause) was applicable to indirect contempt proceedings and thus, that a trial judge was capable of being disqualified in an indirect contempt proceeding. Thereafter, another judge heard the accused contemners' challenge and ruled that the original trial judge was not disqualified for prejudice. The accused contemners again petitioned for a writ of prohibition arguing that the original trial judge was disqualified for prejudice as a matter law. The Supreme Court issued a peremptory writ of prohibition when it found that the original trial judge was disqualified for prejudice by his admittedly expressing an opinion as to the credibility and guilt of the accused contemners. When a judge is thus disqualified as a matter of law, every order he or she enters is equally void so that any judgment can be set aside (215 Cal. 336, 341) .

In Turkington v. Municipal Court (1948) 85 Cal. App. 2d 631, 193 P.2d 795 , a municipal court judge filed an initiating affidavit in contempt alleging that certain persons had published a resolution that tended to interfere with the orderly administration of justice in cases involving traffic laws and regulations. On the date set for the hearing on the order to show cause, one of the accused contemners filed a statement challenging the qualifications of the judge to preside over a matter in which he was also the complaining witness and requested another judge to hear the matter. The judge then continued the proceeding with respect to that accused contemner but refused to hear similar objections from the other accused contemners because they had failed to file individual statements urging his disqualification. These other accused contemners were then tried and found guilty of contempt by the judge. Thereafter, they petitioned for a writ of review. In granting the writ of review and reversing the orders of contempt against the convicted contemners, the court of appeal found, in part, that until the question of a judge's disqualification is passed on by another judge, he or she is without jurisdiction to proceed. Thus, when the judge's qualifications were challenged by one of the accused contemners on a ground which was not limited to that accused contemner alone but applied to all of the accused contemners, the effect of the challenge was to deprive the challenged judge of jurisdiction over the proceedings until his qualifications were passed on. Furthermore, if a judge is qualified, every subsequent order by him or her is void. Thus, the orders of contempt issued by the judge after the challenge by one of the accused contemners were void (85 Cal. App. 2d 631, 638) .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Wrongful Divesting of Jurisdiction to Hear Contempt

In Taylor v. Superior Court (1942) 20 Cal. 2d 244, 125 P.2d 1 , a contempt proceeding was initiated when an employee of the petitioner filed an affidavit charging the respondent, in an action to establish a partnership between petitioner and respondent and to secure an accounting and declaratory relief, with violating a preliminary injunction restraining the respondent from withdrawing funds or disposing of certain equipment. The trial court issued an order to show cause against the respondent. Prior to the hearing on the order to show cause, the alleged contemner answered all of the charges made in the initiating affidavit in a counter affidavit. At the hearing, counsel for the alleged contemner objected to the introduction of any evidence on the ground that the initiating affidavit did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in contempt. The trial court sustained the objection not on the ground of the insufficiency of facts but on the ground that no bond had been filed as required in the order granting the preliminary injunction. The petitioner then sought a writ of review. The Supreme Court held that a writ of review was proper to hear and determine an order by which a trial court wrongfully divested itself of jurisdiction to hear a contempt. The Supreme Court found that the trial court had exceeded its jurisdiction in refusing to hear and determine the issues presented by the petitioner's and alleged contemner's affidavits and thus, annulled the order by which the trial court had sustained the alleged contemner's objection.

In Goodall v. Superior Court (1918) 37 Cal. App. 723, 174 P. 924 , a judgment was rendered enjoining the owners and assigns of certain real property from obstructing the natural flow of water through a creek extending across an adjoining parcel of land. The enjoined defendants conveyed their property to another person who had notice of the injunction. On the new owner's refusal to comply with the injunction, the plaintiff in the original action filed an affidavit stating the foregoing facts and an order to show cause re contempt was issued. The successor in interest filed an affidavit in opposition to the initiating affidavit in which she demurred, asserting that the plaintiff was guilty of laches in seeking enforcement of the injunction and that the contempt proceeding was initiated by the plaintiff for the purpose of compelling the successor in interest to pay money to the plaintiff. The trial court agreed with the successor in interest's contentions and dismissed the contempt proceeding without a hearing. The plaintiff in the original action then petitioned for a writ of review to annual the order by which the trial court had dismissed the contempt proceeding. The court of appeal held that, just as an unwarranted order adjudging a person in contempt may be annulled by a writ of review, the converse was also true. Thus, the court of appeal annulled the trial court's order of dismissal and held that an order should be annulled when a court, without any ground for its action, denied to the beneficiary of a judgment granting an injunction the process of that court when disobedience to the injunction was shown [Goodall v. Superior Court (1918) 37 Cal. App. 723, 726, 174 P. 924] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Appearance by Attorney in Response to Order to Show Cause as Sufficient

In Morelli v. Superior Court (1968) 262 Cal. App. 2d 262, 68 Cal. Rptr. 572 , plaintiffs in a personal injury action had a subpoena duces tecum issued requiring Morelli, a nonparty expert witness employed by the defendants in the personal injury action, to appear at a deposition. On Morelli's failure to appear at the scheduled deposition, the trial court issued an order to show cause re contempt. The witness did not appear personally or through an attorney at the hearing on the order to show cause. Thereafter, the trial court ordered a bench warrant to issue against Morelli, and he was arrested. On the date set for the hearing, Morelli's attorney appeared on his behalf and filed with the court Morelli's declaration objecting to the trial court's jurisdiction. Because Morelli did not appear in person at this hearing, the trial court ordered another bench warrant to be issued for his arrest. Morelli then petitioned for a writ of prohibition to restrain contempt proceedings on both bench warrants. The court of appeal issued the writ with respect to the second bench warrant. It held that the trial court exceeded its jurisdiction in requiring the accused contemner to answer for contempt for failing to appear in person in response to an order to show cause re contempt when the accused contemner's attorney appeared on his behalf at that hearing [Morelli v. Superior Court (1968) 262 Cal. App. 2d 262, 269-270, 68 Cal. Rptr. 572] .

For additional discussion of the factual background and the reasoning of the court of appeal in Silvagni v. Superior Court (1958) 157 Cal. App. 2d 287, 321 P.2d 15 , see the discussion in § 47.31[3][a]. In that case, the trial court ordered the defendant to appear personally on a certain date to show cause, if he had any, why certain stocks, which were the subject of a dispute in the action before the trial court, were not assigned if they were not already assigned on that date. The defendant's attorney appeared at the hearing on the order to show cause. The trial court directed the issuance of a warrant of attachment against the defendant to bring him personally to answer for contempt. The defendant then petitioned for a writ of prohibition to restrain the trial court from taking further proceedings to enforce its order directing issuance of the warrant. The court of appeal granted the writ, holding that the appearance of the defendant's attorney in response to the order to show cause was sufficient. Thus, the trial court was without authority to direct issuance of the warrant of attachment against the defendant for failure to appear personally.

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a petition for a writ seeking relief from an order of contempt or a contempt proceeding when the accused contemner is not afforded procedural due process because legal evidence was not presented against him or her or he or she had no opportunity to present evidence or cross examine witnesses on his or her own behalf at the indirect contempt hearing [Bone v. Superior Court (1966) 245 Cal. App. 2d 972, 973, 54 Cal. Rptr. 406 ; Collins v. Superior Court (1956) 145 Cal. App. 2d 588, 594, 302 P.2d 805] .

Where appropriate, counsel should insert argument in the foregoing from showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Hearing as Required to Constitute Procedural Due Process

In Collins v. Superior Court (1956) 145 Cal. App. 2d 588, 302 P.2d 805 , an ex-wife filed affidavits accusing her ex-husband of contempt for his alleged failure to pay spousal and child support ordered by the trial court in annulment proceedings. At the hearing on the orders to show cause issued on these affidavits, attorneys for both of the ex-spouses stipulated to payment of certain agreed arrearages of spousal and child support and agreed that, based on the stipulation, the court need not find the ex-husband in contempt. However, the court immediately found the ex-husband in contempt over his attorney's objection without the ex-wife's affidavits being offered or received in evidence, without any opportunity for the ex-husband to cross examine the affiant or to refute statements made in the affidavits, and without any opportunity for the ex-husband to offer evidence on his own behalf. After being sentenced to five days in jail, the ex-husband petitioned for a writ of review. In granting the writ and annulling the order of contempt, the court of appeal held that, in order for a court to have jurisdiction to try a person charged with contempt, a hearing must be had in the proceedings which meets the requirements of procedural due process. Thus, in a proceeding to have a person adjudged guilty of indirect contempt, the person cannot be deprived of property or liberty without evidence being offered against him or her in accordance with established rules of evidence, without an opportunity to cross examine those whose evidence is given against him or her, and without the opportunity to present evidence on his or her own behalf. The court added that, although the trial court could take judicial notice of its own orders, it could not take judicial notice and assume the truth of the facts stated in the ex-wife's affidavits until the ex-husband had an opportunity to challenge as evidence the facts alleged in the affidavits.

[b] Procedural Due Process in Indirect Contempt Proceedings

In Bone v. Superior Court (1966) 245 Cal. App. 2d 972, 973, 54 Cal. Rptr. 406 , a preliminary injunction required a defendant to do certain things with respect to the advertising of his business. Shortly after the preliminary injunction was issued, plaintiffs filed a declaration supporting issuance of an order to show cause why the defendant should not be adjudged guilty of contempt for willfully disobeying the preliminary injunction. At the hearing, the defendant was present with his attorney but no evidence was introduced against him. The initiating declaration was not offered in evidence, and the declarant was not called as a witness. Nevertheless, the trial court adjudged the defendant guilty of contempt. The defendant then sought a writ of review annulling the contempt order. In granting the writ, the court of appeal stated that in a proceeding to have a person adjudged guilty of indirect contempt for alleged violation of an order of court, the person cannot be deprived of property or liberty without evidence being offered against him or her in accordance with established rules of evidence, without an opportunity to cross examine those whose evidence is given against him or her, and without the opportunity to present evidence on his or her own behalf. Therefore, the failure to offer the initiating declaration or to call the declarant as a witness deprived the defendant of a trial of the issues tendered by the declaration and, thus, deprived him of due process.

Collins v. Superior Court (1956) 145 Cal. App. 2d 588, 302 P.2d 805 is discussed in § 47.61[3][a].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Contempt Hearing Cannot Proceed Without Appearance by Contemner

In Farace v. Superior Court (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 915, 196 Cal. Rptr. 297 , petitioner's ex-wife filed an affidavit charging petitioner with contempt for failure to pay child support as ordered. The ex-wife charged that petitioner was properly served, but petitioner claimed that at the time of service he was not at home and the papers were mistakenly served on his brother. The brother's attorney informed the ex-wife's attorney that the wrong person had been served. Petitioner claimed he never had actual knowledge of the contempt proceeding. At the hearing on the order to show cause, neither petitioner nor his attorney was present. The ex-wife's attorney alleged that petitioner had been evading service but that he was finally served; the attorney also informed the court that the wrong person had been served. The court made no finding on the validity of service on petitioner but found petitioner in contempt and issued a bench warrant for his arrest. Petitioner moved to quash the order to show cause and set aside the contempt order on the grounds of improper service. The court said it had no jurisdiction to set aside the order and proceeded to sentence petitioner.

The court of appeal issued a writ of mandate ordering the trial court to vacate the contempt order. The court held that a contempt hearing cannot be held in the absence of the accused contemner and his or her attorney when there is no finding the contemner was willfully absent (148 Cal. App. 3d 915, 917) . The court stated that civil contempt proceedings are quasi-criminal in nature because of the penalties that may be imposed, and that, therefore, certain procedural safeguards that are extended to criminal defendants must be extended to a contemner (148 Cal. App. 3d 915, 917) . Because of the criminal nature of the proceedings, the court stated that the contemner must appear at the hearing. The court said that the appearance may be in person, by an attorney, or by an affidavit. The situation could be analogized to a misdemeanor trial where the court, in the absence of an appearance by the defendant, may continue the matter, issue a bench warrant, or proceed with trial if the court finds the defendant has voluntarily absented him or herself with full knowledge that the trial is to be held. The court stated that any of those procedures could have been used, but that when there is no appearance and no finding of valid service and voluntary absence, it is error to proceed with the contempt hearing (148 Cal. App. 3d 915, 918) .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Writ Premature Until Court's Judgment Final

For additional discussion of the factual background and reasoning of the court of appeal in Morelli v. Superior Court (1968) 262 Cal. App. 2d 262, 68 Cal. Rptr. 572 , see the discussion in § 47.60[3][a]. In that case, an expert witness subpoenaed to appear at a deposition failed to appear at the deposition. He likewise failed to appear, either personally or through an attorney, at a hearing on an order to show cause re contempt arising from his failure to appear at the deposition. The trial court ordered the first of two bench warrants to issue for the arrest of the expert witness. In his petition for a writ of prohibition after issuance of the second of the bench warrants, the expert witness challenged the trial court's jurisdiction to issue the bench warrants and asserted that service of the subpoena duces tecum was improper. The court of appeal held that the trial court was statutorily empowered to require the expert witness to appear for a deposition by means of a subpoena duces tecum and, likewise, was statutorily empowered to punish refusal to attend as a contempt pursuant to former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034 [see now Code Civ. Proc. § 2023(b)(5) (Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(e) operative July 1, 2005); see also Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(i) (Code Civ. Proc. § 2034.410 et seq. operative July 1, 2005) (deposition of expert witness)]. Because the trial court was invested with these powers, the accused contemner's challenge to the trial court's jurisdiction in the contempt proceeding was premature until a judgment following from the power statutorily conferred on the trial court became final. The court stated that any error committed in the exercise of those statutorily conferred powers by the trial court could be considered in a review of the final judgment. It should be noted, however, that the court granted a writ of prohibition in this case on other grounds.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Contempt Order Incorporating Allegations of Affidavit or Declaration Sufficient

In Darden v. Superior Court (1965) 235 Cal. App. 2d 80, 45 Cal. Rptr. 44 , a husband was ordered to make two support payments a month to his wife as part of a dissolution action. When the husband failed to make full payments and neglected to make subsequent payments when due, the wife filed an affidavit in support of the issuance of an order to show cause re contempt, alleging, in part, that her husband had the ability to comply with the payment order. The husband filed a declaration opposing his wife's affidavit in which he claimed his inability to comply with the payment order. At the hearing on the order to show cause, the husband was adjudged guilty of contempt and ordered to be imprisoned and to pay a fine. The husband then petitioned for a writ of review asserting that the order of contempt, which incorporated the allegations of the wife's initiating affidavit, failed to contain a specific finding that the alleged contemner had the ability to make the payments called for by the earlier court order. The court of appeal affirmed the order of contempt. It held that an order of contempt stating that all of the allegations contained in a pleading were true was a sufficient finding. Therefore, an order of contempt which incorporated such allegations contained in the initiating affidavit satisfied the requirement that there be a finding that the contemner had the ability to comply with the order he or she was alleged to have violated if the affidavit contained an allegation to that effect.

This memorandum may be submitted to oppose a petition for a writ seeking relief from an order of contempt or from a contempt proceeding when the petitioner contends that the contempt order is insufficient because it fails to recite in so many words that the contemptuous conduct occurred "in the immediate view and presence of the court" under Code Civ. Proc. § 1211(a). The basis for this form is that the contempt order recites facts that sufficiently demonstrate that the contempt occurred in the immediate view and presence of the court.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should refer to specific language in the order that reciting the underlying facts of the alleged contempt, and point out that the facts sufficiently show that the cited conduct occurred in the court's immediate view and presence. For example, in Boysaw v. Superior Court (2000) 23 Cal. 4th 215, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 531, 999 P.2d 748 , discussed in § 47.65[3][a], the contempt order recited that petitioner "yell[ed] at the judge in front of the jury in a loud, rude, hostile and disrespectful tone of voice." The Court asserted that it was "clear beyond any cavil that the cited conduct did in fact occur in the immediate view and presence of the court" [Boysaw v. Superior Court (2000) 23 Cal. 4th 215, 220, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 531, 999 P.2d 748] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] "Immediate View and Presence" Recital Is Not Essential

The facts and procedural background of Boysaw v. Superior Court (2000) 23 Cal. 4th 215, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 531, 999 P.2d 748 , are discussed in § 47.53[3][b]. In Boysaw, the Supreme Court stated that an order adjudging a person guilty and prescribing the punishment must recite facts with sufficient particularity to demonstrate on its face that petitioner's conduct constituted a legal contempt. However, the Court rejected the petitioner's contention that a contempt order which fails to recite in so many words that the contemptuous conduct occurred "in the immediate view and presence of the court" is invalid under Code Civ. Proc. § 1211(a), at least when the underlying facts recited in the order make that quite clear. The contempt order stated that the petitioner "yell[ed] at the judge in front of the jury in a loud, rude, hostile and disrespectful tone of voice." The Court stated that the above facts made it clear that the cited conduct did in fact occur in the immediate view and presence of the court, refusing to "exalt form over substance" (23 Cal. 4th 215, 220) . Thus, the Court held that if the underlying facts recited in an order of contempt sufficiently demonstrate that the contumacious conduct occurred in the immediate view and presence of the court, Code Civ. Proc. § 1211 is satisfied in that regard, and the order need not recite the statutory formula (23 Cal. 4th 215, 221) .

The Court expressly disapproved of the following court of appeal decisions to the extent that they had held that recitation of the statutory formula alone was sufficient to satisfy Code Civ. Proc. § 1211(a) and were therefore inconsistent with its conclusion to the contrary: In re Baroldi (1987) 189 Cal. App. 3d 101, 234 Cal. Rptr. 286 ; Bloom v. Superior Court (1986) 185 Cal. App. 3d 409, 229 Cal. Rptr. 747 ; In re Smith (1976) 65 Cal. App. 3d 291, 135 Cal. Rptr. 5 ; In re Rosen (1973) 31 Cal. App. 3d 71, 106 Cal. Rptr. 757 ; *Morales v. [a] Use of Form because it fails to recite in so many words that the contemptuous conduct occurred "in the immediate view and presence of the court" under Code Civ. Proc. § 1211(a). The basis for this form is that, even though the contempt was committed in the presence of the court (and thus could have been treated summarily as a direct contempt), it was adjudicated under the procedures for indirect contempt (and thus was not subject to the requirements for a direct contempt order).

This memorandum may be submitted to oppose a petition for a writ seeking relief from an order of contempt or from a contempt proceeding when the petitioner contends that the contempt order is insufficient to establish a direct contempt

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, for example, counsel should explain that the judge in whose presence the cited conduct occurred elected to defer the contempt adjudication to another judge.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Contempt Committed in Presence of Judge Need Not Be Treated Summarily

The petitioner in Hanson v. Superior Court (2001) 91 Cal. App. 4th 75, 109 Cal. Rptr. 2d 782 was an attorney who represented a defendant in a criminal case. In closing argument, the petitioner stated to the jury in open court that his client had not received a fair trial and that the goal of the prosecution was to misrepresent the facts. The trial judge immediately admonished the petitioner and stated that a contempt proceeding would be conducted after a recess. However, the judge then granted the petitioner's request for a continuance. The next day, the judge filed an order to show cause why the petitioner should not be held in contempt. The judge also filed an affidavit that recited the statements made by the petitioner to the jury. Two months later, the matter came on for hearing before another judge of the trial court. That judge entered an order finding the petitioner in contempt and prescribing punishment. The petitioner then sought a writ of habeas corpus from the court of appeal, contending that the contempt order was invalid because it failed to recite the facts constituting the contempt. The petitioner argued that because the alleged contempt had occurred in the presence of the trial judge, it was a direct contempt, and the contempt order therefore was required to recite the facts constituting contempt. The court of appeal denied the petition, holding that although contemptuous conduct committed in the presence of a judge is usually treated as direct contempt, the judge may choose to use the procedures for indirect contempt and defer the contempt adjudication to another judge. In such a case, the contempt order need not comply with the requirements for direct contempt orders (91 Cal. App. 4th 75, 82) .

PART I. INTRODUCTION

4-48 California Points & Authorities § 48.01

§ 48.01 Scope of Chapter

This chapter contains forms of points and authorities relating to motions for continuances of trials and hearings in civil cases.

Part II, Subpart A, Supporting Continuance, includes the following types of forms:

- Authorities addressing good cause and the lack of alternatives for the continuance as well as the diligence with which continuance was sought (§ 48.10).
- Authorities supporting continuance based on a written stipulation (§ 48.11).
- Authorities supporting continuance based on a party's absence (§ 48.12).
- Authorities supporting continuance based on a witness's absence (§ 48.13).
- Authorities supporting continuance based on an attorney's absence (§ 48.14).
- Authorities supporting continuance based on a significant change in the status of the case (§ 48.15).
- Authorities supporting continuance based on the pendency of another case (§ 48.16).

Part II, Subpart B, Opposing Continuance, includes the following types of forms:

- Authorities addressing the lack of good cause for the continuance (§ 48.30).
- Authorities regarding the availability of alternatives to the continuance and the lack of promptness with which the continuance was sought (§ 48.31).
- Authorities opposing continuance based on the moving party's lack of good faith (§ 48.32).

- Authorities opposing continuance based on the heavy burden a continuance would place on the party opposing it (§ 48.33).
- Authorities opposing continuance based on a written stipulation (§ 48.34).
- Authorities opposing continuance based on a party's absence (§ 48.35).
- Authorities opposing continuance witness's absence (§ 48.36).
- Authorities opposing a continuance sought because of an attorney's unavailability (§ 48.37).
- Authorities opposing continuance based on a change in the status of the case (§ 48.38).
- Authorities opposing a continuance sought because of the pendency of another case (§ 48.39).

Part II, Subpart C, Reply Memorandum Supporting Continuance, includes the following form:

- Authorities addressing the court's lack of authority to condition a continuance on payment of attorney's fees (§ 48.60).

For discussion and forms of points and authorities relating to motions for precedence or preference and motions to advance, reset, or set a case specially for a trial setting conference or a trial, see Ch. 180, Pretrial Proceedings, § 180.50 et seq.

CHAPTER 48 CONTINUANCE OF PROCEEDINGS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

4-48 California Points & Authorities § 48.02

§ 48.02 Governing Law

The procedures governing motions for a continuance of proceedings and grounds for granting these motions are set out in Code Civ. Proc. §§ 139, 473(a)(2), 594a-596, 1024, 1054, and 1054.1 and Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(c) provides the recommended standards for what constitutes good cause.

Stay of any action or proceeding in which a person in, or recently out of, military service is involved, is governed by the Servicemembers Civil Relief Act enacted in 2003 (formerly the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act) [50 U.S.C. App. § 501 et seq.] and state statutes for reservists and members of the National Guard [Mil. & Vet. Code § 400 et seq.].

Additional grounds for granting a continuance are recognized by case law.

Most trial courts also have established local rules of court governing continuances, when and before whom they may be made, the grounds therefor, and other requirements.

CHAPTER 48 CONTINUANCE OF PROCEEDINGS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

4-48 California Points & Authorities § 48.03

§ 48.03 How to Use the Forms in This Chapter

[1] Written Motion Generally Required for Continuance

Except for good cause, motions for continuance are to be made on written notice to all other parties [Cal. Rules of Ct., 3.1332(a)], and a party filing a notice of motion must serve and file with it a memorandum [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1112(a)]. The court may construe the absence of a memorandum as an admission that the motion is not meritorious and as cause for its denial [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113(a)]. Even in situations where good cause exists to dispense with the notice of motion, a written application and a memorandum will be required [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1201(4)].

[2] Page Limits on Points and Authorities

One of the more significant drafting requirements to keep in mind are page limits: supporting and opposing memoranda must not exceed 15 pages, or 20 pages in the case of a motion for summary judgment. A reply or closing memorandum may not exceed 10 pages in length. Exhibits, declarations, attachments, tables of contents, tables of authorities, and proof of service are not counted. Any party must obtain leave of court to file a longer memorandum [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113(e)]. These and other drafting requirements are discussed in further detail in Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs, § 1.05.

[3] Using Forms to Build a Draft Memorandum

The forms included in this chapter are designed to be combined with other points and authorities to form a complete memorandum. For a detailed discussion on how to select and use the forms in the publication to build a draft memorandum and complete the draft, with detailed discussion of all drafting requirements and strategic or stylistic considerations, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs, § 1.10.

[4] Age of Cases

Except for authorities supporting the granting of continuances on the ground of other pending actions, generally the authorities which support the granting of continuances are older than those which oppose the granting of continuances. Although these older cases may contain excellent discussions of relevant concepts [see, e.g., Pacific Gas & Elec. Co.

v. Taylor (1921) 52 Cal. App. 307, 308, 198 P. 651 , discussed in § 48.13[2][c][ii]], counsel should not rely too heavily on their statements of fact.

Although the principles may be still valid, application of these principles by contemporary judges with modern views of transportation, communication, medical science, and deposition practice could be more strict. For example, a contemporary court would probably not agree that if an attorney notifies an out-of-state client of the trial date by letter with return address and the letter is not returned, the attorney can assume that the client will be at the trial [see Carl v. Thomas (1931) 116 Cal. App. 294, 2 P.2d 872 , discussed in § 48.13[2][c][iii]]. Similarly, although a continuance is proper if a party's presence is required at trial but the party is seriously ill, modern cases generally deny continuances on grounds of illness if the party is physically able to attend the trial [see Kalmus v. Kalmus (1951) 103 Cal. App. 2d 405, 414, 230 P.2d 57] without jeopardizing his or her health [see Agnew v. Parks (1963) 219 Cal. App. 2d 696, 702, 33 Cal. Rptr. 465] . Courts are more likely to make an independent assessment of the medical evidence. Thus, although in Morehouse v. Morehouse (1902) 136 Cal. 332, 334, 68 P. 976 , the Supreme Court reversed the denial of a continuance to one who on the basis of the physician's affidavit could not be taken to the place of trial without great risk to his life, the court of appeal in People v. Mazoros (1977) 76 Cal. App. 3d 32, 41-43 , using more sophisticated medical evidence, upheld the denial of a continuance to a criminal defendant even though a physician testified that the rigors of a trial would be extremely dangerous and that there was substantial likelihood of a fatal heart attack unless defendant was heavily sedated.

[5] Trial Court Delay Reduction Act and Local Rules

Superior courts in all California counties are required to implement delay reduction programs [Gov. Code §§ 68605.5, 68620].

Gov. Code § 68616 restricts the extent to which local delay reduction rules may shorten time periods [see Gov. Code § 68616]. Among other provisions, Section 68616 provides that within 30 days of service of the responsive pleadings, the parties may, by stipulation filed with the court, agree to a single continuance not to exceed 30 days [Gov. Code § 68616(d)]. Beyond this single authorized continuance, however, trial court delay reduction rules restrict continuances [see, e.g., Alameda Co. Super. Ct. Rules, Rule 4.0(d) (court approval required for other stipulated continuances); Los Angeles Co. Super. Ct. Rules, Rules 7.7(b), 7.10 (same)]. Local rules should be checked before seeking any continuance.

A. Good Cause. A court may grant a continuance before or during trial on an affirmative showing of good cause and each request for a continuance must be considered on its own merits (Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(c)).

B. Significant, Unanticipated Change in Case Status Constitutes Good Cause for Continuance. The circumstances that may indicate good cause for a continuance include a significant, unanticipated change in the status of the case as a result of which the case is not ready for trial (Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(c)(7)).

C. Continuance Sought as Soon as Reasonably Practical. A party seeking a continuance of the date set for trial, whether contested or uncontested or stipulated to by the parties, must make the motion or application as soon as reasonably practical once the necessity for the continuance is discovered (Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(b)).

D. Opportunity for Full Presentation. Continuance should be granted if failure to allow the continuance would probably or possibly prejudice the party seeking the continuance by depriving that party of the opportunity to fully and fairly present his/her/its case (*Cadle Co. v. [a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for continuance. It sets forth the basic requirements for a continuance [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332].

The authorities in this form should be combined with all of the forms set forth in §§ 48.11 -48.16 that are applicable to the particular case. Sections 48.11-48.16 address particular situations that constitute good cause on which continuance may be sought, and therefore need only be used when they coincide with the ground or grounds on which a particular request for continuance is based.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form, and in the other forms combined with this form, with the facts of his or her case. For example, if the continuance is sought because of the illness of an expert witness, counsel's argument should focus on the critical points made in the supporting declarations regarding the sudden onset of the expert's illness [see also the form in § 48.13[2][a]], when counsel first learned of the illness, attempts to arrange alternatives, the reasons why those alternatives will not suffice, and the speed with which counsel informed opposing counsel of the need for continuance and filed the motion for continuance.

It is also advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, or by affidavits or declarations. Although the requirement for affidavits or declarations may be waived by the trial court, for instance in a situation involving emergency or surprise [see, e.g., McCown v. Spencer (1970) 8 Cal. App. 3d 216, 228, 87 Cal. Rptr. 213 ; Larson v. Solbakken (1963) 221 Cal. App. 2d 410, 430, 34 Cal. Rptr. 450] , counsel must make a sufficiently detailed factual showing to support the motion for continuance; generalizations are not sufficient [see, e.g., Watson v. Columbia Basin Dev. Co. (1913) 22 Cal. App. 556, 559, 135 P. 511] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits "upon a motion"), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Points and Authorities

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in §§ 48.30 and 48.31 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities set out in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Good Cause

The dates for assigned for trial are firm, and all parties and their counsel must regard the date set for trial as certain [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(a)].

A party seeking a continuance of the date set for trial, whether contested or uncontested or stipulated to by the parties, must make the request for a continuance by a noticed motion or an ex parte application under Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1200 et seq., with supporting declarations; and the party must make the motion or application as soon as reasonably practical once the necessity for the continuance is discovered [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(b)].

Although continuances of trials are disfavored, each request for a continuance must be considered on its own merits, and the court may grant a continuance only upon an affirmative showing of good cause requiring the continuance [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(c)]. Circumstances that may indicate good cause include [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(c)]:

- The unavailability of an essential lay or expert witness because of death, illness, or other excusable circumstances;

- The unavailability of a party because of death, illness, or other excusable circumstances;

- The unavailability of trial counsel because of death, illness, or other excusable circumstances;

- The substitution of trial counsel, but only where there is an affirmative showing that the substitution is required in the interests of justice;

- The addition of a new party if:

- the new party has not had a reasonable opportunity to conduct discovery and prepare for trial, or
- the other parties have not had a reasonable opportunity to conduct discovery and prepare for trial in regard to the new party's involvement in the case;
- A party's excused inability to obtain essential testimony, documents, or other material evidence despite diligent efforts; or
- A significant, unanticipated change in the status of the case as a result of which the case is not ready for trial.

In ruling on a motion or application for continuance, the court must consider all the facts and circumstances that are relevant to the determination, which may include [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(d)]:

- The proximity of the trial date;
- Whether there was any previous continuance, extension of time, or delay of trial due to any party;
- The length of the continuance requested;
- The availability of alternative means to address the problem that gave rise to the motion or application for a continuance;
- The prejudice that parties or witnesses will suffer as a result of the continuance;
- If the case is entitled to a preferential trial setting, the reasons for that status and whether the need for a continuance outweighs the need to avoid delay;
- The court's calendar and the impact of granting a continuance on other pending trials;
- Whether trial counsel is engaged in another trial;
- Whether all parties have stipulated to a continuance;
- Whether the interests of justice are best served by a continuance, by the trial of the matter, or by imposing conditions on the continuance; and
- Any other fact or circumstance relevant to the fair determination of the motion or application.

[b] Significant, Unanticipated Change in Case Status Constitutes Good Cause for Continuance

The circumstances that may indicate good cause for a continuance include a significant, unanticipated change in the status of the case as a result of which the case is not ready for trial (Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(c)(7)).

[c] Continuance Sought as Soon as Reasonably Practical

A party seeking a continuance of the date set for trial, whether contested or uncontested or stipulated to by the parties, must make the motion or application as soon as reasonably practical once the necessity for the continuance is discovered (Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(b)).

[d] Opportunity for Full Presentation

In Cadle Co. v. WorldWide Hospitality Furniture (2006) 144 Cal. App. 4th 504, 50 Cal. Rptr. 3d 480 , plaintiff filed a motion to preclude the defendant corporation from presenting a defense, based on evidence that its corporate powers had been suspended. The trial court granted them motion. After judgment, the corporation obtained a revival of its corporate powers. The court of appeal found the trial court abused its discretion in entering judgment against the corporation because a brief trial continuance would have permitted the corporation to restore its good standing and defend the action (144 Cal. App. 4th 504, 513-515) .

In re Dolly A. (1986) 177 Cal. App. 3d 195, 222 Cal. Rptr. 741 , was a child dependency matter. The father, who had been accused of sexually molesting his daughter and was facing criminal charges in another court, was denied a continuance. After a hearing in which the father had not testified out of fear that his testimony would be tantamount to giving a "deposition" with respect to his pending criminal charges, the court made a finding of dependency. The father appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the finding of dependency, reasoning that proceeding with the dependency hearing forced the father to elect between giving up his right to testify in that hearing and his right not to be "deposed" as a criminal defendant. The court noted that there was an absence of any factors under Welf. & Inst. Code § 352(a) that might otherwise negate granting a continuance. It found that the risk of possible injury to the minor's interests was relatively slight in granting a continuance, whereas the infringement on the father's rights was a clear and serious danger (177 Cal. App. 3d 195, 199, 201) .

In Cohen v. Herbert (1960) 186 Cal. App. 2d 488, 8 Cal. Rptr. 922 , plaintiffs filed an action for appointment of a receiver of defendants' card club in which plaintiffs had an interest as limited partners. After approximately one month had elapsed, the trial court issued an order to show cause why a receiver should not be appointed and scheduled a hearing on the order in 14 days hence. At the hearing which was held on a Monday, both defendants requested a continuance of one week. Counsel for one defendant stated that he had been employed after previous counsel was forced to withdraw because of a conflict of interest and that although he had diligently sought copies of all papers and motions, plaintiffs' attorney was not able to provide complete copies. Counsel did not receive a full set of case papers until the Friday before the Monday hearing date. Moreover, on Friday night and Sunday, he was compelled to attend a mandatory army reserve meeting and thus had only one day to prepare the case and insufficient time to familiarize himself with 70 pages of case papers and to confer with his client.

Counsel for a second defendant stated that although his client had received copies of all case papers three days after the order to show cause had issued, counsel did not receive them until the Wednesday before the Monday hearing date and had not had time to confer with his client. Counsel also argued that because defendants had operated the card club for 10 years and showed a profit for the current period, plaintiffs would not be prejudiced by a brief delay. The court denied both motions for continuance, heard arguments of counsel on the order to show cause, and later that day appointed a receiver. Defendants appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the order appointing a receiver. It pointed out that while the trial court has wide discretion in acting on a motion for continuance, it may not exercise its discretion arbitrarily. If denial of the continuance results in possible or probable prejudice, one may deduce that the order was not made in the exercise of sound discretion, and denial of a continuance which has the practical effect of denying the applicant a fair hearing is often held to be reversible error. In this case, the record failed to show a lack of diligence or good faith on the defendants' part. There was no showing that plaintiffs would be prejudiced in any way by a continuance of one week since more than a month and a half had already elapsed since the filing of the complaint. Further, the power to appoint a receiver is a delicate one which should be exercised with caution to avoid injury to the parties or their property (186 Cal. App. 2d 488, 494) .

4-48 California Points & Authorities § 48.11

§ 48.11 Written Stipulation for Continuance

[1] FORM Written Stipulation for Continuance

[This form should be combined with a general memorandum supporting a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance (see § 48.10) or included in an appellate brief.]

A CONTINUANCE SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE THE ATTORNEYS OF RECORD FOR ALL PARTIES WHO HAVE APPEARED AGREE TO A CONTINUANCE.

A. Written Stipulation for Continuance. In all cases, the court shall postpone a trial, [or the hearing of any motion or demurrer], for a period not to exceed thirty [30] days, when all attorneys of record of parties who have appeared in the action agree in writing to the continuance (Code Civ. Proc. § 595.2).

[2] Comments

This form may be submitted in support of a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(b), (d)(9)]. when attorneys for all parties who have appeared in the action have agreed in writing to a continuance of 30 days or less [Code Civ. Proc. § 595.2].

Despite its mandatory language, Code Civ. Proc. § 595.2 is directory only [see Lorraine v. McComb (1934) 220 Cal. 753, 755-757, 32 P.2d 960 ; Pham v. Thi Nguyen (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 11, 15-17, 62 Cal. Rptr. 2d 422 (stipulation presented four days before trial), discussed in § 48.34[3]]. Therefore, counsel should make out as full a case for continuance aside from the stipulation as possible, by combining this form with the authorities in § 48.10 and with any other authority in the forms set forth in §§ 48.12 -48.17 that is applicable to the particular case.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form, and in the other forms combined with this form, with the facts of his or her case. For example, if the stipulated continuance is sought because of the illness of an expert witness, counsel's argument should focus on the critical points made in the supporting declarations regarding the sudden onset of the expert's illness, when counsel first learned of the illness, attempts to arrange alternatives, the reasons why those alternatives will not suffice, and the speed with which counsel informed opposing counsel of the need for continuance, obtained the stipulation for continuance, and filed the motion for continuance.

It is also advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, or by affidavits or declarations. The affirmative showing of good cause required for continuance is generally made by supporting declarations submitted along with the noticed motion or ex parte application and the memorandum [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(b)]. Although the requirement for affidavits or declarations may be waived by the trial court, for instance in a situation involving emergency or surprise [see, e.g., McCown v. Spencer (1970) 8 Cal. App. 3d 216, 228, 87 Cal. Rptr. 213 ; Larson v. Solbakken (1963) 221 Cal. App. 2d 410, 430, 34 Cal. Rptr. 450] , counsel must make a sufficiently detailed factual showing to support the motion for continuance; generalizations are not sufficient [see, e.g., Watson v. Columbia Basin Dev. Co. (1913) 22 Cal. App. 556, 559, 135 P. 511] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits "upon a motion"), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. [a] FORM Party's Unavoidable Absence Constitutes Good Cause for Continuance

[This form should be combined with a general memorandum supporting a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance (see § 48.10) or included in an appellate brief.]

A CONTINUANCE SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE _____ [name party, e.g., PLAINTIFF'S or DEFENDANT'S] _____ [ILLNESS or DEATH or EXCUSABLE CIRCUMSTANCES] CONSTITUTES GOOD CAUSE FOR CONTINUANCE

A. Party's Unavoidable Absence When Party's Presence Is Necessary. When a party is unavoidably absent and that party's presence is necessary to the conduct of the case, a continuance should be granted (Morehouse v. Morehouse (1902) 136 Cal. 332, 334, 68 P. 976 ; see also Muller v. Tanner (1969) 2 Cal. App. 3d 445, 457, 82 Cal. Rptr. 738).

B. Party's Illness, Death, or Excusable Circumstances. A party's unavailability because of death, illness, or other excusable circumstances should be considered good cause for a continuance of a trial date (Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(c)(2); Morehouse v. Morehouse (1902) 136 Cal. 332, 334, 68 P. 976 ; Jaffe v. Lilienthal (1894) 101 Cal. 175, 176-177, 35 P. 636).

[Optional] C. [Optional] D. Party Is Necessary Witness. When a party is unavoidably absent and that party is required as a witness, a continuance should be granted (Betts Spring Co. v. Jardine Mach. Co. (1914) 23 Cal. App. 705, 706-707, 139 P. 657).

[b] Comments

[i] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be combined with the form at § 48.10[1] and submitted in support of a noticed motion or ex parte application for continuance [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(b), (c)(2)], when a party's illness prevents his or her attendance at trial or renders him or her unable to help counsel prepare for trial. The authorities in this form should also be combined with all of the forms set forth in §§ 48.13 -48.17 that are applicable to the particular case, i.e., that address the particular ground or grounds of good cause on which continuance is sought.

Optional Paragraphs C and D of this form are for use to anticipate the objection that deposing the absent party is desirable to continuance and to emphasize that the ill party is a necessary witness.

Because the party's illness may be insufficient grounds for continuance if other witnesses are available or someone else can aid and advise counsel, counsel should use optional Paragraph D, or another authority from the form in [2], below, to establish the necessity for the party's presence. When the ill party is a necessary witness, counsel may also wish to consider adding authorities from the forms in § 48.13 that address absence of witnesses and expanding argument to address that need.

[ii] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form, and in the other forms combined with this form, with the facts of his or her case. For example, if the continuance is sought because of a party's illness, counsel's argument should focus on the critical points made in the supporting declarations regarding the sudden onset of the party's illness, when counsel first learned of the illness, attempts to arrange alternatives, the reasons why those alternatives will not suffice, and the speed with which counsel informed opposing counsel of the need for continuance and filed the motion for continuance.

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits "upon a motion"), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. [iii] Related Points and Authoritites

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[iv] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in § 48.35[1] -[4], and if the party is also needed as a witness, the points and authorities in § 48.36[1] -[7], may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities set out in this form.

[c] Discussion of Authorities

[i] Party's Unavoidable Absence When Party's Presence Is Necessary

In Morehouse v. Morehouse (1902) 136 Cal. 332, 68 P. 976 , decedent's widow sued defendant, the decedent's brother, to quiet title to land that defendant claimed he and decedent had purchased jointly. The trial court, after granting defendant several continuances because of a serious accident defendant had suffered, refused an additional continuance and held a trial at which judgment was rendered for plaintiff. Defendant appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed, acting in part because of the trial court's failure to grant defendant an additional continuance. The Court noted that while the physician's affidavit showed the impracticability of defendant's attendance, the nature and circumstances of the case, as well as counsel's affidavit, showed the necessity of his appearance (136 Cal. 332, 334) .

In Muller v. Tanner (1969) 2 Cal. App. 3d 445, 82 Cal. Rptr. 738 , plaintiff sued defendant attorney for malpractice. Defendant filed a notice of motion to declare plaintiff a vexatious litigant and for security [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 391-391.6]. Six days before the hearing on defendant's motion, plaintiff filed a notice of motion for a continuance because on the date of the hearing, his presence was required in a different superior court. Three days later, the trial court offered to grant plaintiff a continuance if plaintiff would waive his objection to the timeliness of defendant's motion for security. Plaintiff refused and subsequently, the trial court entered a judgment of dismissal for failure to furnish security. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed and ordered a new hearing on the motion to declare plaintiff a vexatious litigant because the factual showing made was inadequate to entitle defendant to an order for security. In discussing the trial court's denial of plaintiff's motion for a continuance, the court of appeal stated as the applicable principle that it is an abuse of discretion to deny a timely request for a continuance made on the ground of unavoidable absence if the party's presence is necessary for the proper prosecution of the matter before the court (2 Cal. App. 3d 445, 457) . However, the trial court's denial of a continuance was not reversed because the record of the hearing on plaintiff's motion for a continuance was incomplete and plaintiff had rejected the conditional continuance offered to him (2 Cal. App. 3d 445, 458) .

[ii] Party's Unavailability Due to Illness, Death, or Excusable Circumstances

Morehouse v. Morehouse (1902) 136 Cal. 332, 68 P. 976 , is discussed at [i], above. In reversing, the Supreme Court relied in part on the distinction in Jaffe v. Lilienthal (1894) 101 Cal. 175, 177, 35 P. 636 [discussed below], that a party might waive the right to be present at the trial by a voluntary absence under circumstances in which reasonable people would not absent themselves (136 Cal. 332, 334) .

Jaffe v. Lilienthal (1894) 101 Cal. 175, 35 P. 636 , was an action, the nature of which is undescribed in the report, against an administrator. On the day of trial, plaintiff's attorney requested a continuance for the reason that plaintiff, who resided out of state, was prevented from attending the trial by an attack of acute rheumatism which rendered him wholly unable to move or leave his room. In addition, plaintiff's presence was indispensable because he was the only person who knew the whereabouts of the witnesses and the matters to which they would testify. The trial court denied the motion and subsequently entered judgment for defendant. Defendant appealed.

On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, reasoning that although the right of an absent party to attend the trial may be voluntarily waived, it was not waived in this case, and the party's attendance was required. The court rejected defendant's contention that plaintiff had not been diligent in preparing for trial with the statement that it appeared that if plaintiff had not been ill, he could have prepared for trial (101 Cal. 175, 176-177) .

[iii] Continuance Granted When Party Unavailable for Deposition

Morehouse v. Morehouse (1902) 136 Cal. 332, 68 P. 976 , discussed at [i], above, involved the trial court's denial of a continuance to a defendant who had been in an accident. In reversing, the Supreme Court noted that the affidavit submitted on defendant's behalf stated that in addition to being unable to attend trial, at no time since the accident had defendant's physical or mental condition permitted his taking a deposition and that it would be extremely dangerous to his health to take his deposition (136 Cal. 332, 334) .

Betts Spring Co. v. Jardine Mach. Co. (1914) 23 Cal. App. 705, 139 P. 657 , is discussed in [iv], below. The court of appeal, in holding that defendant, who was the only witness on his own behalf, should have been granted a continuance, apparently considered defendant to be unavailable as a practical matter for deposition because he was in Europe recuperating from a stroke (23 Cal. App. 705, 706-707) .

[iv] Party Is Necessary Witness

In Betts Spring Co. v. Jardine Mach. Co. (1914) 23 Cal. App. 705, 139 P. 657 , defendant suffered a stroke of apoplexy three months before the trial and on physician's advice traveled to Europe to recover. On the day of the trial, defendant's counsel moved for a continuance and submitted an affidavit stating the reason for defendant's absence and that defendant was the only witness on the matters in his defense. The trial court denied the motion and entered judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court found that defendant acted in good faith, he was his only witness, and plaintiff did not show injury or prejudice from delay. Although the case had been pending for two years, that delay could not be attributed to defendant (23 Cal. App. 705, 706-707) .

[2] Economic Necessity

[a] FORM Party's Unavoidable Absence Constitutes Good Cause for Continuance

[This form should be combined with a general memorandum of points and authorities supporting a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance (see § 48.10) or included in an appellate brief.]

A CONTINUANCE SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE ECONOMIC NECESSITY REQUIRING _____ [name party, e.g., PLAINTIFF'S or DEFENDANT'S] ABSENCE CONSTITUTES GOOD CAUSE FOR CONTINUANCE.

A. Economic Necessity. A party's absence is sufficient cause for continuance if the party's attendance at trial would result in serious economic loss to his or her business affairs (Ferrari v. Mambretti (1945) 70 Cal. App. 2d 492, 494, 161 P.2d 275 ; see also Wilkinson v. Parrott (1867) 32 Cal. 102, 103) .

[Optional] B. Party Required to Assist Counsel. When a party is unavoidably absent and that party's knowledge of facts, witnesses' names, or testimony is needed to assist counsel, the continuance should be granted (Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. v. Taylor (1921) 52 Cal. App. 307, 308, 198 P. 651).

[Optional] C. Unique Knowledge of Facts. When a party is unavoidably absent and possessed with a unique knowledge of facts which cannot be adequately communicated to counsel in advance, a continuance should be granted (Jaffe v. Lilienthal (1894) 101 Cal. 175, 176-177, 35 P. 636 ; Carl v. Thomas (1931) 116 Cal. App. 294, 298, 2 P.2d 872).

[Optional] D. Party's Inability to Consult With Counsel. When a party is unavoidably absent and, for the same reason, unable to consult with counsel before trial, a continuance should be granted (Estate of Stevens (1922) 57 Cal. App. 160, 161, 206 P. 668).

[i] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be combined with the form at § 48.10[1] and submitted in support of a noticed motion or ex parte application for continuance [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(b)], when a party would incur economic hardship if forced to attend trial on the date scheduled. The authorities in this form should also be combined with all of the forms set forth in §§ 48.13 -48.17 that are applicable to the particular case, i.e., that address the particular ground or grounds of good cause on which continuance is sought.

Because a party's absence due to economic hardship is insufficient grounds for continuance if other witnesses are available or someone else can aid and advise counsel [see e.g., § 48.35[4]], counsel should use optional Paragraphs B, C, or D, or optional Paragraph D from the form in [1], above, to establish the necessity for the party's presence.

[ii] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form, and in the other forms combined with this form, with the facts of his or her case. For example, if the continuance is sought because the party's presence at trial on the scheduled date will cause him or her economic hardship, counsel's argument should focus on the critical points made in the court's file and in supporting declarations regarding the substantial hardship involved for the party to attend on the scheduled date, when counsel first learned of the problem, what alternatives, if any, were considered and why they would not be sufficient, and the speed with which counsel informed opposing counsel of the need for continuance and filed the motion for continuance.

It is also advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, or by affidavits or declarations. The affirmative showing of good cause required for continuance is generally made by supporting declarations submitted along with the noticed motion or ex parte application and the memorandum [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(b)]. Although the requirement for affidavits or declarations may be waived by the trial court, for instance in a situation involving emergency or surprise [see, e.g., McCown v. Spencer (1970) 8 Cal. App. 3d 216, 228, 87 Cal. Rptr. 213 ; Larson v. Solbakken (1963) 221 Cal. App. 2d 410, 430, 34 Cal. Rptr. 450] , counsel must make a sufficiently detailed factual showing to support the motion for continuance; generalizations are not sufficient [see, e.g., Watson v. Columbia Basin Dev. Co. (1913) 22 Cal. App. 556, 559, 135 P. 511] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits "upon a motion"), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[iv] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in § 48.35[1], [3], [4] may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities set out in this form.

[c] Discussion of Authorities

[i] Economic Necessity

Ferrari v. Mambretti (1945) 70 Cal. App. 2d 492, 161 P.2d 275 , involved a retrial of an action for reasonable value of services performed brought against the administratrix of an estate after a previous judgment for plaintiff had been reversed. Six days before trial was to commence in November, plaintiff moved for a continuance of the trial until January, stating in part that he could not be continuously present at the trial since his business was largely seasonal and given the wartime shortage of help, he would suffer serious economic loss if absent during November and December. The trial court denied the motion and, after plaintiff's counsel refused to proceed, dismissed the action. Plaintiff appealed.

Although the court of appeal affirmed the trial court's action for the reason that plaintiff failed to establish that his presence at trial was necessary, it conceded the sufficiency of plaintiff's showing that economic necessity prevented his attendance at the time scheduled for trial (70 Cal. App. 2d 492, 494) .

In Wilkinson v. Parrott (1867) 32 Cal. 102 , plaintiff sued defendant for personal injuries which resulted when defendant's dog bit plaintiff's daughter. On the day of trial, defendant's counsel moved to postpone the trial for three days because defendant had left the state on important private business and the case could not be tried without his attendance. The trial court denied the motion; ultimately, the jury rendered a verdict for plaintiff. Defendant appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed, stating that the refusal of the trial court to postpone the trial was not an abuse of discretion because defendant failed to show that the business activities were very important, required his personal attention, and could not be delayed for a few days (32 Cal. 102, 103) .

[ii] Party Required to Assist Counsel

In Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. v. Taylor (1921) 52 Cal. App. 307, 198 P. 651 , plaintiff brought an action in condemnation against defendants. At the trial, defendants made no showing on their behalf and the jury awarded them only $51.50 as damages for condemnation despite the fact that their answer claimed $63,000 in damages. Defendants appealed on the ground that the trial court should have granted their motion for a continuance based on one defendant's absence.

The court of appeal agreed and reversed. The court found that, first, defendant's presence at the trial was essential. Counsel's affidavit stated that defendant was the only person familiar with the property, the facts constituting the defense, and the whereabouts of witnesses. Counsel was totally unprepared in these matters. Second, it found that defendant's absence was unavoidable and that he showed no lack of diligence. When defendant left the state on business, the case had not been set for trial, and if he had not become seriously ill in Boston, he would have had sufficient time to return. (The court excused the fact that illness was established by telegram rather than by affidavit). Previous to this, both parties had been expeditious in preparing the case for trial. Third, the court found that under these circumstances denial of the motion prejudiced defendants' substantial rights. Eminent domain cases, in particular, require that the landowner should receive every legal consideration in showing the extent of the damage that will be suffered (52 Cal. App. 307, 308) .

[iii] Unique Knowledge of Facts

The factual background of Jaffe v. Lilienthal (1894) 101 Cal. 175, 35 P. 636 , is discussed in [1][c][ii], above. In this case, the Supreme Court reversed the trial court's denial of a continuance to an absent party, describing why, in some situations, advance preparation of counsel is not a substitute for the party's presence. The Court reasoned that even when a party is disqualified as a witness, it seldom happens that a trial can be properly had in the absence of the plaintiff, especially when it is to be tried on oral testimony. Despite careful preparation, some matter of vital importance is liable to be overlooked until the trial calls it to the party's recollection, and this is especially true in relationship to matters purely in rebuttal (101 Cal. 175, 176-177) .

In Carl v. Thomas (1931) 116 Cal. App. 294, 2 P.2d 872 , plaintiffs filed an action to quiet title to property and to cancel defendant's interest in a deed in which both plaintiffs and defendant appeared as grantees on the ground that defendant's interest had been obtained by fraud and deceit; Defendant, who was in the coast guard in New York State notified his attorney that he could obtain a leave in April to attend the trial. A trial date was set in April, but defendant did not appear, and his attorney's request for a continuance was denied. Later, it was determined that defendant did not receive his attorney's notification of the trial date although the letter, sent in an envelope with return address and request for return if not delivered, was not returned to counsel. Subsequently, the trial court, after denying defendant's motions for continuances on other grounds, rendered a judgment for plaintiffs. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed solely because the trial court had clearly abused its discretion in denying defendant's several motions for continuances. Although today, it would likely require more than a single unanswered letter to establish a diligent effort to notify the party of a trial date [see Young v. Redman (1976) 55 Cal. App. 3d 827, 831-832, 128 Cal. Rptr. 86 , discussed in § 48.31[1][c][i]], the court of appeal in Carl found that both defendant and his counsel had made an effort to procure defendant's attendance and that neither was at fault for defendant's failure to appear. Defendant was the only person other than plaintiffs who had personal knowledge of many of the important issues to be decided by the court and was the only person who could have corrected plaintiffs' testimony if in error. Even an admission by plaintiffs' counsel that defendant if present would have testified contrary to plaintiffs' testimony could not substitute for defendant's attendance. Further, there was no showing of prejudice to the plaintiffs by the one-month continuance (116 Cal. App. 294, 298) . The court did not require defendant to show the impossibility of preparing counsel in advance; but said that, given the nature of the subject matter, it would have been difficult for the party to have adequately prepared counsel to rebut plaintiffs' misstatements (116 Cal. App. 294, 298) [but see Foster v. Hudson (1939) 33 Cal. App. 2d 705, 707-708, 92 P.2d 959 , discussed in § 48.35[3][c][ii], which required a showing that the absent party could not have advised counsel in advance].

[iv] Inability to Consult With Counsel

In Estate of Stevens (1922) 57 Cal. App. 160, 206 P. 668 , two of the three parties contesting a will in probate proceedings in California were ill at their homes in New York; their mother, a material witness, also resided in New York. Three days before the trial was to begin, the attorney for the absent contestants filed a motion for continuance to take their depositions. This motion was heard on the day of trial when the executor's witnesses and a jury were already in attendance. The trial court denied the motion and, when contestants refused to proceed, dismissed the contest. The contestants appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, finding that the grounds for continuance were sufficient. The affidavit describing the parties' illnesses was not controverted and their attorney had never had an opportunity to confer with them. Because counsel filed the motion for a continuance within three days after learning about the illnesses, there was no lack of diligence (57 Cal. App. 160, 161) .

[3] Party Is Member of Legislature

[This form should be combined with a general memorandum of points and authorities supporting a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance (see § 48.10) or included in an appellate brief.]

A CONTINUANCE SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE _____ [name party, e.g., PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] IS A MEMBER OF THE LEGISLATURE, WHICH WILL BE IN SESSION AT THE TIME NOW SET FOR TRIAL.

A. Party Is Member of Legislature. The trial of any civil action shall be postponed to a date certain when it appears to the court before which the action is pending that a party to the action is a Member of the California Legislature and that the Legislature is in session or in a recess not exceeding forty (40) days, [or that a legislative interim committee of which the party is a duly appointed member is meeting, or is to meet within a period which the court finds does not exceed the time reasonably necessary to enable the member to reach the committee meeting by the ordinary mode of travel] (Code Civ. Proc. § 595).

B. Length of Postponement. When the Legislature is in session or in a recess not exceeding forty (40) days, that action [or proceeding] shall not, without the consent of the attorney of record therein be brought for trial [or hearing] before the expiration of thirty (30) days next following final adjournment of the Legislature or commencement of a recess of more than forty days. If a date is available during recess, continuance shall be given if possible to that earlier date (Code Civ. Proc. § 595).

[Optional] C. Postponement Due to Legislative Committee Meeting. When a legislative committee is meeting or is to meet within a period which the court finds does not exceed the time reasonably necessary to enable the member to reach the committee meeting by the ordinary mode of travel, the action [or proceeding] shall not, without the consent of the attorney of record therein, be brought for trial [or hearing] before the expiration of the period following the adjournment or recess of the committee meeting as the court finds is reasonably necessary to allow the member to reach the place of trial [or hearing] by the ordinary mode of travel from the place of the committee meeting, unless at the expiration of that period the Legislature is to be in session, and in that case the action [or proceeding] shall not, without such consent, be brought for trial [or hearing] the expiration of thirty (30) days next following final adjournment or a recess of more than forty (40) days. [If a date is available during recess, continuance shall be given to that earlier date] (Code Civ. Proc. § 595).

D. When Continuance Is Mandatory. Granting of a continuance pursuant to this section is mandatory unless the court determines that a continuance would defeat or abridge a right to relief pendente lite in a paternity action or a right to invoke a provisional remedy such as pendente lite support in a domestic relations controversy, attachment and sale of perishable goods, receivership of a failing business, and temporary restraining order or preliminary injunction, and that the continuance should not be granted (Code Civ. Proc. § 595).

[i] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be combined with the form at § 48.10[1] and submitted in support of a noticed motion or ex parte application for continuance [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(b)], when a party is a member of the California Legislature and the Legislature is in session, or in recess for less than forty days, or when a committee of which the party is a member is in session or scheduled for session. There are exceptions noted in Paragraph D.

The authorities in this form should also be combined with all of the forms set forth in §§ 48.13 -48.17 that are applicable to the particular case, i.e., that address the particular ground or grounds of good cause on which continuance is sought.

[ii] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form, and in the other forms combined with this form, with the facts of his or her case. For example, if the continuance is sought because the party's presence at trial on the scheduled date conflicts with his or her Legislative duties, counsel's argument should focus on the critical points made in the court's file and in supporting declarations regarding the Legislative schedule, the travel modes and times involved, if any, the fact that none of the exceptions is applicable, why it is necessary for the party to attend the trial, when counsel first learned of the problem, what alternatives, if any, were considered and why they would not be sufficient, and the speed with which counsel informed opposing counsel of the need for continuance and filed the motion for continuance.

It is also advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, or by affidavits or declarations. The affirmative showing of good cause required for continuance is generally made by supporting declarations submitted along with the noticed motion or ex parte application and the memorandum [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(b)]. Although the requirement for affidavits or declarations may be waived by the trial court, for instance in a situation involving emergency or surprise [see, e.g., McCown v. Spencer (1970) 8 Cal. App. 3d 216, 228, 87 Cal. Rptr. 213 ; Larson v. Solbakken (1963) 221 Cal. App. 2d 410, 430, 34 Cal. Rptr. 450] , counsel must make a sufficiently detailed factual showing to support the motion for continuance; generalizations are not sufficient [see, e.g., Watson v. Columbia Basin Dev. Co. (1913) 22 Cal. App. 556, 559, 135 P. 511] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits "upon a motion"), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [*see Code Civ. [iii] Related Points and Authorities

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[c] Discussion of Authorities

[i] Party Is Member of Legislature

Code Civ. Proc. § 595 applies not only to a trial of any civil action, but also to a proceeding in a court, or of any administrative proceeding before a state board or commission or officer, irrespective of the date of the filing of the matter or when it became at issue, or the hearing of any motion, demurrer, or other proceeding. In those situations, the determination is made by the board, commission, or officer before which the action or proceeding is pending [Code Civ. Proc. § 595].

[ii] Length of Postponement

Any postponement granted under the provisions set forth in Paragraphs B and C of the form in [a], above, suspends for the same period of time as the postponement, the running of any period of time for any ruling or proceeding by a court, board, commission, or officer, or for the performance by any party or any act affected by the postponement [Code Civ.

Proc. § 595].

[iii] When Postponement Is Mandatory

For discussion of Thurmond v. Superior Court (1967) 66 Cal. 2d 836, 838-840, 59 Cal. Rptr. 273, 427 P.2d 985 , the case that led to the amendment of Code Civ. Proc. § 595 to state that postponement is mandatory except in the situations listed, see § 48.30[3][a].

[4] Party Is in Military Service

[a] FORM Party's Unavoidable Absence Constitutes Good Cause for Continuance

[This form should be combined with a general memorandum of points and authorities supporting a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance (see § 48.10) or included in an appellate brief.]

[EITHER, if seeking a continuance under the Servicemembers Civil Relief Act (50 U.S.C. App., § 501 et seq.)]

A CONTINUANCE SHOULD BE GRANTED TO AN ABSENT PARTY IN MILITARY SERVICE.

[OR, if seeking a continuance under Mil. & Vet. Code § 400 et seq.]

A CONTINUANCE SHOULD BE GRANTED TO AN ABSENT PARTY IN MILITARY SERVICE UNLESS THE ABILITY OF THE PARTY TO _____ [PROSECUTE OR DEFEND] IS NOT MATERIALLY AFFECTED BY THE PARTY'S MILITARY SERVICE.

A. Statutory Basis. The Servicemembers Civil Relief Act (formerly, the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act) (50 U.S.C. App., § 501 et seq.) provides that in any action or proceeding in which a person in the military service is involved, the court is required to grant a stay of proceedings for a minimum period of 90 days (50 U.S.C. App., §§ 521, 522.). The stay is not discretionary, but is automatic under the Servicemembers Civil Relief Act; and the servicemember need not show that his or her ability to defend the action is "materially affected" by military service.

If the defendant in any action does not make an appearance and it appears that the defendant is in military service, an attorney is appointed for the defendant. The stay will be granted upon motion of the attorney or upon the court's own motion, if the court determines that: (1) there may be a defense to the action and a defense cannot be presented without the presence of the servicemember/defendant; or (2) after due diligence, counsel has been unable to contact the servicemember/defendant or otherwise determine if a meritorious defense exists (50 U.S.C. App., § 521).

If the defendant is in military service, or within 90 days after release from military service, and has received notice of an action or proceeding, the court must stay the action for a minimum of 90 days upon application of the servicemember or upon the court's own motion. The application from the servicemember must consist of a letter or other communication stating why the servicemember is unable to appear and when the servicemember will be able to appear and include a letter or other communication from the servicemember's commanding officer stating that the servicemember is unable to appear (50 U.S.C. App., § 522).

California statutes also protect service members that are officers and enlisted members of the National Guard called or ordered into active state service by the Governor or President, and Reservists of the United States Military Reserve who have been called to full-time active duty (Mil. & Vet. Code § 400 et seq.). The stay is not automatic under California law. Under the state statutes, at any stage in any action or proceeding in which a service member is involved, either as plaintiff or defendant, during the period of military service or within 60 days thereafter, the court may, in its discretion on its own motion, and must, on application to it by the service member or some person on his/her behalf, stay the action or proceeding unless, in the opinion of the court, the ability of the _____ [plaintiff to prosecute the action or defendant to conduct his/her defense] is not materially affected by reason of his/her military service (Mil. & Vet. Code § 403(a)). Any stay of any action may be ordered for the period of military service and three months thereafter or any part of that period, and subject to those terms as may be just; and if the service member is a codefendant with others the plaintiff may nevertheless, by leave of court, proceed against the others (see Mil. & Vet. Code § 403(d)).

B. Automatic Stay under Federal Law. To protect military servicemember's rights, the Servicemembers Civil Relief Act grants an automatic 90 day stay in civil proceedings (50 U.S.C. App., §§ 521, 522). The stay is not discretionary, but is automatic; and the servicemember need not show that his or her ability to defend the action is "materially affected" by military service.

If no appearance by the defendant in the action has been made, and an attorney has been appointed for the defendant who appears to be in the military, the court must grant a 90 day stay if it appears that there may be a defense to the action that cannot be presented without the presence of the servicemember or the counsel has not been able to locate the servicemember to determine if a defense exists (50 U.S.C. App., § 521).

If a servicemember has received notice of an action or proceeding, the court must grant a 90 day stay if it receives a letter or other communication from the servicemember and the commanding officer stating that the servicemember cannot appear, when he or she will be available to appear, and that he or she is not authorized for leave (50 U.S.C. App., § 522).

While the initial 90-day stay is essentially automatic, the granting of an additional stay is discretionary. A request for an additional stay may be denied if the servicemember's ability to appear and participate in the civil action is not adversely affected by his or her military duties (see George P. v. Superior Court (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 216, 225-226, 24 Cal. Rptr. 3d 919).

C. Under State Statutes, Burden of Persuasion Is on Party Resisting Continuance. A request for a stay under Section 403 of the Military and Veterans Code should be granted if, in the opinion of the court, the ability of the plaintiff to prosecute the action or the defendant to conduct his or her defense is not materially affected by reason of his or her military service; and the burden of persuading the court to the contrary is on the party resisting the continuance (see Chaffey v. Chaffey (1963) 59 Cal. 2d 792, 797, 31 Cal. Rptr. 325, 382 P.2d 365).

D. Under State Statutes, Showing Required Is Less Than Required for Regular Continuance. A request for a stay under Section 403 of the Military and Veterans Code requires less of a showing than that required from a litigant requesting a continuance independently of the act (see Miller v. Miller (1945) 26 Cal. 2d 119, 125, 156 P.2d 931).

[i] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be combined with the form at § 48.10[1] and submitted in support of a noticed motion or ex parte application for continuance [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(b)], when a party's absence is due to his or her military service. The authorities in this form should also be combined with all of the forms set forth in §§ 48.13 -48.17 that are applicable to the particular case, i.e., that address the particular ground or grounds of good cause on which continuance is sought.

To establish the disadvantage at which the party in military service is placed for actions under Mil. & Vet. Code § 400 et seq., counsel may wish add as many as are applicable of the authorities from Paragraph D. of the form in [1][a], above, or from Paragraphs B, C, or D of the form in [2][a], above.

[ii] Argument

It is also advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, or by affidavits or declarations. The affirmative showing of good cause required for continuance is generally made by supporting declarations submitted along with the noticed motion or ex parte application and the memorandum [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(b)]. Although the requirement for affidavits or declarations may be waived by the trial court, for instance in a situation involving emergency or surprise [see, e.g., McCown v. Spencer (1970) 8 Cal. Rptr. 450] , counsel must make a sufficiently detailed factual showing to support the motion for continuance; generalizations are not sufficient [see, e.g., Watson v. Columbia Basin Dev. Co. (1913) 22 Cal. App. 556, 559, 135 P. 511] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits "upon a motion"), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [*see Code Civ. The points and authorities in § 48.35[5] may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities set out in this form.

[c] Discussion of Authorities

[i] Automatic Stay Under Federal Law

In George P. v. Superior Court (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 216, 24 Cal. Rptr. 3d 919 , a request for an additional stay under the federal Servicemembers Civil Relief Act [50 U.S.C. App. § 501 et seq.] was denied. During the course of a juvenile dependency proceeding regarding custody of a minor child, the father, a member of the National Guard, was sent to Iraq. The father was granted an initial 90-day stay by the juvenile court. He later filed a motion for an additional stay on the ground that his military service prevented him from making further appearances in the case. The juvenile court denied the father's motion for an additional stay finding that the father had been given "more than a fair opportunity" to participate in the proceedings. The father then filed an extraordinary writ of review of that denial.

The father argued that the juvenile court erred in denying his request for an additional stay. The father argued that stays are mandatory under the Servicemembers Civil Relief Act. The court of appeal disagreed. While the initial 90-day stay is essentially automatic, the granting of an additional stay is discretionary. A request for an additional stay may be denied if the servicemember's ability to appear and participate in the civil action is not adversely affected by his or her military duties. In this instance, the court held that the father's military service did not adversely affect his participation in the case. The record demonstrated that the father had appeared in the action and received services for reunification with his child for essentially the entire period required by law. The father had also made a personal appearance during a leave of absence from the military and had already provided necessary testimony. Furthermore, the father had been represented by counsel at all times and had been able to communicate with social services staff and counsel while he was in Iraq. In this particular instance, the court opined that the father had already been given a full and fair opportunity to reunify with his child and that any additional stay was merely delaying the inevitable. Accordingly, the juvenile court did not abuse its discretion in denying the stay (127 Cal. App. 4th 216, 225-226) .

[ii] Under State Statutes, Burden of Persuasion is on Party Resisting Continuance

Note:

The Servicemembers Civil Relief Act, enacted in 2003 and replacing the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act, significantly changed the federal law to make the granting of initial stays essentially automatic. While the initial 90-day stay is automatic, the granting of an additional stay is discretionary. The case referenced below also may be useful in supporting a motion for a continuance brought under the Military and Veterans Code, which was patterned after the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act, and requires the servicemember to make a prima facie showing that his or her ability to prosecute or defend is materially affected by reason of military service [see Mil. & Vet. Code § 403].

In Chaffey v. Chaffey (1963) 59 Cal. 2d 792, 31 Cal. Rptr. 325, 382 P.2d 365 , plaintiff, the defendant's former spouse, filed action to obtain custody of their children on the day before defendant was to leave California for Guam under military orders. On the next day, defendant was served with an order to show cause and a restriction on taking the children with him to Guam. Subsequently, on the day of the hearing, defendant's counsel requested a stay under former § 521 of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act (now, the Servicemembers Civil Relief Act) because defendant was still stationed in Guam and could not attend the hearing. The trial court stated that the defendant's violation of the court order by taking the children from California disqualified him from requesting a stay of proceedings. The court then held the hearing and transferred custody from defendant to plaintiff. Defendant appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed because of the trial court's denial of the request for a stay of proceedings without a full hearing on the matter. The Court stated that although the trial court has the discretion to deny a stay, it does not have discretion to deny a full hearing on the issue because if defendant can make a prima facie showing, a postponement, in the absence of evidence by the adverse party, is mandatory (59 Cal. 2d 792, 797) . Relying on Pacific Greyhound Lines v. Superior Court (1946) 28 Cal. 2d 61, 67, 168 P.2d 665 , the Court held that once the party requesting the stay had made a prima facie showing for relief, the burden of persuasion, if not proof, is on the party resisting the postponement to show that the moving party's ability to prosecute or defend is not materially affected by reason of military service (59 Cal. 2d 792, 797) .

[iii] Under State Statutes, Showing Required Is Less Than Required for Regular Continuance

Note:

The Servicemembers Civil Relief Act, enacted in 2003 and replacing the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act, significantly changed the federal law to make the granting of initial stays essentially automatic. While the initial 90-day stay is automatic, the granting of an additional stay is discretionary. The case referenced below also may be useful in supporting a motion for a continuance brought under the Military and Veterans Code, which was patterned after the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act, and requires the servicemember to make a prima facie showing that his or her ability to prosecute or defend is materially affected by reason of military service [see Mil. & Vet. Code § 403].

Miller v. Miller (1945) 26 Cal. 2d 119, 156 P.2d 931 , involved a divorce conflict between the parties. In 1941, plaintiff procured an interlocutory decree of divorce from defendant. In 1943, defendant procured entry of the final decree on presentation of an affidavit averring that he had fully complied with the provisions of the interlocutory decree and was not in default. Six months later, plaintiff moved to set aside the final decree on the ground that it had been procured by fraud because, contrary to his affidavit, defendant had been in default. At the hearing on plaintiff's motion, defendant's counsel submitted a petition signed by defendant's mother in which she alleged that defendant was then in the army, stationed in Mississippi, and requested a stay under former § 521 of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act [50 U.S.C. App. § 501 et seq.]. The trial court denied this motion and a subsequent motion for a three-week continuance made on grounds which were independent of the federal act; it then granted plaintiff's motion to set aside the final decree, and defendant appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that both decisions of the trial court were within its discretionary authority. However, the Court stated that when the trial court had approved the denial of a stay under the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act, it could logically approve the denial of the second request because the showing that one in the military service is required to make under the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act is much less than that required from a litigant requesting a limited continuance independently of the act (26 Cal. 2d 119, 125) .

A. SUPPORTING CONTINUANCE

4-48 California Points & Authorities § 48.13

§ 48.13 Witness's Absence Constitutes Good Cause for Continuance

[1] Materiality of Witness's Evidence

[a] FORM Witness's Absence Constitutes Good Cause for Continuance

[This form should be combined with a general memorandum of points and authorities supporting a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance (see § 48.10) or included in an appellate brief.]

THE COURT SHOULD GRANT THE CONTINUANCE TO PERMIT _____ [name of absent witness] TO TESTIFY, BECAUSE HIS/HER EXPECTED TESTIMONY IS MATERIAL AND _____ [specify moving party, e.g., PLAINTIFF] HAS ATTEMPTED DILIGENTLY TO PROCURE THAT TESTIMONY.

A. Materiality and Diligence. A motion to postpone a trial on the ground of the absence of evidence can only be made on affidavit showing the evidence expected to be obtained is material and that due diligence has been used to procure it. Thus, when the party requesting a continuance to obtain the testimony of an absent witness has attempted diligently to procure the testimony and the expected testimony is material, a continuance is justified (Code Civ. Proc. § 595.4; Jurado v. Toys "R" Us, Inc. (1993) 12 Cal. App. 4th 1615, 1618, 16 Cal. Rptr. 2d 158 ; see also Larson v. Solbakken (1963) 221 Cal. App. 2d 410, 428-430, 34 Cal. Rptr. 450).

B. Avoidance of Subpoena or Disregard of Agreement to Appear. The unavailability of a witness, should, under normal circumstances, be considered good cause for granting the continuance of a trial date only if the witness has been subpoenaed, or is beyond the reach of subpoena and has agreed to be present, and that witness's absence is due to unavoidable emergency that counsel did not know and could not reasonably have known at the time of the pretrial or trial setting conference (Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(c)(1), (7); Jurado v. Toys "R" Us, Inc. (1993) 12 Cal. App. 4th 1615, 1618, 16 Cal. Rptr. 2d 158 ; see Kramer v. Kramer (1961) 197 Cal. App. 2d 727, 731, 17 Cal. Rptr. 461 (upholding denial of continuance when witness had not been subpoenaed)).

[Optional] C. Sole Method of Proof Supports Finding of Materiality. The fact that an absent witness and expected testimony has not been and cannot be established in any other manner supports a finding that the testimony is material (Oak Knoll Broadcasting Corp. v. Hudgings (1969) 275 Cal. App. 2d 563, 566, 80 Cal. Rptr. 175 ; Gibson v. Cobb (1965) 236 Cal. App. 2d 226, 237, 46 Cal. Rptr. 57).

[Optional] D. Important Evidence Is Material. The fact that the expected testimony is important in determining a close question of fact presented by the case supports a finding of materiality, even though it is not the sole evidence supporting the same conclusion (Murr v. Murr (1948) 87 Cal. App. 2d 511, 521-522, 197 P.2d 369).

[Optional] E. Affidavit May Be Waived. If a party requesting a continuance to obtain the testimony of an absent witness has acted with diligence in attempting to procure that testimony and the expected testimony is material, a continuance is justified even though the request is not supported by affidavit, but, rather, by other proof in open court (Larson v. Solbakken (1963) 221 Cal. App. 2d 410, 430, 34 Cal. Rptr. 450).

[i] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be combined with the form at § 48.10[1] and submitted in support of a noticed motion or ex parte application for continuance [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(b)], when a witness whose testimony is material is unavoidably absent [see Code Civ. Proc. § 595.4]. Materiality alone is insufficient grounds for continuance. Counsel must also have been diligent in attempting to arrange for that witness to testify (Paragraph B) The authorities in this form should also be combined with all of the forms set forth in §§ 48.13 -48.17 that are applicable to the particular case, i.e., that address the particular ground or grounds of good cause on which continuance is sought.

Optional Paragraphs C and D are intended for use to demonstrate how the absent witness's testimony is material; and Optional Paragraph E is for use in the surprise situation when a witness does not appear as planned during trial and counsel must move for continuance at that point.

[ii] Argument

It is also advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, or by affidavits or declarations. The affirmative showing of good cause required for continuance is generally made by supporting declarations submitted along with the noticed motion or ex parte application and the memorandum [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(b)]. Although the requirement for affidavits or declarations may be waived by the trial court, for instance in a situation involving emergency or surprise [see, e.g., McCown v. Spencer (1970) 8 Cal. App. 3d 216, 228, 87 Cal. Rptr. 213 ; Larson v. Solbakken (1963) 221 Cal. App. 2d 410, 430, 34 Cal. Rptr. 450] , counsel must make a sufficiently detailed factual showing to support the motion for continuance; generalizations are not sufficient [see, e.g., Watson v. Columbia Basin Dev. Co. (1913) 22 Cal. App. 556, 559, 135 P. 511] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits "upon a motion"), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[iv] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in § 48.36[1] -[7] may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities set out in this form.

[c] Discussion of Authorities

[i] Materiality and Diligence

Code Civ. Proc. § 595.4 also provides that when a request for continuance is made on the ground of the absence of a material witness, the court may require the moving party to state on affidavit the expected evidence; and, if the adverse party admits that the evidence would be given and that it be considered as actually given in the trial, or offered and overruled as improper, the trial must not be postponed. This aspect of Code Civ. Proc. § 595.4 is addressed in the form in § 48.36[7].

In Jurado v. Toys "R" Us, Inc. (1993) 12 Cal. App. 4th 1615, 16 Cal. Rptr. 2d 158 , the plaintiff filed an action for personal injuries. Plaintiff had successfully moved for a four-month continuance of trial on the ground that her treating physician had taken an "unexpected vacation" and was unavailable. Plaintiff obtained a new treating physician and had subpoenas served on both physicians to appear on the new trial date. In following up on the subpoenas, plaintiff's counsel learned the first physician moved without leaving a forwarding address, and the second physician was in Europe on the trial date. Plaintiff moved for continuance on the ground that plaintiff could not proceed without a medical witness. The trial court denied the continuance and granted defendant's motion for dismissal.

The appellate court reversed, holding that the request for a continuance because of the unavailability of a material witness was proper, and denial of the continuance was an abuse of discretion because less drastic means to redress the situation than dismissal, such as continuance until the witness's attendance could be compelled by body attachment, were available (12 Cal. App. 4th 1615, 1620) .

In Larson v. Solbakken (1963) 221 Cal. App. 2d 410, 34 Cal. Rptr. 450 , plaintiff sued defendant for damages for personal injuries arising out of a collision between automobiles driven by the two parties. During the fourth day of trial, a Friday, defendant successfully moved for a continuance until the following Monday in order to call a witness who actually saw the accident and was returning to the state that weekend. Defendant's previous attempts to locate this witness had been discussed in court. The jury returned a verdict in favor of defendant, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. On appeal, plaintiff argued that defendant had failed to show materiality and diligence in an affidavit and thus court had committed prejudicial error in granting the continuance. In rejecting this argument, the court stated that based on the showing made, the trial court did not abuse its discretion, finding that plaintiff was not prejudiced by the continuance because the trial, in any event, could not have been concluded on that day (221 Cal. App. 2d 410, 428-430) .

[ii] Avoidance of Subpoena or Disregard of Agreement to Appear

The factual and procedural background of Jurado v. Toys "R" Us, Inc. (1993) 12 Cal. App. 4th 1615, 16 Cal. Rptr. 2d 158 , are discussed in [i], above. Plaintiff had subpoenaed two medical witness, both of whom absented themselves at the time set for trial. After denying a continuance, the trial court dismissed plaintiff's case; and plaintiff appealed. In reversing, the court of appeal held that the failure of both witnesses to respect the subpoenas constituted an affirmative showing of good cause sufficient to justify continuance under the standards set forth in Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 375(a) [see now Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(c)] (12 Cal. App. 4th 1615, 1618) .

In Kramer v. Kramer (1961) 197 Cal. App. 2d 727, 17 Cal. Rptr. 461 , plaintiff filed an affidavit to obtain a writ of execution on a judgment against defendant, her former spouse, to collect money owed for child support. After the trial court issued the writ for over $7,000, defendant moved to quash the writ on the ground that, although he had not paid in cash the payments specified in plaintiff's affidavit, he had conveyed property to plaintiff as prepayment of the monthly payments. As part of the evidence heard by the trial court on this issue, plaintiff testified that she had sold the property and given defendant a check for $10,000. When defendant denied receiving this check, plaintiff's counsel asked for a continuance of 15 minutes to produce a rebuttal witness who was already in the downtown area. Stating that it should not have to wait during the noon hour for a witness to arrive, the trial court denied the motion and subsequently issued an order quashing the writ of execution. Plaintiff appealed, contending, in part, that the trial court erred in denying her motion for a continuance.

The court of appeal, in affirming, stated only that the witness had not been subpoenaed and it did not appear that the trial court had abused its discretion (197 Cal. App. 2d 727, 731) .

[iii] Sole Method of Proof Supports Finding of Materiality

In Oak Knoll Broadcasting Corp. v. Hudgings (1969) 275 Cal. App. 2d 563, 80 Cal. Rptr. 175 , plaintiff had levied a claim against funds deposited by defendant in a savings and loan association. Defendant's spouse filed a third party claim under Code Civ. Proc. § 689, declaring the funds to be community property and not liable for the contracts of the wife after marriage. On the day of the hearing to determine title to the funds, plaintiff's attorney, after learning from the keeper of records at the savings and loan association that the records would not be ready until later in the week, requested a continuance. His motion was denied and judgment given subsequently for defendant. Plaintiff appealed, arguing that the trial court abused its discretion in denying the motion for continuance.

The court of appeal affirmed. In supporting its conclusion that the trial court had not abused its discretion when it denied plaintiff's motion for continuance to procure the absent witness, the court of appeal stated that when a continuance is requested because of the absence of a material witness, there must be a showing that the facts expected to be established by the witness cannot otherwise be proven. No such showing was made in this case (275 Cal. App. 2d 563, 566) .

In Gibson v. Cobb (1965) 236 Cal. App. 2d 226, 46 Cal. Rptr. 57 , plaintiff landowner brought a quiet title action against defendants, owners of property adjacent to plaintiff's land. Near the close of trial, defendants requested a four-day continuance to call an absent witness and filed a supporting affidavit. The trial court characterized the testimony which defendants expected from the absent witness as not material, already testified to, and cumulative. After denying the request for a continuance, the trial court rendered a judgment for plaintiff. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. In addition to the defendants' lack of diligence, the court of appeal concluded that the deficiency in the expected testimony provided adequate reason to affirm the trial court's decision to deny the continuance (236 Cal. App. 2d 226, 237) .

[iv] Important Evidence Is Material

In Murr v. Murr (1948) 87 Cal. App. 2d 511, 197 P.2d 369 , plaintiff initiated an action for divorce against his wife, alleging that she had given birth to an illegitimate child during their marriage. Defendant filed a cross complaint for divorce and the trial court granted her an interlocutory decree of divorce on her cross complaint, finding that she had not given birth to an illegitimate child. One of defendant's witnesses was a physician who provided medical attention to her and delivered the baby. Because of the physician-client privilege, plaintiff's attorney did not interview the doctor prior to trial, but after the physician had testified and before the case was scheduled for decision, he asked the physician to search for a missing record which would show when defendant first consulted him concerning her pregnancy. This record, turned over to plaintiff's attorney on the day that defendant finished her testimony, showed that defendant became pregnant while plaintiff was away in the navy. Plaintiff's attorney moved for a continuance to recall the physician; the trial court denied the motion, reasoning that plaintiff's counsel should have been aware of this information when the physician testified the first time. Judgment was for defendant, and plaintiff appealed.

In reversing, the court of appeal did not consider whether or not plaintiff had been diligent, nor did the court apply the rule that evidence is not material unless it cannot be proven in other ways, because other, less persuasive, evidence had been submitted to show that defendant may have gotten pregnant before plaintiff returned home. Instead, the court of appeal held that the continuance should have been granted because the proposed testimony was very material in that it would help determine a close question of fact presented by the case (87 Cal. App. 2d 511, 521-522) .

[v] Affidavit May Be Waived

The factual background of Larson v. Solbakken (1963) 221 Cal. App. 2d 410, 34 Cal. Rptr. 450 , is discussed under [i], above. In that case, defendant's counsel successfully moved for a continuance in open court because of an absent witness, and on appeal, plaintiff objected that the motion had not been supported by affidavit. In affirming, the court of appeal held that the requirement of an affidavit in former Code Civ. Proc. § 595 [now Code Civ. Proc. § 595.4] was not jurisdictional and could be excused by the trial court. Furthermore, a showing for a continuance may be made not only by affidavit but also by other proof pursuant to a motion in open court (221 Cal. App. 2d 410, 430) .

[d] Additional Authorities

[i] Sole Method of Proof Supports Finding of Materiality

People ex. rel. Dep't of Public Works v. Busick (1968) 259 Cal. App. 2d 744, 66 Cal. Rptr. 532 , was a proceeding in eminent domain to acquire defendants' property for highway purposes. After granting defendants' counsel's motions for two continuances, the trial court refused to grant a third. Judgment was entered for plaintiff, and defendant appealed. The court of appeal, in affirming, pointed out that it is reversible error and an abuse of discretion not to grant a motion for continuance for an absent, material witness, especially when that witness is the only person who can establish essential facts, citing Betts Spring Co. v. Jardine Mach. Co. (1914) 23 Cal. App. 705, 139 P. 657 [discussed in § 48.12[1][c][iv]], when the absent witness was also the party and the only witness on all matters in his defense. The court concluded, however, that the rule could not be applied in this case because the parties were voluntarily absent, diligence was not employed in arranging for real estate appraisers, and some of the testimony of missing witnesses could have been covered by other witnesses (259 Cal. App. 2d 744, 749-750) .

[ii] Affidavit May Be Waived

In Taylor v. Bell (1971) 21 Cal. App. 3d 1002, 98 Cal. Rptr. 855 , decedent's executor brought an action to collect on promissory notes signed by defendant. At the trial on June 6, defendant called as a witness decedent's son who had been subpoenaed but was out of the state due to employment commitments. The court offered defendant a continuance but she not take it. On July 12, after both parties had rested, the court on its own motion set the cause for further hearing, first on July 18 and then on August 28, to obtain the testimony of the decedent's absent son. Defendant, on July 18, excused one of her witnesses who would be out of the country on August 28. After the court held her liable on the promissory notes, defendant contended on appeal that the continuance from July 18 to August 28 had denied her right to proceed under appropriate provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure including Code Civ. Proc. § 595.4, which states that motions for continuance to produce an absent witness should be supported by affidavit. The court of appeal questioned the applicability of Code Civ. Proc. § 595.4 because the continuance was not for the adverse party's benefit--the absent witness had been called originally by defendant--but nevertheless pointed out the rule that the requirement of an affidavit under Section 595.4 is not jurisdictional in nature and may be excused by the trial court in its discretion, and other proof, including oral representations of counsel, in open court is adequate (21 Cal. App. 3d 1002, 1008) .

[2] Witness's Unavailability Due to Illness, Death, or Excusable Circumstances

[a] FORM Witness's Absence Constitutes Good Cause for Continuance

[This form should be combined with a general memorandum of points and authorities supporting a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance (see § 48.10) or included in an appellate brief .]

THE COURT SHOULD GRANT THE CONTINUANCE TO PERMIT _____ [name of absent witness] TO TESTIFY, BECAUSE HIS/HER EXPECTED TESTIMONY IS MATERIAL AND HIS/HER _____ [ILLNESS or DEATH or EXCUSABLE CIRCUMSTANCE] PROVIDES GOOD CAUSE FOR CONTINUANCE.

A. Essential Lay Witness. The unavailability of an essential lay witness because of death, illness, or excusable circumstances is considered good cause for granting the continuance of a trial date (Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(c)(1)).

[AND/OR]

B. Essential Expert Witness. The unavailability of an essential expert witness because of death, illness, or excusable circumstances is considered good cause for granting the continuance of a trial date (Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(c)(1)).

[b] Comments

[i] Use of Form

The appropriate paragraph from this form of points and authorities may be combined with the forms at § 48.10[1] and in [1][a], above (regarding materiality of the evidence the witness is expected to present and whether the witness was subpoenaed or had agreed to appear), and submitted in support of a motion for continuance [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(b)] when a witness whose testimony is material and whose presence counsel has diligently sought to provide is unavoidably absent due to illness, death, or excusable circumstances [see Code Civ. Proc. § 595.4].

The authorities in this form should also be combined with all of the forms set forth in §§ 48.13 -48.17 that are applicable to the particular case, i.e., that address the particular ground or grounds of good cause on which continuance is sought.

[ii] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form, and in the other forms combined with this form, with the facts of his or her case. For example, if the continuance is sought because of the illness of an expert witness, counsel's argument should focus on the critical points made in the court's file and in supporting declarations regarding the fact that the witness had been subpoenaed or had agreed to testify, why it is necessary for this particular expert witness to testify, when counsel first learned that the witness was ill, what alternatives, if any, were considered and why they would not be sufficient, and the speed with which counsel informed opposing counsel of the need for continuance and filed the motion for continuance.

It is also advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, or by affidavits or declarations. The affirmative showing of good cause required for continuance is generally made by supporting declarations submitted along with the noticed motion or ex parte application and the memorandum [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(b)]. Although the requirement for affidavits or declarations may be waived by the trial court, for instance in a situation involving emergency or surprise [see, e.g., McCown v. Spencer (1970) 8 Cal. App. 3d 216, 228, 87 Cal. Rptr. 213 ; Larson v. Solbakken (1963) 221 Cal. App. 2d 410, 430, 34 Cal. Rptr. 450] , counsel must make a sufficiently detailed factual showing to support the motion for continuance; generalizations are not sufficient [see, e.g., Watson v. Columbia Basin Dev. Co. (1913) 22 Cal. App. 556, 559, 135 P. 511] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits "upon a motion"), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[iv] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in § 48.36[1] -[7] may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities set out in this form.

[3] Principal Witness Is Member of Legislature

[a] FORM Witness's Absence Constitutes Good Cause for Continuance

[This form should be combined with a general memorandum supporting a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance (see § 48.10) or included in an appellate brief].

A CONTINUANCE SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE _____ [name of absent witness], WHO IS INTENDED BY _____ [name party, e.g., PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] TO BE HIS/HER PRINCIPAL WITNESS, IS A MEMBER OF THE LEGISLATURE, WHICH WILL BE IN SESSION AT THE TIME NOW SET FOR TRIAL.

A. Principal Witness Is Member of Legislature. The trial of any civil action shall be postponed to a date certain when it appears to the court before which the action is pending that a principal witness in the action is a Member of the California Legislature and that the Legislature is in session or in a recess not exceeding forty (40) days, [or that a legislative interim committee of which the party is a duly appointed member is meeting, or is to meet within a period which the court finds does not exceed the time reasonably necessary to enable the member to reach the committee meeting by the ordinary mode of travel] (Code Civ. Proc. § 595).

B. Length of Postponement. [See § 48.12[3], Paragraph B.]

[Optional] C. Postponement Due to Legislative Committee Meeting. [See § 48.12[3], Paragraph C.]

D. When Continuance Is Mandatory. [See § 48.12[3], Paragraph D.]

[i] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be combined with the forms at § 48.10[1] and in [1][a], above (regarding materiality of the evidence the witness is expected to present and whether the witness was subpoenaed or had agreed to appear), and submitted in support of a noticed motion or ex parte application and the memorandum [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(b)], when a principal witness is a member of the California Legislature and the Legislature is in session, or in recess for less than forty days, or when a committee of which the principal witness is a member is in session or scheduled for session. There are exceptions noted in Paragraph D.

Counsel should also combine the authorities in this form with those in any form set forth in §§ 48.13 -48.17 that are applicable to the particular case, i.e., that address the particular ground or grounds of good cause existing in his or her particular case.

[ii] Argument

It is also advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, or by affidavits or declarations. The affirmative showing of good cause required for continuance is generally made by supporting declarations submitted along with the noticed motion or ex parte application and the memorandum [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(b)]. Although the requirement for affidavits or declarations may be waived by the trial court, for instance in a situation involving emergency or surprise [see, e.g., McCown v. Spencer (1970) 8 Cal. App. 3d 216, 228, 87 Cal. Rptr. 213 ; Larson v. Solbakken (1963) 221 Cal. App. 2d 410, 430, 34 Cal. Rptr. 450] , counsel must make a sufficiently detailed factual showing to support the motion for continuance; generalizations are not sufficient [see, e.g., Watson v. Columbia Basin Dev. Co. (1913) 22 Cal. App. 556, 559, 135 P. 511] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits "upon a motion"), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice

(Matthew Bender).

[iv] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in § 48.36[1] -[7] may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities set out in this form.

[c] Discussion of Authorities

[i] Principal Witness Is Member of Legislature

Code Civ. Proc. § 595 applies not only to a trial of any civil action, but also to a proceeding in a court, or of any administrative proceeding before a state board or commission or officer, irrespective of the date of the filing thereof or when it became at issue, or the hearing of any motion, demurrer, or other proceeding. In those situations, the determination is made by the board, commission, or officer before which the action or proceeding is pending [Code Civ. Proc. § 595].

[4] Surprise Is Basis for Continuance

[a] FORM Witness's Absence Constitutes Good Cause for Continuance

[This form should be combined with a general memorandum supporting a motion for a continuance (see § 48.10) or included in an appellate brief.]

A CONTINUANCE SHOULD BE GRANTED TO PERMIT AN ABSENT WITNESS TO TESTIFY WHEN EVENTS OCCUR AT TRIAL WHICH COULD NOT HAVE BEEN ANTICIPATED AND REQUIRE THE PRODUCTION OF NEW MATERIAL EVIDENCE.

A. Surprise Is Basis for Continuance. When events occur at trial which could not have been anticipated and require the production of new material evidence, a continuance should be granted (Crosby v. Martinez (1958) 159 Cal. App. 2d 534, 541-542, 324 P.2d 26).

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form, and in the other forms combined with this form, with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel's argument should focus on the critical points made in the court's file and in supporting declarations regarding the events that occurred during trial to require the new material evidence, why counsel was not likely to have anticipated those events, when the trial attorney first became aware of the problem, and the speed with which the attorney informed opposing counsel of the need for continuance and filed the motion for continuance.

It is also advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [*see Evid. [iv] Opposing Points and Authorities

[c] Discussion of Authorities

[i] Surprise Is Basis for Continuance

In Crosby v. Martinez (1958) 159 Cal. App. 2d 534, 324 P.2d 26 , plaintiffs sued defendants for damages for personal injuries arising from a collision between automobiles driven by two of the parties. On the last morning of the trial, defendants' attorney elicited from a witness a statement attributed to another person, Harris, who saw the accident. The statement corroborated defendants' claim that plaintiffs had run a red light. Plaintiff's counsel requested a short continuance to bring in Harris to testify, but the trial court rejected the motion stating that plaintiffs' counsel had said previously he would not be calling Harris as a witness. Plaintiffs' counsel responded that when he made that statement he did not know that statement attributed to Harris would be admitted into evidence. The jury returned a verdict for defendants on which the trial court entered judgment. Plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that the continuance should have been granted. Although the court did not specifically state that it was applying any particular rule to show that plaintiffs had been diligent, it characterized the statement attributed to Harris as unadulterated, erroneously admitted hearsay which plaintiffs' counsel had no reason to anticipate and prepare for. Because counsel was doubtlessly surprised and became aware for the first time of the need to produce the witness, he was entitled to a short continuance (159 Cal. App. 2d 534, 541-542) .

PART II. FORMS
A. SUPPORTING CONTINUANCE

4-48 California Points & Authorities § 48.14

§ 48.14 Attorney's Absence Constitutes Good Cause for Continuance

[1] Representation Not Available

[a] FORM Attorney's Absence Constitutes Good Cause for Continuance

[This form should be combined with a general memorandum of points and authorities supporting a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance (see § 48.10) or included in an appellate brief.]

A CONTINUANCE SHOULD BE GRANTED TO PERMIT A PARTY TO OBTAIN LEGAL REPRESENTATION IF THE PARTY HAS BEEN DILIGENT BUT THAT PARTY'S ATTORNEY IS UNJUSTIFIABLY ABSENT ON THE DAY OF TRIAL.

A. Attorney Unjustifiably Absent. If a party requesting a continuance has made diligent and reasonable attempts to obtain alternative representation, but through no fault of that party, the party's [previous] attorney is unjustifiably absent on the day of trial, a continuance should be granted (Thompson v. Thornton (1871) 41 Cal. 626, 629 ; Vann v. Shilleh (1975) 54 Cal. App. 3d 192, 197-199, 126 Cal. Rptr. 401).

[Optional] B. Substitution of Trial Attorney. The substitution of the trial attorney should, under normal circumstances, be considered good cause for granting the continuance of a trial date only when there is an affirmative showing that the substitution is required in the interests of justice (see San Bernardino County v. Doria Mining & Eng'r Corp. (1977) 72 Cal. App. 3d 776, 783-784, 140 Cal. Rptr. 383).

[b] Comments

[i] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be combined with the form at § 48.10[1] and submitted in support of a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(b)]. Paragraph A is for use when, despite the party's diligence, the party's attorney is absent without justification or without a reason for his or her absence that is considered good cause under Code Civ. Proc. § 595 or [see forms in [2][a], [4][a], [5][a], [6][a], and [7][a], below]. Paragraph B may be used when a substitution of attorneys was required in the interest of justice. The apparent conflict between the cases in Paragraph A and that in Paragraph B seems to indicate that the real criteria is not whether the attorney's absence was voluntary or unavoidable, justified or unjustified, but whether the party was diligent in attempting to find other counsel. Thus, cases generally deny a continuance when counsel has put other activities above the client's business and there is no showing that the client had objected or made efforts to find alternative representation [see Mann v. Pacific Greyhound Lines (1949) 92 Cal. App. 2d 439, 446, 207 P.2d 105 , discussed in § 48.37[4][c][i]].

The authorities in this form should also be combined with all those in any form set forth in §§ 48.11 -48.17 that are applicable to the particular case, i.e., that address the particular ground or grounds of good cause existing in his or her particular case.

[ii] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form, and in the other forms combined with this form, with the facts of his or her case. For example, argument should focus on the critical points made in the court's file and in supporting declarations regarding the reason for the attorney's absence, the party's attempts to obtain other counsel, when previous counsel withdrew or when the party first learned its attorney of record would not appear at the trial, and the speed with which opposing counsel was informed of the need for continuance and the motion for continuance was filed.

It is also advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, or by affidavits or declarations. The affirmative showing of good cause required for continuance is generally made by supporting declarations submitted along with the noticed motion or ex parte application and the memorandum [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(b)]. Although the requirement for affidavits or declarations may be waived by the trial court, for instance in a situation involving emergency or surprise [see, e.g., McCown v. Spencer (1970) 8 Cal. App. 3d 216, 228, 87 Cal. Rptr. 213 ; Larson v. Solbakken (1963) 221 Cal. App. 2d 410, 430, 34 Cal. Rptr. 450] , counsel must make a sufficiently detailed factual showing to support the motion for continuance; generalizations are not sufficient [see, e.g., Watson v. Columbia Basin Dev. Co. (1913) 22 Cal. App. 556, 559, 135 P. 511] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits "upon a motion"), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[iv] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in § 48.37[1] -[4] may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities set out in this form.

[c] Discussion of Authorities

[i] Attorney Unjustifiably Absent

In Thompson v. Thornton (1871) 41 Cal. 626 , an action for ejectment, defendants learned on the day of trial that their attorney was told by a physician not to leave two members of his family who were sick. After an unsuccessful search to find new counsel, defendants requested a continuance so they could obtain new counsel. The trial court denied the request and, after defendants went to trial without benefit of counsel, rendered a judgment against them. Defendants appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed the trial court's denial of the continuance. Defendants had shown no lack of diligence and, except for the illness in their attorney's family, they were ready to go to trial. The Court stated that under these circumstances, defendants were entitled to some time to allow another attorney to become familiar with the case and thus, should have been granted opportunity to find new counsel (41 Cal. 626, 629) .

In Vann v. Shilleh (1975) 54 Cal. App. 3d 192, 126 Cal. Rptr. 401 , plaintiffs sued defendants for breach of contract. Three days before the trial, when settlement negotiations broke down, the trial court permitted defendants' counsel to withdraw from the case. On the day of trial, the trial court denied defendants' motion for a continuance to obtain a new attorney. Defendants appeared during the trial in propria persona and, after a judgment was entered for plaintiff, filed an appeal, claiming that the court should have granted their request for a continuance.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that defendants had not acted improperly. The record did not support the allegation that defendants were dilatory in their rejection of the negotiated settlement, but, rather, their attorney's withdrawal was improper. Thus, it was the duty of the trial court to protect defendants, as far as possible, from their attorney's improper abandonment (54 Cal. App. 3d 192, 197-199) .

[ii] Substitution of Trial Attorney

San Bernardino County v. Doria Mining & Eng'r Corp. (1977) 72 Cal. App. 3d 776, 140 Cal. Rptr. 383 , was a suit by the county to recover unpaid delinquent property taxes on mining claims. On the date set for trial, an attorney who was not defendant's attorney of record appeared on behalf of defendant and requested a continuance. The motion was denied and the attorney departed. The court then heard the county's evidence and, no evidence being presented on defendant's behalf, ruled in favor of the county. Defendant appealed, contending that the denial of the motion for continuance was an abuse of discretion.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court of appeal noted that there was no noticed motion, only an oral request made on the date set for trial. Nor was the motion made "promptly upon the necessity for the continuance being ascertained," as the problem had been apparent for over a week, though there was no showing when the attorney of record informed the defendant that he wished to withdraw. Thus, the court could not determine whether defendant used due diligence to obtain a new attorney. There was no showing that the substitution was necessary, i.e., that the attorney of record was unable or absolutely unwilling to represent defendant. The court then cited Vann v. Shilleh (1975) 54 Cal. App. 3d 192, 197, 126 Cal. Rptr. 401 , for the proposition that an attorney's withdrawal from a case on the eve of trial may constitute a violation of professional ethics. Indeed, at the time of the motion, there had been no substitution, so the motion was premised on a hypothetical rather than an actual dilemma. The court concluded its consideration of this issue by noting that, although under former Cal. Rules of Ct., Appen., Div. I, § 9(4) lists substitution of attorneys as a ground for continuance, the standard for continuance, that substitution is a ground for continuance "only when there is an affirmative showing that the substitution is required in the interests of justice," was not met in this case (72 Cal. App. 3d 776, 783-784) . The court also noted the quoted portion of former Cal. Rules of Ct., Appen., Div. I, § 9(4) was supported by existing case authority, specifically, those cases discussed in § 48.37[1][c][i] (72 Cal. App. 3d 776, 783-784) .

[2] Attorney Is Member of Legislature

[i] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be combined with the form at § 48.10[1] and submitted in support of a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(b)], when any attorney of record in the action is a member of the California Legislature and the Legislature is in session, or in recess for less than forty days, or when a committee of which the attorney is a member is in session or scheduled for session. There are exceptions noted in Paragraph D.

The authorities in this form should also be combined with all those in any form set forth in §§ 48.11 -48.17 that are applicable to the particular case, i.e., that address the particular ground or grounds of good cause existing in his or her particular case.

[ii] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form, and in the other forms combined with this form, with the facts of his or her case. For example, if the continuance is sought because an attorney's presence at trial on the scheduled date conflicts with his or her Legislative duties, counsel's argument should focus on the critical points made in the court's file and in supporting declarations regarding the Legislative schedule, the travel modes and times involved, if any, the fact that none of the exceptions is applicable, why it is necessary for the attorney to attend the trial, when counsel first learned of the problem, what alternatives, if any, were considered and why they would not be sufficient, and the speed with which counsel informed opposing counsel of the need for continuance and filed the motion for continuance.

It is also advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, or by affidavits or declarations. The affirmative showing of good cause required for continuance is generally made by supporting declarations submitted along with the noticed motion or ex parte application and the memorandum [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(b)]. Although the requirement for affidavits or declarations may be waived by the trial court, for instance in a situation involving emergency or surprise [see, e.g., McCown v. Spencer (1970) 8 Cal. App. 3d 216, 228, 87 Cal. Rptr. 213 ; Larson v. Solbakken (1963) 221 Cal. App. 2d 410, 430, 34 Cal. (1913) 22 Cal. App. 556, 559, 135 P. 511] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits "upon a motion"), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [*see Code Civ. For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[iv] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in § 48.37[1] and [3] may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities set out in this form.

[c] Discussion of Authorities

[i] Attorney Is Member of Legislature

Code Civ. Proc. § 595 applies not only to a trial of any civil action, but also to a proceeding in a court, or of any administrative proceeding before a state board or commission or officer, irrespective of the date of the filing thereof or when it became at issue, or the hearing of any motion, demurrer, or other proceeding. In those situations, the determination is made by the board, commission, or officer before which the action or proceeding is pending [Code Civ. Proc. § 595].

Code Civ. Proc. § 595 also applies whether the attorney became an attorney of record in the action before or after commencement of the legislative session or before or after his or her appointment to a legislative committee [Code Civ. Proc. § 595].

[3] Attorney's Inability to Prepare

[a] FORM Attorney's Absence Constitutes Good Cause for Continuance

[This form should be combined with a general memorandum of points and authorities supporting a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance (see § 48.10) or included in an appellate brief.]

A CONTINUANCE SHOULD BE GRANTED TO GIVE COUNSEL TIME TO PREPARE WHEN BOTH THE PARTY AND COUNSEL HAVE BEEN DILIGENT, BUT COUNSEL HAS NOT BEEN ABLE TO PREPARE FULLY FOR TRIAL.

A. Attorney's Inability to Prepare. A continuance should be granted to give counsel time to prepare if the moving party and the attorney have been diligent, but the attorney has not been able to prepare fully for trial (Cohen v. Herbert (1960) 186 Cal. App. 2d 488, 495-496, 8 Cal. Rptr. 922).

[b] Comments

[i] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be combined with the form at § 48.10[1] and submitted in support of a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(b)], when counsel requires additional time to prepare although both counsel and the party he or she represents have been diligent in proceeding with the case.

The authorities in this form should also be combined with all those in any form set forth in §§ 48.11 -48.17 that are applicable to the particular case, i.e., that address the particular ground or grounds of good cause existing in his or her particular case.

[ii] Argument

It is also advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, or by affidavits or declarations. The affirmative showing of good cause required for continuance is generally made by supporting declarations submitted along with the noticed motion or ex parte application and the memorandum [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(b)]. Although the requirement for affidavits or declarations may be waived by the trial court, for instance in a situation involving emergency or surprise [see, e.g., McCown v. Spencer (1970) 8 Cal. Rptr. 450] , counsel must make a sufficiently detailed factual showing to support the motion for continuance; generalizations are not sufficient [see, e.g., Watson v. Columbia Basin Dev. Co. (1913) 22 Cal. App. 556, 559, 135 P. 511] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits "upon a motion"), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [*see Code Civ. [c] Discussion of Authorities

[i] Attorney's Inability to Prepare

The factual and procedural background of Cohen v. Herbert (1960) 186 Cal. App. 2d 488, 8 Cal. Rptr. 922 , is discussed in § 48.10[3][b]. In that case, to explain why he was unprepared, counsel for one defendant stated that he had been employed after previous counsel was forced to withdraw because of a conflict of interest and that although he had diligently sought copies of all papers and motions, plaintiff's attorney was not able to provide complete copies. Counsel did not receive a full set of case papers until the Friday before the Monday hearing date. Moreover, on Friday night and Sunday, he was compelled to attend a mandatory army reserve meeting and thus had only one day to prepare the case. He had not had sufficient time to familiarize himself with 70 pages of case papers and to confer with client. In reversing the trial court's decision to deny defendants a continuance, the court of appeal stated that the record failed to show lack of diligence or good faith on defendant's part (186 Cal. App. 2d 488, 495-496) .

[4] Attorney's Unavailability Due to Illness, Death, or Excusable Circumstances

[a] FORM Attorney's Absence Constitutes Good Cause for Continuance

[This form should be combined with a general memorandum supporting a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance (see § 48.10) or included in an appellate brief].

A CONTINUANCE SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE THE _____ [ILLNESS or DEATH or EXCUSABLE CIRCUMSTANCE] OF _____ [name of attorney], _____ [PLAINTIFF'S or DEFENDANT'S] ATTORNEY, CONSTITUTES GOOD CAUSE FOR CONTINUANCE.

A. Attorney's Unavailability Due to Illness, Death, or Excusable Circumstances. The unavailability of a party's trial counsel because of death, illness, or excusable circumstances should be considered good cause for granting the continuance of a trial date (Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(c)(3); Hernandez v. Superior Court (2004) 115 Cal. App. 4th 1242, 1247, 9 Cal. Rptr. 3d 821 ; Eltzroth v. Ryan (1891) 91 Cal. 584, 588).

[b] Comments

[i] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be combined with the form at § 48.10[1] and submitted in support of a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(b)], when the illness, death, or excusable circumstance of a trial attorney too close to the trial date requires continuance [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(c)(3)].

The authorities in this form should also be combined with all those in any form set forth in §§ 48.11 -48.17 that are applicable to the particular case, i.e., that address the particular ground or grounds of good cause existing in his or her particular case.

[ii] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form, and in the other forms combined with this form, with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel's argument should focus on the critical points made in the court's file and in supporting declarations regarding the onset of the attorney's illness or death too close to trial, the complexity of the case, the unavailability of a substitution of attorney, the expected duration of the illness, and the speed with which counsel informed opposing counsel of the need for continuance and filed the motion for continuance.

It is also advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, or by affidavits or declarations. The affirmative showing of good cause required for continuance is generally made by supporting declarations submitted along with the noticed motion or ex parte application and the memorandum [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(b)]. Although the requirement for affidavits or declarations may be waived by the trial court, for instance in a situation involving emergency or surprise [see, e.g., McCown v. Spencer (1970) 8 Cal. App. 3d 216, 228, 87 Cal. Rptr. 213 ; Larson v. Solbakken (1963) 221 Cal. App. 2d 410, 430, 34 Cal. Rptr. 450] , counsel must make a sufficiently detailed factual showing to support the motion for continuance; generalizations are not sufficient [see, e.g., Watson v. Columbia Basin Dev. Co. (1913) 22 Cal. App. 556, 559, 135 P. 511] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits "upon a motion"), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. [c] Discussion of Authorities

[i] Attorney's Illness

Hernandez v. Superior Court (2004) 115 Cal. App. 4th 1242, 9 Cal. Rptr. 3d 821 , involved a personal injury action where the plaintiff's attorney litigated the action through arbitration and exchanged expert witness lists with the defense, but failed to designate on time an expert for liability purposes. In early September, plaintiff learned of his attorney's illness due to pancreatic cancer. On September 12, 2003, three days before the initial trial date, the trial court heard the plaintiff's ex parte application for a continuance due to attorney illness. The court continued the trial date to December 15, 2003, but the attorney died on September 20, 2003. The plaintiff learned of the attorney's death nine days later, obtained replacement counsel, and filed an ex parte application on October 17, 2003 seeking a continuance and permission to reopen discovery and supplement his expert witness list. At the hearing, the trial court noted that it continued the first trial date for three months due to the attorney's illness and said: "And now a month after he dies, you come in and ask for more time. That could have been done better." Plaintiff explained that he learned of his attorney's death on September 29, 2003, and that he started looking for a new lawyer that day. He denied real party's claims he had "known for months" that Stewart was terminally ill. Real party contended petitioner should not be permitted to supplement his expert witness list because the terminally ill attorney had missed the deadline to do so: "That was his decision as attorney. You can't change that after you die. That will prejudice my client." Without requiring real party to provide any additional explanation of the potential prejudice, the trial court continued the trial date to January 26, 2004, and denied the request to reopen discovery. The trial court apparently did not consider that Rosenberg was unable to start trial on that date, or that petitioner was scheduled for spinal surgery December of 2003.

The reviewing court, on writ of mandate, reversed the trial court citing abuse of discretion and ordered the trial date continued and discovery reopened. The court found that if plaintiff's counsel's serious physical illness and its debilitating effects culminating in death during the final stages of litigation are not good cause for continuing a trial and reopening of discovery, there is no such thing as good cause (115 Cal. App. 4th 1242, 1244) . A plaintiff in a personal injury action is not chargeable with the continued good health of his or her attorney. Forcing such a plaintiff to trial without counsel or adequately prepared counsel is not likely to ensure fairness, the overall policy of the law (115 Cal. App. 4th 1242, 1244) . While the trial court the statutory obligation to enforce discovery cutoff dates and to set firm trial dates, efficiency is not an end in itself. What is required is balance. "While it is true that a trial judge must have control of the courtroom and its calendar and must have discretion to deny a request for a continuance when there is no good cause for granting one, it is equally true that, absent [a lack of diligence or other abusive] circumstances which are not present in this case, a request for a continuance supported by a showing of good cause usually ought to be granted"(115 Cal. App. 4th 1242, 1244). The trial court held petitioner and his prospective new counsel to discovery deadlines that were set before the attorney's death, without any allowance for the fact that his illness affected his trial preparation. The attorney was suffering from pancreatic cancer during the closing phases of discovery. He died 33 days after the last date on which to supplement his expert witness list and only 5 days after the initial trial date. It is possible that the attorney provided effective representation during this crucial phase of the litigation. But common sense and respect for the grim reality of terminal illness make it more likely that, during the waning period of his life, The attorney was not as organized, focused or vigorous an advocate as he had been in healthier times. The fact that he designated no experts on liability issues, even though real party included an accident reconstruction expert on his list, demonstrates the point. would be more plausible if the attorney had been healthy in the weeks leading up to the initial trial date, and then died in an accident or in some other unforeseen manner. But he wasn't healthy. He was dying of pancreatic cancer. We cannot assume that plaintiff's counsel was able to conduct business as usual while in the grip of such a severe illness. The trial court failed to appreciate that this medical condition adversely impacted his trial preparations. Similarly, the defense's assertion that plaintiff was delaying the trial so he could "shop around for attorneys" would make sense if the plaintiff had been dilatory in his search. But he wasn't. He started looking for a new lawyer the very day he learned of his attorney's death, and he filed his ex parte application only 12 business days later. Finally, the plaintiff informed the trial court that the December trial date conflicted with his need to have spinal surgery sometime between December 2003 and February 2004. The trial court's failure to consider petitioner's medical needs in setting the trial date is just one more indication that the trial court's order was an abuse of discretion (115 Cal. App. 4th 1242, 1247).

Eltzroth v. Ryan (1891) 91 Cal. 584, 27 P. 932 , was an action to quiet title. Defendant first learned three days before trial that his attorney was too ill to attend. After an unsuccessful attempt to obtain other counsel, defendant prepared affidavits and employed counsel solely for the purpose of requesting a continuance. The trial court denied continuance, however, because defendant was not willing to pay costs. Defendant appealed from a judgment in favor of plaintiff.

The Supreme Court affirmed. The Court stated as a principle that postponement should be granted if the attorney suddenly becomes ill, but declined to reverse the action of the trial court because of defendant's refusal to pay costs (91 Cal. 584, 588) .

A CONTINUANCE SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE _____ [name of attorney], _____ [PLAINTIFF'S or DEFENANT'S] ATTORNEY, NEEDS TO BE SUBSTITUTED AS TRIAL COUNSEL.

A. Substitution of Trial Counsel. The substitution of trial counsel should be considered good cause for granting the continuance of a trial date when there is an affirmative showing that the substitution is required in the interest of justice (Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(c)(4)).

[b] Comments

[i] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be combined with the form at § 48.10[1] and submitted in support of a motion for continuance [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(b)] when trial counsel substitution is required when there is an affirmative showing that the substitution is required in the interest of justice [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(c)(4)].

The authorities in this form should also be combined with all those in any form set forth in §§ 48.11 -48.17 that are applicable to the particular case, i.e., that address the particular ground or grounds of good cause existing in his or her particular case.

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form, and in the other forms combined with this form, with the facts of his or her case. For example, argument should focus on the critical points made in the court's file and in supporting declarations regarding the reason for the attorney's substitution is and why the substitution is required in the interests of justice.

It is also advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, or by affidavits or declarations. The affirmative showing of good cause required for continuance is generally made by supporting declarations submitted along with the notice motion or ex parte application for continuance and the points and authorities [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(b)]. Although the requirement for affidavits or declarations may be waived by the trial court, for instance in a situation involving emergency or surprise [*see, e.g., McCown v. Spencer (1970) 8 Cal. [6] Attorney's Other Trial

[a] FORM Attorney's Absence Constitutes Good Cause for Continuance

[This form should be combined with a general memorandum supporting a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance (see § 48.10) or included in an appellate brief.]

A CONTINUANCE SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE _____ [name of attorney], _____ [PLAINTIFF'S or DEFENDANT'S] ATTORNEY, MUST TRY ANOTHER MATTER ON THE SAME DATE THAT THIS CASE IS SET FOR TRIAL.

A. Attorney's Other Trial. The unavailability of the trial attorney, when he or she is engaged in the trial of another case, [or in the hearing, investigative or formal, of a State Bar disciplinary matter], should, under ordinary circumstances, be considered good cause for continuance of a trial date (Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(c)(3), (d)(8); Oliveros v. County of Los Angeles (2004) 120 Cal. App. 4th 1389, 1398) .

[Optional] B. Short Continuance When Opposing Party Is Not Prejudiced. When a party requests a short continuance to accommodate an attorney who is unavailable because the attorney is engaged in the trial of another matter, and the opposing party is not prejudiced, the continuance should be granted, even though the party's attorney has not been diligent in proceeding with the case (Palomar Mortgage Co. v. Lister (1963) 212 Cal. App. 2d 236, 239, 27 Cal. Rptr. 863).

This form of points and authorities may be combined with the form at § 48.10[1] and submitted in support of a noticed motion or ex parte application [*see Cal. Optional Paragraph B is for use to seek a short continuance when the opposing party will not be prejudiced by a short continuance. This situation should be distinguished from one in which the party's own lack of diligence has contributed to the attorney's inability to represent the party [see, e.g., Flynn v. Fink (1923) 60 Cal. App. 670, 213 P. 716 , discussed in § 48.37[1][c][i]].

[ii] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form, and in the other forms combined with this form, with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel's argument should focus on the critical points made in the court's file and in supporting declarations regarding the trial attorney's calendar conflict, the unavailability of other counsel to try the case, when the trial attorney first became aware of the conflict, and that he or she did not know of the conflict when he or she accepted the case in which the continuance is sought and the speed with which the attorney informed opposing counsel of the need for continuance and filed the motion for continuance.

It is also advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [*see Evid. [c] Discussion of Authorities

[i] Attorney's Other Trial

In Oliveros v. County of Los Angeles (2004) 120 Cal. App. 4th 1389, 1398 , plaintiffs filed a medical malpractice action against defendant County. The County's attorney requested a continuance, as he was unexpectedly engaged in trial in another courtroom. The trial court denied the continuance suggesting that another lawyer in the County's office try the other case. After denial of continuance, the case proceeded to trial without the presence of the County or its attorney. After plaintiffs presented four days of evidence, the trial court directed a verdict in their favor.

On appeal, the court reversed, concluding that the trial court's failure to carefully balance all of the competing interests at stake, guided by the strong public policy in favor of deciding cases on the merits, constituted an abuse of discretion (120 Cal. App. 4th 1389, 1398) . The court noted that this was a complicated medical malpractice case in which the parties intended to present the testimony of 43 witnesses and in which substantial damages were at stake. The court stated that the trial court did not consider all of the facts and circumstances relevant to a ruling on the County's request for a continuance, nor the specific factors enumerated in former Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 375 (now see Rule 3.1332). Rather, the judge's reported comments suggested that the only factor he took into consideration, and which became the decisive factor in his ruling, was the impact of a continuance on the court's calendar (120 Cal. App. 4th 1389, 1398) .

[ii] Short Continuance When Opposing Party Is Not Prejudiced

In Palomar Mortgage Co. v. Lister (1963) 212 Cal. App. 2d 236, 27 Cal. Rptr. 863 , plaintiff sought declaratory relief and damages for breach of contract. On the day of trial, an attorney, who was not plaintiff's counsel, appeared and submitted an affidavit signed by plaintiff's counsel which stated that he was the only member of the firm able to try the case and that he was engaged in a criminal case on the day of trial. Because of his other trial obligations, he requested a 12-day continuance. When it was clear that the trial court would deny the request, the substitute attorney requested a one-day continuance, offering to pay costs and seeking one hour in which to contact the offices of plaintiff's counsel. The trial court refused the one-hour delay, denied the request for a continuance, and without plaintiff's having any legal representation, held a jury trial which resulted in a verdict in favor of defendants. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court conceded that denial of the request for a 12-day continuance could not be criticized, particularly because the conflict claimed by plaintiff's attorney on the date of trial was only an arraignment. Nevertheless, denial of the one-day continuance denied plaintiff any opportunity at all to present its case even though defendants, who consented to the one-day delay, would not apparently have been injuriously affected by the short delay (212 Cal. App. 2d 236, 239) .

This form of points and authorities may be combined with the form at § 48.10[1] and submitted in support of a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(b)], when a new party has been added to the case and the new party has not had a reasonable opportunity to conduct discovery and prepare for trial, or the other parties have not had a reasonable opportunity to conduct discovery and prepare for trial in regard to the new party's involvement in the case [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(c)(5); see also Code Civ. Proc. § 594a (court's power to postpone trial on own motion when amendment or allowance of time to plead renders postponement necessary)].

The authorities in this form should also be combined with all those in any form set forth in §§ 48.11 -48.17 that are applicable to the particular case, i.e., that address the particular ground or grounds of good cause existing in his or her particular case.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form, and in the other forms combined with this form, with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel's argument should focus on the critical points made in the court's file and in supporting declarations regarding the change in the status of the case, the ways in which that change has rendered the case not ready for trial, the diligence with which counsel has proceeded the prepare the case for trial, when the trial attorney first became aware of the problem, and the speed with which the attorney informed opposing counsel of the need for continuance and filed the motion for continuance.

It is also advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, or by affidavits or declarations. The affirmative showing of good cause required for continuance is generally made by supporting declarations submitted along with the noticed motion or ex parte application and the memorandum [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(b)]. Although the requirement for affidavits or declarations may be waived by the trial court, for instance in a situation involving emergency or surprise [*see, e.g., McCown v. Spencer (1970) 8 Cal. A CONTINUANCE MAY BE GRANTED WHEN ANOTHER ACTION IS PENDING AND THE OUTCOME OF THE PENDING ACTION WOULD RESOLVE OR SIMPLIFY THE DETERMINATION OF ONE OR MORE OF THE ISSUES IN THE INSTANT CASE.

A. Continuance Proper When Other Action Is Pending. A continuance is justified when a party requests a continuance on the ground that another action is pending and the outcome of the pending action would resolve or simplify the determination of one or more of the issues in the instant case. [This rule applies even if the other action is pending in a court other than a California court] ([Thomson v. Continental Ins. Co. (1967) 66 Cal. 2d 738, 747-748, 59 Cal. Rptr. 101, 427 P.2d 765 ; Anthony v. General Motors Corp. (1973) 33 Cal. App. 3d 699, 708, 109 Cal. Rptr. 254;] Margolis v. Superior Court (1957) 151 Cal. App. 2d 333, 334, 338, 311 P.2d 167 ; [Simmons v. Superior Court (1950) 96 Cal. App. 2d 119, 123-125, 214 P.2d 844]).

[Optional] B. Continuance Is Proper for Subsequently Begun Pending Action. A continuance may be justified on the ground that another action is pending even though the other action was begun after the case sought to be continued (Ehrhart & Associates Inc. v. Superior Court (1960) 185 Cal. App. 2d 1, 5, 7 Cal. Rptr. 844).

This form of points and authorities may be combined with the form at § 48.10[1] and submitted in support of a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(b)], when another action is pending that would resolve or simplify the issues in the case which is sought to be continued. The authorities in this form should also be combined with all those in any form set forth in §§ 48.11 -48.17 that are applicable to the particular case, i.e., that address the particular ground or grounds of good cause existing in his or her particular case.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form, and in the other forms combined with this form, with the facts of his or her case. For example, if the continuance is sought because another pending action will resolve or simplify shared issues, counsel's argument should focus on the critical points made in the courts' files in both cases and in supporting declarations regarding the substantial similarity of parties and/or issues, when counsel first learned of the shared issues, and the speed with which counsel informed opposing counsel of the need for continuance and filed the motion for continuance [cf. Code Civ. Proc. § 597 (when answer may be used to plead bar of another action pending)].

It is also advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, or by affidavits or declarations. The affirmative showing of good cause required for continuance is generally made by supporting declarations submitted along with the noticed motion or ex parte application and the memorandum [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(b)]. Although the requirement for affidavits or declarations may be waived by the trial court, for instance in a situation involving emergency or surprise [see, e.g., McCown v. Spencer (1970) 8 Cal. App. 3d 216, 228 ; Larson v. Solbakken (1963) 221 Cal. App. 2d 410, 430, 34 Cal. Rptr. 450] , counsel must make a sufficiently detailed factual showing to support the motion for continuance; generalizations are not sufficient [see, e.g., Watson v. Columbia Basin Dev. Co. (1913) 22 Cal. App. 556, 559, 135 P. 511] .

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits "upon a motion"), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

The points and authorities in § 48.39 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities set out in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Continuance Proper When Other Action Is Pending

In Thomson v. Continental Ins. Co. (1967) 66 Cal. 2d 738, 747-748, 59 Cal. Rptr. 101, 427 P.2d 765 , after the trial court had dismissed plaintiff's suit for damages related to breach of insurance contracts under the doctrine of forum non conveniens, plaintiff appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed, finding that, generally, that doctrine has only an extremely limited application to a case when, as in this case, the plaintiff is a bona fide resident of the forum state. In its discussion, the Court pointed out that a prior pending federal court action in Texas which involved nearly identical issues could provide a proper basis for a stay of proceedings, but not a dismissal. Counsel should note, however, the Court's explicit statement that despite misleading language in earlier cases, such as Simmons v. Superior Court (1950) 96 Cal. App. 2d 119, 123-125, 214 P.2d 844 , the propriety of a stay is a matter of the trial court's discretion, rather than a right for the moving party (66 Cal. 2d 738, 747-748) .

In Anthony v. General Motors Corp. (1973) 33 Cal. App. 3d 699, 109 Cal. Rptr. 254 , plaintiffs brought a class action suit against defendant truck manufacturer requesting that defendant recall and pay for the replacement of allegedly defective truck wheels. While the action was pending, the federal highway administrator determined that a defect in the wheels resulted in an unreasonable risk of harm and filed suit in federal district court to assess a fine against defendant. The trial court in the class action then dismissed the case on the ground that the action could not be brought as a class action and that because the federal action would determine the issue of inherent defect, the principle of collateral estoppel would make retrial of the issue unnecessary. Plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal reversed on both grounds. In regard to the principle of collateral estoppel, the court held that if the disposition of an action pending elsewhere could, by resolving one of the issues, shorten the trial in the instant case or obviate the necessity for a trial, the proper action is not dismissal but continuance (33 Cal. App. 3d 699, 708) .

Margolis v. Superior Court (1957) 151 Cal. App. 2d 333, 311 P.2d 167 , arose out of a lawsuit for damages for conversion of dry cleaning equipment brought by two members of the Margolis family against a machinery corporation. The trial court in the damages action continued the case until resolution of a related case, then on appeal, in which a separate party had successfully pursued a claim against plaintiffs for the same equipment. Plaintiffs petitioned for a writ of mandate to require the trial court to proceed with the damages action.

The court of appeal denied petitioner's writ stating that the issue was whether or not the judgment in the other pending case would be determinative of one or more of the issues in the damages action; and under the principle of collateral estoppel, the answer was affirmative (151 Cal. App. 2d 333, 334) . Further, until the outcome of the appeal was clear, it would be extremely difficult to fix damages. Therefore, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by postponing the trial pending the outcome of the appeal. (151 Cal. App. 2d 333, 338) .

Simmons v. Superior Court (1950) 96 Cal. App. 2d 119, 214 P.2d 844 , arose out of a divorce conflict between a couple residing in Texas. The wife had brought an action for divorce and other remedies on February 10 in Texas, and the husband filed suit on February 15 in California for a declaration that he was the owner of an undivided half interest in certain properties which were claimed in the Texas proceeding as his wife's separate property. The wife filed a motion in the California court to have the proceeding stayed until final determination of the Texas action. Her motion was denied. She then sought a writ of prohibition.

The court of appeal supported the wife's claim, although determining that mandate, not prohibition, was the proper remedy. The court concluded that the Texas action would determine all of the issues involved in the California action. The court also stated that while the fact that a prior action is pending in another state does not entitle the party in a second suit to an abatement as a matter of right, it is within the discretion of the court in which the second action is pending to stay the suit and the principle of comity between states requires California courts to refuse to proceed to a decision before the prior action has terminated (96 Cal. App. 2d 119, 123-125) .

[b] Continuance Is Proper for Subsequently Begun Pending Action

Ehrhart & Associates, Inc. v. Superior Court (1960) 185 Cal. App. 2d 1, 7 Cal. Rptr. 844 , arose out of a conflict between petitioner, Ehrhart & Associates, and Valley Nitrogen Producers, Inc. (referred to as Valley). Petitioner had contracted to build an ammonium sulfate plant in Fresno County for Valley. In February, a payment dispute arose between the parties and petitioner attempted without success to invoke the arbitration clause in the contract. In May,

Valley notified petitioner that it was rescinding the contract. On June 3, petitioner filed a petition in Los Angeles County for appointment of an arbitrator and for an order directing arbitration. Claiming in its answer that it had rescinded the contract, Valley later filed a complaint for rescission on June 8 in Fresno County where the records were located and the principal witnesses resided. The trial court, then, stayed the proceedings on the arbitration petition during the pendency of the rescission action, stating specifically that its action was not based on convenience of the parties or a determination of where the arbitration matter should be tried. Petitioner sought a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to proceed.

The court of appeal denied the writ. The court pointed out that the trial court before deciding the arbitration petition would have to determine the equitable issue of rescission. Because the issue to be submitted to arbitration could well become moot by adjudication of the right to rescission, an unnecessary multiplicity of suits could result of the writ were granted. Thus, the trial court was entitled to exercise its discretion to grant a continuance or stay of the arbitration proceedings pending determination of controlling issues in the other action, even though the action was begun subsequently (185 Cal. App. 2d 1, 5) .

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion for continuance [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(b)]. It should be combined with all of the forms set forth in §§ 48.31 -48.39 that are applicable to the particular case.

This form and the forms in § 48.31[1] and [2] address procedural requirements that are applicable in every case and should be used whenever the showing in support of the motion is deficient in that regard.

The forms in §§ 48.34 -48.39 address particular circumstances that have been held not to constitute good cause, and therefore need only be used when they establish that the circumstances on which the particular request for continuance is based do not constitute good cause for continuance. The authorities in §§ 48.32 and 48.33 may be used to augment a memorandum opposing a continuance if the request for continuance is not made in good faith or would place undue burden on the party opposing the continuance.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used to oppose the points and authorities set out in § 48.10.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form, and in the other forms combined with this form, with the facts of his or her case. For example, if the continuance is sought because of the unavailability of an expert witness, counsel's argument should focus on the critical points made in both the supporting and opposing declarations regarding the reason for the expert's unavailability and whether that reason amounts to good cause [see also the form in § 48.13[3][a]], when counsel for the moving party first learned of the unavailability, the lack or insufficiency of any attempts to arrange alternatives, the reasons, if any, why those alternatives are preferable to a continuance, and the lack of diligence with which counsel for the moving party informed opposing counsel of the need for continuance and filed the motion for continuance.

It is also advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, or by affidavits or declarations. Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits "upon a motion"), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish or negate the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. [3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Continuance Is Not Matter of Right

Thurmond v. Superior Court (1967) 66 Cal. 2d 836, 59 Cal. Rptr. 273, 427 P.2d 985 , arose out of a paternity dispute in which an unborn child's guardian ad litem attempted to obtain support, maintenance, and medical expenses from the alleged father during pendency of the paternity action. The alleged father's attorney, who was a member of the Legislature, requested a continuance under predecessor of Code Civ. Proc. § 595, which stated in essence that a trial shall be postponed when any attorney of record therein is a member of the Legislature and the Legislature is in session [see § 48.14[2]]. The trial court granted a continuance and plaintiff filed a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to hold an early hearing.

The Supreme Court determined that the writ should issue. The Court stated that the statutory provisions must be viewed as directory only. A power inherent in the courts is the power to control their order of business so that the rights of all litigants may be safeguarded. The Court added that this power has been recognized as judicial in its nature and as a necessary appendage to a court organized to enforce rights and redress wrongs. In the instant case, the ability of the mother and child to apply for relief pendente lite would be materially impaired by a substantial continuance, therefore, the continuance was not proper (66 Cal. 2d 836, 838-840) . Code Civ. Proc. § 595 has since been amended to provide for situations, including pendente lite relief in paternity actions, in which continuance for a member of the legislature is not mandatory [see Paragraph D in § 48.12[3]].

[a] FORM Failure to Establish That Matter Requiring Continuance Is a Significant, Unanticipated Change in Case Status

[This form should be combined with a general memorandum opposing a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance (see § 48.30) or included in an appellate brief].

A COURT DOES NOT ABUSE ITS DISCRETION BY DENYING A MOTION FOR A CONTINUANCE WHEN THE PARTY SEEKING THE CONTINUANCE FAILS TO ESTABLISH THAT THE CONTINUANCE IS REQUIRED BY AN UNFORESEEABLE OR UNAVOIDABLE EMERGENCY OCCURRING AFTER THE CASE WAS SET FOR TRIAL THAT CANNOT OTHERWISE BE PROVIDED FOR.

A. Continuance Requires Significant, Unanticipated Change in Status Supported by Good Cause. Dates assigned for trial are firm, and all parties must regard the date set for trial as certain (Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(a)). A continuance may be granted only upon an affirmative showing of good cause (Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(c)). In general, good cause is shown when there is a significant, unanticipated change in the status of the case as a result of which the case is not ready for trial (Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(c)(7)).

B. Failure to Establish Emergency. When a party requests a continuance but fails to establish that the continuance is required by an unforeseeable and unavoidable emergency occurring after the case was set for trial, the continuance may be denied (Young v. Redman (1976) 55 Cal. App. 3d 827, 831, 128 Cal. Rptr. 86 ; see Lazarus v. Titmus (1998) 64 Cal. App. 4th 1242, 1250, 75 Cal. Rptr. 2d 676).

C. Alternatives to Continuance Are Available. A party may be denied a continuance if alternatives to a continuance are available (People ex rel. Dep't of Public Works v. Busick (1968) 259 Cal. App. 2d 744, 749-750, 66 Cal. Rptr. 532 ; Ferrari v. Mambretti (1945) 70 Cal. App. 2d 492, 496, 161 P.2d 275).

[c] Discussion of Authorities

[i] Failure to Establish Emergency

In Young v. Redman (1976) 55 Cal. App. 3d 827, 128 Cal. Rptr. 86 , plaintiff filed an action for breach of contract to purchase land from plaintiff on the grounds of mistake and misrepresentation. On March 5, the trial was set for May 28, and on May 13, defendant's attorney requested a continuance because defendant was out of the country on business. Defendant had adequate notice of the trial date but failed to adjust personal plans in order to attend. The trial court denied the motion and, after a three-day trial with defendant not present, entered judgment in favor of plaintiff. Defendant appealed, contending that the trial court had erred in failing to grant him a continuance.

The court of appeal affirmed, pointing out in part that to justify reversal there must be an affirmative showing of "good cause." The Former Standards of Judicial Administration for the Superior Courts [Cal. Rules of Ct., Appen., Div. I, § 9] [since repealed and partially subsumed into Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332] recommended that good cause exists only when the necessity for the continuance results from an emergency occurring after the trial setting conference that could not have been anticipated or avoided with reasonable diligence and cannot be properly provided for other than by continuance. Defendant made no showing that an emergency required his absence from the country (55 Cal. App. 3d 827, 831) .

In Lazarus v. Titmus (1998) 64 Cal. App. 4th 1242, 75 Cal. Rptr. 2d 676 , the plaintiff's counsel appeared on the day the case was set for trial and moved for a two-week continuance on the ground that the plaintiff had just accepted a new job that required plaintiff to attend an out-of-state orientation and training seminar. Plaintiff had known of the conflict on Thursday July 25, the day he received the job offer, but could not reach the attorney until Saturday July 27. The attorney prepared a motion for continuance, faxed it to defense counsel on Sunday (64 Cal. App. 4th 1242, 1246-1247) . The trial court denied the request, and ultimately dismissed the case due to counsel's inability to proceed in the plaintiff's absence. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court held that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion to continue when the record showed that the trial court was unconvinced that plaintiff could not have arranged his work schedule to be available for trial, or that plaintiff could not have notified this attorney earlier so the motion could have been brought before the trial date. Plaintiff knew the trial date when he accepted the job, and under former Cal. Rules of Ct., Appen. Div. I, § 9, he was to regard the trial date as a definite court appointment that takes precedence over all nonemergencies (64 Cal. App. 4th 1242, 1250-1251) .

[ii] Alternatives to Continuance Are Available

The factual background of People ex rel. Dep't of Public Works v. Busick (1968) 259 Cal. App. 2d 744, 66 Cal. Rptr. 532 , is discussed in § 48.13[1][d][i]. In affirming the trial court's denial of a continuance because of the absence of certain witnesses, the court of appeal stated that the testimony of certain of the absent witnesses would have duplicated that of other witnesses. Further, although an important witness, an expert real estate appraiser, had personal business outside the county on the day set for trial, defendants failed to show that this witness would have been the first witness called or that the trial would not have continued long enough for the witness ultimately to be heard (259 Cal. App. 2d 744, 749-750) .

The factual background of Ferrari v. Mambretti (1945) 70 Cal. App. 2d 492, 161 P.2d 275 , is discussed in § 48.12[2][c][i]. The trial court denied plaintiff's motion for continuance and the court of appeal affirmed because plaintiff failed to show that his continuous presence at the trial was necessary. The court also pointed out that plaintiff would still be physically able to consult with and advise his attorney even if he was not present at the trial (70 Cal. App. 2d 492, 496) .

[2] Party's Failure to Promptly Seek Continuance Allows Denial

[a] FORM Failure to Establish That Matter Requiring Continuance Is a Significant, Unanticipated Change in Case Status

[This form should be combined with a general memorandum of points and authorities opposing a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance (see § 48.30) or included in an appellate brief.]

A COURT DOES NOT ABUSE ITS DISCRETION BY DENYING A CONTINUANCE WHEN THE MOTION FOR A CONTINUANCE WAS NOT MADE PROMPTLY AFTER ASCERTAINING THE NECESSITY FOR THE CONTINUANCE.

A. Continuance Must Be Sought Promptly. A party seeking a continuance of the date set for trial, whether contested or uncontested or stipulated to by the parties, must make the request for a continuance by a noticed motion or an ex parte application under Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1200 et seq., with supporting declarations; and the party must make the motion or application as soon as reasonably practical once the necessity for the continuance is discovered (Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(b)).

B. Party's Failure to Promptly Seek Continuance Allows Denial. A party may be denied a continuance if the motion is not made promptly after ascertaining the necessity for continuance (see Lazarus v. Titmus (1998) 64 Cal. App. 4th 1242, 1250, 75 Cal. Rptr. 2d 676 ; Zlotoff v. Tucker (1984) 154 Cal. App. 3d 988, 994, 201 Cal. Rptr. 692).

[ii] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form, and in the other forms combined with this form, with the facts of his or her case. For example, if the continuance is sought because of the unavailability of an expert witness, counsel's argument should focus on the critical points made in both the supporting and opposing declarations regarding the reason for the expert's unavailability and whether that reason amounts to good cause [see also the form in § 48.13[3][a]], when counsel for the moving party first learned of the unavailability, the lack or insufficiency of any attempts to arrange alternatives, the reasons, if any, why those alternatives are preferable to a continuance, and the lack of diligence with which counsel for the moving party informed opposing counsel of the need for continuance and filed the motion for continuance.

It is also advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, or by affidavits or declarations. Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits "upon a motion"), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish or negate the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Discussion of Authorities

[i] Party's Failure to Promptly Seek Continuance Allows Denial

The facts and procedural background of Lazarus v. Titmus (1998) 64 Cal. App. 4th 1242, 75 Cal. Rptr. 2d 676 , are discussed in [1][c][i], above. One of the factors the court noted in support of its holding the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying the continuance was that the motion was made on the trial date, July 29 (64 Cal. App. 4th 1242, 1250) .

Zlotoff v. Tucker (1984) 154 Cal. App. 3d 988, 201 Cal. Rptr. 692 , was an action for breach of contract and fraud. The trial court denied defendant's requests for continuance because of the illness of a defense witness. Judgment was for plaintiff; and defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court held that the trial court had not abused its discretion in denying a continuance. The court reasoned that defendant's motions for a continuance were all made in the two days immediately preceding the trial date, although defendant had known 11 days before that his witness would be unable to testify. The court also noted that defendant never attempted to preserve the witness's testimony by deposition, despite suggestions by the trial court, and had likewise made no showing that the witness's testimony was material to the issues at trial (154 Cal. App. 3d 988, 994) .

[d] Additional Authorities

[i] Party's Failure to Promptly Seek Continuance Allows Denial

The factual background of San Bernardino County v. Doria Mining & Eng'r Corp. (1977) 72 Cal. App. 3d 776, 140 Cal. Rptr. 383 , is discussed in § 48.14[1][c][ii]. The trial court denied defendant's motion for a continuance to appoint new counsel, and the court of appeal affirmed. In listing the reasons why the trial court did not abuse its discretion, the court of appeal pointed out that defendant's motion fell far short of the requirements of former Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 224 (now see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(b)), in that the motion was not made promptly on ascertaining the necessity for the continuance. The motion for continuance was not made until the day of trial, though the need for the new attorney had been apparent for over a week. There was no showing when the attorney of record informed the defendant that he wished to withdraw (72 Cal. App. 3d 776, 783) .

In Dineen v. City & County of San Francisco (1940) 38 Cal. App. 2d 486, 101 P.2d 736 , plaintiff sued defendant city and county for damages from personal injuries caused by the collapse of a folding chair on which plaintiff had been sitting while he was observing a superior court trial. On Wednesday afternoon, the first day of the jury trial, plaintiff's counsel, after presenting two witnesses, requested a continuance because several other witnesses to the accident were not available for subpoena but would return on Monday. The trial court denied the motion and then granted defendant's motion for a nonsuit. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. Counsel's request for a continuance was not made with due diligence. Counsel knew that the witnesses were not available when the jury was impaneled. The court also noted that counsel failed to state who the witnesses were or what their testimony would be (38 Cal. App. 2d 486, 493) .

THE COURT HAS DISCRETION TO DENY THE CONTINUANCE BECAUSE THE MOVING PARTY SHOWS A LACK OF GOOD FAITH.

A. Moving Party's Lack of Good Faith. A party may be denied a continuance if he/she shows a lack of good faith (McElroy v. McElroy (1948) 32 Cal. 2d 828, 832-833, 198 P.2d 683).

[Optional] B. Moving Party's Purpose Is Delay. A party may be denied a continuance if the purpose of the request is delay (Sheldon v. Landwehr (1911) 159 Cal. 778, 781-782, 116 P. 44).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be used to augment a memorandum submitted in opposition to noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(b)] when, in addition to other reasons why the continuance may be denied, the moving party's actions indicate a lack of good faith, for example, if his or her primary purpose in seeking the continuance appears to be delay. It should be combined with all of the forms set forth in §§ 48.30 -48.39 that are applicable to the particular case.

The forms in §§ 48.30 -48.31 address procedural requirements that are applicable in every case and should be used to whenever the showing in support of the motion is deficient in that regard. Similarly, the forms in §§ 48.34 -48.39 address particular circumstances that have been held not to constitute good cause, and therefore need only be used when they establish that the circumstances on which the particular request for continuance is based do not constitute good cause for continuance. The form in § 48.33 may be used to augment a memorandum opposing a continuance if the request for continuance would place undue burden on the party opposing the continuance.

When using this form, counsel should consider whether to request sanctions based on the opposing party's delaying tactics. For points and authorities supporting the imposition of sanctions that may be combined with the authorities in this form, see Ch. 207, Sanctions . For discussion of the availability of sanctions, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 510, Sanctions (Matthew Bender).

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form, and in the other forms combined with this form, with the facts of his or her case. For example, if the continuance is sought because of the unavailability of an expert witness, counsel's argument should focus on the critical points made in both the supporting and opposing declarations regarding the reason for the expert's unavailability and whether that reason amounts to good cause [see also the form in § 48.13[3][a]], when counsel for the moving party first learned of the unavailability, the lack or insufficiency of any attempts to arrange alternatives, the reasons, if any, why those alternatives are preferable to a continuance, and the lack of diligence with which counsel for the moving party informed opposing counsel of the need for continuance and filed the motion for continuance. In addition, counsel should argue that the foregoing evidence a lack of good faith, or even an intent to delay, on the part of moving party.

It is also advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, or by affidavits or declarations. Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits "upon a motion"), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish or negate the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. [3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Moving Party's Lack of Good Faith

In McElroy v. McElroy (1948) 32 Cal. 2d 828, 198 P.2d 683 , plaintiff sued her spouse for divorce and his parents for return of certain community funds. At the trial, the parents' attorney requested a continuance because the father was ill. Plaintiff, in response, filed an affidavit which stated her attorney's belief that the parents had not intended to attend the trial because of the cost of coming to California from their home in Oregon. The trial court denied the motion, but at the close of trial offered a continuance on its own motion to secure testimony of the father and son. Defendant's counsel was not able to assure the trial court that either would appear; and the trial court then rendered a judgment in plaintiff's favor. Defendant appealed.

On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The Court stated that in deciding a motion for continuance, the trial court could take into consideration the good faith of the moving party. Given all the facts of this case, including the facts that defendants supported their motion only by an attorney's affidavit and that, in the six-day period between denial of the motion and the end of the trial, they made no attempt to augment their motion with a personal or physician's affidavit, it was clear that no abuse of discretion occurred (32 Cal. 2d 828, 832-833) .

[b] Moving Party's Purpose Is Delay

In Sheldon v. Landwehr (1911) 159 Cal. 778, 116 P. 44 , plaintiff sued to recover the balance due on four promissory notes. At the trial, defendant's counsel moved for a continuance because defendant was ill. In opposition, plaintiff argued that his security for the notes, defendant's mining stock, was in jeopardy because it would otherwise be sold in three weeks at a delinquent sale. Plaintiff would not agree to the continuance unless defendant would exercise his power to postpone the sale. Defendant's attorney said he would not attempt to procure a postponement. The trial court ruled that if the sale were not postponed by the next day, the trial would proceed. Because the sale was not postponed, on the following day the trial was begun. Judgment was for plaintiff; and defendant appealed.

The Supreme Court held that in considering whether or not to grant a continuance, a trial court could consider the good faith of the request; in this case, there was evidence to support the conclusion that defendant was not acting in good faith but, rather, with the real purpose of delaying plaintiff's enforcement of his rights (159 Cal. 778, 781-782) .

This form of points and authorities may be used to augment a memorandum submitted in opposition to noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(b)] when granting the continuance, in addition to other reasons why the continuance should not be granted, would unduly burden the party resisting the continuance. It should be combined with all of the forms set forth in §§ 48.30 -48.39 that are applicable to the particular case.

The forms in §§ 48.30 -48.31 address procedural requirements that are applicable in every case and should be used to whenever the showing in support of the motion is deficient in that regard. Similarly, §§ 48.34-48.39 address particular circumstances that have been held not to constitute good cause, and therefore need only be used when they establish that the circumstances on which the particular request for continuance is based do not constitute good cause for continuance. The form in § 48.32 may be used to augment a memorandum opposing a continuance if the request for continuance is not made in good faith.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form, and in the other forms combined with this form, with the facts of his or her case. For example, in addition to argument addressing the primary grounds for denial of the continuance, counsel's argument should focus on the critical points establishing the burden that granting the continuance would impose on the opposing party.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Granting Continuance Would Burden Opposing Party

Joint Holdings & Trading Co., Ltd. v. First Union Nat'l Bank of N.C. (1975) 50 Cal. App. 3d 159, 123 Cal. Rptr. 519 , was a controversy between competing creditors. Plaintiff had sued the owner of an inventory of trousers and obtained writs of attachment which the sheriff levied. Third party claimant, a bank, which had already perfected a security interest in the trousers in North Carolina filed a third party claim pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. §§ 689 and 689b, asserting a paramount security interest. At the hearing on the validity of the bank's asserted interest, the bank's attorneys stated their belief that the cause would be heard on affidavits rather than on in-court testimony and requested either permission to present the case on affidavits or a 60-day continuance to allow out-of-state witness to appear. The trial court denied the request and subsequently concluded that the bank's interest was subordinate to plaintiff's interest. The bank appealed on several grounds.

The court of appeal affirmed. In regard to the trial court's denial of the bank's request for a continuance, the court said that even if the bank's erroneous belief was reasonable, the trial court could validly refuse a continuance because plaintiff's witnesses had come from Hong Kong and American Samoa; and a 60-day continuance would have imposed a heavy burden on plaintiff (50 Cal. App. 3d 159, 167) .

THE COURT HAS DISCRETION TO DENY A CONTINUANCE ALL PARTIES HAVE STIPULATED TO IN WRITING [WHEN THE REQUEST FOR CONTINUANCE COMES TOO LATE].

A. Written Stipulation Does Not Entitle Parties to Continuance. Section 595.2 of the Code of Civil Procedure, despite its mandatory language, is directory and does not confer on the parties an entitlement to a continuance within the thirty-day period specified by the statute. The trial court has discretion to deny a stipulated continuance in accordance with its power to control its order of business (Lorraine v. McComb (1934) 220 Cal. 753, 755-757, 32 P.2d 960 ; Pham v. Thi Nguyen (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 11, 15-17, 62 Cal. Rptr. 2d 422 .

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(b)] that has been stipulated to in writing by all parties [see Code Civ. Proc. § 595.2, set forth in the form in § 48.11[1]], or, more likely, in a reply brief on an appeal after a stipulated continuance has been denied. It should be combined with all of the forms set forth in §§ 48.30 -48.39 that are applicable to the particular case. The forms in §§ 48.30 and 48.31 address procedural requirements that are applicable in every case and should be used to whenever the showing in support of the motion is deficient in that regard. The forms in §§ 48.35 -48.39 address particular circumstances that have been held not to constitute good cause, and therefore need only be used when they establish that the circumstances on which the particular request for continuance is based do not constitute good cause for continuance. The forms in §§ 48.32 and 48.33 may be used to augment a memorandum opposing a continuance if the request for continuance is not made in good faith or would place undue burden on the party opposing the continuance.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used to oppose the points and authorities set out in § 48.11.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form, and in the other forms combined with this form, with the facts of his or her case. For example, if the continuance is sought because of the unavailability of an expert witness, counsel's argument should focus on the critical points made in both the supporting and opposing declarations regarding the reason for the expert's unavailability and whether that reason amounts to good cause [see also the form in § 48.13[3][a]], when counsel for the moving party first learned of the unavailability, the lack or insufficiency of any attempts to arrange alternatives, the reasons, if any, why those alternatives are preferable to a continuance, and the lack of diligence with which counsel for the moving party informed opposing counsel of the need for continuance and filed the motion for continuance.

It is also advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [*see Evid. [3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Written Stipulation Does Not Entitle Parties to Continuance

Lorraine v. McComb (1934) 220 Cal. 753, 32 P.2d 960 , was one of the first cases to interpret the statute that later became Code Civ. Proc. § 595.2. Trial was set for October 9, 1933. On that date, lawyers for all parties submitted a written agreement seeking postponement until October 24, 1933 or any other date within the 30-day period. The trial calendar judge refused to allow the postponement, and because the attorneys did not proceed with the trial, order the matter off calendar. The parties sought by writ to compel the court to reinstate the case to its former status on the calendar.

The Supreme Court denied the writ, although remarking that it should ordinarily be possible to accommodate parties who have mutually agreed to postponement. However, the Court noted that accommodation is not always practical, and when accommodation becomes impracticable, the judicial control reposed in the court by the Constitution must prevail (220 Cal. 753, 755) . The Court stated that the provisions of the statute were directory and that the parties were not entitled to a continuance. The court alluded to the separation of powers, in particular, the right of the judiciary to control its order of business (220 Cal. 753, 755-757) .

Pham v. Thi Nguyen (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 11, 62 Cal. Rptr. 2d 422 , was a dental malpractice case that first went to judicial arbitration. The arbitration award was for defendant dentist, and plaintiff sought trial de novo. Four days before trial the parties, submitted a written stipulation requesting continuance, claiming that they had not had time to depose their expert witnesses. The trial judge summarily denied the request. On the day of trial, defendant requested a continuance, arguing that she had just learned her expert was unavailable. That request was also denied. The matter was tried and resulted in a judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appealed, contending denial of both continuances was an abuse of discretion.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court of appeal reviewed Lorraine v. McComb (1934) 220 Cal. 753, 32 P.2d 960 , and agreed that Code Civ. Proc. § 595.2, is directory only and does not entitle the parties to a continuance (54 Cal. App. 4th 11, 15) . It described Code Civ. Proc. § 595.2 as setting forth legislative policy in favor of professional courtesy when counsel needs a continuance (54 Cal. App. 4th 11, 16-17) . The court stated it was a fairly close question whether the trial court had abused its discretion, but concluded that it had not: the parties did not invoke Code Civ. Proc. § 595.2; the stipulation stated that the parties were agreeing "with the Honorable Court's permission, to continue the trial for a short period to either of two indicated dates;" and the reason for the continuance, to depose witnesses, was contrary to the policy expressed in Code Civ. Proc. § 2024(f) [Code Civ. Proc. § 2024.060 operative July 1, 2005], regarding the need for timely depositions of witnesses. The trial court did not act beyond the bounds of reason in denying the request when it was made at such a relatively late date (54 Cal. App. 4th 11, 18) .

§ 48.35 Party's Absence Does Not Warrant Continuance

[1] Absent Party Had Notice of Trial

[a] FORM Party's Absence Does Not Warrant Continuance

[This form should be combined with a general memorandum of points and authorities opposing a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance (see § 48.30) or included in an appellate brief.]

THE COURT SHOULD PROCEED WITH THE _____ [TRIAL or HEARING] TO ALLOW _____ [party present, e.g., DEFENDANT AND CROSS-COMPLAINANT] TO ESTABLISH HIS/HER/ITS RIGHT TO A _____ [DISMISSAL or VERDICT or JUDGMENT] BECAUSE _____ [name of absent party] HAD PROPER NOTICE OF TRIAL.

A. Trial May Proceed Without Party Who Has Been Given Notice. Unless the court for good cause otherwise directs, either party may bring an issue to trial or hearing and proceed with the case in the absence of the adverse party; provided, however, that if the issue to be tried is an issue of fact, proof shall first be made to the satisfaction of the court that the adverse party has had 15 days' notice of trial, [or five days' notice of trial in an unlawful detainer proceeding], as specified in subdivision (b). [If the adverse party has served notice of trial on the party seeking the dismissal, verdict, or judgment at least five days prior to the trial, the adverse party shall be deemed to have notice of trial] (Code Civ. Proc. § 594(a); see Berris & Seaton v. Meyers (1984) 163 Cal. App. 3d Supp 54, 59-60, 210 Cal. Rptr. 444).

B. Method of Proving Notice. If notice of trial is served by a party, proof may be made by introduction into evidence of an affidavit or certificate pursuant to subdivision (1) or (2) of Section 1013a of the Code of Civil Procedure or other competent evidence. The fact that the trial court's file may have contained the notice and proof of its service at the time of trial is insufficient if those documents were not introduced into evidence (Code Civ. Proc. § 594(b); Irvine National Bank v. Han (1982) 130 Cal. App. 3d 693, 697-698, 186 Cal. Rptr. 864).

[b] Comments

[i] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(b)], when the absent party has been given notice of trial as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 594. Although Code Civ. Proc. § 594 goes to jurisdiction [see Irvine National Bank v. Han (1982) 130 Cal. App. 3d 693, 697-698, 186 Cal. Rptr. 864] and mentions nothing about continuances, it is included here because it may be useful to combine with other authorities opposing continuance. The points and authorities in this form should be combined with those in all of the forms set forth in §§ 48.30 -48.39 that are applicable to the particular case. The forms in §§ 48.30 and 48.31 address procedural requirements that are applicable in every case and should be used to whenever the showing in support of the motion is deficient in that regard. The forms in §§ 48.35 -48.39 address particular circumstances that have been held not to constitute good cause, and therefore need only be used when they establish that the circumstances on which the particular request for continuance is based do not constitute good cause for continuance. §§ 48.32 and 48.33 may be used to augment a memorandum opposing a continuance if the request for continuance is not made in good faith or would place undue burden on the party opposing the continuance.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used to oppose the points and authorities set out in § 48.12[1] and [2].

[ii] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form, and in the other forms combined with this form, with the facts of his or her case. For example, if counsel wishes to oppose a continuance and proceed with the trial of an absent party, counsel's argument should focus on the fact that the absent party received notice of trial. Counsel should request the court to take judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.] of any notice of trial and proof of its service on the absent party that may be in the court's file and should actually introduce the notice of trial and certificate of proof of its service into evidence. Although it is usually advisable for counsel to submit affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) to support or oppose a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits "upon a motion"), 2015.5], in this instance, the introduction into evidence of the original certificate of service of the notice of trial is the only evidence that will suffice [Code Civ. Proc. § 594(b)].

[c] Discussion of Authorities

[i] Trial May Proceed Without Party Who Has Been Given Notice

Berris & Seaton v. Meyers (1984) 163 Cal. App. 3d Supp. 54, 210 Cal. Rptr. 444 , was an action by a law firm against two individuals for fees. The defendants cross-complained. After the case was filed, the attorney members of plaintiff terminated their association and agreed that one would collect the fees. One defendant paid the fees, but a dispute arose over the termination agreement and that attorney did not forward the fees to the other attorney. When the case was first set for trial, plaintiff's attorney had stipulated in open court to the continuance to the new trial date. Plaintiffs served defendants, cross-complainants, and another cross-defendant with a notice of the new trial date. Defendants and cross-complainants did not serve plaintiff with notice of trial, but had served a notice of continuance of trial date. Plaintiff did not appear at trial. The complaint was dismissed and the cross-complaint tried, resulting in a judgment for one of the defendants, which plaintiff sought to vacate. The motion to vacate was denied, and plaintiff appealed.

The appellate department of the superior court affirmed the denial of the motion to vacate the judgment. The appellate department held that plaintiff was an adverse party under Code Civ. Proc. § 594(a), who, having served notice of trial on the other parties, was deemed to have notice of the trial (163 Cal. App. 3d Supp 54, 59-60). The appellate department noted that prior to 1969 a party who wished to proceed with trial had to have given notice and could not rely on an opponent's notice, if the opponent who had given notice thereafter failed to appear at trial (163 Cal. App. 3d Supp. 54, 60).

[ii] Method of Proving Notice

Code Civ. Proc. § 594(b) provides in part, that if notice of trial is served by a party, proof may be made by introduction into evidence of an affidavit or certificate pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1013a(1) or (2) or other competent evidence. If notice of trial is served by the clerk of the court, proof may be made by introduction into evidence of the clerk's certificate pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1013a(3) or other competent evidence. These provisions are exclusive [Code Civ. Proc. § 594(b)].

Irvine National Bank v. Han (1982) 130 Cal. App. 3d 693, 186 Cal. Rptr. 864 , was an action on two promissory notes. The trial was held on the scheduled date, but defendant did not appear. The court's file contained notice of the trial signed by plaintiff's attorney, with an attached proof of service on defendant stating that it was mailed more than 30 days prior to the trial date. Defendant did not appear, and the trial proceeded although the court was never asked to take judicial notice of the file containing the notice of trial. Judgment was for plaintiff. Defendant appealed, contending he had never received notice of trial.

The court of appeal reversed, stating that whether defendant did or did not receive notice of trial was not relevant because it is essential to the jurisdiction of the trial court in proceeding in the absence of defendant that proof first be made that defendant has been given statutory notice. The court noted that before 1975, Code Civ. Proc. § 594 did not provide what kind of proof was required to show that notice had been given. In this case there was absolutely no competent evidence "introduced into evidence" to show that defendant had been served with notice of trial. Although the notice of trial and the attached proof of service were apparently in the superior court's file at the time of the trial those documents were not introduced into evidence as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 594(b), which also provides that its provisions are exclusive. There was no testimony that the required notice was given, nor is there any suggestion in the judgment that the court even considered the matter. In the absence of actual evidence in the record made before the trial court that notice was given, the court was without jurisdiction to proceed in defendant's absence (130 Cal. App. 3d 693, 697-698) .

[2] Illness That Does Not Justify Continuance

[a] FORM Party's Absence Does Not Warrant Continuance

[This form should be combined with a general memorandum of points and authorities opposing a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance (see § 48.30) or included in an appellate brief.]

A COURT DOES NOT ABUSE ITS DISCRETION BY DENYING A MOTION FOR A CONTINUANCE ON THE GROUND THAT THE PARTY IS ABSENT DUE TO ILLNESS WHEN _____ [THE PARTY'S ILLNESS PREDATES THE TRIAL SETTING CONFERENCE and/or THE PARTY'S HEALTH WOULD NOT BE JEOPARDIZED BY ATTENDING THE TRIAL].

A. Illness Predates Trial Setting Conference. Unless an illness is a result of an emergency occurring after the trial setting conference, a continuance that is not requested by noticed motion and supported by the appropriate declaration of a medical doctor should be denied [In re Marriage of Teegarden (1986) 186 Cal. App. 3d 401, 406-407, 226 Cal. Rptr. 417] .

B. Illness Does Not Jeopardize Health. When a party's absence is due to illness but the party's health would not be jeopardized by attendance at trial, the continuance may be denied (Agnew v. Parks (1963) 219 Cal. App. 2d 696, 702, 33 Cal. Rptr. 465 ; Kalmus v. Kalmus (1951) 103 Cal. App. 2d 405, 414, 230 P.2d 57).

[i] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(b)], when a party seeking a continuance on the ground of his or her illness has failed to show good cause for the continuance. While the court of appeal in Agnew v. Parks (1963) 219 Cal. App. 2d 696, 702, 33 Cal. Rptr. 465 , stated that a continuance could be denied if the party's health would not be jeopardized by attendance at trial, Kalmus v. Kalmus (1951) 103 Cal. App. 2d 405, 414, 230 P.2d 57 , established a less rigorous test by stating that if the party was physically able to participate in the trial, there was no abuse of discretion in denying a continuance [see discussion in [c][ii], below].

This form should be combined with all of the forms set forth in §§ 48.30 -48.39 that are applicable to the particular case. The forms in §§ 48.30 and 48.31 address procedural requirements that are applicable in every case and should be used to whenever the showing in support of the motion is deficient in that regard. The forms in §§ 48.34 -48.39 address particular circumstances that have been held not to constitute good cause, and therefore need only be used when they establish that the circumstances on which the particular request for continuance is based do not constitute good cause for continuance. The forms in §§ 48.32 and 48.33 may be used to augment a memorandum opposing a continuance if the request for continuance is not made in good faith or would place undue burden on the party opposing the continuance.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used to oppose the points and authorities set out in § 48.12[1].

[ii] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form, and in the other forms combined with this form, with the facts of his or her case. For example, if the continuance is sought because of a party's illness, counsel's argument should focus on the critical points made in both the supporting and opposing declarations regarding the proof of the illness, or lack thereof, whether the party's presence is required at trial or alternatives to the party's presence, when counsel for the moving party first learned of the party's illness, the lack or insufficiency of any attempts to arrange alternatives, the reasons, if any, why those alternatives are preferable to a continuance, and the lack of diligence with which counsel for the moving party informed opposing counsel of the need for continuance and filed the motion for continuance.

It is also advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, or by affidavits or declarations. Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits "upon a motion"), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish or negate the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. [c] Discussion of Authorities

[i] Illness Predates Trial Setting Conference

The husband in In re Marriage of Teegarden (1986) 186 Cal. App. 3d 401, 226 Cal. Rptr. 417 , became ill with lupus in 1977. Until then, both parties were gainfully employed. They separated in June, 1979, and when the wife filed the petition for dissolution in 1980, husband, who was receiving disability benefits, asked for and received temporary spousal support of $250 per month. The trial was set for Monday, November 9, 1981. The Friday before that Monday, husband notified his attorney that he was ill and might not be able to attend the trial. Husband's attorney asked opposing counsel to agree to a continuance, but the request was denied. In the master calendar department on the morning of trial husband's attorney asked for a continuance, presenting the court with a letter from husband's physician saying that husband was ill. The motion was heard in chambers; the letter was not made part of the record; and there was no transcript of the hearing. In chambers, wife's counsel agreed to stipulate that husband was entitled to and was receiving social security disability payments and that husband's financial declaration could be admitted into evidence. The motion was denied, as was a second motion made by husband's attorney in the trial department at the start of the trial. The court proceeded to trial and found that husband had not met his burden of proving his need for support. An interlocutory decree to that effect was entered. Husband moved for a new trial and supported that motion with a declaration from his physician stating that his condition had worsened between November 6 and November 8 and that husband was not able to appear in court at that time. The motion for new trial was also denied. Husband appealed the portion of the decree denying him spousal support, contending that the trial court abused its discretion in failing to grant him a continuance.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court reviewed the standards for continuance in former section 9 of the California Standards of Judicial Administration, and noted the lack of any record in support of the oral motion and the lack of any explanation for counsel's lack of diligence in preparing for an emergency which could reasonably have been anticipated for the husband's type of illness. The record on the motion for new trial, which did contain the husband's physician's affidavit, was no substitute (186 Cal. App. 3d 401, 406). On appeal, the husband was required to affirmatively show error by an adequate record. In the absence of a record, the court of appeal would not disturb the trial court's implied finding that husband failed to affirmatively show good cause for the continuance (186 Cal. App. 3d 401, 407).

[ii] Illness Does Not Jeopardize Health

Agnew v. Parks (1963) 219 Cal. App. 2d 696, 33 Cal. Rptr. 465 , was a suit for damages based on conspiracy resulting from defendant's malpractice action. On March 12, 1961, after several continuances, the trial was set for June 18, 1961. Although plaintiff's attorney informed her two days later that he would no longer represent her, plaintiff did not employ new counsel and repeatedly demanded that her attorney continue. On June 18, plaintiff was substituted in propria persona. On June 20, she requested a 30-day continuance because she was physically and mentally unable to try the case herself at that time. The court gave plaintiff one day to submit medical reports and, after reviewing the reports, denied plaintiff's motion for the reason that plaintiff's health would not be jeopardized by proceeding to trial and that another delay would create serious schedule problems for opposing counsel. When plaintiff refused to proceed, the court dismissed the action. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The issue of health was essentially one for the trial court's determination based on evaluation and interpretation of the medical reports. This determination, together with the other facts of the case, showed that the trial court was amply justified in denying a further continuance (219 Cal. App. 2d 696, 702) .

In Kalmus v. Kalmus (1951) 103 Cal. App. 2d 405, 230 P.2d 57 , plaintiff filed three different actions against defendant, her former husband, related to financial matters of mutual interest. In one of these actions, set for trial on June 1, plaintiff requested a continuance on May 24. She submitted affidavits supporting a claim of disabling illness which prevented her from traveling from Massachusetts to California and participating in the trial. At the hearing on plaintiff's motion, defendant sharply disputed the claim of disabling illness by submitting several affidavits in which witnesses described plaintiff's travels and other vigorous activities during the month of May as well as a physician's affidavit controverting the conclusion of her physician. The trial court denied the motion and, in the trial which followed, granted the defendant the relief prayed for in his cross complaint. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. In rejecting plaintiff's argument that the trial court erred in failing to grant her a continuance, the court of appeal stated that a trial court may take into consideration the legal sufficiency of the showing in support of the motion and the good faith of the moving party. Reviewing the facts of the case, it is clear that the trial court's conclusion that plaintiff was physically able to come to California and participate in the trial was not an abuse of discretion (103 Cal. App. 2d 405, 414) .

[3] Failure to Show Party's Presence Is Required at Trial

[a] FORM Party's Absence Does Not Warrant Continuance

[This form should be combined with a general memorandum of points and authorities opposing a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance (see § 48.30) or included in an appellate brief].

A COURT DOES NOT ABUSE ITS DISCRETION BY DENYING AN ABSENT PARTY'S MOTION FOR A CONTINUANCE IF THE PARTY FAILS TO ESTABLISH THAT HIS/HER/ITS PRESENCE AT TRIAL IS REQUIRED.

A. Failure to Show Party's Presence Is Required at Trial. When a party requests a continuance on the ground of his or her absence but fails to establish that his or her presence at trial is required, the continuance may be denied (Nahas v. Nahhas (1955) 135 Cal. App. 2d 440, 441-442, 287 P.2d 381).

[Optional] B. Counsel Is Familiar With Facts and Testimony. When an absent party requests a continuance claiming that he or she is needed to assist counsel at trial, but counsel is already familiar with the facts and testimony or could have been had the party shown diligence, a continuance may be denied (Ferrari v. Mambretti (1945) 70 Cal. App. 2d 492, 494-496, 161 P.2d 275 ; Foster v. Hudson (1939) 33 Cal. App. 2d 705, 707-709, 92 P.2d 959).

[Optional] E. Out-of-Trial Consultation Is Adequate. When an absent party requests a continuance claiming that he or she is needed to assist counsel at trial, but sufficient assistance could be provided by periodic out-of-trial consultation, a continuance may be denied (Ferrari v. Mambretti (1945) 70 Cal. App. 2d 492, 496, 161 P.2d 275).

[i] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance [*see Cal. [c] Discussion of Authorities

[i] Failure to Show Party's Presence Is Required at Trial

In Nahas v. Nahhas (1955) 135 Cal. App. 2d 440, 287 P.2d 381 , the case had been at issue for two years and continued, mostly at defendants' request, several times, when defendants' attorney orally moved on the day of trial for a continuance and substitution of counsel. The motion was denied and the case proceeded to trial in the absence of defendants. Following judgment for plaintiffs, defendants moved to vacate the judgment under Code Civ. Proc. § 473 stating, by affidavit, that on the day of trial both defendants were ill and unable to travel from their homes to the place of trial. This motion was denied. Defendants appealed, arguing that by showing illness and inability to travel, they were entitled to a continuance.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment of the trial court, holding that defendants had not been entitled to a continuance because the precedents defendants had relied on to support their argument all involved affidavits setting forth the reason for the absence with particularity. The court further stated that, as established in Hurley v. Kazantzis (1947) 82 Cal. App. 2d 378, 379, 186 P.2d 434 , good cause for a continuance is not shown when the party does not cite facts to support the conclusion that the matter cannot be tried without the party's attendance (135 Cal. App. 2d 440, 441-442) .

[ii] Counsel Is Familiar With Facts and Testimony

The factual background of Ferrari v. Mambretti (1945) 70 Cal. App. 2d 492, 161 P.2d 275 , is discussed in § 48.12[2][c][i]. The trial court denied plaintiff's motion for a continuance on the ground of economic necessity, and the court of appeal affirmed because, among other things, plaintiff failed to show that his continuous presence at trial was necessary. The court pointed out that plaintiff could not testify on his own behalf and that because the case had been tried before, his counsel was already familiar with the witnesses and the testimony (70 Cal. App. 2d 492, 494-496) .

In Foster v. Hudson (1939) 33 Cal. App. 2d 705, 92 P.2d 959 , plaintiffs filed on January 7 several actions for damages from personal injuries arising out of an automobile accident. Defendant did not file an answer until April 29 after he had demurred and received four extensions of time. On May 1, one day before the cases were set for trial on July 5, defendant left the state. On June 18 and at the trial, his attorney requested a continuance until after August 5 because defendant was in Missouri recovering from an operation. The trial court denied both motions and defendant appealed from a jury verdict in favor of plaintiffs, contending, in part, that the court erred in denying the continuance and refusing to admit evidence to show the reason for defendant's absence.

The court of appeal affirmed. During the five months which elapsed between filing the action and defendant's leaving the state, he had ample time to fully prepare his defense. Instead, he had never consulted with his attorney who was not familiar with the details of the defense. The cause of absence was irrelevant and the motions for continuance were properly denied (33 Cal. App. 2d 705, 707-709) .

[iii] Out-of-Trial Consultation as Adequate

The factual background of Ferrari v. Mambretti (1945) 70 Cal. App. 2d 492, 161 P.2d 275 , is discussed in § 48.12[2][c][i]. The trial court denied plaintiff's motion for a continuance, and the court of appeal affirmed because, among other things, plaintiff failed to show that his continuous presence at the trial was necessary. The court also pointed out that plaintiff would still be physically able to consult with and advise his attorney even if he was not present at the trial (70 Cal. App. 2d 492, 496) .

[4] Alternatives Exist to Party's Testifying at Trial

[a] FORM Party's Absence Does Not Warrant Continuance

[This form should be combined with a general memorandum opposing a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance (see § 48.30) or included in an appellate brief.]

A COURT DOES NOT ABUSE ITS DISCRETION BY DENYING AN ABSENT PARTY'S MOTION FOR A CONTINUANCE IF THE PARTY HAS GIVEN A DEPOSITION OR THE COURT IS WILLING TO TAKE ON-SITE TESTIMONY.

A. Deposition Is Adequate. A continuance may be denied an absent party who has requested the continuance in order to testify at trial if he or she has already given a deposition (Young v. Redman (1976) 55 Cal. App. 3d 827, 832, 128 Cal. Rptr. 86).

[Optional] B. On-Site Taking of Testimony as Alternative. A continuance may be denied an absent party who has requested the continuance in order to testify at trial if it is possible to adjourn the trial to where the party is for on-site taking of testimony (Russell v. Roberts (1974) 39 Cal. App. 3d 390, 397, 114 Cal. Rptr. 305).

[b] Comments

[i] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(b)], when a party seeking a continuance on the ground of his or her absence claims it is necessary for him or her to testify but has not addressed alternatives that are available.

This form should be combined with all of the forms set forth in §§ 48.30 -48.39 that are applicable to the particular case. The forms in §§ 48.30 and 48.31 address procedural requirements that are applicable in every case and should be used to whenever the showing in support of the motion is deficient in that regard. The forms in §§ 48.34 -48.39 address particular circumstances that have been held not to constitute good cause, and therefore need only be used when they establish that the circumstances on which the particular request for continuance is based do not constitute good cause for continuance. The forms in §§ 48.32 and 48.33 may be used to augment a memorandum opposing a continuance if the request for continuance is not made in good faith or would place undue burden on the party opposing the continuance.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used to oppose the points and authorities set out in § 48.12[1] and [2].

[ii] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form, and in the other forms combined with this form, with the facts of his or her case. For example, if the continuance is sought because of a party's absence, counsel's argument should focus on the critical points made in both the supporting and opposing declarations regarding the reason for the absence, or lack thereof, that the party's presence at trial is not required, the alternatives to the party's presence, when counsel for the moving party first learned that the party would be absent, the reasons, if any, why those alternatives are preferable to a continuance, and the lack of diligence with which counsel for the moving party informed opposing counsel of the need for continuance and filed the motion for continuance.

It is also advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [*see Evid. [c] Discussion of Authorities

[i] Deposition Is Adequate

The factual background of Young v. Redman (1976) 55 Cal. App. 3d 827, 128 Cal. Rptr. 86 , is discussed in § 48.31[1][c][i]. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's action in denying a continuance to an absent party because the party simply failed to adjust personal plans in order to attend the trial. The court pointed out that even if defendant's absence had been avoidable, the trial court's action was justified because defendant's testimony was adequately preserved in a deposition which was entered into evidence by stipulation of the parties (55 Cal. App. 3d 827, 832) .

[ii] On-Site Taking of Testimony Is Alternative

In Russell v. Roberts (1974) 39 Cal. App. 3d 390, 397, 114 Cal. Rptr. 305 , plaintiff sued defendants to collect money owed on a promissory note. The court entered judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appealed. One of their contentions on appeal was that the trial court erred in refusing their request for a continuance to procure the testimony of one of the defendants who was hospitalized.

In affirming, the court of appeal held that a continuance was unnecessary because the absent defendant had already given one deposition (and plaintiff offered to stipulate to its use) and the trial court was willing to adjourn court to the hospital to take defendant's testimony (39 Cal. App. 3d 390, 397) .

[5] Party's Military Service Does Not Materially Affect Prosecution or Defense

[a] FORM Party's Absence Does Not Warrant Continuance

[This form should be combined with a general memorandum of points and authorities opposing a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance (see § 48.30) or included in an appellate brief.]

A COURT DOES NOT ABUSE ITS DISCRETION BY DENYING A MOTION FOR A STAY OF PROCEEDINGS UNDER SECTION 403 OF THE MILITARY AND VETERANS CODE BECAUSE NEITHER THE MOVING PARTY NOR THE FACTS OF THE CASE SHOW THAT THE ABILITY OF THE PARTY TO _____ [PROSECUTE or DEFEND] IS MATERIALLY AFFECTED.

A. When Party in Military Service Is Not Entitled to Continuance. A request for a stay of proceedings under Section 403 of Military and Veterans Code should be denied if neither the moving party nor the facts of the case show that the ability of the absent party to _____ [prosecute or defend] is materially affected by reason of the party's military service (see Miller v. Miller (1945) 26 Cal. 2d 119, 124-125, 156 P.2d 931 ; Christine M. v. Superior Court (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 1233, 1243-1245, 82 Cal. Rptr. 2d 220 ; Ridley v. Young (1944) 64 Cal. App. 2d 503, 514-515, 149 P.2d 76). The mere fact that the party requesting the continuance is in military service, without more, is insufficient to warrant a stay of proceedings (Christine M. v. Superior Court (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 1233, 1243-1245, 82 Cal. Rptr. 2d 220). While the initial 90-day stay is essentially automatic, the granting of an additional stay is discretionary; and a request for an additional stay may be denied if the servicemember's ability to appear and participate in the civil action is not adversely affected by his or her military duties (see George P. v. Superior Court (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 216, 225-226, 24 Cal. Rptr. 3d 919).

[Optional] B. Failure to Show That Attendance Impossible. A request for a stay of proceedings under Section 403 of the Military and Veterans Code may be denied if the moving party fails to show that the party's attendance is impossible (see Ridley v. Young (1944) 64 Cal. App. 2d 503, 514, 149 P.2d 76).

[Optional] C. Party Is Judgment Proof. A request for a stay of proceedings under Section 403 of the Military and Veterans Code may be denied if the party is _____ [as a practical matter judgment proof or a nominal participant in the case] (see Culver v. Superior Court (1954) 125 Cal. App. 2d 76, 78, 270 P.2d 78).

[Optional] D. Real Effect Is Benefit to Nonmilitary Coparty. A request for a stay of proceedings under Section 403 of the Military and Veterans Code may be denied if the real effect of the stay is to benefit a nonmilitary coparty (see Culver v. Superior Court (1954) 125 Cal. App. 2d 76, 78, 270 P.2d 78).

[i] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(b)], when a party seeking a continuance on the ground of his or her military service fails to establish that his or her military service actually affects his or her ability to prosecute or defend the action [see 50 U.S.C. App. § 521; Mil. & Vet. Code § 403].

The enactment of state statutes in 2002 protecting service members that are officers and enlisted members of the National Guard called or ordered into active state service by the Governor or President, and Reservists of the United States Military Reserve who have been called to full-time active duty [see Mil. & Vet. Code § 400 et seq.] originally paralleled the federal statutes of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act. The Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act has since been dramatically revised in 2003 and renamed the Servicemembers Civil Relief Act. State law, however, had not yet made such revisions. Accordingly, case law interpreting the former Soldiers' and Sailors' Relief Act may be used to make similar interpretations and assertions regarding the state statutes.

This form should be combined with all of the forms set forth in §§ 48.30 -48.39 that are applicable to the particular case. The forms in §§ 48.30 and 48.31 address procedural requirements that are applicable in every case and should be used to whenever the showing in support of the motion is deficient in that regard. The forms in §§ 48.34 -48.39 address particular circumstances that have been held not to constitute good cause, and therefore need only be used when they establish that the circumstances on which the particular request for continuance is based do not constitute good cause for continuance. The forms in §§ 48.32 and 48.33 may be used to augment a memorandum opposing a continuance if the request for continuance is not made in good faith or would place undue burden on the party opposing the continuance.

In 2003, the federal Servicemembers Civil Relief Act (formerly the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act) was significantly changed to make the granting of stays brought under this Act essentially automatic. The revisions to the federal law eliminated the requirement that servicemembers must show that their ability to defend the action is "materially affected" by military service in order to obtain a stay of proceedings. However, California law retains this requirement. The above referenced cases interpret the federal law prior to the 2003 revisions and may be useful in supporting a motion for a continuance brought under the California Military and Veterans Code which requires the servicemember to make a prima facie showing that his or her ability to prosecute or defend is materially affected by reason of military service [Mil. & Vet. Code § 400 et seq.].

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used to oppose the points and authorities set out in § 48.12[4].

[ii] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form, and in the other forms combined with this form, with the facts of his or her case. For example, if the continuance is sought because of a party's military service, counsel's argument should focus on the critical points made in both the supporting and opposing declarations regarding the lack of showing that the party's military service actually affects the party's ability to prosecute or defend the action, such as whether the party can obtain leave to be present at the trial or to be deposed, whether the party's presence at trial is required, the alternatives to the party's presence, when counsel for the moving party first learned that the party would be absent, the reasons, if any, why those alternatives are preferable to a continuance, and the lack of diligence with which counsel for the moving party informed opposing counsel of the need for continuance and filed the motion for continuance.

It is also advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, or by affidavits or declarations. Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits "upon a motion"), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish or negate the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Discussion of Authorities

[i] When Party in Military Service Is Not Entitled to Continuance

Note:

The Servicemembers Civil Relief Act, enacted in 2003 and replacing the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act, significantly changed the federal law to make the granting of initial stays essentially automatic. While the initial 90-day stay is essentially automatic, the granting of an additional stay is discretionary. The cases referenced below also may be useful in opposing a motion for a continuance brought under the Military and Veterans Code, which was patterned after the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act, and requires the servicemember to make a prima facie showing that his or her ability to prosecute or defend is materially affected by reason of military service [see Mil. & Vet. Code § 403].

The factual background of Miller v. Miller (1945) 26 Cal. 2d 119, 156 P.2d 931 , is discussed in § 48.12[4][c][ii]. The trial court denied defendant's motion for a stay under former § 521 of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act and the Supreme Court affirmed. The Court stated that the facts did not show how defendant was prejudiced by a hearing in his absence. All the relevant facts could be verified by defendant's counsel who represented him at all stages of the hearing. All necessary witnesses were available and subject to counsel's interrogation, and defendant's presence was not needed for an investigative purpose. The Court also pointed out that since defendant had procured the final decree while in the military service, the trial court could reasonably reject defendant's request to postpone any challenges against the decree by reason of military service (26 Cal. 2d 119, 124-125) .

In Miller, Christine M. v. Superior Court (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 1233, 82 Cal. Rptr. 2d 220 , and Ridley v. Young (1944) 64 Cal. App. 2d 503, 149 P.2d 76 , discussed, below, the courts were confronted by motions supported only by the fact that the parties were in military service. Those courts chose not to rely solely on the insufficiency of this showing in support of the motion but made an independent assessment of the facts to determine also that the party's ability to prosecute or defend was not materially affected.

In Christine M. v. Superior Court (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 1233, 82 Cal. Rptr. 2d 220 , the juvenile court on September 29, 1997, declared a minor a ward of the court, ordered the mother to attend parenting class, drug counseling and to undergo random drug testing, and ordered the father to attend an approved program of parent education. Prior to that time, the father had told a social worker, among other things, that he was unable to care for the minor and that he had enlisted in the Navy and would leave for training on August 1, 1997. On August 28, 1997, the court appointed counsel to represent the father (69 Cal. App. 4th 1233, 1236-1239) . On April 14, 1998, the father's counsel filed a written request to stay the proceedings pursuant to the former Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act asserting that the father's attendance in the armed forces away at sea made it impossible for the father to comply with any reunification order that he attend a parenting class. The request was denied. Thereafter, at the outset of a contested hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.22, father's counsel asked the court to reconsider its earlier denial of the request for a stay. The court denied the renewed request and after the hearing terminated family reunification services as to the mother and father, and set the matter for hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26. The mother and father then sought writ review of the court's order terminating family reunification services and setting the hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 (69 Cal. App. 4th 1233, 1235, 1239-1241) .

The court of appeal denied the writ, rejecting the fathers claim, among others, that the evidence showed he could not attend the court-ordered parenting class because he was stationed at sea, and thus was entitled to a stay pursuant to the former Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act (69 Cal. App. 4th 1233, 1235, 1242-1243) . The court, quoting from Johnson v. Johnson (1943), , stated that the Act does not grant an absolute right to a stay whenever it is made to appear that one of the parties is in military service. The Act was passed to relieve those in the armed services from the strain of litigation during their period of service where the fact of their service would adversely affect their prosecution or a defense of a pending case; the rights of civilian litigants must also be considered. The trial courts have a wide discretionary power to determine, in each case, whether the service man's or woman's rights would be adversely affected. However, if the rights of one in military service will be adversely affected unless a stay is given, the court must grant a stay. Doubtful cases should be resolved in favor of the service man or women (69 Cal. App. 4th 1233, 1243) . The court noted that an application for stay under the former Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act depends on the facts and circumstances of each case (69 Cal. App. 4th 1233, 1243) . The record before the court disclosed, in addition to a lack of desire on the father's part to parent the minor without the mother, a lack of interest on the father's part in the minor's well-being. The father never appeared personally at any hearing, and the written motion for a stay filed by the father's counsel included no declaration from the father indicating how the father's efforts to comply with the case plan, if any, had been impeded by his attendance in the military. Cases construing the Act have required a showing by the party engaged in military service that he or she is actually unavailable to participate and that his or her rights would be adversely affected by virtue of absence from trial. Courts denying motions for stays under section 531 have noted that the mere contentions of unavailability, without affirmative representations that leave to attend the trial was sought by the serviceman and refused, are insufficient to warrant such relief (69 Cal. App. 4th 1233, 1244) .

Although the father assertedly was at sea at the time of the contested hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.22, the father failed to demonstrate how his military service had prevented him from complying with the order that he attend an approved parenting class. Thus, the father failed to demonstrate he was unable to comply with the case plan by reason of his attendance in the military and that a stay was needed to protect the father's interests or to permit him to defend the action (69 Cal. App. 4th 1233, 1244-1245) . The juvenile court indicated a willingness to give the father the benefit of the doubt and stated that if he had shown some interest and simply couldn't comply because of being at sea that would be a completely different case, but he showed no such interest (69 Cal. App. 4th 1233, 1245) . In sum, the juvenile court did not abuse its discretion. The mere fact that the father was in the navy and stationed in Virginia, without more, was insufficient to warrant a stay of proceedings. Balancing the father's asserted right to parent the minor against the minor's statutorily recognized interest in a stable placement, the juvenile court could properly conclude the only effect of the requested stay would be to postpone the minor's progress toward stable placement. Accordingly, the juvenile court properly could conclude from the showing made the defense would not be materially affected by a denial of a continuance (69 Cal. App. 4th 1233, 1245) .

In Ridley v. Young (1944) 64 Cal. App. 2d 503, 149 P.2d 76 , plaintiff sought damages from defendant and others for personal injury and property damages arising out of a collision between a car driven by plaintiff and one owned by defendant. At the trial, defendant's attorney moved for a continuance under former § 521 of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act on the ground that defendant was then engaged in the military service. The trial court denied the motion, which was unsupported by an affidavit or any other showing. Subsequently, the court rendered judgment against all the defendants. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. In regard to the denial of defendant's motion for a continuance, the court concluded that defendant failed to show that the defense would be materially affected by denial of the continuance. Although defendant was in the military service, he did not show that he could not get a leave to attend trial. Further, his presence was not required as a witness; he was not present at the accident and his answer conceded that he owned the car and had given the other defendant permission to drive it. The court concluded that the federal act should not be invoked for the purpose of delaying or defeating an orderly and expeditious trial of a valid suit (64 Cal. App. 2d 503, 514-515) .

In George P. v. Superior Court (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 216, 24 Cal. Rptr. 3d 919 , a request for an additional stay under the federal Servicemebers Civil Relief Act [50 U.S.C. App. § 501 et seq.] was denied. During the course of a juvenile dependency proceeding regarding custody of a minor child, the father, a member of the National Guard, was sent to Iraq. The father was granted an initial 90-day stay by the juvenile court. He later filed a motion for an additional stay on the ground that his military service prevented him from making further appearances in the case. The juvenile court denied the father's motion for an additional stay finding that the father had been given "more than a fair opportunity" to participate in the proceedings. The father then filed an extraordinary writ of review of that denial.

The father argued that the juvenile court erred in denying his request for an additional stay. The father argued that stays are mandatory under the Servicemembers Civil Relief Act. The court of appeal disagreed. While the initial 90-day stay is essentially automatic, the granting of an additional stay is discretionary. A request for an additional stay may be denied if the servicemember's ability to appear and participate in the civil action is not adversely affected by his or her military duties. In this instance, the court held that the father's military service did not adversely affect his participation in the case. The record demonstrated that the father had appeared in the action and received services for reunification with his child for essentially the entire period required by law. The father had also made a personal appearance during a leave of absence from the military and had already provided necessary testimony. Furthermore, the father had been represented by counsel at all times and had been able to communicate with social services staff and counsel while he was in Iraq. In this particular instance, the court opined that the father had already been given a full and fair opportunity to reunify with his child and that any additional stay was merely delaying the inevitable. Accordingly, the juvenile court did not abuse its discretion in denying the stay.

[ii] Failure to Show That Attendance Is Impossible

Note:

The Servicemembers Civil Relief Act, enacted in 2003 and replacing the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act, significantly changed the federal law to make the granting of initial stays essentially automatic. While the initial 90-day stay is automatic, the granting of an additional stay is discretionary. The case referenced below also may be useful in supporting a motion for a continuance brought under the Military and Veterans Code, which was patterned after the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act, and requires the servicemember to make a prima facie showing that his or her ability to prosecute or defend is materially affected by reason of military service [see Mil. & Vet. Code § 403].

The factual background of Ridley v. Young (1944) 64 Cal. App. 2d 503, 149 P.2d 76 , is discussed in [i], above. In affirming the trial court's denial of defendant's request for a continuance under § 521 of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act former the court pointed out that defendant only furnished a certificate that showed he was engaged in the military service. The court found not only that such an engagement by itself could not establish that defendant's ability to defend was materially affected, but also that such a certificate failed to show that defendant could not obtain a leave of absence to attend the trial (64 Cal. App. 2d 503, 514).

[iii] Party Is Judgment Proof

Note:

The Servicemembers Civil Relief Act, enacted in 2003 and replacing the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act, significantly changed the federal law to make the granting of initial stays essentially automatic. While the initial 90-day stay is automatic, the granting of an additional stay is discretionary. The case referenced below also may be useful in supporting a motion for a continuance brought under the Military and Veterans Code, which was patterned after the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act, and requires the servicemember to make a prima facie showing that his or her ability to prosecute or defend is materially affected by reason of military service [see Mil. & Vet. Code § 403].

Culver v. Superior Court (1954) 125 Cal. App. 2d 76, 270 P.2d 78 , involved a lawsuit against the driver of an automobile and his parents for damages arising from an automobile accident. Prior to the trial and at the trial, defendants' attorney requested a continuance under former § 521 of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act because defendant's son was in the army overseas. The trial court denied the motion, but granted a short continuance for the purpose of taking the son's deposition in Korea. Defendants petitioned for a writ of prohibition to prevent the trial from proceeding further.

The court of appeal denied the writ. Plaintiffs' counsel conceded that the son was judgment proof; therefore, the ability of the son to conduct a defense was not materially affected. Although the parents would be denied the benefit of their son's testimony at trial, they would still be able to obtain a deposition. The court found also that the federal law confers no benefits on coparties of a member of the military service or civilians whose witnesses are in the military services (125 Cal. App. 2d 76, 78) .

[iv] Real Effect Is Benefit to Nonmilitary Coparty

Note:

The Servicemembers Civil Relief Act, enacted in 2003 and replacing the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act, significantly changed the federal law to make the granting of initial stays essentially automatic. While the initial 90-day stay is automatic, the granting of an additional stay is discretionary. The case referenced below also may be useful in supporting a motion for a continuance brought under the Military and Veterans Code, which was patterned after the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act, and requires the servicemember to make a prima facie showing that his or her ability to prosecute or defend is materially affected by reason of military service [see Mil. & Vet. Code § 403].

Culver v. Superior Court (1954) 125 Cal. App. 2d 76, 270 P.2d 78 , is discussed in [iii], above.

[d] Additional Authorities

[i] When Party in Military Service Is Not Entitled to Continuance

Note:

The Servicemembers Civil Relief Act, enacted in 2003 and replacing the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act, significantly changed the federal law to make the granting of initial stays essentially automatic. While the initial 90-day stay is automatic, the granting of an additional stay is discretionary. The case referenced below also may be useful in supporting a motion for a continuance brought under the Military and Veterans Code, which was patterned after the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act, and requires the servicemember to make a prima facie showing that his or her ability to prosecute or defend is materially affected by reason of military service [see Mil. & Vet. Code § 403].

In Whealton v. Whealton (1967) 67 Cal. 2d 656, 63 Cal. Rptr. 291, 432 P.2d 979 , plaintiff, a petty officer on active duty in the Navy and stationed in California, initiated an action for annulment against his spouse who lived in Maryland. The trial court entered a default judgment against defendant and annulled the marriage. When defendant subsequently moved to set aside the judgment and to file a cross complaint for separate maintenance, plaintiff was outside the country on military orders. His attorney moved for a stay of proceedings under former § 521 of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act [50 U.S.C. App. § 501 et seq.], arguing that plaintiff would not be available to assist counsel or appear as a witness. Although the trial court denied plaintiff's request for a stay, it subsequently denied defendant's motion also, and defendant appealed.

The Supreme Court held that the default judgment must be set aside because it was entered prematurely. Plaintiff attempted to avoid this holding by contending that the trial court should not have acted on defendant's motion in the first place because plaintiff was entitled to a stay of proceedings. However, the Court also held that plaintiff's ability to prosecute was not materially affected under former 50 U.S.C. App. § 521 because plaintiff's presence was not required. The court pointed out the plaintiff's attorney was already familiar with the facts and they were not in dispute; rather, the disputed question was one of law (67 Cal. 2d 656, 665-666) .

§ 48.36 Witness's Absence Does Not Require Continuance

[1] Failure to Establish Materiality of Expected Testimony and Diligence to Obtain It

[a] FORM Witness's Absence Does Not Require Continuance

[This form should be combined with a general memorandum of points and authorities opposing a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance (see § 48.30) or included in an appellate brief].

A COURT DOES NOT ABUSE ITS DISCRETION BY DENYING A MOTION FOR A CONTINUANCE ON THE GROUND OF ABSENCE OF A MATERIAL WITNESS IF THE MOVING PARTY FAILS TO DESCRIBE THE EXPECTED TESTIMONY AND HAS NOT SUBPOENAED THE WITNESS OR OBTAINED THE WITNESS'S AGREEMENT TO TESTIFY.

A. Materiality and Diligence. A motion to postpone a trial on the ground of the absence of evidence can only be made on affidavit showing the evidence expected to be obtained is material and that due diligence has been used to procure it (Code Civ. Proc. § 595.4).

[Optional] B. Materiality of Expected Testimony Must Be Shown. If a party requests a continuance to produce an absent witness but fails to establish the materiality of the expected testimony, the continuance may be denied (Lea v. Shank (1970) 5 Cal. App. 3d 964, 977).

[Optional] C. Failure to Submit Affidavit. When a party requests a continuance to produce an absent witness but fails to submit an affidavit to support the request, the continuance may be denied (Cade v. Mid-City Hosp. Corp. (1975) 45 Cal. App. 3d 589, 599-600, 119 Cal. Rptr. 571).

[Optional] D. Failure to Subpoena Witness or Obtain Witness's Agreement to Appear. The unavailability of a witness only constitutes good cause for continuance when the witness has been subpoenaed or is beyond the reach of subpoena and has agreed to be present, and his or her absence is due to an unavoidable emergency that counsel did not know or could not reasonably have known at the time of the pretrial or trial setting conference Marcucci v. Vowinckel (1913) 164 Cal. 693, 130 P. 430 ; Kramer v. Kramer (1961) 197 Cal. App. 2d 727, 731, 17 Cal. Rptr. 461).

[Optional] E. Failure to Describe Testimony. A continuance may be denied to a party who seeks to produce an absent witness if the party fails to describe the testimony which the witness will give (Lewis v. Neptune Society Corp. (1987) 195 Cal. App. 3d 427, 430, 240 Cal. Rptr. 656 ; Stephens v. Aviation Research & Dev. Pub. Corp. (1966) 243 Cal. App. 2d 349, 351, 52 Cal. Rptr. 322).

[b] Comments

[i] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be combined with the form in § 48.30 and submitted in opposition to a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(b)], when a party seeking a continuance to produce an absent witness fails to establish the materiality of the expected testimony or that the witness has been subpoenaed or, if the witness is beyond the reach of subpoena, has agreed to testify [Code Civ. Proc. § 595.4]. It should also be combined with any of the authorities in [2]-[7], below that address more specifically types of testimony that are not considered material and other procedural deficiencies in the showing required to support a motion for continuance based on the absence of a witness.

Counsel should also consider whether any of the authorities in the forms set forth in §§ 48.31 -48.39 are applicable to the particular case, and if so, include those authorities as well. The forms in § 48.31 address procedural requirements that are applicable in every case and should be used to whenever the showing in support of the motion is deficient in that regard. The forms in §§ 48.34 -48.39 address particular circumstances that have been held not to constitute good cause. The forms in §§ 48.32 and 48.33 are for use to augment a memorandum opposing a continuance if the request for continuance is not made in good faith or would place undue burden on the party opposing the continuance.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used to oppose the points and authorities set out in § 48.13[1].

[ii] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form, and in the other forms combined with this form, with the facts of his or her case. For example, if the continuance is sought because of a the unavailability of a witness, counsel's argument should focus on the critical points made in both the supporting and opposing declarations regarding the insufficiencies in the showing in support of the motion: that the witness's testimony is not material, that counsel for the moving party was not diligent in anticipating the need for that testimony, and/or failed to subpoena that witness, the alternatives to the witness's testimony, the reasons, if any, why those alternatives are preferable to a continuance, when counsel for the moving party first learned that the witness would be absent, and the lack of diligence with which counsel for the moving party informed opposing counsel of the need for continuance and filed the motion for continuance.

It is also advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see former Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, or by affidavits or declarations. Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits "upon a motion"), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish or negate the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Discussion of Authorities

[i] Materiality of Expected Testimony Must Be Shown

Lea v. Shank (1970) 5 Cal. App. 3d 964 , was an action for personal injuries between parties involved in a truck collision. On the day of trial, defendant's attorney moved for a continuance to obtain a neurological examination of plaintiff, explaining that he had first learned two days earlier that a neurologist would testify for plaintiff. The attorney also stated he did not know how soon he could get a neurologist to make the examination and be available as a witness. The motion for continuance was denied. Subsequently, the case was submitted to the jury solely on the issue of proximate cause and damages; the jury found for plaintiff. Defendant appealed.

On appeal, the court of appeal in part held that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion for a continuance for an indefinite time to obtain evidence of an unknown content. Although the court did not explicitly state that defendant had failed to show that the expected testimony would be material, it cited Stephens v. Aviation Research & Dev. Pub. Corp. (1966) 243 Cal. App. 2d 349, 52 Cal. Rptr. 322 , discussed in [iii], below, which held that a similarly deficient statement failed to meet the requirements of Code Civ. Proc. § 595 [now Code Civ. Proc. § 595.4] in materiality (5 Cal. App. 3d 964, 977) .

[ii] Failure to Submit Affidavit

In Cade v. Mid-City Hosp. Corp. (1975) 45 Cal. App. 3d 589, 119 Cal. Rptr. 571 , decedent's heirs sued a hospital and several doctors for damages resulting from the alleged negligent treatment of decedent. Judgment was for defendant; and plaintiffs appealed, arguing, in part, that the trial court erred in refusing to grant plaintiffs a continuance in order to present an absent expert witness. Plaintiffs' counsel had first informed the judge that the witness was ill during his presentation of plaintiffs' evidence, but did not request the continuance until defendant's case was drawing to a close.

In affirming the action of the trial court, the court of appeal pointed out that plaintiffs had produced a letter rather than an affidavit stating the witness was ill, and while a showing by affidavit has not been regarded as mandatory, it reflects the policy of encouraging prompt trial of lawsuits. Further, the witness was not going to offer new, innovative testimony but was expected to support the view of plaintiffs' other expert witness (45 Cal. App. 3d 589, 599-600) .

[iii] Failure to Subpoena Witness or Obtain Witness's Agreement to Appear

In Marcucci v. Vowinckel (1913) 164 Cal. 693, 130 P. 430 , plaintiff sued defendant physician to recover damages for injuries resulting from surgery. At the conclusion of plaintiff's presentation of evidence, the trial court granted defendant's motion for a nonsuit. Plaintiff appealed, contending that the trial court erred in denying her motion for a continuance which was made on the afternoon of the last day at trial and sought to continue the trial until the following morning to produce three additional witnesses.

The Supreme Court affirmed, determining that the record supported the action of the trial court in that there was no showing of any diligence whatsoever. As an illustration, the Court pointed out that plaintiff failed to show the issuance and service of a subpoena, the witness's promise of attendance, the nature and materiality of the testimony, or even the names of the witnesses (164 Cal. 693, 694-695) .

In Kramer v. Kramer (1961) 197 Cal. App. 2d 727, 17 Cal. Rptr. 461 , plaintiff filed an affidavit to obtain a writ of execution on a judgment against defendant, her former spouse, to collect money owed for child support. After the trial court issued the writ for over $7,000, defendant moved to quash the writ on the ground that, although he had not paid in cash the payments specified in plaintiff's affidavit, he had conveyed property to plaintiff as prepayment of the monthly payments. As part of the evidence heard by the trial court on this issue, plaintiff testified that she had sold the property and given defendant a check for $10,000. When defendant denied receiving this check, plaintiff's counsel asked for a continuance of 15 minutes to produce a rebuttal witness who was already in the downtown area. Stating that it should not have to wait during the noon hour for a witness to arrive, the trial court denied the motion and subsequently issued an order quashing the writ of execution. Plaintiff appealed, contending, in part, that the trial court erred in denying her motion for a continuance.

The court of appeal, in affirming, pointed out that the witness had not been subpoenaed and it did not appear that the trial court abused its discretion (197 Cal. App. 2d 727, 731) .

[iv] Failure to Describe Testimony

Lewis v. Neptune Society Corp. (1987) 195 Cal. App. 3d 427, 240 Cal. Rptr. 656 , was an action by the assignee of a law firm against a corporation to recover legal fees owed the firm. On the day set for trial, the corporation's attorney appeared and requested a one-month continuance because of the inability of a witness to attend the trial. The witness's declaration stated that he had recently undergone surgery for skin cancer, which affected his ability to appear as a witness, and that, as a result of testifying in another trial, he was physically and mentally unable to testify. The motion was denied. Judgment was for plaintiff; and defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, noting that motions requesting continuances are to be made on written notice [see former Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 375(b) , now Rule 3.1332(b), which was not done, and that the witness knew several days before trial that he would not appear and yet defendant made no attempt to notify plaintiff. The court said that, in addition, Code Civ. Proc. § 595.4 requires an affidavit showing the materiality of the evidence expected to be obtained and that due diligence has been used to procure it, but that the witness's declaration failed to state what the witness's testimony would be (195 Cal. App. 3d 427, 430) .

In Stevens v. Aviation Research & Dev. Pub. Corp. (1966) 243 Cal. App. 2d 349, 52 Cal. Rptr. 322 , plaintiff sued defendant, a New York corporation, for breach of contract. Although the pretrial conference order was filed on November 1, 1961, the trial court granted several continuances both at the plaintiff's and defendant's request, and on the court's own motion until June 25, 1963, when the court set the trial date for October 14, 1963, with no further continuances. On October 14, the trial court denied defendant's request for an additional continuance on the ground that defendant had gone into bankruptcy and neither the president nor another witness could attend the trial in California at that time. Following the entry of a judgment of damages for plaintiff, defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, stating that former Code Civ. Proc. § 595 [now Code Civ. Proc. § 595.4] requires an affidavit showing the materiality of the expected evidence but defendant's counsel gave no hint whatsoever of what the expected testimony would be (243 Cal. App. 2d 349, 351) .

[2] Witness Needed Only for Impeachment

[a] FORM Witness's Absence Does Not Require Continuance

[This form should be combined with a general memorandum opposing a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance (see § 48.30) or included in an appellate brief.]

A COURT DOES NOT ABUSE ITS DISCRETION BY DENYING A MOTION FOR A CONTINUANCE ON THE GROUND OF ABSENCE OF A MATERIAL WITNESS IF THAT WITNESS IS NEEDED ONLY FOR IMPEACHMENT.

A. Witness Needed Only for Impeachment. A party may be denied a continuance to produce an absent witness if the witness is needed only for impeachment (In re Steiner (1955) 134 Cal. App. 2d 391, 395, 285 P.2d 972).

[b] Comments

[i] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be combined with the forms in §§ 48.30 and [1], above, and submitted in opposition to a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(b)], when a party seeking a continuance to produce an absent witness would use the absent witness's testimony only for impeachment [Code Civ. Proc. § 595.4]. It may also be combined with any of the authorities in [3]-[7], below, that address other specific types of testimony that are not considered material and other procedural deficiencies in the showing required to support a motion for continuance based on the absence of a witness.

Counsel should also consider whether any of the authorities in the forms set forth in §§ 48.31 -48.39 are applicable to the particular case, and if so, include those authorities as well. The forms in § 48.31 address procedural requirements that are applicable in every case and should be used to whenever the showing in support of the motion is deficient in that regard. The forms in §§ 48.34 -48.39 address particular circumstances that have been held not to constitute good cause. The forms in §§ 48.32 and 48.33 are for use to augment a memorandum opposing a continuance if the request for continuance is not made in good faith or would place undue burden on the party opposing the continuance.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used to oppose the points and authorities set out in § 48.13[1].

[ii] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form, and in the other forms combined with this form, with the facts of his or her case. For example, if the continuance is sought because of a the unavailability of a witness, but that witness would be used only for impeachment, counsel's argument should focus on the fact that impeachment testimony is not considered material.
