It is also advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, or by affidavits or declarations. Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits "upon a motion"), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish or negate the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[iii] Related Points and Authorities

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[c] Discussion of Authorities

[i] Witness Needed Only for Impeachment

In re Steiner (1955) 134 Cal. App. 2d 391, 285 P.2d 972 , involved a juvenile court proceeding at which Steiner was declared a ward of the juvenile court. The evidence at the hearing consisted mainly of the testimony of Steiner's victim; Steiner's counsel requested a continuance to produce witnesses who would impeach the victim's testimony by showing that in the past the victim had threatened Steiner--a statement which the victim flatly denied. The trial court denied the request.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that, besides counsel's failure to name witnesses or submit affidavits, a continuance is properly refused if the testimony of the absent witness would only tend to impeach a witness of the adverse party (134 Cal. App. 2d 391, 395) .

[3] Cumulative Testimony

[a] FORM Witness's Absence Does Not Require Continuance

[This form should be combined with a general memorandum opposing a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance (see § 48.30) or included in an appellate brief].

A COURT DOES NOT ABUSE ITS DISCRETION BY DENYING A MOTION FOR A CONTINUANCE ON THE GROUND OF ABSENCE OF A MATERIAL WITNESS IF THE EXPECTED TESTIMONY WOULD BE MERELY CUMULATIVE OR SUPPORTIVE OF EVIDENCE ALREADY PRESENTED.

A. Cumulative Testimony. A party may be denied a continuance to produce an absent witness if the expected testimony would merely be cumulative or supportive of evidence already presented (Lewis v. Neptune Society Corp. (1987) 195 Cal. App. 3d 427, 429, 240 Cal. Rptr. 656 ; Cade v. Mid-City Hosp. Corp. (1975) 45 Cal. App. 3d 589, 600, 119 Cal. Rptr. 571 ; Gibson v. Cobb (1965) 236 Cal. App. 2d 226, 235-237, 46 Cal. Rptr. 57).

[b] Comments

[i] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be combined with the forms in §§ 48.30 and [1], above, and submitted in opposition to a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(b)], when a party seeking a continuance to produce an absent witness would use the absent witness's testimony as cumulative evidence [Code Civ. Proc. § 595.4]. It may also be combined with any of the authorities in [2], above, or [4]-[7], below, that address other specific types of testimony that are not considered material and other procedural deficiencies in the showing required to support a motion for continuance based on the absence of a witness.

Counsel should also consider whether any of the authorities in the forms set forth in §§ 48.31 -48.39 are applicable to the particular case, and if so, include those authorities as well. The forms in § 48.31 address procedural requirements that are applicable in every case and should be used to whenever the showing in support of the motion is deficient in that regard. The forms in §§ 48.34 -48.39 address particular circumstances that have been held not to constitute good cause. The forms in §§ 48.32 and 48.33 are for use to augment a memorandum opposing a continuance if the request for continuance is not made in good faith or would place undue burden on the party opposing the continuance.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used to oppose the points and authorities set out in § 48.13[1].

[ii] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form, and in the other forms combined with this form, with the facts of his or her case. For example, if the continuance is sought because of a the unavailability of a witness, but that witness's testimony would be only cumulative of other testimony, counsel's argument should focus on the fact that the same evidence as that to be offered by the absent witness is available from another source.

It is also advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, or by affidavits or declarations. Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits "upon a motion"), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish or negate the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[iii] Related Points and Authorities

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[c] Discussion of Authorities

[i] Cumulative Testimony

The facts and procedural background of Lewis v. Neptune Society Corp. (1987) 195 Cal. App. 3d 427, 240 Cal. Rptr. 656 , are discussed in [1][c][iii], above. In affirming the judgment for plaintiff, the court said it is not an abuse of discretion to deny a continuance when the testimony sought from an unavailable witness would be cumulative to that of other witnesses (195 Cal. App. 3d 427, 429).

The factual background of Cade v. Mid-City Hosp. Corp. (1975) 45 Cal. App. 3d 589, 119 Cal. Rptr. 571 , is discussed in [2][c][i], above. In that case, the court of appeal found that an additional reason, besides the failure to submit an affidavit, for denying the motion for a continuance was the fact that the absent witness was expected to offer not new, innovative testimony, but rather, testimony supporting the view of plaintiff's other expert witness (45 Cal. App. 3d 589, 600) .

In Gibson v. Cobb (1965) 236 Cal. App. 2d 226, 46 Cal. Rptr. 57 , plaintiff landowner brought a quiet title action against defendants, owners of property adjacent to plaintiff's land. Near the close of trial, defendants requested a four-day continuance to call an absent witness and filed a supporting affidavit. The trial court stated that the affidavit contained no material that was not cumulative or testified to in substance by other witnesses and suggested there had been a lack of due diligence. After denying the request for a continuance, the trial court rendered a judgment for plaintiff. Defendants appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that, given the nature of the proposed testimony, there was no abuse of discretion in denying the continuance (236 Cal. App. 2d 226, 235-237) . Furthermore, the court found that insofar as the affidavit contained statements based on information and belief, the trial court must disregard it as hearsay or mere opinion.

[4] Alternative Methods of Proof

[a] FORM Witness's Absence Does Not Require Continuance

[This form should be combined with a general memorandum of points and authorities opposing a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance (see § 48.30) or included in an appellate brief].

A COURT DOES NOT ABUSE ITS DISCRETION BY DENYING A MOTION FOR A CONTINUANCE ON THE GROUND OF ABSENCE OF A MATERIAL WITNESS IF THE MOVING PARTY FAILS TO SHOW THAT THE EVIDENCE COULD NOT BE PROVEN IN OTHER WAYS.

A. Alternative Methods of Proof. A party may be denied a continuance to produce an absent witness if he or she fails to show that the evidence the witness would provide cannot be proven in other ways (Arntz Contracting Co. v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. (1996) 47 Cal. App. 4th 464, 489, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 888 ; Oak Knoll Broadcasting Corp. v. Hudgings (1969) 275 Cal. App. 2d 563, 565-566, 80 Cal. Rptr. 175 ; Agnew v. Larson (1961) 197 Cal. App. 2d 444, 450, 17 Cal. Rptr. 538).

[b] Comments

[i] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be combined with the forms in §§ 48.30 and [1], above, and submitted in opposition to a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(b)], when a party seeking a continuance to produce an absent witness has other ways of proving the facts to which that witness would testify [Code Civ. Proc. § 595.4]. The authority in this form may also be combined with any of the authorities in [2]-[3], above, or [5]-[7], below, that address other specific types of testimony that are not considered material and other procedural deficiencies in the showing required to support a motion for continuance based on the absence of a witness.

Counsel should also consider whether any of the authorities in the forms set forth in §§ 48.31 -48.39 are applicable to the particular case, and if so, include those authorities as well. The forms in § 48.31 address procedural requirements that are applicable in every case and should be used to whenever the showing in support of the motion is deficient in that regard. The forms in §§ 48.34 -48.39 address particular circumstances that have been held not to constitute good cause. The forms in §§ 48.32 and 48.33 are for use to augment a memorandum opposing a continuance if the request for continuance is not made in good faith or would place undue burden on the party opposing the continuance.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used to oppose the points and authorities set out in § 48.13[1].

[ii] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form, and in the other forms combined with this form, with the facts of his or her case. For example, if the continuance is sought because of a the unavailability of a witness, but there is an alternative method of proving the same facts, counsel's argument should focus on those alternatives, and why they are preferable to a continuance, or at least do not prejudice the moving party.

It is also advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, or by affidavits or declarations. Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits "upon a motion"), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish or negate the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[iii] Related Points and Authorities

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[c] Discussion of Authorities

[i] Alternative Methods of Proof

In Arntz Contracting Co. v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. (1996) 47 Cal. App. 4th 464, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 888 , an action by a general contractor against its surety, the surety claimed that the trial court abused its discretion in denying its motion for a trial continuance when its underwriting expert suffered a stroke shortly before trial and was unable to testify. The court of appeal began its analysis by stating that on rulings on motions for continuances it would defer to the sound discretion of the trial court and would not disturb a ruling absent a clear showing of abuse of discretion. The court then noted that the expert's deposition testimony was available for use at trial, a former party witness testified competently as to surety practices, and the trial court forbade the general contractor from commenting to the jury about the absence of a nonparty surety expert witness (47 Cal. App. 4th 464, 489) . The court thus concluded that there was no abuse of discretion in denying an open-ended continuance.

In Oak Knoll Broadcasting Corp. v. Hudgings (1969) 275 Cal. App. 2d 563, 80 Cal. Rptr. 175 , plaintiff had levied a claim against funds deposited by defendant in a savings and loan association. Defendant's spouse filed a third party claim under Code Civ. Proc. § 689, declaring the funds to be community property and not liable for the contracts of the wife after marriage. On the day of the hearing to determine title to the funds, plaintiff's attorney, after learning from the keeper of records at the savings and loan association that the records would not be ready until later in the week, requested a continuance. His motion was denied and judgment given subsequently for defendant. Plaintiff appealed, arguing that the trial court abused its discretion in denying the motion for continuance.

The court of appeal affirmed. Although plaintiff's attorney had received 10 days' notice of the hearing, he did not serve a subpoena deces tecum on the keeper of the records until seven days later. He also gave the keeper of the records permission to be placed "on call." The court concluded that plaintiff's attorney had thus not proceeded promptly to secure the attendance of the witness even though the statute providing for hearings on third party claims suggested that time was of the essence since it calls for a hearing within 20 days unless continued for good cause. Further, the court stated that when a continuance is requested because of the absence of a material witness, there must be a showing that the facts expected to be established by the witness cannot otherwise be proven. No such showing was made here (275 Cal. App. 2d 563, 565-566) .

In Agnew v. Larson (1961) 197 Cal. App. 2d 444, 17 Cal. Rptr. 538 , plaintiff sued defendant doctor for malpractice. The trial court rendered a judgment for the defendant. Plaintiff appealed, contending, among other things, that the trial court had abused its discretion in denying her motion for a continuance which she requested because one of her witnesses was out of the state on the date set for trial and not available for approximately a month.

The court of appeal affirmed. The facts show that the witness had been served with a subpoena duces tecum almost two months before the scheduled trial date. On the other hand, the case had been set for trial and ordered off the calender at the request of plaintiff on five occasions. There had been, overall, 15 continuances and three mistrials prior to the trial in which plaintiff requested the continuance for the absent witness. The court of appeal concluded that most of the lost time was caused by plaintiff and her attorneys; it applied the rule that if a material witness is absent from the trial there must be a showing that the facts expected to be proved cannot otherwise be proved (197 Cal. App. 2d 444, 450) and pointed out plaintiff's concession that the witness she had called might have been a hostile witness.

[d] Additional Authorities

[i] Alternative Methods of Proof

The factual background of Young v. Redman (1976) 55 Cal. App. 3d 827, 128 Cal. Rptr. 86 , is discussed in § 48.31[1][c][i]. In that case the court of appeal upheld the denial of a continuance to an absent party because the party failed to establish that his absence was unavoidable. However, the court stated that even if the situation had been otherwise, denial of the continuance was justified because the party's testimony was adequately preserved in a deposition which was entered into evidence by stipulation of the parties (55 Cal. App. 3d 827, 832) .

[5] Failure to Anticipate Need for Witness

[a] FORM Witness's Absence Does Not Require Continuance

[This form should be combined with a general memorandum opposing a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance (see § 48.30) or included in an appellate brief].

A COURT DOES NOT ABUSE ITS DISCRETION BY DENYING A MOTION FOR A CONTINUANCE ON THE GROUND OF ABSENCE OF A MATERIAL WITNESS WHEN THE MOVING PARTY ATTEMPTS TO JUSTIFY ITS LACK OF DILIGENCE BUT COULD HAVE ANTICIPATED THE NEED FOR THE WITNESS.

A. Party Could Have Anticipated Need for Witness. A party may be denied a continuance to produce an absent witness if the party's lack of diligence is unjustified because he or she could have anticipated the need for the witness (Estate of Smith (1973) 9 Cal. 3d 74, 81, 106 Cal. Rptr. 774, 507 P.2d 78).

[b] Comments

[i] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be combined with the forms in §§ 48.30 and [1], above, and submitted in opposition to a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(b)] based on a witness's absence when the moving party's counsel could have known the absent witness's testimony would be required [Code Civ. Proc. § 595.4]. The authority in this form may also be combined with any of the authorities in [2]-[4], above, or [6]-[7], below, that address other specific types of testimony that are not considered material and other procedural deficiencies in the showing required to support a motion for continuance based on the absence of a witness.

Counsel should also consider whether any of the authorities in the forms set forth in §§ 48.31 -48.39 are applicable to the particular case, and if so, include those authorities as well. The forms in § 48.31 address procedural requirements that are applicable in every case and should be used to whenever the showing in support of the motion is deficient in that regard. The forms in §§ 48.34 -48.39 address particular circumstances that have been held not to constitute good cause. The forms in §§ 48.32 and 48.33 are for use to augment a memorandum opposing a continuance if the request for continuance is not made in good faith or would place undue burden on the party opposing the continuance.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used to oppose the points and authorities set out in § 48.13[1].

[ii] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form, and in the other forms combined with this form, with the facts of his or her case. For example, if the continuance is sought because of a the unavailability of a witness, but counsel for the moving party could have anticipated the need for that witness, opposing counsel's argument should focus on any and all pleadings, discovery, pretrial statements, and declarations in support of the motion that would have put the moving party on notice the absent witness's testimony would be required and point out whether counsel for the moving party made any attempt to obtain that witness's testimony.

It is also advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, or by affidavits or declarations. Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits "upon a motion"), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish or negate the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[iii] Related Points and Authorities

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[c] Discussion of Authorities

[i] Party Could Have Anticipated Need for Witness

In Estate of Smith (1973) 9 Cal. 3d 74, 106 Cal. Rptr. 774, 507 P.2d 78 , plaintiff claimed a share of decedent's estate as the decedent's spouse. At the conclusion of the probate hearing on plaintiff's claim, plaintiff's counsel moved for a continuance to bring plaintiff, who lived in Australia, before the court to rebut evidence that decedent was married both before and after his marriage to plaintiff and to show that plaintiff and decedent had not been divorced. The trial court denied this motion and subsequently entered an order denying plaintiff's claim. Plaintiff appealed.

The Supreme Court, although reversing the trial court's order in regard to a separate claimant, affirmed the order denying plaintiff's claims. Without explaining what ground was urged in support of the continuance, the Court determined that denial of the continuance was proper because plaintiff had full advance knowledge, from both the replies to her petition and the will itself, that the issue of the termination of her marriage would be raised at the hearing (9 Cal. 3d 74, 81) .

[6] Agreement to Admit Expected Evidence

[a] FORM Witness's Absence Does Not Require Continuance

[This form should be combined with a general memorandum of points and authorities opposing a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance (see § 48.30) or included in an appellate brief.]

A COURT DOES NOT ABUSE ITS DISCRETION BY DENYING A MOTION FOR A CONTINUANCE ON THE GROUND OF ABSENCE OF A MATERIAL WITNESS IF THE ADVERSE PARTY ADMITS THAT THE EXPECTED EVIDENCE OF THE WITNESS WOULD BE CONSIDERED GIVEN AT TRIAL.

A. Agreement to Admit Expected Evidence. A party may be denied a continuance to produce an absent witness when the trial court has required the party to state upon affidavit the expected evidence but the adverse party admits that such evidence would be given and that it be considered as actually given on the trial, or offered and overruled as improper (Code Civ. Proc. § 595.4; Eggink v. Robertson (1961) 191 Cal. App. 2d 496, 501, 13 Cal. Rptr. 76).

[b] Comments

[i] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be combined with the forms in §§ 48.30 and [1], above, and submitted in opposition to a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(b)] on the ground of a witness's absence, when the party seeking the continuance has stated in an affidavit the expected evidence and the opposing party admits that such evidence would be considered as actually given at trial or, as offered and overruled as improper [Code Civ. Proc. § 595.4]. Although Code Civ. Proc. § 595.4 states that the trial must not be postponed if the opposing party makes such an admission, other statutes mandating continuances have been interpreted as directory [see Thurmond v. Superior Court (1967) 66 Cal. 2d 836, 838-839, 59 Cal. Rptr. 273, 427 P.2d 985 ; see also Eggink v. Robertson (1961) 191 Cal. App. 2d 496, 13 Cal. Rptr. 76 , discussed in [c][i], below, in which the court avoided saying that under Code Civ. Proc. § 595.4, denial of a continuance was mandatory].

The authority in this form may also be combined with any of the authorities in [2]-[5], above, or [7], below, that address other specific types of testimony that are not considered material and other procedural deficiencies in the showing required to support a motion for continuance based on the absence of a witness.

Counsel should also consider whether any of the authorities in the forms set forth in §§ 48.31 -48.39 are applicable to the particular case, and if so, include those authorities as well. The forms in § 48.31 address procedural requirements that are applicable in every case and should be used to whenever the showing in support of the motion is deficient in that regard. The forms in 48.34 -48.39 address particular circumstances that have been held not to constitute good cause. The forms in §§ 48.32 and 48.33 are for use to augment a memorandum opposing a continuance if the request for continuance is not made in good faith or would place undue burden on the party opposing the continuance.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used to oppose the points and authorities set out in § 48.13[1].

[ii] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form, and in the other forms combined with this form, with the facts of his or her case. For example, if the continuance is sought because of a the unavailability of a witness, but counsel for the opposing party will or has agree that the expected testimony may be considered as actually given, or as offered and overruled as improper, opposing counsel's argument should focus that agreement or inadmissibility.

It is also advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, or by affidavits or declarations. Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits "upon a motion"), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish or negate the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[iii] Related Points and Authorities

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[c] Discussion of Authorities

[i] Agreement to Admit Expected Evidence

Code Civ. Proc. § 595.4 provides in part that when a request for continuance is made on the ground of the absence of a material witness, the court may require the moving party to state on affidavit the expected evidence; and, if the adverse party admits that the evidence would be given and that it be considered as actually given in the trial, or offered and overruled as improper, the trial must not be postponed.

In Eggink v. Robertson (1961) 191 Cal. App. 2d 496, 13 Cal. Rptr. 76 , plaintiff sued defendants for damages for personal injuries as the result of a traffic accident. On the fourth day of the trial when one of the defendants and driver of a vehicle involved in the accident had to be hospitalized, defendant's counsel asked for a continuance on the ground of the absence of this witness and read a statement of evidence to which the absent witness would testify. Thereafter, plaintiff's counsel agreed to admit that such evidence would be given, arguing that the language of former Code Civ. Proc. § 595 (now 595.4), which states that when such an admission occurs, the trial must not be postponed, required denial of the continuance. The trial court did deny the continuance, and the jury rendered a judgment in plaintiff's favor. Defendants, on appeal, claimed that it was error to deny the continuance because the absent witness was the only one who could have testified as to what had occurred (plaintiff had been sleeping in the other vehicle) and would have testified that at the moment of impact, he was in the traffic lane and not on the shoulder where plaintiff's vehicle was parked.

The court of appeal affirmed, however, finding no abuse of discretion (191 Cal. App. 2d 496, 501) .

[7] Failure to Determine When Witness Would Be Available

[a] FORM Witness's Absence Does Not Require Continuance

[This form should be combined with a general memorandum opposing a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance (see § 48.30) or included in an appellate brief].

A COURT DOES NOT ABUSE ITS DISCRETION BY DENYING A MOTION FOR A CONTINUANCE ON THE GROUND OF THE ABSENCE OF A MATERIAL WITNESS IF THE MOVING PARTY CANNOT DETERMINE WHEN THAT WITNESS WILL BE AVAILABLE TO TESTIFY.

A. Availability of Witness Is Undetermined. A party may be denied a continuance to produce an absent witness if he or she cannot determine when the witness will be available to testify (Allstate Ins. Co. v. King (1967) 252 Cal. App. 2d 698, 703, 60 Cal. Rptr. 892).

[b] Comments

[i] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be combined with the forms in §§ 48.30 and [1], above, and submitted in opposition to a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(b)] on the ground of a witness's absence, when the party seeking the continuance is unable to determine when that witness will be available to testify [Code Civ. Proc. § 595.4]. The authority in this form may also be combined with any of the authorities in [2]-[6], above, that address other specific types of testimony that are not considered material and other procedural deficiencies in the showing required to support a motion for continuance based on the absence of a witness.

Counsel should also consider whether any of the authorities in the forms set forth in §§ 48.31 -48.39 are applicable to the particular case, and if so, include those authorities as well. The forms in § 48.31 address procedural requirements that are applicable in every case and should be used to whenever the showing in support of the motion is deficient in that regard. The forms in §§ 48.34 -48.39 address particular circumstances that have been held not to constitute good cause. The forms in §§ 48.32 and 48.33 are for use to augment a memorandum opposing a continuance if the request for continuance is not made in good faith or would place undue burden on the party opposing the continuance.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used to oppose the points and authorities set out in § 48.13[1].

[ii] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form, and in the other forms combined with this form, with the facts of his or her case. For example, if the continuance is sought because of a the unavailability of a witness, but counsel for the moving party cannot state when the absent witness would be available to testify, opposing counsel's argument should focus that fact.

It is also advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, or by affidavits or declarations. Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits "upon a motion"), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish or negate the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[iii] Related Points and Authorities

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[c] Discussion of Authorities

[i] Availability of Witness Is Undetermined

Allstate Ins. Co. v. King (1967) 252 Cal. App. 2d 698, 60 Cal. Rptr. 892 , a declaratory relief action, arose out of a prior action for damages for personal injuries arising out of a collision between a motorcycle operated by plaintiff and pickup truck driven by a person insured by defendant insurance company. The earlier action was filed on May 3, 1962, and prior to July 26, 1962, the truck driver met with counsel and also gave a deposition, but after that date could no longer be located. Between April 3, 1963, and January 21, 1964, defendant's counsel obtained four continuances because of the absence of this witness. During that period, defendant had expended considerable time and effort in attempting to locate the missing driver. However, the trial court refused any further continuances and, after the trial was held, the jury rendered a verdict in plaintiff's favor. Defendant then filed this action for declaratory relief to determine its obligation under the insurance policy because the insured failed to cooperate by appearing at trial. The action resulted in a judgment for defendant and plaintiff appealed.

On appeal, the issue was not if the trial court in the earlier action had erred in refusing defendant an additional continuance, but if, as plaintiff contended, the inadequacies of defendant's motion for a continuance barred defendant from claiming any prejudice resulting from the absence of its insured. In affirming the trial court's judgment, the court of appeal rejected plaintiff's contention by pointing out that defendant could not have made an adequate motion for continuance unless it could have shown the court that there was a reasonable assurance that the truck driver would be present at the trial at some future date. But defendant's counsel could not make this showing and so the continuance was properly denied (252 Cal. App. 2d 698, 703) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 4 Chapters 40-49 CLAIM & DELIVERY---to---CONTINUANCE
CHAPTER 48 CONTINUANCE OF PROCEEDINGS
PART II. FORMS
B. OPPOSING CONTINUANCE

4-48 California Points & Authorities § 48.37

§ 48.37 Attorney's Unavailability Does Not Require Continuance

[1] Party's Insistence on Particular Attorney

[a] FORM Attorney's Unavailability Does Not Require Continuance

[This form should be combined with a general memorandum of points and authorities opposing a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance (see § 48.30) or included in an appellate brief.]

A COURT DOES NOT ABUSE ITS DISCRETION BY DENYING A MOTION FOR CONTINUANCE BECAUSE COUNSEL IS ABSENT IF THE PARTY HAS FAILED TO ACT DILIGENTLY BY INSISTING ON ONE PARTICULAR ATTORNEY.

A. Party's Insistence on Particular Attorney. A party may be denied a continuance because of the absence of his or her attorney when he or she has shown a lack of diligence by insisting on one particular attorney (Agnew v. Parks (1963) 219 Cal. App. 2d 696, 701, 33 Cal. Rptr. 465 ; Flynn v. Fink (1923) 60 Cal. App. 670, 672-674, 213 P. 716).

B. Party Has Not Established Diligence. A party may be denied a continuance on the ground that his or her attorney is unavailable when the party has not been diligent in arranging adequate representation (Agnew v. Parks (1963) 219 Cal. App. 2d 696, 701, 33 Cal. Rptr. 465 ; Flynn v. Fink (1923) 60 Cal. App. 670, 672-674, 213 P. 716).

[b] Comments

[i] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be combined with the form in § 48.30 and submitted in opposition to a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332] on the ground of an attorney's absence, when the party seeking the continuance has not been diligent in obtaining counsel in general, or specifically, by insisting on a particular attorney. The authority in this form may also be combined with any of the authorities in [2]-[4], below, that address other specific situations involving absence of counsel that are not considered good cause for continuance.

Counsel should also consider whether any of the authorities in the forms set forth in §§ 48.31 -48.39 are applicable to the particular case, and if so, include those authorities as well. The forms in § 48.31 address procedural requirements that are applicable in every case and should be used to whenever the showing in support of the motion is deficient in that regard. The forms in §§ 48.34 -48.39 address particular circumstances that have been held not to constitute good cause. The forms in §§ 48.32 and 48.33 are for use to augment a memorandum opposing a continuance if the request for continuance is not made in good faith or would place undue burden on the party opposing the continuance.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used to oppose the points and authorities set out in § 48.14[1] -[6].

[ii] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form, and in the other forms combined with this form, with the facts of his or her case. For example, if the continuance is sought because of a the unavailability of a particular attorney, but the moving party has not been diligent in seeking other counsel, opposing counsel's argument should focus on any delay by the moving party in arranging counsel, the availability of other counsel, and the length of time the moving party has had to arrange representation.

It is also advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, or by affidavits or declarations. Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits "upon a motion"), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish or negate the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[iii] Related Points and Authorities

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[c] Discussion of Authorities

[i] Party's Insistence on Particular Attorney

The factual background of Agnew v. Parks (1963) 219 Cal. App. 2d 696, 33 Cal. Rptr. 465 , is discussed in § 48.35[2][c][ii]. In that case, plaintiff's counsel informed her, approximately three months before the date of trial, that he would not continue to represent her. On the day of trial, she requested a continuance to obtain new counsel. The court denied the motion, and when plaintiff refused to proceed, dismissed the case. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's denial of plaintiff's motion, pointing out that not only did plaintiff make no attempt to sever her connection with her former counsel, but on the contrary her primary objective during the three-month period seemed to be to compel him to represent her. The court reasoned that because in criminal cases, a defendant cannot demand the services of a particular attorney, it is obvious that a civil plaintiff who has greater control over the case and whose personal liberty is not threatened cannot demand a greater privilege (219 Cal. App. 2d 696, 701) .

In Flynn v. Fink (1923) 60 Cal. App. 670, 213 P. 716 , plaintiffs sought compensation for labor performed and materials furnished. Although the case was set on July 7 for trial on December 1, defendants replaced their counsel just five days before trial, and on the day of trial, defendants' new counsel requested a continuance because they were engaged in a separate trial which would take from seven to 10 days to complete. In argument, defendants' counsel stated that the two-person firm was engaged in that trial at the time they were substituted and knew, at that time, that the trial was not likely to be completed by December 1. The trial court denied the motion for continuance, took evidence on behalf of plaintiffs, and subsequently entered judgment in favor of plaintiffs. Defendants appealed.

The court of appeal, in affirming, stated that parties do not have an absolute right to change counsel at the last minute if that change will require a continuance in order that the case may properly be prepared. Quoting from People v. Goldenson (1888) 76 Cal. 328, 341, 19 P. 161 , the court stated that even in a criminal case, to give defendant an absolute right to select counsel, with the unlimited right to insist on continuances, would subvert the prompt administration and execution of the laws. It added that in the instant case it was not unthinkable that one of the lawyers in the two-person firm might have been spared to try defendants' case (60 Cal. App. 670, 672-674).

[ii] Party Has Not Established Diligence

Agnew v. Parks (1963) 219 Cal. App. 2d 696, 33 Cal. Rptr. 465 , and Flynn v. Fink (1923) 60 Cal. App. 670, 213 P. 716 , are discussed in [i], above.

[2] Substitution Is Unnecessary and Without Diligence

[a] FORM Attorney's Unavailability Does Not Require Continuance

[This form should be combined with a general memorandum of points and authorities opposing a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance (see § 48.30) or included in an appellate brief.]

A COURT DOES NOT ABUSE ITS DISCRETION BY DENYING A MOTION FOR CONTINUANCE IF NEWLY SUBSTITUTED COUNSEL IS _____ [UNPREPARED FOR or UNABLE TO ATTEND] THE TRIAL WHEN THE MOVING PARTY FAILS TO SHOW BOTH THE NECESSITY FOR THE SUBSTITUTION AND DILIGENCE IN FINDING THE SUBSTITUTED COUNSEL.

A. Substitution Is Unnecessary and Without Diligence. If a party requests a continuance so that newly substituted counsel can _____ [prepare for or attend] trial, but the party fails to show both the necessity for the substitution and diligence in finding substituted counsel, the continuance may be denied (San Bernardino County v. Doria Mining & Eng'r Corp. (1977) 72 Cal. App. 3d 776, 783, 140 Cal. Rptr. 383 ; Berger v. Mantle (1936) 18 Cal. App. 2d 245, 248-249, 63 P.2d 335).

[b] Comments

[i] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be combined with the form in § 48.30 and submitted in opposition to a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(b)] to give newly substituted counsel time to prepare, when the party seeking the continuance has not shown the need for the substitution or that he or she was diligent in obtaining new counsel. The authority in this form may also be combined with any of the authorities in [1], above, or [3]-[4], below, that address other specific situations involving absence or unpreparedness of counsel that are not considered good cause for continuance.

Counsel should also consider whether any of the authorities in the forms set forth in §§ 48.31 -48.39 are applicable to the particular case, and if so, include those authorities as well. The forms in § 48.31 address procedural requirements that are applicable in every case and should be used to whenever the showing in support of the motion is deficient in that regard. The forms in §§ 48.34 -48.39 address particular circumstances that have been held not to constitute good cause. The forms in §§ 48.32 and 48.33 are for use to augment a memorandum opposing a continuance if the request for continuance is not made in good faith or would place undue burden on the party opposing the continuance.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used to oppose the points and authorities set out in § 48.14[1].

[ii] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form, and in the other forms combined with this form, with the facts of his or her case. For example, if the continuance is sought because a newly substituted attorney, thought the substitution was unnecessary and the moving party has not been diligent in seeking other counsel, opposing counsel's argument should focus on the lack of necessity for the substitution and any delay by the moving party in arranging for new counsel.

It is also advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, or by affidavits or declarations. Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits "upon a motion"), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish or negate the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[iii] Related Points and Authorities

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[c] Discussion of Authorities

[i] Substitution Is Unnecessary and Without Diligence

The factual background of San Bernardino County v. Doria Mining & Eng'r Corp. (1977) 72 Cal. App. 3d 776, 140 Cal. Rptr. 383 , is discussed in § 48.14[1][c][ii]. In that case, the trial court denied a request by defendant's new attorney for a continuance to prepare for trial. Judgment was for plaintiff; and defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. In response to defendant's contention that trial courts should be liberal in granting continuances, the court characterized unnecessary continuances as wasteful, nonproductive, time-consuming, and a fertile ground for public criticism of the courts. After reviewing and rejecting the precedents offered for the "liberality" doctrine, the court stated, in addition, that there was no abuse of discretion in the instant case. It cited as one reason that there was no showing of good cause because defendant failed to establish that the attorney substitution was necessary or that defendant used due diligence to obtain a new attorney (72 Cal. App. 3d 776, 783) .

In Berger v. Mantle (1936) 18 Cal. App. 2d 245, 63 P.2d 335 , decedent's heir filed a claim against an estate for services rendered. Plaintiff filed her claim on October 15, 1935, and it was set for trial on July 16, 1936. Defendant granted plaintiff's California attorney additional time to communicate with plaintiff in Montana from February 14, 1936, to June 4, 1936, before answering and setting the case for trial; yet, on the day of trial, a new counsel for plaintiff appeared, having been substituted on the previous day, and moved for a continuance on the ground that he had been retained for only six days and had not had time to interview the witnesses, all of whom lived outside California, or to review the voluminous documentation. Defendant's counsel contended by affidavit that the substitution was for the purpose of delay. The trial court denied the motion and, subsequently, dismissed the action. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court held that the trial court had not abused its discretion in denying the motion. Plaintiff had given no information that the change was necessary. The court stated that if litigants in all cases could demand a continuance by engaging new counsel just prior to trial, they could indefinitely avoid trial of the issues (18 Cal. App. 2d 245, 248-249) .

[3] Alternative Representation Is Available

[a] FORM Attorney's Unavailability Does Not Require Continuance

[This form should be combined with a general memorandum opposing a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance (see § 48.30) or included in an appellate brief].

A COURT DOES NOT ABUSE ITS DISCRETION BY DENYING A MOTION FOR CONTINUANCE IF THE PARTY'S COUNSEL IS _____ [ABSENT or UNPREPARED] BUT THE PARTY STILL HAS OR COULD HAVE ALTERNATIVE REPRESENTATION.

A. Alternative Representation as Available. A party may be denied a continuance because counsel is _____ [absent or unprepared] if the party still has or could have alternative representation (Volkering v. Allen (1950) 96 Cal. App. 2d 804, 807, 216 P.2d 552 ; Fejer v. Paonessa (1951) 104 Cal. App. 2d 190, 194-195, 231 P.2d 507).

[b] Comments

[i] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be combined with the form in § 48.30 and submitted in opposition to a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(b)] that seeks to give counsel time to attend or prepare, when the party seeking the continuance has, or could have, alternative representation. The authority in this form may also be combined with any of the authorities in [1]-[2], above, or [4], below, that address other specific situations involving absence or unpreparedness of counsel that are not considered good cause for continuance.

Counsel should also consider whether any of the authorities in the forms set forth in §§ 48.31 -48.39 are applicable to the particular case, and if so, include those authorities as well. The forms in § 48.31 address procedural requirements that are applicable in every case and should be used to whenever the showing in support of the motion is deficient in that regard. The forms in §§ 48.34 -48.39 address particular circumstances that have been held not to constitute good cause. The forms in §§ 48.32 and 48.33 are for use to augment a memorandum opposing a continuance if the request for continuance is not made in good faith or would place undue burden on the party opposing the continuance.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used to oppose the points and authorities set out in § 48.14[1] -[6].

[ii] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form, and in the other forms combined with this form, with the facts of his or her case. For example, if the continuance is sought because a an attorney is absent or unprepared, but the moving party has, or could have, alternative representation, opposing counsel's argument should focus on the availability of alternative counsel.

It is also advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, or by affidavits or declarations. Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits "upon a motion"), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish or negate the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[iii] Related Points and Authorities

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[c] Discussion of Authorities

[i] Alternative Representation as Available

In Volkering v. Allen (1950) 96 Cal. App. 2d 804, 216 P.2d 552 , plaintiff sued defendant for damages from assault and battery arising from an altercation between the parties. Twenty days before the date of the trial, defendant's counsel suffered a heart attack which prevented his working for a period of 90 days. On the day of trial, another attorney, with the same business address as that of plaintiff's attorney, appeared for plaintiff's counsel and requested a continuance. The continuance was denied, and the second attorney conducted the case on behalf of defendant. The jury rendered a verdict in plaintiff's favor and defendant appealed, contending in part that the trial court's denial of a continuance forced defendant to proceed to trial without his chosen counsel and forced the second attorney to "represent" defendant.

The court of appeal affirmed after concluding that no error of any prejudicial nature had occurred. As far as denial of the continuance was concerned, the court stated that defendant received an orderly and able presentation of his case (96 Cal. App. 2d 804, 807) .

In Fejer v. Paonessa (1951) 104 Cal. App. 2d 190, 231 P.2d 507 , plaintiff, a musician, sued defendant for moneys owed arising out of defendant's production of an operetta. Intervener, the star singer, filed a complaint intervention to collect for services rendered and for the use of her gowns. Defendant sought a continuance because his attorneys were unfamiliar with the case. One attorney had stated that he was willing to accept employment only if a continuance could be obtained. A second attorney had stated that he had been approached by defendant on the day before the trial. The trial court denied the continuance and entered a judgment in favor of plaintiff and intervener. Defendant appealed. One of the grounds defendant urged was that the trial court erred in denying his motion for continuance.

The court of appeal, in affirming, applied the principle that a party cannot take advantage of the party's own lack of diligence. This case had already been continued from November 7 to November 29, giving defendant ample time to employ counsel who could have familiarized themselves with the case. Moreover, a third attorney who had represented defendant since the start of the action was present at the trial and took an active part in the proceedings (104 Cal. App. 2d 190, 194-195) .

[d] Additional Authorities

[i] Alternative Representation as Available

In Thomas v. Toppins (1928) 206 Cal. 18, 272 P. 1042 , the secretary of defendant's attorney appeared on the day of trial and requested a continuance because the attorney had become ill after the case was set for trial. The trial court denied the request and proceeded to trial. Defendant appealed from a judgment in plaintiff's favor.

The Supreme Court affirmed, stating that the trial court had apparently denied the continuance because defendant had ample time after the attorney became ill to procure alternative counsel and, therefore, the trial court's action was not an abuse of discretion (206 Cal. 18, 19) .

[4] Attorney Is Absent or Unprepared

[a] FORM Attorney's Unavailability Does Not Require Continuance

[This form should be combined with a general memorandum opposing a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance (see § 48.30) or included in an appellate brief].

A COURT DOES NOT ABUSE ITS DISCRETION BY DENYING A MOTION FOR CONTINUANCE WHEN COUNSEL IS _____ [UNPREPARED or ABSENT] IF COUNSEL WAS NOT DILIGENT IN AVOIDING THE DIFFICULTY AND THE PARTY WAS NOT DILIGENT IN FINDING ALTERNATIVE COUNSEL.

A. Counsel Is Unprepared or Absent Due to Lack of Diligence. A party may be denied a continuance because counsel is _____ [unprepared or absent] when counsel was not diligent in avoiding the difficulty and the party was not diligent in finding alternative counsel (Beck v. Reinholtz (1956) 138 Cal. App. 2d 719, 723, 292 P.2d 906 ; Mann v. Pacific Greyhound Lines (1949) 92 Cal. App. 2d 439, 446, 207 P.2d 105).

[Optional] B. Conflicting Professional Engagement Is Not Sufficient. A party may be denied a continuance because of the absence of his or her attorney if counsel has a conflicting professional engagement and has not been diligent in attempting to avoid the conflict and the party was not diligent in finding alternative counsel (Mann v. Pacific Greyhound Lines (1949) 92 Cal. App. 2d 439, 446, 207 P.2d 105 ; Bixby v. Hotchkis (1945) 72 Cal. App. 2d 368, 371-372, 164 P.2d 808).

[b] Comments

[i] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be combined with the form in § 48.30 and submitted in opposition to a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(b)] on the ground of an attorney's absence or unpreparedness, when the attorney has not been diligent in seeking to prepare or to avoid a conflict with another professional engagement and the party seeking the continuance has not been diligent in seeking to engage alternative representation. Although none of the authorities if this form discuss the party's lack of diligence, if the party had shown that he or she had been diligent in finding alternative counsel, it would appear that a court should protect him or her from prejudice [see, e.g., Vann v. Shilleh (1975) 54 Cal. App. 3d 192, 197-199, 126 Cal. Rptr. 401 , discussed in § 48.14[1][c][i], which states that it is a court's duty to protect a party from counsel's improper withdrawal]. Nevertheless, these authorities do support the point that counsel's lack of diligence is sufficient ground to deny a continuance.

The authority in this form may be combined with any of the authorities in [1]-[3], above, that address other specific types of absence of counsel that are not considered good cause for continuance.

Counsel should also consider whether any of the authorities in the forms set forth in §§ 48.31 -48.39 are applicable to the particular case, and if so, include those authorities as well. The forms in § 48.31 address procedural requirements that are applicable in every case and should be used to whenever the showing in support of the motion is deficient in that regard. The forms in §§ 48.34 -48.39 address particular circumstances that have been held not to constitute good cause. The forms in §§ 48.32 and 48.33 are for use to augment a memorandum opposing a continuance if the request for continuance is not made in good faith or would place undue burden on the party opposing the continuance.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used to oppose the points and authorities set out in § 48.14[1], [3], [6].

[ii] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form, and in the other forms combined with this form, with the facts of his or her case. For example, if the continuance is sought because of the unavailability or unpreparedness of the moving party's counsel, opposing counsel's argument should focus the opportunities moving party's counsel had to resolve the conflict or prepare and his or her lack of diligence in doing so.

It is also advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, or by affidavits or declarations. Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits "upon a motion"), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish or negate the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[iii] Related Points and Authorities

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[c] Discussion of Authorities

[i] Counsel Is Unprepared or Absent Due to Lack of Diligence

In Beck v. Reinholtz (1956) 138 Cal. App. 2d 719, 292 P.2d 906 , plaintiffs filed an action to quiet title to property in Orange County. On March 4, defendants filed a notice of motion for summary judgment and for an order dismissing plaintiffs' complaint. Notice of hearing on the motion, set for March 18, was served on plaintiffs that same day. On March 17, plaintiffs' counsel filed a notice of motion for continuance of the hearing on the motion for summary judgment. Counsel stated in an affidavit that he first learned on March 14 that the file containing the pleadings in the action was not in his possession, that he was without the information necessary to respond to the motion, that he had requested copies of the complaint and motion for summary judgment from the court clerk on March 15, that plaintiffs now reside 150 miles from Orange County, and that he required two additional weeks to prepare the necessary documents. On the date of the hearing for the motion for summary judgment, the trial court granted plaintiffs' counsel five days to file points and authorities in support of the motion for continuance. Counsel did not respond and on March 25, the motion for summary judgment was granted and plaintiff's action dismissed. Plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, saying that whether or not plaintiffs' counsel stated facts sufficient to support a continuance was within the discretion of the trial court and, under the circumstances shown, one cannot say that it abused its discretion (138 Cal. App. 2d 719, 723) .

In Mann v. Pacific Greyhound Lines (1949) 92 Cal. App. 2d 439, 207 P.2d 105 , plaintiffs sued a bus company and the driver of a second vehicle for damages resulting from death and serious injuries arising out of a vehicle collision. On August 4, after one continuance, the trial was set for September 31. On that day, an attorney representing plaintiff's counsel requested another continuance because plaintiffs' counsel believed that counsel for the bus company would continue the case and plaintiff's counsel was also concurrently engaged in another jury trial. The trial court denied the continuance and dismissed the case. On plaintiff's motion for relief under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, counsel for the bus company submitted an affidavit, corroborated by the second defendant's counsel, which stated that he had first proposed a continuance on August 22, but when he learned on August 25 that the second defendant would not agree to continue, he so informed plaintiffs' counsel. The trial court denied plaintiffs' motion for relief; and plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. Distinguishing cases in which the parties had very strong reasons for not being present, the court of appeal stated that if a party chooses to be elsewhere on the day of trial or counsel takes on another professional engagement, that excuse is not valid. The court cited Tobias v. Adams (1928) 206 Cal. 88, 89, 273 P. 579 , in which the party told the trial court that the attorneys who represented him were busy elsewhere, and on appeal, the Supreme Court said simply that the showing made was insufficient to justify a continuance (92 Cal. App. 2d 439, 446) .

[ii] Conflicting Professional Engagement Is Not Sufficient

Mann v. Pacific Greyhound Lines (1949) 92 Cal. App. 2d 439, 207 P.2d 105 , is discussed in [i], above.

In Bixby v. Hotchkis (1945) 72 Cal. App. 2d 368, 164 P.2d 808 , plaintiff sued defendant for the conversion of capital stock. The trial was scheduled for October 20 with notice served on October 4. On the day of trial, plaintiff's counsel was represented by another attorney solely for the purpose of moving for a continuance on the ground that plaintiff's counsel had begun a trial in municipal court on the previous day. The trial court denied the request and ultimately rendered a judgment for defendants. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The technical basis for its decision was that because the trial involved only an issue of res judicata, plaintiff's rights were not prejudiced by this attorney's absence, but the court repeatedly pointed out the failure of plaintiff's counsel to attempt to avoid the case conflict. Counsel made no attempt to continue the municipal court trial or to absent himself from it even though there was evidence that the municipal court judge was willing to cooperate in resolving the conflict (72 Cal. App. 2d 368, 371-372) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 4 Chapters 40-49 CLAIM & DELIVERY---to---CONTINUANCE
CHAPTER 48 CONTINUANCE OF PROCEEDINGS
PART II. FORMS
B. OPPOSING CONTINUANCE

4-48 California Points & Authorities § 48.38

§ 48.38 Change in Status of Case Is Not Significant Enough to Warrant Continuance

[1] FORM Change in Status of Case Is Not Significant Enough to Warrant Continuance

[This form should be combined with a general memorandum of points and authorities opposing a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance (see § 48.30) or included in an appellate brief.]

A COURT DOES NOT ABUSE ITS DISCRETION BY DENYING A MOTION FOR A CONTINUANCE WHEN THE ONLY CHANGE IN THE STATUS OF THE _____ [CASE or PLEADINGS] IS INSIGNIFICANT.

A. Insignificant Change. A change in the status of a case or its pleadings that is insignificant and does not change the posture of the case does not warrant a continuance (Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(c)(7); Day v. Rosenthal (1985) 170 Cal. App. 3d 1125, 1174-1175, 217 Cal. Rptr. 89).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be combined with the forms in §§ 48.30 and 48.31[1] and submitted in opposition to a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(b)] on the ground of a significant change in the status of the case or the pleadings, when the change involved is actually not significant. Optional Paragraph B is for use when the change was stipulated to by the parties, including the party seeking the continuance.

Counsel should also consider whether any of the authorities in the forms set forth in §§ 48.31 -48.39 are applicable to the particular case, and if so, include those authorities as well. The forms in § 48.31 address procedural requirements that are applicable in every case and should be used to whenever the showing in support of the motion is deficient in that regard. The forms in §§ 48.34 -48.39 address particular circumstances that have been held not to constitute good cause. The forms in §§ 48.32 and 48.33 are for use to augment a memorandum opposing a continuance if the request for continuance is not made in good faith or would place undue burden on the party opposing the continuance.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used to oppose the points and authorities set out in § 48.15.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form, and in the other forms combined with this form, with the facts of his or her case. For example, if the continuance is sought because of an amendment to the pleadings that changed the posture of the case very little, opposing counsel's argument should focus the history of the pleadings and discovery in the case to show that the change is indeed insignificant and could reasonably have been anticipated by the moving party s counsel, who with appropriate diligence would have been prepared for them without the need of continuance.

It is also advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, or by affidavits or declarations. Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits "upon a motion"), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish or negate the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Points and Authorities

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Insignificant Change

Day v. Rosenthal (1985) 170 Cal. App. 3d 1125, 217 Cal. Rptr. 89 , involved consolidated actions by an actress, the estate of her late husband and manager, her son, and various corporate entities they controlled against former attorneys for malpractice, breach of fiduciary duties, fraud, injunctive relief, and to compel turn over of trust funds. Trial was set by stipulation for March 4, 1974. In December, 1973, after the trial date had been set and when some of the consolidated cases were more than five years old, defendant moved for continuance on the grounds that he needed to conduct additional discovery, a stipulated change in the pleadings by the addition of negligence claims was significant enough to require continuance, and the fact that counsel selected by his malpractice insurers wanted to take a more active part in the case. The trial court denied the request for continuance and judgment in excess of $25 million was awarded to plaintiffs. Defendants appealed, contending among other things, that the trial court had abused its discretion in failing to grant the continuance.

The court of appeal affirmed. Because the court of appeal agreed with the trial court that discovery defendant wanted was too voluminous, too late, and too onerous, no continuance to conduct that discovery was required (170 Cal. App. 3d 1125, 1172-1173) . Regarding defendant's claim that a continuance was warranted under former Cal. Rules of Ct., Appen., Div. I, § 9(b)(5), because of the addition of negligence causes of action, the court of appeal agreed with the trial court's finding that the amended pleadings didn't change the posture of the case one iota. The substance of the case was not changed (170 Cal. App. 3d 1125, 1174) . Further, the court of appeal said it appeared that "significant" change within the meaning of former Cal. Rules of Ct., Appen., Div. I, § 9(b)(5), is one that occurs as a result of a court order, rather than because of a change to which the parties have agreed. The amended pleadings in this case hardly fit the emergency contemplated by the standard in former Cal. Rules of Ct., Appen., Div. I, § 9. The "new" allegations of negligence were not ordered by the court; they were permitted by stipulation, and they would seem to be anticipated the consequences of that agreement (170 Cal. App. 3d 1125, 1175) . The court of appeal also agreed with the trial court that the expanded involvement of one of defendant's attorneys around the time the continuance was sought was not the kind of change contemplated by the standard. Those attorneys sat back and for roughly five years thought they had no problems and couldn't care less. That was the choice they made, and they have to live with it (170 Cal. App. 3d 1125, 1174-1175) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 4 Chapters 40-49 CLAIM & DELIVERY---to---CONTINUANCE
CHAPTER 48 CONTINUANCE OF PROCEEDINGS
PART II. FORMS
B. OPPOSING CONTINUANCE

4-48 California Points & Authorities § 48.39

§ 48.39 Other Action Will Not Resolve All Important Issues

[1] FORM Other Action Will Not Resolve All Important Issues

[This form should be combined with a general memorandum opposing a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance (see § 48.30) or included in an appellate brief.]

A COURT DOES NOT ABUSE ITS DISCRETION BY DENYING A MOTION FOR A CONTINUANCE ON THE GROUND THAT ANOTHER ACTION IS PENDING IF THE OTHER ACTION WOULD NOT RESOLVE ALL [IMPORTANT] ISSUES IN THE INSTANT CASE.

A. Failure to Resolve Important Issues. A party may be denied a continuance on the ground that another action is pending if that party fails to show that the other action would resolve an important issue or issues necessary for the decision in the instant case (Farmland Irrigation Co. v. Dopplmaier (1957) 48 Cal. 2d 208, 215-216, 308 P.2d 732 ; Pesquera del Pacifico v. Superior Court (1949) 89 Cal. App. 2d 738, 741, 201 P.2d 553).

[Optional] B. Failure to Resolve All Issues. A party may be denied a continuance on the ground that another action is pending if that party fails to establish that the other action would settle the controversy by resolving all of the issues in the instant case (Kalmus v. Kalmus (1951) 103 Cal. App. 2d 405, 415-417, 230 P.2d 57).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be combined with the form at § 48.30[1] and submitted in opposition to a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(b)] when a party is seeking a continuance on the ground that another action is pending if the other action would not resolve all, or all important, issues in the case sought to be continued. This form should also be combined with all of the forms set forth in §§ 48.31 -48.39 that are applicable to the particular case.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used to oppose the points and authorities set out in § 48.16.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form, and in the other forms combined with this form, with the facts of his or her case. For example, if the continuance is sought because another action is pending, counsel's argument should focus on issues not involved in the other action that need to be resolved in the instant case and should stress how important those issues are to resolution of the instant case.

It is also advisable for counsel to submit cognizable evidence in support of factual statements, by request for judicial notice [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.], by references to the court's file, or by affidavits or declarations. Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits "upon a motion"), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish or negate the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Points and Authorities

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Failure to Resolve Important Issue

In Farmland Irrigation Co. v. Dopplmaier (1957) 48 Cal. 2d 208, 308 P.2d 732 , plaintiff sought a declaratory judgment that it was entitled to manufacture and sell certain equipment under a patent license agreement and a declaration of its duties under the royalty provisions of the license agreement. Plaintiff was the assignee of the corporation which made the agreement with the equipment's inventor; defendant was the inventor's assignee. Prior to this action, defendant had sued plaintiff's assignor in a federal court in Oregon for an accounting of the royalties due under the license. The federal court had denied the plaintiff's motion to intervene made on the ground that plaintiff had bound itself to pay any liability adjudged against its assignor. Plaintiff then brought this action in which the trial court determined that plaintiff was entitled to manufacture and sell the equipment and interpreted the royalty clause in a way favorable to plaintiff. Defendant appealed, contending in part that the trial court erred in denying its motion for a stay of the proceedings pending a final judgment in the Oregon action.

In affirming, the Supreme Court stated that in the exercise of its discretion to stay a proceeding, the trial court should consider:

- The importance of discouraging multiple litigation,
- The importance of avoiding unseemly conflicts with courts of other jurisdictions, and
- Whether or not the rights of the parties can best be determined by the court of the other jurisdiction due to:
    - The nature of the subject matter,

- Availability of witnesses, and
- The stage to which the proceedings in the other court has already advanced.

Citing the leading case of Pesquera del Pacifico v. Superior Court (1949) 89 Cal. App. 2d 738, 741, 201 P.2d 553 (discussed below), the Court held that a stay may be denied if all the issues in the present action are not involved in the other pending case. The Court pointed out that the Oregon action did not call for an adjudication of the assignability of the license and plaintiff's rights thereunder. A stay of the present proceedings would therefore not only bring these issues no closer to determination, but would compel plaintiff to await a judgment that could not respond to its needs (48 Cal. 2d 208, 215-216) .

Pesquera del Pacifico v. Superior Court (1949) 89 Cal. App. 2d 738, 201 P.2d 553 , was an application for a writ of prohibition in which petitioner sought to prevent further proceedings in an action in which plaintiffs had sued petitioner for damages resulting from petitioner's seizure of certain raw shelled clams. Petitioner claimed that a similar action was pending between the parties in Mexico. The trial court had denied petitioner's motion for a continuance, and the court of appeal denied the writ. It found that petitioner failed to show the following (89 Cal. App. 2d 738, 741) :

- If any or all of the issues in the Mexican law suit were similar to or identical with any of the issues in the California case or that the Mexican decision would be res judicata as to these,
- That the action could not be tried as conveniently in California as in Mexico, and
- That the issue of title to the clams in dispute had been raised or adjudicated in the Mexican action.

[b] Failure to Resolve All Issues

The factual background of Kalmus v. Kalmus (1951) 103 Cal. App. 2d 405, 230 P.2d 57 , is discussed in § 48.35[2][c][ii]. In that case, plaintiff requested a continuance because of illness and because a case pending in Massachusetts would determine the validity of a Massachusetts divorce decree that was the first stage in the conflict between the parties. The trial court denied the motion and the court of appeal affirmed.

In regard to the pending case in Massachusetts, the court found that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying a continuance on this ground because the Massachusetts action was brought after the California action and resolution of the California case, unlike completion of the Massachusetts case, would resolve all the issues raised by both cases (103 Cal. App. 2d 405, 415-417) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 4 Chapters 40-49 CLAIM & DELIVERY---to---CONTINUANCE
CHAPTER 48 CONTINUANCE OF PROCEEDINGS
PART II. FORMS
B. OPPOSING CONTINUANCE

4-48 California Points & Authorities § 48.40

§ 48.40 Continuance for Additional Evidence to Oppose Summary Judgment Motion Requires New Evidence Be Material

[1] FORM Continuance for Additional Evidence to Oppose Summary Judgment Motion Requires New Evidence Be Material

[This form should be combined with a general memorandum opposing a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance (see § 48.30) or included in an appellate brief.]

A COURT DOES NOT ABUSE ITS DISCRETION BY DENYING A MOTION TO CONTINUE A SUMMARY JUDGMENT MOTION FOR PURPOSES OF OBTAINING ADDITIONAL EVIDENCE TO OPPOSE THE MOTION IF THE EVIDENCE SOUGHT IS IMMATERIAL.

A. Evidence Must Be Material. While Code of Civil Procedure § 437c(h) mandates a continuance of a summary judgment hearing upon a good faith showing by affidavit that a continuance is needed to obtain facts essential to justify opposition to the motion, the continuance should be denied if the evidence sought is immaterial (Yuzon v. Collins (2004) 116 Cal. App. 4th 149, 168, 10 Cal. Rptr. 3d 18) ; or where a defendant fails to file such an affidavit (Oldcastle Precast, Inc. v. Lumbermens Mutual Casualty Co. (2009) 170 Cal. App. 4th 554, 577, 88 Cal. Rptr. 3d 363) .

[2] Comments

This form of points and authorities may be combined with the forms in §§ 48.30 and 48.31[1] and submitted in opposition to a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(b)] on the ground that additional evidence needs to be obtained to oppose a summary judgment motion [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(h)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

In Yuzon v. Collins (2004) 116 Cal. App. 4th 149 , 10 Cal. Rprt. 3d 18, an invitee was bitten by a dog at an apartment complex. The plaintiff filed an action against the landlord. In his opposition to the summary judgment motion, plaintiff requested a continuance of the summary judgment hearing. Plaintiff contended that his animal behavior expert, Richard H. Polsky, Ph.D., needed more time to review discovery materials and prepare his declaration.

After the plaintiff's continuance request was denied and the landlord's motion for summary judgment was granted, the injured party sought review.

The appellate court affirmed the denial of the continuance, holding that the power to determine when a continuance should be granted is generally within the discretion of the court, and there is no right to a continuance as a matter of law. However, Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(h) mandates a continuance of a summary judgment hearing upon a good faith showing by affidavit that a continuance is needed to obtain facts essential to justify opposition to the motion. In this case, plaintiff sought a continuance to obtain Dr. Polsky's expert declaration regarding the landlord's' actual knowledge of the dog's vicious propensities. While the subject matter (Collins' knowledge of the dog's vicious propensities) was essential to plaintiff's opposition to the summary judgment motion, the trial court was ultimately proven correct in concluding Dr. Polsky's declaration has no material relevance regarding that issue. Dr. Polsky's declaration, when reviewed by the trial court with regard to the motion for reconsideration, failed to create a triable issue of material fact. Accordingly, there was no error in denying the motion for continuance (116 Cal. App. 4th 149, 167) .

In affirming, the court determined that the landlord only had a duty of care to protect the invitee if he had actual knowledge of the dog's vicious nature in time to protect against the dangerous condition on his property. He did not have a duty to inspect the premises. The evidence showed that the landlord allowed the tenants to have a dog. The landlord thought that the tenants still owned a dog that had died. He was not aware that they owned the dog involved in the incident. The dog in question was kept inside of the apartment, and the landlord rarely visited. The dog's act of pushing on a door and barking constituted normal animal behavior; it was not enough to put the landlord on notice of the dog's existence or its allegedly violent propensities. The landlord was not aware of any acts of aggression by the dog. Finally, the motion to reconsider was properly denied because an expert witness did not raise an issue of fact about the landlord's knowledge.

In Oldcastle Precast, Inc. v. Lumbermens Mutual Casualty Co. (2009) 170 Cal. App. 4th 554, 88 Cal. Rptr. 3d 363 , defendants contended that the trial court abused its discretion by refusing to grant defendants' request for a continuance of the hearing on the summary judgment motion and the opportunity to revise their separate statement. The appellate court noted that a party opposing summary judgment does not have an automatic right for a second chance to prepare a responsive separate statement or present evidence; instead, the party must demonstrate a reason for the trial court to exercise its discretion, by offering a good faith showing by affidavit that a continuance is needed to obtain facts essential to justify opposition to the motion. Where no such affidavit is filed, and where defendants do not contend they needed a continuance to obtain essential facts, a trial court does not abuse its discretion by declining to grant a continuance (170 Cal. App. 4th 554, 577-578) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 4 Chapters 40-49 CLAIM & DELIVERY---to---CONTINUANCE
CHAPTER 48 CONTINUANCE OF PROCEEDINGS
PART II. FORMS
B. OPPOSING CONTINUANCE

4-48 California Points & Authorities §§ 48.41-48.59

[Reserved]

§§ 48.41[Reserved]

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 4 Chapters 40-49 CLAIM & DELIVERY---to---CONTINUANCE
CHAPTER 48 CONTINUANCE OF PROCEEDINGS
PART II. FORMS
C. REPLY MEMORANDUM SUPPORTING CONTINUANCE

4-48 California Points & Authorities § 48.60

§ 48.60 Continuance May Not Be Conditioned on Payment of Attorney's Fees

[1] FORM Continuance May Not Be Conditioned on Payment of Attorney's Fees

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA, COUNTY OF _____

	)
	)	NO. _____
_____ [name],	)	REPLY MEMORANDUM OF POINTS AND AU-Plaintiff,	)	THORITIES IN SUPPORT OF MOTION FOR CON-
vs.	)	TINUANCE
_____ [name],	)	Date: _____
Defendant.	)	Time: _____
	)	Dept: _____
	)	Judge: _____
	)	Date Action Filed: _____
	)	Trial Date: _____

_____

THE TRIAL COURT HAS NO AUTHORITY TO REQUIRE _____ [specify moving party, e.g., PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] TO PAY _____ [specify adverse party, e.g., DEFENDANT'S or PLAINTIFF'S] ATTORNEY'S FEES AS A CONDITION OF CONTINUANCE.

A. Continuance May Not Be Conditioned on Payment of Attorney's Fees. Section 1024 of the Code of Civil Procedure does not give the court discretion to condition a continuance on payment of attorneys' fees; and unless a trial court makes a finding of subjective bad faith on the part of the party requesting the continuance, no attorney fee award can be made pursuant to Section 128.5 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Levine v. Pollack (1995) 37 Cal. App. 4th 129, 139, 43 Cal. Rptr. 2d 491).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for _____

[party's status and name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in a reply memorandum in support of a noticed motion or ex parte application for a continuance [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(b)] when the party resisting the continuance requests payment of its attorney fees as a condition for the continuance. This form assumes there is no evidence of subjective bad faith or frivolous delay on the part of the party seeking the continuance that would. The authorities in this form should be combined with all of the forms set forth in §§ 48.10 -48.17 that are applicable to the particular case.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form, and in the other forms combined with this form, with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel's argument should focus on the lack of any evidence of the moving party's subjective bad faith or frivolous delaying tactics in the court's file or in declarations opposing the continuance, or if there is such evidence, submit declarations countering the allegation.

Affidavits (or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) are authorized generally for use in support of or in opposition to a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (authorizing use of affidavits "upon a motion"), 2015.5]. Their purpose is to supply the facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant (or declarant) necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice, affidavits, and declarations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms of notices of motion regarding imposition of attorney's fees and costs, with related declarations and orders, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 174, Costs and Attorney's Fees (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Continuance May Not Be Conditioned on Payment of Attorney's Fees

Levine v. Pollack (1995) 37 Cal. App. 4th 129, 43 Cal. Rptr. 2d 491 , was an action by an individual and her wholly-owned corporation against two of their former attorneys for damages resulting from malpractice. After approximately six continuances, on joint motion by the parties, another continuance was granted to April 27, 1992. In February, 1992, plaintiffs' counsel was allowed to withdraw; and plaintiff sought other counsel, who advised her that if he had to try the matter, he needed at least a 60-day continuance beyond April 27 to adequately prepare the case. Plaintiff, in propria persona, filed a motion to continue the trial and set it for the day of trial. Counsel for one defendant was resigning to take a job as in-house counsel for a corporation and indicated that if the matter was continued, new counsel would have to take over the file and estimated new counsel's cost to prepare for trial at $15,000 to $25,000. Counsel for the other defendant indicated that he would have to rework much of his preparation. At the time, Code Civ. Proc. § 1024 gave the court discretion to require payment of expenses occasioned by the postponement as a condition of granting one. The court gave plaintiff the choice of having the case dismissed or granting the continuance conditioned on plaintiff's paying the cost of defendants' counsel to again prepare for trial. Plaintiff agreed to pay the attorneys' fees, indicating that she didn't think she had much choice in the matter. The court granted the continuance, basing the order for attorneys' fees on Code Civ. Proc. § 1024, and continued the case until June 29. On June 4, the court set the amount of fees to be paid, vacated the June trial date, and scheduled a motion to dismiss for October 20 if the fees had not been paid by that time. The fees were not paid. The trial date was vacated; and on February 17, 1993, the court, on its own motion, dismissed the case for failure to be brought to trial within 5 years. Plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal reversed both the order of dismissal and the order imposing attorneys' fees. Until 1986, Code Civ. Proc. § 1024 provided that costs occasioned by the postponement of a trial could be imposed as a condition of granting the postponement. Case law interpreting Code Civ. Proc. § 1024 at that time held that attorneys' fees were not costs which could be imposed as a condition for granting a continuance [DeCesare v. Lembert (1983) 144 Cal. App. 3d 20, 23, 192 Cal. Rptr. 354] . The court of appeal found dictum to the contrary in Medford v. Superior Court (1983) 140 Cal. App. 3d 236, 241-242, 189 Cal. Rptr. 227 to be questionable authority (37 Cal. App. 4th 129, 135-137). The court noted that the intent of the legislature in enacting Code Civ. Proc. § 128.5 (attorney's fees as sanctions for frivolous or bad faith delaying tactics) was to authorize monetary sanctions not then available. The court considered other statutory amendments, including the 1987 amendment to Civ. Code § 1717 to refer to attorney's fees as other costs, and the 1993 amendment to Code Civ. Proc. § 1033.5(a)(10)(A) to include attorney's fees provided by contract or by law among the items allowable as costs under Code Civ. Proc. § 1032. The court stated it had no doubt that the Legislature was aware of its incorporation of attorney fees into the statutory scheme providing for costs within the same chapter as Code Civ. Proc. § 1024 and of the juxtaposition of costs and attorney fees within that statutory scheme, and concluded that by the amendment to Code Civ. Proc. § 1024 changing the term costs to expenses the legislature did not intend a trial court to have discretion to award attorney fees as a condition to a continuance pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1024. The court noted that the record was devoid of any evidence suggesting subjective bad faith on plaintiff's part and that no such findings were made by the trial court. Thus, they could not uphold the award of attorney fees based on Code Civ. Proc. § 128.5 (37 Cal. App. 4th 129, 139).

Regarding defendants' contention that plaintiffs agreed to pay their attorneys' fees and were estopped to contest the condition, the court of appeal noted that this argument applied only to the individual plaintiff. The corporation's presence was not recognized at the hearing on the continuance because defendants had successfully obtained dismissal of the corporate plaintiff by reason of the loss of its corporate powers (later revived). The court of appeal did not find any real agreement by the individual plaintiff to pay attorney fees, noting that her agreement was reluctant, she was given no option, she was representing herself, and that she was apparently misled by the court regarding its ability to order attorney fees as a condition for continuance (37 Cal. App. 4th 129, 139).

178 of 178 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 4 Chapters 40-49 CLAIM & DELIVERY---to---CONTINUANCE
Chapter 49 RESERVED

4-49 California Points & Authorities Chapter 49

RESERVED

Chapter 49RESERVED

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS

5-50 California Points & Authorities 50.syn

§ 50.syn Synopsis to Chapter 50: CONTRACTS

§ 50.01 Scope of Chapter

§ 50.02 Governing Statutes

[1] In General

[2] Venue

§ 50.03 How to Use the Forms in This Chapter

[1] Page Limits

[2] Using the Forms to Build a Draft Memorandum

§ 50.04 Related Discussion and Forms

[1] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[2] Related Points and Authorities Chapters

§§ 50.05-50.09 [Reserved]

§ 50.10 Failure to Allege or Prove All Elements of Cause of Action for Damages for Breach of Contract

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Elements to Be Pleaded

[b] Requirement of Alleging Agreement With Certainty

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Elements to Be Pleaded

[b] Requirement of Alleging Agreement With Certainty

§ 50.11 All Elements of Cause of Action for Damages for Breach of Contract Are Alleged or Proven

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Elements That State Cause of Action

[b] Every Term of Contract Need Not Be Stated

[c] Written Contract May Be Pleaded Without Attaching Copy to Complaint

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Elements That State Cause of Action

§§ 50.12-50.19 [Reserved]

§ 50.20 Failure to Plead Plaintiff's Performance or Excuse for Nonperformance of Condition Precedent

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Performance or Excuse for Nonperformance of Conditions Precedent Must Be Alleged

[b] Alleging Performance of Conditions Precedent

[c] Excuses for Nonperformance Must Be Alleged Specifically

[d] Condition Must Be Specifically Pleaded When It Is Event

[e] Promise to Pay When Able

[f] Existence of Fund From Which Plaintiff Is to Be Paid

[g] Request That Defendant Perform Contract

[h] Specific Allegations Control General Pleadings

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Performance or Excuse for Nonperformance of Conditions Precedent Must Be Alleged

[b] Condition Must Be Specifically Pleaded When It Is Event

[c] Existence of Fund From Which Plaintiff Is to Be Paid

§ 50.21 Performance of Condition Precedent Is Sufficiently Pleaded by General Allegation

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Pleading Performance of Conditions

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Pleading Performance of Conditions

§ 50.22 Excuse for Nonperformance of Condition Precedent Is Sufficiently Shown by Prevention

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Means of Prevention Need Not Be Alleged

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Means of Prevention Need Not Be Alleged

§ 50.23 Excuse for Nonperformance of Condition Precedent Is Sufficiently Shown by Anticipatory Breach

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Anticipatory Breach Is Excuse for Nonperformance

§ 50.24 Obligor's Statement of Intended Breach of Contractual Promise, Which Substantially Impairs Value of Contract, Constitutes Repudiation

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Obligor's Statement of Intended Breach Constitutes Repudiation

§§ 50.25-50.29 [Reserved]

§ 50.30 Contract Was Substantially Performed

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Substantial Performance of Contract

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Substantial Performance of Contract

§ 50.31 Contract Was Not Substantially Performed

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] General Rule Requiring Full Performance

[b] Substantial Performance Is Question of Fact

[c] No Substantial Performance When Usefulness of Consideration Is Substantially Affected

[d] Substantial Performance Exists Only When Deviations Are Inadvertent

[e] Substantial Performance Exists Only When Damages Can Compensate for Deviations

[f] Accumulation of Trivial Defects Negates Substantial Performance

§§ 50.32-50.39 [Reserved]

§ 50.40 Strict Performance Was Waived

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Waiver Is Relinquishment of Right

[b] Waiver by Party Who Would Benefit From Waived Provision

[c] Waiver Precludes Assertion of Breach of Waived Condition

[d] Continuing to Accept Performance With Knowledge of Previous Breach May Constitute Waiver of Breach

[e] Condoning Late Periodic Payments Is Waiver of Time-of-the-Essence Clause

[f] Acceptance of Building Is Waiver of Defects

[g] Waiver Is Created by Conduct

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Acceptance of Building Is Waiver of Defects

§ 50.41 Strict Performance Was Not Waived

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Waiver Is Question of Fact

[b] Doubtful Case Must Be Decided Against Waiver

[c] Burden of Proof Is on Party Asserting Waiver

[d] Waiver Must Always Be Intentional With Knowledge of All Facts

[e] Waiver Must Be Clearly Expressed

[f] Mere Payment or Acceptance of Work Under Construction Contract Does Not Constitute Waiver

[g] When Obligation Is Continuous, Waiver to Certain Time Does Not Preclude Assertion of Subsequent Breach

[h] Allowance of Performance After Completion Date Does Not Constitute Waiver of Breach

§§ 50.42-50.49 [Reserved]

§ 50.50 Failure to Plead Breach by Defendant

[1] Breach Must Be Alleged

[a] FORM

[b] Comments

[i] Use of Form

[ii] Argument

[iii] Split of Authorities

[iv] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[v] Related Memoranda

[c] Discussion of Authorities

[i] Requirement of Alleging Breach

[ii] Pleading Defendant's Breach

[iii] Requirement of Stating Facts of Breach Unequivocally

[iv] Requirement of Alleging Promise and Its Nonperformance

[v] Breach Alleged in Conclusionary Language

[d] Additional Authorities

[i] Requirement of Alleging Breach

[2] Demand for Performance Must Be Pleaded When No Time Was Specified for Performance

[a] FORM

[b] Comments

[i] Use of Form

[ii] Argument

[iii] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[iv] Related Memoranda

[c] Discussion of Authorities

[i] Demand for Performance Must Be Made

[3] Nonpayment Must Be Pleaded in Action Based on Promise to Pay

[a] FORM

[b] Comments

[i] Use of Form

[ii] Argument

[iii] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[iv] Related Memoranda

[v] Opposing Memoranda

[c] Discussion of Authorities

[i] Allegation of Nonpayment Is Necessary

[ii] Alleging Only That Amount Is Owing Is Insufficient

§ 50.51 Allegation of Nonpayment Is Not Necessary to Plead Defendant's Breach When Contract Is Not Only for Payment of Money

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Allegation of Nonpayment Is Not Necessary When Contract Is Not Only for Payment of Money

§ 50.52 Defendant's Breach Established by Admission of Owing Certain Sum

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defendant Admits Owing Part of Amount Due

§ 50.53 Defendant's Breach by Nonpayment Is Not Cured Until Check Is Paid

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Obligation Is Not Discharged Until Check Is Paid

[b] Creditor Did Not Direct Payment by Mail

[c] Obligation Is Not Discharged When Check Is Lost in Mail

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Obligation Is Not Discharged Until Check Is Paid

§§ 50.54-50.59 [Reserved]

§ 50.60 Failure to Plead Damages

[1] Damages Must Be Pleaded

[a] FORM

[b] Comments

[i] Use of Form

[ii] Argument

[iii] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[iv] Related Memoranda

[v] Opposing Memoranda

[c] Discussion of Authorities

[i] Damages Must Be Alleged

[ii] Special Damages Must Be Pleaded With Particularity

[iii] Damages Must Be Legally Actionable

[iv] Damages Cannot Be Recovered for Injury to Reputation

[d] Additional Authorities

[i] Damages Must Be Legally Actionable

[2] Uncertain Damages Not Necessarily Resulting From Breach Must Be Alleged

[a] FORM

[b] Comments

[i] Use of Form

[ii] Argument

[iii] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[iv] Related Memoranda

[c] Discussion of Authorities

[i] Damages Not Necessarily Resulting From Breach Must Be Alleged

[d] Additional Authorities

[i] Damages Not Necessarily Resulting From Breach Must Be Alleged

§ 50.61 Damages Are Sufficiently Alleged

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Sufficient Allegation of General Damages

[b] Nature and Extent of Damages Need Not Be Alleged

[c] Damages Naturally Resulting From Breach May Be Alleged Generally

[d] Improper Averment of Damages Is Not Important

§§ 50.62-50.99 [Reserved]

§ 50.100 Plaintiff Cannot Sue as Promisee for Benefit of Donee Third Party

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Promisee for Donee Third Party's Benefit Is Not Damaged by Breach

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] When Third Party Is Not Creditor Beneficiary

§ 50.101 Plaintiff Failed to Exhaust Arbitration Remedies

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Court Must Determine Arbitrability of Dispute

[b] Failure to Exhaust Arbitration Remedies

[c] Expiration of Agreement Does Not Terminate Arbitration Rights

[d] Meaning of Collective Bargaining Agreement Is Arbitration Matter

[e] Arbitration Procedures Are Not Avoided by Artful Pleading

[f] Service-of-Suit Clause Does Not Conflict With Arbitration Clause

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Court Must Determine Arbitrability of Dispute

[b] Failure to Exhaust Arbitration Remedies

§ 50.102 Plaintiff Failed to Allege or Prove License as Contractor

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Contractor Must Allege or Prove Existence of License

[b] Completion of Contract by Unlicensed Party

[c] Dissolution of Licensed Partnership Terminates License

[d] Undisclosed Agent's Lack of License Bars Recovery

[e] Knowledge That Contractor Lacked License

[f] Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031 Applies to Contractor's Assignee

[g] Painting Contractor Must Be Licensed

[h] No Exception for Isolated Transaction

[i] Fraud Claim Is Barred

[j] Purpose of Statute

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Contractor Must Allege or Prove Existence of License

[b] Painting Contractor Must Be Licensed

§ 50.103 Plaintiff Failed to Allege or Prove Required License

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Validity of Contracts by Unlicensed Persons

[b] Contract of Unlicensed Dealer of Farm Produce Is Not Enforceable

§§ 50.104-50.109 [Reserved]

§ 50.110 Defendant Waived Right to Require Arbitration

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Right to Arbitrate May Be Waived

[b] Waiver of Arbitration Is Question of Fact

§ 50.111 Contractor Unlicensed at Time of Contract's Execution May Sue If Licensed During Performance

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Contractor Unlicensed at Time of Contract's Execution but Licensed During Performance

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Contractor Unlicensed at Time of Contract's Execution but Licensed During Performance

§ 50.112 Substantial Compliance With Contractors' License Law Is Sufficient

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Purpose of Licensing Requirement

[b] Substantial Compliance With Licensing Requirement Is Sufficient

[c] Elements of Substantial Compliance

§ 50.113 Plaintiff Need Not Allege or Prove License When Contract Is Outside Scope of Licensing Statute

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] License Is Unnecessary When Contract Is Outside Scope of Licensing Statute

§ 50.114 Defendant Cannot Rely on Licensing Requirement to Avoid Payment to Innocent Party

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Party Cannot Rely on Licensing Requirement to Avoid Payment to Innocent Party

§§ 50.115-50.119 [Reserved]

§ 50.120 Action Is Barred by Statute of Limitations

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Accrual of Cause of Action

[b] Running of Limitation Period

[c] Requirement That Writing Contain Contract

[d] Requirement of Indication of Acceptance

[e] Plaintiff's Writings Cannot Prove Defendant's Acceptance

[f] Limitation Period Governing Open Book Account Is Inapplicable

[g] Tolling of Limitation Period

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Running of Limitation Period

[b] Limitation Period Governing Open Book Account Is Inapplicable

§ 50.121 Contract Provision Supersedes Statute of Limitations

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[c] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Contract May Shorten Limitation Period

[b] Period Fixed Must Not Be Unreasonable

[c] Reasonableness Equates With Effective Remedy

§§ 50.122-50.129 [Reserved]

§ 50.130 Fraud Tolls Running of Statutory Limitation Period

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Fraud Tolls Running of Statute

[b] Breach Accomplished Secretly

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Fraud Tolls Running of Statute

§ 50.131 Statutory Limitation Period Runs From Occurrence of Event When Contract of Warranty Relates to Future Event

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Running of Limitation Period in Action Involving Warranty

[b] Limitation Period Tolled

§ 50.132 Four Year Limitation Period Applies to Action on Contract Evidenced by Writing

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Letter Accepted by Party Is Instrument in Writing

[b] Receipt for Money Containing Promise Is Instrument in Writing

[c] Action by Third Party Beneficiary Is on Written Contract

[d] Action by Employees Involving Collective Bargaining Agreement

[e] Escrow Instructions in Writing Constitute Written Contract

[f] Blanks in Contract

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Limitation Period for Written Contract

§ 50.133 Signature of Party to Be Charged Is Not Required for Four-Year Limitation Period to Apply

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Signature of Party

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Signature of Party

§ 50.134 Implied Promise Is Part of Written Instrument

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Promise Inferred From Writing

§ 50.135 Limitation Period Has Not Run on Installment Obligation

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Running of Limitation Period

[b] Acceleration Clause Affects Running of Limitation Period

[c] Services Paid for Monthly

[d] Rent Payable in Installments

[e] Monthly Payments for Life

§ 50.136 Action on Promise to Pay When Able Accrues When Debtor Is Able to Pay

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Accrual of Action on Promise to Pay When Able

§ 50.137 Employee's Action for Constructive Breach of Employment Contract Accrues on Actual Termination Rather Than When Intolerable Working Conditions Arise

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Accrual of Action Based on Constructive Termination of Employment

§§ 50.138-50.149 [Reserved]

§ 50.150 Agreement for Illegal Purpose Is Not Enforceable

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] What Is Unlawful Contract

[b] Illegal Contract Is Not Enforceable

[c] Contract for Object Prohibited by Penal Law Is Void

[d] Contract Void When its Purpose Is to Defraud Creditors

[e] Claim Is Based on Illegal Contract

[f] Bargain Requiring Nondisclosure of Discreditable Facts Is Illegal

[g] Illegal Consideration Is Inseparable

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] What is Unlawful Contract

[b] Illegal Contract Is Not Enforceable

[c] Claim Is Based on Illegal Contract

[d] Bargain Requiring Nondisclosure of Discreditable Facts Is Illegal

[e] Illegal Consideration Is Inseparable

§ 50.151 Gambling Contract Is Not Enforceable

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Wagering Contracts Are Not Enforceable

[b] Contract Founded on Gambling Consideration Is Unenforceable

[c] Checks Cashed for Gambling Purposes

[d] Money Lent for Gambling Purposes

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Wagering Contracts Are Not Enforceable

[b] Money Lent for Gambling Purposes

§§ 50.152-50.159 [Reserved]

§ 50.160 Party May Maintain Action When Aid of Illegal Agreement Is Not Required

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Action Is Permitted When Aid of Illegal Agreement Is Not Required

§ 50.161 Relief May Be Granted Under Illegal Contract

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Public Importance of Discouraging Prohibited Transactions

[b] Relief May Be Granted Under Illegal Contract

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Relief May Be Granted Under Illegal Contract

§ 50.162 Party Justifiably Ignorant of Contract's Illegality May Recover for Performance

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Recovery Permitted for Party Who Is Justifiably Ignorant

[b] Recovery Permitted When Defendant Misrepresented Facts

§ 50.163 Contract Can Be Enforced Insofar as Illegal Consideration Can Be Severed

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Illegal Consideration Can Be Severed and Contract Can Be Enforced

§§ 50.164-50.169 [Reserved]

§ 50.170 Minor Is Without Capacity to Enter Into Contract Relating to Real Property or to Personal Property Not in Minor's Immediate Possession and Control

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Disaffirmance Is Not Necessary

[b] Void Contracts Are Not Ratifiable

[c] Direction to Pay Wages to Another Is Void

§ 50.171 Contract Was Disaffirmed by Minor

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Minor's Power to Disaffirm Certain Contracts

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[e] Related Memoranda

[f] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Disaffirmance Is Rescission

[b] Restoration of Consideration Is Not Necessary

[c] Manner of Disaffirming Contract

[d] Minor Is Not Estopped From Disaffirming Contract

[e] Mature Appearance Does Not Estop Minor From Disaffirming Contract

[f] False Representation of Age Does Not Preclude Disaffirmance

§§ 50.172-50.179 [Reserved]

§ 50.180 Minor Is Not Permitted to Disaffirm Certain Contracts for Necessaries

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Implied Contract to Pay for Necessaries

[b] Lodging Is Necessary

[c] Attorney's Services Are Necessary

§ 50.181 Minor Is Not Permitted to Disaffirm Certain Court-Approved Contracts

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Court Approval of Contract Precludes Disaffirmance During and After Minority

[b] Approval Encompasses Options for Extension

§§ 50.182-50.189 [Reserved]

§ 50.190 Recovery Is Precluded by Unconscionability Doctrine

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Right to Present Evidence Regarding Unconscionability

[b] Indicia of Unconscionability

[c] Contract of Adhesion Defined

[d] Unconscionability Applied to Commercial Code Transactions

[e] Relevant Considerations Regarding Unconscionability of Price Term

[f] Market Price Set by Oligopoly Is Subject to Scrutiny

[g] Unconscionability of Warranty Disclaimer

[h] Unconscionable Limitation or Exclusion of Consequential Damages Under Commercial Code

[i] Unconscionability Is Question of Law

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Indicia of Unconscionability

[b] Contract of Adhesion Defined

[c] Unconscionable Limitation or Exclusion of Consequential Damages Under Commercial Code

§§ 50.191-50.199 [Reserved]

§ 50.200 Adhesion Contract Is Not Unconscionable and Defendant's Expectations Are Not Reasonable

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Test for Enforceability of Adhesion Contract

[b] Expectations of Nonparty Are Irrelevant

[c] Tests for Reasonableness of Expectations

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Test for Enforceability of Adhesion Contract

§ 50.201 Party Claiming Unconscionability Must Show That Alternative Sources Were Unavailable

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Available Alternative Sources of Supply Defeat Claim of Unconscionability

[b] Claim of Unconscionability Must Show Unavailability of Alternative Sources of Supply

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Available Alternative Sources of Supply Defeat Claim of Unconscionability

§ 50.202 Price for Goods or Services Was Not Unconscionable

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[c] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Price Was Not Unconscionable

§§ 50.203-50.209 [Reserved]

§ 50.210 Delay of Performance Is Defense When Time Is of Essence of Contract

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Delay of Performance by Plaintiff When Time Is of Essence Constitutes Defense

§ 50.211 Defendant's Failure or Delay in Performance Is Excused When Caused by Acts of Plaintiff

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Definition of Creditor in Civ. Code § 1511

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[e] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Delay in Performance Is Excused When Caused by Acts of Obligee

[b] Contractual Stipulation Precluding Excuse of Prevention Is Not Valid

[c] Failure to Apply for Extension of Time Is Not Basis for Liability When Performance Was Delayed by Obligor

[d] Denial of Access to Land Is Prevention

§§ 50.212-50.229 [Reserved]

§ 50.230 Performance Was Prevented by Operation of Law

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Impossibility as Excuse for Nonperformance

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[e] Related Memoranda

[f] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Nonperformance Is Excused When Performance Is Prevented by Operation of Law

§ 50.231 Performance Was Prevented or Delayed by Irresistible, Superhuman Cause or Act of God

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Irresistible, Superhuman Cause Defined

§ 50.232 Performance Was Impossible Because of Impracticability

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Nonperformance Is Excused When Performance Is Impracticable

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Nonperformance Is Excused When Performance Is Impracticable

§ 50.233 Performance Was Impossible Due to Death of Person or Destruction of Specific Thing Necessary for Performance

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Destruction or Nonexistence of Subject Matter

[b] Impossibility Due to Death of Person

[c] Impossibility Due to Incapacity of Person

§§ 50.234-50.239 [Reserved]

§ 50.240 Defense of Prevention of Performance by Operation of Law Is Not Applicable to Prevention by Judicial Order Obtained by Private Litigant

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defense of Prevention of Performance by Operation of Law Is Applicable Only to Governmental Interference

[b] Defense of Impossibility by Operation of Law Is Not Applicable to Prevention by Judicial Order Obtained by Private Litigant

§ 50.241 Reasonably Anticipated Natural Phenomenon Is Not Irresistible, Superhuman Cause Excusing Failure to Perform

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Reasonably Anticipated Natural Event Is Not Irresistible, Superhuman Cause

[b] Reasonably Anticipated High Water Is Not Irresistible, Superhuman Cause

§ 50.242 Inability of Obligor Does Not Constitute Impossibility

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Burden of Proving Impossibility

[b] Inability of Obligor Does Not Constitute Impossibility

[c] Failure to Obtain Consent of Third Party

§ 50.243 Increased Expense or Difficulty Does Not Make Performance Impossible or Impracticable Unless Extreme or Unreasonable

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Increased Expense or Difficulty Does Not Necessarily Excuse Performance as Impossible or Impracticable

§ 50.244 Death of Obligor Does Not Terminate Personal Service Contract That Others Can Perform

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Personal Service Contract Is Not Terminated by Death of Contracting Party When Others Can Perform

§§ 50.245-50.249 [Reserved]

§ 50.250 Recovery Is Precluded by Frustration-of-Purpose Doctrine

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Performance Is Excused When Purpose of Contract Is Frustrated

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Performance Is Excused When Purpose of Contract Is Frustrated

§§ 50.251-50.259 [Reserved]

§ 50.260 Risk of Frustrating Event Was Reasonably Foreseeable

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defense of Frustration Is Not Available When Risk of Frustrating Event Was Reasonably Foreseeable

§ 50.261 Parties Assumed Risk of Frustrating Event

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defense of Frustration Is Not Applicable When Parties Assumed Risk

§ 50.262 Value of Counterperformance Was Not Totally Destroyed

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defense of Frustration Is Not Available Unless Value of Counterperformance Was Totally Destroyed

§ 50.263 Purpose Allegedly Frustrated Was Not Contemplated by Both Parties

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defense of Frustration Is Not Applicable Unless Frustrated Purpose Was Contemplated by Both Parties

§§ 50.264-50.269 [Reserved]

§ 50.270 Recovery Is Precluded by Failure of Consideration

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Failure of Consideration Is Ground for Rescission or Defense in Action on Contract

[b] Failure of Consideration Is Available as Defense Despite Failure to Rescind

[c] Failure of Consideration Must Be Based on Events Subsequent to Making of Contract

[d] Annexation of Unwarranted Condition to Offer of Performance Constitutes Failure of Consideration

[e] Inability to Deliver Thing Sold Constitutes Failure of Consideration

[f] Failure to Make Progress Payments in Building Contract Is Failure of Consideration

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Failure to Make Progress Payments in Building Contract Is Failure of Consideration

§§ 50.271-50.279 [Reserved]

§ 50.280 Recovery Is Not Precluded When Failure of Consideration Is Not Shown

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Burden of Proof of Failure of Consideration Is on Defendant

[b] Deviations From the Contract in Trivial Matters Do Not Constitute Failure of Consideration

[c] No Failure of Consideration When Consideration Proves Worthless

[d] Partial Failure of Consideration Is Not Complete Defense

[e] Delay in Performance Ordinarily Is Not Failure of Consideration

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No Failure of Consideration When Consideration Proves Worthless

§§ 50.281-50.299 [Reserved]

§ 50.300 Change of Venue Is Proper--Complaint Alleges Improper Venue or Does Not Allege Venue

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Contract Must State Place of Performance Before Action May Be Brought in County of Performance

[b] Place Contract Was Made

[c] Defendant's Right to Have Action Tried in County of Residence

[d] Requirement That Venue Be Proper in All Causes of Action

[e] Contract's Statement of Place of Execution Is Not Conclusive

[f] Inquiry and Notification Relative to Credit Are Not Part of Contract

[g] Contractual Venue Selection Clause Requiring Improper Venue Is Contrary to Public Policy and Void

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Defendant's Right to Have Action Tried in County of Residence

[b] Contract's Statement of Place of Execution Is Not Conclusive

§ 50.301 Change of Venue Is Proper--No Special Contract Designates Place of Performance

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Special Contract Defined

[b] Civil Code Section 1489 Does Not Have Effect of Special Contract

[c] Check Is Not Special Contract

[d] Contract Containing Address of Insured Does Not Make Contract Performable in County of Insured's Address

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Contract Must State Place of Performance Before Action May Be Brought in County of Performance

§§ 50.302-50.309 [Reserved]

§ 50.310 Current Venue Is Proper--Contract Was Not Made in Presence of Contracting Parties and Is Deemed Made Where Acceptance Was Given or Placed in Mail

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Propriety of Chosen Venue

[b] Contract Action Commenced in One of Several Proper Counties

[c] Acceptance by Mail

[d] Contract Subject to Approval Is Made Where Acceptance Is Mailed

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Contract Subject to Approval Is Made Where Acceptance Is Mailed

§ 50.311 Current Venue Is Proper--Obligation Was Incurred Where and When Option Contract Was Made

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Obligation Is Incurred When Option Contract Is Made

[b] Contract With Public Body Is Made When Public Body Accepts Written Bid

§ 50.312 Current Venue Is Proper--Unilateral Contract Was Made at Place of Performance

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Unilateral Contract Was Made at Place of Performance

[b] Broker's Listing Agreement Is Unilateral Contract

§ 50.313 Current Venue Is Proper--Contract Made by Telephone Was Made in County Where Offeree Accepted

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Place Contract by Telephone Is Made

§ 50.314 Current Venue Is Proper--Suretyship Contract Was Made Where Creditor Accepted Guaranty

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Suretyship Contract Is Made Where Creditor Accepts Guaranty

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Suretyship Contract Is Made Where Creditor Accepts Guaranty

§ 50.315 Current Venue Is Proper--Check Is Contract for Venue Purposes

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Check Is Contract

§ 50.316 Current Venue Is Proper--Contract Containing Condition Precedent Was Made Where Condition Precedent Was Performed

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Place Condition Precedent Was Performed Is Place Contract Was Made

[b] Condition Precedent of Insurance Premium Payment

§ 50.317 Current Venue Is Proper--Specification of Place of Performance Was Incorporated by Reference

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Incorporation of Place of Performance by Reference

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Incorporation of Place of Performance by Reference

§ 50.318 Current Venue Is Proper--Special Contract Specifies Place of Performance

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Special Contract Specifying Place of Performance

[b] Place Specified for Payment Is Place of Performance

[c] Place for Payment of Note Is Place of Performance

[d] Letterhead Specified Place of Performance

§ 50.319 Current Venue Is Proper--Supplemental Agreement or Contract Correcting Errors Does Not Affect Venue

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Supplemental Agreement Is Not Controlling When Action Is Founded on Original Agreement's Obligations

[b] Contract Correcting Minor Errors Does Not Affect Venue

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Supplemental Agreement Is Not Controlling When Action Is Founded on Original Agreement's Obligations

§ 50.320 Current Venue Is Proper--Place for Corporation's Performance of Obligation That Was Breached Is Decisive Factor

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Where Corporation's Obligation Was to Be Performed Is Determinative

[b] Burden of Proof and Practice of Parties

§ 50.321 Current Venue Is Proper--Code of Civil Procedure Section 395(b) Applies to Action by Consumer or Action Against Consumer

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Code of Civil Procedure Section 395(b) Applies to Action by Consumer or Action Against Consumer

[b] Statutory Reference to "Buyer or Lessee" Means Consumer

§§ 50.322-50.349 [Reserved]

§ 50.350 Complaint Shows Only Agreement to Agree

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[c] Related Memoranda

[d] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Agreement to Agree Is Determined by Reference to Parties' Expressed Intentions

[b] No Remedy for Failure to Agree

[c] Pleader's Interpretation of Ambiguous Agreement Must Be Alleged

[d] Interpretation Is Judicial Function

[e] Intent That Agreement Be Formalized

[f] Words Are to Be Given Their Ordinary Meanings

[g] Condition of Attorney's Approval Is Implied

[h] When Leave to Amend Need Not Be Given

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Agreement to Agree is Determined by Reference to Parties' Expressed Intentions

[b] Interpretation Is Judicial Function

[c] Words Are to Be Given Their Ordinary Meanings

§ 50.351 No Contract Was Formed Because Acceptance Was Not Effective Until After Offer Was Revoked

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[c] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Acceptance Is in Transmission When Offeree Relinquishes Control

[b] Postmark Is Substantial Evidence

[c] Exercise of Option

§ 50.352 Qualified Acceptance Was Not Effective Except as Counteroffer

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[c] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Contract Is Formed by Qualified Acceptance

§ 50.353 Posting Revised Consumer Contract on Web Site Does Not Make New Terms Enforceable

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[c] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Posting Revised Consumer Contract on Web Site Does Not Make New Terms Enforceable

§§ 50.354-50.359 [Reserved]

§ 50.360 Complaint Shows Contract to Negotiate Agreement

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[c] Related Memoranda

[d] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Contract to Negotiate Agreement May Be Formed and Breached Like any Other Contract

§§ 50.361-50.369 [Reserved]

§ 50.370 No Valid Contract Exists Without Mutuality of Obligation

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[c] Related Memoranda

[d] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Requirement of Mutuality of Obligation

[b] Contract Lacks Consideration

[c] Unrestricted Right to Withdraw

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Requirement of Mutuality of Obligation

§§ 50.371-50.379 [Reserved]

§ 50.380 Lack of Mutuality of Obligation Is Immaterial to Executed Contract

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[c] Related Memoranda

[d] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Requirement of Mutuality Is Not Applicable to Executed Contract

[b] Plaintiff Is Entitled to Full Recovery on Executed Contract

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Requirement of Mutuality Is Not Applicable to Executed Contract

§ 50.381 Doctrine of Mutuality Does Not Apply to Unilateral Contracts

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[c] Related Memoranda

[d] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Unilateral Contract Defined

[b] Doctrine of Mutuality Is Not Applicable to Unilateral Contracts

§ 50.382 Right to Terminate Contract on Specified Conditions Does Not Render Contract Unenforceable

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[c] Related Memoranda

[d] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Right to Terminate Contract on Specified Conditions Does Not Render Contract Unenforceable

§ 50.383 Mutuality of Obligation Is Not Required When Consideration Exists

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[c] Related Memoranda

[d] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Mutuality of Obligation Is Not Required When Consideration Exists

§§ 50.384-50.389 [Reserved]

§ 50.390 Contract Cannot Be Ascertained Whether Oral, Written, or Implied by Conduct

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Insufficiency of Contract Allegations

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Insufficiency of Contract Allegations

§ 50.391 Complaint Is Based on Instrument in Writing That Does Not Constitute Contract

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] When Written Instrument Is Contract

[b] Letters Are Not Written Instruments

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Consideration Required

§ 50.392 Complaint Fails to Allege Consideration for Oral Contract

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Consideration for Oral Contract Must Be Alleged

§§ 50.393-50.399 [Reserved]

§ 50.400 Consideration Need Not Be Pleaded When Contract Is Written

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Consideration for Written Instruments Need Not Be Alleged

[b] When Instrument in Writing Is Considered Contract

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Consideration for Written Instruments Need Not Be Alleged

§ 50.401 Allegations of Terms of Oral Contract Show Consideration

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Allegations of Terms of Oral Contract Show Consideration

§ 50.402 Failure to Allege Specific Duration of Oral Commercial Agreement Does Not Render Complaint Fatally Defective

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Pleading Specific Duration of Oral Commercial Agreement

§§ 50.403-50.409 [Reserved]

§ 50.410 Cause of Action Is Based on Promissory Estoppel

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Promise May Be Binding Without Consideration Under Promissory Estoppel Doctrine

[b] Pleading Elements of Promissory Estoppel

[c] Requirement That Injustice Be Unavoidable Except by Enforcing Promise

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Pleading Elements of Promissory Estoppel

[b] Requirement That Injustice Be Unavoidable Except by Enforcing Promise

§§ 50.411-50.419 [Reserved]

§ 50.420 Complaint Fails to Allege Elements of Promissory Estoppel

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Elements of Promissory Estoppel

[b] Mere Expression of Intent Is Not Promise

[c] Requirement of Definite and Substantial Action

[d] Promissory Estoppel Is Not Applicable When Reliance Is Result of Bargaining

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Elements of Promissory Estoppel

§§ 50.421-50.429 [Reserved]

§ 50.430 Contract Providing for Performance to Party's Satisfaction Is Not Illusory

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Contract Providing for Performance to Party's Satisfaction Is Not Illusory

[b] Reasonable-Person Standard Applies to Commercial Satisfaction Clause

[c] Good-Faith Standard Applies When Party's Judgment Is Involved

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Contract Providing for Performance to Party's Satisfaction Is Not Illusory

[b] Good-Faith Standard Applies When Party's Judgment Is Involved

§ 50.431 Contract Is Not Illusory Merely Because Seller Unilaterally Determines Price

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Contract Providing That Seller May Unilaterally Determine Price Is Not Illusory

§ 50.432 Unilateral Contract Is Not Illusory When One Party Has Implied Power to Terminate or Modify It, If Exercise Is Subject to Limitations

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Unilateral Contract Is Not Illusory When One Party Has Implied Power to Terminate or Modify It, If Exercise Is Subject to Limitations

§§ 50.433-50.449 [Reserved]

§ 50.450 Obligation Sued On Was Supplanted by New Obligation

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Contract Was Supplanted by New Obligation

§ 50.451 Contract Is Unenforceable Against Defendant Because New Debtor Was Substituted for Defendant

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] New Debtor Was Substituted for Old Debtor

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] New Debtor Was Substituted for Old Debtor

§ 50.452 Plaintiff Was Substituted as New Creditor With Intent to Transfer Original Creditor's Rights to Plaintiff

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] New Creditor Was Substituted for Old Creditor

§§ 50.453-50.459 [Reserved]

§ 50.460 Alleged Novation Contract Fails to Conform to General Contract Rules

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Lack of Mutual Assent

[b] Lack of Consideration

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Lack of Mutual Assent

§ 50.461 Novation by Substitution of New Obligation Is Not Shown

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Lack of Intent to Substitute New Obligation

[b] Burden of Proof

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Lack of Intent to Substitute New Obligation

[b] Burden of Proof

§ 50.462 Novation by Substitution of New Debtor Is Not Shown

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Lack of Intent to Release Old Debtor

[b] Mere Acceptance of Payments From Another Debtor Is Insufficient to Release Old Debtor

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Lack of Intent to Release Old Debtor

§ 50.463 Creditor Rescinded Acceptance of New Debtor Under Novation Agreement

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

§ 50.464 Past Forgiveness of Installments Does Not Constitute Execution of Oral Agreement to Reduce Future Installments Under Written Contract

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Oral Modification Lacking Consideration Is Executed Contract Only When Obligee Accepts Performance in Accordance With Terms of Modification

[b] Past Forgiveness of Installments Due Does Not Constitute Executed Oral Agreement to Reduce Future Payments

§§ 50.465-50.469 [Reserved]

§ 50.470 Contract Was Rescinded or Abandoned by Mutual Consent

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Release From Obligations

[b] Consideration for Mutual Rescission or Abandonment

[c] Written Contract May Be Rescinded or Abandoned by Oral Agreement

[d] Abandonment or Rescission May Be Implied by Conduct of Parties

[e] Abandonment or Rescission May Be Implied by Subsequent Negotiations for New Contract

[f] Abandonment or Rescission May Be Implied by Acquiescence in Other Party's Refusal to Comply

§§ 50.471-50.479 [Reserved]

§ 50.480 Intent to Rescind or Abandon Contract Was Not Mutual

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Intent to Rescind or Abandon Must Be Mutual

[b] Termination of Contract Because of Other Party's Noncompliance Is Not Mutual Abandonment or Rescission

[c] Repossession of Property Does Not Necessarily Indicate Consent to Rescission

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Intent to Rescind or Abandon Must Be Mutual

[b] Repossession of Property Does Not Necessarily Indicate Consent to Rescission

§§ 50.481-50.499 [Reserved]

§ 50.500 Contract Is Ambiguous

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Contract Is Ambiguous When Susceptible to Two Different Meanings

[b] Right to Introduce Evidence Concerning Ambiguous Contract

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Right to Introduce Evidence Concerning Ambiguous Contract

§ 50.501 Contract Is Uncertain as to Material Features

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Whether Agreement Created Legal Obligation Is Question of Law

[b] Contract Unenforceable in Absence of Meeting of Minds

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Contract Unenforceable in Absence of Meeting of Minds

§ 50.502 Contract Stipulations Generally Are Interpreted as Covenants, Not Conditions Precedent

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Stipulations Must Be Construed as Covenants When Possible

[b] Condition That Third Party Take Action Must Be Construed as Covenant

[c] Stipulations Are Covenants When Forfeiture or Inequitable Consequences Is Involved

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Stipulations Must Be Construed as Covenants When Possible

§§ 50.503-50.509 [Reserved]

§ 50.510 Contract Is Not Ambiguous

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Meaning of Unambiguous Contract Is Question of Law

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Meaning of Unambiguous Contract Is Question of Law

§ 50.511 Plaintiff's Construction of Ambiguous Contract Must Be Accepted

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff's Construction of Ambiguous Contract Must Be Accepted

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Plaintiff's Construction of Ambiguous Contract Must Be Accepted

§§ 50.512-50.519 [Reserved]

§ 50.520 Oral Contract Was Modified by Written Consent

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Modification Defined

[b] Oral Contract May Be Modified by Written Agreement Without New Consideration

§ 50.521 Written Contract Was Modified Pursuant to Its Own Terms

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Written Contract May Expressly Provide for Modification

[b] Modification Pursuant to Contract Provision

§ 50.522 Written Contract Was Modified by Written Agreement or by Oral Agreement Supported by New Consideration

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Modification of Contracts

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[e] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Modification of Written Contract by Oral Agreement Supported by New Consideration

§ 50.523 Written Contract Was Modified by Executed Oral Agreement

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Executed Oral Agreement Is Sufficient to Modify Written Contract Without Consideration

[b] Performance by Promisee Alone Is Sufficient When Oral Modification Is Supported by Consideration

[c] Effect of Contract Provision Requiring Written Modification

[d] Nonperformance Is Execution of Oral Agreement Not to Perform

[e] Burden of Proof

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Executed Oral Agreement Is Sufficient to Modify Written Contract Without Consideration

[b] Performance by Promisee Alone Is Sufficient When Oral Modification Is Supported by Consideration

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.01

§ 50.01 Scope of Chapter

This chapter contains memoranda for use in actions for damages for breach of contract, with the exception of actions involving the sale of goods, which are primarily covered in Ch. 206, Sales .

Part II includes the following forms:

- Subpart A contains forms supporting or opposing contentions relating to the elements necessary to plead and prove a cause of action for damages for breach of contract, including contentions relating to the plaintiff's performance or excuse for nonperformance of conditions precedent, substantial performance by each party, waiver of strict performance, the defendant's breach, and the plaintiff's damages [§ 50.10 et seq.].

- Subpart B contains forms supporting or opposing contentions relating to the following defenses that may be pleaded and proved in an action for contract damages:

  - Plaintiff's standing to sue on the contract [§ 50.100 et seq.].

  - Lapse of the statute of limitations [§ 50.120 et seq.].

  - Application of the illegal purpose doctrine [§ 50.150 et seq.].

  - Contracts with minor defendants [§ 50.170 et seq.].

  - Unconscionability [§ 50.190 et seq.].

  - Plaintiff's actions caused defendant's breach in performance [§ 50.210 et seq.].

  - Other events caused defendant's performance to be impossible or impracticable [§ 50.230 et seq.].

- The frustration of the purpose of the contract [§ 50.250 et seq.].
- Failure of consideration [§ 50.270 et seq.].

- Subpart C contains forms supporting or opposing contentions relating to the proper venue of an action for damages for breach of contract [§ 50.300 et seq.].

- Subpart D contains forms supporting or opposing contentions relating to the existence of a contract on the following grounds:

  - Offer and acceptance [§ 50.350 et seq.].
  - Mutuality of obligation [§ 50.370 et seq.].
  - Requirements particular to written or oral contracts [§ 50.390 et seq.].
  - Recovery based on application of the Promissory Estoppel doctrine [§ 50.410 et seq.].
  - Illusory contracts [§ 50.430 et seq.].
  - Novation of contracts [§ 50.450 et seq.].
  - Mutual rescission or abandonment of contracts [§ 50.470 et seq.].

- Subpart E contains forms supporting or opposing contentions relating to the interpretation of a contract, including contentions relating to the resolution of an ambiguous contract [§ 50.500 et seq.] and modification of the contract [§ 50.520 et seq.].

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.02

§ 50.02 Governing Statutes

[1] In General

Contracts in general are governed by the basic contract rules set out in Civ. Code § 1549 et seq. Obligations in general are governed by Civ. Code § 1427 et seq., while obligations arising from particular transactions are governed by Civ. Code § 1738 et seq.

Statutes governing the capacity of minors to make contracts are set out in Fam. Code § 6700 et seq. Statutes governing the capacity of persons of unsound mind to make contracts are in Civ. Code § 38 et seq. and Prob. Code § 810 et seq., and are discussed in Ch. 117, Insane and Incompetent Persons .

Contracts for the sale of goods are governed by Com. Code § 2101 et seq. Points and authorities concerning these types of contracts are discussed in Ch. 206, Sales .

Gov. Code § 810 et seq., commonly known as the Government Claims Act (or Tort Claims Act), applies to a claim for damages based on breach of a contract by the state or a local public entity [City of Stockton v. Superior Court (2007) 42 Cal. 4th 730, 734, 737-740, 68 Cal. Rptr. 3d 295, 171 P.3d 20] . Therefore, "all claims for money or damages against the state ... on express contract" and all such claims against a local public entity are required to be presented in accordance with a prescribed procedure, not later than one year after the accrual of the cause of action [Gov. Code §§ 905, 905.2(b)(3), 911.2(a)]. No suit for money or damages may be brought against the state or local public entity "on a cause of action for which a claim is required to be presented in accordance with ... [the prescribed procedure] until a written claim therefor has been presented to the public entity and has been acted upon ... or has been deemed to have been rejected" [Gov. Code § 945.4]. For discussion of the prescribed claim procedure [see generally Gov. Code § 900 et seq.] and related memoranda, see Ch. 196, Public Entities .

[2] Venue

Venue in contract actions generally (except consumer actions and actions against corporations) is governed by Code Civ. Proc. § 395(a).

Venue in a consumer action is governed by Civ. Code § 1812.10 if the action arises from a retail installment sale, or by Civ. Code § 2984.4 if the action arises from a transaction subject to the Rees-Levering Motor Vehicle Sales and Finance Act, or by Code Civ. Proc. § 395(b) if the action arises from an offer or provision of goods, services, loans or extensions of credit intended primarily for personal, family or household use, other than an obligation described in Civ. Code § 1812.10 or 2984.4, or arises from a transaction consummated as a proximate result of either an unsolicited telephone call made by a seller engaged in the business of consummating transactions of that kind or a telephone call or electronic transmission made by the buyer or lessee in response to a solicitation by the seller.

Venue for actions against corporations, including actions based on contract, is governed by Code Civ. Proc. § 395.5.

A contractual venue selection clause designating a venue improper under statute is void and unenforceable as contrary to public policy [General Acceptance Corp. v. Robinson (1929) 207 Cal. 285, 289, 277 P. 1039 ; Arntz Builders v. Superior Court (2004) 122 Cal. App. 4th 1195, 1204, 19 Cal. Rptr. 3d 346 ; Alexander v. Superior Court (2003) 114 Cal. App. 4th 723, 732, 8 Cal. Rptr. 3d 111] . Likewise, a contractual waiver of a statutory exception to venue selection rules is void [Arntz Builders v. Superior Court (2004) 122 Cal. App. 4th 1195, 1204, 1206-1207, 19 Cal. Rptr. 3d 346] . However, statutory venue arguments may be waived by delay in asserting them once a lawsuit has been filed [Newman v. County of Sonoma (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 625, 628, 15 Cal. Rptr. 914 ; Arntz Builders v. Superior Court (2004) 122 Cal. App. 4th 1195, 1204, 19 Cal. Rptr. 3d 346 ; Ventura Unified School District v. Superior Court (2001) 92 Cal. App. 4th 811, 815, 112 Cal. Rptr. 2d 260] . Whether a contract may validly specify venue in only one of multiple venues that would be proper under the statute has not been conclusively resolved [Arntz Builders v. Superior Court (2004) 122 Cal. App. 4th 1195, 1202 n.5, 19 Cal. Rptr. 3d 346] .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.03

§ 50.03 How to Use the Forms in This Chapter

[1] Page Limits

One of the more significant drafting requirements to keep in mind is page limits: supporting and opposing memoranda must not exceed 15 pages (20 pages for a summary judgment motion or summary adjudication motion). Exhibits, declarations, attachments, a table of contents, a table of authorities, and the proof of service are not included in the page limitation. A reply or closing memorandum may not exceed 10 pages [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113(d)]. A party desiring to file a longer memorandum must obtain leave of court [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113(e)]. These and other drafting requirements are discussed in detail in Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs, § 1.05.

[2] Using the Forms to Build a Draft Memorandum

The forms included in this chapter are designed to be combined with other forms to form a complete memorandum. For a detailed discussion of how to select and use the forms in this publication to build a draft memorandum and complete the draft, with detailed discussion of all drafting requirements and strategic and stylistic considerations, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.04

§ 50.04 Related Discussion and Forms

[1] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For discussion, a procedural guide, and forms for use in actions for damages for breach of contract, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[2] Related Points and Authorities Chapters

Related memoranda that may be useful in particular cases when a contract is involved may be found in the following chapters in this publication:

- Ch. 11, Accord and Satisfaction.
- Ch. 64, Damages: Tort.
- Ch. 65, Damages: Contract.
- Ch. 206, Sales.
- Ch. 214, Specific Performance.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

5-50 California Points & Authorities §§ 50.05-50.09

[Reserved]

§§ 50.05[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
A. Action for Damages for Breach of Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.10

§ 50.10 Failure to Allege or Prove All Elements of Cause of Action for Damages for Breach of Contract

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE COMPLAINT FAILS TO ALLEGE THE ESSENTIAL ELEMENTS OF A CAUSE OF ACTION FOR DAMAGES BASED ON BREACH OF CONTRACT.

A. Elements to Be Pleaded. The essential elements to be pleaded in an action for breach of contract are (1) the contract, (2) the plaintiff's performance of the contract or excuse for nonperformance, (3) the defendant's breach, and (4) the resulting harm to the plaintiff (Careau & Co. v. Security Pacific Business Credit, Inc. (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 1371, 1388, 272 Cal. Rptr. 387).

[Optional] B. Requirement of Alleging Agreement With Certainty. The complaint must set forth the contract between the parties with sufficient certainty to show any right on the plaintiff's part to performance on the defendant's part (Hays v. Temple (1937) 23 Cal. App. 2d 690, 694, 73 P.2d 1248).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form supports a defendant's contention that all necessary elements of a cause of action for damages for breach of contract have not been properly pleaded or proven. Thus, it may be used in a memorandum submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint, on the ground that the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in that it does not allege all the essential elements of a cause of action for damages for breach of contract. With appropriate modification, optional Paragraph B may be submitted in support of a demurrer to a complaint for breach of contract on the ground of uncertainty [see Hays v. Temple (1937) 23 Cal. App. 2d 690, 694, 73 P.2d 1248] .

This form may also be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which relief is sought on the basis of plaintiff's failure to plead or prove the necessary elements of the cause of action for contract damages. For example, it may be used in support of a motion for summary judgment on the ground that undisputed facts preclude the existence of one or more of the necessary elements.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case, for example, an analysis of the allegations in plaintiff's complaint demonstrating that one or more of the necessary elements has not been pleaded.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to the elements of an enforceable contract, and forms relating to an action for contract damages, including forms of demurrer, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

This form may be combined, when appropriate, with the more specific memoranda based on failure to plead a particular element, such as § 50.20 (performance or excuse for nonperformance of conditions not alleged), § 50.50[1] (breach of contract not alleged), § 50.60[1] (damages not alleged), § 50.350 (no contract, only an agreement to agree, is alleged), and § 50.370 (lack of mutuality of obligation). It may also be combined with other forms that set out additional requirements to plead a breach of contract in a particular situation, such as § 50.50[3] (nonpayment not alleged), § 50.60[2] (amount due not clearly alleged), § 50.390 (inability to ascertain whether the contract was oral or written), and § 50.391 (consideration not alleged in a complaint based on an instrument in writing not satisfying legal requirements).

For memoranda relating to the elements of a cause of action for contract damages based on a sales agreement governed by the Commercial Code, see Ch. 206, Sales, § 206.30 et seq., "Sales Under Commercial Code."

This memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum supporting a general demurrer, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publicationin drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the memoranda set out in § 50.11 may be used in opposition to the memoranda of this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Elements to Be Pleaded

The facts and procedural background of Careau & Co. v. Security Pacific Business Credit, Inc. (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 1371, 272 Cal. Rptr. 387 , are discussed in § 50.20[3][b]. The case involved breach of alleged loan commitments. In reversing the trial court's judgment with respect to the causes of action for breach of contract and holding that the plaintiffs were entitled to leave to amend, the court of appeal began its analysis by stating that a cause of action for breach of contract is composed of the following elements: (1) the contract, (2) the plaintiff's performance or excuse for nonperformance, (3) the defendant's breach, and (4) the resulting damages to the plaintiff (222 Cal. App. 3d 1371, 1388) .

[b] Requirement of Alleging Agreement With Certainty

Hays v. Temple (1937) 23 Cal. App. 2d 690, 73 P.2d 1248 , was an action for damages for breach of contract. The plaintiff claimed the exclusive right to the services of the individual defendants' daughter as a child actress, pursuant to a contract signed by her parents. The complaint alleged that the plaintiff negotiated an agreement with the defendant film-producing corporations, under which the plaintiff agreed to lend the services of the daughter to the corporations that employed her as an actress, for which her parents would receive compensation. The complaint alleged that this compensation was never paid to the plaintiff. Some of the defendant corporations, demurred on the ground that the complaint was ambiguous, unintelligible, and uncertain. The trial court sustained the demurrer.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court concluded that the complaint failed to set forth the agreement between the plaintiff and the corporations with sufficient certainty to show any right on the plaintiff's part to any of the compensation paid to the parents. There was also a total absence of any allegation of a contractual relation between the plaintiff and the corporations, nor was there an allegation that any person other than the parents made any promise to the plaintiff (23 Cal. App. 2d 690, 694-695) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Elements to Be Pleaded

In Otworth v. Southern Pac. Transportation Co. (1985) 166 Cal. App. 3d 452, 212 Cal. Rptr. 743 , the court of appeal affirmed the dismissal of an action after the defendant demurred generally. The complaint, which alleged numerous theories of recovery, including breach of contract, arose out of a dispute concerning income tax withholding by an employer. The complaint failed to allege whether the employment contract was written or oral, it did not set forth the contract terms, and it did not assert whether the plaintiff, the employee, had performed. It also failed to allege whether the contract required the employer to refrain from withholding, even though that type of contract provision might have been invalid (166 Cal. App. 3d 452, 458-459) .

Lortz v. Connell (1969) 273 Cal. App. 2d 286, 78 Cal. Rptr. 6 , was an action for breach of a contract under which the plaintiff was to purchase the defendant's interest in a business owned by both of them. The complaint alleged that the defendants made a written contract for the sale of the defendants' interest in a logging company, the defendants breached this agreement by retaking possession of the company and all of its assets from the plaintiff, and they caused the plaintiff to be arrested to prevent him from taking possession of the company and managing it. The plaintiff claimed damages for loss of assets of the corporation and for loss of profits. When the case had been partially tried, the court granted the defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings, denied the plaintiff's motion to amend the complaint, and rendered judgment for the defendants. The court of appeal held that the complaint failed to state a cause of action, but the court reversed on the ground that the plaintiff should have been permitted to amend the complaint. The essential elements to be pleaded in an action for breach of contract are: (1) the contract, (2) the plaintiff's performance of the contract or excuse for nonperformance, (3) the defendant's breach, and (4) the resulting damage to the plaintiff (273 Cal. App. 2d 286, 290) . With regard to the second essential element, the plaintiff argued that prevention of performance by one party to a contract excuses performance by the other. The court agreed that the allegations of seizure of the corporation and its assets and of the plaintiff's arrest showed facts that might have excused the plaintiff's further performance, but they did not reveal what was done by the plaintiff before the alleged breach by the defendants. Thus, there was a failure to set forth an essential allegation, and the complaint was defective (273 Cal. App. 2d 286, 291) .

[b] Requirement of Alleging Agreement With Certainty

Austin v. Southern Pacific Co. (1942) 50 Cal. App. 2d 292, 123 P.2d 39 , was an action in part by a railroad employee to be restored to a certainstatus on seniority lists and for payment of money due. The trial court sustained the defendants' demurrer and the court of appeal affirmed. The complaint alleged that the plaintiff's seniority with the railroad entitled him to a chef's rating, but he had been employed as a second cook for a period of years after which he was displaced because of lack of seniority. The complaint alleged on information and belief that the railroad secretly and without notifying the plaintiff made a written contract with the plaintiff's union defining the seniority status of dining-car employees by which the plaintiff's senior status was fraudulently and arbitrarily determined so that he lost his correct seniority ranking. Two distinct contracts were mentioned in the pleading: the plaintiff's contract of employment with the railroad and the contract between the railroad and the union. With respect to the first contract, the allegations showed nothing more than month-to-month employment terminable by either party (50 Cal. App. 2d 292, 294) . The plaintiff did not charge a breach of this contract because the complaint alleged continuous service by the plaintiff. Additionally, the pleading did not tell the court what seniority status the plaintiff was entitled to or why he was entitled to it. The alleged grievance was the loss of this status, but there was nothing to tell the court the right on which the suit was based or the source of that right except the statement that the plaintiff was entitled to the rating of chef because of his seniority. With respect to the second contract, it was not possible to tell from the complaint whether the plaintiff claimed that his senior status was initiated by the union contract or destroyed by it. Without proper allegations as to the origin of the right, it was difficult and perhaps impossible to determine the legal consequences of its loss (50 Cal. App. 2d 292, 296) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
A. Action for Damages for Breach of Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.11

§ 50.11 All Elements of Cause of Action for Damages for Breach of Contract Are Alleged or Proven

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

A COMPLAINT STATES A CAUSE OF ACTION FOR BREACH OF CONTRACT IF IT ALLEGES THE CONTRACT, THE PLAINTIFF'S PERFORMANCE OR EXCUSE FOR NONPERFORMANCE, THE DEFENDANT'S BREACH, AND THE RESULTING DAMAGE TO THE PLAINTIFF.

A. Elements That State Cause of Action. A complaint states a cause of action for breach of contract if it alleges the contract, the plaintiff's performance or excuse for nonperformance, the defendant's breach, and the resulting damage to the plaintiff (Wise v. Southern Pacific Co. (1963) 223 Cal. App. 2d 50, 59, 35 Cal. Rptr. 652).

[Optional] B. Every Term of Contract Need Not Be Stated. In a complaint for breach of contract, every term of the contract need not be stated in great detail; only the essentials of the contract need be agreed on and be ascertainable (Domino v. Mobley (1956) 144 Cal. App. 2d 24, 28, 300 P.2d 324).

[Optional] C. Written Contract May Be Pleaded Without Attaching Copy to Complaint. Although a written contract is usually pleaded by alleging its making and attaching a copy that is incorporated by reference, a written contract can also be pleaded by alleging the making and the substance of the relevant terms (Perry v. Robertson (1988) 201 Cal. App. 3d 333, 341, 247 Cal. Rptr. 74).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda support a plaintiff's contention that all necessary elements of a cause of action for damages for breach of contract have been properly pleaded or proven. Thus, they may be used in a memorandum submitted in opposition to a defendant's general demurrer made on the ground that the complaint fails to allege all the essential elements necessary to state a cause of action for damages for breach of contract. Optional Paragraph B may be used when a complaint does not state the contract in its entirety but nevertheless alleges the essential terms, and Optional Paragraph C may be used when the complaint does not have a copy of the contract attached but nevertheless alleges the making and relevant substance of the contract.

This form may also be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a defendant is seeking relief on the basis of plaintiff's failure to plead or prove the necessary elements of the cause of action for contract damages. For example, it may be used in a memorandum opposing a motion for summary judgment that was brought on the ground that undisputed facts preclude the existence of one or more of the necessary elements.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case, for example, an analysis of the plaintiff's allegations showing that all necessary elements of the cause of action for contract damages have been pleaded.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to the elements of an enforceable contract, and forms relating to an action for contract damages, including forms of demurrer, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum opposing a general demurrer, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum in a given procedural context, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the memoranda set out in § 50.10 may be used in opposition to this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Elements That State Cause of Action

The facts and procedural background of Wise v. Southern Pacific Co. (1963) 223 Cal. App. 2d 50, 35 Cal. Rptr. 652 , are discussed in § 50.50[1][c][ii]. In holding that the plaintiff adequately pleaded the elements of an action for breach of an employment contract, the court of appeal noted that the essential elements are (1) the contract, (2) the plaintiff's performance or excuse for nonperformance, (3) the defendant's breach, and (4) the resulting damage to the plaintiff. The court found that the plaintiff adequately pleaded these elements (223 Cal. App. 2d 50, 59) .

[b] Every Term of Contract Need Not Be Stated

Domino v. Mobley (1956) 144 Cal. App. 2d 24, 300 P.2d 324 , was an action for damages for breach of a contract for the sale of real property. The complaint alleged that the plaintiffs and the defendants made a written agreement in the form of escrow instructions by which the plaintiffs agreed to buy and the defendants agreed to sell certain property, the defendants represented that they could convey title in fee, free and clear of all encumbrances, there were no restrictions (when there were actually oil andmineral right restrictions on the property), and the defendants failed and refused to perform the acts to be done by them under the escrow and failed and refused to convey the property in accordance with its terms, to the plaintiffs' damage. The defendants objected to the introduction of any evidence on the ground that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. Treating the objection as a general demurrer to the complaint, the trial court sustained the objection and rendered judgment for the defendant. On appeal the defendants' principal contention was that the contract in the form of the escrow instructions was too uncertain to constitute a contract.

The court of appeal reversed. This was an action for damages. An action at law is founded on mere nonperformance by a defendant, and this negative conclusion can often be established without determining all of the terms of the contract with exactness. It is not necessary that each term be spelled out in minute detail; only the essentials of the contract need be agreed on and be ascertainable. Thus, the complaint stated facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action (144 Cal. App. 2d 24, 28) .

[c] Written Contract May Be Pleaded Without Attaching Copy to Complaint

In Perry v. Robertson (1988) 201 Cal. App. 3d 333, 247 Cal. Rptr. 74 , the plaintiff obtained a verdict in an action against real estate brokers and salespersons, asserting liability for inadequate compensation received for the sale of her house. The liability was attributable to the defendants' negligence in drafting the written sales agreement under which the house was sold. The defendants acted for the plaintiff under a written listing agreement, which provided for attorney's fees to the prevailing party in any action to enforce the agreement. After prevailing in the action, the plaintiff filed a timely motion for costs and attorney's fees. The defendants opposed the motion, contending that a fee award would be improper because the plaintiff had pursued her cause of action on a tort theory rather than a contract theory. The defendants argued that the plaintiff's allegations could not have supported a recovery for breach of contract because the plaintiff failed to append the written listing agreement to the complaint. The defendants' motion to tax costs was denied.

The court of appeal affirmed. The plaintiff had properly raised a contract claim and did not elect a distinctive remedy in tort (201 Cal. App. 3d 333, 341, 344) . The plaintiff's omission of the written listing agreement was not dispositive. Usually a written contract is pleaded by alleging its making and attaching a copy that is incorporated by reference. However, a written contract can also be pleaded by alleging the making and the substance of the relevant terms. Here, the plaintiff alleged the nature of the contract as one engaging the defendants as agents for purposes of selling her residence. The purpose of the "specific pleading of a written contract"requirement is to permit the defendant to demur to the breach-of-contract claim based on the construction of the text of the contract, a question of law unless extrinsic facts bearing on meaning are alleged. In this case, the pleading was legally sufficient to put the defendant on notice of the contract claim (201 Cal. App. 3d 333, 341) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Elements That State Cause of Action

In Je Ho Lim v. The.TV Corporation International (2002) 99 Cal. App. 4th 684, 121 Cal. Rptr. 2d 333 , a pleading case in which a demurrer was sustained without leave to amend, a businessman brought an action for breach of contract and fraud with respect to defendant's Internet auction of a domain name. He alleged that by offering registration of the domain name Golf.tv through its Internet website, defendant intended to transfer that name to the person who submitted the highest bid. Offering the name at auction was an offer, and plaintiff's bid was an acceptance conditioned on there being no higher bids. Since plaintiff accepted the offer precisely as it was made, and no one submitted a higher bid, a contract resulted. Plaintiff authorized charging his credit card for the amount of the bid. Defendant memorialized the contract by an e-mail to plaintiff and charged plaintiff's credit card for the amount of the bid. The e-mail notification was entitled "E-mail Invoice for Domain Registration" and stated that he had won the auction. Plaintiff also alleged that the defendant later tried to disavow the agreement, by claiming that its e-mail concerned a different domain name ("-golf," an invalid Internet name due to the dash), and publicly offered the first name with a much higher opening bid. The trial court sustained defendant's demurrer without leave to amend, and the court of appeal reversed. The court found that plaintiff adequately pleaded a contract. Although he did not set out the website announcement in hac verba, he was not required to do so. Further, although he made alternative legal arguments in his amended complaints, the essential facts of the contract cause of action did not change. With respect to any special rules applicable to auctions, plaintiff pleaded that defendant made an offer by its website statement, that he accepted the offer by his bid, and that he gained the contract because he was not overbid. There was no insufficiency in that pleading. Finally, with respect to any inconsistencies in the domain name which plaintiff sought to acquire, any discrepancy arose only in defendant's invoice e-mail after the contract was formed. Even if viewed as defendant's acceptance of plaintiff's bid on the name, the e-mail clearly was not a counteroffer but rather acceptance of the contract formed (99 Cal. App. 4th 684, 690-693) .

In Collins v. Vickter Manor, Inc. (1957) 47 Cal. 2d 875, 306 P.2d 783 , the plaintiff sued to recover a real estate broker's commission. The complaint alleged that the defendant orally employed the plaintiff to find apurchaser for certain real property owned by the defendant and agreed to pay the plaintiff a commission. The plaintiff found a purchaser who agreed to pay a certain sum for the property. The purchaser and the defendant executed a deposit receipt, incorporated into the complaint, which the plaintiff also signed. Several conditions were outlined in the receipt that the plaintiff averred were subsequent to the formation of a valid contract for the sale of the property but were precedent to the purchaser's duty to pay the purchase price. The complaint further alleged that the purchaser was ready, willing, and able to purchase the property on the terms and conditions imposed by the defendant, but the defendant prevented the purchaser's performance by failing to deposit the necessary papers in escrow and furnish several documents and by giving written notice of withdrawal from the escrow. The defendant demurred generally, and the trial court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend. The Supreme Court reversed. The allegations of the complaint with the incorporated deposit receipt sufficiently stated the cause of action against the defendant: the defendant employed the plaintiff to find a purchaser; the plaintiff found a purchaser ready, able, and willing to purchase on terms sufficiently expressed in the deposit receipt; the defendant approved and agreed to those terms; the deposit receipt appeared to satisfy the statute of frauds as a written and signed memorandum of the defendant's agreement to pay the plaintiff for services; the defendant breached its agreement to pay the plaintiff's commission. The complaint alleged facts from which a court could infer that the plaintiff and the purchaser did everything that the agreement required of them and that consummation of the transaction was prevented solely by the defendant's arbitrary refusal to proceed with the transaction. In these circumstances, the defendant could not be allowed to take advantage of its own acts to defeat the plaintiff's recovery. Consequently the complaint was not defective merely because the plaintiff was not able to allege that the transaction had been consummated (47 Cal. 2d 875, 881) .

M.G. Chamberlain & Co. v. Simpson (1959) 173 Cal. App. 2d 263, 343 P.2d 438 , was in part an action for breach of contract. The complaint alleged that the defendant contracted orally to pay the plaintiff a finder's fee of 5 percent of the purchase price of any business that the plaintiff found for him and he purchased; that at the same time, the defendant named Thurmond as his agent in dealing with the plaintiff, and Thurmond so acted; and that the plaintiff introduced Thurmond to Anderson, whom neither the defendant nor Thurmond had previously known. It was also alleged that pursuant to oral negotiations of which the plaintiff had no knowledge, an oral contract of sale and purchase of a business was made. The plaintiff further averred that he had performed all duties to be performed on his part and had demanded payment of the finder's fee by the defendant, which had been refused. The defendant demurred generally, and the trial court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend. Thecourt of appeal reversed. By the terms of the contract pleaded, the plaintiff was required only to find or introduce to the defendant a person interested in selling and who subsequently did sell, in order to recover the fee agreed to be paid by the defendant. The elements of a cause of action for breach of contract are the making of the contract and its terms, the plaintiff's performance, the defendant's breach, and damage to the plaintiff. The complaint alleged the making of a contract by the defendant with the plaintiff by which the defendant agreed to pay a finder's fee of 5 percent of the purchase price of any business the plaintiff found and the defendant purchased; the plaintiff's performance by finding the sellers; the purchase; the defendant's breach by nonpayment of the fee; and damage to the plaintiff. Thus the complaint contained all the averments necessary to state a cause of action for breach of contract (173 Cal. App. 2d 263, 274) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
A. Action for Damages for Breach of Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities §§ 50.12-50.19

[Reserved]

§§ 50.12[Reserved]

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
A. Action for Damages for Breach of Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.20

§ 50.20 Failure to Plead Plaintiff's Performance or Excuse for Nonperformance of Condition Precedent

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief].

THE COMPLAINT SHOWS AS A CONDITION PRECEDENT TO THE DEFENDANT'S PERFORMANCE THAT _____ [specify condition precedent required by contract], BUT THE COMPLAINT DOES NOT ALLEGE EITHER PERFORMANCE OF THE CONDITION PRECEDENT OR AN EXCUSE FOR NONPERFORMANCE.

A. Elements to Be Pleaded. [See § 50.10[1], Paragraph A.]

B. Performance or Excuse for Nonperformance of Conditions Precedent Must Be Alleged. A complaint for breach of contract failsto state a cause of action unless it alleges either performance of any conditions precedent or an excuse for their nonperformance (Daum v. Superior Court (1964) 228 Cal. App. 2d 283, 287, 39 Cal. Rptr. 443).

[EITHER]

C. Alleging Performance of Conditions Precedent. In order to state a cause of action for breach of contract, performance of conditions precedent must be alleged either generally or specifically (Code Civ. Proc. § 457; Careau & Co. v. Security Pacific Business Credit, Inc. (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 1371, 1389, 272 Cal. Rptr. 387 ; Gordon Bldg. Corp. v. Gibraltar Sav. & L. Assn. (1966) 247 Cal. App. 2d 1, 6, 55 Cal. Rptr. 884).

[OR]

C. Excuses for Nonperformance Must Be Alleged Specifically. Excuses for nonperformance of conditions precedent must be pleaded specifically (Careau & Co. v. Security Pacific Business Credit, Inc. (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 1371, 1391, 272 Cal. Rptr. 387 ; Nelson v. Specialty Records, Inc. (1970) 11 Cal. App. 3d 126, 141, 89 Cal. Rptr. 540).

[CONTINUE]

[Optional] D. Condition Must Be Specifically Pleaded When It Is Event. If a condition precedent is an event that must happen before the defendant's duty of performance accrues, a specific allegation of the happening of the condition is necessary to adequately plead the defendant's breach (Careau & Co. v. Security Pacific Business Credit, Inc. (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 1371, 1389, 272 Cal. Rptr. 387 ; Byrne v. Harvey (1962) 211 Cal. App. 2d 92, 113, 27 Cal. Rptr. 110).

[Optional] E. Promise to Pay When Able. In an action on a contract to pay "when able," the complaint fails to state a cause of action if it does not allege the defendant's ability to pay (Horacek v. Smith (1948) 33 Cal. 2d 186, 191, 199 P.2d 929 ; Van Buskirk v. Kuhns (1913) 164 Cal. 472, 476, 129 P. 587).

[Optional] F. Existence of Fund From Which Plaintiff Is to Be Paid. If the plaintiff is to be paid out of a certain fund, the plaintiff must allege the existence of the fund or a lawful reason for its nonexistence in order to state a cause of action for breach of contract based on the failure to pay the plaintiff a certain sum of money (Eddy v. Hickman (1933) 136 Cal. App. 103, 105, 28 P.2d 66).

[Optional] G. Request That Defendant Perform Contract. When it is essential to the cause of action for breach of contract that the plaintiff should have actually requested the defendant to perform its contract, that request must be alleged (California Canneries Co. v. Great Western Lumber Co., (1919) 44 Cal. App. 69, 71, 185 P. 1008, 207 P. 908).

[Optional] H. Specific Allegations Control General Pleadings. General pleadings are controlled by specific allegations. A general allegation of due performance will not suffice if the plaintiff also sets forth what has actually occurred and the specific facts do not constitute due performance. A complaint that would have been sufficient with general allegations alone is rendered defective by the inclusion of inconsistent specific allegations (Careau & Co. v. Security Pacific Business Credit, Inc. (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 1371, 1389-1390, 272 Cal. Rptr. 387).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda support a defendant's contention that plaintiff has failed to allege a necessary element of a cause of action for damages for breach of contract, specifically, the plaintiff's performance, or excuse for nonperformance, of conditions precedent. Thus, they may be used in a memorandum submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint, on the ground that the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in that it does not allege all the essential elements of a cause of action for damages for breach of contract. The optional paragraphs are designed for use in particular situations as follows:

- Optional Paragraphs D and F are for use when the condition precedent was the occurrence of an event or the existence of a fund.

- Optional Paragraph E is for use when the defendant promised to pay when able rather than at a specific time.

- Optional Paragraph G is for use when the plaintiff was required to request that the defendant perform the contract and such request is not alleged.

- Optional Paragraph H sets forth the general rule of interpretation that general pleadings are controlled by specific allegations. It would most often be used in connection with the second alternative Paragraph C or with Optional Paragraph D.

This form may also be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in another procedural context in which a defendant seeks relief on the basis of plaintiff's failure to plead his or her performance or excuse for nonperformance of a condition precedent in a cause of actionfor contract damages. For example, it may be used in a memorandum supporting a motion for judgment on the pleadings.

Note that generally, a court will construe provisions in a contract as conditions precedent only when clear and unambiguous language requires that construction [see Alpha Beta Food Mkt. v. Retail Clerks (1955) 45 Cal. 2d 764, 771, 291 P.2d 433 , cert. denied, 350 U.S. 996 (1956) ; see also § 50.502].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case, for example, in supporting a demurrer, an analysis of the allegations in plaintiff's complaint demonstrating a condition precedent for which plaintiff has failed to allege performance or excuse for nonperformance.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum supporting a general demurrer, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in §§ 50.21 -50.23, and in § 50.502 may be submitted in opposition to a demurrer to a complaint supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Performance or Excuse for Nonperformance of Conditions Precedent Must Be Alleged

Daum v. Superior Court (1964) 228 Cal. App. 2d 283, 39 Cal. Rptr. 443 , involved an action on a contract. The plaintiff and the defendant had madea contract under which the plaintiff was an exclusive agent in negotiating and obtaining certain long-term leases of commercial sites. Payment for the plaintiff's performance was conditioned on the accrual of the defendant's right to receive rent under each of the leases and the obtaining of two loans to cover on-site construction costs. The plaintiff's first amended complaint alleged a contract, full performance by the plaintiff, and a breach in that, on demand, the defendant failed and refused to pay the money due the plaintiff for performance rendered pursuant to the contract. The defendant demurred, and the trial court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend until the conditions precedent in the contract between the parties had occurred. After the trial court denied the plaintiff's motion to file a second amended complaint, the plaintiff sought a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to permit the plaintiff to file the second amended complaint.

The court of appeal issued the writ. A plaintiff cannot enforce a defendant's obligation unless the plaintiff has performed the conditions precedent imposed by the contract. Accordingly, the plaintiff must allege either performance of the conditions precedent or an excuse. The trial court had properly sustained the demurrer to the plaintiff's first amended complaint since, although it had alleged the obtaining of a long-term loan for on-site construction, it had not alleged the happening of the other condition precedent, that is, the accrual of the right to the first rental payment under the leases. Nevertheless, the trial court's denial of the plaintiff's motion to file a second amended complaint was an abuse of discretion, since it had alleged an excuse of anticipatory breach that created an immediate right of action [see § 50.23] (228 Cal. App. 2d 283, 287-289) .

[b] Alleging Performance of Conditions Precedent

Careau & Co. v. Security Pacific Business Credit, Inc. (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 1371, 272 Cal. Rptr. 387 , involved consolidated actions by two entities that were controlled by the same principal. Each entity claimed to have a loan commitment from the defendant to finance the acquisition of another company. The complaints contained multiple causes of action. The primary ones at issue on appeal were for breach of contract, tortious breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and bad-faith denial of the existence of the contract. The complaint alleged that (1) the loan officer (also a defendant) had stated to the plaintiffs' principal and to the seller that "conditions 8.1, 8.3, 8.4. 8.5, and 8.7 had been met and satisfied and that defendants were fully satisfied that the conditions had been met," (2) the buyer advised the principal that the sale had been approved on the terms of the August 25 letter (the plaintiffs argued that this satisfied condition 8.6), (3) based on conversations of September 7 and 8 "defendants waived ..... the need to satisfy any of the conditions numbered 8.1 through 8.8, inclusive ..... . Thus all Conditions Precedent of thewritten commitment contract had either been met and satisfied or waived or excused," (4) all conditions precedent of the written commitment contract were satisfied not later than September 23, 1983, except 8.2 (requiring plaintiff to have clear title to all collateral) and 8.8 (concerning execution of loan documents, security agreements, etc.), which would have been satisfied at closing, and (5) since the defendants gave notice between October 4 and 6, 1983, that they would not perform the commitment to make the loan, conditions 8.2 and 8.8 were excused. Demurrers to the causes of action were sustained without leave to amend.

The court of appeal affirmed as to the count for tortious breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing but reversed to allow amendments to the counts for breach of contract and bad-faith denial of the existence of the contract. The alleged loan commitments were evidenced by letters dated July 19, 1983, and August 25, 1983, which were incorporated into the complaints. Section 8 of the letter dated August 25, 1983, set forth eight conditions precedent (designated 8.1 through 8.8) to the defendant's obligation to make the loan, such as approval of the defendant's credit committee, completion of a survey, completion of an appraisal of the equipment of the entity being acquired, initial cash equity of $250,000 from the plaintiff, and the seller's agreement to accept deferred payment of $8 million of the purchase price on terms and conditions satisfactory to the defendant. A cause of action for breach of contract is composed of the following elements: (1) the contract, (2) the plaintiff's performance or excuse for nonperformance, (3) the defendant's breach, and (4) the resulting damages to the plaintiff. The plaintiffs in this case failed to adequately allege the due satisfaction of several conditions precedent to the formation of a binding contract (222 Cal. App. 3d 1371, 1388) . When contract liability depends on the satisfaction or performance of conditions precedent, the allegation of that satisfaction or performance is an essential part of the cause of action. This requirement can be satisfied by allegations in general terms. It is sufficient for the plaintiff simply to allege that he or she duly performed all of the conditions on his or her part. However, this rule is subject to two important caveats, both of which were applicable (222 Cal. App. 3d 1371, 1389) . For further discussion relating to these caveats, see [iv], below.

Gordon Bldg. Corp. v. Gibraltar Sav. & L. Assn. (1966) 247 Cal. App. 2d 1, 55 Cal. Rptr. 884 , involved a cross complaint by a building corporation, the defendant in an action for money due and owing, against the savings and loan association to recover, in part, damages for breach of a contract involving a construction loan agreement. The trial court sustained the cross defendant's general demurrer.

The court of appeal affirmed. In order to state a cause of action for breach of contract, the performance of conditions precedent must be alleged either generally or specially (247 Cal. App. 2d 1, 6) . The cross complaint wasfatally defective, in part, because it failed to allege that the corporation had duly performed all conditions precedent in that, although it alleged that a construction loan escrow was handled by an escrow company, it did not allege the execution of this agreement or that the contemplated escrow was ever undertaken or completed (247 Cal. App. 2d 1, 5-6) .

[c] Excuses for Nonperformance Must Be Alleged Specifically

The facts and procedural background of Careau & Co. v. Security Pacific Business Credit, Inc. (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 1371, 272 Cal. Rptr. 387 , are discussed in [b], above. The court ended its discussion of the breach of contract causes of action by saying that the conclusional allegations were not sufficient with regard to excuse or waiver. Excuse or waiver of performance of conditions precedent requires specific, not general, allegations. Nevertheless, the court of appeal could not conclude, without effectively resolving factual issues, whether there was a reasonable possibility that the plaintiffs could make the direct allegations necessary to demonstrate the existence of a binding contract. Therefore, the court found it appropriate that the plaintiffs be given leave to amend (222 Cal. App. 3d 1371, 1391) .

Nelson v. Specialty Records, Inc. (1970) 11 Cal. App. 3d 126, 89 Cal. Rptr. 540 , was an action by an assignee of contract rights, for breach of a contract for the sale and purchase of rights to distribute and exhibit a photoplay. Although the plaintiff alleged that his assignor had fully performed, at trial the plaintiff's counsel stated in an opening statement that the evidence would show that the plaintiff's assignor had not made shipment and delivery on the date required in the contract. The defendants moved for a dismissal, contending that the statement showed a failure to perform in accordance with the agreement, and any evidence to show a waiver or excuse of the performance called for by the contract provisions would constitute an impermissible material variance from the pleadings. The plaintiff moved to amend the pleadings to allege that the time of shipment of the print was waived or unenforceable, that the defendants were estopped because they did not return the contract until after the date of shipment, or that the defendants had made compliance impossible. The trial court denied the motion to amend and granted the defendants' motion to dismiss.

The court of appeal affirmed. Proof of any waiver or excuse for nonperformance would have constituted a material variance. Performance of conditions precedent may be alleged generally, but excuses must be pleaded specifically. Since the plaintiff did not specifically plead an excuse for nonperformance, the dismissal was proper (11 Cal. App. 3d 126, 141-142) .

[d] Condition Must Be Specifically Pleaded When It Is Event

The facts and procedural background of Careau & Co. v. Security Pacific Business Credit, Inc. (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 1371, 272 Cal. Rptr. 387 , are discussed in [b], above. After citing the general rule that satisfaction or performance of conditions precedent may be alleged in general terms, the court of appeal noted that the rule is subject to two important caveats, both of which were applicable. If the condition is an event, as distinguished from an act to be performed by the plaintiff, then a specific allegation of the happening of the condition is a necessary part of pleading the defendant's breach (222 Cal. App. 3d 1371, 1389) . Because six of the eight conditions were events that had to occur or exist, and not acts that had to be performed by the plaintiffs, the general allegations were not adequate (222 Cal. App. 3d 1371, 1390) . Nevertheless, because the court of appeal could not conclude that the plaintiffs would not be able to make the direct allegations necessary to demonstrate the existence of a binding contract, the plaintiffs should be given leave to amend (222 Cal. App. 3d 1371, 1391) .

Byrne v. Harvey (1962) 211 Cal. App. 2d 92, 27 Cal. Rptr. 110 , was an action for breach of an agreement between the plaintiffs and the administrator of a decedent's estate. The agreement concerned the plaintiffs' claims to the decedent's share of a trust and required that court approval of any compromise be obtained and that other qualifying heirs enter into the agreement in order for it to take effect. The defendant's general demurrer was sustained without leave to amend.

The court of appeal affirmed. The complaint did not allege court approval of the agreement or the consent of other qualifying heirs to the agreement, although these were conditions (211 Cal. App. 2d 92, 117) . Although Code Civ. Proc. § 457 only requires a plaintiff to plead that it duly performed all of the conditions on his or her part, the statute does not apply to all possible applicable conditions to a contract (211 Cal. App. 2d 92, 112-113) . If a condition precedent imposed by the contract is an act to be performed by the plaintiff, he or she may allege performance in general terms. But if the condition is an event that must happen before the defendant's duty of performance accrues, the happening of the condition must be alleged as part of the defendant's breach (211 Cal. App. 2d 92, 113) . Approval was an event that had to happen before the defendant's duty of performance accrued (211 Cal. App. 2d 92, 115-116) . In addition, an allegation that no other qualifying heirs had refused to enter into the agreement was essential to the plaintiffs' cause of action. Since the pleading did not contain allegations that court approval was obtained or a valid excuse for the lack of approval and that the other qualifying heirs did not refuse to enter the agreement or a valid excuse for refusal, the complaint failed to allege facts sufficient to state a cause of action (211 Cal. App. 2d 92, 117) .

[e] Promise to Pay When Able

Horacek v. Smith (1948) 33 Cal. 2d 186, 199 P.2d 929 , was an action on an employment contract. The complaint alleged that the defendants employed the plaintiff as a housekeeper at a particular monthly salary plus room and board, which the defendants lowered with the understanding that if the plaintiff continued to serve at whatever they could afford to pay, the defendants would make up the difference when their financial condition improved. The plaintiff continued in the defendants' employ for 10 years at reduced compensation. In her amended complaint, the plaintiff alleged her belief that the defendants' financial condition improved during the later years of her employment to the point where the defendants could pay her the money claimed to be owing. After a jury trial, judgment was rendered for the plaintiff. On appeal, the defendants asserted in part that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

The Supreme Court affirmed. In an action on a contract to pay when able, the promise is conditional, and no cause of action accrues until the condition is performed, that is, until the debtor is able to pay. Accordingly, the complaint fails to state a cause of action if it does not allege the defendants' ability to pay. But the amended complaint in this case pleaded the plaintiff's belief that the defendants' financial condition had improved to the point that the defendants could pay her. Since material facts may be alleged on information and belief, any failure to state more specifically the circumstances in this regard was one of uncertainty or ambiguity that could have been cured if brought to the attention of the trial court. In the absence of a demurrer, the defect is waived (33 Cal. 2d 186, 191) .

Van Buskirk v. Kuhns (1913) 164 Cal. 472, 129 P. 587 , was an action to foreclose a mortgage. The plaintiff alleged that the defendant's intestate, Reynolds, while indebted to the plaintiff, borrowed a further sum from the plaintiff and promised to pay the plaintiff the entire sum whenever he was able to do so. As security for the debt, Reynolds executed and delivered to the plaintiff a bargain-and-sale deed of property. The trial court found for the plaintiff. The defendant's principal contention on appeal was that the action was barred by the statute of limitations.

The Supreme Court reversed. A promise to pay when able is conditional, and no cause of action accrues until the debtor is able to pay. With respect to the statute of limitations, the trial court was justified in finding that the defendant failed to show that Reynolds had the ability to pay and that the cause of action against him accrued more than the statutory time before the filing of the complaint. But the very fact that prevented the statute from running, Reynolds's inability to pay his debt, operated also to prevent the plaintiff from maintaining his action. If the promise to pay is conditional on ability to do so, it is incumbent on a plaintiff to allege and prove that the condition has been complied with. The plaintiff alleged a promise by the defendant to pay when able but did not allege, and the court did notfind, that the event on which the obligation depended had occurred. Thus, the complaint did not allege facts sufficient to state a cause of action (164 Cal. 472, 475-476) .

[f] Existence of Fund From Which Plaintiff Is to Be Paid

In Eddy v. Hickman (1933) 136 Cal. App. 103, 28 P.2d 66 , the plaintiff sued for payment of certain commissions earned as a real estate agent. By the terms of the contracts between the plaintiff and the defendant, the defendant was to pay the plaintiff the commissions from the loans obtained by the purchasers of the real estate and, if the purchase price of any of the real estate was made from crop shares, the defendant was to pay the plaintiff a percentage of the money received from the crop shares. At the beginning of the trial, the defendant objected to the plaintiff's production of evidence on the ground that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. Reserving its ruling, the trial court failed to pass on the objection, but since it rendered judgment for the plaintiff, the court presumptively overruled the objection.

The court of appeal reversed. Performance of a condition precedent on which recovery depends must be alleged. The complaint did not allege that the funds from which the plaintiff's commissions were to be paid at any time came into existence. Therefore, since the plaintiff failed to allege the existence of the fund out of which he was to be paid or a lawful reason for its nonexistence, he failed to state a cause of action (136 Cal. App. 103, 105) .

[g] Request That Defendant Perform Contract

In California Canneries Co. v. Great Western Lumber Co., (1919) 44 Cal. App. 69, 185 P. 1008, 207 P. 908 , the plaintiff sought to recover damages for a breach of a contract to furnish material for making boxes. Under the terms of the contract, the defendant agreed to sell to the plaintiff the plaintiff's entire requirements in box-shook (material for making boxes) for its own use. The complaint alleged that the defendant failed, neglected, and refused to deliver an amount of box-shook. The defendant's demurrer was overruled, and the trial court found for the plaintiff. On appeal the defendant contended that the complaint did not state a cause of action because it did not allege that the plaintiff made a demand for the delivery of the box-shook as required.

The court of appeal affirmed. When it is essential to the cause of action that the plaintiff should have actually requested the defendant to perform the contract, the request must be stated in the complaint (44 Cal. App. 69, 71) . However, in this case the giving of the necessary orders to the defendant could be inferred from the allegation of the complaint that the defendant failed, neglected, and refused to deliver the box-shook (44 Cal. App. 69, 75) .

[h] Specific Allegations Control General Pleadings

The facts and procedural background of Careau & Co. v. Security Pacific Business Credit, Inc. (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 1371, 272 Cal. Rptr. 387 , are discussed in [b], above. After citing the general rule that satisfaction or performance of conditions precedent may be alleged in general terms, the court of appeal noted that the rule is subject to two important caveats, both of which were applicable (222 Cal. App. 3d 1371, 1389) . The second caveat is that general pleadings are controlled by specific allegations. Thus, a general allegation of due performance will not suffice if the plaintiff also sets forth what has actually occurred, and those specific facts do not constitute due performance (222 Cal. App. 3d 1371, 1389-1390) . For example, if the plaintiff alleged a permissible conclusion of law such as the due performance of a condition precedent but also averred specific additional facts that either do not support that conclusion or are inconsistent with it, the specific allegations control, and the complaint is rendered defective. The plaintiffs' pleadings in this case failed to state a cause of action for breach of contract. There were no specific allegations of any of the conditions. The allegations that all conditions had been met and satisfied, that the defendants were fully satisfied that the conditions had been met, and that all conditions precedent had either been met and satisfied or waived or excused, were general conclusions. The allegations of the loan officer's oral statements were not sufficient specific allegations of performance. While the loan officer's statements might be some evidence that one or more of the conditions were satisfied, they do not constitute the direct, specific allegation of performance that is required. A complaint must allege the ultimate facts necessary to the statement of an actionable claim. It is both improper and insufficient for a plaintiff to simply plead the evidence by which it hopes to prove the ultimate fact (222 Cal. App. 3d 1371, 1390) . Nevertheless, because the court of appeal could not conclude that the plaintiffs would not be able to make the direct allegations necessary to demonstrate the existence of a binding contract, the court held that the plaintiffs should be given leave to amend (222 Cal. App. 3d 1371, 1391) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Performance or Excuse for Nonperformance of Conditions Precedent Must Be Alleged

In Wiz Technology, Inc. v. Coopers & Lybrand LLP (2003) 106 Cal. App. 4th 1, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 263 , a company that developed computer games alleged tort and contract causes of action against its auditor for the auditor's purportedly improper resignation prior to completion of a 1996 audit. In an engagement letter, the auditor had originally agreed to audit the company's financial statements for the 1995 fiscal year. In 1996, apartner in defendant auditor's organization met with plaintiff's president and chief executive officer, and discussed the conditions under which defendant might continue its relationship with plaintiff and audit plaintiff's financial statements for the 1996 fiscal year. The partner advised defendant's officers of three conditions under which defendant would continue as auditor, including the condition that plaintiff had to replace its existing securities attorney with competent legal counsel, as defendant had concerns about plaintiff's current attorney's understanding of various securities laws and regulations. On behalf of plaintiff company, the officers agreed to the three conditions. However, the parties never signed any agreement regarding a 1996 audit, and plaintiff continued using the same securities counsel. The auditor then resigned, and the company filed its action. The trial court granted defendant's motion for summary judgment, finding that there was no written, oral, or implied contract for a 1996 audit and that the auditor had good cause to resign because the company violated the condition to replace the securities counsel. The court of appeal affirmed. It held that the auditor's resignation was justified by the company's failure to satisfy the condition that it forgo using the existing counsel for securities matters, which was a prerequisite to any 1996 audit by defendant (106 Cal. App. 4th 1, 11-14) .

[b] Condition Must Be Specifically Pleaded When It Is Event

The court of appeal in Beverly Way Associates v. Barham (1990) 226 Cal. App. 3d 49, 276 Cal. Rptr. 240 , affirmed a judgment denying specific performance on the basis of sustaining of a demurrer without leave to amend. The real estate purchase contract involved provided that "it shall be a condition precedent to Buyer's obligation to close escrow that Buyer shall have approved" the items specified, including an ALTA survey of the property showing all improvements on the property and the location of all exceptions referred to in the preliminary title report. The plaintiff rejected the survey but later demanded that the seller perform. The court stated that the buyer's disapproval was express and unequivocal, and once it was communicated to the seller, that terminated the contract. This left the buyer with no power to create obligations against the seller with a late "waiver" of its objections and acceptance of the proffered documentation (226 Cal. App. 3d 49, 56) .

Draper v. Patterson (1958) 156 Cal. App. 2d 606, 319 P.2d 694 , was an action, in part, to recover damages for the breach of a contract. The defendant filed a general demurrer that was overruled by the trial court, and judgment was rendered for the plaintiff. The court of appeal reversed. The contract between the plaintiff and the defendant provided that the defendant was to pay his portion of the amount for the leveling and clearing of certain land by the plaintiff from the profit of crops grown on the land thatwas to be cleared. The defendant contended that the cause of action based on the written contract did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action because it did not allege that there was any profit from the land cleared. The plaintiff, however, had alleged that the defendant beneficially used the land. If a promise is conditional on the defendant's ability to pay, the plaintiff must allege and prove that the condition was complied with. The allegation in the complaint that the defendant beneficially used the land is not equivalent to an allegation that he made a profit from any crop or crops off the land in question. The contract clearly provided that the defendant's obligation to pay was a conditional one, and thus it was incumbent on the plaintiff to allege and prove that the condition had been complied with (156 Cal. App. 2d 606, 608-609) .

[c] Existence of Fund From Which Plaintiff Is to Be Paid

Rose v. Ames (1942) 53 Cal. App. 2d 583, 128 P.2d 65 , was an action for breach of a contract. The complaint alleged that, in consideration of giving information that would enable the levying on property in satisfaction of a judgment, the plaintiff would receive a share of the money recovered by sale or compromise. The defendant demurred generally, and the trial court sustained the demurrer. The court of appeal affirmed. An essential allegation for the plaintiff to recover on the agreement would be that the defendants had recovered money either by sale or compromise. Since that was not alleged in the complaint, the demurrer was properly sustained (53 Cal. App. 2d 583, 588) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
A. Action for Damages for Breach of Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.21

§ 50.21 Performance of Condition Precedent Is Sufficiently Pleaded by General Allegation

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief].

IN PLEADING THE PERFORMANCE OF CONDITIONS PRECEDENT IN A CONTRACT, IT MAY BE STATED GENERALLY THAT THE PLAINTIFF DULY PERFORMED ALL OF THE CONDITIONS ON THE PLAINTIFF'S PART.

Pleading Performance of Conditions. In pleading the performance of conditions precedent in a contract, it is not necessary to state the facts showing performance, but it may be stated generally that the plaintiff duly performed all of the conditions on the plaintiff's part (Code Civ. Proc. § 457; Reichert v. General Ins. Co. (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 822, 830 n.6, 69 Cal. Rptr. 321, 442 P.2d 377).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that the complaint sufficiently alleges the performance of conditions precedent on the plaintiff's part because the complaint alleges that the plaintiff fully performed all the conditions on his or her part to be performed. Thus, they may be used by a plaintiff in an action for contract damages when the underlying contract includes one or more conditions precedent, in a memorandum that opposes a defendant's general demurrer which is based on a supposed failure to allege plaintiff's performance or excuse for nonperformance of a condition precedent.

This form may also be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in another procedural context in which a defendant seeks relief on the basis of plaintiff's failure to plead performance or nonperformance of a condition precedent. For example, it may be used in a memorandum opposing a motion for judgment on the pleadings.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to the elements of an enforceable contract, including the performance, or excuse for nonperformance, of anyconditions precedent, as well as forms relating to an action for contract damages, including forms of demurrer, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

The memoranda set out in §§ 50.22 and 50.23 may be used in the alternative when a plaintiff is alleging excuse for nonperformance, rather than performance, of a condition precedent.

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum opposing a general demurrer, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the memoranda set out in § 50.20 may be used in opposition to the memoranda of this form. Note in particular § 50.21[1], Paragraph D, which states the point that a general allegation of performance is not sufficient, and a specific allegation is needed, if the condition precedent to be performed was the occurrence of a particular event.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Pleading Performance of Conditions

Reichert v. General Ins. Co. (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 822, 69 Cal. Rptr. 321, 442 P.2d 377 , was an action for damages for malicious nonpayment of fire insurance. The defendant insurance companies demurred generally. The trial court sustained the demurrer.

The Supreme Court affirmed on the principal ground that the causes of action pleaded were vested not in the plaintiff but in the trustee in bankruptcy. However, the plaintiff pleaded a cause of action for damages for breach of contract, namely, the particular insurance policy involved, and to that end attempted to allege the essential elements of the cause of action. The plaintiff alleged that he did all things necessary on his part to do. In alleging performance, the plaintiff may allege that he duly performed all the conditions on his part [see Code Civ. Proc. § 457 (pleading performanceof conditions)]. Thus the plaintiff's allegation of performance was proper (68 Cal. 2d 822, 830 n.6).

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Pleading Performance of Conditions

Needham v. Chandler (1908) 8 Cal. App. 124, 96 P. 325 , was an action to recover a balance of money paid out and commissions earned by the plaintiff under a contract for the construction of a building for the defendant. After trial, judgment was rendered for the plaintiff. In affirming, the court of appeal noted that Code Civ. Proc. § 457 provides that, in pleading the performance of conditions precedent in a contract, it is not necessary to state the facts showing performance, but it may be stated generally that the party duly performed all of the conditions on his or her part. If the allegations are controverted, the party pleading must establish at the trial facts showing performance. Consequently, the plaintiff's allegation that he had complied with all of the terms and conditions of the agreement and completed and fulfilled his part in every way was a sufficient allegation of performance of conditions (8 Cal. App. 124, 127) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
A. Action for Damages for Breach of Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.22

§ 50.22 Excuse for Nonperformance of Condition Precedent Is Sufficiently Shown by Prevention

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE PLAINTIFF'S ALLEGATION THAT THE PLAINTIFF WAS PREVENTED FROM PERFORMING SATISFIES THE REQUIREMENT THAT THE PLAINTIFF ALLEGE EITHER PERFORMANCE OR EXCUSE FOR NONPERFORMANCE.

Means of Prevention Need Not Be Alleged. An allegation in a complaint that the plaintiff was prevented from completing a contract is sufficient to state a cause of action even though the method by which the plaintiff was prevented from performing is not stated (Cox v. Western P. R. Co. (1873) 47 Cal. 87, 89-90) .

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form supports the contention that the plaintiff sufficiently alleged an excuse for the nonperformance of a condition precedent because thecomplaint states that the defendant prevented the plaintiff's performance. Thus, it may be included in a plaintiff's memorandum opposing a general demurrer which is based on plaintiff's supposed failure to allege performance or excuse for nonperformance of a condition precedent.

This form may also be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in another procedural context in which a defendant seeks relief on the basis of plaintiff's failure to plead performance or nonperformance of a condition precedent. For example, it may be used in a memorandum opposing a motion for judgment on the pleadings.

Note that the authority relied on in this form has never been overruled or questioned, but it also has not been cited in recent years. The Supreme Court did not consider the effect of the rule that excuses for nonperformance must be pleaded specifically; nevertheless, it could be argued that pleading prevention is a specific allegation of excuse in that it identifies the type of excuse although it does not allege the exact means of prevention.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to the elements of an enforceable contract, including the performance, or excuse for nonperformance, of any conditions precedent, as well as forms relating to an action for contract damages, including forms of demurrer, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

The memoranda set out in § 50.23 may be used in the alternative when a plaintiff is alleging excuse for nonperformance based on anticipatory breach, rather than prevention.

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum opposing a general demurrer, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the memoranda set out in § 50.20 may be used in opposition to the memoranda of this form. Note in particular § 50.20[1], Paragraph C, which states the point that a specific rather than general allegation is needed, to allege an excuse for nonperformance [but see comment in [a], above].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Means of Prevention Need Not Be Alleged

Cox v. Western P. R. Co. (1873) 47 Cal. 87 , was an action for breach of a contract. The trial court sustained the defendants' general demurrer, and the action was dismissed.

The Supreme Court reversed. The plaintiffs' complaint alleged that the plaintiffs were prevented by the defendants from completing the contract. If the plaintiffs were so prevented, they were fully justified in abandoning the contract and had a right to be paid a fair compensation for work that had been performed under the contract. Although the plaintiffs did not allege how or by what means they were prevented from performing, their averment was sufficient when tested by a general demurrer (47 Cal. 87, 89-90) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Means of Prevention Need Not Be Alleged

De La Falaise v. Gaumont-British Picture Corp. Ltd. (1940) 39 Cal. App. 2d 461, 103 P.2d 447 , was an action for breach of contract resulting from the defendant's failure to perform a condition precedent. The trial court found for the plaintiff but granted a motion for a new trial. Reversing the order for a new trial, the court of appeal noted that the contract provided that the plaintiff was to appear as an actress in two movies. The first picture was produced and completed. The contract provided when the starting date for the second picture should have been, but the plaintiff never received notice of the actual starting date for the picture as required by the contract, and the movie was never made. The defendant asserted that the plaintiff failed to state a cause of action in her complaint because she failed to allege performance or a tender of performance or that the defendant prevented performance or that performance was excused. However, the plaintiff was never in default under the contract and therefore was not required to tender performance before suing for breach. It was enough that she alleged that she was ready, able, and willing to perform her obligations under the contract, but the defendant had failed to fix the time and place for performance (39 Cal. App. 2d 461, 470) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
A. Action for Damages for Breach of Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.23

§ 50.23 Excuse for Nonperformance of Condition Precedent Is Sufficiently Shown by Anticipatory Breach

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

AN ALLEGATION OF THE DEFENDANT'S ANTICIPATORY BREACH IS A SUFFICIENT PLEADING OF AN EXCUSE FOR THE PLAINTIFF'S NONPERFORMANCE.

Anticipatory Breach Is Excuse for Nonperformance. An anticipatory breach by the defendant creates an immediate right of action, and consequently an allegation of anticipatory breach is a sufficient pleading of excuse for nonperformance (Daum v. Superior Court (1964) 228 Cal. App. 2d 283, 287, 39 Cal. Rptr. 443).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form supports the contention that the plaintiff sufficiently alleged an excuse for the nonperformance of a condition precedent because the complaint alleges anticipatory breach by the defendant. Thus, it may be included in a plaintiff's memorandum opposing a general demurrer which is based on plaintiff's supposed failure to allege performance or excuse for nonperformance of a condition precedent.

This form may also be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in another procedural context in which a defendant seeks relief on the basis of plaintiff's failure to plead performance or nonperformance of a condition precedent. For example, it may be used in a memorandum opposing a motion for judgment on the pleadings.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to the elements of an enforceable contract, including the performance, or excuse for nonperformance, of any conditions precedent, as well as forms relating to an action for contract damages, including forms of demurrer, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

The memoranda set out in § 50.22 may be used in the alternative when a plaintiff is alleging excuse for nonperformance based on prevention rather than anticipatory breach.

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum opposing a general demurrer, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the memoranda set out in § 50.20 may be used in opposition to the memoranda of this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Anticipatory Breach Is Excuse for Nonperformance

The facts and procedural background of Daum v. Superior Court (1964) 228 Cal. App. 2d 283, 39 Cal. Rptr. 443 , are discussed in § 50.21[3][a]. In granting the writ to permit the plaintiff to file the second amended complaint, the court of appeal noted that a definite and unconditional repudiation of a contract by a promisor communicated to the promisee, being a breach of the contract, creates an immediate right of action even though it takes place long before the time prescribed for the promised performance and before conditions specified in the contract have ever occurred. Since the plaintiff's second amended complaint alleged an excuse in that it alleged an anticipatory breach, the trial court should not have denied the plaintiff's motion to file the complaint (228 Cal. App. 2d 283, 287) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
A. Action for Damages for Breach of Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.24

§ 50.24 Obligor's Statement of Intended Breach of Contractual Promise, Which Substantially Impairs Value of Contract, Constitutes Repudiation

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

A STATEMENT BY AN OBLIGOR TO THE OBLIGEE INDICATING THAT IT WILL BREACH AN IMPORTANT CONTRACTUAL PROMISE, THEREBY SUBSTANTIALLY IMPAIRING THE VALUE OF THE CONTRACT, CONSTITUTES REPUDIATION OF THE CONTRACT.

Obligor's Statement of Intended Breach Constitutes Repudiation. An obligor's statement to the obligee indicating that the obligor will breach an important contractual promise, thereby substantially impairing the value of the contract, constitutes repudiation of the contract (Mobil Oil Exploration & Producing Southeast, Inc. v. United States (2000)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that an obligor's statement to the obligee indicating its intent to breach an important contractual promise that will substantially impair the value of the contract constitutes repudiation of that contract.

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a party seeks to raise this contention.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender). For discussion of contract damages, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 177, Damages, § 117.140 et seq. (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum opposing a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publicationin drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs . For discussion of contract damages, see Ch. 65, Damages: Contract .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Obligor's Statement of Intended Breach Constitutes Repudiation

In Mobil Oil Exploration & Producing Southeast, Inc. v. United States (2000) 147 L.Ed. 2d 528 , two oil companies--Mobil and Marathon--sought restitution of $156 million that they had paid to the federal government in return for lease contracts giving them rights to explore for and develop oil off the North Carolina coast. The rights were conditioned on the companies obtaining a set of further governmental permissions. The companies claimed that the government repudiated the contracts when it denied them certain elements of the permission-seeking opportunities that the contracts had promised (120 St. Ct. 2423, 2429). They brought suit for breach of contract in the Court of Federal Claims. On motions for summary judgment, the court found that the government had broken its contractual promise to follow provisions of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act (OCSLA), particularly that requiring the Department of the Interior to approve an exploration plan that satisfied OCSLA's requirement within 30 days of its submission to the Department of the Interior; that the government thereby repudiated the contracts; and that repudiation entitled the companies to restitution of the up-front cash bonus payments it had made. A panel of the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit reversed, finding that the government's refusal to consider the companies' final exploration plan was not the "operative cause" of any failure to carry out the contracts' terms (120 St. Ct. 2423, 2432).

The U.S. Supreme Court reversed and remanded. The Court first noted that when the United States enters into contractual relations, its rights and duties are governed by the law applicable to contracts between private individuals. It then reviewed the applicable contract principles set forth in the Restatement of Contracts. Under the Restatement, when one party to a contract repudiates the contract, the other party is entitled to restitution for any benefit that he or she has conferred on the repudiating party by way of part performance or reliance [citing Restatement (2d) § 373]. "Repudiation" is a statement by the obligor to the obligee indicating that the obligor will commit a breach that would of itself give the obligee a claim for damages for total breach [citing Restatement (2d) § 250]. "Total breach" is a breach that so substantially impairs the value of the contract to the injured party at the time of the breach that it is just in the circumstances to all him or her to recover damages based on all of his or her remaining rights to performance [citing Restatement (2d) § 373]. As applied to thefacts, those principles meant that if the government said it would break, or did break, an important contractual promise, thereby substantially impairing the value of the contracts to the companies, then unless the companies waived their rights to restitution, the government must give the companies their money back. Furthermore, it must do so whether or not the contracts ultimately would have proved financially beneficial to the companies (120 St. Ct. 2423, 2429-2430).

In the contract, the U.S. promised the companies that they could explore for oil and develop any oil that they found provided that they received exploration and development permissions in accordance with various statutes and regulations to which the lease contracts were made subject. The OCSLA, and Coastal Zone Management Act (CZMA) required leaseholding companies wishing to explore and drill to successfully complete four procedures (120 St. Ct. 2423, 2430). The Court found that the record made clear that OCSLA required Interior to approve within 30 days a submitted exploration plan that met OCSLA's requirements; that Interior had told Mobil that the companies' submitted plan met those requirements; that Interior had told Mobil that it would not approve the submitted plan for at least 13 months, and possibly longer, due to a new law (OBPA) prohibiting approval of exploration plans until additional governmental actions had taken place; and that the Department of the Interior had never either approved or disapproved the plan (120 St. Ct. 2423, 2432-2433). The Court then concluded that the government's actions violated the contracts, and in fact the new statute required the Department of the Interior to impose the contract-violating delay. The changes made by the statute were changes in approval procedures and standards that the contracts had incorporated through cross-reference. Therefore, by communicating to the companies its intent to follow OBPA, the government was communicating its intent to violate the contracts (120 St. Ct. 2423, 2433-2435). The Court next found that the incorporated procedures and standards amount to a gateway to the companies' enjoyment of all other rights. To significantly narrow that gateway violated material conditions in the contracts. The breach was substantial, depriving the companies of the benefit of the bargain. The government's communication of it intent to commit that breach amounted to a repudiation of the contracts (120 St. Ct. 2423, 2435-2436). The Court held further that the companies did not waive their right to restitution (120 St. Ct. 2423, 2436-2437). Finally, the court held that because the government repudiated the lease contracts, the law entitled the companies to restitution whether or not the contracts would have ultimately produced a financial gain or led them to obtain a definite right to explore (120 St. Ct. 2423, 2437). In sum, the Court held that the oil companies gave the government $158 million in return for a contractual promise to follow the terms of pre-existing statutes and regulations. The new statute prevented the government from keeping that promise. The breach substantially impaired the value of the contracts. The government,therefore, was required to give the companies their money back (120 St. Ct. 2423, 2437-2438).

15 of 168 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
A. Action for Damages for Breach of Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities §§ 50.25-50.29

[Reserved]

§§ 50.25[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
A. Action for Damages for Breach of Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.30

§ 50.30 Contract Was Substantially Performed

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] HAS SUBSTANTIALLY PERFORMED HIS/HER/ITS OBLIGATIONS UNDER THE CONTRACT, AND THE _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] MAY NOT BE DENIED THE BENEFIT OF THE BARGAIN BECAUSE OF MINOR DEPARTURES FROM COMPLETE PERFORMANCE OF THE CONTRACT.

Substantial Performance of Contract. When the party who is bound to make payment has enjoyed the fruits of the other party's good faith substantial performance of the contract, if the failure to make full performance can be reflected in damages to be deducted from the price, and if the omissions or deviations from complete performance were not willful or fraudulent and do not substantially affect the purpose for which the paying party made the contract, the performing party may, in an action on the contract, recover the amount of the contract price that remains unpaid, less the amount allowed as damages for the failure to strictly perform (Lowy v. United Pac. Ins. Co. (1967) 67 Cal. 2d 87, 92-93, 60 Cal. Rptr. 225, 429 P.2d 577 ; Thomas Haverty Co. v. Jones (1921) 185 Cal. 285, 289-291, 197 P. 105).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda support the contention that, when there substantial performance by one party made in exchange for payment by the other party, the performing party does not breach the contract for minor defects or less than strict performance, and is entitled to payment by the paying party, less any damages for the minor failure to perform fully. Although the doctrine of substantial performance is primarily applied in construction contract situations, it may be applied in other contracts calling for performance by one party and payment by the other [see, e.g., Posner v. Grunwald-Marx, Inc. (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 169, 186-187, 14 Cal. Rptr. 297, 363 P.2d 313 , discussed in [4][a], below].

The form may also be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in an appropriate proceeding for raising the contention.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to the doctrine of substantial performance, together with discussion and forms relating to contract actions ingeneral, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

This form should be combined with other memoranda pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise this substantive contention.

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the memoranda set out in § 50.31 may be used in opposition to the memoranda of this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Substantial Performance of Contract

In Lowy v. United Pac. Ins. Co. (1967) 67 Cal. 2d 87, 60 Cal. Rptr. 225, 429 P.2d 577 , land owners contracted with a licensed contractor for excavation and grading work. After the contractor had performed 98 percent of the excavation and grading, a dispute arose regarding payment for additional work necessitated by changes made by the owners. The contractor ceased performance, and the owners sued for breach of contract. The contractor cross complained for breach of contract. The trial court concluded that the owners were entitled to nothing, but the contractor recovered on the cross complaint (67 Cal. 2d 87, 89) .

The Supreme Court affirmed. The contractor had not entirely performed his obligations under the contract. However, the doctrine of substantial performance, ordinarily applicable to building contracts, applied because the evidence demonstrated that the contractor completed 98 percent of the work (67 Cal. 2d 87, 92) . The doctrine of substantial performance is that in the case of a building contract when the owner has taken possession of the building and is enjoying the fruits of the contractor's work in the performance of the contract, if there has been a substantial performance by the contractor in good faith, and the failure to make full performance can be compensated in damages to be deducted from the price or allowed as a cross complaint, and if the omissions and deviations were not willful or fraudulent and do not substantially affect the usefulness of the building or the purpose for which it was intended, the contractor may, in an action on the contract, recover the amount of the contract price remainingunpaid, less the amount allowed as damages for the contractor's failure to strictly perform. Furthermore, in this case, since there was substantial evidence to support the trial court's finding that the owners themselves breached the contract and thus precluded full performance on the contractor's part, the trial court properly rendered judgment for the contractor for the unpaid balance on the contract, less the amount of expenses the contractor would incur in completing the unfinished 2 percent of the job (67 Cal. 2d 87, 92-93) .

In Thomas Haverty Co. v. Jones (1921) 185 Cal. 285, 197 P. 105 , the plaintiff was hired by the defendant, on a $27,000 contract, to install plumbing, heating, and ventilation in a building being constructed at a cost of $186,000. Following completion of the work, the plaintiff sued to recover the balance allegedly due on the contract. The defendant contended the plaintiff had not fully performed the contract and cross complained for damages. The trial court found that the plaintiff had substantially performed the contract and rendered judgment for the plaintiff for the contract price less $99.21 for the cost of remedying trivial defects and $2,180.88 as the reduction in value to the defendant's building caused by defects in the plaintiff's work of a trifling character that could not be corrected (185 Cal. 285, 287-288) .

The Supreme Court affirmed. When a person agrees to do a thing for another for a specified sum of money to be paid on full performance, he or she is not entitled to any part of the sum until he or she has done the thing agreed to do, unless full performance has been excused, prevented, or delayed by the act of the other party, by operation of law, or by an act of God or a public enemy (185 Cal. 285, 288-289) . Thus, at common law, when a person failed to strictly perform a building contract, he or she could not recover on the contract; if, however, the person sued in quantum meruit, he or she could recover the reasonable value of the work performed if the work actually benefitted the owner and to some extent served the owner's purpose. Since the common law forms of action were abolished, and since the contractor would in justice be entitled to recover the reasonable value of the work done, not exceeding the contract price, no good reason appeared why the contractor, in a suit on the contract, should not be allowed to recover the price, less the reasonable compensation to the owner for any damages arising from a failure to completely perform, provided the contractor has acted in good faith and the work is so far completed that it reasonably serves the purpose for which it was intended by the owner. Substantial justice is provided by this course of procedure, and no real property right is violated (185 Cal. 285, 290-291) . Therefore, especially in the case of building contracts, when the owner has taken possession of the building and is enjoying the fruits of the contractor's work in the performance of the contract, if there has been a substantial performance by the contractor in good faith, and the failure to make full performance can be compensated in damages to be deducted from the price orallowed on a cross complaint, and if the omissions and deviations were not willful or fraudulent and do not substantially affect the usefulness of the building for the purposes for which it was intended, the contractor may, in an action on the contract, recover the amount unpaid on the contract price, less the amount allowed as damages for the contractor's failure to strictly perform (185 Cal. 285, 289) .

The question of what constitutes substantial performance is one of some difficulty and usually is determined in each case with reference to the facts and circumstances. There is a substantial performance when the variance from the specifications of the contract does not impair the building or structure as a whole, and when after it is erected the building is actually used for the intended purpose, or when the defects can be remedied without great expenditure and without material damage to other parts of the structure. The defects, however, must not run through the whole work so that the object of the owner in having the work done in a particular way is not accomplished or so that a new contract is not substituted for the original one, nor be so substantial as not to be capable of a remedy or that the allowance out of the contract price will not give the owner essentially what he or she contracted for (185 Cal. 285, 291) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Substantial Performance of Contract

In Posner v. Grunwald-Marx, Inc. (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 169, 14 Cal. Rptr. 297, 363 P.2d 313 , the Supreme Court indicated that the doctrine of substantial performance is applicable in a nonconstruction contract situation. A labor union originally sued to compel the employer to arbitrate the question of whether employees were entitled to vacation and holiday pay because of having substantially completed the conditions precedent for the pay before their termination when the employer moved its business operations to Arizona (56 Cal. 2d 169, 173) . The trial court denied the petition to compel arbitration (56 Cal. 2d 169, 174) . In reversing the trial court, the Supreme Court noted, in dictum, that in response to the employer's contention that complete performance of a condition precedent is necessary before employees are entitled to vacation pay, it can be argued that the vacation provisions do not require complete performance because the doctrine of substantial performance is applicable. At common law, recovery under a contract for work done depended on a complete performance, although hardship might be avoided by permitting recovery in quantum meruit. The prevailing doctrine, applied chiefly in building contracts, is that substantial performance is sufficient, and justifies an action on the contract, but the other party is entitled to a reduction in the amount called for by the contract to compensate for the defects. What constitutes substantial performance is a question of fact, but it is essential that there beno willful departure from the terms of the contract, and that the defects be easily remedied or compensated, so that the promisee may get practically what the contract calls for (56 Cal. 2d 169, 186-187) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
A. Action for Damages for Breach of Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.31

§ 50.31 Contract Was Not Substantially Performed

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] HAS NOT SUBSTANTIALLY PERFORMED THE CONTRACT IN THAT THERE HAS NOT BEEN FULL PERFORMANCE OF THE CONTRACT AND _____ [THE DEVIATIONS FROM FULL PERFORMANCE SUBSTANTIALLY AFFECT THE USEFULNESS OF THE CONSIDERATION or THE _____ (PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT) HAS NOT ACTED IN GOOD FAITH or THE DEVIATIONS FROM FULL PERFORMANCE CANNOT BE COMPENSATED IN DAMAGES or THERE IS AN ACCUMULATION OF MANY DEFECTS].

A. General Rule Requiring Full Performance. When a person agrees to do a thing for another for a specified sum of money to be paid on full performance, he or she is not entitled to any part of the sum until he or she has done the thing as agreed, unless full performance has been excused, prevented, or delayed by the act of the other party, by operation of law, or by an act of God or a public enemy (see Lowy v. United Pac. Ins. Co. (1967) 67 Cal. 2d 87, 92, 60 Cal. Rptr. 225, 429 P.2d 577 ; Thomas Haverty Co. v. Jones (1921) 185 Cal. 285, 288-289, 197 P. 105).

B. Substantial Performance Is Question of Fact. What constitutes substantial performance is always a question of fact, a matter of degree, and a question that must be determined relative to all of the other factors that exist (Thomas Haverty Co. v. Jones (1921) 185 Cal. 285, 291, 197 P. 105 ; Tolstoy Constr. Co. v. Minter (1978) 78 Cal. App. 3d 665, 672, 143 Cal. Rptr. 570).

[Optional] C. No Substantial Performance When Usefulness of Consideration Is Substantially Affected. The doctrine of substantial performance cannot be applied when the deviations from full performance substantially affect the usefulness of the consideration for which the nonbreaching party bargained (see Tolstoy Constr. Co. v. Minter (1978) 78 Cal. App. 3d 665, 672-673, 143 Cal. Rptr. 570 ; Williams v. Elliott (1954) 127 Cal. App. 2d 357, 364, 273 P.2d 953).

[Optional] D. Substantial Performance Exists Only When Deviations Are Inadvertent. The doctrine of substantial performance is available only when the omissions or deviations from full performance are the result of mistake or inadvertence, not when the omissions or deviations are intentional or fraudulent (Perry v. Quackenbush (1894) 105 Cal. 299, 309-310, 38 P. 740 ; see Shell v. Schmidt (1958) 164 Cal. App. 2d 350, 365-366, 330 P.2d 817 , cert. denied, 359 U.S. 959).

[Optional] E. Substantial Performance Exists Only When Damages Can Compensate for Deviations. The doctrine of substantial performance can be applied only if the failure to make full performance can be compensated in damages to be deducted from the price or allowed on a cross complaint (see Lowy v. United Pac. Ins. Co. (1967) 67 Cal. 2d 87, 92-93, 60 Cal. Rptr. 225, 429 P.2d 577 ; Thomas Haverty Co. v. Jones (1921) 185 Cal. 285, 289, 197 P. 105).

[Optional] F. Accumulation of Trivial Defects Negates Substantial Performance. Performance rendered under a contract may be held to be less than substantial by reason of the accumulation of many defects, although any one of them standing alone would be minor in character (Tolstoy Constr. Co. v. Minter (1978) 78 Cal. App. 3d 665, 673, 143 Cal. Rptr. 570).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda support the contention that the adverse party did not substantially perform as required by the contract and therefore is not entitled to payment under the substantial performance doctrine.

This form should be combined with memoranda pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue. For example, this contention might be raised in opposition to the adverse party's contention that there was substantial performance, raised, for example, in a motion for summary adjudication [see § 50.30]. The form may also be used in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised in opposition to a motion for summary adjudication, the memorandum would include an analysis of the facts in the supporting and opposing papers showing thatthere is a triable issue of fact on the issue whether there was actually substantial performance by the moving party.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to the doctrine of substantial performance, together with discussion and forms relating to contract actions in general, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the memoranda set out in § 50.30 may be used in opposition to the memoranda of this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] General Rule Requiring Full Performance

The facts and procedural backgrounds of Lowy v. United Pac. Ins. Co. (1967) 67 Cal. 2d 87, 60 Cal. Rptr. 225, 429 P.2d 577 and Thomas Haverty Co. v. Jones (1921) 185 Cal. 285, 197 P. 105 , are discussed in § 50.30[3][a]. In Lowy, the Supreme Court reaffirmed and applied the principles announced in Haverty (67 Cal. 2d 87, 92-93) . In Thomas Haverty Co., the Supreme Court stated the general rule requiring full performance for actions on a contract for the contract price. The Court went on to hold, however, that this general rule has been greatly relaxed, and the doctrine of substantial performance, as stated in the opinion and discussed in § 50.30[3][a], is settled law (185 Cal. 285, 288-289) .

[b] Substantial Performance Is Question of Fact

The facts and procedural background of Thomas Haverty Co. v. Jones (1921) 185 Cal. 285, 197 P. 105 , are discussed in § 50.30[3][a]. The Supreme Court held that the question of what constitutes substantial performance is usually to be determined in each case with reference to the facts and circumstances (185 Cal. 285, 291) .

In Tolstoy Constr. Co. v. Minter (1978) 78 Cal. App. 3d 665, 143 Cal. Rptr. 570 , the plaintiff construction company contracted with the defendant to build a residence. Following the defendant's refusal to make apayment, the plaintiff stopped work and sued for breach of contract. The defendant, claiming that the plaintiff had failed to perform the contract in a substantial and workmanlike manner, cross complained for damages for the plaintiff's breach of the contract. The trial court found that the plaintiff had substantially performed under the contract and rendered judgment for the plaintiff for the amount due under the contract, less a small sum for the work not performed by the plaintiff. The defendant was denied all relief (78 Cal. App. 3d 665, 668, 671) . On appeal the defendant contended that the evidence was insufficient for the trial court to invoke the doctrine of substantial performance.

The court of appeal reversed. There were many examples of the plaintiff's deviations from the contract and unworkmanlike construction (78 Cal. App. 3d 665, 668-671) . The doctrine of substantial performance is the law of California (78 Cal. App. 3d 665, 671-672) , but what constitutes substantial performance is always a question of fact, a matter of degree, and a question that must be determined in relation to all of the other complex factors that exist in every instance (78 Cal. App. 3d 665, 672) . In this case, since what the defendant contracted for and what she actually received were two entirely different things, the trial court committed reversible error in applying the doctrine of substantial performance and allowing the contractor to recover on the contract. Although it was clear that the defendant suffered severe damage as a result of the manifold imperfections in the plaintiff's work, the court of appeal affirmed the denial of relief to the defendant on her cross complaint because she offered insufficient evidence to support a judgment (78 Cal. App. 3d 665, 673) .

[c] No Substantial Performance When Usefulness of Consideration Is Substantially Affected

The factual and procedural background of Tolstoy Constr. Co. v. Minter (1978) 78 Cal. App. 3d 665, 143 Cal. Rptr. 570 , are discussed in [b], above. The court of appeal held that since what the defendant contracted for, a home of reasonable quality, and what she actually received, a building addition with many significant defects, were two entirely different things, the trial court committed reversible error when it applied the doctrine of substantial performance and allowed the contractor to recover on the contract (78 Cal. App. 3d 665, 673) .

In Williams v. Elliott (1954) 127 Cal. App. 2d 357, 273 P.2d 953 , a contractor sued to establish a mechanic's lien for the unpaid balance due on a contract for the construction of a roof. The owner cross complained for damages, claiming that the contractor's poor workmanship and defects in the roof constituted a breach of contract on the contractor's part. The trial court found that the roof, as constructed, was of no value and had to be replaced. The court rendered judgment for the owner. On appeal thecontractor contended that he had substantially performed the contract (127 Cal. App. 2d 357, 359-360, 364) .

The court of appeal affirmed. This was clearly not a case for application of the substantial-performance doctrine because there was evidence to support the finding that the roof, as constructed, was of no value (127 Cal. App. 2d 357, 364) .

[d] Substantial Performance Exists Only When Deviations Are Inadvertent

In Perry v. Quackenbush (1894) 105 Cal. 299, 38 P. 740 , a case dealing with the doctrine of substantial performance, a land owner contracted with a contractor to build a house. The owner filed an action for cancellation of the promissory note and mortgage that he had executed to the contractor. The owner claimed, and the trial court found, that the contractor intentionally breached the contract by using second-hand materials and by building the house in an unworkmanlike manner. The trial court found the difference in value in the house as built, as opposed to how it should have been built, to be $350, and deducted this sum from the owner's note. On appeal the owner contended that the judgment was not supported by the findings of fact (105 Cal. 299, 302-305) .

The Supreme Court modified the judgment to cancel the owner's promissory note and mortgage (105 Cal. 299, 310) . The old rule requiring strict performance has been relaxed, and the more liberal rule of substantial performance applies (105 Cal. 299, 305) . However, the owner is entitled to have the structure that was contracted-for. Good faith on the part of the contractor is not enough to invoke the doctrine of substantial performance. The owner has a right to a structure that in all essential particulars is the one contracted-for. A trial court cannot say that anything is immaterial that the parties have made material by their contract. The owner had the right to determine for himself what he deemed a good foundation or what materials were to be used; and the owner having contracted for them, neither the contractor nor a court had the right to compel him to accept something else, even if it were shown by witnesses to be just as good or even better. No precise rule can or ought to be laid down on the subject, but whenever a case arises, courts and juries should see to it that the design of the owner is not defeated in any important respect (105 Cal. 299, 309-310) . To justify a recovery on the contract as substantially performed, the omissions or deviations must be the result of a mistake or inadvertence, and not intentional, much less fraudulent; and they must be slight or susceptible of remedy, so that an allowance out of the contract price will give the other party substantially what was contracted-for (105 Cal. 299, 309) .

In Shell v. Schmidt (1958) 164 Cal. App. 2d 350, 330 P.2d 817 , cert. denied, 359 U.S. 959 , third-party beneficiaries of a construction contractbetween the federal government and a contractor, sued for breach of the contract. On a previous appeal, it was decided that the contractor had breached the contract, and the case was sent back to the trial court to ascertain the amount of damages. In this appeal, the contractor contended that the trial court erred in the manner in which it determined the damages (164 Cal. App. 2d 350, 351) .

The court of appeal affirmed. There cannot be the necessary good faith required by the substantial performance rule if there have been willful and intentional major deviations from the terms of the contract (164 Cal. App. 2d 350, 358) .

[e] Substantial Performance Exists Only When Damages Can Compensate for Deviations

In Lowy v. United Pac. Ins. Co. (1967) 67 Cal. 2d 87, 60 Cal. Rptr. 225, 429 P.2d 577 , the Supreme Court, in dealing with the doctrine of substantial performance (discussed in § 50.30[3][a], the Supreme Court applied the rule of Thomas Haverty Co. v. Jones (1921) 185 Cal. 285, 197 P. 105 , which is also discussed in § 50.30[3][a] (67 Cal. 2d 87, 92-93) . In the earlier case, the Supreme Court held that a contractor may recover the contract price, less the amount allowed as damages for failure to strictly perform, only when there has been substantial performance in good faith and when the failure to make full performance can be compensated in damages to be deducted from the price or allowed on a cross complaint (185 Cal. 285, 289) .

[f] Accumulation of Trivial Defects Negates Substantial Performance

The facts and procedural background of Tolstoy Constr. Co. v. Minter (1978) 78 Cal. App. 3d 665, 143 Cal. Rptr. 570 , are discussed in [b], above. The court of appeal held that the performance rendered may be held to be less than substantial by reason of the accumulation of many defects, although any one of them standing alone would be minor in character (78 Cal. App. 3d 665, 673) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
A. Action for Damages for Breach of Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities §§ 50.32-50.39

[Reserved]

§§ 50.32[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
A. Action for Damages for Breach of Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.40

§ 50.40 Strict Performance Was Waived

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE PLAINTIFF WAIVED THE RIGHT TO REQUIRE STRICT PERFORMANCE FROM THE DEFENDANT.

A. Waiver Is Relinquishment of Right. Waiver is the intentional relinquishment of a known right, which can be shown by conduct warranting an inference of the relinquishment of the right or may result from an express agreement or be inferred from other circumstances indicating an intent to waive (Panno v. Russo (1947) 82 Cal. App. 2d 408, 412, 186 P.2d 452 ; see Roesch v. DeMota (1944) 24 Cal. 2d 563, 572, 150 P.2d 422).

B. Waiver by Party Who Would Benefit From Waived Provision. A contracting party may waive provisions placed in a contract solely for his or her benefit (Wyler Summit Partnership v. Turner Broadcasting (9th Cir. 1998) 135 F.3d 658, 662-664 ; Wyler Summit Partnership v. Turner Broadcasting (9th Cir. 2000) 235 F. 3d 1184, 1190-1192 ; Doryon v. Salant (1977) 75 Cal. App. 3d 706, 712, 142 Cal. Rptr. 378 ; Wesley N. Taylor Co. v. Russell (1961) 194 Cal. App. 2d 816, 828, 15 Cal. Rptr. 357).

C. Waiver Precludes Assertion of Breach of Waived Condition. Waiver by an obligee of a contractual condition precludes the obligee from asserting failure of the waived condition as a breach of contract (see Knarston v. Manhattan Life Ins. Co. (1903) 140 Cal. 57, 64-66, 73 P. 740 ; Silva v. National American Life Ins. Co. (1976) 58 Cal. App. 3d 609, 614-615, 130 Cal. Rptr. 211 ; Panno v. Russo (1947) 82 Cal. App. 2d 408, 412-413, 186 P.2d 452).

[Optional] D. Continuing to Accept Performance With Knowledge of Previous Breach May Constitute Waiver of Breach. When an injured party, with full knowledge of a breach, continues to accept performance from the breaching party, that conduct may constitute a waiver of the breach (see Kern Sunset Oil Co. v. Good Roads Oil Co. (1931) 214 Cal. 435, 440, 6 P.2d 71 ; Whitney Inv. Co. v. Westview Dev. Co. (1969) 273 Cal. App. 2d 594, 603, 78 Cal. Rptr. 302).

[Optional] E. Condoning Late Periodic Payments Is Waiver of Time-of-the-Essence Clause. When time is made of the essence in a contract for the payment of money, acceptance of late payments, without objection, constitutes a waiver of the breach, and the right to future timely payments can be restored only by giving a definite and specific notice of an intention to enforce the provision (Stevinson v. Joy (1912) 164 Cal. 279, 285, 128 P. 751 ; see Boone v. Templeman (1910) 158 Cal. 290, 295, 110 P. 947).

[Optional] F. Acceptance of Building Is Waiver of Defects. The acceptance of a building, in the absence of fraud or mistake, implies a waiver of any claim for damages on account of nonperformance in any particular (G & P Elec. Co. v. Dumont Constr. Co. (1961) 194 Cal. App. 2d 868, 878, 15 Cal. Rptr. 757 ; see Smith v. Mathews Constr. Co. (1919) 179 Cal. 797, 802, 179 P. 205).

[Optional] G. Waiver Is Created by Conduct. Waiver may be shown by conduct. It may be the result of an act which, according to its natural import, is so inconsistent with the intent to enforce the right in question as to induce a reasonable belief that the right has been relinquished (Medico-Dental Bldg. Co. v. Horton & Converse (1942) 21 Cal. 2d 411, 432, 132 P.2d 457 ; Howard J. White, Inc. v. Varian Associates (1960) 178 Cal. App. 2d 348, 355, 2 Cal. Rptr. 871).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda support the contention that a plaintiff seeking contract damages waived the right to require strict performance from the defendant.

This form may be combined with memoranda pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue. For example, this contention might be raised in a motion for a new trial on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence, pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 657(6), or a motion to vacate the judgment pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 663. For memoranda relating to motions for a new trial generally, see Ch. 155, Motions After Trial .

This form may be adapted for use when the defendant asserts failure by the plaintiff to fulfill a condition precedent to the defendant's obligation, and the plaintiff asserts that the defendant waived the condition.

The form may also be used in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised in support of a defendant's motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the facts in the supporting and opposing papers showing that undisputed facts establish clearly and convincingly a waiver by plaintiff of strict performance on defendant's part.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to waiver, together with discussion and forms relating to contract actions in general, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing

Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the memoranda set out in § 50.41 may be used in opposition to the memoranda of this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Waiver Is Relinquishment of Right

The facts and procedural background of Panno v. Russo (1947) 82 Cal. App. 2d 408, 186 P.2d 452 , are discussed in [c], below. The court of appeal defined waiver as the intentional relinquishment of a known right or conduct warranting an inference of the relinquishment of the right, which may result from an express agreement or be inferred from circumstances indicating an intent to waive (82 Cal. App. 2d 408, 412) .

The facts and procedural background of Roesch v. DeMota (1944) 24 Cal. 2d 563, 150 P.2d 422 , are discussed in § 50.41[3][d]. The Supreme Court defined waiver as the intentional relinquishment of a known right after knowledge of the facts (24 Cal. 2d 563, 572) .

[b] Waiver by Party Who Would Benefit From Waived Provision

Wyler Summit Partnership v. Turner Broadcasting (9th Cir. 1998) 135 F.3d 658 , a film director's successor in interest sued the producer's successor in interest to recover compensation due under a 1958 contract for the direction of a film. The contract provided that the director's percentage compensation would be payable in annual installments not to exceed $50,000 in any one year. That provision was inserted at the director's request, to reduce income tax liability. The film eventually generated more than $3.3 million in total percentage compensation for the director and his heirs, but the director and his heirs were paid only $1.8 million (in $50,000 annual payments). The producer retained $1.5 million in deferred percentage compensation, which after the director's death became payable to the director's heirs. The heirs proposed to waive the instalment-payment provision, but the producer's successor in interest rejected the proposal. The heirs then sought a judicial annulment of the instalment-payment provision, recovery of the deferred compensation, and recovery of the interest income that the producer and successor in interest had received on the deferred compensation (135 F.3d 658, 659-661) . The trial court granted a motion to dismiss the action for failure to state a claim on which relief can be granted. The court of appeals reversed. The trial court incorrectly applied California contract law as stated in Doryon v. Salant (1977) 75 Cal. App. 3d 706, 712, 142 Cal. Rptr. 378 , and Wesley N. Taylor Co. v. Russell (1961) 194 Cal. App. 2d 816, 828, 15 Cal. Rptr. 357 , both discussed below. A contracting party may waive conditions placed in a contract solely for the party's benefit. In this case, the heirs' complaint stated a cause of action for breach of contract on the basis of the proffered waiver of the instalment-payment provision and the rejection of that waiver by the producer's successor in interest (135 F.3d 658, 662-664) .

On remand, in Wyler Summit Partnership v. Turner Broadcasting (9th Cir. 2000) 235 F. 3d 1184 , the district court granted summary judgment to defendant, and plaintiff appealed. Plaintiff contended, among other things, that a genuine issue of material fact existed as to whether a particular provision of the 1958 contract between the film director and the original producer (defendant's predecessor) was inserted for the sole benefit of the director or for the mutual benefit of both parties. The court stated that under California law, the test of whether a contractual provision may be waived by one party is not whether the parties believed or assumed that it could be waived. Instead, the determinative inquiry is whether the provision was inserted for the sole benefit of one of the parties. The court concluded that the director's successor in interest presented sufficient evidence to raise a triable issue of fact as to whether the original director and producer included the installment payment provision in the 1958 contract for the sole benefit of the director (235 F. 3d 1184, 1190-1192) .

In Doryon v. Salant (1977) 75 Cal. App. 3d 706, 142 Cal. Rptr. 378 , purchasers sued for specific performance of a contract for the sale of residential property. The contract was made subject to the condition that within 21 days, the purchasers would obtain a first-lien loan according to terms in the contract (75 Cal. App. 3d 706, 708-709) . Even though the purchasers were only able to obtain a loan for a sum less than that specified in the contract, they signed supplemental escrow instructions waiving the contingency regarding financing (75 Cal. App. 3d 706, 709-710) . The vendors subsequently refused to close escrow because they thought the price was too low (75 Cal. App. 3d 706, 710) . At the end of the plaintiffs' case, the trial court granted the vendors' motion for judgment under Code Civ. Proc. § 631.8 because the court found that the contract lacked essential terms (75 Cal. App. 3d 706, 710-711) .

The court of appeal reversed. The trial court's findings were not supported by the evidence in that none of the essential terms required for a written contract was missing. Although the purchasers had not obtained the exact loan specified in the contract, the vendors could not rely on this to avoid their contractual obligation. A contracting party may waive provisions placed in a contract solely for his or her benefit. The provision in the contract regarding loan terms was there solely for the purchasers' benefit. They had the right to, and did, waive this condition precedent to their performance and, once having done so, the vendors were contractually assured of obtaining the full purchase price in cash. The vendors had contracted to sell the property for cash. The vendors would receive the purchase price in cash regardless of the method of financing chosen by the purchasers. Thus, if the purchasers were willing and able to produce the necessary cash despite their inability to obtain a loan on favorable terms as described in the contract, the vendors had no right to complain of the purchasers' waiver of the condition (75 Cal. App. 3d 706, 712) .

Wesley N. Taylor Co. v. Russell (1961) 194 Cal. App. 2d 816, 15 Cal. Rptr. 357 , involved two consolidated actions arising out of failure to perform a contract for the sale of real property. The first action was brought by the purchaser to compel specific performance; the second action wasbrought by the real estate broker to collect a commission (194 Cal. App. 2d 816, 818) . The contract of sale was made contingent on the purchaser's ability to obtain a first-lien loan according to certain terms. Even though the purchaser was able to obtain a loan only on terms that were less favorable than those specified in the contract, the purchaser waived the condition that it be able to obtain a loan on the specified terms. The vendor contended that the purchaser's inability to obtain the specified loan automatically voided the contract, and the vendor refused to perform (194 Cal. App. 2d 816, 820) . The trial court found for the plaintiffs in both actions. The court of appeal dismissed the appeal of the judgment granting specific performance to the purchaser because the judgment was interlocutory and, therefore, not appealable (194 Cal. App. 2d 816, 820) .

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment for the broker. The trial court's finding that the subject condition was placed in the contract by the purchaser and was for its sole benefit was supported by the evidence and the law. It is well settled that a contracting party may waive provisions placed in a contract solely for his or her benefit. A provision of the type at issue in this case is for the sole benefit of the purchaser. A cash vendor's sole interest is in receiving the purchase price. The paramount obligation of the respective parties is the payment of the cash by the one party and the delivery of title to the property by the other party, and the method of financing is incidental to the contract (194 Cal. App. 2d 816, 828-829) .

[c] Waiver Precludes Assertion of Breach of Waived Condition

Knarston v. Manhattan Life Ins. Co. (1903) 140 Cal. 57, 73 P. 740 , was an action to recover the benefits of a life insurance policy. The insured died after the scheduled due date for payment of the premium on his policy but before expiration of an oral extension of the time for payment. The policy provided for forfeiture in the event that payment of the premium was not made by the scheduled due date. Judgment was rendered on a verdict for the beneficiary. On appeal the insurance company contended that any purported waiver of the forfeiture provision in the policy would have been an alteration of the terms of the contract that would have been ineffective because not in writing (140 Cal. 57, 60-62) .

The Supreme Court affirmed. The granting of the extension was not a binding contract that precluded the insurance company from repudiating it at any time by notice to the insured. However, in the absence of a repudiation, the actions of the company amounted to a waiver of the provision for forfeiture in the policy, and parol evidence was admissible to prove the waiver (140 Cal. 57, 67) . A waiver is not a contract that requires consideration but rather is in the nature of an estoppel. When the insured failed to pay his premium by the due date, the insurance company could have stood on the terms of the contract and considered the policy forfeited.Instead of doing this, it started negotiations with the insured, treating the policy as still in force and evidencing an intention to waive any right it might have had to insist on the forfeiture. Having granted the extension, the company recognized the policy as continuing in existence. Because the company did not repudiate the extension before the insured's death, the law would not permit the company to claim that its conduct did not constitute a waiver (140 Cal. 57, 64-65) .

Silva v. National American Life Ins. Co. (1976) 58 Cal. App. 3d 609, 130 Cal. Rptr. 211 , was an action to recover the benefits of a life insurance policy. The defendant issued the insurance policy in conjunction with a mortgage loan. After selling the mortgaged property, the insured stopped making payments on the policy, and because of the nonpayment of the premium, the policy lapsed two months before the insured's death (58 Cal. App. 3d 609, 611-612) . On the date of the insured's death, the defendant had coincidentally written a letter to the insured offering to convert the mortgage insurance to individual insurance on payment of past due premiums. The trial court granted the insurance company's motion for summary judgment. On appeal the plaintiff contended that the company waived, or was estopped from relying on, the automatic lapse of the policy for nonpayment of premiums because the letter constituted negotiations with the insured, which was evidence that the company recognized the continued validity of the policy (58 Cal. App. 3d 609, 612) .

The court of appeal affirmed. An express provision of an insurance contract stipulating that a default in payment renders the policy void or causes it to lapse is valid. However, like any other contracting party, an insurance company may waive provisions placed in a policy solely for its own benefit and may, by its conduct, be estopped from asserting defenses that might otherwise be available (58 Cal. App. 3d 609, 614-615) . To constitute a waiver, there must be an existing right, a knowledge of its existence, and an actual intention to relinquish it, or conduct so inconsistent with the intent to enforce the right as to induce a reasonable belief that it has been relinquished. The party who has the right may waive it without reliance by another. The doctrine of estoppel, however, is based on the theory that the party estopped has, by declarations or conduct, misled another to the other's prejudice so that it would be inequitable to allow the true facts to be used against the misled party (58 Cal. App. 3d 609, 615) . If an insurance company, after knowledge of any default for which it might terminate the contract of insurance, enters into negotiations or transactions with the insured and so recognizes the continued validity of the policy and treats it as still in force, the right to claim a forfeiture for a previous default is waived (58 Cal. App. 3d 609, 617) . However, the facts of this case clearly did not fit within that general rule since the most that could be said for the defendant's letter is that it was an attempt to negotiate with the insured for reinstatement of the lapsed policy oncondition that all delinquent premiums be paid and future premiums be paid in advance on an annual basis (58 Cal. App. 3d 609, 616) .

Panno v. Russo (1947) 82 Cal. App. 2d 408, 186 P.2d 452 , was an action for damages based on the defendant's breach of a contract to sell a crop of oranges to the plaintiff. The contract called for the plaintiff to pay a $5,000 deposit then pay $20,000 on January 1, 1944. On that date the plaintiff paid the defendant $10,000, and both parties agreed that the remaining $10,000 need not be paid until demanded by the defendant. The defendant sold the crop to a third party and notified the plaintiff that it had canceled their agreement. The trial court rendered judgment for the plaintiff (82 Cal. App. 2d 408, 409-410) .

The court of appeal affirmed. A party to a contract may, by conduct or representation, waive the performance of a condition or be held estopped by conduct or representations to deny that he or she has waived performance. Whether the established facts in any given case constitute an estoppel or a waiver is not always easily distinguishable. Waiver is the intentional relinquishment of a known right, which may be shown by conduct warranting an inference of the relinquishment of the right or may result from an express agreement or be inferred from other circumstances indicating an intent to waive. The doctrine of promissory estoppel applies when the promisor says, in essence, "I will perform even though you do not comply with the condition," or "even though you subject yourself to a legal defense." To bring the case within the rule, it is essential that the promisee could and would have performed the condition, or would not have allowed the defense to arise, had it not been for the promisor's waiver (82 Cal. App. 2d 408, 412) . In this case, the defendant waived a provision of the contract made for its benefit, and by reason of that conduct, the doctrine of estoppel was properly invoked against the defendant (82 Cal. App. 2d 408, 413) .

[d] Continuing to Accept Performance With Knowledge of Previous Breach May Constitute Waiver of Breach

In Kern Sunset Oil Co. v. Good Roads Oil Co. (1931) 214 Cal. 435, 6 P.2d 71 , a lessor sought a judgment declaring the forfeiture of a lease of oil lands. The lessor had continued to accept a share of the revenues from the land despite knowing that the lessee had not complied with the lease provision requiring the lessee to drill and put into production two wells a year for eight years. The trial court rendered judgment for the defendant after finding that the plaintiff had waived the right to assert the alleged breach as a ground for forfeiture of the lease (214 Cal. 435, 437-439) .

The Supreme Court affirmed. The acceptance of rent by a landlord, after full knowledge of a breach of a condition of the lease, is a waiver of the breach. By accepting rent under these circumstances, the lessor is recognizing the existence of the lease. It would be inconsistent for the lessor torecognize the existence of the lease and accept benefits under it, and at the same time claim that the lease is forfeited and seek to recover the fruits of a forfeiture (214 Cal. 435, 445) .

Whitney Inv. Co. v. Westview Dev. Co. (1969) 273 Cal. App. 2d 594, 78 Cal. Rptr. 302 , was an appeal by real estate brokers from an adverse judgment in their action to recover a commission allegedly due under an exclusive listing agreement for the sale of certain properties owned by the defendant (273 Cal. App. 2d 594, 597) . The trial court found that before the defendant's sale of a property through another agent, the brokers had failed to perform certain obligations under the contract. The trial court rendered judgment for the defendant (273 Cal. App. 2d 594, 599-600) . On appeal the brokers contended that despite their failure to perform all of their promises, the parties had continued to treat the contract as being alive; therefore, the defendant had waived the breach.

The court of appeal reversed. A breach does not terminate a contract as a matter of course but is only a ground for termination at the option of the injured party. Furthermore, when the injured party, with knowledge of the breach, continues to accept performance from the guilty party, that conduct may constitute a waiver of the breach. Although the trial court did find that the brokers breached the contract by failing to perform all of their promises, the court's failure to make a finding as to whether the defendant had terminated the contract by reason of the partial breach, or had waived the breach, required a reversal (273 Cal. App. 2d 594, 602-604) .

[e] Condoning Late Periodic Payments Is Waiver of Time-of-the-Essence Clause

In Stevinson v. Joy (1912) 164 Cal. 279, 128 P. 751 , a vendor sued to quiet title to a parcel of land and to enjoin the purchaser from removing a building constructed on the land. The vendor had made an instalment sale contract requiring the purchaser to make weekly payments and expressly making time of the essence. The vendor had continually accepted payments from the purchaser long after they were due. On receipt from the purchaser of a late payment after the contract had been in effect for more than a year, the vendor returned the payment along with a letter declaring the forfeiture because of the purchaser's failure to make timely payments. The trial court, finding that the vendor had waived the "time of the essence" provision, rendered judgment for the purchaser (164 Cal. 279, 280-283) .

The Supreme Court affirmed. When time is of the essence of a contract for the payment of money, but the covenant has been waived by the acceptance of the money after it is due, and with knowledge of the facts, that conduct will be regarded as creating a temporary suspension of the rightof forfeiture, which can be restored only by giving a definite and specific notice of an intention to enforce it (164 Cal. 279, 285) .

In Boone v. Templeman (1910) 158 Cal. 290, 110 P. 947 , a purchaser sued for specific performance of a contract for the sale of land. The contract, which specifically made time of the essence, provided that if any monthly payment was more than 60 days overdue, the vendor could declare a forfeiture. Nevertheless, the vendor continually accepted late payments with no objection. Furthermore, after receiving no payment for over three years, and more than one year after the final payment was due, and with no demand or notification to the purchaser that he was delinquent in his payments, the vendor notified the purchaser that he rescinded the contract. The purchaser then offered to pay the entire balance due, which was refused. The trial court sustained the vendor's demurrer (158 Cal. 290, 292-294) .

The Supreme Court reversed. From the facts alleged, the acceptance of payments of installments on the price by the vendor, without objection, long after they had become due, was a waiver of all breaches that had occurred at or before the time the payments were actually made, and the vendor could not insist on a forfeiture on the basis of late payments (158 Cal. 290, 295) .

[f] Acceptance of Building Is Waiver of Defects

In Smith v. Mathews Constr. Co. (1919) 179 Cal. 797, 179 P. 205 , a contractor sued for the balance due, as well as compensation for certain extras performed, under a construction contract. The defendants cross complained for damages, claiming that the work was done in an unworkmanlike manner, and defective materials had been used. The trial court rendered judgment for the contractor for the entire sum claimed and against the defendants on their cross complaint (179 Cal. 797, 798-800) .

The Supreme Court affirmed. The contract gave the architect discretionary power to order any imperfect work re-executed. By the defendants' failure to demand any re-execution of the work or change in materials before their acceptance of the building, the departures from the strict performance of the work according to the very letter of the specifications were waived (179 Cal. 797, 802) .

In G & P Elec. Co. v. Dumont Constr. Co. (1961) 194 Cal. App. 2d 868, 15 Cal. Rptr. 757 , an electrical subcontractor sued building owners and the general contractor for the balance allegedly due under the subcontract. The owners claimed that the subcontractor had not performed the work in accordance with the plans and specifications (194 Cal. App. 2d 868, 872-873) . The trial court rendered judgment for the subcontractor.

The court of appeal affirmed. After taking possession of the building, the owners signed a release with the contractor agreeing to make no furtherclaims of any nature whatsoever pursuant to the original contract. Having released the general contractor from all claims for deficient performance, the owners could not be allowed to complain against the subcontractor about the work performed under the subcontract (194 Cal. App. 2d 868, 877-878) . The acceptance of a building, in the absence of fraud or mistake, implies a waiver of any claim for damages on account of nonperformance in any particular (194 Cal. App. 2d 868, 878) .

[g] Waiver Is Created by Conduct

In Medico-Dental Bldg. Co. v. Horton & Converse (1942) 21 Cal. 2d 411, 132 P.2d 457 , a landlord sued for rent due under a lease. The defendant operated a drug store on the leased premises. The lease contained a restrictive covenant by which the lessor agreed not to rent any other portion of the building to a tenant that would compete with the defendant (21 Cal. 2d 411, 414-415) . Despite this restrictive covenant, another tenant in the building began dispensing drugs in competition with the defendant. Following negotiations, the landlord informed the defendant that nothing could be done to prevent the other tenant from dispensing drugs. The defendant then informed the landlord that the defendant intended to vacate the premises in order to avoid a waiver of its exclusive right to maintain a drug store in the building. The defendant vacated the building within two weeks (21 Cal. 2d 411, 417) . The trial court, finding that the landlord had breached the lease and caused a material failure of consideration to the defendant, rendered judgment for the defendant. On appeal the landlord contended that the defendant had waived the alleged breach (21 Cal. 2d 411, 417-418) .

The Supreme Court affirmed. There was no waiver by the defendant. Once the defendant had been told by the landlord that the landlord would not force the other tenant to stop dispensing drugs, the defendant was forced to elect whether it would continue under its lease after the next rent payment day and waive the breach, or vacate before the end of month, as it did. This immediate election was necessary because waiver may be shown by conduct and may be the result of an act that, according to its natural import, is so inconsistent with the intent to enforce the right in question as to induce a reasonable belief that the right has been relinquished (21 Cal. 2d 411, 432) .

Howard J. White, Inc. v. Varian Associates (1960) 178 Cal. App. 2d 348, 2 Cal. Rptr. 871 , was an action by a contractor to recover a sum due under a construction contract. The defendant cross complained, alleging that the contractor's tardy completion of the contract had caused significant damages to the defendant (178 Cal. App. 2d 348, 350, 352) . Despite the contract's requirement that all change orders had to be in writing, many change orders were made orally. The contractor alleged that the change orders necessitated completion of the project after the completiondate. The defendant alleged that the contract required changes to be in writing, including any extension, and the contractor's tardy completion could not be excused on the basis of oral change orders. The trial court rendered judgment for the contractor.

The court of appeal affirmed. It is settled law that the parties may, by their conduct, waive the requirement of a written contract that no extra work shall be done except on written order. In this case, the parties, by their previous conduct, had clearly waived the requirement that change orders be in writing (178 Cal. App. 2d 348, 353) . Waiver may be shown by conduct and may be the result of an act that, according to its natural import, is so inconsistent with the intent to enforce the right in question as to induce a reasonable belief that the right has been relinquished (178 Cal. App. 2d 348, 355) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Acceptance of Building Is Waiver of Defects

In Atowich v. Zimmer (1933) 218 Cal. 763, 25 P.2d 6 , owners sued a contractor for breach of a contract to build a building. The plaintiffs alleged that the defendant omitted certain features called for by the plans and specifications (218 Cal. 763, 764-765) . The trial court found that there was substantial compliance with the contract, and the changes and omissions were made with the consent of the plaintiffs' agent (218 Cal. 763, 767) . Furthermore, at the time the contractor sought payment for extras, his claim was reduced by an allowance by the contractor to the owners of certain credits for omissions (218 Cal. 763, 768) . Judgment was rendered for the contractor. The Supreme Court affirmed. The owners' acceptance and taking of possession of the completed structure was coincident with the settlement of the contractor's claim and the owners' counterclaims for changes, alterations, and omissions; and, in the absence of any showing of fraud or mistake, neither of which was urged by the owners in this case, the owners waived of any claim for damages on account of nonperformance in any particular (218 Cal. 763, 768) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
A. Action for Damages for Breach of Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.41

§ 50.41 Strict Performance Was Not Waived

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE PLAINTIFF DID NOT WAIVE THE RIGHT TO STRICT PERFORMANCE BY THE DEFENDANT.

A. Waiver Is Question of Fact. Whether a party has waived any contractual rights is a question of fact that must be determined from the circumstances of the case (Sparling v. Housman (1950) 96 Cal. App. 2d 159, 163, 214 P.2d 837 ; Banducci v. Frank T. Hickey, Inc. (1949) 93 Cal. App. 2d 658, 663, 209 P.2d 398).

B. Doubtful Case Must Be Decided Against Waiver. When there is doubt as to whether there has been a waiver, the issue is to be decided against the one who claims a waiver (Bass v. John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co. (1974) 10 Cal. 3d 792, 796, 112 Cal. Rptr. 195, 518 P.2d 1147).

C. Burden of Proof Is on Party Asserting Waiver. The burden of proof is on the party claiming a waiver, to prove it by clear and convincing evidence that does not leave the matter to speculation (Bass v. John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co. (1974) 10 Cal. 3d 792, 796, 112 Cal. Rptr. 195, 518 P.2d 1147).

[Optional] D. Waiver Must Always Be Intentional With Knowledge of All Facts. Waiver always rests on intent. Waiver is the intentional relinquishment of a known right after knowledge of the facts (Ukiah v. Fones (1966) 64 Cal. 2d 104, 107, 48 Cal. Rptr. 865, 410 P.2d 369 ; Roesch v. DeMota (1944) 24 Cal. 2d 563, 572, 150 P.2d 422).

[Optional] E. Waiver Must Be Clearly Expressed. A waiver must be clearly expressed (see Spellman v. Dixon (1967) 256 Cal. App. 2d 1, 5, 63 Cal. Rptr. 668).

[Optional] F. Mere Payment or Acceptance of Work Under Construction Contract Does Not Constitute Waiver. Mere payment or acceptance of work under a construction contract does not constitute a waiver by the owner of a breach by the contractor, unless the circumstances show an intent to waive or create an estoppel against the subsequent assertion of the right to damages (see Leonard v. Home Builders (1916) 174 Cal. 65, 68-69, 161 P. 1151 ; Banducci v. Frank T. Hickey, Inc. (1949) 93 Cal. App. 2d 658, 662, 209 P.2d 398).

[Optional] G. When Obligation Is Continuous, Waiver to Certain Time Does Not Preclude Assertion of Subsequent Breach. When an obligation is continuous, a waiver of a breach up to a certain time does not necessarily preclude the promisee from asserting a subsequent breach (Woodard v. Glenwood Lbr. Co. (1915) 171 Cal. 513, 523, 153 P. 951 ; Bowman v. Santa Clara County (1957) 153 Cal. App. 2d 707, 713, 315 P.2d 67).

[Optional] H. Allowance of Performance After Completion Date Does Not Constitute Waiver of Breach. Consent on the part of the promisee to allow the promisor to perform after the agreed time is not a waiver of the promisor's breach of contract for failure to render timely performance (Bryson v. McCone (1898) 121 Cal. 153, 157, 53 P. 637 ; Wilkinson & Co. v. McKinley (1948) 84 Cal. App. 2d 100, 105, 190 P.2d 35).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that strict performance was not waived.

This form may be combined with memoranda pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue. For example, this contention might be raised in opposition to the adverse contention [see § 50.40] presented in a motion for a new trial on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence, pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 657(6), or motion to vacate the judgment pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 663. For forms relating to motions for a new trial generally, see Ch. 155, Motions After Trial .

The form may also be used in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised in opposing a defendant's motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the facts in the supporting and opposing papers showing that there is a triable issue of fact concerning whether or not plaintiff's conduct clearly and convincingly constitutes a waiver of defendant's strict performance.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to waiver, together with discussion and forms relating to contract actions in general, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing amemorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the memoranda set out in § 50.40 may be used in opposition to the memoranda of this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Waiver Is Question of Fact

In Sparling v. Housman (1950) 96 Cal. App. 2d 159, 214 P.2d 837 , a home owner withheld the last payment due to a contractor under a contract for the construction of a house. The owner claimed the contractor had failed to build the building in accordance with the plans and specifications. The contractor sued to collect $1,950 due under the contract. After listening to substantial evidence of deviations from the plans by the contractor, the court, sitting without a jury, allowed the owner an offset of $1,200 (96 Cal. App. 2d 159, 160) . On appeal the contractor contended that the owner's moving into the house and failing to object to the manner in which the work was done constituted a waiver of strict performance of the contract (96 Cal. App. 2d 159, 162) .

The court of appeal affirmed. The question of whether a party has waived the right to recover for failure of performance is a factual question for the trier of fact (96 Cal. App. 2d 159, 163) .

Banducci v. Frank T. Hickey, Inc. (1949) 93 Cal. App. 2d 658, 209 P.2d 398 , was an action to recover damages for failure to strictly perform an oral contract to grade and level land (93 Cal. App. 2d 658, 659) . The court rendered judgment for the land owner. On appeal the contractor contended that since the owner accepted and took possession of the completed work, in the absence of fraud or mistake, the owner waived the right to strict performance and cannot recover, and the jury should have been so instructed (93 Cal. App. 2d 658, 661, 662) .

The court of appeal affirmed. A mere acceptance, without more, does not necessarily preclude the owner from showing that the work was done in an unworkmanlike manner, especially when the defects were latent or when the owner had no reasonable means of ascertaining the defects and, when they were ascertained, gave timely notice, even though the owner paid the contract price (93 Cal. App. 2d 658, 662) . The general rule is that whether a waiver is implied is a question of fact that must be determined from all of the circumstances (93 Cal. App. 2d 658, 663) .

[b] Doubtful Case Must Be Decided Against Waiver

In Bass v. John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co. (1974) 10 Cal. 3d 792, 112 Cal. Rptr. 195, 518 P.2d 1147 , a life insurance beneficiary sued to recoverbenefits. In 1964, the plaintiff's husband, one of 3,500 employees, was the only employee at his company to waive, in writing, the benefits provided without charge to all employees. In 1967, as part of a new union contract, the insurance plan was amended to provide increased benefits. The company did not ask the husband whether he wished to receive benefits under the new plan, but he did receive a booklet telling him that the benefits became applicable to him if he was working on the day the plan went into effect (10 Cal. 3d 792, 794-795) . The trial court, finding that the husband had refused the insurance coverage, rendered judgment for the defendant (10 Cal. 3d 792, 795) .

The Supreme Court reversed and directed judgment for the plaintiff for the benefit amount under the policy. Although the rights of a third-party beneficiary may be voluntarily waived or disclaimed, the burden is on the party claiming the waiver to prove it by clear and convincing evidence that does not leave the matter to speculation, and doubtful cases will be decided against a waiver (10 Cal. 3d 792, 796) . The 1964 waiver was not necessarily controlling with respect to rights under the expanded 1967 insurance program. Although one might assume that the husband, having refused free insurance under the 1964 plan, probably would also refuse similar coverage under the 1967 plan, one could also assume that he finally appreciated the benefits and intended to accept benefits under the new plan. However, the very necessity of speculation demonstrated that the proof of waiver was not clear and convincing (10 Cal. 3d 792, 796-798) .

[c] Burden of Proof Is on Party Asserting Waiver

The facts and procedural background of Bass v. John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co. (1974) 10 Cal. 3d 792, 112 Cal. Rptr. 195, 518 P.2d 1147 , are discussed in [b], above. The Supreme Court held that the burden is on the party claiming the waiver to prove it by clear and convincing evidence that does not leave the matter to speculation, and doubtful cases will be decided against a waiver (10 Cal. 3d 792, 796) .

[d] Waiver Must Always Be Intentional With Knowledge of All Facts

In Ukiah v. Fones (1966) 64 Cal. 2d 104, 48 Cal. Rptr. 865, 410 P.2d 369 , a janitor at a municipal library had been summarily dismissed from his job by the librarian and the library's board of trustees. The city council ordered his reinstatement on the ground that he was a civil service employee and had not been accorded the procedural safeguards prescribed by the civil service ordinance. Following the library board's refusal to comply with the order of reinstatement, the city sued for declaratory relief seeking to assert the jurisdiction of its civil service system over the library's employees. The dismissed employee stipulated that if he had been wrongfully terminated, he would be entitled to salary from the date of dismissalto the date of the filing of the complaint (64 Cal. 2d 104, 106) . Following a determination that the employee was wrongly terminated, the trial court found that the stipulation was a waiver of the employee's right to back pay accruing after the filing of the complaint (64 Cal. 2d 104, 107) .

The Supreme Court reversed. Waiver always rests on intent and is the intentional relinquishment of a known right after knowledge of the facts. The burden is on the party claiming a waiver of a right to prove it by clear and convincing evidence that does not leave the matter to speculation, and doubtful cases will be decided against a waiver (64 Cal. 2d 104, 107-108) . In attempting to determine whether the stipulation was a waiver, a court may find it necessary to speculate on the motives that dictated the choice of language used in the stipulation. The very necessity of speculation would demonstrate that the proof of waiver was not clear and convincing. Therefore found, as a matter of law, there was no waiver (64 Cal. 2d 104, 108, 110) . Although this case did not involve waiver in a contractual setting, the Court's citation to Roesch v. DeMota (1944) 24 Cal. 2d 563, 572, 150 P.2d 422 , below, indicates that the principles applied here would also apply to an asserted waiver of contractual rights.

Roesch v. DeMota (1944) 24 Cal. 2d 563, 150 P.2d 422 , was an action to enjoin a scheduled trustee's sale of mining property under two deeds of trust (24 Cal. 2d 563, 565) . In 1923 and 1925, the owner of the mining property obtained two admittedly usurious loans secured by deeds of trust on the property (24 Cal. 2d 563, 566) . The fact that the notes were usurious was not recognized until some time after a 1927 court decision (24 Cal. 2d 563, 572) . The defendant pleaded that the defense of usury had been waived and was therefore unavailable to the owner. The trial court found that the notes were usurious and the defense of usury was available to the owner. It enjoined the sale of the property for amounts in excess of the face value of the notes plus certain charges and fees to which the parties had stipulated (24 Cal. 2d 563, 568) .

The Supreme Court affirmed. Waiver always rests on intent. Waiver is the intentional relinquishment of a known right after knowledge of the facts. Since the parties did not know that the notes were usurious at the time they made the agreement, and since the agreements could not be interpreted as imputing to the parties an intention not within their contemplation at the time of the execution of the agreements, it could not be held that the parties had waived the defense of usury (24 Cal. 2d 563, 572) .

[e] Waiver Must Be Clearly Expressed

In Spellman v. Dixon (1967) 256 Cal. App. 2d 1, 63 Cal. Rptr. 668 , the plaintiffs had agreed to purchase the defendant's real property. The escrow instructions included a subordination clause that was placed in the instructions solely for the purchasers' benefit. The vendor repudiated the agreement, terminated the escrow, and offered to return all considerationthat she had received from the purchasers. The purchasers informed the vendor that they were willing and able to complete performance of the agreement. They also offered to waive the subordination clause if the vendor went through with the contract, although the language used in the asserted waiver was somewhat ambiguous. The vendor did not accept this offer but sold the property to third persons. The purchasers then sued for specific performance of the agreement or, in the alternative, for damages. The trial court held that the agreement, particularly the subordination clause, was too uncertain to enforce and rendered judgment for the vendor. On appeal, the purchasers contended that their waiver of the subordination clause had removed the uncertainty and rendered the contract enforceable.

The court of appeal affirmed. To be valid, a waiver must be a clear expression made with a full knowledge of the facts and an intent to waive the right. Doubtful cases are decided against the one who claims a waiver. The language of the purported waiver was ambiguous and misleading and, therefore, ineffectual (256 Cal. App. 2d 1, 5) .

[f] Mere Payment or Acceptance of Work Under Construction Contract Does Not Constitute Waiver

Leonard v. Home Builders (1916) 174 Cal. 65, 161 P. 1151 , was an action by home owner against a contractor to recover damages resulting from the contractor's failure to build a house according to the plans and specifications (174 Cal. 65, 66) . Following the introduction of the owner's evidence, the trial court determined that the owner voluntarily had made the last payment under the contract. It therefore concluded that the owner had waived his right to sue for defects in performance. The trial court granted a motion for nonsuit (174 Cal. 65, 67) .

The Supreme Court reversed. The trial court erred in deciding that there was a waiver by the owner in merely voluntarily making the last payment under the contract. Payments under the contract, whether in part or in full, voluntary or involuntary, will not operate as a waiver of the paying party's right to damages unless the circumstances show an intent to waive or create an estoppel against the subsequent assertion of the right to damages (174 Cal. 65, 69) . When a building contractor breaches the covenant to build in a good and workmanlike manner, neither occupation of the building by the owner after its supposed completion nor payment of the price, even with knowledge of the defective construction, is sufficient, taken alone, to operate as a waiver of the breach of the covenant. A right of action for damages is not necessarily waived by the mere fact of payment with knowledge of the defects or by the taking possession of the subject matter of the contract, but these facts may be considered on the question of a waiver of this character (174 Cal. 65, 68) .

The facts and procedural background of Banducci v. Frank T. Hickey, Inc. (1949) 93 Cal. App. 2d 658, 209 P.2d 398 , are discussed in [a], above. The court of appeal held that a mere acceptance, without more, does not necessarily preclude the owner from showing that the work was done in an unworkmanlike manner, especially when the defects were latent or when the owner had no reasonable means of ascertaining the defects and, when they were ascertained, gave timely notice, even though the owner paid the contract price (93 Cal. App. 2d 658, 662) .

[g] When Obligation Is Continuous, Waiver to Certain Time Does Not Preclude Assertion of Subsequent Breach

In Woodard v. Glenwood Lbr. Co. (1915) 171 Cal. 513, 153 P. 951 , a land owner sued to rescind a contract with a lumber company by which the company agreed to cut and ship about four million board-feet of lumber annually from the owner's land and to pay a set price per board-foot (171 Cal. 513, 516-517) . Two years after the company ceased timber-harvesting operations, the plaintiff attempted to rescind the agreement. The company claimed in the trial court, and contended on appeal after judgment was rendered for the owner, that the owner lost his right of rescission by his failure to assert it promptly after the occurrence of the facts giving him the right to rescind.

The Supreme Court affirmed. The obligation to cut the timber, manufacture it into lumber, and ship it, was a continuing covenant. Every day's failure, without justification, to resume operations was a new breach of the contract, and the fact that the owner may have waived the breach up to a given time did not preclude him from asserting a subsequent breach (171 Cal. 513, 523) .

In Bowman v. Santa Clara County (1957) 153 Cal. App. 2d 707, 315 P.2d 67 , a subcontractor sued the general contractor for damages for breach of a contract requiring the subcontractor to dig a trench at the rate of 400 feet a day for $.50 a foot. Implicit in the agreement was the contractor's obligation to pay at a higher rate if the subcontractor was not allowed to dig at the rate of 400 feet per day (153 Cal. App. 2d 707, 712-714) . After working on the job from July 28 to August 21, the subcontractor walked off the job because of constant interruptions and wasted standby time caused by the contractor (153 Cal. App. 2d 707, 710) . The subcontractor returned to work a week later after an exchange of letters that constituted an explicit agreement that the contractor would pay for standby time. The trial court found that the subcontractor was entitled to recover for standby time after August 31, for which the contractor was billed. The subcontractor was not entitled to recover for standby time during the initial period of digging, apparently on the theory of waiver, because of a longdelay in billing the contractor for it (153 Cal. App. 2d 707, 713) . Judgment was rendered for the plaintiff.

The court of appeal affirmed. The subcontractor had waived his right to payment for standby time for the period before he withdrew from the job by not billing the contractor for it. A waiver may be shown by conduct. What constitutes a waiver is a question of fact determined by the trier of fact. In continuing-obligation cases, a waiver of a breach up to a certain time does not necessarily preclude the promisee from asserting a subsequent breach. In this case, the subcontractor's waiver of his right to collect for standby time before he temporarily stopped work was not a waiver of his right to collect for standby time after he resumed work (153 Cal. App. 2d 707, 713) .

[h] Allowance of Performance After Completion Date Does Not Constitute Waiver of Breach

Bryson v. McCone (1898) 121 Cal. 153, 53 P. 637 , was an action to recover damages for breach of a contract to install new ice-making machinery in the plaintiff's plant by a particular date. Even though there was no agreement to extend the time for performance, the plaintiff allowed the defendant to continue working on the plant after the expiration of the time for performance. In the trial court, the defendant unsuccessfully claimed that this conduct constituted a waiver by the plaintiff of the defendant's breach. Judgment was rendered for the plaintiff.

The Supreme Court affirmed. The plaintiff's consent to the defendant's continuing to work beyond the agreed time for completion was not a waiver of damages or of the breach. Following the defendant's breach, the plaintiff had the right to rescind or permit the defendant to complete the work and sue for damages occasioned by the failure to complete the work in a timely fashion (121 Cal. 153, 157-158) .

Wilkinson & Co. v. McKinley (1948) 84 Cal. App. 2d 100, 190 P.2d 35 , was an action by a drilling company to recover money due under a contract to drill a well for the defendant. The defendant cross complained for damages for loss of a crop due to the plaintiff's failure to complete the well by the agreed date. The trial court rendered judgment for the plaintiff but allowed the defendant an offset for the value of the lost crop. On appeal the plaintiff contended that by permitting the work to be begun after the time for performance under the contract had expired, the defendant had waived the time for performance and any damages resulting to any crops from failure to complete the well within that time (84 Cal. App. 2d 100, 101-103) .

The court of appeal affirmed. As a matter of law, there was no waiver of the defendant's right to damages resulting to his crop by allowing theplaintiff to begin work after the time for performance under the contract had expired (84 Cal. App. 2d 100, 105) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
A. Action for Damages for Breach of Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities §§ 50.42-50.49

[Reserved]

§§ 50.42[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
A. Action for Damages for Breach of Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.50

§ 50.50 Failure to Plead Breach by Defendant

[1] Breach Must Be Alleged

[a] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE COMPLAINT DOES NOT ALLEGE THAT THE CONTRACT WAS BREACHED [SINCE IT FAILS TO STATE ANY SPECIFIC CONDUCT THAT THE PLAINTIFF CLAIMS VIOLATED THE CONTRACT].

A. Elements to Be Pleaded. [See § 50.10[1][a], Paragraph A.]

B. Requirement of Alleging Breach. If a complaint does not contain an allegation of breach of contract, no cause of action for breach of contract is shown (Moore v. Besse (1866) 30 Cal. 570, 572 ; Blatt v. University of So. Cal. (1970) 5 Cal. App. 3d 935, 944, 85 Cal. Rptr. 601).

C. Pleading Defendant's Breach. In pleading breach of the contract by the defendant, the plaintiff must allege sufficient facts to apprise the defendant of the specific conduct that the plaintiff claims violated the contract (Wise v. Southern Pacific Co. (1963) 223 Cal. App. 2d 50, 60, 35 Cal. Rptr. 652).

[Optional] D. Requirement of Stating Facts of Breach Unequivocally. The essential facts of the breach must be stated directly or in unequivocal language and not left to be inferred (Moore v. Besse (1866) 30 Cal. 570, 572) .

[Optional] E. Requirement of Alleging Promise and Its Nonperformance. In an action on a contract based on a breach of a promise by the defendant, the plaintiff must set forth the promise and the fact that it was not performed (see Blatt v. University of So. Cal. (1970) 5 Cal. App. 3d 935, 944, 85 Cal. Rptr. 601).

[Optional] F. Breach Alleged in Conclusionary Language. An allegation that the defendant breached or violated the contract or that an act was wrongful, illegal, without authority, unlawful,unjust, arbitrary, or fraudulent, is conclusionary and defective and, without additional allegations, raises no triable issue (Wise v. Southern Pacific Co. (1963) 223 Cal. App. 2d 50, 60, 35 Cal. Rptr. 652).

[b] Comments

[i] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that a complaint for contract damages does not state all the necessary elements of the cause of action because the facts alleged are insufficient to apprise the defendant of the specific conduct that the plaintiff claimed violated the contract, such as when the plaintiff alleges merely that the defendant breached or violated the contract or that the defendant's act was wrongful, illegal, without authority, unlawful, unjust, arbitrary, or fraudulent, with no further allegations with regard to the breach of the contract [see Wise v. Southern Pacific Co. (1963) 223 Cal. App. 2d 50, 60, 35 Cal. Rptr. 652] . Thus, this form may be used in a memorandum submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint, on the ground that the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

This form may also be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a defendant seeks relief on the basis of plaintiff's failure to plead or prove the necessary elements of the cause of action for contract damages. For example, it may be used in a memorandum supporting a motion for judgment on the pleadings.

[ii] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case, for example, an analysis of the allegations in plaintiff's complaint demonstrating that the contract does sufficiently allege facts apprising defendant of the breach claimed by plaintiff.

[iii] Split of Authorities

A slight division of authority exists as to whether a general allegation that the defendant has failed and refused to perform the contract, without more, is a sufficient allegation of breach [Wise v. Southern Pacific Co. (1963) 223 Cal. App. 2d 50, 60, 35 Cal. Rptr. 652] . The weight of authority holds that a general allegation is not sufficient [Fisher v. Pearson (1874) 48 Cal. 472, 478 (allegation that defendant failed and refused to perform contract was radically defective and insufficient to support judgment); Byrne v. Harvey (1962) 211 Cal. App. 2d 92, 105, 27 Cal. Rptr. 110 (statement that defendant failed and refused, and still fails and refuses, to perform contractwas conclusionary and lacking in particularity)]. On the other hand, an old court of appeal case allowed a general allegation (that defendant wrongfully and without cause failed and refused to perform agreement according to its terms or at all) to stand against a general demurrer, on the nonsubstantive ground that objection should have been taken by a special demurrer for uncertainty [Nohl v. Del Norte County (1919) 45 Cal. App. 306, 310, 187 P. 761] .

[iv] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[v] Related Memoranda

This form may be combined, when appropriate, with the general memoranda based on failure to plead a particular element [see § 50.10 et seq.]. They may also be combined with the additional memoranda relating to the allegation of a breach by defendant [see [2], [3], below].

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum supporting a general demurrer, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[c] Discussion of Authorities

[i] Requirement of Alleging Breach

Moore v. Besse (1866) 30 Cal. 570 , was an action on a contract to deliver potatoes. Although the defendant was entitled to deliver the potatoes at any time during a three-month period, the plaintiff claimed to state a breach by alleging that on December 4, when the defendant had nearly two months left within which to perform, the defendant refused to deliver the potatoes. The defendant demurred generally, the trial court overruled the demurrer, and the defendant declined to answer. Judgment by default was rendered for the plaintiff.

The Supreme Court reversed. The allegation in question was not an averment of a breach. It was not averred that the defendant refused to perform the contract or to deliver at some future date within the two months or that he did not in fact deliver the potatoes within that timeperiod. Furthermore, the allegation did not show that a right of action had accrued on December 5; and if the allegation was insufficient to show that a right of action accrued at once, it was insufficient to show a breach at that time. Since a breach must be stated else no cause of action is shown, and the essential facts of the breach must be stated directly in unequivocal language and not left to be inferred, the complaint was defective in not stating a breach (30 Cal. 570, 572) .

Blatt v. University of So. Cal. (1970) 5 Cal. App. 3d 935, 85 Cal. Rptr. 601 , was an action to compel the university to admit the plaintiff to membership in a national honorary legal society. The complaint alleged that there was an offer by the university consisting of representations by certain university officials that if the plaintiff ranked in the top 10 percent of his class, he would be eligible for election to membership in the society. The plaintiff was considered for membership but was not elected to the society, and the society elected several people below him in scholastic achievement. The university's general demurrer was sustained without leave to amend.

The court of appeal affirmed. The plaintiff did not plead a breach of contract since he alleged, not a promise that he would in fact be admitted to membership if he graduated in the top 10 percent of his class, but only a promise that he would be eligible for election if he attained the position. The complaint alleged that his name was on the eligible list and did receive consideration by the election committee under the general standards set forth in the legal society's constitution--which is all that the university promised. The facts pleaded did not support a conclusion that there was a breach of contract (5 Cal. App. 3d 935, 944) .

[ii] Pleading Defendant's Breach

Wise v. Southern Pacific Co. (1963) 223 Cal. App. 2d 50, 35 Cal. Rptr. 652 , was an action for wrongful discharge from employment. The plaintiff alleged that he was a member of the Brotherhood of Railroad Carmen and was employed by the defendant as a railroad carman. A collective bargaining agreement between the union and the railroad covered this employment. The plaintiff further alleged that under the terms of this collective bargaining agreement, he could not be dismissed without just cause or without first having a fair hearing, and as a union committee member, he could not be discriminated against. He then alleged six instances of specific conduct on the railroad's part as violative of these covenants of the agreement. The railroad demurred generally, and the trial court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend.

The court of appeal reversed. An allegation that the defendant breached or violated its contract or that an act was wrongful, illegal, without authority, unlawful, unjust, arbitrary, or fraudulent, would clearly be conclusionary and, without additional allegations, insufficient. A generalallegation, without more, that the defendant has failed and refused to perform its contract might also be insufficient although there is a division of authority in the California cases on this point [see [b][i], above]. The plaintiff must allege sufficient facts to apprise the defendant of the specific conduct that the plaintiff assigns as violative of the contract, which in this case the plaintiff did (223 Cal. App. 2d 50, 60) .

[iii] Requirement of Stating Facts of Breach Unequivocally

Moore v. Besse (1866) 30 Cal. 570 , is discussed in [i], above.

[iv] Requirement of Alleging Promise and Its Nonperformance

Blatt v. University of So. Cal. (1970) 5 Cal. App. 3d 935, 85 Cal. Rptr. 601 , is discussed in [i], above.

[v] Breach Alleged in Conclusionary Language

Wise v. Southern Pacific Co. (1963) 223 Cal. App. 2d 50, 35 Cal. Rptr. 652 , is discussed in [ii], above.

[d] Additional Authorities

[i] Requirement of Alleging Breach

Dodge v. Kimple (1898) 121 Cal. 580, 54 P. 94 , was an action for breach of an obligation to pay money. The plaintiff alleged that he spent a certain sum of money in completing the construction of a building, and the defendant was liable to him for half of that sum. The complaint did not allege in any manner that the plaintiff had not been paid and did not allege a breach of the defendant's obligation to pay. The defendant demurred generally. The trial court overruled the demurrer but, after trial, rendered judgment for the defendant. The Supreme Court affirmed. In all cases, it is necessary to allege both the contract, agreement, or other facts out of which the obligation to pay money arose and also the breach of that obligation. Since a breach was not alleged, the complaint did not state a cause of action (121 Cal. 580, 581) .

Du Brutz v. Jessup (1886) 70 Cal. 75, 11 P. 498 , was an action to recover a sum of money for a breach of contract. The complaint alleged that the defendant, owner of a tract of land, made a contract with the plaintiffs to obtain the formation of a corporation that would purchase the land; the defendant promised to pay the plaintiffs whatever amount the purchaser paid over and above a certain amount; and the plaintiffs undertook the performance of the contract on those terms and obtained the incorporationof a corporation from which the plaintiffs obtained an agreement or offer to buy the land on the terms agreed to by the defendant. The complaint further alleged that a written instrument setting out the terms of the agreement was executed under the seal of the corporation and tendered to the defendant for his signature, and the writing was in strict accordance with the terms on which the defendant had authorized the plaintiffs to negotiate a sale of the land, but the defendant refused to execute the agreement and continued to refuse and still refused to execute the agreement at the time of the action. The trial court rendered judgment for the plaintiffs. The Supreme Court reversed. According to the complaint, there was no agreement between the defendant and the plaintiffs that any writing would be executed by the defendant to them or to any other person or corporation, except a deed of sale to the purchaser of the land at the proper time. That time had not yet arrived. Therefore, the breach alleged in the complaint, that the defendant would not execute the written agreement, was not a breach of any promise stated in the complaint as having been made by him. If he never made a promise, an allegation of the breach of that promise would show no cause of action against him. On the other hand, the complaint showed no breach of the promise that was alleged in the complaint: that he would pay the plaintiffs whatever amount the purchaser paid over and above a certain sum. Since the complaint did not allege a breach of the promise alleged to have been made, it did not state a cause of action (70 Cal. 75, 77-78) .

[2] Demand for Performance Must Be Pleaded When No Time Was Specified for Performance

[a] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

NO TIME WAS SPECIFIED FOR PERFORMANCE, YET THE COMPLAINT DOES NOT ALLEGE THAT A DEMAND FOR PERFORMANCE WAS MADE.

Demand for Performance Must Be Made. When no time is specified for the doing of an act other than the payment of money, a demand for performance must be made, to put the promisor in default (World Sav. & L. Ass'n v. Kurtz Co. (1960) 183 Cal. App. 2d 319, 326, 6 Cal. Rptr. 665 ; Caner v. Owners Realty Co. (1917) 33 Cal. App. 479, 480, 165 P. 727).

[b] Comments

[i] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that a complaint for contract damages does not state all the necessary elements of the cause of action because there is no allegation by that plaintiff made a demand for performance and there is no allegation that the contract otherwise specifies a time for defendant's performance: thus there is no adequate allegation of a breach of the contract terms by defendant. This form may be used in a memorandum submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint, on the ground that the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

This form may also be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a defendant seeks relief on the basis of plaintiff's failure to plead or prove the necessary elements of the cause of action for contract damages. For example, it may be used in a memorandum supporting a motion for summary judgment on the ground that undisputed facts preclude the existence of any demand by plaintiff for defendant's performance.

[ii] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case, for example, an analysis of the allegations in plaintiff's complaint demonstrating that the contract does not call for a specific time for defendant's performance and there is no allegation that plaintiff demanded defendant's performance.

[iii] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[iv] Related Memoranda

This form may be combined, when appropriate, with the more general memoranda based on failure to plead a particular element [see § 50.10 et seq.]. The form may also be combined with other memoranda, as appropriate, relating to the failure to allege a breach of the contract terms by defendant [see [1], above, and [3], below].

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum supporting a general demurrer, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[c] Discussion of Authorities

[i] Demand for Performance Must Be Made

World Sav. & L. Ass'n v. Kurtz Co. (1960) 183 Cal. App. 2d 319, 6 Cal. Rptr. 665 , was an action for money due under a written contract for sharing the cost of installing off-site improvements in certain subdivisions. The contract involved in part an agreement to share the cost of installing a sewer but did not specify when the sewer was to be installed or what party was to cause the work to be done. The plaintiff contracted with a firm for construction of the sewer, but the defendant refused to pay any part of the cost. The defendant at no time made a demand on the plaintiff to install the sewer. In fact, the defendant encouraged the plaintiff to refuse to install the sewer. The trial court rendered judgment for the plaintiff.

The court of appeal affirmed. When no time is specified for the doing of an act, other than the payment of money, a demand for performance is necessary to put the promisor in default. Since the defendant never demanded that the plaintiff install the sewer line, the defendant's claim that the plaintiff unreasonably delayed doing the work contemplated, and so breached the contract, was without merit (183 Cal. App. 2d 319, 326) .

Caner v. Owners Realty Co. (1917) 33 Cal. App. 479, 165 P. 727 , was an action to recover damages for the breach of a particular covenant in a contract, that the defendants guarantied to grade streets at their expense. However, although time was acknowledged to be of the essence in the contract, the covenant did not specify, and the complaint did not allege, that the plaintiff ever demanded that the defendants perform the covenant. The defendants' general demurrer was sustained.

The court of appeal affirmed. When no time is specified for the doing of an act other than the payment of money, a demand for performance is necessary in order to put the promisor in default. No time having been fixed by the covenant for the performance of the obligation, and the complaint having failed to allege a demand on the defendants for performance, the complaint was fatally defective and failed to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action (33 Cal. App. 479, 480) .

[3] Nonpayment Must Be Pleaded in Action Based on Promise to Pay

[a] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE COMPLAINT IS BASED ON A PROMISE TO PAY, BUT NONPAYMENT IS NOT ALLEGED.

A. Elements to Be Pleaded. [See § 50.10[1][a], Paragraph A.]

B. Allegation of Nonpayment Is Necessary. In a suit on a promise to pay, an allegation of nonpayment is essential (Hurley v. Ryan (1897) 119 Cal. 71, 72, 51 P. 20).

[Optional] C. Alleging Only That Amount Is Owing Is Insufficient. In an action on a promissory note, a complaint that states only that the entire amount of the note was owing from the defendant to the plaintiff and does not allege the fact of nonpayment fails to state a cause of action (Knox v. Buckman Contracting Co. (1903) 139 Cal. 598, 599, 73 P. 428).

[b] Comments

[i] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that a complaint for contract damages does not state all the necessary elements of the cause of action because the contract calls for payment by the defendant and there is no sufficient allegation of defendant's nonpayment: thus there is no adequate allegation of a breach of the contract terms by defendant. This form may be used in a memorandum submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint, on the ground that the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

This form may also be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a defendant seeks relief on the basis of plaintiff's failure to plead or prove the necessary elements of the cause of action for contract damages. For example, it may be used in a memorandum supporting a motion for judgment on the pleadings.

[ii] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case, for example, an analysis of the allegations in plaintiff'scomplaint demonstrating that, in a contract calling for payment by defendant, there is no allegation of nonpayment by defendant.

[iii] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[iv] Related Memoranda

This form may be combined, when appropriate, with the more general memoranda based on failure to plead a particular element [see § 50.10 et seq.]. The form may also be combined with other memoranda, as appropriate, relating to the failure to allege a breach of the contract terms by defendant [see [1], [2], above].

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum supporting a general demurrer, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[v] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.51 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[c] Discussion of Authorities

[i] Allegation of Nonpayment Is Necessary

Hurley v. Ryan (1897) 119 Cal. 71, 51 P. 20 , was an action against an administrator of an estate for funeral expenses and administrative and traveling expenses incurred by the plaintiff while he was special administrator of the estate. The plaintiff also claimed damages for services in nursing and providing board and lodging for decedent in his lifetime. The defendant demurred on the ground that the facts alleged did not show that the debts sued-on had not been paid. The trial court overruled the demurrer and, after a jury trial, rendered judgment for the plaintiff.

The Supreme Court reversed. In an action on a debt, the breach of the promise to pay is the essence of the cause of action and must be alleged.Since there was no attempt in the complaint to allege that the debt had not been paid, the demurrer should have been sustained (119 Cal. 71, 72) .

[ii] Alleging Only That Amount Is Owing Is Insufficient

Knox v. Buckman Contracting Co. (1903) 139 Cal. 598, 73 P. 428 , was an action on several promissory notes. The only averment in the complaint as to a breach of the defendant's contract to pay any of the notes was that the whole of the note was owing from the defendant to the plaintiff. The defendant demurred generally. The trial court overruled the demurrer. Judgment was rendered for the plaintiff.

The Supreme Court reversed. That averment is not an averment of the fact of nonpayment, and a complaint containing no other averment as to nonpayment does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action (139 Cal. 598, 599) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
A. Action for Damages for Breach of Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.51

§ 50.51 Allegation of Nonpayment Is Not Necessary to Plead Defendant's Breach When Contract Is Not Only for Payment of Money

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

WHEN A CONTRACT IS FOR MORE THAN THE PAYMENT OF MONEY, A COMPLAINT FOR DAMAGES BASED ON BREACH OF THE CONTRACT NEED NOT ALLEGE NONPAYMENT.

Allegation of Nonpayment Is Not Necessary When Contract Is Not Only for Payment of Money. When the contract is not only for the payment of money, a complaint is sufficient without an allegation of nonpayment (Franz v. Bieler (1899) 126 Cal. 176, 179, 58 P. 466).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in opposition to a contention that a complaint for contract damages is insufficient because it does not allege nonpayment by defendant. The basis for the contention is that defendant's performance under the contract is something other the payment of money. This form may be used in a memorandum submitted in opposition to a general demurrer to a complaint made on the groundthat the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

This form may also be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other appropriate procedural context. For example, it may be used in a memorandum opposing a motion for judgment on the pleadings.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case, for example, an analysis of the allegations in plaintiff's complaint demonstrating that, in fact, the contract calls for performance by defendant of something other than the payment of money.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum opposing a general demurrer, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.50[3] may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Allegation of Nonpayment Is Not Necessary When Contract Is Not Only for Payment of Money

Franz v. Bieler (1899) 126 Cal. 176, 56 P. 249, 58 P. 466 , was an action on a contract not to set up a rival business. After a jury trial, judgment was rendered for the plaintiffs. On appeal, the defendant contended that the complaint did not state a cause of action.

The Supreme Court affirmed. The contract was not simply for the payment of money but was a contract not to set up a rival business; and it included a provision to pay $2,000 in case of a breach of the covenant. When the plaintiff alleged the establishment of a rival business, he showed a breach of the contract and a cause of action and was not required to allege nonpayment of the liquidated damages provided by the contract (126 Cal. 176, 179) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
A. Action for Damages for Breach of Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.52

§ 50.52 Defendant's Breach Established by Admission of Owing Certain Sum

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

IF AN AMOUNT OWING UNDER A CONTRACT IS IN DISPUTE, AND THE DEFENDANT ADMITS OWING A PORTION OF THAT SUM, AND THERE IS NO TRIABLE ISSUE OF FACT REGARDING THE REMAINDER OF THE SUM CLAIMED BY THE PLAINTIFF, THE PLAINTIFF IS ENTITLED TO SUMMARY JUDGMENT FOR THE AMOUNT THAT THE DEFENDANT HAS ADMITTED IS OWING UNDER THE CONTRACT.

Defendant Admits Owing Part of Amount Due. If there is a dispute regarding the amount owing under a contract, but the defendant admits that he or she owes a portion of that amount, and there is no triable issue of fact regarding the plaintiff's entitlement to the remainder of the sum claimed by the plaintiff, the plaintiff is entitled to summary judgment for the amount the defendant admits is owed (Smithers v. Ederer (1956) 146 Cal. App. 2d 227, 229, 303 P.2d 771).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of a contention that, in an action for contract damages calling for payment by defendant, when there is a dispute as to the amount of payment owed by defendant, and defendant has admitted owing a portion of plaintiff's claimed amount, and further there is no triable issue as to the remaining amount claimed by plaintiff, the plaintiff is entitled to summary judgment for the amount that the defendant has admitted owing. This form may be used in a memorandum submitted in support of a motion for summary judgment.

This form may also be used in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. In addition, in a motion for summary judgment, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations that support the motion, together with a separate statement of material facts that the moving party contends are undisputed, with references to the supporting evidence [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)].

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum supporting a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defendant Admits Owing Part of Amount Due

Smithers v. Ederer (1956) 146 Cal. App. 2d 227, 303 P.2d 771 , was an action for money lent to finance a dramatic production. The complaint alleged that the plaintiff had lent the defendant $5,000 and asked for judgment in this amount. In answer, the defendant alleged that the understanding between the plaintiff and the defendant was that if the production for which the $5,000 was lent was successful, the plaintiff was to receive back the $5,000 with interest plus a half interest in the profits, but if the production was unsuccessful, the plaintiff was to get back only $2,500 without interest. The defendant further alleged that the production was unsuccessful, and thus the defendant was indebted to the plaintiff only in the sum of $2,500 without interest. The plaintiff stated in a motion for summary judgment that if the court was of the opinion that trial could not be had on the remaining amount claimed by the plaintiff, the plaintiff would waive all claim and demand for judgment over the amount of moneythat the defendant admitted owing. The plaintiff's motion for summary judgment in a certain amount was granted by the trial court.

The court of appeal modified the judgment and, as modified, affirmed it. There could be no question that the plaintiff was entitled to a judgment for $2,500, since the defendant expressly consented to that judgment in his answer, but no trial could be had with respect to the disputed amount. However, the inclusion of interest in the judgment was improper, and the court modified the judgment by striking the interest provision (146 Cal. App. 2d 227, 229) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
A. Action for Damages for Breach of Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.53

§ 50.53 Defendant's Breach by Nonpayment Is Not Cured Until Check Is Paid

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

AN OBLIGATION IS NOT DISCHARGED UNTIL A CHECK GIVEN IN PAYMENT IS ITSELF PAID.

A. Obligation Is Not Discharged Until Check Is Paid. If an uncertified check is given in payment, the underlying obligation is not discharged until the check itself is paid, unless the parties have expressly agreed that the check is taken in payment (Com. Code § 3310(b); Cornwell v. Bank of America (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 995, 1000-1001, 274 Cal. Rptr. 322).

[Optional] B. Creditor Did Not Direct Payment by Mail. A creditor is not deemed to have directed the manner of performance within the meaning of Civil Code Section 1476 merely by providing the debtor with self-addressed envelopes and payment coupons that state "Detach and mail with payment" and "Mail this coupon with check payable to" the creditor [when the creditor also accepts payments by other methods, such as delivery in the creditor's office and transfers by wire or automated teller networks] (Cornwell v. Bank of America (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 995, 999-1001, 274 Cal. Rptr. 322).

[Optional] C. Obligation Is Not Discharged When Check Is Lost in Mail. If the creditor has not directed that payment be made by mail, and a check mailed by the debtor is lost in the mail, the underlying obligation is not discharged (Cornwell v. Bank of America (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 995, 998-1001, 274 Cal. Rptr. 322).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of a contention that, in an action for contract damages calling for payment by defendant, defendant has not performed when defendant has paid by ordinary check and the check has not yet been paid. Unless otherwise agreed, if an uncertified check is taken for an obligation, the obligation is suspended to the same extent that the obligation would be discharged if an amount of money equal to the amount of the check were taken. The suspension continues until the check is dishonored, paid, or certified. Payment or certification of the check results in discharge of the obligation to the extent of the amount of the check [Com. Code § 3310(b)].

Optional Paragraphs B and C may be included, if appropriate, to oppose a contention that the plaintiff directed the defendant to make payments through the mail, and the debtor claims a payment check was mailed, but the check was lost before it was negotiated by the plaintiff. If a creditor, or any one of two or more joint creditors, at any time directs the debtor to perform the obligation in a particular manner, the obligation is extinguished by performance in that manner, even though the creditor does not receive the benefit of that performance [Civ. Code § 1476].

This form may also be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a plaintiff seeks damages for a defendant's nonpayment under a contract, and defendant claims that payment was made by noncertified check. For example, it may be used in support of a motion for summary judgment on the ground that undisputed facts show payment by an ordinary check that was dishonored or has otherwise not been paid.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. The best proof will be the defendant's inability to produce the canceled check; however, if the plaintiff negotiated the check, and it was not honored and was returned to the plaintiff with the usual dishonor reasons stamped on it, that should be noted. In addition, in a motion for summary judgment, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations that support the motion, together with a separate statement of material facts that the moving party contends are undisputed, with references to the supporting evidence [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)].

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion and forms relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum supporting a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For further memoranda relating to the negotiation of checks, see Ch. 34, Checks and Banks .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Obligation Is Not Discharged Until Check Is Paid

The plaintiff in Cornwell v. Bank of America (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 995, 274 Cal. Rptr. 322 , had a mortgage loan from the bank and always made timely payments. One payment check was lost after the plaintiff deposited it in the mail, in a self-addressed envelope provided by the bank, with a payment coupon provided by the bank. Instructions on the coupon were "Detach and mail with payment" and "Mail this coupon with check payable to Bank of America." The check was never cashed, and the bank threatened to foreclose. The plaintiff sued for declaratory relief, claiming that as a matter of law payment had been made when the check was deposited in the mail. The bank obtained a summary judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed. The fundamental reason for the court's affirmance was its application of former Com. Code § 3802(1)(b) [see Com. Code § 3310(b)]. The court discussed the Uniform Commercial Code Official Comment to that section, saying that a check is conditional payment. Taking the check is a surrender of the right to sue on the obligation until the check is presented. If the check is not paid on presentment, the right to sue on the underlying obligation is revived. Under these rules, the plaintiff's obligation for the mortgage payment would not have been discharged until the check had been paid by the plaintiff's bank (224 Cal. App. 3d 995, 1000) . A check is never payment of the debt for which it is given until the check itself is paid or otherwise discharged, unless expressly agreed to be taken in payment. Thus, even if the check was received by the bank and lost by it, payment would not have been made. If the check was received by the bank and then dishonored on presentment, payment would not have been made. While the parties may vary these rules by agreement, the payment coupon was not evidence of an agreement (224 Cal. App. 3d 995, 1001) .

[b] Creditor Did Not Direct Payment by Mail

The facts and procedural background of Cornwell v. Bank of America (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 995, 274 Cal. Rptr. 322 , are discussed in [a], above. The plaintiff claimed that the bank had directed mail as a manner of payment and thus, under Civ. Code § 1476, payment was complete when the check was deposited in the mail. That statute had rarely been used or cited (224 Cal. App. 3d 995, 998) . The court held that the statements on the payment coupon did not amount to a direction to send loan payments by mail (224 Cal. App. 3d 995, 999, 1001) . The bank accepted payments made at its branches or by wire transfer, and nothing in the coupon prevented payment otherwise than by mail. The plaintiff argued that the only logical interpretation of Civ. Code § 1476 is that it is applicable whenever a creditor designates any particular manner of payment, regardless of whether other means are available. The court stated that the statute was inapplicable without a specific direction to pay by mail. "Direct" as used in the statute refers to a single method of payment. A creditor is not held to have "directed" all methods of payment it makes available (224 Cal. App. 3d 995, 1000) .

[c] Obligation Is Not Discharged When Check Is Lost in Mail

Cornwell v. Bank of America (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 995, 274 Cal. Rptr. 322 , is discussed in [i], above.

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Obligation Is Not Discharged Until Check Is Paid

The Supreme Court in Navrides v. Zurich Ins. Co. (1971) 5 Cal. 3d 698, 97 Cal. Rptr. 309, 488 P.2d 637 , reversed a judgment for the plaintiff, a personal injury victim, on the ground that by suing the insurer, the plaintiff ratified a previously unauthorized settlement made by her attorney (5 Cal. 3d 698, 704) . The attorney had forged the plaintiff's endorsement of the settlement check (5 Cal. 3d 698, 712) . In analyzing whether negotiation of the check by the attorney, as agent for the plaintiff, discharged the insurer's obligation to the plaintiff, the Court stated the rule that a check is never payment of the debt for which it is given until the check is paid or otherwise discharged unless expressly agreed to be taken in payment (5 Cal. 3d 698, 706)

Hale v. Bohannon (1952) 38 Cal. 2d 458, 241 P.2d 4 , involved a motion for change of venue in a contract action. The place of performance was one of the criteria on which venue could be based. Checks issued on a bank in Humboldt County were drawn in and mailed from San Mateo County.In holding that Humboldt County could be considered the place of performance under this pattern of conduct by the parties, the Supreme Court noted that a check is not payment until cashed, and the party attempting to prove payment by mere delivery or acceptance of a check must go further and prove that delivery and acceptance were in accordance with an agreement that the check was to be accepted as payment

(38 Cal. 2d 458, 467) .

In Long v. Cuttle Construction Co. (1998) 60 Cal. App. 4th 834, 70 Cal. Rptr. 2d 698 , a judgment for damages was paid by a check, which was promptly deposited in the creditor's bank, but the bank placed a five-day hold on payment. Consequently, the trial court had to resolve a minor dispute between the parties concerning interest during that five-day period. The trial court ruled that interest on the judgment continued to run during the period (60 Cal. App. 4th 834, 835-836) . The court of appeal reversed, holding that interest ceased to accrue on the judgment when the check was delivered, even though the creditor's bank put a five-day hold on payment. Under Com. Code § 3310(b)(1), once a check is honored, the underlying obligation is considered fully discharged as of the date the check was received by the creditor (60 Cal. App. 4th 834, 837-838) .

26 of 168 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
A. Action for Damages for Breach of Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities §§ 50.54-50.59

[Reserved]

§§ 50.54[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
A. Action for Damages for Breach of Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.60

§ 50.60 Failure to Plead Damages

[1] Damages Must Be Pleaded

[a] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE COMPLAINT FAILS TO ALLEGE DAMAGES.

A. Elements to Be Pleaded. [See § 50.10[1][a], Paragraph A.]

B. Damages Must Be Alleged. In an action for damages for breach of contract, a complaint does not allege sufficient facts to state a cause of action if it does not allege damages (Brumfield v. Crocker-Anglo Nat'l Bank (1960) 185 Cal. App. 2d 759, 764-765, 8 Cal. Rptr. 591).

[Optional] C. Special Damages Must Be Pleaded With Particularity. Unlike general damages, special damages are those losses that do not arise directly and inevitably from any similar breach of any similar agreement. They are secondary or derivative losses arising from circumstances that are particular to the contract or to theparties, and are recoverable if the special or particular circumstances from which they rise were actually communicated to or known by the breaching party, or were matters of which the breaching party should have been aware at the time of contracting. Special damages must be pled with particularity, and must also be proven to be certain both as to their occurrence and their extent (Lewis Jorge Construction Management, Inc. v. Pomona Unified School District (2004) 34 Cal. 4th 960, 968-969, 975, 22 Cal. Rptr. 3d 340).

[Optional] D. Damages Must Be Legally Actionable. The damages alleged in the complaint for breach of contract must be legally actionable (Gautier v. General Telephone Co. (1965) 234 Cal. App. 2d 302, 305-306, 44 Cal. Rptr. 404).

[Optional] E. Damages Cannot Be Recovered for Injury to Reputation. In a breach of contract action, the plaintiff is not entitled to recover damages for injury to his or her name, character, or personal reputation (Gautier v. General Telephone Co. (1965) 234 Cal. App. 2d 302, 306, 44 Cal. Rptr. 404).

[b] Comments

[i] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that a complaint for contract damages does not sufficiently allege damages, one of the essential elements of the cause of action. Thus, this form may be used in a memorandum submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint, on the ground that the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. With appropriate modifications, the form may be submitted in support of a special demurrer to a complaint on the ground that the complaint is uncertain, ambiguous, and unintelligible [see Brumfield v. Crocker-Anglo Nat'l Bank (1960) 185 Cal. App. 2d 759, 760, 765, 8 Cal. Rptr. 591 , discussed in [c][i], below].

This form may also be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a defendant seeks relief on the basis of plaintiff's failure to plead or prove the necessary elements of the cause of action for contract damages. For example, it may be used in a memorandum supporting a motion for judgment on the pleadings.

[ii] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case, for example, an analysis of the allegations in plaintiff'scomplaint demonstrating that the contract does sufficiently allege damages.

[iii] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[iv] Related Memoranda

This form may be combined, when appropriate, with the general memoranda based on failure to plead a particular element [see § 50.10 et seq.]. They may also be combined with the additional memoranda relating to the allegation of a breach by defendant [see [2], below].

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum supporting a general demurrer, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[v] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 60.61 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[c] Discussion of Authorities

[i] Damages Must Be Alleged

Brumfield v. Crocker-Anglo Nat'l Bank (1960) 185 Cal. App. 2d 759, 8 Cal. Rptr. 591 , was an action for damages for failure to defend a suit in which the plaintiff, the bank, and others, including a partner of the plaintiff in a mining venture, were named as the defendants. The plaintiff alleged that the partner had agreed to defend the suit but breached the agreement and allowed a judgment to become a lien on the plaintiff's interest in the partnership. The plaintiff proceeded to defend the suit as far as her interest was concerned but lost, and as a result, her interest in the partnership was levied on and sold pursuant to a valid execution. The partner demurred generally. The trial court sustained the demurrer with leave to amend, but the plaintiff declined to amend, and judgment was rendered for the defendant.

The court of appeal affirmed. When an agreement is merely to defend a lawsuit, not to defend it successfully, damages for failure to defend are not to be measured by the amount of any judgment rendered in the suit but are to be measured by the cost of defending the suit. Since the partner in this case was not a lawyer, the agreement to defend was at most an agreement to retain counsel and pay expenses. The partner's refusal to do that resulted in the plaintiff's doing it. The complaint did not contain any allegations that it cost the plaintiff anything to defend the suit. The complaint was defective because in an action for damages, the complaint must show damages. This point may be made by general demurrer (185 Cal. App. 2d 759, 764-765) . (In this case, the point was also properly raised by a special demurrer that the complaint was uncertain, ambiguous, and unintelligible in that it was not alleged in the complaint nor could it be ascertained how or in what manner the plaintiff was injured or damaged in the sum claimed.)

[ii] Special Damages Must Be Pleaded With Particularity

In Lewis Jorge Construction Management, Inc. v. Pomona Unified School District (2004) 34 Cal. 4th 960, 22 Cal. Rptr. 3d 340 , a school district terminated a construction contract after the contractor failed to complete it in a timely manner. The contractor's bonding company then hired another construction company to complete the project, and first suspended and then later reduced the amount of bonding for the original contractor, which ultimately went out of business. The original contractor successfully sued the school district for breach of contract, recovering as damages approximately $3 million for potentially lost profits that the contractor claimed it would have earned on prospective construction contracts it never won because of its impaired bonding capacity. These lost profits were awarded as an element of general damages. Although the construction company did not plead its lost future profits as special damages, the issue of their availability as special damages was presented to the jury, and the school district expressly stated that it was not relying on that pleading omission. The court of appeal concluded that those potential profits were a proper item of general damages (34 Cal. 4th 960, 965) .

The California Supreme Court reversed, holding that it was improper to award lost profits from future construction contracts as an element of general damages. General damages are those that flow directly and necessarily from a breach of contract, or that are a natural result of a breach. Because general damages are a natural and necessary consequence of a contract breach, they are said to be within the contemplation of the parties, meaning that because their occurrence is sufficiently predictable, the parties at the time of contracting are deemed to have contemplated them (34 Cal. 4th 960, 968) . The Court observed that while unearned profits sometimes havebeen used as the measure of general damages for breach of a construction contract when the breaching party's conduct prevented the other side from undertaking performance, the profits involved were purely profits unearned on the very contract that was breached (34 Cal. 4th 960, 971) . In this case, the Court was unwilling to say that the parties' bargain included the contractor's potential profits on future construction projects it had not bid on or been awarded. Full performance by the school district would simply have provided the contractor with full payment of the contract price for the construction. Thus, award of lost profits as an element of general damages was improper (34 Cal. 4th 960, 975) .

The Court also held that the award also could not be sustained as an award of special damages. Special damages are those losses that do not arise directly and inevitably from any similar breach of any similar agreement, but rather are secondary or derivative losses arising from circumstances that are particular to the contract or to the parties. Under the rule of Hadley v. Baxendale (1854) 156 Eng. Rep. 145 , as articulated in the California case law, special damages are recoverable if the special or particular circumstances from which they arise (1) were actually communicated to or known by the breaching party, or (2) were matters of which the breaching party should have been aware at the time of contracting (34 Cal. 4th 960, 968-969) . The Court noted that such damages must be pled with particularity, and must also be proven to be certain both as to their occurrence and their extent, albeit not with mathematical precision. In this case, when the school district signed the contract it did not know what the contractor's balance sheet showed, or what criteria its surety ordinarily used to evaluate a contractor's bonding limits. Absent such knowledge, the profits that the contractor claimed it would have made on future, unawarded contracts were not actually foreseen or reasonably foreseeable, and hence were unavailable as special damages (34 Cal. 4th 960, 977) . The Court observed that although the school district's termination of the contract was "the first event in a series of misfortunes" that culminated in the contractor closing down its construction business, those consequences are not the natural and necessary result of the breach of every construction contract involving bonding (34 Cal. 4th 960, 978) .

[iii] Damages Must Be Legally Actionable

Gautier v. General Telephone Co. (1965) 234 Cal. App. 2d 302, 44 Cal. Rptr. 404 , was an action for breach of contract for failure to provide telephone service. The plaintiffs were customers of the telephone company, and they had paid all charges for their service. The complaint alleged that certain persons attempting to call the plaintiff's were told by the telephone company that the plaintiffs' telephone was disconnected. Although the urgency of the incoming calls was explained to the operator, the calls were not transferred to the plaintiffs. It was further alleged that the company'sacts or omissions proximately caused harm or emotional distress, inconvenience, and humiliation to the plaintiffs and exposed them to public contempt and ridicule to their damage in a sum set forth in the complaint. The defendant demurred generally, and the trial court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend.

The court of appeal affirmed. An allegation must be made showing that the damage to the plaintiffs, resulting from the defendant's breach of contract, is legally actionable. In a breach of contract action, the plaintiff is not entitled to damages for injury to his or her name, character, or personal reputation. Thus the complaint did not state a cause of action (234 Cal. App. 2d 302, 305-306) .

[iv] Damages Cannot Be Recovered for Injury to Reputation

Gautier v. General Telephone Co. (1965) 234 Cal. App. 2d 302, 44 Cal. Rptr. 404 , is discussed in [ii], above.

[d] Additional Authorities

[i] Damages Must Be Legally Actionable

In Harris v. Time, Inc. (1987) 191 Cal. App. 3d 465, 236 Cal. Rptr. 471 , a consumers' class action seeking damages for breach of contract arising from opening envelopes offering a free prize "just for opening the envelope" and finding after opening the envelopes that the recipient had to subscribe to the magazine in order to receive the prize, the court of appeal affirmed the sustaining of a demurrer on the ground that the action was de minimis in the extreme (191 Cal. App. 3d 465, 477-479) . Although a contract existed, because the envelope was an offer for a unilateral contract and opening it was sufficient consideration (191 Cal. App. 3d 465, 474-476) , the only real damage was feeling foolish for having opened what obviously was junk mail, and only in circumstances of actual detriment should the court intervene (191 Cal. App. 3d 465, 479) .

[2] Uncertain Damages Not Necessarily Resulting From Breach Must Be Alleged

[a] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE DAMAGES ALLEGED DO NOT NECESSARILY RESULT FROM THE BREACH OF THE CONTRACT, AND THE PLAINTIFF DID NOT SPECIFICALLY PLEAD THE FACTS SHOWING THE DAMAGES.

Damages Not Necessarily Resulting From Breach Must Be Alleged. When damages do not necessarily result from the breach of a contract, the plaintiff must specifically plead the facts showing the damages that resulted because of the defendant's act (Comstock v. Coronet Heating Supply Co. (1952) 111 Cal. App. 2d 600, 603-604, 245 P.2d 35).

[b] Comments

[i] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that the complaint is uncertain because the damages alleged were not a necessary result of the breach and the plaintiff did not specifically plead the damages that were incurred. This form may be used in a memorandum submitted in support of a special demurrer to a complaint on the ground that the complaint is uncertain.

The form may also be used in a trial or appellate brief.

[ii] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case, for example, an analysis of the allegations in plaintiff's complaint demonstrating that the contract alleges damages that are not a necessary result of the alleged breach, and there are no additional allegations from which it is possible to ascertain how or in what manner plaintiff was damaged by the alleged breach.

[iii] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[iv] Related Memoranda

This form may be combined, when appropriate, with the more general memoranda based on failure to plead a particular element [see § 50.10 et seq.]. The form may also be combined with other memoranda, as appropriate, relating to the failure to allege damages [see [1], above].

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum supporting a general demurrer, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[c] Discussion of Authorities

[i] Damages Not Necessarily Resulting From Breach Must Be Alleged

Comstock v. Coronet Heating Supply Co. (1952) 111 Cal. App. 2d 600, 245 P.2d 35 , involved a cross action for breach of contract and breach of warranty. The cross complaint did not allege facts in either cause of action from which it was possible to ascertain how or in what manner the cross complainant was damaged by breach of contract by the cross defendant. It did not allege how the cross defendant's hiring a person to circulate price lists in a certain area, in which the cross complainant had exclusive rights to sell the cross defendant's goods, had injured the cross complainant, nor did it state how the cross defendant's breach of warranty damaged the cross complainant. The cross defendant demurred specially to both causes of action in the cross complaint on the grounds that the causes of action were uncertain and unintelligible in that it could not be ascertained from the facts alleged in either cause of action in what manner the cross complainant had been damaged. The demurrer was sustained with leave to amend. When the cross complainant failed to amend, the trial court dismissed the cross complaint.

The court of appeal affirmed. When damages do not necessarily result from the breach of a contract, an injured party must specifically plead the facts showing the damage that has resulted because of the wrongful act of the other party to the contract. A general allegation of damages is insufficient as against a special demurrer for uncertainty or unintelligibility (111 Cal. App. 2d 600, 603-604) .

[d] Additional Authorities

[i] Damages Not Necessarily Resulting From Breach Must Be Alleged

In Metzenbaum v. R.O.S. Associates (1986) 188 Cal. App. 3d 202, 232 Cal. Rptr. 741 , the court of appeal affirmed a directed verdict for the defendant in a real estate loan broker's action for a commission based on the defendant's obtaining a loan elsewhere during the term of their contract. The facts established that the plaintiff's performance was impossible; therefore, the plaintiff's damages did not flow from the defendant's breach (188 Cal. App. 3d 202, 211-214) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
A. Action for Damages for Breach of Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.61

§ 50.61 Damages Are Sufficiently Alleged

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

A COMPLAINT FOR DAMAGES FOR BREACH OF CONTRACT SUFFICIENTLY ALLEGES DAMAGES IF THE PLAINTIFF ALLEGES FACTS SHOWING THE EXISTENCE OF INJURY AND PRAYS FOR A SPECIFIC SUM.

A. Sufficient Allegation of General Damages. A complaint for damages for breach of contract sufficiently avers general damages if the plaintiff alleges facts that show the existence of injury and a prayer for a specific sum, even if there is no specific allegation of damages in any stated sum or the pleading states facts invoking an inapplicable measure of recovery (Domino v. Mobley (1956) 144 Cal. App. 2d 24, 29-30, 300 P.2d 324).

B. Nature and Extent of Damages Need Not Be Alleged. If the complaint alleges a violation of the plaintiff's legal right by the defendant and damages proximately resulting, a cause of action is stated, and it is not necessary to point out in detail the nature and extent of the damages (Colvig v. RKO Gen., Inc. (1965) 232 Cal. App. 2d 56, 68-69, 42 Cal. Rptr. 473).

[Optional] C. Damages Naturally Resulting From Breach May Be Alleged Generally. The natural and ordinary damages resulting from a breach of contract may be recovered under a general allegation of damages without alleging how the damages have arisen (Colvig v. RKO Gen., Inc. (1965) 232 Cal. App. 2d 56, 69, 42 Cal. Rptr. 473).

[Optional] D. Improper Averment of Damages Is Not Important. Whether the correct measure of damages is pleaded or damages are improperly alleged is not an issue in determining whether a complaint states a cause of action (Watson v. Aced (1957) 156 Cal. App. 2d 87, 91, 319 P.2d 83 ; Domino v. Mobley (1956) 144 Cal. App. 2d 24, 30, 300 P.2d 324).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that damages were sufficiently alleged because the complaint at leastalleges facts showing the existence of damage and prays for a specific sum. This form may be used in a memorandum submitted in opposition to a general demurrer to a complaint made on the ground that the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

This form may also be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other appropriate procedural context. For example, it may be used in a memorandum opposing a motion for judgment on the pleadings.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case, for example, an analysis of the allegations in plaintiff's complaint demonstrating that damages are sufficiently alleged.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum opposing a general demurrer, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.60[1] may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Sufficient Allegation of General Damages

The facts and procedural background of Domino v. Mobley (1956) 144 Cal. App. 2d 24, 300 P.2d 324 , are discussed in § 50.11[3][b]. The plaintiffs alleged that they were damaged in an amount that was the difference between the contract price and the market value on the date of the defendant's breach of the agreement. The defendants contended on appealthat the complaint pleaded a measure of damages not authorized by any statute. The court of appeal noted that even if the argument were well taken, the matter was of no consequence. If facts are alleged that show the existence of damages, and a prayer for a specific sum is stated in the pleading, the averment of damages is sufficient even if there is no specific allegation of damages in any stated sum, or if the pleading states facts invoking an inapplicable measure of recovery (144 Cal. App. 2d 24, 29-30) .

[b] Nature and Extent of Damages Need Not Be Alleged

Colvig v. RKO Gen., Inc. (1965) 232 Cal. App. 2d 56, 42 Cal. Rptr. 473 , was an action for damages for breach of contract. The complaint alleged that, pursuant to an arbitration award, the plaintiff was restored to his position as a staff announcer at the defendant's radio station. The award recognized that the plaintiff had a right to practice his profession at that station. While the defendants paid the plaintiff the salary due under the award, they intentionally and tortiously refused to permit him to practice his profession on the radio, thus causing him to lose his popularity as a radio announcer and damaging him in his profession to his detriment in a certain sum. The defendants demurred generally. The trial court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend.

The court of appeal reversed. If the allegations of a complaint set forth a legal right on the plaintiff's part, a violation of that right by the defendant, and damages proximately resulting, a cause of action is stated. It is not necessary to point out in detail in the pleadings the nature and extent of the damages unless special damages are claimed. The complaint in this case satisfied the requirement with respect to general damages. It sufficed as a basis for all damages that would compensate the plaintiff for the detriment proximately caused by the alleged breach or that in the ordinary course of things was likely to result (232 Cal. App. 2d 56, 68-69) .

[c] Damages Naturally Resulting From Breach May Be Alleged Generally

The facts and procedural background of Colvig v. RKO Gen., Inc. (1965) 232 Cal. App. 2d 56, 42 Cal. Rptr. 473 , are discussed in [b], above. The court of appeal noted that the natural and ordinary damages resulting from a breach of contract may be recovered under a general allegation of damages. The question as to how general damages have arisen, otherwise than as disclosed by the general allegation of damages, is the subject of the rules of evidence rather than the rules of pleading. Thus, the complaint sufficiently averred damages and consequently stated a cause of action (232 Cal. App. 2d 56, 69) .

[d] Improper Averment of Damages Is Not Important

Watson v. Aced (1957) 156 Cal. App. 2d 87, 319 P.2d 83 , was an action for damages for breach of contract. The plaintiff alleged that the defendants breached the contract, and as a result the plaintiff was damaged in the amount of $4,025. The defendants demurred generally, but the trial court overruled the demurrer. After a trial, judgment was rendered for the plaintiff.

The court of appeal affirmed. The improper allegation of damages or the items of damages is not a ground for a general demurrer (156 Cal. App. 2d 87, 91) .

The facts and procedural background of Domino v. Mobley (1956) 144 Cal. App. 2d 24, 300 P.2d 324 , are discussed in § 50.11[3][b]. In reviewing the plaintiffs' allegation concerning damages and the defendants' contention that the complaint failed to state a cause of action, the court noted that whether the correct measure of damages is pleaded by a complaint is not important in the context of a general demurrer (144 Cal. App. 2d 24, 30) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
A. Action for Damages for Breach of Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities §§ 50.62-50.99

[Reserved]

§§ 50.62[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
1. Plaintiff's Lack of Standing to Sue

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.100

§ 50.100 Plaintiff Cannot Sue as Promisee for Benefit of Donee Third Party

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE CONTRACT HAVING BEEN MADE FOR THE BENEFIT OF A THIRD PARTY, AND THE PLAINTIFF HAVING FAILED TO ALLEGE THAT THE PLAINTIFF WAS BOUND TO PROVIDE THE PROMISED BENEFIT TO THE THIRD PARTY, THE PLAINTIFF MAY NOT RECOVER DAMAGES FOR BREACH OF THE CONTRACT, BECAUSE THE THIRD PARTY IS A DONEE BENEFICIARY.

Promisee for Benefit of Third Party Is Not Damaged by Breach. When a contract is made for the benefit of a third party, and the promisee is not bound to provide the promised benefit to the third party, the promisee may not recover damages, in the event that the promisor breaches the contract, because the third party is a donee beneficiary, not a creditor beneficiary (In re Marriage of Smith & Maescher (1993) 21 Cal. App. 4th 100, 107, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 133).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that the plaintiff is a promisee of a contract for the benefit of a donee third party, and thus plaintiff is not entitled to recover damages for any breach of the contract by the defendant promisor, since only the donee third party, and not plaintiff, could have incurred damages as the result of any breach.

This form may also be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a defendant seeks to raise this contention in order to vitiate an allegation or claim that the plaintiff incurred damages. For example, it may be used to support a motion for summary judgment when undisputed facts show that the plaintiff is the promisee of a contract for the benefit of a donee third party.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised in support of a defendant's motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the supporting and opposing papers showing that undisputed facts establish that plaintiff is a promisee of a contract for the benefit of a donee third party.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum supporting a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Promisee for Donee Third Party's Benefit Is Not Damaged by Breach

In In re Marriage of Smith & Maescher (1993) 21 Cal. App. 4th 100, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 133 , a marital settlement agreement included the husband's promise to pay certain college expenses for the benefit of the spouses' child. When he failed to pay the expenses, the wife paid them, although at no time was she obligated to pay them. Subsequently she obtained an enforcement order directing the husband to reimburse her.

The court of appeal reversed. The wife, as promisee of a contract for the benefit of a donee third party, was not entitled to recover damages for breach of the contract. The promisee is not damaged by breach of the contract. Since the promisee could not recover damages (except, perhaps, nominal damages), the promisee's only remedy is a suit for specific performance (21 Cal. App. 4th 100, 107) . If the promisee was bound, when the contract was made, to provide the promised benefit to the third party (who would be, in that case, a creditor beneficiary, not a donee beneficiary), thenthe promisee could sue for damages in the event of a breach of the contract (21 Cal. App. 4th 100, 106-107) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] When Third Party Is Not Creditor Beneficiary

In Mission Oaks Ranch, Ltd. v. County of Santa Barbara (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 713, 77 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1 , disapproved on another point in Briggs v. Eden Council for Hope and Opportunity (1999) 19 Cal. 4th 1106, 1123, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 471, 969 P.2d 564 , the court of appeal held that a developer whose proposed project was denied after a consultant hired by the county prepared an EIR could not sue the county for damages caused by county's alleged failure to prepare a proper EIR, as the developer was not a third-party creditor beneficiary of the county's contract with the consultant. One who is not a party to a contract has no right to enforce it unless it is an intended third-party beneficiary of the contract. Whether a putative third party is an intended beneficiary of the contract depends on whether such an intent appears from the written terms of the contract. The court found that in this case, the written terms of the contract showed the parties' intent that the developer was not an intended beneficiary (65 Cal. App. 4th 713, 724) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
1. Plaintiff's Lack of Standing to Sue

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.101

§ 50.101 Plaintiff Failed to Exhaust Arbitration Remedies

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE ONLY ISSUES INVOLVED IN THE CAUSE OF ACTION ARE COVERED BY AN ARBITRATION CLAUSE IN THE CONTRACT, AND THE PLAINTIFF HAS FAILED TO EXHAUST THESE ARBITRATION REMEDIES.

A. Court Must Determine Arbitrability of Dispute. Whether the parties are bound to arbitrate and what issues may be subject to arbitration are matters to be determined by the court on the basis of the contract (Thornton v. Victor Meat Co. (1968) 260 Cal. App. 2d 452, 467, 67 Cal. Rptr. 887).

B. Failure to Exhaust Arbitration Remedies. If the only issues to be litigated are covered by an arbitration clause of the contract, and the plaintiff has not exhausted the arbitration remedies, judgment for defendant is proper (Charles J. Rounds Co. v. Joint Council of Teamsters No. 42 (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 888, 899, 95 Cal. Rptr. 53, 484 P.2d 1397 ; Johnson v. Hydraulic Research & Mfg. Co. (1977) 70 Cal. App. 3d 675, 679, 139 Cal. Rptr. 136).

[Optional] C. Expiration of Agreement Does Not Terminate Arbitration Rights. The expiration of the terms of a collective bargaining agreement does not terminate any rights that may have accrued under the agreement, including the right and correlative duty to arbitrate (Thornton v. Victor Meat Co. (1968) 260 Cal. App. 2d 452, 471, 67 Cal. Rptr. 887).

[Optional] D. Meaning of Collective Bargaining Agreement Is Arbitration Matter. If a collective bargaining agreement provides for arbitration of all disputes pertaining to the meaning, interpretation, and application of the collective bargaining agreement and its provisions, any dispute as to the meaning, interpretation, and application of any specific matter covered by the collective bargaining agreement is a matter of arbitration. Doubts as to whether the arbitration clause applies are to be resolved in favor of coverage (Posner v. Grunwald-Marx, Inc. (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 169, 175, 14 Cal. Rptr. 297, 363 P.2d 313).

[Optional] E. Arbitration Procedures Are Not Avoided by Artful Pleading. If the subject matter of the dispute falls within the grievance and arbitration procedures of the agreement, a plaintiff may not avoid those procedures merely by artfully pleading the complaint and omitting reference to the agreement (Johnson v. Hydraulic Research & Mfg. Co. (1977) 70 Cal. App. 3d 675, 682, 139 Cal. Rptr. 136).

[Optional] F. Service-of-Suit Clause Does Not Conflict With Arbitration Clause. A service-of-suit clause in a contract does not conflict with an arbitration clause as long as the service-of-suit clause can be interpreted as having been intended to facilitate enforcement of the arbitration clause: for instance, when the arbitration clause is qualified by an introductory phrase such as "Notwithstanding every other provision of this contract ..... " (Boghos v. Certain Underwriters at Lloyd's of London (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 495, 502-503, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 787, 115 P.3d 68).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that defendant is entitled to judgment because all the issues to be determined in plaintiff's cause of action for contract damages are covered by an arbitration clause in the contract, and plaintiff failed to exhaust these arbitration remedies before bringing the action.

This form may also be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a defendant seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used to support a motion by defendant for summary judgment when undisputed facts show that the issues in the action are covered by an arbitration agreement but plaintiff did not exhaust these arbitration remedies.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised in support of a defendant's motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the supporting and opposing papers showing that undisputed facts establish that plaintiff failed to exhaust arbitration remedies as required by the terms of the contract.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For affirmative defenses stating that arbitration is a condition precedent to suit, and arbitration is a sole remedy that was not availed of within the time specified, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 32, Contractual Arbitration: Agreements and Compelling Arbitration (Matthew Bender). For detailed discussion relating to contracts generally, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum supporting a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For memoranda relating to arbitration generally, see Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling , and Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.110 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Court Must Determine Arbitrability of Dispute

Thornton v. Victor Meat Co. (1968) 260 Cal. App. 2d 452, 67 Cal. Rptr. 887 , was an action by union members to recover wages from meat processors under a collective bargaining agreement. One issue was whether the plaintiffs could sue to recover wages under a contract that guarantied them 40 hours of work a week, when the defendants had locked them out for four days of a five-day work week. The contract provided for arbitration of any dispute that arose as to its interpretation, although it specifically excluded controversies regarding hours or wages. The defendants claimed that the plaintiffs were bound by the contract provisions for arbitration, and the issue of arbitrability itself should be arbitrated. The trial court granted the defendants' motion for summary judgment on the ground that the issue concerning the wages was subject to arbitration.

The court of appeal affirmed. Whether the plaintiffs were bound to arbitrate as well as what issues were subject to arbitration were matters to be determined by the trial court on the basis of the contract. In this case, the exception in the contract concerning hours or wages should be limited to disputes directly involving the number of hours of employment or the rate of wages to be paid, but by locking out the employees, the defendants had treated the collective bargaining agreement as terminated and thus could not insist on arbitration (260 Cal. App. 2d 452, 467) .

[b] Failure to Exhaust Arbitration Remedies

In Charles J. Rounds Co. v. Joint Council of Teamsters No. 42 (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 888, 95 Cal. Rptr. 53, 484 P.2d 1397 , an employer sued a union for damages for breach of a no-strike clause in a collective bargaining agreement after the plaintiff had discharged a union member and the union then struck the plaintiff. When the case came to trial, the defense of whether the dispute was covered by an arbitration clause in the agreement was tried first by stipulation of the parties. The trial court dismissed the complaint on the ground that the dispute was covered by that clause.

The Supreme Court affirmed. When the only issue litigated is covered by the arbitration clause, and the plaintiff has not first pursued or attempted to pursue the arbitration remedy, the plaintiff has implicitly waived the right to arbitrate, so that the defendant could elect to submit the matter to the jurisdiction of the court. The defendant may elect to demur or move for summary judgment on the ground that the plaintiff has failed to exhaust arbitration remedies. The defendant may instead elect to move for a stay of proceedings pending arbitration, if the defendant also moves to compel arbitration. In this case, the plaintiff at no time attempted to pursue the arbitration remedy even though the no-strike clause was subject to arbitration under the agreement, and thus the defendant was entitled to the dismissal (4 Cal. 3d 888, 899) .

Johnson v. Hydraulic Research & Mfg. Co. (1977) 70 Cal. App. 3d 675, 139 Cal. Rptr. 136 , was an action by a former employee against the company and its manager of employee relations. The complaint alleged a wrongful interference with the plaintiff's contractual relations with a doctor and a conspiracy to violate the plaintiff's rights. A collective bargaining agreement provided specific, exclusive grievance and arbitration procedures to resolve disputes of the nature involved in this case. The plaintiff's dispute concerned his termination based on a report by a physician to whom the plaintiff had been referred by the defendants. The plaintiff put into motion the grievance and arbitration procedures but did not pursue them to a final conclusion. The trial court granted the defendants' motion for summary judgment of the ground that the action was barred by the plaintiff's failure to exhaust the grievance and arbitration remedies.

The court of appeal affirmed. A party to a collective bargaining contract that provides grievance and arbitration machinery for the settlement of disputes within the scope of the contract must exhaust the internal remedies before resorting to the courts in the absence of facts excusing exhaustion. The plaintiff's failure in this case to exhaust those procedures precluded the attempt to resort to the courts instead (70 Cal. App. 3d 675, 679) .

[c] Expiration of Agreement Does Not Terminate Arbitration Rights

The facts and procedural background of Thornton v. Victor Meat Co. (1968) 260 Cal. App. 2d 452, 67 Cal. Rptr. 887 , are discussed in § 50.101[3][a]. A second issue in the case arose because the agreement expired on October 1 but was extended until a negotiating session on October 5 of the year in question. At issue was the parties' intent with respect to the extension of the contract, since the plaintiffs were locked out on October 6. The court noted that expiration of the term of a collective bargaining agreement does not terminate any rights, including the right and correlative duty to arbitrate, that may have accrued under the agreement. Grievances that are based on conditions arising during the term of the agreement to arbitrate are arbitrable after that term has ended. However this principle has no application to grievances that arise after the expiration of the agreement to arbitrate. The defendants' actions indicated that in their view the collective bargaining agreement terminated on October 5. These actions, consisting of locking out the employees, were in effect self-help and were inconsistent with the no-lockout clause of the grievance and arbitration provisions. It would have been improper to allow the defendants to insist on arbitration over the plaintiffs' objection (260 Cal. App. 2d 452, 471) .

[d] Meaning of Collective Bargaining Agreement Is Arbitration Matter

In Posner v. Grunwald-Marx, Inc. (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 169, 14 Cal. Rptr. 297, 363 P.2d 313 , a union brought a proceeding to compel the corporation to arbitrate a question concerning vacation and holiday pay. When the corporation had moved its plant from California to Arizona, it terminated employees on a date making their eligibility for vacation and holiday pay doubtful. The bargaining agreement, in providing for that pay, did not expressly provide for the contingency of the plant's removal or the termination of the employees. The trial court denied the petition, on finding that the defendant was not in default under the arbitration provisions of the collective bargaining agreement was unambiguous as to vacation and holiday pay.

The Supreme Court reversed. The trial court applied an erroneous rule in making its decision to deny the petition. The Court adopted the federal rule to the extent that it states that if the collective bargaining agreement provides for arbitration of all disputes pertaining to the meaning, interpretation, and application of the collective bargaining agreement and its provisions, any dispute as to the meaning, interpretation, and application of any specific matter covered by the agreement is a matter for arbitration. Doubts as to whether the arbitration clause applies are to be resolved in favor of coverage. Since the bargaining agreement in this case provided that any dispute arising between the parties relating directly or indirectly to the provisions of the agreement, whether concerning discharges or any other terms, should be arbitrated, the dispute involved in the case was subject to arbitration (56 Cal. 2d 169, 175) .

[e] Arbitration Procedures Are Not Avoided by Artful Pleading

The facts and procedural background of Johnson v. Hydraulic Research & Mfg. Co. (1977) 70 Cal. App. 3d 675, 139 Cal. Rptr. 136 , are discussed in § 50.101[3][b]. In this action arising from an employer's wrongful interference with the plaintiff's contractual relations with a doctor and a conspiracy to violate the plaintiff's rights, the plaintiff claimed that since he was not relying on the collective bargaining agreement, and its terms were raised as a matter of defense and not in the complaint, the exhaustion rule did not apply. However, the court disagreed, stating that if the subject matter of a dispute falls within the grievance and arbitration procedures of the agreement, a plaintiff may not avoid those procedures merely by artfully pleading a tort and omitting reference to the agreement (70 Cal. App. 3d 675, 682) .

[f] Service-of-Suit Clause Does Not Conflict With Arbitration Clause

In Boghos v. Certain Underwriters at Lloyd's of London (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 495, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 787, 115 P.3d 68 , the plaintiff was receiving payments under a disability insurance contract from the defendants, who were underwriters at Lloyd's of London. The underwriters abruptly stopped making payments, and the plaintiff sued on several theories of contract law. The underwriters sought to compel arbitration pursuant to an arbitration clause in the contract. The trial court refused to order arbitration, on the ground that a service-of-suit clause in the contract conflicted with the arbitration clause, and any ambiguity between the two clauses should be resolved in the plaintiff's favor. The court of appeal affirmed.

The Supreme Court reversed. In the service-of-suit clause, the underwriters agreed to submit to the personal jurisdiction of designated courts for specified purposes related to the contract. Generally, because of the public policy favoring arbitration in lieu of litigation, courts have tended to hold that a service-of-suit clause can co-exist in a contract along with an arbitration clause--that is, the two clauses will not be in conflict--as long as the service-of-suit clause can be interpreted as having been intended to facilitate enforcement of the arbitration clause. This was easily possible in this case because the arbitration clause was qualified by the introductory phrase, "Notwithstanding any other item set forth herein ..... " (36 Cal. 4th 495, 502-503) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Court Must Determine Arbitrability of Dispute

Larkin v. Williams, Woolley, Cogswell, Nakazawa & Russell (1999) 76 Cal. App. 4th 227, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 195 was an action by one partner for dissolution of the law partnership and an accounting. The complaint alleged that one of the partners had breached the partnership agreement. The firm petitioned to compel arbitration based on an arbitration clause in the partnership agreement which stated "[a]ny controversy or claim arising out of or relating to any provision of this agreement or the breach thereof shall be settled by arbitration in accordance with the rules then in effect of the American Arbitration Association ..... ." The trial court denied the petition to compel arbitration and the court of appeal reversed. It held that the language of the arbitration clause was very broad and extended to plaintiff's action, which arose out of or related to the partnership agreement (76 Cal. App. 4th 227, 230-231) .

[b] Failure to Exhaust Arbitration Remedies

Clogston v. Schiff-Lang Co. (1935) 2 Cal. 2d 414, 41 P.2d 555 , was an action for damages for breach of contract. The trial court overruled thedefendant's demurrer to the complaint on the ground that there was a written agreement to arbitrate any differences arising under the contract, and the plaintiff had not alleged that arbitration had taken place or that he had offered to submit to arbitration. The defendant then answered that the contract contained a provision for arbitration, and the defendant had offered in writing to submit the dispute to arbitration, but the plaintiff refused to do so. The trial court found that the contract did not provide for the settlement of any differences by arbitration to the exclusion of the settlement of the differences by the courts. The Supreme Court reversed. When a provision for arbitration in a contract is enforceable, arbitration or an attempt to obtain it is a condition precedent to the right to maintain an action for breach of the contract. In the absence of arbitration or any attempt on the plaintiff's part to arbitrate any contractual differences that have arisen, the judgment for the plaintiff was erroneous (2 Cal. 2d 414, 416-417) .

Don da Roza, Inc. v. Northern Cal. Dist. Council Hod Carriers Union (1965) 233 Cal. App. 2d 96, 43 Cal. Rptr. 264 , was an action for damages for breach of a no-strike clause in a collective bargaining agreement. The defendants had struck and picketed the plaintiff's construction operations in violation of the no-strike provision. The trial court granted the defendants' motion for summary judgment on the ground that the plaintiff had failed to exhaust the arbitration procedures provided for in the agreement. The agreement provided that there would be no strike, slowdown, or work stoppage in any dispute. All disputes would be arbitrated, and the arbitrators' decision would be final and binding on the parties. The court of appeal affirmed. The dispute was subject to the arbitration provision, and the plaintiff's failure to refer the violation of the no-strike clause to arbitration constituted a sufficient ground for granting the defendants' motion for summary judgment. A party to a collective bargaining contract that provides for arbitration of disputes within the scope of the contract must exhaust those internal remedies before resorting to the courts, in the absence of facts that would excuse him or her from pursuing the remedies (233 Cal. App. 2d 96, 103-104) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
1. Plaintiff's Lack of Standing to Sue

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.102

§ 50.102 Plaintiff Failed to Allege or Prove License as Contractor

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE COMPLAINT DOES NOT ALLEGE THAT THE PLAINTIFF WAS A DULY LICENSED CONTRACTOR AT ALL TIMES DURING THE PERFORMANCE OF THE CONTRACT.

A. Contractor Defined. The term "contractor" for purposes of the Contractors' License Law is synonymous with "builder" and includes subcontractors and specialty contractors. It means any person who undertakes to or offers to undertake to or purports to have the capacity to undertake to or submits a bid to, or does himself or herself or by or through others, construct, alter, repair, add to, subtract from, improve, move, wreck, or demolish any building, highway, road, parking facility, railroad, excavation, or other structure, project, development, or improvement, or to do any part, including the erection of scaffolding or other structures or works in connection with it, or the cleaning of grounds or structures in connection with it, or the preparation and removal of roadway construction zones, lane closures, flagging, or traffic diversions, or the installation, repair, maintenance, or calibration of monitoring equipment for underground storage tanks, whether or not the performance of the work involves the addition to or fabrication into any structure, project, development, or improvement, of any material or article of merchandise (Bus. & Prof. Code § 7026).

B. Contractor Must Allege or Prove Existence of License. No person engaged in the business or acting in the capacity of a contractor may bring or maintain any action, or recover in law or equity in any action, in any California court for the collection of compensation for the performance of any act or contract for which a license is required by the Contractors' License Law, without alleging that he or she was a duly licensed contractor at all times during the performance of the act or contract, regardless of the merits of the cause of action brought by the person, except that this prohibition does not apply to contractors who are each individually licensed under the Contractors' License Law but who fail to comply with Business and Professions Code Section 7029 (license for joint venture) (Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031(a); MW Erectors, Inc. v. Niederhauser Ornamental & Metal Works Co. (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 412, 419, 425-431,

30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 755, 115 P.3d 41 ; Lewis & Queen v. N.M. Ball Sons (1957) 48 Cal. 2d 141, 149-150, 308 P.2d 713 . [If an allegation of the existence of a contractor's license is controverted, the burden of proof to establish a proper license is on the licensee, and the licensee must produce a verified certificate from the Contractors' State License Board showing a license in the proper classification at all times during the performance of any act or contract covered by the action (Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031(d))].

[Optional] C. Completion of Contract by Unlicensed Party. If a party that is licensed as a contractor begins work on the contractbut later relinquishes control over further performance of the contract to an unlicensed party, the licensed person cannot recover in an action for compensation on the contract (Weeks v. Merritt Bldg. & Constr. Co. (1974) 39 Cal. App. 3d 520, 523-525, 114 Cal. Rptr. 209).

[Optional] D. Dissolution of Licensed Partnership Terminates License. Dissolution of a licensed partnership automatically terminates its license, so that when a partner leaves a partnership, the continuing partner cannot sue for work performed under the terminated license (Frank v. Kozlovsky (1970) 13 Cal. App. 3d 120, 124-125, 91 Cal. Rptr. 297).

[Optional] E. Undisclosed Agent's Lack of License Bars Recovery. A licensed contractor cannot recover on a contract made, performed, and completed by an unlicensed subcontractor as an undisclosed agent (Muth v. Leineke (1970) 9 Cal. App. 3d 433, 435-436, 88 Cal. Rptr. 1).

[Optional] F. Knowledge That Contractor Lacked License. Business and Professions Code Section 7031 applies even though the party against whom the action is brought knew that the contractor was unlicensed (Pickens v. American Mortgage Exchange (1969) 269 Cal. App. 2d 299, 302, 74 Cal. Rptr. 788).

[Optional] G. Statute Applies to Contractor's Assignee. In order for an assignee to recover on a construction contract, he or she must allege and prove that the contractor had a valid contractor's license during the performance of the contract, that the plaintiff was a holder in due course, or that he or she took an assignment of the contract in good faith without knowledge of any infirmity attached to the contract (Walker v. Nitzberg (1970) 13 Cal. App. 3d 359, 367-368, 91 Cal. Rptr. 526).

[Optional] H. Painting Contractor Must Be Licensed. A painting contractor is a contractor under the statutory definition of contractor in Business and Professions Code Section 7026 (Howard v. California (1948) 85 Cal. App. 2d 361, 364, 193 P.2d 11).

[Optional] I. No Exception for Isolated Transaction. There is no exemption from Business and Professions Code Section 7031 for "special circumstances" or an "isolated transaction" that would allow an unlicensed contractor [from another state] to recover for [specialized] construction services performed on a one-time basis [in the capacity of a subcontractor] (Hydrotech Systems, Ltd. v. Oasis Waterpark (1991) 52 Cal. 3d 988, 994-998, 277 Cal. Rptr. 517, 803 P.2d 370).

[Optional] J. Fraud Claim Is Barred. In a dispute over money owed to an unlicensed contractor, the contractor cannot evade Business and Professions Code Section 7031 by alleging that the express or implied promise to pay for the work was fraudulent. However artful the pleading, if the primary fraud alleged is a false promise to pay for unlicensed construction work, and the primary relief sought is compensation for the work, that statute bars the action (Hydrotech Systems, Ltd. v. Oasis Waterpark (1991) 52 Cal. 3d 988, 1002, 277 Cal. Rptr. 517, 803 P.2d 370).

[Optional] K. Purpose of Statute. The purpose of Business and Professions Code Section 7031 is to protect the public from incompetence and dishonesty in those who provide building materials and construction services. The licensing requirements provide minimal assurance that all persons offering those services in California have the requisite skill and character, understand applicable local laws and codes, and know the rudiments of administering a contracting business.

That statute advances this purpose by withholding judicial aid from those who seek compensation for unlicensed contract work. The statute represents a legislative determination that the importance of deterring unlicensed persons from engaging in the contracting business outweighs any harshness between the parties, and deterrence can best be realized by denying violators the right to maintain any action for compensation in California courts (Hydrotech Systems, Ltd. v. Oasis Waterpark (1991) 52 Cal. 3d 988, 995, 277 Cal. Rptr. 517, 803 P.2d 370).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that the plaintiff in an action for contract damages performed as a contractor under the contract but failed to allege that he or she was a duly licensed contractor at all times during the performance of the contract as required by Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031.

This form may also be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a defendant seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used to support a demurrer on the ground that plaintiff has failed to allege the existence of a license, a statutory prerequisite to bringing or maintaining an action on a contract involving plaintiff's performance in the capacity of a contractor.

Similarly, by using the optional language in Paragraph B, the form may be used to support a motion by defendant for summary judgment when undisputed facts show that the plaintiff was a contractor not licensed during a portion of the contract term [see Pickens v. American Mortgage Exchange (1969) 269 Cal. App. 2d 299, 302, 74 Cal. Rptr. 788] . A contractor who has properly alleged a license need not prove its existence unless this allegation is controverted [Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031(d)]. When the allegation is controverted, however, the contractor has the burden of proof to establish a proper license is on the licensee, and must meet this burden by producing a verified certificate from the Contractors' State License Board showing a license in the proper classification at all times during the performance of any act or contract covered by the action [Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031(d)].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised in support of a defendant's motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the supporting and opposing papers showing that undisputed facts establish that plaintiff failed to prove the existence of a contractor's license during all times covered by the contract.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For discussions and forms relating to contractor licensing requirements in California, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 104, Building Contracts (Matthew Bender). For discussion and forms relating to licensing matters generally, see Ch. 471B, Licensing by Public Agencies , in that publication. For detailed discussion relating to contracts generally, see Ch. 140, Contracts , in that publication. See also California Legal Forms, Ch. 88, Licensing of Contractors (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

These memoranda may be combined with those in § 50.103 for submission in support of the contention that recovery may not be had by an unlicensed contractor. For memoranda supporting the contention that the complaint fails to allege that the plaintiff was duly licensed as a real estate broker or salesman, see Ch. 31, Brokers and Salespersons . For memoranda supporting a demurrer to a complaint to foreclose a mechanics' lien when the complaint fails to allege that the plaintiff was a duly licensed contractor, see Ch. 152, Mechanics' Liens .

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum supporting a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in §§ 50.111 -50.114 may be used in appropriate cases to oppose the contention supported by this form. In particular, § 50.112 contains authority that permits unlicensed contractors in certain exceptional circumstances to plead substantial compliance in order to support a claim for damages for breach of contract [Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031(e), (f)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Contractor Must Allege or Prove Existence of License

In MW Erectors, Inc. v. Niederhauser Ornamental & Metal Works Co. (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 412, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 755, 115 P.3d 41 , the plaintiff was a contractor subject to the Contractors' State License Law. The plaintiff sought recovery on a contract under which the plaintiff had commenced work before obtaining the required license. The plaintiff obtained the license a few weeks after starting work and thereafter was fully licensed for the ensuing period in which the work was completed. The trial court granted the defendant's summary judgment motion. The court of appeal reversed and held that while the contractor could not recover for work performed under the contract during the relatively short time before the license was obtained, the contractor could recover for every individual act performed under the contract after the license was in place. Thus, the plaintiff was entitled to prove amounts due for work on the contract after the license was issued.

The Supreme Court reversed, thus reinstating the summary judgment in favor of the defendant. The court, relying in part on Lewis & Queen v. N.M. Ball Sons (1957) 48 Cal. 2d 141, 308 P.2d 713 (discussed below), held that when Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031(a) applies, it bars a person from suing to recover compensation for any work done under an agreement for services requiring a contractor's license unless a proper license was in place at all times during that contractual performance. Moreover, the statute does not allow a contractor to recover compensation for any individual acts performed while duly licensed, if the contractor was unlicensed at any time during contractual performance (36 Cal. 4th 412, 419, 425-431) .

In Lewis & Queen v. N.M. Ball Sons (1957) 48 Cal. 2d 141, 308 P.2d 713 , a partnership in the contracting business sued for damages for breach of equipment rental agreements. One partner had an individual license, the other did not, and the partnership had no license. The partnership claimed that even if it acted as a contractor under Bus. & Prof. Code § 7026, it substantially complied with the requirement of Bus. & Prof. Code § 7028 (contracting without license as misdemeanor) since one partner had an individual license. The trial court gave judgment to the defendants, finding that because the plaintiff had acted as a contractor within the meaning of Bus. & Prof. Code § 7026 without a license required by Bus. & Prof. Code § 7028, it was barred by Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031 from maintaining any action for compensation. The entity that did the contracting work and was required by Bus. & Prof. Code § 7028 to have a license, however, was the partnership, and it had no license.

The Supreme Court affirmed. Undoubtedly there are situations in which substantial compliance with the licensing requirements satisfies the policy of the statute. Nevertheless, there could be no question that the statutes regulating the contracting business were clearly violated. Since the plaintiff did not comply with the statute, it could not bring or maintain any action for the collection of compensation (48 Cal. 2d 141, 149-150) .

[b] Completion of Contract by Unlicensed Party

Weeks v. Merritt Bldg. & Constr. Co. (1974) 39 Cal. App. 3d 520, 114 Cal. Rptr. 209 , was an action by a subcontractor against the general contractor for the balance due under the subcontract. The issue was presented to the court on a stipulated statement of facts. The subcontractor, who was properly licensed, suffered a heart attack when three fourths of the subcontract was complete. He then relinquished further control over the subcontract to his surety who was not licensed under Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031. Neither the firm employed by the surety nor the firm's representative on the job held a license. The trial court concluded that the action was barred by Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031.

The court of appeal affirmed. Because the plaintiff relinquished all control over the performance of the contract after his heart attack, he violated Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031, since it is the person who performs the contract who must have the required license, not just the person who happens to have a right to maintain a suit for money owed under the contract. One purpose of the Contractors' License Law is to guard against the possibility that unlicensed persons will complete projects begun by a properly licensed person (39 Cal. App. 3d 520, 523-524) .

[c] Dissolution of Licensed Partnership Terminates License

In Frank v. Kozlovsky (1970) 13 Cal. App. 3d 120, 91 Cal. Rptr. 297 , a partnership sought damages arising out of a contract to build a commercial building. When the partnership made the contract with the defendants, a license existed in the partnership name, but it had been issued to one of the partners and another person doing business under the same name. That partnership had been terminated, and the new partnership did not apply for a license until after the contract with the defendants had been completed. Following a nonjury trial, the court rendered judgment for the plaintiffs, finding that the plaintiffs in good faith had substantially complied with the licensing requirements of the state.

The court of appeal reversed. The plaintiffs had not substantially complied with the licensing statutes in part because at the time of the contracting, the partnership did not hold a valid license. Dissolution of the old partnership by a change in its personnel automatically terminated its license. Additionally, the qualifying partner did not hold an individual license. To hold that the licensing requirements were satisfied would be to defeat the Legislature's policy. Thus, the plaintiffs could not recover on the contract (13 Cal. App. 3d 120, 124-126) .

[d] Undisclosed Agent's Lack of License Bars Recovery

Muth v. Leineke (1970) 9 Cal. App. 3d 433, 88 Cal. Rptr. 1 , was an action by a licensed contractor to recover for the labor and materials furnished by a subcontractor to the defendants. The subcontractor, doing business without a contractor's license, orally agreed to do certain work for the defendants. Unknown to the defendants, the subcontractor was the plaintiff's undisclosed agent at the time of the making, performance, and completion of the contract. The trial court, finding that the subcontractor did not have the license required by Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031, rendered judgment for the defendants.

The court of appeal affirmed. In an action on a contract by an undisclosed principal, the other party to the contract has all of the defenses that could be raised against the agent until the principal is discovered. In this case, the defendants could have raised the bar of Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031 as a defense against an action by the subcontractor. The plaintiff asserted that Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031 was satisfied because, since the plaintiff was licensed, substantial compliance existed as to the subcontractor. However, the trial court did not find that the subcontractor substantially complied with the licensing statute. The court of appeal noted that the fact that the plaintiff was duly licensed did not change the fact that the subcontractor was not. The public needs protection from admitted undisclosed principals whose unlicensed and undisclosed agents could recover the value of the work done leaving the customer open to suit and the possibility of double recovery by the principal if the undisclosed principal doctrine is not applied. Consequently, the court concluded that the undisclosed agent's lack of license, under the undisclosed principal doctrine,was properly applied in this case to bar the plaintiff's recovery (9 Cal. App. 3d 433, 436-437) .

[e] Knowledge That Contractor Lacked License

Pickens v. American Mortgage Exchange (1969) 269 Cal. App. 2d 299, 74 Cal. Rptr. 788 , was an action for money due under a contract. The trial court granted the defendants' motion for summary judgment on the ground that the plaintiffs were not licensed general contractors. One plaintiff had a painter's license but not a general contractor's license.

The court of appeal reversed but noted that failure to be licensed during any portion of the term of a contract requires a dismissal of an action on a motion for summary judgment. The plaintiffs alleged that they informed the defendants that they were unlicensed; however, this allegation did not protect them from the proscription of Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031. Despite the plaintiffs' failure to have a contractor's license, they set forth three causes of action in their complaint involving fraud, the sale of products, and the employer-employee relationship, that were not barred by Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031 (269 Cal. App. 2d 299, 302) .

[f] Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031 Applies to Contractor's Assignee

Walker v. Nitzberg (1970) 13 Cal. App. 3d 359, 91 Cal. Rptr. 526 , was an action on a contract by a contractor's assignee against a home owner. Although the defendant was notified of the contract's assignment, he paid the contractor a portion of the contract price, following which the plaintiff brought this action for that sum. The trial court, finding that the defendant paid the contractor with the sincere belief that the contractor needed the money to pay for labor and materials used for the job and to avoid lien claims against the property by persons supplying labor and materials, rendered judgment for the defendant.

The court of appeal affirmed. The contractor was unlicensed at the time of the contract's performance, and Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031 requires that a contractor allege that he was licensed at all times during the performance of the contract. This disability attaches to the contractor's assignee to whom the contractor's right to compensation has been assigned when the assignee is not a holder in due course or did not take the assignment without knowledge of the problem. Consequently, an assignee must allege and prove that the contractor had a valid contractor's license during the performance of the contract. Since the plaintiff did not allege or prove that the contractor was licensed during the performance of the contract or that the plaintiff was a holder in due course or took the assignment in good faith without knowledge of the infirmity that attached to the assigned contract, the plaintiff could not recover on the contract (13 Cal. App. 3d 359, 367-368) .

[g] Painting Contractor Must Be Licensed

Howard v. California (1948) 85 Cal. App. 2d 361, 193 P.2d 11 , was an action by a painter to restrain the state and state and county officials from prosecuting him for violations of the Business and Professions Code due to his entering into contracts as a painter for consideration other than wages. The plaintiff did not possess and was unable to obtain a license issued under the Business and Professions Code. The trial court sustained the individual the defendant's demurrers. On appeal, the plaintiff contended that the Business and Professions Code does not apply to the business of painting buildings or other structures, reasoning that those whose business it is to build a building are contractors but those in the business of altering, repairing, or adding to buildings or other structures are not contractors unless the alterations, repairs, or additions also constituted building.

The court of appeal affirmed. If not all contractors who engage in the work described in Bus. & Prof. Code § 7026 are builders under the common definitions of those words, they are made so by the special definition in the code provision.

Therefore, one who undertakes to, or does, construct, alter, repair, add to, subtract from, improve, move, wreck, or demolish any building is a contractor, and there is only that one definition of a contractor in Bus. & Prof. Code § 7026. Since altering, repairing, adding to, or improving a structure might involve painting the structure, a painting contractor is a contractor under the statutory definition (85 Cal. App. 2d 361, 363-364) .

[h] No Exception for Isolated Transaction

The plaintiff in Hydrotech Systems, Ltd. v. Oasis Waterpark (1991) 52 Cal. 3d 988, 277 Cal. Rptr. 517, 803 P.2d 370 , a New York corporation that admittedly did not have a California contractor's license, manufactured and installed patented equipment designed to simulate ocean waves. The defendant owned and operated a water-oriented amusement park in Palm Springs. A general contractor for the defendant had contracted with the plaintiff in 1985 to design and construct a 29,000 square-foot surfing pool in the park at a total contract price of $850,000. The contract called for progress payments with a retainage to be held back pending satisfactory completion and operation of the pool. The plaintiff sued for $110,000 in retainage after the pool had been completed and was performing as specified, asserting causes of action for fraud, breach of implied contract, money due and owing, and breach of written contract. The defendants demurred on the ground that the complaint failed to allege that the plaintiff had a California contractor's license. The plaintiff claimed that application of Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031 was unnecessary and unjust because the plaintiff possesses unique expertise in its field and provided construction services only at its customer's insistence and in reliance on the generalcontractor's repeated requests that it perform the work and promises to pay. The trial court sustained the demurrer to the written contract claim but granted the plaintiff leave to amend; with respect to all other causes of action, the demurrer was granted without leave to amend. The trial court then entered an order dismissing all defendants except the general contractor. On appeal the plaintiff contended that (1) the protective purposes of the licensing law are not served by applying Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031 to a nonresident who subcontracted at its customer's specific request to provide unique construction services in an "isolated" California transaction, and (2) Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031 does not bar claims for fraudulent induceent to enter a construction contract.

The court of appeal reversed the portion of the judgment that dismissed the fraud claim and affirmed the dismissal in all other respects. On review in the Supreme Court the plaintiff contended that the "exceptional circumstances" of its dealings with the defendants made application of Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031 unnecessary and unjust. The plaintiff claimed that it reluctantly provided construction services on a one-time basis only because the park operator solicited its specialized wave-generating expertise, which was not available anywhere else. The plaintiff argued that the "isolated" provision of the specialized services by a mere subcontractor should be deemed exempt from the statute (52 Cal. 3d 988, 994) .

The Supreme Court determined that (1) there was no "isolated transaction" exception and (2) the fraud claim was barred by Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031 (52 Cal. 3d 988, 994) . Bus. & Prof. Code § 7026 specifies that the term "contractor" includes subcontractor and specialty contractor (52 Cal. 3d 988, 994-995) . Additionally, Bus. & Prof. Code § 7040, which lists numerous exemptions from the contractors' licensing law, does not provide exemptions for foreign contractors, isolated transactions, or "unique" building services and capabilities (52 Cal. 3d 988, 995) . The purpose of the licensing law is to protect the public from incompetence and dishonesty in those who provide building materials and construction. The licensing requirements provide minimal assurance that all persons offering the services in California have the requisite skill and character, understand applicable local laws and codes, and know the rudiments of administering a contracting business. Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031 advances this purpose by withholding judicial aid from those who seek compensation for unlicensed contract work. The obvious legislative intent is to discourage persons who have failed to comply with the licensing law from offering or providing their unlicensed services for pay. Because of the strength and clarity of this policy, it is well settled that the statute applies despite injustice to the unlicensed contractor. The statute represents a legislative determination that the importance of deterring unlicensed persons from engaging in the contracting business outweighs any harshness between the parties, and deterrence can best be realized by denying violators the right to maintain any action for compensation in California courts (52 Cal. 3d 988, 995) .

The plaintiff argued that cases had recognized "exceptional circumstances" in which literal application of Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031 would not further the purposes of the licensing law. Those authorities, however, related to the well-established doctrine of substantial compliance, which applies when the contractor's license is defective only in form (52 Cal. 3d 988, 995-996) . That was not the case here (52 Cal. 3d 988, 996) . Also, after the contract here at issue was made and performed, Stats. 1990, ch. 368, amended the statute to provide that the doctrine of substantial compliance was no longer applicable (52 Cal. 3d 988, 996 n.2). It was not apparent from the pleadings that the plaintiff's activities in California were "isolated," but even if they were, there is no implied exception for "isolated" transactions by foreign contractors. Equally irrelevant was the plaintiff's "reluctance" to engage in the transaction and the defendant's insistence that it do so (52 Cal. 3d 988, 996) . Perhaps the plaintiff's good faith alters the balance of equities in its favor, but the deterrence purpose of Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031 outweighs any harshness in a particular case (52 Cal. 3d 988, 997) . Again, Stats. 1990, ch. 368, amended Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031 to provide that no recovery was allowed "at law or in equity" to an unlicensed contractor "regardless of the merits of the case" (52 Cal. 3d 988, 997 n.6). The plaintiff's claim that the law's protective purpose was served because it only acted as a subcontractor and did not hold itself out to the public was without merit. The law protects both owners and general contractors. Thus, there was no exception that would exempt the plaintiff from the statute (52 Cal. 3d 988, 997) .

[i] Fraud Claim Is Barred

The facts and procedural background of Hydrotech Systems, Ltd. v. Oasis Waterpark (1991) 52 Cal. 3d 988, 277 Cal. Rptr. 517, 803 P.2d 370 , are discussed in § 50.102[3][h]. With regard to the cause of action for fraud, the California Supreme Court noted that regardless of the equities, Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031 bars all actions, however they are characterized, that effectively seek "compensation" for illegal unlicensed contract work. Thus, actions for the agreed price or for the reasonable value of labor and materials are barred, even if the person for whom the work was performed knew the contractor was unlicensed (52 Cal. 3d 988, 997) . It follows that an unlicensed contractor may not circumvent the clear provisions and purposes of Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031 simply by alleging that when the contract was made, the other party had no intention of performing it (52 Cal. 3d 988, 998) . The Court disagreed with the court of appeal's view that disallowing the fraud claim would contravene the protective policies of the licensing law by encouraging professional contractors to seek out unlicensed subcontractors, secure in the knowledge that the work obtained would not have to be compensated. Bus. & Prof. Code § 7118 subjects a general contractor to disciplinary action for hiring an unlicensed subcontractor. Moreover, the unusual circumstances of this case aside, a general contractor would not usually risk liability for claims that an unlicensed subcontractor had performed substandard work (52 Cal. 3d 988, 998) . In addition, the deterrent and protective purposes of Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031 preclude recovery even when the person who solicited the unlicensed work did so fraudulently or in bad faith (52 Cal. 3d 988, 999) .

[j] Purpose of Statute

Hydrotech Systems, Ltd. v. Oasis Waterpark (1991) 52 Cal. 3d 988, 994-998, 277 Cal. Rptr. 517, 803 P.2d 370 , is discussed in § 50.102[3][h].

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Contractor Must Allege or Prove Existence of License

Advantec Group, Inc. v. Edwin's Plumbing Co. (2007) 153 Cal. App. 4th 621, 63 Cal. Rptr. 3d 195 , addressed the question of when licensure is "controverted" so as to trigger the contractor's burden to produce the proof required by Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031(d). The court held that a defendant's answer containing a general denial of the material allegations of the contractor's claim [Code Civ. Proc. § 431.30(b)(1)] is sufficient to controvert the contractor's allegation of licensure and thus invokes the requirement that the contractor prove licensure by producing a verified certificate (153 Cal. App. 4th 621, 624) .

Banis Rest. Design, Inc. v. Serrano (2005) 134 Cal. App. 4th 1035, 36 Cal. Rptr. 3d 532 , was an action by an unlicensed contractor. The defendant demurred on the ground that Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031 barred recovery. The trial court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend, and the plaintiff appealed, arguing that the trial court should have permitted amendment of the complaint so as to allege facts demonstrating that the absolute bar of the statute did not apply. The court of appeal affirmed, however, because the proposed amendment would have directly contradicted the original complaint, which alleged facts revealing that the work for which the plaintiff sought compensation was work of a kind for which a license was required (134 Cal. App. 4th 1035, 1045-1047) .

Rushing v. Powell (1976) 61 Cal. App. 3d 597, 130 Cal. Rptr. 110 , was an action for amounts due for services performed and materials furnished to the defendants pursuant to a written contract for the construction of a swimming pool. The pool construction license under which the plaintiff purported to act was obtained by representing to the Contractors' License Board that a person already licensed for the specialty was engaged in the joint venture with the plaintiff. In fact, the licensed person did not participate in the business of swimming pool construction. Thus, the plaintiff was permitted to engage in a specialty in which he had not demonstrated qualification by taking and passing the appropriate examination and for which he had not been licensed as an individual. The issue of the plaintiff's failure to comply with the Contractors' License Law was raised by demurrer and again at the pretrial conference and by motion for nonsuit. At the conclusion of the evidence, the trial court found that the Contractors' License Law had been substantially complied with. The court rendered judgment for the plaintiff.

[b] Painting Contractor Must Be Licensed

Franklin v. Nat C. Goldstone Agency (1949) 33 Cal. 2d 628, 204 P.2d 37 , was an action to enforce an arbitration award directing payment for certain painting work performed by interior decorators pursuant to an agreement. The trial court confirmed the award. The owner contended on appeal that the decorators had no legal standing in court to enforce their claim for compensation because none of the documents relating to the arbitrator's award indicated that they were licensed contractors at all times during the performance of the agreement. Reversing the trial court, the Supreme Court noted that a contractor is defined by Bus. & Prof. Code § 7026 as any person who undertakes himself or by or through others, to construct, alter, repair, add to, subtract from, or improve any building. The field of specialty contracting is classified as a separate branch of the contracting business and includes a contractor who performs construction work requiring special skill and whose principal contracting business involves the use of specialized building trades and crafts. The Contractors' State License Board, in recognition of the fact that the construction industry embraces numerous specialized crafts requiring certain arts and skills, has expressly listed painting and decorating contractors among the classified specialists coming within the scope of the licensing statutes. Consequently, the decorators should have been regarded as contractors within the scope of the statute and the rules and regulations adopted in pursuance of the statute, and compliance with the state licensing requirements was necessary to validate their undertaking to do and their doing the work (33 Cal. 2d 628, 630) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
1. Plaintiff's Lack of Standing to Sue

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.103

§ 50.103 Plaintiff Failed to Allege or Prove Required License

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE PLAINTIFF IS NOT LICENSED AS A [specify licensed profession], AND [specify statute or ordinance] IMPOSES A PENALTY FOR CARRYING ON THAT BUSINESS WITHOUT A LICENSE. THE CONTRACT SUED ON BY PLAINTIFF WAS THEREFORE MADE IN VIOLATION OF THAT [STATUTE or ORDINANCE] AND IS VOID.

A. Validity of Contracts by Unlicensed Persons. If the object of a statute or ordinance in requiring a license for the privilege of carrying on a certain business is to prevent improper persons from engaging in that particular business or to regulate the business for the protection of the public or in the interest of public morals, health, or policy, the imposition of the penalty amounts to a prohibition against doing business without a license, and a contract made by an unlicensed person in violation of the statute or ordinance is void (California Chicks, Inc. v. Viebrock (1967) 254 Cal. App. 2d 638, 641, 62 Cal. Rptr. 269).

[Optional] B. Contract of Unlicensed Dealer of Farm Produce Is Not Enforceable. The contract of a farm produce dealer who is not licensed under Food and Agricultural Code Section 56101 etseq. is unenforceable (California Chicks, Inc. v. Viebrock (1967) 254 Cal. App. 2d 638, 641, 62 Cal. Rptr. 269).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that the plaintiff failed to have a required license to carry on the business involved in the contract, and, as the purpose of the licensing requirement and the penalty for doing business without the license is to prevent improper persons from engaging in the business, the contract entered into by the plaintiff is void as one in violation of the applicable licensing requirements.

This form may also be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a defendant seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used to support a motion by defendant for summary judgment when undisputed facts show that the plaintiff was a not licensed during some or all of the contract term to carry on the business covered by the contract.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised in support of a defendant's motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the supporting and opposing papers showing that undisputed facts establish that plaintiff failed to prove the existence of a license that plaintiff was required, by specified statute or ordinance, to have in order to carry on the business covered by the contract.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For discussions and forms relating to licensing requirements generally, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 471B, Licensing by Public Agencies (Matthew Bender). For detailed discussion relating to contracts generally, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

These memoranda may be combined with those in § 50.102 for submission in support of the contention that recovery may not be had by an unlicensed contractor.

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum supporting a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in §§ 50.111 -50.114 may be used in appropriate cases to oppose the contention supported by this form. The memoranda in §§ 50.260 -50.263 may also be used to oppose this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Validity of Contracts by Unlicensed Persons

California Chicks, Inc. v. Viebrock (1967) 254 Cal. App. 2d 638, 62 Cal. Rptr. 269 , was an action for damages for breach of a contract for the purchase of eggs. The trial court found that the contract was unenforceable on the ground that the plaintiff had no farm produce dealer's license as required by former Agric. Code § 1263.

The court of appeal affirmed. The plaintiff was clearly a dealer in the purchase of farm produce within the sense of former Agric. Code § 1261 et seq. [see Food & Agric. Code § 56101 et seq. (restating former Agriculture Code sections)]. Thus, former Agric. Code § 1263, which provided that no person may act as a dealer without having obtained a license, applied. The qualifications of people and corporations engaged in this work are of the essence, and it is public policy to make sure that no individual or firm that does not have the necessary qualifications as defined by law be permitted to carry on a business of this type. Although the Food and Agricultural Code does not specifically prohibit a produce dealer who has no license from bringing an action on a contract for the purchase of farm produce, when the object of a statute requiring a license for the privilege of carrying on a certain business is to prevent improper persons from engaging in that particular business or to regulate it for the protection of the public, the imposition of the penalty amounts to a prohibition against doing business without a license. A contract made by an unlicensed person in violation of the statute or ordinance is void (254 Cal. App. 2d 638, 641) .

[b] Contract of Unlicensed Dealer of Farm Produce Is Not Enforceable

California Chicks, Inc. v. Viebrock (1967) 254 Cal. App. 2d 638, 62 Cal. Rptr. 269 , is discussed in § 50.110[3][a].

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
1. Plaintiff's Lack of Standing to Sue

5-50 California Points & Authorities §§ 50.104-50.109

[Reserved]

§§ 50.104[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
1. Plaintiff's Lack of Standing to Sue

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.110

§ 50.110 Defendant Waived Right to Require Arbitration

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

ALTHOUGH A PROVISION IN A CONTRACT REQUIRING ARBITRATION IS CONSIDERED A CONDITION PRECEDENT TO MAINTAINING A LEGAL ACTION, IT IS SUBJECT TO WAIVER, AND WHETHER THE PROVISION WAS WAIVED IS A QUESTION OF FACT.

A. Right to Arbitrate May Be Waived. A party to an arbitration agreement can waive the right to arbitrate (Sawday v. Vista Irrigation Dist. (1966) 64 Cal. 2d 833, 836, 52 Cal. Rptr. 1, 415 P.2d 816).

B. Waiver of Arbitration Is Question of Fact. Whether the parties have waived arbitration procedures in a contract that requires arbitration as a condition precedent is ordinarily a question of fact (Sawday v. Vista Irrigation Dist. (1966) 64 Cal. 2d 833, 836, 52 Cal. Rptr. 1, 415 P.2d 816 ; Berman v. Health Net (2000) 80 Cal. App. 4th 1359, 1363-1364, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 295 ; Daugherty Co. v. Kimberly-Clark Corp. (1971) 14 Cal. App. 3d 151, 157-158, 92 Cal. Rptr. 120).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the plaintiff's contention that the defendant waived an arbitration provision, and therefore plaintiff's failure to pursue arbitration in accordance with a contract provision does not preclude plaintiff from bringing a cause of action for contract damages based on claims otherwise covered by the arbitration agreement.

This form may also be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a defendant seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used to oppose a motion by defendant for summary judgment when undisputed facts show that defendant waived the arbitration requirement of the contract.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised in opposition to a defendant's motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the supporting and opposing papers showing that undisputed facts establish that defendant waived the arbitration requirements of the contract.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For discussion relating to the defense that arbitration is a condition precedent to suit, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 32, Contractual Arbitration: Agreements and Compelling Arbitration (Matthew Bender). For detailed discussion relating to contracts generally, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum opposing a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For memoranda relating to arbitration generally, see Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling , and Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.101 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Right to Arbitrate May Be Waived

In Sawday v. Vista Irrigation Dist. (1966) 64 Cal. 2d 833, 52 Cal. Rptr. 1, 415 P.2d 816 , an irrigation district sued for declaratory relief and anorder terminating arbitration with a lessee of the district, who countered with a petition to compel arbitration. The proceedings were consolidated. The lease provided that if the lessee was damaged by the district's removal of water from the land as permitted in the lease, the monthly rent would be reduced. If the parties failed to agree on the amount of reduction, the matter was to be determined by arbitration. When the district started removing water from the premises in 1950, the lessee informed the district that the water removal would damage the lessee. Three years later, she claimed that she had been damaged and stated that she felt that there should be a reduction of rentals, but the district refused any adjustment. The lessee did not press her claim but continued to pay the full rent and gave notice of the exercise of her option for another five-year term beginning in 1955 on the terms and conditions and at the same rent provided in the lease. In 1960 the lessee demanded arbitration of her damages over the entire period for which the district had pumped and removed water, from 1950 to the end of the lease term in 1960. The trial court concluded that the lessee had been guilty of laches to the district's prejudice so as to waive her right to compel arbitration with respect to matters arising before 1959, but the court ordered arbitration of the lessee's claim with respect to matters arising after 1959.

The Supreme Court affirmed. A party to an arbitration agreement can waive the right to arbitrate. In this case, the lessee should have made her claim for adjustment in rent within one year after the year in which the damages were incurred, and by not doing so, she was guilty of laches. Thus she waived her right to compel arbitration as to the amount of rent reduction to which she might otherwise be entitled because of damages suffered by the removal of water before 1959 (64 Cal. 2d 833, 836) .

[b] Waiver of Arbitration Is Question of Fact

The facts and procedural background of Sawday v. Vista Irrigation Dist. (1966) 64 Cal. 2d 833, 52 Cal. Rptr. 1, 415 P.2d 816 , are discussed in § 50.110[3][a]. In concluding that the lessee waived her right to compel arbitration with respect to matters arising before 1959, the Supreme Court stated that whether there has been waiver of a right to arbitrate is ordinarily a question of fact. A finding of waiver, if supported by sufficient evidence, is binding on an appellate court. In this case, the trial court's finding of waiver was supported by sufficient evidence (64 Cal. 2d 833, 836) .

In Berman v. Health Net (2000) 80 Cal. App. 4th 1359, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 295 , the plaintiff sued his health insurer, asserting various causes of action with regard to the insurer's handling of plaintiff's deceased wife's health care benefits. The insurer filed a petition to compel arbitration. The insured opposed the petition, arguing that the insurer had waived the right to compel arbitration by engaging in substantial discovery. The trial court denied the petition to compel arbitration and denied the insured's motion for reconsideration. The court of appeal affirmed, finding that the insured had been prejudiced by the insurer's conduct of extensive discovery. It found that the insured had demonstrated adequate prejudice to support the trial court's finding of waiver. The test for prejudice is whether defendants used the discovery processes of the court to gain information about plaintiff's case which defendant could not have gained in arbitration. That test was met (80 Cal. App. 4th 1359, 1367-1369) . Further, the insured was prejudiced even though he engaged in discovery of his own. The court also found that any supposed lack of surprise did not support the insurer's position, and subjective bad faith was not a required element of waiver. It finally found that the existence of the insured's non-arbitrable claim for injunctive relief did not nullify the insurer's waiver (80 Cal. App. 4th 1359, 1371-1373) .

In Daugherty Co. v. Kimberly-Clark Corp. (1971) 14 Cal. App. 3d 151, 92 Cal. Rptr. 120 , the plaintiff sued for compensation for work performed in connection with a contract. The trial court granted the defendants' motion for summary judgment, concluding that as a matter of law, the plaintiff's failure to comply strictly with certain arbitration procedures in the contract prevented recovery. The trial court found that the contract provisions requiring arbitration were a condition precedent to maintaining legal action, and the plaintiff had never demanded that arbitration proceedings be begun.

The court of appeal reversed. Arbitration procedures are no more binding on the parties to a contract than other contract terms. The arbitration agreement may be rescinded, repudiated, or avoided, and the ordinary arbitration statutes do not deprive the parties of this power. Whether the parties have waived arbitration procedures is ordinarily a question of fact. In this case, after complaint was filed, the defendants paid the plaintiff a certain sum on disputed claims. If the defendants were convinced that arbitration was a condition precedent to a suit, there was no reason why they should have made this payment. Clearly a question of fact was presented as to whether the parties waived the arbitration terms, abandoned the contract, or replaced it or any of its terms by means of an executed oral agreement, or one implied by the conduct of the parties (14 Cal. App. 3d 151, 157-158) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
1. Plaintiff's Lack of Standing to Sue

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.111

§ 50.111 Contractor Unlicensed at Time of Contract's Execution May Sue If Licensed During Performance

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF WAS FULLY LICENSED AT ALL TIMES DURING PERFORMANCE OF THE WORK THAT WAS THE SUBJECT MATTER OF THE CONTRACT, AND THEREFORE IS NOT BARRED FROM RECOVERING COMPENSATION FOR THE WORK SOLELY BECAUSE PLAINTIFF WAS UNLICENSED WHEN THE CONTRACT WAS EXECUTED.

Contractor Unlicensed at Time of Contract's Execution but Licensed During Performance. If fully licensed at all times during contractual performance, a contractor that is subject to the Contractors' State License Law is not barred from recovering compensation for the work solely because the contractor was unlicensed when the contract was executed (MW Erectors, Inc. v. Niederhauser Ornamental & Metal Works Co. (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 412, 419, 435-445, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 755, 115 P.3d 41).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that the plaintiff was licensed as a contractor during the performance of the contract, and therefore may maintain an action on the contract, as it is not relevant if the plaintiff was not licensed at the time the contract was executed.

This form may also be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a defendant seeks to raise this contention. For example, the form may be used to oppose a defendant's motion for summary judgment when undisputed facts show that, although the plaintiff may not have been licensed when the contract was executed, he or she was licensed at all times during the performance of the contract.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised in opposition to a defendant's motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the supporting and opposing papers showing that undisputed facts establish that plaintiff was licensed to conduct the business covered by the contract during the time of plaintiff's performance.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For discussion and forms relating to licensing matters generally, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 471B, Licensing by Public Agencies (Matthew Bender). For detailed discussion relating to contracts generally, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

These memoranda may be combined with those in §§ 50.112-50.114, as appropriate, to support a contention that a plaintiff may recover notwithstanding issues relating to the plaintiff's license to conduct the business covered by the contract.

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum opposing a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in §§ 50.102, 50.103 may be used in appropriate cases to oppose the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Contractor Unlicensed at Time of Contract's Execution but Licensed During Performance

In MW Erectors, Inc. v. Niederhauser Ornamental & Metal Works Co. (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 412, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 755, 115 P.3d 41 , the plaintiff was a contractor subject to the Contractors' State License Law. The plaintiff sought recovery on a contract that the parties executed before the plaintiff had the required license. After execution of the contract but before commencement of the work, the plaintiff obtained the required license, which the plaintiff retained during the entire time of performing work under the contract. The trial court granted the defendant's summary judgment motion, but the court of appeal reversed and held that the contract was not unenforceable merely because of the plaintiff's unlicensed status at the time the contract was executed.

The Supreme Court affirmed. The court cited two earlier cases in which the issue had been resolved in favor of the contractor: Gaines v. Eastern Pacific (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 679, 186 Cal. Rptr. 421 , and Vitek, Inc. v. Alvarado Ice Palace, Inc. (1973) 34 Cal. App. 3d 586, 110 Cal. Rptr. 86 , both of which are discussed in § 50.111[4][a]. The court, explicitly confirming the conclusions reached in those cases on the issue, held that if a contractor was subject to the Contractors' State License Law and was fully licensed at all times during contractual performance, the contractor is not barred by Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031(a) from recovering compensation for the work solely because the contractor was unlicensed when the contract was executed (36 Cal. 4th 412, 419, 435-445) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Contractor Unlicensed at Time of Contract's Execution but Licensed During Performance

In Gaines v. Eastern Pacific (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 679, 186 Cal. Rptr. 421 , a subcontractor sued the general contractor for breach of contract, and the general contractor cross complained against the subcontractor. Judgment was rendered for the general contractor on the cross complaint.

The court of appeal affirmed. Even though the contractor was unlicensed during the first month of the contract period, it was licensed at all times during performance of the contract (136 Cal. App. 3d 679, 682) . Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031 did not bar recovery on the cross complaint (136 Cal. App. 3d 679, 683) .

In Vitek, Inc. v. Alvarado Ice Palace, Inc. (1973) 34 Cal. App. 3d 586, 110 Cal. Rptr. 86 , an action on a construction contract, the trial court rendered judgment for the plaintiff finding that the plaintiff was a duly licensed contractor at all times during the performance of the contract. The defendants contended on appeal that there was no substantial evidence to support this finding. The plaintiff had not been licensed at the time of the execution of the contract but had been licensed at all times while performance was taking place.

The court of appeal affirmed. When there is a violation of a regulating statute, the prescribed penalty is the equivalent of an express prohibition, and a contract made contrary to its terms is void even though the statute does not pronounce the fact. However, this rule is subject to exceptions, and the statute must be examined as a whole to determine whether the legislature meant that a contract in contravention of it should be void. This case clearly presented an act that was wrong merely because it was prohibited (malum prohibitum), not an act of an immoral character and opposed to sound public policy or designed to further a crime or obstruct justice. The contract was void only if it fell within the area that the legislature intended to prohibit as a necessary deterrence to protect the public interest. Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031 denies all recovery for performance unless the contractor had a license at all times during performance. If the legislature had in mind that the contract was void, it could have acknowledged the fact by omitting the words "during the performance" or adding "while so acting," but since it did not do so, possession of a license on the date of execution was not a matter of concern in the legislature's design for public protection. In this case, although the plaintiff may have committed a misdemeanor, nothing in the law allowed the trial court to impose civil sanctions not authorized by the statute. Any other conclusion would work a distinct hardship on the contractor, and the licensing law should not be used as a shield for the avoidance of a just obligation (34 Cal. App. 3d 586, 590-594) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
1. Plaintiff's Lack of Standing to Sue

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.112

§ 50.112 Substantial Compliance With Contractors' License Law Is Sufficient

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

A CONTRACTOR MAY MAINTAIN AN ACTION FOR COMPENSATION FOR WORK PERFORMED IF HE/SHE HAS SUBSTANTIALLY COMPLIED WITH THE CONTRACTORS' LICENSE LAW AS SET FORTH IN BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONS CODE SECTION 7031(e), EVEN THOUGH HE/SHE DID NOT STRICTLY COMPLY WITH THE LICENSING REQUIREMENT.

A. Purpose of Licensing Requirement. The purpose of the licensing requirement is to protect the public from incompetent or untrustworthy contractors (Davis Co. v. Superior Court (1969) 1 Cal. App. 3d 156, 158, 81 Cal. Rptr. 453).

B. Substantial Compliance With Licensing Requirement Is Sufficient. A contractor may maintain an action on a contract even though he or she has not strictly complied with Business and Professions Code Section 7031 requiring a license, if he or she substantially complied with the statute (Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031(e); Slatkin v. White (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 963, 971-972, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 54).

[EITHER]

C. Elements of Substantial Compliance. The contract in this case was made after 1991, and this action was _____ [commenced before 1995 or previously commenced before 1995 then was dismissed and recommenced after 1994]. The elements of substantial compliance are present because (1) the plaintiff was a duly licensed contractor during [a portion of] the 90 days immediatelypreceding the performance of the act or contract for which compensation was sought, (2) the plaintiff's category of license would have authorized the act or contract, and (3) noncompliance was the result of inadvertent clerical error and other error or delay not caused by negligence (Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031(e); see Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031(f) (actions and proceedings to which statutory elements of substantial compliance with licensing requirements apply)).

[OR]

C. Elements of Substantial Compliance. The contract in this case was made after 1991, and this action was commenced after 1994. The elements of substantial compliance are present because (1) the plaintiff was duly licensed as a contractor in California before the performance of the act or contract, (2) the plaintiff acted reasonably and in good faith to maintain the license, (3) the plaintiff did not know and reasonably should not have known that the plaintiff was not duly licensed, and (4) the plaintiff acted promptly and in good faith to reinstate the plaintiff's license on learning that it was invalid (Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031(e); see Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031(f) (actions and proceedings to which statutory elements of substantial compliance with licensing requirements apply)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that, if the plaintiff did not comply with the Contractors' License Law, the plaintiff substantially complied with the exceptions set forth in Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031(e) and therefore may maintain an action on the contract to recover damages for nonpayment for his or her contract performance.

This form may also be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a defendant seeks to raise this contention. For example, the form may be used to oppose a defendant's motion for summary judgment when undisputed facts show that, although the plaintiff may not have complied with the License Law in all particulars, he or she nevertheless substantially complied with the exceptions in Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031(e).

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised in opposition to a defendant's motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the supporting and opposing papers showing that undisputed facts establish that plaintiff substantially complied with Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031(e).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For discussions and forms relating to contractor licensing requirements in California, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 104, Building Contracts (Matthew Bender). For discussion and forms relating to licensing matters generally, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 471B, Licensing by Public Agencies (Matthew Bender). For detailed discussion relating to contracts generally, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts , (Matthew Bender). See also California Legal Forms, Ch. 88, Licensing of Contractors (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

These memoranda may be combined with those in §§ 50.111, 50.113, and 50.114, as appropriate, to support a contention that a plaintiff may recover notwithstanding issues relating to the plaintiff's license to conduct the business covered by the contract.

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum opposing a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, these memoranda may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the memoranda in § 50.102.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Purpose of Licensing Requirement

Davis Co. v. Superior Court (1969) 1 Cal. App. 3d 156, 81 Cal. Rptr. 453 , involved an unlicensed subcontractor who cross-complained forbreach of warranty by a materialman furnishing material used by the subcontractor in performing his subcontract. The materialman had sued the subcontractor and others to recover the value of materials furnished for use in performance of the subcontract. The materialman moved for summary judgment on the cross complaint on the ground that the subcontractor was not a licensed contractor. The trial court granted the motion.

The court of appeal reversed, stating that the purpose of the licensing requirement is to protect the public from the perils incident to contracting with incompetent or untrustworthy contractors (1 Cal. App. 3d 156, 159) . The court went on to hold that penalty provision proscribing the maintenance of an action by an unlicensed contractor is limited to an action for the collection of compensation for the performance of any act or contract for which a license is required. Thus, illegality attendant on engaging in the business or acting in the capacity of a contractor without a license attaches only to transactions or contracts for construction and similar work described in Bus. & Prof. Code § 7026. As a consequence, an unlicensed contractor may sue for breach of a contract not within the scope of the protective purpose of the statute. In this case, the subcontractor, by the cross complaint, was not seeking compensation for the performance of an illegal contract to provide services to the general contractor. Instead, the cross action arose out of the transaction between the subcontractor as a buyer and the materialman as a seller of materials that were warranted to be fit for the purpose intended (1 Cal. App. 3d 156, 159) .

[b] Substantial Compliance With Licensing Requirement Is Sufficient

The doctrine of substantial compliance may allow an unlicensed contractor to recover damages for breach of contract, but only in limited circumstances. Former Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031(d), operative January 1, 1990 (Stats. 1989, ch. 368), enumerated circumstances in which the judicial doctrine of substantial compliance may apply, and overruled the holding of Latipac, Inc. v. Superior Court (1966) 64 Cal. 2d 278, 281-282, 49 Cal. Rptr. 676, 411 P.2d 564 . Legislation effective January 1, 1995, changed the elements of substantial compliance [see Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031(e); Stats. 1994, ch. 550]. A statement of the purpose of Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031 is given in Hydrotech Systems, Ltd. v. Oasis Waterpark (1991) 52 Cal. 3d 988, 995, 277 Cal. Rptr. 517, 803 P.2d 370 , which is discussed in § 50.102[3][h].

In Slatkin v. White (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 963, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 54 , a contractor recorded a mechanic's lien against plaintiffs' residence for money allegedly owed for the construction of the residence. Plaintiff owners then filed a complaint seeking damages for breach of contract and a mandatory injunction to vacate the lien and prohibit the filing of further liens, on the ground that the contractor did not have a current license. The contractor withdrew the original lien and filed a new one limited to the cost of work performed while his license was not under suspension. He filed an answer and cross-complaint seeking to foreclose the lien. Although he conceded that his license had been suspended because a bonding company had canceled a bond, he claimed he was entitled to file a lien for work he had performed because he had substantially complied with the licensing requirements. Plaintiffs moved for a preliminary injunction seeking to order the release of the second lien. The contractor opposed the motion, claiming that he was licensed when he signed the contract on April 8, 1998. On December 27, 2000, he received notice from the CSLB that his license had been suspended effective August 27, 2000 because of the cancellation of a bond. He immediately attempted to obtain a new one, doing so on June 21, 2001, with an effective date of March 12, 2001. The CSLB reinstated his license retroactive to the March date (102 Cal. App. 4th 963, 966-967) .

The trial court refused to direct the contractor to release the lien. The appellate court affirmed. It reviewed the substantial compliance requirements of Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031(e), finding that the most sensible construction of that section is that a contractor does not necessarily lose the right to be compensated simply because he or she performs additional work after discovering the loss of licensure, as long as the individual did not have knowledge or notice of the loss before the start of the job (102 Cal. App. 4th 963, 968-971) . Based on the record, the court could not reach a conclusive determination of whether the contractor had substantially complied with the licensing requirements, although the limited facts suggested that he did. The issue before the court was whether the superior court had abused its discretion by determining that the contractor should not be ordered to release his lien without affording him an evidentiary hearing. The court concluded that the record did not establish a likelihood that plaintiffs would prevail in defeating the mechanic's lien and that there had been no abuse of discretion (102 Cal. App. 4th 963, 971-972) .

[c] Elements of Substantial Compliance

The doctrine of substantial compliance applies to all contracts made after 1991 and to all actions and arbitrations arising from those contracts, and allows a claim by an unlicensed contractor for damages for breach of contract if the elements of substantial compliance are shown to exist at an evidentiary hearing [Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031(e)]. The elements of substantial compliance depend generally on whether the action or arbitration was commenced before 1995 [see Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031(f)]. The elements applicable to actions and arbitrations commenced before 1995 (or after 1994, if the action or arbitration was commenced before 1995 and subsequently dismissed) are contained in the first alternative Paragraph C. The elements applicable to actions and arbitrations commenced after1994 (except those previously commenced and then dismissed) are contained in the second alternative Paragraph C.

Note that the statutory exception for substantial compliance is not available to a contractor who was not duly licensed at some time before beginning performance under the contract [MW Erectors, Inc. v. Niederhauser Ornamental & Metal Works Co. (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 412, 419, 431-435, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 755, 115 P.3d 41 (contractor that obtained license only after starting work under contract had no standing to invoke statutory exception for substantial compliance), discussed in § 50.111[3][a]].

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
1. Plaintiff's Lack of Standing to Sue

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.113

§ 50.113 Plaintiff Need Not Allege or Prove License When Contract Is Outside Scope of Licensing Statute

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

AN UNLICENSED PARTY TO A CONTRACT MAY MAINTAIN AN ACTION FOR THE BREACH OF THAT CONTRACT THAT IS NOT WITHIN THE SCOPE OF THE PROTECTIVE PURPOSE OF THE LICENSING STATUTE.

A. Contractor Defined. [See § 50.102, Paragraph A.]

B. License Is Unnecessary When Contract Is Outside Scope of Licensing Statute. Since the illegality attendant on engaging in the business or acting in the capacity of a contractor without a license attaches only to transactions or contracts for construction and similar work described in the Contractors' License Law, an unlicensed contractor may bring and maintain an action for the breach of a contract not within the scope of the protective purpose of the statute (Davis Co. v. Superior Court (1969) 1 Cal. App. 3d 156, 159, 81 Cal. Rptr. 453).

C. Purpose of Licensing Requirement. [See § 50.112, Paragraph A.]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that the contract involved in the action is not within the protective scope of a given licensing statute and that plaintiff, although unlicensed under that statute, may therefore maintain an action on the contract.

This form may also be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a defendant seeks to raise this contention. For example, the form may be used to oppose a defendant's motion for summary judgment when undisputed facts show that, although the plaintiff may be unlicensed under a given licensing statute, the contract is nevertheless not within the protective scope of that statute and is enforceable by plaintiff.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised in opposition to a defendant's motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the supporting and opposing papers showing that undisputed facts establish that plaintiff substantially complied with Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031(e).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For discussion and forms relating to licensing matters generally, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 471B, Licensing by Public Agencies (Matthew Bender). For detailed discussion relating to contracts generally, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

These memoranda may be combined with those in §§ 50.111, 50.112, and 50.114, as appropriate, to support a contention that a plaintiff may recover notwithstanding issues relating to the plaintiff's license to conduct the business covered by the contract.

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum opposing a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, these memoranda may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the memoranda in §§ 50.102 or 50.103.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] License Is Unnecessary When Contract Is Outside Scope of Licensing Statute

Davis Co. v. Superior Court (1969) 1 Cal. App. 3d 156, 81 Cal. Rptr. 453 , is discussed in § 50.112[3][a].

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
1. Plaintiff's Lack of Standing to Sue

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.114

§ 50.114 Defendant Cannot Rely on Licensing Requirement to Avoid Payment to Innocent Party

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

WHEN THE ILLEGALITY OF A CONTRACT CONSISTS OF THE FAILURE TO OBTAIN A LICENSE, AND THE TRANSACTION HAS BEEN WHOLLY CONSUMMATED, THE CULPABLE PARTY CANNOT RELY ON THE LICENSING REQUIREMENT TO RETAIN THE PROCEEDS OF THE TRANSACTION AND AVOID PAYMENT TO THE INNOCENT PARTY.

Party Cannot Rely on Licensing Requirement to Avoid Payment to Innocent Party. When the illegality of a contract consists of the failure to obtain a license, and the transaction has been wholly consummated as concerns the parties designed to be protected by the licensing statute, the culpable party cannot rely on the licensing requirement to retain the proceeds of the transaction and avoid payment to the innocent party (Holland v. Morgan & Peacock Properties (1959) 168 Cal. App. 2d 206, 211, 335 P.2d 769).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that illegality of the contract based on failure to be licensed cannot be asserted by the culpable unlicensed party against the innocent party.

This form may also be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a defendant seeks to raise this contention. For example, the form may be used to oppose a defendant's motion for summary judgment when undisputed facts show that plaintiff performed fully under the contract while ignorant of defendant's lack of a proper license. Therefore plaintiff, as the innocent party, may recovery any amount owed by defendant to plaintiff under the contract, and defendant, as the culpable party, may not assert his or her lack of a license to avoid paying that amount.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised in opposition to a defendant's motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the supporting and opposing papers showing that undisputed facts establish that plaintiff performed fully as innocent parties and defendant, as the culpable, unlicensed party, has retained proceeds owing to plaintiff under the contract.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For discussion and forms relating to licensing matters generally, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 471B, Licensing by Public Agencies (Matthew Bender). For detailed discussion relating to contracts generally, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum opposing a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, these memoranda may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the memoranda in § 50.103.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Party Cannot Rely on Licensing Requirement to Avoid Payment to Innocent Party

The facts and procedural background of Holland v. Morgan & Peacock Properties (1959) 168 Cal. App. 2d 206, 335 P.2d 769 , are discussed in § 50.162[3][a]. In this case plaintiff brokers sought to recover a part of a commission on the sale and purchase of real property that defendants had promised to share with plaintiffs if plaintiffs helped find a purchaser for the property. Defendants later sought to avoid sharing the commission by claiming the contract was void in that not all defendants were properly licensed as brokers, a fact which they concealed from plaintiffs until after plaintiffs completed their promised performance. The court of appeal, in affirming a judgment in favor of plaintiffs, noted that when the illegality of a contract consists of the failure of one party to obtain a license, and the transaction has been wholly consummated as concerns the party designed to be protected by the licensing statute, the culpable, unlicensed party cannot rely on the licensing requirement to retain proceeds of the transaction and avoid payment to the innocent party (168 Cal. App. 2d 206, 211) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
1. Plaintiff's Lack of Standing to Sue

5-50 California Points & Authorities §§ 50.115-50.119

[Reserved]

§§ 50.115[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
2. Lapse of Statute of Limitations

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.120

§ 50.120 Action Is Barred by Statute of Limitations

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief].

THIS ACTION IS BARRED BY THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.

A. Accrual of Cause of Action. A cause of action for breach of contract accrues on the failure of the promisor to do the thing contracted for at the time and in the manner contracted (Waxman v. Citizens Nat'l Trust & Sav. Bank (1954) 123 Cal. App. 2d 145, 149, 266 P.2d 48).

[EITHER]

B. Running of Limitation Period. The limitation period begins to run at the time of the breach of the contract (Baker v. Joseph (1860) 16 Cal. 173, 177 ; Barlow v. Collins (1958) 166 Cal. App. 2d 274, 278-279, 333 P.2d 64).

[OR]

B. Running of Limitation Period. The limitation period on an instalment contract begins to run from each date an instalment becomes due (Tillson v. Peters (1940) 41 Cal. App. 2d 671, 676, 107 P.2d 434).

[EITHER]

C. Limitation Period. An action on a written contract must be commenced within four years after the cause of action has accrued (Code Civ. Proc. § 337).

[OR]

C. Limitation Period. An action on a contract not founded on an instrument in writing must be commenced within two years after the cause of action has accrued (Code Civ. Proc. § 339).

[CONTINUE]

[Optional] D. Requirement That Writing Contain Contract. An instrument in writing is not a contract unless it contains the contract to do the thing for the nonperformance of which an action may be brought. The writing must create a duty before a duty may beinferred from the writing. It is not sufficient that a cause of action is in some way remotely or indirectly connected with an instrument in writing or that the instrument is a link in the chain establishing the cause of action (Citizens Cas. Co. v. Otis Clark & Co. (1971) 19 Cal. App. 3d 294, 299-300, 96 Cal. Rptr. 838).

[Optional] E. Requirement of Indication of Acceptance. In order for an action to be founded on an instrument in writing, there must be some tangible written indication of acceptance of the terms of the writing by the defendant (James De Nicholas Associates, Inc. v. Heritage Constr. Corp. (1970) 5 Cal. App. 3d 421, 424, 85 Cal. Rptr. 233).

[Optional] F. Plaintiff's Writings Cannot Prove Defendant's Acceptance. When all the writings tending to show the terms of an agreement are the plaintiff's writings, they cannot be used to show the defendant's acceptance (James De Nicholas Associates, Inc. v. Heritage Constr. Corp. (1970) 5 Cal. App. 3d 421, 425, 85 Cal. Rptr. 233).

[Optional] G. Limitation Period Governing Open Book Account Is Inapplicable. When an action is one to recover installments due under a written contract, the contract provisions are controlling as to the running of the limitation period. The plaintiff may not change the nature of the action into one on an open book account even though the plaintiff keeps a memorandum book in which he or she charges the accounts accruing under the contract and credits the payments made on dates other than that specified under the contract (Stewart v. Claudius (1937) 19 Cal. App. 2d 349, 352, 65 P.2d 933).

[Optional] H. Tolling of Limitation Period. The statute of limitations in a cause of action for breach of contract is tolled by a resident's absence from the state pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 351 only if the out-of-state travel is unrelated to interstate commerce (Filet Menu, Inc. v. Cheng (1999) 71 Cal. App. 4th 1276, 1282-1284, 84 Cal. Rptr. 2d 384).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that the action is barred by either the two-year statute of limitations for oral contracts or the four-year limitation periods for written contracts.

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a defendant seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used to support a general demurrer; if it appears on the face of the complaint, or from a matter of which the court must or may take judicial notice, that the action is barred by the statute of limitations, an objection that an action is barred by the statute of limitations may be set up by demurrer [Baillargeon v. Department of Water & Power (1977) 69 Cal. App. 3d 670, 675, 138 Cal. Rptr. 338] and must be deemed to be included in the ground of a general demurrer that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action [Bell v. Bank of Cal. (1908) 153 Cal. 234, 245, 94 P. 889] . The form may also be used to support a motion for summary judgment when it is not apparent from the face of the complaint that the statutory limitations period has run, but this fact later becomes an indisputable fact in the course of summary judgment proceedings.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised in support of a defendant's general demurrer, the memorandum would include an analysis of the complaint's allegations showing that the applicable statutory limitations period has lapsed prior to the filing of the complaint.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum supporting a general demurrer, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings, and if used in a memorandum supporting a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.130 et seq. may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Accrual of Cause of Action

Waxman v. Citizens Nat'l Trust & Sav. Bank (1954) 123 Cal. App. 2d 145, 266 P.2d 48 , was an action for damages for a divorced father's failure to have a policy of life insurance in force on his life at the time of his death. As part of a property settlement agreement with his former wife, the decedent promised to name their daughter as beneficiary of a life insurance policy. He obtained two policies, each worth $5,000, but one of the policies lapsed before his death. The plaintiff filed a claim against the decedent's estate for $5,000. The trial court rendered judgment for the plaintiff. On appeal, the defendant contended that the cause of action was barred by the four-year statute of limitations, Code Civ. Proc. § 337(1). The defendant argued that the plaintiff had a cause of action on the date the decedent let the policy lapse by ceasing to pay the premiums.

The court of appeal held that a cause of action for breach of contract accrues on the failure of the promisor to do the thing contracted for at the time and in the manner contracted. The decedent, at any time before his death, could have complied with his obligation. Thus, the breach of the obligation did not occur until he died without the $5,000 policy in force. The plaintiff had no right to sue until the agreement had been breached by his failure to have in force, at death, a policy for $5,000 for her benefit and thus, the statute of limitations was not set in motion until the date of the obligation's promised performance--the date of decedent's death (123 Cal. App. 2d 145, 149) .

[b] Running of Limitation Period

In Baker v. Joseph (1860) 16 Cal. 173 , the plaintiff sued to recover several sums of money from the defendant. The plaintiff deposited some money with the defendant in April 1854 to be invested by the defendant in loans at interest, and the principal and interest to be paid to the plaintiff on request. When the plaintiff demanded the money in December 1858, the defendant refused to pay. The defendant included in his answer the defense of the statute of limitations. The plaintiff demurred to the plea of the statute of limitations, and the trial court sustained the demurrer.

The Supreme Court affirmed. The repayment of the money was not to be made until demanded by the plaintiff. The limitation period does not begin to run from the making of a contract but runs from the breach of it; and a depository is not in default, as a general rule, until demand. Theplaintiff thus brought the action within the period allowed by the statute of limitations (16 Cal. 173, 177) .

In Barlow v. Collins (1958) 166 Cal. App. 2d 274, 333 P.2d 64 , the plaintiff sued for breach of contract. The plaintiff alleged that for a number of years the plaintiff and the defendant lived together as husband and wife without the benefit of a marriage license or ceremony, and during these years they agreed to pool their earnings. The defendant later left with the proceeds of a bank account in which they had been placing their joint earnings. The plaintiff demanded his share of the money, but the defendant refused to give it to him. After trial, judgment was rendered for the plaintiff. On appeal the defendant contended that the plaintiff was barred by the statute of limitations from asserting any claim to her share on the profits or wages accumulated beyond the period prescribed by the statute of limitations.

The court of appeal affirmed. The limitation period would run from the time of the breach (which apparently was when the defendant left with the proceeds) or termination of the agreement or when the cause of action accrued. The plaintiff was not barred from claiming his share of the profits because he had brought his action within the period following the breach allowed by the statute of limitations (166 Cal. App. 2d 274, 278-279) .

Tillson v. Peters (1940) 41 Cal. App. 2d 671, 107 P.2d 434 , was an action to recover unpaid installments of rent due under an oral contract for the leasing of real property. The defendant answered and affirmatively alleged that the cause of action was barred by the statute of limitations. The demurrer was apparently overruled. At the trial the plaintiff sought to avoid the effect of the statute of limitations by attempting to prove that the action was founded on a balance of rental shown to be due on an open book account. After trial, judgment was rendered for the plaintiff.

The court of appeal reversed. The fulfillment of the terms of a contract, either written or oral, may not be avoided by attempting to convert the suit for breach of the specific terms of a contract into an action based on an open book account. A suit to recover unpaid installments of rent due according to the terms of a contract, in specified monthly sums, is subject to the bar of the statute of limitations from each date an instalment becomes due. If the action is on an oral contract, the statute of limitations may not be extended from two to four years by attempting to convert the cause into a suit based on an open book account. Since the action was founded on an oral contract that specified the exact installments of rent that became due each month during the term of lease, the limitation period ran on each monthly instalment for two years from the date it became due. Since the action was commenced more than two years after the termination of the lease, the defense of the statute of limitations barred all unpaid installments of rent (41 Cal. App. 2d 671, 676) .

[c] Requirement That Writing Contain Contract

Citizens Cas. Co. v. Otis Clark & Co. (1971) 19 Cal. App. 3d 294, 96 Cal. Rptr. 838 , involved an action against two insurance brokers for breach of an agreement to obtain reinsurance contracts. A loan association had requested the defendant brokers to obtain an all-risk insurance policy for a three-year term. The plaintiff agreed to undertake this policy subject to the express condition that the defendants obtain reinsurance for 50 percent of the risk it assumed. An insurance broker and company (also sued for reformation of the reinsurance agreement) agreed to take 25 percent each of the plaintiff's risk for a one-year term, unaware that the term of the principal policy was for three years or that the plaintiff had instructed the defendants to have the reinsurance for a three-year term. Thereafter, the defendants wrote a letter to the plaintiff in which they reminded the plaintiff of the oral agreement and reported on the progress they had made in fulfilling its oral agreement. Eighteen months after the underlying policy was issued, the loan association was burglarized, at which time the plaintiff claimed that it discovered that the term of the underlying policy was for three years and the reinsurance certificates were for only a one-year term. The plaintiff brought the action more than two years after the burglary. The plaintiff claimed that the agreement with the defendant was a written agreement consisting of the letter written by the defendants to the plaintiff together with the binder, and therefore, the statute of limitations would not bar the action until four years after the burglary. The trial court determined that the cause of action was barred by the statute of limitations and rendered judgment for the defendant.

The court of appeal affirmed. The cause of action was based on an oral agreement. The instrument itself must contain the contract to do the thing for the nonperformance of which the action is brought. It is not sufficient that the cause of action is in some way remotely or indirectly connected with an instrument in writing or that the instrument is a link in the chain establishing the cause of action. The writing must create the duty before a duty may be implied from the writing. The letter from the brokers to the plaintiff did not purport by itself to establish the terms of an agreement. It was the work product of the agreement rather than the agreement itself. Since the action was not filed until more than two years after knowledge of the breach sued upon, it was barred by Code Civ. Proc. § 339(1) prescribing the limitation periods for oral contracts (19 Cal. App. 3d 294, 299-300) .

[d] Requirement of Indication of Acceptance

James De Nicholas Associates, Inc. v. Heritage Constr. Corp. (1970) 5 Cal. App. 3d 421, 85 Cal. Rptr. 233 , was an action for breach of contract. In consideration of the plaintiff's waiving any rights it had to acquire the controlling stock of an investment company and making available to thedefendant certain material that the plaintiff had gathered, the defendant orally agreed to pay the plaintiff $10,000 plus certain expenses incurred by the plaintiff. The plaintiff confirmed the terms of the oral contract by a letter and offered to accept $13,000 for the consideration set forth. The defendant made a partial payment to the plaintiff of $5,000, and the plaintiff sent a second letter to the defendant acknowledging the partial payment. The defendant refused to pay the balance of $8,000. The trial court sustained the defendant's demurrer to the second amended complaint on the ground that the plaintiff's cause of action was barred by Code Civ. Proc. § 339.

The court of appeal affirmed. The plaintiff asserted that a cause of action may be founded on an instrument in writing, notwithstanding that the instrument was not signed by the defendant, when the defendant accepts the contract, relying on the rule of Amen v. Merced County Title Co. (1962) 58 Cal. 2d 528, 532, 25 Cal. Rptr. 65, 375 P.2d 33 , discussed in § 50.132[3][e]. The court of appeal distinguished that case by noting that in the present case any writings tending to show the terms of the agreement were all the plaintiff's writings and not the defendant's. Therefore they could not be used to show the defendant's acceptance. Additionally, there was no written indication of acceptance on the defendants' part. Thus there were no tangible written words of acceptance of the terms of the writing by the defendant (5 Cal. App. 3d 421, 424) .

[e] Plaintiff's Writings Cannot Prove Defendant's Acceptance

James De Nicholas Associates, Inc. v. Heritage Constr. Corp. (1970) 5 Cal. App. 3d 421, 85 Cal. Rptr. 233 , is discussed in [d], above.

[f] Limitation Period Governing Open Book Account Is Inapplicable

Stewart v. Claudius (1937) 19 Cal. App. 2d 349, 65 P.2d 933 , was an action on a written contract for the payment of tuition for the defendant's son in a military academy operated by the plaintiff. The answer pleaded the statute of limitations. The cause was tried before the court, and judgment was rendered for the plaintiff.

The court of appeal modified the judgment and affirmed. When an action is one to recover installments due under a written contract, the provisions of the contract are controlling as to the running of the limitation period; and even though the plaintiff keeps a memorandum book in which he or she charges the accounts accruing under the contract and credits the several payments made, the entries in the book account do not fix a new date for the running of the period. Thus, the court found that the portion of the indebtedness based on the first instalment was barred by the statute oflimitations since the action was filed more than four years after the plaintiff had made written demand for the payment of the instalment (19 Cal. App. 2d 349, 352) .

[g] Tolling of Limitation Period

In Filet Menu, Inc. v. Cheng (1999) 71 Cal. App. 4th 1276, 84 Cal. Rptr. 2d 384 , a California corporation asserted claims for breach of contract, alter ego liability, account stated, and quantum meruit against defendant California resident after he refused to pay for goods shipped and to accept further deliveries. The complaint alleged that any applicable statute of limitations was tolled as against defendant because he had been out of the state for a sufficient amount of time to prevent the running of any applicable statute, including the four-year statute of limitation for breach of a written contract, and therefore Code Civ. Proc. § 351 tolled the four-year statute. Defendant demurred to the complaint, contending that plaintiff's claims were time-barred. The trial court sustained the demurrer, reasoning that the tolling provisions of Code of Civ. Proc. § 351 violated the Commerce Clause of the United States Constitution. The court of appeal reversed. It concluded that Code Civ. Proc. § 351 impermissibly burdens interstate commerce with respect to residents who travel in the course of interstate commerce (71 Cal. App. 4th 1276, 1280-1283) . However, although the complaint alleged that defendant was absent from California for periods sufficient to toll the running of the applicable statutory period, it did not allege the specific reasons for his out-of-state travel. Because the allegations did not describe the extent to which his absences from the state were in the course of interstate commerce, they did not establish that applying Code Civ. Proc. § 351 in the circumstances of this case violated the commerce clause, and the demurrer was improperly sustained (71 Cal. App. 4th 1276, 1284) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Running of Limitation Period

Niles v. Louis H. Rapoport & Sons (1942) 53 Cal. App. 2d 644, 128 P.2d 50 , was an action to recover for legal services rendered to the defendants by the plaintiff's assignor. In 1931 the defendants retained the plaintiff's assignor to bring an action against a couple named Stern to recover a deficiency judgment after foreclosure of a mortgage. In August 1931 the plaintiff's assignor filed the action, and judgment was rendered for the deficiency. The plaintiff's assignor stated that it was agreed that his fee for this work would be 50 percent of anything recovered, and this fee arrangement was confirmed by the defendants from time to time. In 1939 the plaintiff's assignor arranged a settlement between the defendants and Stern. According to the plaintiff's assignor, he and the defendants agreedthat he was to be paid half of the monthly amortized payments provided for in the note executed by Stern in compliance with the settlement. The defendants' answer raised the bar of the statute of limitations. The trial court rendered judgment for the plaintiff. The defendants contended on appeal that the trial court had failed to make any findings on the issue of the statute of limitations. The court of appeal disagreed. The record indicated that the original agreement for the payment of a portion of the recovery on the Stern litigation was made by the defendants in 1931 and confirmed by them from time to time. There was also evidence that the plaintiff's assignor continued to work on the matter of collecting the account up to and beyond the time the note was made in 1939. The limitation period does not begin to run from the time of making a contract but commences when the cause of action accrues, which is the date of breach of the obligation. In the present case, the trial court had implicitly found that the breach occurred at the time the defendants took possession of the note and proceeds and failed or refused to pay the plaintiff's assignor his half interest (53 Cal. App. 2d 644, 650-651) .

Trigg v. Arnott (1937) 22 Cal. App. 2d 455, 71 P.2d 330 , was an action on a promissory note. The defendant's answer included the defense of the statute of limitations. After a trial, judgment was rendered for the defendant. In reversing the judgment, the court of appeal stated that the note on which the action was based was by its terms payable in monthly installments, and interest on the principal amount should also be paid monthly. Consequently, the cause of action was barred as to all installments of principal and interest that had become due more than four years before the date the action was commenced. The action was not barred as to the installments that became due less than four years after the action was commenced, and the plaintiff was entitled to recover (22 Cal. App. 2d 455, 459) .

[b] Limitation Period Governing Open Book Account Is Inapplicable

In Tsemetzin v. Coast Federal Savings (1997) 57 Cal. App. 4th 1334, 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 726 , a lessor sued to recover rent. The lessee, claiming that the limitation period had long since run on all of the lessor's claims, moved for summary judgment. The lessor responded that since the lessee hadmade some partial payments of rent and had exchanged correspondence with the lessor acknowledging that a dispute existed as to the amount of unpaid rent due, an "open book" account had been established between them, and the limitation period did not begin until the date of the last item. The trial court granted the motion for summary judgment (57 Cal. App. 4th 1334, 1340-1341) . The court of appeal reversed. The lessor could not expand the limitation period by characterizing the lessee's lease obligations as "open book" items. Money that becomes due under an express contract, such as rent due under a lease, cannot, in the absence of a contrary agreement between the parties, be treated as items under an open book account so as to extend the statutory limitation period. However, in this case the lessor was at least entitled to seek recovery of the unpaid rent for the four years preceding the filing of the complaint (57 Cal. App. 4th 1334, 1343-1344) .

In Maggio, Inc. v. Neal (1987) 196 Cal. App. 3d 745, 241 Cal. Rptr. 883 , the plaintiff had sued its former vice-president for marketing to recover what it characterized as loans. The defendant claimed they were nonreimbursable advances against bonuses. The trial court found that the advances constituted an open book account and an account stated. The court of appeal disagreed, finding no evidence to establish an agreement by the parties that the transactions would be carried as an account (196 Cal. App. 3d 745, 752-753) . The four-year limitation does not apply when the creditor acts in a self-serving manner by creating what is in effect a private record of an account without informing the debtor. There is no reason to permit a creditor to turn this private record into an account stated merely by mailing a summary of accounts allegedly due to the debtor and treating the debtor's silence as acceptance (196 Cal. App. 3d 745, 751-752) . The court of appeal modified the judgment by decreasing the award for the plaintiff to eliminate amounts representing advances made more than two years before the action was brought (196 Cal. App. 3d 745, 754) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
2. Lapse of Statute of Limitations

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.121

§ 50.121 Contract Provision Supersedes Statute of Limitations

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THIS ACTION IS BARRED BY A CONTRACT PROVISION THAT SUPERSEDES THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.

A. Contract May Shorten Limitation Period. In California there is no public policy objection to a contract provision shortening the statutory limitation period for an action on the contract (Tebbets v. Fidelity & Cas. Co. (1909) 155 Cal. 137, 139, 99 P. 501).

B. Period Fixed Must Not Be Unreasonable. If a contract provision shortens the limitation period, the period fixed must be not so unreasonable as to show imposition or undue advantage in some way (Beeson v. Schloss (1920) 183 Cal. 618, 622, 192 P. 292).

C. Reasonableness Equates With Effective Remedy. A shortened limitation period is not unreasonable if it allows sufficient time for the plaintiff to effectively pursue a judicial remedy (Moreno v. Sanchez (2003) 106 Cal. App. 4th 1415, 1430, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 684).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of a contention that an action is barred by a contract provision that supersedes the statute of limitations. Typically, this would be a provision specifying a period shorter than the applicable statute of limitations within which a party to the contract is permitted make a claim against another party to the contract. These memoranda should be combined with other memoranda pertaining to the specific procedural context in which they are raised. For example, they might be combined with a general memorandum supporting a motion for summary adjudication or summary judgment. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion and forms for use in pleading limitation of the action as an affirmative defense, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 345, Limitation of Actions (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Memoranda

For additional forms for memoranda relating generally to limitation of an action, see Ch. 143, Limitation of Actions .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Contract May Shorten Limitation Period

In Tebbets v. Fidelity & Cas. Co. (1909) 155 Cal. 137, 99 P. 501 , the plaintiff sued to recover on a life insurance policy which provided that "legal proceedings for recovery hereunder may not be brought ... unless begun within six months from time of death." The trial court sustained a general demurrer because the complaint showed that the action was commenced more than six months after the date of death.

The California Supreme Court affirmed. The court stated, "The general rule, supported by the great weight of authority, is that a condition in a policy of insurance, providing that no recovery shall be had thereon unless suit be brought within a given time, is valid, if the time limited be in itself not unreasonable." The plaintiff relied on a Kentucky case holding that, on grounds of public policy, the statute of limitations may not be shortened by contract. The California court disagreed. "Such is not the rule in this state, where such statutes are regarded as statutes of repose, carrying with them, not a right protected under the rule of public policy, but a mere personal right for the benefit of the individual, which may be waived. [Citations omitted.] We are unable to perceive that any distinction can be made upon the ground of public policy between the right of a party to waive the plea of the statute of limitations as a defense to an action, and his right to waive a portion of the time granted by the statute for the commencement of an action. The supreme court of Kentucky seems to be at variance with the consensus of judicial opinion upon this question" (155 Cal. 137, 139) .

The fact that the contract in question was an insurance policy was not relevant. The court cited its opinion in an action against sureties on a bond [State Loan & Trust Co. v. Cochran (1900) 130 Cal. 245, 62 P. 466] as "declaring that the authorities uphold the validity of an agreement shortening for a definite or limited period the statute of limitations" (155 Cal. 137, 139) . That opinion had relied on the court(s earlier opinion in an action to collect a debt under a contract [Wells, Fargo & Co. v. Enright (1900) 127 Cal. 669, 60 P. 439], in which the court said, "In this state, at least, the validity of such agreements must be regarded as established" (130 Cal. 245, 252) .

[b] Period Fixed Must Not Be Unreasonable

Beeson v. Schloss (1920) 183 Cal. 618, 192 P. 292 , was an action for recovery of commissions alleged to be due for services rendered to the defendant by the plaintiff as a traveling salesman, under a written contract. The defendant pleaded that the action was barred by a limitation provision in the contract: "nor shall any suit or proceedings of any kind be brought against Schloss Bros. & Co. after the lapse of six months from" a specified event. The action was commenced after the lapse of that six-month period, but the trial court entered judgment for the plaintiff because the court concluded that the six-month limitation period fixed by the contract was unreasonable.

The California Supreme Court reversed. Citing the Tebbets case [see [a], above], the court said, "It is a well-settled proposition of law that the parties to a contract may stipulate therein for a period of limitation, shorter than that fixed by the statute of limitations, and that such stipulation violates no principle of public policy, provided the period fixed be not so unreasonable as to show imposition or undue advantage in some way" (183 Cal. 618, 622) . The court then held, "In making its ruling ... the court below put it on the ground that the limitation was unreasonable because of the fact that the plaintiff could not get jurisdiction of defendants by personal service of process in California. This was not a sufficient reason. ... The ground upon which the court below ruled, is, in our opinion, wholly untenable. ... The limitation of six months was not unreasonable as a matter of law" (183 Cal. 618, 623-624) . Furthermore, the court concluded, after summarizing the evidence, the circumstances did not render that period unreasonable: "It is certain, therefore, that the plaintiff, if he had begun his action in time [within six months as provided in the contract], would have had the same facilities for pleading and proving his case as he had in the action begun some five months too late" (183 Cal. 618, 626) .

[c] Reasonableness Equates With Effective Remedy

In Moreno v. Sanchez (2003) 106 Cal. App. 4th 1415, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 684 , buyers sued a home inspector for failing to discover and report certain defects in the house they ultimately purchased. The trial court entered a judgment of dismissal after sustaining the inspector's demurrer to the second amended complaint, on the ground that the one-year limitation period specified in the home inspection contract barred the action.

The court of appeal reversed and directed the trial court to overrule the demurrer. Citing the Beeson case [see [b], above], the court stated, "It is true California courts have afforded contracting parties considerable freedom to modify the length of a statute of limitations. Courts generally enforce parties' agreements for a shorter limitations period than otherwise provided by statute, provided it is reasonable. 'Reasonable' in this context means the shortened period nevertheless provides sufficient time to effectively pursue a judicial remedy" (106 Cal. App. 4th 1415, 1430) .

The contract in this case required an action to be commenced within one year from the date of the home inspection. (This provision was in a standardized contract. The buyers initially objected to it but ultimately signed the contract after the home inspector refused to remove the provision.) In the context of this case, that one-year period was unreasonably short because it undercut the delayed-discovery rule. The court concluded that a contractual provision "waiving the benefits of the delayed discovery rule runs afoul of important public policy considerations. Also, ... we are unable to find a contractual provision 'reasonable' where it only gives homeowners a single year to discover their causes of action against home inspectors. A four-year outside limit on the time permitted for the homeowner to discover the inspector's negligence and its adverse consequences is clearly 'reasonable.' A contractual provision setting a somewhat shorter outside limit conceivably might be 'reasonable,' too. But a one-year outside boundary completely vitiates the delayed discovery rule. Indeed, such a provision blatantly substitutes a straight one-year statute of limitations for the delayed discovery rule. Consistent with the policies behind this rule, we hold the buyers' causes of action did not accrue under the one-year statute of limitations provided in the home inspection contract until they discovered, or with the exercise of reasonable diligence, should have discovered the home inspector negligently failed to discover, or negligently failed to report, material defects in the home" (106 Cal. App. 4th 1415, 1434) .

43 of 168 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
2. Lapse of Statute of Limitations

5-50 California Points & Authorities §§ 50.122-50.129

[Reserved]

§§ 50.122[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
2. Lapse of Statute of Limitations

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.130

§ 50.130 Fraud Tolls Running of Statutory Limitation Period

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

WHEN A BREACH OF CONTRACT INTEGRALLY INVOLVES FRAUD, THE ELEMENTS OF WHICH HAVE BEEN PLEADED, THE ACTION, AS REGARDS THE BAR OF THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS, MUST BE TREATED AS ONE FOR RELIEF ON THEGROUND OF FRAUD, AND THE LIMITATION PERIOD DOES NOT BEGIN UNTIL DISCOVERY OF THE FACT CONSTITUTING THE FRAUD, AS PRESCRIBED BY CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE SECTION 338.

A. Fraud Tolls Running of Statute. When fraud is ingrained with a breach of contract, the action, as regards the bar of the statute of limitations, must be treated as one for relief on the ground of fraud, and the limitation period does not run until the discovery of the facts constituting the fraud as prescribed by Code of Civil Procedure Section 338 (Gregory v. Spieker (1895) 110 Cal. 150, 153, 42 P. 576).

[Optional] B. Breach Accomplished Secretly. When a breach of contract is accomplished by the defendant's secret confederacy with another person in which the other person's name is used to hide the defendant's actions, fraud is so ingrained with the breach of a contract that the action, as regards the bar of the statute of limitations, must be treated as one for relief on the ground of fraud (Gregory v. Spieker (1895) 110 Cal. 150, 153, 42 P. 576).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of the contention that an action for contract damages is not barred by lapse of the applicable statute of limitations, because the complaint alleges the elements of fraud as well as breach of contract, the applicable period therefore begins to run from the date the plaintiff discovers or reasonably should have discovered the facts constituting the fraud, and the action was initiated within the period so calculated. When rights arising out of fraud and contract are blended, the statute of limitations on a contract begins to run on the discovery by the aggrieved party of the facts constituting fraud [see San Fillippo v. Griffiths (1975) 51 Cal. App. 3d 640, 645, 124 Cal. Rptr. 399] .

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a plaintiff seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used by plaintiff to oppose a defendant's general demurrer interposed on the ground that the applicable limitation period has lapsed.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised in opposition toa defendant's general demurrer, the memorandum would include an analysis of the complaint's allegations showing that the elements of fraud are alleged, and that the action was timely commenced when calculating the applicable limitation period from the date of plaintiff's discovery of the facts constituting the fraud.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

These memoranda may be combined, when appropriate, with the memoranda set out in § 50.131 et seq., which set out other grounds for arguing that an action for contract damages is not barred by the applicable statute of limitations.

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum opposing a general demurrer, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.120 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Fraud Tolls Running of Statute

Gregory v. Spieker (1895) 110 Cal. 150, 42 P. 576 , was an action to enjoin violations of a contract and to recover damages for the fraudulent breach. The defendant, who owned a liquid compound and the formula for its manufacture, sold the compound to Lee, who then assigned it to the plaintiff. The defendant agreed not to manufacture or sell any of the compound in the county but later secretly combined with Lash to manufacture and sell it under a different name. These facts were divulged on the trial of an action between Lash and the defendant. The defendant pleaded the bar of the statute of limitations, but the trial court, ruling that the action was not barred, rendered judgment for the plaintiff.

The Supreme Court reversed and remanded for a new trial because of the trial court's error concerning the correct measure of damages. However, the facts as found by the trial court showed that fraud was so ingrained with the defendant's breach of the contract that the action, as regards the bar of the statute of limitations, must be treated as one for relief on the ground of fraud. Thus, the action was saved by the provision of Code Civ. Proc. § 338, that in an action for relief on the ground of fraud, the cause of action is not to be deemed to have accrued until the discovery of the facts constituting the fraud (110 Cal. 150, 153) .

[b] Breach Accomplished Secretly

Gregory v. Spieker (1895) 110 Cal. 150, 42 P. 576 , is discussed in [a], above.

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Fraud Tolls Running of Statute

Souza & McCue Constr. Co. v. Superior Court (1962) 57 Cal. 2d 508, 20 Cal. Rptr. 634, 370 P.2d 338 , involved an action seeking damages for breach of a contract for the construction of a storm sewer. The defendant answered and cross complained for damages for the balance due under the contract for goods and services furnished. The plaintiff knew before entering into the contract that the soil at the construction site was unstable and failed to inform the defendant of the adverse soil conditions and represented in its plans and specifications that the soil was stable, with the intent of inducing the defendant to make a lower bid than it would make on the basis of the actual soil conditions. The defendant relied on the misrepresentation in making a low bid, and as a result of the unstable soil conditions, the cost to the defendant of doing the work was much greater than it otherwise would have been. The plaintiff refused to pay the claim for damages that the defendant presented. When the plaintiff's answer to the cross complaint raised the statute of limitations, the defendant moved for leave to file an amended answer and cross complaint, which was denied. The defendant then sought a writ of mandate to direct the trial court to permit the filing of the amended pleading. The Supreme Court granted the writ. The amended pleadings alleged facts showing the fraudulent breach of a contractual duty because of fraud. For purposes of the statute of limitations, an action for relief on the ground of fraud is not deemed to accrue until discovery of the fraud. The action alleged in the proposed pleading by the defendant, which is based on a fraudulent breach of a contractual duty, comes under this provision (57 Cal. 2d 508, 511) .

In Watts v. Crocker-Citizens National Bank (1982) 132 Cal. App. 3d 516, 183 Cal. Rptr. 304 , an action for breach of contract to furnish water to certain property owners, the trial court dismissed one owner's action asbarred by the four-year statute of limitations set by Code Civ. Proc. § 337. The trial court ruled that the statute began to run when the defendant completed the pipeline but failed to supply water as required by the contract, rather than when the owner first discovered the absence of water two years later. The court of appeal reversed, holding that the defendant's failure to inform the owner of its failure to supply water constituted fraud, and the fraud was not vitiated by the owner's delayed discovery, since no circumstances existed to cause him to investigate. Accordingly, the statute of limitations was tolled until his actual discovery of the breach of contract (132 Cal. App. 3d 516, 523) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
2. Lapse of Statute of Limitations

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.131

§ 50.131 Statutory Limitation Period Runs From Occurrence of Event When Contract of Warranty Relates to Future Event

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

WHEN A CONTRACT OF WARRANTY RELATES TO A FUTURE EVENT BEFORE WHICH THE DEFECT CANNOT BE DISCOVERED BY THE EXERCISE OF REASONABLE DILIGENCE, THE WARRANTY IS PROSPECTIVE IN CHARACTER, AND THE LIMITATION PERIOD BEGINS TO RUN AS OF THE TIME OF THE EVENT.

A. Running of Limitation Period in Action Involving Warranty. When a contract of warranty relates to a future event before which the defect cannot be discovered by the exercise of reasonable diligence, the warranty, even if accompanied by a representation as to present condition, is prospective in character, and the limitation period begins to run as of the time of that event (Aced v. Hobbs-Sesack Plumbing Co. (1961) 55 Cal. 2d 573, 584, 12 Cal. Rptr. 257, 360 P.2d 897).

[Optional] B. Limitation Period Tolled. The statute of limitations in a cause of action for breach of warranty is tolled as long as the warrantor claims that the problem can be remedied and is attempting to correct the problem (Southern Cal. Enterprises v. Walter & Co. (1947) 78 Cal. App. 2d 750, 755, 178 P.2d 785).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that an action for contract damages is not barred by lapse of theapplicable statute of limitations, because the complaint alleges facts that show the contract sued on was for breach of a warranty relating to a future event, and the defect could not have been discovered by the exercise of reasonable diligence before the event.

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a plaintiff seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used by plaintiff to oppose a defendant's general demurrer interposed on the ground that the applicable limitation period has lapsed.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised in opposition to a defendant's general demurrer, the memorandum would include an analysis of the complaint's allegations showing that the contract sued on included a warranty relating to a future event, and the defect could not have been discovered by the exercise of reasonable diligence before the occurrence of that event.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

These memoranda may be combined, when appropriate, with the memoranda set out in § 50.130 and § 50.132 et seq., which set out other grounds for arguing that an action for contract damages is not barred by the applicable statute of limitations. For memoranda relating to warranties generally, see Ch. 206, Sales .

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum opposing a general demurrer, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.120 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Running of Limitation Period in Action Involving Warranty

Aced v. Hobbs-Sesack Plumbing Co. (1961) 55 Cal. 2d 573, 12 Cal. Rptr. 257, 360 P.2d 897 , was in part a cross action by a general contractor against a subcontractor. The general contractor had contracted to build a home with a radiant heating system, which the subcontractor installed in the concrete slab floor. Numerous leaks developed in the tubing, and two years after installation, the entire system had to be replaced. The homeowners sued the general contractor, who in turn filed a cross complaint defendant subcontractor. The general contractor's cross complaint relied solely on the theory that defendant subcontractor had breached an implied warranty of merchantability. The trial court initially rendered judgment for the cross defendant on several ground, including the ground that the action was barred by the applicable statute of limitations. The cross complainant moved for a new trial, however, and the court granted this motion. The cross defendant appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed and remanded for a new trial. With regard to the issue of the statute of limitations, the subcontractor argued that the four-year period began to run when he completed his work on the heating system, and the cross complaint was filed more than four years afterwards. The Court, however, disagreed, holding that the four-year period began to run when the leaks developed, and the cross complaint was timely filed within four years of this occurrence. The Court reasoned that the case came within the operation of the principle that, if a warranty relates to a future event before which the defect cannot be discovered by the exercise of reasonable diligence, the warranty, even though accompanied by a representation as to present condition, is prospective in character, and the limitation period begins to run as of the time the future event occurs (55 Cal. 2d 573, 584) . In this case, the implied warranty would include a prospective warranty that the tubing would not, within a reasonable period of time, corrode and leak. Since, however, the tubing was embedded in the concrete floor, there was no way, in the exercise of reasonable diligence, to discover whether the pipe were defective until actual leaking began (55 Cal. 2d 573, 583-584) .

[b] Limitation Period Tolled

Southern Cal. Enterprises v. Walter & Co. (1947) 78 Cal. App. 2d 750, 178 P.2d 785 , was an action for damages for breach of warranty made on the sale of a carpet. The plaintiff bought the carpet from the defendant after entering into an oral agreement by which the defendant agreed that if the plaintiff would purchase the carpet, the carpet when installed in the plaintiff's place of business would last for six-to-eight years. Within twoyears before the commencement of the action but less than six years after installation, the carpet became unfit for the plaintiff's use. The defendant attempted to repair the imperfections in the carpet by removing and replacing portions and recementing other portions but without success. The defendant demurred on the ground that the cause of action was barred by the statute of limitations set forth in Code Civ. Proc. § 339(1). The trial court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend.

The court of appeal reversed. The cause of action was on a warranty of a future happening that had not arisen, and the limitation period did not begin to run at the date of sale but was postponed until the future event failed to materialize. The statute is tolled as long as the vendor claims that the defect in the article can be remedied and is attempting to correct the error (78 Cal. App. 2d 750, 755) . (It is not clear whether the warrantor must be actually attempting to correct the error or may be merely claiming to remedy the problem.)

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
2. Lapse of Statute of Limitations

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.132

§ 50.132 Four Year Limitation Period Applies to Action on Contract Evidenced by Writing

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE FOUR-YEAR LIMITATION PERIOD APPLIES TO A CONTRACT FOUNDED ON AN INSTRUMENT IN WRITING.

A. Limitation Period for Written Contract. The four-year limitation period applies to a contract founded on an instrument in writing (Code Civ. Proc. § 337(1)).

[Optional] B. Letter Accepted by Party Is Instrument in Writing. A letter that constitutes an offer and was accepted by the plaintiff is evidence of a writing signed by the party to be charged; therefore, the four-year statute of limitations is applicable to an action for damages for breach of the contract by the offeror (Ravel v. Hubbard (1952) 112 Cal. App. 2d 255, 258-259, 246 P.2d 88).

[Optional] C. Receipt for Money Containing Promise Is Instrument in Writing. A written receipt for money that contains words from which a promise may be inferred, arising directly from the receipt itself and including its terms, is an instrument in writing to which the four-year statute of limitations provided by Code of Civil Procedure Section 337(1) applies. All obligations and promises that the writing's words necessarily import must be regarded as beingincluded in the terms of the writing (O'Brien v. King (1917) 174 Cal. 769, 773, 164 P. 631 ; Ashley v. Vischer (1864) 24 Cal. 322, 327-329) .

[Optional] D. Action by Third Party Beneficiary Is on Written Contract. An action by a third party beneficiary is one on an obligation founded on a written instrument within the meaning of Code of Civil Procedure Section 337, although parol evidence may be necessary to show that the party maintaining the action is within the class intended to be benefitted by the contract and to show the extent of the party's interest (Division of Labor Law Enforcement v.

Dennis (1947) 81 Cal. App. 2d 306, 311, 183 P.2d 932).

[Optional] E. Action by Employees Involving Collective Bargaining Agreement. The four-year limitation period prescribed by Code of Civil Procedure Section 337(1) applies to an action by orally hired employees to recover the difference between the wages actually received and the amounts claimed to have been payable to them under the provisions of collective bargaining agreements between the employer and unions (Division of Labor Law Enforcement v. Dennis (1947) 81 Cal. App. 2d 306, 310-311, 183 P.2d 932).

[Optional] F. Escrow Instructions in Writing Constitute Written Contract. An action for failure to comply with escrow instructions is on a written contract to which the four-year limitation period prescribed in Code of Civil Procedure Section 337 applies, if the instructions are in writing and the escrow holder accepts them, or if the escrow holder prepares the instructions and offers to perform them, and the buyer and seller accept the offer (Amen v. Merced County Title Co. (1962) 58 Cal. 2d 528, 532, 25 Cal. Rptr. 65, 375 P.2d 33).

[Optional] G. Blanks in Contract. The omission of information to be inserted in blanks in a written instrument does not invalidate the agreement as a written contract (Benard v. Walkup (1969) 272 Cal. App. 2d 595, 602, 77 Cal. Rptr. 544).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that a particular contract action is governed by the four-year limitations period applicable to written contracts [Code Civ. Proc. § 337(1)], rather than the two-year period applicable to oral contracts [Code Civ. Proc. § 339(1)].

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a plaintiff seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used by plaintiff to oppose a defendant's general demurrer interposed on the ground that the action is barred by lapse of the two-year period.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised in opposition to a defendant's general demurrer, the memorandum would include an analysis of the complaint's allegations which set out, or allege the substance of, a contract embodied in an instrument in writing within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 337(1).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

These memoranda may be combined, when appropriate, with the memoranda set out in §§ 50.130, 50.131, and § 50.133 et seq., which set out other grounds for arguing that an action for contract damages is not barred by the applicable statute of limitations. In particular, they may be combined with the memoranda set out in § 50.133, which relates to application of the four-year period to a written contract lacking the defendant's signature, or with those set out in § 50.134, which relate to application of this period to a contract that includes an implied promise.

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum opposing a general demurrer, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.120 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Letter Accepted by Party Is Instrument in Writing

Ravel v. Hubbard (1952) 112 Cal. App. 2d 255, 246 P.2d 88 , was an action to recover damages for breach of a contract by which the plaintiff was to haul the defendant's prefabricated houses. The defendant wrote a letter to the plaintiff in which the defendant stated that it was eager to have a mutual agreement regarding the trucking of its houses. The terms and conditions of the agreement were outlined in the letter and accepted by the plaintiff, who started performance of the agreement. The defendant later permitted other persons to haul the houses and attempted to terminate the plaintiff's agreement. The plaintiff sued to recover for lost profits. The defendant demurred on the ground that the cause of action was barred by the two-year statute of limitations applicable to oral contracts. The trial court overruled the demurrer.

The court of appeal affirmed. The letter signed by the defendant was an offer that was accepted by the plaintiff. At that time it became a contract evidenced by a writing signed by the party to be charged. Therefore, the four-year statute of limitations, not the two-year statute, was applicable (112 Cal. App. 2d 255, 258-259) .

[b] Receipt for Money Containing Promise Is Instrument in Writing

O'Brien v. King (1917) 174 Cal. 769, 164 P. 631 , was an action on a debt. The plaintiff had lent a sum of money to the defendant, who acknowledged receiving the money in writing that also stated the date and that the money was received at 5-percent interest. The defendant answered the amended complaint and pleaded the bar of the statute of limitations. Judgment was rendered for the plaintiff. On appeal, the defendant contended that the contract was oral and was barred by the two-year statute of limitations, Code Civ. Proc. § 339(1).

The Supreme Court affirmed. In order for an action to be founded on an instrument in writing, the instrument must, itself, contain a contract to do the thing for the nonperformance of which the action is brought. In this case the writing was more than a mere receipt. The words "at five percent interest" imported into the writing an additional and significant element. By embodying the statement that the money had been received at a given rate of interest, the only reasonable meaning was that the money was received as a loan at the specified interest rate. Therefore, a loan being established by the writing, a promise to repay was implied by necessary inference of law and fact. The promise must be one arising directly from the writing itself and included in its terms. In determining whether the obligation is supported by an express promise or stipulation in the writteninstrument, all obligations and promises that the writing's words necessarily import must be regarded as being included in the terms of the writing. Since the promise in the receipt in this case arose directly from the writing itself, the four-year statute of limitations for written contracts, Code Civ. Proc. § 337(1), applied (174 Cal. 769, 773) .

Ashley v. Vischer (1864) 24 Cal. 322 , was an action on a debt. The defendant had signed a receipt for money stating that he was the holder of three checks in a certain amount that were to be converted into cash and then to be applied to the account of John Morrison. The trial court ruled that the action was not barred by the two-year statute of limitations and rendered judgment for the plaintiff.

The Supreme Court affirmed. The words "To be converted into cash as best possible and to be applied to the account of John Morrison" went beyond a mere acknowledgment of the receipt of money. The receipt indicated to whom the money belonged and contained a promise to apply it to Morrison's account. Thus the instrument showed on its face a liability to the account. Consequently, the liability was founded on an instrument of writing, and the four-year limitation period applied (24 Cal. 322, 327-329) .

[c] Action by Third Party Beneficiary Is on Written Contract

Division of Labor Law Enforcement v. Dennis (1947) 81 Cal. App. 2d 306, 183 P.2d 932 , was an action by an assignee of the defendant's former employees to recover the difference between the wages actually paid to the employees and the amounts claimed to have been payable to them under collective bargaining agreements. The defendant's demurrer was sustained without leave to amend on the ground that it appeared on the face of the complaint that all claims alleged were barred by Code Civ. Proc. § 339 providing for a two-year limitation period.

The court of appeal reversed. Two separate and distinct contracts were involved: the oral contract of hire between the employees and the employer and the written collective bargaining agreement between the employer and the unions. In this situation, Civ. Code § 1559 (a contract made expressly for the benefit of a third person is enforceable by that person) must be taken into consideration. The written contract contained an agreement by the defendant to pay certain wages to anyone working for him in certain capacities. The complaint alleged that the plaintiff's assignors did certain work for the defendant in some of these classifications and in accordance with the contract, and certain amounts thus became due under the contract. There was a definite promise to pay anyone of a certain class, and all that was required was for the plaintiff's assignors to identify themselves as members of that class and show the amount of work done. Although the promise must be one arising directly from the writing itselfand included in its terms, in determining whether the obligation is supported by an express promise in the written instrument, the court must regard as included in the terms of the writing all obligations and promises that its words necessarily import. Under this rule, and under Civ. Code § 1559, the action was based on an obligation or liability founded on an instrument in writing within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 337. An action by a third party beneficiary can be an action on an obligation founded on a written instrument within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 337, even though parol evidence may be necessary to show that the party maintaining the action is within the class intended to be benefitted by the other contract and to show the extent of the party's interest (81 Cal. App. 2d 306, 311) .

[d] Action by Employees Involving Collective Bargaining Agreement

Division of Labor Law Enforcement v. Dennis (1947) 81 Cal. App. 2d 306, 183 P.2d 932 , is discussed in [c], above.

[e] Escrow Instructions in Writing Constitute Written Contract

Amen v. Merced County Title Co. (1962) 58 Cal. 2d 528, 25 Cal. Rptr. 65, 375 P.2d 33 , was an action for breach of an escrow contract and for negligence. The plaintiff and her husband made a contract to buy a tavern. The contract, in the form of escrow instructions, was typed on forms provided by the defendant and was signed by the sellers and by the plaintiff and her husband. The instructions to the defendant stated that any debts over $10,000 would be paid by the defendant out of the proceeds of the sale; that the escrow was accepted by the defendant subject to all terms and conditions set forth in the contract and printed on the back; and that the terms, conditions, and the instructions given in the contract had been read and agreed to by all parties signing the escrow instructions. The defendant failed to inform the plaintiff of the potential liability for state sales taxes owed by the sellers. When the sellers failed to pay the sales taxes, the plaintiff received notice of her liability as successor to the sellers and thus she became liable for the debts of the sellers in an amount greater than $10,000 despite the fact that she had instructed the defendant to pay debts exceeding $10,000 out of the proceeds. The plaintiff alleged that the defendant breached an implied promise to inform her of the potential tax liability. The trial court sustained the defendant's demurrer on the ground that the two-year statute of limitations applicable to an action on a contract not founded on an instrument of writing barred the action.

The Supreme Court reversed. An action is on a written contract even though it is based on a promise implied by the writing, and thus the action was not barred by the statute of limitations. When escrow instructions arein writing and the escrow holder prepares the instructions and offers to perform them, and the buyer and seller accept the offer, an action for failure to comply with the instructions is on a written contract. The contract may be in writing for purposes of the statute of limitations even though it was accepted orally or by an act other than signing (58 Cal. 2d 528, 532) .

[f] Blanks in Contract

In Benard v. Walkup (1969) 272 Cal. App. 2d 595, 77 Cal. Rptr. 544 , the plaintiff sued for legal malpractice based on a contingent-fee contract for legal services. The defendant pleaded the statute of limitations. The trial court found that the plaintiff's cause of action was not barred because it was governed by the four-year statute of limitations for actions on written instruments [see Code Civ. Proc. § 337] and not by the two-year statute of limitations for actions on oral contracts [see Code Civ. Proc. § 339].

The court of appeal affirmed. The action was founded on an instrument in writing. The omission of information that was to be inserted in blanks in the contract did not invalidate the agreement but merely rendered it ambiguous. Any ambiguities caused by the draftsman of a contract must be resolved against that party. Additionally, any ambiguities were clarified by the defendant when he completed the terms of the contract before the applicable four-year period expired (272 Cal. App. 2d 595, 602) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Limitation Period for Written Contract

Nomellini Constr. Co. v. Harris (1969) 272 Cal. App. 2d 352, 77 Cal. Rptr. 361 , included a cross action by a subcontractor (the defendant in the original action) against a manufacturer for breach of contract. The subcontractor alleged that he gave the manufacturer an order in the form of a list of materials that specifically recited: "Material to Meet Federal Specifications"; that the manufacturer undertook to supply the ordered materials; that the parts shipped were rejected on several successive occasions by a government inspector, resulting in a temporary stop order; and that, as a result of the breach by the manufacturer, the subcontractor was unable to comply with the terms of his contract with the plaintiff in the original action. On the cross action, the trial court found for the subcontractor. One of the principal issues on appeal was whether the cause of action was barred by the two-year statute of limitations [Code Civ. Proc. § 339]. The court of appeal affirmed. The writing, in setting forth the parts required and carrying the provision that government standards must be complied with, was apparently calculated to set forth the parts that were to be supplied by the manufacturer; it was approved on its face by the manufacturer's representative; and it clearly implied that it would be usable as thespecifications of a contract. The subcontractor's claim was not barred by the statute of limitations, since the action was brought within four years after the breach, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 337(1) governing actions on written instruments (272 Cal. App. 2d 352, 360-362) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
2. Lapse of Statute of Limitations

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.133

§ 50.133 Signature of Party to Be Charged Is Not Required for Four-Year Limitation Period to Apply

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

A WRITTEN INSTRUMENT DOES NOT NEED TO BE SIGNED BY THE PARTY TO BE CHARGED IN ORDER FOR THE FOUR-YEAR STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS, CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE SECTION 337, SUBDIVISION (1), TO APPLY, SO LONG AS THAT PARTY HAS AGREED TO THE WRITING,

A. Limitation Period for Written Contract. [See § 50.132[1], Paragraph A.]

B. Signature of Party. The four-year statute of limitations applicable to instruments in writing does not require that the writing be signed by the party to be charged when that party has agreed to the writing (Amen v. Merced County Title Co. (1962) 58 Cal. 2d 528, 533, 25 Cal. Rptr. 65, 375 P.2d 33).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that a particular contract action is governed by the four-year limitations period applicable to written contracts [Code Civ. Proc. § 337(1)], notwithstanding the fact that the defendant did not sign the writing that constitutes the contract.

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a plaintiff seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used by plaintiff to oppose a defendant's general demurrer interposed on the ground that the action is barred by lapse of the two-year period applicable to oral contracts.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised in opposition toa defendant's general demurrer, the memorandum would include an analysis of the complaint's allegations which, although they may disclose that the written contract lacked defendant's signature, nevertheless shows that the defendant agreed to the contract.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

These memoranda may be combined, when appropriate, with the memoranda set out in §§ 50.130 -50.132, and § 50.134 et seq., which set out other grounds for arguing that an action for contract damages is not barred by the applicable statute of limitations. In particular, they may be combined with the memoranda set out in § 50.132, which relate generally to application of the four-year period to written contracts, or with those set out in § 50.134, which relate to application of this period to a written contract that includes an implied promise.

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum opposing a general demurrer, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.120 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Signature of Party

The facts and procedural background of Amen v. Merced County Title Co. (1962) 58 Cal. 2d 528, 25 Cal. Rptr. 65, 375 P.2d 33 , are discussed in § 50.132[3][d]. In reversing the judgment, the Supreme Court held that the action was on a written contract even though the defendant had not signed the agreement but instead had orally accepted the obligation to actas escrow agent. When a party has agreed to the writing, there is no reason to invoke the two-year statute of limitations applicable to oral agreements. The four-year statute of limitations, unlike the statute of frauds, does not require that the writing be signed by the party to be charged. Had the legislature meant to make a signature mandatory in order for a writing to qualify for the longer limitation period, it would have so provided (58 Cal. 2d 528, 533) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Signature of Party

In E.O.C. Ord, Inc. v. Kovakovich (1988) 200 Cal. App. 3d 1194, 246 Cal. Rptr. 456 , an attorney sued his clients to recover attorney's fees. The attorney had spelled out the terms of the parties' agreement in a letter to the clients, and the clients had assented to the agreement in a telephone conversation with the attorney. The trial court determined that the action was barred under Code Civ. Proc. § 339(1) (two-year statute of limitations for breach of oral contracts). The court of appeal reversed, holding that the four-year statute of limitations for written contracts under Code Civ. Proc. § 337(1) applied (200 Cal. App. 3d 1194, 1202, 1206) . For the four-year statute of limitations to apply, it is sufficient that there is a writing containing all terms, and the party to be charged has accepted it. The acceptance may be proved by evidence of a particular act other than signing, such as words spoken (200 Cal. App. 3d 1194, 1201) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
2. Lapse of Statute of Limitations

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.134

§ 50.134 Implied Promise Is Part of Written Instrument

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

AN ACTION IS ON A WRITTEN CONTRACT AND THEREFORE SUBJECT TO THE FOUR-YEAR LIMITATION PERIOD EVEN THOUGH IT IS BASED ON A PROMISE INFERRED FROM THE WRITING.

A. Limitation Period for Written Contract. [See § 50.132[1], Paragraph A.]

[EITHER]

B. Promise Inferred From Writing. An action on a written contract is subject to the four-year limitation period even though it is based on a promise inferred from the writing (Amen v. Merced County Title Co. (1962) 58 Cal. 2d 528, 532, 25 Cal. Rptr. 65, 375 P.2d 33).

[OR]

B. Promise Inferred From Writing. An action on an obligation implied in law as an element of a written instrument is a part of the contract, and the four-year statute of limitations applies (Comunale v. Traders & General Ins. Co. (1958) 50 Cal. 2d 654, 662, 328 P.2d 198).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that a particular contract action is governed by the four-year limitations period applicable to written contracts [Code Civ. Proc. § 337(1)], notwithstanding the fact that the action is based on the breach of a promise not expressly stated but implied in the contract. This form is not for use when the liability involved is quasi-contractual, that is, when the promise is implied in law by a situation evidenced by a writing, since such an action is not based on the written contract and consequently, the four-year statute of limitations does not apply [O'Brien v. King (1917) 174 Cal. 769, 774, 164 P. 631 ; see Comunale v. Traders & General Ins. Co. (1958) 50 Cal. 2d 654, 662, 328 P.2d 198] .

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a plaintiff seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used by plaintiff to oppose a defendant's general demurrer interposed on the ground that the action is barred by lapse of the two-year period applicable to oral contracts.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised in opposition to a defendant's general demurrer, the memorandum would include an analysis of the complaint showing that the action is based on a written contract, even though it is based on the breach of promise impliedly but not expressly set out in the contract.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

These memoranda may be combined, when appropriate, with the memoranda set out in §§ 50.130 -50.133, and § 50.135 et seq., which set out other grounds for arguing that an action for contract damages is not barred by the applicable statute of limitations. In particular, they may be combined with the memoranda set out in § 50.132, which relate generally to application of the four-year period to written contracts, or with those set out in § 50.133, which relate to application of this period to a written contract that lacks the defendant's signature.

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum opposing a general demurrer, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.120 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Promise Inferred From Writing

Amen v. Merced County Title Co. (1962) 58 Cal. 2d 528, 25 Cal. Rptr. 65, 375 P.2d 33 , is discussed in § 50.132[3][e].

Comunale v. Traders & General Ins. Co. (1958) 50 Cal. 2d 654, 328 P.2d 198 , was an action by the assignee of an insured party against the liability insurer to recover the portion of his judgment against the insured that was in excess of the policy limits. In a personal injury action brought previously by the plaintiff against insured, the insured told the insurance company that the plaintiff would compromise the case. However, the insurance company refused to make a settlement. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff, but the trial court rendered judgment for the defendant notwithstanding the verdict. On appeal the defendant contended that an action on an implied obligation arising out of the contract was not on the written instrument, and therefore the four-year statute of limitations prescribed in Code Civ. Proc. § 337(1) did not apply.

The Supreme Court reversed with directions to enter judgment on the verdict. Every contract contains an implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing that neither party will do anything that will injure the right of the other to receive the benefits of the agreement. This implied obligation requires an insurer to settle an appropriate case although the express terms of the policy do not impose such a duty. The promise that is implied in law as an element of the contract is as much a part of the instrument as if it were written out, and thus the four-year statute of limitations applies (50 Cal. 2d 654, 662) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
2. Lapse of Statute of Limitations

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.135

§ 50.135 Limitation Period Has Not Run on Installment Obligation

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

WHEN MONEY IS PAYABLE IN INSTALLMENTS, THE LIMITATION PERIOD BEGINS TO RUN ON THE CAUSE OF ACTION FOR THE RECOVERY OF EACH UNPAID INSTALMENT AT THE TIME THE INSTALMENT IS PAYABLE.

A. Running of Limitation Period. When money is payable in installments, the limitation period begins to run on the cause of action for the recovery of an unpaid instalment at the time the instalment is payable (Bank of America v. McLaughlin (1957) 152 Cal. App. 2d Supp. 911, 915 , 313 P.2d 220).

[Optional] B. Acceleration Clause Affects Running of Limitation Period. When the contract contains an acceleration clause, but the creditor did not take any affirmative action to invoke the benefit of the clause after the defendant failed to make a payment, the period begins to run not when the defendant first breached the obligation by not making a payment but when the next future payment falls due (Stewart v. Claudius (1937) 19 Cal. App. 2d 349, 353, 65 P.2d 933).

[Optional] C. Services Paid for Monthly. When services performed under a contract are to be paid for at regular intervals, for example at the end of each month, the limitation period for an action to recover for the value of the services begins to run, as to each regular payment, on the date the regular payment was due (Konjoyan v. Der Zakarian (1961) 191 Cal. App. 2d 110, 113-114, 12 Cal. Rptr. 389 (dictum)).

[Optional] D. Rent Payable in Installments. If rent becomes due in monthly installments, the limitation period begins to run on each monthly instalment of rent from the date the instalment is due (Tillson v. Peters (1940) 41 Cal. App. 2d 671, 674-675, 107 P.2d 434).

[Optional] E. Monthly Payments for Life. A contract that provides for monthly payments for life is an instalment contract, and the limitation period runs from the date each instalment is due (Conway v. Bughouse, Inc. (1980) 105 Cal. App. 3d 194, 199-200, 164 Cal. Rptr. 585).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that a contract action is not barred by the applicable statute of limitations because, although a period longer than that allowed by the statute may have passed since the defendant first failed to make an instalment payment as required by the contract, the limitation period has not run as to all of the installments.

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a plaintiff seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used by plaintiff to oppose a defendant's general demurrer interposed on the ground that the action is barred by lapse of the applicable limitation period.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised in opposition to a defendant's general demurrer, the memorandum would include an analysis of the complaint showing that the action is based on an instalment contract, and even though plaintiff may be barred from recovery for defendant's failure to pay earlier installments, recovery for defendant's failure to pay later installments is not barred by the applicable statute of limitations.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

These memoranda may be combined, when appropriate, with the memoranda set out in §§ 50.130 -50.134, and §§ 50.136,50.137, which set out other grounds for arguing that an action for contract damages is not barred by the applicable statute of limitations.

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum opposing a general demurrer, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.120 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Running of Limitation Period

Bank of America v. McLaughlin (1957) 152 Cal. App. 2d Supp. 911 , 313 P.2d 220 , included a cross complaint founded on an assignment of an interest in a contract for the purchase of property against the assignee who had defaulted in the payments that were due in installments. The trial court rendered judgment for the cross complainants.

The appellate department of the superior court modified the judgment. When money is payable in installments, the limitation period begins to run on the cause of action for the recovery of an unpaid instalment at the time it is payable. In this case, the statute of limitations was a defense to all installments that accrued before the applicable period but was no defense to those installments that became due within two years before the cross complaint was filed (152 Cal. App. 2d Supp. 911, 915) .

[b] Acceleration Clause Affects Running of Limitation Period

Stewart v. Claudius (1937) 19 Cal. App. 2d 349, 65 P.2d 933 , was an action on a written contract for the payment of tuition for the defendant's son who attended a military academy operated by the plaintiff. The defendant was to pay the tuition in two installments; he had paid a portion of the first and nothing of the second. Before the second instalment came due, the defendant's son was dismissed from the academy, and the plaintiff made a written demand on the defendant to pay the remainder of the firstinstalment. The plaintiff later brought suit on the contract more than four years after the date of the written demand but less than four years after the date the second instalment was due. The defendant pleaded the statute of limitations in his answer. After trial before the court, the trial court rendered judgment for the plaintiff.

The court of appeal affirmed insofar as the judgment found that the defendant owed the plaintiff the amount of the second instalment. Whether the second instalment was barred by the statute of limitations depended on whether at any time between the date of the dismissal of the defendant's son and the due date of the second instalment, the plaintiff attempted to invoke rights under the acceleration clause of the contract. Since acceleration clauses are not self-operative, the limitation period begins to run on the date the future payment falls due, not the date of the breach of the obligation, if the creditor has not taken some affirmative action to invoke the benefit of the acceleration clause. In this case, the plaintiff had not invoked the acceleration clause; consequently, the action was not barred by the statute of limitations, since it had been brought within four years after the second instalment was due (19 Cal. App. 2d 349, 353) .

[c] Services Paid for Monthly

Konjoyan v. Der Zakarian (1961) 191 Cal. App. 2d 110, 12 Cal. Rptr. 389 , was an action for compensation for services relating to trading in market commodities. A dispute arose over a sum of money the plaintiff received from the defendant, a portion of which he repaid on the defendant's demand. The plaintiff and the defendant differed as to whether this sum was a loan or an advance on an undetermined compensation to be paid in the future. According to both the plaintiff and the defendant, the defendant told the plaintiff that the defendant would make it worth the plaintiff's while for the work the plaintiff was doing, but the evidence conflicted as to whether the defendant ever agreed to compensate the plaintiff in any way other than by assisting the plaintiff to profit by market investment. The trial court found for the plaintiff. On appeal, the defendant contended that since the plaintiff's action was based on an oral contract, it was barred by the two-year statute of limitations.

The court of appeal affirmed. When services are to be paid for month-to-month, the limitation period begins to run on the due date of each monthly payment. However, in this case there was ample evidence from which the trial court was justified in concluding that the intention of the parties was payment at the termination of services; consequently, the action was not barred by the statute of limitations (191 Cal. App. 2d 110, 113-114) .

[d] Rent Payable in Installments

Tillson v. Peters (1940) 41 Cal. App. 2d 671, 107 P.2d 434 , was an action for rent due for a dairy ranch. The complaint alleged a cause ofaction for unpaid installments of rent due for a specified period from 1931 to April 1, 1936. The trial court overruled the defendant's demurrer on the ground of uncertainty regarding the terms of the lease. The defendant additionally had pleaded by means of demurrer and in his answer that the cause of action was barred by the statute of limitations.

The court of appeal reversed. The uncontradicted evidence showed that the rent became due in monthly installments. The limitation period began to run on each monthly instalment from the date it was due. The contract was an oral contract of lease. The limitation period expired on each monthly instalment two years from the date it became due. Since the plaintiff alleged that the lease expired on April 1, 1936, and the last payment was made not later than April 1, 1935, and more than two years had elapsed since the termination of the lease before the action was commenced, the statute of limitations barred all unpaid installments of rent (41 Cal. App. 2d 671, 674-675) .

[e] Monthly Payments for Life

Conway v. Bughouse, Inc. (1980) 105 Cal. App. 3d 194, 164 Cal. Rptr. 585 , was an action for instalment payments due to the assignee of an interest in monthly payments for life. The trial court, in granting partial summary judgment for the plaintiff, found that since the agreement was an instalment contract, the statute of limitations ran only from the date of payment of each instalment.

The court of appeal affirmed. Since the payments were to be made for the rest of the assignor's life, and the total amount of money to be paid was not a fixed sum to be paid out over a period of time, and each payment was separable from the others and not a part of a total payment, the agreement was an instalment contract for purposes of applying the statute of limitations. Consequently, limitation period should run from the date of each instalment (105 Cal. App. 3d 194, 199-200) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
2. Lapse of Statute of Limitations

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.136

§ 50.136 Action on Promise to Pay When Able Accrues When Debtor Is Able to Pay

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

WHEN A PROMISE TO PAY IS CONDITIONAL ON THE DEBTOR'S ABILITY TO PAY, THE CAUSE OF ACTION DOES NOT ACCRUE UNTIL THE DEBTOR IS ABLE TO PAY.

Accrual of Action on Promise to Pay When Able. When a promise to pay is conditional on the debtor's ability to pay, the causeof action does not accrue until the debtor is able to pay (Horacek v. Smith (1948) 33 Cal. 2d 186, 191, 199 P.2d 929 ; Van Buskirk v. Kuhns (1913) 164 Cal. 472, 474-476, 129 P. 587).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that a contract action is not barred by the applicable statute of limitations because the complaint alleges that the debtor promised to pay when able, and the action was brought within the limitation period as calculated from the date that defendant became able to pay.

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a plaintiff seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used by plaintiff to oppose a defendant's general demurrer interposed on the ground that the action is barred by lapse of the applicable limitation period.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised in opposition to a defendant's general demurrer, the memorandum would include an analysis of the complaint

showing that the contract called for defendant to pay when, and other facts alleged show the date that defendant became able to pay.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

These memoranda may be combined, when appropriate, with the memoranda set out in §§ 50.130 -50.135, and § 50.137, which set out other grounds for arguing that an action for contract damages is not barred by the applicable statute of limitations.

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum opposing a general demurrer, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publicationin drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.120 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Accrual of Action on Promise to Pay When Able

The facts and procedural background of Horacek v. Smith (1948) 33 Cal. 2d 186, 199 P.2d 929 , are discussed in § 50.20[3][e]. In affirming the judgment, the Supreme Court noted that, in an action on a contract to pay when able, the promise is conditional, and no cause of action accrues until the condition is performed, that is, until the debtor is able to pay. Since the plaintiff's amended complaint alleged on information and belief that the defendant's financial condition had improved to the point where the defendant could have paid the money, this requirement was satisfied (33 Cal. 2d 186, 191) .

The facts and procedural background of Van Buskirk v. Kuhns (1913) 164 Cal. 472, 129 P. 587 , are discussed in § 50.20[3][e]. In affirming the judgment, the Supreme Court stated that a promise to pay when able is conditional, and no cause of action accrues until the debtor is able to pay. Although the evidence was meager, the trial court was justified in making a finding that the action was not barred since defendant did not have the ability to pay until a time prior to the commencement of the action that was within the limitation period (164 Cal. 472, 474-476) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
2. Lapse of Statute of Limitations

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.137

§ 50.137 Employee's Action for Constructive Breach of Employment Contract Accrues on Actual Termination Rather Than When Intolerable Working Conditions Arise

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE CAUSE OF ACTION ACCRUED WHEN THE PLAINTIFF'S EMPLOYMENT WAS ACTUALLY TERMINATED, NOT WHEN THE INTOLERABLE WORKING CONDITIONS AROSE THAT LED TO THE TERMINATION OF EMPLOYMENT.

Accrual of Action Based on Constructive Termination of Employment. The limitation period for an employee's action for breach of contract based on constructive termination begins to run on the date employment actually is terminated, not when the intolerable working conditions arise that lead to the termination of employment (Mullins v. Rockwell Internat. Corp. (1997) 15 Cal. 4th 731, 733-734, 743, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 636, 936 P.2d 1246).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that a action is not barred by the applicable statutes of limitation, because the action is one for constructive termination of plaintiff employee by defendant employer due to intolerable working conditions, and breach of the employment contract, and the action for breach of contract was commenced with the limitation period calculated from the date employment actually terminated.

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a plaintiff seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used by plaintiff to oppose a defendant's general demurrer interposed on the ground that the action is barred by lapse of the applicable limitation period.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised in opposition to a defendant's general demurrer, the memorandum would include an analysis of the complaint showing that the date of plaintiff's termination of employment due to intolerable working conditions.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

These memoranda may be combined, when appropriate, with the memoranda set out in §§ 50.130 -50.136, which set out other grounds for arguing that an action for contract damages is not barred by the applicable statute of limitations. For memoranda relating to tort causes of action for wrongful termination based constructive termination due to intolerable working conditions, see Ch. 100, Employer and Employee: Wrongful Termination and Discipline .

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum opposing a general demurrer, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.120 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Accrual of Action Based on Constructive Termination of Employment

In Mullins v. Rockwell Internat. Corp. (1997) 15 Cal. 4th 731, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 636, 936 P.2d 1246 , an employee sued the employer based on constructive termination because of intolerable working conditions. The complaint alleged (1) wrongful termination, (2) wrongful termination based on a breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and (3) breach of an oral employment contract. The employee alleged that he was forced to resign because the employer was going to demote him and reduce his pay and benefit level when he returned from sick leave. He submitted his resignation while still, technically, in a high-level management position. In addition, he alleged the existence of an oral contract of employment arising from his long service, his promotions, his bonuses, his stock rights, the praise given him, and the employer's practices and policies, which implicitly prohibited termination of employment except for good cause. The employer moved for summary judgment on the grounds that the first cause of action was barred by the one-year statute of limitations for tort actions [former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1, allowing two years)], and the second and third causes of action, involving breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing and breach of an oral contract, were barred by the two-year statute of limitations [Code Civ. Proc. § 339]. The applicability of these statutes was not the subject of dispute; rather, the issue was when the limitation periods began to run. The trial court granted the motion for summary judgment (15 Cal. 4th 731, 735-736) . The court of appeal affirmed. With respect to the contract causes of action, the court of appeal declared that the limitation period for a wrongful discharge claim begins when the employee is given notice of termination or the basisfor constructive discharge, not when termination occurs. The court reasoned that the limitation period begins when the circumstances have developed so that the employee is entitled to a legal remedy. Applying this theory, the court determined that the contract claims accrued at the latest when the employee became aware of all of the facts underlying the employer's new hostile attitude toward him (15 Cal. 4th 731, 736) .

The Supreme Court reversed. Constructive discharge occurs only when an employer terminates employment by forcing the employee to resign, either by creating working conditions that are intolerable under an objective standard or by failing to remedy objectively intolerable working conditions that actually are known to the employer (15 Cal. 4th 731, 737) . In this case, the employee alleged that he was constructively discharged in breach of an implied contract not to terminate his employment absent good cause. The limitation period for a claimed breach of an implied contract not to terminate employment without good cause begins to run at the time of actual termination of employment, even when the employer has issued an unequivocal notification of termination at an earlier date. Similar reasoning applies to a breach of contract action based upon an alleged constructive discharge. The breach of contract alleged is the termination of employment without good cause. To the extent that the employer's creation or knowing exploitation of intolerable working conditions for the purpose of forcing a resignation in the future also may be a breach of contract, it is similar to an announcement that employment will be terminated in the future (15 Cal. 4th 731, 738) . In this case, the employee alleged that the termination of his employment was a breach of contract. Any possible earlier breach of contract committed through the creation of intolerable working conditions did not rescind the contract, for the employee continued to perform (or, for certain periods, took temporary leave, authorized by the employer, while hoping for an amelioration of his employment situation) until he resigned. In these circumstances, he had an election of remedies, and the limitation period did not begin to run until he made that election by resigning (15 Cal. 4th 731, 739) . Because (1) constructive discharge is an employer-directed termination of employment, (2) termination normally is the breach alleged, and (3) the employee may elect to overlook earlier adverse actions of the employer in the hope of conciliation, the limitation period does not begin to run until actual termination. An employee is not barred from bringing his or her claim on the basis of the statute of limitations as long as the claim is brought in a timely manner after the actual termination of employment (15 Cal. 4th 731, 743) .

52 of 168 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
2. Lapse of Statute of Limitations

5-50 California Points & Authorities §§ 50.138-50.149

[Reserved]

§§ 50.138[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
3. Illegal Purpose Doctrine

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.150

§ 50.150 Agreement for Illegal Purpose Is Not Enforceable

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE CONTRACT ON WHICH THE ACTION IS BASED IS ILLEGAL AND VOID.

[EITHER]

A. Illegality Defined. A contract is void and illegal if the object is unlawful (Civ. Code § 1598).

[OR]

A. Illegality Defined. A contract is void and illegal if any part of a single consideration for several objects or any of several considerations for a single object is unlawful (Civ. Code § 1608).

[CONTINUE]

B. What Is Unlawful Contract. An agreement is not lawful that is (1) contrary to an express provision of law, (2) contrary to the policy of express law, although not expressly prohibited, or (3) otherwise contrary to good morals (Civ. Code § 1667; McIntosh v. Mills (2004) 121 Cal. App. 4th 333, 344, 17 Cal. Rptr. 3d 66 ; Kashani v. Tsann Kuen China Enter. Co. (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 531, 537, 13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 174 ; Diosdado v. Diosdado (2002) 97 Cal. App. 4th 470, 474, 118 Cal. Rptr. 2d 494 ; Bovard v. American Horse Enterprises, Inc. (1988) 201 Cal. App. 3d 832, 838-841, 247 Cal. Rptr. 340).

C. Illegal Contract Is Not Enforceable. A court will not enforce an illegal contract if the contract is contrary to common standards of morality (malum in se), or if the illegality derives from violation of statute (malum prohibitum) and the parties are in pari delicto or there is an overriding public interest to be served by voiding the agreement (McIntosh v. Mills (2004) 121 Cal. App. 4th 333, 344 n.10, 347, 17 Cal. Rptr. 3d 66 ; Wong v. Tenneco, Inc. (1985) 39 Cal. 3d 126, 136-138, 216 Cal. Rptr. 412, 702 P.2d 570 ; Shenson v. Fresno Meat Packing Co. (1950) 96 Cal. App. 2d 725, 731, 216 P.2d 156).

[Optional] D. Contract for Object Prohibited by Penal Law Is Void. If a statute prohibits or attaches a penalty to the doing of an act, the act is void, notwithstanding that the statute does not expressly pronounce it so and regardless of whether the thing forbidden is malum in se or merely malum prohibitum. The imposition by statute of a penalty implies a prohibition of the act to which the penalty is attached, and a contract founded on that act is void (Contractor's Safety Ass'n v. California Compensation Ins. Co. (1957) 48 Cal. 2d 71, 76, 307 P.2d 626).

[Optional] E. Contract Void When its Purpose Is to Defraud Creditors. An executory contract is void if the parties have made the contract for the purpose of defrauding creditors of one of the parties (Severance v. Knight-Counihan Co. (1947) 29 Cal. 2d 561, 568, 177 P.2d 4).

[Optional] F. Claim Is Based on Illegal Contract. A court will not enforce a contract if the plaintiff must disclose, in addition to the contract on which the action is based, an illegal contract or transaction as the basis of the claim (Shenson v. Fresno Meat Packing Co. (1950) 96 Cal. App. 2d 725, 731, 216 P.2d 156).

[Optional] G. Bargain Requiring Nondisclosure of Discreditable Facts Is Illegal. A bargain that includes as part of its consideration the nondisclosure of discreditable facts is illegal (Allen v. Jordanos' Inc. (1975) 52 Cal. App. 3d 160, 166, 125 Cal. Rptr. 31).

[Optional] H. Illegal Consideration Is Inseparable. If the illegal consideration is not separable and any part of a single consideration for several objects, or any of several considerations for a single object, is unlawful, the entire contract is void (Civ. Code § 1608; McIntosh v. Mills (2004) 121 Cal. App. 4th 333, 344, 17 Cal. Rptr. 3d 66 ; Taylor v. Fields (1986) 178 Cal. App. 3d 653, 664-665, 224 Cal. Rptr. 186).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that a contract action is based on an illegal contract that is unenforceable.

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a defendant seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used by defendant in moving for summary judgment, on the ground that undisputed facts show that plaintiff's cause of action is based on an illegal and therefore unenforceable contract.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised in support of a defendant's motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the supporting and opposing papers showing that undisputed facts establish that plaintiff's cause of action is based on an illegal contract.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

These memoranda may be combined, when appropriate, with the memoranda set out in § 50.151 (unenforceable gambling contract). They may also be combined in an appropriate cases with those set out in §§ 50.102 and 50.103, which set out other grounds for arguing that a contract action is unenforceable as it is one in which plaintiff's performance violates licensing laws.

For memoranda supporting the contention that a contract made by a corporation whose powers have been suspended is voidable at the option of the other party, see Ch. 52, Corporations .

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum supporting a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The rule requiring courts to withhold relief under the terms of an illegal contract is not an inflexible one, and exceptions are recognized [McIntosh v. Mills (2004) 121 Cal. App. 4th 333, 347, 17 Cal. Rptr. 3d 66] . For memoranda authorites that set out these exceptions and may be used in oppositionto the contention supported by this form, see § 50.160 et seq. [see also §§ 50.111 -50.114].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] What Is Unlawful Contract

In McIntosh v. Mills (2004) 121 Cal. App. 4th 333, 17 Cal. Rptr. 3d 66 , a nonlawyer sued to enforce a fee-sharing agreement with an attorney. The court held that because fee-sharing agreements between lawyers and nonlawyers are expressly prohibited by a rule of professional conduct, the object of the contract was illegal, and it did not matter that the nonlawyer trying to enforce the contract was not subject to that rule. The court further held that although fee sharing was prohibited, and therefore the contract, while illegal, was not necessarily unenforceable, the defendant was at least as culpable as the attorney in the illegal conduct, and therefore was not entitled to relief under an exception to unenforceability for parties not in pari delicto (121 Cal. App. 4th 333, 344) . The doctrine of illegality "considers whether the object of the contract is illegal. It does not turn on whether the illegality applies to the party seeking to enforce the agreement" (121 Cal. App. 4th 333, 346) . Further, the in pari delicto exception allows an illegal contract to be enforced only as long as the party seeking its enforcement is less morally blameworthy than the party against whom the contract is being asserted, and there is no overriding public interest to be served by voiding the agreement (121 Cal. App. 4th 333, 347) . Under the facts of the case, the nonlawyer's conduct rendered him as legally blameworthy as the attorney in pursuit of the contract's objective (121 Cal. App. 4th 333, 351) .

In Kashani v. Tsann Kuen China Enter. Co. (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 531, 13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 174 , plaintiffs alleged that they executed a written agreement with defendants whereby plaintiffs would establish an Iranian corporation in Iran to build a plant there for manufacturing defendants' computer products to be sold in Iran. They also would provide defendants with 18 percent of the shares of the corporation. Plaintiffs alleged that in reliance on this agreement, they spent money on the project and began setting up the plant. Thereafter, defendants ceased doing business in the computer industry and did not proceed with the agreement. Plaintiffs filed an action for breach of contract, seeking their expenditures and anticipated lost profits as damages for breach of the agreement. The trial court granted defendants' motion for summary judgment on the ground that the alleged agreement was unenforceable because it was illegal and against public policy. It violated United States presidential executive orders and implementing regulations, both of which prohibited any United States person from engaging, without a license, in any transaction directly or indirectly in the export, sale, or supply of goods, technology, or services to Iran. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that plaintiffs legally could not establish their claim because the agreement on which their claim was based was illegal and against public policy (118 Cal. App. 4th 531, 537) .

Diosdado v. Diosdado (2002) 97 Cal. App. 4th 470, 118 Cal. Rptr. 2d 494 , was an action brought by a woman against her former husband for breach of a contract, made during their marriage, which provided for the payment of liquidated damages if one spouse chose to terminate the marriage because the other spouse was unfaithful. The trial court entered judgment on the pleadings for the former husband, and the appellate court affirmed. The court stated that the only question before it was whether the agreement was enforceable. Under Civ. Code § 1550(3), a contract must have a lawful object to be enforceable. Furthermore, under Civ. Code § 1667, a contract is unlawful if it is contrary to an express provision of law, contrary to the policy of express law, or otherwise contrary to good morals. In this case, when the agreement attempted to impose a penalty on one of the parties as a result of that party's "fault" during the marriage, it was contrary to the public policy underlying the no-fault provisions for dissolution of marriage set forth in Fam. Code §§ 2310 and 2335. For that reason, the court held that the agreement was unenforceable (97 Cal. App. 4th 470, 474-475, 118 Cal. Rptr. 2d 494).

The action in Bovard v. American Horse Enterprises, Inc. (1988) 201 Cal. App. 3d 832, 247 Cal. Rptr. 340 , began as one to enforce notes made by the defendant in payment for a company bought from the plaintiff. The company manufactured jewelry and drug paraphernalia. A stipulated judgment was rendered against the defendant. The defendant never signed the stipulation, claimed his attorney did not have authority to make it, and had the judgment vacated. The plaintiff then filed a second amended complaint, including a cause of action for enforcement of the settlement agreement. That cause of action was tried first. In the course of the trial, it became clear that the company produced very little jewelry and mostly produced drug paraphernalia. At that point, the trial court dismissed the action. On appeal the plaintiff contended that since the statutes making the manufacture of drug paraphernalia illegal were not enacted until after the sale of the company, they could not provide the basis for holding the contract void as against public policy.

The court of appeal affirmed. Any court has authority, whenever it becomes aware that a contract is illegal, to refrain from entertaining an action to enforce the contract. Similarly, a court will not permit the parties to maintain an action to settle or compromise a claim based on an illegal contract (201 Cal. App. 3d 832, 838) . In determining whether the subject of a given contract violates public policy, courts must rely on the state of the law as it existed at the time the contract was made (201 Cal. App. 3d 832, 840 n.3). At the time the company was sold, however, statutes made it illegal to possess, use, or transfer marijuana, and that was sufficientbasis to hold that the contract at issue was void because it was against public policy (201 Cal. App. 3d 832, 839-841) .

[b] Illegal Contract Is Not Enforceable

McIntosh v. Mills (2004) 121 Cal. App. 4th 333, 17 Cal. Rptr. 3d 66 is discussed in [a], above.

In Wong v. Tenneco, Inc. (1985) 39 Cal. 3d 126, 216 Cal. Rptr. 412, 702 P.2d 570 , the Supreme Court upheld the denial of enforcement of a marketing agreement relating to crops grown in Mexico, when it was well known to the defendant that the plaintiff, in flagrant violation of the Mexican Constitution, owned the property on which the crops were grown, although title was held in trust for him by Mexicans. As no California public policy was offended, doctrines of comity required that the contract, illegal in Mexico, be denied enforcement in California courts (39 Cal.

3d 126, 136-138) .

Shenson v. Fresno Meat Packing Co. (1950) 96 Cal. App. 2d 725, 216 P.2d 156 , was an action for an accounting with respect to certain subsidies. The plaintiffs had agreed to sell and deliver to the defendant cattle that the defendant was to process and sell, and the defendant had received governmental subsidies for the slaughter of the cattle by falsely and fraudulently representing that all of the cattle in question were owned by the defendant at the time of the slaughter. However, the plaintiffs could not have recovered directly from the government the subsidies to which they claimed they were entitled, since that would have been illegal under government regulations. The trial court granted the defendant's motion for nonsuit at the close of the plaintiffs' case.

The court of appeal affirmed. The issue was whether the plaintiffs required the aid of the defendant's illegal transaction with the government to establish their case. The general rule is that when two or more have concocted a fraudulent scheme for the purpose of obtaining property in which all are to share, and the scheme has been carried out so that all of the results of the fraud are in the hands of the parties, a court of equity will not interfere on behalf of the others to aid them in obtaining their shares but will leave the parties in the position in which they have placed themselves. A party to an illegal contract or an illegal transaction cannot come into a court of law and ask it to carry out the illegal contract or to enforce rights arising out of the illegal transaction. The party cannot set up a case in which he or she necessarily must disclose the illegal contract or the illegal transaction as the basis of the claim. Whenever illegality appears, whether the evidence comes from one side or the other, the disclosure is fatal to the case (96 Cal. App. 2d 725, 731) .

[c] Contract for Object Prohibited by Penal Law Is Void

Contractor's Safety Ass'n v. California Compensation Ins. Co. (1957) 48 Cal. 2d 71, 307 P.2d 626 , was an action to recover dividends on an agreement made in conjunction with the purchase of a workers' compensation insurance policy. The plaintiff alleged that the defendant had represented that it would pay dividends according to a stated schedule to group insureds carrying workers' compensation insurance issued by the defendant if the insured's loss-premium ratio was a certain percentage and a surplus was available for payment of the dividends. The plaintiff accepted the offer, including one for additional dividends, and the defendant issued to the plaintiff its standard workers' compensation policy. The plaintiff further alleged that it relied on the representations; its loss experience was within a range that would entitle it to dividends in a certain sum; the defendant had sufficient surplus to meet the payment of the dividend, but it arbitrarily reduced the dividend to a smaller sum and paid that amount. The complaint asked that the balance of the dividend be paid to the plaintiff. The trial court dismissed the action after sustaining the defendant's oral demurrer to the introduction of any evidence on the plaintiff's behalf.

The Supreme Court affirmed. A consideration of the relevant laws concerning payment of rebates under insurance policies showed that the dividend agreement was contrary to law. Acceptance or receipt of an unlawful rebate is a misdemeanor, and violation of the minimum-rating law is also a misdemeanor. A contract must have a lawful object, and a contract for an object prohibited by a penal law is void. The general rule controlling cases of this character is that when a statute prohibits or attaches a penalty to the doing of an act, the act is void, notwithstanding that the statute does not expressly pronounce it so, and it is immaterial whether the thing forbidden is malum in se or merely malum prohibitum. The imposition by statute of a penalty implies a prohibition of the act to which the penalty is attached, and a contract founded on the act is void. Since the contract in the case was illegal, the plaintiff could not recover (48 Cal. 2d 71, 76) .

[d] Contract Void When its Purpose Is to Defraud Creditors

Severance v. Knight-Counihan Co. (1947) 29 Cal. 2d 561, 177 P.2d 4 , was an action to recover possession of personal property. The defendant operated a printing plant and employed the plaintiff as a salesman of its tariff business. When the plaintiff resigned, he notified the defendant of his decision to exercise an option to purchase at their metal value all tariff plates used in the defendant's business. The parties agreed on the amount of the metal value and agreed that their value as tariff plates was aboutfour times more than the metal value. The evidence showed without conflict that when the agreement was signed, the defendant was in unsound financial condition, and the parties feared that the defendant's creditors would either take over the business or force the defendant into liquidation. The tariff business was a valuable part of the defendant's printing enterprise and could be saved from the creditors if a way were found to withhold the tariff plates. The trial court rendered judgment for the defendant after finding that the agreement was made for the purpose of defrauding the defendants' creditors, and it was contrary to good morals and public policy, illegal, void, and unenforceable.

The Supreme Court affirmed. The agreement was void because it was made to defraud creditors. Even if it is assumed that the creditors could have been satisfied at the time of the agreement, the agreement would still have been fraudulent as impairing the rights of future creditors, since future creditors as well as present creditors are protected by the legislation relating to fraudulent conveyances. Although it is recognized that a transferor of property conveyed to defraud creditors cannot revoke the conveyance, it is also recognized that an executory contract is void if the parties have made the contract for the purpose of defrauding creditors of one of the parties (29 Cal. 2d 561, 568) .

[e] Claim Is Based on Illegal Contract

Shenson v. Fresno Meat Packing Co. (1950) 96 Cal. App. 2d 725, 216 P.2d 156 , is discussed in [b], above.

[f] Bargain Requiring Nondisclosure of Discreditable Facts Is Illegal

Allen v. Jordanos' Inc. (1975) 52 Cal. App. 3d 160, 125 Cal. Rptr. 31 , was an action in part for breach of contract. The plaintiff claimed that there was a valid, enforceable oral contract between the parties. Under the agreement, the plaintiff and the defendants promised not to demand an impartial arbitration to determine the truth or falsity of certain charges of theft and dishonesty that the defendants had made against the plaintiff and instead to lay off the plaintiff. The defendants also promised to allow the plaintiff to obtain unemployment benefits and not to communicate to prospective employers that the plaintiff was discharged or resigned for dishonesty, theft, and bad employment attitude, or that they would not rehire the plaintiff. The defendants filed a general demurrer that the trial court granted.

The court of appeal affirmed. A substantial part of the contract was for the defendants to allow the plaintiff to obtain unemployment benefits to which he would otherwise not be entitled. Thus, the plaintiff was bargaining for an act that was illegal by definition--to withhold information from, or give false information to, a state agency. The nondisclosure was a major and substantial consideration of the agreement. A bargain that includes as part of its consideration nondisclosure of discreditable facts is illegal. Since a substantial part of the contract was illegal and void, there was no consideration. Without consideration, a contract did not exist, and the general demurrer was properly sustained (52 Cal. App. 3d 160, 166) .

[g] Illegal Consideration Is Inseparable

The plaintiff in Taylor v. Fields (1986) 178 Cal. App. 3d 653, 224 Cal. Rptr. 186 , had been the mistress of the defendant's husband for 42 years. Although they had never lived together, he promised to take care of her financially and see that she would live comfortably for the rest of her life if she did not marry anyone else during the period of their relationship. After her lover died, the plaintiff sued his wife for breach of oral contract, breach of implied contract, breach of fiduciary duty, and fraudulent transfer, and to impose a constructive trust on property that the decedent transferred during his lifetime to an inter vivos trust of which the defendant was the trustee. The defendant's motion for summary judgment was granted.

The court of appeal affirmed. Marvin v. Marvin (1976) 18 Cal. 3d 660, 134 Cal. Rptr. 815, 557 P.2d 106 , and its progeny did not apply because those cases all involved couples who lived together. Moreover, the agreement alleged in Marvin did not rest on illegal consideration. Agreements of cohabiting couples regarding the ordering of their economic affairs are enforceable as long as they do not rest on illicit meretricious consideration and unless sexual acts form an inseparable part of the consideration for the agreement. In this case the plaintiff alleged that she acted as decedent's confidante, friend, travel companion, and lover. Nothing in the alleged agreement rested on the plaintiff's acting as friend, traveling companion, or confidante as distinguished from her role as paramour; hence the entire agreement was invalid (178 Cal. App. 3d 653, 664-665) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] What is Unlawful Contract

In Cariveau v. Halferty (2000) 83 Cal. App. 4th 126, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 417 , a securities dealer brought an action against her customer in a securities transaction for breach of a confidentiality clause in a settlement agreement that prohibited the customer from discussing the dealer's misconduct with regulatory authorities. The trial court refused to enforce the clause on the grounds that the confidentiality clause was void and unenforceable as a violation of public policy, and the court of appeal affirmed. After executing the settlement agreement, the customer had complained about plaintiff's conduct. The NASD then investigated and censured the dealer, who broughtthis action related to defendant customer's disclosure of the information regarding the plaintiff's dealings in violation of the confidentiality clause of the forbearance agreement. The dealer subsequently was shot to death, and the trustee of the assets of her estate was substituted in as plaintiff. The court of appeal found that public policy, express and implied from the securities laws and regulations, outweighed the general interest in settling disputes without litigation. To permit the dealer's violations of rules and shield them from administrative review in an agreement to silence wrongdoing would undermine the public's confidence in the integrity of securities oversight (83 Cal. App. 4th 126, 133-137) . The court held that the trial court's decision was supported by the law pertaining to the NASD, the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, and the policy against enforcement of contract terms that violate the express public policies requiring NASD members to observe the high standards and equitable principles of trade and refrain from suppressing disclosure to the regulatory bodies (83 Cal. App. 4th 126, 138) .

In Dunkin v. Boskey (2000) 82 Cal. App. 4th 171, 98 Cal. Rptr. 2d 44 , the court of appeal concluded that an agreement between the parties to grant defendant paternity rights to a child conceived by artificial insemination was binding and could be enforced to the extent of an action for unjust enrichment. Plaintiff and defendant, while an unmarried couple, entered into a written contract entitled "Consent for Artificial Insemination" to create a child by the use of artificial insemination through the use of the sperm of an anonymous donor. Under the contract, the parties agreed that "the male partner and the female partner acknowledge that the child shall be the lawful child of both the mother and the male partner, and that neither of them shall assert a contrary position in any subsequent proceeding." Defendant, the female partner, gave birth to a girl after artificial insemination. Several years later defendant terminated her cohabitation and relationship with plaintiff, moved with the child from California to Wisconsin, and thereafter denied plaintiff any custody or visitation with the child. Plaintiff filed a complaint in California to establish his paternity and custody rights to the child. The trial court dismissed his action in California, based upon a finding that he lacked standing to sue for custody and visitation. After plaintiff's breach of contract action was also dismissed, plaintiff appealed. Defendant argued that agreements between a parent and a "non-parent" are "illegal and unenforceable because they are in an area entirely preempted by statutory mechanisms for creating or establishing parenthood." The court of appeal cited Bovard v. American Horse Enterprises, Inc. (1988) 201 Cal. App. 3d 832, 840, 247 Cal. Rptr. 340 , discussed above, on the issue of whether a contract violates public policy (82 Cal. App. 4th 171, 183-184) . It found nothing in the agreement between the parties that so offended public policy as to require the court to find it illegal or invalid. To the contrary, recognizing the validity of plaintiffs's contractual promise to care for and support and educate the child as though it were his natural child served rather than contravened the compelling public policies of family law to legitimate children, provide for their support, foster the best interests of the child, and promote familial responsibility (82 Cal. App. 4th 171, 189-190) . The court therefore concluded that the agreement upon which the breach of contract action for damages was based was not in its entirety illegal or unenforceable (82 Cal. App. 4th 171, 192) .

[b] Illegal Contract Is Not Enforceable

In Yoo v. Robi (2005) 126 Cal. App. 4th 1089, 24 Cal. Rptr. 3d 740 , plaintiff sued to recover a commission allegedly due him under a personal management contract with one of the original members of the singing group The Platters. The singer's widow and successor in interest was the named defendant, while plaintiff's trustee in bankruptcy was substituted as plaintiff. Defendant did not raise invalidity of the contract as an affirmative defense. However, during the pending superior court action, defendant filed a petition with the California Labor Commissioner alleging that throughout the contract period plaintiff acted as an unlicensed talent agency while procuring engagements for the singer, and thus the contracts providing for commissions for plaintiff's services were void as a matter of law. The Commissioner ruled in defendant's favor, issuing a decision finding that the oral contracts were unlawful and void. Plaintiff filed a notice in the contract action appealing that decision and requesting trial de novo. The court then declared all contracts between the parties void and unenforceable and dismissed the complaint. Both parties appealed [126 Cal. App. 4th 1089, 1094-1097] .

The appellate concluded that substantial evidence supported the trial court's finding that plaintiff procured performance engagements for the singer in violation of the Talent Agencies Act [Lab. Code § 1700], thus rendering his contracts with the singer void and barring his recovery of a commission for procuring a recording contract for the singer. The court rejected plaintiff's argument that plaintiff waived the illegality defense by not specifically pleading it in the answer to the complaint [126 Cal. App. 4th 1089, 1103] , and also held that plaintiff was not entitled to have his commission for a legal activity severed from his commissions for illegal activities [126 Cal. App. 4th 1089, 1103-1104] .

In Johnson v. Superior Court (2000) 80 Cal. App. 4th 1050, 95 Cal. Rptr. 2d 864 , a child and her parents brought an action for professional negligence, fraud, and breach of contract against a sperm bank, its employees, officers, and directors, claiming that defendants failed to disclose that the sperm they sold came from a donor (John Doe) with a family history of kidney disease. That sperm was used to conceive plaintiff child, who was diagnosed to have that serious kidney disease. When plaintiffs sought to take the deposition and obtain documents of John Doe, the person believedto be the anonymous sperm donor, defendants filed motions to quash the deposition subpoena. At the same time, plaintiffs filed a motion to compel compliance with the deposition subpoena. The trial court denied plaintiffs' motion and granted the motions to quash the deposition subpoena. Plaintiffs sought a writ of mandate directing the superior court to vacate its order and issue a different order compelling John Doe's deposition and the production of records. The court of appeal ordered issuance of a writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate its order denying plaintiffs' motion and to grant the motion to compel the donor's deposition and to order production of records. The court of appeal concluded that the sperm bank's agreement with the plaintiffs precluding disclosure of the donor's identity and other information pertaining to the donor under all circumstances was contrary to public policy and therefore unenforceable. Based on the policy expressed in Fam. Code § 7613, inspection of insemination records, including a sperm donor's identity and related information contained in those records, may be disclosed under certain circumstances. Thus, to prohibit disclosure of the donor's identity and related information in every situation and under all circumstances, as in the sperm bank's agreement, would be contrary to the policy expressed in the statute. Because a third party beneficiary such as John Doe can only enforce a contract when there is a valid and subsisting obligation between the promisor and the promisee, the court held that the sperm bank's agreement with plaintiffs did not preclude disclosure of the donor's identity and related information about the donor. However, it did require that his identity should remain undisclosed to the fullest extent possible (80 Cal. App. 4th 1050, 1065-1067) .

R.M. Sherman Co. v. W.R. Thomason, Inc. (1987) 191 Cal. App. 3d 559, 236 Cal. Rptr. 577 , was an action by a subcontractor on a public works project to recover money due under the subcontract. The defendant cross complained for damages under a previous public works contract that had been subcontracted to the plaintiff in violation of Pub. Contract Code §§ 4106 and 4107. The trial court declared the previous contract illegal and void but held that the prime contractor could set off its former claim against the plaintiff's present claim. In the judgment, each party's claim was set off by the other's. The court of appeal reversed insofar as the judgment allowed the setoff and directed that the plaintiff take nothing, and otherwise affirmed. The previous contract violated Pub. Contract Code §§ 4106 and 4107 and was therefore void under Civ. Code §§ 1598 and 1608 (191 Cal. App. 3d 559, 563) . If the contract was truly void, it created no right or claim whatsoever. A void contract is no contract at all, binds no one, and is a nullity. No rights are enforceable under a void contract. A contract void due to illegality has no existence for any purpose and may not serve as the foundation of any action, either at law or in equity. As a general rule, a setoff must rest on a claim enforceable in its own right. Because the agreement conferred no rights whatsoever and was a legal nullity, it could furnish no basis for a setoff (191 Cal. App. 3d 559, 563) . The Fair Practices Act [Pub. Contract Code § 4100 et seq.] recognizes that a subcontractor may sue under a noncomplying contract but provides that illegality is no defense to the contractor [Pub. Contract Code § 4112], implying legislative recognition of the general rule of unenforceability. Under the rule that to express one thing is to exclude all others of the kind (expressio unius est exclusio alterius), the contract is in all other respects subject to the rule of unenforceability (191 Cal. App. 3d 559, 565) .

In Prime v. Hyne (1968) 260 Cal. App. 2d 397, 67 Cal. Rptr. 170 , an action for declaratory relief under contracts and a lease, the court of appeal affirmed the summary judgment for the defendants. The agreements were illegal and void for violation of the rule against perpetuities (260 Cal. App. 2d 397, 402) .

[c] Claim Is Based on Illegal Contract

The court of appeal in Homami v. Iranzadi (1989) 211 Cal. App. 3d 1104, 260 Cal. Rptr. 6 , reversed a judgment for the plaintiff. The plaintiff and the defendant were brothers-in-law, and the plaintiff had lent $250,000 to the defendant, evidenced by a note reciting that it bore no interest. The plaintiff testified, however, that the parties had orally agreed that the defendant would pay 12-percent interest. The oral agreement was to allow the plaintiff not to report the interest income on state and federal income tax returns. A contract legal on its face may be discredited by evidence introduced to establish its illegal character. If the substance of the transaction is illegal, it does not matter when or how the illegality is raised; whether the evidence comes from one side or the other, it is fatal to the case (211 Cal. App. 3d 1104, 1112) . When the parties are in pari delicto, this rule may leave the defendant with an unexpected benefit from the transaction. Nevertheless, the rule that courts will not enforce an illegal contract is not applied in order to correct injustice between the parties, but in regard of a higher interest--that of the public, whose welfare demands that the transaction be discouraged. Knowing that they will receive no help from the courts is intended to be a deterrent to make parties less likely to enter into illegal agreements (211 Cal. App. 3d 1104, 1111-1112) .

[d] Bargain Requiring Nondisclosure of Discreditable Facts Is Illegal

In Philippine Export & Foreign Loan Guarantee Corp. v. Chuidian (1990) 218 Cal. App. 3d 1058, 267 Cal. Rptr. 457 , the court refused to set aside a settlement agreement and stipulated judgment challenged as illegal on several grounds, one of which was that part of the consideration for the agreement was a "warranty of silence." The "warranty" consisted of the defendant's promises (1) to sign a statement that the Marcoses did not ownshares in the defendant's corporations, (2) to provide another statement by a corporate officer that in the officer's opinion, the Marcoses had never tried to acquire the companies, (3) to turn over copies of the defendant's deposition in another matter in which the defendant testified that the Marcos family was trying to take over the defendant's companies, and (4) that the settlement agreement be kept private. The court of appeal stated that although it is illegal and against public policy for one who has a duty to reveal a material fact to the court to agree to conceal that fact, this case did not involve ongoing litigation or an administrative matter (218 Cal. App. 3d 1058, 1082) . The statement that the Marcoses did not own the company was apparently true. Other copies of the deposition were available from the public records. There was no agreement to suppress or withhold evidence from the court or from any party to the lawsuit. Thus, the consideration for the agreement was not illegal as a matter of law (218 Cal. App. 3d 1058, 1082-1083) .

[e] Illegal Consideration Is Inseparable

The court of appeal in Schaefer v. Williams (1993) 15 Cal. App. 4th 1243, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 212 , affirmed a judgment for the defendant on a demurrer to a contract cause of action. The plaintiff and the defendant were candidates for the same office. The defendant signed a pledge to abide by the Code of Fair Campaign Practices [see Elec. Code § 20400 et seq. (restatingformer Elec. Code § 12500 et seq.)], which provided that no candidate would use character defamation or attacks. The defendant circulated a campaign brochure that discussed legal difficulties the plaintiff had in the 1980s. The court of appeal stated that the concept of unlawful consideration includes a promise to refrain from committing a crime or a tort or from deceiving or wrongfully injuring the promisee or a third person. A contract for which such a promise is the sole consideration is illegal and void (15 Cal. App. 4th 1243, 1246) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
3. Illegal Purpose Doctrine

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.151

§ 50.151 Gambling Contract Is Not Enforceable

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE ACTION IS BASED ON A GAMBLING CONTRACT THAT IS UNLAWFUL AND THEREFORE UNENFORCEABLE.

A. What Is Unlawful Contract. [See § 50.150[1], Paragraph B.]

B. Wagering Contracts Are Not Enforceable. The rule that the courts will not recognize an illegal contract and will not aid the parties is rigidly enforced to deny any relief in the courts to parties seeking to recover either their stakes or their winnings under a wagering contract that is in violation of law, whether the party against whom the relief is sought is a party to the wager or a stakeholder for the parties to the wager (Kyne v. Kyne (1940) 16 Cal. 2d 436, 438, 106 P.2d 620 ; Bradley v. Doherty (1973) 30 Cal. App. 3d 991, 994, 106 Cal. Rptr. 725 , cert. denied, 414 U.S. 878).

[Optional] C. Contract Founded on Gambling Consideration Is Unenforceable. A contract that is founded on a consideration based on any type of gambling, whether prohibited by statute or not, is unenforceable under Civil Code Section 1667 (Lavick v. Nitzberg (1948) 83 Cal. App. 2d 381, 382, 188 P.2d 758).

[Optional] D. Checks Cashed for Gambling Purposes. The owner of a gambling house who honors a check for the purpose of providing a prospective customer with funds with which to gamble and who then participates in the transaction thus promoted by his or her act cannot recover on the check (Hamilton v. Abadjian (1947) 30 Cal. 2d 49, 52, 179 P.2d 804 ; Braverman v. Horn (1948) 88 Cal. App. 2d 379, 381, 198 P.2d 948).

[Optional] E. Money Lent for Gambling Purposes. A lender who advances money to a borrower with the understanding that it is tobe used in gambling or who participates and shares in the gambling transaction promoted by his or her act cannot recover the money advanced (Rose v. Nelson (1947) 79 Cal. App. 2d 751, 751-752, 180 P.2d 749).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that a contract action is based on an illegal gambling or wagering contract, and the underlying contract is therefore unenforceable.

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a defendant seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used by defendant in moving for summary judgment, on the ground that undisputed facts show that plaintiff's cause of action is based on an unenforceable gambling contract.

Note that one court of appeal has expressed the view that given California's expanded acceptance of gambling, as evidenced by the introduction of the state lottery, a judgment from a jurisdiction that allows casino gambling should be entitled to comity in California [Crockford's Club, Ltd. v. Si-Ahmed (1988) 203 Cal. App. 3d 1402, 1406, 250 Cal. Rptr. 728 (permitting enforcement of English judgment for aggregate amount of dishonored checks given to gambling club to purchase gambling tokens)]. Even so, no California case has allowed a foreign casino or its assignee to recover in a suit initially filed in California.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised in support of a defendant's motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the supporting and opposing papers showing that undisputed facts establish that plaintiff's cause of action is based on an unenforceable gambling contract.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender). For discussion and forms relating to the unenforceability of gambling contracts, see also California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 272, Gambling (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

These memoranda may be combined, when appropriate, with the memoranda set out in § 50.150 (illegal contract generally).

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum supporting a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the memoranda in § 50.160 et seq. may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Wagering Contracts Are Not Enforceable

Kyne v. Kyne (1940) 16 Cal. 2d 436, 106 P.2d 620 , involved a proceeding in which certain third parties claimed money that had been levied-on by a sheriff on behalf of a judgment creditor of the defendant. The third-party claims rested on the successful outcome of an unlawful wagering agreement with the defendant, who accepted wagers concerning various events, including the claimants' wagers on the outcome of an election. The money levied-on comprised the wagers, and the third-party claimants represented bettors who had successfully placed bets on the election but had not been paid their winnings. The trial court rendered judgment for the claimants.

The Supreme Court reversed. Courts will not recognize an illegal contract and will not aid the parties but will leave them where it finds them. This rule has been rigidly enforced to deny any relief in the courts to parties seeking to recover either their stakes or their winnings under a wagering contract that is in violation of law, whether the party against whom the relief was sought was a party to the wager or a stakeholder for the parties to the wager. The wagering agreements involved in this case were illegal contracts to which the rule applied. The burden was on the third-party claimants to prove that their claims to the money were superior to the judgment creditor's claim. They could not do this without relying on the wagering agreements and thus they were not entitled to prevail (16 Cal. 2d 436, 438) .

In Bradley v. Doherty (1973) 30 Cal. App. 3d 991, 106 Cal. Rptr. 725 , cert. denied, 414 U.S. 878 , the plaintiff alleged that the defendant fraudulently obtained money from the plaintiff by betting on sides or hands of various games, including pinball games. The trial court sustained thedefendant's demurrer on the ground that the allegations of the complaint showed that the plaintiff was attempting to collect money that he had lost in betting on the outcome of pinball games; the plaintiff was in pari delicto; and, as the betting was illegal, one engaged in such betting could not recover his losses even if the gambling game was fixed and crooked.

The court of appeal affirmed. The courts will not recognize such an illegal betting contract and will not aid the parties but will leave them where it finds them. This rule has been rigidly enforced to deny any relief in the courts to parties seeking to recover either their stakes or their winnings under a wagering contract that is in violation of law. The gambling activity in this case could only be classified as an unlawful and forbidden enterprise to which the doctrine of in pari delicto applied. Whether the plaintiff was a compulsive gambler was of no importance. A compulsive gambler is no less in pari delicto when indulging in illegal gambling than a noncompulsive one (30 Cal. App. 3d 991, 994) .

[b] Contract Founded on Gambling Consideration Is Unenforceable

Lavick v. Nitzberg (1948) 83 Cal. App. 2d 381, 188 P.2d 758 , was an action on checks given in payment for chips to be used in gambling. The plaintiff, who conducted a gambling establishment, received four checks from the defendant in payment for chips to be used by the defendant in a game of draw poker. The plaintiff knew that the checks were given for the purchase of chips, the chips would be used by the defendant in the game, and one of the plaintiff's employees would participate in the game. The defendant lost all of the chips and subsequently stopped payment on the checks. The trial court rendered judgment for the defendant. The plaintiff contended on appeal that since draw poker is not a game declared illegal by Penal Code § 330 (punishment for gaming, as defined), it was a lawful transaction.

The court of appeal affirmed. Because Civ. Code § 1667 states that an act is not lawful if it is contrary to an express provision of law, contrary to the policy of express law, even though not expressly prohibited, or otherwise contrary to good morals, that statute, not Penal Code § 330, determines what is an unlawful contract. Because draw poker is a game of chance, in other words, gambling, the consideration for the notes given in a gambling game in a gambling house is contrary to good morals and unlawful under Civ. Code § 1667. Promissory notes given in a gambling house to the keeper of the house for the purpose of enabling the maker to participate in any game of chance with the keeper or his or her employees are unenforceable under that statute (83 Cal. App. 2d 381, 382) .

[c] Checks Cashed for Gambling Purposes

Hamilton v. Abadjian (1947) 30 Cal. 2d 49, 179 P.2d 804 , was an action to enforce payment on checks cashed by the plaintiff's assignor. Theproceeds of the checks were lost at a blackjack table in the casino of the hotel belonging to the plaintiff's assignor. The trial court found that the plaintiff was entitled to recover on four out of six checks cashed.

The Supreme Court affirmed. The two checks that the plaintiff was not allowed to recover on were cashed at the blackjack table. The owner of a gambling house who honors a check for the purpose of providing a prospective customer with funds with which to gamble and who then participates in the transaction promoted by his or her act cannot recover on the check. Therefore, the plaintiff in this case, as assignee of the two checks, was not entitled to recover (30 Cal. 2d 49, 52) .

In Braverman v. Horn (1948) 88 Cal. App. 2d 379, 198 P.2d 948 , the plaintiff sued on a check taken in payment of a gambling debt. The plaintiff's assignor had cashed a series of checks while the defendant was shooting dice. After the defendant had lost the entire sum to the knowledge of the assignor, the latter accepted one check in lieu of all the smaller checks, which were then destroyed. The plaintiff was the assignee of that replacement check. The trial court granted the defendant's motion for summary judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed. A payer who honors checks by payment in cash or chips for the purpose of enabling the drawer to use the proceeds in a gambling game conducted by the payer has no cause of action on the checks. The underlying principle supporting the judgment was that the check in suit was a contract in payment of a gambling debt and, as such, against good morals (contra bonos mores) and unenforceable under Civ. Code § 1667 (88 Cal. App. 2d 379, 381) .

[d] Money Lent for Gambling Purposes

Rose v. Nelson (1947) 79 Cal. App. 2d 751, 180 P.2d 749 , was an action to recover on an unpaid check. During a game of poker, the defendant gave the plaintiff seven IOUs for cash used by the defendant to continue the game. Thereafter the defendant gave the plaintiff his check for the sum of the IOUs. The check was returned from the bank unpaid. The trial court granted the defendant's motion for summary judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed. A lender who advances money to a borrower with the understanding that it is to be used in gambling, or who participates and shares in the gambling transaction promoted by his or her act, becomes particeps criminis and cannot recover the money advanced. If the lender takes any active part in the gambling contract, such as depositing the loan as margins, he or she cannot recover. Money lent by one player to another while both are participating in a poker game without further stipulation as to its use cannot be recovered by the lender (79 Cal. App. 2d 751, 751-752) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Wagering Contracts Are Not Enforceable

In Szadolci v. Hollywood Park Operating Co. (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 16, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 356 , the plaintiffs had purchased shares from the defendant in a worthless canceled horse racing ticket. At the time the defendant sold the shares, he was aware that the ticket was invalid and was intending to defraud the purchasers. The defendant personally purchased the ticket for $4,860, canceled it, and then bribed a pari-mutuel clerk to let him keep it. The horses listed on the canceled ticket won, and the plaintiffs brought a tort action against the seller, the racetrack, and other parties, alleging negligence, conspiracy, and negligent hiring. The court of appeal held that the plaintiffs had no remedy, because the bets were unauthorized by the Business and Professions Code and illegal (14 Cal. App. 4th 16, 21) . Generally courts will not recognize an illegal betting contract and will not aid the parties but will leave them where it finds them (14 Cal. App. 4th 16, 19) .

[b] Money Lent for Gambling Purposes

The court of appeal in Metropolitan Creditors Service v. Sadri (1993) 15 Cal. App. 4th 1821, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 646 , affirmed a judgment declining to enforce a Nevada-licensed gambling establishment's cause of action against a California resident to recover $22,000 in bad checks and memoranda of indebtedness executed in Nevada to finance baccarat losses over a two-day period. The court of appeal discussed the history and purpose of California's public policy, noting the inclusion in the 1987 American Psychiatric Association's characterization of pathological gambling as a mental disorder (15 Cal. App. 4th 1821, 1824-1830) , and concluded that the reasoning and public policy underlying older cases still apply: the owner of a gambling house who honors a check for the purpose of providing a prospective customer with funds with which to gamble and then participates in the transaction promoted cannot recover on the check (15 Cal. App. 4th 1821, 1832) .

55 of 168 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
3. Illegal Purpose Doctrine

5-50 California Points & Authorities §§ 50.152-50.159

[Reserved]

§§ 50.152[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
3. Illegal Purpose Doctrine

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.160

§ 50.160 Party May Maintain Action When Aid of Illegal Agreement Is Not Required

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

ALTHOUGH THERE MAY BE SOME ILLEGAL FEATURES INDIRECTLY CONNECTED WITH A TRANSACTION INVOLVED IN AN ACTION FOR BREACH OF CONTRACT, THE PLAINTIFF MAY RECOVER DAMAGES FOR THE BREACH IF HE/ SHE DOES NOT REQUIRE THE AID OF THE ILLEGAL CONTRACT TO ESTABLISH HIS/HER CASE.

Action Is Permitted When Aid of Illegal Agreement Is Not Required. Although there may be some illegal features indirectly connected with a transaction involved in an action, the plaintiff may recover if the cause of action is otherwise legitimate and he or she can make a case without calling the illegal agreement to his or her aid. The test of whether the demand can be enforced at law is whether the plaintiff requires the aid of the illegal contract to establish his or her case (Cal-Neva Lodge, Inc. v. Marx (1960) 178 Cal. App. 2d 186, 189, 2 Cal. Rptr. 889).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that the plaintiff does not require the aid of an illegal contract to establish maintain an action for contract damages.

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a plaintiff seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used by plaintiff in opposing a defendant's motion for summary judgment, made on the ground that the underlying contract is illegal and unenforceable.

With respect to illegal gambling contracts, see also the editorial comment in § 50.151[2][a].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised in opposition to a defendant's motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the supporting and opposing papers showing that there is, at least, a triable issue of fact concerning the legality of the underlying contract, when the opposing papers show a contract that involves an entirely legitimate transaction, although it may be indirectly related to illegal activity.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender). Fordiscussion and forms relating to the unenforceability of gambling contracts, see also California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 272, Gambling (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

These memoranda may be combined, when appropriate, with the memoranda set out in § 50.161 et seq.

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum opposing a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the memoranda set out in § 50.150 and § 50.151 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Action Is Permitted When Aid of Illegal Agreement Is Not Required

Cal-Neva Lodge, Inc. v. Marx (1960) 178 Cal. App. 2d 186, 2 Cal. Rptr. 889 , was an action for money received for the plaintiff's use and benefit. The defendant admitted that pursuant to an agreement with the plaintiff, he received the claimed sums of money for the plaintiff's use. Nevertheless, he claimed that he could withhold the amounts due and belonging to the plaintiff since the money collected was a result of credit the plaintiff extended to various persons who engaged in games of chance in the plaintiff's gambling casinos. The trial court rendered judgment for the plaintiff.

The court of appeal affirmed. That this was not a suit to collect a gambling debt from one who participated in an illegal enterprise. Instead, although there may have been some illegal features indirectly connected with the transaction involved in this case, the plaintiff nevertheless could recover if the cause of action was otherwise legitimate and the plaintiff could make out a case without calling the illegal agreement to the plaintiff's aid. The test of whether the demand can be enforced at law is whether theplaintiff requires the aid of the illegal contract to establish the case. Because the plaintiff in this case established that the defendant, as its agent, had collected money for the plaintiff's use and benefit and failed to pay the money to the plaintiff, the plaintiff did not require the aid of any illegal agreement or transaction. The defendant's duty to pay the plaintiff arose from a separate agreement to collect for and pay to his principal the money in question (178 Cal. App. 2d 186, 189) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
3. Illegal Purpose Doctrine

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.161

§ 50.161 Relief May Be Granted Under Illegal Contract

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE PLAINTIFF MAY RECOVER DAMAGES IN AN ACTION FOR BREACH OF CONTRACT, EVEN THOUGH THE CONTRACT IS ILLEGAL, IF THE TRANSACTION HAS BEEN COMPLETED, NO SERIOUS MORAL TURPITUDE IS INVOLVED, THE DEFENDANT IS GUILTY OF THE GREATER MORAL FAULT, AND OTHERWISE THE DEFENDANT WOULD BE UNJUSTLY ENRICHED AT THE PLAINTIFF'S EXPENSE.

A. Public Importance of Discouraging Prohibited Transactions. The rule requiring courts to withhold relief under the terms of an illegal contract is based on the rationale that the public importance of discouraging the prohibited transactions outweighs equitable considerations of possible injustice between the parties (Southfield v. Barrett (1970) 13 Cal. App. 3d 290, 294, 91 Cal. Rptr. 514).

[EITHER]

B. Relief May Be Granted Under Illegal Contract. The rule against enforcement of illegal contracts is not inflexible when the object of the contract is merely contrary to a statute, regulation, or rule (malum prohibitum) and not contrary to commonly accepted standards or morality (malum in se). In such a case, the contract may be enforced by a party who is not in pari delicto (McIntosh v. Mills (2004) 121 Cal. App. 4th 333, 344 n.10, 347B351, 17 Cal. Rptr. 3d 66 ; Cain v. Burns (1955) 131 Cal. App. 2d 439, 442, 280 P.2d 888).

[OR]

B. Relief May Be Granted Under Illegal Contract. The rule against enforcement of illegal contracts is not inflexible when the object of the contract is merely contrary to a statute, regulation, or rule (malum prohibitum) and not contrary to commonly accepted standards or morality (malum in se). In such a case, the contract may be enforced when the public interests promoting the statute in question are not advanced by rendering the agreement unenforceable (McIntosh v. Mills (2004) 121 Cal. App. 4th 333, 344 n.10, 349, 17 Cal. Rptr. 3d 66 ; Emmons, Williams, Mires & Leech v. State Bar (1970) 6 Cal. App. 3d 565, 86 Cal. Rptr. 367).

[OR]

B. Relief May Be Granted Under Illegal Contract. If by applying the rule that relief under the terms of an illegal contract will not be granted, the public cannot be protected because the transaction has been completed, no serious moral turpitude is involved, the defendant is the one guilty of the greater moral fault, and to apply the rule would permit the defendant to be unjustly enriched at the plaintiff's expense, the rule should not be applied, and the plaintiff should be granted a remedy (Tri-Q, Inc. v. Sta-Hi Corp. (1965) 63 Cal. 2d 199, 219, 45 Cal. Rptr. 878, 404 P.2d 486 ; Southfield v. Barrett (1970) 13 Cal. App. 3d 290, 294, 91 Cal. Rptr. 514).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that a plaintiff in an action for contract damages may recover even though the underlying contract is illegal, when the public cannot be protected because the transaction has been completed, no serious moral turpitude is involved, and the defendant otherwise would be unjustly enriched at the plaintiff's expense. The defendant would be unjustly enriched by the amount of the contract price because of receiving a service or goods without paying, and consequently, the measure of the plaintiff's recovery may be the contract price. The plaintiff may also use this contention in an action for rescission and restitution, in order to be granted a remedy consisting of restitution of the items or money by which the defendant has been unjustly enriched.

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a plaintiff seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used by plaintiff in opposing a motion for summary judgment, made on the ground that the underlying illegal contract is not enforceable.

With respect to illegal gambling contracts, see also the editorial comment in § 50.151[2][a].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised in opposition to a defendant's motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the supporting and opposing papers showing that there are triable issues of fact concerning circumstances that would entitle plaintiff to recover damages, notwithstanding the illegality of the underlying contract.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender). For discussion and forms relating to the unenforceability of gambling contracts, see also California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 272, Gambling (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

These memoranda may be combined, when appropriate, with the memoranda set out in § 50.160 and §§ 50.162, 50.163.

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum opposing a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the memoranda in § 50.150 and § 50.151 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Public Importance of Discouraging Prohibited Transactions

Southfield v. Barrett (1970) 13 Cal. App. 3d 290, 91 Cal. Rptr. 514 , was an action on a contract by which, in return for an advance of a sum of money, the defendant agreed to harvest and deliver hay to the plaintiff. The plaintiff agreed to market the hay and to credit the defendant with the proceeds less certain deductions, including commissions. After partial performance, the defendant refused to make further deliveries. As a defense to the plaintiff's action for breach of contract, the defendant pleaded that the contract was illegal in that the plaintiff was acting as a commission merchant without a license in violation of the applicable statutory provisions. The issue of illegality was tried by the court before the trial of any other issues. The trial court concluded that the contract was illegal and void and rendered judgment for the defendant.

The court of appeal reversed. The rule that courts are required to withhold relief under the terms of an illegal contract is based on the rationale that the public importance of discouraging the prohibited transactions outweighs equitable considerations of possible injustice as between the parties. If the public cannot be protected because the transaction has already been completed, no serious moral turpitude is involved, and the defendant is the one guilty of the greater moral fault and would be unjustly enriched at the plaintiff's expense if the rule were applied, the general rule should not be applied. Equitable solutions have been fashioned to avoid unjust enrichment to a defendant and a disproportionately harsh penalty on the plaintiff. The violation of law in this case was one that did not involve serious moral turpitude. The policy of protecting the public from the future consequences of the contract would not be furthered because the transaction had been completed. Neither party could be said to have been guilty of the greater moral fault. The defendant would be unjustly enriched at the plaintiff's expense were he not required at least to pay the balance owing on the advance payment. The penalty resulting from denial of relief would be disproportionately harsh in relation to the violation involved (13 Cal. App. 3d 290, 294) .

[b] Relief May Be Granted Under Illegal Contract

In McIntosh v. Mills (2004) 121 Cal. App. 4th 333, 17 Cal. Rptr. 3d 66 a nonlawyer sued to enforce a fee-sharing agreement with an attorney. The court held that because fee-sharing agreements between lawyers and nonlawyers are expressly prohibited by a rule of professional conduct, the object of the contract was illegal, and it did not matter that the nonlawyer party trying to enforce the contract was not subject to that rule. The court further held that although fee sharing was prohibited, and therefore the contract, while illegal, was not necessarily unenforceable, an analysis of the relative culpability of the parties showed that the plaintiff was at least as culpable as the defendant attorney in the illegal conduct. For that reason, and because serious moral turpitude was involved, the plaintiff was not entitled to relief under the exception to unenforceability for parties not in pari delicto (121 Cal. App. 4th 333, 344) .

Southfield v. Barrett (1970) 13 Cal. App. 3d 290, 91 Cal. Rptr. 514 , is discussed in [a], above.

In Emmons, Williams, Mires & Leech v. State Bar (1970) 6 Cal. App. 3d 565, 86 Cal. Rptr. 367 , a law firm sought declaratory relief that its fee-splitting agreement with a bar association's referral service was illegal and unenforceable. The court upheld the agreement, holding that none of the concerns underlying the rule against fee splitting with nonlawyers would be implicated by the agreement in question; to the contrary, under the specific circumstances of the case, it was in the public interest to enforce the agreement (6 Cal. App. 3d 565, 573B575) .

Tri-Q, Inc. v. Sta-Hi Corp. (1965) 63 Cal. 2d 199, 45 Cal. Rptr. 878, 404 P.2d 486 , involved a cross complaint to recover the balance due under a contract to purchase certain stock of a corporation when the cross defendant (plaintiff in the principal action) terminated his employment. The contract specifically provided for the payment in semi-annual installments of the remaining amount of the purchase price after two previous contracts had already been negotiated. The cross defendant made the first four payments and then brought the principal action to rescind the agreement, alleging that the defendant had breached a clause of the agreement providing that he would not enter into competition with the cross defendant. The defendant cross complained for the balance due. The trial court found that neither party was entitled to relief since the agreement had afforded a means by which both parties could have taken improper advantage of the federal and state governments.

The Supreme Court reversed. The general rule requires a court to withhold relief under the terms of an illegal contract or agreement that violates public policy. Rules barring enforcement of illegal contracts are intended either to prevent the guilty party from reaping the benefits of his or her wrongful conduct or to protect the public from the future consequences of an illegal contract. They do not necessarily apply to both parties to the agreement unless both are truly in pari delicto. Thus, if the public cannot be protected because the transaction has been completed, no serious moral turpitude is involved, the defendant is the one guilty of the greater moral fault, and to apply the rule would permit the defendant to be unjustly enriched at the plaintiff's expense, the rule should not be applied. In this case there was no reason why the cross complainant should be denied the court's aid in obtaining the agreed consideration for the stock delivered to the plaintiff. Except for payment of that consideration, the transaction had been completed, and the public required no further protection. The cross defendant was clearly guilty of the greater moral fault, and the cross complainant's conduct involved little, if any, serious moral turpitude. Refusal of the courts to enforce the agreement would permit the cross defendant to be unjustly enriched. Such a course would result in a forfeiture disproportionately harsh considering the nature of the illegality and the respective conduct of the parties. Finally, effective deterrence would be best realized by enforcing the cross complainant's claim rather than by leaving the cross defendant in possession of the benefit (63 Cal. 2d 199, 219) .

In Cain v. Burns (1955) 131 Cal. App. 2d 439, 442, 280 P.2d 888 , a private investigator sued an attorney for refusing to pay a percentage of the attorney's fee in a case, which the lawyer had promised to do in exchange for the plaintiff's investigative services. The court held that the rule against enforcement of illegal contracts was not to be blindly applied to every case in which some illegality appeared in the transaction. Because the transaction had been completed (except for payment to the investigator), and no serious moral turpitude was involved, enforcement of the rule would not protect the public interest. Moreover, determination of whether the parties were in pari delicto required analysis of the relative culpability of each, and the investigator was relatively less blameworthy than the attorney, who was attempting to gain advantage from his own disregard of a rule intended to govern his (and not the investigator's) conduct. Accordingly, under the facts of that case, the court enforced the agreement (131 Cal. App. 2d 439, 443) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Relief May Be Granted Under Illegal Contract

Asdourian v. Araj (1985) 38 Cal. 3d 276, 211 Cal. Rptr. 703, 696 P.2d 95 , was a suit by a contractor to recover in excess of $25,000 under several contracts, including two oral home improvement contracts, for work done on investment properties owned by a friend with whom he had previously had business dealings. Home improvement contracts in excess of $500 are required by Bus. & Prof. Code § 7159 to be in writing; otherwise the contractor is guilty of a misdemeanor punishable by a fine. The trial court awarded the plaintiff $45,000, which included the excess of the reasonable value of his services provided under three agreements over the amounts paid previously by the owner. The Supreme Court affirmed. In view of the history of Bus. & Prof. Code § 7159, including a 1975 amendment deleting a provision that contracts not in compliance with that section were not to be deemed invalid solely because of the noncompliance, the express penalty provisions of the statute are not exclusive, and some oral contracts may in fact be void (38 Cal. 3d 276, 292) . The Court specifically disapproved the holding of Calwood Structures, Inc. v. Herskovic (1980) 105 Cal. App. 3d 519, 521-522, 164 Cal. Rptr. 463 , that Bus. & Prof. Code § 7159 implicitly excludes additional penalties (38 Cal. 3d 276, 293 n.11). The Court reviewed the criteria for enforcing an illegal contract--a statute does not expressly prohibit enforcement; the violation is only malum prohibitum, not malum in se; the policy purpose of the statute will not be furtheredby denying enforcement; the penalty of denying relief would be disproportionately harsh in relation to the violation; and the failure to allow the plaintiff compensation would unjustly enrich the defendant. In these circumstances, an illegal contract may be enforced (38 Cal. 3d 276, 292-294) .

The court of appeal in Davenport & Co., Inc. v. Spieker (1988) 197 Cal. App. 3d 566, 242 Cal. Rptr. 911 , followed Asdourian v. Araj (1985) 38 Cal. 3d 276, 291-294, 211 Cal. Rptr. 703, 696 P.2d 95 (discussed above), in affirming a contractor's recovery for work done on oral change orders, even though Bus. & Prof. Code § 7159 requires changes to be in writing. The defendant home owner who negotiated for the extra work was a partner in a real estate investment and development firm. Further, the home owner was not displeased with the work and should not be allowed to retain the benefits of the oral change orders without compensating the contractor (197 Cal. App. 3d 566, 570, 571) .

In Johnson v. Johnson (1987) 192 Cal. App. 3d 551, 237 Cal. Rptr. 644 , the court of appeal affirmed, with certain modifications, a judgment imposing a resulting trust in favor of a mother against her son. The son had purchased a home with GI financing, but the mother had provided all of the son's purchase money. The mother could not have obtained the GI loan, and it would have been illegal for her to obtain the benefits of the GI loan (192 Cal. App. 3d 551, 556) . The issue of illegality was not raised in the trial court. The son, not the mother, initiated the transaction. The public policy prohibiting enforcement of illegal contracts was designed to protect the public. The contract may be enforced when the public cannot be protected because the transaction is completed, there is no serious moral turpitude involved, the defendant is the one guilty of the greater fault, and refusal to grant relief would unjustly enrich the defendant at the plaintiff's expense (192 Cal. App. 3d 551, 558) . Even had the issue of illegality been raised in the trial court, it would have been well within the court's discretion to impose the resulting trust (192 Cal. App. 3d 551, 559) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
3. Illegal Purpose Doctrine

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.162

§ 50.162 Party Justifiably Ignorant of Contract's Illegality May Recover for Performance

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

IF THE ILLEGALITY OF A CONTRACT IS DUE TO FACTS OF WHICH THE PLAINTIFF WAS JUSTIFIABLY IGNORANT AND THE DEFENDANT WAS NOT, THE ILLEGALITY DOES NOT BAR THE PLAINTIFF'S RECOVERY OF COMPENSATION FOR HIS/HER PERFORMANCE RENDERED WHILE REMAINING JUSTIFIABLY IGNORANT.

A. Recovery Permitted for Party Who Is Justifiably Ignorant. If the illegality of a contract is due to facts of which one party is justifiably ignorant and the other party is not, the illegality does not bar recovery by the innocent party of compensation for performance rendered while he or she remained justifiably ignorant of the facts establishing illegality (Holland v. Morgan & Peacock Properties (1959) 168 Cal. App. 2d 206, 210, 335 P.2d 769).

[Optional] B. Recovery Permitted When Defendant Misrepresented Facts. When the defendant has misrepresented the facts so that the plaintiff was unaware of any illegality involved in the contract, the plaintiff may recover for performance rendered while he or she believed the facts to be as represented by the defendant (Holland v. Morgan & Peacock Properties (1959) 168 Cal. App. 2d 206, 210, 335 P.2d 769).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that the plaintiff in an action for contract damages was justifiably ignorant of the facts establishing the illegality of the contract, and is therefore entitled to maintain the action.

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a plaintiff seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used by plaintiff in opposing a motion for summary judgment, made on the ground that the underlying illegal contract is not enforceable.

With respect to illegal gambling contracts, see also the editorial comment in § 50.151[2][a].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised in opposition to a defendant's motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the supporting and opposing papers showing that there are triable issues of fact showing plaintiff's justifiable ignorance of the illegality of the contract.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender). For discussion and forms relating to the unenforceability of gambling contracts, see also California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 272, Gambling (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

These memoranda may be combined, when appropriate, with the memoranda set out in §§ 50.160, 50.161 and § 50.163.

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum opposing a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the memoranda in § 50.150 and § 50.151 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Recovery Permitted for Party Who Is Justifiably Ignorant

Holland v. Morgan & Peacock Properties (1959) 168 Cal. App. 2d 206, 335 P.2d 769 , was an action to enforce an oral agreement requiring the defendants to share their commissions with the plaintiff brokers. The defendants had agreed to pay the plaintiffs half of the commissions if the plaintiffs were to find purchasers for properties owned by clients of the defendants. The plaintiffs had found a prospective purchaser whose name they disclosed to one defendant. The properties were actually sold to a corporation formed by that purchaser, who provided a large part of the financing, but the plaintiffs never received any portion of their commissions. Only one of the defendants was a licensed real estate broker; the other was licensed as a salesman, and the defendants' partnership did not have a separate license. The individual defendants represented to the plaintiffs, at the outset, that they and their partnership were licensed brokers, who had written contracts with the owners of the properties they sought to sell. In addition, the plaintiffs did not know the true licensing situation until after their services were rendered. Judgment was rendered on a verdict for the plaintiffs.

The court of appeal affirmed. To the extent that enforceability of the contract with the plaintiffs depended on the defendants acting as brokers, the contract was illegal and void. However, the plaintiffs came within a recognized exception to the rule barring recovery on contracts tainted with illegality. If the illegality is due to facts of which one party is justifiably ignorant and the other party is not, the illegality does not bar recovery by the innocent party of compensation for performance rendered while he or she remains justifiably ignorant of the facts establishing illegality. Permitting the plaintiff to recover was therefore proper, since denying recovery would unreasonably enrich the defendants by leaving them in possession of gains that stemmed from their misrepresentations (168 Cal. App. 2d 206, 210) .

[b] Recovery Permitted When Defendant Misrepresented Facts

Holland v. Morgan & Peacock Properties (1959) 168 Cal. App. 2d 206, 335 P.2d 769 , is discussed in [a], above.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
3. Illegal Purpose Doctrine

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.163

§ 50.163 Contract Can Be Enforced Insofar as Illegal Consideration Can Be Severed

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

AN ILLEGAL CONTRACT WILL BE ENFORCED WHEN ONLY PART OF THE CONSIDERATION GIVEN FOR THE CONTRACT INVOLVES ILLEGALITY. NOTWITHSTANDING AN ILLEGAL CONSIDERATION, THE COURT MAY SEVER THE ILLEGAL PORTION OF THE CONTRACT FROM THE REST OF THE AGREEMENT.

Illegal Consideration Can Be Severed and Contract Can Be Enforced. Illegal contracts will be enforced in certain circumstances, such as when only part of the consideration given for the contract involves illegality. In other words, notwithstanding an illegal consideration, courts may sever the illegal portion of the contract from the rest of the agreement. Only when the court is unable to distinguish between the lawful and unlawful parts of theagreement will the illegality taint the entire contract and make the entire transaction illegal and unenforceable (Birbrower, Montalbano, Condon & Frank v. Superior Court (1998) 17 Cal. 4th 119, 138, 70 Cal. Rptr. 2d 304, 949 P.2d 1).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that the plaintiff in an action for contract damages was justifiably ignorant of the facts establishing the illegality of the contract, and is therefore entitled to maintain the action.

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a plaintiff seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used by plaintiff in opposing a motion for summary judgment, made on the ground that the underlying illegal contract is not enforceable.

With respect to illegal gambling contracts, see also the editorial comment in § 50.151[2][a].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised in opposition to a defendant's motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the supporting and opposing papers showing that there are triable issues of fact concerning the severability of illegal portions of the contract and maintaining an action on the remaining portions.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender). For discussion and forms relating to the unenforceability of gambling contracts, see also California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 272, Gambling (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

These memoranda may be combined, when appropriate, with the memoranda set out in §§ 50.160 -50.162.

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum opposing a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the memoranda in § 50.150 and § 50.151 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Illegal Consideration Can Be Severed and Contract Can Be Enforced

In Birbrower, Montalbano, Condon & Frank v. Superior Court (1998) 17 Cal. 4th 119, 70 Cal. Rptr. 2d 304, 949 P.2d 1 , an out-of-state law firm, not licensed to practice law in California, violated Bus. & Prof. Code § 6125 when it performed legal services in California for a California-based client under a fee agreement stipulating that California law would govern all matters in the representation. See Ch. 25, Attorney's Fees , for further discussion of that aspect of the case. The case arose because the client sued for malpractice, and the firm counterclaimed for its fee under the agreement. The trial court granted the client's motion for summary adjudication of the counterclaim, and the court of appeal denied the firm's petition for a writ of mandate.

The Supreme Court reversed and remanded on the firm's counterclaim for fees after affirming on the issue of the violation of Bus. & Prof. Code § 6125. The firm could not recover under the fee agreement for services constituting the unlawful practice of law in California, but the firm could recover under the agreement for any services performed for the client outside California and not constituting the practice of law in California. While it is true that courts will not ordinarily aid in enforcing an agreement that is either illegal or against public policy, nevertheless illegal contracts will be enforced in certain circumstances, such as when only part of the consideration given for the contract involves illegality. In other words, notwithstanding an illegal consideration, a court may sever the illegal portion of a contract from the rest of the agreement. Only if the court is unable to distinguish between the lawful and unlawful parts of the agreement will the illegality taint the entire contract and make the entire transaction illegal and unenforceable. In this case, the firm's statutoryviolation required exclusion of the portion of the fee attributable to the illegal services, but that violation did not necessarily preclude recovery under the fee agreement for limited services performed outside California. Thus, the portion of the fee agreement that included payment for services rendered outside California was enforceable to the extent that the illegal compensation could be severed from the rest of the agreement (17 Cal. 4th 119, 138-139) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
3. Illegal Purpose Doctrine

5-50 California Points & Authorities §§ 50.164-50.169

[Reserved]

§§ 50.164[Reserved]

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
4. Minor Defendant's Incapacity

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.170

§ 50.170 Minor Is Without Capacity to Enter Into Contract Relating to Real Property or to Personal Property Not in Minor's Immediate Possession and Control

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE DEFENDANT LACKED CAPACITY TO CONTRACT IN THAT HE/SHE WAS A MINOR AT THE TIME THE CONTRACT WAS MADE, AND THE CONTRACT _____ [RELATES TO (AN INTEREST IN) REAL PROPERTY or RELATES TO (AN INTEREST IN) PERSONAL PROPERTY NOT IN THE DEFENDANT'S IMMEDIATE POSSESSION OR CONTROL or DELEGATES A POWER].

A. Minors Defined. A minor is an individual under 18 years of age. The period of minority is measured from the first minute of the day the individual is born to the same minute of the corresponding day completing the period of minority (Fam. Code § 6500).

B. Minor's Incapacity to Make Certain Contracts. A minor cannot give a delegation of power or make a contract relating to real property or any interest in real property or relating to any personal property not in his or her immediate possession or control (Fam. Code § 6701).

C. Disaffirmance Is Not Necessary. Contracts described in Family Code Section 6701 (formerly Civil Code Section 33) are deemed absolutely void, and a minor need not expressly disaffirm them in order to avoid their apparent effect (Hakes Inv. Co. v. Lyons (1913) 166 Cal. 557, 560-561, 137 P. 911).

[Optional] D. Void Contracts Are Not Ratifiable. Contracts of minors that are void from the beginning may not be made valid by subsequent acts of ratification (Hakes Inv. Co. v. Lyons (1913) 166 Cal. 557, 561, 137 P. 911).

[Optional] E. Direction to Pay Wages to Another Is Void. A minor's direction to pay his or her wages to another person constitutes an assignment of a chose in action and is void under Family Code Section 6701 (formerly Civil Code Section 33) (Morgan v. Morgan (1963) 220 Cal. App. 2d 665, 675, 34 Cal. Rptr. 82).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that plaintiff's cause of action for contract damages is based on a contract that is void because the defendant was a minor at the time it was made, and the contract relates to an interest in real property, relates to personal property not under the defendant's immediate possession or control, or delegates a power [see Fam. Code § 6701 (restating former Civ. Code § 33)]. Optional Paragraph D is for use to address the procedural issue that dissaffirmance is not required because the contract was void. Optional Paragraph E illustrates one common type of "delegation of power" that a minor cannot make: that is, an assignment of wages.

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a defendant seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used by defendant in supporting a motion for summary judgment made on the ground that the underlying contract is void under Fam. Code § 6701.

If a minor's contract neither relates to real property nor relates to personal property not under the minor's immediate possession and control and does not delegate a power, the contract is not void, but it is subject to the right of the minor to disaffirm the contract before he or she reaches the age of majority or within a reasonable time thereafter, with the exception of certain type of contracts [see Fam. Code §§ 6700, 6710]. For further discussion see § 50.171[2][a] and [c].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised in support of a defendant's motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the supporting and opposing papers showing that there are undisputable facts showing that the contract was of a type deemed void under Fam. Code § 6701.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender). For discussion and forms relating to the minors and contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 365, Minors: Contract Actions , (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

These memoranda may be combined, when appropriate, with the memoranda set out in § 50.171.

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum supporting a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Disaffirmance Is Not Necessary

In Hakes Inv. Co. v. Lyons (1913) 166 Cal. 557, 137 P. 911 , the plaintiff sued to quiet title to certain real property. The plaintiff's grantor and the defendant were at one time co-owners of the property, each having an undivided half-interest. The defendant then executed a deed purporting to convey his half-interest to the plaintiff's grantor for a consideration of one dollar. At the time he executed the deed, the defendant was 14 years old. The defendant did not attempt to disaffirm or repudiate the transaction until he filed his answer to the quiet title action, which was 35 years after the deed was executed and 28 years after he had attained the age of majority (which, at that time, was 21 years old). The trial court rendered judgment for the plaintiff.

The Supreme Court reversed. The question of whether the plaintiff had title depended on whether the defendant was required to disaffirm the deed within a reasonable time after coming of age, in order to render it ineffectual and avoid the transfer of title to the plaintiff. Under the common law preceding the enactment of former Civ. Code § 33, the contracts described by that section [see Fam. Code § 6701 (restating former Civ. Code § 33)] would be deemed absolutely void, with no necessity to disaffirm them to avoid their apparent effect (166 Cal. 557, 560) . It logically follows that the provisions of former Civ. Code § 35 concerning disaffirmance of contracts made by a minor under 18 years old [see Fam. Code § 6710 (restating former Civ. Code § 35)] were to be understood as intended to refer solely to contracts other than those described in former Civ. Code § 33, and it was not the purpose to make a disaffirmance necessary to avoid a contract of a minor relating to real property, or to personal property not in his or her immediate possession or control, or delegating a power (166 Cal. 557, 560-561) . Since the deed was absolutely void, the doctrine of ratification had no application, since the effect of a ratification is to preclude a party from afterward disaffirming a contract, which implies that the contract would be binding but for the disaffirmance. When, however, the contractis not binding in any event, but is utterly void from the beginning, no ratification can make it valid (166 Cal. 557, 561) .

[b] Void Contracts Are Not Ratifiable

Hakes Inv. Co. v. Lyons (1913) 166 Cal. 557, 137 P. 911 , is discussed in [a], above.

[c] Direction to Pay Wages to Another Is Void

In Morgan v. Morgan (1963) 220 Cal. App. 2d 665, 34 Cal. Rptr. 82 , the plaintiff sued to recover the amounts of payroll checks issued to him when he was under 18 years of age under a contract of employment as an actor. The plaintiff was employed by the defendant studio when he was 12 years old to play a role in a television series. The written employment contract was approved on a petition to the superior court, pursuant to former Civ. Code § 36 [see Fam. Code § 6751 (restating former Civ. Code § 36)]. Pursuant to another contract approved by the court, the plaintiff's mother relinquished all right to compensation paid to the plaintiff pursuant to the acting contract. Thereafter, pursuant to the employment contract, the plaintiff received payroll checks. Some of these checks were delivered by the studio to a management agency that endorsed the checks, at the plaintiff's written direction, and issued its own checks to the plaintiff for the same amount, less a commission for its services. By one of the counts of his complaint, the plaintiff sought to recover from the studio and from the agency the amount of the checks issued by the studio. The trial court denied the plaintiff recovery on this count, except for the amount of the commission retained by the agency.

The court of appeal, affirming on another ground, held that the plaintiff's authorization to the agency to endorse the checks was a delegation of power and therefore void under former Civ. Code § 33 [see Fam. Code § 6701 (restating former Civ. Code § 33)] (220 Cal. App. 2d 665, 674) . Because the delegation of power was void and not necessary to the accomplishment of the purpose of the contract to have the plaintiff's wages paid to him through the medium of checks, the agency's endorsement of the plaintiff's name on the checks was unauthorized, and the payment of the checks by the bank did not discharge the studio's obligation to the plaintiff (220 Cal. App. 2d 665, 674-675) . The studio had not extinguished its obligation to pay the plaintiff's wages by delivering the checks to the agency merely because the plaintiff had directed the studio to pay his wages to the agency. Even assuming that the direction to deliver the checks to the agency and the related oral direction to the agency to endorse and cash them constituted a direction to pay the wages to the agency, the studio was, nevertheless, not relieved of its obligation for wages, because the plaintiff's right to wages was not personal property in his possession and his direction topay the wages to another constituted an assignment of a chose in action, which was void (220 Cal. App. 2d 665, 675) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
4. Minor Defendant's Incapacity

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.171

§ 50.171 Contract Was Disaffirmed by Minor

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE DEFENDANT WAS A MINOR AT THE TIME THE CONTRACT WAS MADE, AND THE DEFENDANT DISAFFIRMED THE CONTRACT PURSUANT TO FAMILY CODE SECTION 6710.

A. Minors Defined. [See [1][a], Paragraph A, above.]

B. Minor's Power to Disaffirm Contracts. Except as otherwise provided by statute, the contract of a minor may be disaffirmed by the minor, either before his or her majority or within a reasonable time afterwards, or, in case of his or her death within that period, may be disaffirmed by his or her heirs or personal representatives (Fam. Code § 6710).

C. Disaffirmance Is Rescission. Disaffirmance of an executed or executory contract by a minor, whether declared before or after majority, has the effect of a rescission (Warner Bros. Pictures v. Brodel (1948) 31 Cal. 2d 766, 771, 192 P.2d 949).

D. Restoration of Consideration Is Not Necessary. A minor who disaffirms a contract pursuant to Family Code Section 6710 (formerly Civil Code Section 35) may do so without restoring or offering to restore to the other party the consideration received by the minor under the contract (see Tracy v. Gaudin (1930) 104 Cal. App. 158, 161, 285 P. 720).

E. Manner of Disaffirming Contract. Disaffirmance of a contract by a minor may be made by any act or declaration, and express notice to the other party is not necessary (Celli v. Sports Car Club of America, Inc. (1972) 29 Cal. App. 3d 511, 517, 105 Cal. Rptr. 904).

[Optional] F. Minor May Not Be Estopped From Disaffirming Contract. A minor cannot be estopped to disaffirm a contract while the minor is under the age of majority (Morgan v. Morgan (1963) 220 Cal. App. 2d 665, 675, 34 Cal. Rptr. 82). In order to operate as an estoppel, the acts allegedly estopping the minor to disaffirmthe contract must occur after the minor has reached the age of majority (Lee v. Hibernia Sav. & L. Soc'y (1918) 177 Cal. 656, 660, 171 P. 677).

[Optional] G. Mature Appearance Does Not Estop Minor From Disaffirming Contract. A minor is not estopped to disaffirm a contract because of having had a mature appearance at the time of making the contract (Lee v. Hibernia Sav. & L. Soc'y (1918) 177 Cal. 656, 660, 171 P. 677).

[Optional] H. False Representation of Age Does Not Preclude Disaffirmance. A minor is not estopped to disaffirm a contract because he or she falsely represented his or her age at the time of making the contract (Lee v. Hibernia Sav. & L. Soc'y (1918) 177 Cal. 656, 660, 171 P. 677 ; Williams v. Leon T. Shettler Co. (1929) 98 Cal. App. 282, 283, 276 P. 1065).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that, in an action for contract damages, the defendant effectively disaffirmed the contract as one made while the defendant was a minor [see Fam. Code § 6710]. See also discussion in [c], below.

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a defendant seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used by defendant in supporting a motion for summary judgment made on the ground that the underlying contract has been disaffirmed under Fam. Code § 6710.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised in support of a defendant's motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the supporting and opposing papers showing by undisputable facts that the contract was disaffirmed by defendant under Fam. Code § 6710.

[c] Minor's Power to Disaffirm Certain Contracts

If a minor's contract involves real property, personal property not under the minor's immediate possession and control, or a delegation of a power, that contract is void and need not be disaffirmed [see Fam. Code § 6701; Hakes Inv. Co. v. Lyons (1913) 166 Cal. 557, 560-561, 137 P. 911 ; see § 50.170]. If a minor's contract involves none of these things, the contract is not void, but it is subject to the right of the minor to disaffirm the contract before he or she reaches the age of majority or within a reasonable time thereafter [see Fam. Code §§ 6700, 6710]. Certain contracts are made expressly not disaffirmable on the ground of minority:

- Contracts expressly authorized by statute [Fam. Code § 6711].
- Contracts for necessaries [Fam. Code § 6712; see § 50.180].
- Contracts relating to the minor's services as an actor or in professional sports or relating to literary or artistic compositions [Fam. Code § 6750 et seq.; see § 50.181].

In addition, a number of sections in the Family Code provide that a minor's consent to the rendering of certain specified medical and psychiatric services cannot be disaffirmed on the ground of minority [see Fam. Code § 6920 et seq.]. The sections do not expressly indicate whether a minor may disaffirm a contract to pay for the services, and no reported appellate decision has considered the question. Thus, it is unclear whether these provisions create additional exceptions to the minor's power to disaffirm his or her contracts or whether the provisions were intended only to shield the provider of the services from tort liability when the services are provided without the consent of the minor's parent or guardian.

Emancipated minors are considered adults for purposes of contracts [see Fam. Code § 7050(e)].

Under former Civ. Code § 35, in all cases other than those specified in former Civ. Code §§ 36 and 37 [see Fam. Code §§ 6711, 6712, 6750 et seq.], "the contract of a minor, if made whilst he is under the age of eighteen may be disaffirmed by the minor himself, either before his majority or within a reasonable time afterwards; or, in case of his death within that period, by his heirs or personal representatives; and if the contract be made by the minor whilst he is over the age of eighteen, it may be disaffirmed in like manner upon restoring the consideration to the party from whom it was received, or paying its equivalent." Restoration of consideration was thus required to accompany disaffirmance of a contract made by a minor who was more than 18 years old, but not when the minor was under that age [see Burnand v. Irigoyen (1947) 30 Cal. 2d 861, 865, 186 P.2d 417] . In 1971, the age of majority was lowered to 18, and former Civ. Code § 35 was amended to eliminate the references to the minor's age. Although no case interpreted former Civ. Code § 35 after its amendment, the language of Fam. Code § 6710 is identical to that formerly applied only to minors under the age of 18. Thus, apparently, a minor need not restore consideration furnished to him or her pursuant to a contract that he or she has disaffirmed.

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender). For discussion and forms relating to the minors and contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 365, Minors: Contract Actions , (Matthew Bender).

[e] Related Memoranda

These memoranda may be combined, when appropriate, with the memoranda set out in § 50.170.

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum supporting a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[f] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in §§ 50.180 and 50.181 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Disaffirmance Is Rescission

The facts and procedural background of Warner Bros. Pictures v. Brodel (1948) 31 Cal. 2d 766, 192 P.2d 949 , are discussed in § 50.181[3][a]. The Supreme Court noted that a minor's disaffirmance, whether declared before or after majority, of a contract, whether executed or executory, under former Civ. Code § 35 has the effect of a rescission (31 Cal. 2d 766, 771) .

[b] Restoration of Consideration Is Not Necessary

In Tracy v. Gaudin (1930) 104 Cal. App. 158, 285 P. 720 , the plaintiff, as administrator of a decedent's estate, sued to recover a sum paid by the decedent, then a minor under the age of 18 years, to the defendant as the price of an automobile. At the time the contract was made, the decedent was under the care of a court-appointed guardian. The guardian had deposited a sum of money belonging to the decedent in a bank. When the guardian withheld permission to use that money to buy an automobile,the decedent forged the guardian's signature and obtained the money, with which he bought the car from the defendant. A few days later, the minor traded in the car to another person as part payment on a more expensive car. The decedent died a month later, and the plaintiff was appointed administrator of his estate. At no time did either the decedent or the plaintiff restore, or offer to restore to the defendant, the automobile that the decedent had bought from him, or its value. The trial court rendered judgment for the plaintiff.

The court of appeal affirmed. Except in certain specified instances not applicable in this case, a contract of a minor under the age of 18 years could be disaffirmed by the minor, or by his personal representatives in case of the minor's death, and returning the consideration received by the minor was implicitly not required (104 Cal. App. 158, 160) . Thus, because the decedent was under the age of 18 years at the time he paid the defendant for the automobile, his personal representative could disaffirm the contract and recover the money without restoring, or offering to restore, the consideration to the defendant (104 Cal. App. 158, 161) .

[c] Manner of Disaffirming Contract

In Celli v. Sports Car Club of America, Inc. (1972) 29 Cal. App. 3d 511, 105 Cal. Rptr. 904 , three plaintiffs, one of whom was a minor, sued for personal injuries sustained while they were spectators at an automobile race operated and sponsored by the defendants. The plaintiffs, who had been admitted to the infield area of the race track pursuant to a pit pass issued by the defendants, were injured when, during a practice run, a car left the track and skidded into the infield area, striking the plaintiffs. The trial court rendered judgment for each plaintiff. On appeal, the defendants contended that the trial court had erred in failing to admit the pit passes into evidence on the issues of liability and assumption of risk. The passes purported to release the defendants from liability for any injury caused by an accident or any other occurrence.

The court of appeal affirmed. The release agreements in any event were invalid and unenforceable as to the minor, who was nine years old at the time of the accident. Under former Civ. Code § 35 then applicable, a contract of a minor made while under the age of 18 could be disaffirmed by the minor himself either before his majority or within a reasonable time thereafter [see Fam. Code § 6710 (restating former Civ. Code § 35)]. The disaffirmance could be made by any act or declaration, and express notice to the other party was unnecessary; the filing of an action was sufficient (29 Cal. App. 3d 511, 517) . On this ground alone, the trial court did not err in excluding the pit passes signed by or on behalf of the minor (29 Cal. App. 3d 511, 517-518) .

[d] Minor Is Not Estopped From Disaffirming Contract

In Lee v. Hibernia Sav. & L. Soc'y (1918) 177 Cal. 656, 171 P. 677 , the plaintiff sued to have a mortgage and deed of trust on real property owned by the plaintiff declared void on the ground that the plaintiff was a minor under the age of 18 at the time she executed these instruments. The plaintiff had executed the instruments to secure loans made by the defendants, without informing the defendants that she was under 18 years of age. Thereafter, when the defendants threatened to foreclose the instruments because of the plaintiff's default in making the loan payments, the defendants were informed that the plaintiff had been under the age of 18 years when the instruments were executed. The plaintiff falsely represented that she would be 18 within a month and promised that if they would forgo sale of the property on account of the default and advance to her and her mother an additional sum secured by the deed of trust, the plaintiff would ratify and confirm the trust deed after she reached majority. Thereafter, the plaintiff executed an instrument purporting to ratify the trust deed and falsely swearing that she was over 18 years of age. The trial court found that the defendants had been deceived by the affidavit as to the plaintiff's age; at the time the trust deed was executed, the plaintiff had had the physical appearance and mentality of an adult woman. The trial court, however, rendered judgment for the plaintiff. On appeal, the defendants contended that the findings of fact showed that the plaintiff should be estopped from asserting that she was under 18 years old at the time the trust deed was executed and at the time she purportedly ratified the trust deed.

The Supreme Court affirmed. The trial court had specifically found that the plaintiff was under 18 years of age at the time she executed the instruments and, hence, was incapable of making the trust deed. Although some act that is the equivalent of a new contract may in some cases act as an estoppel to disaffirm the contract, nevertheless, the acts must be performed after the minor reaches an age when she has capacity to act in order to operate as an estoppel. It would nullify the plain provisions of former Civ. Code §§ 33 and 35 [see Fam. Code §§ 6701, 6710 (restating former Civ. Code §§ 33 and 35)] to hold that a minor under 18 years of age is, because of her mature appearance and false representations as to her age, estopped to disaffirm a conveyance of real estate without restoring the consideration received by her (177 Cal. 656, 660) .

The facts and procedural background of Morgan v. Morgan (1963) 220 Cal. App. 2d 665, 34 Cal. Rptr. 82 , are discussed in § 50.170[3][c]. The defendants contended that the plaintiff was estopped to disaffirm the transaction. In rejecting this contention, the court of appeal noted that, in that case, all of the elements of estoppel were present if the right to disaffirm were to be asserted by an adult; however, the defendants had cited no authority holding that a minor may be estopped to assert the rightgiven him or her by former Civ. Code § 35 [see Fam. Code § 6710 (restating former Civ. Code § 35)] to disaffirm his contract. The court observed that all authorities that had been called to its attention [see, e.g., Lee v. Hibernia Sav. & L. Soc'y (1918) 177 Cal. 656, 660, 171 P. 677 , discussed above] hold to the contrary (177 Cal. 656, 171 P. 677) .

[e] Mature Appearance Does Not Estop Minor From Disaffirming Contract

Lee v. Hibernia Sav. & L. Soc'y (1918) 177 Cal. 656, 171 P. 677 , is discussed in [d], above.

[f] False Representation of Age Does Not Preclude Disaffirmance

Lee v. Hibernia Sav. & L. Soc'y (1918) 177 Cal. 656, 171 P. 677 , is discussed in [d], above.

In Williams v. Leon T. Shettler Co. (1929) 98 Cal. App. 282, 276 P. 1065 , the plaintiff, who was a minor, bought an automobile from the defendant under an installment contract. In partial payment of the price, the plaintiff delivered another automobile and a sum of cash to the defendant. Twelve days thereafter, the plaintiff disaffirmed the contract and demanded that the defendant return the automobile and cash to the plaintiff, in part, because the plaintiff was a minor. When the defendant refused to do so, the plaintiff commenced an action to recover the consideration furnished by him. The defendant later assigned the contract to a finance company. The trial court rendered judgment for the plaintiff. On appeal, the defendant contended that the plaintiff should not have been permitted to disaffirm the contract because at the time the agreement was made, the plaintiff had falsely represented to the defendant seller that he was 22 years old.

The court of appeal affirmed. Neither former Civ. Code § 35 [see Fam. Code § 6710 (restating former Civ. Code § 35)] nor any other statutory provision contained any intimation that fraud of the nature practiced by the plaintiff could have the effect of preventing the minor from disaffirming the contract (98 Cal. App. 282, 283) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
4. Minor Defendant's Incapacity

5-50 California Points & Authorities §§ 50.172-50.179

[Reserved]

§§ 50.172[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
4. Minor Defendant's Incapacity

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.180

§ 50.180 Minor Is Not Permitted to Disaffirm Certain Contracts for Necessaries

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE CONTRACT WAS ONE BY WHICH THE DEFENDANT AGREED TO PAY THE REASONABLE VALUE OF THINGS ACTUALLY FURNISHED TO AND NECESSARY FOR THE SUPPORT OF THE _____ [DEFENDANT or DEFENDANT'S FAMILY], WHICH WAS MADE BY THE DEFENDANT WHEN HE/SHE WAS NOT UNDER THE CARE OF A PARENT OR GUARDIAN ABLE TO PROVIDE FOR THE DEFENDANT OR HIS/HER FAMILY, AND WHICH IS THEREFORE NOT SUBJECT TO DISAFFIRMANCE ON THE GROUND OF THE DEFENDANT'S MINORITY.

A. Contracts for Necessaries Are Not Subject to Disaffirmance. A contract, otherwise valid, that is made during minority and while the minor is not under the care of a parent or guardian who is able to provide for the minor or his or her family, by which the minor agrees to pay the reasonable value of things necessary for his or her support, or that of his or her family, cannot be disaffirmed on the ground of minority, either during minority or thereafter, if those things have been actually furnished to the minor or to his or her family (Fam. Code § 6712).

B. Implied Contract to Pay for Necessaries. An obligation on the part of a minor to pay for necessaries furnished to the minor or his or her family on his or her own credit is implied in law, if not otherwise prohibited. A contract by a minor to pay for necessaries actually furnished to him or her is not inherently invalid, whether the contract is express or implicit (Burnand v. Irigoyen (1947) 30 Cal. 2d 861, 867, 868, 186 P.2d 417).

[Optional] C. Lodging Is Necessary. Lodging is necessary. If shelter or lodging is furnished to a minor, and a promise to pay for it can be inferred from the circumstances, the minor is liable for its reasonable value (see Burnand v. Irigoyen (1947) 30 Cal. 2d 861, 867, 186 P.2d 417).

[Optional] D. Attorney's Services Are Necessary. The services of an attorney rendered to a minor in a proceeding personal to him or her are necessaries of life of the minor, and a promise by the minor to pay the attorney for the reasonable value of the services is implied in law (Leonard v. Alexander (1942) 50 Cal. App. 2d 385, 387-389, 122 P.2d 984).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that, in an action for contract damages, the defendant, although aminor at the time of contracting, may not not disaffirm the contract on the ground of minority, because the contract is one for necessaries and is expressly excepted from disaffirmance on that ground [see Fam. Code § 6712].

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a plaintiff seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used by plaintiff in opposing a motion for summary judgment made on the ground that the underlying contract has been disaffirmed under Fam. Code § 6710.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised in support of a plaintiff's opposition to a motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the supporting and opposing papers showing that there is, at least, a triable issue on whether defendant may disaffirm the contract on grounds of minority, in that the contract falls within the exception set out in Fam. Code § 6712.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender). For discussion and forms relating to the minors and contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 365, Minors: Contract Actions , (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

These memoranda may be combined, when appropriate, with the memoranda set out in § 50.181.

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum supporting a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.171 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Implied Contract to Pay for Necessaries

In Burnand v. Irigoyen (1947) 30 Cal. 2d 861, 186 P.2d 417 , the plaintiff and her husband made a contract to convey a residence to the defendant, then a minor, and her mother, brother, and stepfather. After taking possession of the property, the purchasers defaulted in their performance on the contract. The plaintiff brought an action in ejectment, after the commencement of which the purchasers surrendered possession of the property. Thereafter, the plaintiff sued to quiet title to the property. The defendant filed a cross complaint based on her disaffirmance of the contract, for recovery of payments made on the purchase price. On the issues presented by the cross complaint, the trial court concluded that the defendant was not entitled to recover anything paid under the contract.

The Supreme Court affirmed. As to the express contract for purchase of the property, although a minor under the age of 18 was entitled, on disaffirmance, to recover all benefits paid under the contract, it was incumbent on the defendant to show that she had made payments on the contract executed by her before she could recover (30 Cal. 2d 861, 866-867) . The record in this case indicated that the defendant's parents, and not the defendant, had made all of the payments. Moreover, even if the defendant had made some of the payments, an obligation on the part of a minor to pay for necessaries furnished to him or her and his or her family on his or her own credit is implied in law, if otherwise not prohibited. Lodging is necessary. If shelter or lodging has been furnished to a minor, and a promise to pay is implicit in the circumstances, the minor will be liable for the reasonable value, unless statutory prohibitions apply (30 Cal. 2d 861, 867) . The policy of the law of California that protects minors against their own improvidence does not extend to depriving others of the reasonable value of necessaries that they have furnished to minors who have the capacity to contract for those necessaries, since the law recognizes that minors must have their needs provided-for (30 Cal. 2d 861, 867-868) . Thus, there is no invalidity inherent in a minor's contract to pay for necessaries actually furnished to him, whether that contract is express or implied (30 Cal. 2d 861, 868) . In this case, the trial court had found, on sufficient evidence, that the parents of the minors were unable to provide shelter, and the home that they occupied and the reasonable rental value were necessary for the support of the minors. The record showed that the rental value of the property exceeded the amounts paid under the contracts, and there was no showing that a home of the class occupied by the members of the family was not in accord with their station and requirements, or that the amounts paid to the plaintiff did not represent he reasonable rental value for the period of occupancy (30 Cal. 2d 861, 868) .

[b] Lodging Is Necessary

Burnand v. Irigoyen (1947) 30 Cal. 2d 861, 186 P.2d 417 , is discussed in [a], above.

[c] Attorney's Services Are Necessary

In Leonard v. Alexander (1942) 50 Cal. App. 2d 385, 122 P.2d 984 , an attorney sued to recover for services rendered to the defendant, then a minor, in an action for damages caused by medical malpractice. The plaintiff had originally been hired by the defendant and his mother to represent the plaintiff in the action on a contingent fee, but, after the defendant and his mother expressed dissatisfaction with the plaintiff's services, another attorney was substituted. The plaintiff agreed to the substitution without prejudice to his rights to attorney's fees for services previously rendered in the event the defendant ultimately recovered. After the defendant reached majority, he compromised the claim and received a sum of money in settlement of the claim. The trial court rendered judgment for the defendant in the action by the attorney for recovery of fees.

The court of appeal reversed. The general rule concerning the fees of attorneys for services rendered to a person under disability to contract is that the services are usually considered necessaries, and a promise to pay for them is implied in law when they are rendered in a proceeding personal that individual (50 Cal. App. 2d 385, 388) . The services rendered by the plaintiff in this case were for necessaries of life of the minor, and their reasonable value was recoverable from him (50 Cal. App. 2d 385, 389) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
4. Minor Defendant's Incapacity

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.181

§ 50.181 Minor Is Not Permitted to Disaffirm Certain Court-Approved Contracts

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE CONTRACT WAS APPROVED BY THE SUPERIOR COURT PURSUANT TO _____ [FORMER CIVIL CODE SECTION 36 or FAMILY CODE SECTION 6751] AND IS THEREFORE NOT SUBJECT TO DISAFFIRMANCE ON THE GROUND OF THE DEFENDANT'S MINORITY AT THE TIME THE CONTRACT WAS MADE.

[EITHER]

A. Court-Approved Contracts for Artistic or Creative Services Are Not Subject to Disaffirmance. A contract or agreement, otherwise valid, that is made during minority, by which the minor isemployed or agrees to render artistic or creative services, cannot be disaffirmed on the ground of minority, either during the actual minority of the person entering into the contract or thereafter, if the contract or agreement has been approved by the superior court (Fam. Code §§ 6750(a)(1), 6751(a)). For this purpose, "artistic or creative services" include, but are not limited to, services as an actor, actress, dancer, musician, comedian, singer, stunt-person, voice-over artist, or other performer or entertainer, or as a songwriter, musical producer or arranger, writer, director, producer, production executive, choreographer, composer, conductor, or designer (Fam. Code §§ 6750(a)(1), 6751(a)).

[OR]

A. Court-Approved Contracts Relating to Literary, Musical, or Dramatic Properties Not Subject to Disaffirmance. A contract or agreement, otherwise valid, that is made during minority, by which the minor agrees to buy, otherwise obtain, sell, lease, license, or otherwise dispose of, literary, musical, or dramatic properties (either tangible or intangible) or any rights in those properties for use in motion pictures, television, the production of sound records, the legitimate or living stage, or otherwise in the entertainment field, cannot be disaffirmed on the ground of minority, either during the actual minority of the person entering into the contract or thereafter, if the contract or agreement has been approved by the superior court (Fam. Code §§ 6750(a)(2), 6751(a)).

[OR]

A. Court-Approved Contracts for Services in Sports Are Not Subject to Disaffirmance. A contract or agreement, otherwise valid, that is made during minority, by which the minor is employed or agrees to render services as a participant or player in a sport cannot be disaffirmed on the ground of minority, either during the actual minority of the person entering into the contract or thereafter, if the contract or agreement has been approved by the superior court (Fam. Code §§ 6750(a)(3), 6751(a)).

[CONTINUE]

[Optional] B. Court Approval of Contract Precludes Disaffirmance During and After Minority. When a court approves a contract pursuant to the statute, the minor cannot disaffirm the contract during his or her minority or thereafter (see Warner Bros. Pictures v. Brodel (1948) 31 Cal. 2d 766, 770-771, 192 P.2d 949).

[Optional] C. Approval Encompasses Options for Extension. When court approval of a contract is given pursuant to the statute, it extends to the whole of the contract and all of its terms and provisions, including but not limited to, any optional or conditional provisions in the contract for extending, prolonging, or terminating the contract (see Warner Bros. Pictures v. Brodel (1948) 31 Cal. 2d 766, 770-771, 192 P.2d 949).

[EITHER]

[Optional] D. Plaintiff Is Minor's Employer. If a minor is employed or agrees to render services directly for any person or entity, then that person or entity is considered the minor's employer [Fam. Code § 6750(b)(1)].

[OR]

[Optional] D. Plaintiff Is Minor's Employer. If a minor's services are being rendered through a third-party individual or personal services corporation, then the person to whom or entity to which that third party is providing the minor's services is considered the minor's employer [Fam. Code § 6750(b)(2)].

[OR]

[Optional] D. Plaintiff Is Minor's Employer. If a minor renders services as an extra, background performer, or in a similar capacity through an agency or service that provides one or more of those performers for a fee, then the agency or service is considered the minor's employer [Fam. Code § 6750(b)(3)].

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that in an action for contract damages, the defendant, although a minor at the time of contracting, may not not disaffirm the contract on the ground of minority, because the contract is one for the performance of artistic or creative services, or for the performance of services as an athlete, or for the purchase, sale, or other disposition of literary, musical, or dramatic properties, in support of the contention that the defendant could not disaffirm the contract on the ground of being a minor at the time the contract was made. The contention is based on the fact that the contract was approved by the superior court pursuant to Fam. Code § 6751 and is therefore not subject to disaffirmance on the ground of the minority.

Optional Paragraph B is for use when attempted disaffirmance occurred after the minor has attained majority. Optional Paragraph C is for use whenthe attempted disaffirmance related to an extension, termination, or other option, condition, or provision. Optional Paragraph D is for use when the plaintiff is one of the following [Fam. Code § 6750(b)]:

- An individual or entity directly employing the minor [see Paragraph D, first alternative];

- An individual or entity obtaining the minor's services through a loan-out company [see Paragraph D, second alternative]; or

- A casting agency through which the minor's services are provided. In that case, the plaintiff is considered the minor's employer [see Paragraph D, third alternative].

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a plaintiff seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used by plaintiff in opposing a motion for summary judgment made on the ground that the underlying contract has been disaffirmed.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised in support of a plaintiff's opposition to a motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the supporting and opposing papers showing that there is, at least, a triable issue on whether defendant is precluded from disaffirming the contract by application of Fam. Code § 6751.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender). For discussion and forms relating to the minors and contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 365, Minors: Contract Actions , (Matthew Bender). See also California Legal Forms, Ch. 100B, Contracts and Employment of Minors (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

These memoranda may be combined, when appropriate, with the memoranda set out in § 50.180.

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum supporting a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publicationin drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.170 or 50.171 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Court Approval of Contract Precludes Disaffirmance During and After Minority

In Warner Bros. Pictures v. Brodel (1948) 31 Cal. 2d 766, 192 P.2d 949 (decided under former Civ. Code § 36), a producer of motion pictures made a contract with the defendant, then a minor, by which the defendant agreed to perform dramatic services exclusively for the plaintiff during the term of the contract. The contract provided for a one-year term and gave the plaintiff six separate options to extend the contract for additional successive one-year periods at successively higher salary rates. The contract was submitted to and approved by the superior court pursuant to former Civ. Code § 36 [see Fam. Code §§ 6750(a)(1), 6751 (restating former Civ. Code § 36)]. The defendant performed her obligations under the agreement for the first year, and when the plaintiff elected to exercise the first three options, she continued to perform for three additional years. Before the fifth year, the defendant reached her majority. When the plaintiff notified the defendant of its election to exercise its fourth option, the defendant replied that she was disaffirming the contract and would perform no further services for the plaintiff. The plaintiff then sued to enjoin the defendant from performing for other motion picture producers. The trial court sustained demurrers to the complaint and dismissed the action. On appeal, the defendant contended that under former Civ. Code § 36, the minor's statutory right to disaffirm the contract was precluded only for the period of minority, and the minor could still disaffirm the contract within a reasonable time after majority.

The Supreme Court reversed. Former Civ. Code § 35 granted the power of disaffirmance only in cases other than those specified in former Civ. Code §§ 36 and 37 [see Fam. Code §§ 6711, 6712, 6750, 6751]. Moreover, former Civ. Code § 36 conferred on the superior courts the power, by their approval of contracts of minors, to remove from the obligations incurred the uncertainty that otherwise attends contract obligations of a minor because of the right of disaffirmance [see Fam. Code §§ 6712, 6750, 6751]. Disaffirmance of a contract, executed or executory, whether declared before or after majority, has the effect of a rescission. If former Civ. Code § 36 prohibited disaffirmance of a contract approved by the court duringminority only, it would not remove the uncertainty attending the right of disaffirmance but would only prolong it, since a minor who intended to disaffirm the contract would have to leave the matter in suspense until reaching majority (31 Cal. 2d 766, 771) .

[b] Approval Encompasses Options for Extension

Warner Bros. Pictures v. Brodel (1948) 31 Cal. 2d 766, 192 P.2d 949 , is discussed in [a], above. The point is now reflected in Fam. Code § 6751(b).

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
4. Minor Defendant's Incapacity

5-50 California Points & Authorities §§ 50.182-50.189

[Reserved]

§§ 50.182[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
5. Unconscionable Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.190

§ 50.190 Recovery Is Precluded by Unconscionability Doctrine

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE CONTRACT IS UNCONSCIONABLE AS APPLIED TO DEFENDANT IN LIGHT OF ITS TERMS AND ALL THE EVIDENCE PRESENTED AS TO ITS COMMERCIAL SETTING, PURPOSE, AND EFFECT.

A. Right to Present Evidence Regarding Unconscionability. When it is claimed or appears to the court that a contract or any provision of it may be unconscionable, the parties must be afforded a reasonable opportunity to present evidence as to its commercial setting, purpose, and effect (Civ. Code § 1670.5(b); Perdue v. Crocker National Bank (1985) 38 Cal. 3d 913, 926, 928-929, 216 Cal. Rptr. 345, 702 P.2d 503 ; see U.S. Roofing, Inc. v. Credit Alliance Corp. (1991) 228 Cal. App. 3d 1431, 1450, 279 Cal. Rptr. 533).

B. Indicia of Unconscionability. Under California law, the doctrine of unconscionability has a procedural and a substantive element. Procedural unconscionability turns on adhesiveness--a set of circumstances in which the weaker or "adhering" party is presented a contract drafted by the stronger party on a take it or leave it basis. Substantive unconscionability involves basic fairness of the agreement. Both elements must appear in order to invalidate a contract or one of its individual terms. These elements, however, need not be present in the same degree. The more substantively oppressive the contract term, the less evidence of procedural unconscionability is required to come to the conclusion that the term is unenforceable, and vice versa. (Little v. Auto Stiegler (2003) 29 Cal. 4th 1064, 1071-1072, 1076, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 892, 63 P.3d 979 ; Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Service, Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 113-114, 6 P.3d 669).

[Optional] C. Contract of Adhesion Defined. The term "contract of adhesion" signifies a standardized contract that, imposed and drafted by the party of superior bargaining strength, relegates to the subscribing party only the opportunity to adhere to the contract orreject it. The adhering party's freedom to choose not to contract at all is irrelevant. The question is whether he or she is free to negotiate and alter the printed terms of the proffered agreement. A signature card, drafted by the bank and offered to the customer without negotiation, is a classic example of a contract of adhesion (Perdue v. Crocker National Bank (1985) 38 Cal. 3d 913, 924-925, 216 Cal. Rptr. 345, 702 P.2d 503 ; Pardee Construction Company v. Superior Court (2002) 100 Cal. App. 4th 1081, 1086-1087, 123 Cal. Rptr. 2d 288 ; Flores v. Transamerica Homefirst, Inc. (2001) 93 Cal. App. 4th 846, 853-855, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 376 ; Parr v. Superior Court (1983) 139 Cal. App. 3d 440, 444, 188 Cal. Rptr. 801).

[Optional] D. Test for Enforceability of Adhesion Contract. [See § 50.200[1], Paragraph A.]

[Optional] E. Unconscionability Applied to Commercial Code Transactions. Although California did not adopt Uniform Commercial Code Section 2-302, the identical language has been enacted as Civil Code Section 1670.5, which applies to all contracts, including those governed by the Commercial Code. Thus, when nonnegotiable terms on preprinted form agreements combine with disparate bargaining power, resulting in the allocation of commercial risks in a socially or economically unreasonable manner, the concept of unconscionability as codified in Uniform Commercial Code Sections 2-302 and 2-719, Subdivision 3, furnishes legal justification for refusing enforcement of the offensive result (U.S. Roofing, Inc. v. Credit Alliance Corp. (1991) 228 Cal. App. 3d 1431, 1447-1448, 279 Cal. Rptr. 533 ; A & M Produce Co. v. FMC Corp. (1982) 135 Cal. App. 3d 473, 484-485, 493, 186 Cal. Rptr. 114).

[Optional] F. Relevant Considerations Regarding Unconscionability of Price Term. Factors generally considered in determining whether a price term is reasonable are the basis and justification for the charge, the price being paid by other similarly situated consumers in similar transactions, the price that would be determined in a competitive business environment, whether any competition existed for the goods or services, the inconvenience imposed on the seller, the true value of the goods or services, the buyer's absence of a meaningful choice, the sophistication of the buyer, and whether deceptive practices are involved (Civ. Code § 1670.5(b); Perdue v. Crocker National Bank (1985) 38 Cal. 3d 913, 926-929, 216 Cal. Rptr. 345, 702 P.2d 503 ; Truta v. Avis Rent A Car System (1987) 193 Cal. App. 3d 802, 820-821, 238 Cal. Rptr. 806).

[Optional] G. Market Price Set by Oligopoly Is Subject to Scrutiny. While it is unlikely that a court would find a price set by a freely competitive market to be unconscionable, the market price set by an oligopoly is not immune from scrutiny (Perdue v. Crocker National Bank (1985) 38 Cal. 3d 913, 927, 216 Cal. Rptr. 345, 702 P.2d 503).

[Optional] H. Unconscionability of Warranty Disclaimer. [The specific provisions of Commercial Code Section 2316 do not foreclose the application of Civil Code Section 1670.5 or Commercial Code Section 2719, Subdivision (3), to warranty disclaimer provisions. Thus, an unconscionable warranty disclaimer may be denied enforcement despite its technical compliance with Commercial Code Section 2316]. It is patently unreasonable to assume that a buyer would willingly take a standardized, mass-produced product from an industry seller without any performance standards. A disclaimer of warranties that leaves nothing guarantied about what the product will do and thus undermines the fundamental basis for the contract is commercially unreasonable and may be unconscionable. This is especially true in a transaction involving an inexperienced buyer, since the seller's representations as to the product's performance are absolutely necessary to allow the buyer to make an intelligent choice among the competitive options available (A & M Produce Co. v. FMC Corp. (1982) 135 Cal. App. 3d 473, 491-492, 186 Cal. Rptr. 114).

[Optional] I. Unconscionable Limitation or Exclusion of Consequential Damages Under Commercial Code. Consequential damages may be limited or excluded unless the limitation or exclusion is unconscionable. Limitation of consequential damages for injury to the person in the case of consumer goods is invalid unless it is proved that the limitation is not unconscionable. Limitation of consequential damages when the loss is commercial is valid unless it is proved that the limitation is unconscionable. It is a commercial reality that a breach of seller's warranties makes consequential damages not merely reasonably foreseeable but explicitly obvious (Com. Code § 2719(3); A & M Produce Co. v. FMC Corp. (1982) 135 Cal. App. 3d 473, 492, 186 Cal. Rptr. 114).

[Optional] J. Unconscionability Is Question of Law. The question of whether a contact or clause is unconscionable is one of law. [Thus, it is error to submit the matter to a jury.] (U.S. Roofing, Inc. v. Credit Alliance Corp. (1991) 228 Cal. App. 3d 1431, 1447-1448, 279 Cal. Rptr. 533 ; A & M Produce Co. v. FMC Corp. (1982) 135 Cal. App. 3d 473, 489, 186 Cal. Rptr. 114).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that the contract at issue in an action for contract damages is unconscionable and is therefore not unenforceable on that ground [see Civ. Code § 1670.5(b)].

The form includes the following optional memoranda:

- Optional Paragraph C defines a contract of adhesion, although unconscionability may be relevant in other situations [see, e.g., Com. Code § 2719(3)]. Optional Paragraphs C and D apply when the contract at issue is a contract of adhesion.

- Optional Paragraph E describes the relationship between the Civil Code provisions and Commercial Code provisions relating to unconscionability and may be relevant when the contract is governed by the Commercial Code.

- Optional Paragraph F is for use when a price term is claimed to be unconscionable.

- Optional Paragraph G should be used when a price term is claimed to be unconscionable and the defendant establishing the price is part of an oligopoly.

- Optional Paragraph H is for use when the provision claimed to be unconscionable is a disclaimer of warranty.

- Optional Paragraph I sets forth the provisions of the Commercial Code governing enforcement of provisions excluding or limiting consequential damages. If the facts involved personal injury in the case of consumer goods, the optional second sentence may be used. The optional third sentence may be used when commercial losses are involved. If the facts involve both a breach of warranty and an exclusion or limitation of consequential damages, the last optional sentence applies.

- Optional Paragraph J may be used to argue that the question of unconscionability is one of law, and it is error to submit the matter to a jury.

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a defendant seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used by defendant in supporting a motion for summary judgment made on the ground that the underlying contract is unconscionable.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised in support of a defendant's motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the supporting and opposing papers showing that, given the undisputed facts, the court may find as a matter of law that the contract is unconscionable.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender). For discussion and forms relating to the enforcement or nonenforcement of arbitration provisions, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 32, Contractual Arbitration: Agreements and Compelling Arbitration (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For memoranda concerning unconscionability of arbitration provisions, see Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resistant . For memoranda addressing the unconscionability of exculpatory clauses, releases, assumptions of the risk, and waivers, when used as defenses to a tort cause of action for negligence, see Ch. 165, Negligence .

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum supporting a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.200 or § 50.201 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Right to Present Evidence Regarding Unconscionability

The facts and procedural background of Perdue v. Crocker National Bank (1985) 38 Cal. 3d 913, 216 Cal. Rptr. 345, 702 P.2d 503 , arediscussed in § 50.431[3][a]. In reversing the sustaining of the demurrer with respect to the second cause of action, which sought a judicial declaration that NSF charges were oppressive and unconscionable, the Supreme Court noted that Civ. Code § 1670.5(b) requires that the parties be afforded a reasonable opportunity to present evidence as to the commercial setting, purpose, and effect of the contract (38 Cal. 3d 913, 928-929) .

The facts and procedural background of U.S. Roofing, Inc. v. Credit Alliance Corp. (1991) 228 Cal. App. 3d 1431, 279 Cal. Rptr. 533 , are discussed in [d], below [see also discussion in [b], below]. The court stated that a determination of unconscionability involves various factual considerations, including the business conditions in which the contract was formed, the relative bargaining power of the parties, their reasonable expectations, and the commercial reasonableness of the risk allocation as provided in the agreement. The court of appeal concluded, however, that in this case the defendant lessor's disclaimer of warranties was not unconscionable (228 Cal. App. 3d 1431, 1450) .

[b] Indicia of Unconscionability

In Little v. Auto Stiegler (2003) 29 Cal. 4th 1064, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 892, 63 P.3d 979 , an employee of an auto dealership claimed that he was demoted and then terminated for reporting warranty fraud. He brought an action for tortious demotion and termination in violation of public policy, breach of an implied contract of continued employment, and breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. Plaintiff had signed mandatory arbitration agreements that permitted either party to appeal an arbitration award of more than $50,000 to a second arbitrator. The employer's motion to compel arbitration initially was granted, then denied upon reconsideration following the decision in Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Services Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669 , discussed below (29 Cal. 4th 1064, 1069-1071) .

The court of appeal reversed, finding that the arbitration agreement was not unconscionable, and the California Supreme Court granted review. The Supreme Court held that the appellate arbitration provision was unconscionable. It recapitulated the principles of unconscionability set forth in Armendariz. With respect to the procedural element, the court found that the arbitration agreement was adhesive (29 Cal. 4th 1064, 1071) . The court then stated that one kind of substantively unconscionable provision occurs when the party imposing arbitration mandates a post-arbitration proceeding, either judicial or arbitral, wholly or largely to its benefit at the expense of the party on which the arbitration is imposed (29 Cal. 4th 1064, 1071-1072) . In this case, the $50,000 award threshold inordinately benefitted defendants, with no legitimate commercial need other than the employer's desire to maximize its advantage in the arbitration process. The court therefore concluded that the arbitral appeal provision in this particularagreement was unconscionably one-sided and could not be enforced (29 Cal. 4th 1064, 1073-1074) . However, the court determined that the offending provision could be severed. Unlike the agreement in Armendariz, this contract involved only a single provision that was unconscionable--the one sided arbitration appeal--and no contract reformation was required. The offending provision could be severed and the rest of the arbitration agreement left intact (29 Cal. 4th 1064, 1074-1076) .

The facts and procedural background of Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Services, Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669 are discussed in Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling, § 20.23[3][a]. In Armendariz, the California Supreme Court reversed an order compelling arbitration, concluding that the arbitration provision relied on was unconscionable and unenforceable. Citing A & M Produce Co. v. FMC (1982) 135 Cal. App. 3d 473, 486-487, 186 Cal. Rptr. 114 , discussed below, the Court stated that unconscionability has both a procedural and a substantive element. The former focuses on oppression or surprise due to unequal bargaining power, and the latter focuses on overly harsh or one-sided results. Although procedural and substantive unconscionability both must be present in order for a court to exercise its discretion to refuse to enforce a contract or clause under the doctrine of unconscionability, they need not be present in the same degree. Essentially a sliding scale is invoked; the more substantively oppressive the contract term, the less evidence of procedural unconscionability is required to come to the conclusion that the term is unenforceable, and vice versa (24 Cal. 4th 83, 113-114) .

Applying the above principles to the case, the Court first determined that the pre-employment arbitration "agreement" at issue in the case was adhesive. This "agreement" was imposed on employees as a condition of employment and there was no opportunity to negotiate (24 Cal. 4th 83, 115-116) . With respect to substantive unconscionability, the employees contended that the contract required only employees to arbitrate their wrongful termination claims against the employer, but did not require the employer to arbitrate claims it may have against the employees. The Court agreed that there must be a "modicum of bilaterality" in an arbitration agreement. The unconscionable one-sidedness of the arbitration agreement was compounded in this case by the fact that it did not permit the full recovery of damages for employees, while placing no such restriction on the employer (24 Cal. 4th 83, 121) . With respect to severability of the unconscionable provisions, the Court found that two factors weighed against severance of the unlawful provisions. First, the arbitration agreement contained more than one unlawful provision--it had both an unlawful damages provision and an unconscionably unilateral arbitration clause. Such multiple defects indicate a systematic effort to impose arbitration on an employee not simply as an alternative to litigation, but as an inferior forum that works to the employer's advantage. In other words,given the multiple unlawful provisions, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in concluding that the arbitration agreement was permeated by an unlawful purpose. Second, in the case of the agreement's lack of mutuality, permeation was indicated by the fact that there was no single provision a court could strike or restrict in order to remove the unconscionable taint from the agreement. Rather, the Court would have to reform the contract, not through severance or restriction, but by augmenting it with additional terms. Because the Court was unable to cure this unconscionability through severance or restriction and was not permitted to cure it through reformation and augmentation, it must void the entire agreement (24 Cal. 4th 83, 124-125) .

[c] Contract of Adhesion Defined

The facts and procedural background of Perdue v. Crocker National Bank (1985) 38 Cal. 3d 913, 216 Cal. Rptr. 345, 702 P.2d 503 , are discussed in § 50.431[3][a]. Although the bank conceded that the signature card was a contract of adhesion, the Supreme Court noted that the term contract of adhesion signifies a standardized contract, which, imposed and drafted by the party of superior bargaining strength, relegates to the subscribing party only the opportunity to adhere to the contract or reject it. A signature card, drafted by the bank and offered to the customer without negotiation, is a classic example of a contract of adhesion (38 Cal. 3d 913, 924-925) .

The facts and procedural background of Pardee Construction Company v. Superior Court (2002) 100 Cal. App. 4th 1081, 123 Cal. Rptr. 2d 288 , are discussed in [b], above. In Pardee, the court of appeal held that the superior court properly concluded that the real estate purchase agreements were contracts of adhesion. Citing the criteria set forth in Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Services, Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669 , discussed in [b], above, the court of appeal found that the contract provision presented each entry-level home buyer with a "take it or leave it" proposition. The buyers were unlikely to have significant economic bargaining power against the developer, and little choice other than to sign the agreement (100 Cal. App. 4th 1081, 1086-1087) .

In Flores v. Transamerica Homefirst, Inc. (2001) 93 Cal. App. 4th 846, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 376 , a senior citizen couple filed suit against their lender for unfair business practices with respect to a reverse mortgage on their home. The lender petitioned to compel arbitration pursuant to clauses contained in the loan agreement. The plaintiffs opposed the petition on the ground that the underlying loan documents were unconscionable. The trial court denied the petition, finding the arbitration clauses to be unconscionable and unenforceable pursuant to the then-recent decision of the California Supreme Court in Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Services, Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669 (discussed under [b], above). The court of appeal affirmed. The appellate court stated that an analysis of unconscionability begins with an inquiry into whether the contract was a contract of adhesion, i.e., a standardized contract imposed on the subscribing party without an opportunity to negotiate the terms. The court noted that a finding of a contract of adhesion is essentially a finding of procedural unconscionability. The court found that the arbitration clauses contained in the loan agreement and deed of trust constituted a contract of adhesion. The lender had superior bargaining strength, plaintiffs were offered no opportunity to negotiate, plaintiffs were required to sign the standardized loan documents to obtain the reverse mortgage and plaintiffs were told that they had no real choice of alternate lenders. In sum, the facts indicated that the arbitration agreement was imposed on plaintiffs on a "take it or leave it" basis. The arbitration agreement was a contract of adhesion and thereby procedurally unconscionable. Substantive unconscionability focuses on the one-sidedness of the contract terms. In the context of an arbitration agreement, the agreement is unconscionable unless there is a "modicum of bilaterality" in the arbitration remedy. The court found no bilaterality, and concluded that the unilateral obligation to arbitrate was so one-sided as to be substantively unconscionable (93 Cal. App. 4th 846, 853-855) . The court refused to sever the invalid provisions. Because it was faced with an arbitration agreement in which no single provision could be stricken to remove the unconscionable taint, the court affirmed the trial court's order denying the lender's motion to compel arbitration (93 Cal. App. 4th 846, 857-858) .

In Parr v. Superior Court (1983) 139 Cal. App. 3d 440, 188 Cal. Rptr. 801 , a bank customer and shareholder sought a writ of mandate to vacate the trial court's order compelling arbitration of his dispute with the bank. Although the writ did not issue, because the arbitration clause was found not to be unconscionable and was found to be within the plaintiff's reasonable expectations, the court of appeal considered the contract between the parties and found it to be a contract of adhesion. In setting forth the criteria for a contract of adhesion, the court of appeal noted that the adhering party's freedom to choose not to contract at all is irrelevant. The question is whether he or she is free to negotiate and alter the printed terms of the proffered agreement (139 Cal. App. 3d 440, 444) .

[d] Unconscionability Applied to Commercial Code Transactions

In U.S. Roofing, Inc. v. Credit Alliance Corp. (1991) 228 Cal. App. 3d 1431, 279 Cal. Rptr. 533 , a buyer-lessee of a crane sued the manufacturer and the financing lessor. The manufacturer knew that the crane was being purchased for lease and sale to the plaintiff. In fact, the purchase was negotiated between the manufacturer and the plaintiff. The manufacturerreferred the plaintiff to two arrangers of credit, one of whom became the financing lessor. The lease disclaimed all implied and express warranties from the financing lessor to the lessee. The plaintiff never returned the certificate of acceptance because it never received the full package. The financing lessor paid the manufacturer the full purchase price, less two deposits that the plaintiff had made to the manufacturer. The crane was out of service for several months for repairs, during which time it could not be made to conform and remained unsafe. The plaintiff stopped making payments under the lease when the defect was discovered. The jury found the crane to be defective, and judgment was rendered for the plaintiff against both the manufacturer and the financing lessor on the ground of breach of warranty. On appeal the defendant lessor contended that the disclaimer was valid because it comported with the requirements of Com. Code § 2316.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment against the financing lessor because it found the disclaimer to be valid. The judgment against the manufacturer was remanded on the issue of damages. The financing lessor had validly disclaimed all warranties, and the plaintiff's only remedies were against the manufacturer. The plaintiff had the right, as against the manufacturer, to revoke acceptance as soon as the defect appeared. The court stated that, although California did not adopt U.C.C. § 2-302, which permits the court to refuse to enforce any provision of a contract that it finds unconscionable as a matter of law, the doctrine of unconscionability is recognized in California as a common law doctrine and has thus been applied by courts in the absence of specific statutory authority (228 Cal. App. 3d 1431, 1447) . Further, language identical to U.C.C. § 2-302 was enacted as Civ. Code § 1670.5. A warranty disclaimer is subject to this doctrine (228 Cal. App. 3d 1431, 1448) .

The plaintiff in A & M Produce Co. v. FMC Corp. (1982) 135 Cal. App. 3d 473, 186 Cal. Rptr. 114 , had purchased a weight-sizing machine from the defendant. The machine was to be used to harvest the plaintiff's first tomato crop. After speaking with two of the defendant's representatives on two occasions, the plaintiff placed an order on a standard form, which was printed on both sides and contained the same terms as the form contract he later received, and paid a $5,000 deposit. The defendant's engineering department analyzed the layout of the plaintiff's packing shed and compiled a list of equipment that was sent to the plaintiff on a form contract. The reverse of the two-sided contract (signatures were on the front side) in bold print disclaimed all warranties and in smaller print disclaimed all liability for consequential damages. The total bill was $32,000. A 20-foot extension to the packing shed was required to house the equipment. The machine did not have a speed control, so tomatoes backed up, overflowed and fell on the ground, and were thus bruised, which made them susceptible to fungus. The entire crop was essentially ruined. The plaintiff offeredto return the machine. The defendant rejected the offer and demanded payment of the balance owing. The plaintiff sued for breach of express and implied warranties. Judgment was rendered for the plaintiff for the net sum of $255,000 plus attorney's fees. On appeal the defendant conceded that Com. Code § 2719 allows a court to declare a consequential-damages limitation unconscionable, but the defendant contended that the provisions of Com. Code § 2316, relating to wording and interpretation of warranty disclaimers, foreclosed application of any other statute to the warranty disclaimer.

The court of appeal affirmed. Although California had not adopted U.C.C. § 2-302, the identical language was enacted as Civ. Code § 1670.5, which applies to all contracts, including those governed by the Commercial Code (135 Cal. App. 3d 473, 484-485, 493) . Thus, an unconscionable warranty disclaimer may be denied enforcement despite technical compliance with Com. Code § 2316 (135 Cal. App. 3d 473, 484) .

[e] Relevant Considerations Regarding Unconscionability of Price Term

The facts and procedural background of Perdue v. Crocker National Bank (1985) 38 Cal. 3d 913, 216 Cal. Rptr. 345, 702 P.2d 503 , are discussed in § 50.431[3][a]. In reversing the sustaining of a demurrer with respect to the second cause of action, which sought a judicial declaration that NSF charges were oppressive and unconscionable, the Supreme Court reviewed the cases setting forth the considerations relevant to whether a price is reasonable or unconscionable. Those factors include, but are not limited to, the basis and justification for the charge, the price being paid by other similarly situated consumers in similar transactions, the inconvenience imposed on the seller, the true value of the goods or services, the buyer's absence of meaningful choice, the sophistication of the buyer, and whether deceptive practices are involved (38 Cal. 3d 913, 926-929) .

In Truta v. Avis Rent A Car System (1987) 193 Cal. App. 3d 802, 238 Cal. Rptr. 806 , the plaintiff alleged that the price for collision damage waivers in the standardized, nonnegotiable adhesion contracts offered by car rental companies was far in excess of the price that would be determined in a competitive business environment, that on an annualized basis the rate charged was two times the amount of insurance provided, and that no competition existed between the defendants for the insurance. The trial court sustained the defendant's demurrer.

The court of appeal reversed with respect to the plaintiffs' claims of unconscionability related to the price of the collision damage waivers. The court discussed indicia of unconscionability in general, saying that unconscionability encompasses both procedural abuses in the contract formation and substantive abuses relating to the terms of the contract, such asunexpectedly harsh terms manifested in the form of price disparity. Coincidence of both forms would be necessary to a finding of unconscionability. The court cited A & M Produce Co. v. FMC Corp. (1982) 135 Cal. App. 3d 473, 486, 186 Cal. Rptr. 114 (discussed in [d], above), for the proposition that unconscionability generally includes situations in which there is an absence of meaningful choice on the part of one of the parties, together with contract terms that are unreasonably favorable to the other party (193 Cal. App. 3d 802, 819) . Regarding unconscionability of the price, the allegations were sufficient indicia of unconscionability to survive a demurrer (193 Cal. App. 3d 802, 820-821) .

[f] Market Price Set by Oligopoly Is Subject to Scrutiny

The facts and procedural background in Perdue v. Crocker National Bank (1985) 38 Cal. 3d 913, 216 Cal. Rptr. 345, 702 P.2d 503 , are discussed in § 50.431[3][a]. The Supreme Court reversed the sustaining of a demurrer with respect to the second cause of action, which sought a judicial declaration that NSF charges were oppressive and unconscionable. After reviewing the factors generally considered in determining whether a price is reasonable or unconscionable, the Court noted that while it was unlikely that a price set by competitive market forces would be found unconscionable, the same could not be said about market prices in an oligopoly. Oligopoly market prices are subject to scrutiny (38 Cal. 3d 913, 927) .

[g] Unconscionability of Warranty Disclaimer

The facts, procedural background, and some of the discussion in A & M Produce Co. v. FMC Corp. (1982) 135 Cal. App. 3d 473, 186 Cal. Rptr. 114 , of the Civil Code and Commercial Code provisions applicable to warranty disclaimers are discussed in [d], above. Applying those principles to the facts of the case, the court of appeal pointed out that it is patently unreasonable to assume that a buyer would purchase a standardized, mass-produced product from an industry seller without any performance standards. A disclaimer of warranties that leaves nothing guarantied about what the product will do and thus undermines the fundamental basis for the contract is commercially unreasonable and may be unconscionable. This is especially true if the buyer is inexperienced, since in that situation, the seller's representations as to the product's performance are absolutely necessary to allow the buyer to make an intelligent choice among the competitive options available (135 Cal. App. 3d 473, 491-492) .

[h] Unconscionable Limitation or Exclusion of Consequential Damages Under Commercial Code

The facts, procedural background, and some of the discussion in A & M Produce Co. v. FMC Corp. (1982) 135 Cal. App. 3d 473, 186 Cal. Rptr. 114 , of the Commercial Code provisions applicable to consequential-damages limitations and exclusions are discussed in § 50.190[3][d]. Applying those principles to the facts of the case, the court of appeal pointed out that it is a commercial reality that a breach of the seller's warranties makes consequential damages not merely foreseeable but explicitly obvious (135 Cal. App. 3d 473, 492) .

[i] Unconscionability Is Question of Law

The facts and procedural background of U.S. Roofing, Inc. v. Credit Alliance Corp. (1991) 228 Cal. App. 3d 1431, 279 Cal. Rptr. 533 , are discussed in § 50.190[3][d]. The jury was instructed, "It is the position of the plaintiff that the limitation of warranties contained in the lease, as well as the measure of damages contained in the lease, are unenforceable under the doctrine of unconscionability. Said clauses shall not be valid and shall be unenforceable, if the plaintiff proves the provisions are unconscionable. The law does not precisely define what is or is not unconscionable. Unconscionability is recognized to include: An absence of meaningful choice on the part of one of the parties, together with contract terms which are unreasonably favorable to the other party." The only other proposed instruction on the issue, by the plaintiff, stated that the court had found the disclaimer unconscionable as a matter of law, but the court refused to give this instruction (228 Cal. App. 3d 1431, 1446) . The defendants contended that the plaintiff could not raise the issue for the first time on appeal, but the court of appeal stated that the plaintiff was contending that the instruction contained an incorrect statement of the law, and thus the issue could be raised on appeal without an objection at trial (228 Cal. App. 3d 1431, 1446-1447) . The question of whether a contact or clause is unconscionable is one of law [Civ. Code § 1670.5(a)] (228 Cal. App. 3d 1431, 1448) .

The facts and procedural background of A & M Produce Co. v. FMC Corp. (1982) 135 Cal. App. 3d 473, 186 Cal. Rptr. 114 , are discussed in § 50.190[3][d]. In considering whether the warranty disclaimer at issue was unconscionable, the court of appeal stated that unconscionability is ultimately a question of law, although numerous factual inquiries bear on the question (135 Cal. App. 3d 473, 489) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Indicia of Unconscionability

In Ting v. AT&T (9th Cir. 2003) 319 F.3d 1126, 1148-1152 , a long distance telecommunications carrier sent its customers a new consumer services agreement containing "legal remedies provisions" which were designed to limit customers' rights and remedies in the event of a dispute with the carrier, including, among other things, mandatory binding arbitration, a prohibition against class actions, and significant limitations on the right to award damages and attorney's fees. Plaintiffs brought a class action alleging that those provisions violated California's consumer protection and contract laws. The district court concluded that theprovisions violated California's law on unconscionability. The Ninth Circuit agreed with the district court that the agreement was procedurally unconscionable. The carrier mailed the agreement in a envelope that few customers realized contained a contract, and offered its terms on a take-it-or-leave-it basis. The imposition of the contract on customers without the opportunity for negotiation, modification, or waiver rendered it procedurally unconscionable (319 F.3d 1126, 1148-1149) . With respect to substantive unconscionability, the Ninth Circuit cited Armendariz, discussed in § 50.190[3][b], for the requirement that an arbitration agreement must have a "modicum of bilaterality." It affirmed the district court's conclusion that the one-sided contract terms which barred class actions, imposed an arbitration fee scheme, and required any arbitration to remain confidential, rendered the contract substantively unconscionable (319 F.3d 1126, 1149-1152) .

In Ferguson v. Countrywide Credit Industries, Inc. (9th Cir. 2002) 298 F.3d 778 , a woman filed a complaint against her employer and supervisor for sexual harassment and retaliation. The employer filed a petition for an order compelling arbitration of her claims. The district court denied the petition on the grounds of unconscionability and the Ninth Circuit affirmed. The appellate court found that the arbitration agreement was procedurally unconscionable, as the employee was in a position of unequal bargaining power and was presented with offending contract terms without an opportunity to negotiate (298 F.3d 778, 784) . Further, the agreement was substantively unconscionable, in that it was unfairly one-sided, required the employee to pay arbitration fees, and contained a one-sided discovery provision (298 F.3d 778, 785-787) . Finally, the court found that the agreement was so permeated with unconscionable clauses that it could not sever or limit them (298 F.3d 778, 788) .

In Soltani v. Western & Southern Life Insurance Co. (9th Cir. 2001) 258 F.3d 1038 , plaintiff employees who sold life insurance as agents for defendant insurance company brought suit alleging wrongful termination. The employer removed the suit to federal court based on diversity of citizenship and, invoking an employment contract provision requiring suits to be brought within six months of termination, moved for summary judgment on the ground that the suit was time-barred. In addition, the employer invoked another contract provision requiring that 10 days notice to be given before commencing suit in seeking summary judgment with respect to one plaintiff. The district court found that the clauses were enforceable and granted summary judgment to the employer, rejecting plaintiffs' arguments that the contractual provisions were unconscionable and therefore unenforceable. The plaintiffs filed an appeal. The Ninth Circuit first examined the enforceability of the shortened limitations provision. It used the analysis set forth in Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Services, Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669 , discussed in § 50.190[3][b], to determine whether the contractual provision was unconscionable. Pursuant to that analysis, even if there is a showing of procedural unconscionability and a contract is adhesive, the court applies a sliding scale. There must be some showing of substantive unconscionability. The court held that the six-month contractual limitation was not substantively unconscionable under California law (258 F.3d 1038, 1042-1045) . However, the court then examined the 10-day notice provision, finding it unenforceable. As in Armendariz, the effect of that provision was to maximize employer advantage without reasonable justification for that arrangement. The failure to comply with the provision deprived an employee of a judicial forum and its concomitant rights (258 F.3d 1038, 1045-1047) .

In Engalla v. Permanente Medical Group, Inc. (1997) 15 Cal. 4th 951, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 843, 938 P.2d 903 , an HMO petitioned to compel arbitration of a medical malpractice claim asserted on behalf of a deceased plan participant. The trial court denied the petition. The court of appeal reversed. The claimant petitioned for review (15 Cal. 4th 951, 969-971) . The Supreme Court concluded that there was evidence to support the trial court's initial findings that the HMO engaged in fraudulent conduct justifying a denial of its petition to compel arbitration, but questions of fact remained to be resolved by the trial court before it could be determined whether the HMO's conduct was actually fraudulent. Similarly, there was a factual question as to whether the HMO's actions constituted a waiver of its right to compel arbitration. The Court therefore reversed the judgment of the court of appeal and directed it to remand the case to the trial court for factual determinations (15 Cal. 4th 951, 960) . On the issue of unconscionability, the Court concluded that the agreement, which was offered to the plan participant on a take-it-or-leave-it basis, had characteristics of an adhesion contract but did not on its face lack "minimum levels of integrity" and was not unconscionable (15 Cal. 4th 951, 984-986) .

Higgins v. Superior Court (2006) 140 Cal. App. 4th 1238, 45 Cal. Rptr. 3d 293 , raised the issue of whether an arbitration clause in a contract for a television show was unconscionable. The weaker parties were five siblings who were young and unsophisticated and had recently lost both parents. The arbitration provision appeared in one paragraph near the end of a lengthy, single-spaced document. No words were printed in bold letters or larger font, nor were they capitalized. Although the siblings were required to place their initials in boxes adjacent to six other paragraphs, no box appeared next to the arbitration provision. These facts indicated procedural unconscionability. The arbitration provision was also substantively unconscionable. It required only the siblings to submit their claims to arbitration; only the television show producers, not the siblings, could compel arbitration; and the provision barred only the siblings from seeking appellate review of the arbitrator's decision. The harsh, one-sided nature of the arbitration provision, combined with the elements of procedural unconscionability, led the court to conclude that the arbitration provision was unenforceable (140 Cal. App. 4th 1238, 1252-1254) .

In Trend Homes, Inc. v. Superior Court (2005) 131 Cal. App. 4th 950 , purchasers of a subdivision home failed to present evidence sufficient to support their assertion that a provision for judicial reference as the exclusive remedy under the purchase contract was unconscionable. The court recited the evidence that was submitted on both of the issues (procedural unconscionability and substantive unconscionability) and explained why, as to each evidentiary point and also as to the entire body of evidence, the purchasers failed to carry their burden of proof (131 Cal. App. 4th 950, 957-964).

Crippen v. Central Valley RV Outlet (2004) 124 Cal. App. 4th 1159, 22 Cal. Rptr. 3d 189 , involved a buyer's purchase of a used motor home that was allegedly faulty. When the buyer sued the dealer, the dealer moved to compel arbitration under the terms of the dealer's standard form contract of sale. The buyer objected that the arbitration clause was unconscionable and therefore unenforceable. The court noted that unconscionability has both procedural and substantive elements, that it is the burden of the party asserting unconscionability to prove the elements, and that the more evidence there is of one element the less is required of the other (124 Cal. App. 4th 1159, 1164-1165) . Moreover, the mere fact that the contract was standard form did not make the contract one of adhesion, and the court found nothing inherent in the relationship between motor home buyer and seller from which to infer a great disparity of bargaining power. To the contrary, the record disclosed nothing to indicate the buyer was under any economic compulsion (124 Cal. App. 4th 1159, 1164-1166) .

In Greenbriar Homes Communities, Inc. v. Superior Court (2004) 117 Cal. App. 4th 337, 11 Cal. Rptr. 3d 371 , a number of homeowners brought a construction defect action against the developer (petitioner's predecessor in interest). The purchase and sale agreements required all disputes arising out of the agreement to be determined by a judicial referee. Petitioner filed a motion to compel the court to order that the action be heard by a referee. The homeowners opposed the motion on the grounds that the provision was unconscionable and that enforcement of the provision would result in a multiplicity of lawsuits. The trial court denied the motion, but made no determination regarding whether the reference provision was unconscionable. The court of appeal issued an alternative writ of mandate for petitioner. It discussed the doctrine of unconscionability, and found that the provision was neither procedurally nor substantively unconscionable. Unlike the reference provision at issue in Pardee Construction Co. v. Superior Court (2002) 100 Cal. App. 4th 1081, 123 Cal. Rptr. 2d 288 [discussed in § 50.190[3][b]], the provision in this case was not buried in the form or physically difficult to read. It appeared where the purchaser was almost certain to see it--immediately above where the purchaser had to sign. Furthermore, unlike Pardee, the reference provision did not limit the purchaser's relief, and provided that the referee's fees were to be shared equally (117 Cal. App. 4th 337, 344-346) .

In Abramson v. Juniper Networks, Inc. (2004) 115 Cal. App. 4th 638, 9 Cal. Rptr. 3d 422 , an employee sued his former employer, asserting breach of contract, wrongful termination, and other claims. His employment agreement contained arbitration provisions, which he challenged as unenforceable. The trial court ordered the parties to arbitration, and after several unsuccessful attempts at arbitration, ultimately entered summary judgment for the defense on the ground that plaintiff failed to exhaust his arbitration remedies. The court of appeal concluded that the arbitration agreement was unenforceable in its entirety, and reversed the judgment. It found procedural unconscionability in that plaintiff lacked equal bargaining power with respect to the arbitration agreement, which was presented on a take it or leave it basis. The court found substantive unconscionability, which was demonstrated by the extremely one-sided nature of the arbitration provision (115 Cal. App. 4th 638, 666) . The court further held that because illegality and unconscionability permeated the agreement, its objectionable terms could not be severed and the entire agreement was found to be void and unenforceable (115 Cal. App. 4th 638, 668) .

In Harper v. Ultimo (2003) 113 Cal. App. 4th 1402, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 418 , plaintiff homeowners signed preprinted construction contracts with defendant to stabilize soil and re-level a pool on their property. The arbitration provisions required all controversies under the contracts to be settled in accordance with the Uniform Rules for Better Business Bureau Arbitration, which were not attached to the contracts. As a result of property damage occurring during construction, plaintiffs sued defendant for negligence, fraud, and breach of contract. Defendant brought a motion to compel arbitration, which the trial court denied. The court of appeal affirmed. It reviewed the requirement that both procedural and substantive unconscionability must be present, although not necessarily in equal amounts. The court stated, "Here both procedural and substantive unconscionability are so present that it is almost impossible to keep tripping over them." With respect to procedural unconscionability, the court found surprise and oppression by virtue of the fact that the customer's inability to receive full relief was hidden by referencing rules that were not attached to the contract. As to substantive unconscionability, the court found the arbitration provision to be even more one-sided against the customer than clauses in which other courts have found substantive unconscionability (113 Cal. App. 4th 1402, 1406-1407) .

In Woodside Homes v. Superior Court (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 723, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 35 , buyers of tract homes sued the builder, who moved to compel judicial reference pursuant to a clause in the standard purchase contracts. The trial court found the provision for mandatory judicial reference to be unconscionable and unenforceable. The court of appeal granted the builder's petition for writ of mandate. It held that the provision was neither procedurally or substantively unconscionable. With respect to procedural unconscionability, there was no evidence of de facto coercion, lack of choice, or lack of sophistication on the partof the buyers. The contract was not misleading or hard to penetrate; the buyers had to initial the judicial reference paragraph separately, and the caption was not misleading (107 Cal. App. 4th 723, 728-730) . With respect to substantive unconscionability, the court found that none of the issues that concerned the trial court had substantial weight: the developer's power to "opt out," the lack of provision for attorney fees, the possibility that a nonjudge could be selected, the confidentiality of the transcript, or the lack of provisions for mediation. As for expense, the buyers failed to show that the fees they were likely to pay would be greater than those which would accrue in litigation before a court. With respect to waiver of the right to jury trial, both parties made such a waiver. Thus, the court held that this particular agreement for judicial reference was valid and enforceable (107 Cal. App. 4th 723, 730-736) .

In O'Hare v. Municipal Resource Consultants (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 267, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 116 , an employee who had been fired sued his employer, which moved to compel arbitration pursuant to an arbitration provision contained in the employment contract. The trial court refused to enforce the arbitration provision, finding it did not meet the criteria established by case law. The court of appeal affirmed, finding the provision to be both substantively and procedurally unconscionable. Citing Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Services, Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669 , discussed in § 50.190[3][b], the court reviewed the governing legal principles used to determine unconscionability (107 Cal. App. 4th 267, 272-273) . Under these criteria, the court found a lack of mutuality in the arbitration agreement (107 Cal. App. 4th 267, 274) , and additionally determined that the costs provision applicable to the arbitration proceeding was inconsistent with the Armendariz requirements (107 Cal. App. 4th 267, 279) . Further, because unconscionability permeated the entire agreement, severance was not appropriate (107 Cal. App. 4th 267, 279) .

In Pardee Construction Company v. Superior Court (2002) 100 Cal. App. 4th 1081, 123 Cal. Rptr. 2d 288 , a construction defect action, the homeowners' real estate purchase agreements contained a provision requiring all disputes to be submitted to judicial reference. Plaintiffs filed a class action suit, and defendants sought a stay and appointment of a judicial referee. Plaintiffs claimed that the parties' agreements, including the judicial reference provisions, were contracts of adhesion, unconscionable, and against public policy. The superior court denied defendants' motion, concluding that the agreements were contracts of adhesion, the provisions requiring judicial reference were unconscionable, and the agreements in their entirety were contrary to the public policy against compelling homeowners to submit construction defect claims to alternative dispute resolution. The court of appeal denied defendants' petition for a writ of mandate. It held that the purchase agreements requiring all disputes to be submitted to judicial reference were adhesive contracts fatally infected with procedural and substantive unconscionability. Citing Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Services, Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669 , discussed in § 50.190[3][b], it found the judicial reference provisions procedurally unconscionable because there was no real bargaining about those provisions, the provisions were difficult to read and misleading, and the agreements omitted mention of the economically significant matter of referee's fees (100 Cal. App. 4th 1081, 1088-1090) . Furthermore, because those provisions gave buyers nothing in return for their waiver of the right to a jury trial, they were so one-sided as to be substantively unconscionable (100 Cal. App. 4th 1081, 1090-1092) .

In Szetela v. Discover Bank (2002) 97 Cal. App. 4th 1094, 118 Cal. Rptr. 2d 862 , a credit card account holder filed an action against the credit card company for breach of contract, breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, misrepresentation, and deceptive business practices. Based on an arbitration clause which purportedly was added to the cardholder agreement as an insertion to the plaintiff's billing statement, the credit card company moved to compel arbitration of the claim. The trial court granted the motion, and the plaintiff appealed. He argued that the arbitration provision, to the extent it prohibited class treatment of small individual claims, was unconscionable and unenforceable. The court of appeal agreed, issuing a writ of mandate directing the trial court to strike the portion of the arbitration clause prohibiting class or representative actions. Citing Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Services, Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669 , discussed in § 50.190[3][b], the court noted that arbitration agreements are valid except upon grounds, such as unconscionability, that exist at law or in equity for revocation of the contract. It reiterated that unconscionability includes both substantive and procedural elements, which need not be present to the same degree. The more substantively oppressive the contract term, the less evidence of procedural unconscionability is required for the conclusion that the term is unenforceable, and vice versa (97 Cal. App. 4th 1094, 1099-1100) . The court held that the oppressive "take it or leave it" manner in which the amendment to the cardholder agreement was imposed established the necessary element of procedural unconscionability. Furthermore, the provision at issue was clearly one-sided. The manner of arbitration--prohibiting class or representative actions--violated fundamental notions of fairness and thus was substantively unconscionable (97 Cal. App. 4th 1094, 1101-1102) .

In Mercurio v. Superior Court (2002) 96 Cal. App. 4th 167 , an employee and his wife sought a writ of mandate overturning thetrial court's order compelling them to arbitrate their employment-related tort claims against a securities corporation, the husband's former employer. Although the employee had misgivings and initially refused to sign a contract agreeing to arbitrate certain disputes which might arise between sales personnel and the company, he ultimately signed the contract after pressure from management. The court of appeal first stated that its review was controlled by Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Services, Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669 , discussed in [3][b], above. With respect to procedural unconscionability, there was no doubt that the employer used oppressive tactics to secure the employee's signature on the arbitration agreement. The economic pressure that it exerted on its employee was particularly acute since the employee was 52 years old, had just moved to California from Florida, and had only been with the company for a year. He obviously was not in a position to give up his job over an arbitration agreement which might never come into play. The court stated that given the employer's highly oppressive conduct in securing the employee's consent, the employee need only make a minimal showing of the agreement's substantive unconscionability (96 Cal. App. 4th 167, 174-175) . On that issue, it found that the agreement was unfairly one-sided in requiring arbitration of most claims of interest to employees, but exempting from arbitration most claims of interest to the employer. Further, the agreement failed to guarantee a neutral arbitrator (96 Cal. App. 4th 167, 176-179) . With respect to severability, the court again cited Armendariz for the general rule that if the central purpose of a contract is permeated with unconscionability, then the contract as a whole cannot be enforced. However, if unconscionability is collateral to the main purpose and the offending provisions can be excised from the contract by means of severance or limitation, then the remainder of the contract can be enforced (96 Cal. App. 4th 167, 184-185) . In Mercurio, the court found that the arbitration agreement was unenforceable because it was permeated with unconscionability and illegality, and could not be cured by excising the offending provisions. The court would have to rewrite the contract, which it lacked the power to do (96 Cal. App. 4th 167, 185-186) . The court therefore issued a peremptory writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate its order compelling arbitration (96 Cal. App. 4th 167, 187) .

The facts and procedural background of Flores v. Transamerica Homefirst, Inc. (2001) 93 Cal. App. 4th 846, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 376 , are discussed in [3][c], above. In that case, the court of appeal reviewed the analytic framework for determining whether a particular contractual provision is unconscionable and found the arbitration agreement in the plaintiffs' loan agreement to be both procedurally and substantively unconscionable (93 Cal. App. 4th 846, 852-855) . Following Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Services, Inc, discussed in [3][b], above, the court refused to sever the invalid provisions. Because it was faced with an arbitration agreement in which no single provision could be stricken to remove theunconscionable taint, the court affirmed the trial court's order denying the lender's motion to compel arbitration (93 Cal. App. 4th 846, 857-858) .

In Blake v. Ecker (2001) 93 Cal. App. 4th 728, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 422 , an ex-employee sued her former employer and certain individuals for sexual harassment. The defendants moved to compel arbitration, their motion was granted, and plaintiff's civil action was stayed pending the arbitration. Thereafter, Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Services, Inc., 24 Cal. 4th 83, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669 , discussed in [3][b], above, was decided. Defendants moved to dismiss plaintiff's complaint, and in response plaintiff moved to vacate the order compelling arbitration, citing Armendariz. The trial court granted defendants' motion to dismiss and refused to consider plaintiff's motion, because it was moot after dismissal of the civil action. The court of appeal reversed. It held that the trial court, having granted defendants' motion to compel arbitration, had no jurisdiction to rule on defendants' motion to dismiss. The court also held that the trial court should have ruled on plaintiff's motion to vacate the order to compel arbitration in light of the then-recent Armendariz decision (93 Cal. App. 4th 728, 733) . The court of appeal thus remanded the case to trial court, stating that the critical question before the trial court would be whether Armendariz applied to make the parties' arbitration agreement unenforceable. The court of appeal found that Armendariz could be applied retroactively (93 Cal. App. 4th 728, 740-741) . It also reviewed the general principles of unconscionability set forth in Armendariz (93 Cal. App. 4th 728, 741-743) . It noted that pursuant to those principles, if an agreement is determined to contain unconscionable provisions, a court may sever those provisions and enforce the balance of the agreement. In this case, the agreement itself expressly provided for severance of provisions that resulted in plaintiff's claim of unconscionability. The trial court therefore was directed to consider these issues in deciding whether the arbitration clause was enforceable (93 Cal. App. 4th 728, 745-747) .

In Marin Storage & Trucking, Inc. v. Benco Contracting and Engineering, Inc. (2001) 89 Cal. App. 4th 1042, 107 Cal. Rptr. 2d 645 , a subcontractor's employee who was injured working on a freeway construction project sued both the supplier of the crane involved in the accident and the general contractor. The crane company then cross-complained against the general contractor for express indemnity. The parties' practice, which was followed on the day of the accident, involved the crane company supplying the general contractor with a "Work Authorization and Contract" for signature at the end of any day in which the crane company had provided a crane. The form indicated the number of hours worked at a job site, noted above the signature line that it was a contract that included all terms and conditions on the reverse side, and contained an indemnification clause among other provisions on that reverse side. During trial, on its own motion, the trial court raised the issue of whether the Work Authorization and Contractcontaining the indemnification clause was an unconscionable contract of adhesion. The trial court entered judgment for the contractor on the cross-complaint, finding that the indemnification clause in the form was unenforceable because there was no mutual assent of the parties and because the clause was procedurally unconscionable.

The court of appeal reversed. It noted initially that the trial court's findings were inconsistent, as a finding of no mutual assent constituted a finding that no contract had been formed, yet a finding of unconscionability presupposes an existing contract. The court of appeal, however, construed the trial court's ruling to rest on alternative grounds. The court of appeal first concluded that the trial court erred in finding no contract was formed, based on the parties' course of conduct over the years using the contract containing the indemnity clause. The court of appeal next addressed the issue of unconscionability by reviewing the applicable principles set forth in California case law, including A & M Produce Co. v. FMC Corp. (1982) 135 Cal. App. 3d 473, 186 Cal. Rptr. 114 , discussed in [3][d], above. It stated that to be unenforceable, a contract must be both procedurally and substantively unconscionable. As to procedural unconscionability, the court of appeal found no error in the trial court's conclusion that the parties' contract was one of adhesion. However, the flaw in the trial court's decision was that it ended its analysis with that determination (89 Cal. App. 4th 1042, 1052-1054) . As to substantive unconscionability, the standard is whether the contract terms "shock the conscience." The court concluded that the indemnification clause was not so unreasonable, unjustified, or one-sided as to shock the conscience. It stated that there is a sliding scale or balancing relationship between the two elements of unconscionability, such that the greater the degree of unfair surprise or unequal bargaining power, the less the degree of substantive unconscionability required to annul the contract, and vice versa. In this case, the procedural unconscionability was not great since the contractor had a meaningful choice in renting from other crane operators and had used the contract in question over a period of years. In light of the low level of procedural unfairness, the court concluded that a greater degree of substantive unfairness than that shown was required before the contract could be found substantively unconscionable (89 Cal. App. 4th 1042, 1054-1057) .

In Bolter v. Superior Court (2001) 87 Cal. App. 4th 900, 104 Cal. Rptr. 2d 888 , franchisees brought an action against the franchisor for breach of contract. The trial court granted the franchisor's motion to compel arbitration in Utah, pursuant to an arbitration provision in the franchise agreement. The franchisees claimed that the provision was unconscionable. The court of appeal held that under the circumstances, which included the fact that the franchisor was a large international corporation and the franchisees were small "Mom and Pop" operations, the "place and manner" arbitration clauses in franchise agreement were unduly oppressive. Theagreement required franchisees wishing to resolve a dispute to close down their shops, pay for airfare to Utah and incur costs of having counsel familiar with Utah law. The court determined, however, that those provisions could be severed from the remainder of the agreement pursuant to Civ. Code § 1670.5, leaving an otherwise valid and complete agreement to submit disputes to arbitration (87 Cal. App. 4th 900, 909-911) .

In Pinedo v. Premium Tobacco Stores, Inc. (2000) 85 Cal. App. 4th 774, 102 Cal. Rptr. 2d 435 , an employee who claimed he was subjected to workplace harassment and discrimination because of his national origin brought a FEHA action against his employer. The defendants filed a petition to compel arbitration based on an arbitration provision in the employment agreement. The trial court denied the motion to compel arbitration and the court of appeal affirmed. The court stated that the appeal presented the same issue focused on in Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Services, Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669 , discussed in [3][b], above: whether the so-called "agreement" to arbitrate was so one-sided that it should not be enforced (85 Cal. App. 4th 774, 776) . The court found that the arbitration provision was at least as unconscionable as that presented in Armendariz. It precluded recovery of any and all damages contemplated within the FEHA. It also required that all costs initially be borne by the employee. The employee was further disadvantaged by being required to arbitrate in a particular city. The agreement was also inherently one-sided as it addressed only claims involving terms of employment that would normally be brought by the employee against the employer. The limitation on damages applied only to damages awarded in favor of the employee, not to damages claimed by the employer. The court therefore affirmed the order of the trial court denying compelled arbitration (85 Cal. App. 4th 774, 780-781) .

In Villa Milano Homeowners Association v. Il Davorge (2000) 84 Cal. App. 4th 819, 102 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1 , the homeowners of a condominium complex filed a complaint against the developer for construction and design defects. The developer filed a petition to compel arbitration, which the trial court denied. The court of appeal affirmed. The court held that the arbitration clause contained in the CC&Rs was an unconscionable adhesion contract that was unenforceable to the extent it applied to construction and design defect claims against the developer who drafted, signed, and recorded the CC&Rs (84 Cal. App 4th 819, 835-836) . It was procedurally unconscionable because it was drafted and recorded by the developer years before the purchasers were involved, the individual buyers could not negotiate the terms of the CC&Rs, and the clause was buried within the CC&Rs (84 Cal. App. 4th 819, 828-829) . It was also substantively unconscionable, since it violated public policy expressed in both statutory and regulatory provisions governing arbitration clauses in real property sales documentation (84 Cal. App. 4th 819, 833) .

In Coast Plaza Doctors Hospital v. Blue Cross of California (2000) 83 Cal. App. 4th 677, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 809 , a hospital filed an action against Blue Cross on numerous tort theories related to reimbursement rates paid by Blue Cross pursuant to a service agreement with the hospital. Blue Cross then filed a petition to compel arbitration pursuant to an arbitration clause in the service agreement. The hospital opposed the motion on the grounds that, among other things, the arbitration provision was unconscionable and therefore unenforceable. The trial court denied a Blue Cross motion for arbitration. The court of appeal reversed and remanded. The hospital argued that the arbitration clause was (1) procedurally unconscionable because Blue Cross was a much larger and financially stronger company than the hospital and thus was able to impose terms that were unfavorable to the hospital, and (2) substantively unconscionable because the hospital's right to discovery, which it might enjoy in a judicial proceeding, was much more restricted, thus permitting Blue Cross to engage in tortious misconduct which the hospital would be unable to uncover (83 Cal. App. 4th 677, 687) . The court of appeal reviewed the principles applicable to the doctrine of unconscionability as set forth in various cases, including A & M Produce Co. v. FMC Corp. (1982) 135 Cal. App. 3d 473, 186 Cal. Rptr. 114 , discussed above. The evidence of unconscionability presented by the hospital included only a declaration from its attorney who had no personal involvement with negotiation of the service agreement, and two newspaper articles containing quotes from an officer of the hospital on the reasons for filing the lawsuit. The court of appeal found that none of that material was competent evidence sufficient to establish unconscionability as a defense to mandatory arbitration (83 Cal. App. 4th 677, 687-689) . Even assuming that a disparity in size and certain economic considerations would permit the service agreement to be considered adhesive, the hospital made no showing that it was "surprised" by the clause imposing mandatory arbitration as the required means of dispute resolution. Further, nothing concerning the presence of the arbitration clause in the agreement would support the conclusion that it was so one-sided as to shock the conscience (a conclusion necessary for finding substantive unconscionability). Finally, the court rejected the assertion that the mere fact that opportunities for formal discovery were limited under the American Arbitration Association's rules made the arbitration agreement "one-sided" and so unfair as to shock the conscience. The court of appeal thus concluded that the hospital could not avoid arbitration on a claim of unconscionability (83 Cal. App. 4th 677, 689-690) .

In Robison v. City of Manteca (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 452, 92 Cal. Rptr. 2d 748 , a refuse collector sought a writ of mandate directing defendant city to reinstate him to his position. Plaintiff claimed that after he tested positive for controlled stimulants in a random drug test, his employee-organization representative coerced him into executing a recovery agreement with defendant. The agreement required him to undertake asubstance-abuse treatment plan and waived his right to appeal any discipline to defendant's personnel board. The city notified him by letter, in advance of its action, that it would be firing him for failure to comply with the recovery agreement. It then fired him and noted he had waived his right to appeal to the personnel board. Plaintiff sought a writ of mandate. The trial court sustained defendant's demurrer without leave to amend and entered a judgment of dismissal. On appeal, plaintiff claimed that the circumstances under which he executed the recovery agreement constituted both "undue influence," and "unconscionability." The court of appeal found that the claim of unconscionability was lacking in merit, as plaintiff failed to establish procedural unconscionability. The only "surprise" he alleged was absence of an appeal to the personnel board if dismissed for failure to comply with the agreement. This was not a provision even remotely material to his dismissal for refusal to participate in a substance-abuse program. He did not allege he was prevented from reading the agreement upon execution, only that it was open to the signature page. The court found no evidence that these shortcomings could reasonably be overcome in an amended pleading. In the absence of any procedural unconscionability, the court did not consider substantive unconscionability (78 Cal. App. 4th 452, 458-459) .

In Stirlen v. Supercuts, Inc. (1997) 51 Cal. App. 4th 1519, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 138 , the trial court refused to enforce a compulsory arbitration clause of an employment contract, on the grounds that it was against public policy and unconscionable. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that in the circumstances of the case, the governing state law pertaining to unconscionable contracts, Civ. Code § 1670.5, was not preempted by the Federal Arbitration Act [9 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.]. The court reviewed the judicially developed criteria for determining whether an arbitration clause is unconscionable and therefore unenforceable (51 Cal. App. 4th 1519, 1530-1531) . The analysis begins with the determination of whether the agreement to arbitrate is a contract of adhesion. If it is, the court must determine whether other factors operate to render it unenforceable. The court cited A & M Produce Co. v. FMC Corp. (1982) 135 Cal. App. 3d 473, 486, 186 Cal. Rptr. 114 , discussed in [3][d], above, for the proposition that unconscionability has both a procedural element and a substantive element (51 Cal. App. 4th 1519, 1531-1532) . The court applied these criteria and determined that the agreement to arbitrate was a contract of adhesion and unconscionable. The terms of an arbitration clause in an employment contract that provides the employer more rights and greater remedies than would otherwise be available and concomitantly deprives employees of significant rights and remedies they would normally enjoy, considered in light of the commercial context in which it operates and the legitimate needs of the parties at the time it was made, was unconscionable according to the mores and business practices of the time and place (51 Cal. App. 4th 1519, 1542) . The Federal Arbitration Act [9 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.] did notpreclude a state court from finding that the arbitration clause was unconscionable and unenforceable under Civ. Code § 1670.5 (51 Cal. App. 4th 1519, 1552) .

In Olsen v. Breeze, Inc. (1996) 48 Cal. App. 4th 608, 55 Cal. Rptr. 2d 818 , a skier challenged the legality of a release from liability required as a condition for purchasing, renting, or obtaining service on ski bindings. The trial court dismissed his two claims. On appeal the plaintiff contended that the agreements skiers are required to sign are contracts of adhesion and objectively unreasonable under the circumstances presented. The court of appeal affirmed, concluding that the use of releases in the ski industry does not violate either state unfair-competition laws or the Consumers Legal Remedies Act. Even assuming that the doctrine of unconscionability may be used affirmatively as the predicate of an unfair-competition claim, it was inapplicable. There is nothing inherently unreasonable in skiers agreeing with ski equipment distributors or service providers to allocate to skiers the risk of injury from failure of a ski binding to release properly. It is not unconscionable for ski equipment distributors and retailers to require and use the releases at issue as a condition for doing business (48 Cal. App. 4th 608, 622-623) .

The court of appeal in Carboni v. Arrospide (1991) 2 Cal. App. 4th 76, 2 Cal. Rptr. 2d 845 , affirmed a finding that an interest rate of 200 percent a year was unconscionable and thus unenforceable in a loan that was exempt from usury law because it was made by a real estate broker and secured by a fourth deed of trust on the plaintiff's residence. The court held that the note and deed of trust could be enforced with an interest rate of 24 percent. After noting that neither party had found any case in which Civ. Code § 1670.5 was applied to an interest rate, the court discussed the concept of unconscionability in general, saying that it was meant to counteract two forms of abuses, the coincidence of both being necessary for a finding of unconscionability. One abuse relates to procedural deficiencies in the contract formation process and takes the form of deception or refusal to bargain over contract terms. The second abuse involves the substantive contract terms and may include unexpectedly harsh terms such as price disparity (2 Cal. App. 4th 76, 81) . The procedural aspect is manifested by oppression, which refers to an inequality of bargaining power resulting in no meaningful choice for the weaker party, or surprise, which occurs when the supposedly agreed-on terms are hidden in a prolix document (2 Cal. App. 4th 76, 81-82, 85) . Substantive unconscionability refers to an overly harsh allocation of risks or costs that is not justified by the circumstances in which the contract was made. Normally, both procedural and substantive unconscionability must be present before a contract is held unenforceable. However, the greater the degree of substantive unconscionability, the lesser the degree of procedural unconscionability that is required to annul the contract or clause (2 Cal. App. 4th 76 ,82). As in this case, a compelling showing of substantive unconscionability may overcome a weaker showing of procedural unconscionability (2 Cal. App. 4th 76, 86) . This case did not involve surprise, but, viewed in the light most favorable to the judgment, the court had to presume that the plaintiff was acting under emotional distress when the loan was negotiated (2 Cal. App. 4th 76, 85) . The loan was necessary to pay the plaintiff's parents' medical expenses, and the plaintiff had apparently attempted unsuccessfully to obtain a loan from other sources. The loan agreement recited that fact. Consequently, the defendant was able to offer the plaintiff the loan on a take-it-or-leave-it basis. The plaintiff had no meaningful choice and no alternative for obtaining credit (2 Cal. App. 4th 76, 86) .

The facts and procedural background of U.S. Roofing, Inc. v. Credit Alliance Corp. (1991) 228 Cal. App. 3d 1431, 279 Cal. Rptr. 533 , are discussed in [3][d], above. The court of appeal stated that unconscionability involves both procedural and substantive aspects. The procedural element focuses on the oppression arising from an inequality of bargaining power between the parties and the surprise of a clause hidden in a printed document. The substantive element is concerned with terms that are overly harsh or one-sided (228 Cal. App. 3d 1431, 1448) . Recognizing that California courts had not previously considered whether a disclaimer of warranties in a financing lease was unconscionable, the defendant relied on cases from other jurisdictions. The court reviewed those cases and concluded that there was nothing per se unconscionable about a financing lessor disclaiming all express and implied warranties in equipment selected solely by the lessee-buyer, as long as the lessee has some remedy for defective (nonconforming) equipment, which in this case it did against the manufacturer (228 Cal. App. 3d 1431, 1450) . Because the issue of unconscionability had (erroneously) been presented to the jury, all of the relevant evidence was in the record for the court of appeal's evaluation. The disclaimer met the conspicuousness requirement of Com. Code § 2316, because the disclaimer was printed in red above the signature line and used the term "as is." Further, nothing suggested that the plaintiff was in an unequal bargaining position with the finance lessor. The plaintiff's principal had 30 years of experience in the roofing business, and the company had received a large government contract. Once the plaintiff decided to purchase the crane, it discussed financing with at least one other financing lessor. This was not a take-it-or-leave-it situation. The procedural element thus indicated no unconscionability (228 Cal. App. 3d 1431, 1451) .

The facts and procedural background of A & M Produce Co. v. FMC Corp. (1982) 135 Cal. App. 3d 473, 186 Cal. Rptr. 114 , are discussed in [3][d], above. The appellate court discussed procedural unconscionability, which encompasses the analyses usually involved in defining a contract as one of adhesion and determining whether the adhering party's expectations arereasonable and, if so, whether they have been frustrated (135 Cal. App. 3d 473, 485-487) . Substantive unconscionability has generally been recognized to include an absence of meaningful choice on the part of one of the parties, together with contract terms that are unreasonably favorable to the other party. Overly harsh terms or one-sided results may be indicia of unconscionability; however, the outcome turns not only on a one-sided result but on the absence of justification for it. A contract term is suspect if it allocates the risks of the bargain in an objectively unreasonable or unexpected manner. Not all unreasonable allocations of risk are unconscionable; rather, enforceability is tied to the procedural aspects of unconscionability; that is, the greater the unfair surprise or inequality of bargaining power, the less an unreasonable risk allocation will be tolerated (135 Cal. App. 3d 473, 487) . Although courts have not been solicitous of businesses in the name of unconscionability, the concept should be applied to a business in situations like the one at hand, in which the plaintiff was a relatively small business while the defendant was an enormous diversified corporation. The analysis does not turn alone on size or sophistication. Some experienced but legally unsophisticated business managers may be surprised by unconscionable contract terms, and even a large corporation may have relatively little bargaining power in some circumstances (135 Cal. App. 3d 473, 489) . The defendant in this case knew the plaintiff's needs, perhaps better than the plaintiff, and was the only party reasonably able to prevent the plaintiff's loss by not selling a machine inadequate to the plaintiff's known needs. This type of risk allocation, namely, the shifting to one party of a risk that only the other party can avoid, is a type of risk allocation that should be subjected to special scrutiny (135 Cal. App. 3d 473, 493) .

[b] Contract of Adhesion Defined

In YMCA v. Superior Court (1997) 55 Cal. App. 4th 22, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 612 , the YMCA sought extraordinary review of an order denying its motion for summary judgment. The trial court agreed with the plaintiff that the YMCA's release form, by which participants in a Seniors Program released the YMCA for personal injury arising from the YMCA's negligence, was invalid because it was against the public interest. The court of appeal directed the trial court to enter summary judgment for the defendant. Although an exculpatory adhesion contract will be unenforceable if it violates public policy [see Tunkl v. Regents of University of California (1963) 60 Cal. 2d 92, 98-101, 32 Cal. Rptr. 33, 383 P.2d 441 (enumerating factors indicating public policy violation)], the court held that the provision signed by the plaintiff exhibited none of the coercive aspects typically found in an adhesion contract (55 Cal. App. 4th 22, 27-28) .

In Central Bank v. Kaiperm Santa Clara Fed. Credit Union (1987) 191 Cal. App. 3d 186, 236 Cal. Rptr. 262 , the court of appeal affirmed ajudgment for a bank against its agent for recovery of sums paid by the bank on money orders stolen from the agent. The were not checks (because no drawer's signature was required), and Division 4 of the Commercial Code did not govern the relationship of the parties (191 Cal. App. 3d 186, 202) . Their relationship was governed instead by the contract between them that placed the risk of loss on the agent. Unconscionability involves both procedural and substantive elements and requires an initial showing that there has been an absence of meaningful choice on the part of one of the parties in addition to which that party must have accepted terms unreasonably favorable to the other party (191 Cal. App. 3d 186, 204-205) . The determination of unconscionability, although a question of law, involves various factual considerations, including the business conditions under which the contract was formed, the relative bargaining power of the parties, the reasonableness of their expectations, and the commercial reasonableness of the risk allocation provided by the agreement (191 Cal. App. 3d 186, 205) .

In Izzi v. Mesquite Country Club (1986) 186 Cal. App. 3d 1309, 231 Cal. Rptr. 315 , the court of appeal reversed the trial court's order denying arbitration under a contract claimed to be adhesive. The court of appeal said that although the contract was on a standardized form, that alone was insufficient to establish its adhesive character. The record was silent on the relative bargaining powers of the parties or the availability of comparable subject matter on comparable or superior terms, and the contract was not adhesive (186 Cal. App. 3d 1309, 1318) .

[c] Unconscionable Limitation or Exclusion of Consequential Damages Under Commercial Code

In Nunes Turfgrass, Inc. v. Vaughan-Jacklin Seed Co., Inc. (1988) 200 Cal. App. 3d 1518, 246 Cal. Rptr. 823 , the court of appeal affirmed a judgment for the plaintiff buyer limited only to the cost of rye grass seed. The parties had been doing business for over 20 years, and the limitation was clearly set forth on the seed packs. The court of appeal noted, however, that each case must be determined on its own facts (200 Cal. App. 3d 1518, 1538-1539) .

68 of 168 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
5. Unconscionable Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities §§ 50.191-50.199

[Reserved]

§§ 50.191[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
5. Unconscionable Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.200

§ 50.200 Adhesion Contract Is Not Unconscionable and Defendant's Expectations Are Not Reasonable

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE CONTRACT AT ISSUE IS NOT UNCONSCIONABLE AND THE ALLEGED EXPECTATIONS OF THE DEFENDANT(S) ARE UNREASONABLE.

A. Test for Enforceability of Adhesion Contract. A contract of adhesion is enforceable unless it is unconscionable or does not fall within the reasonable expectations of the weaker or adhering party (Perdue v. Crocker National Bank (1985) 38 Cal. 3d 913, 925, 216 Cal. Rptr. 345, 702 P.2d 503 ; Allan v. Snow Summit, Inc. (1996) 51 Cal. App. 4th 1358, 1376-1377, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 813 ; San Francisco Newspaper Printing Co. v. Superior Court (1985) 170 Cal. App. 3d 438, 442, 216 Cal. Rptr. 462).

[Optional] B. Expectations of Nonparty Are Irrelevant. The expectations of a person not a party to the contract are not relevant in determining whether an adhesion contract is or is not enforceable (San Francisco Newspaper Printing Co. v. Superior Court (1985) 170 Cal. App. 3d 438, 442, 216 Cal. Rptr. 462).

[Optional] C. Tests for Reasonableness of Expectations. One cannot reasonably expect a clause to mean something other than what it says; and failing to read the contract is no excuse (San Francisco Newspaper Printing Co. v. Superior Court (1985) 170 Cal. App. 3d 438, 443, 216 Cal. Rptr. 462).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the plaintiff's contention that the contract is not unconscionable, and the defendant's expectations are unreasonable.

This form is based in part on a unique situation in which the contract at issue had been judicially interpreted in prior cases not to be unconscionable. Generally, when the issue of unconscionability has been raised, the parties have the right to present evidence as to the commercial setting, purpose, and effect of the contract [Civ. Code § 1670.5(b); see § 50.200[3][a]].

It does not matter whether an insurance policy is labeled adhesive or not, because the canons of construction governing insurance policies are well established and have independent vitality even though the applicable principles grew out of contracts of adhesion [Equitable Life Assurance Society v. Berry (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 832, 837, 260 Cal. Rptr. 819] .

Optional Paragraph B is for use when the defendant whose expectations are not met is not a party to the contract. Optional Paragraph C is for use when the defendant's expectations are claimed to be unreasonable.

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a plaintiff seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used by plaintiff in opposing a motion for summary judgment made on the ground that the underlying contract is unconscionable. Note that unconscionability is usually raised as a defense to enforcement of a contract, so that this form in most cases would be used by the plaintiff. However, the form may be used by a defendant in some cases, for example, when the plaintiff raises the issue of unconscionability in the context of a complaint for declaratory judgment [see, e.g., Perdue v. Crocker National Bank (1985) 38 Cal. 3d 913, 216 Cal. Rptr. 345] or a complaint seeking to have imposition of the challenged term held to be an unlawful practice under the Consumers Legal Remedies Act [see, e.g., Truta v. Avis Rent A Car System (1987) 193 Cal. App. 3d 802, 238 Cal. Rptr. 806 ; Civ. Code § 1750 et seq.] or an unfair or unlawful business practice under Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 [see, e.g., Shadoan v. World Savings & Loan Assn. (1990) 219 Cal. App. 3d 97, 268 Cal. Rptr. 207 ; see generally Ch. 235, Unfair Competition].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised to oppose a defendant's motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the supporting and opposing papers showing that there is a triable issue as to unconscionability or that, given undisputed facts, the court may summarily adjudicate the issue and find as a matter of law that the contract is not unconscionable.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender). For discussion and forms relating to the enforcement or nonenforcement of arbitration provisions, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 32, Contractual Arbitration: Agreements and Compelling Arbitration (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

In an appropriate case, these memoranda may be combined with those set out in § 50.201.

For forms concerning unconscionability of arbitration provisions, see Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling , and Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting .

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum opposing a motion for summaryjudgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.190 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Test for Enforceability of Adhesion Contract

The facts and procedural background of Perdue v. Crocker National Bank (1985) 38 Cal. 3d 913, 216 Cal. Rptr. 345, 702 P.2d 503 , are discussed in § 50.431[3][a]. In reversing the sustaining of a demurrer with respect to the second cause of action, which sought a judicial declaration that NSF charges were oppressive and unconscionable, the Supreme Court quoted at length from Graham v. Scissor-Tail, Inc. (1981) 28 Cal. 3d 807, 820, 171 Cal. Rptr. 604, 623 P.2d 165 , the general rule as to enforcement of adhesion contracts. Adhesion contracts are fully enforceable according to their terms unless certain other factors are present, which under established judicial and legislative rules operate to render it otherwise. A contract or provision that does not fall within the reasonable expectations of the weaker or adhering party will not be enforced against him or her. An equitable principle applicable to all contracts generally is that a contract or provision, even if consistent with the reasonable expectations of the parties, will be denied enforcement if, considered in its context, it is unduly oppressive or unconscionable (38 Cal. 3d 913, 925) .

In Allan v. Snow Summit, Inc. (1996) 51 Cal. App. 4th 1358, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 813 , as a condition of enrolling in ski school, a skier signed a release in which he agreed to hold the resort and its employees harmless for any injuries incurred. After he was injured, he sued the resort for injuries he allegedly suffered during a ski lesson. The trial court granted the resort's motion for summary judgment on the basis of the skier's release and waiver. On appeal the skier contended that the release was an unconscionable, unenforceable contract of adhesion.

The court of appeal affirmed. The release agreement, which was concededly a condition precedent to permission for the skier to ski or to receive ski lessons, was an adhesion contract. However, such a characterization was only the beginning of the analysis (51 Cal. App. 4th 1358, 1375) . Acontract of adhesion is fully enforceable according to its terms unless certain other factors are present, which under established legal rules operate to render it otherwise. A court might preclude enforcement of an adhesion contract when the contract does not fall within the reasonable expectations of the weaker or adhering party or, even if it does, when the contract is unduly oppressive or unconscionable when considered in the context. Among the factors that affect the assessment of whether the contract was within the reasonable expectations of the adhering party are notice and the extent to which the contract affects the public interest. The notice in this case was adequate to have altered the skier's subjective expectations that the resort would be liable for negligent instruction. Furthermore, the contract did not affect the public interest (51 Cal. App. 4th 1358, 1375-1376) . It was not objectively unreasonable or unexpected to allocate the risk of injury entirely to the plaintiff, and the release requirement was not substantively unconscionable (51 Cal. App. 4th 1358, 1376-1377) .

In San Francisco Newspaper Printing Co. v. Superior Court (1985) 170 Cal. App. 3d 438, 216 Cal. Rptr. 462 , the widow of a newspaper dealer sought a declaration that two identical dealership contracts, for two papers published by the defendant SFNA, survived the death of her husband. She was not a party to the contracts; only the SFNA and her husband were parties. The court of appeal issued a writ of mandate vacating an injunction pendente lite that prohibited the SFNA from terminating the dealership. An adhesion contract is enforceable unless it is unconscionable or does not fall within the reasonable expectations of the weaker or adhering party (170 Cal. App. 3d 438, 442) . Identical contracts had been the subject of prior litigation in which the fact that the dealership could not devolve by will or intestacy was inferred from the nonassignment clause. The clause provided that the agreements were "not assignable nor transferable in whole or in part by Dealer, voluntarily, by operation of law, or otherwise" (170 Cal. App. 3d 438, 440-441) [see Miller v. San Francisco Newspaper Agency (1985) 164 Cal. App. 3d 315, 317, 210 Cal. Rptr. 159] . There is nothing unconscionable about nonassignment clauses; they are not inherently suspect and are routinely enforced (170 Cal. App. 3d 438, 442) .

[b] Expectations of Nonparty Are Irrelevant

The facts and procedural background of San Francisco Newspaper Printing Co. v. Superior Court (1985) 170 Cal. App. 3d 438, 216 Cal. Rptr. 462 , are discussed in [a], above. The court of appeal addressed the sufficiency of the evidence. The portions of the complaint alleging that the contracts were adhesive were made on information and belief and therefore were inadequate as a matter of law (170 Cal. App. 3d 438, 441-442) . The widow's declaration that she expected the contracts to continue was irrelevant, as she was not a party to the contracts (170 Cal. App. 3d 438, 442) . Since the SFNA could not compel her to perform her husband's dutiesunder the contracts, she could not enforce them against the SFNA, even on the theory that she had a community property interest in the dealership (170 Cal. App. 3d 438, 443) .

[c] Tests for Reasonableness of Expectations

The facts and procedural background of San Francisco Newspaper Printing Co. v. Superior Court (1985) 170 Cal. App. 3d 438, 216 Cal. Rptr. 462 , are discussed in [a], above. The court of appeal, in considering the husband's reasonable expectations, in the event a declaration admissible under Evid. Code § 1251 regarding his expectations were to be provided, noted that the dealer could not reasonably have expected the nonassignability clause to mean anything other than what it said, it having been conclusively presumed for purposes of the lawsuit that the provision was clear and unambiguous (170 Cal. App. 3d 438, 443) . The court cited Parr v. Superior Court (1983) 139 Cal. App. 3d 440, 445-446, 188 Cal. Rptr. 801 , discussed in § 50.190[3][c], and A & M Produce Co. v. FMC Corp. (1982) 135 Cal. App. 3d 473, 486, 186 Cal. Rptr. 114 , discussed in § 50.190[3][d], for the proposition and reasoning that failing to read the contract does not provide an excuse for the adhering party; otherwise all contracts of adhesion would be unenforceable at the whim of the adhering party (170 Cal. App. 3d 438, 443) . Turning to the contract in issue, the court of appeal noted that the contract required the dealer to keep certain records, to make earnest, conscientious, and continuing efforts to promote and increase circulation, and to furnish a temporary substitute acceptable to the SFNA at the dealer's expense whenever a substitute was necessary to perform the dealer's obligations under the contract. Given those provisions that made the right to rely on the skill, energy, and initiative of the particular dealer important rights of the publisher, the court of appeal said that a dealer could not reasonably expect to be able to transfer the dealership on death when he or she could not have done so in life, even temporarily, without the SFNA's approval (170 Cal. App. 3d 438, 443-444) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Test for Enforceability of Adhesion Contract

In Williams v. California Physicians' Service (1999) 72 Cal. App. 4th 722, 85 Cal. Rptr. 2d 497 , plaintiffs alleged breach of contract and breach of the duty of good faith and fair dealing based on defendant Blue Shield's refusal to pay for plaintiff wife's physical therapy under defendant's health care service plan. At the time of her accident, plaintiff's service plan covered unlimited physical therapy. Blue Shield, however, later modified the plan pursuant to a written provision in the plan, reducing physical therapy services to a stated maximum per year. Blue Shield filed a cross-complaint for declaratory relief to obtain a judicial determination that plaintiffs werebound by the contract as amended. It then moved for summary judgment as to the complaint and/or the cross-complaint. Plaintiffs opposed the motion, asserting among other things that the clause relied on by Blue Shield should be held unconscionable. The trial court denied Blue Shield's motion for summary judgment as to plaintiffs' complaint but granted Blue Shield summary judgment on the cross-complaint for declaratory relief, determining that Blue Shield could reduce the benefits pursuant to the terms of its health service agreement, which contained a clear and conspicuous statement to that effect. The parties settled their differences as to other matters and entered into a stipulated judgment in favor of Blue Shield, with plaintiffs retaining their right to appeal. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the plan was not unconscionable since the amendments were subject to review by the Department of Corporations as required under Health & Saf. Code § 1352.1, and the plan clearly and conspicuously allowed for the type of reduction that took place (72 Cal. App. 4th 722, 741-744) .

The court of appeal in West v. Henderson (1991) 227 Cal. App. 3d 1578, 278 Cal. Rptr. 570 , affirmed a judgment for a landlord based on a six-month limitation period in a lease. The tenant challenged the limitation as an unconscionable term. The limitation period applied only to the tenant's actions against the landlord, not to the landlord's actions against the tenant. Nevertheless, the six-month limitation period was not unconscionable; indeed, the lease was not an adhesion contract (227 Cal. App. 3d 1578, 1585-1588) . The circumstances of the signing of the lease were not oppressive. While the tenant had no previous business experience and was not represented by an attorney, there was time for the tenant to have consulted an attorney, and the printed lease form had "CONSULT YOUR ATTORNEY" above the signature line (227 Cal. App. 3d 1578, 1586) . The six-month limitation period was not standard in other commercial leases. There was no evidence that the tenant had inferior bargaining power or could not go to another lessor and get more favorable terms (227 Cal. App. 3d 1578, 1586) . The fact that the six-month limitation period operated only against the tenant was a lack of mutuality that made the term suspect in the analysis of the substantive aspect of unconscionability. The one-sided application of the term was justified by the fact that any pending litigation by the tenant could inhibit the lessor's ability to lease the property to another party, while pending litigation by the lessor against the lessee would probably not have the same consequences (227 Cal. App. 3d 1578, 1588) .

In Izzi v. Mesquite Country Club (1986) 186 Cal. App. 3d 1309, 231 Cal. Rptr. 315 , the court of appeal reversed the trial court's order denying arbitration under a contract claimed to be adhesive. The court of appeal did not find that the contract was adhesive but noted that an adhesion contract is fully enforceable unless all or part of it falls outside the reasonable expectations of the weaker party, or it is unduly oppressive orunconscionable under applicable principles of equity (186 Cal. App. 3d 1309, 1317) . Even if the contract was an adhesion contract, the arbitration provision was enforceable because its provisions did not appear to conflict with the reasonable expectations of an ordinary person or to be unduly oppressive or unconscionable (186 Cal. App. 3d 1309, 1318) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
5. Unconscionable Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.201

§ 50.201 Party Claiming Unconscionability Must Show That Alternative Sources Were Unavailable

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

UNCONSCIONABILITY OF [A PROVISION OF] THE CONTRACT IS NOT PROVABLE EXCEPT BY FACTS SUFFICIENT TO ESTABLISH THAT THE _____ [GOODS or SERVICES] WERE NOT AVAILABLE FROM ALTERNATIVE SOURCES WITHOUT THE OFFENDING PROVISION.

[EITHER]

A. Available Alternative Sources of Supply Defeat Claim of Unconscionability. Any claim of oppression may be defeated if the complaining party had reasonably available alternative sources of supply from which to obtain the desired goods or services free of the terms claimed to be unconscionable (Dean Witter Reynolds, Inc. v. Superior Court (1989) 211 Cal. App. 3d 758, 768, 259 Cal. Rptr. 789).

[AND/OR]

B. Claim of Unconscionability Must Show Unavailability of Alternative Sources of Supply. Unconscionability includes an absence of meaningful choice on the part of one of the parties, together with contract terms that are unreasonably favorable to the other party. Thus, a party challenging a contract [provision] as unconscionable cannot establish his or her lack of true bargaining power without facts indicating that he or she could not obtain more favorable terms elsewhere or from the other party by altering their agreement (Shadoan v. World Savings & Loan Assn. (1990) 219 Cal. App. 3d 97, 102-103, 268 Cal. Rptr. 207).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that the unconscionability of a contract provision is not proved in the absence of facts showing that the goods or services could not be obtained from other sources without the challenged term being part of the transaction.

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a plaintiff seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used by plaintiff in opposing a motion for summary judgment made on the ground that the underlying contract is unconscionable. Note that unconscionability is usually raised as a defense to enforcement of a contract, and this form in most cases would therefore be used by the plaintiff. However, the form may be used by a defendant in some cases, for example, when the plaintiff raises the issue of unconscionability in the context of a complaint for declaratory judgment [see, e.g., Perdue v. Crocker National Bank (1985) 38 Cal. 3d 913, 216 Cal. Rptr. 345, 702 P.2d 503] or a complaint seeking to have imposition of the challenged term held to be an unlawful practice under the Consumers Legal Remedies Act [see, e.g., Truta v. Avis Rent A Car System (1987) 193 Cal. App. 3d 802, 238 Cal. Rptr. 806 ; Civ. Code § 1750 et seq.] or an unfair or unlawful business practice under Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 [see, e.g., Shadoan v. World Savings & Loan Assn. (1990) 219 Cal. App. 3d 97, 268 Cal. Rptr. 207 ; see generally Ch. 235, Unfair Competition].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised to oppose a defendant's motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the supporting and opposing papers showing that there is a triable issue as to unconscionability based on facts, or the lack thereof, concerning the availability of alternate sources for the product, service, etc. that is the subject of the action.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender). For discussion and forms relating to the enforcement or nonenforcement of arbitration provisions, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 32, Contractual Arbitration: Agreements and Compelling Arbitration (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

In an appropriate case, these memoranda may be combined with those set out in § 50.200.

For memoranda concerning unconscionability of arbitration provisions, see Ch. 20, Arbitration: Compelling , and Ch. 20A, Arbitration: Resisting .

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum opposing a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.190 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Available Alternative Sources of Supply Defeat Claim of Unconscionability

In Dean Witter Reynolds, Inc. v. Superior Court (1989) 211 Cal. App. 3d 758, 259 Cal. Rptr. 789 , a financial services corporation petitioned for a writ of mandate to vacate the trial court's order certifying the class in a class action challenging the fees charged by the corporation in connection with its self-directed IRA accounts. Three issues were before the court of appeal: (1) whether the $20 set-up fee, the $20 annual fee, and the $50 termination fee constituted unfair business practices under Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq., (2) whether the termination fee was unconscionable under Civ. Code § 1670.5, (3) and whether the termination fee was unconscionable under former Civ. Code § 1770(s) [see Civ. Code § 1770(a)(19)] in the Consumer Legal Remedies Act. The corporation contended that the unconscionability claims lacked merit because the representative plaintiff could have gone to a competing financial services corporation and opened an IRA free of the offending provisions.

The court of appeal issued the writ vacating the certification order. The doctrine of unconscionability has generally been recognized to include situations in which there is an absence of meaningful choice on the part of one of the parties, together with contract terms that unreasonably favorthe other party (211 Cal. App. 3d 758, 767) . Unconscionability presents procedural and substantive aspects, and the procedural aspect includes oppression, which refers to an inequality of bargaining power resulting in no real negotiation and the absence of meaningful choice as well as surprise, which occurs when the supposedly agreed-on terms of the bargain are hidden in a prolix printed form drafted by the party seeking to enforce the disputed terms (211 Cal. App. 3d 758, 767-768) . Also relevant is the buyer's sophistication or lack of it. Substantive unconscionability consists of an allocation of risks or costs that is overly harsh or one-sided and is not justified by the circumstances in which the contract was made (211 Cal. App. 3d 758, 768) . Normally, both procedural and substantive unconscionability must be present before a contract will be held unenforceable. However, a relatively larger degree of one will compensate for a relatively smaller degree of the other (211 Cal. App. 3d 758, 768) . Any claim of oppression may be defeated if the complaining party had reasonably available alternative sources of supply from which to obtain the desired goods or services free of the terms claimed to be unconscionable. If oppression refers to the absence of meaningful choice, then the existence of a meaningful choice to do business elsewhere must tend to defeat any claim of oppression (211 Cal. App. 3d 758, 768) . One mark of a contract of adhesion is that was accepted on a take-it-or-leave-it basis, without opportunity for bargaining and or otherwise obtaining the desired product or service except by acquiescing in the form agreement (211 Cal. App. 3d 758, 769-770) . Procedural unconscionability includes the element of oppression, which depends in part on the absence of meaningful choice by a party, and even though a contract may be adhesive, the existence of meaningful alternatives available to that party in the form of other sources of supply tends to defeat any claim of unconscionability (211 Cal. App. 3d 758, 770) . In this case, the fact that others offered competing IRAs that lacked the challenged provisions defeated any attempt to demonstrate that the $50 termination fee was unconscionable (211 Cal. App. 3d 758, 771) .

[b] Claim of Unconscionability Must Show Unavailability of Alternative Sources of Supply

The plaintiffs in Shadoan v. World Savings & Loan Assn. (1990) 219 Cal. App. 3d 97, 268 Cal. Rptr. 207 , had a loan from the defendant that contained both a prepayment penalty and a call provision that allowed the defendant to call the entire loan due and payable on six months' notice. No prepayment penalty was payable if the defendant called the loan. The plaintiffs paid the loan before maturity and paid a $5,189.18 prepayment penalty to the defendant. Then the plaintiffs sued, individually and on behalf of others similarly situated, alleging that the prepayment penalty was an unconscionable and an unfair business practice, seeking to enjoin the defendant from collecting prepayment penalties from other borrowersand seeking recovery of the prepayment penalty they had paid. The plaintiffs alleged, "Borrowers such as plaintiffs rely on banking institutions such as defendant for real estate financing. Borrowers such as plaintiffs have no bargaining power in obtaining real estate financing from banking institutions such as defendant. Plaintiffs and similar borrowers have no choice but to acquiesce to the unilateral call and prepayment penalty provisions when obtaining real estate financing from defendant. When defendant's preprinted form prepayment penalty and unilateral call provisions are both in effect during the term of a real estate loan, the loan agreement is a contract of adhesion that is unconscionable and unlawful." The defendant's demurrer was sustained, the action was dismissed, and the defendant was awarded attorney's fees on the basis of a provision in the loan agreement.

The court of appeal affirmed and remanded for redetermination of the amount of attorney's fees awarded to the defendant. Civ. Code § 1670.5 by its terms only provides that unconscionability is a defense to enforcement of a contract or contract term but does not speak to the case of a person who has performed or complied with the offending term and seeks restitution. However, the fact that a contractual term is unconscionable may be relevant to the question of whether a party who drafted, and seeks to enforce, the provision has committed an unfair business practice [see Bus. & Prof. Code § 17203, discussed in Ch. 235, Unfair Competition] (219 Cal. App. 3d 97, 101) . Unconscionability includes an absence of meaningful choice on the part of one of the parties, together with contract terms that are unreasonably favorable to the other party. The absence of meaningful choice occurs when a party has little choice but to accept the terms stated by the other party or when a party is wholly unable to obtain the same consideration on other terms, for example, automobile warranties (219 Cal. App. 3d 97, 102) . Here, the plaintiffs alleged no facts indicating that they were unable to receive more favorable terms from another lender, or from the defendant by paying a different interest rate or by accepting a different type of loan or one with a different term. Thus, they alleged no fact from which it could be concluded that they lacked true bargaining power. To allege that the contract was unconscionable states no more than a legal conclusion. Nor does the allegation that the agreement was an adhesion contract state facts demonstrating lack of bargaining power. An adhesion contract is fully enforceable according to its terms unless certain other facts are present. These loan provisions were not so oppressive or unreasonably favorable to the defendant as to make them unconscionable (219 Cal. App. 3d 97, 103) . Civ. Code § 294.9 specifically authorizes prepayment penalties, and Fin. Code § 7504 implicitly authorizes prepayment penalties and call provisions by not including them in a list of prohibited provisions (219 Cl. App. 3d 97, 104). Fin. Code § 7504(b)(5)(A) and (B) do not mandate that the risk of changes in interest rate be equally shared by the borrower and the lender (219 Cal. App. 3d 97, 104-105) .The risk allocation in this case was neither objectively unreasonable nor unexpected. The type of risk allocation usually found to be unconscionable is one by which the stronger party shifts the risk of its own negligence or the defectiveness of its own product to the weaker party (219 Cal. App. 3d 97, 105) . It is simply less disturbing and less unexpected that a lender would shift the risk of market fluctuations to the party using the lender's money (219 Cal. App. 3d 97, 106) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Available Alternative Sources of Supply Defeat Claim of Unconscionability

In Crippen v. Central Valley RV Outlet (2004) 124 Cal. App. 4th 1159, 22 Cal. Rptr. 3d 189 , a buyer purchased a used motor home that was allegedly faulty. When the buyer sued the dealer, the dealer moved to compel arbitration under the terms of the dealer's standard form contract of sale. The buyer objected that the arbitration clause was unconscionable and therefore unenforceable. The buyer introduced no evidence of procedural unconscionability, but argued that unconscionability could be inferred from the dealer's standard form contract itself and from the nature of the buyer-dealer relationship. The court noted that the mere fact the contract was the dealer's standard form did not make the contract one of adhesion and that there was nothing in the dealer's contract form that showed procedural unconscionability (124 Cal. App. 4th at 1165). Moreover, in contrast to the relationship between a job applicant (who needs to find work) and an employer, the court found nothing inherent in the relationship between motor home buyer and seller from which to infer a great disparity of bargaining power (124 Cal. App. 4th at 1166). Although not expressly stated, it seems implicit in the court's discussion of this point not only that other sources of supply were available to the buyer, but that the purchase was entirely discretionary in the first place. However, this case does not go so far as to state a rule that a contract involved in a discretionary purchase can never be a contract of adhesion.

In Freeman v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. (2003) 111 Cal. App. 4th 660, 3 Cal. Rptr. 3d 860 , a purchaser of a Wal-Mart shopping card alleged in his first cause of action that a service fee applicable if the card was not used within 24 months was unconscionable and thus unlawful under Civ. Code § 1770(a)(19). The trial court sustained defendant's demurrer as to this cause of action and plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the trial court appropriately concluded that the service fee was not an unconscionable term and thus did not abuse its discretion in sustaining the demurrer. Plaintiff was not deprived of submitting evidence on the issue of unconscionability, but chose not to amend to allege additional facts establishing unconscionability. The court of appeal reviewed theprinciples of unconscionability, and concluded under these standards that the shopping card fee term was not unconscionable. Its terms were not shockingly one-sided or surprising to the customer. The card stated on the back that a monthly $1 fee would be imposed if the card was not used within 24 months. The fee would continue until the balance of the card was reduced to zero by the monthly fee, but imposition of the fee would cease upon use of the card. Plaintiff had the option of using the card within two years without incurring a fee, and after two years could terminate the fee at any time by using the card. Further, the card was not an adhesion contract. Plaintiff was not subjected to a take-it-or-leave-it situation in which there was no reasonable alternative but to accept the shopping card terms. Plaintiff could simply decline to purchase a shopping card and make purchases by other means (111 Cal. App. 4th 660, 667-670) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
5. Unconscionable Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.202

§ 50.202 Price for Goods or Services Was Not Unconscionable

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE PRICE FOR _____ [specify item or service that plaintiff alleged was unconscionably priced] WAS NOT UNCONSCIONABLE AS A MATTER OF LAW BECAUSE (1) THE PRICE WAS CLEARLY DISCLOSED, (2) THE PLAINTIFF HAD AN OPTION NOT TO BUY _____ [specify item or service], (3) THE PLAINTIFF COULD HAVE DONE BUSINESS WITH OTHER SUPPLIERS INSTEAD OF DEALING WITH THE DEFENDANT, AND (4) THERE WAS NO INDICATION OF OLIGOPOLISTIC PRICING.

Price Was Not Unconscionable. The price that a buyer is required to pay for goods or services is not unconscionable as a matter of law when (1) the price is clearly disclosed, (2) the buyer has an option not to buy the goods or services in question, (3) the buyer has a range of choices for doing business with other suppliers, and (4) there is no indication, in the pleadings or the evidence, that the market for those goods or services is an oligopoly (Wayne v. Staples, Inc. (2006) 135 Cal. App. 4th 466, 482-483, 37 Cal. Rptr. 3d 544).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in opposition to a contention that the price for specified goods or services was unconscionable, by a party contending that the price was not unconscionable as a matter of law, under Civ. Code § 1670.5.

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context, in which a defendant seeks to raise that contention. For example, it may be used to support a demurrer on the ground that the complaint reveals the existence of the first three salient facts (disclosure, an option not to buy, and a choice of other suppliers) while failing to allege the existence of an oligopolistic market.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised in support of the defendant's motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the supporting and opposing papers showing that undisputed facts establish that the plaintiff has conceded or cannot refute the first three salient facts and cannot prove the existence of an oligopolistic market.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For discussion and forms relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Memoranda

In an appropriate case, these memoranda may be combined with those set out in §§ 50.200 and 50.201.

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum supporting a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.190 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Price Was Not Unconscionable

In Wayne v. Staples, Inc. (2006) 135 Cal. App. 4th 466, 37 Cal. Rptr. 3d 544 , the trial court granted a retailer's summary judgment motion in an action by a consumer asserting unconscionable pricing, among other claims. The retailer, as an authorized shipping outlet for a parcel delivery service, offered declared-value insurance coverage to shipping customers and clearly disclosed the price for that coverage but did not inform customers that the price included a 100 percent markup or margin, compared to the amount that the parcel delivery service would have charged for the same coverage in dealing with the customer directly.

The court of appeal upheld the judgment for the retailer as to the customer's claim of unconscionable pricing. The pricing was not unconscionable as a matter of law under Civ. Code § 1670.5 because the price was clearly disclosed, a customer had the option not to buy the insurance coverage, and potential customers had a wide range of choices for shipping their packages, other than dealing with the retailer. Moreover, there was no indication, either in the complaint or in the evidence, that the market for package shipping services was an oligopoly. In fact, the retailer showed that a 100 percent markup or profit margin was wholly within the range of commonly accepted notions of fair profitability (135 Cal. App. 4th 466, 482-483) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
5. Unconscionable Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities §§ 50.203-50.209

[Reserved]

§§ 50.203[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
6. Plaintiff's Acts Caused Defendant's Breach

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.210

§ 50.210 Delay of Performance Is Defense When Time Is of Essence of Contract

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

BECAUSE THE CONTRACT MADE TIME OF THE ESSENCE AND THE PLAINTIFF DID NOT PERFORM IN A TIMELY FASHION, DEFENDANT'S NONPERFORMANCE IS EXCUSED.

Delay of Performance by Plaintiff When Time Is of Essence Constitutes Defense. When a contract makes it clear, unequivocal, and unmistakable that time is of the essence, failure by one party to render timely performance excuses nonperformance by the other party and may be asserted as a defense to an action by the first party for breach of the contract (see Jozovich v. Central Cal. Berry Growers Ass'n (1960) 183 Cal. App. 2d 216, 227-228, 6 Cal. Rptr. 617 ; Leiter v. Handelsman (1954) 125 Cal. App. 2d 243, 250-251, 270 P.2d 563).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that, in an action for contract damages, the plaintiff did not render timely performance when the contract clearly made time of the essence, and therefore defendant's breach or nonperformance is excused.

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a defendant seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used by defendant in supporting a motion for summary judgment.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised to support a defendant's motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the supporting and opposing papers such that undisputed facts show that defendant's nonperformance is excused by plaintiff's delay in performance.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

In an appropriate case, these memoranda may be combined with those set out in § 50.211.

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum supporting a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Delay of Performance by Plaintiff When Time Is of Essence Constitutes Defense

In Jozovich v. Central Cal. Berry Growers Ass'n (1960) 183 Cal. App. 2d 216, 6 Cal. Rptr. 617 , the plaintiff contracted to build for the defendant a machine that would freeze strawberries at the rate of 2,000 pounds an hour. The contract required completion of the machine before May 1, the commencement of the strawberry season, and expressly made time of the essence. The defendant gave the plaintiff an extension until June 23 to complete the machine, but the plaintiff was unable to meet this extension. The defendant then prevented the plaintiff from working on the machine. Judgment was rendered for the plaintiff for the reasonable value of his services and equipment (183 Cal. App. 2d 216, 218, 227) . On appeal the defendant contended that the plaintiff's failure to complete the machine within the time specified in the contract relieved him of any duty to pay the plaintiff.

The court of appeal reversed. A reasonable time for performance of this contract, which expressly made time of the essence, had expired by June 23. Since the plaintiff failed to perform under the contract by that date, the defendant had no further obligation to the plaintiff (183 Cal. App. 2d 216, 228, 230) .

In Leiter v. Handelsman (1954) 125 Cal. App. 2d 243, 270 P.2d 563 , the defendants contracted to purchase clear title to real estate owned bythe plaintiffs. The escrow was to be completed on or before 30 days from February 28. Not until after that period expired did the plaintiffs attempt to eliminate an easement on the property. When the easement was not removed by April 17, the defendants canceled the escrow and received their money back. The vendors then brought this action for damages for breach of contract. Judgment was rendered for the defendants (125 Cal. App. 2d 243, 245, 246, 251) .

The court of appeal affirmed. The general rule is that time is not of the essence unless it has been made so by the express terms of a contract or is necessarily so from the very nature of the contract. A contractual provision rendering time of the essence must be clear, unequivocal, and unmistakable. When time is not of the essence, compliance within a reasonable time after the specified due date constitutes compliance (125 Cal. App. 2d 243, 250-251) . While the evidence did not reflect that the vendors were dilatory in any respect, all of the events indicated that the purchasers acted in good faith and not arbitrarily. The purchasers proposed to purchase clear title to real property. Within a reasonable time after the specified date, clear title was not offered to them, and they were therefore not responsible for any damages to the plaintiff caused by the plaintiff's inability to deliver clear title in a timely fashion (125 Cal. App. 2d 243, 252) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
6. Plaintiff's Acts Caused Defendant's Breach

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.211

§ 50.211 Defendant's Failure or Delay in Performance Is Excused When Caused by Acts of Plaintiff

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE _____ [obligor, e.g., DEFENDANT'S] PERFORMANCE WAS _____ [PREVENTED or DELAYED] BY THE ACTS OF THE _____ [obligee, e.g., PLAINTIFF].

[EITHER]

A. Failure to Perform Is Excused When Performance Is Prevented by Obligee. The want of performance of an obligation, or of an offer of performance, in whole or in part, is excused to the extent that the performance or offer is prevented by the act of the obligee (see Civ. Code § 1511(1)).

[OR]

A. Delay in Performance Is Excused When Caused by Acts of Obligee. An obligor's delay in performance is excused to the extentthat acts of the obligee caused the delay (see Civ. Code § 1511(1); Semas v. Bergmann (1960) 178 Cal. App. 2d 758, 762, 3 Cal. Rptr. 277).

[Optional] B. Contractual Stipulation Precluding Excuse of Prevention Is Not Valid. A provision in a contract that a promisor is not excused from late or defective performance caused by the promisee is inoperative (Civ. Code § 1511(1); Peter Kiewit Sons' Co. v. Pasadena City Junior College Dist. (1963) 59 Cal. 2d 241, 244, 28 Cal. Rptr. 714, 379 P.2d 18).

[Optional] C. Failure to Apply for Extension of Time Is Not Basis for Liability When Performance Was Delayed by Obligor. A provision in a contract requiring the obligor to make an application for an extension of time before he or she may be excused for a delay caused by the obligee's conduct constitutes a substantial limitation on the policy declared by Civil Code Section 1511(1). Thus, noncompliance with a contractual provision requiring application for an extension of time is not a proper basis for holding an obligor liable for late performance caused by the obligee's conduct (Peter Kiewit Sons' Co. v. Pasadena City Junior College Dist. (1963) 59 Cal. 2d 241, 244, 245, 28 Cal. Rptr. 714, 379 P.2d 18).

[Optional] D. Denial of Access to Land Is Prevention. When the performance of a contract depends on the obligor's having access to certain land, the obligee's blocking of access, whether by actual physical force or by order, constitutes prevention that excuses the obligor's nonperformance (see Crawford v. Pioneer Box & Lbr. Co. (1930) 105 Cal. App. 760, 765-767, 288 P. 694).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that, in an action for contract damages, the defendant obligor's failure or delay in performance is excused because it was a result of acts of the plaintiff obligee.

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a defendant seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used by defendant in supporting a motion for summary judgment.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised to support adefendant's motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the supporting and opposing papers such that undisputed facts show that defendant's failure or delay in performance was caused by acts of the plaintiff.

[c] Definition of Creditor in Civ. Code § 1511

Civ. Code § 1511(1), by its terms, purports to excuse nonperformance only when performance is prevented or delayed by acts of "the creditor." The Civil Code contains no special definition of the term "creditor" as it is used in Civ. Code § 1511. Although the term "creditor" usually connotes a person in whose favor an obligation exists for the payment of money [see, e.g., Civ. Code § 3430], the term is also used throughout Civ. Code § 1473 et seq. (governing extinction of obligations in general) and apparently refers to a person entitled to the performance of any type of obligation--in short, an obligee. For example, an owner of real property who is a party to a construction contract is a creditor within the meaning of Civ. Code § 1511(1), and any delay in performance by the builder is excused to the extent that performance has been delayed by the owner's acts [see Peter Kiewit Sons' Co. v. Pasadena City Junior College Dist. (1963) 59 Cal. 2d 241, 243-244, 28 Cal. Rptr. 714, 379 P.2d 18 , discussed in [c][ii], below]. Therefore, the broader term "obligee" is used in this form, instead of the term "creditor."

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[e] Related Memoranda

In an appropriate case, these memoranda may be combined with those set out in § 50.210.

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum supporting a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Delay in Performance Is Excused When Caused by Acts of Obligee

In Semas v. Bergmann (1960) 178 Cal. App. 2d 758, 3 Cal. Rptr. 277 , the plaintiff agreed to construct a store building for the defendants and to complete it by a certain date. If the plaintiff failed to complete the building by the specified date, he would be liable to the defendants for $100 each working day the work remained uncompleted, but if the building was completed before that date, the defendants would be liable for the same amount for each working day the building was completed ahead of schedule. The building was completed 69 days late. The plaintiff sued for recovery of the balance due on the contract and for foreclosure of a mechanic's lien. The defendants claimed that the entire 69-day delay was due to inclement weather, the risk of which the plaintiff had assumed, as well as the plaintiff's incompetence. The plaintiff claimed that the delay was due to the defendants' acts. The trial court found that all but 20 days of the delay were excused and rendered judgment for the plaintiff for the balance due on the contract, less a $2,000 offset for the late performance. On appeal, the defendants contended that the evidence was insufficient to support the trial court's finding that some of the delay was excused.

The court of appeal affirmed. After reviewing the evidence concerning the defendants' acts that allegedly caused the delay, the court of appeal concluded that it created, at most, a conflict that the trial court could have decided either way. The court could not say, as a matter of law, that the evidence compelled a conclusion in the defendants' favor. A promisor's delay in performance is excused to the extent that acts of the promisee caused the delay (178 Cal. App. 2d 758, 762) .

[b] Contractual Stipulation Precluding Excuse of Prevention Is Not Valid

In Peter Kiewit Sons' Co. v. Pasadena City Junior College Dist. (1963) 59 Cal. 2d 241, 28 Cal. Rptr. 714, 379 P.2d 18 , the plaintiff agreed to construct school facilities for the defendant, the work to be completed by a certain day, and liquidated damages of a certain sum per day were to be deducted from the final payment for each day's delay after that date. The plaintiff could obtain an extension of time, but only for certain causes, which included any act of neglect of duty or default by the defendant. Extensions were to be granted only if the plaintiff submitted a written application for the extension to the defendant and the architect. The work was not completed within the time specified, nor within the time allowed by extensions granted by the defendant. The defendant withheld a portion of the final payment pursuant to the liquidated-damages provision of the contract. The plaintiff sued to recover this amount. The trial court foundthat the late completion was caused by matters beyond the plaintiff's control, including delays caused by the defendant, and concluded that the delay was excusable. It concluded that the defendant was not entitled to liquidated damages and rendered judgment for the plaintiff. On appeal, the defendant contended that the judgment could be sustained only if it were proper to take into account various delays caused by the defendant's conduct as to which the plaintiff had failed to request an extension of time, as required by the contract. In the absence of compliance with the contractual provision, the defendant contended, the plaintiff's late performance could not be excused.

The Supreme Court affirmed. Civ. Code § 1511(1) provides that any delay in the performance of an obligation is excused when performance is delayed by the act of the creditor even though there may have been a stipulation that this could not be an excuse (59 Cal. 2d 241, 243-244) . An owner who is a party to a construction contract is a creditor within the meaning of Civ. Code § 1511, and a provision in an agreement that the contractor is not to be excused for late completion caused by the owner is rendered inoperative by the statute. A provision in a contract that would require the contractor to make an application for an extension of time before he could be excused for a delay caused by the owner's conduct would obviously constitute a substantial limitation on the policy declared by Civ. Code § 1511 (59 Cal. 2d 241, 244) . Noncompliance with a provision requiring an application for an extension of time is not a proper basis for holding a contractor liable in liquidated damages for late completion that is caused by the owner's conduct (59 Cal. 2d 241, 245) .

[c] Failure to Apply for Extension of Time Is Not Basis for Liability When Performance Was Delayed by Obligor

Peter Kiewit Sons' Co. v. Pasadena City Junior College Dist. (1963) 59 Cal. 2d 241, 28 Cal. Rptr. 714, 379 P.2d 18 , is discussed in [b], above.

[d] Denial of Access to Land Is Prevention

In Crawford v. Pioneer Box & Lbr. Co. (1930) 105 Cal. App. 760, 288 P. 694 , the plaintiff agreed to fell timber on certain land owned by the defendant and to deliver it to the defendant's loading skids. The defendant was to pay the plaintiff a certain amount per log delivered. Pursuant to the contract, the plaintiff began cutting operations on the land. Before all of the timber had been felled, however, the defendant ordered the plaintiff to cease his operations until further notice. When the plaintiff received no further notice, he sued for damages for breach of contract. The trial court rendered judgment on a verdict for the plaintiff. On appeal, the defendant contended that the orders to stop were not sufficient to warrant the plaintiff in declaring the contract breached. The plaintiff could have, and shouldhave, wholly ignored the orders and gone on with the contract, delivering logs until the defendant refused to accept more. The defendant further contended that, irrespective of the orders, the plaintiff was bound under his contract to deliver the logs, and the defendant was bound to do nothing other than accept and pay for the logs.

The court of appeal affirmed. The performance of the contract here depended wholly and entirely on the plaintiff's access to the defendant's lands. Access having being blocked by the defendant, he could proceed no further. If the lands had been so situated that access was possible only over a certain road or trail, it would be readily apparent that a blocking or destruction of the road by the defendant would have accomplished a complete prevention of performance. The order by the defendant for the plaintiff to stop was only slightly less of a barrier to access, since under the contract, no interest in or title to the lands involved passed to the plaintiff, and all that distinguished the plaintiff from a mere trespasser was the defendant's implied license. Whether the plaintiff was removed from the lands by actual physical force or merely by order, the effect was the same (105 Cal. App. 760, 767) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
6. Plaintiff's Acts Caused Defendant's Breach

5-50 California Points & Authorities §§ 50.212-50.229

[Reserved]

§§ 50.212[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
7. Impossibility of Performance

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.230

§ 50.230 Performance Was Prevented by Operation of Law

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE DEFENDANT'S NONPERFORMANCE WAS EXCUSED IN THAT PERFORMANCE WAS PREVENTED BY OPERATION OF LAW.

Nonperformance Is Excused When Performance Is Prevented by Operation of Law. A party is not liable for breach of a contract whose performance has been prevented by operation of law (Civ. Code § 1511(1); Baird v. Wendt Enterprises, Inc. (1967) 248 Cal. App. 2d 52, 55, 56 Cal. Rptr. 118).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that, in an action for contract damages, the defendant's nonperformance is excused because performance was prevented by operation of law.

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a defendant seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used by defendant in supporting a motion for summary judgment.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised to support a defendant's motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the supporting and opposing papers such that undisputed facts show that defendant's performance was prevented by operation of law.

[c] Impossibility as Excuse for Nonperformance

Although there are numerous decisions stating that "impossibility" is not a defense in certain situations [see §§ 50.242, 50.243], no reported decision defines "impossibility" and applies it as an excuse for nonperformance. Itappears, however, that the term "impossibility" refers to any one of at least four separate excuses for nonperformance:

- Prevention of performance by operation of law [Civ. Code § 1511(1)].

- Prevention of performance by an irresistible, superhuman force (or "act of God") [Civ. Code § 1511(2); see § 50.231].

- Impracticability of performance [Mineral Park Land Co. v. Howard (1916) 172 Cal. 289, 293, 156 P. 458 ; see § 50.232].

- Destruction of a person or thing necessary to performance of the contract [see § 50.233].

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[e] Related Memoranda

In an appropriate case, these memoranda may be combined with alternate or additional memoranda relating to impossibility of performance, set out in §§ 50.231 -50.233 [see [c], above, regarding definition of "impossibility"].

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum supporting a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[f] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.240 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Nonperformance Is Excused When Performance Is Prevented by Operation of Law

Civ. Code § 1511 provides, in part, as follows:

> The want of performance of an obligation, or an offer of performance, in whole or in part, or any delay therein, is excused by the following causes, to the extent to which they operate:
>
> 1. When such performance or offer is prevented or delayed by the act of the creditor, or by the operation of law, even though there may have been a stipulation that this shall not > be an excuse; however, the parties may expressly require in a contract that the party relying on the provisions of this paragraph give written notice to the other party or parties, within a reasonable time after the occurrence of the event excusing performance, of an intention to claim an extension of time or of an intention to bring suit or of any other similar or related intent, provided the requirement of such notice is reasonable and just.

In Baird v. Wendt Enterprises, Inc. (1967) 248 Cal. App. 2d 52, 56 Cal. Rptr. 118 , the plaintiff agreed to convey a leasehold interest in certain real property, together with plans and specifications for construction of a high-rise hotel-apartment building on the property. The parties agreed to a certain closing date at which time the plaintiff was to furnish a title report and an effective building permit. The plaintiff obtained a building permit but informed the defendant that the permit would expire within 15 months unless substantial construction was begun under the permit within that time, and if the permit expired, the building could not be constructed according to the original specifications because of a new building code passed after the issuance of the original permit. The parties later agreed to extend the closing date for the transaction beyond the date when the building permit expired. Neither party took any steps to arrange for the commencement of construction. By the time of the extended closing date, the building permit had expired without possibility of renewal. The deal was never closed, and the plaintiff sued for damages for breach of contract. The defendant counterclaimed for damages for breach of contract. The trial court found that both parties had defaulted in their obligations under the contract and refused to award damages to either.

The court of appeal affirmed. Although the plaintiff had failed to furnish a valid building permit at the close of escrow, the terms of the original contract had been altered by the parties with knowledge, if not appreciation, of the resulting risks to performance of the contract on its original terms. By extending the duration of escrow, the defendant agreed to a postponement of the performance of the contract to a time when performance on its original terms would become impossible. Neither party attempted to renegotiate the contract to authorize the start of substantial construction on the project earlier to keep the building permit alive, with the result that on the scheduled date for the close of escrow, performance of the contract was prevented by operation of law because of the new building code. Since there is no liability for breach of a contract whose performance has been made impossible by operation of law, the plaintiff's inability to perform the contract, as extended, was excused (248 Cal. App. 2d 52, 54, 55) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
7. Impossibility of Performance

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.231

§ 50.231 Performance Was Prevented or Delayed by Irresistible, Superhuman Cause or Act of God

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

NONPERFORMANCE WAS EXCUSED IN THAT PERFORMANCE WAS PREVENTED BY AN IRRESISTIBLE, SUPERHUMAN CAUSE.

A. Nonperformance Is Excused to Extent Performance Is Prevented by Irresistible, Superhuman Cause. The want or delay of performance of an obligation or of an offer of performance, in whole or in part, is excused to the extent that it is prevented or delayed by an irresistible, superhuman cause, unless the parties have expressly agreed to the contrary (Civ. Code § 1511(2)).

B. Irresistible, Superhuman Cause Defined. Under Civil Code Section 1511, an irresistible, superhuman cause is equivalent to the phrase "act of God" and refers to natural causes, the effects of which cannot be prevented by the exercise of prudence, diligence, and care (Ryan v. Rogers (1892) 96 Cal. 349, 353, 31 P. 244).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that, in an action for contract damages, a defendant's nonperformance is excused because it was prevented by an irresistible, superhuman cause.

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a defendant seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used by defendant in supporting a motion for summary judgment.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised to support a defendant's motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the supporting and opposing papers such that undisputed facts show that defendant's performance was prevented by an irresistible, superhuman cause.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender). For discussion and a form of affirmative defense of an irresistible, superhuman force, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 10, Act of God (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

In an appropriate case, these memoranda may be combined with alternate or additional memoranda relating to impossibility of performance, set out in § 50.230 and §§ 50.232, 50.233 [see § 50.230[2][c], regarding definition of "impossibility"].

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum supporting a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.241 may be submitted in opposition to contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Irresistible, Superhuman Cause Defined

In Ryan v. Rogers (1892) 96 Cal. 349, 31 P. 244 , the defendants made a written contract with the plaintiff's assignor to deliver five carloads of lima beans to the assignor on or before a certain date. The plaintiff sued for damages for breach of contract, alleging that the defendants failed to deliver the beans. As a defense, the defendants alleged that they had attempted to deliver the beans on the particular date but had been prevented from doing so because they were unable to cross a certain river that was swollen by recent rains so as to render it impassable. The trial court rendered judgment for the plaintiff. On appeal, the defendants contended that they were prevented from performing the contract by an irresistible and superhuman cause, and facts constituting such a defense had been alleged in the answer.

The Supreme Court affirmed. The words "irresistible, superhuman force," within the meaning of Civ. Code § 1511, are equivalent to the phrase "actof God" and refer to those natural causes, the effects of which cannot be prevented by the exercise of prudence, diligence, and care, and the use of those appliances that the situation of the party renders it reasonable for him to use (96 Cal. 349, 352-353) . An act of God, in legal phraseology, means an accident against which ordinary skill and foresight is not expected to provide. The facts alleged in the answer were not sufficient to show that the defendants were prevented by an irresistible, superhuman cause from performing their contract (96 Cal. 349, 353) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
7. Impossibility of Performance

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.232

§ 50.232 Performance Was Impossible Because of Impracticability

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

FAILURE TO PERFORM WAS EXCUSED IN THAT PERFORMANCE COULD ONLY HAVE BEEN ACCOMPLISHED AT AN EXCESSIVE AND UNREASONABLE COST AND WAS THEREFORE IMPRACTICABLE.

Nonperformance Is Excused When Performance Is Impracticable. Nonperformance of an obligation is excused as legally impossible if performance is impracticable. Performance is impracticable if it can only be accomplished at an excessive and unreasonable cost (Mineral Park Land Co. v. Howard (1916) 172 Cal. 289, 293, 156 P. 458).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that, in an action for contract damages, a defendant's nonperformance is excused because performance was impracticable.

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a defendant seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used by defendant in supporting a motion for summary judgment.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised to support adefendant's motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the supporting and opposing papers such that undisputed facts show that defendant's performance was rendered impracticable.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

In an appropriate case, these memoranda may be combined with alternate or additional memoranda relating to impossibility of performance, set out in §§ 50.230, 50.231 and § 50.233 [see § 50.230[2][c], regarding definition of "impossibility"].

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum supporting a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in §§ 50.242, 50.243 may be submitted in opposition to contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Nonperformance Is Excused When Performance Is Impracticable

In Mineral Park Land Co. v. Howard (1916) 172 Cal. 289, 156 P. 458 , the defendants had made a contract with public authorities for construction of a bridge. They made a contract with the plaintiff by which they agreed to remove all gravel and earth necessary for construction of the bridge from the plaintiff's land and to pay the plaintiff a certain amount per cubic yard of earth removed. In constructing the bridge, the defendants used 101,000 cubic yards of earth and gravel, but less than half of this was taken from the plaintiff's land. The plaintiff sued for damages for breach of contract. The first count sought to recover the unpaid amountdue for the earth and gravel that was actually removed by the defendants. The second count sought to recover damages for the defendants' failure to remove more earth and gravel than was actually removed. The trial court found that although the plaintiff's land contained earth and gravel in excess of 101,000 cubic yards, only the amount actually taken by the defendants was above the water table; no greater quantity could have been taken by the defendants except by use of a steam dredger at prohibitive cost. The trial court nevertheless concluded that the facts found did not justify the defendants' failure to take from the plaintiff's land all of the earth and gravel required for the construction job. The trial court rendered judgment for the plaintiff.

The Supreme Court modified the judgment by deducting damages for the defendants' failure to remove additional earth and gravel from the plaintiff's land. When performance depends on the existence of a thing assumed to exist as the basis of the agreement, nonperformance is excused to the extent that the thing ceases to exist or turns out to be nonexistent (172 Cal. 289, 292) . The findings of fact in this case fell within this rule. The parties had contracted for the right to take earth and gravel to be used in the construction of the bridge, and in so doing, they contemplated and assumed that the land contained the requisite quantity available for use. The defendants did not bind themselves to take what was not there. Although there was gravel on the land, it was so situated that the defendants could not take it by ordinary means, except at a prohibitive cost, so that, to all fair intents, it was impossible for the defendants to take it. A thing is impossible in legal contemplation when it is not practicable, and a thing is impracticable when it can only be done at an excessive and unreasonable cost. While the defendants could not excuse themselves merely by showing the existence of conditions that would make performance of their obligation more expensive than they had anticipated, or that would entail a loss on them, nevertheless, when the difference in cost is great as in this case and has the effect of making performance impracticable, the situation is not different from that of a total absence of earth and gravel (172 Cal. 289, 293) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Nonperformance Is Excused When Performance Is Impracticable

In Vernon v. Los Angeles (1955) 45 Cal. 2d 710, 290 P.2d 841 , the City of Vernon had made a number of contracts with Los Angeles by which Los Angeles agreed to dispose of Vernon's sewage through the Los Angeles outfall sewer system. Over the years, the Los Angeles sewer system gradually became inadequate to handle the increased sewage from its own system as well as that from Vernon and from other cities using the Los Angelessystem. Eventually, the State of California brought an abatement action against Los Angeles, Vernon, and other cities, which resulted in issuance of an injunction requiring Los Angeles to build new sewage treatment facilities and requiring Vernon and other cities to either provide their own facilities for safe and sanitary disposal of their sewage or arrange to finance their proportional share of the cost of the new Los Angeles sewage facilities. Vernon elected to dispose of its sewage through the new Los Angeles facilities but did not arrange to finance its share of the cost of the facilities until it was compelled to do so by contempt proceedings. Thereafter, Vernon sued for declaratory and injunctive relief, seeking a declaration that under the previous contracts between Vernon and Los Angeles, Vernon was entitled to discharge its sewage through the Los Angeles sewer system without charge. The trial court found that Los Angeles could not continue performance under its previous contracts with Vernon except at an excessive and unreasonable cost, and further performance by Los Angeles under the contracts was therefore excused. It rendered judgment for Los Angeles. The Supreme Court affirmed. The controlling principles as to legal impossibility excusing performance have long been recognized in California. A thing is impossible in legal contemplation when it is not practicable, and a thing is impracticable when it can only be done at an excessive and unreasonable cost [Mineral Park Land Co. v. Howard (1916) 172 Cal. 289, 293, 156 P. 458 , discussed in [3][a], above] (45 Cal. 2d 710, 719-720) . In this case, when the parties contracted, they had contemplated that there would be disposal facilities available for legal use, whether in existence or to be constructed, the cost of which would not be completely disproportionate to the costs expressly referred to in the contracts (45 Cal. 2d 710, 720) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
7. Impossibility of Performance

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.233

§ 50.233 Performance Was Impossible Due to Death of Person or Destruction of Specific Thing Necessary for Performance

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

NONPERFORMANCE IS EXCUSED BECAUSE OF THE _____ [DESTRUCTION OF THE THING or DEATH OF THE PERSON] THAT WAS THE SUBJECT OF THE CONTRACT AND ON WHOSE EXISTENCE PERFORMANCE OF THE CONTRACT DEPENDED.

[EITHER]

Destruction or Nonexistence of Subject Matter. When performance of a contract depends on the existence of a thing assumedby the parties to exist as the basis of the agreement, nonperformance is excused to the extent that the thing ceases to exist or turns out to be nonexistent (Mineral Park Land Co. v. Howard (1916) 172 Cal. 289, 292, 156 P. 458).

[OR]

Impossibility Due to Death of Person. When performance of a contract depends on the continued existence of a certain person, a condition is implied that the impossibility of performance arising from the perishing of the person will excuse nonperformance (Farnon v. Cole (1968) 259 Cal. App. 2d 855, 858, 66 Cal. Rptr. 673).

[OR]

Impossibility Due to Incapacity of Person. If a contract contemplates the personal services of a particular person, nonperformance is excused if that person dies or becomes otherwise incapable of performing (Cazares v. Saenz (1989) 208 Cal. App. 3d 279, 284-286, 256 Cal. Rptr. 209).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that, in an action for contract damages, a defendant's nonperformance is excused because performance was rendered impossible by the death or incapacity of the specific person or by the destruction of the specific thing that was the subject of the contract and on whose existence performance depended.

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a defendant seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used by defendant in supporting a motion for summary judgment.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised to support a defendant's motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the supporting and opposing papers such that undisputed facts show that defendant's performance was rendered impossible due the death of a person, or the destruction of a thing, upon which performance depended.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

In an appropriate case, these memoranda may be combined with alternate or additional memoranda relating to impossibility of performance, set out in §§ 50.230 -50.232 [see § 50.230[2][c], regarding definition of "impossibility"].

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum supporting a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.244 may be submitted in opposition to contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Destruction or Nonexistence of Subject Matter

The facts and procedural background of Mineral Park Land Co. v. Howard (1916) 172 Cal. 289, 156 P. 458 , are discussed in § 50.232[3][a]. The Supreme Court, in holding the defense of impossibility of performance applicable to the facts of the case, noted that when performance of a contract depends on the existence of a thing assumed to exist as the basis of the agreement, nonperformance is excused to the extent that the thing ceases to exist or turns out to be nonexistent (172 Cal. 289, 292) .

[b] Impossibility Due to Death of Person

In Farnon v. Cole (1968) 259 Cal. App. 2d 855, 66 Cal. Rptr. 673 , a famous popular singer had made a written contract by which the plaintiff agreed to render services as the defendant's musical director for a one-year period. The contract provided for a certain weekly compensation for the services rendered, with a guarantied minimum compensation for the entire year. The plaintiff rendered performance under the contract until thesinger died, about six months after the contract was executed. Thereafter, the plaintiff sued the estate to recover the amount of the minimum compensation under the contract, less the compensation actually paid to the plaintiff before the singer's death. The trial court found that the contract was terminated by the singer's death. Judgment was rendered for the defendant.

The court of appeal affirmed. When distinctly personal considerations are at the foundation of the contract, the relation of the parties is dissolved by the death of the person whose personal qualities constituted the particular inducement to the contract. When performance depends on the continued existence of a certain person, a condition is implied that the impossibility of performance arising from the perishing of the person will excuse the performance. The implication arises in spite of the unqualified character of the promissory words because, from the nature of the contract, it is apparent that the parties contracted on the basis of the continued existence of the particular person (259 Cal. App. 2d 855, 858) . In this case, the contract expressed the parties' intent that the contract be conditioned on the singer's continued existence and personal participation. There was no doubt that the singer's artistic skill, talent, and renown were inducements to the plaintiff to enter into the contract. The plaintiff's services were to be rendered exclusively to the singer personally, or to the corporation or company at which the singer would be rendering services, and at times and places the singer was to designate. The singer's personal appearance or personal recording was an implied condition precedent to the plaintiff's rendition of services as a musical director. With the singer's untimely death, both parties were excused from further performance, and the contract was terminated (259 Cal. App. 2d 855, 859) .

[c] Impossibility Due to Incapacity of Person

Cazares v. Saenz (1989) 208 Cal. App. 3d 279, 256 Cal. Rptr. 209 , was an action by two former partners of a law firm to collect fees from a sole practitioner who had associated with the firm in a personal injury action. At the time of the association agreement, all three attorneys contemplated that most of the work on the case would be done by one of the partners (the major partner) because of that partner's experience and reputation, and because he was bilingual. Two and a half years into the contract, the major partner was appointed to the bench. The sole practitioner refused to work with the other partner and associated himself with other attorneys. The personal injury action was settled, and the plaintiffs sued for half of the contingency fee earned by the defendant. Judgment was rendered for the plaintiffs.

The court of appeal reversed. The major partner's judicial appointment rendered the partner incapable of performing and discharged the obligations of the parties (208 Cal. App. 3d 279, 282) . All parties contemplatedthat the major partner would do most, if not all, of the work on the case, and the defendant was entitled to refuse to work with the other partner (208 Cal. App. 3d 279, 284) . When a contract contemplates the personal services of a party, another party's nonperformance is excused when the contemplated party dies or becomes otherwise incapable of performing. Once the major partner was appointed to the bench, he was legally incapable of performing. If the existence of a particular person is necessary for the performance of a duty, that person's death or any incapacity making performance impracticable is an event the nonoccurrence of which was a basic assumption on which the contract was made (208 Cal. App. 3d 279, 285) . At least when the contract contemplates the unique personal services of a firm member, both the obligations of the firm and those of the party retaining the firm are discharged by the incapacity (208 Cal. App. 3d 279, 286) .

80 of 168 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
7. Impossibility of Performance

5-50 California Points & Authorities §§ 50.234-50.239

[Reserved]

§§ 50.234[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
7. Impossibility of Performance

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.240

§ 50.240 Defense of Prevention of Performance by Operation of Law Is Not Applicable to Prevention by Judicial Order Obtained by Private Litigant

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE DEFENDANT'S PERFORMANCE WAS PREVENTED BY A JUDICIAL ORDER OBTAINED BY A PRIVATE LITIGANT, AND THE DEFENSE OF PREVENTION BY OPERATION OF LAW DOES NOT APPLY TO JUDICIAL ORDERS.

A. Defense of Prevention of Performance by Operation of Law Is Applicable Only to Governmental Interference. The defense that performance has been rendered impossible by operation of law applies only to governmental interference that results from the passage of a statute or ordinance making the contemplated performance illegal, or from a condemnation proceeding brought by the state or other public agency (Webster v. Southern Cal. First Nat'l Bank (1977) 68 Cal. App. 3d 407, 415, 137 Cal. Rptr. 293).

B. Defense of Impossibility by Operation of Law Is Not Applicable to Prevention by Judicial Order Obtained by Private Litigant. The defense that performance has been rendered impossible by operation of law does not apply when performance has been prevented by a court order or process obtained by a private litigant,as in the case of an injunction or attachment obtained against the promisor by some third party (Webster v. Southern Cal. First Nat'l Bank (1977) 68 Cal. App. 3d 407, 415-416, 137 Cal. Rptr. 293).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that, in an action for contract damages, the defense that defendant's performance was prevented by operation of law is applicable only to governmental interference in the form of passage of a statute or ordinance making the contemplated performance illegal, and not to prevention by court order or process obtained by a private litigant.

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a plaintiff seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used by plaintiff in opposing a motion for summary judgment.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised to support a plaintiff's opposition to a motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the supporting and opposing papers showing that undisputed facts establish nonperformance due to judicial process obtained through private litigation rather than due to the enactment of prohibitive statute or ordinance.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

In an appropriate case, these memoranda may be combined with alternate or additional memoranda that resist a defense of impossibility of performance, set out in §§ 50.241 -50.244 [see § 50.230[2][c], regarding definition of "impossibility"].

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum opposing a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.230 may be submitted in opposition to contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defense of Prevention of Performance by Operation of Law Is Applicable Only to Governmental Interference

In Webster v. Southern Cal. First Nat'l Bank (1977) 68 Cal. App. 3d 407, 137 Cal. Rptr. 293 , the seller of a bar and restaurant opened an escrow with the bank and deposited the purchase price along with directions to pay the bona fide claims of the seller's creditors who filed their claims in the escrow, pursuant to Bus. & Prof. Code § 24074 (requiring the transferor of a liquor license to place the entire purchase price in escrow to pay bona fide claims of the transferor's creditors). The plaintiff's assignor, holder of three promissory notes executed by the seller, filed a claim with the bank for the amount due on the notes. Thereafter, two of the seller's shareholders filed an action against the seller seeking rescission of their stock purchases, return of their money, and a declaration that their claims had priority over other creditors' claims in the escrow. The last of a series of court orders ordered the bank to pay specified claims out of the escrow, which did not include the notes held by the plaintiff's assignor, and to pay the balance of the funds in the escrow to the attorneys for the two shareholders pending further order of the court. The bank paid the claims and closed the escrow without informing the court of the plaintiff's assignor's notes and without informing the plaintiff's assignor of the lawsuit or injunction. The plaintiff then sued for the amount due on the notes plus interest. On the theory that the plaintiff's assignor was a creditor-beneficiary of the escrow agreement, the plaintiff charged the bank with breach of contract, negligence, conversion, and violation of the bulk transfer laws, based solely on the bank's failure to pay the amount due under the notes. The trial court granted the bank's motion for summary judgment. On appeal, in support of the judgment, the bank contended that performance according to Bus. & Prof. Code § 24074 and the terms of the escrow agreement was rendered impossible by operation of law because of the court orders in the action brought by the two shareholders.

The court of appeal reversed. The defense of prevention by operation of law applies only to governmental interference that results from the passage of a statute or ordinance making the contemplated performance illegal, or from a condemnation proceeding brought by the state or other public agency. Prevention by court order or process obtained by a private litigant, as in the case of an injunction or attachment obtained against the promisor by some third party, is not considered an excuse (68 Cal. App. 3d 407, 415-416) .

[b] Defense of Impossibility by Operation of Law Is Not Applicable to Prevention by Judicial Order Obtained by Private Litigant

Webster v. Southern Cal. First Nat'l Bank (1977) 68 Cal. App. 3d 407, 137 Cal. Rptr. 293 , is discussed in [a], above.

82 of 168 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
7. Impossibility of Performance

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.241

§ 50.241 Reasonably Anticipated Natural Phenomenon Is Not Irresistible, Superhuman Cause Excusing Failure to Perform

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PERFORMANCE WAS NOT PREVENTED BY AN IRRESISTIBLE, SUPERHUMAN CAUSE BECAUSE THE EVENTS THAT ALLEGEDLY PREVENTED PERFORMANCE WERE NATURAL PHENOMENA THAT WERE REASONABLY TO BE ANTICIPATED AT THE PARTICULAR TIME AND PLACE THEY OCCURRED AND AGAINST THE EFFECTS OF WHICH THE _____ [nonperforming party, e.g., DEFENDANT] COULD HAVE BEEN PROTECTED THROUGH THE EXERCISE OF ORDINARY SKILL AND FORESIGHT.

A. Reasonably Anticipated Natural Event Is Not Irresistible, Superhuman Cause. Irresistible, superhuman causes do not include natural phenomena that are reasonably to be anticipated at the particular time and place they occur and against the effects of which ordinary skill and foresight are expected to protect (see Ryan v. Rogers (1892) 96 Cal. 349, 353, 31 P. 244).

[Optional] B. Reasonably Anticipated High Water Is Not Irresistible, Superhuman Cause. With respect to watercourses, irresistible, superhuman causes include only floods or extraordinary freshets, not a rising of water in a stream that is usual or ordinaryand reasonably to be anticipated at particular times of the year (Ryan v. Rogers (1892) 96 Cal. 349, 353, 31 P. 244).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that, in an action for contract damages, the defense that defendant's performance was prevented by an irresistible, superhuman cause, because the events allegedly preventing the performance were reasonably anticipated natural phenomena and therefore do not constitute an irresistible, superhuman causes sufficient to excuse nonperformance.

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a plaintiff seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used by plaintiff in opposing a motion for summary judgment.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised to support a plaintiff's opposition to a motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the supporting and opposing papers showing that undisputed facts concerning events that do not constitute irresistible, superhuman causes.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

In an appropriate case, these memoranda may be combined with alternate or additional memoranda that resist a defense of impossibility of performance, set out in §§ 50.240 and 50.242 -50.244 [see § 50.230[2][c], regarding definition of "impossibility"].

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum opposing a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publicationin drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.231 may be submitted in opposition to contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Reasonably Anticipated Natural Event Is Not Irresistible, Superhuman Cause

The facts and procedural background of Ryan v. Rogers (1892) 96 Cal. 349, 31 P. 244 , are discussed in § 50.231[3][a]. The Supreme Court, in affirming a judgment for the plaintiff in an action for damages for breach of contract, rejected the defendants' contention that their performance had been prevented by an irresistible, superhuman cause. The Court noted that the phrase irresistible, superhuman cause was equivalent to the phrase "act of God," which in legal phraseology means an accident against which ordinary skill and foresight are not expected to provide. As applied to watercourses, this includes only floods or extraordinary freshets, not a rising of water in a stream that is usual or ordinary and reasonably to be anticipated at particular times of the year. The facts alleged in the defendants' answer were insufficient to show that the defendants' performance was prevented by an irresistible, superhuman cause. It did not appear that there was anything unusual for that season of the year in the rising of the waters referred to in the defendants' answer, and the high water was therefore something that ordinary prudence might have anticipated and taken proper steps to guard against any delay. The defendants had not alleged that they could not have reached the place they were to deliver the beans by another route or that it was impossible for them to communicate with that place and direct the delivery to be made by some other agent (96 Cal. 349, 353) .

[b] Reasonably Anticipated High Water Is Not Irresistible, Superhuman Cause

Ryan v. Rogers (1892) 96 Cal. 349, 31 P. 244 , is discussed in [a], above.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
7. Impossibility of Performance

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.242

§ 50.242 Inability of Obligor Does Not Constitute Impossibility

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief].

PERFORMANCE IS NOT IMPOSSIBLE OR IMPRACTICABLE WHEN THE IMPOSSIBILITY OR IMPRACTICABILITY IS DUE TO THE DEFENDANT'S INABILITY TO PERFORM, NOT TO THE NATURE OF THE ACT TO BE PERFORMED.

A. Burden of Proving Impossibility. The burden of proving the defense of impossibility of performance rests on the party asserting it (Hensler v. Los Angeles (1954) 124 Cal. App. 2d 71, 83, 268 P.2d 12).

B. Inability of Obligor Does Not Constitute Impossibility. To excuse nonperformance of a contract, the impossibility of performance must attach to the nature of the thing to be done and not to the inability of the obligor to do it (Hensler v. Los Angeles (1954) 124 Cal. App. 2d 71, 83, 268 P.2d 12). If performance is not inherently impossible, and there is an unconditional promise to perform, nonperformance is a breach when the obligor becomes unable to perform, even though through causes beyond his or her control, since he or she might have provided against them in his or her contract (El Rio Oils v. Pacific Coast Asphalt Co. (1949) 95 Cal. App. 2d 186, 197, 213 P.2d 1).

[Optional] C. Failure to Obtain Consent of Third Party. One who binds himself or herself to a contract that cannot be performed without the consent or cooperation of a third person is not relieved of liability because of his or her inability to obtain the required consent or cooperation (Hensler v. Los Angeles (1954) 124 Cal. App. 2d 71, 83, 268 P.2d 12).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that, in an action for contract damages, a defendant's nonperformance is not excused on the ground of impossibility or impracticability, because this defense does not apply when the nonperformance results from the inability of the promisor instead of the nature of the act to be performed.

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a plaintiff seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used by plaintiff in opposing a motion for summary judgment.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised to support a plaintiff's opposition to a motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the supporting and opposing papers showing that, at the least, there is a triable issue of fact whether the events alleged to have prevented defendant's performance are sufficient to give rise to a defense that the performance was impossible or impracticable.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

In an appropriate case, these memoranda may be combined with alternate or additional memoranda that resist a defense of impossibility of performance, set out in §§ 50.240, 50.241, 50.243, and 50.244 [see § 50.230[2][c], regarding definition of "impossibility"].

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum opposing a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.232 may be submitted in opposition to contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Burden of Proving Impossibility

In Hensler v. Los Angeles (1954) 124 Cal. App. 2d 71, 268 P.2d 12 , the plaintiff contracted to construct runways and taxiways at an airportoperated by Los Angeles. Part of the work required removal of a road that traversed the area over which the plaintiff would be installing runways and taxiways. Both parties knew that completion of the contract would require that traffic over the road be discontinued and diverted to a new road being built by a different contractor. The contract provided for construction in two stages. The first stage of the work included all work except removal of the road and construction in the area occupied by the road. The second stage involved completion of the remaining work. The plaintiff began work on the project and continued until the city issued an order deleting certain items of work to be performed under the contract. These items related to the removal of the road and construction in the area traversed by the road. The city ordered these items deleted on discovering that it would be unable to divert traffic from the road and make the job site available to the plaintiff because of the refusal by the state highway department to grant consent for connection of the new road to existing highways. The plaintiff sued for damages for breach of contract based, in part, on the city's deletion of this work from the contract. The trial court rendered judgment for the plaintiff. On appeal, the city contended that it should not be held liable for canceling a portion of the work because completion of the work had become impossible due to the state highway department's failure to permit diversion of traffic from the road.

The court of appeal affirmed. In every construction contract, there is a covenant, implied in law when necessary, that the owner will furnish the selected site of operations to the contractor in order to enable him to adequately carry on the construction and complete the work (124 Cal. App. 2d 71, 82-83) . The burden of proving the defense of impossibility is on the party asserting it. In this case, the city had failed to carry this burden. The record merely showed that the city could not obtain permission to divert traffic from the road in time to enable the plaintiff to proceed with the contract, although it was able to get consent and reroute the traffic at a later time. The city failed to show that it could not, by greater diligence or better planning, have arranged for the diversion to be accomplished on the date required. In order to be an excuse for nonperformance of a contract, the impossibility of performance must attach to the nature of the thing to be done and not to the inability of the obligor to do it. One who binds himself to a contract that cannot be performed without the consent or cooperation of a third person is not relieved of liability because of his inability to obtain the required consent or cooperation (124 Cal. App. 2d 71, 83) .

[b] Inability of Obligor Does Not Constitute Impossibility

Hensler v. Los Angeles (1954) 124 Cal. App. 2d 71, 268 P.2d 12 , is discussed in [a], above.

In El Rio Oils v. Pacific Coast Asphalt Co. (1949) 95 Cal. App. 2d 186, 213 P.2d 1 , the defendant agreed to buy and the plaintiff agreed to sellall of the oil produced by the plaintiff from certain property leased by the plaintiff, to the extent that the oil could be used by the defendant in the production of asphalt and other products. Thereafter, the defendant made a contract with the intervener to sell all of the asphalt produced from the oil located on the premises leased by the plaintiff. The intervener agreed to buy all of that asphalt. The plaintiff later refused to deliver to the defendant any oil produced from its wells. Thereafter, the plaintiff, a shareholder of the defendant, filed a complaint seeking dissolution of the corporation on the ground of internal dissension. The defendant filed a cross complaint against the plaintiff seeking specific performance of its contract with the defendant and damages for breach of contract. The intervener filed a complaint in intervention seeking damages against the defendant for breach of its contract with him. The trial court rendered judgment for the defendant against the plaintiff and for the intervener against the defendant. On the defendant's appeal from the portion of the judgment awarding the intervener damages against the defendant, the defendant contended that performance of its contract with the intervener was rendered impossible because of the plaintiff's failure to deliver the oil to the defendant.

The court of appeal affirmed. Impossibility of performance must result from the nature of the thing to be done and not from the inability of the obligor to do it. If performance is not inherently impossible, and there is an unconditional promise to perform, nonperformance is a breach when the obligor becomes unable to perform, even though through causes beyond his control, since he might have provided against them in his contract (95 Cal. App. 2d 186, 197) . In this case, the impossibility of performance by the defendant consisted not in the nature of the thing to be done but in the defendant's inability to perform the contract. The defendant could have protected itself against damages resulting from the facts in this case had it provided in its contract that it should not be liable in the event the plaintiff failed to deliver oil to it. Not having done so, the defendant was liable for breach of its unconditional contract with intervener (95 Cal. App. 2d 186, 198) .

[c] Failure to Obtain Consent of Third Party

Hensler v. Los Angeles (1954) 124 Cal. App. 2d 71, 268 P.2d 12 , is discussed in [a], above.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
7. Impossibility of Performance

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.243

§ 50.243 Increased Expense or Difficulty Does Not Make Performance Impossible or Impracticable Unless Extreme or Unreasonable

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PERFORMANCE OF THE CONTRACT IS NOT IMPOSSIBLE OR IMPRACTICABLE BECAUSE THE MERE FACT THAT PERFORMANCE IS MORE DIFFICULT OR EXPENSIVE THAN THE DEFENDANT ORIGINALLY CONTEMPLATED DOES NOT EXCUSE NONPERFORMANCE WHEN THE INCREASED DIFFICULTY OR EXPENSE IS NOT EXTREME AND UNREASONABLE.

A. Burden of Proving Impossibility. [See § 50.242[1], Paragraph A.]

B. Increased Expense or Difficulty Does Not Necessarily Excuse Performance as Impossible or Impracticable. Mere increase in expense does not excuse performance unless extreme and unreasonable difficulty, expense, injury, or loss is involved (Butler v. Nepple (1960) 54 Cal. 2d 589, 599, 6 Cal. Rptr. 767, 354 P.2d 239). Although performance may be excused on the ground of impossibility when it is so difficult and expensive that it may be described as impracticable, the defense of impracticability may not be interposed unless the facts that make performance harder or more costly than the parties contemplated are of the gravest importance (Kennedy v. Reece (1964) 225 Cal. App. 2d 717, 724-725, 37 Cal. Rptr. 708).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that, in an action for contract damages, a defendant's nonperformance is not be excused on the ground of impossibility or impracticability merely because it is more difficult or expensive than the party contemplated at the time the contract was made, unless the increased difficulty or expense is extreme and unreasonable.

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a plaintiff seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used by plaintiff in opposing a motion for summary judgment.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised to support a plaintiff's opposition to a motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the supporting and opposing papers showing that, at the least, there is a triable issue of fact whether the events alleged to have prevented defendant's performance are sufficient to give rise to a defense that the performance was impracticable.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

In an appropriate case, these memoranda may be combined with alternate or additional memoranda that resist a defense of impossibility of performance, set out in §§ 50.240 -50.242 and 50.244 [see § 50.230[2][c], regarding definition of "impossibility"].

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum opposing a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.232 may be submitted in opposition to contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Increased Expense or Difficulty Does Not Necessarily Excuse Performance as Impossible or Impracticable

Butler v. Nepple (1960) 54 Cal. 2d 589, 6 Cal. Rptr. 767, 354 P.2d 239 , involved an assignment of an oil and gas lease from the plaintiff to the defendant. Under the assignment agreement, the defendant agreed that if he did not either begin drilling operations within a certain period or reassign the lease to the plaintiff, he would pay a certain amount per monthto the plaintiff as rent until he either began drilling operations or reassigned the lease to the plaintiff. The defendant failed to begin drilling operations by the specified date and eventually reassigned the lease to the plaintiff. The plaintiff sued to recover rent due under the contract. The defendant alleged, as a defense, that he was unable to comply with the drilling schedule because a steel strike prevented him from obtaining a sufficient quantity of well casing, and performance was excused under a force majeure clause in the lease. The evidence showed that some casing was available, although the defendant characterized the available casing as grossly overpriced. The trial court rendered judgment for the plaintiff.

The Supreme Court affirmed. Mere increase in expense does not excuse nonperformance unless extreme and unreasonable difficulty, expense, injury, or loss is involved. In this case, the defendant gave the trial court no factual evidence on which to base a finding that the increase in price was extreme and unreasonable, other than his own characterization of the increased prices of the casing. The trial court properly determined that the defendant had not carried the burden of proving impossibility of performance (54 Cal. 2d 589, 599) .

In Kennedy v. Reece (1964) 225 Cal. App. 2d 717, 37 Cal. Rptr. 708 , the plaintiff contracted to drill a water well to a certain depth and case it. The plaintiff abandoned work after drilling two shallower holes, claiming that he had struck hard rock. The plaintiff did not insert any casing in either hole. Thereafter, the plaintiff sued to recover compensation for the portion of the work completed. The defendants answered and counterclaimed, alleging that the contract required the plaintiff to drill a hole of a certain depth and to case it, which the plaintiff had failed to do, for a fixed price. The counterclaim sought damages for the plaintiff's breach of the contract. The trial court rendered judgment for the defendants on both the plaintiff's claim and the counterclaim. On appeal, the plaintiff contended that he was relieved from the duty of completing his contract because of impossibility resulting when he struck hard rock during the drilling.

The court of appeal affirmed. Although enforcement of a contract may be denied on the ground of impossibility when performance is so difficult and expensive that it is impracticable, this does not mean that any facts making performance more difficult or expensive than the parties anticipated would discharge a duty that has been created by the contract (225 Cal. App. 2d 717, 724) . Facts that make performance harder or more costly than the parties contemplated when the agreement was made do not constitute a ground for the defense of impracticability unless the facts are of the gravest importance. The difference is one of degree rather than kind (225 Cal. App. 2d 717, 724-725) . In this case, neither the pleadings nor the facts as found by the trial court warranted the application of the doctrine of impossibility or impracticability (225 Cal. App. 2d 717, 726-727) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
7. Impossibility of Performance

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.244

§ 50.244 Death of Obligor Does Not Terminate Personal Service Contract That Others Can Perform

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PERFORMANCE WAS NOT IMPOSSIBLE DUE TO DEATH OF THE PERSON WHO WAS TO PERFORM BECAUSE THE _____ [SERVICE TO BE PERFORMED WAS OF SUCH A CHARACTER THAT IT COULD HAVE BEEN PERFORMED AS WELL BY OTHERS or CONTRACT, BY ITS TERMS, SHOWS THAT THE PARTIES CONTEMPLATED PERFORMANCE BY PERSONS OTHER THAN THE DECEDENT].

A. Burden of Proving Impossibility. [See § 50.242[1], Paragraph A.]

B. Personal Service Contract Is Not Terminated by Death of Contracting Party When Others Can Perform. The rule that an executory contract of a strictly personal nature is terminated by the death of the party by whom the personal service is to be performed is not applicable when the service is of such a character that it may as well be performed by another, or when the contract, by its terms, shows that performance by others was contemplated (Howard v. Adams (1940) 16 Cal. 2d 253, 258, 105 P.2d 971).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that, in an action for contract damages, the death of the person who was to perform services required by the contract does not terminate the contract if others are able to perform the service or if the contract, by its terms, indicates that the parties contemplated performance by persons other than the decedent.

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a plaintiff seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used by plaintiff in opposing a motion for summary judgment.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised to support aplaintiff's opposition to a motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the supporting and opposing papers showing that there is a triable issue of fact on the issue whether another person could have performed the services that defendant claims could not be performed due to the death of an indispensable person.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

In an appropriate case, these memoranda may be combined with alternate or additional memoranda that resist a defense of impossibility of performance, set out in §§ 50.240 -50.243 [see § 50.230[2][c], regarding definition of "impossibility"].

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum opposing a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.233 may be submitted in opposition to contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Personal Service Contract Is Not Terminated by Death of Contracting Party When Others Can Perform

Howard v. Adams (1940) 16 Cal. 2d 253, 105 P.2d 971 , was an action to recover damages for breach of an oral contract for support and maintenance. The plaintiff was the defendant's niece, but the relationship between the parties resembled that of mother and daughter. When the niece informed the defendant of her intention to divorce her husband, the defendant, seeking to avoid a family scandal, suggested that the niece go to Nevada to obtain a divorce. When the niece responded that she could not get alimony if she obtained a divorce in Nevada, the defendant orallypromised that if the niece went to Nevada to obtain the divorce, the defendant would support the niece for the rest of her life and support and educate the niece's children. The niece acted immediately on the defendant's proposal, and the defendant supported the niece and her children until, following a quarrel between the niece and the defendant's husband, the niece and her children were ousted from the defendant's house. The defendant died just before the close of trial. The trial court correctly instructed the jury that the action was one that survived, and the defendant's death just before submission of the case did not affect the issues to be decided in any way. Judgment was rendered for the niece.

The Supreme Court affirmed. An executory contract of a strictly personal nature terminates on the death of the party required to perform the personal service, but this rule is not applicable when the service is of such a character that it may as well be performed by another or when the contract, by its terms, shows that performance by others was contemplated (16 Cal. 2d 253, 258) . In this case, no strictly personal service was required of the defendant, nor was any intent manifested that performance should depend on her continued existence. The defendant's promise to support the niece for life and to educate and care for the children until they became self-supporting did not involve the rendition of any personal service; the allowance of a fixed sum of money would have constituted a full and practical compliance with all that the defendant agreed to do (16 Cal. 2d 253, 258) .

86 of 168 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
7. Impossibility of Performance

5-50 California Points & Authorities §§ 50.245-50.249

[Reserved]

§§ 50.245[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
8. Frustration of Purpose of Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.250

§ 50.250 Recovery Is Precluded by Frustration-of-Purpose Doctrine

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE PURPOSE OF THE PARTIES IN ENTERING INTO THE CONTRACT HAS BEEN FRUSTRATED BY AN UNANTICIPATED SUPERVENING EVENT THAT HAS SUBSTANTIALLY DESTROYED THE VALUE OF THE _____ [adverse party, e.g., PLAINTIFF'S] PERFORMANCE TO THE _____ [contending party, e.g., DEFENDANT].

Performance Is Excused When Purpose of Contract Is Frustrated. A party is excused from performing his or her duty under a contract, even though performance remains possible, if the fundamental reason of both parties for entering into the contract has been frustrated by an unanticipated supervening circumstance that substantially destroys the value of performance by the party standing on the contract (see Cutter Laboratories, Inc. v. Twining (1963) 221 Cal. App. 2d 302, 314-315, 34 Cal. Rptr. 317 ; Federal Leasing Consultants, Inc. v. Mitchell Lipsett Co. (1978) 85 Cal. App. 3d Supp. 44, 47 , 150 Cal. Rptr. 82).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that, in an action for contract damages, the parties' purpose in entering into the contract was frustrated by an unanticipated supervening event that destroyed the value of performance for defendant.

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a defendant seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used by defendant in supporting a motion for summary judgment.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised to support adefendant's motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the supporting and opposing papers such that undisputed facts show that the value of defendant's performance was destroyed by an unanticipated supervening event.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum supporting a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.260 et seq. may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Performance Is Excused When Purpose of Contract Is Frustrated

In Cutter Laboratories, Inc. v. Twining (1963) 221 Cal. App. 2d 302, 34 Cal. Rptr. 317 , a vice president of a corporation made an arrangement to avoid estate tax (under then-prevailing law) by having the corporation agree to buy back some of his stock at a set price after his death. The stock was placed in escrow for this purpose. The stock eventually became worth much more than the fixed buy-back price. Nevertheless, over many years the vice president repeatedly ignored or rejected numerous opportunities to change or cancel the buy-back agreement. The vice president ultimately transferred all of his property to his son in trust, and the son, as trustee, then attempted to rescind the buy-back agreement. The corporation sued for a declaration of its rights and obligations under the contract. The trial court declared that the agreement was binding. On appeal, the son contended that the doctrine of frustration of purpose was applicable because (1) the estate tax laws had been changed so that the proceeds of the saleon the defendant's death were now subject to tax, and (2) the corporation's stock was now publicly traded and had increased greatly in value.

The court of appeal affirmed. The doctrine of frustration applies when performance remains possible, but the fundamental reason of both parties for entering into the contract has been frustrated by an unanticipated supervening circumstance, thus destroying substantially the value of performance by the party standing on the contract (221 Cal. App. 2d 302, 314-315) . The doctrine did not apply to the facts of this case because the vice president's basic purpose in entering into the contract was found by the trial court to be the protection of his wife in the event of his death, by the creation of an investment of fixed cash value. The basic purpose of both parties was to protect the wife, and that purpose was not frustrated (221 Cal. App. 2d 302, 315) .

In Federal Leasing Consultants, Inc. v. Mitchell Lipsett Co. (1978) 85 Cal. App. 3d Supp. 44 , 150 Cal. Rptr. 82 , the plaintiff and the defendant made a written lease for an electronic burglar alarm system that operated on certain radio frequencies and was intended to provide security for the defendant's place of business. Under the lease, title to the equipment remained in the plaintiff, and the defendant was obligated to pay monthly rent and to return the equipment in good condition to the plaintiff at the end of the lease. Some time after the lease was executed, a U.S. district court issued an injunction requiring that this equipment and all other equipment similar to it be rendered inoperable because it interfered with secret government radio frequencies. At the time the contract was executed, neither party was aware of this problem. The defendant later became aware of the problem and immediately took steps to rescind the lease. The plaintiff then sued to recover the remaining lease payments. The trial court ruled that the doctrine of commercial frustration was applicable and rendered judgment for the defendant.

The appellate department of the superior court affirmed. The doctrine of commercial frustration operates when a supervening event, which is not reasonably foreseeable, totally or nearly totally destroys the value of counterperformance in a contract or lease. There was no dispute that the risk of the frustrating event in this case was not reasonably foreseeable (85 Cal. App. 3d Supp. 44, 47) . The purpose of the lease agreement was not merely to finance the defendant's purchase of the alarm system from a third party. The fundamental purpose of the lease contract was clearly to give the defendant a functioning burglar alarm system. There was no reason, in the absence of an express agreement to the contrary, to assume that the plaintiff had agreed to acquire ownership of and lease to the defendant a burglar alarm system that could not be used or that the defendant had agreed to pay rent for the nonuse of such a system (85 Cal. App. 3d Supp. 44, 49) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Performance Is Excused When Purpose of Contract Is Frustrated

In Johnson v. Atkins (1942) 53 Cal. App. 2d 430, 127 P.2d 1027 , the appellants made a contract to buy copra from the respondents for shipment and resale to a buyer in a foreign country. After a portion of the copra was shipped to the foreign country and paid for by the appellants, the appellants learned that no more copra could be shipped there because permission for entry had either been denied or canceled by the authorities of the foreign country. The appellants paid the respondents for certain incidental expenses incurred in handling the remainder of the copra and then requested that the respondents make other disposition of the remainder. The respondents refused to do so and submitted the controversy to arbitration, pursuant to a provision in the contract. The arbitrators made an award to the respondents. The appellants protested the submission of the dispute to arbitration and then contested the arbitration proceedings in superior court. The trial court rendered judgment confirming the arbitration award. On appeal, the appellants contended that submission of the contract to arbitration was improper because the arbitration clause of the contract fell when the object of the contract was frustrated, and the trial court had erred in refusing to admit evidence of frustration of purpose in the proceedings to contest the arbitration award. The court of appeal agreed and reversed the judgment. When the assumed possibility of a desired object or effect to be attained by either party to a contract forms the basis on which both parties enter into it, and this object or effect is or surely will be frustrated, a promisor who is without fault in causing the frustration, and who is harmed, is discharged from the duty of performing the promise unless a contrary intention appears (53 Cal. App. 2d 430, 433-434) . In this case, if the facts pleaded by the appellants were true, the contract was terminated on the ground of frustration of purpose, and no arbitration was permissible (53 Cal. App 2d 430, 435) .

88 of 168 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
8. Frustration of Purpose of Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities §§ 50.251-50.259

[Reserved]

§§ 50.251[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
8. Frustration of Purpose of Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.260

§ 50.260 Risk of Frustrating Event Was Reasonably Foreseeable

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief].

THE PURPOSE OF THE PARTIES IN ENTERING INTO THE CONTRACT WAS NOT FRUSTRATED BECAUSE THE RISK OF THE FRUSTRATING EVENT WAS REASONABLY FORESEEABLE.

Defense of Frustration Is Not Available When Risk of Frustrating Event Was Reasonably Foreseeable. A promisor seeking to be excused from performance on the ground that the purpose of the contract has been frustrated must prove that the risk of the frustrating event was not reasonably foreseeable (Gold v. Salem Lutheran Home Ass'n (1959) 53 Cal. 2d 289, 291, 1 Cal. Rptr. 343, 347 P.2d 687 ; Lloyd v. Murphy (1944) 25 Cal. 2d 48, 54, 153 P.2d 47).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that, in an action for contract damages, a defendant is not excused from performance on the ground of the purpose of the contract being frustrated when the frustrating event was one that was reasonably foreseeable.

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a plaintiff seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used by plaintiff in opposing a motion for summary judgment.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised to oppose a defendant's motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the supporting and opposing papers showing that a triable issue of fact exists on the issue whether the unanticipated supervening event was reasonably foreseeable.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

In an appropriate case, these memoranda may be combined with alternate or additional memoranda refuting the defense that the purpose of the contract was frustrated, set out in §§ 50.261 -50.263.

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. Forexample, if used in a memorandum opposing a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.250 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defense of Frustration Is Not Available When Risk of Frustrating Event Was Reasonably Foreseeable

In Gold v. Salem Lutheran Home Ass'n (1959) 53 Cal. 2d 289, 1 Cal. Rptr. 343, 347 P.2d 687 , the plaintiffs' decedent made a contract with the defendant, a nonprofit corporation that operated a home for elderly persons, by which the defendant agreed to care for the decedent for the rest of his life in return for a lump-sum payment, the amount of which was determined by reference to life expectancy tables. The decedent, who was 84 years old at the time the contract was executed, died two days after the contract was executed. The plaintiffs sued to recover the lump-sum payment. The trial court rendered judgment for the defendant. On appeal, the plaintiffs contended that the doctrine of frustration of purpose was applicable to the case.

The Supreme Court affirmed. Frustration of purpose is no defense if the frustrating event was reasonably foreseeable, and the burden of proving that the risk of the frustrating event was not reasonably foreseeable rests with the party seeking to excuse nonperformance of a contractual obligation (53 Cal. 2d 289, 291) . The fact that death may at any unexpected time overcome a man of the decedent's age is, by common observation, readily classified as reasonably foreseeable. In this case, each party to the contract had clearly assumed the risk of variation of the life span from that predicted by the mortality tables, and the doctrine of frustration was not applicable (53 Cal. 2d 289, 291-292) .

In Lloyd v. Murphy (1944) 25 Cal. 2d 48, 153 P.2d 47 , the plaintiffs leased certain premises to the defendant for a five-year term for the sole purpose of conducting the business of displaying, selling, servicing, and repairing new automobiles, and for no other purpose without the plaintiff's written consent. Subsequent to the execution of the lease, the federalgovernment enacted wartime restrictions on the sale of new automobiles. Although the plaintiffs offered to waive the restrictions on use of the leased premises and to reduce the rent, the defendant chose to vacate the premises. After attempting unsuccessfully to persuade the defendant to perform his obligations under the lease, the plaintiffs rented the premises to other tenants for the purpose of mitigating damages and sued for recovery of unpaid rent. The trial court rendered judgment for the plaintiffs. On appeal, the defendant contended that the purpose for which the premises were leased was frustrated by the restrictions placed on the sale of new automobiles by the federal government, terminating his duties under the lease.

The Supreme Court affirmed. Under the doctrine of frustration, the courts have required a promisor seeking to be excused from performance to prove that the risk of the frustrating event was not reasonably foreseeable, and the value of counterperformance is totally or nearly totally destroyed; for frustration is no defense if it was foreseeable or controllable by the promisor, or if counterperformance remains valuable (25 Cal. 2d 48, 54) . At the time the lease in this case was executed, federal law authorizing the President to allocate materials and mobilize industry for national defense had been in effect for more than a year, and the automotive industry was in the process of conversion to supply the needs of the nation's growing mechanized army and to meet lend-lease commitments. These facts were commonly known, and it could not be said that the risk of war and its consequences necessitating restriction of the production and sale of automobiles was so remote a contingency that its risk could not be foreseen by the defendant, who was an experienced automobile dealer. The defendant had failed to prove that the possibility of war and its consequences on the production and sale of new automobiles was an unanticipated circumstance wholly outside the contemplation of the parties (25 Cal. 2d 48, 55-56) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
8. Frustration of Purpose of Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.261

§ 50.261 Parties Assumed Risk of Frustrating Event

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE PURPOSE OF THE PARTIES IN ENTERING INTO THE CONTRACT WAS NOT FRUSTRATED BECAUSE THE PARTIES CONTRACTED WITH REFERENCE TO THE FRUSTRATING EVENT, AND THE _____ [adverse party, e.g., DEFENDANT] ASSUMED THE RISKS ARISING FROM IT.

Defense of Frustration Is Not Applicable When Parties Assumed Risk. Parties to a contract may not invoke the doctrine offrustration to escape their obligations if they have contracted with reference to the frustrating event or have contemplated the risks arising from it (Glenn R. Sewell Sheet Metal, Inc. v. Loverde (1969) 70 Cal. 2d 666, 676, 75 Cal. Rptr. 889, 451 P.2d 721).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support the contention that, in an action for contract damages, the frustration-of-purpose defense is not available to defendant because the parties contracted with reference to the frustrating event, and the defendant assumed the risks arising from it.

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a plaintiff seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used by plaintiff in opposing a motion for summary judgment.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised to oppose a defendant's motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the supporting and opposing papers showing that, under undisputed facts, the defendant assumed the risk of the frustrating event.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

In an appropriate case, these memoranda may be combined with alternate or additional memoranda refuting the defense that the purpose of the contract was frustrated, set out in §§ 50.260 50.262, and 50.263.

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum opposing a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publicationin drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.250 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defense of Frustration Is Not Applicable When Parties Assumed Risk

In Glenn R. Sewell Sheet Metal, Inc. v. Loverde (1969) 70 Cal. 2d 666, 75 Cal. Rptr. 889, 451 P.2d 721 , the plaintiff subleased certain real property from the defendants for the purpose of operating a trailer park. The plaintiff agreed to comply with all federal, state, county, city, and district laws, ordinances, rules, and regulations. He also agreed that he had examined the premises and knew of their condition, the defendants had made no representation as to their condition, and the defendants were relieved of all obligations as to the repair or maintenance of the improvements. After successfully operating the premises as a trailer park for some time, the plaintiff had difficulties with the septic system. The plaintiff unsuccessfully attempted to alleviate the resulting pooling of effluent on the grounds. He was then ordered by the county health department to either connect the trailer park sewage system to nearby public sewer lines or terminate use of the premises as a trailer park. After determining that connection to the public sewer system would be too expensive, the plaintiff elected to terminate his operation of the trailer park and ordered the occupants to leave. Thereafter, he abandoned the premises 11 months before the end of the sublease and paid no rent for that period. The plaintiff sued for a declaratory judgment that the sublease was unenforceable and to recover a deposit paid to the defendants. The trial court rendered judgment for the defendants.

The Supreme Court affirmed. The plaintiff had assumed the obligation of complying with sewage disposal laws, and this included the obligation either to connect the sewer system to a public sewer or to cease using the premises as a trailer park (70 Cal. 2d 666, 671-676) . Accordingly, he assumed the risk that complying with sewage disposal laws might interfere with his use of the premises or render it less profitable. Having voluntarily assumed this duty and its attendant risk, the plaintiff could not avail himself of the common law doctrine of frustration because it is settled that if parties have contracted with reference to the frustrating event or have contemplated the risks arising from it, they may not invoke the doctrine of frustration to escape their obligations (70 Cal. 2d 666, 676) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
8. Frustration of Purpose of Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.262

§ 50.262 Value of Counterperformance Was Not Totally Destroyed

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE PURPOSE OF THE PARTIES IN ENTERING INTO THE CONTRACT WAS NOT FRUSTRATED IN THAT THE VALUE OF THE _____ [contending party, e.g., PLAINTIFF'S] COUNTERPERFORMANCE TO THE _____ [adverse party, e.g., DEFENDANT] WAS NOT TOTALLY OR NEARLY TOTALLY DESTROYED BY THE FRUSTRATING EVENT.

Defense of Frustration Is Not Available Unless Value of Counterperformance Was Totally Destroyed. A promisor seeking to be excused from performance under a contract on the ground of frustration of purpose must prove that the value of the counterperformance was totally or nearly totally destroyed by the frustrating event (Lloyd v. Murphy (1944) 25 Cal. 2d 48, 54, 153 P.2d 47).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support the contention that, in an action for contract damages, the frustration-of-purpose defense is not available to defendant because the frustrating event did not totally or in effect destroy the value of defendant's performance.

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a plaintiff seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used by plaintiff in opposing a motion for summary judgment.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised to oppose a defendant's motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the supporting and opposing papers showing that there is a triable issue on whether the value of defendant's performance was destroyed sufficiently to give rise to a frustration-of-purpose defense.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

In an appropriate case, these memoranda may be combined with alternate or additional memoranda refuting the defense that the purpose of the contract was frustrated, set out in §§ 50.260 50.261, and 50.263.

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum opposing a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.250 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defense of Frustration Is Not Available Unless Value of Counterperformance Was Totally Destroyed

The facts and procedural background of Lloyd v. Murphy (1944) 25 Cal. 2d 48, 153 P.2d 47 , are discussed in § 50.260[3][a]. The Supreme Court, in holding the doctrine of frustration inapplicable to the facts of the case, noted that a promisor seeking to be excused from performance must prove that the risk of the frustrating event was not reasonably foreseeable, and the value of counterperformance was totally or nearly totally destroyed (25 Cal. 2d 48, 54) . In this case, the defendant had not sustained the burden of proving that the value of the lease had been destroyed. The sale of automobiles had not been made impossible or illegal but was merely restricted, and the defendant could still use the premises for the purpose for which they were leased. Moreover, the defendant had testified that he continued to sell new automobiles exclusively at another location in the same county. If governmental regulation does not entirely prohibit the business to be carried on in the leased premises but only limits or restricts it, making it less profitable or more difficult to continue, the lease is not terminated, and the lessee is not excused from further performance (25 Cal. 2d 48, 56) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
8. Frustration of Purpose of Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.263

§ 50.263 Purpose Allegedly Frustrated Was Not Contemplated by Both Parties

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE PURPOSE ALLEGEDLY FRUSTRATED WAS NOT ONE CONTEMPLATED BY THE PARTIES AT THE TIME THE CONTRACT WAS MADE.

Defense of Frustration Is Not Applicable Unless Frustrated Purpose Was Contemplated by Both Parties. The defense of frustration of purpose is not applicable unless the frustrated purpose was contemplated by both parties to the contract (see Brown v. Oshiro (1945) 68 Cal. App. 2d 393, 397, 156 P.2d 976).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support the contention that, in an action for contract damages, the frustration-of-purpose defense is not available to defendant because the purpose allegedly frustrated was not one contemplated by both parties at the time the contract was made.

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a plaintiff seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used by plaintiff in opposing a motion for summary judgment.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised to oppose a defendant's motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the supporting and opposing papers showing that a triable issue as to whether the purpose allegedly frustrated was not one contemplated by both parties at the time the contract was made.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

In an appropriate case, these memoranda may be combined with alternate or additional memoranda refuting the defense that the purpose of the contract was frustrated, set out in §§ 50.260 -50.262.

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum opposing a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.250 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defense of Frustration Is Not Applicable Unless Frustrated Purpose Was Contemplated by Both Parties

In Brown v. Oshiro (1945) 68 Cal. App. 2d 393, 156 P.2d 976 , the plaintiffs leased a portion of a building to the defendant for use as a hotel. The defendant operated a hotel business on the premises until he was evacuated from the city, pursuant to a federal governmental wartime order that excluded all persons of Japanese ancestry from the area. The defendant then sublet the premises to a third person. The plaintiff sued for declaratory relief seeking a determination that the lease was still binding on the defendant. The trial court found that at the time of the execution of the lease, the parties intended that the defendant should personally conduct a hotel business catering primarily to persons of Japanese ancestry, and this purpose had been frustrated or prevented by the government order removing all persons of Japanese ancestry from the area. The trial court determined that the lease was not binding.

The court of appeal reversed. Assuming that the evidence was sufficient to support a finding that the defendant's purpose was to operate a Japanese hotel, this alone was not sufficient to support a judgment. For the defense of frustration to be applicable, it is not sufficient that the purpose or desired object of one of the parties to the contract has been frustrated;the purpose or desired object of both parties must have been frustrated. In other words, the applicability of the doctrine of frustration depends on the total or nearly total destruction of the purpose for which, in the contemplation of both parties, the contract was made. There was no evidentiary support for a finding that the plaintiffs' purpose in executing the lease was other than that stated, that is, for conducting a hotel and renting office space. This purpose was not frustrated (68 Cal. App. 2d 393, 397-398) .

93 of 168 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
8. Frustration of Purpose of Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities §§ 50.264-50.269

[Reserved]

§§ 50.264[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
9. Failure of Consideration

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.270

§ 50.270 Recovery Is Precluded by Failure of Consideration

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE CONTRACT IS NOT ENFORCEABLE BECAUSE THERE WAS A FAILURE OF CONSIDERATION IN THAT _____ [specify, e.g., THE PLAINTIFF REFUSED TO PERFORM THE OBLIGATIONS TO BE PERFORMED ON THE PLAINTIFF'S PART UNLESS _____ (specify unwarranted additional condition), WHICH WAS A CONDITION NOT CREATED BY THE CONTRACT AND AN UNWARRANTED ADDITIONAL CONDITION].

A. Failure of Consideration Is Ground for Rescission or Defense in Action on Contract. Failure by a promisor to execute a material promise going to the essence of the contract, performance of which has been exchanged for performance by the promisee, excuses nonperformance by the promisee and constitutes a ground for rescission by the promisee or a defense to an action on the contract by the promisor (see Civ. Code § 1689(b)(2), (4); Bliss v. California Coop. Producers (1947) 30 Cal. 2d 240, 248-249, 181 P.2d 369 ; Wyler v. Feuer (1978) 85 Cal. App. 3d 392, 403-404, 149 Cal. Rptr. 626 ; Taliaferro v. Davis (1963) 216 Cal. App. 2d 398, 410-412, 31 Cal. Rptr. 164).

B. Failure of Consideration Is Available as Defense Despite Failure to Rescind. A party does not waive the right to rely on failure of consideration as a defense to an action on the contract by having failed to rescind the contract on the same ground (Benson v. Andrews (1955) 138 Cal. App. 2d 123, 136, 292 P.2d 39 ; see Bliss v. California Coop. Producers (1947) 30 Cal. 2d 240, 250, 181 P.2d 369).

C. Failure of Consideration Must Be Based on Events Subsequent to Making of Contract. The defense of failure of consideration must be based on facts occurring subsequent to the making of the contract (Taliaferro v. Davis (1963) 216 Cal. App. 2d 398, 411, 31 Cal. Rptr. 164 ; Benson v. Andrews (1955) 138 Cal. App. 2d 123, 132, 292 P.2d 39).

[Optional] D. Annexation of Unwarranted Condition to Offer of Performance Constitutes Failure of Consideration. If one who isbound to perform a contract annexes an unwarranted condition to his or her offer of performance, there is, in effect, a refusal to perform and a failure of consideration (Loop Bldg. Co. v. De Coo (1929) 97 Cal. App. 354, 364, 275 P. 881 ; see Steelduct Co. v. Henger-Seltzer Co. (1945) 26 Cal. 2d 634, 646, 160 P.2d 804).

[Optional] E. Inability to Deliver Thing Sold Constitutes Failure of Consideration. A vendor's inability to deliver the thing contracted for constitutes a failure of consideration and prevents the vendor from enforcing the contract (see Post v. Palpar, Inc. (1960) 184 Cal. App. 2d 676, 680, 7 Cal. Rptr. 823 ; McDorman v. Moody (1942) 50 Cal. App. 2d 136, 141, 122 P.2d 639).

[Optional] F. Failure to Make Progress Payments in Building Contract Is Failure of Consideration. In the case of a building contract, the failure by the owner to make progress payments as required by the contract may constitute a failure of consideration justifying rescission by the contractor (American-Hawaiian Eng'r & Constr. Co. v. Butler (1913) 165 Cal. 497, 516, 133 P. 280).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that there was a failure of consideration, which justified rescission [Civ. Code § 1689(b)(2), (4)].

Civ. Code § 1689(b)(2) provides that a party to a contract may rescind the contract if the consideration for the obligation of the rescinding party fails, in whole or in part, through the fault of the party as to whom he or she rescinds.

Civ. Code § 1689(b)(4) provides that a party to a contract may rescind the contract if the consideration for the obligation of the rescinding party, before it is rendered to him or her, fails in a material respect from any cause.

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a party seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used by plaintiff to support a motion for summary judgment.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised to support a plaintiff's motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would includean analysis of the supporting and opposing papers such that undisputed facts show that there was a failure of consideration justifying the remedy of rescission.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum supporting a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.280 may be submitted in opposition to contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Failure of Consideration Is Ground for Rescission or Defense in Action on Contract

Bliss v. California Coop. Producers (1947) 30 Cal. 2d 240, 181 P.2d 369 , was an action on promissory notes that had been taken by a corporation in consideration of the corporation's assistance in the marketing and processing of the defendants' products and in further consideration of the corporation's payment of premiums on life insurance policies for the defendants. The notes were pledged to the plaintiffs by the corporation. The central issue was whether the plaintiffs, who accepted the notes after the defendants failed to make the first instalment payment, were holders in due course. The defendants asserted failure of consideration for the notes, a good defense to an action on a negotiable instrument by one who is not a holder in due course, in that the corporation failed to perform under the marketing contract, failed to pay the life insurance premiums, and subsequently became insolvent (30 Cal. 2d 240, 248) . The trial court rendered judgment for the plaintiffs.

The Supreme Court reversed. Failure of consideration is the failure to execute a promise, the performance of which has been exchanged for performance by the other party. Among other situations, the failure may arise from the wilful breach of the promise. In the case of a bilateral contract, failure of consideration is a defense to an action for a breach of the contract inasmuch as it is contemplated that the performance of the unilateral promises shall be in exchange for each other, the performances being considered as equivalent in value (30 Cal. 2d 240, 248) . In all executory contracts, the several obligations of the parties constitute to each, reciprocally, the consideration of the contract; a failure to perform constitutes a failure of consideration, either partial or total, within the meaning of Civ. Code § 1689 (30 Cal. 2d 240, 248-249) . The insolvency of a promisor in a bilateral continuing contract is tantamount to a breach of the contract. Although the general rule is that an assignee of a chose in action is subject to all equities and defenses existing at or before the notice of the assignment, when there is a failure of consideration under a bilateral contract consisting of a breach by the assignor, the failure is a good defense to an action by the assignee, whether it occurred before or after the notice of assignment (30 Cal. 2d 240, 250) .

Wyler v. Feuer (1978) 85 Cal. App. 3d 392, 149 Cal. Rptr. 626 , was an action by a limited partner seeking rescission of the limited partnership agreement on the grounds of fraud and failure of consideration. The plaintiff contended that the defendants' inability to obtain $850,000 in financing for the production of a motion picture that was the subject of the agreement constituted a failure of consideration. The jury had been instructed that a party may rescind a contract if, through the fault of the other party, the consideration that the rescinding party was to receive fails in whole or in a material part; or if the consideration fails in a material respect from any cause before it is rendered to the rescinding party (85 Cal. App. 3d 392, 403) . Judgment was rendered on a verdict for the defendants. On appeal, the plaintiff asserted the insufficiency of the evidence and error in the jury instruction concerning failure of consideration (85 Cal. App. 3d 392, 395, 399) . The plaintiff contended that this instruction was erroneous because Civ. Code § 1689(b)(2) does not require a "material" failure of consideration.

The court of appeal affirmed. Case law has uniformly held that a failure of consideration must be "material," or go to the "essence" of the contract, before rescission is appropriate (85 Cal. App. 3d 392, 403-404) . The 1961 amendment of Civ. Code § 1689 (which coincided with the repeal of Civ. Code § 3406 on equitable rescission) did not abrogate the need for materiality; Civ. Code § 1689 was reenacted in substantially the same words as the original enactment in 1872.

When a statute construed by the courts in a particular fashion is reenacted in substantially the same terms, the legislature is presumed to have been familiar with that construction and to have adopted it. Since Civ. Code § 1689(b)(2), (4) substantially reenactedprior law, the judicial construction requiring materiality was, and has been, properly carried forward. Therefore, the jury instruction regarding failure of consideration was correct (85 Cal. App. 3d 392, 404) .

Taliaferro v. Davis (1963) 216 Cal. App. 2d 398, 31 Cal. Rptr. 164 , was an interpleader action by tenants of divorced spouses. After their landlords' divorce and in view of proceedings in consequence of the divorce, the tenants sought a determination of whether they should pay rent to the husband or to the wife. A property settlement agreement in the divorce action stipulated that the leased property would remain under the management and control of the husband. Nevertheless, the wife obtained a writ of execution on the property pursuant to a judgment the husband for arrearages in support payments. In the tenants' interpleader action, the husband cross complained that the wife's execution and sale of the property constituted a failure of consideration for the original property settlement agreement (216 Cal. App. 2d 398, 404-405) . The trial court rendered judgment for the wife on the husband's cross complaint (216 Cal. App. 2d 398, 408) .

The court of appeal affirmed. Failure of consideration is the failure to execute a promise, the performance of which has been exchanged for performance by the other party. The failure may arise from the willful breach of the promise (216 Cal. App. 2d 398, 410-411) . Failure of consideration does not vitiate the contract from the beginning; until rescinded or terminated, a contract once in effect remains in effect. This is because failure of consideration is based not on facts existing at the time the mutual promises bargained for in a bilateral contract are made, but on some fact or contingency that occurs between the time of the making of the contract and the action, which results in the material failure of performance by one party (216 Cal. App. 2d 398, 411) . Failure of consideration is a ground for rescission of a bilateral contract as well as a defense to an action for breach of the contract (216 Cal. App. 2d 398, 411) . When the consideration fails in whole or in part through the fault of a party whose duty it is to render it, the other party may invoke the failure as a basis for rescinding or terminating the contract, provided the failure or refusal to perform constitutes a breach in such an essential particular as to justify rescission or termination. The right of the injured party to claim release from obligations, and thus to elect to terminate the contract, depends on the gravity of the breach (216 Cal. App. 2d 398, 412) . The husband in this case contended that there was a failure of consideration for the property settlement agreement because the wife had enforced the husband's obligation under the agreement to the extent provided for by law; however, that contention was absurd (216 Cal. App. 2d 398, 412) .

[b] Failure of Consideration Is Available as Defense Despite Failure to Rescind

The facts and procedural background of Benson v. Andrews (1955) 138 Cal. App. 2d 123, 292 P.2d 39 , are discussed in [c], below. The court of appeal held that the defendants did not waive their right to rely on failure of consideration as a defense to the action on the note by failing to announce a formal rescission. When there is a failure of consideration, a party may elect whether to rescind the transaction or to do nothing and then assert failure of consideration as a defense in an action by the other party for breach of the contract (138 Cal. App. 2d 123, 136) .

The facts and procedural background of Bliss v. California Coop. Producers (1947) 30 Cal. 2d 240, 181 P.2d 369 , are discussed in [a], above. The Supreme Court recognized that a failure of consideration that constitutes a ground for rescission under Civ. Code § 1689 can also be used as a defense to an action for breach of contract (30 Cal. 2d 240, 248-249) .

[c] Failure of Consideration Must Be Based on Events Subsequent to Making of Contract

The facts and procedural background of Taliaferro v. Davis (1963) 216 Cal. App. 2d 398, 31 Cal. Rptr. 164 , are discussed in [a], above. The court of appeal stated that failure of consideration must be based not on facts existing at the time the mutual promises bargained for in a bilateral contract are made, but on some fact or contingency that occurs between the time of the making of the contract and the action, which results in the material failure of performance by one party (216 Cal. App. 2d 398, 411) .

Benson v. Andrews (1955) 138 Cal. App. 2d 123, 292 P.2d 39 , was an action by an assignee to enforce the defendants' promissory note secured by a deed of trust to a contractor. Before assigning the instruments to the plaintiff, the contractor had committed several material breaches of his contract with the defendants for the construction of a house. The defendants raised the affirmative defense of failure of consideration. The trial court rendered judgment for the plaintiff (138 Cal. App. 2d 123, 125) .

The court of appeal reversed. It was inescapable from any aspect of the case that there was a total failure of consideration for the note and deed of trust, and the trial court's determination that there was no failure of consideration was completely contrary to the facts and unsupported by the evidence. Since the plaintiff stood in the same position as the contractor, being a mere assignee of the note and not a holder in due course, he was subject to the same defense of failure of consideration as the contractor (138 Cal. App. 2d 123, 135) . The defense of failure of consideration, in its precise sense, rests not on facts existing at the time the mutual promises bargained for in a bilateral contract are made, but on some fact or contingency that occurs between the time of the making of the contract and theaction, which results in the material failure of performance by one party (138 Cal. App. 2d 123, 132) .

[d] Annexation of Unwarranted Condition to Offer of Performance Constitutes Failure of Consideration

Loop Bldg. Co. v. De Coo (1929) 97 Cal. App. 354, 275 P. 881 , was an action to rescind a contract for the purchase of $5,000 worth of stock and to recover $1,080 already paid toward its purchase. The plaintiff claimed that the defendant refused to complete the sale as agreed unless the plaintiff bought a block of $10,000 worth of stock. The trial court granted a motion for nonsuit (97 Cal. App. 354, 356, 361) .

The court of appeal reversed. A refusal or failure of a party fully to perform his or her part of a contract constitutes a partial failure of consideration and gives the other party a right to rescind under Civ. Code § 1689. If one who is bound to perform a contract annexes an unwarranted condition to his or her offer of performance, there is, in effect, a refusal to perform (97 Cal. App. 354, 364) .

In Steelduct Co. v. Henger-Seltzer Co. (1945) 26 Cal. 2d 634, 160 P.2d 804 , the defendant agreed to act as the plaintiff's exclusive sales agent in California. Before expiration of the contract term, the defendant repudiated the contract. In subsequent discussions with the plaintiff, the defendant agreed to reinstatement of the contract if the plaintiff would agree to a further condition not contained in the original contract. The plaintiff refused to assent to this new condition and sued for damages for breach of contract. Judgment was rendered for the defendant. On appeal, the plaintiff contended that the trial court committed error in its jury instructions (26 Cal. 2d 634, 639, 646) .

The Supreme Court reversed. Annexing an unwarranted condition to an offer of performance is a refusal to perform (26 Cal. 2d 634, 646) .

[e] Inability to Deliver Thing Sold Constitutes Failure of Consideration

In Post v. Palpar, Inc. (1960) 184 Cal. App. 2d 676, 7 Cal. Rptr. 823 , purchasers sued to rescind a contract for the purchase of land. The contract provided that if the vendor could not perfect a marketable title within 90 days, the purchasers would have the option of receiving back their deposit. The agreement further stated that time was of the essence (184 Cal. App. 2d 676, 677) . Despite several extensions of time granted by the purchasers, the vendor failed to perfect title. Judgment was rendered for the purchasers.

The court of appeal affirmed. The failure to tender marketable title at the time the contract matured was a material breach of the contract that entitled the purchasers to rescind, to refuse to make further payments,and to recover any amount paid under the contract (184 Cal. App. 2d 676, 680) .

In McDorman v. Moody (1942) 50 Cal. App. 2d 136, 122 P.2d 639 , the plaintiff's assignor had contracted with the defendant to transfer 1,500 shares of stock on the defendant's completion of agreed monthly payments. The contract provided that if the corporation whose stock was the subject of the contract should be adjudicated a bankrupt, then the defendant would no longer be liable for further payments. The contract further provided that if the defendant defaulted on any payments, the entire balance would become due (50 Cal. App. 2d 136, 137-138) . On hearing that the corporation had filed a petition for bankruptcy, the defendant stopped payment on a check he had just sent to the plaintiff's assignor. The contract was then assigned to the plaintiff who sued for the balance due under the contract. Judgment was rendered for the defendant (50 Cal. App. 2d 136, 138-139) .

The court of appeal affirmed. Competent proof established that the plaintiff was not able or ready to deliver, and would never have been able to deliver, any part of the shares sold under the contract. It is a general rule that one who cannot perform his or her part of a contract is not entitled to performance by the other party. Even if the seller had offered to deliver the stock, the offer would have been of no effect in view of the inability of the seller to perform according to the offer (50 Cal. App. 2d 136, 140-141) . A contract for the purchase of property cannot be enforced by the seller when the consideration for the purchase price wholly fails in a material respect. When the promise of the seller to deliver corporate stock has failed without fault on the part of the buyer, the consideration for the buyer's promise fails in a material respect. An agreement to sell implies the ability to deliver the thing sold. When the seller becomes unable to execute his or her part of the contract, his or her right to enforce the payment of the purchase price fails (50 Cal. App. 2d 136, 141) . Because of the inability of the plaintiff's assignor to deliver what he sold, the buyer was released from making further payments after discovery of the failure (50 Cal. App. 2d 136, 142) .

[f] Failure to Make Progress Payments in Building Contract Is Failure of Consideration

In American-Hawaiian Eng'r & Constr. Co. v. Butler (1913) 165 Cal. 497, 133 P. 280 , a contractor ceased working on a building and sued for rescission and damages following the owner's refusal to make a monthly payment as required under a construction contract. The owner hired another contractor to finish the building and cross complained for damages, claiming that the contractor had violated the terms of the contract. The trial court rendered judgment for the contractor (165 Cal. 497, 502-503) .

The Supreme Court affirmed. Due demand having been made by the contractor for the monthly payment, the refusal of the owner to pay was unjustifiable and a breach of the contract. As to the contractor, the consideration for the contract had to that extent failed. The refusal to make the monthly payment under these circumstances was sufficient cause for rescission by the contractor and for a suit in quantum meruit for the reasonable value of the work and material furnished to date (165 Cal. 497, 516) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Failure to Make Progress Payments in Building Contract Is Failure of Consideration

In Integrated, Inc. v. Alec Fergusson Elec. Contractor (1967) 250 Cal. App. 2d 287, 58 Cal. Rptr. 503 , an electrical subcontractor gave notice of rescission and refused to complete performance of a contract as a result of a dispute over progress payments. The contractor sued the subcontractor for breach of contract for the damages incurred by having to hire someone else to complete the work. The subcontractor filed his own action for breach of contract. The actions were consolidated and judgment was rendered for damages to the general contractor and no relief on the subcontractor's separate action (250 Cal. App. 2d 287, 289-290) . The court of appeal reversed because the trial court had erred in interpreting the contract. Because of this error, the trial court never decided whether the contractor should have made payments "immediately" on receipt of payment from the principal, as required by the contract (250 Cal. App. 2d 287, 295) . A retrial was necessary to determine this factual issue. In building-contract cases, a failure to make progress payments is not such a breach as will authorize a contractor to abandon the work and sue for damages, but it does constitute such a breach as will justify rescission and recovery of the reasonable value of labor and materials furnished (250 Cal. App. 2d 287, 296) . A contract requiring "immediate" payment is usually construed to require payment within a reasonable time having due regard to the nature and circumstances of the case. Ordinarily, a party may unilaterally rescind a contract only when there has been a total or material breach by the other party. If the other party has violated a covenant of minor importance, not going to the root of the matter, and one that can be readily compensated in damages, the party injured cannot rescind, but must perform his part of the contract and seek compensation in damages. A slight deviation either in time or amount of progress payments should not justify rescission or abandonment (250 Cal. App.2d 287, 295-297) . Although the court did not specifically use the phrase "failure of consideration," it is clear that the court was applying this concept from theprinciples it applied and from its citations to cases and secondary authority dealing with failure of consideration.

95 of 168 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
9. Failure of Consideration

5-50 California Points & Authorities §§ 50.271-50.279

[Reserved]

§§ 50.271[Reserved]

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
9. Failure of Consideration

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.280

§ 50.280 Recovery Is Not Precluded When Failure of Consideration Is Not Shown

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THERE IS NO FAILURE OF CONSIDERATION WHEN _____ [specify, e.g., THERE HAS BEEN SUBSTANTIAL PERFORMANCE, AND THE ONLY DEVIATIONS OR OMISSIONS FROM STRICT PERFORMANCE ARE TRIVIAL].

A. Burden of Proof of Failure of Consideration Is on Defendant. The burden of proving failure of consideration as a matter of defense is on the party who asserts it (Boswell v. Reid (1962) 199 Cal. App. 2d 705, 712-713, 19 Cal. Rptr. 29).

[Optional] B. Deviations From the Contract in Trivial Matters Do Not Constitute Failure of Consideration. When there has been a substantial performance of the contract, trivial omissions or deviations do not constitute a failure of consideration sufficient to warrant a rescission of the contract (Giberson v. Fink (1915) 28 Cal. App. 25, 34, 151 P. 371).

[Optional] C. No Failure of Consideration When Consideration Proves Worthless. When a party gets the promised consideration, the fact that it proves worthless or of little value because of an unexpected occurrence does not constitute a failure of consideration (Konecko v. Konecko (1958) 164 Cal. App. 2d 249, 253, 330 P.2d 393).

[Optional] D. Partial Failure of Consideration Is Not Complete Defense. When there is a partial failure of consideration, the part that failed is simply a nullity and imparts no taint to the remaining consideration. If there is a substantial consideration left, it will be sufficient to sustain the contract (Del Riccio v. Photochart (1954) 124 Cal. App. 2d 301, 312, 268 P.2d 814).

[Optional] E. Delay in Performance Ordinarily Is Not Failure of Consideration. Mere delay in performing a contract is not asubstantial breach constituting failure of consideration unless time has been expressly made of the essence in the contract (Johnson v. Alexander (1976) 63 Cal. App. 3d 806, 813, 134 Cal. Rptr. 101) or unless the delay in performance warrants the conclusion that the other side does not intend to perform (Hofland v. Gustafson (1955) 132 Cal. App. 2d Supp. 907, 909-910 , 282 P.2d 1039).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that there was no failure of consideration [see Civ. Code § 1689(b)(2), (4)], and that there should be no rescission granted in a suit to rescind a contract.

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a party seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used by a defendant to oppose a motion for summary judgment.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised to oppose a plaintiff's motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the supporting and opposing papers showing that there is a triable issue of fact whether there was a failure of consideration justifying the remedy of rescission.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

An unexpected occurrence that substantially destroys the value of the other party's performance may, in some instances, give rise to the defense of frustration of purpose [see Federal Leasing Consultants, Inc. v. Mitchell Lipsett Co. (1978) 85 Cal. App. 3d Supp. 44, 47 , 150 Cal. Rptr. 82] . For memoranda supporting the contention that a party's nonperformance is excused because of frustration of purpose, see § 50.250.

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum opposing a motion for summaryjudgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.270 may be submitted in opposition to contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Burden of Proof of Failure of Consideration Is on Defendant

In Boswell v. Reid (1962) 199 Cal. App. 2d 705, 19 Cal. Rptr. 29 , the plaintiff sued on an unsecured promissory note taken from the owner of land on which a housing project was to be built. The note was given in exchange for an agreement to obtain construction financing and interim and take-out loans. The defendant raised the defense of failure of consideration but did not prove it. The trial court rendered judgment for the plaintiff (199 Cal. App. 2d 705, 706, 713) .

The court of appeal affirmed. Failure of consideration is the failure to execute a promise, the performance of which has been exchanged for performance by the other party. Every negotiable instrument is deemed prima facie to have been issued for a valuable consideration. The burden of proving failure of consideration as a matter of defense is on the party who asserts it (199 Cal. App. 2d 705, 713) .

[b] Deviations From the Contract in Trivial Matters Do Not Constitute Failure of Consideration

In Giberson v. Fink (1915) 28 Cal. App. 25, 151 P. 371 , the plaintiff paid the defendant $1,000 toward the purchase of a house that the defendant contracted to construct for the plaintiff. The plaintiff sued for rescission of the contract and return of her $1,000 after the defendant had allegedly deviated substantially from the agreed-on plans (28 Cal. App. 25, 27, 28) . Judgment was rendered for the defendant.

The court of appeal affirmed. The alleged deviations were not significant enough to justify the conclusion that the contract was not substantially performed. Trivial omissions occur in the execution of the terms of nearly all building contracts. When the building is constructed in substantialconformity with the plans and specifications, trivial omissions cannot be the basis for a claim of failure of consideration sufficient to justify a rescission of the contract (28 Cal. App. 25, 34) .

[c] No Failure of Consideration When Consideration Proves Worthless

In Konecko v. Konecko (1958) 164 Cal. App. 2d 249, 330 P.2d 393 , the plaintiff and his wife had made a property settlement agreement by which he gave her a large portion of the community property in lieu of support payments. The wife died intestate less than seven months later, and her children received her entire estate. The plaintiff then sued the administrator to rescind the property settlement agreement contending that there was a failure of consideration in that he would not have made the property settlement agreement if he had known that his wife would die before the divorce was final (164 Cal. App. 2d 249, 250-252) . After a demurrer to the second amended complaint was sustained, the plaintiff failed to amend.

The court of appeal affirmed. When a party gets the consideration promised, the fact that it proves worthless or of little value because of an unexpected occurrence, such as the wife's death in this case, is not a failure of consideration warranting rescission (164 Cal. App. 2d 249, 253) .

[d] Partial Failure of Consideration Is Not Complete Defense

Del Riccio v. Photochart (1954) 124 Cal. App. 2d 301, 268 P.2d 814 , was an action to recover royalties under an agreement to license patents covering several photographic devices and methods. A federal court had invalidated a few of the many patents that were the subject of the agreement. The defendant claimed that there was a failure of consideration for the agreement because the invalidated patents were the substance of the agreement. The trial court rendered judgment for the plaintiff (124 Cal. App. 2d 301, 304, 307-308) .

The court of appeal affirmed. The invalidity of a few of the patents constituted only a partial failure of the entire consideration for the agreement. The general rule as to partial failure of consideration is that when there is a failure of a part of a lawful consideration, the part that failed is simply a nullity and imparts no taint to the residue. In such a case, since no particular amount of consideration is required, the promise may be enforced. In other words, if there is a substantial consideration left, it will be sufficient to sustain the contract. In this case, since the heart of the agreement did not fail, the defense of failure of consideration could not prevail (124 Cal. App. 2d 301, 312) .

[e] Delay in Performance Ordinarily Is Not Failure of Consideration

In Johnson v. Alexander (1976) 63 Cal. App. 3d 806, 134 Cal. Rptr. 101 , plaintiff agreed to dismiss an existing lawsuit in exchange for the defendants' payment of $30,000. Subsequently, because of the defendants' failure to pay the $30,000 in its entirety, the plaintiff sued and obtained a prejudgment writ of attachment. The defendants appealed from the trial court's denial of their motion to dissolve the writ of attachment (63 Cal. App. 3d 806, 809-810) . On appeal, the defendants contended that the writ should have been dissolved because there was a failure of consideration for the original agreement on which the writ was based. The alleged failure of consideration consisted of the plaintiff's failure to dismiss the previous lawsuit until a few months after the signing of the settlement agreement (63 Cal. App. 3d 806, 812-813) .

The court of appeal affirmed. Delay in performance is a material failure only if time is of the essence, that is, if prompt performance is, by the express language of the contract or by its very nature, a vital matter. When no time is specified for the doing of an act, other than the payment of money, a demand for performance is necessary to put the promisor in default. In this case, a delay of a few months in dismissing the first lawsuit did not amount to a failure of consideration (63 Cal. App. 3d 806, 813) .

In Hofland v. Gustafson (1955) 132 Cal. App. 2d Supp. 907 , 282 P.2d 1039 , the plaintiff attempted to rescind a written release on the ground of failure of consideration because the payment for the release had not been received eight days after the signing of the release. The trial court set aside the release and rendered judgment in the underlying negligence action for an amount in excess of the release (132 Cal. App. 2d Supp. 907, 908) .

The appellate department of the superior court reversed. The fact that the consideration was not paid until a few days after the release was executed did not constitute such a material failure of consideration as to entitle the plaintiff to rescind. Mere delay in performing a contract is not considered a substantial breach, justifying rescission, unless the delay warrants the conclusion that the other side does not intend to perform. When time is not of the essence of the contract, payment within a reasonable time is sufficient. The delay in the receipt of the check by the plaintiff was not such a material failure of consideration that it gave her a right to rescind the release (132 Cal. App. 2d Supp. 907, 909-910) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No Failure of Consideration When Consideration Proves Worthless

The court of appeal in Mosher v. Mayacamas Corp. (1989) 215 Cal. App. 3d 1, 263 Cal. Rptr. 373 , affirmed a judgment for the vendor, who suedfor breach of contract, and against the purchaser, who cross complained for rescission. The case involved the sale of Lake Tahoe vacation properties in 1982. Beginning in 1985, property values at Lake Tahoe declined drastically. It was assumed for purposes of the case that the principal cause of the decline was the impending tax legislation, later enacted as the Tax Reform Act of 1986, which substantially eliminated tax benefits for secondary residences. The purchaser stopped making payments under the contract and sought rescission on the grounds of mistake of fact and failure of consideration. The court of appeal said that as a matter of law, the purchaser's predicament resulted from an error in judgment rather than a mistake of fact or failure of consideration. The purchaser chose to enter into the contract knowing that the tax benefits were a major aspect of the value of the properties and presumably knowing that the availability of those benefits could be affected by future legislation, yet it made no provision with respect to tax matters in the contract. Thus, the purchaser alone had to bear this risk and was not entitled to avoid, rescind, or reform the contract (215 Cal. App. 3d 1, 6) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
B. Defenses to Breach of Contract Action
9. Failure of Consideration

5-50 California Points & Authorities §§ 50.281-50.299

[Reserved]

§§ 50.281[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
C. Venue for Breach of Contract Action

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.300

§ 50.300 Change of Venue Is Proper--Complaint Alleges Improper Venue or Does Not Allege Venue

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE PROPER COURT FOR THE TRIAL OF AN ACTION IS IN THE COUNTY OF THE DEFENDANT'S RESIDENCE WHEN THE COMPLAINT DOES NOT ALLEGE SUFFICIENT FACTS TO SHOW EITHER THAT VENUE IS PROPER ELSEWHERE OR SPECIFICALLY THAT THE ACTION WAS BROUGHT IN THE COUNTY WHERE THE CONTRACT WAS MADE OR THE COUNTY OF PERFORMANCE.

A. Statutory Authority for Change of Venue. The court may, on motion, change the place of trial when the court designated in the complaint is not the proper court (Code Civ. Proc. § 397(a)).

B. Transfer Is Mandatory on Proper Showing. The court must order the action transferred to the proper court when it appears at the hearing of the motion for change of venue that the action was not commenced in the proper court (Code Civ. Proc. § 396b).

C. Proper Court for Contract Action Not Based on Consumer Contract. Except as provided in Code of Civil Procedure Section 395(b) (concerning venue in actions arising from certain consumer transactions), when a defendant has contracted to perform an obligation in a particular county, either the county where the obligation is to be performed or the contract in fact was made or the county where any defendant resides at the commencement of the action is a proper county for the trial of an action founded on the obligation (Code Civ. Proc. § 395(a)).

D. Contract Must State Place of Performance Before Action May Be Brought in County of Performance. The county where an obligation was incurred is deemed to be the county where it was to be performed unless there is a special contract in writing to the contrary. Before an action may be brought in the county of performance, the contract must specifically state in writing the place of performance. If the contract so states, then the provision as to place of performance is both express and special (see Code Civ. Proc.§ 395(a); Wathen v. Superior Court (1963) 212 Cal. App.

2d 125, 129, 27 Cal. Rptr. 840).

E. Place Contract Was Made. The place of making of a contract is the place the last act necessary for its validity was done, usually the act constituting the acceptance (Braunstein v. Superior Court (1964) 225 Cal. App. 2d 691, 696, 37 Cal. Rptr. 666).

F. Defendant's Right to Have Action Tried in County of Residence. The general rule is that a defendant is entitled to have actions tried in the county of his or her residence. The plaintiff's right to have the action tried elsewhere is an exceptional right that must find its justification in the terms of some statute. It is the plaintiff's duty to bring himself or herself within some exception; otherwise, the defendant's right is to have the case tried in the county of his or her residence (Wheeler v. Moschetti (1961) 188 Cal. App. 2d 827, 829-830, 10 Cal. Rptr. 722 ; Goossen v. Clifton (1946) 75 Cal. App. 2d 44, 47, 170 P.2d 104).

[Optional] G. Requirement That Venue Be Proper in All Causes of Action. When a defendant is entitled to a change of venue as to one contractual cause of action, a motion for change of venue should be granted even though there are other causes of action as to which he or she is not entitled to a transfer (Sure-Grip Skate Wheel Co., Inc. v. Bergin (1962) 208 Cal. App. 2d 562, 565, 25 Cal. Rptr. 413).

[Optional] H. Contract's Statement of Place of Execution Is Not Conclusive. The unessential designation of the time and place of the execution of a contract in the contract is not conclusive and may be refuted by extrinsic evidence (Taylor v. Lundblade (1941) 43 Cal. App. 2d 638, 640, 111 P.2d 344).

[Optional] I. Inquiry and Notification Relative to Credit Are Not Part of Contract. Inquiry and notification relative to credit do not constitute part of a contract within the meaning of Code of Civil Procedure Section 395(a). Consequently the county where the credit was granted is not a proper county for a contract action. (Garrett v. Superior Court (1967) 248 Cal. App. 2d 263, 267, 56 Cal. Rptr. 418).

[Optional] J. Contractual Venue Selection Clause Requiring Improper Venue Is Contrary to Public Policy and Void. A contractual venue selection clause designating a venue improper under statute is void and unenforceable as contrary to public policy. Likewise, a contractual waiver of a statutory exception to venue selection rules is void (General Acceptance Corp. v. Robinson (1929) 207 Cal. 285, 289, 277 P. 1039 ; Arntz Builders v. Superior Court (2004) 122 Cal. App. 4th 1195, 1204, 1206-1207, 19 Cal. Rptr. 3d 346 ; Alexander v. Superior Court (2003) 114 Cal. App. 4th 723, 732, 8 Cal. Rptr. 3d 111).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the general contention that a complaint for contract damages does not allege facts showing that it was brought in the proper court, and that is therefore proper for the court to grant a motion to change the venue to the county of defendant's residence.

This form normally will be used to support a defendant's motion for change of venue, and should be combined when appropriate with memoranda relating to that proceeding. For memoranda relating to change of venue proceedings, see Ch. 238, Venue .

With appropriate modifications these memoranda may be submitted in support of a motion for change of venue to the county where the contract was made or the county of performance.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, in supporting a motion for change of venue, the memorandum would include an analysis of the complaint or supporting declarations showing that it is proper to change the current venue to the county of defendant's residence.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion and forms for motions relating to venue, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 571, Venue (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

In an appropriate case, these memoranda may be combined with alternate or additional memoranda relating to change of venue set out in § 50.301.

For memoranda supporting a motion for change of venue by a corporate the defendant, see Ch. 52, Corporations . There are additional bases of venue in an action against a corporation, and the definition of place of performance is different when an action on a contract involves a corporate the defendant.

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.310 et seq. may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Contract Must State Place of Performance Before Action May Be Brought in County of Performance

In Wathen v. Superior Court (1963) 212 Cal. App. 2d 125, 27 Cal. Rptr. 840 , the plaintiffs sued on a contract in Santa Clara County. One of the defendants moved to have the action changed to Fresno County on the grounds that all of the defendants resided there, the contract was made there, and since there was no special contract in writing to the contrary, the contract was to be performed there. The trial court denied the motion for change of venue based on the plaintiffs' affidavit that a letter of agreement was sent to the defendants under the plaintiffs' letterhead stating its address as Palo Alto, California, and the original letter agreement clearly indicated that delivery to the plaintiffs was intended to be at the plaintiffs' Santa Clara County office. The defendants' affidavit denied that the agreement was under such a letterhead.

The court of appeal denied the defendants' petition for writ of mandate compelling the court to change the place of trial. Before an action may be brought under Code Civ. Proc. § 395 in the county where the obligation forming the basis of the suit is performable, the contract must specifically state the place of performance of the obligation. If the contract so states, then the provision as to place of performance is both express and special. This requirement may be met by an agreement to pay money in a particular county, to deliver goods at a particular place, or to perform an obligation in a particular city. The question in this case was whether the contract sufficiently designated Santa Clara County as the place of performance of the defendants' obligation when the contract stated that delivery was to be to the plaintiffs, who had various places of business. It would be technical and unrealistic to require that the address of delivery be restated in the agreement when it was stated in the letterhead, in order to satisfy Code Civ. Proc. § 395. Taking the instrument as a whole, it was apparent that the plaintiffs' office in Santa Clara County was intended as the place of delivery, and the place of performance was thus specifically designated in the instrument (212 Cal. App. 2d 125, 129) .

[b] Place Contract Was Made

Braunstein v. Superior Court (1964) 225 Cal. App. 2d 691, 37 Cal. Rptr. 666 , was an action for goods sold and delivered and services performed based on a written contract. The contract consisted of a letter addressed to the defendant at her home in Los Angeles. The letter confirmed the understanding and agreement between the parties, setting forth the terms, and asking the defendant specifically to approve and accept the terms if they were in accordance with the defendant's understanding of the agreement. The defendant signed the agreement in Los Angeles and forwarded it to the plaintiff in Monterey. The defendant moved to transfer the action to Los Angeles County, the county of her residence. The defendant contended that the contract was made and executed in Los Angeles, while the plaintiff argued that it was not because all negotiations and preparation of the contract occurred in Ventura County and the actual offer and acceptance took place in Monterey County. The plaintiff filed a countermotion to retain venue in Monterey County for the convenience of witnesses. The trial court denied the defendant's motion for change of venue and granted the plaintiff's motion.

The court of appeal granted the defendant's petition for writ of mandate to compel the transfer of the case and ordered that the action be transferred to Los Angeles County. The place of making a contract is the place the last act necessary for its validity was done, usually the act constituting the acceptance. On the face of the agreement in this case, it appeared that it was prepared by the plaintiff and then sent to the defendant at the Los Angeles address appearing on the document for acceptance and signing. This fact, plus the plaintiff's failure to deny that it was executed in Los Angeles as claimed by the defendant, compelled the conclusion that the contract was made in Los Angeles (225 Cal. App. 2d 691, 696) .

[c] Defendant's Right to Have Action Tried in County of Residence

Wheeler v. Moschetti (1961) 188 Cal. App. 2d 827, 10 Cal. Rptr. 722 , was an action on an oral contract. The complaint was in the form of a common count alleging that the defendants were indebted to the plaintiff in a certain sum and had promised to pay that sum in Yuba County. The trial court denied the defendants' motion for a change of venue from Yuba County to San Francisco, where the defendants resided. The defendants' supporting affidavit stated that the parties had made two written contracts in Yuba County by which the defendants had sold to the plaintiff certain fixtures to be delivered in Yuba County. However, when the time for delivery arrived, the plaintiff no longer wanted the equipment, and three weeks after the sale, the plaintiff orally agreed in San Francisco that the defendants should sell the undelivered fixtures for the plaintiff's account on a commission basis. Those fixtures were then sold in Oakland.

The court of appeal reversed. Generally a defendant is entitled to have actions tried in the county of his or her residence. The plaintiff's right to have the action tried elsewhere is the exceptional right and must find its justification in the terms of some statute. The proper place of trial in this case was San Francisco. Even if the verified complaint, alleging that the defendants promised to pay the sum in Yuba County (the only evidence opposing the defendants' affidavit), could be said to raise a conflict with the affidavit, the conflict, if resolved in the plaintiff's favor, would still not defeat the defendants' right to a change of venue since there was no allegation of any written promise to perform the oral agreement in Yuba County. In the absence of such a special contract in writing to the contrary, the county where the obligation is incurred is the venue of an action arising out of it. In this case, the allegation in the appellants' affidavit that the oral contract was made in San Francisco was uncontested (188 Cal. App. 2d 827, 829-830) .

Goossen v. Clifton (1946) 75 Cal. App. 2d 44, 170 P.2d 104 , was an action on a contract in which the complaint failed to contain an allegation that the cause of action arose, or the contract was made or was to have been performed, in the county where suit was filed. The defendants sought a change of venue to the county where they were residents. The trial court denied the motion.

The court of appeal reversed. Generally a defendant is entitled to have an action tried in the county of his or her residence, and the plaintiff's right to have an action tried elsewhere is the exceptional right that must find its justification in the terms of some statute. It is the plaintiff's burden to come within some exception if possible; otherwise, the defendant's right is to have the case tried in the county of the defendant's residence. The right to have the action tried in the county where the defendants, or some of them, reside is remedial and should be liberally construed to the end that the defendants may not be unjustly deprived of that right (75 Cal. App. 2d 44, 47) .

[d] Requirement That Venue Be Proper in All Causes of Action

Sure-Grip Skate Wheel Co., Inc. v. Bergin (1962) 208 Cal. App. 2d 562, 25 Cal. Rptr. 413 , was an action on the common counts for the agreed price of goods, an account stated, and an open book account. The complaint alleged three causes of action. The trial court denied the defendant's motion for change of venue to the county of his residence.

The court of appeal affirmed. If a defendant is entitled to a change of venue as to one contractual cause of action, a motion for a change of venue should be granted even if there are other causes of action as to which the defendant is not entitled to a transfer. However, there is a presumption that the county where the action is commenced is the proper county for the trial, and the burden of overcoming the presumption rested on the defendant. His declaration that he was a resident of a certain county was not sufficient to overcome that presumption (208 Cal. App. 2d 562, 565) .

[e] Contract's Statement of Place of Execution Is Not Conclusive

In Taylor v. Lundblade (1941) 43 Cal. App. 2d 638, 111 P.2d 344 , the plaintiffs sued on a contract for the sale of a tractor. The defendants moved for change of venue on the ground that the action was not brought in the county of the defendants' residence or the county where the contract was made. The defendants asserted that because the attestation clause of the contract recited where the contract was executed, that recital was conclusive, and the plaintiffs' attempt to prove that the contract was made in fact in the county where the action was brought violated the parol evidence rule. The trial court denied the motion.

The court of appeal affirmed. The legislature provided that a proper county for the trial of a contract action is the county where the contract was in fact made, not where it may have been made, where it was declared to have been made, or where the parties may have stipulated it was made. The attestation clause, particularly the recital that the contract was executed in a certain city, could not be held a material part of the agreement. The parol evidence rule does not extend to nonessential facts in contract. Thus the unessential designation of the time and place of the execution could be contradicted by extrinsic evidence. The place of execution designated in a contract is presumed to be where it was made, but this may be rebutted by other evidence (43 Cal. App. 2d 638, 640) .

[f] Inquiry and Notification Relative to Credit Are Not Part of Contract

Garrett v. Superior Court (1967) 248 Cal. App. 2d 263, 56 Cal. Rptr. 418 , was a mandate proceeding to compel the trial court to grant the defendant's motion for a change of venue of a contract action from Kings County to Orange County where he resided. None of the purchase contracts, which made up the open account sued on and were the basis of the complaint, had been made in Kings County, performance had taken place in counties other than Kings, and there had been no special contract in writing relative to the business relationship. However, the defendant preliminarily had applied to the plaintiff's head office in Kings County for a line of credit, which was granted.

The court of appeal granted the writ. The initial extension of potential credit was not part of any contract. It was simply a preliminary matter that looked to a future relationship between the parties but did not commiteither of the parties to any specific purchase. Thus, the inquiry and notification relative to credit did not constitute a part of any contract within the meaning of the venue statutes, and the plaintiff brought the action in an improper county (248 Cal. App. 2d 263, 267) .

[g] Contractual Venue Selection Clause Requiring Improper Venue Is Contrary to Public Policy and Void

In General Acceptance Corp. v. Robinson (1929) 207 Cal. 285, 277 P. 1039 the plaintiff sued in the county designated in a contractual venue selection clause. At that time, the only proper county under the statute was the county of the defendant's residence, and the defendant therefore moved to transfer venue to his home county. The trial court granted the motion, and the California Supreme Court affirmed, holding that private parties are not free to contract around considerations of general judicial convenience and expediency or proper administration of justice.

In Arntz Builders v. Superior Court (2004) 122 Cal. App. 4th 1195, 1204, 19 Cal. Rptr. 3d 346 , the defendant and a county had entered into a contract containing a waiver of defendant's statutory right under Code Civ. Proc. § 394 to transfer any action filed by the county to a neutral county. The court held that General Acceptance Corp. v. Robinson (discussed above) was still controlling law, and that "[p]ermitting a county to extract an advance waiver of the right of a private party to have disputes with the county resolved in a neutral forum would be at odds with the fundamental principle that a party may not waive the benefits of a statute enacted primarily for a public purpose" (122 Cal. App. 4th 1195, 1206) .

In Alexander v. Superior Court (2003) 114 Cal. App. 4th 723, 8 Cal. Rptr. 3d 111 , plaintiff filed suit in the county specified in the contract and opposed defendant's motion for change of venue on the basis of the contractual venue clause. The court of appeal ruled that General Acceptance Corp. v. Robinson (discussed above) remained good law and remanded for consideration of whether venue was currently proper under the statutory framework of Code Civ. Proc. § 395.

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Defendant's Right to Have Action Tried in County of Residence

In International Inv. Co. v. Chagnon (1959) 170 Cal. App. 2d 441, 339 P.2d 147 , the plaintiffs sued on a written contract and an implied contract.The trial court granted the defendant's motion for change of venue to the county of his residence. On appeal the plaintiff contended that the complaint showed on its face that the contract was executed in the county where the action was brought. However, the plaintiffs alleged the place of execution for the written contract only and failed to allege in what county the implied contract was made. The court of appeal affirmed. The general rule is that a defendant is entitled to have actions tried in the county of his or her residence. The plaintiff's right to have the action tried elsewhere is the exceptional right and must find its justification in the terms of a statute. If a plaintiff unites in one complaint two causes of action, only one of which the defendant has the right to have tried in the county of his or her residence, the defendant is entitled to have the entire cause tried in the county of his or her residence. The trial court's order was correct since the defendant was entitled to have the cause of action on the implied contract tried in the county of her residence. The fact entitling a party to try the action in a county other than the defendant's residence may be shown by affidavit when the complaint is silent on the subject (170 Cal. App. 2d 441, 443) .

Bloom v. Carpenter (1946) 74 Cal. App. 2d 790, 169 P.2d 388 , was an action on a contract brought in San Francisco. The trial court denied the defendants' motion for change of venue to the county of the defendant's residence. The court of appeal affirmed. In an action on a contract in which one individual appears to be the real party in interest, in the absence of allegations that the defendant had contracted to perform an obligation in a particular county, or that the contract was made in a certain county, the venue is in the county where the individuals resided at the time of the commencement of the action. However in this case, the complaint alleged in substance that the plaintiff consigned goods to the defendants as a carrier for a reasonable reward in San Francisco, and the goods were to be transported to Oregon. There was no averment in the defendants' affidavit to the contrary. For venue purposes, the contract was made in San Francisco, and the allegations of the complaint were sufficient to establish a basis for venue in the county where the action was brought (74 Cal. App. 2d 790, 792) .

[b] Contract's Statement of Place of Execution Is Not Conclusive

Wilson v. Hoffman (1947) 81 Cal. App. 2d 664, 184 P.2d 951 , was an action on a contract in which the defendant moved to change the place of trial from Orange County to Los Angeles County where he resided. The trial court denied the motion, and the court of appeal reversed. The contract recited that it was made at Santa Ana, California, and described the property involved as being in Los Angeles County. The complaint stated that the contract was made in Orange County where the obligation suedon was incurred and was payable. The defendant contended that the contract was made and signed in his home. The plaintiff argued that the recitation in the contract that it was made in Orange County was sufficient to retain the trial in that county. However, the legislature provided that the proper county for an action on a contract is where the contract was in fact made. Since the contract was in fact made in Los Angeles County, and the contract contained no special provision that payment was to be made elsewhere, the proper county for trial was Los Angeles County (81 Cal. App. 2d 664, 666) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
C. Venue for Breach of Contract Action

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.301

§ 50.301 Change of Venue Is Proper--No Special Contract Designates Place of Performance

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE DEFENDANT MAY HAVE THE ACTION TRANSFERRED TO THE COUNTY OF HIS/HER RESIDENCE WHEN THE ACTION IS BROUGHT IN A DIFFERENT COUNTY, BUT THERE WAS NO SPECIAL CONTRACT SPECIFYING THE COUNTY OF PERFORMANCE.

A. Statutory Authority for Motion. [See § 50.300[1], Paragraph A.]

B. Transfer Is Mandatory on Proper Showing. [See § 50.300[1], Paragraph A.]

C. Proper Court for Contract Action. [See § 50.300[1], Paragraph A.]

D. Contract Must State Place of Performance Before Action May Be Brought in County of Performance. [See § 50.300[1], Paragraph A.]

E. Defendant's Right to Have Action Tried in County of Residence. [See § 50.300[1], Paragraph A.]

F. Special Contract Defined. A special contract is one whose provisions are express and not dependent on implication (Caffrey v. Tilton (1952) 38 Cal. 2d 371, 374, 240 P.2d 273).

[Optional] G. Civil Code Section 1489 Does Not Have Effect of Special Contract. Civil Code Section 1489, which states that in the absence of an express provision to the contrary, an offer of performance may be made at the option of the debtor wherever the personto whom the offer ought to be made can be found, does not have the effect of a special contract in writing permitting the obligee of a contract to control the venue of an action by staying in the county he or she chooses as the place for the action (Caffrey v. Tilton (1952) 38 Cal. 2d 371, 373-374, 240 P.2d 273).

[Optional] H. Check Is Not Special Contract. A check is not a special contract specifying the place of performance and requiring suit to be brought in the county where the bank on which the check is drawn is located (Gulick v. Justice's Court (1929) 101 Cal. App. 619, 622, 281 P. 1031).

[Optional] I. Contract Containing Address of Insured Does Not Make Contract Performable in County of Insured's Address. An insurance contract showing the address and place of business of the insured does not raise the presumption that the place of performance was intended to be in the county of insured's residence (Yedor v. Ocean Acc. & Guar. Corp. (1948) 85 Cal. App. 2d 698, 704-705, 194 P.2d 95).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support the contention that it is proper to change the current venue of an action for contract damages from that in which it was brought to the county of defendant's residence, because although the complaint was allegedly brought in the county of performance, there is no special contract designating the county of performance and the action has not been brought in the county where the obligation was incurred.

This form will normally be used to support a defendant's motion for change of venue, and should be combined when appropriate with memoranda relating to that proceeding. For memoranda relating to change of venue proceedings, see Ch. 238, Venue .

With appropriate modifications these memoranda may be submitted in support of a motion for change of venue from the county where the action was brought to the county where the contract was made.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, in supporting a motion for change of venue, the memorandum would include an analysis of the complaint or supporting declarations showing that it is proper to change the current venue to the county of defendant's residence.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion and forms of motion relating to venue, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 571, Venue (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

In an appropriate case, these memoranda may be combined with alternate or additional memoranda relating to change of venue set out in § 50.300.

For memoranda supporting a motion for change of venue by a corporate the defendant, see Ch. 52 Corporations . There are additional bases of venue in an action against a corporation, and the definition of place of performance is different when an action on a contract involves a corporate the defendant.

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.310 et seq. may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Special Contract Defined

In Caffrey v. Tilton (1952) 38 Cal. 2d 371, 240 P.2d 273 , the plaintiff sued in San Francisco for declaration of his rights under a contract that had been made in Los Angeles County where the defendant resided. The defendant's motion for change of venue to Los Angeles County was denied by the trial court. The plaintiff contended that there was a special contract in writing sufficient to justify the denial of the requested change of venue to Los Angeles County. Although no place of performance had been specified in the letter setting forth the agreement, the plaintiff relied on Civ. Code § 1489, providing that in the absence of an express provision to the contrary, an offer of performance may be made, at the option of the debtor, wherever the person to whom the offer ought to be made can be found. The plaintiff contended that San Francisco, the place of his residence, was the place of performance by the defendant and Civ. Code § 1489 had the effect of a special contract in writing within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 395(a) (venue in contract actions).

The Supreme Court reversed. If the plaintiff's contention were to prevail, the obligee of a contract could control the venue of an action by simply sojourning in whatever county he or she chose as the place for trial of the action, since that county would be the county where he or she might be found. Although Civ. Code § 1489 is an implied provision of the parties' agreement, it is not a special contract in writing within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 395, since a special contract is one whose provisions are express and not dependent on implication (38 Cal. 2d 371, 374) .

[b] Civil Code Section 1489 Does Not Have Effect of Special Contract

Caffrey v. Tilton (1952) 38 Cal. 2d 371, 240 P.2d 273 , is discussed in [a], above.

[c] Check Is Not Special Contract

In Gulick v. Justice's Court (1929) 101 Cal. App. 619, 281 P. 1031 , the plaintiff sued on a debt. The defendant had incurred the debt in Riverside County and gave the plaintiff a check payable to the plaintiff, dated at Los Angeles and drawn on a Los Angeles bank. When the check reached the Los Angeles bank, payment had been stopped by the defendant. The defendant demurred on the ground that the court had no jurisdiction over him because he was not a resident of the county where the action was brought and there was a special contract in writing. At the time of the action, former Code Civ. Proc. § 832 required that actions in justice courts be tried, when the defendant was a nonresident of the county, in any township or city where he or she could be found or, when a person contracted to perform an obligation at a particular place and resided in another county, in the township or city in which the obligation was to be performed or in which he or she resided. The township or city in which the obligation was incurred was deemed to be the township or city in which it was to be performed unless there was a special contract in writing to the contrary. (Former Code Civ. Proc. § 832 contained the same language as Code Civ. Proc. § 395(a) with respect to special contracts.) The trial court overruled the demurrer. The superior court denied the defendant's application for a writ of prohibition.

The court of appeal affirmed. The defendant did not show that he was a resident of Los Angeles County. In using the words "special contract," the legislature must have had in mind some contract other than one ordinarily and usually used in everyday transactions of business life, otherwise the word "special" would have no significance and need not have been inserted in the statute. In using the word "special," the legislature had in mind those contracts in which there was a direct and definite promise to pay at a certain place, such as some forms of promissory notes. In this case, the check was not a special contract that of itself would requirethe suit to be brought in Los Angeles County. To hold otherwise would require merchants accepting checks from customers living in distant parts of the state, in payment for goods sold, to follow those debtors to their homes or the homes of their banks if the checks were not paid [see § 50.315[3][a]] (101 Cal. App. 619, 622) .

[d] Contract Containing Address of Insured Does Not Make Contract Performable in County of Insured's Address

Yedor v. Ocean Acc. & Guar. Corp. (1948) 85 Cal. App. 2d 698, 194 P.2d 95 , was an action to recover on a workers' compensation policy after the insurer refused to pay a judgment that one of the insureds' employees had recovered. None of the clauses of the insurance policy mentioned the county where the action was brought as the place for the insurer's performance of any obligation under the policy. The trial court denied the defendant's motion for a change of venue to the county of its residence.

The court of appeal reversed. Although the address and place of the insured's business, which was contained in the policy, was shown to be in the county where the action was brought, that alone was insufficient to raise the presumption that the place of performance was intended to be in that county. Thus, the parties had neither specially nor implicitly agreed that the contract should be performed in the county where the action was brought. Instead the obligations were to be performed in the county of the defendant's residence where the contract was made and where the obligations were incurred (85 Cal. App. 2d 698, 704-705) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Contract Must State Place of Performance Before Action May Be Brought in County of Performance

Armstrong v. Smith (1942) 49 Cal. App. 2d 528, 122 P.2d 115 , was an action commenced in Alameda County on a contract for the construction of a house. The only stipulation in the contract, which was executed in San Francisco, as to where any of its covenants were to be performed was that the plaintiff bound himself to build on a lot in Alameda County. The trial court denied the defendant's motion for change of venue to San Mateo County, the county of the defendant's residence. The court of appeal reversed. The limitation in Code Civ. Proc. § 395(a), that the county where the obligation is incurred is deemed to be the county where it is to be performed, cuts down the number of counties in which an action on a contract may be tried to two. Those two counties are the county where the defendant resides and the county where the contract is made. The legislature also provided an exception to this limitation: that if it is specially contracted in writing as to the county of performance, that county is alsoa proper county for the trial of an action. The court held that before an action may be brought under Code Civ. Proc. § 395(a) in the county where the obligation forming the basis of the suit is performable, the contract must specifically state the place of performance of the obligation. If the contract so states, then the provision as to place of performance is both express and special. Thus there does not need to be a separate contract special in its nature on the same subject matter as the original contract before Code Civ. Proc. § 395(a) would apply. All that is needed is that an express stipulation with respect to the obligation in question be embodied in the agreement giving rise to the action. The place of performance of the defendant's obligation sued on in the action was implied and not specially contracted. Consequently the county where the obligation was incurred and the county of the defendant's residence were the only proper counties for the trial of the action (49 Cal. App. 2d 528, 535-537) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
C. Venue for Breach of Contract Action

5-50 California Points & Authorities §§ 50.302-50.309

[Reserved]

§§ 50.302[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
C. Venue for Breach of Contract Action

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.310

§ 50.310 Current Venue Is Proper--Contract Was Not Made in Presence of Contracting Parties and Is Deemed Made Where Acceptance Was Given or Placed in Mail

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE PLAINTIFF BROUGHT THE ACTION IN A PROPER COUNTY SINCE, WHEN A CONTRACT IS NOT MADE IN THE PRESENCE OF THE CONTRACTING PARTIES, THE CONTRACT IS DEEMED MADE WHERE THE UNCONDITIONAL ACCEPTANCE OF THE OFFER IS MADE OR PLACED IN THE MAIL.

A. Propriety of Chosen Venue. In the absence of an affirmative showing to the contrary, the presumption is that the county where the title of the action shows that it is brought is the proper county for the commencement and trial of the action (Sea World, Inc. v. Superior Court (1970) 13 Cal. App. 3d 100, 103, 91 Cal. Rptr. 336).

B. Proper Court for Contract Action. [See § 50.300[1], Paragraph C.]

C. Contract Action Commenced in One of Several Proper Counties. In order to overcome the presumption that the county where the action is commenced is the proper county for trial, the defendant must show that he or she is not a resident of that county,and the contract was not made or to be performed in the county where the action is pending (Ward Mfg. Co. v. Miley (1955) 131 Cal. App. 2d 603, 606-607, 281 P.2d 343).

D. Acceptance by Mail. When a contract is not made in the presence of the contracting parties, the contract is generally deemed made where the unconditional acceptance of the offer is made or placed in the mail (Marchese Bros. v. A. Lyon & Sons (1954) 123 Cal. App. 2d 193, 198, 266 P.2d 556).

[Optional] E. Contract Subject to Approval Is Made Where Acceptance Is Mailed. When a contract is subject to approval and acceptance, the contract is made and becomes binding in the county where the acceptance was mailed (Di Giorgio Fruit Corp. v. Zachary (1943) 60 Cal. App. 2d 560, 562, 141 P.2d 8).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support the contention that the current venue of an action for contract damages is proper, because it was brought in the county in which acceptance was made or was placed in the mail.

This form will normally be used to oppose a defendant's motion for change of venue, and should be combined when appropriate with memoranda relating to that proceeding. For memoranda relating to change of venue proceedings, see Ch. 238, Venue .

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, in opposing a motion for change of venue, the memorandum would include an analysis of the complaint or opposing declarations showing that acceptance was made or was placed in the mail in the county in which the action was brought.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion and forms of motion relating to venue, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 571, Venue (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

In an appropriate case, these memoranda may be combined with alternate or additional memoranda opposing a change of venue set out in § 50.311 et seq.

For memoranda supporting a motion for change of venue by a corporate the defendant, see Ch. 52, Corporations . There are additional bases of venue in an action against a corporation, and the definition of place of performance is different when an action on a contract involves a corporate the defendant.

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.300 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Propriety of Chosen Venue

In Sea World, Inc. v. Superior Court (1970) 13 Cal. App. 3d 100, 91 Cal. Rptr. 336 , the defendant sought a writ of mandate compelling the superior court to vacate and set aside its order denying the defendant's motion for change of venue.

The court of appeal ordered the issuance of the writ. In the absence of an affirmative showing to the contrary, the presumption is that the county where the title of the action shows that it is brought is the proper county for the commencement and trial of the action. However, when the plaintiff fails to bring the action in any of the counties specified as proper, the defendant is entitled to a change of venue. In this case, the action had not been brought in a proper court and therefore the defendant's motion for change of venue should have been granted (13 Cal. App. 3d 100, 103) .

[b] Contract Action Commenced in One of Several Proper Counties

Ward Mfg. Co. v. Miley (1955) 131 Cal. App. 2d 603, 281 P.2d 343 , was an action on a contract. The complaint alleged first an action on account stated and second a common count for goods sold and delivered. The complaint alleged that the account was stated between the plaintiff and the defendant and a balance was found due to the plaintiff from the defendant. The defendant had agreed to pay the balance but had not done so. In the second count, the plaintiff alleged that the defendant was indebted to the plaintiff in a certain sum on an account for goods and merchandise sold and delivered by the plaintiff to the defendant, but no part had been paid. The defendant's motion for change of venue to the county of thedefendant's residence and the county where the obligation was incurred was denied by the trial court.

The court of appeal affirmed. With respect to the first cause of action, the complaint fixes prima facie the proper place for trial. The averments of a complaint are deemed to be true on a motion for change of venue, at least to the extent that they are not controverted. The first cause of action alleged that the account was stated in Los Angeles County. The burden of overthrowing the prima facie venue showing rested on the defendant. The defendant's residence in another county was not enough. He had to show that the contract was not made or to be performed in the county where the action was pending. This rule is the same as to both individuals and corporations. The defendant's affidavit was insufficient because he did not discuss the account stated but instead devoted the affidavit to the consideration for the account stated if there was one. Thus the trial court correctly denied the motion for change of venue (131 Cal. App. 2d 603, 606-607) .

[c] Acceptance by Mail

Marchese Bros. v. A. Lyon & Sons (1954) 123 Cal. App. 2d 193, 266 P.2d 556 , was an action for the breach of an express written warranty. Orders for the purchase of brandy were solicited from the plaintiffs in San Jose. The plaintiffs offered to buy a certain number of barrels on the condition that the seller make a warranty. This offer was sent to the defendants' broker in Los Angeles. The broker submitted it to the defendants who accepted it in Los Angeles. This acceptance was shown not only by what was said to the broker but by the invoices, containing the express warranty and the terms of the sale, and the other documents, all of which were executed in Los Angeles and mailed to the plaintiffs from that city. The defendants moved to transfer the action from Santa Clara County to Los Angeles County on the grounds that they resided there, and the contract was made in that county. The trial court denied the motion.

The court of appeal reversed. When a contract is not made in the presence of the parties, it is generally deemed made where the last event necessary to make it a binding agreement occurs. That, normally, is where the unconditional acceptance of the offer is made or placed in the mail. Thus the contract was made in Los Angeles, and the action should have been transferred there (123 Cal. App. 2d 193, 198) .

[d] Contract Subject to Approval Is Made Where Acceptance Is Mailed

In Di Giorgio Fruit Corp. v. Zachary (1943) 60 Cal. App. 2d 560, 141 P.2d 8 , the plaintiff sought recovery of the purchase price for some wine sold and delivered by the plaintiff's predecessor under two separate writtencontracts. One of the contracts was admittedly made in San Francisco. The other contract was negotiated by one of the salespersons of the plaintiff's predecessor in Los Angeles County. An order signed there by the salesperson and by the defendants' representative was on a printed form containing the provision that the order was subject to approval and acceptance by the office in San Francisco. Pursuant to this provision, a letter of acceptance of the order was mailed in San Francisco to the defendants. Under the express terms of the writing, it did not become a binding contract until the signing and mailing of the letter of acceptance. The trial court denied the defendants' motion for change of venue from San Francisco to Los Angeles County.

The court of appeal affirmed. Since the mailing occurred in San Francisco, the contract was made there, and that was a proper place for trial under Code Civ. Proc. § 395(a) (60 Cal. App. 2d 560, 562) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Contract Subject to Approval Is Made Where Acceptance Is Mailed

De Campos v. State Comp. Ins. Fund (1946) 75 Cal. App. 2d 13, 170 P.2d 60 , was an action on a workers' compensation insurance policy. The trial court denied the defendant's motion for change of venue from Placer County to San Francisco. The court of appeal reversed. The policy provided that it would not be binding on the insurance fund unless countersigned by a duly authorized officer or representative of the fund. The policy was countersigned in San Francisco by the authorized representative. When a contract contains a provision that it is subject to the approval and acceptance of a certain office and acceptance is mailed from that office, the contract is made at that place. Consequently the insurance policy in this case was made where it was countersigned, in San Francisco, and the plaintiff's motion for transfer of the action to San Francisco should have been granted (75 Cal. App. 2d 13, 22-23) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
C. Venue for Breach of Contract Action

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.311

§ 50.311 Current Venue Is Proper--Obligation Was Incurred Where and When Option Contract Was Made

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

IN THE CASE OF AN ACTION ON AN OPTION CONTRACT, THE OBLIGATION IS INCURRED WHERE AND WHEN THE OPTION CONTRACT IS MADE, NOT WHEN THE OPTION IS EXERCISED.

A. Propriety of Chosen Venue. [See § 50.310[1], Paragraph A.]

B. Proper Court for Contract Action. [See § 50.300[1], Paragraph C.]

C. Contract Action Commenced in One of Several Proper Counties. [See § 50.310[1], Paragraph C.]

D. Obligation Is Incurred When Option Contract Is Made. In the case of an option contract, even though the option has been exercised and suit is by the optionee, the optionor is bound and the obligation is incurred when the option contract is made. Thus a proper county for venue purposes is the county where the option contract was made (Dawson v. Goff (1954) 43 Cal. 2d 310, 318, 273 P.2d 1).

[Optional] E. Contract With Public Body Is Made When Public Body Accepts Written Bid. When a public body advertises for bids, a binding contract is formed when the public body, acting by responsible officers, accepts the written bid of a bidder. In such a case, the contract is made at the place the acceptance occurs (Elsinore Union Etc. School Dist. v. Kastorff (1954) 129 Cal. App. 2d 60, 65, 276 P.2d 112).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support the contention that the current venue of an action for contract damages is proper, because the contract contains an option which was made in the county where the action was brought.

This form will normally be used to oppose a defendant's motion for change of venue, and should be combined when appropriate with memoranda relating to that proceeding. For memoranda relating to change of venue proceedings, see Ch. 238, Venue .

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, in opposing a motion for change of venue, the memorandum would include an analysis of the complaint or opposing declarations that showing the contract contains an option which was made in the county where the action was brought.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion and forms of motion relating to venue, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 571, Venue (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

In an appropriate case, these memoranda may be combined with alternate or additional memoranda opposing a change of venue set out in § 50.310 and § 50.312 et seq.

For forms generally opposing a motion for change of venue in a contract action when the action was commenced in a proper county or the defendant's obligation was pursuant to a consumer contract, an installment contract or account, or an automobile sales contract, see Ch. 238, Venue .

For memoranda supporting a motion for change of venue by a corporate the defendant, see Ch. 52, Corporations . There are additional bases of venue in an action against a corporation, and the definition of place of performance is different when an action on a contract involves a corporate the defendant.

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.300 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Obligation Is Incurred When Option Contract Is Made

Dawson v. Goff (1954) 43 Cal. 2d 310, 273 P.2d 1 , was an action for breach of a binding option contract. The contract had been executed in San Diego County, where the defendants resided, and provided that the defendants agreed to buy shares of stock from the plaintiffs on the plaintiffs' written or oral demand. The plaintiffs had mailed a written demand covering a specified number of shares from Los Angeles County, but the defendants refused to buy. The defendants moved for a change of venue to San Diego County. The plaintiffs contended that the contract had been made in Los Angeles County, the county where the action was brought, because they accepted the defendants' offer in the option contract bymailing the written demand in that county. The trial court granted the motion.

The Supreme Court affirmed. There were two contracts, the binding option contract and the contract to which it related.

In the case of an option contract, when an optionee incurs no liability with regard to the contract as to which he or she holds an option, the optionor has irrevocably promised on the exercise of the option to perform the contract on the terms specified in the binding offer. The creation of the final contract requires no promise or other action by the optionor, since the contract is completed by the acceptance of the irrevocable offer of the optionor by the optionee. The contract has already been made as far as the optionor is concerned, but it is subject to conditions that are removed by the acceptance. In this case, even though the option has been exercised and suit is by the optionee, the optionor was bound--the obligation was incurred--as far as he or she is concerned, when the option contract was made. Since it was executed in San Diego County, that is the county where the contract was made. In addition that was the county where it was deemed the obligation was to be performed and in which the defendants resided. Thus the plaintiffs failed to bring themselves within an exception of Code Civ. Proc. § 395(a), and the motion for change of venue was granted correctly (43 Cal. 2d 310, 318) .

[b] Contract With Public Body Is Made When Public Body Accepts Written Bid

Elsinore Union Etc. School Dist. v. Kastorff (1954) 129 Cal. App. 2d 60, 276 P.2d 112 , was an action on a proposal bond brought by a school district in Riverside County against a contractor and the surety on the contractor's bond. The district had advertised for bids for the construction of two classroom buildings. The contractor submitted a bid along with a bid bond signed by the contractor and the surety. The bond was signed by the contractor in Orange County and by the surety in Los Angeles. The district accepted the bid, but the contractor declined to enter the contract. The district contended that the contracts were executed in Riverside County, and the obligation sought to be enforced was incurred and was to be performed in that county. The trial court denied the defendants' motion for change of venue, which was made on the grounds that none of the contracts was executed in Riverside County, and the proper county for trial was Orange County, the residence of the contractor.

The court of appeal affirmed. According to Code Civ. Proc. § 1933, the execution of an instrument requires both subscribing a name to it and delivering it; therefore, the contractor's written offer or bid was not executed merely by his signing it. Likewise, the mere signature on the proposal bond, standing alone, meant nothing to the district. No obligation arose until the bid was accepted. Delivery of the instrument to the district andacceptance and approval by the district were necessary to give it the legal effect intended by the obligors. The general rule is that when a public body advertises for bids, a good and binding contract is formed when the public body, acting by responsible officers, accepts the written bid of a bidder. The view is almost uniform that a bid submitted to a municipal corporation in response to an advertisement constitutes an irrevocable offer. In this case, the act that brought the obligation into being was the act by which the district unconditionally signified its acceptance of the contractor's proposal. Necessarily involved in that act was the tacit approval and acceptance of the proposal bond. Therefore at the time and place of the district's act of acceptance that occurred in Riverside County, the defendants incurred an obligation on the proposal bond (129 Cal. App. 2d 60, 65) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
C. Venue for Breach of Contract Action

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.312

§ 50.312 Current Venue Is Proper--Unilateral Contract Was Made at Place of Performance

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE CONTRACT WAS UNILATERAL AND WAS MADE AND PERFORMED IN THE COUNTY WHERE THE ACTION WAS COMMENCED.

A. Propriety of Chosen Venue. [See § 50.310[1], Paragraph A.]

B. Proper Court for Contract Action. [See § 50.300[1], Paragraph C.]

C. Contract Action Commenced in One of Several Proper Counties. [See § 50.310[1], Paragraph C.]

D. Unilateral Contract Was Made at Place of Performance. Since a unilateral contract is accepted by performance, and a contract is deemed to be made when the last act required to make the contract obligatory is performed, a unilateral contract is made at the place it is performed (see Richardson v. Rose (1961) 197 Cal. App. 2d 318, 322, 17 Cal. Rptr. 84).

[Optional] E. Broker's Listing Agreement Is Unilateral Contract. A loan broker's listing agreement, by the terms of which the borrower agrees to pay the broker's commission in the event that the broker obtains a ready, willing, and able lender within the listing period, constitutes a unilateral contract (Richardson v. Rose (1961) 197 Cal. App. 2d 318, 322, 17 Cal. Rptr. 84).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support the contention that the current venue of an action for contract damages is proper, because the action was brought in the county where a unilateral contract was performed and hence was brought in the county where the contract was made.

This form will normally be used to oppose a defendant's motion for change of venue, and should be combined when appropriate with memoranda relating to that proceeding. For memoranda relating to change of venue proceedings, see Ch. 238, Venue .

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, in opposing a motion for change of venue, the memorandum would include an analysis of the complaint or opposing declarations showing that the unilateral contract was performed in the county where the action was brought.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion and forms of motion relating to venue, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 571, Venue (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

In an appropriate case, these memoranda may be combined with alternate or additional memoranda opposing a change of venue set out in §§ 50.310, 50.311 and § 50.313 et seq.

For memoranda supporting a motion for change of venue by a corporate the defendant, see Ch. 52, Corporations . There are additional bases of venue in an action against a corporation, and the definition of place of performance is different when an action on a contract involves a corporate the defendant.

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.300 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Unilateral Contract Was Made at Place of Performance

Richardson v. Rose (1961) 197 Cal. App. 2d 318, 17 Cal. Rptr. 84 , was an action to recover a broker's commission pursuant to the terms of a written agreement by which the defendants authorized the plaintiff to act as their exclusive agent for a 10-day period to obtain for them a loan of $50,000 on specified terms and promised to pay him a commission of $5,000 in the event he succeeded in negotiating the loan. After the listing agreement had been signed by the defendants, it was delivered to the plaintiff in Los Angeles County where he accepted it by performance. The defendants moved for a change of venue from Los Angeles County to Orange County where they resided and where the contract was made. The trial court granted the motion.

The court of appeal reversed. The agreement by its terms was a unilateral contract since the borrower agreed to pay the broker's commission in the event the broker obtained a ready, willing, and able lender within the listing period. A unilateral contract is accepted by performance. A contract is deemed made when the last act required to make the contract obligatory is performed. Consequently, the contract was made and wholly performed in Los Angeles County.

When an action on a contract is brought in the county where the contract was made, the plaintiff is entitled to have the action tried there despite the defendant's residence in another county (197 Cal. App. 2d 318, 322) .

[b] Broker's Listing Agreement Is Unilateral Contract

Richardson v. Rose (1961) 197 Cal. App. 2d 318, 17 Cal. Rptr. 84 , is discussed in [I], above.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
C. Venue for Breach of Contract Action

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.313

§ 50.313 Current Venue Is Proper--Contract Made by Telephone Was Made in County Where Offeree Accepted

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

A CONTRACT MADE BY A TELEPHONE CALL TO THE OFFEREE IS MADE AT THE PLACE THE RECIPIENT OF THE CALL IS AT THE TIME HE/SHE ACCEPTS THE OFFER.

A. Propriety of Chosen Venue. [See § 50.300[1], Paragraph A.]

B. Proper Court for Contract Action. [See § 50.300[1], Paragraph C.]

C. Contract Action Commenced in One of Several Proper Counties. [See § 50.300[1], Paragraph C.]

D. Place Contract by Telephone Is Made. A contract made by a telephone call to the offeree is made at the place the recipient of the call is at the time he or she accepts the offer (Wilson v. Scannavino (1958) 159 Cal. App. 2d 369, 371, 324 P.2d 350).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support the contention that the current venue of an action for contract damages is proper, because the action was brought in the county where the contract was made based on the fact that the contract offer was accepted by telephone in that county.

This form will normally be used to oppose a defendant's motion for change of venue, and should be combined when appropriate with memoranda relating to that proceeding. For memoranda relating to change of venue proceedings, see Ch. 238, Venue .

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, in opposing a motion for change of venue, the memorandum would include an analysis of the complaint or opposing declarations showing that the contract offer was accepted by telephone in the county where the action was brought.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion and forms of motion relating to venue, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 571, Venue (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

In an appropriate case, these memoranda may be combined with alternate or additional memoranda opposing a change of venue set out in §§ 50.310 -50.312 and § 50.314 et seq.

For memoranda supporting a motion for change of venue by a corporate the defendant, see Ch. 52, Corporations . There are additional bases of venue in an action against a corporation, and the definition of place of performance is different when an action on a contract involves a corporate the defendant.

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.300 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Place Contract by Telephone Is Made

Wilson v. Scannavino (1958) 159 Cal. App. 2d 369, 324 P.2d 350 , was an action on an open book account. The defendant moved for a change of venue to San Joaquin County where he resided. In his affidavit, the defendant alleged that the plaintiff did some subhauling pursuant to a telephone request from the defendant, and the plaintiff hauled loads from California and Nevada, none of which had as its destination any point in Butte County, the county where the action was brought. The plaintiff, in his affidavit, admitted the truth of the defendant's affidavit but stated that the contract was made by telephone, and Butte County was a proper county for the action because the plaintiff received and accepted the defendant's telephone request to do the subhauling in that county. The trial court denied the motion.

The court of appeal affirmed. A contract made by a telephone call to the offeree is made at the place the recipient of the call is at the time he or she accepts the offer. Since the plaintiff was in Butte County when he accepted the offer by telephone, Butte County was the place of contract and was a proper county for trial (159 Cal. App. 2d 369, 371) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
C. Venue for Breach of Contract Action

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.314

§ 50.314 Current Venue Is Proper--Suretyship Contract Was Made Where Creditor Accepted Guaranty

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

A SURETYSHIP CONTRACT IS MADE AT THE PLACE THE CREDITOR ACCEPTS THE GUARANTY.

A. Propriety of Chosen Venue. [See § 50.310[1], Paragraph A.]

B. Proper Court for Contract Action. [See § 50.300[1], Paragraph C.]

C. Contract Action Commenced in One of Several Proper Counties. [See § 50.310[1], Paragraph C.]

D. Suretyship Contract Is Made Where Creditor Accepts Guaranty. A contract involving a guaranty of loans is not complete until the creditor has accepted the surety's guaranty either by acting on the guaranty and extending credit or by communicating his or her acceptance to the surety. Consequently, the contract is made at the place the creditor accepts the guaranty (Skaggs-Stone, Inc. v. LaBatt (1960) 182 Cal. App. 2d 142, 143, 5 Cal. Rptr. 882).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support the contention that the current venue of an action for contract damages is proper, because the contract was a suretyship and the action was brought in the county where the creditor accepted the guaranty.

This form will normally be used to oppose a defendant's motion for change of venue, and should be combined when appropriate with memoranda relating to that proceeding. For memoranda relating to change of venue proceedings, see Ch. 238, Venue .

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, in opposing a motion for change of venue, the memorandum would include an analysis of the complaint or opposing declarations showing that the contract was a suretyship and the creditor accepted the guaranty in the county where the action was brought.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion and forms of motion relating to venue, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 571, Venue (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

In an appropriate case, these memoranda may be combined with alternate or additional memoranda opposing a change of venue set out in §§ 50.310 -50.313 and § 50.315 et seq.

For memoranda supporting a motion for change of venue by a corporate the defendant, see Ch. 52, Corporations . There are additional bases of venue in an action against a corporation, and the definition of place of performance is different when an action on a contract involves a corporate the defendant.

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.300 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Suretyship Contract Is Made Where Creditor Accepts Guaranty

In Skaggs-Stone, Inc. v. LaBatt (1960) 182 Cal. App. 2d 142, 5 Cal. Rptr. 882 , the plaintiff filed a complaint in Alameda County alleging that a certain company was indebted to it, the defendants had guarantied the account in writing, and the plaintiff sought to collect the amount owed by the company from the guarantors. The plaintiff prepared the loan guaranty, and forwarded it to the defendants in Stanislaus County where they signed it and returned it to the plaintiff by mail. The trial court denied the defendants' motion for a change of venue, which was based on the ground that the defendants resided in Stanislaus County where the contract was made. The defendants argued that when they signed the guaranty and deposited it in the mail in Stanislaus County the contract was complete.

The court of appeal affirmed. Although the defendants' argument followed the general rule of offer and acceptance, suretyship contracts differ in that the creditor must accept the surety's guaranty, either by acting on it and extending credit or by communicating his or her acceptance to the surety. Logically, there does not seem to be any way a creditor could extend credit in reliance on a guaranty until he or she had knowledge of the guarantor's undertaking. The contract in any case could be reasonably interpreted to provide for performance in Alameda County since not only was the guaranty addressed to the plaintiff's place of business in Alameda County, where the credit was to be extended, but also it provided that it was to remain in full force and effect until written notice of its withdrawal had been served by the guarantors at the creditor's principal office as shown in the guaranty. Thus, credit was to be extended when the plaintiff receivedthe guaranty at its place of business in Alameda County and could be withdrawn by the guarantors only on their giving notice in writing to the plaintiff in Alameda County. Consequently, Alameda County was a proper place for trial

(182 Cal. App. 2d 142, 143) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Suretyship Contract Is Made Where Creditor Accepts Guaranty

Pacific Nat'l Bank v. Covington Inv. Co. (1959) 169 Cal. App. 2d 868, 338 P.2d 56 , was an action for the payment of loans guarantied by the defendants. Two guaranties had been signed by an investment company and by officers of the investment company. The company's guaranty provided that, in consideration of any loans the plaintiff made to the debtor, the company guarantied their payment, provided the debtor's notes to the plaintiff were first approved by the company. The company officers' guaranty provided that, in consideration of the plaintiff's acceptance of the company's guaranty, the officers guarantied the company's performance. Both instruments were signed in Los Angeles and handed there to debtor's agent. The investment company's approval of the plaintiff's notes was signed in Los Angeles and mailed to the plaintiff in San Francisco, where its only place of business was located. Neither the letter of approval nor either of the guaranties provided for the defendants' performance in San Francisco nor any place of performance. The debtor's agent had delivered the guaranties to the plaintiff in San Francisco. The defendants moved for change of venue from San Francisco to Los Angeles County. The trial court found that as between the plaintiff and the defendant guarantors, the contracts were made in San Francisco when the plaintiff made a loan to the debtor, accepting the defendants' guaranties. The trial court denied the motion. The court of appeal affirmed. The plaintiff was not a signatory to either contract, and as far as the plaintiff was concerned, the guaranties were mere offers to guaranty performance by the debtor in the event that the plaintiff made loans to the debtor based on the guaranties. These loans were to be, and were, made and payable in San Francisco. The acceptance of the offers was made in San Francisco by the making of the loans to be guarantied. Thus, the contract between the plaintiff and the defendants was made in San Francisco, and consequently that was proper place for trial (169 Cal. App. 2d 868, 870-872) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
C. Venue for Breach of Contract Action

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.315

§ 50.315 Current Venue Is Proper--Check Is Contract for Venue Purposes

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief].

A CHECK THAT WAS MADE, EXECUTED, AND DELIVERED IN A CERTAIN COUNTY IS A CONTRACT THAT WAS MADE IN THAT COUNTY.

A. Propriety of Chosen Venue. [See § 50.310[1], Paragraph A.]

B. Proper Court for Contract Action. [See § 50.300[1], Paragraph C.]

C. Contract Action Commenced in One of Several Proper Counties. [See § 50.310[1], Paragraph C.]

D. Check Is Contract. A check is a contract subject to the laws governing contracts, and a check that was made, executed, and delivered in a certain county is a contract that was made in that county, which is, therefore, a proper county for trial of an action on the check (Roff v. Crenshaw (1945) 69 Cal. App. 2d 536, 538, 540-541, 159 P.2d 661).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support the contention that the current venue of an action for contract damages is proper, because the action involves a check and the check was made, executed, and delivered, and consequently made, in the county where the action was brought.

This form will normally be used to oppose a defendant's motion for change of venue, and should be combined when appropriate with memoranda relating to that proceeding. For memoranda relating to change of venue proceedings, see

Ch. 238, Venue .

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, in opposing a motion for change of venue, the memorandum would include an analysis of the complaint or opposing declarations showing that the action involves a check made, executed, and delivered in the county where the action was brought.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion and forms of motion relating to venue, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 571, Venue (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

In an appropriate case, these memoranda may be combined with alternate or additional memoranda opposing a change of venue set out in §§ 50.310 -50.314 and § 50.316 et seq.

For memoranda supporting a motion for change of venue by a corporate the defendant, see Ch. 52, Corporations . There are additional bases of venue in an action against a corporation, and the definition of place of performance is different when an action on a contract involves a corporate the defendant.

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.300 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Check Is Contract

Roff v. Crenshaw (1945) 69 Cal. App. 2d 536, 159 P.2d 661 , was an action on a check. The complaint alleged that the defendant executed and delivered a check in San Luis Obispo County, and it was presented for payment in Millbrae, San Mateo County, where it was refused payment on a written order executed by the defendant stopping payment. The defendant's motion for change of venue to the county of the defendant's residence and the county where the check was payable was denied by the trial court. On appeal the defendant contended, first, that the plaintiff did not allege in the complaint or by way of affidavit that the contract was in fact made in San Luis Obispo County, and second, that the check was to be paid and performed in San Mateo County. The defendant further contended that a check is not a contract, hence the laws governing the venue of contract actions do not apply.

The court of appeal affirmed. The allegation of the complaint that the check was executed and delivered in San Luis Obispo County wasequivalent to saying that the contract was in fact made in that county. A check is a contract. Thus, the action could be tried in the county where the check was issued (69 Cal. App. 2d 536, 538) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
C. Venue for Breach of Contract Action

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.316

§ 50.316 Current Venue Is Proper--Contract Containing Condition Precedent Was Made Where Condition Precedent Was Performed

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

A PROPER COUNTY FOR AN ACTION FOR THE BREACH OF A CONTRACT CONTAINING A CONDITION PRECEDENT IS WHERE THE CONDITION PRECEDENT IS TO BE PERFORMED. THUS, WHEN THE ACTION FOR BREACH OF CONTRACT HAS NOT BEEN BROUGHT IN THE COUNTY OF THE DEFENDANT'S RESIDENCE OR THE COUNTY OF PERFORMANCE, THE COUNTY WHERE THE CONDITION PRECEDENT WAS PERFORMED IS THE PROPER COUNTY FOR THE ACTION.

A. Propriety of Chosen Venue. [See § 50.310[1], Paragraph A.]

B. Proper Court for Contract Action. [See § 50.300[1], Paragraph C.]

C. Contract Action Commenced in One of Several Proper Counties. [See § 50.310[1], Paragraph C.]

D. Place Condition Precedent Was Performed Is Place Contract Was Made. When the contract fixes the time and place for performing a condition precedent to make the contract binding and operative, that place is the place the obligations were incurred and, consequently, the place the contract was made [Limited Mut. Compensation Ins. Co. v. Curtis (1941) 45 Cal. App. 2d 507, 509, 114 P.2d 404] .

[Optional] E. Condition Precedent of Insurance Premium Payment. When an insurance contract provides that as a condition precedent, the policy is void unless the initial premium is paid to a certain office, the contract is made at that office [Yedor v. Ocean Acc. & Guar. Corp. (1948) 85 Cal. App. 2d 698, 704, 194 P.2d 95] .

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support the contention that the current venue of an action for contract damages is proper, because the contract contained a condition precedent and the action was brought in the county where the condition precedent was performed.

This form will normally be used to oppose a defendant's motion for change of venue, and should be combined when appropriate with memoranda relating to that proceeding. For memoranda relating to change of venue proceedings, see Ch. 238, Venue .

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, in opposing a motion for change of venue, the memorandum would include an analysis of the complaint or opposing declarations showing that the contract contained a condition precedent that was performed in the county where the action was brought.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion and forms of motion relating to venue, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 571, Venue (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

In an appropriate case, these memoranda may be combined with alternate or additional memoranda opposing a change of venue set out in §§ 50.310 -50.315 and § 50.317 et seq.

For memoranda supporting a motion for change of venue by a corporate the defendant, see Ch. 52, Corporations . There are additional bases of venue in an action against a corporation, and the definition of place of performance is different when an action on a contract involves a corporate the defendant.

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.300 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Place Condition Precedent Was Performed Is Place Contract Was Made

In Limited Mut. Compensation Ins. Co. v. Curtis (1941) 45 Cal. App. 2d 507, 114 P.2d 404 , the plaintiff sued in San Francisco to recover premiums claimed to be due on three policies of workers' compensation insurance that the plaintiff issued to the defendant. The trial court denied the defendant's motion for change of venue to Los Angeles County where he resided.

The court of appeal affirmed. Because the insurance policies provided that as a condition precedent, the policies were null and void unless the total initial premium was paid to the plaintiff or its agents at its office in San Francisco on or before a certain date, the obligations imposed by the contracts were incurred in San Francisco. No obligations whatever arose under the contracts until the defendant performed the condition precedent of paying the premiums to the plaintiff at its San Francisco office. In other words, by the terms of the contracts, the parties themselves fixed the time and place the condition precedent should be performed to make the contracts binding and operative. It followed, therefore, that the place they became binding and operative was the place the obligations were incurred. Consequently, San Francisco was a proper county for the trial (45 Cal. App. 2d 507, 509) .

[b] Condition Precedent of Insurance Premium Payment

The facts and procedural background of Yedor v. Ocean Acc. & Guar. Corp. (1948) 85 Cal. App. 2d 698, 194 P.2d 95 , are discussed in § 50.301[3][e]. The insurance policy provided that, as a condition precedent, the policy was null and void unless the total initial premium was paid to the State Compensation Insurance Fund at its office in San Francisco by a certain date. When a provision in a contract fixes the place a condition precedent should be performed to make the contracts binding and operative, that place is the place the obligations were incurred and the contract was made. Since the plaintiff failed to show a special contract specifying that the place of performance was in the county where the action was brought, and since the defendant's residence was in San Francisco and the contract was made there, the trial court should have transferred the action to San Francisco (85 Cal. App. 2d 698, 704) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
C. Venue for Breach of Contract Action

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.317

§ 50.317 Current Venue Is Proper--Specification of Place of Performance Was Incorporated by Reference

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

WHEN A CONTRACT DOES NOT SPECIFY THE PLACE OF PERFORMANCE BUT INCORPORATES BY REFERENCE A DOCUMENT THAT DOES SPECIFY IT, THE PLACE OF PERFORMANCE IS EFFECTIVELY FIXED, AND THE COUNTY DESIGNATED FOR PERFORMANCE IS A PROPER COUNTY FOR TRIAL OF THE ACTION.

A. Propriety of Chosen Venue. [See § 50.310[1], Paragraph A.]

B. Proper Court for Contract Action. [See § 50.300[1], Paragraph C.]

C. Contract Action Commenced in One of Several Proper Counties. [See § 50.310[1], Paragraph C.]

D. Incorporation of Place of Performance by Reference. When a contract does not specify the place of performance but incorporates by reference a document that does specify the place of performance, the place of performance is as effectively fixed by the document as though the place had been expressly fixed in the contract itself [East-West Dairymen's Ass'n v. Dias (1943) 59 Cal. App. 2d 437, 441, 138 P.2d 772] .

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support the contention that the current venue of an action for contract damages is proper, because the county of performance as designated in a document incorporated by reference into the contract is that in which the action was brought.

This form will normally be used to oppose a defendant's motion for change of venue, and should be combined when appropriate with memoranda relating to that proceeding. For memoranda relating to change of venue proceedings, see Ch. 238, Venue .

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, in opposing a motion for change of venue,the memorandum would include an analysis of the complaint or opposing declarations showing that the county in which the action was brought is the county of performance is designated in a document incorporated by reference into the contract.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion and forms of motion relating to venue, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 571, Venue (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

In an appropriate case, these memoranda may be combined with alternate or additional memoranda opposing a change of venue set out in §§ 50.310 -50.316 and §§ 50.318, 50.319.

For memoranda supporting a motion for change of venue by a corporate the defendant, see Ch. 52, Corporations . There are additional bases of venue in an action against a corporation, and the definition of place of performance is different when an action on a contract involves a corporate the defendant.

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.300 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Incorporation of Place of Performance by Reference

In East-West Dairymen's Ass'n v. Dias (1943) 59 Cal. App. 2d 437, 138 P.2d 772 , a marketing organization sued to enjoin the defendant from disposing of his dairy products to persons other than the plaintiff and to recover damages for the defendant's failure and refusal to continue delivering his dairy products to the plaintiff as provided in his member's contract. The bylaws of the organization provided that each member was to sell and deliver to the organization's plant in Newman, Stanislaus County, all milk and cream produced or controlled by the member. The member's contract, which was signed by the defendant, stated that the defendant had read and was familiar with the organization's bylaws, ratified and adopted them,and agreed to be bound by them and any changes or amendments. The trial court denied the defendant's motion for change of venue to the county of his residence. The defendant contended that the contract was silent as to the place of performance, and since the contract was made in the county of the defendant's residence, that county must be deemed to be the county where it was to be performed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The member's contract did not purport to set forth in detail the agreement of the parties but incorporated by reference all provisions of the organization's bylaws and all changes or amendments. It was immaterial that the member's contract did not expressly specify the place of performance, for the effect of the contract was to incorporate all provisions of then-existing bylaws and all reasonable amendments. In other words, for the purpose of determining venue in an action brought under the contract, the place of performance was as effectively fixed by the bylaws as though the place had been expressly fixed in the contract itself or by a provision in the contract expressly permitting the other party to fix any reasonable place for performance (59 Cal. App. 2d 437, 441) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Incorporation of Place of Performance by Reference

In Stute v. Burinda (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d Supp. 11 , 177 Cal. Rptr. 102 , a breach of contract action, an appendix to the contract provided for performance at the plaintiff's place of business, located in the county where the action was brought. The trial court denied the defendants' motion for change of venue to the county of their residence. The defendants conceded that venue is proper in the county of performance if so specified in writing by the contract but contended that they were not bound by the performance provision, since it was not contained in the original contract executed 12 years earlier. The appellate department of the superior court affirmed. The contract became operative by automatic renewal of the original. A written agreement may incorporate other written agreements by reference, and the contract containing the performance clause could be construed as one with the original contract. The defendants were bound by the performance clause, which adequately supported the venue chosen by the plaintiffs (123 Cal. App. 3d Supp. 11, 15-16) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
C. Venue for Breach of Contract Action

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.318

§ 50.318 Current Venue Is Proper--Special Contract Specifies Place of Performance

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE CONTRACT SPECIFICALLY STATES IN WRITING THE PLACE OF PERFORMANCE.

A. Propriety of Chosen Venue. [See § 50.310[1], Paragraph A.]

B. Proper Court for Contract Action. [See § 50.300[1], Paragraph C].

C. Contract Action Commenced in One of Several Proper Counties. [See § 50.310[1], Paragraph C.]

D. Special Contract Specifying Place of Performance. If a contract specifically states in writing the place of performance, the action may be brought in the county of performance. When the contract states the place of performance, the provision is both express and special [Wathen v. Superior Court (1963) 212 Cal. App. 2d 125, 129, 27 Cal. Rptr. 840] .

[Optional] E. Place Specified for Payment Is Place of Performance. In a complaint on an account stated, an allegation that the defendant contracted to pay the account in a particular county is sufficient to place venue in that county on the basis that the county where an obligation is to be performed is a proper county for trial of the action [Atwater v. Argonne Van & Storage Co. (1946) 74 Cal. App. 2d 410, 412, 168 P.2d 776] .

[Optional] F. Place for Payment of Note Is Place of Performance. When a promissory note requires payment in a certain county or city, that county or city is adequately established as the place of performance [Causley v. Superior Court (1968) 267 Cal. App. 2d 757, 758, 73 Cal. Rptr. 585] .

[Optional] G. Letterhead Specified Place of Performance. When a contract is set forth under a company's letterhead, and the subject matter of the contract is to be delivered to the company but the address for delivery is not stated, and the company has several offices, then the place of delivery and consequently the place of performance may be considered to be the address in the letterhead [Wathen v. Superior Court (1963) 212 Cal. App. 2d 125, 129-130, 27 Cal. Rptr. 840] .

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support the contention that the current venue of an action for contract damages is proper, becausethe contract specifically states the place of performance and the action was brought in that county.

This form will normally be used to oppose a defendant's motion for change of venue, and should be combined when appropriate with memoranda relating to that proceeding. For memoranda relating to change of venue proceedings, see Ch. 238, Venue .

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, in opposing a motion for change of venue, the memorandum would include an analysis of the complaint or opposing declarations showing that it specifically states as the place of performance the county in which the action was brought.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion and forms of motion relating to venue, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 571, Venue (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

In an appropriate case, these memoranda may be combined with alternate or additional memoranda opposing a change of venue set out in §§ 50.310 -50.317 and § 50.319.

For memoranda supporting a motion for change of venue by a corporate the defendant, see Ch. 52, Corporations . There are additional bases of venue in an action against a corporation, and the definition of place of performance is different when an action on a contract involves a corporate the defendant.

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.300 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Special Contract Specifying Place of Performance

Wathen v. Superior Court (1963) 212 Cal. App. 2d 125, 27 Cal. Rptr. 840 , is discussed in § 50.300[3][a].

[b] Place Specified for Payment Is Place of Performance

Atwater v. Argonne Van & Storage Co. (1946) 74 Cal. App. 2d 410, 168 P.2d 776 , was an action on an account stated for the balance due for the installation of a truck motor. The verified complaint alleged that the defendant contracted to pay the account in the county where the action was brought. The defendant moved for a change of venue to the county of his residence. The justice court denied the motion and transferred the case to the superior court when the defendant renewed his motion for change of venue. The superior court denied the motion.

The court of appeal affirmed. The allegation in the complaint was properly considered in opposition to the motion for change of venue. Since the county where the obligation is to be performed is a proper county for the trial of the action, the motion for change of venue was correctly denied (74 Cal. App. 2d 410, 412) .

[c] Place for Payment of Note Is Place of Performance

Causley v. Superior Court (1968) 267 Cal. App. 2d 757, 73 Cal. Rptr. 585 , was an action on the promissory note of two individuals who were the president and the secretary of a corporation. The complaint set out the promissory note by incorporating it by reference. The note provided that it was to be paid at Santa Rosa, California. The trial court granted the defendants' motion for change of venue to the county of the defendants' residences.

The court of appeal granted a writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate its order. A note so incorporated by reference becomes a part of the complaint, which thus alleges its contents. Consequently, the complaint directly alleged that the obligation of the note was to be performed in Sonoma County, in which Santa Rosa is located. A contract action against an individual is properly brought in the county where the obligation is to be performed. The provision of the note requiring payment in Santa Rosa, California adequately established that city as the place of performance, whether by the corporation or the individuals. It satisfies the requirement of a special contract in writing since it specifically provides that payment is to be at Santa Rosa (267 Cal. App. 2d 757, 758) .

[d] Letterhead Specified Place of Performance

Wathen v. Superior Court (1963) 212 Cal. App. 2d 125, 27 Cal. Rptr. 840 , is discussed in § 50.300[3][a].

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
C. Venue for Breach of Contract Action

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.319

§ 50.319 Current Venue Is Proper--Supplemental Agreement or Contract Correcting Errors Does Not Affect Venue

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

A SUPPLEMENTAL AGREEMENT OR SECOND CONTRACT DOES NOT AFFECT VENUE, AND THE PROPER PLACE FOR TRIAL IS THE PLACE THE ORIGINAL CONTRACT WAS MADE, IF THE ACTION IS FOUNDED ON THE OBLIGATIONS OF THE ORIGINAL CONTRACT RATHER THAN THE SUPPLEMENTAL AGREEMENT OR IF THE SECOND CONTRACT MERELY CORRECTS ERRORS IN THE ORIGINAL CONTRACT.

A. Propriety of Chosen Venue. [See § 50.310[1], Paragraph A.]

B. Proper Court for Contract Action. [See § 50.300[1], Paragraph C.]

C. Contract Action Commenced in One of Several Proper Counties. [See § 50.310[1], Paragraph C.]

[EITHER]

D. Supplemental Agreement Is Not Controlling When Action Is Founded on Original Agreement's Obligations. If the action is founded on the obligations of the original contract and not on any obligations incurred by a supplemental agreement, venue is controlled by the original agreement, and the place it was made is a proper place for trial (Joe Lowe Corp. v. Rasmusson (1942) 53 Cal. App. 2d 490, 494, 127 P.2d 1002).

[OR]

D. Contract Correcting Minor Errors Does Not Affect Venue. When a second contract is executed to correct minor errors in the original contract, with no intention on the part of the parties of effecting a novation, the proper place for trial is the place the original contract was made, not the place the second contract was made (Standard Mach. Co. v. Coleman (1956) 140 Cal. App. 2d 748, 749-750, 296 P.2d 89).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support the contention that the current venue of an action for contract damages is proper, because, notwithstanding a second agreement or contract supplementing the original one that was made in the county of the defendant's residence, the action is founded on the obligations created by the original contract and the second agreement in fact contains only minor modifications.

This form will normally be used to oppose a defendant's motion for change of venue, and should be combined when appropriate with memoranda relating to that proceeding. For memoranda relating to change of venue proceedings, see Ch. 238, Venue .

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, in opposing a motion for change of venue, the memorandum would include an analysis of the complaint or opposing declarations showing that the action is founded on the obligations created by the original contract and a second agreement that was made in the county of defendant's residence only contains minor modifications.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion and forms of motion relating to venue, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 571, Venue (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

In an appropriate case, these memoranda may be combined with alternate or additional memoranda opposing a change of venue set out in §§ 50.310 -50.318.

For memoranda supporting a motion for change of venue by a corporate the defendant, see Ch. 52, Corporations . There are additional bases of venue in an action against a corporation, and the definition of place of performance is different when an action on a contract involves a corporate the defendant.

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.300 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Supplemental Agreement Is Not Controlling When Action Is Founded on Original Agreement's

Obligations

Joe Lowe Corp. v. Rasmusson (1942) 53 Cal. App. 2d 490, 127 P.2d 1002 , was an action for damages for breach of contract brought in Los Angeles County. The parties had made a contract in San Francisco, but one week later made a second agreement to alter the terms of payment. This agreement was executed in Los Angeles. The trial court denied the defendant's motion to transfer the action to Sacramento County where he resided. The trial court regarded the act of signing the supplemental agreement as the final act of the parties in the execution of the contract and accordingly ruled that the obligation on which the action was founded was incurred in Los Angeles.

The court of appeal reversed. The obligations on which the action was founded were incurred by the terms of and at the time of the signing of the original agreement. The supplemental agreement signed in Los Angeles imposed on the defendant no additional obligation except to forgo the right to receive the total purchase price in cash and to accept payment on other terms. The action was not founded on any obligation of the defendant incurred by the supplemental agreement, if it could even be said that he assumed an obligation at all in agreeing to extend the time for the payment of a portion of the purchase price. The supplemental agreement was so lacking in materiality to the issues involved that the case could be tried and determined without proof of the supplemental agreement itself (53 Cal. App. 2d 490, 494) .

[b] Contract Correcting Minor Errors Does Not Affect Venue

Standard Mach. Co. v. Coleman (1956) 140 Cal. App. 2d 748, 296 P.2d 89 , was an action on a contract for the sale of a truck-crane brought in San Francisco. The original contract under which the truck-crane was sold was negotiated and made in San Francisco. The truck-crane was delivered to the defendants on the basis of the original contract. However, some errors were discovered in the contract form, and it was retyped and taken to one of the defendants in Mendocino County to be signed again. The trial court denied the defendants' motion to transfer the action to Mendocino County where they resided.

The court of appeal affirmed. The intent of the parties was merely to correct minor errors in the first contract and not to rescind the first contract and substitute the second, effecting a novation. Consequently, the action was on the original contract, as modified by the second contract, and venue was in San Francisco where the original contract was made (140 Cal. App. 2d 748, 749-750) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Supplemental Agreement Is Not Controlling When Action Is Founded on Original Agreement's Obligations

Miller v. Hale (1961) 193 Cal. App. 2d 567, 14 Cal. Rptr. 472 , was an action in Santa Clara County for rescission of a contract, or, in the alternative, damages. The plaintiff had purchased a boat from the defendants in Contra Costa County where the defendants had their place of business. After taking possession of the boat, the plaintiff telephoned one of the defendants, informing him that the boat leaked, whereupon the defendant informed the plaintiff that the boat would be picked up and repaired or replaced. The plaintiff claimed that the boat was picked up but never returned. He contended that the telephone conversation was a contractual agreement made in Santa Clara County. However, the plaintiff also alleged that the defendants originally promised that the boat would be a new boat, in good and merchantable condition and seaworthy, but due to defective manufacture the boat leaked so much when it floated in the water that it was in danger of sinking. The trial court granted the defendants' motion for change of venue to Contra Costa County, where the defendants resided, which was also the county where the trial court found the contract was made. The court of appeal affirmed. The allegations forced the conclusion that the plaintiff was suing under the original obligation and provisions of the contract made in Contra Costa County, not under any telephone conversation agreement. Since no new obligation was incurred by the telephone conversation, venue was controlled by the prior or original agreement, and the defendants' motion was appropriately granted (193 Cal. App. 2d 567, 570-571) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
C. Venue for Breach of Contract Action

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.320

§ 50.320 Current Venue Is Proper--Place for Corporation's Performance of Obligation That Was Breached Is Decisive Factor

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE PLAINTIFF BROUGHT THE ACTION IN A PROPER COUNTY, SINCE THE COUNTY FOR PERFORMANCE BY A CORPORATION OF THE OBLIGATION THAT WAS BREACHED IS THE DECISIVE FACTOR.

A. Statutory Authority for Motion. [See § 50.300[1], Paragraph A.]

B. Transfer Is Mandatory on Proper Showing. [See § 50.300[1], Paragraph B.]

C. Where Corporation's Obligation Was to Be Performed Is Determinative. In a breach of contract action against a corporation, the place the plaintiff performed its obligations under the contract does not determine the proper venue. The decisive factor in determining venue is the place the defendant was to perform the obligation, the breach of which is pleaded as the cause of action (Code Civ. Proc. § 395.5; Anaheim Extrusion Co. v. Superior Court (1985) 170 Cal. App. 3d 1201, 1203-1204, 216 Cal. Rptr. 815).

[Optional] D. Burden of Proof and Practice of Parties. A corporation as defendant has the burden of negating the propriety of venue as laid on all possible grounds. Thus, if the contract does not specify where the corporation is to make payments under the contract, and the defendant introduces no evidence on the issue, venue will be upheld in the county of the plaintiff's office at which it has been the defendant's practice to make payments (Anaheim Extrusion Co. v. Superior Court (1985) 170 Cal. App. 3d 1201, 1203-1204, 216 Cal. Rptr. 815).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support the contention that the current venue of an action for contract damages is proper, because the action was brought by a corporation in the county for performance of the obligation, the breach of which provided the basis for the cause of action. The basis for the contention is that Code Civ. Proc. § 395.5, rather than Code Civ. Proc. § 395, establishes the venue for an action against a corporation, and provides that a corporation may be sued on a contract in the county where the contract is to be performed [Code Civ. Proc. § 395.5; see Hale v. Bohannon (1952) 38 Cal. 2d 458, 470-478, 241 P.2d 4] .

This form will normally be used to oppose a defendant's motion for change of venue, and should be combined when appropriate with pointsand authorities relating to that proceeding. For memoranda relating to change of venue proceedings, see Ch. 238, Venue .

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, in opposing a motion for change of venue, the memorandum would include an analysis of the complaint or opposing declarations showing that the action was brought by a corporation in the county for performance of the obligation, the breach of which provided the basis for the cause of action.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion and forms of motion relating to venue, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 571, Venue (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

In an appropriate case, this memorandum may be combined with alternate or additional memoranda opposing a change of venue set out in §§ 50.310 -50.319.

For memoranda supporting a motion for change of venue by a corporate the defendant, see Ch. 52, Corporations .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memorandum in § 50.301 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Where Corporation's Obligation Was to Be Performed Is Determinative

In Anaheim Extrusion Co. v. Superior Court (1985) 170 Cal. App. 3d 1201, 216 Cal. Rptr. 815 , the corporation had taken delivery of goods in Los Angeles County. The corporation sought to have venue placed there because, according to the corporation, that was where the contract was to be performed.

The court of appeal issued a writ of mandate vacating an order changing venue as the corporation had requested because the corporation did not meet its burden of proof. The place of performance of the obligation that was breached is the decisive factor. In this case, the place of performance was the place payment was to be made (170 Cal. App. 3d 1201, 1203) .

[b] Burden of Proof and Practice of Parties

The facts and procedural background of Anaheim Extrusion Co. v. Superior Court (1985) 170 Cal. App. 3d 1201, 216 Cal. Rptr. 815 , are discussed in § 50.320[3][a]. The contract was silent as to where payment was to be made, but the past practice of the parties was that the defendant made payments to the plaintiff's offices in Orange County, where the action was brought. The corporation's failure to present any evidence on the issue entitled the plaintiff to maintain the action in Orange County (170 Cal. App. 3d 1201, 1203-1204) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
C. Venue for Breach of Contract Action

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.321

§ 50.321 Current Venue Is Proper--Code of Civil Procedure Section 395(b) Applies to Action by Consumer or Action Against Consumer

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE PLAINTIFF BROUGHT THE ACTION IN A PROPER COUNTY BECAUSE CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE SECTION 395(b) APPLIES, AND THE ACTION WAS BROUGHT IN THE COUNTY WHERE _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] _____ [IN FACT SIGNED THE CONTRACT or RESIDED AT THE TIME THE CONTRACT WAS ENTERED INTO or RESIDED AT THE COMMENCEMENT OF THE ACTION].

A. Venue in Action Based on Consumer Transaction Depends on Consumer-Related Facts. In an action arising from an offer or provision of goods, services, loans, or extensions of credit intended primarily for personal, family, or household use, other than an obligation described in Civil Code Section 1812.10 (Unruh Retail Installment Sales Act) or Civil Code Section 2984.4 (Rees Levering Motor Vehicle Sales and Finance Act), or in an action arising from a transaction consummated as a proximate result of either an unsolicited telephone call made by a seller engaged in the business of consummating transactions of that kind or a telephone call or electronic transmission made by the buyer or lessee in response to a solicitation by the seller, the superior court in the county where the buyer or lessee in fact signed the contract, or where the buyer or lessee resided at the time the contract was entered into, or where the buyer or lessee resides at the commencement of the action, is the proper court for the trial of the action (Code Civ. Proc. § 395(b)).

B. Code of Civil Procedure Section 395(b) Applies to Action by Consumer or Action Against Consumer. There is nothing in the language of Code of Civil Procedure Section 395(b) that limits its application to actions brought against a consumer defendant. Whether the action is brought against a consumer defendant or by a consumer plaintiff, the venue provisions of that statute apply as long as the action arises from a consumer transaction specified in the statute (Fontaine v. Superior Court (CashCall, Inc.) (2009) 175 Cal. App. 4th 830, 838, 96 Cal. Rptr. 3d 607).

C. Statutory Reference to "Buyer or Lessee" Means Consumer. In view of the legislative history of the 1991 amendments by which "buyer or lessee" was inserted in place of "defendant" in Code of Civil Procedure Section 395(b), the Legislature intended to provide that, for an action arising from a consumer transaction described in the statute, venue would be proper either in the county where the consumer signed the contract or the county of the consumer's residence, consistent with the venue provisions of other consumer protection laws (Fontaine v. Superior Court (CashCall, Inc.) (2009) 175 Cal. App. 4th 830, 838-839, 96 Cal. Rptr. 3d 607).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support the contention that the current venue of a consumer-contract action is proper because Code Civ. Proc. § 395(b) applies, and the action was brought in the county specified in the statute.

This form will normally be used to oppose a defendant's motion for change of venue, and should be combined when appropriate with points and authorities relating to that proceeding. For memoranda relating to change of venue proceedings, see Ch. 238, Venue .

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, in opposing a motion for change of venue, the memorandum would include an analysis of the complaint or opposing declarations showing that the action was brought by a corporation in the county for performance of the obligation, the breach of which provided the basis for the cause of action.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion and forms of motions relating to venue, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 571, Venue (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

In an appropriate case, this memorandum may be combined with alternative or additional memoranda opposing a change of venue set out in §§ 50.310 -50.320.

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memorandum in § 50.301 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Code of Civil Procedure Section 395(b) Applies to Action by Consumer or Action Against Consumer

Fontaine v. Superior Court (CashCall, Inc.) (2009) 175 Cal. App. 4th 830, 96 Cal. Rptr. 3d 607 , was a consumer's action against a corporation and four of its employees individually. The consumer had obtained a loan for personal, famil,y or household use, from the corporation, and the complaint alleged that the defendants used collection methods in violation of the Rosenthal Fair Debt Collection Practices Act [Civ. Code § 1788 et seq.]. The action was commenced in Santa Clara County, where the consumer resided. The corporation and two of the individual defendants moved to transfer venue to Orange County, contending that (1) the general venue rule in Code Civ. Proc. § 395(a) is that a defendant is entitled to have an action tried in the county of his or her residence, (2) one of the individual defendants, who was a moving party, was a resident of Orange County and requested that the action be transferred there, and (3) no exception to the general venue rule was applicable. The consumer, opposing the motion, asserted that venue was proper in Santa Clara County under Code Civ. Proc. § 395(b) because the action arose from a loan that he had obtained primarily for personal, family, or household purposes, and he was a resident of Santa Clara County at the time the action was commenced. The trial court granted the motion after determining that Code Civ. Proc. § 395(b) did not apply because the action was not commenced against the consumer. The consumer petitioned the court of appeal for a writ of mandamus to prevent the change of venue.

The court of appeal granted the petition and directed the trial court to deny the motion for change of venue. The court concluded, "We find that the plain language of section 395, subdivision (b) provides that an action arising from certain consumer transactions, including a loan or extension of credit intended primarily for personal, family or household use, must be tried in the superior court of the county where either (1) the buyer or lessee signed the contract; (2) the buyer or lessee resided at the time he or she entered into the contract; or (3) the buyer or lessee resided at the commencement of an action. There is nothing in the language of section 395, subdivision (b) that limits its application to collection actions brought against a consumer defendant. Therefore, whether the action is brought against a consumer defendant or by a consumer plaintiff, the venue provisions of section 395, subdivision (b) apply as long as the action arises from a consumer transaction specified in the statute. [P] We are not convinced by defendants' argument that the venue provision of section 395, subdivision (b) is properly interpreted to apply only to actions against a consumer defendant, or, alternatively, does not apply where the consumer is the plaintiff and one of the defendants is an individual. Even assuming that there is some ambiguity regarding the scope of section 395, subdivision (b), we believe that the legislative history supports our plain language interpretation" (175 Cal. App. 4th 830, 838) (original emphasis). Regarding the meaning of the statutory reference to "buyer or lessee" in the context of this case involving a consumer loan, see § 50.321[3][b].

In addition the court concluded, "Finally, we find no merit in defendants' alternative argument that section 395, subdivision (b) does not apply to this action because the action does not arise from [an] individual defendant['s] ... provision of a loan. There is nothing in either the language of section 395, subdivision (b) or its legislative history to indicate that this venue exception does not apply where one of the defendants is an individual" (175 Cal. App. 4th 830, 840) .

[b] Statutory Reference to "Buyer or Lessee" Means Consumer

The facts and procedural history of Fontaine v. Superior Court (CashCall, Inc.) (2009) 175 Cal. App. 4th 830, 96 Cal. Rptr. 3d 607 , are given in § 50.321[3][a].

The court, in discussing its reliance on the legislative history of Code Civ. Proc. § 395(b), noted that amendments in 1991 inserted "buyer or lessee" in place of "defendant" three times and also inserted "arising from an offer or provision of" in place of "founded upon an obligation of the defendant for" in the text of that subsection. The court concluded, "The legislative history further reveals that the 1991 amendments to section 395, subdivision (b) were intended to provide that an action arising from a consumer credit transaction would be 'venued' either in the county where the consumer signed the contract or the county where the consumer resides, consistent with the venue provisions of other consumer protection laws. ... [P] Thus, as intended by the Legislature, section 395, subdivision (b) provides a statutory exception to the general venue rule, by authorizing venue in the county where a consumer plaintiff resides at the commencement of his or her action arising from a consumer transaction as specified in the statute. Because [the plaintiff's] action arises from a loan that he obtained primarily for personal, family or household use, which is a consumer transaction specified in section 395, subdivision (b), and [the plaintiff] resided in Santa Clara County at the time his action commenced, venue is proper in Santa Clara County Superior Court" (175 Cal. App. 4th 830, 838-839) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
C. Venue for Breach of Contract Action

5-50 California Points & Authorities §§ 50.322-50.349

[Reserved]

§§ 50.322[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
D. Existence of Contract
1. Offer and Acceptance

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.350

§ 50.350 Complaint Shows Only Agreement to Agree

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE COMPLAINT SHOWS ONLY AGREEMENT TO SOME PRELIMINARY TERMS AND NOTHING MORE THAN AN AGREEMENT TO AGREE.

A. Agreement to Agree Is Determined by Reference to Parties' Expressed Intentions. Whether a writing constitutes a final agreement or is merely an agreement to make an agreement depends primarily on the intention of the parties. In the absence of ambiguity, this must be determined by a construction of the instrument taken as a whole (Rennick v. O.P.T.I.O.N. Care, Inc. (9th Cir. 1996) 77 F.3d 309, 314-316 ; Banner Entertainment v. Superior Court (1998) 62 Cal. App. 4th 348, 358, 72 Cal. Rptr. 2d 598 ; Beck v. American Health Group Internat. Inc. (1989) 211 Cal. App. 3d 1555, 1562, 260 Cal. Rptr. 237 ; Smissaert v. Chiodo (1958) 163 Cal. App. 2d 827, 830, 330 P.2d 98).

B. No Remedy for Failure to Agree. Neither law nor equity provides a remedy for breach of an agreement to agree in the future. An agreement to agree cannot be made the basis of a cause of action (Autry v. Republic Productions, Inc. (1947) 30 Cal. 2d 144, 151, 180 P.2d 888).

[Optional] C. Pleader's Interpretation of Ambiguous Agreement Must Be Alleged. When an ambiguous written contract is pleaded by attachment to and incorporation in a complaint or set forth in haec verba, and the complaint fails to allege the meaning ascribed by the pleader, the court will construe the language of the contract on its face to determine whether, as a matter of law, the contract is reasonably subject to a construction sufficient to sustain a cause of action for breach (Beck v. American Health Group Internat. Inc. (1989) 211 Cal. App. 3d 1555, 1561-1562, 260 Cal. Rptr. 237 ; Hillsman v. Sutter Community Hospitals (1984) 153 Cal. App. 3d 743, 749-750, 200 Cal. Rptr. 605).

[Optional] D. Interpretation Is Judicial Function. Interpretation of a written instrument is solely a judicial function unless the interpretation turns on the credibility of extrinsic evidence (Oceanside 84 Ltd. v. Fidelity Federal Bank (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 1441, 1451, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 487 ; Beck v. American Health Group Internat. Inc. (1989) 211 Cal. App. 3d 1555, 1561, 260 Cal. Rptr. 237).

[Optional] E. Intent That Agreement Be Formalized. If there is a manifest intention that an agreement is not complete until it has been reduced to writing and signed by the parties, there is no binding or completed contract until that has been done (Rennick v. O.P.T.I.O.N. Care, Inc. (9th Cir. 1996) 77 F.3d 309, 315-316 ; Banner Entertainment v. Superior Court (1998) 62 Cal. App. 4th 348, 358, 72 Cal. Rptr. 2d 598 ; Beck v. American Health Group Internat. Inc. (1989) 211 Cal. App. 3d 1555, 1562, 260 Cal. Rptr. 237 ; Smissaert v. Chiodo (1958) 163 Cal. App. 2d 827, 830-831, 330 P.2d 98).

[Optional] F. Words Are to Be Given Their Ordinary Meanings. The words of a written instrument are generally to be understood in their ordinary and popular sense (Beck v. American Health Group Internat. Inc. (1989) 211 Cal. App. 3d 1555, 1562, 260 Cal. Rptr. 237 ; Smissaert v. Chiodo (1958) 163 Cal. App. 2d 827, 830, 330 P.2d 98).

[Optional] G. Condition of Attorney's Approval Is Implied. Assignment of the drafting of a formal, finalized agreement to an attorney usually evidences an expectation that the terms set forth in the letter agreement are subject to the attorney's approval (see Beck v. American Health Group Internat. Inc. (1989) 211 Cal. App. 3d 1555, 1563, 260 Cal. Rptr. 237).

[Optional] H. When Leave to Amend Need Not Be Given. Although it is usually error to sustain a demurrer without leave to amend if there is a reasonable possibility that the defect can be cured by amendment, it is not necessary to allow an amendment when the only contract the plaintiff could allege would be illegal and void (Beck v. American Health Group Internat. Inc. (1989) 211 Cal. App. 3d 1555, 1563-1565, 260 Cal. Rptr. 237).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that the complaint alleges nothing more than an agreement to agree.

This form includes optional paragraphs that set out various rules of interpretation and pleading requirements that may be used as appropriate in the particular situation. Additional rules of pleading and interpretation applicable to ambiguous contracts are provided in § 50.500 et seq.

This form may be used in combination with other memoranda for submission of a complete memorandum appropriate to the procedural context in which it raised, such as a memorandum in support of a demurrer or motion for summary judgment. It may also be incorporated into a trial or appellate brief. However used, counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Memoranda

In an appropriate case, these memoranda may be combined with the memoranda supporting the contention that no contract was formed because there is uncertainty as to material terms [see § 50.501].

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[d] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.360 may be used in appropriate cases to oppose the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Agreement to Agree Is Determined by Reference to Parties' Expressed Intentions

Rennick v. O.P.T.I.O.N. Care, Inc. (9th Cir. 1996) 77 F.3d 309 was an action for breach of contract to enter into a franchise relationship. The plaintiffs, who sought to become a corporation's sole Canadian franchisee, claimed that an agreement was reached at a meeting that was concluded with a ceremonious shaking of hands, and the terms of the agreement were set forth in a draft letter of intent circulated after the meeting. No interim or final agreement was ever signed. The trial court entered summary judgment for the corporation.

The court of appeals affirmed. The parties had not made a contract. Although in appropriate circumstances a handshake or a letter of intent could manifest agreement, in this case the express provisions of the letter of intent established that as a matter of law no contract was made (77 F.3d 309, 314-316) .

In Banner Entertainment v. Superior Court (1998) 62 Cal. App. 4th 348, 72 Cal. Rptr. 2d 598 , a film producer sued for declaratory relief, claiming that a dispute between the producer and its overseas marketing agent was not subject to mandatory arbitration. The trial court ordered arbitration, and the producer petitioned for a writ of mandate to compel the court to vacate its order (62 Cal. App. 4th 348, 355-356) . The producer contended that there was no agreement to arbitrate because the parties' conduct did not establish that there was such an agreement, and preliminary draft agreements, which provided that by signing them the producer would manifest its intent to agree to the draft agreements' terms, were never signed.

The court of appeal granted the petition. No substantial evidence supported the trial court's implicit finding that the parties agreed to arbitration. The uncontradicted evidence showed that the parties never reached an agreement that included all of the terms contained in the draft agreements. No enforceable agreement to arbitrate existed (62 Cal. App. 4th 348, 358-361) .

Beck v. American Health Group Internat. Inc. (1989) 211 Cal. App. 3d 1555, 260 Cal. Rptr. 237 , is discussed in [c], below.

Smissaert v. Chiodo (1958) 163 Cal. App. 2d 827, 330 P.2d 98 , was an action for specific performance of a contract for the sale and leaseback of real estate or, in the alternative, for damages and declaratory relief. A candy company placed its property on the market, intending to use the sale and leaseback as a financing device. An offer was presented, on a standard deposit receipt that included all material terms of the sale and lease. In accepting it, the company added this addendum: "It is further mutually understood and agreed by and between the parties to this agreement that the validity of the proposed agreement is subject and conditioned upon the parties agreeing upon and reducing to writing all terms and conditions necessary and incidental to the validity of said proposed agreement and that seller shall pay a total real estate commission of 5% upon completion of said sale." Negotiations followed regarding a higher price, higher rent, and security for the lease. Eventually the company notified the plaintiff that the property was being taken off the market. This action followed, and the trial court rendered judgment for the defendant on findings that the deposit receipt was not intended by the parties as their final contract.

The court of appeal affirmed. Whether a writing constitutes a final agreement or merely an agreement to make an agreement depends primarily on the intention of the parties. In the absence of ambiguity, this mustbe determined by a construction of the instrument taken as a whole (163 Cal. App. 2d 827, 830) . When all of the essential terms are agreed on in writing, there is a binding contract even though there is an intention that a formal writing will be executed later; but the objective intent of the parties is determined by an objective standard and not by an unexpressed stateof mind (163 Cal. App. 2d 827, 830) . When any terms are left for future negotiation, or when there is a manifest intention that the formal agreement is not to be complete until reduced to a formal writing to be executed, there is no binding contract until this has been done (163 Cal. App. 2d 827, 830-831) . Applying the foregoing principles, it is only necessary to quote the language of the addendum to show that the parties intended and agreed not to be bound until a formal contract was executed (163 Cal. App. 2d 827, 831) .

[b] No Remedy for Failure to Agree

Autry v. Republic Productions, Inc. (1947) 30 Cal. 2d 144, 180 P.2d 888 , was an action for declaratory relief of the rights and obligations of the parties arising from contracts between them. The second contract in question was supplemental to a previous contract made in 1938 and was executed after the plaintiff was ordered to report for physical examination under the Selective Service Act. It granted the defendant an additional option for one year commencing on the expiration of its last option under the 1938 contract, to require the plaintiff to appear in eight plays for a compensation of $15,000 each. The agreement provided, at Paragraph 24: "In the event Artist [the plaintiff] shall be required to serve in the armed forces of the United States pursuant to the Selective Service Act, or shall volunteer for such service, the parties hereto will agree upon their mutual rights and obligations hereunder in view of military service." The plaintiff enlisted in July 1942, at which time there remained five plays to be photographed under the third option granted by the 1938 contract. In March 1944, the defendant notified the plaintiff of its election to extend performance under the fourth option of the 1938 contract for a period equal to that of the plaintiff's military service. In June 1944, the plaintiff served the defendant a notice of termination of the agreements and employment by reason of military service and filed the action for declaratory relief. The trial court determined that the plaintiff's performance was suspended during the term of his military service, but thereafter the plaintiff was obligated for 21 more plays, and this would not place any substantial burden on the plaintiff.

The Supreme Court reversed. Generally, military service would terminate or suspend a contract under the doctrine of impossibility (30 Cal. 2d 144, 148-150) . The revival of a personal-services contract interrupted by war is a matter of equitable considerations, requiring findings that discharge of performance would not place substantially greater burdens on either party. The trial court had made such a finding, but the Supreme Court disagreed (30 Cal. 2d 144, 155-157) . More to the point, the doctrine of frustration did not apply here, because the negotiations of the parties and Paragraph 24 indicated that the parties had contracted with reference to a state of war and contemplated the risks arising from it (30 Cal. 2d 144 ,148). Paragraph 24 was a special agreement that the parties' mutual obligations should continue during the period of military service, but they would make a new agreement concerning their rights and obligations. The parties had attempted to negotiate a new contract but had been unable to agree. There is no remedy for breach of an agreement to agree, and an agreement to agree cannot be made the basis of a cause of action. It does not follow from their failure to agree that there was no performance in legal contemplation. Nor does the failure to come to agreement operate to restore or revive the original terms that were abrogated (30 Cal. 2d 144, 151-154) .

[c] Pleader's Interpretation of Ambiguous Agreement Must Be Alleged

In Beck v. American Health Group Internat. Inc. (1989) 211 Cal. App. 3d 1555, 260 Cal. Rptr. 237 , a psychiatrist alleged that he had a contract with a hospital, which was owned by a health care group, to act as the hospital's medical director for mental health services for a term of five years. The first amended complaint contained causes of action for breach of contract, bad-faith denial of the existence of a contract, breach of implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and intentional and negligent interference with an economic relationship. The plaintiff alleged that the contract was made on May 21, 1987, the date of a letter attached to the complaint and drafted by the hospital. It was signed by both the plaintiff and the executive director of the hospital. The letter began "It is a pleasure to draft the outline of our future agreement after these many months of discussion" and ended "If this is a general understanding of the agreement, I ask that you sign a copy of this letter, so that I might forward it to Corporate Counsel for the drafting of a contract. When we have a draft, we will discuss it, and hopefully have a completed contract and operating unit in the very near future." The plaintiff further alleged that on July 22, 1987, the hospital, by letter to the plaintiff from the health care group, gave notice that it would not perform the contract and repudiated it, as a proximate result of which the plaintiff sustained general and special damages. The defendants demurred on the grounds that no binding, enforceable contract existed as shown by the language of the writing attached to and incorporated into the first amended complaint, and even if the letter constituted a contract, it was illegal in that it fixed the plaintiff's compensation as a percentage of room and board charged to all general psychiatric patients, which was in violation of former Bus. & Prof. Code § 650. The demurrer was sustained on the ground that there was no contract or contractual relationship as a matter of law, and any prospective economic benefit to the plaintiff was too speculative to support the claims alleged. On appeal the plaintiff contended that the court erred in construing the writing on demurrer because judicial interpretation of a written instrument is proper only after the parties have had an opportunity to present extrinsic evidence bearing on their intent and the meaning of the writing.

The court of appeal affirmed. The rule cited by the plaintiff applies only when the plaintiff has alleged the meaning that he or she ascribes to an ambiguous writing attached to and incorporated in the complaint. If a contract that is set out in haec verba is ambiguous, the pleader must put some definite construction on it by averment. When, as here, a complaint fails to allege the meaning ascribed by the plaintiff to an ambiguous writing that is attached to and incorporated into the complaint or set forth in haec verba, the court is free to interpret the ambiguous agreement. The first amended complaint did not allege the plaintiff's interpretation except for the conclusional allegation that the incorporated letter was the contract of the parties. Ordinarily, a written contract is sufficiently pleaded if it is set out in full or its terms are alleged according to their legal effect. But if the instrument is ambiguous, the pleader must allege the meaning he or she ascribes to it (211 Cal. App. 3d 1555, 1561-1562) .

Hillsman v. Sutter Community Hospitals (1984) 153 Cal. App. 3d 743, 200 Cal. Rptr. 605 , was an action by a physician for breach of employment contract. The letter agreement of the parties stated no specific term of employment but provided that the agreement could be terminated or renegotiated by either party on 30 days' notice. It also contained the statement, "We look forward to a long, pleasant, and mutually satisfactory relationship with you and the Sutter Community Hospitals." The defendant terminated the agreement, and the plaintiff contested the termination on the grounds that (1) it was done in violation of an express provision of the letter agreement that allowed termination only for cause, (2) the defendant was barred from terminating the agreement because the plaintiff had furnished extra consideration in the form of leaving other more lucrative employment to take the position with the defendant, and (3) it was done in violation of an implied covenant that the plaintiff's service could only be terminated in accordance with the hospital bylaws providing grounds for discipline, notice, and hearing. On appeal, the plaintiff contested the sustaining of demurrers to two causes of action without leave to amend.

The court of appeal reversed with respect to the cause of action based on the implied covenant incorporating bylaws but affirmed the dismissal with respect to the claim of an express provision requiring cause for termination. The letter agreement was pleaded in its entirety by attachment to the complaint. Ordinarily a written contract is sufficiently pleaded if it is set out in full or its terms are alleged according to their legal effect, but if the instrument is ambiguous, the pleader must allege the meaning that he or she ascribes to it (153 Cal. App. 3d 743, 749) . When a written contract is pleaded by attachment to and incorporation in a complaint, and the complaint fails to allege that the terms of the contract have any special meaning, a court will construe the language of the contract on its face to determine whether, as a matter of law, the contract is reasonably subject to a construction sufficient to sustain a cause of action for breach (153 Cal. App. 3d 743, 749-750) . Because the plaintiff in this case did not pleadthat the language of the letter agreement was subject to any special meaning, the court could construe the language itself (153 Cal. App. 3d 743, 750) . That language expressed a mere hope or expectation rather than a promise. The defendant could not promise a mutually satisfactory relationship, because it had no control over the plaintiff's conduct and could not guaranty that the plaintiff's performance would be satisfactory. The plaintiff's interpretation twisted the defendant's polite closing remark far beyond its obvious purpose, which was simply to add a touch of personal warmth to a business letter. That language did not promise the plaintiff employment for a specified term of more than one month (153 Cal. App. 3d 743, 750) . That fact, together with the language in the letter agreement allowing renegotiations or termination by either party on 30 days' notice, prompted the court to conclude that the letter agreement did not contain an express promise of employment terminable only for cause (153 Cal. App. 3d 743, 751) .

[d] Interpretation Is Judicial Function

Oceanside 84 Ltd. v. Fidelity Federal Bank (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 1441, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 487 , was a breach of contract action by a commercial borrower, based on a bank's improper choice of the month from which to recompute the interest on a loan pursuant to the loan agreement's provision for a rate adjustment every six months after the borrower's initial payment. The trial court rendered judgment for the bank (56 Cal. App. 4th 1441, 1446-1447) . On appeal the borrower contended that since the issue of contract interpretation depended on the credibility of the parties' experts concerning custom and practice in the industry, the borrower was entitled to a jury trial.

The court of appeal affirmed. The interpretation of a written instrument is essentially a judicial function, even when it involves what might be called questions of fact. That function is to be exercised according to generally accepted canons of interpretation so that the purposes of the instrument may be given effect. It is therefore solely a judicial function to interpret a written instrument unless the interpretation turns upon the credibility of extrinsic evidence. In this case, the question as to proper interpretation of the loan documents was one of law for the trial court, on which the parties had no right to a jury trial (56 Cal. App. 4th 1441, 1451) .

The facts and procedural background of Beck v. American Health Group Internat. Inc. (1989) 211 Cal. App. 3d 1555, 260 Cal. Rptr. 237 , are discussed in [iii], above. The court of appeal stated that when a written contract is pleaded by incorporation in the complaint, and the complaint fails to allege that the terms of the contract have any special meaning, a court will construe the language of the contract on its face to determine whether, as a matter of law, the contract is reasonably subject to a construction sufficient to sustain a cause of action for breach. This ruleis a variation on the well-recognized theme that it is solely a judicial function to interpret a written instrument unless the interpretation turns on the credibility of extrinsic evidence. Here, the agreement was left to speak for itself without any allegation that the writing was ambiguous (211 Cal. App. 3d 1555, 1561) .

[e] Intent That Agreement Be Formalized

Rennick v. O.P.T.I.O.N. Care, Inc. (9th Cir. 1996) 77 F.3d 309 is discussed in [a], above.

Banner Entertainment v. Superior Court (1998) 62 Cal. App. 4th 348, 72 Cal. Rptr. 2d 598 , is discussed in [a], above.

The facts and procedural background of Beck v. American Health Group Internat. Inc. (1989) 211 Cal. App. 3d 1555, 260 Cal. Rptr. 237 , are discussed in [c], above. The court of appeal held that it was free to interpret the contract in light of the following principles. First, whether a writing constitutes a final agreement or merely an agreement to make an agreement depends primarily on the intention of the parties. In the absence of ambiguity, this must be determined by a construction of the instrument taken as a whole. Preliminary negotiations or an agreement for future negotiations cannot be the functional equivalent of a valid, subsisting agreement. A manifestation of willingness to enter into a bargain is not an offer if the person to whom it is addressed knows or has reason to know that the person making it does not intend to conclude a bargain until he or she has made a further manifestation of assent. Thus, if it is part of the understanding between the parties that the terms of their contract are to be reduced to writing and signed, their assent to the terms must be evidenced in the manner agreed, otherwise it does not become a binding or completed contract (211 Cal. App. 3d 1555, 1562) .

Smissaert v. Chiodo (1958) 163 Cal. App. 2d 827, 330 P.2d 98 , is discussed in [a], above.

[f] Words Are to Be Given Their Ordinary Meanings

The facts and procedural background of Beck v. American Health Group Internat. Inc. (1989) 211 Cal. App. 3d 1555, 260 Cal. Rptr. 237 , are discussed in [iii], above. With regard to the proper interpretation of the letter in question, the court of appeal stated that the words of a written instrument are generally to be understood in their ordinary and popular sense. The objective intent as evidenced by the words of the instrument, not the parties' subjective intent, governs the court's interpretation. The outward manifestation or expression of assent is controlling, and what the language of an instrument means is a matter of interpretation for the courts and not controlled in any sense by what either of the parties intended or thought its meaning to be (211 Cal. App. 3d 1555, 1562) .

The facts and procedural background of Smissaert v. Chiodo (1958) 163 Cal. App. 2d 827, 330 P.2d 98 , are discussed in [a], above. The plaintiff contended that the word "validity" in the addendum was used to mean "not repugnant to some statute or public policy" rather than to mean "not binding." The court of appeal said that the plaintiff's narrow interpretation was contrary to the general meaning of "effective" or "having legal force" (163 Cal. App. 2d 827, 832) .

[g] Condition of Attorney's Approval Is Implied

The facts and procedural background of Beck v. American Health Group Internat. Inc. (1989) 211 Cal. App. 3d 1555, 260 Cal. Rptr. 237 , are discussed in [c], above. The court of appeal concluded that taken in their ordinary sense, the words of the letter manifested an intention of the parties that no binding contract would come into being until the terms of the letter agreement were embodied in a formal contract to be drafted by corporate counsel. Assignment of the drafting to an attorney evidences an expectation that the terms set forth in the letter were subject to the attorney's approval. In fact, in this case, the letter of July 22, 1987, was from the health care group's attorney and concluded that the terms of the proposed contract were unlawful. In addition, the letter stated, "When we have a draft, we will discuss it." This statement contemplated further negotiations, and by signing the letter, the plaintiff assented that no binding agreement would result until a formal contract was drafted by counsel. Whether the plaintiff intended or believed otherwise is immaterial in the face of the language in the letter that plainly indicated that no contract would come into existence when the letter was signed (211 Cal. App. 3d 1555, 1563) .

[h] When Leave to Amend Need Not Be Given

The facts and procedural background of Beck v. American Health Group Internat. Inc. (1989) 211 Cal. App. 3d 1555, 260 Cal. Rptr. 237 , are discussed in [iii], above. The court of appeal concluded that the letter did not constitute a binding contract but was only "an agreement to agree," which cannot be made the basis of a cause of action (211 Cal. App. 3d 1555, 1563) . Although it is usually error to sustain a demurrer without leave to amend if there is a reasonable possibility that the defect can be cured by amendment, it is not necessary to allow the plaintiff to amend the complaint by adding allegations regarding his or her construction of ambiguous language (211 Cal. App. 3d 1555, 1562-1563) . The contract embodied in the letter would be illegal, in that it would violate Bus. & Prof. Code § 650, and hence no cause of action could be stated for its breach (211 Cal. App. 3d 1555, 1564-1565) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Agreement to Agree is Determined by Reference to Parties' Expressed Intentions

In Herman v. County of Los Angeles (2002) 98 Cal. App. 4th 484, 119 Cal. Rptr. 2d 691 , a transportation authority ("MTA") abolished its police force and contracted with a county to provide it with law enforcement services through the county sheriff, pursuant to a contract which provided for transfer of MTA officers to the county sheriff's department if they passed the sheriff's personnel review process. The contract provided that, as to MTA officers who did not pass the sheriff's review, the parties would meet and reach mutual agreement on the placement of those personnel. When a former MTA officer did not pass the sheriff's review process and neither agency offered him an alternative position, he filed a petition for writ of mandate seeking an order directing the agencies to meet and reach mutual agreement on a job for him as required by the contract. The trial court denied the writ and the officer appealed. The court of appeal reversed, rejecting the county's argument that the contract language providing "the parties shall meet and reach mutual agreement" on the placement of former MTA police officers left an essential element of the contract undetermined, voiding the contract. The court stated that there is nothing unlawful or even unusual about contracting parties agreeing to cross certain bridges when they are reached. The parties did provide for the contingency regarding former MTA police officers who did not pass the review process and therefore were not given jobs as deputy sheriffs, by agreeing to meet and reach mutual agreement of that person's placement. Furthermore, the parties agreed that if they could not reach accord on the placement of a former MTA officer after a good faith effort to resolve the dispute, they would submit the matter to mediation. Accordingly, it held the contract was not void for failure to reach agreement on an essential term (98 Cal. App. 4th 484, 487-488) .

In Harris v. Rudin, Richman & Appel (1999) 74 Cal. App. 4th 299, 87 Cal. Rptr. 2d 822 , plaintiff brought a malpractice claim against a law firm and several attorneys, alleging negligent drafting of a trust. A letter from defendants' counsel to plaintiff's counsel set out settlement terms but was signed by only two of the four individual defendants and was not signed by plaintiff. The trial court denied plaintiff's motion to enforce the settlement agreement, finding that statutory prerequisites had not been satisfied because not all the parties had signed the letter. The trial court granted plaintiff leave to amend the complaint to add causes of action for breach of written contract and intentional infliction of emotional distress, but sustained defendants' demurrers without leave to amend to those causes of action. The court of appeal directed the trial court on remand to vacate the judgment and reinstate the cause of action for breach of writtencontract and granted leave to amend to state a cause of action for breach of oral contract. The court held that the trial court erred in sustaining defendants' demurrer without leave to amend as to plaintiff's cause of action for breach of contract, because the allegations in the complaint were sufficient to state a claim for breach of an oral contract. Although defendants asserted that the complaint failed to state a cause of action for breach of contract because the letter on its face demonstrated it was merely an agreement to agree in the future, as in Beck v. American Health Group Internat. Inc., 211 Cal. App. 3d 1555, 260 Cal. Rptr. 237 , discussed above, the court distinguished the two cases. Here, the letter drafted by respondents' own counsel and signed by two individual respondents purported to embody the "essential terms" of the agreement. It was signed under a signature block noting "[a]ccepted and agreed," and thus was far different from Beck in which the writing itself as expressly denominated as an outline of a "future agreement." Further, plaintiff's complaint in Beck merely relied on the language of the letter and unlike this case, did not attempt to plead any facts alleging the plaintiff's interpretation of the letter (74 Cal. App. 4th 299, 306-309) .

[b] Interpretation Is Judicial Function

Greater Middleton Assn. v. Holmes Lumber Co. (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 980, 271 Cal. Rptr. 917 , involved the construction of covenants in deeds. Although the court of appeal affirmed the trial court's construction of the covenants, it began its analysis by setting forth the relevant rules of construction, including the fact that interpretation of a contract is solely a judicial function unless the interpretation turns on the credibility of extrinsic evidence, which it did not. Thus, the court made an independent interpretation of the deeds (222 Cal. App. 3d 980, 989-990) .

[c] Words Are to Be Given Their Ordinary Meanings

In Appalachian Ins. Co. v. McDonnell Douglas Corp. (1989) 214 Cal. App. 3d 1, 262 Cal. Rptr. 716 , the court of appeal affirmed a summary judgment and held that the contract involved was clear and unambiguous (214 Cal. App. 3d 1, 18) . Generally the words of a contract are to be understood in their ordinary and popular sense, unless a contrary intent is shown, such as a specialized meaning due to trade custom and practice or a prior course of dealing. Interpretation of a written contract is solely a judicial function unless the interpretation turns on the credibility of extrinsic evidence (214 Cal. App. 3d 1, 11) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
D. Existence of Contract
1. Offer and Acceptance

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.351

§ 50.351 No Contract Was Formed Because Acceptance Was Not Effective Until After Offer Was Revoked

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

NO CONTRACT WAS EVER FORMED BETWEEN THESE PARTIES BECAUSE THE PLAINTIFF'S ACCEPTANCE WAS NOT EFFECTIVE UNTIL AFTER THE DEFENDANT HAD REVOKED THE OFFER.

A. Revocation Is Allowed Before Acceptance. An offer may be revoked at any time before its acceptance is communicated to the offeror, but not afterward (Civ. Code § 1586).

B. When Acceptance Is Deemed Effective. Consent is deemed to be fully communicated between the parties as soon as the party accepting an offer has put the acceptance in the course of transmission to the offeror, in conformity with Civil Code Section 1582 (Civ. Code § 1583).

C. Acceptance Is in Transmission When Offeree Relinquishes Control. Acceptance is placed "in the course of transmission" within the meaning of Civil Code Section 1583 when it has passed out of the control of the offeree. When an acceptance is being transmitted by mail, it is considered to be placed in the course of transmission when it is delivered to the post office. Thus, acceptance of an offer is effective and deemed communicated when it is deposited in the mail (Palo Alto Town & Country Village, Inc. v. BBTC Company (1974) 11 Cal. 3d 494, 500-501, 113 Cal. Rptr. 705, 521 P.2d 1097 ; Gibbs v. American Savings & Loan Assn. (1990) 217 Cal. App. 3d 1372, 1376, 266 Cal. Rptr. 517).

[Optional] D. Appropriate Mode of Acceptance. If an offer prescribes any conditions concerning the communication of the acceptance, the offeror is not bound unless they are conformed to; but in other cases any reasonable and usual mode may be adopted (Civ. Code § 1582).

[Optional] E. Postmark Is Substantial Evidence. The date on a postmark constitutes substantial evidence that an acceptance contained in that envelope was mailed on the date shown on the postmark (Gibbs v. American Savings & Loan Assn. (1990) 217 Cal. App. 3d 1372, 1375, 266 Cal. Rptr. 517).

[Optional] F. Exercise of Option. Civil Code Sections 1582 and 1583 apply to irrevocable options as well as to revocable offers. In the absence of any provision in the option contract to the contrary, by virtue of Civil Code Section 1583, the exercise of an option becomes effective when a written notice of acceptance is deposited in the mail (Palo Alto Town & Country Village, Inc. v. BBTC Company (1974) 11 Cal. 3d 494, 113 Cal. Rptr. 705, 521 P.2d 1097).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that no contract was in fact formed because the plaintiff's acceptance was not communicated until after the defendant's offer had been revoked [Civ. Code §§ 1582, 1583, 1586].

This form may be used in combination with other memoranda for submission of a complete memorandum appropriate to the procedural context in which it raised, such as a memorandum in support of a demurrer or motion for summary judgment. It may also be incorporated into a trial or appellate brief. However used, counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Memoranda

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publicationin drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Acceptance Is in Transmission When Offeree Relinquishes Control

Palo Alto Town & Country Village, Inc. v. BBTC Company (1974) 11 Cal. 3d 494, 113 Cal. Rptr. 705, 521 P.2d 1097 , was a declaratory relief action by a lessor, who claimed that the lessee had not effectively exercised its option, and the lease was therefore terminated. The option had to be exercised by July 1. On June 5, the defendant prepared and signed a letter to the plaintiff notifying the plaintiff that it was exercising its option to extend the lease. The defendant deposited the letter in the mail in a stamped envelope addressed to plaintiff. The plaintiff claimed it never received the letter. The trial court rendered judgment for the defendant, declaring that the option had been exercised and the lease term extended for five years.

The Supreme Court affirmed. Civ. Code § 1583 governed the situation. Exercise of an option is tantamount to acceptance of an irrevocable offer (11 Cal. 3d 494, 498-502) . The optionee was the "party accepting" within the language of Civ. Code § 1583, and notice of exercise was an acceptance of that offer and signified the optionee's consent to be bound by the terms of the bilateral contract created by the acceptance (11 Cal. 3d 494, 504) . Notice of exercise of an option is governed by the "effective on posting" rule (11 Cal. 3d 494, 500-501, 504) .

In Gibbs v. American Savings & Loan Assn. (1990) 217 Cal. App. 3d 1372, 266 Cal. Rptr. 517 , the plaintiffs had submitted an offer to the defendant to purchase a foreclosed property. After a long silence, they received a counteroffer from the defendant in the mail. It made no mention of price but added certain conditions. The plaintiffs signed the counteroffer, and one the plaintiffs prepared an envelope and certified mail receipt, enclosed the executed acceptance of the counteroffer in the envelope, and gave it to the mail clerk in her office to deposit in the U.S. mail. The plaintiff testified that the mail clerk returned at about 10:15 a.m. June 6 with the receipt. At 11:00 a.m. one of the defendant's employees telephoned to say the counteroffer had been in error in that it neglected to include an increased purchase price and was therefore revoked. The postmark on the envelope in which the plaintiffs returned the counteroffer was dated June 7, which was also the day after the plaintiffs mailed it. Summary judgment was rendered for the defendant.

The court of appeal affirmed. The date on the postmark constituted substantial evidence that the acceptance was mailed June 7, not June 6,and would support affirmance of the judgment for the defendants (217 Cal. App. 3d 1372, 1375) . Civ. Code § 1583 provides that consent is deemed fully communicated between the parties as soon as the party accepting an offer has put the acceptance in the course of transmission to the offeror. This rule has long been interpreted to require that the acceptance be placed out of the control of the accepting party in order to be considered "in the course of transmission." Typically, this occurs when the acceptance is delivered to the post office. California's "effective on posting" rule, as codified in Civ. Code § 1583, thus holds than an acceptance of an offer is effective and deemed communicated when it is deposited in the mail. The postmark on the counteroffer established that the deposit occurred June 7, not June 6. The counteroffer was not placed in the course of transmission beyond the control of the offeree when the plaintiff gave it to the mail clerk in her office. Thus, under Civ. Code § 1586, the revocation by telephone was effective (217 Cal. App. 3d 1372, 1376) .

[b] Postmark Is Substantial Evidence

Gibbs v. American Savings & Loan Assn. (1990) 217 Cal. App. 3d 1372, 266 Cal. Rptr. 517 , is discussed in [a], above.

[c] Exercise of Option

The facts and procedural background of Palo Alto Town & Country Village, Inc. v. BBTC Company (1974) 11 Cal. 3d 494, 113 Cal. Rptr. 705, 521 P.2d 1097 , are discussed in [a], above. The Supreme Court noted that under Civ. Code § 1582, when no method of communication of acceptance is specified, any reasonable and usual mode may be adopted. Further, under the option contract, ordinary mail was specified as the means of giving notice. Thus, the defendant's use of ordinary mail to give notice of exercise of the option was appropriate (11 Cal. 3d 494, 500) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
D. Existence of Contract
1. Offer and Acceptance

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.352

§ 50.352 Qualified Acceptance Was Not Effective Except as Counteroffer

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

NO CONTRACT WAS FORMED BECAUSE THE _____ [offeree, e.g., PLAINTIFF] DID NOT UNEQUIVOCALLY ACCEPT THE _____ [offeror, e.g., DEFENDANT'S] OFFER BUT GAVE ONLY A QUALIFIED ACCEPTANCE, WHICH WAS AT MOST A COUNTEROFFER.

No Contract Is Formed by Qualified Acceptance. Terms proposed in an offer must be met exactly, precisely, and unequivocally in order for the acceptance to result in the formation of a contract. A qualified acceptance amounts to a new proposal or counteroffer, putting an end to the original offer (Panagotacos v. Bank of America (1998) 60 Cal. App. 4th 851, 855-856, 70 Cal. Rptr. 2d 595).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that no contract was in fact formed because the acceptance was not unequivocal but was qualified, amounting to a counteroffer.

This form may be used in combination with other memoranda for submission of a complete memorandum appropriate to the procedural context in which it raised, such as a memorandum in support of a demurrer or motion for summary judgment. It may also be incorporated into a trial or appellate brief. However used, counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Memoranda

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Contract Is Formed by Qualified Acceptance

In Panagotacos v. Bank of America (1998) 60 Cal. App. 4th 851, 70 Cal. Rptr. 2d 595 , the plaintiff sued a bank for damages because of the bank's tardy recordation of a reconveyance under a trust deed. The complaint alleged that the plaintiff became unable to complete the purchase of a house, which then was sold to someone else, after the bank's tardy recordation of the reconveyance prevented the plaintiff's obtaining necessary financing before the deadline for consummating the purchase. The financing was dependent on the clearing of the bank's lien in the title record. In fact the lien had been discharged several years earlier, and the bank had simply failed to record the reconveyance. The bank moved for summary adjudication on a showing that the plaintiff could not prove the formation of a contract to purchase the house in question, and therefore, the bank's delay in recording the reconveyance could not have harmed the plaintiff. The plaintiff's purported acceptance of the vendor's offer to sell was qualified by an implicit rejection of the vendor's explicit condition that payment was to be received in Germany. The vendor insisted on that condition. Two days before the vendor-imposed deadline for closing the transaction, the plaintiff requested an extension and stated that payment could be made in Germany or Amsterdam approximately two months hence. The vendor declined to extend and sold the house to a different purchaser. The trial court granted the bank's motion for summary adjudication and subsequently rendered judgment for the plaintiff for nothing more than a trivial statutory penalty in consequence of the bank's tardy recordation of the reconveyance.

The court of appeal affirmed. Terms proposed in an offer must be met exactly, precisely, and unequivocally in order for the acceptance to result in the formation of a contract. A qualified acceptance amounts to a new proposal or counteroffer, putting an end to the original offer. In this case, the plaintiff's counteroffer was not accepted by the vendor, who viewed the condition that the money be paid in Germany as essential. Although the vendor continued to entertain discussion on the matter with the plaintiff, no contract was formed. The plaintiff's final communication, in which the plaintiff arguably agreed to send the money to Germany (or Amsterdam), did not constitute an acceptance of the original offer because the plaintiff again proposed additional terms: a two-month extension of the original deadline. The plaintiff lost the opportunity to purchase the house because of simply failing to timely accept the vendor's offer. The bank's tardy recordation of the reconveyance did not cause that failure (60 Cal. App. 4th 851, 855-856) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
D. Existence of Contract
1. Offer and Acceptance

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.353

§ 50.353 Posting Revised Consumer Contract on Web Site Does Not Make New Terms Enforceable

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE REVISED CONTRACT POSTED ON THE DEFENDANT'S WEB SITE CANNOT BE ENFORCED AGAINST PLAINTIFF BECAUSE PLAINTIFF DID NOT RECEIVE NOTICE OF HOW THE CONTRACT HAD BEEN CHANGED AND DID NOT SIGNIFY ASSENT TO THE CHANGES.

Posting Revised Consumer Contract on Web Site Does Not Make New Terms Enforceable. If a consumer service provider revises its service contract and posts the revised contract on the provider's web site, the revised contract cannot be enforced against an existing customer who did not receive notice of how the contract was changed and did not then signify assent to the changes (Douglas v. United States Dist. Court (9th Cir. 2007) 495 F.3d 1062, 1066-1067) .

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that posting a revised version of a consumer service contract on the service provider's web site does not make the new terms enforceable against an existing customer who had no notice (apart from the posting of the contract on the web site) as to how the contract was changed.

This form may be combined with other memoranda for submission of a complete memorandum appropriate to the procedural context in which it raised, such as a memorandum in support of a demurrer or motion for summary judgment. It may also be incorporated into a trial or appellate brief. However used, counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Memoranda

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Posting Revised Consumer Contract on Web Site Does Not Make New Terms Enforceable

In Douglas v. United States Dist. Court (9th Cir. 2007) 495 F.3d 1062 , the plaintiff, an individual, had a long-distance telephone service contract with a service provider that posted a revised contract on its web site but did not notify the plaintiff of the changes, which included increased charges, a class-action waiver, an arbitration requirement, and a choice-of-law provision. On discovering that charges had been increased without notice, the plaintiff filed a class action in federal court. The provider moved to compel arbitration based on the revised contract, and the district court granted the motion. The plaintiff sought a writ of mandamus to vacate the district court's order.

The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals issued the writ. The plaintiff had no obligation to check the terms of the contract on a periodic basis in order to learn whether they had been changed by the service provider. Indeed, the plaintiff could not have known when to check the web site for possible changes to the contract terms without being notified as to how the contract has been changed. Even if the plaintiff checked the contract every day for possible changes, still, without such notice, an examination would have been fairly cumbersome, as the plaintiff would have been obliged to compare every word of the posted contract with the existing contract in order to detect whether it had changed. It is elementary that a party cannot unilaterally change the terms of a contractbut must obtain the other party's consent to do so. Presenting a revised contract amounts to nothing more than making an offer and does not bind the other party until it is accepted. Generally an offeree cannot actually assent to an offer unless the offeree knows of its existence. Even if the plaintiff's continued use of the provided telephone service could be considered assent, such assent could not be inferred until after the plaintiff received proper notice of the proposed changes (495 F.3d 1062, 1066-1067) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
D. Existence of Contract
1. Offer and Acceptance

5-50 California Points & Authorities §§ 50.354-50.359

[Reserved]

§§ 50.354[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
D. Existence of Contract
1. Offer and Acceptance

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.360

§ 50.360 Complaint Shows Contract to Negotiate Agreement

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief].

THE COMPLAINT SHOWS A CONTRACT TO NEGOTIATE AN AGREEMENT, WHICH CAN BE FORMED AND BREACHED LIKE ANY OTHER CONTRACT.

Contract to Negotiate Agreement May Be Formed and Breached Like any Other Contract. A contract to negotiate an agreement is distinguishable from an "agreement to agree" and can be formed and breached like any other contract (Copeland v. Baskin Robbins U.S.A. (2002) 96 Cal. App. 4th 1251, 1253, 117 Cal. Rptr. 2d 875).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that the complaint alleges a contract to negotiate an agreement, which may be formed and breached like any other contract.

This form may be used in combination with other memoranda for submission of a complete memorandum appropriate to the procedural context in which it raised, such as a memorandum in support of a demurrer or motion for summary judgment. It may also be incorporated into a trial or appellate brief. However used, counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Memoranda

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

For discussion of damages for breach of a contract to negotiate, see Ch. 65, Damages: Contract, § 65.22.

[d] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.350 may be used in appropriate cases to oppose the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Contract to Negotiate Agreement May Be Formed and Breached Like any Other Contract

In Copeland v. Baskin Robbins U.S.A. (2002) 96 Cal. App. 4th 1251, 117 Cal. Rptr. 2d 875 , the individual purchaser of an ice creammanufacturing plant brought an action for breach of contract against the seller. When the parties were negotiating for the sale, plaintiff purchaser made it clear that plaintiff's agreement to purchase the plant was continent on defendant seller's agreement to purchase the ice cream plaintiff manufactured there. This ice cream purchase arrangement, known as "co-packing," was critical to the deal. Defendant sent plaintiff a letter setting forth the terms for the sale of the plant, in which it stated it would agree, subject to a separate co-packing agreement and negotiated pricing, to provide plaintiff with a three-year co-packing agreement. Plaintiff accepted the terms of the letter by signing the statement and returning it along with a $3,000 non-refundable deposit check. The parties then continued negotiating over the terms of the co-packing agreement. The issues to be settled included the price defendant would pay for the ice cream, the flavors that plaintiff would produce, and who would bear the loss from spoilage. Defendant thereafter wrote to plaintiff breaking off negotiations over the co-packing arrangement, and returned the deposit. Plaintiff brought an action for breach of contract, claiming he suffered expectation damages in the form of lost profits. His discovery responses did not provide or allege that he could provide evidence of damages he suffered as a result of his reliance on defendant's promise to negotiate a co-packing agreement.

The trial court granted defendant's motion for summary judgment, concluding that the letter failed as a contract because the essential terms of the co-packing deal were never agreed to and there was no reasonable basis upon which to determine them. The court of appeal affirmed on a different ground. The court first noted that plaintiff, rather than insisting that the parties had formed a co-packing contract which defendant had breached, claimed that the letter between the parties constituted a contract to negotiate the remaining terms of the co-packing agreement. Plaintiff claimed that defendant breached this contract by refusing without excuse to continue negotiations, or alternatively, by failing to negotiate in good faith. Although noting that no reported California case has held that breach of a contract to negotiate an agreement gives rise to a cause of action for damages, the court held that a contract to negotiate an agreement is distinguishable from a so-called "agreement to agree," and can be formed and breached just like any other contract. The court first stated that it found no reason why in principle the parties could not enter into a valid, enforceable contract to negotiate the terms of a co-packing agreement. The contract to negotiate the terms of a second agreement was neither illegal or immoral pursuant to Civ. Code § 1667. The court further found that a contract to negotiate the terms of an agreement differs from a mere agreement to agree because failure to agree is not itself a breach of a contract to negotiate. A party will be liable only if a failure to reach ultimate agreement resulted from a breach of that party's obligation to negotiate or to negotiate in good faith (96 Cal. App. 4th 1251, 1256-1257) .

The court ultimately held, however, that the appropriate remedy for breach of a contract to negotiate is not damages for the injured party's lost profits under the prospective contact, but rather damages caused by the injured party's reliance on the agreement to negotiate. Reliance damages include plaintiff's out-of pocket costs in conducting the negotiations, and any lost opportunity costs (96 Cal. App. 4th 1251, 1260-1264) . In this case, plaintiff sought only damages derived from what he would have received if the underlying contract had been consummated, i.e., lost profits. Satisfactory proof of such damages was impossible because there was no way to know what the eventual terms of the co-packing agreement would have been, or even if the parties would have reached an agreement. The court therefore held that defendant was entitled to summary judgment because it had showed that plaintiff could not establish reliance damages (96 Cal. App. 4th 1251, 1263-1264) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
D. Existence of Contract
1. Offer and Acceptance

5-50 California Points & Authorities §§ 50.361-50.369

[Reserved]

§§ 50.361[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
D. Existence of Contract
2. Mutuality of Obligation

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.370

§ 50.370 No Valid Contract Exists Without Mutuality of Obligation

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

NO CONTRACT EXISTS BECAUSE THERE WAS NO MUTUALITY OF OBLIGATION.

A. Consideration Is Required. It is essential to the existence of a contract that there should be a sufficient cause or consideration (Civ. Code § 1550).

B. Requirement of Mutuality of Obligation. When parties attempt to make a contract and promises are exchanged as the consideration, the promises must be mutual in obligation. For the contract to bind either party, both must have assumed some legal obligation, and each of the reciprocal promises must have been given as inducement for the other promise at the time each party gave consent (Mattei v. Hopper (1958) 51 Cal. 2d 119, 122, 330 P.2d 625 ; Jara v. Suprema Meats, Inc. (2004) 121 Cal. App. 4th 1238, 1249, 18 Cal. Rptr. 3d 187).

C. Contract Lacks Consideration. Without mutuality of obligation, an agreement lacks consideration, and no enforceable contract has been created (Mattei v. Hopper (1958) 51 Cal. 2d 119, 122, 330 P.2d 625).

[Optional] D. Unrestricted Right to Withdraw. If a promise leaves a party free to perform or to withdraw from the agreement at his or her own unrestricted pleasure, the promise is illusory and provides no consideration, and the contract is unenforceable (Mattei v. Hopper (1958) 51 Cal. 2d 119, 122, 330 P.2d 625).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that the complaint alleges a contract but there was no

mutuality of obligation.

As a general rule, consideration need not be pleaded if the contract is written. Thus, this form is for use if the complaint alleges a written contract and there is no consideration because mutuality of obligation is lacking, or if an oral contract is the basis of the action and the allegation of consideration shows that there was no mutuality of obligation.

This form may be used in combination with other memoranda for submission of a complete memorandum appropriate to the procedural context in which it raised, such as a memorandum in support of a demurrer or motion for summary judgment. It may also be incorporated into a trial or appellate brief. However used, counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Memoranda

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[d] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in §§ 50.380 -50.382 and in §§ 50.430, 50.431 may be used in appropriate cases to oppose the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Requirement of Mutuality of Obligation

In Mattei v. Hopper (1958) 51 Cal. 2d 119, 330 P.2d 625 , the plaintiff sued for a breach of contract for failure to convey real property according to the terms of a deposit receipt that the parties had executed. Under the parties' written agreement, the plaintiff was required to deposit a portion of the total purchase price for the property with a real estate agent and was given a number of days to examine the title and consummate the purchase. The concluding paragraph of the deposit receipt provided that it was subject to the real estate agent's obtaining leases satisfactory to the purchaser. After a trial without jury, the court concluded that the agreement was illusory and lacking in mutuality.

The Supreme Court reversed. The deposit receipt and the clause concerning the obtaining of leases must be read as making the plaintiff'sperformance dependent on the obtaining of satisfactory leases. The plaintiff was given the power and privilege to terminate the contract if he did not obtain the leases. When the parties attempt, as they did in this case, to make a contract, and promises are exchanged as the consideration, the promises must be mutual in obligation. In other words, for the contract to bind either party, both must have assumed some legal obligations. Without this mutuality of obligation, the agreement lacks consideration, and no enforceable contract has been created. Additionally, if one of the promises leaves a party free to perform or to withdraw from the agreement at his own unrestricted pleasure, the promise is deemed illusory, and it provides no consideration. The contract here was neither illusory nor lacking in mutuality of obligation because the parties inserted a provision in the contract making the plaintiff's performance dependent on his satisfaction with the leases to be obtained by him. Thus his right to withdraw was not unrestricted because the satisfaction clause required that the plaintiff determine in good faith that he was not satisfied (51 Cal. 2d 119, 122) .

In Jara v. Suprema Meats, Inc. (2004) 121 Cal. App. 4th 1238, 18 Cal. Rptr. 3d 187 , one of three shareholders owning a corporation sued the other two shareholders for increasing their own compensation as officers in violation of what the plaintiff claimed was a contract not to raise any officer's compensation without the consent of all shareholders. The trial court rendered judgment for the plaintiff on the premise that all three shareholders had exchanged promises not to vote for increases in compensation without the approval of the other two (analogous to a voting trust). The court of appeal reversed because the evidence (including the plaintiff's own testimony) established that when one of the other shareholders made that promise, it was not conditioned on receiving a similar commitment from the plaintiff or on any expectation of some other promise in exchange. That promise amounted to nothing more than an expression of goodwill or perhaps an offer to enter into some future contract regarding voting rights (121 Cal. App. 4th 1238, 1252) .

[b] Contract Lacks Consideration

Mattei v. Hopper (1958) 51 Cal. 2d 119, 330 P.2d 625 , is discussed in [a], above.

[c] Unrestricted Right to Withdraw

Mattei v. Hopper (1958) 51 Cal. 2d 119, 330 P.2d 625 , is discussed in [a], above.

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Requirement of Mutuality of Obligation

In Kremen v. Cohen (9th Cir. 2003) 337 F.3d 1024 , the registrant of an Internet domain name brought an action for breach of contract, among other things, against the exclusive domain name registrar who had later transferred that domain name to another party. The third party had sent a fraudulent letter to the registrar, asserting that the registrant had abandoned the name. The trial court granted summary judgment for the registrar. The court of appeals affirmed on the breach of contract count, holding that the registrant did not give any consideration for his domain name so he had no contract with the registrar. The court cited Civ. Code § 1605 for the requirement that the party claiming breach must show that it conferred some benefit that the other party was not already entitled to receive, or suffered some prejudice that it was not already bound to endure. In this case, the registrant did not pay the registrar for his domain name, nor did he provide any marketing data with his contact information. The registrar was giving away domain names because the National Science Foundation was paying it to do so. Knowledge of the recipient's identity was a consequence of the gift. Absent evidence it was something the donor bargained for, it was not consideration (337 F.3d 1024, 1028-1029) .

In Schaefer v. Williams (1993) 15 Cal. App. 4th 1243, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 212 , the court of appeal affirmed a judgment for the defendant on a contract cause of action. The plaintiff and the defendant were candidates for the same political office. The defendant signed a pledge to abide by the Code of Fair Campaign Practices [see Elec. Code § 20400 et seq. (formerly Elec. Code § 12500 et seq.)], which provided that no candidate would use character defamation or attacks. The defendant circulated a campaign brochure that discussed legal difficulties the plaintiff had in the 1980s. The court of appeal set forth the elements necessary for a contract under Civ. Code § 1550 and concluded that the pledge was not a contract, it was only a promise by one party (15 Cal. App. 4th 1243, 1246) .

Hancock Oil Co. v. McClellan (1955) 135 Cal. App. 2d 667, 288 P.2d 39 , was an action on a book account for the balance due for gasoline sold and delivered. The defendant raised the special defense that it was the custom of the industry to allow a temperature correction and adjustment on all gasoline, and if that was allowed, the defendant would be entitled to credit for overcharges made for a number of gallons that were charged for but were not delivered because of the change in temperature. The defendant claimed that the contract of distributorship between the plaintiff and the defendant was the contract of sale of the petroleum products, and each delivery of gasoline was in pursuance of that contract. In affirming the trial court's judgment, the court of appeal held that since the distributorship agreement was not mutually obligatory and reserved to the plaintiff theright to terminate it at will, it was not enforceable and could not be the basis for recovery (135 Cal. App. 2d 667, 669-670) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
D. Existence of Contract
2. Mutuality of Obligation

5-50 California Points & Authorities §§ 50.371-50.379

[Reserved]

§§ 50.371[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
D. Existence of Contract
2. Mutuality of Obligation

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.380

§ 50.380 Lack of Mutuality of Obligation Is Immaterial to Executed Contract

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE REQUIREMENT OF MUTUALITY OF OBLIGATION TO MAKE A CONTRACT ENFORCEABLE DOES NOT APPLY TO AN EXECUTED CONTRACT.

A. Requirement of Mutuality Is Not Applicable to Executed Contract. The requirement of mutuality of obligation does not apply to an executed contract or to executed portions of an executory contract (Mutz v. Wallace (1963) 214 Cal. App. 2d 100, 109, 29 Cal. Rptr. 170).

[Optional] B. Plaintiff Is Entitled to Full Recovery on Executed Contract. If the plaintiff has fully performed his or her side of the bargain so that the contract is executed, the plaintiff is entitled to a full recovery on the entire contract (see Mutz v. Wallace (1963) 214 Cal. App. 2d 100, 109, 29 Cal. Rptr. 170).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that a contract is enforceable despite lack of mutuality of obligation, because the contract was executed, or key portions of it were executed and the action for contract damages involves those executed portions.

This form may be used in combination with other memoranda for submission of a complete memorandum appropriate to the proceduralcontext in which it raised, such as a memorandum in opposition to a demurrer or motion for summary judgment. It may also be incorporated into a trial or appellate brief. However used, counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Memoranda

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[d] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.370 may be used in appropriate cases to oppose the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Requirement of Mutuality Is Not Applicable to Executed Contract

Mutz v. Wallace (1963) 214 Cal. App. 2d 100, 29 Cal. Rptr. 170 , was an action for specific performance of a contract to make a will. The plaintiff and the decedent had executed a written instrument that was a valid and binding contract in which the plaintiff promised to render certain personal services faithfully and efficiently throughout the natural life of the decedent, and the decedent promised to pay the plaintiff a monthly salary and to execute a will leaving $10,000 and some real property to the plaintiff. The plaintiff fully performed his side of the bargain. The trial court rendered judgment for the plaintiff for specific performance. On appeal the executor argued that the contract could be binding only if the decedent had performed.

The court of appeal affirmed. There was no merit in that argument since the defense of want of mutuality of obligation applies only to executory contracts, not to an executed contract or provision (214 Cal. App. 2d 100, 109) .

[b] Plaintiff Is Entitled to Full Recovery on Executed Contract

Mutz v. Wallace (1963) 214 Cal. App. 2d 100, 29 Cal. Rptr. 170 , is discussed in [a], above.

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Requirement of Mutuality Is Not Applicable to Executed Contract

J.A. Folger & Co. v. Williamson (1954) 129 Cal. App. 2d 184, 276 P.2d 645 , was an action for damages for breach of a contract involving the loss of goods. The trial court rendered judgment for the plaintiff against several the defendants, which was affirmed on appeal except as to one defendant against whom the judgment was reversed. Under the contract, the plaintiff agreed to tender to a partnership as many of its shipments as its general business and market conditions warranted during the term of the contract, and the partnership agreed to accept, transport, and deliver shipments that were tendered to it. The partnership handled a number of the plaintiff's shipments under this contract. In discussing whether the contract was lacking in mutuality, the court noted that the defect of want of mutuality applies only to executory contracts and not to an executed contract nor to the executed portion of a contract. Since some shipments had been made under the contract, part of the contract was executed, and the defense of lack of mutuality did not apply to the shipment that was lost (129 Cal. App. 2d 184, 187) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
D. Existence of Contract
2. Mutuality of Obligation

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.381

§ 50.381 Doctrine of Mutuality Does Not Apply to Unilateral Contracts

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE DOCTRINE OF MUTUALITY OF OBLIGATION DOES NOT APPLY TO UNILATERAL CONTRACTS.

A. Unilateral Contract Defined. A unilateral contract is a bargain to exchange an act for a promise. A contract comes into existence when the act is completed (Anchor Cas. Co. v. Surety Bond Sav. & L. Ass'n (1962) 204 Cal. App. 2d 175, 182, 22 Cal. Rptr. 278).

B. Doctrine of Mutuality Is Not Applicable to Unilateral Contracts. The doctrine of mutuality of obligation does not apply tounilateral contracts (Asmus v. Pacific Bell (2000) 23 Cal. 4th 1, 14-15, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 179, 999 P.2d 71 ; Anchor Cas. Co. v. Surety Bond Sav. & L. Ass'n (1962) 204 Cal. App. 2d 175, 182, 183, 22 Cal. Rptr. 278).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that the contract is enforceable despite lack of mutuality of obligation, because the contract is unilateral.

This form may be used in combination with other memoranda for submission of a complete memorandum appropriate to the procedural context in which it raised, such as a memorandum in opposition to a demurrer or motion for summary judgment. It may also be incorporated into a trial or appellate brief. However used, counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Memoranda

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[d] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.370 may be used in appropriate cases to oppose the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Unilateral Contract Defined

Anchor Cas. Co. v. Surety Bond Sav. & L. Ass'n (1962) 204 Cal. App. 2d 175, 22 Cal. Rptr. 278 , was an action by a city against a contractor and his surety on a subdivision bond in which the surety filed a cross complaint in part for damages against the city, the contractor, and a savings and loan association as guarantor. The contractor had obtained a permit from the city to construct and subdivide a residential housingproject. The contractor indicated in a certificate of dedication that he would cause certain streets, street lighting facilities, and other offsite improvements to be put in and dedicated to the city. The city required the contractor to obtain a bond from a surety company for the faithful performance of the offsite improvement work. Before executing the bond, pursuant to the surety's request, the association made a written commitment in the form of a letter that in the event a loan was made, it would disburse a certain sum for the payment of offsite improvements to guaranty their completion. The improvements were never completed, and as a result of the contractor's default under the bond, the surety completed the improvements, but the association refused to pay. The trial court rendered judgment for the surety. On appeal the association contended that there was no written agreement between the parties because there was no consideration given and no mutuality.

The court of appeal affirmed. The agreement involved constituted a unilateral contract. There was a bargain to exchange an act for a promise, which in this case was a conditional promise. The contract came into existence when the act was completed, that is, when the surety executed the bond. The promise to disburse the sum for the payment of offsite improvements in order to guaranty the completion of the improvements was conditioned on the association's making the loan. Once the loan was made, the promise became absolute (204 Cal. App. 2d 175, 182) .

[b] Doctrine of Mutuality Is Not Applicable to Unilateral Contracts

In Asmus v. Pacific Bell (2000) 23 Cal. 4th 1, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 179, 999 P.2d 71 , the California Supreme Court granted the request of the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit for an answer to the following certified question of law: "Once an employer's unilaterally adopted policy--which requires employees to be retained so long as a specified condition does not occur--has become a part of the employment contract, may the employer thereafter unilaterally terminate the policy, even though the specified condition has not occurred?" The court concluded the answer to the certified question was yes. An employer may unilaterally terminate a policy that contains a specified condition, if the condition is one of indefinite duration, and the employer effects the change after a reasonable time, on reasonable notice, and without interfering with the employees' vested benefits (23 Cal. 4th 1, 5, 18) . The employer had issued a management employment security policy (MESP) that it would offer all management employees who continued to meet its changing business expectations employment security through reassignment, even if their present jobs were eliminated, as long as there was no change that would materially affect its business plan achievement. It later notified its managers that would terminated its MESP to competemore successfully in the marketplace. Sixty former management employees filed an action seeking declaratory and injunctive relief, and damages for breach of contract, breach of fiduciary duty, fraud and ERISA violations. The district court certified for interlocutory appeal the issue whether the employer breached the MESP, and the Ninth Circuit accepted the interlocutory appeal. The Ninth Circuit stated its certification request and noted that the answer to the certified question by the Supreme Court would determine the remaining portion of the case pending before it (23 Cal. 4th 1, 8-9) .

The plaintiffs contended that the employer gave no valid consideration to bind the proposed MESP termination and subsequent modification. When it unilaterally terminated the contract to create a new contract with different terms, it left its employees with no opportunity to bargain for additional benefits or other consideration. Plaintiffs claimed that the parties' obligations were unequal, and there was no mutuality of obligation for the change. The Supreme Court disagreed, citing authority to the effect that the mutuality of obligation principle requiring new consideration for contract termination applies only to bilateral contracts. In the unilateral contract context, there is no mutuality of obligation. For an effective modification, there is consideration in the form of continued employee services (23 Cal. 4th 1, 14-15) .

Anchor Cas. Co. v. Surety Bond Sav. & L. Ass'n (1962) 204 Cal. App. 2d 175, 22 Cal. Rptr. 278 , is discussed in [a], above.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
D. Existence of Contract
2. Mutuality of Obligation

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.382

§ 50.382 Right to Terminate Contract on Specified Conditions Does Not Render Contract Unenforceable

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

A CONTRACT IS NOT UNENFORCEABLE EVEN THOUGH IT CONTAINS A PROVISION GIVING ONE PARTY AN OPTION TO TERMINATE IT ON SPECIFIED CONDITIONS.

Right to Terminate Contract on Specified Conditions Does Not Render Contract Unenforceable. A contract giving one party an option to terminate it on specified conditions is enforceable and is not lacking in mutuality (Benard v. Walkup (1969) 272 Cal. App. 2d 595, 604, 77 Cal. Rptr. 544).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that the contract is enforceable even though one of the parties has a right to terminate the contract, because the right is dependent on certain conditions.

This form may be used in combination with other memoranda for submission of a complete memorandum appropriate to the procedural context in which it raised, such as a memorandum in opposition to a demurrer or motion for summary judgment. It may also be incorporated into a trial or appellate brief. However used, counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Memoranda

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[d] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.370 may be used in appropriate cases to oppose the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Right to Terminate Contract on Specified Conditions Does Not Render Contract Unenforceable

In Benard v. Walkup (1969) 272 Cal. App. 2d 595, 77 Cal. Rptr. 544 , the plaintiff sued for legal malpractice based in part on a contingent fee contract for legal services. The trial court rendered for the plaintiff on the breach of contract cause of action. On appeal the defendant contended that the contingent fee agreement was invalid because it lacked mutuality. Under the terms of the agreement, he was permitted to withdraw from the case if, in his opinion, investigation disclosed that one of several situations existed.

The court of appeal affirmed. A contract is lacking in mutuality when one party has the right to terminate it at any time at his or her pleasure. However, it is equally true that a contract may give one party an option to terminate it on specified conditions. In this case, the defendant's right of withdrawal was only on the occurrence of an extrinsic event, the unfavorable results of an investigation. Furthermore, although the defendant's opinion would be involved in any withdrawal, this provision was analogous to a right to terminate for cause or for good cause, so that the right must involve an opinion formed on reasonable grounds and in good faith (272 Cal. App. 2d 595, 604) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
D. Existence of Contract
2. Mutuality of Obligation

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.383

§ 50.383 Mutuality of Obligation Is Not Required When Consideration Exists

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

MUTUALITY OF OBLIGATION IS NECESSARY IN BILATERAL CONTRACTS ONLY BECAUSE THERE ARE MUTUAL PROMISES. WHEN SUFFICIENT CONSIDERATION IS OTHERWISE PRESENT, MUTUALITY IS NOT ESSENTIAL.

Mutuality of Obligation Is Not Required When Consideration Exists. Mutuality of obligation is necessary in bilateral contracts only because there are mutual promises. When sufficient consideration is otherwise present, mutuality is not essential (Principal Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Vars, Pave, McCord & Freedman (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 1469, 1488-1489, 77 Cal. Rptr. 2d 479).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that the contract is enforceable even though there is no mutuality of obligation, because there is sufficient consideration otherwise.

This form may be used in combination with other memoranda for submission of a complete memorandum appropriate to the procedural context in which it raised, such as a memorandum in opposition to a demurrer or motion for summary judgment. It may also be incorporated into a trial or appellate brief. However used, counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Memoranda

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[d] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.370 may be used in appropriate cases to oppose the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Mutuality of Obligation Is Not Required When Consideration Exists

In Principal Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Vars, Pave, McCord & Freedman (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 1469, 77 Cal. Rptr. 2d 479 , a partnership signed a lease, which each partner personally guarantied, for the firm's office space. The lease provided expressly that in the event of a trust-deed foreclosure sale of the landlord's interest, the firm would, on request, attorney to the purchaser as the successor landlord, on the same terms. The lease was subordinate to a trust deed, and eventually the beneficiary of the trust deed foreclosed and took over the landlord's interest. The beneficiary, now acting as the new landlord, invoked the attornment provision of the lease and requested that the firm sign a new lease on the same terms as the original lease. The firm viewed the foreclosure as extinguishing the lease, however; and after giving notice, the firm vacated the premises. The new landlord sued the firm for breach of the lease and sued the partners individually on their personal guaranties. The trial court rendered judgment for the new landlord. On appeal, the partners as guarantors contended that the attornment provision in the lease was unenforceable because it vested the new landlord with full control over whether the lease would continue, and therefore, the lease lacked mutuality of obligation.

The court of appeal affirmed. Normally, unless the parties to a lease agree otherwise, a lease is subordinate to a trust deed that the landlord executed before the lease was signed; and in the event of foreclosure under the trust deed, the lease would be extinguished (65 Cal. App. 4th 1469, 1478) . In this case, the attornment provision in the lease was an agreement for adifferent result, namely, that in the event of foreclosure under a superior trust deed, although the lease would be extinguished, the lessee would, on request, remain in possession and accede to a new tenancy, on the same terms, under the original landlord's successor in interest (65 Cal. App. 4th 1469, 1487-1488) . Even though the new landlord was free to choose whether to require that the firm attorney, there was no fatal lack of mutuality of obligation. Mutuality of obligation is necessary in bilateral contracts only because there are mutual promises. The new landlord was not a party to the lease, however, but was a third-party beneficiary of the lease, particularly the attornment provision, which was a contract between the firm and the original landlord. A third-party beneficiary need not supply any consideration in order to enforce an agreement made for the third party's benefit. There was no doubt that the lease, particularly the attornment provision, was supported by ample consideration. When sufficient consideration is otherwise present, mutuality is not essential (65 Cal. App. 4th 1469, 1488-1489) .

127 of 168 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
D. Existence of Contract
2. Mutuality of Obligation

5-50 California Points & Authorities §§ 50.384-50.389

[Reserved]

§§ 50.384[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
D. Existence of Contract
3. Requirement of Written or Oral Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.390

§ 50.390 Contract Cannot Be Ascertained Whether Oral, Written, or Implied by Conduct

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

IT CANNOT BE ASCERTAINED FROM THE COMPLAINT WHETHER THE CONTRACT ON WHICH THE ACTION IS BASED IS WRITTEN, ORAL, OR IMPLIED BY CONDUCT.

Insufficiency of Contract Allegations. The party against whom a complaint has been filed may object to the complaint by demurrer on the ground that it cannot be ascertained from the complaint whether the contract is written, oral, or implied by conduct (Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(g); see Zumbrun v. University of So. Cal. (1972) 25 Cal. App. 3d 1, 9, 101 Cal. Rptr. 499) when the ground appears on the face of the complaint or from any matter of which the court is required to or may take judicial notice (Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of a demurrer that the complaint does not allege whether the contract was written, oral, or implied by conduct [see Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(g)].

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a party seeks to raise this contention. For example, its usual use will be to support a demurrer under Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(g).

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised in support of a defendant's demurrer, the memorandum would include an analysis of the complaint's allegations showing that they do not sufficiently allege a contract, whether one that is written, oral, or implied by conduct.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum supporting a demurrer, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Insufficiency of Contract Allegations

Zumbrun v. University of So. Cal. (1972) 25 Cal. App. 3d 1, 101 Cal. Rptr. 499 , was an action for damages for breach of contract. The plaintiff alleged in her complaint that she enrolled in a university to conclude her college education and, in reference to a course that was a prerequisite to other courses necessary to her major field, the university and a professor represented and warranted to the plaintiff that this course would be a full and complete course, but the professor refused to teach the class partway through the course. The plaintiff did not allege whether the contract was written or oral. The university demurred on the ground that it could not be ascertained whether the contract on which the plaintiff's action was based was written or oral. The trial court sustained the special demurrer.

The court of appeal reversed on other grounds but noted that, since the contractual relationship between a student and a university arises out of both oral and written elements, the special demurrer was well taken (25 Cal. App. 3d 1, 9) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Insufficiency of Contract Allegations

In Otworth v. Southern Pac. Transportation Co. (1985) 166 Cal. App. 3d 452, 212 Cal. Rptr. 743 , the court of appeal affirmed the dismissal of an action following a general demurrer. The complaint, which alleged numerous theories of recovery including breach of contract, arose out of a disputeconcerning wage withholding for income tax purposes by an employer. One of the grounds for upholding the trial court action was that the complaint failed to allege whether the employment contract was written or oral (166 Cal. App. 3d 452, 458-459) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
D. Existence of Contract
3. Requirement of Written or Oral Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.391

§ 50.391 Complaint Is Based on Instrument in Writing That Does Not Constitute Contract

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

ALTHOUGH THE COMPLAINT PURPORTS TO BE BASED ON AN INSTRUMENT IN WRITING, THE INSTRUMENT DOES NOT SATISFY THE LEGAL PREREQUISITES FOR A CONTRACT.

A. Consideration Required. It is essential to the existence of a contract that there should be a sufficient cause or consideration (Civ. Code § 1550).

B. Written Instrument Presumptive of Consideration. A written instrument is presumptive evidence of consideration (Civ. Code § 1614).

C. When Written Instrument Is Contract. An instrument in writing is not a contract unless the instrument itself contains the contract to do the thing for the nonperformance of which an action may be brought. The writing must create a duty before a duty may be inferred from the writing. It is not sufficient that a cause of action is in some way remotely or indirectly connected with an instrument in writing or that the instrument is a link in the chain establishing the cause of action (Citizens Cas. Co. v. Otis Clark & Co. (1971) 19 Cal. App. 3d 294, 299-300, 96 Cal. Rptr. 838).

[Optional] D. Letters Are Not Written Instruments. An ordinary letter expressing feelings and intentions but not stating a completed contract is not an instrument in writing within Civil Code Section 1614, and a complaint based on an ordinary letter must allege consideration (Michaelian v. State Fund (1996) 50 Cal. App. 4th 1093, 1112, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 133 ; Foltz v. First Trust & Sav. Bank (1948) 86 Cal. App. 2d 59, 61-62, 194 P.2d 135 ; Weisbrod v. Weisbrod (1938) 27 Cal. App. 2d 712, 719, 81 P.2d 633).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that, while the complaint purports to be based on a contract evidenced by an instrument in writing, the instrument alleged does not meet the legal requirements for a contract and the complaint does not allege any consideration for the promise sued on.

The cases that construe Civ. Code § 1614, which provides that a written instrument is presumptive evidence of consideration, generally do not appear to set forth any standard by which a particular writing may be determined to be a "written instrument" for purposes of the statute. This form therefore is based on the case law definition of "instrument in writing," which the courts have developed for the purpose of determining whether the statute of limitations has run in an action alleged to be based on an instrument in writing [see § 50.60].

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a party seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used to support a demurrer on the ground that the complaint fails to allege a valid written contract.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised in support of a defendant's demurrer, the memorandum would include an analysis of the complaint's allegations showing that they do not sufficiently allege a written contract.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum supporting a demurrer, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing amemorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.400 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] When Written Instrument Is Contract

Citizens Cas. Co. v. Otis Clark & Co. (1971) 19 Cal. App. 3d 294, 96 Cal. Rptr. 838 , is discussed in § 50.120[3][c].

[b] Letters Are Not Written Instruments

In Michaelian v. State Fund (1996) 50 Cal. App. 4th 1093, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 133 , an employee sued his employer's liability insurer on contract, tort, and constructive-trust theories after the insurer withdrew from defending him against another employee's claims of sexual harassment, constructive discharge, assault and battery, and intentional and negligent infliction of emotional distress. The trial court sustained the insurer's general demurrer without leave to amend. On appeal the employee's principal contention was that the first amended complaint sufficiently alleged an enforceable agreement, consisting of the State Fund's reservation-of-rights letter as modified by a letter from the employee's counsel, and the State Fund materially breached the agreement by not paying all defense costs incurred after a certain date. The employee contended that the State Fund letter constituted an offer, the employee's letter was a counteroffer, and the State Fund's later payment of some defense costs was an acceptance.

The court of appeal affirmed. The State Fund letter was not an offer (50 Cal. App. 4th 1093, 1110-1112) . The employee had not shown there was sufficient consideration for the State Fund's conditional agreement to defend. The employee relied on Civ. Code § 1614 in arguing that the consideration requirement was met. However, Foltz v. First Trust & Sav. Bank (1948) 86 Cal. App. 2d 59, 61-62, 194 P.2d 135 , and Weisbrod v. Weisbrod (1938) 27 Cal. App. 2d 712, 718-721, 81 P.2d 633 , discussed below, held that "written instrument" as it appears in that statute does not apply to letters but applies only to more formal legal documents (50 Cal. App. 4th 1093, 1112) .

Foltz v. First Trust & Sav. Bank (1948) 86 Cal. App. 2d 59, 194 P.2d 135 , was an action against an executor of a decedent's will and a legatee to recover on a contract. The plaintiff alleged that before the decedent's death, the decedent wrote a letter in which he stated that quarterly he would send the plaintiff a check. The decedent did not make any otherprovision, either by will, trust, or annuity, to pay the plaintiff the amount referred to in the letter. The complaint sought a judgment against the executor and the sole legatee under the decedent's will. The defendants demurred generally. The trial court sustained the demurrer.

The court of appeal affirmed. Civ. Code § 1614, which states that a written instrument is presumptive evidence of a consideration, is not applicable to ordinary letters and does not raise a presumption that there is consideration for them. The document signed by the decedent in this case was merely a letter written to the plaintiff, in which decedent made certain promises. As the letter was not an instrument within the provisions of Civ. Code § 1614, there was no presumption that it was supported by consideration. The complaint failed to allege any prior valuable consideration for the promise. Any moral obligation resting on the decedent in the plaintiff's favor was not a sufficient consideration to convert the letter into a contract (86 Cal. App. 2d 59, 61-62) .

Weisbrod v. Weisbrod (1938) 27 Cal. App. 2d 712, 81 P.2d 633 , was an action for declaratory relief in which the plaintiffs alleged an agreement to divide an estate among the plaintiffs and the defendant in consideration of the plaintiffs' refraining from contesting the will. Under the will, the defendant received the bulk of the estate. The defendant wrote letters to her brother and sister in which she informed them of the will and that she was executrix. She stated that after the debts of the estate had been paid, the remainder would be divided among the living heirs, share and share alike. The plaintiffs sought a judgment declaring their rights in the estate. The trial court, in rendering judgment for the defendant, found that the defendant had not contracted with any of the plaintiffs respecting the distribution of the estate.

The court of appeal affirmed. The letters were expressive of the defendant's feelings and intentions as they were when the letters were written, but the letters were not completed contracts nor written instruments that could be said under Civ. Code § 1614 to be presumptive evidence of consideration. The term "instrument in writing" includes bills, bonds, conveyances, leases, mortgages, promissory notes, and wills, but not accounts, ordinary letters, or memoranda. The term "instrument," as applied to documents, necessarily imports a paper writing; but not every paper writing is necessarily an instrument within the settled statutory meaning of the term. With reference to writings, the term "instrument," as used in California statutes, has been defined to mean an agreement expressed in writing, signed, and delivered by one person to another, transferring the title to or creating a lien on real property, or giving a right to a debt or duty (27 Cal. App. 2d 712, 719) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Consideration Required

In O'Byrne v. Santa Monica-UCLA Medical Center (2001) 94 Cal. App. 4th 797 , the court of appeal affirmed the trial court's grant of summary judgment for defendant medical center as to plaintiff physician's claim for breach of contract. The medical center had denied the physician attending staff privileges. The plaintiff's cause of action for breach of contract was based on the allegation that the medical center's bylaws constituted a contract between himself and the medical center. The court stated that the crucial question was whether the hospital's bylaws created an enforceable contract (94 Cal. App. 4th 797, 805) . It noted that whether a set of bylaws constitutes a contract turns on whether the elements of a contract are present, and cited Civ. Code § 1550(4) as to the requirement of consideration. The court found that 22 Cal. Code Reg. §§ 70701 and 70703 required the medical center to appoint a medical staff, to adopt bylaws, and to abide by those bylaws. It found that there was no consideration given for the bylaws--neither the medical center nor the plaintiff conferred on the other any more than what was required by law. The court of appeal held that under California contract law, medical staff bylaws adopted pursuant to 22 Cal. Code Reg. § 70703(b) do not in and of themselves constitute a contract between a hospital and a physician on its medical staff. The plaintiff, however, was not deprived of a remedy, as an aggrieved physician can enjoin a hospital from contravening the terms and provisions of the bylaws (94 Cal. App. 4th 797, 808-810) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
D. Existence of Contract
3. Requirement of Written or Oral Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.392

§ 50.392 Complaint Fails to Allege Consideration for Oral Contract

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE COMPLAINT ALLEGES THAT THE CONTRACT IS ORAL, BUT THERE IS NO ALLEGATION OF CONSIDERATION.

Consideration for Oral Contract Must Be Alleged. If the complaint does not allege that the contract was in writing, a consideration must be alleged (Acheson v. Western Union Tel. Co. (1892) 96 Cal. 641, 644, 31 P. 583).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that when the complaint shows the contract to be oral, consideration must be alleged.

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a party seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used to support a demurrer on the ground that the complaint fails to allege a valid oral contract.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised in support of a defendant's demurrer, the memorandum would include an analysis of the complaint's allegations showing that they do not sufficiently allege a oral contract.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum supporting a demurrer, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.402 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Consideration for Oral Contract Must Be Alleged

Acheson v. Western Union Tel. Co. (1892) 96 Cal. 641, 31 P. 583 , was an action for a breach of a contract to send a telegram. The complaint alleged that the plaintiff's assignors presented a message to the defendant, and the defendant undertook to forward it. The message was in the complaint. Several words in the message were transmitted by telegraph incorrectly. The defendant demurred generally. The trial court overruled the demurrer and entered a default judgment when the defendant did not answer.

The Supreme Court reversed. No consideration was alleged for the defendant's undertaking to transmit the message. Contracts, to be valid, must be formed on a consideration, and except as to contracts that imply it, the consideration must be proved and consequently should be stated. The exception at common law was for contracts under seal, and the exception under statute is for all contracts in writing [Civ. Code § 1614]. The agreement in this case to forward the message in question was not alleged to have been in writing, and therefore a consideration should have been alleged (96 Cal. 641, 644) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
D. Existence of Contract
3. Requirement of Written or Oral Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities §§ 50.393-50.399

[Reserved]

§§ 50.393[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
D. Existence of Contract
3. Requirement of Written or Oral Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.400

§ 50.400 Consideration Need Not Be Pleaded When Contract Is Written

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

A WRITTEN INSTRUMENT IS PRESUMPTIVE EVIDENCE OF CONSIDERATION; THEREFORE, CONSIDERATION NEED NOTBE ALLEGED IN AN ACTION BASED ON A WRITTEN INSTRUMENT.

A. Consideration Is Presumed for Written Instrument. A written instrument is presumptive evidence of consideration (Civ. Code § 1614).

B. Consideration for Written Instruments Need Not Be Alleged. Since consideration for a written contract is presumed, it is not necessary to allege the consideration in an action on a written instrument (Henke v. Eureka Endowment Asso. (1893) 100 Cal. 429, 432-433, 34 P. 1089).

[Optional] C. When Instrument in Writing Is Considered Contract. An instrument in writing is a contract if the instrument itself contains the contract to do the thing for the nonperformance of which an action may be brought. The writing must create a duty before a duty may be inferred from the writing (Citizens Cas. Co. v. Otis Clark & Co. (1971) 19 Cal. App. 3d 294, 299-300, 96 Cal. Rptr. 838).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that the complaint alleges consideration for the contract because the complaint alleges that the contract was in writing or the action was based on a written contract.

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a party seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used to oppose a demurrer that has been interposed on the ground that the complaint fails to allege a valid written contract.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised in opposition to a defendant's demurrer, the memorandum would include an analysis of the complaint's allegations showing that they sufficiently allege a written contract.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum opposing a demurrer, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.391 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Consideration for Written Instruments Need Not Be Alleged

Henke v. Eureka Endowment Asso. (1893) 100 Cal. 429, 34 P. 1089 , was an action for breach of a contract to pay a sum of money. The plaintiff alleged that the defendant executed a contract in writing that on a given date, the defendant would pay the plaintiff a certain sum of money. The defendant demurred generally and specially. The trial court overruled the demurrers. Judgment was rendered for the plaintiff.

The Supreme Court affirmed. Civ. Code § 1614 states that a written instrument is presumptive evidence of consideration. When the plaintiff in this case alleged that the contract was in writing, she stated facts from which the law presumed a consideration. Hence it was unnecessary to allege specially the consideration (100 Cal. 429, 432-433) .

[b] When Instrument in Writing Is Considered Contract

Citizens Cas. Co. v. Otis Clark & Co. (1971) 19 Cal. App. 3d 294, 96 Cal. Rptr. 838 , is discussed in § 50.120[3][c].

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Consideration for Written Instruments Need Not Be Alleged

Cuthill v. Peabody (1912) 19 Cal. App. 304, 125 P. 926 , was an action for the price of shares of stock that the defendants contracted to buy fromthe plaintiff. The contract was not alleged to have been expressed in writing nor pleaded in its own words. However, the complaint alleged that the defendants promised and agreed to buy the stock from the plaintiff for a certain sum on a certain date if the plaintiff desired to sell it; on that date, the plaintiff notified the defendants that he desired to sell the stock at the price stated and tendered the stock, duly endorsed for transfer, to the defendants; but they refused to buy or pay for the stock as agreed, notwithstanding that the plaintiff had kept and performed all of the conditions required of him by the contract. The trial court sustained the defendants' demurrer, in which the defendants contended that the complaint was defective in not alleging that the contract was founded on an adequate or any consideration. The court of appeal reversed. As a matter of pleading, the plaintiff was not required to allege that the contract was founded on a consideration. To be valid under the statute of frauds, the contract must have been in writing, and the law presumes that such a contract was in writing. Presumptions of law need not be pleaded. In this case the presumption that the contract was in writing necessarily followed the allegation of its making. Since every contract expressed in writing carries with it the presumption of a consideration for its execution, the burden of showing a want of consideration is on the party who seeks to avoid the contract, and it was not necessary to allege specifically the consideration for the contract (19 Cal. App. 304, 307-308) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
D. Existence of Contract
3. Requirement of Written or Oral Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.401

§ 50.401 Allegations of Terms of Oral Contract Show Consideration

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

WHEN THE ALLEGATIONS CONSTRUED TOGETHER SUFFICIENTLY SHOW ADEQUATE CONSIDERATION FOR AN ORAL CONTRACT, A SPECIAL ALLEGATION OF CONSIDERATION IS UNNECESSARY.

Allegations of Terms of Oral Contract Show Consideration. When all of the allegations in a complaint construed together show that the consideration for an oral contract was adequate, a special allegation of consideration is unnecessary (Johnson v. Servaes (1962) 210 Cal. App. 2d 392, 399, 26 Cal. Rptr. 733).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that a complaint for breach of an oral contract alleges consideration because the allegations of the complaint construed together show adequate consideration.

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a party seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used to oppose a demurrer that has been interposed on the ground that the complaint fails to allege a valid oral contract.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised in opposition to a defendant's demurrer, the memorandum would include an analysis of the complaint's allegations showing that they sufficiently allege the consideration given in an oral contract.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum opposing a demurrer, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.392 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Allegations of Terms of Oral Contract Show Consideration

Johnson v. Servaes (1962) 210 Cal. App. 2d 392, 26 Cal. Rptr. 733 , was an action for specific performance of an oral agreement to cancel a note and release a deed of trust by which the note was secured. The complaint alleged an oral agreement between a broker and the defendants concerning property that had been deeded to an irrigation district before the agreement was made. The plaintiffs would pay all amounts due the irrigation district and persuade the district to reconvey the property to one of the plaintiffs. The broker would satisfy the remaining liens on the property except for one defendant's deed of trust and would pay certain of the defendants' attorney's fees and other debts. The consideration to be given for the real property was in excess of the fair and reasonable value, and as a further consideration to induce the broker to undertake efforts to obtain a reconveyance of the property, two of the defendants agreed to cancel the note and release the property from the lien without any payment of money. The trial court rendered judgment for the plaintiffs.

The court of appeal affirmed. There was no direct allegation of adequacy of consideration, but when all of the allegations of the complaint were construed together, the complaint sufficiently alleged adequate consideration. Since the facts were sufficiently pleaded, the complaint did not need to contain an allegation in so many words that the contract was supported by adequate consideration (210 Cal. App. 2d 392, 399) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
D. Existence of Contract
3. Requirement of Written or Oral Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.402

§ 50.402 Failure to Allege Specific Duration of Oral Commercial Agreement Does Not Render Complaint Fatally Defective

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE COMPLAINT PLEADS A CAUSE OF ACTION FOR TERMINATION OF AN ORAL COMMERCIAL CONTRACT WITHOUT REASONABLE NOTICE; THEREFORE, THE COMPLAINT IS NOT REQUIRED TO ALLEGE THE SPECIFIC DURATION OF THE AGREEMENT.

Pleading Specific Duration of Oral Commercial Agreement. When a plaintiff bringing an action for breach of a commercial contract alleges no specific duration of the agreement, the mereabsence of the allegation does not render the complaint fatally vague, as long as what constitutes a commercially reasonable time is presumptively within the defendant's knowledge (Khoury v. Maly's of California (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 612, 616, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 708).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that an action for damages for breach of an oral commercial contract may be maintained even though the duration of the agreement is uncertain, because the law implies a reasonable duration.

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a party seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used to oppose a demurrer that has been interposed on the ground that the complaint fails to allege a valid oral commercial contract.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised in opposition to a defendant's demurrer, the memorandum would include an analysis of the complaint's allegations showing that they sufficiently allege the an oral commercial contract.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum opposing a demurrer, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Pleading Specific Duration of Oral Commercial Agreement

In Khoury v. Maly's of California (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 612, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 708 , the complaint alleged a cause of action for breach of an oral contract. The parties made an oral agreement that the defendant would supply a certain brand of hair care products to the plaintiff's beauty salon, for sale to the plaintiff's customers, and the plaintiff and his employees agreed to attend a training class and to sell the products. Pursuant to the agreement, the plaintiff and his employees attended the training, the defendant supplied the products, and the plaintiff displayed and sold the products. The plaintiff developed a clientele loyal to the products who would accept no substitutes. Thereafter, the defendant refused to continue to supply the plaintiff with the products, allegedly damaging the plaintiff's business. The trial court sustained the defendant's demurrer to this cause of action without leave to amend, on the ground that the allegations were uncertain as to the nature and duration of the oral agreement.

The court of appeal reversed. The plaintiff's allegations were sufficient to plead a cause of action for damages for termination without reasonable notice. An oral contract may be pleaded generally as to its effect, because it is rarely possible to allege the exact words. Furthermore, a demurrer for uncertainty is strictly construed, even when a complaint is in some respects uncertain, because ambiguities can be clarified under modern discovery procedures. While the plaintiff alleged no specific duration of the agreement, a reasonable term is implied in law; even assuming the contract to be terminable at will, Com. Code § 2309 requires reasonable notice to be given before termination. The complaint was not unfairly vague, because what constitutes a commercially reasonable time is presumptively within the defendant's knowledge as much as the plaintiff's (14 Cal. App. 4th 612, 616) .

135 of 168 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
D. Existence of Contract
3. Requirement of Written or Oral Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities §§ 50.403-50.409

[Reserved]

§§ 50.403[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
D. Existence of Contract
4. Promissory Estoppel Doctrine

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.410

§ 50.410 Cause of Action Is Based on Promissory Estoppel

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE COMPLAINT ALLEGES THE ELEMENTS OF PROMISSORY ESTOPPEL, AND NO CONSIDERATION NEED BE SHOWN.

A. Promise May Be Binding Without Consideration Under Promissory Estoppel Doctrine. The doctrine of promissory estoppel makes a promise binding even though there is no consideration in the sense of something that is bargained for and given in exchange (Drennan v. Star Paving Co. (1958) 51 Cal. 2d 409, 414, 333 P.2d 757).

B. Pleading Elements of Promissory Estoppel. If the complaint discloses that the defendant made a clear unambiguous promise to the plaintiff, that the defendant had reason to believe that the plaintiff would rely on the promise, that the plaintiff did rely on the promise, and that foreseeable damages resulted to the plaintiff, the complaint alleges a cause of action based on promissory estoppel (see Morrison v. Home Sav. & L. Ass'n (1959) 175 Cal. App. 2d 765, 768-773, 346 P.2d 917).

[Optional] C. Requirement That Injustice Be Unavoidable Except by Enforcing Promise. The requirement under the doctrine of promissory estoppel that it must appear that injustice can be avoided only by enforcing the promise is met when the plaintiff alleges responsive action of such a nature as to create a substantial and complete change of the plaintiff's position (Morrison v. Home Sav. & L. Ass'n (1959) 175 Cal. App. 2d 765, 773, 346 P.2d 917).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that consideration existed and was alleged because the doctrine of promissory estoppel is applicable.

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a party seeks to raisethis contention. For example, it may be used to oppose a demurrer that has been interposed on the ground that the complaint fails to allege consideration.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised in opposition to a defendant's demurrer, the memorandum would include an analysis of the complaint's allegations showing that they sufficiently allege facts which give rise to application of the promissory estoppel doctrine.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For memoranda addressing the related doctrine of equitable estoppel [see Evid. Code § 623], see Ch. 166, Negotiable Instruments .

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum opposing a demurrer, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.420 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Promise May Be Binding Without Consideration Under Promissory Estoppel Doctrine

Drennan v. Star Paving Co. (1958) 51 Cal. 2d 409, 333 P.2d 757 , a landmark decision, was an action for damages for refusal to perform paving work according to a bid submitted to the plaintiff as the general contractor. The trial court found that the defendant made a definite offer to do the paving, and the plaintiff relied on the defendant's bid in computing his ownbid. Judgment was rendered for the plaintiff. On appeal, the defendant contended that there was no enforceable contract between the parties since it had made a revocable offer and had revoked it before the plaintiff communicated his acceptance to the defendant.

The Supreme Court affirmed. There was no evidence that the defendant offered to make its bid irrevocable in exchange for the plaintiff's use of its figures in computing his bid. Nor was there evidence that would warrant interpreting the plaintiff's use of the defendant's bid as the acceptance, binding the plaintiff, on condition that he receive the main contract, to award the subcontract to the defendant. Thus there was neither an option supported by consideration nor a bilateral contract binding on both parties. However, a promise that the promisor should reasonably expect would induce action or forbearance of a definite and substantial character on the part of the promisee is binding if it does induce action or forbearance, and if injustice can be avoided only by enforcement of the promise. The absence of consideration is not fatal to the enforcement of the promise. The very purpose of the doctrine of promissory estoppel is to make a promise binding even though there was no consideration in the sense of something that is bargained for and given in exchange. Reasonable reliance serves to hold the offeror in lieu of the consideration ordinarily required to make the offer binding. When the plaintiff used the defendant's offer in computing his own bid, he bound himself to perform in reliance on the defendant's terms. Although the defendant did not bargain for this use of its bid, neither did the defendant make it idly, indifferent to whether it would be used or not. The defendant had reason to expect the plaintiff to rely on its bid and to want him to. Given this interest and the fact that the plaintiff was bound by his own bid, it was only fair that the plaintiff should have at least an opportunity to accept the defendant's bid after the general contract had been awarded to him. Thus the doctrine of promissory estoppel was applicable to the case (51 Cal. 2d 409, 414) .

[b] Pleading Elements of Promissory Estoppel

Morrison v. Home Sav. & L. Ass'n (1959) 175 Cal. App. 2d 765, 346 P.2d 917 , was an action for damages against a savings and loan association for breach of contract. The plaintiffs alleged that the association orally promised to lend a sum of money on the plaintiffs' property to a prospective purchaser. In reliance the plaintiffs authorized a realty company to sell the property. Purchasers were found. The association notified the realty company that it would lend a certain sum, which was satisfactory to the parties. In reliance on this loan commitment, the plaintiffs and purchasers made a written agreement for the sale of the property, and the plaintiffs made and consummated an agreement with a third person to purchase a new residence. The association later stated that it would not make the loan without an all-physical-loss insurance policy covering the property.Since such a policy could not be obtained, the association did not make the loan. The trial court sustained the association's general demurrer.

The court of appeal reversed. The plaintiffs sufficiently alleged a cause of action for promissory estoppel since the pleading disclosed that the association made a clear and well-defined promise to the plaintiffs, the association had reason to expect and foresee that if it made such a promise, the plaintiffs would rely on it, the plaintiffs relied on the promise, and the plaintiffs were damaged by the change in their position as a result of their reliance on the association's promise (175 Cal. App. 2d 765, 768-773) .

[c] Requirement That Injustice Be Unavoidable Except by Enforcing Promise

The facts and procedural background of Morrison v. Home Sav. & L. Ass'n (1959) 175 Cal. App. 2d 765, 346 P.2d 917 , are discussed in [b], above. The doctrine of promissory estoppel should be applied only if injustice can be avoided only by enforcing the promise. The court concluded that it was obvious from the pleading that the action taken by the plaintiffs in reliance on the association's conduct and loan commitment was of such a nature as to create a substantial and complete change of their position since, after the plaintiffs agreed to sell their house, they consummated a purchase of another house for themselves resulting in the ownership of two residences and the obligations accompanying them. The nature and extent of this hardship appeared to be substantial and consequently relief should be granted (175 Cal. App. 2d 765, 768-773) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Pleading Elements of Promissory Estoppel

The plaintiff in A-C Company, Inc. v. Security Pacific National Bank (1985) 173 Cal. App. 3d 462, 219 Cal. Rptr. 62 , had not returned loan renewal documents by the time stated in a bank's offer to renew the loans, but the plaintiff sought to make the bank's offer irrevocable on the basis of promissory estoppel. The court of appeal reversed a judgment for the plaintiff, because the jury had been allowed to decide the equitable issues by advisory verdict. It is proper to have a jury render advisory verdicts on factual issues that apply to promissory estoppel in a case in which promissory estoppel is only one issue relevant to claims based on legal theories. However, the trial court is required to make its own findings, adopt or reject the jury's findings, and decide equitable issues such as whether injustice can be avoided only by enforcing the promise and whether the party asserting promissory estoppel has unclean hands (173 Cal. App. 3d 462, 472-473) . A promise that the promisor should reasonably expect to induce action or forbearance of a definite and substantial character on the part of the promisee is binding if it does induce action or forbearance, and ifinjustice can be avoided only by enforcement of the promise (173 Cal. App. 3d 462, 472) .

H.W. Stanfield Constr. Corp. v. Robert McMullan & Son, Inc. (1971) 14 Cal. App. 3d 848, 92 Cal. Rptr. 669 , was an action for damages by general contractors against a subcontractor for refusal to do work in compliance with a bid submitted to the plaintiffs. The defendant submitted a bid to the plaintiffs on a contract that was much lower than the other bids the plaintiffs had received. After the plaintiffs requested confirmation of the bid from the defendant, he submitted a second bid that was higher than the previous one but still lower than the other bids. The plaintiffs used the defendant's second bid in preparing their bid on the prime contract and so advised the defendant. Two weeks after their bid was accepted, the plaintiffs submitted a proposed written contract to the defendant, which the defendant refused to sign. After trial, the court rendered judgment for the plaintiffs. The court of appeal affirmed. A promise that the promisor should reasonably expect to induce action or forbearance of a definite and substantial character on the part of the promisee is binding if it does induce action or forbearance, and if injustice can be avoided only by enforcement of the promise. The contention that the plaintiffs' reliance on the defendant's bid was not justifiable or reasonable was without merit, since the plaintiffs expressed concern respecting the defendant's first bid and inferentially were entitled to assume that its second bid was not the product of any misconception, misunderstanding, or mistake. The contention that the plaintiffs unreasonably delayed acceptance of the defendant's bid and made a counteroffer in lieu of acceptance was also without merit, since the plaintiffs had both informed the defendant that its bid had been included in their bid on the same day that they submitted their bid and also sent the proposed contract to the defendant within two weeks of the acceptance of the plaintiffs' bid. The court held that the contract submitted to the defendant by the plaintiffs was not a counteroffer. The only reason the defendant refused to perform was that under its bid it was required to do certain work that it apparently had not considered in making its bid. The doctrine of promissory estoppel was applicable (14 Cal. App. 3d 848, 852-853) .

Hilltop Properties v. California (1965) 233 Cal. App. 2d 349, 43 Cal. Rptr. 605 , was an action for breach of contract. The complaint alleged that the plaintiff owned two strips of land that were taken by the defendant for the widening of a freeway, and the defendant made certain promises to the plaintiff with regard to these strips of land, stating that if the plaintiff reserved the land, the defendant would purchase it at a specified price, and that intent was communicated to the plaintiff in writing. The complaint further alleged that the plaintiff relied on the defendant's promise by leaving the property undeveloped, thus rendering it useless and of no value; the defendant should have expected and did expect a substantialchange of position by the plaintiff in reliance on the promise; and the defendant repudiated its proposal to purchase the property. The trial court sustained the defendant's general demurrer. In reversing as to the promissory estoppel cause of action, the court of appeal noted that a promise that the promisor should reasonably expect to induce action or forbearance of a definite and substantial character on the part of the promisee is binding if it does induce the action or forbearance, and if injustice can be avoided only by enforcement of the promise. Since detrimental reliance is an essential feature of promissory estoppel, that doctrine cannot be invoked when the promisee's reliance was bargained-for, the law of consideration being applicable. The court concluded that, although the allegations of the complaint were susceptible to the interpretation that at the time the alleged promise was made, the defendant requested the plaintiff to withhold the subject parcels from development, thus bargaining for the plaintiff's reliance by making the doing of what was requested the consideration, the allegations were equally susceptible to the interpretation that the plaintiff's act of withholding the parcels from development was not given in exchange for the defendant's promise to purchase the parcels. The court held that these allegations, as well as those purporting to allege that the defendant reasonably expected to induce forbearance of a definite and substantial character on the plaintiff's part, were sufficient as against a general demurrer (233 Cal. App. 2d 349, 362-368) .

In Thomson v. International Alliance of Stage Employees (1965) 232 Cal. App. 2d 446, 42 Cal. Rptr. 785 , the plaintiffs sued for breach of contract. The plaintiffs were members of the sound technicians' union and were paid under an agreement referred to as Schedule B. For many years members of the union could be employed under four different schedules, but in 1946 the defendants demanded the elimination of two of the schedules because they had become inequitable and discriminatory to the members. Eventually one schedule was eliminated. Two years later, instead of eliminating the other schedule, a memorandum agreement was executed that provided for an increase in wages. The memorandum provided that it was not in final contract language, and a formal agreement would be drafted as soon as possible. An oral agreement was reached by the negotiating committees that any and all tentative agreements reached (such as the memorandum agreement) would not be final until ratified by the memberships of the various locals of the union and approved by each of the producers. The members of the union approved by a majority a different plan by which wage rates under the three schedules would be increased disproportionately, resulting in no wage increase for persons paid under Schedule B. After a trial without a jury, the trial court rendered judgment for the defendants. The plaintiffs contended on appeal that the defendants were estopped from asserting the lack of ratification of the memorandum agreement, and the memorandum agreement was a promise clear and unambiguous. The court of appeal affirmed. The elements of promissory estoppelare a promise clear and unambiguous in its terms, reliance by the party to whom the promise is made, the party's reasonable and foreseeable reliance, and resulting injury to the party asserting the estoppel. The court found that not all of the elements of promissory estoppel were present because, although the plaintiffs asserted that the deprivation of a wage increase represented injury to them, the plaintiffs did not establish that the injury was the result of reliance on the memorandum agreement (232 Cal. App. 2d 446, 453-454) .

[b] Requirement That Injustice Be Unavoidable Except by Enforcing Promise

In Kajima/Ray Wilson v. Los Angeles MTA (2000) 23 Cal. 4th 305, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747 , the California Supreme Court considered whether the lowest responsible bidder that was wrongfully denied a public contract has a cause of action for monetary damages against the public entity, and if so, whether those damages include bid preparation costs and lost profits. The court concluded that bid preparation costs but not lost profits were available under a theory of promissory estoppel (23 Cal. 4th 305, 308) . After soliciting bids to build the Red Line Hollywood/Highland station and tunnels, the Los Angeles MTA rejected all bids and solicited new bids for the same public project. The contract was awarded to a bidder whose bid was higher than plaintiff's bid. Plaintiff filed suit against MTA, seeking an injunction, issuance of a writ of mandate or prohibition, and damages. It sought bid and protest expenses, unabsorbed overhead expenses, and lost profits. In addition to a peremptory writ of mandate, the court awarded plaintiff bid expenses, unabsorbed overhead, lost profits, and prejudgment interest. The court of appeal affirmed (23 Cal. 4th 305, 309-310) . The California Supreme Court examined the doctrine of promissory estoppel, stating that the remedy for breach may be limited as justice requires. Although it applied the doctrine in this case, it noted that it fit the circumstances imperfectly. The court used promissory estoppel primarily to further certain public policies by creating a damages remedy for a public entity's statutory violation. That fact, plus the fact that unlike the usual promissory estoppel situation, the MTA retained discretion to reject all bids, played a role in determining the measure of damages available under a promissory estoppel theory (23 Cal. 4th 305, 315) . The Court stated that in the context of competitive bidding statutes, neither estoppel nor any other equitable principle could be invoked against a governmental body if it would operate to defeat the effective operation of a policy adopted to protect the public. The general public would not benefit from allowing a disappointed bidder to recover lost profits. In fact, if those profits were recoverable, the possibility of significant monetary gain alone might encourage frivolous litigation and further expend public resources (23 Cal. 4th 305, 315-317) . Noting that the court of appeal's conclusion thatdisappointed bidders may recover lost profits as damages was a distinctly minority position, the California Supreme Court reversed (23 Cal. 4th 305, 320-321) .

In reversing the trial court's judgment for the defendant employer, the court of appeal in Sheppard v. Morgan Keegan & Co. (1990) 218 Cal. App. 3d 61, 266 Cal. Rptr. 784 , held that the doctrine of promissory estoppel applied to prevent the defendant from terminating the plaintiff before the date the plaintiff was to report for work (thus foreclosing the plaintiff's opportunity to demonstrate his ability to satisfy the job requirements), after the plaintiff had severed his former employment and moved across the country. A promise that the promisor reasonably expects to induce action or forbearance on the part of the promisee or a third person is binding if it does induce action or forbearance, and if injustice can be avoided only by enforcement of the promise (218 Cal. App. 3d 61, 67) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
D. Existence of Contract
4. Promissory Estoppel Doctrine

5-50 California Points & Authorities §§ 50.411-50.419

[Reserved]

§§ 50.411[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
D. Existence of Contract
4. Promissory Estoppel Doctrine

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.420

§ 50.420 Complaint Fails to Allege Elements of Promissory Estoppel

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE COMPLAINT IS BASED ON THE DOCTRINE OF PROMISSORY ESTOPPEL BUT DOES NOT ALLEGE THE ESSENTIAL ELEMENTS OF PROMISSORY ESTOPPEL.

A. Elements of Promissory Estoppel. The elements that must be alleged in a cause of action for promissory estoppel are: a promise, clear and unambiguous in its terms; reliance by the party to whom the promise is made; both reasonable and foreseeable reliance; injury as a result of the reliance; and a causal connection between breach of the promise and injury to the party to whom the promise is made (US Ecology, Inc. v. State (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 887, 891, 908, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 894 ; Lange v. TIG Insurance Company (1998) 68 Cal. App. 4th 1179, 1186-1187, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 39 ; Laks v. Coast Fed. Sav. & L. Ass'n (1976) 60 Cal. App. 3d 885, 890, 131 Cal. Rptr. 836).

[Optional] B. Mere Expression of Intent Is Not Promise. The defendant made no promise sufficient to support a claim of promissory estoppel if the defendant's expression of intent to do or refrain from doing a specified act was not addressed or directed to the plaintiff or to someone else for the plaintiff's benefit and was not communicated to the plaintiff by either the defendant or any authorized agent of the defendant (Trans-World Intern. v. Smith-Hemion Productions (C.D. Cal. 1997) 972 F. Supp. 1275, 1284-1286) .

[Optional] C. Requirement of Definite and Substantial Action. The doctrine of promissory estoppel is not applicable when the promises or representations did not induce action of a definite and substantial character on the part of the promisee (Blatt v. University of So. Cal. (1970) 5 Cal. App. 3d 935, 944, 85 Cal. Rptr. 601).

[Optional] D. Promissory Estoppel Is Not Applicable When Reliance Is Bargained-for. If the promisee's performance was requested at the time the promisor made his or her promise, and that performance was bargained-for, the doctrine of promissory estoppel is inapplicable (Youngman v. Nevada Irrigation Dist. (1969) 70 Cal. 2d 240, 249, 74 Cal. Rptr. 398, 449 P.2d 462).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that the cause of action is based on promissory estoppel but the complaint does not allege the essential elements of promissory estoppel.

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a party seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used to support a demurrer that has been interposed on the ground that the complaint fails to allege facts insufficient for relief under the promissory estoppel doctrine.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised in support of a defendant's demurrer, the memorandum would include an analysis of the complaint's allegations showing that they fail to allege sufficient facts to permit relief under the promissory estoppel doctrine.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For memoranda addressing the related doctrine of equitable estoppel [see Evid. Code § 623], see Ch. 166, Negotiable Instruments .

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum supporting a demurrer, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.410 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Elements of Promissory Estoppel

In US Ecology, Inc. v. State (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 887, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 894 , the Department of Health Services had selected the plaintiff to develop and operate California's first low-level radioactive waste storage facility. The plaintiff and state officials thereafter identified a location for the facility and completed environmental reviews for that site. However, the facility was never built. The plaintiff blamed the state government for failing to do what was promised, namely, use best efforts to acquire the selected site from the federal government. Claiming to have spent millions of dollars in development costs in reliance on the state's promise to use best efforts to acquire the site, the plaintiff sued the state, alleging a promissory estoppel cause of action. The trial court found that the cause of the plaintiff's injury was actually the federal government's political decision not to transfer the site to the state, and the court entered judgment in favor of the state, on the ground that the plaintiff had failed to prove that the plaintiff's injury was proximately caused by any breach of promise by the state. The plaintiff's argument on appeal was that causation is not an element of a promissory estoppel cause of action.

The court of appeal affirmed. Addressing what the court described as an issue of first impression--whether a plaintiff pursuing a claim for promissory estoppel must prove that the defendant caused the plaintiff's injury--the court concluded that, as in ordinary contract actions, a plaintiff seeking recovery on a promissory estoppel theory must prove that the defendant's breach of promise was a substantial factor in causing the plaintiff's injury. Further, even if causation is not a necessary element of all promissory estoppel claims, the court held that because promissory estoppel is an equitable remedy, courts have the discretion in an appropriate case to deny relief when the plaintiff cannot demonstrate that the defendant's actions caused the plaintiff's injury (129 Cal. App. 4th 887, 891, 908) .

In Lange v. TIG Insurance Company (1998) 68 Cal. App. 4th 1179, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 39 , an insurer terminated its agency agreement with an insurance brokerage for cause in April after an audit revealed irregularities. Respondent brokers threatened the insurer with legal action if it did not allow them to continue selling new policies until the date in July originally stated as the date for termination of the agency agreement. Respondents' theory was they had a third party contractual relationship with the insurer despite having had no direct dealings or contractual relationship. The insurer responded by bringing an action against the brokers for declaratory relief, seeking a judgment that they were not third-party beneficiaries of the agency agreement with the insurance brokerage and had no greater rights than the agent. The brokers counterclaimed, alleging promissory estoppel and negligent interference with prospective economic advantage. The basis of their claim for promissory estoppel was a statement made in a letter from the insurer that notice of termination of the agency agreement was effective on a date in July. They asserted that the statement constituted a binding promise that the agreement would not be terminated under any circumstances before that date. The superior court ruled in favor of the brokers. The court of appeal reversed. It reviewed the elements for promissory estoppel set forth in Laks v. Coast Fed. Sav. & L. Ass'n, discussed below. The court did not find a promise of any sort in the letter, let alone a promise of sufficient definitiveness and clarity to justify applying promissory estoppel. It found that the statement regarding the termination date was simply a recitation of the historical fact that notice of termination had been served and would take effect on a particular date (68 Cal. App. 4th 1179, 1185-1187) .

Laks v. Coast Fed. Sav. & L. Ass'n (1976) 60 Cal. App. 3d 885, 131 Cal. Rptr. 836 , was an action for damages resulting from the defendant's failure to make a loan as stated in a letter of conditional commitment. The defendant demurred generally, and the plaintiffs replied that the complaint sufficiently stated the elements of promissory estoppel. The trial court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend, holding that the letter was not an enforceable contract.

The court of appeal affirmed. The required elements for promissory estoppel are (1) a promise clear and unambiguous in its terms, (2) reliance by the party to whom the promise is made, (3) provided that the reliance must be both reasonable and foreseeable, and (4) resulting injury to theparty asserting the estoppel. The first element was missing in this case because the defendant did not make a clear and unambiguous promise to make a loan. Additionally, the third element was absent because the plaintiffs' reliance was not reasonable and foreseeable, since the plaintiffs were experienced businessmen (60 Cal. App. 3d 885, 890) .

[b] Mere Expression of Intent Is Not Promise

In Trans-World Intern. v. Smith-Hemion Productions (C.D. Cal. 1997) 972 F. Supp. 1275 , a production company sued a performer on a claim of promissory estoppel based on the performer's expression of intent toappear in a show. The performer signed a letter stating unequivocally that he would appear in the show, but he subsequently recanted and refused to appear, and the show was canceled. The production company sought compensation for debts that the company had incurred to produce the show, having received no revenue to cover those debts because the show had to be canceled. The company incurred those debts in reliance on the performer's statement, in the letter, that he would appear in the show.

The U.S. district court rendered judgment for the performer. The performer did not make any promise on which the production company's claim of promissory estoppel could be based. The letter was not delivered to the company by the performer or by any of the performer's authorized agents, nor did the company ever ask the performer or any of his authorized agents for a copy of the letter or for any other expression of the performer's intent to appear in the show. The letter was not addressed to the company; indeed, it was not addressed to anyone but was merely a signed statement of the performer's intent to appear in the show. The letter had been solicited by the performer's brother for the purpose of satisfying the brother and their mother of the performer's intention to appear in the show, in which the brother and their mother were financially interested. The brother showed the letter to the production company, which undertook its role in producing the show solely in reliance on the letter. However, if the company relied on a promise to the company, in concluding that the performer would appear, it was a promise made by the brother or by some other family member, not by the performer or by any representative of the performer. If the company relied on any promise made by the performer, it relied on a promise from the performer to members of his family, not to the company. Neither of these scenarios alone, nor the two together, can satisfy the requirement that the performer must have made a promise to the production company, in order for the promissory estoppel claim to be supportable. Moreover, the production company was not the intended beneficiary of any promise made by the performer to any third person (972 F. Supp. 1275, 1284-1286) .

[c] Requirement of Definite and Substantial Action

The facts and procedural background of Blatt v. University of So. Cal. (1970) 5 Cal. App. 3d 935, 85 Cal. Rptr. 601 , are discussed in § 50.100[3][a]. The plaintiff argued that he suffered detriment and a change of position because he might have decided to take an easier path through law school and graduate with an average scholastic record instead of attaining excellence; that he had this initial choice, that after the defendants enticed him by their promises, he took the tougher road; and that his extra effort for scholastic achievement was in reliance on and motivated by the representations of the promised award. In affirming the sustaining of the general demurrer, the court of appeal noted that since no benefitflowed to the defendants as a result of the plaintiff's hard work or class ranking, no consideration existed for any promise by the defendants and therefore, if any contractual liability existed, it was because of the applicability of the doctrine of promissory estoppel. The doctrine of promissory estoppel is that a promise that the promisor should reasonably expect to induce action or forbearance of a definite and substantial character on the part of the promisee is binding if it does induce action or forbearance, and if injustice can be avoided only by enforcement of the promise. Although the validity of consideration does not depend on its value and the law does not ordinarily take its measure, in this case it could not be said that the alleged promises or representations induced action of a definite and substantial character on the part of the promisee (5 Cal. App. 3d 935, 944) .

[d] Promissory Estoppel Is Not Applicable When Reliance Is Result of Bargaining

Youngman v. Nevada Irrigation Dist. (1969) 70 Cal. 2d 240, 74 Cal. Rptr. 398, 449 P.2d 462 , was an action for declaratory relief by an employee of an irrigation district, to determine his right to a merit increase in pay. The plaintiff alleged as one cause of action that the plaintiff relied on an express oral promise by the defendant's agent, namely that annual pay increases would be granted by accepting employment with the defendant, continuing in its employ, and refraining from accepting another job; and the district was estopped to refuse to consider and grant him a merit step increase in pay. The trial court sustained the defendant's general and special demurrer on the ground that the complaint did not indicate how the defendant could be bound by implication under the circumstances alleged, and the oral agreement did not comply with the legal requirements for procedures to be followed by an irrigation district in entering into a contract.

The Supreme Court reversed. A promisor is bound when he or she should reasonably expect a substantial change of position, either by act or by forbearance, in reliance on the promise, if injustice can be avoided only by its enforcement. The purpose of the doctrine of promissory estoppel is to make a promise binding, under certain circumstances, without consideration in the usual sense: something bargained-for and given in exchange. If the promisee's performance was requested at the time the promisor made the promise, and that performance was bargained-for, the doctrine is inapplicable. The defendant's promise, through its agent, that the plaintiff would be afforded a raise each year was part of the bargain under which the plaintiff entered the employment and by remaining in his position and presumably rendering satisfactory service, the plaintiff performed his part of the bargain and rendered the consideration called for by the employment contract. Consequently, the doctrine of promissory estoppel was not applicable since it is used only to supply consideration for a promise when no actual consideration was given by the promisee (70 Cal. 2d 240, 249) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Elements of Promissory Estoppel

In Glen Holly Entertainment Inc. v. Tektronix Inc. (9th Cir. 2003) 352 F.3d 367 , plaintiff brought a private antitrust action against defendant, together with state law claims for fraud, negligent misrepresentation, and promissory estoppel. The district court dismissed the promissory estoppel claim in its entirety, concluding that the alleged promises did not constitute actionable promises because they were too vague or indefinite, and because no allegations supported the conclusion that injustice could only be avoided by enforcing them. On that issue, the Ninth Circuit affirmed. It agreed with the district court that plaintiff's representations were not definite enough to be enforceable. The court found that plaintiff had adequate remedies through its viable fraud and negligent misrepresentation claims, and therefore a promissory estoppel claim was not necessary to avoid injustice (352 F.3d 367, 381) .

The court of appeal in Smith v. City and County of San Francisco (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 38, 275 Cal. Rptr. 17 , affirmed a judgment in an inverse condemnation action in which the plaintiffs also alleged breach of contract based on promissory estoppel. The court held that no cause of action for promissory estoppel had been stated because the plaintiffs' pleadings of reliance were conclusionary and insufficient and did not show that the plaintiffs changed their position in reliance on statements of city personnel. All facts relied on must be specifically pleaded. A promise that the promisor should reasonably expect to induce action or forbearance on the part of the promisee or a third person is binding if it does induce action or forbearance, and if injustice can be avoided only by enforcement of the promise (225 Cal. App. 3d 38, 48) .

Division of Labor Law Enforcement v. Transpacific Transp. Co. (1977) 69 Cal. App. 3d 268, 137 Cal. Rptr. 855 , was an action to recover wages. The plaintiff's assignors were the defendant's employees who had been paid an annual bonus for a number of years. The defendant terminated the employees approximately two weeks before it paid its annual bonus, and the plaintiff sued to recover the bonus. The trial court rendered judgment for the defendant. In affirming the trial court's judgment, the court of appeal noted that in order for the plaintiff to recover on the theory of promissory estoppel, the elements of promise, reliance, and injury had to be present, and the existence of these elements constituted a question of fact. The trial court had found that although the defendant had paid bonuses as a gift in the past, it made neither an express promise nor an implicit promise to pay any bonus to its employees. Since the doctrine of promissory estoppel is inapplicable in the absence of a showing that a promise had been made on which the complaining party relied to his or her prejudice, the plaintiff could not recover the bonuses because there was no showing of a promise (69 Cal. App. 3d 268, 275-278) .

Landberg v. Landberg (1972) 24 Cal. App. 3d 742, 101 Cal. Rptr. 335 , was a divorce action involving the defendant's right to buy the plaintiff's stock in two corporations pursuant to an agreement between them and the corporations. The property settlement agreement, pursuant to which the plaintiff received 60 percent and the defendant received 40 percent of the stock of the corporations, provided a procedure by which either spouse could sell stock to or buy stock from the other. Pursuant to this procedure, the plaintiff submitted to the defendant an offer to buy or sell, and the defendant replied by letter stating a desire to buy the plaintiff's stock. Since the defendant refused to accept three conditions set forth in the offer, the plaintiff replied that the defendant's acceptance was not valid. The defendant then sent a telegram stating that the telegram was again notice to the plaintiff that she elected to buy the plaintiff's interests in the corporations, and if her earlier communication was not a valid election to buy, the telegram was acceptance of his offer and election to buy. The plaintiff's attorney then sent a telegram to the defendant stating that since the defendant did not properly accept the plaintiff's offer, the defendant declined to sell his interests to her. The defendant testified that after she sent her letter accepting the plaintiff's offer, the plaintiff came into the corporation's office and said that he was literally through with the business, and the defendant was in charge. A couple of days later he telephoned the defendant to tell her that he did not feel the defendant's acceptance was valid. The trial court denied the defendant's motion for an order declaring that the defendant had exercised her right to buy the plaintiff's stock. On appeal the defendant contended that under the doctrine of promissory estoppel, the plaintiff's conduct estopped the plaintiff to avoid acquiescence in her buying his interest in the corporations, on the basis that she took extensive action in reliance. In affirming the trial court's judgment, the court of appeal noted that the doctrine of promissory estoppel is based on the principle that a promise that the promisor should reasonably expect to induce action or forbearance of a definite and substantial character on the part of the promisee is binding if it does induce action or forbearance, and if injustice can be avoided only by enforcement of the promise. The facts alleged in the defendant's opening brief did not set out any evidence of the alleged extensive action on which reliance was predicated; consequently, the doctrine of promissory estoppel did not apply (24 Cal. App. 3d 742, 758-759) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
D. Existence of Contract
4. Promissory Estoppel Doctrine

5-50 California Points & Authorities §§ 50.421-50.429

[Reserved]

§§ 50.421[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
D. Existence of Contract
5. Illusory Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.430

§ 50.430 Contract Providing for Performance to Party's Satisfaction Is Not Illusory

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

A CONTRACT THAT PROVIDES FOR PERFORMANCE TO THE SATISFACTION OF ONE OF THE PARTIES IS NOT ILLUSORY.

A. Right to Terminate Contract on Specified Conditions Does Not Render Contract Unenforceable. [See § 50.382[1].]

B. Contract Providing for Performance to Party's Satisfaction Is Not Illusory. A contractual provision for performance to the satisfaction of one of the parties does not render the contract illusory (Collins v. Vickter Manor, Inc. (1957) 47 Cal. 2d 875, 882-883, 306 P.2d 783).

[Optional] C. Reasonable-Person Standard Applies to Commercial Satisfaction Clause. When a contract calls for the satisfaction of one of the parties as to commercial value of quality, operative fitness, or mechanical utility, the standard of a reasonable person is used to determine whether satisfaction has been received (Mattei v. Hopper (1958) 51 Cal. 2d 119, 123, 330 P.2d 625 ; Collins v. Vickter Manor, Inc. (1957) 47 Cal. 2d 875, 882-883, 306 P.2d 783).

[Optional] D. Good-Faith Standard Applies When Party's Judgment Is Involved. When a contract calls for performance to the satisfaction of one of the parties, and the question of the party's satisfaction is one of fancy, taste, or judgment, the promisor's duty to exercise his or her judgment in good faith is adequate consideration to support the contract (Mattei v. Hopper (1958) 51 Cal. 2d 119, 123-124, 330 P.2d 625 ; Moreland Development Co. v. Gladstone Holmes, Inc. (1982) 135 Cal. App. 3d 973, 977, 186 Cal. Rptr. 6).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that the contract is not illusory merely because it provides that performance is to be to the satisfaction of one of the parties.

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a party seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used to oppose a defendant's motion for summary judgment.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised in opposition to a defendant's motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the moving and opposing papers showing that there is a triable issue of fact as to whether the contract is illusory.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum opposing a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.370 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Contract Providing for Performance to Party's Satisfaction Is Not Illusory

Collins v. Vickter Manor, Inc. (1957) 47 Cal. 2d 875, 306 P.2d 783 , was an action to recover a real estate broker's commission. The plaintiff alleged that he had found a purchaser for certain property that the defendant wanted to sell, and the plaintiff, the purchaser, and the defendant signed a deposit receipt, incorporated into the complaint, which required the vendor to furnish a satisfactory soil compaction report on eachsite from a reliable testing firm and also provided that the final contour map and filing map be subject to the purchaser's approval. The defendant successfully demurred to the complaint on the ground that it did not state a cause of action since the deposit receipt was not an enforceable contract in that it gave the purchaser the right at his uncontrolled discretion to refuse to perform if he was not satisfied as to the soil compaction report and maps.

The Supreme Court reversed, holding that if the provisions as to soil compaction report and maps were contained in an otherwise enforceable contract, those provisions would not make the purchaser's obligation illusory; the purchaser could not withdraw from the contract at his pleasure. A contractual provision for performance to the satisfaction of one of the parties ordinarily calls for performance that would be satisfactory to a reasonable person. If acceptance or rejection of the soil compaction report and maps had been dependent on the purchaser's uncontrolled caprice, then he would have been the sole judge of his own satisfaction and could have withdrawn from the contract without regard to the reasonableness of his decision. But when the question is whether an agreed performance will satisfy a requirement of commercial value or quality, operative fitness, or mechanical ability, the party to whom performance is tendered is not justified in claiming arbitrarily, unreasonably, or capriciously to be unsatisfied, in order to evade liability. A standard for the soil compaction report was stated in the deposit receipt when it stated that the report was to be from a reliable testing firm, and from the receipt as a whole it could be determined that the report and maps should meet reasonable standards for the commercial purpose of subdivision. In these circumstances, the purchaser could not evade liability by arbitrary rejection of the report and maps. Thus, the plaintiff alleged the existence of a valid contract (47 Cal. 2d 875, 882-883) .

[b] Reasonable-Person Standard Applies to Commercial Satisfaction Clause

The facts and procedural background of Mattei v. Hopper (1958) 51 Cal. 2d 119, 330 P.2d 625 , are discussed in § 50.370[3][a]. In holding that the contract involved in the action was not illusory, the Supreme Court noted that satisfaction clauses in contracts usually are given effect and are divided into two primary categories, each of which has received different treatment. If the condition calls for satisfaction as to commercial value or quality, operative fitness, or mechanical utility, then dissatisfaction cannot be claimed arbitrarily, unreasonably, or capriciously, and the standard of a reasonable person is used to determine whether satisfaction has been received. On the other hand, when the question is one of judgment, fancy, or taste, the promisor's duty to act in good faith is adequate consideration to support the contract (51 Cal. 2d 119, 123-124) .

Collins v. Vickter Manor, Inc. (1957) 47 Cal. 2d 875, 306 P.2d 783 , is discussed in [a], above.

[c] Good-Faith Standard Applies When Party's Judgment Is Involved

Mattei v. Hopper (1958) 51 Cal. 2d 119, 330 P.2d 625 , is discussed in § 50.370[3][a].

In Moreland Development Co. v. Gladstone Holmes, Inc. (1982) 135 Cal. App. 3d 973, 186 Cal. Rptr. 6 , an action for breach of contract by a purchaser of real property arising out of the seller's refusal to comply with the contract, the plaintiff's obligation to purchase and close escrow was conditioned on approval of the transaction by the plaintiff's board of directors. The trial court granted the defendant's motion for summary judgment on the ground that the contract was illusory.

The court of appeal reversed. It could not be said as a matter of law that a bilateral contract was not made (135 Cal. App. 3d 973, 978) . The condition of board approval does not give the plaintiff the absolute right to escape its obligation under the agreement, since there is an implicit obligation on the part of the plaintiff's officers to carry out the objectives of the contract in good faith by submitting the proposal to the board (135 Cal. App. 3d 973, 977) . Part of the implicit obligation would be that the board would actually confer and decide whether to approve the proposed sale (135 Cal. App. 3d 973, 977-978) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Contract Providing for Performance to Party's Satisfaction Is Not Illusory

In Chodos v. West Publishing Co, Inc. (9th Cir. 2002) 292 F.3d 992 , a legal publisher and author entered into a standard industry agreement under which the author agreed to write a legal treatise. After the author had spent some years fulfilling his part of the bargain and had submitted a completed manuscript, the publisher decided not to publish the work, citing solely sales and marketing reasons. The author sued for damages in quantum meruit. In addition to an allegation that the publisher breached the contract, he argued that the agreement was illusory because the contract required him to produce a work of publishable quality but allowed the publisher in its discretion to decide unilaterally whether or not to publish the work. The district court held that under the terms of the contract the publisher's decision not to publish was within its discretion, and granted summary judgment in the publisher's favor. The court of appeals reversed. The court found that the agreement did impose numerous obligations on the author but gave the publisher "the right in itsdiscretion to terminate" the publishing relationship after receiving the manuscript and determining that it was unacceptable. However, it concluded that the contract was not illusory because the publisher's duty to exercise its discretion was limited by its duty of good faith and fair dealing. Specifically, because the standard agreement obligated the publisher to make a judgment as to the quality or literary merit of the author's work-to determine whether the work was "acceptable" or "unacceptable"--it must make that judgment in good faith, and could not reject a manuscript for other, unrelated reasons (292 F.3d 992, 996-997) . The court of appeals next found that the author's alternative argument, that a contract existed and it was breached, was more persuasive. It held that the author was entitled to sue for restitution for the time and effort he reasonably invested in writing the manuscript (292 F.3d 992, 1001-1002) .

[b] Good-Faith Standard Applies When Party's Judgment Is Involved

In Larwin-Southern Cal., Inc. v. JGB Inv. Co. (1979) 101 Cal. App. 3d 626, 162 Cal. Rptr. 52 , a would-be purchaser of real estate sought specific performance of a written contract. Among the provisions of the contract were two requiring the purchaser's approval of the preliminary title report and the engineering report. The trial court sustained the defendant's demurrer without leave to amend, based in part on the lack of mutuality of obligation because of these "satisfaction" clauses. The court of appeal reversed, holding that, with the type of subjective satisfaction clauses in this case, the party whose satisfaction is required is under a duty of exercising its approval or disapproval in good faith. The existence of an additional clause, indicating that the purchaser's approval was subject to its sole discretion and judgment, did not change the result (101 Cal. App. 3d 626, 638-640) .

141 of 168 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
D. Existence of Contract
5. Illusory Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.431

§ 50.431 Contract Is Not Illusory Merely Because Seller Unilaterally Determines Price

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

A CONTRACT THAT PROVIDES FOR THE SELLER'S UNILATERALLY DETERMINATION OF THE PRICE IS NOT ILLUSORY.

Contract Providing That Seller May Unilaterally Determine Price Is Not Illusory. The fact that one party has power to set or vary the price does not render a contract illusory. That party is obligated by the covenant of good faith and fair dealing to set or vary a price that is objectively reasonable (Perdue v. Crocker National Bank (1985) 38 Cal. 3d 913, 923-924, 216 Cal. Rptr. 345, 702 P.2d 503).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that the contract is not illusory merely because the price term is to be unilaterally determined by one party, typically the seller.

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a party seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used to oppose a defendant's motion for summary judgment.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised in opposition to a defendant's motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the moving and opposing papers showing that there is a triable issue of fact as to whether the contract is illusory.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. Forexample, if used in a memorandum opposing a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.370 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Contract Providing That Seller May Unilaterally Determine Price Is Not Illusory

Perdue v. Crocker National Bank (1985) 38 Cal. 3d 913, 923-924, 216 Cal. Rptr. 345, 702 P.2d 503 , was a class action regarding charges imposed by a bank for processing and dishonoring checks because the drawer had "not sufficient funds" on deposit (NSF checks and NSF charges). The plaintiff pleaded five causes of action: (1) for a judicial declaration that the bank's signature card was not a contract authorizing NSF charges, (2) for a judicial declaration that the NSF charges were oppressive and unconscionable, (3) for damages for unjust enrichment derived from the bank's collection of illegal NSF charges, (4) for an injunction against unfair and deceptive practices, namely the bank's failure to inform customers of the contractual nature of the signature card and its practice of waiving NSF charges for certain preferred customers, and (5) for damages for the difference between the NSF charges and the bank's actual expenses in processing NSF checks, on the theory that the charges represented an unreasonable attempt to fix liquidated damages. The bank's general demurrer was sustained without leave to amend as to all causes of action.

The Supreme Court reversed and remanded with instructions that the plaintiff be allowed to amend the complaint to seek a judicial declaration determining whether the charges set by the bank were consonant with good faith and fair dealing. The plaintiff was not entitled to a declaration that the signature card was not a contract; the signature card was a contract. The fact that the signature-card contract empowered the bank to unilaterally determine and vary the amount NSF charges did not make the contract illusory but imposed on the bank the obligation of good faith and fair dealing. The bank's conduct in setting and varying the NSF charges must be objectively reasonable (38 Cal. 3d 913, 923-924) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
D. Existence of Contract
5. Illusory Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.432

§ 50.432 Unilateral Contract Is Not Illusory When One Party Has Implied Power to Terminate or Modify It, If Exercise Is Subject to Limitations

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE FACT THAT ONE PARTY RESERVES THE IMPLIED POWER TO TERMINATE OR MODIFY A UNILATERAL CONTRACT IS NOT FATAL TO ITS ENFORCEMENT IF THE EXERCISE OF THE POWER IS SUBJECT TO LIMITATIONS SUCH AS FAIRNESS AND REASONABLE NOTICE.

Unilateral Contract in Which One Party Has Power to Terminate or Modify Is Not Illusory If Exercise of Power Is Subject to Limitations. The fact that one party reserves the implied power to terminate or modify a unilateral contract is not fatal to its enforcement if the exercise of the power is subject to limitations, such as fairness and reasonable notice (Asmus v. Pacific Bell (2000) 23 Cal. 4th 1, 15-16, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 179, 999 P.2d 71).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that a unilateral contract is not illusory merely because one party has the power to terminate or modify it. This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a party seeks to raise this contention.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised in opposition to a defendant's motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the moving and opposing papers showing that there is a triable issue of fact as to whether the contract is illusory.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum opposing a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms in this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Unilateral Contract Is Not Illusory When One Party Has Implied Power to Terminate or Modify It, If Exercise Is Subject to Limitations

The facts and procedural background of Asmus v. Pacific Bell (2000) 23 Cal. 4th 1, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 179, 999 P.2d 71 are discussed in § 50.381[3][b]. Plaintiffs claimed that their employer's management employment security policy (MESP) would be an illusory contract if the employer could unilaterally modify it. They relied on the rule that when a party to a contract retains the unfettered right to terminate or modify the agreement, the contract is deemed to be illusory. The Supreme Court stated that an unqualified right to modify or terminate the contract is not enforceable. However, the fact that one party reserves the implied power to terminate or modify a unilateral contract is not fatal to its enforcement if the exercise of the power is subject to limitations, such as fairness and reasonable notice. In this case, the MESP was not illusory because plaintiff employees obtained the benefits of the policy while it was in effect. As long as the MESP remained in force, the employer could not treat the contract as illusory by refusing to adhere to its terms. The employer's promise pursuant to the MESP was fully enforceable until terminated or modified (23 Cal. 4th 1, 15-16) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
D. Existence of Contract
5. Illusory Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities §§ 50.433-50.449

[Reserved]

§§ 50.433[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
D. Existence of Contract
6. Novation of Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.450

§ 50.450 Obligation Sued On Was Supplanted by New Obligation

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

A NEW OBLIGATION BETWEEN THE SAME PARTIES WAS SUBSTITUTED FOR THE CONTRACT [ON WHICH THE _____ (VERDICT or DECISION) FOR THE PLAINTIFF IS BASED], WITH THE INTENT TO EXTINGUISH THE ORIGINAL OBLIGATION[, AND THE DEFENDANT HAS FULFILLED THE NEW OBLIGATION].

A. Novation Defined. Novation is the substitution of a new obligation for an existing one (Civ. Code § 1530).

B. Contract Was Supplanted by New Obligation. A contract that is the basis of an action for breach is not enforceable when it clearly appears that a novation was made by the substitution of a new obligation between the same parties with the intent to extinguish the old obligation (see Civ. Code § 1531(1)); Producers Fruit Co. v. Goddard (1925) 75 Cal. App. 737, 754-756, 243 P. 686).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that a novation was made by the substitution of a new obligation between the same parties with the intent to extinguish the original contract [Civ. Code § 1531(1); see Code Civ. Proc. § 657(6)].

Although a novation might ordinarily be asserted by a defendant as a defense to enforcement of the original obligation, novation by substitution of a new obligation may be also be asserted offensively by a plaintiff who is seeking to enforce the new obligation [see, e.g., Childs v. Hunt (1970) 9 Cal. App. 3d 276, 279, 88 Cal. Rptr. 34 ; San Gabriel Valley

Ready-Mixt v. Casillas (1956) 142 Cal. App. 2d 137, 139-141, 298 P.2d 76] .

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a party seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used to support a defendant's motion for summary judgment.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised in support of a defendant's motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the moving and opposing papers showing that there is a triable issue of fact as to whether the original contract has been replaced by a new agreement.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum supporting a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in §§ 50.560, 50.461, and 50.464 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Contract Was Supplanted by New Obligation

Producers Fruit Co. v. Goddard (1925) 75 Cal. App. 737, 243 P. 686 , was an action for breach of contract against a fruit grower for failure to deliver canning fruit pursuant to a written contract. As a special defense, the defendant alleged that the parties had subsequently made an oral agreement for the delivery of shipping and canning fruit at market price. Judgment was rendered for the defendant on a counterclaim for breach of the oral agreement. On appeal the plaintiff contended that the oral agreement could not extinguish the written contract because it was invalid under the statute of frauds as an agreement not able to be performed within a year from its making.

The court of appeal affirmed. Because of the difference in terms between the two agreements, the jury was justified in finding that the oral agreement was made with the intention by both parties that it should constitute a novation, as defined in Civ. Code § 1531. An oral agreement that is otherwise valid but is required to be in writing is effective for all purposes for which it was made until its enforcement is voided because it is not in writing. Since it clearly appeared that the parties intended to replace the written agreement with the oral agreement, the written agreement was entirely extinguished. Additionally, because a novation was shown, the provision of Civ. Code § 1698 requiring that a written contract be modified by a written contract or an executed oral agreement had no application (75 Cal. App. 737, 754-757) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
D. Existence of Contract
6. Novation of Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.451

§ 50.451 Contract Is Unenforceable Against Defendant Because New Debtor Was Substituted for Defendant

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE CONTRACT IS NOT ENFORCEABLE AGAINST _____ THE [original obligor, e.g., DEFENDANT] BECAUSE A NOVATION WAS MADE BY THE SUBSTITUTION OF A NEW DEBTOR IN PLACE OF THE _____ [original obligor, e.g., DEFENDANT] WITH THE INTENT TO RELEASE THE _____ [original obligor, e.g., DEFENDANT].

A. Novation Defined. [See § 50.450[1], Paragraph A.]

B. New Debtor Was Substituted for Old Debtor. A contract is not enforceable against an old debtor when a novation has been made by the substitution of a new debtor in place of the old debtor with the intent to release the old debtor (see Civ. Code § 1531(2); Alexander v. Angel (1951) 37 Cal. 2d 856, 860-863, 236 P.2d 561).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that a novation was made by the substitution of a new debtor in the defendants' place, with the intent to release the defendant [Civ. Code § 1531(2); see Code Civ. Proc. § 657(6)].

Although a novation substituting debtors might ordinarily be asserted by a defendant as a defense to enforcement of the obligation as to him or her, a novation by substitution of a new debtor may also be asserted offensively by a plaintiff who is seeking to enforce the obligation against the new debtor [see, e.g., Baxter v. Chico Constr. Co. (1916) 31 Cal. App. 492, 493-494, 160 P. 1084] .

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a party seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used to support a defendant's motion for summary judgment.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised in support of a defendant's motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the moving and opposing papers showing that there is a triable issue of fact as to whether defendant has been substituted by a new obligor.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum supporting a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in §§ 50.462, 50.463 may in an appropriate case be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] New Debtor Was Substituted for Old Debtor

Alexander v. Angel (1951) 37 Cal. 2d 856, 236 P.2d 561 , was an action to foreclose a chattel mortgage on business fixtures given as security for two promissory notes for the purchase of a restaurant. The defendant pleaded, by affirmative defense and cross complaint, that the property had been conveyed to third parties who made a separate agreement with the plaintiffs to assume the defendant's obligation and release him from all liability. The two obligations differed in that (1) the new obligation with the third parties provided for monthly payments whereas the defendant's notes came due on specified dates, (2) the agreement with the third parties provided for interest payments while the defendant's notes did not, and (3) the new agreement contained an acceleration clause, which also was not in the notes. On the execution of the new agreement with the third parties, the plaintiff made no attempt to contact the defendant or obtain his consent to these material changes made in the terms of the obligation, and this conduct indicated the plaintiff's intent to release the defendant from liability on the original agreement. An arrearage accumulated on the new agreement over a 13-month period, but the plaintiff made no demand on the defendant during that time. The trial court sustained the defendant's claim of novation. Judgment was rendered for the defendant.

The Supreme Court affirmed. Under Civ. Code § 1530, a novation is the substitution of a new obligation for an existing one. One of the ways a novation may be consummated is by the substitution of a new debtor in place of the old one, with the intent to release the old debtor, pursuant to Civ. Code § 1531. A novation must be pleaded either expressly or by unequivocal implication, and the burden of proof is on the party asserting it. The question of whether a novation has taken place is always one of intention, with the controlling factor being the intent of the obligee to effect a release of the original obligor under the original agreement. While the evidence in support of a novation must be clear and convincing, the question is one of fact, with the weight and sufficiency of the proof being matters for the determination of the trier of fact. In this case, distinguishing factors between the two obligations relating to the restaurant sale indicated not merely the assumption of a preexisting obligation but the consummation of an entirely new agreement, as to parties and obligation, in relation to the mortgage debt. When it satisfactorily appears that a new agreement was intended by the parties to take the place of an existing one, as in this case when the parties proceeded to act for some 15 months in reliance solely on the substituted agreement, it necessarily follows that the old agreement has been entirely abrogated or extinguished. The trial court could reasonably infer that the substitution of a new obligation for the existing one was intended (37 Cal. 2d 856, 860-863) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] New Debtor Was Substituted for Old Debtor

Porter Pin Co. v. Sakin (1952) 112 Cal. App. 2d 760, 247 P.2d 81 , was an action for an accounting under a license agreement. The plaintiff, the owner of letters patent on safety pins, granted to the defendants the exclusive right to manufacture and distribute the safety pins. The agreement established a guarantied monthly royalty and gave the defendants the right to assign the contract to a corporation to be formed. The defendants assigned the contract to the corporation, of which they became officers and directors. The agreement provided for a royalty to be paid monthly as long as the defendants sold and distributed the pins. The defendants never sold the safety pins, but the corporation did. The trial court denied relief against the defendants on the ground that a novation existed. In affirming the judgment for the defendants, the court of appeal held that there was substantial evidence supporting the finding that the defendants were released from liability by the agreement to substitute the corporation for them. Conduct may form the basis for a novation. Looking to the parties' conduct, the court noted that only the corporation, not the defendants, sold and distributed the pins. The defendants never paid any royalties or rendered any accountings, and the plaintiff conducted all business dealings with the corporation (112 Cal. App. 2d 760, 761-762) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
D. Existence of Contract
6. Novation of Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.452

§ 50.452 Plaintiff Was Substituted as New Creditor With Intent to Transfer Original Creditor's Rights to Plaintiff

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE PLAINTIFF WAS SUBSTITUTED IN PLACE OF THE ORIGINAL CREDITOR WITH THE INTENT TO TRANSFER THE RIGHTS OF THE ORIGINAL CREDITOR UNDER THE CONTRACT TO THE PLAINTIFF.

A. Novation Defined. [See § 50.450[1], Paragraph A.]

B. New Creditor Was Substituted for Old Creditor. A contract by which a new creditor was substituted in place of the old creditor, with the intent to transfer the rights of the old creditor to the new creditor, may be enforced by the new creditor (see Civ. Code § 1531(3); Eckart v. Brown (1939) 34 Cal. App. 2d 182, 187, 93 P.2d 212).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that the plaintiff in an action for damages against a debtor for breach of an alleged novation contract was substituted in place of the old creditor, with the intent to transfer the rights of the old creditor to the plaintiff [see Civ. Code § 1531(3); Code Civ. Proc. § 657(6)].

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a party seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used to oppose a defendant's motion for summary judgment purporting that plaintiff was not a party to the contract.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised to oppose a defendant's motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the moving and opposing papers showing that there is a triable issue of fact as to whether plaintiff has been properly substituted as the creditor or obligee.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum opposing a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] New Creditor Was Substituted for Old Creditor

Eckart v. Brown (1939) 34 Cal. App. 2d 182, 93 P.2d 212 , was an action to recover the price of shares of stock. The defendant offered to transferstock to a third person in consideration of his acceptance of an employment offer. The contract was assigned to the plaintiff, and the defendant agreed to the assignment, with the additional promise by the defendant to buy the stock from the plaintiff on request. The plaintiff brought the action when the defendant refused to buy the stock on demand. Judgment was rendered for the plaintiff.

The court of appeal affirmed. A novation is the substitution of a new obligation for an existing one. The effect of a novation is to make the original agreement a nullity, and the rights of the new parties are governed solely by the new agreement. In this case, the stock buy-back agreement, together with the assignment to the plaintiff that was approved by the defendant, resulted in a novation and a new agreement. Thus, as the other questions on appeal were decided in the plaintiff's favor, the defendant was obligated to buy the shares of stock from the plaintiff at a fixed price within a given period (34 Cal. App. 2d 182, 187-188) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
D. Existence of Contract
6. Novation of Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities §§ 50.453-50.459

[Reserved]

§§ 50.453[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
D. Existence of Contract
6. Novation of Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.460

§ 50.460 Alleged Novation Contract Fails to Conform to General Contract Rules

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE ALLEGED CONTRACT OF NOVATION FAILS TO CONFORM TO THE RULES GOVERNING CONTRACTS IN GENERAL IN THAT _____ [specify reason why contract creating novation is invalid, e.g., THE PARTIES DID NOT MUTUALLY ASSENT TO THE SUBSTITUTION OF A NEW OBLIGATION FOR THE OLD OBLIGATION].

A. Novation Is Subject to Contract Rules. Novation is made by contract and is subject to all of the rules concerning contracts in general (Civ. Code § 1532).

[Optional] B. Lack of Mutual Assent. There is no novation when the parties do not mutually assent to the new contract (Duncanson-Harrelson Co. v. Travelers Indem. Co. (1962) 209 Cal. App. 2d 62, 69, 25 Cal. Rptr. 718 ; Ayoob v. Ayoob (1946) 74 Cal. App. 2d 236, 251, 168 P.2d 462).

[Optional] C. Lack of Consideration. There is no novation when there is a lack of consideration for the new contract (Hunt v. Smyth (1972) 25 Cal. App. 3d 807, 810, 101 Cal. Rptr. 4 ; Ybarra v. Solarz (1942) 56 Cal. App. 2d 342, 346, 132 P.2d 880).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that an alleged novation contract fails to conform to the rules governing contracts in general.

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a party seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used to oppose a defendant's motion for summary judgment.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised to oppose a defendant's motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the moving and opposing papers showing that there is a triable issue of fact as to whether the obligation sued on was in fact replaced by a new agreement.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

In a proper case this form may be combined with the memoranda set out in § 50.461.

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum opposing a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.450 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Lack of Mutual Assent

Duncanson-Harrelson Co. v. Travelers Indem. Co. (1962) 209 Cal. App. 2d 62, 25 Cal. Rptr. 718 , was an action by a subcontractor against the surety on a public works contractor's bond for materials furnished to the contractor. The plaintiff rented steel sheet piling and pile-driving equipment to the contractor, with rental the period to terminate June 10. When the contractor was declared in default and the contract was terminated on March 3, the public entity made an agreement with the contractor by which it assumed liability for all rental charges after March 3. The trial court granted judgment for the plaintiff. On appeal the defendant contended that a novation existed in that the public entity agreed to assume liability for all rental charges with the contractor, and thus the public entity, not the contractor or its surety, should be liable.

The court of appeal affirmed. An essential element of a novation is the agreement of all of the parties to the new contract. There was no evidence that the plaintiff was a party to the alleged agreement between the public entity and the contractor, and the rental agreement was still controlling between the contractor and the plaintiff (209 Cal. App. 2d 62, 69-70) .

Ayoob v. Ayoob (1946) 74 Cal. App. 2d 236, 168 P.2d 462 , was an action against the estate of the plaintiff's husband to recover on an alleged oral antenuptial agreement. The plaintiff's husband had promised to pay her $5,000 from his estate after his death if she would marry him, move to America, and care for him. After their marriage, the husband told the plaintiff that he had made her the beneficiary of his $5,000 life insurance policy. After the husband's death, the plaintiff received the policy proceeds but sued to recover on the oral promise. The defendant alleged that the parties substituted the agreement to make the plaintiff a beneficiary under the life insurance policy in place of the antenuptial agreement. The trial court found that the oral promise to change beneficiaries had been satisfied but did not find evidence that the agreement to change beneficiaries constituted a novation. Judgment was rendered for the defendants.

The court of appeal reversed. The burden of proving the novation was on the defendant, but the evidence in this case was insufficient to satisfy the burden. It is the plaintiff's intent that would be controlling in trying to establish a novation. Novation is a bilateral or multilateral contract requiring the mutual assent of all parties, and as between the obligor and the obligee, the intent of the obligee is controlling on the question of waiver or release of the obligation under the original agreement. Even if the husband had intended the original obligation to be superseded by the new acts and promise, they would have been insufficient to constitute a novation in that they were only illusory and did not amount to an executed consideration. Moreover, the plaintiff testified that nothing was said toindicate that the change of beneficiaries would constitute satisfaction of the original promise to pay $5,000 out of the husband's estate; this was corroborated by the fact that she was allowed to keep a written memorandum of the husband's original promise at his suggestion, and it was evidence against the existence of a novation and in favor of the subsistence of the original agreement (74 Cal. App. 2d 236, 251-252) .

[b] Lack of Consideration

The facts and procedural background of Hunt v. Smyth (1972) 25 Cal. App. 3d 807, 101 Cal. Rptr. 4 , are discussed in § 50.464[3][b]. In affirming judgment for the defendant, the court of appeal rejected the plaintiff's argument that the parties made a novation by substituting a lower monthly payment on a promissory note. In the absence of some agreement, the mere acceptance of partial payments of what is due on an obligation does not discharge the balance or modify the terms of payment. There must be some consideration flowing from the obligor, either a benefit to the obligee or a detriment to the obligor for which the obligee bargained, before a novation can be found. The court held the evidence to be insufficient to establish a novation (25 Cal. App. 3d 807, 810) .

Ybarra v. Solarz (1942) 56 Cal. App. 2d 342, 132 P.2d 880 , was an action to cancel a trust deed and promissory note and to restrain foreclosure proceedings against real property. The plaintiff agreed to purchase the property from the defendants. The agreement provided that the vendors reserved the right at any time to give a deed and take back a trust deed for the unpaid balance, payable in accordance with the terms of the contract. The plaintiff alleged that the vendors induced him to execute a trust deed which, contrary to the terms of the agreement, provided that the unpaid balance would become due and payable on a specified future date. When the vendors indicated their intention to foreclose after this date had passed, the plaintiff commenced this action, alleging lack of consideration for the new terms. The vendors' general demurrer was sustained without leave to amend. On appeal, the vendors contended that the parties made a novation through the execution of the trust deed and promissory note, and the unpaid balance of the purchase price, being an antecedent debt, constituted sufficient consideration.

The court of appeal reversed. A novation is subject to the rules of contracts and requires a consideration to support it. If the terms of sale had remained the same, the plaintiff would have had no cause for complaint because the consideration for the original contract sufficed. However, the complaint alleged a change in the terms of the agreement between the parties, which resulted in a more onerous burden on the plaintiff without any consideration from the vendors. These allegations were sufficient as against a general demurrer (56 Cal. App. 2d 342, 346) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Lack of Mutual Assent

Molera v. Cooper (1916) 173 Cal. 259, 160 P. 231 , was an action to collect on a promissory note that the defendant had made to the plaintiff's testator. The defendant answered that the parties to the note had agreed that in consideration of its extinguishment, the defendant would hold the amount of the note in trust for the benefit of two minors. A demurrer to the answer was sustained, and judgment was rendered for the plaintiff. The Supreme Court affirmed, with modifications concerning the amount of interest. There was no trust as there was no trust property in existence, and a mere promise to obtain money and hold it in trust is insufficient. A novation had not occurred. None of the three alternatives under Civ. Code § 1531 applied, as there was no agreement between the same parties, and no new debtor or creditor was substituted. The defendant contended that a new obligation to third parties, the two children, had been created. However, neither the children nor their guardians consented to the new obligation. For the same reason, there was no transfer to them of the rights of the original obligee. Such a novation would require the consent both of the original parties to change the old contract or their relations to it and extinguish the liability, and of the new parties to create the new contract (173 Cal. 259, 262-263) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
D. Existence of Contract
6. Novation of Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.461

§ 50.461 Novation by Substitution of New Obligation Is Not Shown

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THERE WAS NO NOVATION BY SUBSTITUTION OF A NEW OBLIGATION BECAUSE IT DOES NOT CLEARLY APPEAR THAT THE PARTIES INTENDED TO EXTINGUISH THE ORIGINAL OBLIGATION.

A. Lack of Intent to Substitute New Obligation. There is no novation by substitution of a new obligation when it does not clearly appear from the evidence that the parties intended to extinguish the old obligation (see Civ. Code § 1531(1); Paykar Construction, Inc. v. Spilat Construction Corp. (2001) 92 Cal. App. 4th 488, 494, 111 Cal. Rptr. 2d 863 ; Wade v. Diamond A Cattle Co. (1975) 44 Cal. App. 3d 453, 457, 118 Cal. Rptr. 695 ; Davies Mach. Co. v. Pine Mountain Club, Inc. (1974) 39 Cal. App. 3d 18, 25, 113 Cal. Rptr. 784).

B. Burden of Proof. The burden of proof is on the party asserting that a novation has been consummated (Davies Mach. Co. v. Pine Mountain Club, Inc. (1974) 39 Cal. App. 3d 18, 24-25, 113 Cal. Rptr. 784 ; Ehrenreich v. Shelton (1963) 213 Cal. App. 2d 376, 378-379, 28 Cal. Rptr. 855).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that a novation did not occur by the substitution of a new obligation because it does not clearly appear that the parties intended to extinguish the old obligation.

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a party seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used to oppose a defendant's motion for summary judgment.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised to oppose a defendant's motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the moving and opposing papers showing that there is a triable issue of fact as to whether the obligation sued on was in fact replaced by a new agreement.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

In a proper case this form may be combined with the memoranda set out in § 50.460.

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum opposing a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing amemorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.450 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Lack of Intent to Substitute New Obligation

Paykar Construction, Inc. v. Spilat Construction Corp. (2001) 92 Cal. App. 4th 488, 494, 111 Cal. Rptr. 2d 863 was an action by a subcontractor against a general contractor for amounts due under a subcontract which the general contractor and the property owners had executed jointly and severally. In a prior action against the same parties, the subcontractor had settled with the owners, released a mechanic's lien and dismissed the entire action without prejudice. Under the terms of the settlement, the owners executed a promissory note to the subcontractor, secured by deeds of trust on other properties, and also agreed to pay specified amounts. In a subsequent action, the subcontractor sued the general contractor alleging causes of action for breach of contract and a common count for book account. The jury found a substantial breach and awarded damages. The general contractor moved for judgment notwithstanding the verdict or new trial. It argued that both its debt to the subcontractor and the owners' debt to the subcontractor were based on the same obligation to pay for work performed under the subcontract. Therefore, when the owners provided a promissory note in lieu of the original debt, the subcontractor's debt was "merged" into the promissory note and extinguished. The trial court denied the motion, and the court of appeal affirmed. With respect to novation, the court of appeal stated that it saw no indication in the record on appeal that the subcontractor intended to extinguish the general contractor's obligation, much less evidence compelling that conclusion. There was no document stating that the subcontractor's obligation was extinguished or excused in any manner, and the events surrounding the settlement did not established as a matter of law that the subcontractor intended to excuse the general contractor's debt. The court found of particular importance the fact that upon settling with the owners, the subcontractor dismissed its first action against the general contractor and the owners without prejudice, thereby preserving its rights against the general contractor (92 Cal. App. 4th 488, 494) .

Wade v. Diamond A Cattle Co. (1975) 44 Cal. App. 3d 453, 118 Cal. Rptr. 695 , was an action for money due involving three separate transactions for the buying, feeding and fattening, and reselling of cattle. The defendant conducted a feed yard on its own account and also as agent andfactor for the accounts of others including the plaintiff. The defendant also financed customers' purchases up to 75 percent of the price. The amount financed with interest was deducted from the price at the time of resale. The plaintiff alleged that in one of the transactions, the defendant orally agreed to buy a certain number of head of cattle for the plaintiff's account. The parties also made a written financing agreement for cattle at $27 per hundredweight, under which the plaintiff made a small equity payment and the balance was financed by the defendant. The defendant resold the cattle but paid to the plaintiff only a part of the plaintiff's net profit on the resale and the plaintiff's original equity payment. The plaintiff's sued to recover the balance due. The defendant answered by alleging the existence of an earlier written contract by which the defendant sold cattle to the plaintiff at $33 per hundredweight. The defendant alleged that the $27 price appeared in the financing agreement because of mistake and inadvertence. As the defendant had already advanced part of the balance owing to the plaintiff based on the $27 price, the defendant cross complained for the amount of overpayment based on the $33 price. The trial court found that the basic agreement was for $33 per hundredweight, and the price of $27 in the financing agreement was a unilateral mistake by the defendant known to the plaintiff. Judgment was rendered for the plaintiff but awarding the defendant a setoff based on the reasonable market value of the cattle at the time the original contract was executed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court construed the plaintiff's contention that the written contract at $33 per hundredweight was modified by the financing agreement, based on the $27 price, to be a contention for a novation. There is no valid novation unless the parties intend that the rights and obligations of the new contract be substituted for the terms and conditions of the old contract. Although the evidence was highly conflicting, there was substantial evidence to support the finding that the intentwas lacking because of the defendant's inadvertence and mistake in using the $27 price (44 Cal. App. 3d 453, 457) .

The facts and procedural background of Davies Mach. Co. v. Pine Mountain Club, Inc. (1974) 39 Cal. App. 3d 18, 113 Cal. Rptr. 784 , are discussed in [b], below. The parties orally agreed that the contractor make payments on the maintenance account based on the hours he used the equipment. In holding that the oral agreement did not constitute a novation of the security agreement for the purchase of the equipment, the court stated that the intention of the parties to extinguish the prior obligation and to substitute a new agreement in its place must clearly appear. The court found the evidence of the intent to be lacking, and the new arrangement for payment under the contract was not, in itself, sufficient to effect a novation (39 Cal. App. 3d 18, 25-26) .

[b] Burden of Proof

Davies Mach. Co. v. Pine Mountain Club, Inc. (1974) 39 Cal. App. 3d 18, 113 Cal. Rptr. 784 , was an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien against the club's real property, for breach of a contract to buy land-leveling equipment, and to collect against an insurance company that bonded the buyer against liens on the property. The plaintiff had made a security agreement for the sale of earth-moving equipment to a land-leveling contractor. When the contractor became delinquent in the contract payments and on the open account established for maintenance and repair of the equipment, he made an oral agreement with the plaintiff to keep the equipment and to make payments based on the number of hours the equipment was used. After the contractor began leveling work on the club's land, he again became delinquent on both the maintenance account and the hourly rate for the equipment. The plaintiff served a preliminary notice on the club of recording a mechanic's lien and filing of a stop notice. When the contractor ceased working on the job, the plaintiff recorded a mechanic's lien against the property and commenced the foreclosure action. The trial court found that the oral agreement by implication canceled and terminated all prior written agreements between the parties respecting the equipment. Judgment was rendered for the plaintiff against the contractor, and a lien was charged against the club's property.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment against the contractor but reversed both the judgment foreclosing the mechanic's lien against the club's property and the judgment against the insurance company. The judgment ordering foreclosure of the lien could be upheld only if the plaintiff was the lessor of the equipment at the time it was used by the contractor for the job on the defendant's land. Sellers who have only a security interest in the equipment used by contractors or subcontractors on the property are not included within the class of persons entitled to a mechanic's lien under Civ. Code § 3110, as they are not beneficial owners of the equipment.The trial court's finding that the oral agreement by implication canceled the prior written agreement was an apparent finding of a novation, by which an oral lease agreement was substituted in place of the purchase agreement with the intent to extinguish the latter. Generally the burden of proving a novation is on the party asserting that a novation has been consummated, and the intent of the parties must clearly appear (39 Cal. App. 3d 18, 24-25) . There was no evidence that the parties expressly stated an intent to extinguish the purchase contract. To the contrary, as shown by their subsequent conduct and testimony, the parties intended that when the maintenance account was paid up, the payments were to be credited on the price of the equipment. Testimony indicated that the oral agreement was for the purpose of arranging lower monthly payments, and the plaintiff never released its equity in the equipment. Additionally, the plaintiff's standard lease form was not used; the contractor paid the personal property taxes on the equipment, which would have been paid by the plaintiff under a bona fide lease arrangement; the contractor made safety modifications on the equipment; and the principal charges declined over a period of a year, raising the inference that the hourly payments were credited to the purchase price. Thus, since the evidence indicated that the parties did not intend to substitute a lease agreement for the purchase agreement, the plaintiff was not a lessor entitled to a mechanic's lien, and the judgment of foreclosure was reversed (39 Cal. App. 3d 18, 25-27) .

Ehrenreich v. Shelton (1963) 213 Cal. App. 2d 376, 28 Cal. Rptr. 855 , was an action on a promissory note. The plaintiff had lent the defendant a sum of money in connection with the formation of a corporation. The parties subsequently modified the defendant's note to provide that the defendant would not be liable after the corporation was actually completed and formed. At the same time, they drew up two instruments. The first was an unsigned preincorporation subscription agreement that the sum disbursed to the defendant would be considered a loan to be repaid only from dividends from the corporation's stock. The second was a signed ancillary agreement by which the defendant was relieved from liability to the plaintiff for the sum if he did not rescind the agreement before a certain date. The trial court ruled that a novation was effected, and liability on the note was thus terminated. Judgment was rendered for the defendant.

The court of appeal reversed. Because there was some doubt as to which version of the facts was correct, the trial court erroneously placed the burden of proof on the plaintiff, whereas the burden of proving a novation is on the party asserting it (213 Cal. App. 2d 376, 378-379) . There was considerable doubt as to the parties' intent in making the secondary agreements. Generally in determining whether there has been a novation, the intent of the parties must be investigated and is determinative, and the evidence to establish the intent must be clear and convincing (213 Cal. App. 2d 376, 381) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Lack of Intent to Substitute New Obligation

The court of appeal in Meadows v. Grimsgaard (1985) 175 Cal. App. 3d 475, 221 Cal. Rptr. 22 , affirmed the trial court's judgment for the defendants. The plaintiff, purchaser under a "back-up" contract, sought declaratory relief and specific performance. The back-up contract was conditioned on the failure, termination, cancellation, or novation of the original contract. Despite the fact that the original contract called for a cash down payment but the deal was consummated by purchasers' giving exchange property, no novation was found. Since the only issue was the intent of the parties to the original contract, in the absence of any showing of fraud or collusion against the plaintiff, the policy against interference with contracts by third parties, the intent of parties to the original contract, and the fact they were the parties to the original contract controlled (175 Cal. App. 3d 475, 483-484) .

Goodman v. Citizens Life & Cas. Ins. Co. (1967) 253 Cal. App. 2d 807, 61 Cal. Rptr. 682 , was an action for declaratory relief and damages for breach of contract resulting from wrongful termination of an agency contract. The plaintiffs and an insurance company made a general agency contract by which the plaintiffs would sell insurance policies. The parties later made a new agreement by which the plaintiffs worked as the company's area supervisors on a commission basis, recruiting sales agents. A disagreement arose concerning one of the accounts recruited by the plaintiffs, resulting in the company's threatening to terminate the agreement. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's judgment that the company did not terminate or attempt to terminate the contract, and the plaintiffs were not entitled to damages for breach. At trial, the plaintiffs attempted to introduce evidence that the parties had made an oral agreement by which the clause in their agreement permitting termination by the defendant without cause was altered. The trial court excluded the evidence under the parol evidence rule. One of the plaintiffs' arguments to justify admitting the evidence was that the oral agreement constituted a novation. The court summarized the rule that for a novation, the intention of the parties to extinguish the prior obligation and to substitute a new agreement in its place must clearly appear, and the controlling factor is the intent of the obligee to effect a release of the original obligor. The evidence of intent was insufficient in that the alteration only dealt with the termination clause, and if a novation was made, the sole agreement would have consisted of a termination clause without any underlying contract (253 Cal. App. 2d 807, 816-817) .

U.S. Gypsum Co. v. Synder-Ashe Co. (1934) 139 Cal. App. 731, 34 P.2d 767 , included causes of action for an unpaid balance on an open account for materials furnished by the plaintiff to the defendant, for an accountstated, and for materials sold and delivered. The defendant alleged that the obligation was extinguished when the defendant agreed to pay the plaintiff $2,000 and deliver its promissory notes for the balance. The trial court rendered judgment for the plaintiff, finding that the defendant never made the payment, and the plaintiff refused to accept the promissory notes. On the defendant's appeal, the court of appeal affirmed. The evidence showed that the cash payment was a condition precedent to the acceptance of the notes, and until both payment and notes were received by the plaintiff, the original obligation remained in effect, and the novation was not effective. A novation, strictly speaking, implies (1) a previous valid obligation, (2) the agreement of all the parties to the new contract, (3) the extinguishment of the old contract, and (4) the validity of the new contract. There was nothing in the evidence to show an extinguishment of the old contract (139 Cal. App. 731, 733) .

[b] Burden of Proof

The court of appeal in Howard v. County of Amador (1990) 220 Cal. App. 3d 962, 269 Cal. Rptr. 807 , affirmed a judgment for taxpayers who challenged reassessment of their mineral rights. The county contended that reassessment was proper because the twelfth lease amendment constituted a novation and thus a change of ownership. The court disagreed, saying that it is essential to a novation that it clearly appear that the parties intended to extinguish rather than merely modify the original agreement. The burden of proof is on the party asserting that a novation has been consummated. The court commented that this was an unusual case because the parties to the lease denied that a novation occurred and it was a third party who asserted a novation (220 Cal. App. 3d 962, 977) . The third party in that position has a heavy burden of proof, and in the absence of fraud or collusion, a court would be warranted in finding for the original parties to the contract simply because they are the original parties (220 Cal. App. 3d 962, 977-978) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
D. Existence of Contract
6. Novation of Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.462

§ 50.462 Novation by Substitution of New Debtor Is Not Shown

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THERE WAS NO NOVATION BY SUBSTITUTION OF A NEW DEBTOR IN PLACE OF THE ORIGINAL DEBTOR BECAUSE THE PARTIES DID NOT INTEND TO RELEASE THE ORIGINAL DEBTOR.

A. Lack of Intent to Release Old Debtor. There is no novation by substitution of a new debtor in place of the old debtor when the parties did not intend to release the old debtor (see Civ. Code § 1531(2); Transport Clearings-Bay Area v. Simmonds (1964) 226 Cal. App. 2d 405, 430-431, 38 Cal. Rptr. 116).

B. Burden of Proof. [See § 50.461[1], Paragraph B.]

[Optional] C. Mere Acceptance of Payments From Another Debtor Is Insufficient to Release Old Debtor. The acceptance of payments by the creditor from another debtor does not alone amount to a contract of novation to release the original debtor (University of Redlands v. Ford (1942) 56 Cal. App. 2d 151, 152, 132 P.2d 238).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that a novation did not occur by the substitution of a new debtor in place of the original debtor because it has not been shown that the parties intended to release the original debtor from the contract obligations.

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a party seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used to oppose a defendant's motion for summary judgment.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised to oppose a defendant's motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the moving and opposing papers showing that there is a triable issue of fact as to whether the defendant was in fact replaced by a new debtor or obligor.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

In a proper case this form may be combined with the memoranda set out in § 50.463.

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum opposing a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.451 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Lack of Intent to Release Old Debtor

Transport Clearings-Bay Area v. Simmonds (1964) 226 Cal. App. 2d 405, 38 Cal. Rptr. 116 , was an action to recover sums disbursed by the plaintiff in clearing freight bills of the defendant's trucking company. The plaintiff was a private clearinghouse for carriers' freight bills; it would advance the amount of a bill to the carrier then collect the amount from the obligor. The defendant was a clearinghouse member. The defendant sold its trucking business, subject to approval by the Public Utilities Commission, and made a management agreement for the buyer to manage the business until approval of the sale or expiration of the contract. The plaintiff accepted freight bills from the defendant's buyer, which were chargeable to an out-of-state corporation owned by the buyer. After many of that debtor's checks were dishonored, the plaintiff met with the defendant's buyer and agreed to accept an unsecured promissory note for the debt along with the buyer's personal guaranty. When the buyer failed to provide additional security and the plaintiff discovered that none of the submitted bills represented charges due on cargo handled in the local area, the plaintiff made a demand on the defendant for the unrecovered amounts of the freight bills and then commenced this action. The plaintiff's motion for a directed verdict was denied, and a verdict was returned for the defendant. The plaintiff's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict was denied, and judgment was rendered for the defendant.

The court of appeal reversed. The defendant was the owner of the business since there could be no transfer before approval of the sale by the Public Utilities Commission (226 Cal. App. 2d 405, 421) . The buyer was the defendant's agent with implicit authority to submit the freight bills (226 Cal. App. 2d 405, 424-427) , and the defendant failed to establish the defense of estoppel (226 Cal. App. 2d 405, 427-429) . The defendant's claim that a novation was effected by substituting the buyer as a new debtor in the defendant's place, with the intent to release the defendant, was not supported by the evidence. Whether a novation has taken place is a question of intention, with the controlling factor being the obligee's intent to release the original obligor. The plaintiff in this case never intimated during negotiations with the buyer that transactions between them were to be deemed in any way a release of any obligations incurred by the defendant. Since the plaintiff lacked the necessary intent, there could be no novation as a matter of law (226 Cal. App. 2d 405, 430-431) .

[b] Mere Acceptance of Payments From Another Debtor Is Insufficient to Release Old Debtor

University of Redlands v. Ford (1942) 56 Cal. App. 2d 151, 132 P.2d 238 , was an action to direct a decedent's executor to allow the plaintiff's claim against the estate. The decedent had made a promissory note to the plaintiff, secured by a deed of trust on real and personal property. The defendant alleged that the real property securing the note was sold to third parties subject to the lien of the deed of trust, and the defendant attempted to plead a novation. The trial court rendered judgment for the plaintiff.

The court of appeal affirmed. The defendant alleged that a novation had occurred by the sale of the property to third parties but failed to allege any agreement with the plaintiff to release the decedent from his obligation and substitute the promise of the third parties. In order to complete a novation successfully by the substitution of one debtor for another, the creditor must consent to it. The acceptance of payments from the new owner does not amount to a contract to release the original debtor. A novation was neither properly pleaded nor proved (56 Cal. App. 2d 151, 152) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Lack of Intent to Release Old Debtor

Engineering etc. Corp. v. Longridge Inv. Co. (1957) 153 Cal. App. 2d 404, 314 P.2d 563 , was an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien. The defendants had formed a joint venture for the purpose of subdividing real property and selling lots. One of the defendants had individually hired the plaintiff to conduct preliminary engineering studies the property. The defendants later converted their joint venture into a development corporation. The plaintiff obtained a decree of foreclosure of its mechanic's lien that held the defendants personally liable. The court of appeal affirmed. The defendants argued that a novation occurred when, after the development corporation was formed, the plaintiff sent its bills for services rendered to the corporation. However, there were no conversations between the plaintiff andanyone representing the corporation about the substitution of the corporation as debtor in the place of the individual joint venturers. To accomplish a novation by the substitution of a new debtor, the substitution must be with the consent of the creditor, and the parties must intend that the obligation of the original debtor be released. The acceptance of payments from the new owner does not amount to a contract to release the original debtor. Thus, the joint venturers remained liable after assumption of the obligation by the corporation (153 Cal. App. 2d 404, 413-414) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
D. Existence of Contract
6. Novation of Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.463

§ 50.463 Creditor Rescinded Acceptance of New Debtor Under Novation Agreement

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

A NOVATION DID NOT OCCUR BY THE SUBSTITUTION OF A NEW DEBTOR FOR THE _____ [e.g., DEFENDANT] BECAUSE THE _____ [e.g., PLAINTIFF] RESCINDED ACCEPTANCE OF THE NEW DEBTOR'S OBLIGATION, PURSUANT TO SECTION 1533 OF THE CIVIL CODE.

[EITHER]

Creditor May Rescind Acceptance When Debtor Prevents Compliance With Order or Fulfillment of Obligation. When _____ [the obligation of or an order on] a third person is accepted in satisfaction of a former debtor's obligation, the creditor may rescind the acceptance if the old debtor prevents the new debtor from _____ [fulfilling the obligation or complying with the order] (Civ. Code § 1533).

[OR]

Creditor May Rescind Acceptance When New Debtor Is Insolvent. When _____ [the obligation of or an order on] a third person is accepted in satisfaction of a former debtor's obligation, the creditor may rescind the acceptance if the third person _____ [is insolvent at the time the _____ (obligation or order) is received, and this fact is unknown to the creditor or becomes insolvent before the creditor can with reasonable diligence present the order to him/her] (Civ. Code § 1533).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that a novation did not occur by the substitution of a new debtor in the place of the original debtor because the creditor rescinded acceptance of the obligation of or an order on the new debtor in satisfaction of the contract obligation [see Civ. Code § 1533].

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a party seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used to oppose a defendant's motion for summary judgment.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised to oppose a defendant's motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the moving and opposing papers showing that there is a triable issue of fact as to whether the defendant was in fact replaced by a new debtor or obligor.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

In a proper case this form may be combined with the memoranda set out in § 50.462.

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum opposing a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.451 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
D. Existence of Contract
6. Novation of Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.464

§ 50.464 Past Forgiveness of Installments Does Not Constitute Execution of Oral Agreement to Reduce Future Installments Under Written Contract

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE CONTRACT WAS NOT MODIFIED BY AN EXECUTED ORAL AGREEMENT BECAUSE THERE WAS NO CONSIDERATION FOR ANY MODIFICATION OF THE CONTRACT BY THE _____ [contending party, e.g., PLAINTIFF], AND, IN THE ABSENCE OF CONSIDERATION, FORGIVENESS OF PAST INSTALLMENTS UNDER THE WRITTEN CONTRACT DID NOT CONSTITUTE EXECUTION OF AN ORAL AGREEMENT TO REDUCE THE AMOUNT OF FUTURE INSTALLMENTS.

A. Oral Modification Lacking Consideration Is Executed Contract Only When Obligee Accepts Performance in Accordance With Terms of Modification. When an oral modification agreement requires no act or forbearance on the part of the obligor other than as required by the original contract, such an agreement is executed within the meaning of Civil Code Section 1698 only to the extent that the obligee accepts performance in accordance with the terms of the modification agreement (D.L. Godbey & Sons Constr. Co. v. Deane (1952) 39 Cal. 2d 429, 432, 246 P.2d 946

B. Past Forgiveness of Installments Due Does Not Constitute Executed Oral Agreement to Reduce Future Payments. In the absence of a new consideration or of a writing that modifies the contract, the mere forgiveness of past installments under a written contract does not constitute execution of an oral agreement to reduce the amount of future installments under the contract (see Stoltenberg v. Harveston (1934) 1 Cal. 2d 264, 266-267, 34 P.2d 472 ; Hunt v. Smyth (1972) 25 Cal. App. 3d 807, 810, 101 Cal. Rptr. 4).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that the contract was not modified by an executed oral agreement to reduce the amount of installment payments under the contract, because past forgiveness of a portion of the installments due does not constituteexecution of an oral modification agreement to reduce the amount of future installment payments.

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a party seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used to oppose a defendant's motion for summary adjudication.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised to oppose a defendant's motion for summary adjudication, the memorandum would include an analysis of the moving and opposing papers showing that the undisputed facts indicate there is no valid modification justifying nonpayment of the installments from which defendant claims to be excused.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum opposing a motion for summary adjudication, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.450 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Oral Modification Lacking Consideration Is Executed Contract Only When Obligee Accepts Performance in Accordance With Terms of Modification

The facts and procedural background of D.L. Godbey & Sons Constr. Co. v. Deane (1952) 39 Cal. 2d 429, 246 P.2d 946 , are discussed in § 50.523[3][b]. The Supreme Court noted that Civ. Code § 1698 has the effect of validating executed oral modification agreements that might otherwise fail for lack of consideration. Agreements to accept less than is due under the terms of a written contract or to accept performance at a later date than that provided in writing are typical of this type of agreement. Since the modification agreement requires no additional act or forbearance on the part of the obligor, it can be executed only to the extent that the obligee accepts performance in accordance with its terms. Thus, in the absence of a valid waiver of a condition or facts establishing an estoppel to rely on Civ. Code § 1698, the statute can be satisfied only by execution on the part of the obligee by accepting less than his due (39 Cal. 2d 429, 432) .

[b] Past Forgiveness of Installments Due Does Not Constitute Executed Oral Agreement to Reduce Future

Payments

Stoltenberg v. Harveston (1934) 1 Cal. 2d 264, 34 P.2d 472 , was a landlord's action against tenants who held over after default in the payment of rent. The defense to the action was that the plaintiff had orally agreed to reduce the rent under the written lease. The trial court rendered judgment for the plaintiff.

The Supreme Court affirmed. Regarding whether a written lease specifying a certain monthly rent may be modified by an oral agreement to accept a lesser sum: as to those payments actually made and accepted as rent in full for the period covered by them, the oral agreement reducing the rent was executed, and no claim for recovery of rent during the period covered by those payments could be maintained. However, a different rule governs the monthly payments of rent due under the lease and not actually paid by the lessees. As to those payments: the oral agreement to accept amounts less than those called for in the written lease had not been executed (1 Cal. 2d 264, 266) .

In Hunt v. Smyth (1972) 25 Cal. App. 3d 807, 101 Cal. Rptr. 4 , was an action to prevent foreclosure proceedings. The plaintiffs had purchased real property from the defendant and had given a note secured by a second deed of trust on the property for the balance of the price. The note provided for monthly installments of $250 for eight years then $350 until the balance was paid. The plaintiffs became delinquent on their payments and paid only $250 a month after eight years had passed. When the defendant discovered that the noted called for $350 monthly payments after eight years, he demanded that the plaintiffs immediately pay all delinquent installments and pay $350 a month thereafter. The plaintiffs commenced this action when the defendant filed a notice of default. The trial court rendered judgment for the defendant, requiring the plaintiffs to pay the amounts owing on the note and the defendant's attorney's fees.

The court of appeal affirmed. When periodic payments are due under a lease or a settlement agreement, and a lesser sum than that provided in the written agreement is tendered and accepted in full satisfaction of the agreement, the obligee cannot subsequently collect the difference. However, in the absence of a new consideration or a writing that modifies the contract, the mere forgiveness of a portion of past installments will not effect an agreement to reduce future installments (25 Cal. App. 3d 807, 810) . In this case, an agreement to waive $100 of each payment and extend the maturity of the note could not be inferred from the circumstances (25 Cal. App. 3d 807, 812) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
D. Existence of Contract
6. Novation of Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities §§ 50.465-50.469

[Reserved]

§§ 50.465[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
D. Existence of Contract
7. Mutual Rescission or Abandonment of Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.470

§ 50.470 Contract Was Rescinded or Abandoned by Mutual Consent

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

[THE EVIDENCE IS NOT SUFFICIENT TO SUPPORT THE _____ (VERDICT or DECISION) FOR THE PLAINTIFF IN THAT] THE CONTRACT WAS _____ [RESCINDED or ABANDONED] BY THE MUTUAL CONSENT OF THE PARTIES.

A. Mutual Rescission of Contract. A contract may be rescinded if all of the parties consent (Civ. Code § 1689(a)).

B. Release From Obligations. A contract may be mutually abandoned or rescinded by the parties at any stage of its performance or before any performance has been commenced, and by abandonment or rescission, each party is released from any further performance or any performance at all (see Honda v. Reed (1958) 156 Cal. App. 2d 536, 540, 319 P.2d 728).

C. Consideration for Mutual Rescission or Abandonment. When parties to an executory bilateral agreement mutually agree to rescind or abrogate the contract, the promise of one party to forgo his or her rights under the contract is sufficient consideration for the promise of the other party to forgo his or her rights (Jura v. Sunshine Biscuits, Inc. (1953) 118 Cal. App. 2d 442, 447, 258 P.2d 90 ; Sass v. Hank (1951) 108 Cal. App. 2d 207, 215, 238 P.2d 652).

[Optional] D. Written Contract May Be Rescinded or Abandoned by Oral Agreement. The mutual rescission or abrogation of a written contract may be effected by an oral agreement, whether executed or not (Sass v. Hank (1951) 108 Cal. App. 2d 207, 215, 238 P.2d 652).

[Optional] E. Abandonment or Rescission May Be Implied by Conduct of Parties. A mutual abandonment or rescission of a contract may be shown by the conduct of the parties and need not be expressly stated in writing or orally (Honda v. Reed (1958) 156 Cal. App. 2d 536, 537, 319 P.2d 728).

[Optional] F. Abandonment or Rescission May Be Implied by Subsequent Negotiations for New Contract. Abandonment of acontract may be implied by the acts of the parties in negotiating for a new and different contract concerning the same property or subject matter (Honda v. Reed (1958) 156 Cal. App. 2d 536, 539, 319 P.2d 728).

[Optional] G. Abandonment or Rescission May Be Implied by Acquiescence in Other Party's Refusal to Comply. Abandonment or rescission of a contract by mutual consent may be implied when one party acquiesces in the other party's refusal to comply with the contract (McCreary v. Mercury Lbr. Distributors (1954) 124 Cal. App. 2d 477, 486, 268 P.2d 762 ; Dessert Seed Co. v. Garbus (1944) 66 Cal. App. 2d 838, 847, 153 P.2d 184).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that the parties rescinded or abandoned the contract by mutual consent [see Civ. Code § 1689(a)].

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a party seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used to support a defendant's motion for summary judgment.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised to support a defendant's motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the moving and opposing papers showing that the undisputed facts indicate the parties, by mutual consent, abandoned or rescinded the contract sued upon.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum supporting a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.480 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Release From Obligations

In Honda v. Reed (1958) 156 Cal. App. 2d 536, 319 P.2d 728 , the defendant agreed to lease an apartment building and sell the furniture in it to the plaintiffs. An escrow was to be opened at a bank to consummate the transaction; however, escrow instructions were never signed, and the escrow contemplated by the contract was never opened. None of the consideration for the lease and sale was ever paid to the defendant. The parties later negotiated for a new and different agreement with respect to the apartment building. After these negotiations failed, the plaintiffs sued for damages for the breach of the initial agreement. The trial court found that the contract had been abandoned by the mutual consent of the parties and rendered judgment for the defendant.

The court of appeal affirmed. An abandonment may be shown by the conduct of the parties and need not be expressly stated orally or in writing (156 Cal. App. 2d 536, 537) . Thus, abandonment of a contract may be implied by the acts of the parties in negotiating for a new and different contract concerning the same property or subject matter (156 Cal. App. 2d 536, 539) . Also, former Civ. Code § 1698, which provided that a written agreement could be altered by a contract in writing or by an executed oral agreement, and not otherwise, was not applicable to the abandonment of such a contract by mutual consent. Abandonment terminates a contract and abrogates as much of it as is unperformed; abandonment does not merely alter or modify the contract (156 Cal. App. 2d 536, 539-540) . A contract may be mutually abandoned by the parties at any stage of its performance or before any performance has been commenced, and by abandonment, each party is released from any further performance, or, as in this case, each party is released from any performance at all (156 Cal. App. 2d 536, 540) .

[b] Consideration for Mutual Rescission or Abandonment

In Jura v. Sunshine Biscuits, Inc. (1953) 118 Cal. App. 2d 442, 258 P.2d 90 , the plaintiffs sued to recover the price of figs sold pursuant toa written contract. The defendant answered that the parties had orally agreed to extinguish that contract and substitute a new agreement for it. The trial court found that, before the delivery of the figs to the defendant, the parties had made an agreement terminating the written contract by mutual consent and providing that thereafter the plaintiffs would sell to the defendant whatever quantities of figs the defendant might order, at a price to be agreed on by the parties. The trial court rendered judgment for the defendant. On appeal, the plaintiffs contended that, assuming that there was an oral agreement to terminate the original written contract, there was no valid consideration to support such an agreement.

The court of appeal affirmed. The written agreement was a bilateral contract that had not been performed by either side, and under the terms of the oral agreement, the plaintiffs were freed of their obligation to sell the fig crop to the defendant, and the defendant was freed of its obligation to buy the crop. If the parties to a bilateral contract agree to rescind or modify it, there is no difficulty in finding consideration, whether the agreement to rescind is made before or after a breach of the original contract, as long as neither party has completely performed or been discharged from his or her obligation. The promise of one party to forgo his or her rights under the contract is sufficient consideration for the promise of the other party to forgo his or her rights (118 Cal. App. 2d 442, 447) . In this case, there was sufficient consideration to support the oral agreement of the parties (118 Cal. App. 2d 442, 448) .

In Sass v. Hank (1951) 108 Cal. App. 2d 207, 238 P.2d 652 , the plaintiffs agreed in writing to lend certain photographic negatives containing original art work to the defendants for the purpose of manufacturing greeting cards. The defendants agreed to produce and sell a certain minimum number of greeting cards and to pay the plaintiffs a royalty equal to a certain percentage of the gross billing price of the cards. The contract also provided that the contract should have a two-year period, and the contract would be automatically renewed for an additional two-year period unless the parties gave written notice of intention to terminate the contract at least 60 days before the expiration of the initial two-year period. Thereafter, the plaintiffs sued to recover royalties under the contract, based on the guarantied minimum-production provision, for the initial two-year period and for the subsequent two-year period. The trial court found that the defendants had not agreed to a minimum production or royalty, and, although no written notice of termination of the agreement had been given, the parties had orally agreed to rescind, cancel, and abandon the agreement before the expiration of the initial two-year period. The trial court rendered judgment for the plaintiffs based on the actual sales of the cards during the first two-year period and denying royalties entirely for the second two-year period.

The court of appeal modified the judgment and affirmed. The defendants had agreed to a minimum production and royalty by the express terms ofthe written contract, and the court modified the judgment to award royalties based on the minimum production for the initial two-year period. The court affirmed the judgment insofar as it denied the plaintiffs royalties for the second two-year period. Although the contract provided for an automatic two-year renewal unless the parties gave 60 days' written notice of cancellation, the trial court had found that the parties later orally agreed to terminate their agreement after the expiration of the original period of two years. The mutual rescission or abrogation of a written contract may be effected by an oral agreement, whether executed or not. Although such an agreement must be supported by sufficient consideration, the consideration was present in this case in the form of the mutual cancellation of executory contractual rights. Each party suffered a legal detriment in giving up rights, and the consideration is adequate (108 Cal. App. 2d 207, 215) .

[c] Written Contract May Be Rescinded or Abandoned by Oral Agreement

Sass v. Hank (1951) 108 Cal. App. 2d 207, 238 P.2d 652 , is discussed in [b], above.

[d] Abandonment or Rescission May Be Implied by Conduct of Parties

Honda v. Reed (1958) 156 Cal. App. 2d 536, 319 P.2d 728 , is discussed in [a], above.

[e] Abandonment or Rescission May Be Implied by Subsequent Negotiations for New Contract

Honda v. Reed (1958) 156 Cal. App. 2d 536, 319 P.2d 728 , is discussed in [a], above.

[f] Abandonment or Rescission May Be Implied by Acquiescence in Other Party's Refusal to Comply

McCreary v. Mercury Lbr. Distributors (1954) 124 Cal. App. 2d 477, 268 P.2d 762 , was an action to rescind a written contract for the sale of timber and to quiet title to real property. The defendant was to fell and remove all timber on a certain tract owned by the plaintiffs and to pay the plaintiffs a certain amount per thousand board feet for the timber removed. Although the written contract was silent as to the time within which the timber was to be removed, the trial court found that the parties had intended that the timber be removed from the plaintiffs' land as soon as possible. After execution of the contract, the defendant delayed logging operations for some time and then logged only sporadically. The defendant also failed to pay for some of the logs removed from the plaintiffs' property.Thereafter, the plaintiffs repudiated the contract, locked the gate on the road leading to the tract of land where the timber was located, and sent the defendant a notice of rescission. The parties then attempted to negotiate either for a modification of the old contract or for a new contract, but the negotiations failed to produce a new agreement. The trial court found that the plaintiffs and the defendant had mutually agreed to rescind and abandon the original contract. Judgment was rendered for the plaintiffs. On appeal, the defendants contended that the trial court's finding of mutual rescission was not supported by the evidence.

The court of appeal affirmed. An abandonment of a contract may be implied by the acts of the parties, and this may be accomplished by the repudiation of the contract by one of the parties and by the acquiescence of the other party in the repudiation. It is not necessary that the parties say, in so many words, that they do mutually rescind the contract; rescission may be proved by other words and acts. In this case, acquiescence was shown by the negotiations for a new contract, after the plaintiffs had locked the gate, and by the absence of a showing that the defendant had claimed any further rights under the old contract before the commencement of the action by the plaintiffs (124 Cal. App. 2d 477, 486) .

In Dessert Seed Co. v. Garbus (1944) 66 Cal. App. 2d 838, 153 P.2d 184 , the plaintiff contracted over the phone to buy the defendants' growing onion crop. Following their conversation, the plaintiff sent a letter setting forth the terms of the oral contract and a check and a note for the price. A few days later, one of the defendants went to the plaintiff's office with the check, note, and papers and stated to the plaintiff that the deal was off. The plaintiff subsequently tore his signature off these papers. The parties then engaged in further negotiations with respect to the sale of the onion crop, which failed to result in an agreement. The defendants grew and harvested the crop, paying all expenses of doing so. When the seed was about to be taken, the plaintiff sued for specific performance and for damages for breach of contract and attached the crop. The trial court rendered judgment for the defendants.

The court of appeal affirmed. An abandonment of a contract may be implied by the acts of the parties, and this may be accomplished by the repudiation of the contract by one of the parties and by the acquiescence of the other party in the repudiation. In this case, the evidence warranted a conclusion that there had been a mutual abandonment or rescission of the oral contract (66 Cal. App. 2d 838, 847) .

155 of 168 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
D. Existence of Contract
7. Mutual Rescission or Abandonment of Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities §§ 50.471-50.479

[Reserved]

§§ 50.471[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
D. Existence of Contract
7. Mutual Rescission or Abandonment of Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.480

§ 50.480 Intent to Rescind or Abandon Contract Was Not Mutual

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE CONTRACT HAS NOT BEEN RESCINDED OR ABANDONED BECAUSE [THE EVIDENCE IS SUFFICIENT TO SHOW THAT] THE INTENT TO RESCIND OR ABANDON THE CONTRACT WAS NOT MUTUAL.

A. Intent to Rescind or Abandon Must Be Mutual. When mutual rescission or abandonment is asserted as a defense to a contract, the intent to rescind or abandon the contract must be mutual (Lubin v. Lubin (1956) 144 Cal. App. 2d 781, 796, 302 P.2d 49).

[Optional] B. Termination of Contract Because of Other Party's Noncompliance Is Not Mutual Abandonment or Rescission. Termination of a contract by one party solely because of the other party's failure and refusal to live up to the agreement does not amount to a mutual cancellation, rescission, or abandonment (see Ross v. Frank W. Dunne Co. (1953) 119 Cal. App. 2d 690, 699, 260 P.2d 104).

[Optional] C. Repossession of Property Does Not Necessarily Indicate Consent to Rescission. A seller's repossession of property sold, pursuant to an express or implied contract provision, does not necessarily indicate that he or she has elected to rescind the agreement (Kreisa v. Stoddard (1954) 127 Cal. App. 2d 627, 631, 274 P.2d 164).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that the contract was not rescinded or abandoned by mutual consent of the parties, because the intent to rescind or abandon the contract was not shown to be mutual.

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a party seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used to oppose a defendant's motion for summary judgment.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised to oppose a defendant's motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the moving and opposing papers showing that the undisputed facts indicate the parties lacked mutual consent in any abandonment or rescission of the contract sued upon.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum opposing a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.470 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Intent to Rescind or Abandon Must Be Mutual

In Lubin v. Lubin (1956) 144 Cal. App. 2d 781, 302 P.2d 49 , the divorcing spouses' property settlement agreement provided that the husband was to maintain insurance policies on his life for the wife's benefit. The divorce decree incorporated, by reference, the provisions of the agreement. Thereafter, the wife sued to enforce the life insurance provisions of the agreement. The trial court concluded that the agreement to maintain the life insurance policies had been rescinded by the mutual consent of the parties and rendered judgment for the defendant.

The court of appeal reversed. Although it is not necessary for the parties to say, in so many words, that they are rescinding the contract, it must be shown that the intent to abandon or rescind is mutual (144 Cal. App.2d 781, 796) . The evidence in this case did not sustain the finding of mutual consent to an abandonment or rescission of the agreement (144 Cal. App. 2d 781, 797) .

[b] Termination of Contract Because of Other Party's Noncompliance Is Not Mutual Abandonment or Rescission

In Ross v. Frank W. Dunne Co. (1953) 119 Cal. App. 2d 690, 260 P.2d 104 , the plaintiff agreed to act as exclusive distributor of certain paint products produced by the defendant. After signing the agreement, the parties had numerous disagreements about the deal. Finally, after a conference with the plaintiff, the defendant indicated that it would not proceed further under the distributorship agreement. Thereafter, the plaintiff sued for damages for breach of contract. The trial court rendered judgment for the plaintiff. On appeal, the defendant contended that the contract had been mutually rescinded or abandoned by the parties on one of two dates.

The court of appeal affirmed. The question of whether a contract has been canceled, rescinded, or abandoned is a mixed question of law and fact that is addressed to the trial court, and the finding of the trial court will be upheld if it is supported by substantial evidence (119 Cal. App. 2d 690, 698-699) . In this case, there was conflicting evidence on the issue. The parties carried on their dealings after the first alleged date of rescission, so that it could hardly be said that there was a cancellation or rescission on that date. As to the second date, the record showed that the parties did terminate their dealings, but the plaintiff did so only because the defendant failed and refused to live up to the agreement. This did not amount to a mutual cancellation, rescission, or abandonment (119 Cal. App. 2d 690, 699) .

[c] Repossession of Property Does Not Necessarily Indicate Consent to Rescission

In Kreisa v. Stoddard (1954) 127 Cal. App. 2d 627, 274 P.2d 164 , the defendant agreed to buy the plaintiffs' floral business together with the good will and fixtures and to take over the lease of the premises the business was conducted. The plaintiffs reserved title to all of the property sold until full payment was made, but the contract did not expressly provide for repossession by the plaintiffs as a remedy in the event of breach of the agreement by the defendant. After the defendant had defaulted on one of the payments, the defendant notified the plaintiffs that he had elected to terminate the agreement, and he was returning all equipment and goodwill of the business to the plaintiffs. With the defendant's authorization, the plaintiffs entered the premises, restored the property, and soldit to another buyer, crediting the proceeds to the amount owed by the defendant. The plaintiffs sued to recover the amount of the deficiency from the defendant. The trial court rendered judgment for the plaintiffs. On appeal, the defendant contended that the return of the property that was the subject of the agreement and the acceptance by the plaintiffs constituted an election by the plaintiffs to rescind the contract.

The court of appeal affirmed. A seller's retaking or repossessing, under an express or implicit contract provision, does not necessarily demand the conclusion that in so doing the seller has elected to rescind; the application of the doctrine of election of remedies must be modified by the facts of the particular case (127 Cal. App. 2d 627, 631) . When a buyer has repudiated a contract, abandoned the goods, or in some other way manifested an intention not to fulfill contractual obligations, the seller may, to secure the obligations, retake the property and, after reselling it and applying the proceeds to the outstanding balance, still be entitled to enforce the contract against the buyer for the payment of any deficiency (127 Cal. App. 2d 627, 631-632) . In this case, the trial court properly concluded that there was no rescission by mutual consent within the meaning of Civ. Code § 1689, and the plaintiffs' acts did not constitute an election of remedies so as to preclude them from recovering on the contract (127 Cal. App. 2d 627, 632-633) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Intent to Rescind or Abandon Must Be Mutual

In Pennel v. Pond Union School Dist. (1973) 29 Cal. App. 3d 832, 105 Cal. Rptr. 817 , a school teacher was reassigned from teaching first grade to teaching fourth grade. Although she had initially indicated that she would not teach fourth grade, she later reluctantly signed a contract to do so. Thereafter, claiming that she was ill, she failed to attend various school meetings and the first two days of the school year. The school board determined that she had vacated her position and terminated her services, without giving her notice or a hearing. She petitioned for a writ of mandate to compel her reinstatement and payment of back salary. The trial court rendered judgment for the school district, finding that the teacher had abandoned her teaching position by refusing to perform her obligations as a teacher. The court of appeal reversed. There was no substantial evidence to support the trial court's finding that the teacher intended to abandon her contract for the school year. Although the teacher had previously voiced her opposition to teaching fourth grade, she nevertheless signed a contract to teach fourth grade during the coming school year. Her actions during the summer before the opening of school may have been equivocal as to whether she intended to honor her contract; however, when she failed to appear for the teacher orientation meeting and for the first day of school,she gave illness as the reason for her failure to appear. The assertion of an excuse for nonperformance at the time performance became due logically precluded any inference of an intent on her part to abandon her contract (29 Cal. App. 3d 832, 837) . Although an executory bilateral contract may be rescinded by the mutual consent of the parties, and the rescission may be oral or manifested by conduct, nevertheless, a mutual rescission requires an intent to rescind on the part of both parties (29 Cal. App. 3d 832, 837-838) . In this case, at no time did the teacher expressly repudiate or refuse to comply with her contract. There was no substantial evidence from which to deduce that she intended to rescind the contract. To have an implied abandonment, the acts and conduct relied on must be positive, unequivocal, and inconsistent with the contract (29 Cal. App. 3d 832, 838) .

[b] Repossession of Property Does Not Necessarily Indicate Consent to Rescission

In Phillips v. Stark (1921) 186 Cal. 369, 199 P. 509 , the plaintiff contracted to sell a bakery to the defendants. At the time the contract was made, the defendants gave the plaintiff a check for part of the price, agreed to pay the balance the next day, and received immediate possession of the premises. When the plaintiff called on the defendants the next day to collect the balance of the price, the defendants tricked the plaintiff into giving them possession of their first check. The defendants then tore up the check, refused to pay anything on the price, and told the plaintiff that the deal was off, and he could do whatever he pleased with the property. After the defendants abandoned the property, the plaintiff retook possession of it and sold it at a public auction. The plaintiff then sued to recover the difference between the contract price and the amount realized on the auction sale. The trial court held that the plaintiff had elected a remedy to which he was not entitled and entered a judgment of nonsuit. The Supreme Court reversed. Rescission was one of the remedies to which the plaintiff was entitled on the defendants' repudiation and consequent breach of the contract, and after the plaintiff chose this remedy, he could not obtain the different and wholly inconsistent remedy of damages. However, unless the contract was rescinded, the plaintiff was entitled to the remedy of damages. The question in this case was whether the plaintiff's repossession or resale of the property amounted to a rescission. If the plaintiff had retaken possession of the property so as to show an acquiescence on his part in the defendant's assertion that the sale was off, there would at once have been a rescission by mutual consent. When the defendants not only refused to pay but also repudiated the contract and abandoned the property, the plaintiff's act in retaking possession did not indicate any acquiescence on his part in the repudiation or any intent to end the sale. The defendants had thrust the necessity of taking possession for the protection of the property on the plaintiff against his will. In thecircumstances, there was no rescission (186 Cal. 369, 372) . For similar reasons, the plaintiff's resale of the property did not constitute a rescission (186 Cal. 369, 373) .

In Rice v. Navarro (1949) 91 Cal. App. 2d 233, 204 P.2d 633 , the plaintiffs agreed to buy jukeboxes from the defendant. The contract provided that title to the property was to remain in the seller until the price was paid, and the seller had the right to repossess the jukeboxes in the event of any default in payment. The contract also provided that if the seller should take possession, all of the buyers' rights under the contract would be terminated, and the seller could, but was not obligated to, resell the property and apply the proceeds to the expenses of repossession and resale and to the unpaid balance of the price. After making a down payment and one installment payment, the buyers gave notice of rescission of the contract and surrendered the jukeboxes to the seller. The seller repossessed them and sued for the balance due on the contract. The buyers sued for rescission of the contract on the ground of fraud. The actions were consolidated for trial, and the trial court rendered judgment for the seller in both actions. On appeal, the buyers contended that the evidence proved a mutual rescission of the agreement because the seller took possession of the jukeboxes after the buyers had given notice of rescission. The court of appeal affirmed. The contract gave the seller the right, on the buyers' default, to repossess the jukeboxes and the right to resell them, and there was evidence that the seller was obliged to take possession in order to protect them. The seller's act in doing so did not establish, as a matter of law, a mutual rescission of the agreement (91 Cal. App. 2d 233, 237) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
D. Existence of Contract
7. Mutual Rescission or Abandonment of Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities §§ 50.481-50.499

[Reserved]

§§ 50.481[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
E. Interpretation of Contract
1. Ambiguous Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.500

§ 50.500 Contract Is Ambiguous

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

WHEN A CONTRACT IS AMBIGUOUS OR UNCERTAIN, A FULL OPPORTUNITY MUST BE AFFORDED THE PARTIES TO PRODUCE EVIDENCE OF THE FACTS, CIRCUMSTANCES, AND CONDITIONS SURROUNDING ITS EXECUTION AND THE CONDUCT OF THE PARTIES.

A. Contract Is Ambiguous When Susceptible to Two Different Meanings. When the language used in a contract is fairly susceptible to either two constructions without doing violence to its usual and ordinary import, an ambiguity arises (Walsh v. Walsh (1941) 18 Cal. 2d 439, 444, 116 P.2d 62 ; Wolf v. Superior Court (2004) 114 Cal. App. 4th 1343, 1346, 1350-1351, 8 Cal. Rptr. 3d 649 ; Walter E. Heller, Inc. v. Tecrim Corp. (1987) 196 Cal. App. 3d 149, 158, 241 Cal. Rptr. 677).

B. Right to Introduce Evidence Concerning Ambiguous Contract. When a contract is, in any of its terms or provisions, ambiguous or uncertain, parol evidence is admissible to explain the ambiguity and presents a question of fact, which precludes summary judgment if the evidence, or the inferences to be drawn from it, are in conflict (Walsh v. Walsh (1941) 18 Cal. 2d 439, 443-444, 116 P.2d 62 ; Wolf v. Superior Court (2004) 114 Cal. App. 4th 1343, 1346, 1350-1351, 8 Cal. Rptr. 3d 649 ; Walter E. Heller, Inc. v. Tecrim Corp. (1987) 196 Cal. App. 3d 149, 158, 241 Cal. Rptr. 677).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that the contract is ambiguous or uncertain.

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a party seeks to raisethis contention. For example, it may be used to oppose another party's motion for summary judgment.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised to oppose a motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the moving and opposing papers showing that triable issues of fact exist concerning the interpretation or meaning of contract terms.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum opposing a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.510 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Contract Is Ambiguous When Susceptible to Two Different Meanings

Walsh v. Walsh (1941) 18 Cal. 2d 439, 116 P.2d 62 , was an action for the breach of a property settlement agreement that the defendant was to support and maintain the plaintiff, her adopted son. The agreement provided that the defendant, as long as she received the payments provided for in the agreement, would properly care for, maintain, and educate the "child or children" in respect of whom the payments had been made. The plaintiff claimed that the words "child or children" were purely descriptive as far as the duration of benefits to be received by them from the defendantwere concerned. The defendant, however, insisted that the agreement pertained to the care of the children during minority, so that the defendant's undertaking to support the plaintiff terminated on his attaining majority. The trial court granted the defendant's motion for summary judgment.

The Supreme Court reversed. When the language in a contract is fairly susceptible to either of two constructions without doing violence to its usual and ordinary import, an ambiguity arises. Extrinsic evidence may be used for the purpose of explaining the intention of the parties. In this case, the words "child or children" were ambiguous and indefinite since on its face the phraseology of the agreement considered in its entirety was reasonably consistent with either of the interpretations advanced by the plaintiff and the defendant. Thus, the motion for summary judgment should not have been granted (18 Cal. 2d 439, 444) .

In Wolf v. Superior Court (2004) 114 Cal. App. 4th 1343, 8 Cal. Rptr. 3d 649 , plaintiff author, who had written an original novel creating various characters, agreed to option the rights to the novel to defendant Walt Disney Pictures and Television. Disney exercised its option to purchase the rights, and the parties executed a purchase agreement. In the paragraph governing royalty rights to character merchandising, the parties used the term "gross receipts" without definition. They later entered into a subsequent agreement which clarified or modified certain terms of the first agreement, but plaintiff's right to a five percent royalty on merchandise depicting his characters remained intact. None of the parties to either agreement could recall any discussion regarding the meaning of plaintiff's right to a royalty on gross receipts from character merchandise. Disney then entered into various promotional third-party agreements with for which it received no cash; Disney took the position that it was not obligated to pay plaintiff any royalty unless or until it received actual cash from a licensing agreement.

Plaintiff filed suit against Disney, which in turn filed a cross-complaint for declaratory relief, reformation, money had and received, and unjust enrichment. Disney moved for summary adjudication on its cross-complaint, seeking a declaration that the parties' contract only obligated it to pay royalties on cash it received for character merchandising. Disney argued that it was entitled to summary adjudication because the clear and unambiguous meaning of "gross receipts" could only mean receipt of cash money. Plaintiff presented extrinsic evidence in the form of expert testimony to refute Disney's assertion. The expert stated that the term "gross receipts" in the entertainment industry meant "money or the value of other consideration received by the studio," when not otherwise defined or limited by written agreement. The trial court held that the term was not reasonably susceptible to the meaning urged by plaintiff, rejected his proffered extrinsic evidence, and granted summary adjudication in favor of Disney (114 Cal. App. 4th 1343, 1346-1349) .

Plaintiff filed a petition for writ of mandate to compel the trial court to vacate its order. The court of appeal held that the trial court erred in concluding that the term "gross receipts" was not reasonably susceptible to the interpretation urged by plaintiff--that according to industry custom and usage the term meant cash and other valuable consideration received. The court granted the petition for writ of mandate with directions for the trial court to vacate its order and remanded for further proceedings (114 Cal. App. 4th 1343, 1346, 1358) .

In Walter E. Heller, Inc. v. Tecrim Corp. (1987) 196 Cal. App. 3d 149, 241 Cal. Rptr. 677 , the trial court found that a subordination agreement, by which the defendant's security interest in a third party's inventory was subordinated to the plaintiff's security interest in the same inventory, was supported by consideration. Resolution of the issue of consideration was also the basis of the trial court's finding that there were no triable issues of fact on other causes of action, including fraud, mistake, and breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing. The trial court granted the defendant's motion for summary judgment.

The court of appeal reversed. The introductory recital and fifth paragraph of the subordination agreement were inconsistent and made it unclear what the consideration was supposed to be. The agreement stated that the consideration for the subordination was the plaintiff's continued extension of credit to the debtor, but it did not specify how long the plaintiff was obligated to continue the financing. The contract was one with two equally plausible interpretations of its language, and it was ambiguous (196 Cal. App. 3d 149, 158) .

[b] Right to Introduce Evidence Concerning Ambiguous Contract

The facts and procedural background of Walsh v. Walsh (1941) 18 Cal. 2d 439, 116 P.2d 62 , are discussed in [a], above. The Supreme Court concluded that the words "child or children" as used in the agreement were ambiguous and indefinite. When a contract is in any of its terms or provisions ambiguous or uncertain, it is primarily the duty of the trial court to construe it after a full opportunity is afforded to all parties in the case to produce evidence of the facts, circumstances, and conditions surrounding execution of the contract and the conduct of the parties relating to it (18 Cal. 2d 439, 443) . In such a case, when the meaning of the language of a contract is uncertain or doubtful and parol evidence is introduced in aid of its interpretation, the question of its meaning is one of fact (18 Cal. 2d 439, 444) . The trial court should have denied the defendant's motion for summary judgment so that the issue raised between the parties as to the duration of the defendant's undertaking to furnish support and maintenance to the plaintiff might be tried on its merits (18 Cal. 2d 439, 444) .

The facts and procedural background of Wolf v. Superior Court (2004) 114 Cal. App. 4th 1343, 8 Cal. Rptr. 3d 649 , are discussed in [a], above. On the issue of the right to introduce evidence concerning ambiguity, the court of appeal held that the trial court erred in its treatment of the proffered extrinsic evidence on the issue of whether the contract was ambiguous (114 Cal. App. 4th 1343, 1355) . Because there was no evidence of objective manifestations of the parties' intent, and because the term at issue was undefined, the only way to construe the meaning of the term was to consider the nature of the contract and the circumstances under which the parties negotiated. Both the nature of the contract and the circumstances involved the motion picture industry. The proffered evidence regarding trade usage and custom was relevant to prove an interpretation to which the agreements were reasonably susceptible in the entertainment industry context (114 Cal. App. 4th 1343, 1357) . The court also held that the conflicting interpretations of the contract term raised factual issues which precluded a determination as a matter of law (114 Cal. App. 4th 1343, 1359) .

The facts and procedural background of Walter E. Heller, Inc. v. Tecrim Corp. (1987) 196 Cal. App. 3d 149, 241 Cal. Rptr. 677 , are discussed in [a], above. The court of appeal said that when two equally plausible interpretations of the language of a contract may be made, as here, parol evidence is admissible to aid in interpreting the agreement, which presents a question of fact that precludes summary judgment if the evidence is contradictory. The trial court was required to give the parties a full opportunity to produce evidence of the facts, conduct, and circumstances surrounding execution of the contract. Summary judgment was not proper because the trial court had made a factual determination of what constituted consideration (196 Cal. App. 3d 149, 158) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Right to Introduce Evidence Concerning Ambiguous Contract

In Blackburn v. Charnley (2004) 117 Cal. App. 4th 758 , the plaintiffs sought specific enforcement of a developer's contracts for the sale of homes that were to be built on specified lots in a subdivision tract for which government approval was still pending. After the real estate market appreciated significantly while construction was delayed, the developer sought to avoid the contracts and contended they were not sufficiently definite to be enforceable. The court of appeal affirmed a judgment of specific enforcement, holding that parol evidence, consisting of the tract map, site plans, standard home-feature sheets, floor plans, and elevation plans, was properly admissible to render the purchase agreements sufficiently definite to create a legal obligation (117 Cal. App. 4th 758, 766) .

In Kavruck v. Blue Cross of California (2003) 108 Cal. App. 4th 773, 134 Cal. Rptr. 2d 152 , a health insurance policy holder initiated a class action composed of subscribers whose health insurance policies were changed so that their premiums were no longer based on their initial enrollment age but on their attained age at the time of renewal. The insurer moved for summary judgment on the breach of contract cause of action. The trial court concluded that there was no triable issue of material fact concerning the propriety of the insurer's exercise of its right under the agreement to modify its age rating position, and granted the motion for summary judgment. The court of appeal reversed. The issue on appeal was whether the insurer had established as a matter of law that it did not breach the entry age contracts of plaintiff and other members of the certified class. The court concluded that the contract was ambiguous with respect to the provision which seemed to authorize the insurer to change any term of the policy upon proper notice. Plaintiff was entitled to submit parol evidence to establish the objectively reasonable expectations of the insureds that the contract protected the entry age rating from modification unless the insured changed coverage (108 Cal. App. 4th 773, 781-782) .

In Darling v. Controlled Environments Construction, Inc. (2001) 89 Cal. App. 4th 1221, 108 Cal. Rptr. 2d 213 , a concrete subcontractor sued the general contractor to recover retention proceeds withheld by the contractor. The contractor filed a counterclaim, arguing that the subcontractor failed to comply with contractual specifications regarding the flatness required for a concrete floor. The trial court held that an ambiguity existed in the contract with regard to the flatness requirement and awarded the subcontractor its retention, but denied its request for statutory penalties and attorney fees. The general contractor appealed, contending that the trial court erred in allowing the subcontractor to offer extrinsic oral testimony which contradicted the plain, unambiguous meaning of the contract provision at issue. The court of appeal disagreed. It cited Code Civ. Proc. § 1856(g), which allows introduction of evidence to explain an extrinsic ambiguity or otherwise interpret the terms of the agreement. It found that the subcontract was ambiguous with regard to the flatness standard, and therefore extrinsic evidence was admissible to assist the court in ascertaining the parties' intent with regard to the applicable provision (89 Cal. App. 4th 1221, 1234-1236) . Because there was no meeting of the minds as to the required flatness of the floor, the trial court was left to resolve the remaining ambiguity. It relied on external facts and custom and usage in the industry to supply the deficiency. In essence, it supplied a reasonable term when the parties had failed to reach an agreement: the floor had to meet industry standards and be suitable for the building owner's use. It correctly determined that the subcontractor was entitled to the full amount of retention withheld by the general contractor because it provided a floor in keeping with industry standards and suitable for the owner's use. The court of appeal thus held that the judgment was amply supported by the applicable law of contracts and the evidence (89 Cal. App. 4th 1221, 1236-1238) .

In Bionghi v. Metropolitan Water District of Southern California (1999) 70 Cal. App. 4th 1358, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 388 , after a water district terminated its contract with a company that provided temporary employees, the company brought an action against the district for breach of contract and breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. The contract provided that the district could terminate with 30 days notice, and included an integration clause. The district gave the company 30 days notice and terminated the contract. The trial court found the contract could not reasonably be interpreted to mean that good cause was required for termination, and therefore extrinsic evidence offered by the company to establish that requirement was inadmissible. It granted summary adjudication and judgment to the district. The court of appeal affirmed. The appellate court reviewed the rules regarding the introduction of evidence concerning ambiguous provisions. A court first must determine whether the language of a contract is reasonably susceptible to the meanings urged by the parties. In so doing, the court must give consideration to any evidence offered to show that the parties' understanding of words used differed from the common understanding. If the court determines that the contract is reasonably susceptible of the meanings urged, extrinsic evidence relevant to prove the meaning agreed to by the parties is admissible (70 Cal. App. 4th 1358, 1364-1366) . In this case, however, the court of appeal found that none of the evidence offered by the company indicated that the words or phrases of the termination clause were ambiguous. The court held that the contract was integrated and in unambiguous termsrequired only notice for termination. The language of the contract was not on its face reasonably susceptible of a reading requiring good cause, and the company offered no extrinsic evidence which would indicate it was susceptible of such a meaning. Thus, the trial court correctly found that parol evidence was not admissible to prove the terms of the contract (70 Cal. App. 4th 1358, 1369) .

The court of appeal in Haskell v. Carli (1987) 195 Cal. App. 3d 124, 240 Cal. Rptr. 439 , reversed the a summary judgment in a case seeking specific performance of an ambiguous contract. Both parties to the contract were deceased, and their heirs or successors had introduced a will of one of the parties and a residence affidavit of another. The will and affidavit may not have been proper evidence, but since no objection was made on the basis of parol evidence, the trial court was bound to consider them in reaching its decision [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)(5), (c)] (195 Cal. App. 3d 124, 129-132) . When the meaning of contract language is doubtful or uncertain and parol evidence has been introduced to aid in the interpretation of the contract, the question of meaning is a question of fact, and a summary judgment is not proper (195 Cal. App. 3d 124, 132-133) .

Daugherty Co. v. Kimberly-Clark Corp. (1971) 14 Cal. App. 3d 151, 92 Cal. Rptr. 120 , was an action for compensation for additional work performed in connection with changes in an original contract to build a paper mill. The trial court granted the defendant's motion for summary judgment, but the court of appeal reversed. In support of the summary judgment, the defendant contended that the plaintiff had not performed a condition precedent by asking the engineer on the project to make a decision on its claim as the contract required. The contract also provided that if the engineer failed to reach a decision within 10 days, the contractor could demand arbitration. In practice the engineer did not make decisions within 10 days. The evidence was that in many respects the claims procedures required by the contract were ignored in practice. When the terms of a contract are at issue and any of its provisions are ambiguous or uncertain, the trial court should not grant a motion for summary judgment but should allow the parties a full opportunity to produce evidence of the facts, circumstances, and conditions surrounding execution of the contract and the conduct of the parties relating to it (14 Cal. App. 3d 151, 157) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
E. Interpretation of Contract
1. Ambiguous Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.501

§ 50.501 Contract Is Uncertain as to Material Features

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE AGREEMENT ON WHICH THE ACTION IS BASED DOES NOT EVINCE A MEETING OF THE MINDS OF THE PARTIES ON ESSENTIAL FEATURES.

A. Whether Agreement Created Legal Obligation Is Question of Law. Whether an agreement is sufficiently definite and certain in its essential terms to give rise to a legal obligation is a question of law (Robinson & Wilson, Inc. v. Stone (1973) 35 Cal. App. 3d 396, 407, 110 Cal. Rptr. 675).

B. Contract Is Unenforceable in Absence of Meeting of Minds. When a contract is so uncertain and indefinite that the intention of the parties in material particulars cannot be ascertained, the contract is void and unenforceable. Although the terms of the contract need not be stated in the minutest detail, it must evince a meeting of the minds on the essential features of the agreement, and the scope of the duty and limits of acceptable performance must be at least sufficiently defined to provide a rational basis for the assessment of damages (Robinson & Wilson, Inc. v. Stone (1973) 35 Cal. App. 3d 396, 407, 110 Cal. Rptr. 675).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that the agreement between the parties fails to evidence a meeting of minds on essential features. This form should not be used when there is a dispute as to the meaning of the contract terms, in which case the plaintiff's interpretation is accepted by the court unless, despite the validity of the plaintiff's interpretation, there is no meeting of the minds [see Robinson & Wilson, Inc. v. Stone (1973) 35 Cal. App. 3d 396, 406, 110 Cal. Rptr. 675] .

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a party seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used to support a party's motion for summary judgment.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised to support a motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the moving and opposing papers showing that undisputed disclose a failure of the parties to agree on essential elements of the contract.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For memoranda supporting the contention that no contract was formed and the parties have only an agreement to agree, see § 50.350.

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum supporting a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Whether Agreement Created Legal Obligation Is Question of Law

Robinson & Wilson, Inc. v. Stone (1973) 35 Cal. App. 3d 396, 110 Cal. Rptr. 675 , was an action by contractors for damages for breach of a contract to build a medical building. The owners counterclaimed for breach of the same contract by the plaintiffs. According to Article 20 of the contract, the total contract price included $30,040 for completion of the undesigned portions of the building. The parties disagreed as to the contractors' obligation under Article 20. The contractors claimed that the $30,040 was intended as an allowance against the ultimate cost of the work on the undesigned portions, while the owners contended that the contractors were required to complete minimum basic medical suites in the undesigned portion of the building, and if the tenants of those areas wanted any extras, they were to pay for them. Following a consolidated nonjury trial, the court rendered judgment for the owners. One issue on appeal was whether Article 20 of the contract was so uncertain and indefinite that it had given rise to no legally enforceable obligation.

The court of appeal reversed. When a contract is so uncertain and indefinite that the parties' intentions cannot be ascertained, the contract is void and unenforceable. Although the contract terms need not be stated in the minutest detail, the contract cannot be enforced unless it evinces a meeting of the minds on the agreement's essential features, and the scope of theduty and limits of acceptable performance must be sufficiently defined to provide a rational basis for the assessment of damages. In the absence of plans and specifications, an agreement to provide labor and materials for the completion of standard medical suites is too indefinite and uncertain to evince a meeting of the minds respecting the scope of the work or to provide an objective basis for assessment of damages. The wide disparity in the estimates of the cost of completing the undesigned areas that were introduced into evidence revealed the uncertainty of the term "standard medical suites." The term could neither form a basis for a meeting of the minds nor provide a rational objective for assessment of damages. In addition, Article 20 was uncertain in other essential respects such as in its provision concerning the reasonable value of extras required by tenants; there was no evidence as to how the reasonable value of the extras was to be determined, nor was there certainty as to who was to pay for the extras. Consequently, it did not give rise to a legally enforceable obligation (35 Cal. App. 3d 396, 406) .

[b] Contract Unenforceable in Absence of Meeting of Minds

Robinson & Wilson, Inc. v. Stone (1973) 35 Cal. App. 3d 396, 110 Cal. Rptr. 675 , is discussed in [a], above.

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Contract Unenforceable in Absence of Meeting of Minds

In First Street Plaza Partners v. City of Los Angeles (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 650, 76 Cal. Rptr. 2d 626 , the court of appeal held that if the requirements of a city's charter for formation of contract are not satisfied, no contract is formed. The court found that the Charter of the City of Los Angeles plainly mandated (through use of the mandatory verb "shall") that a city contract of the type involved in that case must be signed by the Mayor, approved by the City Council, and approved as to form by the City Attorney. None of those requirements were met (65 Cal. App. 4th 650, 662-664) . Further, in those circumstances, the city could not be equitably estopped from denying that a contract had been formed (65 Cal. App. 4th 650, 667-668) .

Jackson v. Grant (9th Cir. 1989) 890 F.2d 118 , involved Truth in Lending Act violations in a loan transaction. One finding was that no contract to lend money existed at the time the borrower signed the loan documents, because at the time, no lender had committed to make the loan. Those documents had been drafted by an arranger of credit, and no lender was named in them. The court of appeals held that since an essential elementwas reserved for future agreement, there was no contract (890 F.2d 118, 120-121) .

The court of appeal in Peterson Development Co. v. Torrey Pines Bank (1991) 233 Cal. App. 3d 103, 284 Cal. Rptr. 367 , affirmed a judgment for a bank based on the fact that a commitment letter for permanent (takeout) financing was not a contract but was only an agreement to agree. Even though the commitment letter was construed with the related construction loan agreement [see Civ. Code § 1642] naming a nonsignatory affiliate of the bank as permanent lender and requiring a permanent loan commitment as a condition of construction financing, the commitment letter left too many terms for future definition and used terms too broad to be made certain. The borrowers were not identified, except generically as prospective homeowners; the amounts of the loans to individual borrowers were not specified, except as a percentage of the sale price or appraisal value; the terms of repayment were not specified, and the interest rates were described as the bank's "standard interest rate quoted from time to time during the term of the commitment" (233 Cal. App. 3d 103, 115) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
E. Interpretation of Contract
1. Ambiguous Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.502

§ 50.502 Contract Stipulations Generally Are Interpreted as Covenants, Not Conditions Precedent

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

STIPULATIONS IN A CONTRACT ARE TO BE CONSTRUED AS COVENANTS, NOT AS CONDITIONS PRECEDENT; AND PERFORMANCE, OR AN EXCUSE FOR NONPERFORMANCE, MUST BE ALLEGED, UNLESS A CONSTRUCTION AS CONDITIONS PRECEDENT IS REQUIRED BY CLEAR, UNAMBIGUOUS LANGUAGE.

A. Stipulations Must Be Construed as Covenants When Possible. Stipulations in a contract should be construed as covenants, not as conditions precedent, unless a construction as conditions precedent is required by clear, unambiguous language (Alpha Beta Food Mkt. v. Retail Clerks (1955) 45 Cal. 2d 764, 771, 291 P.2d 433 , cert. denied, 350 U.S. 996 (1956) .

[Optional] B. Condition That Third Party Take Action Must Be Construed as Covenant. A condition that a third party must take some action should be construed as a covenant rather than a condition precedent, when the terms of the agreement can be so construed (Patrick J. Ruane, Inc. v. Parker (1960) 185 Cal. App. 2d 488, 504, 8 Cal. Rptr. 379).

[Optional] C. Stipulations Are Covenants When Forfeiture or Inequitable Consequences Is Involved. The general rule that stipulations in an agreement should be interpreted as covenants instead of conditions precedent should be especially applied if otherwise a forfeiture or other inequitable consequence would result (Alpha Beta Food Mkt. v. Retail Clerks (1955) 45 Cal. 2d 764, 771, 291 P.2d 433 , cert. denied, 350 U.S. 996 (1956) .

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that, if performance of conditions precedent has not been alleged, the stipulations in the contract should be construed as covenants, performance or excuse for nonperformance of which need not be alleged.

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a party seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used to oppose a defendant's general demurrer interposed on the ground that plaintiff has not alleged performance of conditions precedent.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised to oppose a demurrer, the memorandum would include an analysis of the allegations showing that the terms in questions are properly covenants rather than conditions precedent.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum opposing a demurrer, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing amemorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case these memoranda may be used in opposition to the contention supported by the memoranda in § 50.20.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Stipulations Must Be Construed as Covenants When Possible

Alpha Beta Food Mkt. v. Retail Clerks (1955) 45 Cal. 2d 764, 291 P.2d 433 , cert. denied, 350 U.S. 996 (1956) , was an action for declaratory relief respecting an arbitration award in the period of wage controls during the Korean War. The case involved a "submission agreement" providing for submitting to arbitration the question of what, if any, changes should be made in premium pay for employees who performed night, holiday, and Sunday work. If the arbitration award provided for any change in pay, the award had to be submitted for approval to the federal Wage Stabilization Board. An arbitration award was made in favor of pay increases, and the Wage Stabilization Board was in the process of reviewing the award when the President terminated wage controls. The employees contended that all wage increases would become automatically effective immediately following termination of wage controls, but the employers contended that there was no duty on their part to pay increases unless and until the pay was specifically allowed and approved by the Wage Stabilization Board--in other words, approval of the pay increases was a condition precedent to liability and duty on the employers' part. The trial court rendered judgment declaring the arbitration award to be valid.

The Supreme Court affirmed. In interpreting contracts, stipulations in an agreement are not to be construed as conditions precedent unless that construction is required by clear, unambiguous language, especially when a forfeiture or other inequitable consequence would result. Reasonably interpreted, the submission agreement indicated that the parties agreed to be bound by the terms of the arbitration award in final settlement of their disputed issues as to premium pay. Thus the employees gave up the right to demand an annual reopening as to changes in the wage scale until a certain date. The statement in the agreement respecting Wage Stabilization Board approval in the submission agreement was no more than recognition of a requirement under federal law. The insertion of that statement in the agreement was unnecessary, neither adding nor taking away anything in the expressed and implied obligations of the parties in their agreement. Thus the requirement of the board's approval was not acondition precedent, and when wage controls were terminated, the increase in pay benefits could lawfully go into effect without the board's approval (45 Cal. 2d 764, 771) .

[b] Condition That Third Party Take Action Must Be Construed as Covenant

In Patrick J. Ruane, Inc. v. Parker (1960) 185 Cal. App. 2d 488, 8 Cal. Rptr. 379 , a general contractor sued a subcontractor for damages for breach of contract. The action arose out of a construction project in which an architect passed on the merits of materials and workmanship, made written decisions regarding all owner's or contractor's claims, and interpreted the contract documents on all questions arising in connection with the execution of the work. The plaintiff maintained that the subcontractor was bound to repair certain defects in the exterior and interior plaster regardless of their cause. The subcontractor claimed that the architect's demand that the defects be remedied required that the plaintiff do the repairs at his expense regardless of the cause of the defects, asserting in part that the architect's approval of the work was a condition precedent to the plaintiff's right to recover the cost of remedying the defects that the subcontractor had subtracted from the amount due the plaintiff on the contract. After a trial, the court rendered judgment for the plaintiff.

The court of appeal affirmed. A condition that a third party take some action, such as action by the architect, is to be construed against the party relying on it and will be held to be a covenant, rather than a condition, when the terms of the agreement can be so construed. In this case, the architect's certificate was not unequivocally made a condition precedent to the plaintiff's right to recover, nor was the architect's decision final or conclusive. Thus it was not a condition precedent to the plaintiff's right of recovery (185 Cal. App. 2d 488, 504) .

[c] Stipulations Are Covenants When Forfeiture or Inequitable Consequences Is Involved

Alpha Beta Food Mkt. v. Retail Clerks (1955) 45 Cal. 2d 764, 291 P.2d 433 , cert. denied, 350 U.S. 996 (1956) , is discussed in [i], above.

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Stipulations Must Be Construed as Covenants When Possible

The court of appeal in In re Marriage of Hasso (1991) 229 Cal. App. 3d 1174, 280 Cal. Rptr. 919 , affirmed the trial court's judgment enforcing a marital settlement agreement over the objections of one spouse that theagreement was subject to the approval of the parties' attorneys. This contention was based on signature lines at the bottom for each of the parties' attorneys under the caption "Approved As To Form" and acknowledgments by each party that they had retained their own counsel to advise them in connection with their rights under the agreement. Conditions precedent are not favored, and contractual provisions will not be construed as conditions precedent in the absence of language plainly requiring such a construction. The agreement contained no basis for such a construction (229 Cal. App. 3d 1174, 1181-1182) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
E. Interpretation of Contract
1. Ambiguous Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities §§ 50.503-50.509

[Reserved]

§§ 50.503[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
E. Interpretation of Contract
1. Ambiguous Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.510

§ 50.510 Contract Is Not Ambiguous

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

SUMMARY JUDGMENT FOR THE _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] IS PROPER WHEN THERE IS NO CONFLICT AS TO THE TERMS OF THE CONTRACT AND ITS PROVISIONS ARE NOT UNCERTAIN OR AMBIGUOUS, THERE IS OTHERWISE NO TRIABLE ISSUE OF FACT AS TO WHETHER THE DEFENDANT BREACHED THE CONTRACT, AND AS A MATTER OF LAW, JUDGMENT SHOULD BE RENDERED IN FAVOR OF THE _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT].

Meaning of Unambiguous Contract Is Question of Law. When there is no conflict as to the terms of a contract, and its provisions are not uncertain or ambiguous, its meaning and effect and the relation of the parties to it become questions of law to be decided by the court, and a motion for summary judgment may be granted (Goldstein v. Hoffman (1963) 213 Cal. App. 2d 803, 814, 29 Cal. Rptr. 334).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that a contract's terms are clear and unambiguous.

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a party seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used to support a party's motionfor summary judgment on a particular ground, based on the theory that the terms are unambiguous and therefore the matter at issue may be resolved as a matter of law on motion for summary judgment.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised to support a motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the moving and opposing papers showing that undisputed facts disclose a clear and unambiguous contract.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum supporting a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.500 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Meaning of Unambiguous Contract Is Question of Law

Goldstein v. Hoffman (1963) 213 Cal. App. 2d 803, 29 Cal. Rptr. 334 , was an action to declare the plaintiffs the owners of assets belonging to the estate of a decedent. The plaintiffs had transferred real property to the decedent in consideration for which the decedent was to leave his entire estate to the plaintiffs. When the decedent's will did not comply with the terms of the agreement, the plaintiffs asked the court to declare that all of the assets belonging to the decedent's estate were the plaintiffs' property. The plaintiffs filed as exhibits the agreement between the plaintiffs and thedecedent, an earlier will that the decedent had executed complying with the agreement, and the later will executed by the decedent, which did not comply with the agreement. The plaintiffs' evidence was uncontroverted. The trial court reached the following conclusions. Exhibit A was a valid agreement to make a will. Pursuant to the agreement, a will (Exhibit B) was executed, leaving the decedent's estate in equal shares to the plaintiffs. The agreement provided that the will would not be revoked without the plaintiffs' written consent. Exhibit B was revoked by the execution of the last will (Exhibit C), which specifically provided that all other wills were revoked. To the extent that the last will left each of the plaintiffs one third of the residue of the decedent's estate, it complied with Exhibit A. By revoking Exhibit B and specifically bequeathing his interest in specific property to the defendant, the decedent breached Exhibit A. The plaintiffs were entitled to distribution of the estate. The trial court granted the plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed. The plaintiffs' affidavit and exhibits set forth facts which, if true, established every element necessary to sustain a judgment, and these facts were uncontroverted. There being no conflict as to the terms of the exhibits, and it appearing that the provisions were not uncertain or ambiguous, the meaning and effect of the exhibits and the relation of the parties became questions of law to be decided by the court. The trial court's application of the law to the uncontroverted facts led the court to correct conclusions (213 Cal. App. 2d 803, 814) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Meaning of Unambiguous Contract Is Question of Law

In Appling v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. (9th Cir. 2003) 340 F.3d 769, 777-779 , independent contractor insurance agents brought a breach of contract action against the defendant insurer. The district court granted the insurance company's motion for summary judgment and the agents appealed. They disputed the district court's conclusion that the termination provision in their contract allowed termination at will, and argued that parol evidence could be used to interpret the provision to show that it required good cause. The Ninth Circuit stated that in Pacific Gas & Elec. Co v. G.W. Thomas Drayage & Rigging Co. (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 33, 69 Cal. Rptr. 561, 442 P.2d 641 the California Supreme Court established rules governing the use of parol evidence in determining the meaning of words in a contract where the contract is clear and unambiguous and integrated. Pacific Gas made clear that extrinsic evidence is not admissible to add to, detract from, or vary the terms of a written contract, but only to define the terms in a contract. Here, the agents were seeking to add a good cause term to the termination provision, not to interpret the words of that provision. Pacific Gas clearly prohibited such an attempt to graft a good cause requirementonto the termination provision's plain language allowing termination at will. The court of appeals therefore affirmed the district court's holding that there was no genuine issue of material fact as to meaning of termination provision (340 F.3d 769, 777-779) .

In Crow Winthrop Dev. Ltd.Pshp. (9th Cir. 2001) 241 F.3d 1121 , two partnerships (Crow Operating and Crow Development) were formed to acquire office buildings and land. After a dispute and litigation regarding management of the property, the parties entered into a settlement agreement. The agreement allowed an affiliate of Crow Operating to manage the common areas and parking. It also contained a change in ownership provision which provided that the management provisions would terminate if Crow Operating no longer owned the office buildings. Crow Operating subsequently filed for bankruptcy and the bankruptcy court transferred ownership of the office buildings to a new owner. Crow Operating requested and obtained the bankruptcy court's approval of the assignment of the settlement agreement to the new owner. The new owner then began receiving notices from Crow Development purporting to terminate the management provisions of the settlement agreement pursuant to the change in ownership provision. The new owner filed a motion asking the bankruptcy court to determine the validity of the change in ownership provision under 11 U.S.C. § 365(f), which invalidates anti-assignment clauses in debtors' contracts. The bankruptcy court issued an order invalidating the change in ownership provision as an anti-assignment clause. The district court affirmed.

The Ninth Circuit first determined that the bankruptcy court properly considered the validity of the change in ownership provision on a motion rather than in an adversary proceeding. It then held that the bankruptcy court did not err in invalidating the change in ownership provision as an unenforceable anti-assignment clause under 11 U.S.C. § 365(f). Finally, the court concluded that the bankruptcy court had sufficient evidence before it to determine the validity of the change in ownership provision. Under California law, if a contract's terms are unambiguous, a court may interpret the contract without recourse to extrinsic evidence. The court found that to the extent that factual findings were necessary to its determination, the evidence in the record was more than sufficient to dispel any suggestion of clear error (241 F.3d 1121, 1123-1124) .

In Beard v. Goodrich (2003) 110 Cal. App. 4th 1031, 2 Cal. Rptr. 3d 160 , an attorney filed a complaint seeking a declaration that he was entitled to payment of the full amount of attorney fees awarded in the underlying action, plus the costs incurred in that action. The client, defendant in the underlying action, cross-complained for failure to pay sums due under the contingency fee contract, claiming entitlement to 60 percent of the settlement funds. The trial court agreed with the client, finding that under the terms of the parties' fee agreement, the attorney was entitled to 40 percentof the settlement amount after a deduction for unpaid costs. The attorney appealed, claiming that the court misinterpreted the fee agreement. He argued that under the terms of the agreement, he was entitled to 40 percent of the client's "net recovery," defined in the fee agreement as including not only all amounts received but also including the forgiveness or discharge of debt. He asserted that the contract should have been interpreted to include not only the recovery on the cross-complaint, but also 40 percent of the unrecovered damages sought by the plaintiff in the underlying action. The court of appeals noted that as the underlying case settled, the attorney's entitlement to fees was defined not by the underlying judgment (which was vacated as part of the settlement) or the settlement (which did not include an attorney fee award), but by the attorney fee contract. The merits of the attorney's contention turned on the meaning of the contractual provision defining net recovery as including "the forgiveness or discharge of debt." The trial court had ruled that the phrase was not ambiguous, and that undetermined and unrecovered claims did not constitute the forgiveness or discharge of debt. The court of appeal affirmed, stating that to determine the objective intent, the question was what a reasonable person would believe the parties intended. The ordinary meaning of the term "debt" is something that is owed. A reasonable person would not construe it to include an unresolved and possibly unfounded claim. The court of appeal held that the trial court was justified in concluding that the phrase was not reasonably susceptible to a meaning that includes "unrecovered unliquidated claims." The trial court, therefore, correctly concluded that the attorney had not shown that the phrase was ambiguous (110 Cal. App. 4th 1031, 1037-1039) .

In Roden v. Bergen Brunswig Corporation (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 620, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 549 , an executive who was terminated without cause brought suit against his employer. Ultimately, he accepted a "section 998" settlement offer [see Code Civ. Proc. § 998], and then successfully filed an application for entry of judgment and to enforce the judgment. The employer filed a motion for reconsideration, which was denied, and then appealed from the order interpreting the judgment. The issue was whether the lump sum payment required by the judgment included an amount for retirement benefits, or whether continuing retirement benefits were to be provided to plaintiff under the judgment provision requiring defendant to continue employment benefits. The court of appeal affirmed the post-judgment order. It held that the judgment was clear and unambiguous. It required defendant to continue to provide specified employment benefits, including retirement benefits, to plaintiff. Consequently, the amount defendant was required to pay as a lump sum under the judgment did not resolve defendant's liability with respect to plaintiff's retirement benefits. The court stated that the language of the judgment was not reasonably susceptible of the interpretation the employer suggested, and thus the court did not need to consider the employer's extrinsic evidence. Even ifit did so, however, and if the proffered evidence were admissible, the result would be the same (107 Cal. App. 4th 620, 623, 633) .

In Benedek v. PLC Santa Monica, LLC (2002) 104 Cal. App. 4th 1351, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 197 , a member of a health club suffered personal injuries from a falling television while on the club's premises. He had signed a waiver of liability which released the health club from liability for all personal injuries sustained by a member on the premises "whether using exercise equipment or not." The member brought an action against the health club for negligence and premises liability. The club answered the complaint, asserting the affirmative defenses of assumption of risk and waiver or release. It then moved for summary judgment on the basis that the written release expressly negated any duty it owed the member. The trial court granted the summary judgment motion, concluding that the written release clearly and unambiguously defeated the lawsuit. The member filed an appeal. The court of appeal concluded that the express language of the unambiguous release of the health club from all premises liability defined its scope. In this case, the broad language of the release applied to the liability of the health club for the fitness-unrelated personal injuries suffered by the health club member. The court affirmed the summary judgment in favor of the health club (104 Cal. App. 4th 1351, 1361) .

In Sanchez v. Bally's Total Fitness Corporation (1998) 68 Cal. App. 4th 62, 79 Cal. Rptr. 2d 902 a health club member sued the club for negligence after she fell on the premises. The trial court granted summary judgment for the club. The plaintiff claimed on appeal that the release clause in her contract with the health club was ineffective to relieve the club of liability for her injuries because the exculpatory provision was not set out in large or italicized letters emphasizing to the reader that she was forgoing her right to assert a claim for injuries and damages, and because the word "negligence" was not found among its terms. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the member's claim was barred by the release she executed when she joined the club. The court stated that whether a contract provision is clear and unambiguous is a question of law, not fact. It found that the health club release and assumption of risk provision was clear, explicit, and comprehensible in itself and when considered with entire agreement, and thus plaintiff's cause of action for negligence was barred by the terms of the agreement (68 Cal. App. 4th 62, 69) .

The court of appeal in Equitable Life Assurance Society v. Berry (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 832, 260 Cal. Rptr. 819 , affirmed a judgment for an insurer upholding its interpretation of a policy and denying coverage. The plaintiff contended on appeal that the trial court had erred in holding the contract unambiguous and thus depriving the plaintiff of a jury trial. The court of appeal said that the jury trial issue was a red herring because even if the court had not determined the matter itself, it would have beenrequired to hear the evidence bearing on the meaning of the contract outside the presence of the jury (212 Cal. App. 3d 832, 836) . The procedure when the proponent of extrinsic evidence urges a particular interpretation of a contract is for the court, outside the presence of the jury, to permit the parties to introduce, conditionally or subject to a motion to strike, all available evidence on the issue of the meaning to be given to the written instrument. If the evidence has the effect of imparting to the written instrument a meaning to which the instrument is not readily susceptible, the extrinsic evidence is stricken. The jury is involved only if the court determines that (1) the wording of the instrument is reasonably susceptible to the interpretation contended for by the proponent of the extrinsicevidence, (2) the extrinsic evidence is relevant to prove the proposed meaning, and (3) the credibility of the proponent's parol evidence is disputed (212 Cal. App. 3d 832, 838) . A determination whether an ambiguity exists in a contract is one of law. Thus, the trial court's ruling was not binding on the reviewing court, and its review is de novo (212 Cal. App. 3d 832, 840) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
E. Interpretation of Contract
1. Ambiguous Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.511

§ 50.511 Plaintiff's Construction of Ambiguous Contract Must Be Accepted

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

IF AN INSTRUMENT PLEADED IN A COMPLAINT IS AMBIGUOUS, THE CONSTRUCTION, IF REASONABLE, THAT IS ADOPTED IN THE COMPLAINT MUST BE ACCEPTED BY THE COURT IN RULING ON A GENERAL DEMURRER.

Plaintiff's Construction of Ambiguous Contract Must Be Accepted. When the provisions of a contract are ambiguous, the court in ruling on a general demurrer must accept as correct the plaintiff's reasonable allegations as to the meaning of the agreement (Pigeon Point Ranch, Inc. v. Perot (1963) 59 Cal. 2d 227, 233, 28 Cal. Rptr. 865, 379 P.2d 321 ; Aragon-Haas v. Family Security Ins. Services, Inc. (1991) 231 Cal. App. 3d 232, 239, 282 Cal. Rptr. 233).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that plaintiff's allegations of a contract provide a reasonable construction that must be accepted.

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a party seeks to raise this contention. Usually, for example, it would be used to oppose a defendant's general demurrer interposed on the ground that complaint alleges a contract the terms of which are ambiguous and uncertain.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised to oppose a demurrer, the memorandum would include an analysis of the allegations showing that the terms in questions are unambiguous when given plaintiff's alleged reasonable construction.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum opposing a demurrer, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case these memoranda may be used in opposition to memoranda such as those set out in § 50.350.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff's Construction of Ambiguous Contract Must Be Accepted

Pigeon Point Ranch, Inc. v. Perot (1963) 59 Cal. 2d 227, 28 Cal. Rptr. 865, 379 P.2d 321 , was an action by a corporation to recover funds misappropriated by an officer. The complaint alleged that the officer was to receive a sum of money for the express and sole purpose of paying attorney's fees owed by the corporation. However, the written agreement incorporated in the complaint provided that the officer did not agree to discharge the corporation's obligation of accrued attorney's fees for services to the corporation, and he assumed all of those fees in excess of a certain sum, although a later provision, by interlineation, stated that the officer was to receive a sum for attorney's fees as well as another sum. The complaint alleged that the officer violated the agreement in that he did not use the sum he received to pay the attorney's fees but instead converted that amount to his own use and paid the fees out of the corporation's funds. The officer demurred generally. The trial court sustained the demurrer and entered a judgment of dismissal.

The Supreme Court reversed. The provisions of the contract, although not clear as to whether the officer was required to use the sum to pay the fees, were subject to that interpretation and consistent with the corporation's allegation. The cause of action thus was not one in which the pleading placed a clearly erroneous construction on an unambiguous contract provision, and in the circumstances it was proper, if not essential, for the corporation to allege its own construction of the agreement. Accordingly, in passing on the sufficiency of the complaint, the trial court had to accept as correct the corporation's allegations as to the meaning of the agreement (59 Cal. 2d 227, 233) .

Aragon-Haas v. Family Security Ins. Services, Inc. (1991) 231 Cal. App. 3d 232, 282 Cal. Rptr. 233 , was a wrongful termination case that included causes of action for breach of contract and breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing. Section 1.01 of the employment agreement gave the defendant the right to terminate the plaintiff's employment during the first year "as provided in Section 8.01," in other words, with or without cause, and "thereafter this Agreement shall be automatically extended" for six consecutive one-year terms. The contract was ambiguous. The trial court sustained a demurrer to the cause of action for breach of contract without leave to amend. On appeal, the defendant contended that the cause of action for breach of contract was properly dismissed because the employment agreement was integrated, and evidence sustaining the plaintiff's interpretation of the agreement was inadmissible because it would vary the terms of the agreement.

The court of appeal reversed. When an ambiguous contract is the basis of an action, it is proper, if not essential, for the plaintiff to allege a construction of the agreement. As long as the pleading does not place a clearly erroneous construction on the provisions of the contract, in passing on the sufficiency of the complaint, the trial court must accept as correct the plaintiff's allegation as to the meaning of the agreement. Whether a contract is ambiguous is a question of law. In this case, the word "thereafter" in Section 1.01 made it unclear whether the right to terminate existed only during the first year of the plaintiff's employment or the right continued throughout the term of employment specified in the contract. Section 1.01 was ambiguous, and it was reasonably susceptible of the meaning alleged by the plaintiff: that after successful completion of the first year of employment, the plaintiff could be discharged only for good cause (231 Cal. App. 3d 232, 239) . When a complaint sets out a contract in full, a general demurrer admits not only the contents of the contract but also any pleaded meaning to which the contract is reasonably susceptible. While the plaintiff's interpretation of the contract ultimately may prove invalid, it was improper to resolve the issue against her solely on her own pleading. In ruling on a demurrer, the likelihood that the pleader will be able to prove his or her allegations is not the question (231 Cal. App. 3d 232, 239) .Additionally, the defendant's contention on the integration issue was without merit (231 Cal. App. 3d 232, 239-240) . When the parties to a written contract have agreed to it as an "integration," that is, a complete and final embodiment of the terms of an agreement, parol evidence cannot be used to add to or to vary its terms [Code Civ. Proc. § 1856(a)]. Extrinsic evidence is admissible, however, to explain what the parties meant by the language they used. Although extrinsic evidence is not admissibl to add to, detract from, or vary the terms of a written contract, the terms must first be determined before the court can decide whether extrinsic evidence is being offered for a prohibited purpose. The fact that the terms of the instrument appear clear to a judge does not preclude the possibility that the parties chose the language of the instrument to express different terms. Accordingly, rational interpretation requires at least a preliminary consideration of all credible evidence offered to prove the intention of the parties (231 Cal. App. 3d 232, 240) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Plaintiff's Construction of Ambiguous Contract Must Be Accepted

In Safeco Insurance Company of America v. Robert S. (2001) 26 Cal. 4th 758, 110 Cal. Rptr. 2d 844 , a 16 year old boy accidentally shot a friend to death and the juvenile court sustained a petition alleging commission of involuntary manslaughter. The decedent's parents then brought a wrongful death action against the minor and his parents. They tendered defense to their insurer, who undertook the defense under a reservation of rights. The insurer brought an action in superior court seeking a declaration that it had no duty to defend or indemnify its insureds under a homeowners policy because the policy excluded coverage for an "illegal act." The insurer unsuccessfully moved for summary judgment, contending that the accidental killing fell within the policy exclusion for an "illegal act." The decedent's parents and the insureds then moved for summary judgment, claiming that as a matter of law, the insurer had a duty to defend and indemnify. The trial court granted the motion, ruling that the policy's "illegal act" exclusion could reasonably be interpreted as excluding coverage only for an intentional illegal act. The insurer appealed, and the court of appeal reversed. It concluded that the illegal act exclusion in the policy precluded coverage for any act in violation of civil or criminal law, and held that the policy did not provide coverage for an act causing death that resulted in a juvenile court adjudication of involuntary manslaughter. The California Supreme Court subsequently reversed the judgment of the court of appeal. It examined the controlling principles of insurance contract interpretation regarding ambiguity, and noted that the phrase "illegal act" was susceptible of two reasonable meanings (26 Cal. 4th 758, 762-763) . The court stated that the court of appeal's constructionof the phrase as meaning violation of any civil or criminal law was so broad as to render the policy's liability coverage practically meaningless. It found that the proper inquiry was whether reasonable insureds expect their homeowners policy to protect them against liability for accidental injury or death occurring in their home, and answered in the affirmative (26 Cal. 4th 758, 763-766) . Therefore, it concluded that the wrongful death action was within the liability coverage of the homeowners policy at issue (26 Cal. 4th 758, 767) .

In Badie v. Bank of America (1999) 67 Cal. App. 4th 779, 803-804, 79 Cal. Rptr. 2d 273 , bank customers sought a declaration regarding the validity of an alternative dispute resolution clause that the bank had attempted to add to their existing credit account agreements. The trial court entered judgment in favor of the bank. The court of appeal held that the provision in the original credit account agreements that the bank could change any "term, condition, service or feature" of the account was ambiguous as to whether the bank could impose the alternative dispute resolution clause. The court applied the rule that ambiguous contract language must be interpreted most strongly against the party who prepared it, finding that the parties did not intend that the change of terms provision should permit the bank to add new contract terms that differ in kind from the terms and conditions included in the original agreements (67 Cal. App. 4th 779, 798-803) .

In Marina Tenants Assn. v. Deauville Marina Development Co. (1986) 181 Cal. App. 3d 122, 226 Cal. Rptr. 321 , a suit by tenants of individual units claiming to be third-party beneficiaries of a master lease between a county as lessor and a developer, the court of appeal found the master lease ambiguous in its dual purposes to maximize revenue for the county and to ensure that rental rates for the ultimate tenants were fair and reasonable (181 Cal. App. 3d 122, 131-132) . The developer's demurrer was sustained because the tenants could not assert greater rights in the contract than the county, which had power to do so but had never challenged the rents at issue. Nevertheless, in determining that the tenants were third-party beneficiaries, the court of appeal reiterated and relied on the rule that when a contract is ambiguous, the plaintiffs are entitled to allege their construction in the complaint. In ruling on a demurrer, that construction, if it is not clearly erroneous, must be accepted as correct (181 Cal. App. 3d 122, 128, 132) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
E. Interpretation of Contract
1. Ambiguous Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities §§ 50.512-50.519

[Reserved]

§§ 50.512[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
E. Interpretation of Contract
2. Modification of Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.520

§ 50.520 Oral Contract Was Modified by Written Consent

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE ORAL CONTRACT WAS MODIFIED BY THE WRITTEN CONSENT OF THE PARTIES, AND THE DEFENDANT FULFILLED HIS/HER/ITS OBLIGATIONS UNDER THE CONTRACT AS MODIFIED.

A. Modification Defined. A modification of a contract is a change in one or more respects that introduces new elements into the details of the contract, or cancels some of them but leaves the general purpose and effect of the contract undisturbed (Grant v. The Aerodraulics Co. (1949) 91 Cal. App. 2d 68, 74, 204 P.2d 683).

B. Oral Contract May Be Modified by Written Agreement Without New Consideration. A contract not in writing may be modified in any respect by the consent of the parties, in writing, without a new consideration, and is extinguished to the extent of the modification (Civ. Code § 1697; see Roehm Distrib. Co. v. Burgermeister Brewing Corp. (1961) 196 Cal. App. 2d 678, 681, 16 Cal. Rptr. 881).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that an oral contract was modified by the mutual written consent of the parties and the defendant fulfilled his or her obligations under the contract as modified.

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a party seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used to support a defendant's motion for summary judgment.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised to support a motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include ananalysis of the moving and opposing papers showing that undisputed facts disclose a modification under which defendant fully performed.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

In an appropriate case, this form may be combined with the memoranda set out in § 50.521 and § 50.522.

For memoranda supporting and opposing the contention that a novation has occurred by which the parties substituted a new obligation for the one the plaintiff is attempting to enforce, see § 50.450 and § 50.523.

For memoranda supporting and opposing the contention that the contract has been rescinded or abandoned by the mutual consent of the parties, see §§ 50.470, 50.480.

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum supporting a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Modification Defined

In Grant v. The Aerodraulics Co. (1949) 91 Cal. App. 2d 68, 204 P.2d 683 , the plaintiff granted to the defendant an exclusive world-wide license to produce and sell a certain type of valve and to obtain a patent for the device. The defendant agreed to pay the plaintiff a minimum guarantied royalty. Thereafter, the defendant refused to pay the plaintiff the unpaid balance of the royalty debt. The plaintiff sued to recover this amount. As an affirmative defense, the defendant alleged that after the execution of the agreement, the parties orally agreed that in consideration of the payment by the defendant of a lesser sum, the contract would be terminated and canceled. The defendant further alleged that it had tendered payment of this lesser amount, but the plaintiff refused to accept it. The trial court rendered judgment on the pleadings for the plaintiff. On appeal,the plaintiff contended that since the alleged agreement to terminate was not in writing and was not fully executed, it was completely ineffective to accomplish its purported purpose under former Civ. Code § 1698, which at that time provided, "A contract in writing may be altered by a contract in writing, or by an executed oral agreement, and not otherwise."

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment on the ground that the alleged oral agreement to terminate the contract was not supported by consideration (91 Cal. App. 2d 68, 75-77) . The plaintiff's contention on appeal was not correct, however. A well-recognized distinction exists between the alteration and the termination of a contract. An alteration is a modification or change in one or more respects that introduces new elements into the details of the contract or cancels some of them, but leaves the general purpose and effect undisturbed (91 Cal. App. 2d 68, 74) . On the other hand, to terminate a contract means to abrogate as much of it as remains unperformed, doing away with the existing agreement on the terms and with the consequences agreed on. The termination or abrogation of a written contract may be achieved by an oral agreement, whether executed or not, and Civ. Code § 1698 would have no application in that case (91 Cal. App. 2d 68, 75) .

[b] Oral Contract May Be Modified by Written Agreement Without New Consideration

In Roehm Distrib. Co. v. Burgermeister Brewing Corp. (1961) 196 Cal. App. 2d 678, 16 Cal. Rptr. 881 , the plaintiff orally agreed to act as exclusive distributor of the defendant's product. It was an industry practice that such an agreement could be terminated only on reasonable notice, usually 60 days, from the manufacturer to the distributor. After making the oral agreement, the plaintiff and the defendant exchanged letters stating that their contractual relation might be terminated at any time by written notice. Thereafter, the defendant gave written notice of termination to the plaintiff. The plaintiff sued for damages for breach of the oral agreement. The trial court granted the defendant's motion for summary judgment. On appeal, the plaintiff contended that the letters were invalid as a modification of the oral contract because there was no consideration.

The court of appeal affirmed. Civ. Code § 1697 contains a clear, direct, and unequivocal statutory mandate that no new consideration is required for the "alteration" (now "modification") of an oral contract by a written agreement (196 Cal. App. 2d 678, 681) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
E. Interpretation of Contract
2. Modification of Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.521

§ 50.521 Written Contract Was Modified Pursuant to Its Own Terms

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE CONTRACT WAS MODIFIED IN ACCORDANCE WITH ITS OWN TERMS, AND THE DEFENDANT HAS FULFILLED HIS/HER/ITS OBLIGATIONS UNDER THE CONTRACT AS MODIFIED.

A. Modification Defined. [See § 50.520[1], Paragraph A.]

B. Written Contract May Expressly Provide for Modification. A written contract may expressly provide for its modification (Busch v. Globe Indus. (1962) 200 Cal. App. 2d 315, 320, 19 Cal. Rptr. 441).

[Optional] C. Modification Pursuant to Contract Provision. When modification of a written contract is in accordance with a provision of the contract authorizing and setting forth the method for the modification, the provisions of Civil Code Section 1698 restricting oral modification of a written contract are inapplicable (see Busch v. Globe Indus. (1962) 200 Cal. App. 2d 315, 320, 19 Cal. Rptr. 441).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that a written contract was modified in accordance with its terms and the defendant has fulfilled his or her obligations under the contract as modified.

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a party seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used to support a defendant's motion for summary judgment.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised to support a motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the moving and opposing papers showing that undisputed facts disclose a modification by terms of the contract under which defendant fully performed.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

In an appropriate case, this form may be combined with the memoranda set out in § 50.520 and § 50.522.

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum supporting a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Written Contract May Expressly Provide for Modification

In Busch v. Globe Indus. (1962) 200 Cal. App. 2d 315, 19 Cal. Rptr. 441 , the plaintiff became an exclusive agent for the distribution of kitchen utensils produced by the defendant. The written agreement provided that the defendant would not enter into any contract contemplating the shipment of its products into the plaintiff's territory without first communicating with the plaintiff and obtaining his consent to such a transaction. Subsequently, the defendant negotiated with several national companies for the promotion of its products. The plaintiff was orally informed of these negotiations and advised that, if consummated, they would result in some sales within his exclusive territory. The plaintiff did not object to these negotiations and, in fact, participated in some of them. The negotiations eventually led to a contract between the defendant and another corporation, which resulted in some sales in the plaintiff's territory. Sometime thereafter, the plaintiff informed the defendant that he wished to get out of the business, and the parties started negotiations that resulted in the defendant's buying back all of its merchandise from the plaintiff. Thereafter, the plaintiff sued for breach of the exclusive agency agreement based on the sales in the plaintiff's territory pursuant to the promotional program. After a trial without a jury, the trial court rendered judgment for the defendant on finding that the exclusive agency contract had been orally modified by the parties with the plaintiff's consent.

The court of appeal affirmed. Under former Civ. Code § 1698, a contract could be altered by a contract in writing or by an executed oral agreement, and not otherwise. However, a written contract may expressly provide for its own modification. When a modification is in accordance with a provision of a contract authorizing and setting forth a method for its revision, the rule that a contract in writing may be altered only by another written contract or an executed oral agreement has no application because there is no alteration of the contract; the modification is merely conducted in accordance with the terms of the contract. In this case, the contract provided that the defendant would not enter into any contract contemplating the shipment of its products into the plaintiff's territory without first communicating with the plaintiff and obtaining his agreement. The evidence showed that there was a communication regarding the promotional program to the plaintiff, and his conduct indicated his consent. Therefore, there was no alteration or revision of the contract; there was only conduct pursuant to and in conformity with the agreement. If considered a modification, the method of modifying the contract was provided for and followed by the parties (200 Cal. App. 2d 315, 320) .

[b] Modification Pursuant to Contract Provision

Busch v. Globe Indus. (1962) 200 Cal. App. 2d 315, 320, 19 Cal. Rptr. 441 , is discussed in [a], above.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
E. Interpretation of Contract
2. Modification of Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.522

§ 50.522 Written Contract Was Modified by Written Agreement or by Oral Agreement Supported by New Consideration

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE WRITTEN CONTRACT WAS MODIFIED BY _____ [A SUBSEQUENT WRITTEN CONTRACT or AN ORAL AGREEMENT SUPPORTED BY A NEW CONSIDERATION] BETWEEN THE PARTIES, AND THE DEFENDANT HAS FULFILLED HIS/HER/ITS OBLIGATIONS UNDER THE CONTRACT AS MODIFIED.

A. Modification Defined. [See § 50.520[1], Paragraph A.]

[EITHER]

B. Modification of Written Contract by Another Written Contract. A contract in writing may be modified by a contract in writing (Civ. Code § 1698(a)).

[AND/OR]

C. Modification of Written Contract by Oral Agreement Supported by New Consideration. Unless the contract otherwise expressly provides, a contract in writing may be modified by an oral agreement supported by new consideration (Civ. Code § 1698(c); Wagner v. Glendale Adventist Medical Center (1989) 216 Cal. App. 3d 1379, 1388, 265 Cal. Rptr. 412).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that the contract was modified by a subsequent written contract or an oral agreement supported by new consideration [see Civ. Code § 1698(a), (c) and discussion in [c], below], and a party's obligations were fulfilled under the contract as modified.

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a party seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used to support a defendant's motion for summary judgment.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised to support a motion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the moving and opposing papers showing that undisputed facts disclose a subsequent modification under which defendant fully performed.

[c] Modification of Contracts

Modification of a contract for the sale of goods is governed by the provisions of Com. Code § 2209, rather than Civ. Code § 1698. Thus, the memoranda set forth in this form are inapplicable in an action for damages for breach of a contract for the sale of goods. An agreement modifying such a contract needs no consideration to be binding [Com. Code § 2209(1)]. However, a signed agreement that excludes modification or rescission, except by a signed writing, cannot be otherwise modified or rescinded. Except as between merchants, when such a requirement is contained in a form supplied by the merchant, it must be separately signed by the other party [Com. Code § 2209(2)].

Former Civ. Code § 1698 provided that a contract in writing may be altered by a contract in writing, or by an executed oral agreement, and nototherwise. The section was amended in 1976. Under the amended version, a written contract may still be modified by a written contract and by an executed oral agreement [see Civ. Code § 1698(a), (b)]. In addition, now a contract in writing may be modified by an oral agreement supported by a new consideration, unless the written contract expressly provides otherwise. However, the contract must satisfy the statute of frauds [Civ. Code § 1624] if the contract, as modified, is within its provisions [Civ. Code § 1698(c)].

The statute does not preclude the application, in an appropriate case, of rules of law concerning estoppel, oral novation and substitution of a new agreement, rescission of a written contract by an oral agreement, waiver of a provision of a written contract, or oral independent collateral contracts [Civ. Code § 1698(d)].

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[e] Related Memoranda

In an appropriate case, this form may be combined with the memoranda set out in § 50.520 [see also § 50.521].

For memoranda supporting the contention that a written contract was modified by an executed oral agreement, see § 50.523.

For memoranda supporting and opposing the contention that a novation occurred by which the parties substituted a new obligation for the one the plaintiff is attempting to enforce, see § 50.450 and § 50.461.

For memoranda supporting and opposing the contention that a contract was rescinded or abandoned by the mutual consent of the parties, see § 50.470 and § 50.480.

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum supporting a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Modification of Written Contract by Oral Agreement Supported by New Consideration

The court of appeal in Wagner v. Glendale Adventist Medical Center (1989) 216 Cal. App. 3d 1379, 265 Cal. Rptr. 412 , affirmed a judgment for an employer, concluding that there was insufficient evidence of subsequent oral representations to support a modification as alleged by the plaintiff. Nevertheless, the court did note that when one party has, through oral representations and conduct or custom, behaved after execution of a contract in a manner antithetical to one or more of the terms of an express written contract and induced the other party to rely on those representations and conduct or custom, it is inequitable to deny the relying party the benefit of the other party's apparent modification of the written contract (216 Cal. App. 3d 1379, 1388) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 50 CONTRACTS
PART II. FORMS
E. Interpretation of Contract
2. Modification of Contract

5-50 California Points & Authorities § 50.523

§ 50.523 Written Contract Was Modified by Executed Oral Agreement

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE WRITTEN CONTRACT WAS MODIFIED BY AN EXECUTED ORAL AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE PARTIES, AND THE DEFENDANT HAS FULFILLED HIS/HER/ITS OBLIGATIONS UNDER THE CONTRACT AS MODIFIED.

A. Modification Defined. [See § 50.520[1], Paragraph A.]

B. Modification of Written Contract by Executed Oral Agreement. A contract in writing may be modified by an oral agreement to the extent that the oral agreement is executed by the parties (Civ. Code § 1698(b)).

C. Executed Oral Agreement Is Sufficient to Modify Written Contract Without Consideration. An executed oral agreement serves as a modification of a written agreement without regard to the presence or absence of consideration (Julian v. Gold (1931) 214 Cal. 74, 76, 3 P.2d 1009 ; Eluschuk v. Chemical Eng'rs Termite Control, Inc. (1966) 246 Cal. App. 2d 463, 469, 54 Cal. Rptr. 711).

[Optional] D. Performance by Promisee Alone Is Sufficient When Oral Modification Is Supported by Consideration. If thereexists sufficient consideration for an oral modification agreement, then full performance by the promisee alone is sufficient to render the agreement executed and therefore enforceable under Civil Code Section 1698 (D.L. Godbey & Sons Constr. Co. v. Deane (1952) 39 Cal. 2d 429, 433-434, 246 P.2d 946).

[Optional] E. Effect of Contract Provision Requiring Written Modification. An executed oral agreement may alter a written contract, even though the original contract provides that all changes must be in writing (Miller v. Brown (1955) 136 Cal. App. 2d 763, 775, 289 P.2d 572).

[Optional] F. Nonperformance Is Execution of Oral Agreement Not to Perform. When the parties orally modify a written contract by agreeing that a certain act contemplated by the contract will not be performed, the modification is to be deemed executed, within the meaning of Civil Code Section 1698, when the party who was to perform the act does not perform it and the other party does not demand performance (see Coldwell Banker & Co. v. Pepper Tree Office Center Associates (1980) 106 Cal. App. 3d 272, 280-281, 165 Cal. Rptr. 51).

[Optional] G. Burden of Proof. An oral modification of a written contract, to be sustained, need be proved only by a preponderance of the evidence, and it is prejudicial error to instruct the jury that the elements of an oral modification must be proved by clear and convincing evidence (Barrett v. Bank of America (1986) 183 Cal. App. 3d 1362, 1370-1371, 229 Cal. Rptr. 16).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that the contract was modified by an executed oral agreement [see Civ. Code § 1698(b)], and a party's obligations were fulfilled under the contract as modified.

This form may be used in a trial or appellate brief, or in a memorandum submitted in any other procedural context in which a party seeks to raise this contention. For example, it may be used to support a defendant's motion for summary judgment.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, if the contention is raised to support amotion for summary judgment, the memorandum would include an analysis of the moving and opposing papers showing that undisputed facts disclose a modification under which defendant fully performed.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion relating to contracts, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

In an appropriate case, this form may be combined with the memoranda set out in § 50.520 and § 50.522.

For memoranda supporting and opposing the contention that a novation occurred by which the parties substituted a new obligation for the one the plaintiff is attempting to enforce, see § 50.450 and § 50.461.

For memoranda supporting and opposing the contention that a contract was rescinded or abandoned by the mutual consent of the parties, see § 50.470 and § 50.480.

These memoranda should be combined with others, as necessary, relating to the procedural context in which they are used. For example, if used in a memorandum supporting a motion for summary judgment, they may be combined with appropriate memoranda set out in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda in § 50.464 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Executed Oral Agreement Is Sufficient to Modify Written Contract Without Consideration

In Julian v. Gold (1931) 214 Cal. 74, 3 P.2d 1009 , the defendants agreed in writing to lease certain real property from the plaintiff. Subsequently, the parties made an oral agreement by which the monthly rent was reduced from the amount provided for in the written lease. The plaintiff accepted the defendants' performance under the oral agreement for more than two years, until the defendants defaulted in their performance under the oralagreement. The plaintiff then sued to recover back rent equal to the difference between the amount provided for in the written lease and the amount actually paid by the defendants. After a trial without a jury, the trial court concluded that since the agreement to reduce the rent, although carried out, was oral and unsupported by consideration, it was void and subject to repudiation by the plaintiff at any time. The trial court rendered judgment for the plaintiff.

The Supreme Court reversed. An executed oral agreement serves as a modification or release of a written agreement without regard to the presence or absence of consideration (214 Cal. 74, 76) . Although some prior opinions contained statements that an executed oral modification of a contract required consideration to be valid, the statements were merely dicta (214 Cal. 74, 76-78) .

In Eluschuk v. Chemical Eng'rs Termite Control, Inc. (1966) 246 Cal. App. 2d 463, 54 Cal. Rptr. 711 , the plaintiff agreed in writing to render services to the defendant as a salesman, field representative, and solicitor for a one-year period at a commission equal to a certain percentage of the gross sales made by him. The plaintiff was prohibited from competing with the defendant for a two-year period following termination of the agreement. The plaintiff would be obligated to pay the defendant a certain sum as liquidated damages in the event of breach of the contract by the plaintiff, and the defendant could apply any money due to the plaintiff as an offset against damages. Immediately after making the written agreement, the plaintiff and the defendant orally agreed that the plaintiff would not be required to render services as a solicitor or field representative but only as a salesman, and the plaintiff would receive a smaller commission than that provided for in the written agreement. Before expiration of the written contract, the plaintiff terminated his employment with the defendant without notice or legal excuse and went to work for the defendant's competitor. Pursuant to the liquidated-damages provision of the written agreement, the defendant retained the amount that it owed the plaintiff for services rendered. The plaintiff sued to recover this amount. The trial court found that all of the terms and conditions of the written employment contract, except as modified by the executed oral agreement pertaining to duties and salary, were valid and enforceable, and the plaintiff had breached the written agreement by prematurely leaving the defendant's employment, refusing to perform his duties as a salesman, and competing with the defendant during the term of the agreement. The trial court rendered judgment for the defendant. The court of appeal affirmed. The oral agreement substituting duties and salary for those provided in the written agreement did not, under the facts o the case, constitute a novation so as to extinguish the written contract (246 Cal. App. 2d 463, 468) . The provisions of the written agreement relating to the plaintiff's duties and salary were modified by a fully-executed oral agreement that left all other provisions of the written agreement in effect. An executed oralagreement will serve as a modification of a written agreement without regard to the presence or absence of consideration. However, an executed oral modification of a term or provision of a written contract does not extinguish the contract; the effect is to alter only those portions of the written contract directly affected by the oral agreement, leaving the remaining portions intact. Thus, the executed oral agreement did not relieve the plaintiff from the terms of the written contract that prohibited him from competing with the defendant and provided for damages for his breach of the contract (246 Cal. App. 2d, 463, 469) .

[b] Performance by Promisee Alone Is Sufficient When Oral Modification Is Supported by Consideration

In D.L. Godbey & Sons Constr. Co. v. Deane (1952) 39 Cal. 2d 429, 246 P.2d 946 , the plaintiff made a written contract to perform the cement work for a building that the defendants were erecting. The plaintiff was to be paid a certain amount per cubic foot, and the basis of the payment would be determined by the actual measurement of the forms into which the concrete would be poured. Thereafter, before commencing performance, the parties orally agreed that the plaintiff would instead be paid on the basis of the actual amount of concrete delivered and poured, less an allowance for shrinkage and waste. The parties further agreed that the plaintiff would furnish the defendants with delivery tickets showing the actual amount of concrete poured on the job site every day. The plaintiff sued for breach of contract, alleging that it had performed the contract, as modified, and had supplied the required daily reports of deliveries, and under the terms of the contract, as modified, there remained a certain amount owing. The trial court sustained a demurrer to the complaint without leave to amend and rendered judgment for the defendants. On appeal, the defendants contended that the alleged modification of the written contract was invalid because of lack of consideration and because it was not in writing, and therefore the complaint was fatally defective in failing to allege that any sum was due and unpaid under the terms of the original written contract.

The Supreme Court reversed. Since the modification was made before performance was started, the substitution of new rights and duties based on the new method of measurement was adequate consideration for the relinquishment of the reciprocal rights of the parties under the old method (39 Cal. 2d 429, 431) . The defendants' contention that the oral modification was invalid because it was not executed had no merit. Former Civ. Code § 1698, as it read at that time [see Civ. Code § 1698(a), (b)], had a dual operation. On the one hand, it invalidated oral contracts of modification that were unexecuted, and on the other hand, it validated executed agreements that might otherwise fail for lack of consideration. Agreements to accept less than is due under the terms of a written contract or to acceptperformance at a later date than that provided in writing are typical of the latter category of agreement. Since the modification agreement requires no act or forbearance on the part of the obligor, it can only be executed to the extent that the obligee accepts performance in accordance with its terms. Thus, in the absence of a valid waiver of a condition or facts establishing an estoppel to rely on Civ. Code § 1698, the statute can only be satisfied by execution on the part of the obligee by accepting less than is due (39 Cal. 2d 429, 432) . The situation is different when there is consideration for an oral modification agreement. The rights and duties of both parties to the contract are affected, and by performing the contract as modified, each party will be in a position to execute the oral agreement. There was a conflict in the language of prior decisions as to whether execution by one party is sufficient to allow enforcement of an oral modification against the other. However, in those cases in which there was adequate consideration for the oral modification, and in which the party relying on it had fully performed, the contract was enforced as modified whether or not the other party had performed (39 Cal. 2d 429, 433) . In this case, since the plaintiff had alleged an adequate consideration for the oral modification and full performance on its part, it had stated a cause of action (39 Cal. 2d 429, 433-434) .

[c] Effect of Contract Provision Requiring Written Modification

In Miller v. Brown (1955) 136 Cal. App. 2d 763, 289 P.2d 572 , the defendant contracted in writing to build a house for the plaintiff. The defendant was to purchase the materials and supervise performance of the work required for construction of the house. The plaintiff was to pay the costs of the labor and materials, and the defendant was to receive a fee equal to a percentage of the costs. The defendant guarantied that the total cost would not exceed a specified sum unless changes were made in the plans. Any changes and deviations from the plans were to be made in writing and signed by both parties. After the house was completed, its total cost was considerably more than the amount provided for in the contract. The plaintiff sued to recover from the defendant the difference between the actual cost and the maximum guarantied cost specified in the contract. The defendant answered that the difference in cost represented extras that were ordered by the plaintiff. The trial court rendered judgment for the defendant. On appeal, the plaintiff contended that he was entitled to recover the cost of some of the extras because the contract required that any alterations be in writing, and the plaintiff had approved only one alteration in writing.

The court of appeal affirmed. The plaintiff had, in fact, ordered and approved the extras, and under the law, this amounted to a modification of the written contract. Under Civ. Code § 1698, an executed oral agreement may alter an agreement in writing, even though, as in this case, theoriginal contract provides that all changes must be approved in writing. This is so because the executed oral agreement may modify the portion of the contract requiring written approval of changes as well as other provisions (136 Cal. App. 2d 763, 775) .

[d] Nonperformance Is Execution of Oral Agreement Not to Perform

In Coldwell Banker & Co. v. Pepper Tree Office Center Associates (1980) 106 Cal. App. 3d 272, 165 Cal. Rptr. 51 , the plaintiff agreed in writing to act as exclusive agent for the defendants in obtaining tenants for an office building to be built by the defendants. The defendants were to pay the plaintiff a commission if the plaintiff obtained a tenant during the term of the agreement or if the property was leased through the efforts of anyone other than the defendants. After the execution of this agreement, the parties orally agreed that the plaintiff would not conduct any further negotiations with certain prospective tenants. The defendants developed their own proposals for these particular leases and submitted them to the prospective tenants through the tenants' brokers. Agreements to lease the property to these tenants were eventually reached. Thereafter, the plaintiff sued to recover commissions for these leases. The trial court concluded that the parties had orally modified the original written agreement, and the plaintiff was not entitled to commissions on the leases under the contract as modified. It rendered judgment for the defendants.

The court of appeal affirmed. Under Civ. Code § 1698, an enforceable oral modification of the written agreement between the plaintiff and the defendants could be found if the oral agreement was either supported by consideration or fully executed (106 Cal. App. 3d 272, 279) . In this case, under the agreement as modified, the plaintiff had agreed to limit its duty and not do further work seeking prospective tenants for the building, while the defendants gave up their rights to use the plaintiff's best efforts in obtaining leases and avoided the expenditure of resources that this would entail. This forbearance was adequate consideration to support the modification under Civ. Code § 1698(c) (106 Cal. App. 3d 272, 280) . As to execution, an agreement not to perform certain duties was executed by not performing. Thus, the plaintiff had executed its part of the oral agreement by taking a passive role with respect to these leases, and the defendants had performed by choosing not to use the plaintiff's services (106 Cal. App. 3d 272, 280) . The oral modification of the written agreement was fully executed by the parties and thus satisfied Civ. Code § 1698(b) (106 Cal. App. 3d 272, 281) .

[e] Burden of Proof

Barrett v. Bank of America (1986) 183 Cal. App. 3d 1362, 229 Cal. Rptr. 16 , was an action by borrowers against a bank for damages for breach ofcontract, fraud, conspiracy to defraud, intentional infliction of emotional distress, and negligence based on the bank's failure to honor its oral promise to release the plaintiffs' personal guaranties after the merger of the company in which the plaintiffs were the principal shareholders and another company. The agreement constituted a modification of the written guaranty agreement between the plaintiffs and the bank. The trial court rendered judgment for the bank.

The court of appeal reversed because of the trial court's refusal to instruct the jury on constructive fraud; however, the court stated that the burden of proof for oral modification of a written contract is a preponderance of the evidence [see Evid. Code § 115], not clear and convincing evidence (183 Cal. App. 3d 1362, 1370 ; but see Coldwell Banker & Co. v. Pepper Tree Office Center Associates (1980) 106 Cal. App. 3d 272, 165 Cal. Rptr. 51 , discussed in [d], above). There are no degrees of quality of evidence, apart from its relevancy, and while the trier of fact must be satisfied based on admissible evidence that modification of a written instrument is intended, this in no way increases the plaintiff's burden of proof beyond the mere preponderance of the evidence required in most civil cases, including actions for fraud (183 Cal. App. 3d 1362, 1371) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Executed Oral Agreement Is Sufficient to Modify Written Contract Without Consideration

In Price v. Price (1938) 24 Cal. App. 2d 462, 75 P.2d 655 , divorcing spouses made a written property settlement agreement by which the husband was to pay the wife a certain amount weekly for her support. Thereafter, when the husband was in arrears in his payments, the parties met and made a new agreement that modified the original agreement by reducing the amount of the payments to be received by the wife. The husband made all payments in accordance with the modified agreement until the wife's remarriage. The wife then sued to recover payments due her in accordance with the original agreement. The trial court concluded that the agreement modifying the original contract was ineffective because of lack of consideration. It rendered judgment for the wife. The court of appeal reversed. The agreement modifying the original agreement was fully executed, and therefore no consideration was necessary. An executed agreement will serve as a modification or release of a written agreement, without regard to the presence or absence of a consideration (24 Cal. App. 2d 462, 464) .

[b] Performance by Promisee Alone Is Sufficient When Oral Modification Is Supported by Consideration

Sanders Construction Co. v. San Joaquin First Fed. Sav. & Loan Assn. (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 387, 186 Cal. Rptr. 218 , involved an action forbreach of contract brought by a land owner against a savings and loan association that had contracted to construct a building on the property. The trial court found that the original contract, which had called for construction of the building by the land owner, had been modified by an executed oral agreement that the savings and loan association would have the building constructed by an independent contractor. The building was never completed, and the land owner sued for breach of contract. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's conclusion that the oral modification agreement was valid. Not only had it been executed by the promisee's nonperformance, but also it was supported by sufficient consideration in that the land owner had relinquished his right to make a profit from construction of the building (136 Cal. App. 3d 387, 396-397) .

In Kelley v. R.F. Jones Co. (1969) 272 Cal. App. 2d 113, 77 Cal. Rptr. 170 , the plaintiff owned a building that it leased to the defendant, pursuant to a written lease. Before the expiration of the lease, the plaintiff attempted to sell the building. The plaintiff's real estate agent found a prospective purchaser that wanted to take possession before the expiration of the defendant's lease. The plaintiff instructed the agent to proceed with the sale transaction. The agent then orally informed the defendant that the plaintiff had a purchaser for the building, and the parties were willing to terminate the lease early if the defendant would agree to vacate the premises by a certain date. The defendant agreed to this and vacated the property by that date. The sale ultimately was not consummated. The plaintiff then sued to recover rent for the remainder of the lease. The trial court rendered judgment for the plaintiff. On appeal, the plaintiff contended that the duration of the written lease could be modified only by operation of law or by an instrument in writing. The court of appeal rejected this contention, noting that an oral modification of a written lease is binding to the extent that it is executed. Also, an oral agreement fully executed by one party, if supported by a valid consideration, will constitute a valid modification of a prior written agreement (272 Cal. App. 2d 113, 119) . Hence, as the agent had authority to speak for the plaintiff, his statements to the defendant constituted a promise to terminate the lease early in consideration for the defendant's promise to vacate the premises early (272 Cal. App. 2d 113, 120-121) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 51 CONVERSION

5-51 California Points & Authorities 51.syn

§ 51.syn Synopsis to Chapter 51: CONVERSION

§ 51.01 Scope of Chapter

§ 51.02 Governing Law

§ 51.03 Alternate Remedies for Conversion of Personal Property

§ 51.04 Related Discussion and Forms

[1] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[2] Related Points and Authorities

§§ 51.05-51.19 [Reserved]

§ 51.20 Supporting Contention That Defendant Has Converted Plaintiff's Personal Property--General Form

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Conversion Defined

[b] Necessary Allegations

[c] General Allegation of Wrongful Conversion Sufficient

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Necessary Allegations

§ 51.21 Supporting Contention That Defendant Has Converted Plaintiff's Personal Property--Personal Property, Tangible or Intangible, Can Be Subject to Conversion

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Personal Property, Tangible or Intangible, Can Be Subject to Conversion

[b] Specific Money as Property Subject to Conversion

[c] Equitable Interest in Real Property Subject to Conversion

[d] Customer List as Property Subject to Conversion

[e] Shares of Stocks and Bonds as Property Subject to Conversion

[f] Fixtures as Property Subject to Conversion

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Equitable Interest in Real Property Subject to Conversion

[b] Shares of Stocks and Bonds as Property Subject to Conversion

[c] Fixtures as Property Subject to Conversion

§ 51.22 Supporting Contention That Defendant Has Converted Plaintiff's Personal Property--Plaintiff Owned or Had Right to Immediate Possession of Property Converted

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff Owned or Had Right to Immediate Possession of Property Converted

[b] Actual Possession of Property, Rather Than Ownership, Sufficient Interest in Property Converted

[c] Plaintiff With Right to Immediate Possession Need Not Be in Actual Possession at Time of Conversion

[d] Owner of Automobile on Which Repairs Were Made Without Prior Written Estimate

[e] Purchaser Under Automobile Installment Sale Contract Who Is Denied Right to Reinstate Contract

[f] When Plaintiff Owner Need Not Have Right to Immediate Possession at Time of Conversion

[g] Secured Party Having Special Interest With Right to Immediate Possession on Default

[h] Owner of Property in Which Another Has Special Interest

[i] Assignee of Cause of Action for Conversion Has Right to Maintain Action Without Ownership or Right to Possession

[j] Attorney With Valid Charging Lien May Pursue Conversion Action When Proceeds are Wrongfully Withheld

§ 51.23 Supporting Contention That Defendant Has Converted Plaintiff's Personal Property--Act of Conversion as Unwarranted Interference With Rights or Interests in Personal Property of Another

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Act of Conversion as Unwarranted Interference With the Rights or Interests in Personal Property of Another

[b] Lack of Knowledge or Good Faith No Defense to Conversion

[c] Denial of Access to Property as Conversion

[d] Misdelivery of Personal Property as Conversion

[e] Purchase of Property of Another in Unauthorized Sale as Conversion

[f] Unauthorized Sale of Property of Another as Conversion

[g] Willful Omission to Act as Conversion

[h] Wrongful Appropriation of Property as Conversion

[i] Bailee's Failure to Investigate Conflicting Claim of Possession as Conversion

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Lack of Knowledge or Good Faith No Defense to Conversion

[b] Denial of Access to Property as Conversion

[c] Misdelivery of Personal Property as Conversion

[d] Unauthorized Sale of Property of Another as Conversion

[e] Willful Appropriation of Property as Conversion

§ 51.24 Supporting Contention That Defendant Has Converted Plaintiff's Personal Property--Measure of Damages for Conversion [Civ. Code § 3336]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Measure of Damages for Conversion

[b] Damages for Expenditures in Pursuit of Property

[c] Loss of Profits as Measure of Damages

[d] Loss of Use as Measure of Special Damages

[e] Cost of Property as Proof of Value

[f] Face Value of Written Instrument as Proof of Value

[g] Full Value as Measure of Damages for Owner of Limited Interest in Property as Against Stranger Without Ownership Rights

[h] Prejudgment Interest Available

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Face Value of Written Instrument as Proof of Value

§ 51.25 Supporting Contention That Defendant Has Converted Plaintiff's Personal Property--Emotional Distress Damages Recoverable

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Emotional Distress Damages Recoverable

§ 51.26 Opposing Contention That Defendant Has Converted Plaintiff's Personal Property--Real Property as Not Subject to Conversion

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Real or Immovable Property

[b] Real Property as Property Not Subject to Conversion

[c] Fixtures Treated as Real Property by Terms of Conveyance Not Subject to Conversion

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Real Property as Property Not Subject to Conversion

§ 51.27 Opposing Contention That Defendant Has Converted Plaintiff's Personal Property--Intangible and Indefinite Property Rights Not Subject to Conversion

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Property That Is Intangible, Uncertain, and Indefinite as Not Subject to Conversion

[b] Goodwill of Business and Customer List for Specific Route as Property Not Subject to Conversion

[c] Literary Property as Incorporeal Right

[d] Gambling Losses Not Subject to Conversion

§ 51.28 Opposing Contention That Defendant Has Converted Plaintiffs Personal Property--Plaintiff Failed to Show Ownership With Right to Possession or Actual Possession

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

[d] Relating Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff Failed to Show Ownership With Right to Possession or Actual Possession

[b] Defendant Having Superior Interest in Property

[c] Defaulting Chattel Mortgagor as Having No Right of Possession

[d] Imposition of Constructive Trust Does Not Retroactively Create Ownership Interest Superior to That of Levying Creditor

[e] Medical Patient Does Not Retain Ownership Interest in Body Cells Removed With Consent and Later Used for Research

[f] Mere Promise to Hold Property in Trust Does Not Create Sufficient Property Interest

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Plaintiff Failed to Show Ownership With Right of Possession or Actual Possession

§ 51.29 Opposing Contention That Defendant Has Converted Plaintiff's Personal Property--Plaintiff Failed to Show Wrongful Interference With Property

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff Failed to Show Wrongful Interference With Property

[b] Interference With Property Not Substantial

[c] Refusal to Deliver Property Pending Reasonable Inquiry Into Plaintiff's Rights to Property as Not Conversion

[d] Mere Movement of Property Is Not Conversion

[e] Act by Mortgagee in Possession of Property to Protect and Preserve Property as Not Conversion

[f] Impossibility of Redelivery of Stored Property Because of Loss or Destruction as Not Conversion

[g] Filing of Complaint in Interpleader Insufficient to Support Conversion Action

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Plaintiff Failed to Show Wrongful Interference With Property

[b] Interference With Property Not Substantial

§ 51.30 Supporting Contention That Claims for Damages for Expenditures Paid in Pursuit of Converted Property Must Be Necessary and Reasonable

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Expenditures Made in Pursuit of Recovery of Converted Property Must Be Necessary and Reasonable

[b] Attorney's Fees Not Recoverable as Money Expended in Pursuit of Property

§ 51.31 Supporting Contention That Recovery by Plaintiff of Converted Property Acts as Mitigation of Damages

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Recovery of Property by Plaintiff as Mitigation of Damages

§ 51.32 Supporting Contention That Plaintiff Who Regains Possession of Converted Property Prior to Adjudication of Entitlement to Possession May Recover Prejudgment Interest Calculated to Entry of Judgment

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Right to Interest Extends to Entry of Judgment

§ 51.33 Supporting Contention That Plaintiff's Action for Conversion of Personal Property Is Barred by the Statute of Limitations [Code Civ. Proc. § 338(c)]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Three-Year Statute of Limitations for Action for Conversion

[b] Statute of Limitations Commences at Time of Conversion

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Statute of Limitations Commences at Time of Conversion

§ 51.34 Supporting Contention That Plaintiff's Consent to Taking of Personal Property Is Defense to Action for Conversion

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff's Consent to Taking of Personal Property Is Defense to Action for Conversion

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Plaintiff's Consent to Taking of Personal Property Is Defense to Action to Conversion

§ 51.35 Supporting Contention That Plaintiff Required to Make Demand for Return of Property Before Bringing Action for Conversion

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff Required to Make Demand for Return of Property Before Bringing Action for Conversion

§ 51.36 Supporting Contention That Plaintiff's Waiver of Interest in Property Is Bar to Recovery for Conversion

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff's Waiver of Interest in Property Is Bar to Recovery for Conversion

§ 51.37 Supporting Contention That Plaintiff Equitably Estopped From Asserting Title to Property Not Entitled to Recover for Conversion

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff Equitably Estopped From Asserting Title to Property Not Entitled to Recover for Conversion

§ 51.38 Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Not Liable for Conversion--Defendant Took Possession as Personal Representative of Decedent's Estate in Good Faith Belief That Property Was Part of Decedent's Estate [Prob. Code § 9651(c)]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Personal Representative Is Not Liable for Taking Possession of Property in Good-Faith Belief That It Is Part of Decedent's Estate

§ 51.39 Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Not Liable for Conversion--Defendant Delivered Decedent's Tangible Personal Property to Surviving Spouse, Relative, or Conservator or Guardian of Estate [Prob. Code § 330]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defendant Is Immune From Liability for Loss or Damage to Property of Decedent Because Property Was Properly Delivered and Statutory Requirements Were Met

§ 51.40 Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Not Liable for Conversion--Defendant Took Possession to Protect Own Interests

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

§ 51.41 Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Not Liable For Conversion--Bank Not Liable For Mortgage Loan Broker's Conversion of Note Payments Deposited in Bank Trust Accounts

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Banks Have No Duty to Prevent Breaches of Fiduciary Duty

§ 51.42 Opposing Contention That Plaintiff's Action for Conversion of Personal Property Is Barred by the Statute of Limitations--Fraudulent Concealment of Conversion Tolls Statute of Limitations

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[c] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Fraudulent Concealment of Conversion Tolls Statute of Limitations

[b] Discovery of Whereabouts of Art or Artifact

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Fraudulent Concealment of Conversion Tolls Statute of Limitations

[b] Discovery of Whereabouts of Art or Artifact

§ 51.43 Opposing Contention That Plaintiff's Action for Conversion of Personal Property Is Barred by the Statute of Limitations-- Cause of Action Does Not Accrue Until Owner Learns of Conversion When Original Taking Lawful

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[c] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Cause of Action Does Not Accrue Until Owner Learns of Conversion When Original Taking Lawful

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Cause of Action Does Not Accrue Until Owner Learns of Conversion When Original Taking Lawful

§ 51.44 Opposing Contention That Plaintiff's Action for Conversion of Personal Property Is Barred by Statute of Limitations--Statute Tolled While Plaintiff Legally Restrained from Protecting Interest [Code Civ. Proc. § 356]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[c] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Suspension of Statute When Plaintiff Legally Restrained

§ 51.45 Opposing Contention That Plaintiff's Consent to Taking of Personal Property Is Defense to Action for Conversion--Consent Obtained by Fraud as Not Constituting Defense to Conversion

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Consent Obtained by Fraud as Not Constituting Defense to Action for Conversion

§ 51.46 Opposing Contention That Plaintiff Required to Make Demand for Return of Property Before Bringing Action for Conversion-- Demand for Return of Property Not Necessary When Original Taking Wrongful [Civ. Code § 1713]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Duty to Return Property Obtained Without Consent or Unlawfully Taken

[b] Demand for Return of Property Not Necessary When Original Taking Wrongful

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Demand for Return of Property Not Necessary When Original Taking Wrongful

§ 51.47 Opposing Contention That Plaintiff Required to Make Demand for Return of Property Before Bringing Action for Conversion-- Demand for Return of Property Not Necessary When Demand Would Be Futile

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Demand for Return of Property Not Necessary When Demand Would Be Futile

[b] Demand for Return of Property Not Necessary When Property Actually Converted

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Demand for Return of Property Not Necessary When Property Actually Converted

§ 51.48 Opposing Contention That Plaintiff Waived Interest in Personal Property--No Intentional Relinquishment of Known Right of Property

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff Waived Interest in Property

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 51 CONVERSION
PART I. INTRODUCTION

5-51 California Points & Authorities § 51.01

§ 51.01 Scope of Chapter

This chapter contains memoranda of points and authorities for use in supporting or opposing the respective parties' contentions relating to conversion of personal property. The chapter contains a general form for use in supporting the contention that the defendant has converted the plaintiff's personal property [see § 51.20], forms relating to specific points in support of that contention [see §§ 51.21 -51.25].

The chapter also contains general forms for use in opposing the contention that the defendant has converted the plaintiff's personal property [see §§ 51.26 -51.29] together with general forms for use in supporting the contention that the damages awarded plaintiff are improperly computed [see §§ 51.30, 51.31].

Also included in this chapter are a form relating to the recovery of prejudgment interest [see § 51.32], forms for use in supporting the contentions relating to various affirmative defenses to an action for conversion [see §§ 51.33 -51.41], and forms for use in opposing those contentions [see §§ 51.42 -51.48].

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
TortsIntentional TortsConversionDefensesTortsIntentional TortsConversionElementsTortsIntentional TortsConversionRemedies

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 51 CONVERSION
PART I. INTRODUCTION

5-51 California Points & Authorities § 51.02

§ 51.02 Governing Law

Conversion is basically governed by case law. However, damages recoverable for conversion of property are governed by Civ. Code §§ 3336-3338. In addition, Code Civ. Proc. § 338(c) governs the time period in which an action for conversion must be brought, and Civ. Code §§ 1712 and 1713 set forth the requirement that a person return wrongfully acquired property and provide that the owner need not make any demand for the return of wrongfully acquired property in order to bring an action for conversion. Prob. Code § 9651 establishes immunity from both civil and criminal liability for a decedent's personal representative who takes possession of real or personal property in the good faith belief that it is part of decedent's estate. For discussion of other statutes relating to conversion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 150, Conversion (Matthew Bender).

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureRemediesDamagesGeneral OverviewGovernmentsLegislationStatutes of LimitationsTime LimitationsTortsIntentional TortsConversionDefensesTortsIntentional TortsConversionElementsTortsIntentional TortsConversionRemedies

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 51 CONVERSION
PART I. INTRODUCTION

5-51 California Points & Authorities § 51.03

§ 51.03 Alternate Remedies for Conversion of Personal Property

When a party brings an action for conversion of personal property, he or she is seeking to recover the reasonable value of the property converted [see Civ. Code § 3336; see also § 51.24]. When the converter still retains the property at the time of the action, the plaintiff in essence is forcing the converter to buy the property. Plaintiff may also bring an action for claim and delivery to recover the property itself [see Civ. Code § 3379; Code Civ. Proc. §§ 511.010-516.050; see also California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 119, Claim and Delivery (Matthew Bender)]. The plaintiff may also elect to waive the tort and sue on an implied contract, thereby, in effect, consenting to the conversion [see Hill v. Superior Court (1940) 16 Cal. 2d 527, 530, 106 P.2d 876 ; Bank of Am. Nat'l Trust & Sav. Ass'n v. Hill (1937) 9 Cal. 2d 495, 499, 500, 71 P.2d 258 ; see also California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 121, Common Counts (Matthew Bender)]. When the converted property is money belonging to the plaintiff that defendant has refused to return, plaintiff that may sue for money had and received [see Bank of Am. Nat'l Trust & Sav. Ass'n v. Hill (1937) 9 Cal. 2d 495, 499, 71 P.2d 258 ; see also California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 121, Common Counts (Matthew Bender)]. Suing in contract makes available the provisional remedy of attachment, which is not available in conversion [see Code Civ. Proc. § 483.010; Los Angeles Drug Co. v. Superior Court (1936) 8 Cal. 2d 71, 75, 63 P.2d 1124 ; see also California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 62, Attachment (Matthew Bender)]. However, punitive damages are not available when the action is on the contract [see Civ. Code § 3294; see also Ch. 177, Damages, § 177.40 et seq., in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender)].

When defendant's interference with plaintiff's personal property was not substantial enough to sustain an action for conversion, plaintiff may seek an action for trespass to personal property. Recovery in those cases is limited to actual damages suffered by reason of the impairment of the property or loss of its use [Zaslow v. Kroenert (1946) 29 Cal. 2d 541, 551, 176 P.2d 1 ; see § 51.29[3][a]].

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureRemediesDamagesGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsConversionDefensesTortsIntentional TortsConversionElementsTortsIntentional TortsConversionRemedies

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 51 CONVERSION
PART I. INTRODUCTION

5-51 California Points & Authorities § 51.04

§ 51.04 Related Discussion and Forms

[1] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion and forms relating to the measure of damages generally, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 177, Damages (Matthew Bender).

For discussion and forms relating to the time period in which to bring an action in tort generally, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 345, Limitation of Actions (Matthew Bender).

[2] Related Points and Authorities

For points and authorities for use in actions to recover possession of personal property, see Ch. 40, Claim and Delivery .

Related memoranda of points and authorities that may be used in supporting or opposing damages awarded may be found in Ch. 64, Damages: Tort .

Related memoranda of points and authorities that may be used in supporting or opposing contentions that an action was timely brought may be found in Ch. 143, Limitation of Actions .

For a discussion of the format requirements governing memoranda generally, including page limits, and discussion of how to use the forms in this chapter to draft a memorandum of points or authorities or a trial or appellate brief, and for a sample of a complete memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 51 CONVERSION
PART I. INTRODUCTION

5-51 California Points & Authorities §§ 51.05-51.19

[Reserved]

§§ 51.05[Reserved]

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 51 CONVERSION
PART II. FORMS

5-51 California Points & Authorities § 51.20

§ 51.20 Supporting Contention That Defendant Has Converted Plaintiff's Personal Property--General Form

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT'S ACT OF _____ [FAILING TO RETURN or WITHHOLDING or state other specific act of conversion] PERSONAL PROPERTY OF PLAINTIFF IS AN ACT OF WILLFUL INTERFERENCE WITH THAT PROPERTY, DONE WITHOUT LAWFUL JUSTIFICATION, BY WHICH PLAINTIFF, THE PERSON ENTITLED TO THE PROPERTY, IS DEPRIVED OF ITS USE AND POSSESSION, AND CONSTITUTES AN ACT OF CONVERSION.

A. Conversion Defined. Conversion is any act of willful interference with the personal property of another, or any act of dominion exerted over another's personal property, done without legal justification, depriving that person entitled to the property of its use and possession (see de Vries v. Brumback (1960) 53 Cal. 2d 643, 647, 2 Cal. Rptr. 764, 349 P.2d 532 ; Weiss v. Marcus (1975) 51 Cal. App. 3d 590, 599, 124 Cal. Rptr. 297).

B. Necessary Allegations. In order to state a cause of action for conversion, the plaintiff must allege first, his or her ownership or right to possession of tangible property at the time of the conversion; second, the defendant's conversion of the property; and third, damages (Franklin v. Municipal Court (1972) 26 Cal. App. 3d 884, 901, 103 Cal. Rptr. 354).

[Optional] C. General Allegation of Wrongful Conversion Sufficient. A general allegation that defendant converted property to his or her own use is sufficient to state a good cause of action in the absence of a demurrer for uncertainty (see Haigler v. Donnelly (1941) 18 Cal. 2d 674, 681, 117 P.2d 331 ; Lowe v. Ozmun (1902) 137 Cal. 257, 260, 70 P. 87 ; Franklin v. Municipal Court (1972) 26 Cal. App. 3d 884, 902, 103 Cal. Rptr. 354).

[Add additional points and authorities pertaining to particular allegations necessary to state a cause of action for conversion (see §§ 51.21 -51.24).]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of plaintiff's contention in an action for conversion that defendant has converted plaintiff'spersonal property by wrongfully depriving him or her of the use and possession of that property. Paragraph A sets out the general definition of conversion. Paragraph B sets forth the necessary allegations to state a cause of action for conversion. The points and authorities in the optional Paragraph C may be used to support the contention that a general allegation that the defendant has wrongfully converted the property to his or her own use is sufficient to state a cause of action for conversion.

The argument supported by this memorandum may be raised in response to an assertion that plaintiff has failed to adequately allege or prove a cause of action for conversion.

This form is not a complete form, but is designed as a framework to be used in combination with additional forms of memoranda of points and authorities pertaining to the elements of a cause of action for conversion (see §§ 51.21 -51.24) as well as with other points and authorities, as appropriate, that may be used in response to the raising of affirmative defenses [see §§ 51.42 -51.48].

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include discussion showing how the facts of the case demonstrate that the defendant converted the property belonging to the plaintiff by an act of willful interference with that property, that the act was done without legal justification, and that the act thereby deprived the plaintiff of his or her rightful use and possession of the property.

These points and authorities may be combined, when appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which the substantive issue arises; for example, this form may be used in opposition to a demurrer or a motion for summary judgment, when counsel wishes to respond to an assertion that plaintiff has not alleged or proved a cause of action for conversion of personal property.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Conversion Defined

Plaintiff in de Vries v. Brumback (1960) 53 Cal. 2d 643, 2 Cal. Rptr. 764, 349 P.2d 532 , filed an action for conversion of certain property taken in a robbery and not subsequently recovered. Plaintiff was an assignee of a jewelry firm that was robbed of money, precious stones, and jewelry, which had a value totalling approximately $112,000.00. Defendant neither participated in the robbery, nor had any part in its planning. However, he obtained the greater portion of the stolen property from a receiver of the stolen goods, who had conspired with others to rob the jewelry firm and to dispose of the property in a manner beneficial to the robbers and the receiver. Subsequently, the property obtained by defendant for disposition was recovered. However, approximately $21,947.00 worth of items remained unrecovered. The trial court gave judgment for plaintiff for the $21,947.00. The trial court also made findings of fact, including a finding that defendant had joined, ratified, and participated in a conspiracy to convert all of the property stolen in the robbery of the jewelry firm to their own use and benefit, and that the conspiracy had not terminated by the time the defendant had joined, ratified, and participated in the conspiracy. Defendant appealed, contending that he was improperly held liable for property over which he at no time exercised any dominion, and which was never in his possession. Defendant claimed that the conspiracy to rob the jewelry firm terminated when, after the robbery, the greater part of the stolen goods was delivered to the receiver, and a new conspiracy to convert the property of the jewelry firm took place. Consequently, defendant argued, his liability could not extend beyond the amount of goods he obtained from the receiver, and since all those goods were subsequently recovered, no damages could properly be assessed against him by reason of this second conversion.

The Supreme Court, in affirming the judgment of the trial court, rejected defendant's contention that he could not be held liable for the unrecovered goods. The basis of the damage claim, the Court said, was the alleged conversion of goods taken in the robbery of the jewelry firm. Citing prior California law, the Court defined conversion as an act of willful interference with a chattel, done without lawful justification, by which any person entitled thereto is deprived of its use and possession (53 Cal. 2d 643, 647) . The case, the Court continued, was tried on the theory of conspiracy and trial court expressly found that the general purpose of the conspirators was to convert all of the stolen property obtained in the robbery to their own use and benefit. As long as the person entitled to the use and possession of the property was deprived of the property, the Court stated, the tort of conversion continued. Similarly, the Court continued, a conspiracy to convert is a continuing concert of action lasting so long as the agreement to exercise dominion over another's property continues. Apparently, disposition of the stolen property was a primary feature of the conspiracy, and that had not been accomplished when defendant joined in the conspiracy and subsequently aided in the disposition of the stolen goods. Consequently, the Court concluded, defendant's active participation in the disposition of the property by taking the greater part of the stolen property into his possession and custody was an overt act clearly in furtherance of the general plan of the conspirators to exercise dominion over all the property as against the owner, and to convert it to their own use and benefit (53 Cal. 2d 643, 647) .

Weiss v. Marcus (1975) 51 Cal. App. 3d 590, 124 Cal. Rptr. 297 , involved an action to recover the reasonable value of legal services rendered. Among other things, plaintiff charged that defendants converted the sum of $6,750 to their ownuse, to plaintiff's damage, that the sum belonged to and was the property of plaintiff by virtue of his lien for attorney's fees that attached to the proceeds of the settlement in a case involving his former client, one of the defendants in the action. Plaintiff claimed that by oral agreement, he had been retained by defendant Oran to prosecute a claim for injuries and damages. By the terms of the agreement, defendant Oran agreed to pay plaintiff a certain percentage of the amounts recovered as fees for legal services rendered. Subsequently, by written agreement, defendant Oran granted plaintiff a lien on all amounts recovered as security for payment of the fees due plaintiff under the oral agreement. Plaintiff began processing the suit, but was subsequently discharged by Oran. Plaintiff claimed that up to the time of the discharge, he had performed legal services of the reasonable value of $6,750. Defendant Oran ultimately obtained a judgment of $35,000, and plaintiff claimed that he became entitled to his attorney's fee of $6,750, but defendant Oran and his lawyers refused to pay plaintiff that sum, or any part of it. The trial court sustained defendants' demurrer to plaintiff's first amended complaint without leave to amend and dismissed the action as to defendant attorneys. Plaintiff appealed the order of dismissal.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment of dismissal as to the count alleging conversion. The court described conversion as any act of dominion wrongfully exerted over another's personal property in denial of, or inconsistent with, the owner's rights in the property. Plaintiff, the court said, by alleging that $6,750 of the $35,000 paid to defendants belonged to him, had sufficiently stated a cause of action for conversion (51 Cal. App. 3d 590, 599) .

[b] Necessary Allegations

In Franklin v. Municipal Court (1972) 26 Cal. App. 3d 884, 103 Cal. Rptr. 354 , plaintiff brought an action for conversion or, in the alternative, claim and delivery. The item alleged to have been converted was a revolver that had been introduced into evidence at a preliminary hearing in a criminal action in the municipal court. Plaintiff was the defendant in that action and was charged with violating former Penal Code § 217 (assault with intent to commit murder; since repealed). After the preliminary hearing was held, the judge sitting at the hearing dismissed the action; however, he issued an order confiscating the revolver pursuant to former Penal Code § 1418 (now see Penal Code § 1417 et seq.) Plaintiff filed an application for return of the weapon under former Penal Code § 1418, but the judge refused to order its return. Plaintiff then filed an action against the court and the judge in both his official and individual capacities. In addition to the allegation of conversion, plaintiff also sought a petition for a writ of mandate compelling the court to return the revolver to him. In the conversion and claim and delivery action, plaintiff alleged on information and belief that the revolver was in the possession of the judge in his individual capacity since records of the municipal court indicated that the judge had issued an order releasing the weapon to himself in his individual capacity. The weapon, plaintiff alleged, belonged to him at the time of his arrest, and he was still the lawful owner and entitled to its possession. Plaintiff also alleged that the weapon had a value of $100. He also sought special damages for loss of work as a security guard resulting from his being deprived of the use of his revolver. Defendants answered, alleging that the weapon was no longer in the jurisdiction of the municipal court and that it was not in the possession of the judge. The petition for the writ of mandamus was heard separately and was denied. Subsequently, defendants' motion for summary judgment as to the conversion and claim and delivery action was granted. Plaintiff appealed from both judgments, and the cases were consolidated on appeal.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment denying plaintiff's petition for a writ of mandate, but reversed the judgment as to the judge in his individual capacity in the action for conversion. In order to state a cause of action for conversion, the court stated, the plaintiff must allege first, his or her ownership or right to possession of tangible property at the time of the conversion; second, the defendant's conversion of the property; and third, damages (26 Cal. App. 3d 884, 901) . The court found that in this case, plaintiff had alleged that he was the lawful owner and entitled to possession of the subject revolver, and that such allegation was sufficient to show ownership and right to possession (26 Cal. App. 3d 884, 902) . Plaintiff had also, the court added, alleged facts sufficient to show a conversion on the part of the judge by stating on information and belief that the judge was in possession of the revolver in his individual capacity, that he demanded return of the revolver, that the judge refused to deliver it to plaintiff, and that the judge retained the revolver without plaintiff's consent (26 Cal. App. 3d 884, 902) . Finally, the court concluded, plaintiff also made a sufficient allegation of damages by alleging that the revolver was valued at $100 and by alleging special damages resulting from his loss of possession of the revolver. Consequently, the court held, plaintiff had sufficiently alleged a cause of action for conversion, and it was error for the trial court to have dismissed that action as to the judge in his individual capacity (26 Cal. App. 3d 884, 902) .

The court of appeal observed that pursuant to former Penal Code §§ 1418 and 1419, a judge is not entitled to keep or retain an exhibit or to exercise any dominion over it other than in his or her official capacity as a judge and representative of the court. In his or her official capacity, a judge is obligated to return the exhibit to the person who is entitled to it unless it is unlawful property as described in former Penal Code § 1419, in which case he or she may order it destroyed or otherwise disposed of [see now Penal Code § 1417 et seq.; see also Penal Code § 12028 (disposition of unlawfully concealed or possessed weapons)].

[c] General Allegation of Wrongful Conversion Sufficient

Haigler v. Donnelly (1941) 18 Cal. 2d 674, 117 P.2d 331 , arose out of an action for money had and received and for conversion of money collect ed. Plaintiffs, owners of a furnished apartment house, listed the house and furniture with defendant, a licensed real estate broker. Under the listing agreement, plaintiffs wanted net payments of $250 per month for the house lease, and $3,000 in cash for sale of the furniture. Subsequently, plaintiffs gave defendant another listing authorizing sale of the apartment house and furniture for $27,000, with 5 percent commission to defendant. Defendant secured a lessee for the apartment at the net payment of $250 per month. The lessee also agreed to buy the furniture, but at $2,500. Plaintiffs accepted, and a contract was executed according to the agreed terms. The lessee paid defendant $3,500, $2,500 representing the price of the furniture, and $1,000 representing payment on account of the lease. Defendant retained $1,150 of the sum as commission, and tendered to plaintiffs the balance. Plaintiffs demanded the full amount, and upon refusal, filed complaints for money had and received and for conversion. In the action for conversion, plaintiffs incorporated the allegation of the demand contained in the action for money had and received, and further alleged that defendant, as agent for plaintiffs, maliciously and fraudulently refused to account to plaintiffs for money belonging to them that defendant had collected on their account. Plaintiffs asked for damages in the amount collected, minus a small amount of prorated rents, and for exemplary damages in the amount of $3,000. At the trial, plaintiffs contended that under the original listing, defendant was entitled to receive for her services only those amounts she secured for the rent and sale in excess of the net prices specified in the listing. Defendant contended that the original listing was canceled at the time of the second listing. Since the lease and sale to the lessee were not within the terms of the second listing, defendant based her alleged right to a commission on the theory of an implied contract to pay the reasonable value of her services.The trial court gave judgment to plaintiffs, and defendant appealed, contending that the conversion of the money was not sufficiently alleged.

The Supreme Court, in affirming the judgment of the trial court, rejected defendant's contention concerning the insufficiency of the allegation of conversion. Citing prior California law, the Court stated that a complaint charging defendant with exercising dominion over property inconsistent with the ownership of plaintiff sets forth a good cause of action for conversion when no special demurrer for uncertainty is interposed (18 Cal. 2d 674, 681) .

Plaintiff in Lowe v. Ozmun (1902) 137 Cal. 257, 70 P. 87 , brought an action for conversion of certain personal property consisting of bonds and coupons given as security to defendant's testator for an indebtedness owed to testator by plaintiff. Plaintiff alleged that defendant's testator unlawfully converted and disposed of the described property to his own use, that the property belonged to plaintiff on the day it was given to defendant's testator as security, and that, on the indebtedness being fully paid and discharged, the property was in the possession of the testator who knew that the bonds and coupons were the property of plaintiff and should be returned to him. Defendant demurred to the complaint on the ground that the action was not brought within the two-year limitation period required for actions on a contract, obligation, or liability, not founded upon an instrument in writing [see § 51.33]. The trial court sustained the demurrer, and plaintiff appealed. Defendant contended in response that since its demurrer was general, the judgment should be affirmed if, for any reason, the complaint does not contain a sufficient statement of facts to constitute a cause of action, and that in this case, the allegation of conversion was not sufficient since there was not a statement of the particular facts, or acts and methods, by which the conversion was accomplished.

The Supreme Court reversed the judgment of the trial court. The Court held that the allegation that the defendant's testator unlawfully converted and disposed of the property described in the complaint to his own use was sufficient. An allegation that a defendant converted and disposed of the property to his own use is sufficient, in the absence of a special demurrer, to allege the fact of conversion and to sustain a judgment of conversion (137 Cal. 257, 260) .

The facts and procedural background of Franklin v. Municipal Court (1972) 26 Cal. App. 3d 884, 103 Cal. Rptr. 354 , are discussed in § 51.20[3][b]. The court, in discussing the allegations necessary to state a cause of action for conversion, cited prior California law illustrating the types of general allegations held sufficient to allege conversion. These cases, the court said, have found conversion to have been sufficiently alleged, in the absence of a special demurrer for uncertainty, when the complaint stated that the defendant converted the property to his own use; when the complaint stated that plaintiff demanded return of the property and that the defendant refused to return the property in question, even though plaintiff may have added the additional conclusionary statement that the defendant acted unlawfully; and when a complaint charged a defendant with exercising dominion over property inconsistent with the ownership of plaintiff (26 Cal. App. 3d 884, 902) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Necessary Allegations

The facts and procedural background of Hartford Fin. Corp. v. Burns (1979) 96 Cal. App. 3d 591, 158 Cal. Rptr. 169 , are discussed in § 51.22[3][g]. The court of appeal stated that the elements of a cause of action for conversion of personal property are: (1) plaintiff's ownership or right to possession of the property at the time of the conversion; (2) defendant's conversion by a wrongful act ordisposition of plaintiff's property rights; and (3) damages (96 Cal. App. 3d 591, 598) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 51 CONVERSION
PART II. FORMS

5-51 California Points & Authorities § 51.21

§ 51.21 Supporting Contention That Defendant Has Converted Plaintiff's Personal Property--Personal Property, Tangible or Intangible, Can Be Subject to Conversion

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and should be combined with the general form of memorandum of points and authorities pertaining to conversion of plaintiff's personal property (see § 51.20).]

PROPERTY CONVERTED BY DEFENDANT WAS THE PERSONAL PROPERTY OF PLAINTIFF CONSISTING OF_____ [A CERTAIN SUM OF MONEY IN THE AMOUNT OF $_____ or describe other specific property converted] AND THEREFORE WAS PROPERTY SUBJECT TO CONVERSION.

A. Personal Property, Tangible or Intangible, Can Be Subject to Conversion. Every species of personal property, both tangible and intangible and capable of being identified, can be subject to conversion (Payne v. Elliot (1880) 54 Cal. 339, 340-342) .

[Optional] B. Specific Money as Property Subject to Conversion. A specific sum of money that is capable of being identified is personal property and subject to conversion (Haigler v. Donnelly (1941) 18 Cal. 2d 674, 681, 117 P.2d 331 ; Weiss v. Marcus (1975) 51 Cal. App. 3d 590, 599, 124 Cal. Rptr. 297).

[Optional] C. Equitable Interest in Real Property Subject to Conversion. A person who deprives an equitable owner of his or her right to any real property converts the equitable title to real property to personal property in the form of a right to a money judgment for damages, and if the person denies or repudiates his or her obligation to pay those damages, he or she, in effect, converts the personal property to his or her own use (Gherman v. Colburn (1977) 72 Cal. App. 3d 544, 568-569, 140 Cal. Rptr. 330 ; see also Murphy v. Wilson (1957) 153 Cal. App. 2d 132, 135-136, 314 P.2d 507).

[Optional] D. Customer List as Property Subject to Conversion. Property consisting of a cabinet of index cards containing names and valuable information regarding prospective and actual customers may be personal property subject to conversion (see Palm Springs-La Quinta Dev. Co. v. Kieberk Corp. (1941) 46 Cal. App. 2d 234, 240, 115 P.2d 548).

[Optional] E. Shares of Stocks and Bonds as Property Subject to Conversion. Shares of stock and bonds are personal property subject to conversion (Payne v. Elliot (1880) 54 Cal. 339, 341-342 ; Nichols v. Leach (1931) 114 Cal. App. 545, 550, 300 P. 103).

[Optional] F. Fixtures as Property Subject to Conversion. Fixtures, such as emblements, industrial growing crops, and things attached to or forming part of the land, which are agreed to be severed before a sale or under the contract of sale, are to be treated as goods and to be governed by the provisions of the Civil Code regulating the sales of goods; thus, wrongful interference with this type of property will give rise to an action for conversion (see Civ. Code §§ 658, 660; Carey v. Glenco Citrus Prods. (1965) 235 Cal. App. 2d 572, 578-580, 45 Cal. Rptr. 365 ; Bedell v. Mashburn (1948) 87 Cal. App. 2d 417, 422-423, 197 P.2d 98).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of plaintiff's contention in an action for conversion that the defendant has converted plaintiff's personal property by wrongfully depriving him or her of the use and possession of that property. This form sets forth the point that personal property, tangible or intangible, that is capable of being identified, can be subject to conversion. The optional paragraphs may be included as appropriate whenever the opposing party asserts that the property in question as illustrated by that paragraph is not personal property subject to conversion.

The argument supported by this memorandum may be raised in response to an assertion that the property alleged to have been converted was not personal property, or was intangible property not capable of being identified.

This form should be combined with the general form of memorandum of points and authorities in § 51.20, and, if appropriate, with other forms of memoranda supporting the contention that defendant converted plaintiff's personal property [see, e.g., §§ 51.22 -51.24].

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include discussion showing that the property of plaintiff alleged to have been converted was personal property, either tangible or intangible, that was capable of being identified and therefore subject to conversion. For example, when the property in question could be considered either real or personal property, counsel should discuss the operative facts that demonstrate that the property is personal, as in a contract of conveyance of real property when the parties have agreed that certain attached fixtures are to retain their character as personal property and are removable by the seller [see Carey v. Glenco Citrus Prod. (1965) 235 Cal. App. 2d 572, 578-580, 45 Cal. Rptr. 365 ; see also § 51.20[3][f]].

These points and authorities may be combined, when appropriate, with pointsand authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which the substantive issue arises; for example, this form may be used in opposition to a demurrer or a motion for summary judgment, when counsel wishes to respond to an assertion that the property alleged to have been converted was not personal property capable of being identified, and therefore was not subject to conversion. The points and authorities set forth in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

For discussion of property considered to be personal property subject to conversion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 150, Conversion (Matthew Bender).

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in §§ 51.26 and 51.27 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Personal Property, Tangible or Intangible, Can Be Subject to Conversion

Plaintiff in Payne v. Elliot (1880) 54 Cal. 339 , brought an action of trover for an alleged conversion of 100 shares of stock in a mining company. The trial court overruled defendants' demurrer, and, after a trial held in the absence of defendants and their attorneys, gave judgment to plaintiff. Defendants appealed, contending that the trial court erred in overruling their demurrer to the complaint on the ground that there was no allegation that the plaintiff owned, or that the defendants converted, any certificates of shares of stock.

The Supreme Court, in affirming the judgment of the trial court that defendants had converted the shares of stock of plaintiff, rejected defendants' contention that conversion could only lie in the conversion of certificates of stock and not in the shares themselves. The Court reviewed the common law history of trover, finding that it was the proper remedy for a conversion of personal property that was tangible, capable of being identified, and taken into actual possession. The conversion of the property was the gist of the action, and conversion did not take place unless the defendant actually possessed the property by some means, whether by finding it or otherwise. Shares of stock, for example, and other similar things did not belong to that class of property known as chattels because they were considered to be incorporeal, intangible things existing in idea and incapable of being subjected to actual possession. Nor did these incorporeal things denote possession since they had no other evidence of an existence than, as in the case of shares of stock, the certificate that was issued to the person who claimed a right to what the certificate represented. It was a right to a thing in action, but not possession, and the certificates themselves were considered evidence of property, but not property itself. Consequently, under common law, personal rights were not reducible into possession, but were recoverable by law, and trover was not a proper remedy for their conversion (54 Cal. 339, 340-341) . The Court, however, citing authorities from various jurisdictions, stated that trover no longer existed as it did at common law, and that it had developed into a remedy for the conversion of every species of personal property, including certificates of stock (54 Cal. 339, 341) . At the same time, the Court continued, the words "things in action" had also undergone a development from their original meaning and now represented things that could be the subject of contract, sale, gift, mortgage, bailment, and pledge, and under the provision of California law, were personal property subject to taxation, attachment, execution, levy, and sale (54 Cal. 339, 341-342) .

[b] Specific Money as Property Subject to Conversion

The facts and procedural background of Haigler v. Donnelly (1941) 18 Cal. 2d 674, 117 P.2d 331 , are discussed in § 51.20[3][c]. The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment of the trial court in finding that defendant real estate broker had converted a portion of monies collected by her for the benefit of plaintiffs. Defendant, as an agent or broker of plaintiffs, had negotiated a lease of an apartment house and had received a stipulated sum of money belonging to plaintiffs, and then refused to account for it after a demand by plaintiffs. Defendant had alleged that she was entitled to a commission for services rendered. The Court, citing California and other authorities, stated that a broker or agent is ordinarily liable for converting the funds of his or her principal when he or she refused to account for them upon proper demand. When an agent is required to turn over to his or her principal a definite sum received by him or her on the principal's account, the remedy of conversion, the Court held, was proper. While money cannot be the subject of an action for conversion unless a specific sum capable of identification is involved, it is not necessary, the Court noted, that each coin or bill be earmarked (18 Cal. 2d 674, 681) .

The facts and procedural background of Weiss v. Marcus (1975) 51 Cal. App. 3d 590, 124 Cal. Rptr. 297 , are discussed in § 51.20[3][a]. The court of appeal found that the trial court erred in sustaining defendants' demurrer to a count of conversion of $6,750 owed to plaintiff by one of the defendants for legal services rendered. The court held that an allegation that a certain specific sum belonged to plaintiff and that defendants converted that sum to their own use sufficiently stated a cause of action for conversion. The court stated that while money cannot be the subject of an action unless a specific sum capable of identification is involved, it is not necessary that each coin or bill be earmarked (51 Cal. App. 3d 590, 599) .

[c] Equitable Interest in Real Property Subject to Conversion

Gherman v. Colburn (1977) 72 Cal. App. 3d 544, 140 Cal. Rptr. 330 , arose out of an action for damages for tortious exclusion of a joint venturer in thatdefendants wrongfully repudiated or breached the joint venture agreement and converted all of the joint venture assets to themselves. Plaintiffs alleged that they and defendants had entered into an oral agreement of joint venture to acquire and sell certain real property and to divide the proceeds of the sale according to an agreed formula. The joint venture purchased the land for approximately $4 million, and one of defendant Colburn's wholly owned subsidiary corporations took title. Thereafter, plaintiffs, as part of the agreement, formulated plans for marketing the properties and lined up several prospective buyers, including one which would have produced a profit of $5 million to the joint venture. Defendants at this time denied the existence of a joint venture and denied that plaintiffs had any interest in the land. Plaintiffs brought this action for conversion. The jury at trial rendered a verdict in favor of plaintiffs and defendants appealed, contending that there can be no conversion of real property and that the term conversion applies only to personal property.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment of the trial court. Addressing itself to the issue of whether or not real property could be the subject of conversion, the court stated that normally, at law, a person could only convert personal property and could not be guilty of converting real property. However, the court pointed out, this rule was not true in equity when the person guilty of conversion was the holder of legal title to real property, and his or her victim had at most only an equitable title or right to that property. In this case, the court said, defendants had legal title to the property purchased. The court agreed with plaintiffs' contention and the jury's implied findings that defendant Colburn's subsidiary corporation held title to the land as nominee for the joint venture and therefore in trust for the use and benefit of the joint venture, and when defendants repudiated the joint venture and denied that plaintiffs had any equitable right or title in the land and claimed the entire parcel of land for themselves, they became obligated to pay plaintiffs damages in the form of money. The actions of defendants, stated the court, constituted a conversion in equity. Citing Black's Law Dictionary, the court defined a conversion in equity as the exchange of property from real to personal or from personal to real, which takes place under some circumstances in the consideration of the law, for example, to give effect to directions in a will or settlement or to stipulations in a contract, although no such change has actually taken place, and by which exchange the property dealt with becomes invested with the properties and attributes of that into which it is supposed to have been converted. Consequently, the court concluded, when defendants repudiated the existence of the joint venture, denied that plaintiffs had any equitable right or title to the property in question, and claimed the entire parcel for defendants' own exclusive benefit, they converted plaintiffs' equitable title in real property to personal property in the form of a right to a money judgment for damages; and when defendants denied and repudiated their obligation to pay those damages, they in effect converted plaintiffs' personal property to their own use and benefit. Since plaintiffs elected to seek a money judgment, the court added, a conversion within the concept of equity occurred (72 Cal. App. 3d 544, 568-569) .

The court of appeal observed that plaintiffs might also have sued to impress a trust, either express, constructive, or resulting, on the real property in question (72 Cal. App. 3d 544, 568, 569 ns. 15, 16).

Murphy v. Wilson (1957) 153 Cal. App. 2d 132, 314 P.2d 507 , involved an action for declaratory relief and to adjudge certain conveyances as mortgages. Plaintiff had contracted with the federal government to construct a diversion dam in New Mexico; however, he did not have enough capital to carry out his contract. Plaintiff subsequently arranged for a loan of $50,000 from defendant. As security for the loan, plaintiff gave a bill of sale and chattel mortgage of his vehicles and equipment in use on the dam and also conveyed a deed to his California home to defendant. These conveyances were placed in escrow. If plaintiff paid $75,000 to defendant by a certain date, the conveyances would be returned; if not, they would go to defendant. Plaintiff was unable to continue with the construction work and defendant took possession of all the property to which title had been put in escrow. Eventually, defendant sold all of the property. At trial, the presiding judge found that defendant had charged plaintiff a usurious rate of interest in excess of that permitted under the laws of New Mexico. The trial court further found that defendant had not foreclosed on plaintiff's property under the terms of the chattel mortgage, and that defendant had sold outright the equipment and plaintiff's home. The court awarded plaintiff $2,238, the amount of the rentals on equipment rented out before their sale. Plaintiff appealed on ground of inadequate damages.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment, holding that the trial court had erred in not awarding plaintiff the fair market value of all of the property converted as of the date defendant took the property into his possession, together with interest. The court reformulated the amount of damages to be awarded and included in the formulation plaintiff's equity of $15,000 in his California home (153 Cal. App. 2d 132, 135-136) .

NOTE:

The court of appeal in Murphy did not explicitly discuss whether conversion could be committed with respect to real property. It is unclear whether the court considered it was plaintiff's home that was converted, or his equity in the home. The court of appeal in Munger v. Moore (1970) 11 Cal. App. 3d 1, 7, 89 Cal. Rptr. 323 [see § 51.26[4][a]], criticized the holding in Murphy to the extent that the case seems to imply that there may be a conversion of real property. The court said that the Murphy decision was articulating a rule with respect to real property that has been applied in other jurisdictions. This rule, the court said, citing authorities from various jurisdictions, is that a trustee or mortgagee may be liable to the trustor or mortgagor for damages sustained when there has been an illegal, fraudulent, or willfully oppressive sale of property under a power of sale contained in a mortgage or deed of trust. This rule of liability, the court went on to say, is alsoapplicable in California under the basic principle of tort liability declared in the Civil Code that every person is bound by law not to injure the person or property of another or infringe on any of his or her rights [Civ. Code § 1708] .

[d] Customer List as Property Subject to Conversion

Palm Springs-La Quinta Dev. Co. v. Kieberk Corp. (1941) 46 Cal. App. 2d 234, 115 P.2d 548 , involved two consolidated cases. Kieberk Corp., both as cross complainant and plaintiff, sought damages for conversion of some 27,000 lead cards containing lists of customers and other trade information used for procuring sales of real property. Plaintiff and defendant Palm Springs Co. entered into an agreement that the index cards and the cabinets in which they were contained could be used by Palm Springs for the limited purpose expressed in the contract. Judgment was rendered in favor of Kieberk Corp. and Palm Springs appealed, contending that damages would not lie for the appropriation, loss or conversion of a list of customers, together with information that may constitute such individuals as valuable prospects for sales of real property.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment of the trial court. Addressing itself to the issue of whether or not a customer list together with its attendant information was property subject to conversion, the court concluded that it was. In this case, the court said, appellants were charged with damages for destroying and appropriating tangible personal property consisting of a cabinet of lead cards containing the names and valuable information regarding prospective and actual purchasers of real property, contrary to the express terms of a written contract. Appellant's reliance on Olschewski v. Hudson (1927) 87 Cal. App. 282, 288, 262 P. 43 [see § 51.27[3][a]], the court said, was not apt. In that case, the defendant was not charged with converting an index list of customers. Rather, the court continued, he was charged with selling the good will of a business in a specific district and the court in that case merely held that to be an intangible property right not subject to conversion (46 Cal. App. 2d 234, 240) .

[e] Shares of Stocks and Bonds as Property Subject to Conversion

The facts and procedural background of Payne v. Elliot (1880) 54 Cal. 339 , are discussed in § 51.21[3][a].

The Supreme Court said that shares of stock under common law were not personal property, but were a right consisting of the privilege of voting in the concerns of the corporation, and of participating in the profits of the corporation. It subsisted only in law or contract. This right, although represented by a certificate, was not reducible to possession, since the certificate was merely evidence of property and not property itself. Under the common law, trover was not a proper remedy for the conversion of things that were considered to be mere personal rights. However, the Court stated, citing authorities from various jurisdictions, trover no longer existed as it did in common law and had developed into a remedy for the conversion of every species of personal property, including certificates of stock. At the same time that trover was being expanded, the Court continued, the words "things in action," which under the common law included rights under a contract or at law, had also developed away from their original meaning, and that they now represented things that were the subject of contract, sale, gift, mortgage, bailment, and pledge. Under the provisions of California law, the Court added, these things were personal property subject to taxation, attachment, execution, levy, and sale (54 Cal. 339, 340-342) . Consequently, the Court held, it was the shares of stock themselves that constituted the property that belonged to the shareholder and that were converted. Otherwise, the Court stated, the property would be in the certificate, which was only some evidence of property. The certificate, the Court said, had no intrinsic value disconnected from the stock it represented, and its conversion did not constitute the entire wrong. The court concluded that the real act done was the conversion of the shares, and therefore the trial court did not err in overruling defendant's demurrer (54 Cal. 339, 342) .

Plaintiffs in Nichols v. Leach (1931) 114 Cal. App. 545, 300 P. 103 , brought an action for conversion of stocks and bonds given as collateral security for a promissory note. Plaintiffs alleged that they were owners of the note and of certain stocks and bonds, and that these instruments were deposited with defendants pursuant to an agreement that these items were to be used to purchase certain bank stock in which plaintiffs wanted to gain controlling interest. The complaint further alleged that these instruments were to be returned to plaintiffs at a certain date, but that defendants failed to deliver these items, having in the meantime sold the stocks and bonds, appropriated the proceeds of the sale to their own use, and retained the note. The trial court rendered judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appealed, contending that the transaction between the parties was a joint venture and that plaintiffs failed to allege or prove the elements necessary to establish an involuntary trust of the property.

The court of appeal, in affirming the judgment of the trial court, rejected defendant's contentions that the action was one for involuntary trust and that plaintiffs therefore had failed to allege or prove the necessary elements. The court conceded that plaintiffs had made certain allegations to the effect that the proceeds of the sale of the stocks and bonds constituted a trust in the hands of defendants; however, the court found those allegations to be surplusage and harmless. Plaintiffs' complaint, the court said, contained adequate allegations constituting a cause of action sounding in trover. Moreover, the court added, the case was tried on that theory (114 Cal. App. 545, 549) . Shares of stocks and bonds, the court held, constitute tangible property and are subject to an action of conversion when they are deposited as collateral security for payment of a note and are unlawfully appropriated (114 Cal. App. 545, 550) .

[f] Fixtures as Property Subject to Conversion

In Carey v. Glenco Citrus Prods. (1965) 235 Cal. App. 2d 572, 45 Cal. Rptr. 365 , defendant Glenco filed a cross action against plaintiffs for conversion of certain industrial crops that, by the terms of the contract of purchase, were severable. Plaintiff Carey had leased a certain portion of its land to Construction Company, who had subsequently assigned its interest in the lease to Capitol Estates. Construction Company thereafter sold the orange crop on the premises to Glenco. Both the assignment of the lease and the sale of the crop were executed by the same person. The agreement also included crops from an adjoining parcel of land owned by plaintiff Powell, and by the terms of the agreement, Glenco was to pay for all care of the grove, including irrigation and pest control, from the date of the sale until the crop was harvested, and that permission was given to Glenco to maintain the crop on the land. Subsequently,

Capitol Estates and Construction Company defaulted on their agreement to pay county taxes due, and they assigned their interests in the property to World Properties. Plaintiff Carey terminated the lease after failure of the lessees to pay the county taxes and rental payments due. Plaintiff Carey also notified defendant Glenco not to pick up the remaining orange crop and harvested the balance of the crop himself. Plaintiff Carey then instituted this action to quiet title in the property leased and named as defendants Construction Company, Capitol Estates, World Properties, and Glenco Citrus Products. Defendant Glenco answered and filed the cross action; the other defendants defaulted and judgment was entered against them. On the cross action, the trial court entered judgment for defendant Glenco. Plaintiff appealed, contending that defendant Glenco had not obtained title to the orange crop because it had obtained its agreement for the sale of the crop from Construction Company rather than from Capitol Estates, which was the assignee of the lease agreement. Plaintiff also contended that even if the interest of the lessee in the orange crop had been transferred to Glenco, it was not the owner of the crop remaining on the trees at the time of the alleged conversion because defendant's right thereto terminated upon termination of the leases.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment against plaintiffs regarding the finding that they were liable for conversion of defendant's interest in the orange crop. The court held that Construction Company and Capitol Estates were one and the same legal entity (235 Cal. App. 2d 572, 575) , that title to the orange crop passed to defendant Glenco at the time of the execution of the agreement of sale, and that termination of the leases did not affect Glenco's interest in the unharvested fruit growing on the leased premises. For some purposes, growing crops are regarded as part of the realty upon which they are growing, the court said. In California, statutory law provides that industrial growing crops that are agreed to be severed under the contract of sale shall be treated as goods to be treated by the provisions of Civ. Code §§ 658, 660, and 1796, regulating the sale of goods. In reviewing prior California law, the court stated that growing crops that are agreed to be severed under a contract of sale cease to be a part of the realty and become personalty. There occurs, the court said, a constructive severance of the crop from the realty (235 Cal. App. 2d 572, 578-579) . The refusal of plaintiffs to permit defendant Glenco to harvest the crop that was its personal property constituted a conversion (235 Cal. App. 2d 572, 580) .

Bedell v. Mashburn (1948) 87 Cal. App. 2d 417, 197 P.2d 98 , arose out of an action for conversion of various items of personal property, including a water heater that was attached to the real property. Plaintiffs alleged that they delivered certain personal property to defendants pursuant to an agreement by which defendants purchased the real property, and were to purchase the personal property in question at a reasonable price to be determined by plaintiffs, but that defendants refused to pay the price asked. Evidence produced at trial indicated that the parties were unable to agree on a price for the property and in the meantime defendants made use of some of the property for their own benefit, including household furniture, a truck, various animals, and a water heater. By the terms of the conveyance of the real property to defendants, the water heater was to retain its character as personal property and become removable by plaintiffs. The trial court found for plaintiffs, awarding damages for the market value or rental value of the various items used, and returned possession of the truck and household furniture to plaintiffs. Defendants retained the water heater. Defendants appealed, contending that the damages awarded in relation to the water heater were excessive, apparently on the ground that either the value of the property was less than the damages awarded, a fact conceded by plaintiff, or that the water heater was a fixture and therefore ran with the land and was not personal property and consequently, not subject to conversion.

The court of appeal in affirming the judgment of the trial court, modified the amount of damages awarded for the conversion of the water heater. The court apparently agreed with the trial court's finding that the water heater was personal property. In regard to a conveyance of real property between parties, the court stated, an agreement that an attached article shall retain its character as personal property and become removable by the owner of the realty will be binding upon the parties. In this case, the court concluded that the trial court had found that the parties agreed that the water heater should retain its character as personal property and therefore was subject to conversion (87 Cal. App. 2d 417, 422-423) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Equitable Interest in Real Property Subject to Conversion

Katz v. Enos (1945) 68 Cal. App. 2d 266, 156 P.2d 461 , involved an action by a brother against the estate of his deceased sister to recover for the wrongful conversion of 42 acres of land deeded to her by the brother in order to raise money to pay for his medical expenses. The court of appeal affirmed the findings of thetrial court that the deed was for a limited purpose, that it established a trust for the benefit of the brother, and that the sister failed to carry out the trust but sold the property and appropriated the proceeds of the sale to her own use (68 Cal. App. 2d 266, 273-274) .

The court did not discuss whether conversion could be committed with respect to real property. Although the court may have implied this since the action was for wrongful conversion of land [see Munger v. Moore (1970) 11 Cal. App. 3d 1, 7, 89 Cal. Rptr. 323] , it seems more likely that the court considered that the property converted was the proceeds of the sale of the land. As the court noted, the purpose of the brother in deeding the land to the sister was to raise money to pay his medical expenses, but she instead appropriated the money raised to her own use. The court did not say that the actual sale of the property constituted conversion (68 Cal. App. 2d 266, 274) .

[b] Shares of Stocks and Bonds as Property Subject to Conversion

In Virtanen v. O'Connell (2006) 140 Cal. App. 4th 688, 44 Cal. Rptr. 3d 702 , an attorney acted as an escrow holder in a stock transaction in which his client was the purchaser. The seller deposited his stock certificates and related documents with the attorney. Under instructions accompanying the stock, the attorney was to hold the materials until the attorney received fully executed closing documents, the seller had confirmed that he had received the first payment, and the stock and assignment documents could be delivered to another escrow agent according to the terms of a secured promissory note regarding payment over time of the balance due. Less than a week after the delivery, the seller notified the attorney and the buyers that he was rescinding the sale offer and demanded return of his stock. Instead of returning the stock certificates, and despite the fact that none on the prerequisites for delivery of the stock to the closing agent had been met, the attorney ignored the seller's demands and finished the closing anyway. The seller sued the attorney and his law firm for conversion, breach of fiduciary duty, and negligence. The jury found for the seller and the court of appeal upheld the verdict. The court held that the attorney, acting as an escrow agent, was liable for conversion of the stock certificates. The attorney had exercised dominion over and disposed of the property in a way that was not in accordance with the escrow instructions, and contradicted the seller's notice of rescission and demand for return of the property (140 Cal. App. 4th 688, 706-708) .

[c] Fixtures as Property Subject to Conversion

In Story v. Christin (1939) 14 Cal. 2d 592, 95 P.2d 925 , plaintiff leased certain land to grow walnut and orange trees and to purchase the land on installment payments. Plaintiff failed to pay the required interest and taxes pursuant to agreement, and defendant canceled the contract of sale, repossessed the land, and refused to allow plaintiff to remove the nursery trees that plaintiff claimed were part of his stock in trade. The Supreme Court reversed the trial court's judgment in favor of defendant, holding that the nursery stock, even though they were attached to the land by their roots, were not an annual crop that was a profit of the land; rather, the Court stated they were, under the circumstances of the case, part of plaintiff's stock in trade and therefore classified as personal property (14 Cal. 2d 592, 595-596) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 51 CONVERSION
PART II. FORMS

5-51 California Points & Authorities § 51.22

§ 51.22 Supporting Contention That Defendant Has Converted Plaintiff's Personal Property--Plaintiff Owned or Had Right to Immediate Possession of Property Converted

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and should be combined with the general form of memorandum of points and authorities pertaining to conversion of plaintiff's personal property (see § 51.20).]

PLAINTIFF _____ [IS OWNER or HAS RIGHT TO IMMEDIATE POSSESSION or state other applicable property interest] OF THE PROPERTY CONVERTED AND THEREFORE HAS SUFFICIENT INTEREST IN THE PROPERTY TO MAINTAIN AN ACTION FOR CONVERSION.

A. Plaintiff Owned or Had Right to Immediate Possession of Property Converted. In order to state a cause of action for conversion, the plaintiff must allege his or her ownership or right to possession of the property in question at the time of the alleged conversion (Franklin v. Municipal Court (1972) 26 Cal. App. 3d 884, 902, 103 Cal. Rptr. 354).

[Optional] B. Actual Possession of Property, Rather Than Ownership, Sufficient Interest. It is not necessary for a plaintiff in an action against a wrongdoer for conversion to be the legal owner of the property; it is sufficient if he or she had actual possession at the time of the alleged act of conversion (Igauye v. Howard (1952) 114 Cal. App. 2d 122, 127, 249 P.2d 558 ; Fletcher Aviation Corp. v. Landis Mfg. Co. (1950) 95 Cal. App. 2d 905, 908, 214 P.2d 400).

[Optional] C. Plaintiff With Right to Immediate Possession Need Not Be in Actual Possession at Time of Conversion. A plaintiff who has the right to immediate possession of the property at the time of the alleged conversion need not be in actual possession of the property at the time to maintain an action for conversion (see Franklin v. Municipal Court (1972) 26 Cal. App. 3d 884, 901-902, 103 Cal. Rptr. 354).

[Optional] D. Owner of Automobile on Which Repairs Were Made Without Prior Written Estimate. An automotive repairer who repairs a vehicle without first giving the owner the written estimate required by Bus. & Prof.

Code§ 9884.9 is not entitled to any compensation for that work, has no lien on the vehicle and has no right to retain or retake possession of the vehicle. The repairer's retention of possession or repossession of the vehicle in that situation constitutes conversion (Bus. & Prof. Code § 9884.9; Zhadan v. Downtown L.A. Motor Distribs. Inc. (1979) 100 Cal. App. 3d 821, 831-833, 161 Cal. Rptr. 225 ; see Donaldson v. Doe (1987) 194 Cal. App. 3d 817, 820-821, 239 Cal. Rptr. 801 ; Bennett v. Hayes (1975) 53 Cal. App. 3d 700, 703-704, 125 Cal. Rptr. 825).

[Optional] E. Purchaser Under Automobile Installment Sale Contract Who Is Denied Right to Reinstate Contract. The purchaser of a vehicle under an installment sale contract who has been denied the right granted by Civ. Code § 2983.3 to reinstate that contract and to redeem the repossessed vehicle has the right to possession of the vehicle and standing to maintain a cause of action for conversion against the seller or holder (Cerra v. Blackstone (1985) 172 Cal. App. 3d 604, 609-610, 218 Cal. Rptr. 15).

[Optional] F. When Plaintiff Owner Need Not Have Right to Immediate Possession at Time of Conversion. A plaintiff who is owner of property allegedly converted, but who did not have a right to immediate possession, may bring an action for conversion when the act constituting conversion would entirely divest the owner of his or her title to the property (see Reynolds v. Lerman (1956) 138 Cal. App. 2d 586, 596-597, 292 P.2d 559).

[Optional] G. Secured Party Having Special Interest With Right to Immediate Possession on Default. A secured party, although not an owner, does have a special interest in property secured with a right of possession if there is a default and the security agreement allows the secured party to take possession (Hartford Fin. Corp. v. Burns (1979) 96 Cal. App. 3d 591, 599-600, 158 Cal. Rptr. 169).

[Optional] H. Owner of Property in Which Another Has Special Interest. Ownership, either general or special, or the right to immediate possession of property, is all that is required to maintain an action for conversion, and the fact that another party may have a special interest in the property does not affect the owner's right to maintain such an action (Everfresh, Inc. v. Goodman (1955) 131 Cal. App. 2d 818, 820, 281 P.2d 560).

[Optional] I. Assignee of Cause of Action for Conversion Has Right to Maintain Action Without Ownership or Right to Possession. A cause of action arising out of the violation of property right may be assigned, and the assignee of the cause of action need not show either ownership or right of immediate possession of the property in order to maintain the action as long as he or she can assert that the assignor was the owner or had a right to immediate possession at the time of the alleged conversion of the property (Staley v. McClurken (1939) 35 Cal. App. 2d 622, 625-627, 96 P.2d 805).

[Optional] J. Attorney With Valid Charging Lien May Pursue Conversion Action When Proceeds are Wrongfully Withheld. An attorney may maintain an action for conversion against any party who wrongfully withholds or disburses funds subject to a valid attorney's lien (Plummer v. Day/Eisenberg, LLP (2010) 184 Cal. App. 4th 38, 45, 108 Cal. Rptr. 3d 455).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of plaintiff's contention in an action for conversion that defendant has converted plaintiff's personal property by wrongfully depriving him or her of the use and possession of that property. This form sets forth the point that plaintiff sufficiently asserted ownership or a right to immediate possession of the property alleged to have been converted at the time of the conversion. One or more optional paragraphs may be included as appropriate to plaintiff's particular situation or interest in the property converted.

The argument supported by this memorandum may be raised in response to an assertion that the plaintiff was not the owner, or did not have a right of immediate possession of the property in question, at the time of the alleged conversion.

This form should be combined with the general form of memorandum of points and authorities in § 51.20 and, if appropriate, with other forms of memoranda supporting the contention that defendant converted the personal property of the plaintiff [see, e.g., §§ 51.21, 51.23 -51.24].

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include discussion showing the nature of plaintiff's ownership interest in the property in question, and how this interest gives him or her a right of immediate possession. If the plaintiff is basing his or her action for conversion on the ground that he or she had actual possession of the property at the time of the alleged conversion, counsel should include discussion showing plaintiff's superior right to possession to the property in question as against defendant.

It is important to set forth the relevant facts establishing plaintiff's right to bring an action for conversion in those situations that appear to be outside the general rule. For example, a plaintiff who owns property that has been lawfully attached but wrongfully sold, although not having the right to immediate possession, may nevertheless bring an action for conversion [see Reynolds v. Lerman (1956) 138 Cal. App. 2d 586, 597, 292 P.2d 559 ; see also § 51.22[3][f]]. Similarly, an assignee of a cause of action for conversion may maintain the action, even though he or she has no interest in the converted property itself, as long as the assignor was the owner or had the right to immediate possession of the property at the time of the conversion [see Staley v. McClurken (1939) 35 Cal. App. 2d 622, 625-627, 96 P.2d 805 ; see also § 51.22[3][i]].

These points and authorities may be combined, when appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which the substantive issue arises; for example, this form may be used in opposition to a demurrer or a motion for summary judgment, when counsel wishes to respond to an assertion that the plaintiff was not the owner, or did not have a right of immediate possession of the property, at the time of the alleged conversion. The points and authorities set forth in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

For further discussion of the types of interest in personal property necessary for a plaintiff to maintain an action for conversion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 150, Conversion (Matthew Bender).

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 51.28 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff Owned or Had Right to Immediate Possession of Property Converted

The facts and procedural background of Franklin v. Municipal Court (1972) 26 Cal. App. 3d 884, 103 Cal. Rptr. 354 , are discussed in § 51.20[3][b]. The court of appeal reversed the judgment of the trial court in granting defendants' motion for summary judgment in an action for conversion against a municipal court judgein his individual capacity. The court held that a cause of action for conversion was sufficiently stated in an action arising out of confiscation of plaintiff's revolver by a municipal court judge in violation of former Penal Code §§ 1418-1419 [now see Penal Code §§ 1417-1417.7]. In order to state a cause of action for conversion, the court ruled, the plaintiff must first allege his or her ownership or right to possession of tangible property at the time of the conversion. In this case, the court concluded, plaintiff, in alleging that he was the lawful owner and entitled to the possession of the subject revolver at the time the revolver was taken from him following his arrest for assault with intent to commit murder, had alleged facts sufficient to show ownership and right to possession (26 Cal. App. 3d 884, 901-902) .

[b] Actual Possession of Property, Rather Than Ownership, Sufficient Interest in Property Converted

Plaintiff in Igauye v. Howard (1952) 114 Cal. App. 2d 122, 249 P.2d 558 , brought an action for wrongful eviction and for conversion of personal property detained by defendant landlord. Plaintiff alleged that he and defendant entered into a written lease of a hotel that contained a provision that in case of default on the rent, defendant had the option of terminating the lease. Subsequently, plaintiff could not make the rental payments, and defendant entered the hotel and took possession of it, changed the lock on the door of the office, removed certain monies belonging to plaintiff from the cash register, and converted to his own use certain personal property belonging to plaintiff. The trial court entered judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appealed, contending that the hotel was operated by plaintiff's father, who was in fact the owner of the property and therefore was the real party in interest, and that the action could not be prosecuted in plaintiff's name.

The court of appeal, in affirming the judgment of the trial court, rejected defendant's contention that plaintiff did not have sufficient interest in the property to sue for conversion. Even assuming the facts urged by defendant to be true, the court said, the plaintiff could prosecute the case in his own name since under these facts, plaintiff was a trustee of an express trust with the father being the beneficial owner of the lease (114 Cal. App. 2d 122, 125) . Moreover, the court concluded, the fact that plaintiff's father, not plaintiff, may have been the owner was not material. Plaintiff had possession of the property at the time of the conversion. It is not necessary that a plaintiff in an action for conversion be the owner of the property; it is sufficient if he or she had actual possession at the time of the alleged act of conversion (114 Cal. App. 2d 122, 127) .

Fletcher Aviation Corp. v. Landis Mfg. Co. (1950) 95 Cal. App. 2d 905, 214 P.2d 400 , arose out of an action for conversion of patterns and dies and for the value of a leasehold estate of which plaintiff was dispossessed. Plaintiff alleged that it was in the business of designing and manufacturing airplanes and that it had a contract with the federal government to produce airplanes until the government terminated it. Plaintiff then subleased a room in a factory building in which plaintiff stored plaster patterns and metal dies that were used in the manufacturing of airplanes. Subsequently, defendant purchased the factory building subject to the lease and sublease, and pursuant to an agreement with the lessee, entered the storage room, removed the patterns and dies, changed the lock, and thereafter occupied the room without plaintiff's consent. Defendant apparently sold the metal dies to a junk dealer and hauled the plaster patterns to a dump. The trial court found for plaintiff, and defendant appealed, contending that plaintiff was not the owner and was not in lawful possession of the patterns and dies, which belonged to the federal government, the rightful owner of all property acquired or produced by plaintiff in the performance of the contract to manufacture airplanes. Plaintiff responded that it was the owner of the patterns and dies by the provisions of the contract with the government that specifically reserved to plaintiff the exclusive right to reproduce the airplanes and any parts. Plaintiff also asserted that it had sufficient interest in the patterns and dies to entitle it to sue for conversion.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment of the trial court, holding that in an action for conversion, it is not necessary that plaintiff be the owner of the property involved, if the plaintiff had actual possession of the property at the time of the alleged conversion. Whether or not plaintiff had lawful possession was not material to the issue, the court said. Plaintiff had acquired the pattern and dies in a lawful manner and it was not necessary, the court stated, to determine in the action for conversion who had the superior interest in the property, the United States or plaintiff. The court concluded that one having possession is merely the owner as against a wrongdoer (95 Cal. App. 2d 905, 908) .

[c] Plaintiff With Right to Immediate Possession Need Not Be in Actual Possession at Time of Conversion

The facts and procedural background of Franklin v. Municipal Court (1972) 26 Cal. App. 3d 884, 103 Cal. Rptr. 354 , are discussed in § 51.20[3][b]. The court of appeal held that plaintiff had sufficiently alleged possession and ownership of a revolver even though at the time of the conversion of the revolver, it was not in his possession, but in the custody of the municipal court. The municipal court judge, after dismissing criminal charges against plaintiff, ordered plaintiff's revolver confiscated pursuant to former Penal Code § 1418 [now see Penal Code §§ 1417-1417.7].

Subsequently the same municipal judge signed an order releasing the weapon to his own custody in his individual capacity, thereby converting the property to his own use (26 Cal. App. 3d 884, 901-902) .

[d] Owner of Automobile on Which Repairs Were Made Without Prior Written Estimate

The court of appeal in Donaldson v. Doe (1987) 194 Cal. App. 3d 817 , 239 Cal. Rptr. 801 , reversed a judgment for defendant automobile repairer. Although plaintiffs gave oral authorization for some of the repairs and made a substantial down payment, no written estimate was given. When plaintiffs could not pay defendant's final bill, defendant commenced lien sale proceedings. Plaintiffs sued for return of the car. The court of appeal reasoned that if recovery was barred on the contract when the repairer violated Bus. & Prof. Code § 9884.9 by failing to provide a written estimate, recovery on a common count should also be barred in view of the public policy purpose behind that statute (194 Cal. App. 3d 817, 820-821) .

Zhadan v. Downtown L.A. Motor Distribs. (1976) 100 Cal. App. 3d 821, 161 Cal. Rptr. 225 , was the second appeal, after the second trial [see Zhadan v. Downtown L.A. Motors (1976) 66 Cal. App. 3d 481, 136 Cal. Rptr. 132] of plaintiff's action for conversion. After being presented with a bill for almost $2,000 for repairs that she had not authorized, plaintiff did not pay the bill and used a second set of keys to take her car from defendant's lot. Defendant repossessed the car, and plaintiff sued for conversion and punitive damages. Judgment for plaintiff was affirmed.

Most of defendant's contentions on appeal related to the amount of the punitive damages award. The portion of the opinion considering the propriety of the punitive damage award is discussed in Ch. 64, Damages: Tort .

Defendant also contested the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict (100 Cal. App. 3d 821, 831) . There were conflicts in testimony, but the evidence was sufficient to support the judgment for plaintiff (100 Cal. App. 3d 821, 832-833) . The court of appeal concluded that the evidence was sufficient to establish that defendant failed to provide the written estimate in violation of Bus. & Prof. Code § 9884.9, that plaintiff never approved any estimate, and that the invoice in many respects failed to contain the specificity and breakdowns required by 16 Cal. Code Reg. §§ 3353-3354 (100 Cal. App. 3d 821, 833) .

The court of appeal in Bennett v. Hayes (1975) 53 Cal. App. 3d 700, 125 Cal. Rptr. 825 , affirmed a judgment for defendant owner in an automobile repairer's action for breach of written contract and for recovery of agreed price. Defendant orally agreed to specific prices for some of the work involved, but plaintiff never provided defendant with a written estimate for any of the work done. The court of appeal cited an Attorney General's opinion to the effect that the purpose of the Automotive Repair Act is to foster fair dealing and to eliminate misunderstandings (53 Cal. App. 3d 700, 703) . While recognizing that unjust enrichment is a factor allowing enforcement of some contracts that contain technical violations of the law, the court said that the primary purpose of the rule of unenforceability, namely to discourage practices forbidden by law, would best be served here by holding the contract unenforceable (53 Cal. App. 3d 700, 704) .

[e] Purchaser Under Automobile Installment Sale Contract Who Is Denied Right to Reinstate Contract

Cerra v. Blackstone (1985) 172 Cal. App. 3d 604, 218 Cal. Rptr. 15 , was an action for conversion instituted by an installment sales contract purchaser of a truck. Defendant lawfully repossessed the truck, but then sent a notice of intent to sell the truck that "did not even come close to complying" with Civ. Code § 2983.2. Among other things, the notice did not specify the amount necessary to reinstate the contract. Defendant eventually resold the truck. The trial court entered judgment for defendant, after granting its motion for summary judgment. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. Defendant contended that the only penalty for failure to give notice of the amount required to reinstate is that a deficiency judgment is barred. The court disagreed, saying that since Civ. Code § 2983.3 was totally rewritten in 1976 the right of reinstatement is absolute for most types of default, and certainly for the failure to make payments, which was plaintiff's only default (172 Cal. App. 3d 604, 608-609) . The court said that once it is determined that a purchaser has a right to reinstate the contract, the first element of conversion, namely the right to possession of the property at the time of conversion, is also established. That purchaser has a right to possession of the vehicle and standing to bring an action for conversion. Unjustified refusal to turn over possession by the withholder on demand constitutes conversion even when.possession by the withholder was originally obtained lawfully (172 Cal. App. 3d 604, 609) . The court said that a buyer who has the right to reinstate the contract does not have to prove that he or she tendered the amount necessary to reinstate the contract when the seller or holder has never advised of the amount necessary to reinstate (172 Cal. App. 3d 604, 609) . The court concluded that Zeff v. Harvey Smith Oldsmobile Co. (1957) 154 Cal. App. 2d 1, 315 P.2d 371 , which held that a dealer did not convert an automobile when he repossessed and sold it after the purchaser had defaulted on a conditional sale contract, was not persuasive because that case was decided under prior law. The buyer's right to regain possession of a vehicle after repossession was first created in 1957 (172 Cal. App. 3d 604, 610) .

NOTE:

For forms of memoranda of points and authorities for use in actions involving conditional sales of motor vehicles under the Rees-Levering Motor Vehicle Sales and Finance Act (Civ. Code §§ 2981-2984.4), see Ch. 206, Sales .

[f] When Plaintiff Owner Need Not Have Right to Immediate Possession at Time of Conversion

In Reynolds v. Lerman (1956) 138 Cal. App. 2d 586, 292 P.2d 559 , plaintiffdebtor filed an action for conversion of attached property against defendant sheriff who had levied an attachment on plaintiff's personal property seized at his place of business. Plaintiff alleged that his attaching creditor met all demands of the sheriff for fees and deposits, but that the warehouse company that stored the property sold it for nonpayment of warehouse charges. Plaintiff further alleged that the warehouse company was defendant sheriff's agent, that the warehouse company had notified the sheriff of planned sale but had not notified plaintiff, and that the warehouse company sold the property without authority of any court order. The trial court found the sheriff negligent and awarded judgment to plaintiff. Defendant sheriff appealed, contending that plaintiff, as an attachment debtor, was not entitled to the return of the property at the time of the sale of the property and therefore could not recover for its wrongful conversion.

The court of appeal, in affirming the judgment against the defendant sheriff, rejected his contentions that plaintiff did not have a proper cause of action in conversion. The court agreed that plaintiff did not have a right to immediate possession at the time of the sheriff's tortious sale; however, the court stated, plaintiff was the owner at the time of the sale and that whenever a sale wrongfully divests the owner's title entirely, right of immediate possession is not essential to his or her recovery for conversion. The court admitted that this holding ran counter to the general rule in trover that title without immediate right to possession is not sufficient basis for a conversion action. This rule, said the court, had no sound basis for survival with respect to factual situations such as the present case and conflicted with Civ. Code § 3523, which contains the maxim of jurisprudence that every wrong has a remedy. Moreover, prior California law had already determined that a sheriff was liable for conversion when property levied under his or her authority is wrongfully sold (138 Cal. App. 2d 586, 596-597) .

[g] Secured Party Having Special Interest With Right to Immediate Possession on Default

Hartford Fin. Corp. v. Burns (1979) 96 Cal. App. 3d 591, 158 Cal. Rptr. 169 , involved an action for conversion of personal property consisting of heavy equipment, including trucks, tractors, and vans, in which plaintiff had a security interest. Plaintiff alleged that it had a security interest in certain motor vehicles as a result of loans made to debtor trucking company. The property was stored on the premises owned by defendants and leased to the debtor. Following default on the loans, plaintiff sought to obtain possession of the vehicles subject to the security agreements; however, defendants had locked the doors to the area where the property was stored, refused to allow plaintiff's representative access to the property, and advised him that the property would not be released until the rent due from the debtor trucking firm was paid, thereby converting the property to their own use. The trial court found for plaintiff, and defendants appealed from the judgment of the trial court, contending that plaintiff did not have sufficient right to possession of the personal property involved because it failed to perfect its secured interest in the motor vehicles involved according to the provisions of Veh. Code §§ 6301-6303, and that it could not have obtained possession of the property without a breach of the peace in violation of former Com. Code § 9503 [now see Com. Code § 9609].

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment of the trial court, holding that plaintiff had a sufficient right to possession of the personal property involved as a result of its security interest (96 Cal. App. 3d 591, 600) . Citing prior California law, the court stated that one of the elements of a cause of action for conversion was that plaintiff must show ownership or right to possession of the property at the time of the conversion, but that it was not essential that the plaintiff be the absolute owner of the property converted if plaintiff could show that he or she was entitled to immediate possession. Furthermore, the court added, decisional law has recognized that a secured party, although not an owner, does not have a special interest in the property secured with a right of possession if there is a default and the security agreement allows the secured party to take possession. In this case, the court found that the security agreements gave plaintiff the right to take possession of the property on default of the debtor trucking firm and that its security interest was not affected by any provisions of the Vehicle Code as far as its ability to bring an action in conversion (96 Cal. App. 3d 591, 599-600) . The court also found that defendants' reliance on former Com. Code § 9503 or on decisional law interpreting that section was not helpful to his case, since plaintiff proceeded by judicial action, as authorized by the statute, rather than by obtaining possession by acts constituting a breach of the peace (96 Cal. App. 3d 591, 600) .

[h] Owner of Property in Which Another Has Special Interest

Everfresh, Inc. v. Goodman (1955) 131 Cal. App. 2d 818, 281 P.2d 560 , arose out of an action for conversion. Plaintiff alleged that he had leased certain premises from defendant and subsequently, in response to a notice, quit the premises leaving behind, with defendant's permission, certain personal property. Plaintiff retained a key and had access to the premises, and had informed defendant that attempts were being made to sell the stored property in order to satisfy creditors. The property was under lien to the federal government, and title to the property was apparently held by certain holders of conditional sales contracts, or other holders of special interests. Plaintiff further alleged that defendant had removed the property and had disposed of it without notice to, or consent by, plaintiff. The trial court gave judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appealed, contending that plaintiff was not the real party in interest and therefore plaintiff could not prosecute the action pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 367.

In affirming the judgment of the trial court, the court of appeal rejected defendant's contention that the action was not prosecuted by the real party in interest. Citing prior California law, the court said that it has long been establishedthat ownership, either general or special, or the right to immediate possession, is all that is required to maintain an action for conversion. In the present case, the court found that plaintiff was clearly in this category of persons with a right to bring an action for conversion. The fact that the federal government might have a lien on the property, or that conditional sales owners might have actual title, the court concluded, did not alter the situation (131 Cal. App. 2d 818, 820) .

[i] Assignee of Cause of Action for Conversion Has Right to Maintain Action Without Ownership or Right to Possession

Plaintiff in Staley v. McClurken (1939) 35 Cal. App. 2d 622, 96 P.2d 805 , brought an action for conversion of certain personal property. Plaintiff alleged that, as owner of certain timberland, she leased these premises to defendant. According to the terms of the lease agreement, plaintiff leased all of her real and personal property consisting of 142 acres of timberland and one complete shingle mill, all buildings, and other equipment. Plaintiff had been living on the premises in the large cabin with her mother and sister. After the premises were leased, they stored their personal property and effects in that cabin and secured the door with a padlock. On taking possession of the land, defendant broke the padlock, took possession of the large cabin together with the property and effects left by plaintiff and her family. Defendant used the furnishings in the cabin, but apparently either threw out personal clothing stored there, or placed the clothing in a location where it was damaged or lost. Defendant refused to restore the property in question, and plaintiff brought her action for conversion in three counts. The first count alleged conversion of plaintiff's personal property. The second one charged conversion of the mother's personal property and alleged an assignment of her claim of conversion to plaintiff. The third count charged conversion of personal property of plaintiff's sister and alleged an assignment by the sister of her claim to plaintiff. The trial court found for plaintiff and defendant appealed, contending that plaintiff failed to allege that she was the owner or entitled to immediate possession to the property alleged to be converted in the second and third counts.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment of the trial court for plaintiff on the second and third counts. The court conceded that most of the property involved in the suit belonged to plaintiff's mother and sister and that their portion of the personal property was never sold or transferred to plaintiff. However, the court held, the right to maintain an action for conversion of personal property may be based on an assignment of a chose in action subsequently executed after the conversion and before the filing of the suit. Furthermore, the court stated, it was not necessary that the assignment also have transferred title to the property, or the possession of it (35 Cal. App. 2d 622, 625) . The rule that it is necessary for plaintiff to show either ownership of the property or the right to immediate possession at the time of the conversion, the court said, means that the owner of the property must have either title or the right of immediate possession of the property. Consequently, the court concluded, it was not necessary for an assignee of a chose in action to show that he or she was the owner of the property, nor that he or she was entitled to the possession of the property at the time of the conversion. The fact that both assignors were the owners of and entitled to immediate possession of their respective property met the requirements of the law (35 Cal. App. 2d 622, 626-627) . The court also stated that under Civ. Code § 954, the assignments were proper because a cause of action arising out of the violation of a right of property may be transferred by the owner (35 Cal. App. 2d 622, 625) .

[j] Attorney With Valid Charging Lien May Pursue Conversion Action When Proceeds are Wrongfully Withheld

In Plummer v. Day/Eisenberg, LLP (2010) 184 Cal. App. 4th 38, 108 Cal. Rptr. 3d 455 , plaintiff attorney was associate counsel when representing a client in a personal injury action. The client had contracted with one law firm to provide representation, but the retainer agreement contained a separate page that specifically acknowledged that plaintiff would work on the case in an "of counsel" role, would receive 50 percent of any and all legal fees, and was specifically granted an attorney's lien to protect his right to fees. After working on the case for a year, plaintiff was allegedly forced off of the case by the retaining law firm and was eventually replaced by another law firm. When the case settled, the remaining parties and attorneys cashed the settlement check without his endorsement, even though he was listed on the check as a payee, and plaintiff was not paid the fee to which he was entitled. He sued the law firm that replaced him, alleging causes of action for conversion and interference with economic advantage. The trial court granted summary judgment for the defendant law firm on the conversion cause of action, concluding that because plaintiff did not have a direct contract with the client, he did not have a valid attorney's lien on the settlement proceeds and could not state a claim for conversion. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court noted that the existence of a lien can establish an immediate right to possess sufficient to support an action for conversion if the proceeds subject to the lien are wrongfully disposed of without authority. Under this general principle, an attorney may therefore maintain a conversion action against those who wrongfully withhold or disburse funds that are subject to an attorney's lien (184 Cal. App. 4th 38, 45) . While the defendant law firm argued that plaintiff did not have a valid attorney's lien because he did not have a direct contractual relationship with the clients, plaintiff had presented evidence of the original attorney retention agreement which specifically gave plaintiff a right to a share of the attorneys' fees as well as a lien on any proceeds from the action. In light of that evidence, the court concluded that a triable issue existed as to whether plaintiff had a direct contractual relationship with the clients sufficient to support a valid lien (184 Cal. App. 4th 38, 47-48) . The court went on to hold that a written contingency fee agreement need not comply with Rule 3-300 of the Rules of Professional Conduct in order to create a valid attorney's lien (184 Cal. App. 4th 38, 49) , and that triable issues also existed on other elements of both the conversion and interference causes of action such that summary judgment for defendant was improper (184 Cal. App. 4th 38, 50-51) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 51 CONVERSION
PART II. FORMS

5-51 California Points & Authorities § 51.23

§ 51.23 Supporting Contention That Defendant Has Converted Plaintiff's Personal Property--Act of Conversion as Unwarranted Interference With Rights or Interests in Personal Property of Another

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and should be combined with the general form of memorandum of points and authorities pertaining to conversion of plaintiff's personal property (see § 51.20).]

DEFENDANT'S ACT OF _____ [DENYING PLAINTIFF ACCESS TO HIS OR HER PROPERTY or SELLING PLAINTIFF'S PROPERTY WITHOUT AUTHORIZATION or state other specific act] CONSTITUTED AN UNWARRANTED INTERFERENCE WITH THE RIGHTS AND INTERESTS OF PLAINTIFF IN HIS OR HER PROPERTY THAT RESULTED IN INJURY TO PLAINTIFF.

A. Act of Conversion as Unwarranted Interference With the Rights or Interests in Personal Property of Another. Conversion is based on a person's unwarranted interference with another's personal property in denial of, or inconsistent with, his or her rights in the property and from which injury to the latter results. The act is founded on a conjoint right of property and possession and constitutes any act of a defendant that negates or is inconsistent with such right (see Gruber v. Pacific States Sav. & Loan Co. (1939) 13 Cal. 2d 144, 147-149, 88 P.2d 137 ; see also Poggi v. Scott (1914) 167 Cal. 372, 375-376, 139 P. 815).

[Optional] B. Lack of Knowledge or Good Faith No Defense to Conversion. The foundation for the action of conversion rests neither in the knowledge nor the intent of the defendant; therefore, neither good nor bad faith, neither care nor negligence, neither knowledge nor ignorance, are the gist of the action (Varela v. Wells Fargo Bank (1971) 15 Cal. App. 3d 741, 750, 93 Cal. Rptr. 428 ; Culp v. Signal Van & Storage Co. (1956) 142 Cal. App. 2d Supp. 859, 862 , 298 P.2d 162 .

[Optional] C. Denial of Access to Property as Conversion. A refusal by a holder of real property to permit access by another to his or her personal property located on the real property constitutes a wrongful exercise of dominion andcontrol over the personal property and is an act of conversion (see Hartford Fin. Corp. v. Burns (1979) 96 Cal.

App. 3d 591, 601-603, 158 Cal. Rptr. 169 ; Carey v. Glenco Citrus Prods. (1965) 235 Cal. App. 2d 572, 578-582, 45 Cal. Rptr. 365).

[Optional] D. Misdelivery of Personal Property as Conversion. Misdelivery of personal property by one entrusted with the property of another constitutes conversion, even though the person who misdelivered the goods acted innocently and by mistake (Byer v. Canadian Bank of Commerce (1937) 8 Cal. 2d 297, 299-302, 65 P.2d 67).

[Optional] E. Purchase of Property of Another in Unauthorized Sale as Conversion. One who purchases personal property of another from a person having no title to the property or right to sell it is guilty of conversion as against the true owner (Culp v. Signal Van & Storage Co. (1956) 142 Cal. App. 2d Supp. 859, 861 , 298 P.2d 162 ; see Strutt v. Ontario Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1972) 28 Cal. App. 3d 866, 874-875, 105 Cal. Rptr. 395).

[Optional] F. Unauthorized Sale of Property of Another as Conversion. An unauthorized sale of personal property of another in possession of defendant constitutes an act of conversion (see Reynolds v. Lerman (1956) 138 Cal. App. 2d 586, 591-594, 292 P.2d 559).

[Optional] G. Willful Omission to Act as Conversion. A willful omission of a party entrusted with the personal property of another may serve as a foundation for the action of conversion when that property has been lost or destroyed (see Schroeder v. Auto Driveaway Co. (1974) 11 Cal. 3d 908, 918, 114 Cal. Rptr. 622, 523 P.2d 662).

[Optional] H. Wrongful Appropriation of Property as Conversion. A person who wrongfully appropriates to his or her own use personal property of another is liable for conversion (see De Vries v. Brumback (1960) 53 Cal. 2d 643, 647-649, 2 Cal. Rptr. 764, 349 P.2d 532 ; Miller v. Rau (1963) 216 Cal. App. 2d 68, 76-77, 30 Cal. Rptr. 612).

[Optional] I. Bailee's Failure to Investigate Conflicting Claim of Possession as Conversion. When a professional bailee is presented with reasonably compelling evidence demonstrating a party other than the bailor is entitled to possession, the bailee's failure to investigate the third party claim or file an interpleader action in which the claims of possession will be adjudicated may subject the bailee to liability for conversion (Messerall v. Fulwider (1988) 199 Cal. App. 3d 1324, 1329-1333, 245 Cal. Rptr. 548).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of plaintiff's contention in an action for conversion that defendant has converted plaintiff's personal property by wrongfully depriving him or her of the use and possession of that property. This form sets forth the point that defendant's act in relation to the property in question was an unwarranted interference with the rights and interests of the plaintiff in his or her personal property. The optional paragraphs may be included when an issue arises regarding whether or not defendant's act, as illustrated by the particular paragraph, constitutes a conversion.

The argument supported by this memorandum may be raised in response to an assertion that defendant's act did not constitute conversion because he or she did not have the intent to convert, or that the act did not amount to substantial interference with the property in question.

This form should be combined with the general form of memorandum of points and authorities in § 51.20 and, if appropriate, with other forms of memoranda supporting the contention that defendant converted the personal property of the plaintiff [see §§ 51.21, 51.22, and 51.24].

These points and authorities may be combined, when appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which the substantive issue arises; for example, this form may be used in opposition to a demurrer or a motion for summary judgment, when counsel wishes to respond to an assertion that the act of the defendant in relation to the property in question did not constitute a conversion of the property. The points and authorities set forth in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include discussion of the act of the defendant in relation to the property and demonstrate that this act constituted an unwarranted interference with plaintiff's rights in the property and that the plaintiff suffered injury as a result of defendant's act. For example, in a case involving retention of property by a landlord until rent is paid, counsel should include discussion of the landlord-tenant relationship, plaintiff's departure from the premises for failure to pay rent due, the landlord's refusal to permit plaintiff access to his or her personal property until payment of the sum required, and the applicable law that holds that a landlord cannot retain personal property of a tenant for rent due [see Gruber v. Pacific States Sav. & Loan Co. (1939) 13 Cal. 2d 144, 147-149, 88 P.2d 137 ; see also § 51.23[3][a], [4][b]].

NOTE:
For further discussion of types of acts constituting conversion of personal property, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 150, Conversion (Matthew Bender).

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 51.29 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Act of Conversion as Unwarranted Interference With the Rights or Interests in Personal Property of Another

Gruber v. Pacific States Sav. & Loan Co. (1939) 13 Cal. 2d 144, 88 P.2d 137 , arose out of an action for conversion of certain road grading equipment and other personal property. Plaintiff alleged that he had rented a portion of certain premises from defendant and that he had stored the subject personal property within the premises, and in order to secure that property, had nailed shut all doors and windows except for one door to which he retained the key. After failure to pay rent due, an agent of defendant wrote to plaintiff, informing him that all of his equipment stored on the premises would be sold to discharge the indebtedness. The letter also stated that the only way in which plaintiff could have the property released to him was by payment in full of the rent due. Plaintiff contacted defendant to request additional time for payment and to object to the proposed sale of his property. Defendant denied the request and informed plaintiff that only full payment would prevent the sale of his property. At trial, plaintiff testified that he had twice requested permission to enter the premises and remove a portion of his property stored there, but that his requests were denied by agents of defendant. Subsequently, the real property was sold by defendant and the building in which plaintiff's property had been stored was torn down. None of the property stored was ever returned to plaintiff's possession. A jury returned a verdict in favor of plaintiff, and the trial court entered judgment accordingly. Defendant appealed, contending that the property in question had at all times remained in the exclusive possession of plaintiff, that it had not had its agents seize or otherwise take possession of the property to the exclusion of plaintiff, and, at best, it had merely threatened to sell plaintiff's property, and this threat was insufficient to support the jury's finding of conversion.

The Supreme Court, in affirming the judgment of the trial court, found defendant's contentions to be without merit. The Court said that the evidence not only disclosed a written threat to convert plaintiff's property, but also showed repeated refusals by defendant's agents to permit plaintiff to remove his equipment from the premises, a right plaintiff had as the owner of the property, and one to which he was entitled without interference from defendant or its agents (13 Cal. 2d 144, 147) . The fact that plaintiff had failed to make payments of rent due, the Court stated, did not warrant defendant lessor in exercising dominion over plaintiff's personal property located on the premises rented by defendant to plaintiff, since a landlord has no lien on a tenant's property for unpaid rent. It is the unwarranted interference with the dominion over another's personal property in denial of or inconsistent with his or her rights in the property and from which injury to the latter results that constitutes conversion, the Court ruled. It is not necessary that there be an actual manual taking of the property in question, the Court continued, as the action of trover, being founded on a conjoint right of property and possession, constitutes any act of a defendant that negates or is inconsistent with such right. The question is whether or not the defendant exercised a dominion over the property in exclusion or in defiance of plaintiff's right. If defendant did so, then under the law it was conversion, and the fact that defendant never had possession of the property, nor handled it, cannot defeat a claim of conversion. Consequently, the Court held, the acts and conduct of defendant, operating through its agents, improperly and wrongfully interfered with plaintiff's absolute ownership of, and dominion over, his equipment and constituted a conversion of that property that ultimately resulted in plaintiff's financial detriment (13 Cal. 2d 144, 149) .

Plaintiff in Poggi v. Scott (1914) 167 Cal. 372, 139 P. 815 , sued to recover damages for the unlawful conversion by defendant of barrels of plaintiff's wine stored in a building owned by defendant. Plaintiff had originally rented the building from its former owner and stored his wine in barrels in the building's cellar. Later, the building was leased to a laundry in which plaintiff had some stock. Plaintiff subleased the cellar from the laundry, and the rent was deducted from dividends due to him. Subsequently, the owner sold the building to defendant, informing him of the tenant and subtenant. Plaintiff was not informed of the change in ownership. Thereafter, the laundry vacated the premises, and defendant sold the wine under the mistaken belief that he was selling empty barrels. Defendant was apparently a victim of a fraud and theft of the wine by persons who knew of the location of the barrels and that they contained wine. The trial court granted defendant's nonsuit on the ground that plaintiff had failed to prove a sufficient case for the jury. Plaintiff appealed from the subsequent judgment. In response to the appeal, defendant contended that he thought that he was disposing of so much junk or rubbish in the form of barrels, and therefore he could not be held liable for the conversion of full barrels of wine or for the value of the wine in the barrels, or that the loss of the wine could be attributable in any way to any act of his.

The Supreme Court, in reversing the judgment of the trial court, found that defendant's contentions of nonliability were incorrect. The foundation for the action of conversion, the Court stated, rests neither in the knowledge nor the intent of the defendant. Rather, the Court added, it rests upon the unwarranted interference by defendant with the dominion over the property of plaintiff from which injury to the latter results (167 Cal. 372, 375) . Conversion, the Court said, was in a class of cases in which the tort consists in what may be called an absolute duty; the act itself is unlawful and redressible as a tort. Consequently, the Courtconcluded, the all-important fact in this case was the defendant's sale of barrels that did not belong to him, but that belonged, together with their contents, to plaintiff. In so doing, defendant exercised an unjustifiable and unwarranted dominion and control over property of another, and from his acts, great loss resulted to the other (167 Cal. 372, 376) .

[b] Lack of Knowledge or Good Faith No Defense to Conversion

Varela v. Wells Fargo Bank (1971) 15 Cal. App. 3d 741, 93 Cal. Rptr. 428 , involved an action for conversion of a 1965 automobile and three diamond rings located in the vehicle's glove compartment. Plaintiff had purchased the subject automobile, and as part of the transaction, executed a conditional sales contract with the auto agency, in which the agency retained title to the vehicle. The contract was subsequently assigned to defendant bank. Plaintiff alleged that there were three diamond rings in the car at the time defendant repossessed it. Plaintiff demanded that defendant return the auto and the diamond rings, and on defendant's failure to do so, filed a complaint for conversion. The trial court found that defendant had converted the automobile and the rings and awarded damages to plaintiff. Defendant appealed, contending, with regard to the conversion of the rings, that there was no conversion because it did not know of their presence in the auto nor did it intend to take ownership of them.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment of the trial court, holding that it was not necessarily a matter of conscious wrongdoing that constituted conversion, rather it was an intent to exercise a dominion or control over the property that is inconsistent with plaintiff's rights. When an auto is repossessed, the court said, the repossessor, unless he or she empties the glove compartment and the trunk, intends to possess, at least temporarily, its contents and to deprive the owner of them. Having taken possession of the car with the rings in it, the bank had the duty to protect the rings since it had no right to their possession, even temporarily. The court said that the foundation for the action of conversion rests neither in the knowledge nor in the intent of the defendant. It rests upon the unwarranted interference by defendant with the dominion over the property of plaintiff from which injury to the latter results. Therefore, neither good nor bad faith, care nor negligence, knowledge nor ignorance are of the gist of the action [see Poggi v. Scott (1914) 167 Cal. 372, 375, 139 P. 815 ; see also § 51.23[3][a]]. Consequently, the court held, defendant was properly liable for conversion since it took the rings without right, even assuming it had the right to repossess the car, and failed to return them on demand (15 Cal. App. 3d 741, 750) .

In Culp v. Signal Van & Storage Co. (1956) 142 Cal. App. 2d, Supp. 859, 298 P.2d 162 , intervenor filed a complaint in intervention for conversion of property that was the subject of an action to recover personal property. Intervenor sold several jukeboxes to defendant under terms of a conditional sales contract by which intervenor retained title until full payment. Defendant, without intervenor's knowledge, sold the jukeboxes to plaintiff, who in return resold them to defendant, also pursuant to a conditional sales contract in which plaintiff retained title. Defendant defaulted under the contract, and plaintiff brought his action to recover the property, alleging ownership of the property and entitlement to the possession of it. Intervenor, by leave of court, filed his complaint in intervention. Plaintiff responded, denying that intervenor was the owner or that he was entitled to the possession of the jukeboxes, and denying that plaintiff had converted the property. The case went to trial on the complaint in intervention, and the trial court, although finding that intervenor was the true owner, gave judgment to plaintiff on the ground that it was not guilty of conversion of the property. Intervenor appealed from the judgment, and plaintiff, in response, contended that no conversion took place since it had returned the property to defendant pursuant to a conditional sales contract.

The appellate department of the superior court reversed the trial court's judgment that plaintiff was not guilty of conversion. The court stated that one who, though honestly and in good faith, purchases personal property from one having no title to, or right to sell, the property is guilty of conversion. The court held that even though plaintiff returned the property to defendant in this case, it was guilty of conversion as against the true owner according to California law (142 Cal. App. 2d, Supp. 859, 861). Moreover, the court added that this was not a case in which plaintiff returned the property free from any restraint, but rather the so-called "return" was pursuant to a contract of sale in which plaintiff, as owner of the property, agreed to sell the property to defendant and to retain title to the property until payment of the purchase price. In addition, the court continued, plaintiff instituted an action to recover possession of the property in question on the assertion and under the claim that it was the owner and entitled to the possession of the property as against defendant, and also in response to the complaint in intervention, as against intervenor. An act of conversion may occur by a wrongful assertion of ownership or a wrongful denial of plaintiff's ownership, the court held, and plaintiff's conduct, however honestly or in good faith it may have acted, constituted a denial of, and was inconsistent with, intervenor's rights in and to the property in question (142 Cal. App. 2d, Supp. 859, 862).

NOTE:

The dissent in Culp argued that there was no conversion since plaintiff's return of the property to defendant placed the true owner of the property, intervenor, in exactly the same position as it was before the sale and resale of the property. Consequently the dissent claimed, intervenor suffered no damage from plaintiff's action. The dissent based its contention on prior California decisions in which return of the converted property by an innocent receiver of the property mitigated the damages claimed [see § 51.31[3][a]]. However, the dissent seemed to ignore the thrust of the majority opinion in that there was no "return" of theproperty in a real sense, and that plaintiff wrongfully asserted ownership of the property in question and denied the rightful ownership of the true owner, intervenor.

[c] Denial of Access to Property as Conversion

The facts and procedural background of Hartford Fin. Corp. v. Burns (1979) 96 Cal. App. 3d 591, 158 Cal. Rptr. 169 , are discussed in § 51.22[3][g]. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment of the trial court, finding that defendants had converted plaintiff's property. Plaintiff had a security interest in some of the trucking company's equipment to secure a debt owed by the trucking company to plaintiff. The equipment was stored on premises leased by defendant to the trucking company. When the trucking company defaulted on its debt to plaintiff, plaintiff demanded return of the equipment. After the trucking company defaulted, it abandoned the leased premises and the property located there. The Internal Revenue Service subsequently seized the property, but thereafter released it to defendant, who locked the doors to the area where the equipment was stored and refused plaintiff's demand for surrender of the property. On appeal, defendants contended that they never had possession of the property or exercised any dominion or control over it at the times plaintiff demanded its possession. Defendants took the position that the property was in the possession of their tenant, the trucking firm. Defendants further contended that (1) their action in refusing to surrender the property could be characterized only as a threat to prevent access by plaintiff to the personal property involved; and (2) as involuntary bailee, they had a right to refuse to surrender the property until rent owed to defendants by the trucking firm was paid.

The court of appeal rejected these contentions. The court observed that defendants' contentions that they never had possession of the property or exercised dominion and control over it was in conflict with the evidence. The trial court, the court of appeal stated, could reasonably have concluded that after the trucking firm abandoned the premises and the property located on it, and after the Internal Revenue Service released its dominion and control over it to defendants, that defendants exerted dominion and control over the property by locking the doors to the area and building where the property was stored, and by refusing plaintiff's demand by asserting to plaintiff that surrender of the property would be made only when back rent owed by plaintiff's debtor was paid. Conversion, stated the court, is any act of dominion wrongfully exerted over another's property in denial or inconsistent with his or her rights in the property. Citing prior California law, the court observed that the liability of one in possession of real property for the conversion of personal property that he or she finds on it, depends in most cases on a determination of whether or not the conduct of the defendant indicates an assumption of control or ownership over the goods in question. It was clear, the court continued, that under some circumstances refusal of one in possession of real property to permit on demand the owner of chattels that were left there to remove his or her goods constitutes conversion. The court further noted that not every failure to deliver goods to the owner constituted conversion. To establish a conversion, the court declared, it was incumbent on the plaintiff to show an intention or purpose to convert the goods and to exercise ownership over them, or to prevent the owner from taking possession of his or her property. In the present case, the court held, the evidence justified the trial court's conclusion that defendants intended to and did exercise ownership over the personal property involved in order to preclude plaintiff from taking possession of it (96 Cal. App. 3d 591, 601-602) . Defendants' claim to being an involuntary bailee entitled to rent or reasonable storage costs of the property before turning over the property to plaintiff was also untenable, the court stated. Defendants may have been entitled to the reasonable value of the storage costs had they advised plaintiff that if it did not remove the property on their premises, the property would be placed in storage at plaintiff's expense. However, the court pointed out, this was not the case in the present action. In this case, the court said, defendants refused to surrender possession to plaintiff of personal property originally belonging to defendants' tenant, the trucking firm, and based their refusal on the fact that there was back rent owed to them and that payment of that rent was a condition precedent to their release of the property. A landlord, the court said, is not entitled to hold a tenant's goods as ransom for the payment of back rent under the guise of storage costs. Unpaid rent and storage costs are separately incurred debts, the court added, and the liability for each arises under separate and different obligations. Consequently, the court held, defendants were not entitled to retain possession of personal property of its tenant, which was subject to a security interest in plaintiff, until the back rent was paid and therefore had no right to refuse plaintiff access to its property (96 Cal. App. 3d 591, 603) .

The facts and procedural background of Carey v. Glenco Citrus Prods. (1965) 235 Cal. App. 2d 572, 45 Cal. Rptr. 365 , are discussed in § 51.21[3][f]. The court of appeal held that a lessee of real property holds title to the crops growing on the property and may sell the same. The lessee in this case sold its interest in an orange crop growing on the premises to defendant Glenco. The right to sell a crop, the court stated, conferred on the buyer a license to harvest the crop within a reasonable time after the fruit matured, and also the right to go on the leased premises to carry out the harvest. If a license to go on the land to harvest is terminated, the licensee nonetheless, the court said, must be given a reasonable opportunity to remove himself or herself, or his or her effects from the land, including any crop growing on the land that the licensee had previously purchased. Consequently, the court concluded, defendant's right to go on the land and to complete the harvest of the orange crop was not affected by the termination of the leases on account of the lessee's default in payment of rent and taxes.Therefore, the court added, since defendant Glenco was the owner of the orange crop at the time of the alleged termination of the leases, the fruit was its personal property, and refusal of plaintiffs to permit Glenco to harvest it constituted a conversion (235 Cal. App. 2d 572, 578-582) .

[d] Misdelivery of Personal Property as Conversion

Byer v. Canadian Bank of Commerce (1937) 8 Cal. 2d 297, 65 P.2d 67 , arose out of an action for conversion of bonds and stock. Plaintiff, a former resident of Canada, continued to maintain an account with defendant bank, as well as a safe deposit box. Plaintiff arranged to have certain bonds and stock placed into his safe deposit box in defendant's bank. Thereafter, he granted a power of attorney to a certain R.T. O'Brien to act in his behalf regarding the collection of certain securities. O'Brien apparently sent a telegram to defendant instructing it to forward to plaintiff the bonds and stock that plaintiff had previously arranged to be placed in his safe deposit box. The bank sent the securities by registered mail to plaintiff but had not restricted delivery to plaintiff. The package was signed for by an employee of O'Brien. Plaintiff alleged that he never received the stock and sued to recover its reasonable value. The trial court found for plaintiff, and defendant appealed, contending that there was no conversion because the facts did not show a tortious detention of the property or an act in exclusion or defiance of the owner's rights.

The Supreme Court, in affirming the judgment of the trial court, rejected defendant's contention that there was no conversion. Citing prior California law, the Court held that misdelivery by one entrusted with the property of another constituted a conversion even though the person who misdelivered the goods acted innocently and by mistake. The foundation for the action of conversion, the Court stated, rests neither on the knowledge nor the intent of the defendant; rather, it rests on the unwarranted interference by defendant with the dominion over the property of plaintiff from which injury to the latter results. The Court added that defendant's liability is not founded on negligence. Citing authorities from other jurisdictions, the Court stated that delivery of property to a person not authorized to receive it made the deliverer responsible for its value without regard to the question of negligence. The complaint against a defendant in a case such as this, the Court continued, is not that he or she was negligent or grossly negligent, but that he or she intentionally disposed of the property in a manner not authorized by the terms of the trust. Consequently, the Court concluded, even though the securities were addressed to plaintiff, defendant subjected them to a risk that plaintiff, as bailor, did not contemplate, and therefore defendant was liable for the loss resulting from the misdelivery (8 Cal. 2d 297, 299-302) .

[e] Purchase of Property of Another in Unauthorized Sale as Conversion

The facts and procedural background of Culp v. Signal Van & Storage Co. (1956) 142 Cal. App. 2d, Supp. 859, 298 P.2d 162 , are discussed in § 51.23[3][b]. The appellate department of the superior court reversed the judgment of the trial court in finding that a good faith purchaser of property from a person not authorized to sell the property was not guilty of conversion. Citing prior California law, the court observed that one who purchases personal property of another from a person who has no title to the property or right to sell the property is guilty of conversion (142 Cal. App. 2d, Supp. 859, 861). Plaintiff in

Strutt v. Ontario Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1972) 28 Cal. App. 3d 866, 105 Cal. Rptr. 395 , brought an action against defendant for, among other things, conversion of his personal property and wrongful exercise of a private power of sale of certain real property owned by plaintiff and secured by defendant. After default on payment of money due, defendant, under the terms of its deed of trust, posted and published a notice of sale and purchased the property. Plaintiff, arrested on a criminal charge, had been sent to a state mental hospital for care and treatment until such time as he could assist counsel in his defense. The guardianship division of the Department of Mental Hygiene made an investigation of plaintiff's property to determine what action, if any, should be taken with respect to his real and personal property and determined that plaintiff no longer had any interest in the real property but had personal property reasonably valued at $100 in and about the real property. Defendant paid the guardianship division for the personal property and thereafter took possession of it. Plaintiff was subsequently released from the mental hospital and criminal charges were ultimately dismissed in the interest of justice. The trial court found adversely against plaintiff on all counts, and he appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment of the trial court but found that the trial court was in error when it determined that defendant did not convert plaintiff's property. The court stated that under the applicable provisions of law governing the rights and duties of the Department of Mental Hygiene concerning a patient's property, the guardianship division properly investigated the nature, extent, and value of plaintiff's property. The department also had the right to receive funds in the name of plaintiff and to take into possession for safekeeping certain personal property; however, the court said, these rights to handle plaintiff's personal property did not give it a right to compromise disputed claims concerning money or property, nor to sell any of plaintiff's property except in conformity with the statutory provisions governing sale of a mental patient's personal property. Consequently, the court concluded, when defendant paid the department $100 and took possession of plaintiff's personal property, it converted that property. However, the court said, the judgment as to the count for conversionwas affirmed because substantial evidence produced at trial indicated that the value of the property in question was the same as that which defendant had paid to the department, and that plaintiff was only entitled to the reasonable value of the property, plus interest, at the time of conversion (28 Cal. App. 3d 866, 874-875) .

[f] Unauthorized Sale of Property of Another as Conversion

The facts and procedural background of Reynolds v. Lerman (1956) 138 Cal. App. 2d 586, 292 P.2d 559 , are discussed in § 51.22[3][f]. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment of the trial court awarding damages for the wrongful sale of plaintiff's property under a levy of attachment for nonpayment of warehouse charges. Defendant sheriff contended on appeal that plaintiff could not recover since he had failed to file a claim pursuant to the Government Code as to property damaged as a result of negligence or carelessness of any public officer or employee. The court of appeal rejected this contention. This action, the court said, was not for negligence but for conversion. Citing prior California law, the court stated that a sheriff who has attached certain personal property and placed it in storage and who subsequently allowed the property to be sold for payment of storage costs without having sought payment from the attaching creditor, giving notice to plaintiff, or obtaining a court order, was guilty of conversion (138 Cal. App. 2d 586, 592) . The court held that the fact that the trial court found the sheriff negligent did not change the cause of action. It is important, the court said, to not confuse the unlawful conduct, that is the negligence of the sheriff, which gave rise to the cause of action, with the cause of action itself. The sheriff was under a duty to safely keep attached property sufficient to satisfy the attaching creditor's demands, and property that unnecessarily deteriorated while in the sheriff's possession may constitute a breach of that duty. However, the court concluded, an unauthorized sale of property in the possession of the sheriff violated the sheriff's obligation to keep the property, and therefore the sheriff was liable for conversion for the wrongful sale by is agent of the personal property of plaintiff (138 Cal. App. 2d 586, 591-594) .

[g] Willful Omission to Act as Conversion

Plaintiff in Schroeder v. Auto Driveaway Co. (1974) 11 Cal. 3d 908, 114 Cal. Rptr. 622, 523 P.2d 662 , filed an action for wrongful conversion of a van and goods contained within it, which were destroyed in a accident in which a driver hired by defendant carrier was involved. Plaintiffs had engaged defendant common carrier to transport their van and certain commercial goods contained in it from Arizona to a location in Northern California where plaintiffs planned to open a shop stocked with the goods contained within the van. In signing the contract engaging the common carrier, plaintiffs failed to notice certain fine print disclaimers of liability placed on the back of the contract form. These disclaimers affected liability for property that exceeded $250, and for various items of unusual value, such as guns, cameras, and the like. However, plaintiffs had notified carrier's agent that the van contained valuable goods and that they had put all their money into the property. The carrier's agent picked up the van in person and was in a position to observe the extent of the goods within the van and the weight of the load. The agent never informed plaintiffs as to the Interstate Commerce Commission conditions on transportation under limited liability arrangements that provide that the carrier is liable for the full value of the property shipped when the shipper is not informed of the limitation and given a fair opportunity to choose between a higher and lower liability or to refuse to make the shipment if the property exceeds the value of the liability the shipper is willing to undertake at the agreed-upon rate of shipment. The agent hired a driver to transport the van to California; however, the driver and her companion detoured to the Grand Canyon for sightseeing. En route, the van skidded off a mountain road. The van was totally destroyed and many of the contents were damaged. In addition to conversion, plaintiff also alleged breach of contract and fraudulent misrepresentation by the agent that defendant carrier was authorized to transport plaintiffs' van and goods, although he knew that the value of the goods far exceeded $250. The jury returned a verdict for plaintiffs, awarding $25,000 in compensatory damages and $10,000 in punitive damages. Defendants appealed from the judgment, contending, among other things, that thee was no conversion since conversion can only result from conduct intended to affect the chattel and not for mere negligent interference with it.

The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment of the trial court. Addressing itself to the issue of conversion, the Court held that in this case conversion was a proper remedy. The Court agreed that defendants had stated the general rule that conversion can result only from conduct intended to affect the property in question and that negligence would not constitute interference with the property. However, the Court said, there are situations in which a willful omission that deprives the plaintiff of his or her property can serve as a foundation for the action of conversion. For example, stated the Court, when one person is in possession of the property, or when he or she has such control over it that he or she can readily get possession (as when he or she has stored it with a bailee), and another person demands it, and the first person fails to deliver it, no modern court will save the other from being a converter on the ground that there was only a nonfeasance. The above cited example, the Court said, was squarely in point in the facts of the present case (11 Cal. 3d 908, 918) .

[h] Wrongful Appropriation of Property as Conversion

The facts and procedural background of de Vries v. Brumback (1960) 53 Cal. 2d 643, 2 Cal. Rptr. 764, 349 P.2d 532 , are discussed in § 51.20[3][a]. The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment of the trial court that defendant was liablefor conversion of jewels and other precious metals taken in a robbery. The Court stated that conversion was a continuing tort and existed as long as the person entitled to the use and possession of his or her property was deprived of it. The Court said that the case was tried on the theory of conspiracy and that the trial court expressly found that the general purpose of the conspirators, the robbers, and the receiver of the stolen property was to convert all of the stolen property taken in the robbery to their own use and benefit. Consequently, the Court held, when defendant subsequently took possession of the greater part of the stolen goods, he joined the conspiracy and became a part of the continuing plan to convert stolen property to the use and benefit of the conspirators (53 Cal. 2d 643, 647-648) .

In Kaiser Found. Health Plan, Inc. v. Aguiluz (1996) 47 Cal. App. 4th 302, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 665 , an insurer sued an attorney who had represented its insured, who had been injured in a motorcycle accident. After the insurer paid the insured's medical expenses, he hired the attorney to sue the other driver involved in the accident. At the insurer's request the insured executed an agreement acknowledging that his insurance contract required him to reimburse his insurer for the cost of treating the injuries he sustained in his accident, and required his attorney to reimburse the insurer by disbursing the money from any settlement or judgment directly to the insurer. The attorney knew about the agreement, and nonetheless disbursed the entire amount of a settlement of the personal injury action without any attempt to protect the insurer's interest. The insurer obtained a judgment against attorney. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that under the rule of Miller v. Rau (1963) 216 Cal. App. 2d 68, 30 Cal. Rptr. 612 , the attorney was liable for the settlement proceeds disbursed to his client in knowing disregard of the insurer's lien. Miller established that an attorney on notice of a third party's contractual right to funds received on behalf of his client disburses those funds to his client at his own risk. The court concluded that since the attorney knew about the reimbursement agreement his client signed, the insurer was entitled to recover (47 Cal. App. 4th 302, 307) .

Miller v. Rau (1963) 216 Cal. App. 2d 68, 30 Cal. Rptr. 612 , arose out of an action for money and accounting by plaintiff against defendant involving an alleged conversion of funds by one joint venturer to the exclusion of the other. Plaintiff and Aivex agreed to form a joint venture in which plaintiff was to purchase certain British surplus was aircraft and prepare them for shipment to the United States for sale. Aivex was to provide the capital for the purchase of the planes and for the attendant expenses involved in the purchase. At first the agreement was for an equal share of the net profits after deduction of the costs of the purchase; however, the agreement was later modified so that plaintiff was to receive 25 percent of the net profits. To raise the funds to purchase the planes, Aivex entered into a limited partnership agreement with several other persons. Upon return to the United States after purchase of the aircraft, plaintiff informed defendant, attorney for the limited partnership, that he objected to the limited partnership agreement and claimed not to be bound by it. Subsequently, plaintiff brought an action against Aivex and others, but not against defendant, for a declaration of rights concerning the purchased aircraft. Plaintiff notified defendant of the suit and cautioned him not to disburse any of the proceeds arising from the sale of the planes without written approval of plaintiff. The trial court in that action decreed, among other things, that plaintiff and Aivex were joint venturers, that net profits were to be divided 25 percent to plaintiff and 75 percent to Aivex, and that plaintiff and Aivex had joint control of the aircraft in question. The aircraft were sold during the pendency of that suit for a gross price of $199,000, less advances by the purchaser and for damages and missing parts. One payment of $70,355.14 was made to one of the limited partners, and the other two payments were made directly to defendant and Aivex. These latter two remittances were endorsed by Aivex and delivered to defendant who thereafter had sole custody and control of the funds. Defendant did not notify plaintiff that he had received the funds or that he distributed the funds back to Aivex to pay off its various debts. The trial court found that plaintiff was entitled to receive as his share of the sale of the aircraft 25 percent of the net profits, for a total of $30,264.98, and rendered judgment for plaintiff in that amount. Defendant appealed, contending that it was Aivex who had converted the property and not defendant who had delivered the money from the sale to Aivex as required by the terms of the limited partnership agreement.

The court of appeal, in affirming the judgment of the trial court, rejected defendant's contention as to nonliability. The court held that the agreement between Aivex and the limited partners could have no effect on plaintiff's original agreement and continuing interest in the funds from the proceeds of the sale of the aircraft in question as expressed in the joint venture agreement between plaintiff and Aivex. The court stated that a joint proprietary interest and right of mutual control over the subject matter of an enterprise, or over property engaged in the enterprise, are essential to a joint venture, and when members of a joint venture have appropriated the venture's assets to their own use and to the exclusion of another venturer, the latter innocent joint venturer may treat the matter as a conversion and sue for such (216 Cal. App. 2d 68, 75-76) . Defendant's liability, the court said, was based on the legal principle recognized in other jurisdictions that an agent who receives money to which his or her principal has no right, and has received notice not to pay the money to the principal, has a duty to hold for the rightful owner of the money so much of the proceeds as represented the owner's interest in it. Should the agent proceed to disburse the funds to his or her principal, an action for money had and received would lie against the agent. Applying this principle to the present case, the court held that not only did defendant not have a duty to pay the funds to the limited partnership, but that defendant had a positive duty to hold 25 percent of the net profits for plaintiff.Consequently, the court held, when defendant, by reason of Aivex's instructions relative to checks to be paid, knew that none of the funds was intended to be paid to plaintiff, payment by defendant to Aivex failed to satisfy his obligation to plaintiff (216 Cal. App. 2d 68, 76-77) .

[i] Bailee's Failure to Investigate Conflicting Claim of Possession as Conversion

In Messerall v. Fulwider (1988) 199 Cal. App. 3d 1324, 245 Cal. Rptr. 548 , plaintiff, purchaser of a boat and trailer, registered the property with the Department of Motor Vehicles in his own name and listed as legal owner the bank from whom he obtained the loan. When plaintiff later sold the property, it was agreed that he would retain title until the purchaser's final payment had been made, and that he had the right to retake possession of the property on default. The registration was never changed. Sometime later, the purchaser brought the property to defendant for repairs. Because the purchaser was behind on the payments, plaintiff considered him in default and decided to get possession of the property from defendant. Plaintiff met with defendant, offered to pay the storage fees (the purchaser had already paid for the repairs), and presented documentary evidence of his claim. Defendant refused to release possession unless and until plaintiff presented a court order establishing a right of possession. Plaintiff filed a complaint against defendant for conversion, and defendant filed a cross complaint in interpleader seeking a judicial determination of who had the superior right to possession. The trial court granted judgment in favor of plaintiff on both the complaint and cross complaint. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, finding that when a professional bailee is presented with reasonably compelling evidence demonstrating a third party is entitled to possession, the bailee must investigate the third-party claim (199 Cal. App. 3d 1324, 1327) . The court observed that conversion does not require that the plaintiff be the absolute owner of the property converted, but the plaintiff must show entitlement to immediate possession at the time of conversion. Thus, one who wrongfully withholds personal property from another who is entitled to it under a security agreement may be liable for conversion (199 Cal. App. 3d 1324, 1329) . The court said that in a conversion action, in order for a bailee to defeat a third party's claim to possession of the property, the bailee must show that he or she had a right to possession. Defendant argued that he had a right to possession of the property because he had a lien on it for storage charges. The court agreed, but observed that a lien is sufficient to deny the owner's right to possession only until the lien was redeemed, and redemption may be made by offering to pay the holder of the lien (199 Cal. App. 3d 1324, 1330) . The court said that plaintiff, as the holder of a security interest, had an interest in the property and was therefore entitled to redeem defendant's lien. Thus, given plaintiff's offer to pay the outstanding storage charges on the property, whatever lien defendant had was redeemed. The court went on to point out that defendant's other right to possession depended on his status as bailee of the boat. That status placed on him a duty to investigate plaintiff's claim and gave him a limited right of possession during the investigation (the registration certificate in his name, a statement executed under penalty of perjury asserting his right to immediate possession, and a copy of the security agreement on which that right was founded). When this evidence was furnished, the burden fell on defendant to investigate the validity of the claim (199 Cal. App. 3d 1324, 1332) . The court noted that defendant undertook no investigation at all, but insisted on a court order, thereby refusing to deliver possession without any justification, and concluded that he was properly held liable for conversion (199 Cal. App. 3d 1324, 1332) . The court said that if defendant had sought and failed to obtain the purchaser's consent to a release of the property, he should have filed an interpleader action under Code Civ. Proc. § 386(b). In such an action, costs and attorney's fees may be awarded in the discretion of the court under Code Civ. Proc. § 386.6, and ordinarily should be awarded to a diligent bailee (199 Cal. App. 3d 1324, 1332-1333) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Lack of Knowledge or Good Faith No Defense to Conversion

The facts and procedural background of Poggi v. Scott (1914) 167 Cal. 372, 139 P. 815 , are discussed in § 51.23[3][a]. Defendant contended that he could not be held liable for conversion of wine contained in barrels sold since he did not know that the barrels contained wine and thought that he was merely disposing of junk or rubbish in the form of barrels. The Supreme Court, in reversing judgment for defendant, held that the foundation on which conversion is based rested neither on the knowledge nor the intent of the defendant; rather, it rested on the unwarranted interference by defendant with the dominion over the property of plaintiff from which injury to the latter results. Consequently, the Court held, neither good nor bad faith, care nor negligence, knowledge nor ignorance are the gist of the action, and defendant's wrongful sale of property not belonging to him constituted conversion of it and the property contained within, regardless of defendant's knowledge of the contents (167 Cal. 372, 375-376) .

Beverly Fin. Co. v. American Cas. Co. (1969) 273 Cal. App. 2d 259, 78 Cal. Rptr. 334 , involved, among other things, an action for conversion of a 1961 Cadillac by Beverly Finance. The automobile in question was stolen from its lot in St. Louis, Missouri, and the subrogee-owner paid the owner and took back an assignment of the owner's rights in the vehicle. The car was subsequently purchased by an auto agency in California, sold under a conditional sales contract, and subsequently repossessed by Beverly Finance as assignee of the contract. Beverly Finance obtained a certificate of ownership from the Department of Motor Vehicles. Eventually, the subrogee-owner learned of the whereabouts of thevehicle and demanded that Beverly Finance return the vehicle to it. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's rejection of Beverly Finance's contention that it acted in good faith and without notice, holding that Beverly Finance's assertion of legal ownership of the car was in derogation of the rightful owner's title and that the fact that Beverly Finance acted in good faith constituted no defense. Conversion, stated the court, is an instance of strict liability in which care, good faith, and lack of knowledge will not save defendant (273 Cal. App. 2d 259, 264) .

[b] Denial of Access to Property as Conversion

The facts and procedural background of Gruber v. Pacific States Sav. & Loan Co. (1939) 13 Cal. 2d 144, 88 P.2d 137 , are discussed in § 51.23[3][a]. The Supreme Court, in affirming the judgment of the trial court for plaintiff, held that defendant landlord, who refused to permit plaintiff to have access to his property, or to remove the property from the landlord's premises while plaintiff was arrears in rent, constituted an improper and wrongful exercise of dominion over plaintiff's property in violation of his rights as owner, and amounted to conversion of plaintiff's property.

Kessinger v. Organic Fertilizers, Inc. (1957) 151 Cal. App. 2d 741, 312 P.2d 345 , involved two consolidated actions in which plaintiff sought declaratory relief and defendant sought, among other things, damages for conversion of worm farm equipment stored on a lot adjacent to plaintiff's. Access to that lot was available only by use of a driveway on plaintiff's land. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment of the trial court in awarding defendant damages for plaintiff's conversion of its personal property. Citing prior California law, the court held that plaintiff's action in denying defendant the right to use her driveway in order to remove its personal property constituted conversion, since plaintiff had no right of dominion over land adjacent to her land, had participated and acquiesced in defendant's use of her driveway, and consequently exercised and assumed dominion and control over the property. If all the other requirements of a conversion were met, the court concluded, it was immaterial that the property in question was in the actual possession of a third party (151 Cal. App. 2d 741, 751-755) .

[c] Misdelivery of Personal Property as Conversion

In Smith v. Miller (1935) 5 Cal. App. 2d 564, 43 P.2d 347 , assignee of purchaser of furniture brought an action against a public warehouseman for conversion. Defendant admitted his failure to deliver the goods on demand of the assignors, but offered as a defense to the charge of conversion that he delivered the furniture to the true owner, a conditional vendor, on its demand. The court of appeal upheld the trial court's judgment in favor of plaintiff, holding that the holder of the conditional sales contract, by its actions in refusing the assignors' previous requests that the furniture be returned, and by its insistent demand for payment, had elected to treat the sale as an absolute one with title in the assignors. Consequently, the court concluded, defendant's delivery of the goods to the alleged true owner constituted a conversion of the property since a warehouseman, though justified in delivering goods to their true owner on demand, acts at his or her peril in purporting to do so if such person is not in fact entitled to their possession (5 Cal. App. 2d 564, 572) .

[d] Unauthorized Sale of Property of Another as Conversion

Plaintiff in Swim v. Wilson (1891) 90 Cal. 126, 27 P. 33 , brought an action for conversion against defendant stockbroker. Plaintiff alleged that stock owned by him was stolen by an employee in his office and delivered to defendant who subsequently sold the stock and turned over the proceeds to the employee. In affirming the judgment of the trial court, the Supreme Court held that defendant stockbroker was guilty of conversion and liable to the true owner of the stock for its true value even though at the time the broker received the stock, he believed that the employee was the true owner and, in good faith and without notice of the theft, sold the stock and paid the employee the net proceeds for its sale (90 Cal. 126, 128-131) .

[e] Willful Appropriation of Property as Conversion

In Fischer v. Machado (1996) 50 Cal. App. 4th 1069, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 213 , a farmer sued a commission merchant for conversion, alleging that the merchant commingled the proceeds of the sale of consigned farm products with its general accounts and then went out of business. The trial court found defendants liable and they appealed. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that because defendant was designated as commission merchant in the written agreement between the parties, it had an obligation to turn over the money received by it on plaintiff's account. The court rejected defendant's argument that there was no liability for conversion as a matter of law because there was no duty to segregate specific funds. The court ruled that an agent, with knowledge of another's right to receive a specific amount of money, can be liable for conversion when the agent applies it for his or her own use (50 Cal. App. 4th 1069, 1073) .

NOTE:

In Mendoza v. Continental Sales Co. (2006) 140 Cal. App. 4th 1395, 1405, 45 Cal. Rptr. 3d 525 , the court of appeal held that the court's rationale in Fischer v. Machado, discussed above, could also be applied to subagents of a grower who dealt only with an intermediary commission merchant. The court in Mendoza, in reversing a judgment on the pleadings granted in favor of defendants, held that a grower had stated a cognizable claim for conversion against parties who had purchased a farmer's crops for an amount below market value from a commission merchant and resold them for a much higher amount as part of an alleged scheme to prevent the grower from receiving the amount due under hiscontract with the commission merchant.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 51 CONVERSION
PART II. FORMS

5-51 California Points & Authorities § 51.24

§ 51.24 Supporting Contention That Defendant Has Converted Plaintiff's Personal Property--Measure of Damages for Conversion [Civ. Code § 3336]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and should be combined with the general form of memorandum of points and authorities pertaining to conversion of plaintiff's personal property (see § 51.20).]

THE PROPER MEASURE OF DAMAGES IN AN ACTION FOR CONVERSION OF PERSONAL PROPERTY IS THE VALUE OF THE PROPERTY AT THE TIME OF THE CONVERSION, PLUS INTEREST FROM THE TIME OF CONVERSION, OR AN AMOUNT SUFFICIENT TO INDEMNIFY PLAINTIFF FOR THE NATURAL, REASONABLE, AND PROXIMATE RESULT OF THE WRONGFUL ACT COMPLAINED OF, AND WHICH A PROPER DEGREE OF PRUDENCE ON HIS OR HER PART WOULD NOT HAVE AVERTED.

A. Measure of Damages for Conversion. The detriment caused by the wrongful conversion of personal property is presumed to be the value of the property at the time of the conversion, plus interest from the time of conversion, or an amount sufficient to indemnify the party for the natural, reasonable, and proximate result of the wrongful act complained of, and which a proper degree of prudence on his or her part would not have averted (see Civ. Code § 3336).

[Optional] B. Damages for Expenditures in Pursuit of Property. Damages may be awarded for fair compensation for the time and money properly expended in pursuit of the property converted (see Civ. Code § 3336; Gladstone v. Hillel (1988) 203 Cal. App. 3d 977, 992, 250 Cal. Rptr. 372).

[Optional] C. Loss of Profits as Measure of Damages. An award for damages that includes plaintiff's loss of profits as a result of the wrongful conversion of personal property may be proper when the awarding of such damages would indemnify plaintiff for the loss suffered that was the natural, reasonable, and proximate result of the wrongful act complained of, and when determination of damages based on value of the property at the time of conversion would be manifestly unjust (see Myers v. Stephens (1965) 233 Cal. App. 2d 104, 116-118, 43 Cal. Rptr. 420).

[Optional] D. Loss of Use as Measure of Special Damages. Loss of use of property wrongfully converted by defendant may be pleaded, proved, and awarded as special damages (see Franklin v. Municipal Court (1972) 26 Cal. App. 3d 884, 902, 103 Cal. Rptr. 354).

[Optional] E. Cost of Property as Proof of Value. Cost of goods is a circumstance tending to show value, and that evidence may be taken into consideration, along with other circumstances, when determining the subsequent value of property converted in order to establish the loss sustained (Wade v. Markwell & Co. (1953) 118 Cal. App. 2d 410, 431-432, 258 P.2d 497).

[Optional] F. Face Value of Written Instrument as Proof of Value. When personal property converted is a written instrument, the face value of the instrument converted is, prima facie, its true value (Knudsen v. Hill (1964) 227 Cal. App. 2d 639, 642-643, 38 Cal. Rptr. 859 ; Acme Paper Co. v. Goffstein (1954) 125 Cal. App. 2d 175, 181, 270 P.2d 505).

[Optional] G. Full Value as Measure of Damages for Owner of Limited Interest in Property as Against Stranger Without Ownership Rights. In an action for conversion, a plaintiff owning a limited or qualified interest in the property in question may, as against a stranger who has no ownership interest in the property, recover full value of the property converted (Hartford Fin. Corp. v. Burns (1979) 96 Cal. App. 3d 591, 604-605, 158 Cal. Rptr. 169 ; Camp v. Ortega (1962) 209 Cal. App. 2d 275, 288-289, 25 Cal. Rptr. 873).

[Optional] H. Prejudgment Interest Available. If the measure of damages is an amount sufficient to indemnify the party for the loss suffered, prejudgment interest may be awarded pursuant to the general prejudgment interest authority of Civ. Code § 3287(a) (Moreno v. Greenwood Auto Ctr. (2001) 91 Cal. App. 4th 201, 210-211, 110 Cal. Rptr. 2d 177).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a plaintiff's contention in an action for conversion that defendant has converted the personal property of the plaintiff by wrongfully depriving him or her of the use and possession of that property. This form sets forth the point that the proper measure of damages for the wrongful conversion of the property in question is the value of the property at the time of the conversion, or an amount sufficient to indemnify the plaintiff for the natural, reasonable, and proximate result of the foreseeable loss suffered. The optional paragraphs may be included in the points and authorities, when appropriate, whenever the point illustrated by a particular paragraph is at issue.

The argument supported by this memorandum may be used in support of an assertion that damages awarded were inadequate, or in response to an assertion that the damages sought or awarded were excessive.

This form should be combined with the general form of memorandum of points and authorities in § 51.20 and, if appropriate, with other forms of memoranda supporting the contention that defendant converted the personal property of the plaintiff [see §§ 51.21 -51.23].

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include discussion showing the value of the property involved at the time of the conversion, and show that the value is the proper amount of damages for conversion of the property. When damages based on that formula would be inadequate compensation, counsel should set forth facts showing that the amount of damages sought is sufficient to indemnify the owner of the property for the loss suffered.

These points and authorities may be combined, when appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which the substantive issue arises; for example, this form may be used in opposition to a demurrer, a motion for summary judgment or a motion for a new trial on ground of excessive damages, when counsel wishes to respond to an assertion that the damages sought or awarded are excessive. The points and authorities may also be used in support of a motion for a new trial for inadequate damages. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in §§ 51.30 and 51.31 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion of damages in relation to conversion of personal property, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 150, Conversion (Matthew Bender). For discussion, forms, and procedures relating to damages generally, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 177, Damages (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For forms of memoranda of points and authorities relating to damages generally, see Ch. 64, Damages: Tort .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Measure of Damages for Conversion

Civ. Code § 3336 provides that the detriment caused by the wrongful conversion of personal property is presumed to be the value of the property at the time of the conversion, plus interest from the time of conversion, or an amount sufficient to indemnify the party for the natural, reasonable, and proximate result of the wrongful act complained of, and which a proper degree of prudence on his or her part would not have averted.

Although this section appears to provide for alternate provisions for awarding damages, the first alternative provision, the value of the property at the time of the conversion, is considered to be the proper one. The second alternative provision, an amount sufficient to indemnify the party for the loss suffered, is resorted to only when the determination on the basis of value at the time of the conversion would be manifestly unjust [see, e.g., Myers v. Stephens (1965) 233 Cal. App. 2d 104, 116, 43 Cal. Rptr. 420 ; see also § 51.24[3][c]].

Damages are an essential element of conversion and must be pleaded. An allegation that the property converted was of a certain value and when appropriate, that plaintiff suffered additional loss as a result of being deprived of its use, is sufficient to allege damages and special damages [see, e.g., Franklin v. Municipal Court (1972) 26 Cal. App. 3d 884, 902, 103 Cal. Rptr. 354 ; see also § 51.24[3][d]].

[b] Damages for Expenditures in Pursuit of Property

In Gladstone v. Hillel (1988) 203 Cal. App. 3d 977, 250 Cal. Rptr. 372 , the plaintiff, a jeweler who crafted unique, limited-edition jewelry, sued his ex-partners for fraud and conversion of his jewelry designs and molds. At trial, plaintiff obtained a judgment against defendants for $90,400 in compensatory damages, including $10,000 in damages for efforts to recover the property, $100,000 in punitive damages, and injunctive relief. With regard to the award for efforts to recover property, the defendants objected that nearly all the expenses listed were connected to the litigation.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment with regard to the compensatory and punitive damages but held that the decree for injunctive relief had to be modified so that it did not enforce rights equivalent to copyright on a theory of conversion. With regard to the portion of damages attributable to efforts to recover property, the court held that under modern conditions, the legislative purpose of Civ. Code § 3336 would be defeated by rigorously excluding all items having some connection with litigation, because the only modern means of recovering property withheld is the institution of legal process. The court stated that the statute should at least extend to efforts that had a purpose independent of the litigation, such as preparation of lists of missing property, inspection of inventories, meetings with the other party, contacts with law enforcement authorities, and inquiries regarding appropriate courses of action (203 Cal. App. 3d 977, 992) .

[c] Loss of Profits as Measure of Damages

Myers v. Stephens (1965) 233 Cal. App. 2d 104, 43 Cal. Rptr. 420 , arose out of an action for specific performance for the sale of a house. Plaintiff later amended the complaint to allege conversion of the house. Defendant was president of a real estate development company that owned a single unit residence on land that it wanted to develop. He contacted a real estate broker and authorized the agent to sell the house. Subsequently, plaintiff offered to buy the house for $250, but said that he would need some time to move the house off of the property. The agent called defendant on the telephone in plaintiff's presence and transmitted the offer. Defendant responded that the time indicated by plaintiff was too long, that the price was immaterial, but that if the agent could improve on the time, he could go ahead and sell it. After the phone conversation, plaintiff and the agent agreed that plaintiff could have the house for $250 if he could remove it within 30 days. Plaintiff agreed and gave a check in that amount to the agent. The following day, defendant, without knowledge that the agent had accepted plaintiff's offer, sold the house to another party who had agreed to remove the house within 15days. At trial, plaintiff introduced evidence to the effect that after removal, renovation, and relocation, he would have sold the house and the land on which it stood for a profit of approximately $5,000 to $6,000. The trial court awarded plaintiff damages of $3,040 for conversion of the house. Defendant appealed, contending that it was improper to award damages to plaintiff based on his loss of profits from his anticipated resale of the house since they were, among other things, speculative and uncertain.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment of the trial court, holding that its awarding to plaintiff of his loss of profits as a result of the wrongful resale of the house in question was proper. Although the more appropriate measure for damages as provided in Civ. Code § 3336 was the value of the property converted at the time of conversion, the court stated, the second alternative measure of damages, the awarding to an injured party of an amount sufficient to indemnify him or her for the loss suffered that was the natural, reasonable, and proximate result of the wrongful act complained of, could be resorted to when the determination on the basis of value at the time of conversion would be manifestly unjust. The court agreed with the lower court's determination that there were special circumstances in the present case that required a different measure of damages to be applied than that provided under the first alternative provision. In addition, the court found that the trial court's award of $3,040 to plaintiff was supported by the evidence. The court stated that anticipated profits may be established within the range of selling prices and aggregate costs testified to. Consequently, the court computed, a resale value of the house less the commission on the sale, cost of the lot, moving, and renovation costs would leave plaintiff a net profit in the amount awarded by the trial court (233 Cal. App. 2d 104, 117-118) .

[d] Loss of Use as Measure of Special Damages

The facts and procedural background of Franklin v. Municipal Court (1972) 26 Cal. App. 3d 884, 103 Cal. Rptr. 354 , are discussed in § 51.20[3][b]. The court of appeal reversed the trial court's ruling that plaintiff had failed to state a cause of action against a municipal judge in his capacity as an individual for conversion of a revolver. In his complaint, plaintiff alleged that the value of the revolver was $100 and that because his work as a security guard required him to have a weapon, he was unable to procure work until he was subsequently able to borrow a gun, and that he was seeking damages for loss of use of his property. The court held that these allegations of damages were sufficiently pleaded (26 Cal. App. 3d 884, 902) .

[e] Cost of Property as Proof of Value

Plaintiff in Wade v. Markwell & Co. (1953) 118 Cal. App. 2d 410, 258 P.2d 497 , brought an action against defendant for conversion of a fur coat that she gave to defendant as security for a pledge for $300. Under the terms of the pledge, plaintiff was to repay the loan within 30 days, and in the event of default, she waived the giving of notice of time, place, and sale of the coat. The agreement also provided that the pledgee could be a purchaser of the property at any such sale. Plaintiff also arranged to have defendant clean the coat. Although the pledge was due in 30 days, plaintiff made no payments on the principal, interest, or cleaning costs of the coat; however, defendant charged plaintiff's account $4 per month interest for each month that payment was outstanding. Eight months later, plaintiff, in response to a notice by defendant, informed defendant that she wished to redeem the coat and was told that a 24-hour notice requirement was necessary, but that she could pick up her coat anytime within a week. Several days later, plaintiff presented herself at defendant's place of business to redeem her coat and was informed that the coat had been sold for the value of the pledge. Plaintiff demanded the return of the coat, but defendant refused, and subsequently resold the coat to a third party connected with the business. At trial, plaintiff testified that she had purchased the coat only two months before pledging it to defendant at a cost of $3,750, plus luxury and sales tax, for a total of $4,612.50. Defendant countered with testimony of an employee that it was only worth some $500. The trial court found that defendant, by its actions, had waived its rights under the pledge contract and awarded damages to plaintiff of $3,278, less the amount of the loan, interest, and cleaning costs. Defendant appealed, contending, among other things, that the trial court awarded excessive damages.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment of the trial court. It is generally recognized, the court stated, that the owner of property, whether generally familiar with such values or not, is competent to estimate its worth. Moreover, the court added, testimony as to cost of goods is a circumstance tending to show value, and that such evidence may be taken into consideration, along with other circumstances such as the extent of the use of the property, and its condition and depreciation, in order to determine the subsequent value of the property and establish the loss sustained as the result of the unlawful conversion (118 Cal. App. 2d 410, 431) . The amount of compensation, however, must be left to the sound discretion of the trier of fact, and the weight of the evidence on value is for the trial court's determination after consideration of the facts and circumstances of the case. In this case, the court said, the trial court's findings implied that it chose to believe plaintiff as to the condition of the coat and awarded damages accordingly, and since the record contained substantial evidence to support the finding, the damages awarded were proper (118 Cal. App. 2d 410, 432) .

[f] Face Value of Written Instrument as Proof of Value

Knudsen v. Hill (1964) 227 Cal. App. 2d 639, 38 Cal. Rptr. 859 , arose out of an action for conversion of a pledged promissory note. Defendants loaned plaintiff $18,000 to be used to build a motel. Plaintiff built and sold the motel to a thirdparty who, as part of the purchase price, gave plaintiff a promissory note for $26,500. This note was later pledged by plaintiff to defendants to secure the $18,000 loan. Thereafter, defendants sold the note to an agent of the third party who had purchased the motel and had given the note to plaintiff. The trial court fixed damages to plaintiff in the amount of $16,052.26, the sum for which defendants had sold the note. Plaintiff appealed, contending that the proper amount of the judgment awarded should have been the face value of the note.

The court of appeal, in modifying the judgment of the trial court, agreed with plaintiff's contention and increased the amount of damages consistent with the face value of the promissory note. In the United States, the court stated, the measure of damages arising out of conversion is to be measured by the value at the time of the conversion, and when the personal property converted is a written instrument, the face value of the bill or note converted is, prima facie, its true value. However, this rule is only applicable, the court noted, when the instrument imposes a personal liability on the maker or drawer, and when a promissory note imposes no personal liability on the maker, but is collectable only from property mortgaged to secure its payment, the measure of damages is the value of the security as of the date of the conversion. The court said that California statutory law provides that the value of an instrument in writing is a sum equal to the property to which it entitles its owner [see Civ. Code § 3356]. In the present case, the court held, the note's value was the prima facie evidence of its true value and should have been the proper measure of damages applied in this case in order to compensate plaintiff for all the detriment proximately caused by defendant's wrong. The court concluded that there could be no fairer yardstick to measure loss than to award plaintiff a sum equal to the value of the note, since that was the sum of his security against his debtors that defendants had, by their action, wiped out (227 Cal. App. 2d 639, 643-644) .

Plaintiff in Acme Paper Co. v. Goffstein (1954) 125 Cal. App. 2d 175, 270 P.2d 505 , brought an action against its defendant warehouse foreman for money had and received, based on a conversion perpetrated by fraud and deceit. Defendant had arranged a simulated series of purchases from a certain dealer with which plaintiff company had a previous transaction. On defendant's representations, purchase orders were made out, and checks issued to cover the cost of the purchased goods were given to defendant to pay to the driver on delivery of the goods. A co-conspirator of defendant would deliver merchandise to plaintiff and receive payment in the form of the checks made out to the dealer. The checks were endorsed in the dealer's name and cashed by the conspirators. Most of the delivered goods were subsequently sold by plaintiff in the regular course of its business. The trial court found for plaintiff and awarded damages to plaintiff in the amount of $6,954.90, the amount paid for the merchandise in the form of checks, plus exemplary damages. Defendant appealed, contending, among other things, that plaintiff incurred no damage since most, if not all the items, for which plaintiff paid for were subsequently sold.

The court of appeal, in affirming the judgment of the trial court, rejected defendant's contention. The court said that the presumption of damage to plaintiff for the conversion of his or her personal property cannot be repelled in favor of one whose possession was wrongful from the beginning, by the subsequent application of the property to the benefit of the owner, without his or her consent [citing Civ. Code § 3337]. Under the circumstances, the court said, it was unnecessary to determine whether or not any merchandise was received, and impliedly later sold. Plaintiff, in this case, did not consent to the purchases and never ratified them after discovery. This was an action for money had and received, the court stated, based on a conversion perpetrated by fraud and deceit. The subject matter of the conversion was the checks received by defendant and applied to his own use, or that of his fellow conspirator. Proof of the measure of damages applicable in this case, the court concluded, was the face value of the checks converted (125 Cal. App. 2d 175, 181) .

[g] Full Value as Measure of Damages for Owner of Limited Interest in Property as Against Stranger Without Ownership Rights

The facts and procedural background of Hartford Fin. Corp. v. Burns (1979) 96 Cal. App. 3d 591, 158 Cal. Rptr. 169 , are discussed in § 51.22[3][g]. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment of the trial court in awarding the full value of the property converted as the amount of damages. Plaintiff in this case had a security interest in certain heavy equipment vehicles. At trial, plaintiff offered no evidence as to the remaining balance owed, and the trial court ruled that defendants' proffered evidence on the subject was irrelevant. On appeal, defendants contended that a holder of a security interest, in an action for conversion of the property in question, was limited to recovery of the remaining amount of indebtedness owed by the debtor on the property in the event that the total value of the property exceeded the amount of indebtedness.

The court of appeal rejected defendants' contention, holding that in an action for conversion, a plaintiff owning a limited or qualified interest in the property in question may, as against a stranger who has no ownership interest in the property, recover full value of the property converted (96 Cal. App. 3d 591, 605) . Citing prior California law, the court stated that the underlying basis for this rule was the fact that the party having the limited or qualified interest would be liable to the owner of the remaining interest and, in order to be adequately compensated, must receive sufficient compensation not only to satisfy his or her own loss, but also to satisfy the demands of the remaining owner. The court distinguished the facts of the present case from those types of cases in which an owner of a limited interest in property sues the owner of the property for conversion, if the property was wrongfully disposed of by the owner without authority. In those types of cases, thecourt said, the measure of damages was limited to the amount of the limited interest owned by the plaintiff, which was the amount of money owed to plaintiff by defendant. In the present case, however, the court pointed out, defendants were not the owners of the property in which plaintiff was a lien holder or other type of security holder, but were instead nondebtors and strangers to the security holder (96 Cal. App. 3d 591, 604-606) .

NOTE:

In an action by a security holder for conversion against the owner of property who wrongfully disposed of the property, the measure of damages can be no greater than the amount secured [see Civ. Code § 3338; see also Service v. Trombetta (1963) 212 Cal. App. 2d 313, 316, 28 Cal. Rptr. 68 ; Bastanchury v. Times-Mirror Co. (1945) 68 Cal. App. 2d 217, 236, 156 P.2d 488] .

Camp v. Ortega (1962) 209 Cal. App. 2d 275, 25 Cal. Rptr. 873 , involved an action for conversion of certain motion picture equipment stored in premises leased from defendant. Plaintiff had formed a partnership with another film producer to make motion pictures but a disagreement ensued, and the partnership dissolved, with plaintiff attempting to seek a new associate. In the meantime, the motion picture equipment was stored in defendant's premises; however, because of failure to pay rent, defendant locked plaintiff out of the premises and claimed all of the property contained in the premises as his. The trial court found for plaintiff and awarded damages of $3,125 to plaintiff. Plaintiff appealed, contending that the trial court had improperly excluded the sum of $4,600 from the amount of damages awarded, which was the amount of money subject to a chattel mortgage in the property held by a person other than defendant.

The court of appeal modified the judgment of the trial court by increasing the amount of damages awarded by $4,600, plus interest. In an action for conversion, the court stated, a plaintiff, although owning only a limited or qualified interest in property may, as against a stranger who has no ownership interest in the property in question, recover the full value of the converted property. The rationale of the rule, the court said, is that the owner of the limited or qualified interest is still liable to the person owning the superior or remainder interest for his or her share in the property. This rule, the court held, is applicable to owners of property such as plaintiff as well as to holders of secured interests in property (209 Cal. App. 2d 275, 286-289) .

[h] Prejudgment Interest Available

In Moreno v. Greenwood Auto Ctr. (2001) 91 Cal. App. 4th 201, 110 Cal. Rptr. 2d 177 , the plaintiff brought suit against a car dealership for conversion and other causes of action based on the defendant's actions in convincing the plaintiff to trade in her 1996 pickup truck for a 1997 model. Although the plaintiff, who spoke little English, thought she was buying the 1997 truck, she was actually executing a lease agreement. When the plaintiff refused to sign new papers in conjunction with the transaction and tried to rescind the agreement, the defendant repossessed the 1997 truck and refused to return the 1996 truck. The plaintiff prevailed on the conversion claim after a jury trial and was awarded damages for loss of use of the 1996 truck. The trial court entered judgment for the plaintiff, including prejudgment interest on the conversion damages, after reduction pursuant to remittitur. The defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court noted that the jury was never asked to determine the value of the 1996 truck, but was only asked through special verdict forms to determine the value of the loss of use of that truck and its accessories. Therefore, the damages awarded were damages under the second alternative found in Civ. Code § 3336--that is, an amount sufficient to indemnify the injured party for the loss suffered. The court held that although Civ. Code § 3336 does not specifically indicate that prejudgment interest is available if this measure of damages is used, prejudgment interest may still be awarded pursuant to the general prejudgment interest authority of Civ. Code § 3287(a). Under that statute, an award of prejudgment interest is proper on any damages certain, or capable of being made certain by calculation, if the right to recover vests on a particular day (91 Cal. App. 4th 201, 210-211) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Face Value of Written Instrument as Proof of Value

In Stenseth v. Wells Fargo Bank (1995) 41 Cal. App. 4th 457, 48 Cal. Rptr. 2d 192 , plaintiff sued his bank for letting his employee cash checks on his forged endorsement. After judgment was entered for plaintiff, the bank appealed on evidentiary issues, and plaintiff cross appealed on a trial court ruling that his damages could not include the time and effort he spent in uncovering the theft. Plaintiff relied on Civ. Code § 3336, which provides that damages for conversion may include fair compensation for time and money expended in pursuit of the property. However, the court of appeal noted that Com. Code § 3420 limits damages to the face amount of the converted instrument. As to whether the Civil Code or Commercial Code should govern, the court noted that in Sun N Sand, Inc. v. United Cal. Bank (1978) 21 Cal. 3d 671, 696, 148 Cal. Rptr. 329, 582 P.2d 920 , the Supreme Court has held that if the Commercial Code establishes a loss distributive scheme that applies, then that provision displaces any other provision of law (41 Cal. App. 4th 457, 466) . The court thus concluded that plaintiff's recovery was limited to the face value of the instrument. Since the trial court did not err in excluding evidence relating to for time and effort spent attempting to recover the converted property, the judgment was affirmed in this regard.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 51 CONVERSION
PART II. FORMS

5-51 California Points & Authorities § 51.25

§ 51.25 Supporting Contention That Defendant Has Converted Plaintiff's Personal Property--Emotional Distress Damages Recoverable

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and should be combined with the general form of memorandum of points and authorities pertaining to conversion of plaintiff's personal property (see § 51.20)].

PLAINTIFF IS ENTITLED TO AN AWARD OF EMOTIONAL DISTRESS DAMAGES ARISING OUT OF DEFENDANT'S CONVERSION OF PERSONAL PROPERTY.

Emotional Distress Damages Recoverable. A plaintiff is entitled to recover emotional distress damages growing out of a defendant's conversion of his or her personal property (Gonzales v. Personal Storage, Inc. (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 464, 477, 65 Cal. Rptr. 2d 473).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a plaintiff is entitled to recover emotional distress damages growing out of a defendant's conversion of his or her personal property.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should provide facts showing that defendant interfered with plaintiff's dominion over the property and argue that plaintiff suffered emotional distress as a result.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion of damages resulting from the conversion of personal property, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 150, Conversion (Matthew Bender). For discussion, forms and procedures relating to damages generally, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 177, Damages (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For memoranda of points and authorities relating to the measure of damages for conversion, see § 51.24. For memoranda of points and authorities relating to damages generally, see Ch. 64, Damages: Tort .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Emotional Distress Damages Recoverable

In Gonzales v. Personal Storage, Inc. (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 464, 65 Cal. Rptr. 2d 473 , a self-storage facility converted approximately $60,000 of a tenant's personal property. The jury awarded plaintiff $232,582 in emotional distress damages. On appeal defendant argued that the jury should not have been permitted to award plaintiff damages for her emotional distress. The court of appeal let the jury award stand, holding that damages for emotional distress growing out of a defendant's conversion of personal property are recoverable. In support of its holding the court cited Schroeder v. Auto Driveaway Co. (1974) 11 Cal. 3d 908, 921, 114 Cal. Rptr. 622, 523 P.2d 662 , as the only California case it could find which dealt directly with a claim for emotional distress growing out of the conversion of personal property, and the Restatement (Second) of Torts § 927, illustration m, which provides: that where property has been converted if the deprivation is the legal cause of harm to the feelings, damages may be allowable for the harm. The court ruled that although the landlord-tenant relationship imposed no duty on it to protect plaintiff's emotional well-being, the limits on emotional distress damages which exist in negligence cases did not apply in conversion cases; where the act of dominion over the property of another provides the converter with very direct knowledge of the likely consequences of the interference. The court reasoned that in conversion cases there is far less likelihood that allowing recovery for emotional distress damages will create liability which is out of proportion to the nature of the defendant's act and concluded that notwithstanding further developments in the law of negligence, damages for emotional distress growing out of a defendant's conversion of personal property were recoverable (56 Cal. App. 4th 464, 477) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 51 CONVERSION
PART II. FORMS

5-51 California Points & Authorities § 51.26

§ 51.26 Opposing Contention That Defendant Has Converted Plaintiff's Personal Property--Real Property as Not Subject to Conversion

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

REAL PROPERTY CANNOT BE THE SUBJECT OF AN ACTION FOR CONVERSION.

A. Real or Immovable Property. Real or immovable property consists of land, that which is affixed to land, that which is incidental or appurtenant to land, and that which is immovable by law, except for those items which are agreed to be treated as goods under a contract of sale (Civ. Code § 658).

B. Real Property as Property Not Subject to Conversion. An action forconversion of real property will not lie (Graner v. Hogsett (1948) 84 Cal. App. 2d 657, 662, 191 P.2d 497).

[Optional] C. Fixtures Treated as Real Property by Terms of Conveyance Not Subject to Conversion. Fixtures specifically enumerated as part of the real property and as part of the security by the terms of a conveyance are real property and therefore not subject to conversion (see McAllister v. Metzger (1963) 220 Cal. App. 2d 692, 701-705, 33 Cal. Rptr. 879).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to plaintiff's contention in an action for conversion that defendant has converted plaintiff's personal property by wrongfully depriving him or her of the use and possession of that property. This form sets forth the point that real property is property that cannot be the subject of conversion. The optional paragraph may be included in the points and authorities whenever the real property in question concerns fixtures or other property that by the terms of a conveyance, is considered to be real property.

The argument supported by this memorandum may be raised in response to an assertion by the plaintiff that the property in question was property subject to conversion.

These points and authorities may be combined, when appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which the substantive issue arises; for example, this form may be used in support of a demurrer or a motion for a summary judgment, when counsel wishes to assert that the property in question is real property and therefore not subject to conversion. The points and authorities set forth in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include discussion showing the nature of the property in question and demonstrate that under the facts of the case and under California law, the property in question is real property and therefore not subject to conversion.

This form may be used in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 51.21.

For further discussion of property not subject to conversion because it is considered to be real property, see Ch. 150, Conversion , in California Forms of Pleading and Practice.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Real or Immovable Property

Civ. Code § 658 provides that real or immovable property consists of: (1) land; (2) that which is affixed to land; (3) that which is incidental or appurtenant to land; and (4) that which is immovable by law; except that for the purposes of sale, emblements, industrial growing crops and things attached to or forming part of the land, which are agreed to be severed before sale or under the contract of sale, are to be treated as goods and be governed by the provisions of the Civil Code regulating the sales of goods.

[b] Real Property as Property Not Subject to Conversion

Plaintiff in Graner v. Hogsett (1948) 84 Cal. App. 2d 657, 191 P.2d 497 , brought an action for conversion of certain personal and real property. Plaintiff executed a contract to purchase both the real and personal property which was to be conveyed to him after completion of certain installment payments agreed to in the sale of the property. Plaintiff failed to make complete payments, and the property was sold to defendant purchasers with the consent and participation of plaintiff. Plaintiff subsequently sued for conversion, contending, among other things, that he had received no consideration for the transfer of his interest in the property. The trial court entered judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment of the trial court. The court held that the complaint in trover for the wrongful conversion of the real property in question was defective. An action for conversion will not lie for real property. There was no theory, the court added, on which it could be held that a cause of action is stated as to conversion of real property (84 Cal. App. 2d 657, 662) .

[c] Fixtures Treated as Real Property by Terms of Conveyance Not Subject to Conversion

McAllister v. Metzger (1963) 220 Cal. App. 2d 692, 33 Cal. Rptr. 879 , involved an action for conversion of a sprinkler system and removable cottage. Defendants executed a purchase money deed of trust with plaintiffs to secure payment on a balance due after sale of certain real property to plaintiffs. Included in the sale were a sprinkling system consisting of connectable pipes, various sprinkler heads, and related equipment. The pipes could be moved, dismantled, and stored. The sprinklers were mounted on wheels and could be moved while sprinkling. As part of the terms of the deed of trust, all fixtures, either installed at the time of the conveyance, or to be installed thereafter, were to be considered as part of the real estate in order to protect the security of the trust deed. Included as fixtures were sprinklers, sprinkler systems and equipment, and flumes. After plaintiffs acquired the land, they added flumes to the water system. These flumes were individual redwood troughs connected together. Plaintiffs also brought ontothe land a removable five-room cottage and placed it on mud sills. Subsequently, plaintiffs defaulted and defendants obtained a court order appointing a receiver for the property. The receiver, on instructions of defendants, tagged all the property on the ranch as property under the control of the receiver, including the sprinkling system, flumes, and cottage. The trial court entered judgment for defendants as to the sprinkling system and flumes. Plaintiffs appealed, contending, among other things, that there was a conversion as a matter of law of the sprinkling system and flumes. Plaintiffs further contended that these items were not installed, nor were they fixtures, but were their personal property.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment of the trial court. Addressing itself to the issue of the conversion of the sprinkler system and flumes, the court agreed with the trial court's finding that the sprinkler, pipe, and flumes were affixed and appurtenant to the real property, and were therefore a part of the real property and of the security of the deed of trust. This finding, the court said, was supported by the terms of the deed of trust, quite apart from any consideration of the law of fixtures. According to the terms of the trust, the court stated, items such as sprinklers and sprinkling systems and equipment pipes, as well as flumes were specifically enumerated and all could go under the term sprinkling system. The fact that the sprinkling system was mobile and could be disconnected and stored did not negate its function as a fixture, the court added, as its being set up for use constituted an installment on the property and was therefore within the terms of the deed of trust. Consequently, the court held, the receiver was properly authorized to take possession of the system and use it in connection with his management of the property (220 Cal. App. 2d 692, 701, 705) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Real Property as Property Not Subject to Conversion

Munger v. Moore (1970) 11 Cal. App. 3d 1, 89 Cal. Rptr. 323 , involved an action for damages for wrongful sale of real property. Defendant beneficiary of a deed of trust ordered the trustee of the deed of trust to foreclose on certain property even though plaintiff had made a timely tender of the sum needed to cure the default. In affirming the judgment of the trial court, the court of appeal noted that it was generally acknowledged that conversion was a tort that could not be committed in relation to real property and agreed with plaintiff's theory that a trustee or mortgagee can be liable to the trustor or mortgagor for damages sustained as a result of an illegal, fraudulent, or willfully oppressive sale of property under a power of sale contained in a mortgage or deed of trust (11 Cal. App. 3d 1, 6-7) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 51 CONVERSION
PART II. FORMS

5-51 California Points & Authorities § 51.27

§ 51.27 Opposing Contention That Defendant Has Converted Plaintiff's Personal Property--Intangible and Indefinite Property Rights Not Subject to Conversion

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF'S PROPERTY ALLEGED TO HAVE BEEN CONVERTED, _____ [CUSTOMER LIST or GOOD WILL OF BUSINESS or state other intangible property right as appropriate], IS PROPERTY THAT IS TOO INTANGIBLE, UNCERTAIN, AND INDEFINITE TO BE SUBJECT TO CONVERSION.

A. Property That Is Intangible, Uncertain, and Indefinite as Not Subject to Conversion. Conversion is a proper remedy for the wrongful appropriation of goods, chattels, or personal property which is specific enough to be identified, and is not an available remedy for property which is indefinite, intangible, and uncertain (see Olschewski v. Hudson (1927) 87 Cal. App. 282, 286-289, 262 P. 43).

[Optional] B. Goodwill of Business and Customer List for Specific Route as Property Not Subject to Conversion. Goodwill of a business or patronage of a specific list of customers in a definite route is not property subject to conversion (Adkins v. Model Laundry Co. (1928) 92 Cal. App. 575, 582-583, 268 P. 939 ; Olschewski v. Hudson (1927) 87 Cal. App. 282, 286-289, 262 P. 43).

[Optional] C. Literary Property as Incorporeal Right. A literary property is an incorporeal right, existing separate and apart from the paper on which it is written, and does not come within the definition of goods or chattels (see Italiani v. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Corp. (1941) 45 Cal. App. 2d 464, 466-467, 114 P.2d 370).

[Optional] D. Gambling Losses Not Subject to Conversion. A generalized claim for gambling losses, even if the losses were the result of other players' cheating which a card club failed to prevent, is not actionable as conversion (Vu v. California Commerce Club, Inc. (1997) 58 Cal. App. 4th 229, 235, 68 Cal. Rptr. 2d 31).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to plaintiff's contention in an action for conversion that defendant has converted plaintiff's personal property by wrongfully depriving him or her of the use and possession of that property. This form sets forth the point that property that is intangible,uncertain, and indefinite cannot be subject to conversion.

The argument supported by this memorandum may be raised in response to an assertion by the plaintiff that the property in question was property subject to conversion.

These points and authorities may be combined, when appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which the substantive issue arises; for example, this form may be used in support of a demurrer or a motion for a summary judgment, when counsel wishes to assert that the property in question is too intangible, uncertain, and indefinite to be subject to conversion. The points and authorities set forth in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include discussion showing the nature of the property in question and demonstrate that the property is too intangible, uncertain, and indefinite to be subject to conversion.

This form may be used in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 51.21.

For further discussion of property not subject to conversion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 150, Conversion , (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Property That Is Intangible, Uncertain, and Indefinite as Not Subject to Conversion

Plaintiff in Olschewski v. Hudson (1927) 87 Cal. App. 282, 262 P. 43 , brought an action against defendant for wrongful conversion of property rights in a laundry route. Plaintiff was trustee in bankruptcy and sold various routes of the laundry company to other laundries. Thereafter, he demanded that defendant's agent of the bankrupt laundry company turn over all the memoranda and list of customers to the route to the purchaser of the route. Instead, deceased agent sold the route to another laundry company. Defendant demurred to the complaint on the ground that it failed to state a cause of action. The trial court sustained the demurrer, and, on plaintiff's failure to amend the complaint, entered judgment in favor of defendant. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal upheld the judgment of the trial court, holding that an action for conversion of the customer route would not lie (87 Cal. App. 282, 289) . A list of laundry customers, the court said, is a property right which may be appropriately protected, but, citing prior California law, it is not a tangible right which may be handled and transferred like stocks, bonds, personal effects, household goods, or animals. The property right of a laundry route is akin to the goodwill of a business and is susceptible of ownership, and such ownership, along with the benefits of trade, patronage of a specific list of customers in a definite route is protectible by injunctive relief. However, the court continued, there is nothing definite or tangible in the character of the ordinary list of laundry customers which makes an effort to transfer the district in which they live subject to an action for conversion. Conversion, the court stated, was not intended to reach this type of intangible, uncertain, and indefinite property right. The very meaning of the word conversion is to change into another form, substance, or state; to transform, or change; at law it means the wrongful appropriation to one's own use the goods of another. The very definition of the word, the court continued, presupposed the existence of tangible goods or chattels in a form capable of being changed, transformed, turned over, delivered, or appropriated for the use and benefit of the wrongdoer. In reviewing the history of trover and conversion, the court observed that these actions provided a remedy for recovering the value of specific chattels wrongfully converted, and not for money had and received for payment of debts. Trover and conversion did not operate on chattels generally, but specifically, on chattels or property capable of being identified as the actual property or thing wrongfully taken or converted. Consequently, the court noted, it appeared that trover or conversion lies only for the wrongful appropriation of goods, chattels, or personal property which is specific enough to be identified, and not for indefinite, intangible, and uncertain property rights such as the mere goodwill of a business, trade secrets, or routes with specific customers. The deceased agent, the court held, acquired no title to property, and having none, his attempt to transfer the route to another conveyed no title. Since the agent conveyed no specific tangible property right, the court of appeal concluded that the action of the trial court in sustaining the demurrer to the complaint was proper (87 Cal. App. 282, 286-289) .

The court of appeal discussed Payne v. Elliot (1880) 54 Cal. 339, 340-342 [see § 51.21[3][a]]. The court of appeal said that the Supreme Court in Payne had stated that conversion lies for the wrongful appropriation of every character of personal property, and found this to be a too broad a statement when applied to the doctrine of conversion. In Payne, all that was involved, the court said, was whether shares of stock that were wrongfully appropriated could be the subject of conversion. Since shares of stock were represented by certificates which were evidence of a definite interest in the assets of a company, the court said, they were tangible, capable of being identified, and subject to conversion. However, the Supreme Court in Payne had actually said, in reviewing the history of trover and conversion, that under modern law, conversion and trover had developed into a proper remedy for the conversion of every species of personal property, including certificates of stock (54 Cal. 339, 341) . These certificates of stock, however, were but evidence of shares of stock, and shares of stock, though intangible rights to property, could be the subject of contract, sale, gift, mortgage, bailment, andpledge, and, under California law, were personal property subject to taxation, attachment, execution, levy, and sale, and therefore also subject to conversion (54 Cal. 339, 342) .

[b] Goodwill of Business and Customer List for Specific Route as Property Not Subject to Conversion

Plaintiff in Adkins v. Model Laundry Co. (1928) 92 Cal. App. 575, 268 P. 939 , brought an action for an alleged breach of contract against defendant, apparently on the basis of an unlawful interference with plaintiff's property right to a certain laundry route that he had purchased from the previous driver of the route. Defendant subsequently dismissed plaintiff from the route. The jury in the case awarded damages to plaintiff and defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment of the trial court, holding that a suit at law for a breach of contract was not a proper remedy for wrongful interference with intangible property rights (92 Cal. App. 575, 585) . Unlawful interference with property rights in the goodwill of a business, benefits of trade, or patronage of a specific list of customers in a definite laundry route may be protected by injunctive relief, the court stated; however, there is no such property right in the intangible interest of an exclusive privilege to collect laundry or sell newspapers in a specific district which will authorize damages in a suit at law for conversion (92 Cal. App. 575, 582-583) .

The facts and procedural background of Olschewski v. Hudson (1927) 87 Cal. App. 282, 262 P. 43 , are discussed in § 51.27[3][a]. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's sustaining of defendant's demurrer on the ground that the complaint failed to state a cause of action for conversion of property consisting of a list of customers of a certain laundry route. Patronage of a specific list of customers in a definite route is protectible by injunctive relief, the court said, but there is nothing definite or tangible in the character of the ordinary list of laundry customers that makes an effort to transfer the district in which they live subject to an action for conversion. Consequently, the court held, the trial court did not err in sustaining defendant's demurrer.

[c] Literary Property as Incorporeal Right

Plaintiff in Italiani v. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Corp. (1941) 45 Cal. App. 2d 464, 114 P.2d 370 , brought an action for damages for plagiarism of a moving-picture scenario. Plaintiff alleged that he had submitted to defendant studio a scenario entitled "Johnny of the Circus," but that it was returned to him with the explanation that it was not suitable for moving pictures. Thereafter, defendant studio produced and released a film entitled "O'Shaughnessy's Boy," which, plaintiff claimed, was plagiarized from the script that he had previously submitted to defendant and that defendant had unlawfully appropriated and converted to its own use. The trial court sustained defendant's demurrer to an amended complaint on the ground that plaintiff failed to bring his action within the two-year period required by Code Civ. Proc. § 339(1) for actions arising out of an oral contract. Plaintiff appealed, contending that his action was for conversion of literary property and therefore the three-year time limit under Code Civ. Proc. § 338(c) applied.

The court of appeal, in affirming the judgment of the trial court, held that the property that was the basis of the action was incorporeal, and as such, it had no physical existence that allowed it to come under the designation of goods and chattels. Plaintiff's scenario, the court stated, was what the law designated as an intellectual production, though the court admitted that in some instances this designation was a misnomer. As an intellectual product, the court added, it was an intangible incorporeal right, and existed separate and apart from the property in the paper on which it was written, or the physical substance in which it was embodied. Code Civ. Proc. § 338(c), the court declared, applied to the taking, detaining, or injuring of any goods or chattels, or the recovery of personal property. The statute prescribed a limitation for those actions which, the court noted, could be classed broadly as the common law actions of trover, detinue, and replevin. All of these actions, the court observed, involved the concept of interference with possession of, or damage to, some specific tangible property, and were not concerned with intangible or incorporeal rights which have existed in connection with, or entirely apart from, any particular piece of physical property (45 Cal. App. 2d 464, 466-467) .

[d] Gambling Losses Not Subject to Conversion

In Vu v. California Commerce Club, Inc. (1997) 58 Cal. App. 4th 229, 68 Cal. Rptr. 2d 31 , plaintiffs appealed from a summary judgment in favor of a card club, in an action to recover moneys plaintiffs lost while playing card games at the club, allegedly as a result of cheating. Plaintiffs asserted causes of action for conversion against the club and certain employees and players based on the alleged cheating. Plaintiffs subsequently recharacterized the conversion charges as involving the club's retaining of funds confiscated from Pan-Nine games in which the club detected cheating. The club moved for summary judgment arguing that plaintiffs could not establish that it had converted any specific sums from them. In response to the motion, plaintiffs offered little direct evidence that they had encountered the alleged cheating in their play at the club, and no evidence that cheating had been the cause of their losses.

The court of appeal affirmed. It stated that while the subject of the conversion action was the funds plaintiffs lost, neither their pleading nor responsive proof identified any specific, identifiable sums that the club took from them. This rendered the generalized claim for money not actionable as conversion (58 Cal. App. 4th 229, 235) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 51 CONVERSION
PART II. FORMS

5-51 California Points & Authorities § 51.28

§ 51.28 Opposing Contention That Defendant Has Converted Plaintiffs Personal Property--Plaintiff Failed to Show Ownership With Right to Possession or Actual Possession

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF HAS FAILED TO SHOW HIS/HER/ITS OWNERSHIP AND RIGHT TO POSSESSION OF THE PROPERTY IN QUESTION, OR ACTUAL POSSESSION OF THE PROPERTY.

A. Plaintiff Failed to Show Ownership With Right to Possession or Actual Possession. In an action for conversion, plaintiff must show that he or she is the owner with right to possession, or actual possession, of the property in question at the time of the alleged conversion (General Motors Acceptance Corp. v. Dallas (1926) 198 Cal. 365, 371, 373, 245 P. 184 ; Kronsberg v. Milton J. Wershow Co. (1965) 238 Cal. App. 2d 170, 174-175, 47 Cal. Rptr. 592).

[Optional] B. Defendant Having Superior Interest in Property. A defendant who retains, under a contract, title to property transferred to plaintiff and who has a right to repossession of the property on default of payment for the property has a superior interest in the property over plaintiff and may exercise his or her right under the contract to repossess the subject property (see Silverstin v. Kohler & Chase (1919) 181 Cal. 51, 54, 183 P. 451).

[Optional] C. Defaulting Chattel Mortgagor as Having No Right of Possession. A defaulting chattel mortgagor whose property is subject to repossession on default by the terms of the chattel mortgage has no right of possession to the property as against the mortagee, even if the terms of the chattel mortgage provide that the mortgagor retains an equitable interest in the property (see Gardena Valley Airport, Inc. v. All Am. Sports Enters., Inc. (1964) 230 Cal. App. 2d 478, 481, 41 Cal. Rptr. 93).

[Optional] D. Imposition of Constructive Trust Does Not Retroactively Create Ownership Interest Superior to That of Levying Creditor. The judicial imposition of a constructive trust on property does not retroactively interfere with a third-party creditor's claim on that property that has previously been reduced to judgment and levied upon and therefore cannot support a conversion action against the levying creditor by the beneficiary of the constructive trust ( CHoPP Computer Corp. v. United States (9th Cir. 1993) 5 F.3d 1344, 1348-1349 (applying California law)).

[Optional] E. Medical Patient Does Not Retain Ownership Interest in Body Cells Removed With Consent and Later Used for Research. A medical patient who gives informed consent to the removal of certain body cells does not retain ownership in those cells once they are removed, and may not state a cause of action in conversion against researchers who later use those cells for potentially lucrative purposes (Moore v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (1990) 51 Cal. 3d 120, 136-142, 271 Cal. Rptr. 146, 793 P.2d 479).

[Optional] F. Mere Promise to Hold Property in Trust Does Not Create Sufficient Property Interest. Insurance policy language which binds insured's to hold "in trust" for insurer any third party recovery, without any showing of detrimental reliance or unjust enrichment, does not create a sufficient equitable interest in that property to sustain an action for conversion (Farmers Ins. Exch. v. Zerin (1997) 53 Cal. App. 4th 445, 454-455, 61 Cal. Rptr. 2d 707).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to plaintiff's contention in an action for conversion that the defendant has converted the personal property of the plaintiff by wrongfully depriving him or her of the use and possession of that property. This form sets forth the point that in an action for conversion, the plaintiff must show ownership and/or right to possession, or actual possession, at the time of the alleged conversion. The optional paragraphs may be included in the points and authorities, as appropriate, whenever a point illustrated by a particular paragraph is at issue.

The argument supported by this memorandum may be raised in response to an assertion by the plaintiff that he or she was the owner or a person with the right of possession, or had actual possession of the property in question, at the time of the alleged conversion.

These points and authorities may be combined, when appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which the substantive issue arises; for example, this form may be used in support of a demurrer or a motion for a summary judgment, when counsel wishes to assert that the plaintiff was not the owner, did not have the right to possession, or did not have actual possession of the property in question at the time of the alleged conversion. The points and authorities set forth in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include discussion showing that plaintiff was not the owner of the property in question or some other person with the right of immediate possession, or that he or she was not in actual possession at the time of the alleged conversion. For example, if the property was repossessed subject to a conditional sales contract on default of thepurchaser, counsel should discuss how, under California law, the seller had a superior interest in the property and a right to immediate possession under the terms of the contract [see Silverstin v. Kohler & Chase (1919) 181 Cal. 51, 54, 183 P. 451 ; see also § 51.28[3][b]].

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

This form may be used in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 51.22.

[d] Relating Pleading and Practice Forms

For further discussion of the necessity of showing ownership, or a right of possession, or actual possession at the time of the alleged conversion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 150, Conversion (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff Failed to Show Ownership With Right to Possession or Actual Possession

Plaintiff in General Motors Acceptance Corp. v. Dallas (1926) 198 Cal. 365, 245 P. 184 , brought an action for conversion of two automobiles allegedly converted by defendant sheriff when he seized the property pursuant to a writ of attachment. Plaintiff was a finance company who purchased two conditional sales contracts from an automobile dealer. Under the terms of these contracts, plaintiff's assignor retained title. At trial, the trial court found, however, that plaintiff failed to prove the existence of valid conditional sales contracts covering the two vehicles in question and therefore acquired nothing by the assignment to it of the purported contracts. The trial court entered judgment in favor of defendant, and plaintiff appealed. On appeal, defendant responded by referring to provisions of the Motor Vehicle Act governing the method of the transfer of title and right of possession of a motor vehicle, which required that reregistration in the name of the transferee of an automobile within a certain time was a prerequisite to the passing of title, and that plaintiff failed to comply with these provisions.

The Supreme Court, in affirming the judgment of the trial court, held that in an action for conversion, the plaintiff had the burden to sustain the affirmative of the issue and prove either ownership and the right of possession or actual possession of the two vehicles in question (198 Cal. 365, 370) . The evidence, the Court said, showed that plaintiff was not in actual possession of the automobiles at the time of the alleged conversion. Moreover, the Court held, plaintiff had failed to show that it had obtained title and thereby ownership with a right to possession pursuant to the provisions of the Motor Vehicle Act governing transfer of title and right of possession of a motor vehicle. Consequently, the Court concluded, the judgment of the trial court had to be sustained even though its decision was based on a different theory (198 Cal. 365, 371, 373) .

Kronsberg v. Milton J. Wershow Co. (1965) 238 Cal. App. 2d 170, 47 Cal. Rptr. 592 , arose out of an action for breach of contract, conversion, and fraud. Plaintiffs and defendant entered into an agreement in which plaintiffs would convey their real and personal property to defendant to sell at an auction. Apparently, not all of the property was sold within the agreed-upon time. Plaintiffs alleged that defendant failed to reconvey an air facility; however, under the terms of the contract, defendant had not agreed to reconvey the property, but to arrange financing for it. After granting defendant's motion to strike the fourth amended complaint, the trial court entered dismissal of the action on plaintiffs' refusal to amend further. Plaintiffs subsequently appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's judgment on all counts, including the action for conversion, holding that the right of recovery in an action for conversion was derived from ownership with the right of possession, or from actual possession of the property in question at the time of the alleged conversion. Under the circumstances of the case, the court stated, plaintiffs could not qualify under either of the required categories. The air facility and attendant equipment had, the court observed, been conveyed to defendant, therefore plaintiffs were not the owners of and entitled to the possession of the property. Since plaintiffs' complaints for conversion each alleged that defendant's lawful possession of the property was terminated and that plaintiffs' demand for reconveyance was refused, the trial court's striking these complaints or sustaining defendant's demurrers to them was proper (238 Cal. App. 2d 170, 174-175) .

NOTE:

General Motors Acceptance Corp. and Kronsberg set forth the point that in an action for conversion, the plaintiff must show that he or she is the owner with right to possession of the property in question, or have actual possession of the property at the time of the alleged conversion. However, this language should not be interpreted to mean that the plaintiff must be the absolute owner of the property, but that he or she has an interest in the property superior to that of the defendant. In order to state a cause of action for conversion, the plaintiff must allege his or her ownership of the property in question or a right to immediate possession of the property [see Franklin v. Municipal Court (1972) 26 Cal. App. 3d 884, 902, 103 Cal. Rptr. 354 ; see also § 51.22 regarding the interest necessary to maintain an action for conversion].

[b] Defendant Having Superior Interest in Property

Plaintiffs in Silverstin v. Kohler & Chase (1919) 181 Cal. 51, 183 P. 451 , brought an action for conversion of a piano that it had leased from defendant's assignor. By the terms of the lease, the seller retained title to the piano, but titlewould pass to plaintiffs on payment in full, plus one dollar. The price of the piano was $500 and plaintiffs had paid $130. After failure to make further payments, defendant assignee sued plaintiffs for the amount of installments due; however, it allowed plaintiffs to remain in possession of the piano. Defendant obtained a judgment, but plaintiffs failed to pay that judgment or to make any further payments on installments subsequently accrued, and defendant repossessed the piano. Plaintiffs thereafter brought this action for conversion. By the terms of the contract, the seller had the option of terminating the lease and repossessing the piano, or accelerating the payments due and demanding payment in full. The trial court entered judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed the judgment of the trial court on the issue of conversion. Defendant acted in accordance with the contract which was, the Court concluded, a conditional sales contract in the form of a lease. Defendant had not declared the whole of the purchase due and sued for that amount; rather, it sued for the installments due under the terms of the contract and allowed plaintiffs to remain in possession of the piano until plaintiffs failed to pay that judgment or subsequently accrued installments. Consequently, the Court held, defendants had a right under its contract to retake possession of the piano (181 Cal. 51, 54) .

NOTE:

Silverstin sets forth the point that in an action for conversion, the plaintiff must show that he or she is the owner with right to possession of the property in question, or have actual possession of the property at the time of the alleged conversion. However, this language should not be interpreted to mean that the plaintiff must be the absolute owner of the property, but that he or she has an interest in the property superior to that of the defendant. In order to state a cause of action for conversion, the plaintiff must allege his or her ownership of the property in question, or a right to immediate possession of the property [see Franklin v. Municipal Court (1972) 26 Cal. App. 3d 884, 902, 103 Cal. Rptr. 354 ; see also § 51.22 regarding the interest necessary to maintain an action for conversion].

[c] Defaulting Chattel Mortgagor as Having No Right of Possession

Gardena Valley Airport, Inc. v. All Am. Sports Enters., Inc. (1964) 230 Cal. App. 2d 478, 41 Cal. Rptr. 93 , involved a cross action for conversion by a mortgagor against its mortgagees of personal property which was the subject of a chattel mortgage. Mortgagees brought two separate actions against defendant mortgagor for recovery of monies due on a lease, and to recover the deficiency due on a promissory note secured by a chattel mortgage after sale of mortgaged items. Mortgagees leased certain premises to mortgagor, which mortgagor used as an auto racetrack. The mortgagor was facing financial difficulties, and a chattel mortgage was executed between the parties concerning certain personal property on the premises used in connection with the racing of cars. By the terms of the chattel mortgage, mortgagees had the right, on default of payment due, to foreclose on the property and sell all rights, title, and interest of mortgagor in the property. Subsequently, mortgagor failed to make payments and abandoned the premises. Mortgagees took possession of the premises and the property contained within it in order to sell the property subject to the terms of the chattel mortgage. Before the sale of the property, mortgagees operated the racetrack using the equipment of mortgagor. They also leased the premises, along with the property subject to the chattel mortgage, to another racing organization. The trial court entered judgment for mortgagees on their actions and against mortgagor on its cross action. Mortgagor subsequently appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment of the trial court, holding that there was no wrongful conversion of the subject items. For an action in conversion, the court said, it was necessary for plaintiff to show ownership of the property with a right to possession, or actual possession. In the present case, the court held, mortgagor had, at the time of the alleged conversion, neither ownership of the property nor actual possession of it. Mortgagor claimed that it had a vested interest in the property, but could not demand possession of the property. The court agreed that the mortgagor could not make a lawful demand for the property since the mortgagees' right to the property was established, as the court pointed out, by the terms of the chattel mortgage (230 Cal. App. 2d 478, 481) .

NOTE:

Gardena Valley Airport sets forth the point that in an action for conversion, the plaintiff must show that he or she is the owner with right to possession of the property in question, or have actual possession of the property at the time of the alleged conversion. However, this language should not be interpreted to mean that the plaintiff must be the absolute owner of the property, but that he or she has an interest in the property superior to that of the defendant. In order to state a cause of action for conversion, the plaintiff must allege his or her ownership of the property in question, or a right to immediate possession of the property [see Franklin v. Municipal Court (1972) 26 Cal. App. 3d 884, 902, 103 Cal. Rptr. 354 ; see also § 51.22 regarding the interest necessary to maintain an action for conversion] .

[d] Imposition of Constructive Trust Does Not Retroactively Create Ownership Interest Superior to That of Levying Creditor

The plaintiff in CHoPP Computer Corp. v. United States (9th Cir. 1993) 5 F.3d 1344 , had sued a former investment promoter (Laurins) in California superior court, alleging a tortious conspiracy to disparage plaintiff and thereby drive down the price of its stock so that Laurins and others could profit from short sales of the stock. The state court issued a preliminary injunction prohibiting Laurins fromwithdrawing any proceeds from any short sales of the stock. While this suit was pending, the United States government had launched a tax investigation against one of Laurins' alter ego companies. As a result of Laurins' failure to comply with a discovery order of the federal district court, Laurins was assessed fines and civil penalties totaling $694,000. The United States obtained writs of execution to collect on the judgment and fine and then levied on a stock brokerage account controlled by Laurins. Subsequently, plaintiff recovered a $29 million judgment against Laurins in the state court action. The superior court judgment imposed a constructive trust in favor of plaintiff on all proceeds of short sales by Laurins of plaintiff's stock, which included the funds contained in the stock brokerage account. Plaintiff then brought an action against the United States and the stock brokerage firm in federal district court, alleging that the government's levy and retention of the funds from the account (and the brokerage firm's disbursement of the funds to the government) constituted a conversion under California law. The district court granted defendants' motion for summary judgment, and the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed.

The appellate court noted that California substantive law governed the action. The court observed that in order to maintain an action for conversion under California law, plaintiff must show that it had title to or a right to possess the funds in the account and that plaintiff's interest must have existed at the time of the levy or at the time that plaintiff demanded return of the funds after entry of final judgment in the state court action (5 F.3d 1344, 1347) . Plaintiff argued that it had an ownership interest in the account as a result of the constructive trust. The court conceded that some California cases suggest that a constructive trust "springs into existence" at the moment a wrongful taking occurs. The court disagreed, however, that cases dealing with limitations or other rights between the "trustor" and the "trustee" of a constructive trust establish that imposition of such a trust may interfere with a third party's prior claim that has been reduced to judgment and levied upon. The court observed that retroactive creation of a constructive trust is not necessarily a self-executing award of equitable title. Moreover, the court noted, there was no California law that suggests that plaintiff may rely on a 1990 judgment to impede satisfaction in 1988 of a competing judgment that was already final. The preliminary judgment did not give plaintiff a prior claim to the brokerage account since it was not final, was addressed only to the parties to the state court action, and did not purport to impose a constructive trust on the account. Only the final state court judgment recognized the existence of a constructive trust, and it came too late for the purpose of defeating the government's earlier levy (5 F.3d 1344, 1348) . The court concluded that imposition of the constructive trust did not give plaintiff title to the account at the time of the government's levy. Therefore, the government did not commit a conversion when it levied on the account, and the brokerage firm did not commit conversion when it surrendered the funds to the government (5 F.3d 1344, 1349) .

[e] Medical Patient Does Not Retain Ownership Interest in Body Cells Removed With Consent and Later Used for Research

In Moore v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (1990) 51 Cal. 3d 120, 271 Cal. Rptr. 146, 793 P.2d 479 , a medical patient sued medical personnel and researchers in conversion for the use of cells removed from his body for potentially lucrative research purposes. Plaintiff, after learning that he had "hairy-cell leukemia," consented in writing to the removal of his spleen. Following the operation, plaintiff returned to the hospital several times, when his physician removed blood samples. Using cells obtained from these samples, the physician established a "cell line" for which he applied for a patent, which was based on the physician-negotiated agreements for commercial development of the cell line and products to be derived from it. Plaintiff sued the hospital, his physician, and researchers, stating many causes of action, including conversion, based on the use of his cells in that manner without his permission. The trial court sustained all defendants' demurrers to the complaint, and the court of appeal reversed. Defendants obtained review from the California Supreme Court.

The California Supreme Court reversed the decision of the court of appeal with respect to the cause of action in conversion, holding that under the facts plaintiff did not state a cause of action (51 Cal. 3d 120, 148) . (The Court also held that plaintiff stated a cause of action for breach of fiduciary duty and lack of informed consent with regard to plaintiff's physician (51 Cal. 3d 120, 148) .) With respect to the conversion cause of action, the Court noted that to establish a conversion, plaintiff must establish an actual interference with his or her ownership or right of possession. A plaintiff who has neither title to the property alleged to have been converted, nor possession of it, cannot maintain an action for conversion. Inasmuch as plaintiff did not expect to retain possession of his cells following their removal, to sue for their conversion he must have retained an ownership interest in them (51 Cal. 3d 120, 136-137) . The Court stated that there are several reasons to doubt that he did retain any such interest. First, no reported judicial decision supports his claim, either directly or by close analogy (51 Cal. 3d 120, 137-140) . Second, California statutory law, such as Health & Safety Code § 7054.4 (concerning waste disposal of human tissues following scientific use), drastically limits any continuing interest of a patient in excised cells. Third, the subject matters of the patent cannot be plaintiff's property, in that the patented cell line is both factually and legally distinct from the cells taken from his body (51 Cal. 3d 120, 140-141) . Federal law permits the patenting of organisms that represent the product of "human ingenuity," but not naturally occurring organisms (51 Cal. 3d 120, 141-142) . Human cell lines are patentable as an inventive effort. Therefore, plaintiff's allegations that he owns the cell line and the products derived from it are inconsistent with the patent, which constitute an authoritative determination that the cell line is the product of invention (51 Cal. 3d 120, 142) .

The Court then considered whether it should extend the theory of conversion to impose liability based on plaintiff's allegations, and concluded that it would be inappropriate to do so. The Court held that a fair balancing of the relevant policy considerations counsels against extending the tort, for example, the protection of a competent patient's right to make autonomous medical decisions, and the protection of researchers engaged in socially useful activities who have no reason to believe that their conduct contravenes a donor's wishes (51 Cal. 3d 120, 142-143) . The Court concluded that existing disclosure obligations, rather than an unprecedented extension of the conversion theory, protects patients' rights of privacy and autonomy without unnecessarily hindering research (51 Cal. 3d 120, 144) . The Court also stated that the extension of liability to this area is the proper prerogative of the legislature (51 Cal. 3d 120, 147) .

[f] Mere Promise to Hold Property in Trust Does Not Create Sufficient Property Interest

In Farmers Ins. Exch. v. Zerin (1997) 53 Cal. App. 4th 445, 61 Cal. Rptr. 2d 707 , an auto insurer sued the attorney representing its insureds in connection with their claims against third party tortfeasors allegedly responsible for their injuries. Two of plaintiff's causes of action stated claims for conversion. The complaint alleged that (1) plaintiff had property rights in any third party recoveries by virtue of insurance policy language which provided that when an insured had been paid damages by plaintiff under the policy and also recovered from another, the amount recovered from the other must be held by insured in trust for plaintiff and reimbursed to plaintiff to the extent of its payment; (2) defendant had notice of plaintiff's rights; and (3) defendant failed to pay any portion of the amount recovered from third parties to plaintiff. Defendant demurred, and the trial court sustained the demurrer and granted defendant's subsequent motion to dismiss.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the insurance policy language did not create an equitable lien in favor of plaintiff upon third party recoveries, and therefore, plaintiff had not sufficiently plead its ownership or right to possession of the property. The court noted that neither a promise to pay a debt out of a particular fund nor a promise to hold property in trust for another, without more, created an equitable interest in that property. Although detrimental reliance or unjust enrichment might make a mere promise to pay sufficient, this case did not involve either. The court reasoned that plaintiff had not detrimentally relied on a promise of reimbursement in performing its contractual obligation because, under the insurance policy, plaintiff's obligation to pay medical benefits was independent of any right of reimbursement. Moreover, the court stated that this was not a case in which equity required the rescue of a party otherwise without recourse. Rather, the court categorized the claim as nothing more than an attempt by plaintiff to avoid the necessity of seeking repayment from the parties primarily responsible by giving notice to their legal representative (53 Cal. App. 4th 445, 456-457) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Plaintiff Failed to Show Ownership With Right of Possession or Actual Possession

In Symonds v. Mercury Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 1458, 275 Cal. Rptr. 871 , the trial court sustained a demurrer to the complaint in an action brought by a checking account customer against her bank stating several causes of action. The bank had credited plaintiff's account with the amount of a check plaintiff had deposited, but had then charged the account for that amount eight months later when the deposited check was returned for insufficient funds. The appellate court reversed in part and affirmed in part, holding that plaintiff could not maintain a cause of action for conversion, because any money allegedly debited from the account was in fact only a revocation of the provisional credit made at the time of deposit, not a deprivation of the plaintiff's personal property (225 Cal. App. 3d 1458, 1468) .

In Otworth v. Southern Pac. Transp. Co. (1985) 166 Cal. App. 3d 452, 212 Cal. Rptr. 743 , the court of appeal affirmed the dismissal of an action following a successful demurrer, holding that the complaint failed to state a cause of action. The complaint, which alleged numerous theories of recovery, including conversion, arose out of a dispute concerning wage withholdings for income tax purposes by an employer. The court reasoned, in part, that the complaint did not allege that plaintiff (employee) had or was entitled to possession of money withheld by the employer. In order to state a cause of action for conversion, one of the essential elements is that plaintiff must allege that he owned or had the right to possess the withheld money at the time of the conversion (166 Cal. App. 3d 452, 458) .

Plaintiff in Del E. Webb Corp. v. Structural Materials Co. (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 593, 176 Cal. Rptr. 824 , brought an action against its supplier of roofing materials after the supplier, among other things, failed to supply certain materials. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's grant of summary judgment to defendant on the issue of conversion. Although plaintiff had paid for delivery of the materials at some future date, title in the materials had not passed to plaintiff on issuance of the checks. Moreover, plaintiff, according to the evidence, never had possession of the materials. Consequently, the court concluded, plaintiff, having neither possession nor title to the property, could not maintain an action for conversion (123 Cal. App. 3d 593, 610-611) .

The facts and procedural background of Eistrat v. Western Hardwood Lumber Co. (1958) 164 Cal. App. 2d 374, 330

P.2d 629 , are discussed in § 51.36[3][a]. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment of the trial court and its finding thatdefendant had not converted plaintiff's property by taking lumber previously ordered from plaintiff's lessee from plaintiff's land. Under the agreement between plaintiff and the logging company lessee, title passed to the logging company upon timber being severed. The court held that plaintiff failed to establish a cause of action for conversion. The court said that in an action for conversion, plaintiff must prove either ownership with the right of possession, or actual possession of the property claimed to have been converted at the time of the alleged conversion. In this case, title to the lumber, both under the law and under the terms of the contract, passed to the logging company upon severance, and ultimately to the defendant purchaser (164 Cal. App. 2d 374, 378-379) .

NOTE:

Eistrat sets forth the point that in an action for conversion, the plaintiff must show that he or she is the owner with right to possession of the property in question, or have actual possession of the property at the time of the alleged conversion. However, this language should not be interpreted to mean that the plaintiff must be the absolute owner of the property, but that he or she has an interest in the property superior to that of the defendant. In order to state a cause of action for conversion, the plaintiff must allege his or her ownership of the property in question, or a right to immediate possession of the property [see Franklin v. Municipal Court (1972) 26 Cal. App. 3d 884, 902, 103 Cal. Rptr. 354 ; see also § 51.22 regarding the interest necessary to maintain an action for conversion].

Scutt v. Bassett (1948) 86 Cal. App. 2d 373, 194 P.2d 781 , arose out of an action for conversion of certain automobile cranes which defendant agreed to build for plaintiff. In reversing the judgment of the trial court which found a conversion of five undelivered cranes, the court of appeal held that, as to the undelivered goods, plaintiff had made no demand for their delivery or offer of payment, and therefore did not have either ownership with the right to possession or the actual possession of the machines (86 Cal. App. 2d 373, 375) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 51 CONVERSION
PART II. FORMS

5-51 California Points & Authorities § 51.29

§ 51.29 Opposing Contention That Defendant Has Converted Plaintiff's Personal Property--Plaintiff Failed to Show Wrongful Interference With Property

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF HAS FAILED TO SHOW THAT DEFENDANT'S INTERFERENCE WITH THE PROPERTY IN QUESTION WAS WRONGFUL IN THAT DEFENDANT HAD AN INTENT OR PURPOSE TO CONVERT PLAINTIFF'S PROPERTY AND TO EXERCISE OWNERSHIP OVER IT, OR TO PREVENT PLAINTIFF FROM TAKING POSSESSION OF HIS/HER/ITS PROPERTY.

A. Plaintiff Failed to Show Wrongful Interference With Property. In an action for conversion, a plaintiff must show that defendant's interference with the property in question was wrongful by showing an intention or purpose on the part of the defendant to convert the personal property of the plaintiff and to exercise ownership over it, or to prevent the owner from taking possession of his or her property (see Aronson v. Bank of Am. Nat'l Trust & Sav. Ass'n (1937) 9 Cal. 2d 640, 643-646, 72 P.2d 548 ; Oakes v. Suelynn Corp. (1972) 24 Cal. App. 3d 271, 278-279, 100 Cal. Rptr. 838).

[Optional] B. Interference With Property Not Substantial. In an action for conversion, the conduct of the defendant in relation to plaintiff's property must constitute a substantial interference with that property, and any act of defendant done without an intent to exercise ownership over the property in question or to prevent the owner from taking possession of his or her property does not amount to a substantial interference with plaintiff's possession (see Zaslow v. Kroenert (1946) 29 Cal. 2d 541, 549-551, 176 P.2d 1 ; Itano v. Colonial Yacht Anchorage (1968) 267 Cal. App. 2d 84, 89-90, 72 Cal. Rptr. 823).

[Optional] C. Refusal to Deliver Property Pending Reasonable Inquiry Into Plaintiff's Rights to Property as Not Conversion. A qualified refusal to surrender property demanded by plaintiff is not a conversion of plaintiff's property if the real and stated purpose of defendant is to secure a reasonable opportunity to inquire into the claimant's right to it (Giacomelos v. Bank of Am. (1965) 237 Cal. App. 2d 99, 100-101, 46 Cal. Rptr. 612).

[Optional] D. Mere Movement of Property Is Not Conversion. A defendant's movement of personal property from one place to another, without asserting ownership or preventing the owner from exercising rights of ownership in the property, does not constitute a conversion (Simonian v. Patterson (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 773, 782, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 722 ; Itano v. Colonial Yacht Anchorage (1968) 267 Cal. App. 2d 84, 89, 72 Cal. Rptr. 823).

[Optional] E. Act by Mortgagee in Possession of Property to Protect and Preserve Property as Not Conversion. A chattel mortgagee in possession of the property subject to the mortgage may act to protect his or her rights under the lien; any acts in relation to the property that are done to preserve and protect the property so that it may remain subject to the lien and that are beneficial to those have subordinate rights, and not in antagonism to those rights, are not acts constituting conversion of personal property by the lienholder (see Gardena Valley Airport, Inc. v. All Am. Sports Enters., Inc. (1964) 230 Cal. App. 2d 478, 482-483, 41 Cal. Rptr. 93 ; Kertz v. Paris (1959) 168 Cal. App. 2d 67, 69-70, 335 P.2d 154).

[Optional] F. Impossibility of Redelivery of Stored Property Because ofLoss or Destruction as Not Conversion. When redelivery of stored goods is impossible due to loss or destruction, with or without the bailee's negligence, there is no conversion (George v. Bekins Van & Storage (1949) 33 Cal. 2d 834, 837-838, 205 P.2d 1037).

[Optional] G. Filing of Complaint in Interpleader Insufficient to Support Conversion Action. A person such as an attorney who, acting as a mere custodian, intermediary, or conduit, files a complaint in interpleader when faced with conflicting claims against litigation proceeds, does not exercise dominion over those funds sufficient to support an action for conversion (Shopoff & Cavallo LLP v. Hyon (2008) 167 Cal. App. 4th 1489, 1508, 85 Cal. Rptr. 3d 268).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to plaintiff's contention in an action for conversion that defendant has converted plaintiff's personal property by wrongfully depriving him or her of the use and possession of that property. This form sets forth the point that in an action for conversion, the plaintiff must show that defendant's interference with plaintiff's property was wrongful by showing an intention or purpose on the part of the defendant to convert the personal property of plaintiff and to exercise ownership over it, or to prevent the owner from taking possession of his or her property. The optional paragraphs may be included in the points and authorities, as appropriate, whenever a point illustrated by a particular paragraph is at issue.

The argument supported by these points and authorities may be raised in response to an assertion by plaintiff that defendant's interference with the property in question was wrongful.

These points and authorities may be combined, when appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which the substantive issue arises; for example, this form may be used in support of a demurrer or a motion for a summary judgment, when counsel wishes to assert that the plaintiff has failed to show any wrongful interference by the defendant with the plaintiff's property. The points and authorities set forth in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include discussion showing that plaintiff failed to assert or show any wrongful interference by defendant with plaintiff's property. For example, if the personal property was left on the real property of defendant after the plaintiff quit the premises for failure to pay rent, counsel should discuss facts showing that the defendant removed the property for safekeeping from one place to another without asserting ownership or preventing the owner from gaining access to the property [see, e.g., Itano v. Colonial Yacht Anchorage (1968) 267 Cal. App. 2d

84, 89-90, 72 Cal. Rptr. 823 (discussed in § 51.29[3][b])].

This form may be used in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 51.23.

For further discussion of the requirement that plaintiff show that the interference by defendant with plaintiff's property was wrongful, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 150, Conversion (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff Failed to Show Wrongful Interference With Property

Plaintiffs in Aronson v. Bank of Am. Nat'l Trust & Sav. Ass'n (1937) 9 Cal. 2d 640, 72 P.2d 548 , brought an action for conversion of shares of stock in two banks against the administrators of their deceased's estate and the defendant bank, which was the purchaser and successor in interest of the two banks in question. Plaintiffs alleged that the stock in question was inventoried as an asset of the estate, but that no accounting of certain transfers of the stock in question was made to the probate court. The administrators allegedly had the old certificates of shares of stock standing in the name of the deceased, or in the name of the estate, canceled and new certificates issued without order of the probate court or other authority. The complaint alleged that the administrators, in changing the certificates, had the intent and purpose to use and dispose of the shares represented thereby for their individual benefit and profit. The complaint did not, however, allege that they actually used the shares as alleged nor that they had ever disposed of them. The trial court entered a dismissal of the case after sustaining a general demurrer to the complaint. Before entry of the judgment, plaintiffs were allowed to submit an amended complaint, but the trial court denied leave to file the complaint after a hearing. Plaintiffs appealed on the ground that the trial court erred when it denied leave to amend.

The Supreme Court, in affirming the judgment and order of the trial court, held that plaintiffs failed to show that defendants had interfered with the dominion over plaintiffs' property. Conversion, the Court said, implies some act of ownership or exercise of dominion over property of another in defiance of his or her rights, and is the unwarranted interference by defendant with the dominion over plaintiff's property. In regard to the defendant administrators, the Court stated, plaintiffs failed to allege that the administrators were not acting as administrators of the estate at the time of the alleged conversion. Nor did plaintiffs allege any facts to rebut the presumption that the administrators were acting as such, and in that capacity their possession of the property in question was not an interference with the dominion of plaintiff, and that the administrators held the property for the heirs and not adversely to them. The complaint, the Court said, did not plead any facts on which an inference of fraud, wrong, or unfair dealing could be found. The only reasonable inference that could be drawn from the facts pleaded, the Court concluded, was that for some undisclosed reason, the names on the certificates were changed, but that the administrators held the shares as administrators for the use and benefit of plaintiffs (9 Cal. 2d 640, 643) . Directing its attention to the defendant bank, the Supreme Court found that plaintiffs had also failed to pleadfacts showing plaintiffs suffered any injury in the transactions. As stockholders in the original banks, the Court said, they were entitled to their proportionate part of the sales to defendant bank; however, plaintiffs failed to show that they were denied their share of the proceeds of the sale or that any fraud existed on the part of any of the banks involved (9 Cal. 2d 640, 644) . Defendant bank could not be liable for the alleged wrongful transfer by the original banks since the banks transferred the shares on their books on presentation by the administrators of the original certificates. Citing existing California law that governed the transfer of shares of stock, the Court stated that transfers of shares of stock could be made by endorsement by signature of the proprietor, his or her agent, attorney, or legal representative, and the delivery of the certificate. The Court held that when a party follows the terms of a statute that purports to measure the power or prescribes the mode of conduct of an act, the party cannot be charged with a wrong. Consequently, the Court concluded, since the complaint alleged that the selling banks did no more than follow the terms of the statute governing transfer of shares of stock, there was no conversion on the part o the original banks under the facts pleaded, and therefore no liability to the purchasing defendant bank (9 Cal. 2d 640, 644-646) .

Oakes v. Suelynn Corp. (1972) 24 Cal. App. 3d 271, 100 Cal. Rptr. 838 , involved an action for conversion and copyright infringement of certain architectural plans relating to converting a ferryboat into a nightclub and restaurant. Plaintiffs were hired to design an airport, motel, and marina project and had prepared plans for the renovation of a ferryboat to be converted into a restaurant and nightclub. The corporation that hired them went bankrupt, and defendant corporation purchased the boat in question and hired defendant architects to complete the renovation of the boat for the purpose of making it into an office building. At trial, one of the defendant architects testified that he was provided with a copy of plaintiffs' plans by the trustee in bankruptcy and assumed that the plans were included in the purchase of the boat and had used the plans only insofar as they depicted the existing condition of the boat and to avoid necessity of remeasuring various areas of the boat. Moreover, plaintiffs had been informed that defendants had a set of the plans, but made no demand for their return. At the conclusion of the trial, the trial court granted defendants' motion to strike the conversion count; however, through inadvertance, dismissal of the conversion charge was omitted from the judgment for defendants. Plaintiffs appealed, contending, among other things, that the trial court erred in striking the conversion count of their complaint.

The court of appeal modified the judgment to include dismissal of the conversion count and affirmed the judgment of the trial court as modified. Addressing itself to the conversion count, the court held that the evidence failed to disclose any intention on the part of defendants to convert plaintiffs' plans or to exercise ownership over them, or to prevent plaintiffs from taking possession of them. Conversion, the court stated, is any act of dominion wrongfully exerted over another's personal property in denial of or inconsistent with his or her rights in the property. In order to establish conversion, the court added, plaintiff must show an intention or purpose on the part of the defendant to convert the goods and to exercise ownership over them, or to prevent the owner from taking possession of his or her property. Defendants in this case, the court found, lawfully came into possession of plaintiff's plans. Moreover, defendants at no time used the plans in such a way as to interfere with a protectible interest of plaintiffs in their property and referred to the plans only to establish the existing conditions and measurements of the boat. In addition, the court said, defendants never denied plaintiffs' ownership in the plans, had notified them that they had a set of the plans, and plaintiffs had not at that time nor subsequently, made a demand for their return. Consequently, the court concluded, plaintiffs failed to establish that defendants possessed the requisite intent to convert plaintiff's plans (24 Cal. App. 3d 271, 278-279) .

[b] Interference With Property Not Substantial

Zaslow v. Kroenert (1946) 29 Cal. 2d 541, 176 P.2d 1 , arose out of an action for conversion and trespass. Plaintiff claimed title to certain real property by the foreclosure of a street assessment bond, while defendant was the grantee in a tax deed made by the state to the same property. After acquiring the property, defendant had her agent take possession of the property and notified plaintiff by mail that he could obtain his personal property left on the premises through her attorney's office. After plaintiff failed to contact the attorney, defendant had the property removed and placed in storage at plaintiff's expense, pursuant to her notice to plaintiff. No demand was ever made for the property. The trial court found for plaintiff, awarding plaintiff $1,200 as damages for conversion, plus additional amounts for trespass and exemplary damages. Defendant appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed the judgment of the trial court with directions to redetermine the amount of damages awarded on the basis that defendant's conduct amounted to only an ouster of plaintiff of his interest in the real property and trespass to his interests in the personal property. Addressing itself to the issue of conversion, the Court, citing prior California law and other authorities, reviewed the tort of conversion as it related to personal property left on real property. The Court stated that conversion is any act of dominion wrongfully exerted over another's personal property in denial of, or inconsistent with, the owner's rights in the property. The liability of one in possession of real property for the conversion of personal property that he or she finds on it, depends, in most cases, on a determination of whether the conduct of the defendant indicated an assumption of control or ownership over the goods in question. The refusal by an owner of real property to permit, on demand, the owner of chattels left on the real property to remove his or her goods constitutes conversion. Moreover, if thepossessor of the real property appropriates the chattels to his or her own use in obvious defiance of the owner's rights, he or she is liable to the owner for the conversion of them. However, the Court observed, every failure to deliver goods on demand is not necessarily so serious an interference with the owner's dominion that the defendant should be required to pay the full value of the goods withheld. The act of taking a building and locking it does not, of itself, the Court noted, constitute a conversion of the personal property contained within. To establish conversion, the Court stated, the plaintiff must show an intention or purpose to convert the goods and to exercise ownership over them, or to prevent the owner from taking possession of his or her property. In the present case, the Court found that all defendant's agent did was to remove plaintiff's goods from the defendant's real property and place them in storage. There was no evidence, the Court said, to show that defendant otherwise exerted any dominion over plaintiff's property in denial of or inconsistent with his rights. Plaintiff made no demand for the return of his property, nor attempted to obtain his property through defendant's attorney or at the place of storage. Moreover, the Court added, defendant's agent, acting as custodian of the goods, recognized plaintiff's complete title and right to them. Therefore, the Court concluded, when the conduct complained of does not amount to a substantial interference with possession or right to possession, but consists of intermeddling with or use of or damages to the personal property, the owner has a cause of action for trespass or case, and may recover only the actual damages suffered by reason of the impairment of the property or loss of its use (29 Cal. 2d 541, 549-551) .

The Supreme Court in this case and in a companion case [see Kroenert v. Zaslow (1946) 29 Cal. 2d 878, 879, 176 P.2d 8] ruled that both plaintiff and defendant held the property as tenants in common. The trial court in this case operated under the assumption that defendant had no interest in the property because her tax deed from the state was invalid on the ground that, because of an overlevy of taxes (eighty-three cents) the state did not acquire a valid deed to the property. The Supreme Court, however, ruled that a minor overlevy did not invalidate the entire tax levy and must be deemed to have been waived by failure to enter an appropriate objection. Therefore, defendant obtained a valid deed and accordingly, both plaintiff and defendant became tenants in common on the vesting of title from the respective taxing agencies (29 Cal. 2d 541,547-548) . Consequently, the Court said, plaintiff, as a cotenant, had the right of possession of the realty, which included the right to keep his personal goods on the property, and, therefore, defendant's agent, in placing the goods in storage, although not asserting ownership or substantially interfering with the property in question, committed a trespass by intermeddling with the possession of plaintiff and he was, as result of such acts, entitled to actual damages in an amount sufficient to compensate him for any impairment of the property or loss of its use (29 Cal. 2d 541, 551-552) .

Plaintiff in Itano v. Colonial Yacht Anchorage (1968) 267 Cal. App. 2d 84, 72 Cal. Rptr. 823 , brought an action for damages for the sinking of a small vessel following its removal from its moorings. Defendant operated a shipyard and maintained a wharf for the mooring of boats. Plaintiff purchased the boat in question from a party who had leased space at the wharf. By the terms of the lease, defendant reserved the right to assign or move any boat to any other mooring at any time. At the time of the purchase, the boat was moored at defendant's wharf. Defendant learned of the sale and adjusted its records accordingly and billed plaintiff for fees due, even though no formal lease was executed. Plaintiff maintained an erratic payment schedule, and became behind in payments. As a result, defendant requested plaintiff find a different moorage so that defendant could rerent the slip occupied by plaintiff to a good-paying customer. Plaintiff requested, and was granted, several delays. After several months, defendant towed plaintiff's boat to a work slip where it was secured by a lock and cable across the slip opening. Plaintiff made no effort to remove the boat, and testimony taken at trial indicated that defendant would not have interfered with any effort by plaintiff to do so. A week later, the boat sank. The jury returned a verdict of $9,150 in favor of plaintiff, and defendant moved for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict. The trial court denied the motion and entered judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appealed from the judgment and from the denial of an order for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment of the trial court, holding that plaintiff could not recover on the theory of conversion. Conversion, the court said, is defined as any act of dominion wrongfully exerted over another's personal property in denial of or inconsistent with his or her rights in the property. To establish conversion, the court added, plaintiff must show an intention or purpose on the part of the defendant to convert the goods and to exercise ownership over them, or to prevent the owner from taking possession of his or her property. The purpose for removing the boat from one slip to another was to provide the defendant with a slip available for a paying customer, the court said, and there was no evidence that defendant intended to prevent plaintiff from using or removing his boat. Defendant did not use or make any claim of ownership to the boat. The act of removing personal property from one place to another, without an assertion of ownership or preventing the owner from exercising all rights of ownership in the personal property, the court stated, is not enough to constitute a conversion. Consequently, the court held, the moving of the boat from one slip to another within defendant's anchorage, with no intent to exercise ownership over it or to prevent the owner from taking possession of his property, did not amount to a substantial interference with plaintiff's possession (267 Cal. App. 2d 84, 89-90) .

[c] Refusal to Deliver Property Pending Reasonable Inquiry Into Plaintiff's Rights to Property as Not Conversion

Giacomelos v. Bank of Am. (1965) 237 Cal. App. 2d 99, 46 Cal. Rptr. 612 , was an action for damages for conversion of proceeds of the sale from real property left to plaintiff widow for life with remainder to defendant as trustee for deceased's two children by a previous marriage. The property was sold under threat of condemnation, and plaintiff wanted the proceeds applied to her life estate. Defendant, relying on certain statutory provisions, felt that it was required to divide the proceeds of the sale and instituted a petition to the probate court to determine the matter. The probate court ruled that the proceeds must be divided; however, that decision was reversed by an appellate court. Plaintiff then brought this action for the additional income she would have had between the date of the sale of the real property and the date the proceeds were invested to produce income for her for life. The trial court entered judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal, in affirming the trial court's judgment, held that there was no conversion. Conversion, the court said, was the intentional exercise of dominion over a chattel that interferes with the right of another to control it. The good faith of the bank in believing that the law required division of the proceeds of the sale of the real property was not a defense; however, the court stated, the law recognized that a qualified refusal to surrender property demanded by the plaintiff was not a conversion if the real and stated purpose of defendant was to secure a reasonable opportunity to inquire into the claimant's right to it. In the present action, the court held, defendant bank asserted no right of its own; it acted solely as a testamentary trustee obligated to defend the rights of the remaindermen and to act in doubtful cases only on court order. Therefore, concluded the court, defendant was in a comparable position to a bailee who made a qualified refusal to surrender the property demanded until it ascertained whether or not the claimant had a valid interest in the property, and acted properly when, in relying on the state of the law as it understood it to be, it sought a prompt determination of the question (237 Cal. App. 2d 99, 100-101) .

[d] Mere Movement of Property Is Not Conversion

In Simonian v. Patterson (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 773, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 722 , plaintiff brought an action against his ex-fiancee's father for conversion and various other causes of action, arising out of his efforts to retrieve various items of personal property from his fiancee after their relationship had ended. The defendant father had helped his daughter move various items of personal property from the apartment that plaintiff and the daughter had shared to the daughter's new apartment. Plaintiff alleged that certain of these items (record albums and Christmas decorations) were moved without his permission and against his wishes, and that defendant had failed to return them on demand or to assist plaintiff in securing their return from defendant's daughter. The trial court sustained defendant's demurrer to all causes of action and dismissed the action, and the court of appeal affirmed.

The court of appeal rejected plaintiff's argument that the trial court had erred in granting defendant's demurrer to the conversion cause of action. The court noted that from the complaint as a whole, it was plain that the record albums and Christmas decorations were no longer in the defendant's possession and that they were obviously outside his power to return. The court observed that a refusal to deliver personal property is not a conversion unless the party has the power to deliver the goods at the time of demand for their return. The court deemed it irrelevant that the items might not have been moved in the first instance had the defendant exercised due care in ascertaining their rightful owner. The court analogized to the law of bailments, under which the bailee is not liable for conversion if he or she fails to redeliver goods because they have been lost or destroyed, even if the loss or destruction is the result of the bailee's negligence (27 Cal. App. 4th 773, 781) . Furthermore, the court held, the defendant did not exercise dominion over the items sufficient to convert them to his own use in violation of the plaintiff's ownership rights. Relying on the rule applicable to common carriers and to bailees, the court held that removing personal property from one place to another, without asserting ownership or preventing the owner from exercising his or her rights of ownership, does not constitute a conversion. Thus, the court concluded, that the simple act of moving items apparently belonging to defendant's daughter to her new apartment did not constitute a conversion of those items (27 Cal. App. 4th 773, 781-782) .

Itano v. Colonial Yacht Anchorage (1968) 267 Cal. App. 2d 84, 72 Cal. Rptr. 823 , is discussed in § 51.29[3][b].

[e] Act by Mortgagee in Possession of Property to Protect and Preserve Property as Not Conversion

The facts and procedural background of Gardena Valley Airport, Inc. v. All Am. Sports Enters., Inc. (1964) 230 Cal. App. 2d 478, 41 Cal. Rptr. 93 , are discussed in § 51.28[3][c]. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment of the trial court against defendant in its cross action for conversion against plaintiffs for equipment used by plaintiffs and their lessees in the operation of an auto racetrack that plaintiffs took over after defendant's default on certain promissory notes. Addressing itself to the issue of whether or not plaintiff's actions constituted conversion, the court of appeal found that plaintiffs had a right to possession of the chattels in question pursuant to the terms of its chattel mortgage with defendant and that defendant relinquished possession of the premises and the property contained within it in the face of mounting financial difficulties. When the original possession of claimant's property is lawfully obtained, or there is an acknowledgment of the mortgagor's interest, the dominion exercised by the mortgagee, thecourt stated, is not a conversion. Plaintiffs in this case, the court held, obtained possession lawfully through the terms of its chattel mortgage, and acknowledged defendant's interest in the property by taking steps for the foreclosure and sale of the property. Moreover, the court said, plaintiffs had a right to protect their lien rights in the property and any act done to preserve and protect the property so that it may remain subject to the lien, which was equally beneficial to those having subordinate rights, and not in antagonism to those rights, was not a wrongful conversion within the meaning of Civ. Code § 2910, which provides that wrongful conversion of personal property by a lien holder extinguishes the lien. Consequently, the court held, the use of defendant's chattels by plaintiffs under the circumstances was not a wrongful conversion since plaintiffs were justified in using and leasing defendant's property during the time preceding the foreclosure sale (230 Cal. App. 2d 478, 482-483) .

Plaintiffs in Kertz v. Paris (1959) 168 Cal. App. 2d 67, 335 P.2d 154 , brought an action to foreclose a chattel mortgage on defendants' property, and defendants filed a cross complaint for conversion of certain personal property subject to a chattel mortgage. Plaintiff leased certain premises to defendants and executed a promissory note secured by a chattel mortgage on the personal property contained within the premises consisting of fixtures and equipment used in the operation of defendants' laundry business. Defendants quit the premises after receiving a notice to quit following default on the promissory note. The personal property listed on the chattel mortgage remained in the building. Plaintiffs subsequently leased the premises to new tenants, who used defendants' chattels and kept them in repair. Defendants made no demand on plaintiff for return of the property, nor did they demand that the new tenants cease using the chattels. At trial, all parties testified that it was better to use the equipment than to permit it to remain idle. The trial court entered judgment adverse to defendants on their claim for conversion, and they appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment of the trial court, holding that there was no conversion. The court stated that when the original possession of the chattels is lawfully obtained, or there is an acknowledgment of the mortgagor's interest, the dominion exercised by the mortgagee is not unlawful, and therefore is not a conversion. Moreover, damages against a lessor for the alleged conversion of the lessee's property are properly refused when it appears that the property remained on the premises and lessee has not been refused its possession. In addition, the court said, a chattel mortgagee in possession after default may act to protect his or her rights under the lien, and an act done to preserve and protect property so that it may remain subject to the lien, which is equally beneficial to those having subordinate rights and not in antagonism to those rights, is not a wrongful conversion within the meaning of Civ. Code § 2910, governing the effect of a wrongful conversion of personal property by a lien holder. Consequently, the court held, the use of defendant's equipment by the new tenants was not a conversion, and the trial court properly found against defendants on their cross action (168 Cal. App. 2d 67, 69-70) .

[f] Impossibility of Redelivery of Stored Property Because of Loss or Destruction as Not Conversion

George v. Bekins Van & Storage (1949) 33 Cal. 2d 834, 205 P.2d 1037 , arose out of six causes of action to recover value of goods destroyed by fire, including a cause of action for conversion. Plaintiffs wired defendant, inquiring if it would store their valuable furniture in its ware house. The goods were shipped to defendant's warehouse on defendant's affirmative response. Subsequently, defendant sent to plaintiffs a warehouse receipt and contract together with an identification card. The warehouse receipt contained a clause limiting defendant's liability to $10 per 100 pounds per article unless the depositor of the goods fixed a greater value in writing at the time of delivery and the depositor agreed to pay an additional charge. The receipt also contained a paragraph in which the company would only be liable for failure to use ordinary care, and then only to the value of depositor's declared valuation of the goods. The identification card signed by plaintiffs acknowledged receipt of the warehouse receipt and contract, and their acceptance of its terms and conditions. Plaintiffs' household furnishings and effects were destroyed by fire while in possession of defendant's warehouse. The trial court found that defendant had converted plaintiffs' goods and that the goods were destroyed by fire as a result of defendant's negligence. Defendant appealed, contending that the evidence did not support these findings.

The Supreme Court, in reversing the judgment of the trial court, held that there was no conversion. Citing prior California law, the Court stated that the tort of conversion existed if there was an exertion of wrongful dominion over the personal property of another in denial of or inconsistent with his or her rights in the property. When a bailee refuses to redeliver goods to which the bailor is entitled, the tort of conversion is committed; and a prima facie case for conversion is made out by proof of the bailment and subsequent refusal of the bailee to make delivery on demand. However, the Court observed, if redelivery is impossible because the goods have been lost or destroyed, either without fault on the part of the bailee, or merely because of his or her negligence, there was no conversion. Negligence, the Court noted, was not an act of dominion that was necessary to make the bailee liable as a converter. The Court held that since the trial court found that plaintiffs' goods were destroyed by fire as a result of defendant's negligence, the finding that defendant converted plaintiffs' goods could not be sustained (33 Cal. 2d 834, 837-838) .

[g] Filing of Complaint in Interpleader Insufficient to Support Conversion Action

In Shopoff & Cavallo LLP v. Hyon (2008) 167 Cal. App. 4th 1489, 85 Cal. Rptr. 3d 268 , an attorney filed a complaint in interpleader to resolve multiple conflicting claims made by plaintiffs and several attorneys against the proceeds derived from a multiparty global settlement agreement. This complaint alleged that the recovery funds were in imminent danger of loss due to the impasse between the conflicting claimants and the various conflicting demands. One of the plaintiffs in the underlying action filed a cross-complaint in the interpleader action alleging conversion and other causes of action. The trial court eventually sustained a demurrer to the conversion cause of action. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's decision to sustain the demurrer on the conversion claim. The court agreed with the plaintiff's contention that some of the proceeds from the recovery, including stock in a business enterprise, could be the proper subject of a conversion action (167 Cal. App. 4th 1489, 1507) . However, the court held that plaintiff failed to plead that the attorney exercised dominion over the proceeds and converted them to his own use. Instead, as trustee of the recovery proceeds, the attorney retained and interpled the funds precisely in order to avoid potential liability for conversion, liability that he might have incurred had he disbursed funds to an improper party with knowledge that another claimant had lawful contractual rights to the proceeds. According to the court, the attorney, as a mere custodian, intermediary, or conduit who filed the interpleader action to resolve conflicting claims to the proceeds, did not exercise dominion over the funds sufficient to convert them to his own use in denial of the plaintiff's rights (

167 Cal. App. 4th 1489, 1508) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Plaintiff Failed to Show Wrongful Interference With Property

In Home v. Kramer (1936) 7 Cal. 2d 361, 60 P.2d 854 , defendant Gorbach soldmarket premises to a third party, including fixtures, which, by the terms of a lease agreement with defendant Kramer, constituted security for the faithful performance of the lease. A sublessee had taken control over a portion of the premises, including the fixtures, and on becoming bankrupt the trustee in bankruptcy claimed ownership of the fixtures. When Gorbach sold the fixtures to the purchaser, he advised the purchaser of the trustee's claim. The Supreme Court reversed the judgment for plaintiff, holding that defendant Gorbach's sale of the fixtures was not a conversion since he sold only the interest he had in the property subject to plaintiff's claim, and therefore the sale was not a denial of or act inconsistent with plaintiff's claim because there was no assertion of right or title hostile to that claim (7 Cal. 2d, 361, 363-364) .

In Software Design & Application, Ltd. v. Hoefer & Arnett, Inc. (1996) 49 Cal. App. 4th 472, 56 Cal. Rptr. 2d 756 , plaintiffs, who had lost assets to a financial consultant through a scheme involving a series of fictitious brokerage and bank accounts, sought to recover their money through an action for conversion against the brokerage firms and banks. The trial court sustained demurrers and dismissed the action. The court of appeal affirmed, stating that plaintiffs could not state a common law count for conversion of money because conversion requires an act of dominion over the property. Furthermore, money cannot be the subject of a conversion action unless a specific sum capable of identification is involved. For the banks, money came into various accounts in various sums, without any indication that it was held in trust for plaintiff. As for the brokers, they were bailees acting in good faith on instructions from their customer (49 Cal. App. 4th 472, 485) .

In Otworth v. Southern Pac. Transp. Co. (1985) 166 Cal. App. 3d 452, 212 Cal. Rptr. 743 , the court of appeal affirmed the dismissal of an action following a successful demurrer, holding that the complaint failed to state a cause of action. The complaint, which alleged numerous theories of recovery, including conversion, arose out of a dispute concerning wage withholdings for income tax purposes by an employer. The court of appeal reasoned, in part, that the complaint did not allege that defendant willfully and without legal justification interfered with plaintiff's right to possession of the withheld money, an essential element of the cause of action for conversion. In fact, the complaint indicated that the money was withheld for tax purposes and turned over to the I.R.S. Furthermore, it has been established by case law that employees have no cause of action against employers who, pursuant to directives or regulations of the I.R.S, withold wages and pay them over to the government in satisfaction of federal income tax liability (166 Cal. App. 3d 452, 458) .

Estergren v. Sager (1940) 39 Cal. App. 2d 401, 103 P.2d 177 , involved an action for, among other things, conversion of a jointly owned tractor. In reversing the judgment for defendant, the court of appeal held that plaintiff's complaint failed to establish the elements of conversion on the ground that common property was in existence and in the possession of one of the coowners. The property, the court said, was not lost, destroyed, or removed from the state, and therefore plaintiff could not recover the value of his undivided interest in the property (39 Cal. App. 2d 401, 403) .

Travelers Fire Ins. Co. v. Brock & Co. (1938) 30 Cal. App. 2d 112, 85 P.2d 905 , arose out of an action for conversion of a diamond brooch lost after transfer of the brooch by the bailee to a subbailee for repair work that plaintiff hired defendant to do. The court of appeal reversed the judgment for plaintiff, holding that a bailee for repairs does not wrongfully assume control of the bailor's property in placing the bailed article with another for repairs unless the bailment agreement expressly or impliedly requires the bailee to perform the labor personally (30 Cal. App. 2d 112, 114) .

[b] Interference With Property Not Substantial

Plaintiff in Jordan v. Talbot (1961) 55 Cal. 2d 597, 12 Cal. Rptr. 488, 361 P.2d 20 , sued her former landlord for conversion after he entered her apartment, removed her personal property to a warehouse, and stored it in her name. The Supreme Court affirmed the trial court's granting a new trial, holding that the verdict for conversion was unsupported by the evidence. Citing Zaslow v. Kroenert (1946) 29 Cal. 2d 541, 551, 176 P.2d 1 [see § 51.29[3][b]], the Court said that removal of another's property and storing it in the owner's name without any exercise of dominion or control was not conversion since it did not amount to a substantial interference with the possession or the right to possession of the property (55 Cal. 2d 597, 610) .

McAllister v. Metzger (1963) 220 Cal. App. 2d 692, 33 Cal. Rptr. 879 , involved an action for, among other things, conversion of a sprinkler system included as part of the sale of the land to plaintiffs by defendants, and a removable cottage placed on mud sills by plaintiffs. Plaintiffs defaulted on a promissory note secured by a deed of trust and defendants obtained a court order appointing a receiver of all the real property, improvements, and crops growing on the land. The receiver began tagging various items of personal property, including the removable cottage as property under the control of the receiver. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment of the trial court and held that the receiver's tagging of the cottage was not a substantial interference with plaintiff's property since plaintiff produced no evidence to show that defendants or their receiver dispossessed plaintiffs or exerted a physical control over the cottage inconsistent with plaintiff's rights (220 Cal. App. 2d 692, 697-708) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 51 CONVERSION
PART II. FORMS

5-51 California Points & Authorities § 51.30

§ 51.30 Supporting Contention That Claims for Damages for Expenditures Paid in Pursuit of Converted Property Must Be Necessary and Reasonable

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

IN AN ACTION FOR CONVERSION, CLAIMS FOR DAMAGES FOR EXPENDITURES PAID OUT IN PURSUIT OF PROPERTY THAT WAS CONVERTED MUST BE BASED ON EVIDENCE THAT THE EXPENDITURES WERE NECESSARY AND REASONABLE.

A. Expenditures Made in Pursuit of Recovery of Converted Property Must Be Necessary and Reasonable. Claims for damages for expenditures made in pursuit of converted property must be based on evidence that the expenditures were necessary and reasonable (Beetson v. Hollywood Athletic Club (1930) 109 Cal. App. 715, 722-723, 293 P. 821).

[Optional] B. Attorney's Fees Not Recoverable as Money Expended in Pursuit of Property. Attorney's fees incurred to recover converted property are not within the rule of Section 3336 of the Civil Code authorizing recovery of money paid out in pursuit of property (Russell v. United Pac. Ins. Co. (1963) 214 Cal. App. 2d 78, 91-92, 29 Cal. Rptr. 346).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of defendant's contention in an action for conversion that a claim for damages arising out of expenditures made in pursuit of recovery of the converted property must be based on evidence that the expenditures were necessary and reasonable. The optional paragraph may be included in the points and authorities whenever the damages sought or awarded are for attorney's fees paid out in connection with plaintiff's pursuit of the converted property.

The argument supported by this memorandum may be raised in response to claims by the plaintiff for damages arising out of expenditures paid out in pursuit of the converted property.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include discussion showing that the expenditures that plaintiff paid out in pursuit of the converted property in question were not necessary or reasonable under the particular circumstances of the case.

This form may be used in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 51.24.

These points and authorities may be combined, when appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which the substantive issue arises; for example, this form may be used in support of a demurrer, a motion for a summary judgment, or for a motion for a new trial on grounds of excessive damages, when counsel wishes to assert that plaintiff has failed to show that expenditures paid out in pursuit of the converted property were reasonable or necessary. The points and authorities set forth in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Related Points and Authorities

For points and authorities pertaining to damages in tort actions generally, including punitive damages, see Ch. 64, Damages: Tort .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Expenditures Made in Pursuit of Recovery of Converted Property Must Be Necessary and Reasonable

In Beetson v. Hollywood Athletic Club (1930) 109 Cal. App. 715, 293 P. 821 , plaintiff sued for conversion for loss of his automobile while parked in defendant's lot. Plaintiff's vehicle was subsequently recovered, and plaintiff sought damages to the automobile sustained in connection with the disappearance of the vehicle, plus damages for loss of use and for expenses in pursuit of recovery of his car. Plaintiff offered proof that the vehicle in question had sustained damage in the amount of $254.19, that he had expended $440 in the recovery of the property, and had sustained a loss of $350 for loss of use. The expenses entailed in procuring the automobile included $8 for telegrams, $50 to the sheriff in the county where the car was located, $326 for the cost of freight, and $45 to an investigator to locate the car. The evidence as to the loss of use consisted of the cost of rental of another vehicle for two months at $300 and $50 spent in taxicabs before plaintiff obtained the rental vehicle. The trial court found for plaintiff and awarded the damages prayed for. Defendant appealed, contending, that the damages awarded were excessive because the trial court erred in computing damages allowable to plaintiff.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment after modifying the amount of damages awarded. Addressing itself to the damages awarded to plaintiff as to expenses incurred in pursuit of property, the court found that plaintiff had been awarded excessive damages. The court held that since there was nothing in the record to support the necessity of the $8 for the telegrams, the $50 to the sheriff, or the reasonableness of the $45 for the investigator, there was no basis for the trial court to award these damages to plaintiff. The burden as to the necessity andreasonableness of these expenditures, the court ruled, rested on plaintiff, and in the absence of proof, the trial court should not have allowed these expenditures (109 Cal. App. 715, 722-723) .

[b] Attorney's Fees Not Recoverable as Money Expended in Pursuit of Property

Russell v. United Pac. Ins. Co. (1963) 214 Cal. App. 2d 78, 29 Cal. Rptr. 346 , involved consolidated actions for conversion of mining ore and recovery of attorney's fees expended in litigating certain actions taken against plaintiffs by some of the defendants. Plaintiffs, in an earlier and separate action, had brought an action against individual defendants in this case for injunctive relief and recovery of certain real property on which individual defendants were conducting ore mining operations. The individual defendants cross complained and obtained a restraining order against plaintiffs barring them from entering or interfering with the mine. Subsequently, these same defendants obtained a preliminary injunction against plaintiffs from working or interfering with the mine. However, after trial, the trial court entered judgment for plaintiffs. Defendants turned over the mine to plaintiffs, but refused to deliver ore previously mined from it, and plaintiffs brought the present action. The trial court awarded damages to plaintiffs, including recovery of expenditures paid out in pursuit of recovery of the property, including surveyor's fees, and attorney's fees expended in contesting the preliminary injunction and temporary restraining hearings in the previous case. Both sets of parties appealed, with plaintiff contesting the failure of the trial court to award prejudgment interest on the value of ore converted and on the counsel fees awarded.

The court of appeal, in modifying the judgment of the trial court, held that the award of attorney's fees allowed in the conversion action was erroneous (214 Cal. App. 2d 78, 92) . The general rule regarding attorney's fees, the court stated, is that they are not a proper item of recovery from the adverse party, either as costs, damages, or otherwise, unless there is express statutory authority or contractual liability for their recovery. Civ. Code § 3336, the court said, does not expressly provide for attorney's fees for the converting of property (that is, for the expenditures paid out in pursuit of recovery of the property converted). Consequently, the court held, citing prior California law, attorney's fees are not within the rule of damages provided by Civ. Code § 3336, and the party defendants to the conversion action are not liable for any expenditures for attorney's fees in that action (214 Cal. App. 2d 78, 91-92) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 51 CONVERSION
PART II. FORMS

5-51 California Points & Authorities § 51.31

§ 51.31 Supporting Contention That Recovery by Plaintiff of Converted Property Acts as Mitigation of Damages

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF CANNOT RECOVER THE VALUE OF THE PROPERTY CONVERTED WHEN HE/SHE/IT HAS RECOVERED THE PROPERTY, SINCE RECOVERY OF THE PROPERTY ACTS AS MITIGATION OF DAMAGES.

Recovery of Property by Plaintiff as Mitigation of Damages. In an action for conversion, when the plaintiff has recovered his or her property that had been unlawfully taken, he or she is considered to have received the property in mitigation of damages, and the measure of damages, absent special damage, is the expense of procuring its return with interest (Blewett v. Miller (1900) 131 Cal. 149, 151, 63 P. 157 ; Beetson v. Hollywood Athletic Club (1930) 109 Cal. App. 715, 722, 293 P. 821).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of defendant's contention in an action for conversion that recovery by plaintiff of the property converted acts as a mitigation of damages. The argument supported by this memorandum may by raised in response to a claim by plaintiff for the reasonable value of the property converted when he or she has recovered the property.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include discussion showing that although plaintiff has asked for damages for the reasonable value of the property converted, he or she has actually recovered the property converted.

This form may be used in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 51.24.

These points and authorities may be combined, when appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which the substantive issue arises; for example, this form may be used in support of a demurrer, a motion for a summary judgment, or a motion for a new trial on ground of excessive damages, when counsel wishes to assert that plaintiff has recovered the property converted and therefore is not entitled to the reasonable value of the property, but only for any money expended in recovery of the property, or specialdamages, if any. The points and authorities set forth in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Related Points and Authorities

For points and authorities pertaining to damages in tort actions generally, including punitive damages, see Ch. 64, Damages: Tort .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Recovery of Property by Plaintiff as Mitigation of Damages

Blewett v. Miller (1900) 131 Cal. 149, 63 P. 157 , arose out of an action for conversion of a harvester and five gang plows attached, levied, and sold by defendant sheriff, although they were exempt from execution. The trial court found for plaintiff and awarded the sum of $1,060. Defendant moved for a new trial on the ground of newly-discovered evidence. In his affidavit, the sheriff disclosed that all of the property levied on, including the property alleged to have been converted from plaintiff's intestate, was sold back to plaintiff's intestate for only $1,100 and that some of the property, such as 23 mules, were alone worth more than that sum.

The Supreme Court ordered a reversal of the judgment of the trial court and ordered a new trial. Had this information been known, the Court said, the amount of damages awarded to plaintiff would have been different. When one recovers his or her wrongfully taken property, the Court stated, he or she is considered to have received it in mitigation of damages and the measure of damages in that event, in the absence of special damages, is the expense of procuring its return, with interest. Consequently, the Court concluded, when plaintiff's property was seized and sold by defendant sheriff and was repurchased by the plaintiff from one who bought it at the sheriff's sale, the measure of damages was the amount paid to repurchase the property (131 Cal. 149, 151) .

The facts and procedural background of Beetson v. Hollywood Athletic Club (1930) 109 Cal. App. 715, 293 P. 821 , are discussed in § 51.30[3][a]. The court of appeal modified and affirmed the judgment of the trial court. Directing its attention to the issue of plaintiff's damages when the converted property has been recovered by plaintiff, the court stated that when one recovers his or her property that had been unlawfully taken from him or her, he or she is considered to have received the property in mitigation of damages, and the measure of damages, in the absence of special damage, is the expense of procuring its return with interest. In this case, the court held, plaintiff was entitled to his damages in pursuit of his property as well as for special damages incurred as a result of injury sustained to the vehicle during its absence, and loss of use of the car during the same period (109 Cal. App. 715, 722) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 51 CONVERSION
PART II. FORMS

5-51 California Points & Authorities § 51.32

§ 51.32 Supporting Contention That Plaintiff Who Regains Possession of Converted Property Prior to Adjudication of Entitlement to Possession May Recover Prejudgment Interest Calculated to Entry of Judgment

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

EVEN THOUGH THE PLAINTIFF REGAINED POSSESSION OF THE CONVERTED PROPERTY PRIOR TO TRIAL, THE PLAINTIFF IS ENTITLED TO PREJUDGMENT INTEREST CALCULATED TO THE DATE OF ENTRY OF JUDGMENT.

Right to Interest Extends to Entry of Judgment. If a plaintiff regains possession of converted goods prior to adjudication of the right to possession of those goods, either through a writ of possession under Code Civ. Proc. § 512.010 et seq. or otherwise, the plaintiff's right to prejudgment interest continues beyond the point at which the plaintiff regained possession and extends to the entry of judgment (Irving Nelkin & Co. v. South Beverly Hills Wilshire Jewelry & Loan (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 692, 702-703, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 815).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the plaintiff, despite regaining possession of converted property prior to trial, is entitled to recover prejudgment interest, based on the value of that property, calculated to the date on which judgment was rendered in the plaintiff's favor.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which these points are raised. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Thus, counsel should include facts showing when judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiff on the conversion claim.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Right to Interest Extends to Entry of Judgment

In Irving Nelkin & Co. v. South Beverly Hills Wilshire Jewelry & Loan (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 692, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 815 , the plaintiff was a wholesale jewelry dealer that consigned goods to another party in August and September of 1999. The plaintiff filed a UCC financing statement to protect its goods. Despite the fact that the consignment agreement specifically prohibited this other party from pledging the plaintiff's property as security for a loan, that party did so nonetheless, pledging the plaintiff's property as collateral for loans made by the defendant, who took possession of the property. The plaintiff filed suit in October 1999 and obtained writs of possession under Code Civ. Proc. § 512.010 et seq. Pursuant to these writs, the defendant returned the goods to the plaintiff. In November 2002, the plaintiff obtained summary adjudication in its favor on causes of action for recovery of personal property and conversion. The plaintiff served notice of outstanding issues for trial, but eventually decided to abandon further adjudication and, in November 2003, obtained judgment on the actions decided through summary adjudication. As part of its damages award, the plaintiff sought and obtained prejudgment interest from the date of conversion to the date of entry of judgment. The defendant appealed, arguing that the plaintiff was not entitled to prejudgment interest past the date on which the plaintiff regained possession of the property.

The court of appeal affirmed, with amendment. The court held that if a plaintiff regains possession of converted goods prior to adjudication of the right to possession of those goods, either through a writ of possession under Code Civ. Proc. § 512.010 et seq. or otherwise, the plaintiff's right to prejudgment interest continues beyond the point at which the plaintiff regained possession and extends to the date of entry of judgment (129 Cal. App. 4th 692, 695) . The court reasoned that prior to adjudication, the plaintiff faces the prospect of losing possession of the goods after trial, effectively depriving the plaintiff of the liberty of dealing with the goods as the plaintiff sees fit until such adjudication is made (129 Cal. App. 4th 692, 702-703) . However, the court also held that if the right to possession is determined through summary adjudication and all that remains to be determined is the amount of damages, as in this particular case, the right to interest extends only to the date of the order granting summary adjudication in the plaintiff's favor. Therefore, the judgment was amended to provide that the plaintiff's right to interest extended only to the date in November 2002 of the order granting summary adjudication, and the court remanded the case for recalculation of the interest owed (129 Cal. App. 4th 692, 704-705) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 51 CONVERSION
PART II. FORMS

5-51 California Points & Authorities § 51.33

§ 51.33 Supporting Contention That Plaintiff's Action for Conversion of Personal Property Is Barred by the Statute of Limitations [Code Civ. Proc. § 338(c)]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF CANNOT RECOVER ON HIS/HER/ITS ACTION FOR CONVERSION OF PERSONAL PROPERTY BECAUSE THE ACTION IS BARRED BY THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS, WHICH REQUIRES THAT THE ACTION FOR CONVERSION BE BROUGHT WITHIN THREE YEARS FROM THE DATE OF THE ALLEGED CONVERSION.

A. Three-Year Statute of Limitations for Action for Conversion. An action for taking, detaining, or injuring any goods or chattels must be brought within three years (Code Civ. Proc. § 338(c)).

B. Statute of Limitations Commences at Time of Conversion. The statute of limitations in an action for conversion commences to run at the time of the alleged conversion, and not at the time of the acquisition of knowledge of the conversion (Barnes v. Witt (1962) 207 Cal. App. 2d 441, 444-445, 24 Cal. Rptr. 545 ; Coy v. E.F. Hutton (1941) 44 Cal. App. 2d 386, 390-391, 112 P.2d 639).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of defendant's contention in an action for conversion that plaintiff's action is barred by the statute of limitations because he or she did not bring the action within three years from the date of the alleged conversion. The argument may be raised in response to a claim for damages for conversion of plaintiff's personal property when the action is brought more than three years from the date of the alleged conversion.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include discussion showing that plaintiff's cause of action is barred because it was not brought until after three years had expired between the date of the alleged conversion and the filing of the complaint.

These points and authorities may be combined, when appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which the substantive issue arises; for example, this form may be used in support of a demurrer when counsel wishes to assert that plaintiff's action for conversion is barred because the action was not begun until after the three-year period in which the action could bebrought had expired. The points and authorities set forth in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in §§ 51.42 -51.44 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion of the statute of limitations as a bar to an action for conversion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 150, Conversion (Matthew Bender). For discussion, forms, and procedures relating to the statute of limitations generally, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 345, Limitation of Actions (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For forms of memoranda of points and authorities in support of defendant's contention that the statue of limitations is a bar to plaintiff's action generally, see Ch. 143, Limitation of Actions .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Three-Year Statute of Limitations for Action for Conversion

Code Civ. Proc. § 338(c) provides that an action for taking, detaining, or injuring any goods or chattels must be brought within three years.

NOTE:

There are some exceptions to this rule. For example, Code Civ. Proc. § 341a provides for only a 90-day period in which an action can be brought for conversion of property left at a hotel, rest home, sanitarium, boarding or lodging house, or furnished apartment or bungalow; and *Code Civ. Proc. § 349*3/4 provides for a 180-day time period in which to bring an action for conversion of well-drilled oil, gas, or liquid or fluids. Other exceptions to Code Civ. Proc. § 338(c) are set out in §§ 51.42 -51.44.

[b] Statute of Limitations Commences at Time of Conversion

Plaintiff in Barnes v. Witt (1962) 207 Cal. App. 2d 441, 24 Cal. Rptr. 545 , brought an action for conversion, among other things, of three trucks that defendant allegedly took by forcibly entering plaintiff's premises and towing the trucks away. The trial court sustained defendant's demurrer to plaintiff's first amended complaint on the ground that the action was barred by the statute of limitations. The original complaint was filed on August 16, 1961. Both the original and amended complaints alleged that the wrongful actions took place on or about September 20, 1955. The trial court entered judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment of the trial court, holding that the ruling of the trial court on the basis of the statute of limitations was unquestionably correct. More than three years had gone by, the court said, since the alleged seizure of the trucks. The three-year statute of limitations, the court said, applied to both the amended and original complaints in the action for conversion. The period of limitation for a conversion action commences at the time of the conversion, the court ruled, and not at the time of acquisition of knowledge of the acts constituting the conversion, unless plaintiff can show affirmatively that the offending party voluntarily concealed from plaintiff the facts constituting the cause of action. Consequently, the court held, the action for conversion in this case was barred by the statute of limitations since the successive complaints showed that the trucks were taken on September 20, 1955 (207 Cal. App. 2d 441, 444-445) .

Coy v. E.F. Hutton (1941) 44 Cal. App. 2d 386, 112 P.2d 639 , arose out of an action for conversion of stock owned by plaintiff that defendant had sold. In April 1932, plaintiff Coy informed defendant that he was leaving California and returning to Ohio. On May 11, 1932, a telegram arrived at defendant's place of business that purported to authorize defendant to sell certain stock owned by plaintiff. The telegram was signed "E.M. Coy." Coy had apparently suffered a mental breakdown on his return to Ohio, and his mother placed him in a rest home. To pay for his care, the mother had sent the telegram to defendants. She applied the proceeds of the sale to an account maintained for plaintiff's care at the rest home. In February of 1934, plaintiff escaped from the rest home and returned to California where he inquired about his stock. Defendant, through its agent, informed plaintiff of the previous sale of the stock on May 12, 1932, at his instructions. Plaintiff returned to Ohio, and in March 1935, wrote defendant with instructions to sell the stock and pay a certain indebtedness. The firm again informed him of the previous sale. Approximately two years later, plaintiff made a demand for the return of the stock, and after refusal, filed the present action on February 15, 1937. The trial court made no findings on the issue of conversion, but entered judgment for defendant on the ground, among other things, that plaintiff's action for conversion was barred by the three-year statute of limitations. In its written opinion, the trial court stated that in the action for conversion, the statute started to run from the date of the alleged conversion and was not tolled by the fact that the owner may have been ignorant of the conversion. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment of the trial court. Plaintiff's cause of action, the court stated, was barred because the sale of stock took place on May 12, 1932, and the action was not filed until February 15, 1937, or more than fouryears and nine months from the date of the alleged conversion. The court rejected plaintiff's contention that his cause of action for conversion did not accrue and that the statute of limitations did not start to run until the making of the demand for the return of the stock. When possession is obtained lawfully, and there has been an actual conversion, the court said, a demand is not necessary, and the cause of action is complete at the time of the wrongful disposal of the property with the statute of limitations starting to run at that time. Citing secondary authority on the law of stockbrokers and stock exchanges, the court said that in an action by the customer for conversion of his or her securities, the period of limitation commenced on the date of the conversion. The cause of action was complete. No tender or demand was necessary and the running of the statute could not be extended by making a tender and demand at a later date. Nor, the court concluded, was it necessary that the customer be informed of the fact that his or her securities had been converted, since the time started running even though he or she was ignorant of his or her rights (44 Cal. App. 2d 386, 390-391) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Statute of Limitations Commences at Time of Conversion

In Maheu v. CBS, Inc. (1988) 201 Cal. App. 3d 662, 247 Cal. Rptr. 304 , a former aide of the celebrated recluse Howard Hughes brought an action in 1985 against several defendants for, among other things, the alleged conversion of letters sent by Hughes to the aide over the course of many years. Plaintiff alleged that two of the defendants allegedly converted the letters in 1974, while other "media" defendants conspired to acquire the letters in 1977, resulting eventually in the 1984 publication of a book about Hughes. Plaintiff did not learn of the conversion until 1984. The trial court sustained demurrers, without leave to amend, to the causes of action based on conversion, and plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal affirmed. The court stated that both an action for conversion and an action for conspiracy based on conversion are subject to the three-year limitations period of Code Civ. Proc. § 338(c). Normally, this statute commences to run from the date of the conversion, even though the injured person is ignorant of his or her rights, except when fraudulent concealment is alleged (201 Cal. App. 3d 662, 673) . In the case of an action for conspiracy based on conversion, this statute commences to run from the date of the last overt act committed in pursuance of the conspiracy. The court rejected the argument that the last overt act in this instance was the publication of the book in 1984; this act did not involve conversion of the property but rather the diminution of its value. The court concluded that, because the latest alleged act relating to conversion of the property occurred no later than 1977, the causes of action based on conversion were barred by the statute of limitations (201 Cal. App. 3d 662, 673-674) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 51 CONVERSION
PART II. FORMS

5-51 California Points & Authorities § 51.34

§ 51.34 Supporting Contention That Plaintiff's Consent to Taking of Personal Property Is Defense to Action for Conversion

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF'S CONSENT TO TAKING OF HIS/HER/ITS PERSONAL PROPERTY BY DEFENDANT IS A DEFENSE TO AN ACTION FOR CONVERSION.

Plaintiff's Consent to Taking of Personal Property Is Defense to Action for Conversion. A plaintiff who consented to the taking of his or her personal property by defendant cannot recover damages against the defendant in an action for conversion since consent is a complete defense to conversion (see Klett v. Security Acceptance Co. (1952) 38 Cal. 2d 770, 789-790, 242 P.2d 873 ; Wade v. Southwest Bank (1962) 211 Cal. App. 2d 392, 410, 27 Cal. Rptr. 337).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of defendant's contention in an action for conversion that plaintiff's consent to the taking of the personal property of plaintiff by defendant is complete defense to the action for conversion. The argument may be raised in response to a claim for damages for conversion of plaintiff's personal property by defendant.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include discussion showing that defendant took plaintiff's personal property in response to or with plaintiff's consent.

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 51.45 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

These points and authorities may be combined, when appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which the substantive issue arises; for example, this form may be used in support of a demurrer or a motion for a summary judgment, when counsel wishes to assert that plaintiff consented to the taking of the personal property by defendant, and therefore defendant has a complete defense to the action for conversion. The points and authorities set forth in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

For further discussion of the defense of consent in relation to conversion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 150, Conversion (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff's Consent to Taking of Personal Property Is Defense to Action for Conversion

Plaintiff in Klett v. Security Acceptance Co. (1952) 38 Cal. 2d 770, 242 P.2d 873 , brought an action against defendant for, among other things, conversion of certain furniture from plaintiff's retail store. Plaintiff, facing financial difficulties, arranged with defendant that he would pay defendant 90 percent of the wholesale purchase price of various major-item furniture for purpose of sale at plaintiff's store. Defendant secured its interest in the property by executing a trust receipt agreement with plaintiff in which the property was held by plaintiff in trust for defendant with plaintiff having the right to sell the items subject to the agreement but obligated to immediately turn over the secured portion of the proceeds of any sale. Under the terms of the agreement, defendant had the right, on default of plaintiff for failure to pay any monies due, to all monies secured immediately due and payable and to forfeiture of plaintiff's interest in the property in cancellation of any remaining debt. Approximately one year after the trust receipts agreement, plaintiff became delinquent in payments, and defendant demanded full payment on all amounts due, or that plaintiff surrender possession of all property subject to the security agreement. On plaintiff's failure to pay, defendant informed plaintiff that it would take all the property subject to the agreement as well as other property not subject to the agreement equal in value to the furniture sold without delivery of the proceeds to the sale to defendant. Plaintiff agreed to the arrangement and cooperated with defendant's agents in removal of the subject property. Defendant subsequently sold the property in satisfaction of the debt. The trial court entered judgment in favor of defendant, and plaintiff appealed, contending, among other things, that the sale of the furniture was an act of conversion.

The Supreme Court, in affirming the judgment of the trial court, rejected plaintiff's contention that the sale of the property constituted conversion. The Court concurred with the trial court's finding that plaintiff had consented to the taking of the property in question. Since plaintiff consented to the taking of the furniture, the Court stated, defendant's taking of the property was not a conversion and plaintiff's contentions were without merit (38 Cal. 2d 770, 789-790) .

Wade v. Southwest Bank (1962) 211 Cal. App. 2d 392, 27 Cal. Rptr. 337 , involved consolidated actions for conversion against defendant bank and defendant moving and storage company for conversion of certain motion picture equipment purchased by plaintiff's actress wife. Plaintiff claimed that the property belonged to him and was wrongfully taken from his studio-residence. Plaintiff had become bankrupt and was also involved in divorce proceedings. Defendant held a note signed by defendant bank and his wife that was secured by the subject property, and plaintiff was unable to pay it. Because plaintiff declared the property to be community property, the bank became concerned and suggested, as an alternative to foreclosure, that the property be placed in storage pending the outcome of divorce proceedings and plaintiff's ability to pay on the note. Defendant bank, through its agents, hired defendant moving and storage company and prepared a written consent for plaintiff to sign, although it was felt that a signed consent was not necessary. Plaintiff refused to sign, saying that the property was all his wife's; however, evidence produced at trial, though contradicted to some extent by plaintiff and his later reconciled wife, tended to show that plaintiff cooperated with the movers by assisting in preparation and attachment of tags and markers to the equipment taken from both the studio and adjoining residence. The trial court entered judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appealed, contending that the trial court erred in finding that plaintiff consented to the taking of the property from the studio-residence, and that the consent obtained for the property was obtained through fraud and misrepresentation. Plaintiff asserted that any consent given was done so with the understanding that plaintiff would have access to the property; however, only plaintiff's wife and her attorney were listed as persons authorized to have access to the property.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment of the trial court, implying that the evidence in the case supported its finding that plaintiff consented to the taking of the property for safekeeping rather than subjecting the property to foreclosure and therefore no conversion took place. In discussing what constituted a valid consent, the court said, in response to plaintiff's claims concerning the nature of the evidence, that consent in law was more than a mere formal act of the mind. Citing prior California law and other authorities, the court stated that consent in law means a voluntary agreement by a person in the possession and exercise of sufficient mentality to make an intelligent choice, or to do something proposed by another. Consent, the court added, differed from assent, in that consent implied some positive action and involved submission, while assent meant mere passivity and submission without consent. Consent, the court continued, could be given directly by voice or in writing, or it could be implied as manifested by signs, actions, or facts, or by inaction or silence, from which an inference arises that the consent has been given (211 Cal. App. 2d 392, 406) . As to plaintiff's contention that the consent was obtained by fraud, the court said that plaintiff failed to raise this issue in his complaints or in the proceedings at trial, and the court refused to discuss the issue (211 Cal. App. 2d 392, 410) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Plaintiff's Consent to Taking of Personal Property Is Defense to Action to Conversion

French v. Smith Booth Usher Co. (1942) 56 Cal. App. 2d 23, 131 P.2d 863 , involved an action for, among other things, conversion of cement hauling equipment that was subject to a conditional sales contract and repossessed by defendant on plaintiff's default on a note secured by the subject property. Defendant contended that plaintiff has consented to the taking of the property since he could not make the payment due and demanded on the note. The court of appeal, in affirming the judgment of the trial court for defendant, stated that to constitute conversion, nonconsent to the possession and disposition of the property by defendant is indispensable. If an owner expressly or impliedly assented to or ratified the taking, use, or disposal of the property, he or she cannot recover damages for conversion of the property. Plaintiff's consent, the court concluded, needed no consideration, since his act of consent merely prevented defendant's acts from becoming a conversion, and was not a making of a contract (56 Cal. App. 2d 23, 27-28) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 51 CONVERSION
PART II. FORMS

5-51 California Points & Authorities § 51.35

§ 51.35 Supporting Contention That Plaintiff Required to Make Demand for Return of Property Before Bringing Action for Conversion

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

WHEN DEFENDANT LAWFULLY ACQUIRED POSSESSION OF PLAINTIFF'S PERSONAL PROPERTY WITH CONSENT OF OWNER, PLAINTIFF MUST MAKE A DEMAND ON THE DEFENDANT FOR RETURN OF THE PROPERTY IN ORDER TO CREATE A LIABILITY FOR CONVERSION OF THE PROPERTY ON THE PART OF DEFENDANT.

Plaintiff Required to Make Demand for Return of Property Before Bringing Action for Conversion. When a defendant lawfully acquires possession of property with the consent of the owner, demand for its possession is necessary to create a liability for conversion or unlawful withholding of the property (Flennaugh v. Heinrich (1948) 89 Cal. App. 2d 214, 221-222, 200 P.2d 580).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of defendant's contention in an action for conversion that plaintiff is required under the facts of the case to make a demand that defendant return the property in question in order to create defendant's liability for conversion of the property. The argument may be raised in response to a complaint that defendant converted or wrongfully withheld the property of the plaintiff.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include discussion showing that the defendant originally acquired the property with the consent of the owner and that plaintiff has failed to make a demand for the return of the property from the defendant.

These points and authorities may be combined, when appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which the substantive issue arises; for example, this form may be used in support of a demurrer or a motion for a summary judgment, when counsel wishes to assert that plaintiff cannot maintain an action for conversion since he or she made no demand of the defendant for return of the property as required when possession of the property was lawfully acquired with the consent of the owner. The points and authorities set forth in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in §§ 51.46 and 51.47 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff Required to Make Demand for Return of Property Before Bringing Action for Conversion

Plaintiff in Flennaugh v. Heinrich (1948) 89 Cal. App. 2d 214, 200 P.2d 580 , brought an action for conversion of trucks and hauling equipment used by plaintiff as a trucker of farm produce. Defendant paid in full certain notes owed by plaintiff to a bank and received an assignment of plaintiff's chattel mortgage on the trucks and other hauling equipment. Plaintiff executed and delivered powers of attorney to defendant authorizing defendant to sign and transfer the certificates of ownership of the vehicles, and ratifying any action defendant might take with respect to the transfers of title. Defendant also, on plaintiff's request, paid for the insurance on plaintiff's vehicles that were used for hauling produce and that were subject to the chattel mortgage. One vehicle and trailer was involved in an accident and removed to a repair shop. Plaintiff, relying on defendant to pay for repair bill nonetheless requested the repair shop to release the vehicles to him in the event that he was able to raise the necessary money. In answer, the repair shop merely indicated that it understood that the truck and trailer were insured by defendant and belonged to him. Thereafter, plaintiff never saw defendant about recovery of the truck and trailer and never made any demand on him for their possession. Plaintiff also instructed his employee to deliver another truck todefendant, who would see to it that it would be repaired. Plaintiff never made any demand for the return of this truck; rather, he testified that he sold the truck to defendant in return for defendant's paying a certain debt of plaintiff's. The trial court found that defendant had converted plaintiff's property and entered judgment for plaintiff on that issue. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment of the trial court on the issue of conversion. The trial court's findings, the court said, were inadequate to support the judgment on the theory of unlawful conversion of plaintiff's properties because there was no allegation or proof that plaintiff demanded a return of the properties before bringing the action for conversion. The court stated that, when, as in this case, a defendant lawfully acquires possession of property with the consent of the owner, demand for its possession is necessary to create a liability for conversion (89 Cal. App. 2d 214, 222) . The truck and trailer that had been involved in the accident were removed to a repair shop and left there by plaintiff. With plaintiff's knowledge and consent, defendant had paid the insurance premiums on the vehicles and had incurred the obligation to pay for their repairs. Although the repair shop had a mechanic's lien on the property, plaintiff never demanded that defendant have the property delivered to plaintiff. With respect to the other truck left with defendant, plaintiff instructed that the truck be taken to defendant, that he knew it was there, and that he had agreed with defendant for defendant's purchase of it in return for payment of plaintiff's debt to a bank. Plaintiff never sought return of this equipment from defendant (89 Cal. App. 2d 214, 221) . Consequently, since no demand was ever made for the return of any of the subject property, there was no conversion by defendant (89 Cal. App. 2d 214, 222) .

23 of 152 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 51 CONVERSION
PART II. FORMS

5-51 California Points & Authorities § 51.36

§ 51.36 Supporting Contention That Plaintiff's Waiver of Interest in Property Is Bar to Recovery for Conversion

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF'S WAIVER OF HIS/HER/ITS INTEREST IN THE PROPERTY ALLEGED TO HAVE BEEN CONVERTED CONSTITUTES A BAR TO RECOVERY IN AN ACTION FOR CONVERSION.

Plaintiff's Waiver of Interest in Property Is Bar to Recovery for Conversion. Evidence of plaintiff's waiver of his or her interest in property in relation to defendant is sufficient to support a finding that defendant is not liable for conversion of that property (see Eistrat v. Western Hardwood Lumber Co. (1958) 164 Cal. App. 2d 374, 381, 330 P.2d 629).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of defendant's contention in an action for conversion that under the facts of the case plaintiff's waiver of his or her interest in the property in question may be used as a defense to an action for conversion of that property. The argument may be raised in response to a complaint that defendant converted or wrongfully withheld plaintiff's property.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include discussion showing that plaintiff, by his or her conduct, waived any interest in relation to defendant in the property in question and therefore plaintiff's waiver is a defense to the action for conversion.

These points and authorities may be combined, when appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which the substantive issue arises; for example, this form may be used in support of a demurrer or a motion for a summary judgment, when counsel wishes to assert that plaintiff's waiver of his or her interest in the property in relation to defendant constitutes a defense to conversion of the property in question. The points and authorities set forth in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

For further discussion of waiver as a defense in an action for conversion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 150, Conversion (Matthew Bender).

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 51.48 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff's Waiver of Interest in Property Is Bar to Recovery for Conversion

Eistrat v. Western Hardwood Lumber Co. (1958) 164 Cal. App. 2d 374, 330 P.2d 629 , involved an action for conversion of lumber against a purchaser of the lumber from a lumber and logging company that had a agreement to cut and remove timber from plaintiff's timberlands. According to terms of the agreement, the logging company was required to pay weekly for timber cut during the previous week and comply with all the laws and regulations relating to logging. Furthermore, failure to make the weekly payments or comply with logging regulations would result in loss of cutting rights, and the logging company couldnot proceed to cut additional timber without written authorization from plaintiff. Plaintiff became dissatisfied with the logging company's inadequate fire protection and advised it to quit the premises. Defendant buyer had purchased considerable amounts of timber from the logging company before the notice to quit, and two occasions thereafter, took from plaintiff's land three loads of lumber previously ordered. A short time later, defendant purchaser made final payment to the logging company for its purchases. Subsequently, the logging company was unable to pay plaintiff money due, and plaintiff informed defendant's vice president of his intent to sue the logging company. When the logging company filed for bankruptcy, plaintiff requested and received defendant's help in establishing his claim against the logging company by supplying plaintiff with an account of the amount of lumber purchased from it. After the logging company's discharge in bankruptcy, plaintiff made his first and only demand on defendant for the return of the lumber that defendant had purchased and fully paid for, or its purchase price. The trial court, entered judgment for defendant finding that plaintiff had waived any rights he had against defendant.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment of the trial court. Substantial evidence in the record, the court said, sustained the trial court's finding that plaintiff waived any rights he had against defendant purchaser for conversion, and elected to pursue his remedy against the logging company. He advised defendant purchaser of his intention to do so, and later sought and obtained defendant's assistance in his claim against the logging company in the bankruptcy court. The court observed that plaintiff had not made any demand on defendant purchaser for return of the property in question until after he had exhausted his remedies against the logging company and failed to satisfy his alleged claim (164 Cal. App. 2d 374, 381) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 51 CONVERSION
PART II. FORMS

5-51 California Points & Authorities § 51.37

§ 51.37 Supporting Contention That Plaintiff Equitably Estopped From Asserting Title to Property Not Entitled to Recover for Conversion

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF IS EQUITABLY ESTOPPED FROM ASSERTING TITLE TO THE PROPERTY ALLEGEDLY CONVERTED AND THEREFORE MAY NOT RECOVER DAMAGES FOR CONVERSION OF THAT PROPERTY.

Plaintiff Equitably Estopped From Asserting Title to Property Not Entitled to Recover for Conversion. Plaintiff is not entitled to recover damages for conversion of his or her personal property when he or she is equitably estopped from asserting title to that property against defendant (see Jessup v. Cattle Ctr., Inc. (1968) 259 Cal. App. 2d 434, 437-439, 66 Cal. Rptr. 361).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of defendant's contention in an action for conversion that under the facts of the case plaintiff is equitably estopped from asserting title to the property involved as to defendant and therefore is not entitled to recovery in an action for conversion. The argument may be raised in response to a complaint that defendant converted or wrongfully withheld plaintiff's property.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include discussion showing that plaintiff is equitably estopped from asserting title to the property in question against defendant and that plaintiff cannot therefore recover for conversion.

These points and authorities may be combined, when appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which the substantive issue arises; for example, this form may be used in support of a demurrer or a motion for a summary judgment, when counsel wishes to assert that the plaintiff is equitably estopped from asserting title to the property in question against defendant and therefore is not entitled to recover for conversion. The points and authorities set forth in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

For further discussion of equitable estoppel as a defense in an action for conversion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 150, Conversion (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff Equitably Estopped From Asserting Title to Property Not Entitled to Recover for Conversion

Plaintiffs in Jessup v. Cattle Ctr., Inc. (1968) 259 Cal. App. 2d 434, 66 Cal. Rptr. 361 , brought an action against defendants for fraud and conversion of certain cattle sold to defendant dealer and auctioned off by defendant auctioneer. Defendant dealer paid for his purchase of the cattle by a draft known by him to be drawn on insufficient funds, and consigned the cattle to defendant auctioneer to be sold. Defendant auctioneer sold the cattle to bona fide purchaser and delivered the proceeds of the sale to defendant dealer. Some evidence in the case tended to show that defendant auctioneer knew that defendant dealer's bank had discontinued giving him credit. Evidence also showed that plaintiffs had the cattle inspected, that an official brand inspection certificate showing purchase of the cattle by defendant dealer was issued, and that the plaintiffs knew the cattle wereshipped to defendant auctioneer's stockyard on consignment for the account of defendant dealer. The trial court concluded that plaintiffs were estopped by their conduct from asserting title to the cattle against defendant auctioneer and entered judgment for him as to the action for conversion. Plaintiffs thereafter appealed.

The court of appeal, in affirming the judgment of the trial court on the issue of conversion, found that there was sufficient evidence in the case to support the trial court's finding that plaintiffs were estopped from asserting title to the cattle as against defendant auctioneer. The court stated that although plaintiffs were ignorant of the fact that the draft given to them would not be honored by the drawer bank, they knew that they were accepting a draft, payable at a later time, yet immediately parted with possession of their cattle. This conduct, the court continued, clothed the purchaser with the indicia of title. However, in relation to defendant auctioneer, plaintiffs were in the better position to inquire into their buyer's ability to honor his draft, whereas defendant auctioneer, who dealt with many dealers with large amounts of cattle, could not reasonably be expected to investigate the exact terms of the purchase of each lot of cattle presented to it. Citing prior California law, the court stated that a bona fide purchaser for value who takes cattle directly or indirectly from an auctioneer is not liable in conversion to the true owner who has been defrauded by accepting a bad check. In the present case, the court held, that the trial court correctly ruled that plaintiffs were not entitled to recover for conversion of their cattle from the innocent auctioneer on the ground of equitable estoppel. Plaintiffs, the court held, knew that: (1) the cattle were to be sent to defendant auctioneer on consignment for the account of their purchaser; (2) by transferring their property to the buyer and placing their cattle in the stream of commerce for immediate sale, plaintiffs acted in such a manner that defendant auctioneer could reasonably believe that they intended their conduct to be acted on; (3) defendant auctioneer was ignorant of the fact that the dealer had paid for the cattle with a draft written on insufficient funds; and (4) defendant auctioneer accepted the cattle in the regular course of business, and in reliance of defendant dealer's possession, the brand certificate, and shipping orders, sold the cattle at auction and accounted to defendant dealer for the receipts (259 Cal. App. 2d 434, 437-438) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 51 CONVERSION
PART II. FORMS

5-51 California Points & Authorities § 51.38

§ 51.38 Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Not Liable for Conversion--Defendant Took Possession as Personal Representative of Decedent's Estate in Good Faith Belief That Property Was Part of Decedent's Estate [Prob. Code § 9651(c)]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT IS NOT LIABLE TO PLAINTIFF FOR TAKING POSSESSION OF THE PROPERTY WHICH IS THE SUBJECT OF THIS ACTION BECAUSE DEFENDANT TOOK POSSESSION IN GOOD FAITH AS A PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVE OF A DECEDENT'S ESTATE AND REASONABLY BELIEVED THAT THE PROPERTY WAS PART OF DECEDENT'S ESTATE.

Personal Representative Is Not Liable for Taking Possession of Property in Good Faith Belief That It Is Part of Decedent's Estate. A personal representative who in good faith takes into possession real or personal property, and reasonably believes that the property is part of the estate of the decedent, is not civilly liable to any person for so doing (Prob. Code § 9651(a)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of defendant's contention in an action for conversion that defendant is not civilly liable for taking possession of the property that is the subject of the action since he or she did so in good faith as the personal representative of a decedent's estate, and reasonably believed that the property was part of the decedent's estate [see Prob. Code § 9651(a)].

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include facts establishing the reasonable efforts taken by defendant to determine the true nature of, and title to, the property taken into possession [see Prob. Code § 9651(b)].

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the personal representative's immunity based on his or her good faith belief that the property was part of his or her decedent's estate. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Personal Representative Is Not Liable for Taking Possession of Property in Good-Faith Belief That It Is Part of Decedent's Estate

Prob. Code § 9651 provides civil immunity for the reasonable good faith taking of property by one acting as a personal representative of a decedent's estate, and provides that a personal representative must make reasonable efforts to determine the true nature and title of property that it takes into possession under the belief that it is part of a decedent's estate [Prob. Code § 9651(a), (b)]. In addition, it provides that a personal representative who good faith takespossession of real or personal property is entitled, during that possession, to the rents, issues, and profits from the property. If the property is later determined not to be property of the estate, the representative must deliver, or cause to be delivered, possession of the property to the person or persons legally entitled to it, together with all rents, issues, and profits from the property received by the representative, less any expenses incurred in the protection and maintenance of the property and in the collection of the rents, issues, and profits. The representative may request court approval before delivering the property [Prob. Code § 9651(c)].

The court may allow the representative and reasonable compensation for services rendered in connection with the duties of Prob. Code § 9651 as to property later determined not to be property of the decedent's estate, if the court finds either that the services were of benefit to the estate or that the services were essential to the preservation, protection, and maintenance of the property. If compensation is awarded because the services benefitted the estate, the fees are a proper expense of administration. If compensation is awarded because the services were essential to the preservation, protection, and maintenance of the property, the expense is deductible from the rents, issues, and profits received by the representative, or if those are insufficient, are a lien on the property [Prob. Code § 9651(d)].

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 51 CONVERSION
PART II. FORMS

5-51 California Points & Authorities § 51.39

§ 51.39 Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Not Liable for Conversion--Defendant Delivered Decedent's Tangible Personal Property to Surviving Spouse, Relative, or Conservator or Guardian of Estate [Prob. Code § 330]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT IS NOT LIABLE TO PLAINTIFF FOR ANY LOSS OR DAMAGE TO THE DECEDENT'S PROPERTY CAUSED BY THE PERSON TO WHOM DEFENDANT DELIVERED THE PROPERTY, BECAUSE DEFENDANT REQUIRED REASONABLE PROOF OF THE STATUS AND IDENTITY OF THE PERSON TO WHOM THE PROPERTY WAS DELIVERED, DEFENDANT KEPT A PROPER RECORD OF THE DELIVERY, AND DEFENDANT HAD NO REASON TO BELIEVE THERE WAS ANY DISPUTE OVER THE RIGHT TO POSSESSION OF THE PROPERTY AT THE TIME OF DELIVERY OF THE PROPERTY.

Defendant Is Immune From Liability for Loss or Damage to Property of Decedent Because Property Was Properly Delivered and Statutory Requirements Were Met. If a public administrator, government official, law enforcement agency, the hospital or institution in which the decedent died, or the decedent's employer delivers the property of the decedent to the decedent's surviving spouse, relative, or the conservator or guardian of the estate, with no knowledge or reason to believe that there is a dispute of the right to possession of the property, after requiring reasonable proof of the status and identity of the person to whom the property is delivered, he or she will not be liable for loss or damage to the property caused by the person to whom the property is delivered (Prob. Code § 330).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of defendant's contention in an action for conversion that defendant is not civilly liable for any loss or damage to property caused by a person to whom defendant delivered the property of a decedent when defendant has met all the statutory requirements [see Prob. Code § 330].

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include facts establishing that he or she was one of the parties specified by statute to deliver decedent's property after decedent's death, that the party to whom defendant delivered the property was a person specified by statute and one whom defendant identified by reasonable proof, that defendant had no reason to believe there was a dispute over the right to possession of the property, and that defendant kept appropriate records of the delivery, and status and identity of the person to whom the property was delivered [see Prob. Code § 330(a)-(d), (f)].

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the defendant's immunity on the basis of his or her performance of the statutory requirements for such immunity [see Prob. Code § 330]. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defendant Is Immune From Liability for Loss or Damage to Property of Decedent Because Property Was Properly Delivered and Statutory Requirements Were Met

Prob. Code § 330 provides that a public administrator, government official, law enforcement agency, hospital or institution where a decedent died, or the decedent's employer may, without the need to wait 40 days after death, deliver the tangible personal property of the decedent in its possession, including keys to the decedent's residence, to the decedent's surviving spouse, relative, or conservatoror guardian of the estate acting in that capacity at the time of death [Prob. Code § 330(a)]. Provided that the person delivering the property has no reason to believe there is a dispute over the property, that he or she requires reasonable proof of the identity and status of the person to whom the property is delivered, and that he or she keeps required records of the delivery, he or she is not liable for loss or damage to the property caused by the person to whom the property was delivered [see Prob. Code § 330(b)-(d), (f)].

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 51 CONVERSION
PART II. FORMS

5-51 California Points & Authorities § 51.40

§ 51.40 Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Not Liable for Conversion--Defendant Took Possession to Protect Own Interests

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT IS NOT LIABLE TO PLAINTIFF FOR TAKING POSSESSION OF THE PROPERTY THAT IS THE SUBJECT OF THIS ACTION BECAUSE DEFENDANT DID SO FOR THE PURPOSE OF DEFENDING HIMSELF/HERSELF FROM _____ [specify nature of threat to defendant's interests, e.g., PHYSICAL HARM], IN THE REASONABLE BELIEF THAT PLAINTIFF INTENDED TO HARM HIM/HER IN THAT MANNER, AND THAT THE HARM COULD SAFELY BE PREVENTED ONLY BY TAKING THE PROPERTY.

Conditional Privilege of Protection of Interests of Self or Another. One is privileged to commit an act that would otherwise be a conversion of a chattel in the possession of another, for the purpose of defending himself or herself, when he or she reasonably believes that the other person intends to cause injury to him or her, or that the injury is reasonably probable, and that the injury can be safely prevented only by taking possession of the chattel (Church of Scientology v. Armstrong (1991) 232 Cal. App. 3d 1060, 1072, 283 Cal. Rptr. 917).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the defendant is not liable for conversion, based on the conditional privilege that protects one who took possession of the property in order to avert injury to himself or herself, with the reasonable belief that it was necessary to do so [see Church of Scientology v. Armstrong (1991) 232 Cal. App. 3d 1060, 1072, 283 Cal. Rptr. 917] .

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should describe the circumstances under which defendant took the property that is the subject of the action, and show how defendant's own interests would have been injured had he or she not done so.

These points authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the conditional privilege of the protection of the interests of oneself or another. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion and forms relating to conversion generally, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 150, Conversion (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

In Church of Scientology v. Armstrong (1991) 232 Cal. App. 3d 1060, 283 Cal. Rptr. 917 , a church sued a former church member who was seeking the return of documents taken by defendant, related injunctive relief, and a constructive trust over the property. The wife of the church's founder, who was the subject of the documents, filed a complaint-in-intervention, alleging causes of action for conversion and invasion of privacy, and declaratory and injunctive relief. Defendant's cross complaint sought damages for fraud, intentional infliction of emotional distress, libel, breach of contract, and tortious interference with contract. According to the evidence, which was found credible by the trial court, defendant had, at the time of the incidents subject to the action, been a dedicated church member for 12 years, and ultimately a member of one of its elite groups. At one point, fearing a raid by law enforcement agencies, church representatives ordered the shredding of a huge volume of church documents (regarding church-controlled organizations and financing). While shredding the documents, defendant reviewed biographical material concerning the church's founder, and requested permission to research it for a planned biography. Defendant became the official researcher, and, together with the author, eventually noticed discrepancies between the archive information and previous representations made concerning the founder. As a result, the church charged that defendant was openly criticizing the founder, and subjected defendant to a crude lie-detector test in an attempt to determine which materials he had delivered to the author. Defendant subsequently wrote a report urging accuracy in the materials published about the founder, and relating examples of factual inaccuracies in previous publications. Shortly thereafter, he and his wife left the church, surreptitiously moving their possessions from the church premises because they knew that persons attempting to leave were locked up, subjected to security checks, and forced to sign promissory notes to the church, confessions of "blackmailable" material obtained from their personal files, and incriminating documents. Two months later, the church in effect labeled defendant an enemy of the church, and charged that he hadtaken an unauthorized leave, was spreading destructive rumors about senior church officials, and secretly planned to leave the church. Defendant was consequently subjected to the "Fair Game Doctrine" of the church, which permits a person to be "tricked, sued or lied to or destroyed ...#x2026; [or] deprived of property or injured by any means" by any church member. During that time, the church confiscated photographs of the founder that defendant had arranged to sell. When defendant demanded return of the photographs, he was ordered from church property and told to get an attorney. He then received a letter from the church counsel threatening him with a lawsuit, and became aware that private investigators were watching his house and following him. Defendant feared that his life and the life of his wife were in danger, and that he would be made the target of costly and harassing lawsuits. He therefore took a number of documents from the author and sent them to his attorney. After the commencement of the instant action, defendant was pushed or shoved by one of the church's investigators. In later incidents, an investigator, driving a vehicle, struck defendant's elbow, pulled in front of defendant on the freeway and slammed on his brakes, and crossed a lane as if to push him off the road. Plaintiff asserts that the investigators were hired solely to retrieve the documents taken by defendant.

After trial on the complaint and complaint-in-intervention, the court found in favor of defendant, awarding him costs and disbursements. The cross action filed by defendant was settled and dismissed, and the record was sealed pursuant to a stipulation by the parties. Plaintiffs appealed the order dismissing their action with prejudice. Two years later, a plaintiff in another action against the church intervened, seeking access to the sealed record for the limited purpose of preparing his own case. The trial judge had retired, and a different judge issued orders vacating the original sealing order, and opening the record to the general public. Plaintiffs appealed those orders. The court of appeal issued a stay order regarding the unsealing of the records, to the extent those orders applied to the general public, and protected the records from dissemination beyond that required by the plaintiff in the subsequent case for purposes of litigation. The appeals were consolidated.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment for defendant, and reversed the order vacating the order sealing the trial court records (232 Cal. App. 3d 1060, 1074) . With respect to plaintiffs' causes of action for conversion, the court stated that, pursuant to Restatement (Second) of Torts § 261, one is privileged to commit an act that would otherwise be a trespass to or a conversion of a chattel in the possession of another, for the purpose of defending himself or herself, or a third person, against the other, under the same conditions that would afford a privilege to inflict a harmful or offensive contact on the other for the same purpose. For the purpose of defending his or her own person, an actor is privileged to make intentional invasions of another's interests or personalty when the actor reasonably believes that the other person intends to cause a confinement or a harmful or offensive contact to the actor, or that the invasion of his or her interests is reasonably probable, and the actor reasonably believes that the apprehended harm can be safely prevented only by the infliction of harm on the other. A similar privilege is afforded an actor for the protection of certain third persons [see Restatement (Second) of Torts § 261, cmt. b]. The court noted that no reported California case had yet adopted these privileges, and held that the trial court had acted properly in doing so (232 Cal. App. 3d 1060, 1072-1073) . In its statement of decision, the trial court found that defendant believed that he and his wife were in danger, that is, that the church threatened to harm them physically, as well as file harassing lawsuits against them. He believed that the only way he could defend himself was to take the archive materials, which would corrobate his assertions about the founder and the church, and refute the allegations made against him; and that the only way the documents would remain secure for his future use was by his sending them to his attorneys. The court of appeal held that the trial court's findings were substantially supported by the evidence (232 Cal. App. 3d 1060, 1073) . (In its resolution of the issue regarding the sealing of the trial court records, the court of appeal vacated the second trial judge's order unsealing the records, because the time had expired for reconsideration of the order sealing the documents; the court of appeal also held, however, that the record on appeal was not subject to sealing, absent further and particularized showing for doing so (232 Cal. App. 3d 1060, 1068-1071) .)

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 51 CONVERSION
PART II. FORMS

5-51 California Points & Authorities § 51.41

§ 51.41 Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Not Liable For Conversion--Bank Not Liable For Mortgage Loan Broker's Conversion of Note Payments Deposited in Bank Trust Accounts

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

THE BANK IS NOT LIABLE FOR THE MORTGAGE LOAN BROKER'S CONVERSION OF NOTE PAYMENTS DEPOSITED IN BANK TRUST ACCOUNTS BECAUSE THE BANK HAS NO DUTY TO MONITOR TRUST ACCOUNTS FOR BREACHES OF FIDUCIARY DUTY.

A. Financial Code Section 952. Notice to any bank of an adverse claim to a deposit standing on its books to the credit of any person shall be disregarded, and the bank, notwithstanding the notice, shall honor the checks, notes, or other instruments requiring payment of money by or for the account of the person to whose credit the account stands without any liability on the part of the bank. (Fin. Code § 952(a)). This section shall be applicable even thought the name of the person appearing on the bank's books to whose credit the deposit stands or for whose account the property is held is modified by a qualifying or descriptive term such as "agent," "trustee," or other work or phrase indicating that the person maynot be the owner in his or her own right of the deposit (Fin. Code § 952(c)).

B. Financial Code Section 953. When the depositor of a commercial or savings account has authorized any person to make withdrawals from the account, the bank, in the absence of written notice otherwise, may assume that any check, receipt, or order of withdrawal drawn by such person in the authorized form or manner, including checks drawn to his or her personal order and withdrawal orders payable to him or her personally, was drawn for a purpose authorized by the depositor and within the scope of the authority conferred upon such person (Fin. Code § 953).

C. Banks Have No Duty to Prevent Breaches of Fiduciary Duty. Under governing principles of banking law, a bank has no duty to police fiduciary accounts so as to prevent breaches of fiduciary duty. Specifically, it has no duty to prevent commingling of assets in fiduciary accounts, to monitor fiduciary accounts for irregular transactions, to prevent improper disbursements from the accounts, or to conduct an investigation of possible misappropriation of funds ( Chazen v. Centennial Bank (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 532, 541, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 462 ; Fin. Code § 952(a), (c); Fin. Code § 953).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a bank is not liable for a mortgage loan broker's conversion of note payments deposited in bank trust accounts.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should provide facts showing the conversion of funds deposited in bank trust accounts by a fiduciary (i.e. mortgage loan broker) and argue that because it had no duty to monitor trust accounts for breaches of fiduciary duty, the bank may not share liability for the conversion.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion of damages resulting from the conversion of personal property, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 150, Conversion (Matthew Bender). For discussion, forms and procedures relating to general banking principles, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 95, Banks, Deposits, and Checks (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For memoranda of points and authorities relating to banking, see Ch. 34, Checks and Banks .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Banks Have No Duty to Prevent Breaches of Fiduciary Duty

Chazen v. Centennial Bank (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 532, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 462 was a consolidated appeal reviewing actions against the same defendant bank. Both complaints sought to hold the bank liable for the actions of a mortgage loan broker. Plaintiffs had purchased second mortgages through the loan broker who agreed to service the loans by collecting payments due and remitting them to plaintiffs. For this purpose he opened three accounts with he bank which were designated on the bank's signature card as "payment trust account," "custodial account," and "escrow account." The broker deposited note payments into the accounts and then withdrew substantial amounts for his own use, including much of the principal payments on a series of notes that were paid in full. Plaintiffs sued the broker for conversion. The bank demurred and the trial court sustained the demurrers.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that because a bank has no duty to monitor trust accounts for breaches of fiduciary duty, the bank could not be held liable for the mortgage loan broker's conversion of note payments which were deposited in bank trust accounts (61 Cal. App. 4th 532, 541) . The court stated that under governing principles of banking law, a bank has no duty to police fiduciary accounts so as to prevent breaches of fiduciary duty. Specifically, it has no duty to prevent commingling of assets in fiduciary accounts, to monitor fiduciary accounts for irregular transactions, to prevent improper disbursements from the accounts, or to conduct an investigation of possible misappropriation of funds. Instead, the bank is obliged under Financial Code Section 953 to honor withdrawals from fiduciary accounts by authorized persons who draw on the account in an authorized manner, and it is required by Financial Code Section 952 to disregard notice of adverse claims to the account, including notice conveyed by circumstantial evidence or documents in the bank's possession, unless the claims are made through an appropriate affidavit or court order.

Citing dicta in Blackmon v. Hale (1970) 1 Cal. 3d 548, 556, 83 Cal. Rptr. 194, 463 P.2d 418 , the court dismissed plaintiffs' argument that the bank is liable because it had actual or constructive knowledge of the misappropriation of trust funds. It opined that the Blackmon dicta should not be interpreted in a manner that would undermine the judicial principles and statutory mandates which relieve banks of any duty to police fiduciary accounts. It interpreted the dicta as a prudent judicial qualification recognizing that banks may in some extreme circumstances engage in wrongdoing affecting a fiduciary account that would merit the imposition of liability. However, it concluded that the following allegation was sufficient to state a conversion cause of action against the bank: that the bank caused disbursements from the trust accounts for the purpose of satisfying the loan broker's personal obligations to the bank and took a security interest in theTrust Accounts to secure the obligations (61 Cal. App. 4th 532, 543) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 51 CONVERSION
PART II. FORMS

5-51 California Points & Authorities § 51.42

§ 51.42 Opposing Contention That Plaintiff's Action for Conversion of Personal Property Is Barred by the Statute of Limitations--Fraudulent Concealment of Conversion Tolls Statute of Limitations

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

IN AN ACTION FOR CONVERSION, THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS DOES NOT COMMENCE TO RUN WHEN DEFENDANT HAS FRAUDULENTLY CONCEALED THE FACTS FROM PLAINTIFF UNTIL PLAINTIFF DISCOVERS OR OUGHT TO HAVE DISCOVERED THE EXISTENCE OF HIS/HER/ITS CAUSE OF ACTION FOR CONVERSION.

A. Fraudulent Concealment of Conversion Tolls Statute of Limitations. In an action for conversion, the statute of limitations does not commence to run when the defendant has fraudulently concealed the facts of the conversion from the plaintiff until the plaintiff has discovered or ought to have discovered the existence of his or her cause of action for conversion (see Code Civ. Proc. § 338(d); Bennett v. Hibernia Bank (1956) 47 Cal. 2d 540, 559-563, 305 P.2d 20).

[Optional] B. Discovery of Whereabouts of Art or Artifact. A cause of action for theft of any art or artifact does not accrue until the discovery of the whereabouts of the art or artifact by the aggrieved party, his or her agent, or the law enforcement agency which originally investigated the theft (Civ. Code § 338(c); see Society of Cal. Pioneers v. Baker (1996) 43 Cal. App. 4th 774, 783, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 865).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to defendant's contention in an action for conversion that plaintiff's action is barred by the statute of limitations. This form states that when defendant has fraudulently concealed the facts of the conversion from the plaintiff, the statute of limitations does not commence to run until he or she has discovered, or ought to have discovered, the existence of the cause of action for conversion.

This form may be used in combination with other forms of memoranda either opposing defendant's contentions that plaintiff does not have a cause of action against defendant [see, e.g., §§ 51.43 -51.48], or supporting the contention that defendant converted the personal property of the plaintiff on the specific grounds asserted [see, e.g., §§ 51.20 -51.24].

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include discussion showing that defendant fraudulently concealed from plaintiff the conversion of plaintiff's property and that plaintiff brought the action within three years after he or she discovered the existence of the cause of action for conversion.

This form may be used in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 51.33.

These points and authorities may be combined, when appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which the substantive issue arises; for example, this form may be used in opposition to a demurrer or a motion for summary judgment, when counsel wishes to respond to an assertion by defendant that plaintiff's action is barred by the three-year statute of limitations governing actions for conversion. The points and authorities set forth in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion, forms, and procedures relating to opposing defendant's contention that the cause of action is barred by the statute of limitations generally, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 345, Limitation of Actions (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Points and Authorities

For forms of memoranda of points and authorities opposing defendant's contention that plaintiff's cause of action is barred by the statute of limitations generally, see Ch. 143, Limitation of Actions .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Fraudulent Concealment of Conversion Tolls Statute of Limitations

Plaintiff in Bennett v. Hibernia Bank (1956) 47 Cal. 2d 540, 305 P.2d 20 , brought an act for declaration of rights in membership of defendant bank. In 1945, the bank filed an in rem suit to determine membership rights. The suit listed 15 named defendants together with all unknown persons claiming any right of membership. The only service given to the unknown defendants was through publication and posting. The trial court found that the 15 named defendants were the sole members and the only persons having any right or interest in its property and assets. In 1947, defendant reorganized itself under its current name with stock in the amount of $7 million divided among the 15 individual defendants named in the in rem suit. In 1951, plaintiffs, by court order, received the residue of a certain estate, which included a membership in defendant bank originally held by aCallaghan Curtin, and passed by right of succession to plaintiffs through Mary, his sole legatee. Thereafter, plaintiffs discovered that Curtin had been an early depositor in the bank, had signed certain bylaws of the bank in 1860, and had become a member of the bank. Plaintiffs also discovered the 1945 suit, the conversion of defendant into a stock bank, and the distribution of all its stock to the 15 named defendants in the suit. Plaintiffs filed their action in January, 1953, claiming that Mary had received no notice of the in rem suit and had no knowledge of its judgment.

The trial court sustained defendant's general demurrer without leave to amend. Plaintiffs thereafter appealed. In response, defendant claimed, among other things, that the statute of limitations in relation to plaintiffs' action began to run at the rendition of the judgment in the in rem suit in 1946, and that the running of the statute did not depend on plaintiffs' knowledge of the judgment. Defendants also contended that the complaint alleged facts constituting a conversion, and therefore the statute of limitations would have started to run at the time of the reorganization proceedings of defendant bank in 1947.

The Supreme Court reversed the judgment of the trial court, holding that plaintiffs had stated facts sufficient to state a cause of action, that defendant knew of Curtin's membership in the bank and of his death leaving successors, that it knew of Mary's address, and that it knew, or in the exercise of reasonable diligence, could have discovered, that Mary was Curtin's successor. Addressing itself to the issue of whether or not plaintiffs' action was barred by the statute of limitations, the Court ruled that the suit was timely filed. The Court based its ruling on four similar rules. Directing its attention to actions by a shareholder or member of a corporation to establish his or her interest in a corporation, the Court, citing prior California law, stated that if lapse of time could bar this type of action, the statutory period did not commence to run until the stockholder had knowledge or notice that his or her rights were denied, or that his or her status was repudiated or controverted by the corporation (47 Cal. 2d 540, 559) . Similarly, the Court said, citing California case law and former Code Civ. Proc. § 338(4) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 338(d)], in cases involving fraud or mistake, the statute of limitations commences to run when the plaintiff discovers he or she has a cause of action, or through reasonable diligence, should have discovered it (47 Cal. 2d 540, 559-560) . The Court also directed itself to defendant's contention that plaintiffs' allegations constituted a charge of conversion, and that the statute of limitations began to run as to any membership rights that Mary obtained from Curtin at the time of the reorganization proceedings of the bank in 1947. Ordinarily, the Court said, the statute of limitations that applies in conversion actions is former Code Civ. Proc. § 338(3) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 338(c)], which begins to run from the date of the conversion even though the injured person is ignorant of his or her rights. This rule, the Court pointed out, citing prior California law, is not absolute. For example, when there has been a fraudulent concealment of the facts of the conversion, the statute of limitations does not commence to run until the aggrieved party discovers or ought to have discovered the existence of the cause of action for conversion (47 Cal. 2d 540, 561) . The Court noted that a fiduciary has a duty to make full disclosure of facts that materially affect the rights of the parties, and that any act by the fiduciary amounting to a conversion of trust property was akin to a fraudulent concealment. Moreover, the Court added, citing prior California law, the statute of limitations do not begin to run against an action for breach of a voluntary trust until there has been a repudiation of the trust that is brought home to the beneficiary (47 Cal. 2d 540, 561-562) . Consequently, the Court held, because of the existence of a fiduciary duty, a plaintiff need not disprove that an earlier discovery could have been made on a diligent inquiry, but need only show that he or she made an actual discovery of previously unknown information within the statutory period before filing the action. Therefore, plaintiffs' complaint, which alleged discovery of the facts within two years of the filing of the action, sufficiently alleged the circumstances of the discovery to meet the requirements that the cause of action be brought within three years after its discovery (47 Cal. 2d 540, 561-564) .

Counsel should note that the Supreme Court stated that the 1945 in rem action repudiated any claims to membership rights that Mary may have had in the defendant bank and that the complaint alleged that neither Mary nor any of the plaintiffs had any knowledge of the action prior to the death of Mary in 1951, and that therefore the applicable statute of limitations was former Code Civ. Proc. § 338(4) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 338(d)] (47 Cal. 2d 540, 560) . The Court merely quoted from that statute without further elaboration. However, this statute normally applies only when fraud or mistake is the gravamen of the original action. Independent of that statute is the rule that when a defendant is guilty of fraudulent concealment of the cause of action, the statute is tolled until discovery and that on discovery, the statute applicable to the particular cause of action (in the case of conversion, former Code Civ. Proc. § 338(3) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 338(c)]) then commences to run [see Kimball v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1934) 220 Cal. 203, 210, 30 P.2d 39 ; see also Pashley v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co. (1944) 25 Cal. 2d 226, 229, 153 P.2d 325] .

In ruling that the same rules apply to pleading fraudulent concealment of a cause of action as to pleading facts to avoid the bar of the statute of limitations in cases of fraud in general, the Supreme Court has determined that the complaint must allege (1) when the fraud was discovered, (2) the circumstances under which it was discovered, and (3) facts showing that plaintiff is not at fault in failing to discover the fraud sooner and that plaintiff has no actual or presumptive knowledge of facts sufficient to put him or her on inquiry [see Kimball v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1934) 220 Cal. 203, 215, 30 P.2d 39] .

[b] Discovery of Whereabouts of Art or Artifact

In Society of Cal. Pioneers v. Baker (1996) 43 Cal. App. 4th 774, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 865 , plaintiff brought a conversion action with regard to an antique cane handle. The trial court determined that the current version of Civ. Code § 388(c), the statute of limitations, did not apply, and thus applied a prior version of the statute which did not contain a discovery provision. Concluding that the action was barred, the trial court granted a defense motion for nonsuit.

The court of appeal found that the amended version of Civ. Code § 388(c) applied, so that the action did not accrue until plaintiff discovered the whereabouts of the cane handle (43 Cal. App. 4th 774, 783) . The court then noted that no facts were produced indicating that plaintiff had actual notice or knowledge of any facts that would have imputed constructive notice of the location of the stolen item or to a line of further inquiry that would have led to notice or knowledge (43 Cal. App. 4th 774, 786) . Concluding that whether the correct standard is actual or constructive notice, plaintiff could not have been charged with notice of the location of the item more than three years before the action was commenced, the court reversed the judgment of nonsuit.

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Fraudulent Concealment of Conversion Tolls Statute of Limitations

Strasberg v. Odyssey Group, Inc. (1996) 51 Cal. App. 4th 906, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 474 , involved the conversion of certain personal effects of Marilyn Monroe. Ms. Monroe bequeathed all her personal effects to her acting coach, who subsequently bequeathed them to plaintiff. However, Ms. Monroe's business manager retained certain documents and personal items that had belonged to Ms. Monroe, and neither identified these items to the probate court nor turned them over to the proper heir. These items eventually came into the possession of the manager's nephew, who believed that his aunt had rightfully owned them either because Ms. Monroe had given them to her prior to her death or because the acting coach had not wanted them. The nephew then consigned the items to defendant, an auction house, and the items were prepared for auction. Plaintiff learned of the auction and filed suit for conversion and constructive trust. Defendants demurred and moved for summary judgment, contending that the action was barred by the statute of limitations. The trial court denied the motions, and entered a judgment imposing a constructive trust following a jury determination that the items had been wrongfully converted. The court of appeal affirmed, stating that where there has been a fraudulent concealment of the facts the statute of limitations does not commence to run until the aggrieved party discovers or ought to have discovered the existence of the cause of action for conversion (51 Cal. App. 4th 906, 916) . The court rejected an argument that the statute of limitations was triggered when the manager failed to disclose the personal effects to the probate court, reasoning that repudiation of a trust is not effective until the fact of repudiation is brought home to the beneficiary (51 Cal. App. 4th 906, 917) . Similarly, the court rejected an argument that the cause of action accrued when the manager's nephew took possession of the items, reasoning again that since plaintiff had no knowledge of the property there was no responsibility to take action to enforce the right to the property (51 Cal. App. 4th 906, 918) .

Bartlett v. Pacific Nat'l Bank (1952) 110 Cal. App. 2d 683, 244 P.2d 91 , involved an action for conversion of attorney's fees due under a contract. Defendant bank held certain monies received from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for distribution to certain bondholders and had informed plaintiff that it would respect his notices and demands for one-forth of the amount by withholding sufficient monies for him before distribution. In affirming the judgment of the trial court, the court rejected defendant's contention that the statute of limitations barred plaintiff's action. Ordinarily, the court stated, the statute of limitations runs from the date of conversion and lack of knowledge by the injured party does not toll the statute. However, the court held, defendant's actions in fraudulently representing to plaintiff that it would withhold money due him, and its fraudulent concealment of the conversion of the money by distributing all of the money held to the bondholders brought the case within the rule that when the defendant was guilty of fraudulent concealment on the cause of action, the statute of limitations did not become operative until the aggrieved party discovered its existence (110 Cal. App. 2d 683, 694) .

[b] Discovery of Whereabouts of Art or Artifact

In Naftzger v. American Numismatic Soc'y (1996) 42 Cal. App. 4th 421, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 784 , a museum sought to recover coins which had been stolen prior to 1970, before a 1983 amendment to Code Civ. Proc. § 338(c). Defendant, who had purchased the coins from the alleged thief, refused to return the coins, and entered a demurrer to the museum's complaint to quiet title. The trial court sustained the demurrer, finding that the current version of Code Civ. Proc. § 338(c) should not apply retroactively to the case, since the coins were stolen before the effective date of an applicable 1983 amendment, and that under the former version of the statute the museum's cause of action accrued on the date of the theft. The museum appealed, and the court of appeal reversed, agreeing with the museum that under the pre-1983 version of the statute, the limitation period did not accrue at the time of the theft. The court noted that the general principles regarding when a cause of action accrues are that it accrues on the date of injury, or upon the occurrence of the last element essential to the cause of action (42 Cal. App. 4th 421, 428) . Since the thief fraudulently concealed the taking, the limitations period for prosecuting the thief did not commence until the crime was discovered. The court reasoned that it would be inconsistent to bar the museumfrom suing defendant when the criminal limitations period against the thief did not commence until the crime was discovered (42 Cal. App. 4th 421, 429) . The court noted that in a conversion situation, the owner can immediately sue the person who was originally entrusted with possession because the identity of that person is known. However, in a theft situation, the owner cannot sue the thief or the innocent purchaser prior to discovering their identities (42 Cal. App. 4th 421, 431) . The court ultimately held that the museum's cause of action, based on the prior version of Code Civ. Proc. § 338(c), did not accrue until the museum discovered the identity of the person in possession of the property (42 Cal. App. 4th 421, 433) . The court also rejected a contention by the defendant that it could not imply a discovery rule when there was none stated in the pre-1983 version of the statute, stating that a discovery rule may be implied by judicial decision (42 Cal. App. 4th 421, 434) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 51 CONVERSION
PART II. FORMS

5-51 California Points & Authorities § 51.43

§ 51.43 Opposing Contention That Plaintiff's Action for Conversion of Personal Property Is Barred by the Statute of Limitations-- Cause of Action Does Not Accrue Until Owner Learns of Conversion When Original Taking Lawful

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

IN AN ACTION FOR CONVERSION, THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS DOES NOT COMMENCE TO RUN UNTIL THE OWNER OF PROPERTY ORIGINALLY TAKEN LAWFULLY HAS DEMANDED RETURN OF THE PROPERTY AND THERE HAS BEEN A REFUSAL, OR UNTIL A REPUDIATION OF THE OWNER'S TITLE HAS BEEN CLEARLY AND UNEQUIVOCALLY BROUGHT HOME TO HIM/HER/IT.

Cause of Action Does Not Accrue Until Owner Learns of Conversion When Original Taking Lawful. When the original taking is lawful, the statute of limitations is not set in motion until the return of the property has been demanded and refused, or until a repudiation of the owner's title is clearly and unequivocally brought home to him or her (Bufano v. City & County of San Francisco (1965) 233 Cal. App. 2d 61, 70-71, 43 Cal. Rptr. 223 ; Niiya v. Goto (1960) 181 Cal. App. 2d 682, 688-690, 5 Cal. Rptr. 642).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to defendant's contention in an action for conversion that plaintiff's action is barred by the statute of limitations. This form sets forth the point that when the original taking of plaintiff's property was lawful, the statute of limitations does not commence to run until the owner's demand for return of the property has been refused, or until a repudiation of the owner's title is clearly and unequivocally brought to his or her attention.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include discussion showing that the original taking by defendant of the personal property was lawful, that the plaintiff made a demand for the return of the property and was refused, or that plaintiff learned that the property was converted, and that subsequently the plaintiff brought his or her action for conversion within three years of the refusal or the knowledge that his or her title in the property had been repudiated.

This form may be used in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 51.33.

These points and authorities may be combined, when appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which the substantive issue arises; for example, this form may be used in opposition to a demurrer or a motion for summary judgment, when counsel wishes to respond to an assertion that plaintiff's action is barred by the statute of limitations because it was not brought within three years of the taking of the property. The points and authorities set forth in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion, forms, and procedures relating to the statute of limitations generally, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 345, Limitation of Actions (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Points and Authorities

For forms of memoranda of points and authorities opposing defendant's contention that plaintiff's cause of action is barred by the statute of limitations generally, see Ch. 143, Limitation of Actions .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Cause of Action Does Not Accrue Until Owner Learns of Conversion When Original Taking Lawful

Plaintiff in Bufano v. City & County of San Francisco (1965) 233 Cal. App. 2d 61, 43 Cal. Rptr. 223 , brought an action against defendant city for conversion of two granite statues. The city alleged that plaintiff's cause of action was barred by the statute of limitations because the conversion occurred in 1942 and plaintiff did not bring his action until 1962. Evidence produced at trial showed that plaintiffwas one of a number of artists employed as a sculptor by the Works Progress Administration (WPA) before World War II. Plaintiff's project was sponsored by the city and plaintiff and other artists produced works only at the request of the sponsoring entity. The work was part time, and plaintiff and other artists would also use the project studios to work on items other than WPA art projects. Plaintiff lent WPA a sculpture entitled Torso for exhibition. Because he did not have his own studio, plaintiff stored Torso, and another work in progress, Bear, at the studio. After the beginning of World War II, the federal government terminated WPA. The WPA art project studio, together with all items in the studio, including Bear and Torso, were turned over to the city. The city art commission approved by resolution the allocation of the property to defendant. At that particular time, plaintiff was in Washington D.C. Plaintiff acquiesced in the city's possession of the items and from time to time knew that they were exhibited by the city. Although the city asserted title to Torso and other works exhibited, evidence showed that many of the art works were not property of the city but were on loan. In 1961, the Board of Supervisors of defendant city passed a resolution allowing plaintiff access to certain city property where Bear was placed in order for him to work on it. However, plaintiff became concerned that language in the resolution indicated that the property inured to the benefit of the city. After consulting an attorney, plaintiff demanded that defendant return Bear and Torso. When the city refused, asserting that it acquired the property from the WPA in 1942, plaintiff brought his action for conversion. After the jury returned a verdict in favor of plaintiff, the trial court gave judgment notwithstanding the verdict to defendant. Plaintiff appealed from the judgment of the trial court and defendant cross appealed from the judgment rendered on the verdict.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment of the trial court in granting defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, holding that plaintiff's action was timely filed. The court found that the WPA was a gratuitous bailee and that when the city received and stored plaintiff's sculptures after the WPA project was discontinued, its custody was an extension of its own WPA art project and it was normal for plaintiff to regard it as such. Consequently, the court held, the formal assumption of control by the art commission's resolution did not terminate the bailment. Addressing itself to the issue of whether or not plaintiff's action was barred by the statute of limitations, the court stated, citing prior California law, that there is no conversion, and the statute of limitations does not start to run against an owner of property and in favor of a bailee until the bailee's adverse claim is brought to the owner's knowledge. When an original taking is wrongful, the bar of the statute runs from the time of the unlawful taking, the court continued; but when the original taking is lawful, the statute is not set in motion until the return of the property has been demanded and refused, or until a repudiation of the owner's title is clearly and unequivocally brought to his or her attention. The city's art commission resolution accepting the property did not constitute such notice, the court held, as there was no testimony that plaintiff had knowledge of its passage. Other acts by the city such as exhibiting plaintiff's works, and permitting him access to city property to work on various sculptures, were entirely consistent, the court said, with his consent to defendant's possession. Consequently, the court held, there was substantial evidence to support the jury verdict that defendant city did not assert ownership over Torso and Bear until 1961 (233 Cal. App. 2d 61, 70-71) .

Niiya v. Goto (1960) 181 Cal. App. 2d 682, 5 Cal. Rptr. 642 , arose out of an action for conversion of furniture and furnishings that plaintiff stored on defendant's property. Plaintiff testified that she left the property with defendant so that he could have the use of the property in his house and she would not have to pay storage on the condition that he would return the property to her if he moved, or she had need of it. Four years later, plaintiff demanded return of the property, but defendant refused, and plaintiff brought the action for conversion. The trial court found for defendant; however, on plaintiff's motion the court granted a new trial on grounds of insufficiency of the evidence. Defendant appealed, contending, among other things, that the action was barred by the statute of limitations.

The court of appeal, in affirming the order granting a new trial, rejected defendant's contention that the action was barred by the statute of limitations. The parties' relationship, the court stated, was that of a bailor and bailee. The general rule, the court said, is that the statute of limitations does not run against a bailor and owner of the property and in favor of a bailee claiming to hold adversely to the owner until such adverse claim is brought to the knowledge of the bailor. Citing prior California law, the court held that so long as the bailee holds the property in recognition of the bailor's right, the statute does not run, and will not run until there is an illegal exercise of dominion over the property. If the original taking is wrongful, the court stated, the bar of the statute of limitations runs from the time of the unlawful taking, but when the original taking is lawful, the statute is not set in motion until the return of the property has been demanded and refused, or until repudiation of the owner's title that is clearly and unequivocally brought home to him or her is made. The court found that, on the record, defendant did not do anything inconsistent with plaintiff's right of ownership or in repudiation of that right until plaintiff's demand for the return of her property and defendant's subsequent refusal. The statute of limitations, the court concluded, did not begin to run until the time of the refusal, and therefore the action, being filed within three years from defendant's first claimed ownership of the property, not barred by the statute of limitations (181 Cal. App. 2d 682, 688-690) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Cause of Action Does Not Accrue Until Owner Learns of Conversion When Original Taking Lawful

Martin v. Bank of Am. Nat'l Trust & Sav. Ass'n (1935) 4 Cal. App. 2d 431, 41 P.2d 200 , involved an action for recovery for value of certain bonds deposited with defendant in trust in July 1927. Four years later, plaintiff became entitled to the bonds under the terms of the trust agreement and in the following year demanded their return. The trial court found that defendant had converted the bonds by turning them over to a bondholders' protective committee without plaintiff's knowledge or consent and that when plaintiff learned of the conversion she brought the present action within the applicable statute of limitations. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment of the trial court, holding that plaintiff began her action within three years from the discovery of the repudiation by defendant of its obligation under the trust agreement regarding plaintiff's rights in her property (4 Cal. App. 2d 431, 436) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 51 CONVERSION
PART II. FORMS

5-51 California Points & Authorities § 51.44

§ 51.44 Opposing Contention That Plaintiff's Action for Conversion of Personal Property Is Barred by Statute of Limitations--Statute Tolled While Plaintiff Legally Restrained from Protecting Interest [Code Civ. Proc. § 356]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF'S ACTION FOR CONVERSION IS NOT BARRED BY THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS BECAUSE THE STATUTE WAS TOLLED FOR THE PERIOD DURING WHICH PLAINTIFF WAS LEGALLY RESTRAINED BY _____ [AN INJUNCTION or specify statutory prohibition] FROM TAKING ACTION TO PROTECT HIS/HER/ITS INTERESTS.

Suspension of Statute When Plaintiff Legally Restrained. Although a cause of action for conversion normally accrues on commission of the act of conversion, the running of the statute of limitations is suspended during any period in which the plaintiff is legally restrained, by injunction or statutory prohibition, from taking action to protect his or her interests (see Code Civ. Proc. § 356; Eistrat v. Cekada (1958) 50 Cal. 2d 289, 291-292, 324 P.2d 881).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that plaintiff's action for conversion is barred by the statute of limitations. This form sets forth the point that the running of the statute of limitations is tolled during any period in which plaintiff is legally restrained from taking action to protect his or her interests.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include discussion showing that plaintiff was under an injunction, other judicially-imposed restraint, or a statutory prohibition legally restraining him or her from commencing the action against defendant for a period of time before the filing of the suit and that the injunction, other judicially-imposed restraint, or statutory prohibition caused the delay in bringing the action.

This form may be used in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 51.33.

These points and authorities may be combined, when appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which the substantive issue arises; for example, this form may be used in opposition to a demurrer or a motion for summary judgment, when counsel wishes to respond to an assertion by defendant that plaintiff's action is barred by the three-year statute of limitations governing actions for conversion. The points and authorities set forth in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion, forms, and procedures relating to the statute of limitations generally, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 345, Limitation of Actions (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Points and Authorities

For forms of memoranda of points and authorities opposing defendant's contention that plaintiff's cause of action is barred by the statute of limitations generally, see Ch. 143, Limitation of Actions .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Suspension of Statute When Plaintiff Legally Restrained

Plaintiff in Eistrat v. Cekada (1958) 50 Cal. 2d 289, 324 P.2d 881 , brought an action for conversion of lumber from his timberlands. In June 1949, plaintiff's lessee, a logging company, filed for bankruptcy, claiming title to certain lumber and the right to operate a sawmill on plaintiff's property free from interference by plaintiff. The referee in bankruptcy granted an order enjoining plaintiff from bringing suit against the debtor and from interfering with the debtor in the possession of his property and in the operation of his lumber mill and business. In September 1949, plaintiff filed a petition in the bankruptcy proceedings toreclaim the lumber involved in this action; however, final action on the petition was postponed. In November, defendant paid the receiver in bankruptcy a certain sum for whatever right, title, or interest the receiver had in the property in question and took possession of it. In October 1951, the bankruptcy court granted plaintiff's petition, finding that neither the receiver in bankruptcy, nor the debtor who was plaintiff's lessee, had any right, title, or interest in the subject property. In late November of 1951, plaintiff demanded that defendant return the lumber, but defendant refused. Plaintiff brought his action in September of 1954. Defendant pleaded the three-year statute of limitations. The trial court concluded that the restraining order issued in the bankruptcy proceedings merely restrained plaintiff from commencing any action against the bankrupt debtor, and not against defendant, and found that since plaintiff's cause of action arose in November 1949, and that plaintiff had knowledge of the sale of the lumber to defendant shortly thereafter, the complaint filed in September of 1954 was barred by the three-year statute of limitations. Plaintiff appealed from the judgment of the trial court. Defendant, in response, contended that the bankruptcy court's dissolution of the restraining order in April of 1951, which related specifically to plaintiff's interference with the possession of the real property and the operation of the mill and lumber business on it, removed all physical restraint and that the statute of limitations commenced to run at that time.

The Supreme Court reversed the judgment of the trial court. It is the general rule, the Court stated, citing prior California law, that a cause of action accrues immediately upon the commission of the act of conversion and that normally the statute of limitations begins to run at that time. However, the Court noted, Code Civ. Proc. § 356 provides that the running of the statute is suspended during any period in which the plaintiff is legally restrained from taking action to protect his or her interests. Citing federal authority, the Court observed that on the filing of a petition in bankruptcy, the bankruptcy court acquires exclusive jurisdiction over the bankrupt debtor and his on her estate, and may restrain any suit to recover a debt that might be dischargeable from the estate. The Court said that it should be assumed that the bankruptcy court would not condone the commencement of an action against the receiver in bankruptcy, or against the receiver's assignee, defendant, and any action commenced would constitute an interference with the debtor in the possession of the property. The Court rejected defendant's contention that the dissolution of that part of the restraining order relating to plaintiff's interference with the possession of the real property and the operation of the mill and lumber business on plaintiff's property removed all physical restraint. The partial dissolution affected only the real property and the operation of the mill on it, the Court held, and did not allow plaintiff to interfere with the debtor in the possession of his property, as prohibited in the original order (50 Cal. 2d 289, 291-293) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 51 CONVERSION
PART II. FORMS

5-51 California Points & Authorities § 51.45

§ 51.45 Opposing Contention That Plaintiff's Consent to Taking of Personal Property Is Defense to Action for Conversion--Consent Obtained by Fraud as Not Constituting Defense to Conversion

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

CONSENT BY PLAINTIFF TO THE TAKING OF HIS/HER/ITS PERSONAL PROPERTY THAT IS OBTAINED BY FRAUD DOES NOT CONSTITUTE A DEFENSE TO AN ACTION FOR CONVERSION OF THE PROPERTY IN QUESTION.

Consent Obtained by Fraud as Not Constituting Defense to Action for Conversion. When plaintiff's consent to the taking of his or her personal property was obtained by fraud, the consent does not constitute a defense to an action for conversion (see Freedman v. Queen Ins. Co (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 454, 457-458, 15 Cal. Rptr. 69, 364 P.2d 245).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to defendant's contention that plaintiff's consent to the taking of the property operates as a defense to an action for conversion. This form sets forth the point that when consent is obtained by fraud, the consent does not constitute a defense to an action for conversion.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include discussion showing that plaintiff's consent to the taking of his or her personal property was obtained by fraud.

This form may be used in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 51.34.

These points and authorities may be combined, when appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which the substantive issue arises; for example, this form may be used in opposition to a demurrer or a motion for summary judgment, when counsel wishes to respond to an assertion by defendant that plaintiff's consent to the taking of his or her personal property operates as a defense to an action for conversion. The points and authorities set forth in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Consent Obtained by Fraud as Not Constituting Defense to Action for Conversion

Plaintiff in Freedman v. Queen Ins. Co (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 454, 15 Cal. Rptr. 69, 364 P.2d 245 , brought an action to recover the value of diamond jewelry against his insurer. Plaintiff alleged that he received a telephone call from a certain person who represented himself to be one with whom plaintiff was well acquainted. The caller requested that plaintiff let him have several diamonds on memorandum, that is, for examination and approval by a prospective customer. Since this was the custom in the trade, plaintiff agreed and turned over the diamonds to an alleged messenger of the caller. The jewelry disappeared with the messenger and plaintiff brought this action under its insurance policy. Defendant carrier refused to honor its coverage on the ground that its policy with plaintiff excluded recovery for loss through conversion of the property insured by any person to whom the property was entrusted or delivered. The trial court found for defendant, ruling that under the exclusionary clause of the policy, defendant was exonerated from any liability. Plaintiff appealed from the adverse judgment accordingly entered and from the order denying his motion to vacate the judgment.

The Supreme Court reversed the judgment of the trial court. It was clear, the Court stated, that under the facts of the case there was a theft of the diamonds accomplished by false personation and that the theft by fraudulent representations would support an action for conversion. The Court said that consent, in law, is more than a mere formal act of the mind; it is an act unclouded by fraud, duress, or sometimes even mistake. Citing the Restatement of Torts, the Court noted that one who by fraudulent representations induces another to surrender the possession of a chattel to him or her has dispossessed the other of the chattel and assent to the actor's taking possession of the chattel is ineffectual to constitute a consent to the taking. The exclusionary clause of the policy in question excepted from coverage property loss through conversion when the insured had delivered or entrusted the property to another. Citing former Civ. Code § 1796, the Court stated that delivery is the voluntary transfer of possession. To entrust, the Court said, is defined in Webster's New International Dictionary (2d ed. 1958) as to deliver to another something in trust. Consequently, the Court concluded, one tenable construction of the words of the policy was that there can be no valid delivery or entrustment of property to another when the possession of the property was acquired by means of some fraudulent device (56 Cal. 2d 454, 457-458) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 5 Chapters 50-59 CONTRACTS---to---CORPORATIONS
CHAPTER 51 CONVERSION
PART II. FORMS

5-51 California Points & Authorities § 51.46

§ 51.46 Opposing Contention That Plaintiff Required to Make Demand for Return of Property Before Bringing Action for Conversion-- Demand for Return of Property Not Necessary When Original Taking Wrongful [Civ. Code § 1713]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEMAND BY PLAINTIFF FOR THE RETURN OF HIS/HER/ITS PERSONAL PROPERTY IS NOT NECESSARY IN ORDER TO BRING AN ACTION FOR CONVERSION OF THAT PROPERTY WHEN THE ORIGINAL TAKING WAS WRONGFUL.

A. Duty to Return Property Obtained Without Consent or Unlawfully Taken. One who obtains property without the lawful consent of its owner, or by an unlawful taking, must restore the property to the person from whom it was obtained (see Civ. Code § 1712).

