In Santisas v. Goodin (1998) 17 Cal. 4th 599, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 830, 951 P.2d 399 , plaintiff home buyers sued sellers for defects in the home, alleging both a claim for breach of contract and various tort causes of action. After discovery, plaintiff's voluntarily dismissed their action with prejudice. Defendants moved to recover attorney's fees as costs under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1021, 1032, 1033.5 and the attorney fee provision of the purchase contract, and this motion was granted by the trial court, awarding over $16,000 in attorney's fees as costs. On appeal by plaintiffs, the court of appeal affirmed.

A majority of the Supreme Court reversed, holding that contractual attorney fee provisions are generally enforceable in voluntary pretrial dismissal cases, except as barred by Civ. Code Civ. § 1717. The application of this rule in this case meant that defendant's were entitled to recover as costs attorney's fees incurred to defend tort claims, but Civ. Code Civ. § 1717 barred their recovery as costs of attorney's fees incurred in defense of the breach of contract claim (17 Cal. 4th 599, 622-623) .

Defendants' initial argument was that the attorney fees were recoverable as litigation costs. The Court thus addressed the threshold issue, whether defendants' were entitled to recover costs, and concluded that they were, in fact, entitled to recover costs as a matter of right. Plaintiff's voluntarily dismissed the action, and defendants' are therefore "prevailing" parties entitled to costs under Code Civ. Proc. § 1032(a)(4), (b) (17 Cal. 4th 599, 606) .

The Court then addressed whether attorney's fees were recoverable by defendants' as an item costs because such recovery was authorized by contract (citing Code Civ. Proc. § 1033.5(a)(10). The Court first noted, that, on the record before it, it was undisputed that the parties entered into a purchase contract that included a provision for attorney's fees in the following terms: "[i]n the event legal action is instituted by ... any party to this agreement, or arising out of the execution of this agreement or the sale ... the prevailing party shall be entitled to receive from the other party a reasonable attorney fee to be determined by the court in which such action is brought" (17 Cal. 4th 599, 606-607) . This provision, the Court noted, was phrased in broad enough language to include both contract and tort causes of action 17 Cal. 4th 599, 608) .

The contract did not, however, define "prevailing party," nor was any extrinsic evidence offered on the issue. This term has more than one meaning under California law. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1032(a)(4) For purposes of recovering costs, a "prevailing party" includes a party in whose favor a judgment of dismissal has been entered. Under Civ. Code § 1717(b)(2), however, there is no "prevailing party" when the action has been voluntarily dismissed (17 Cal. 4th 599, 609) . The Court concluded that, because the term has no settled technical meaning as including or excluding a party in whose favor a dismissal has been entered, it would assume the parties understood the term in its ordinary or popular sense, disapproving Sweat v. Hollister (1995) 37 Cal. App. 4th 603, 611 n.7, 43 Cal. Rptr. 2d 399 to the extent it is inconsistent with this analysis (17 Cal. 4th 599, 609, 609 n.5). Giving the term its popular meaning, the Court concluded that the defendants' were prevailing parties under their agreement based on plaintiffs' voluntary dismissal, with prejudice of their action against defendant. Thus, in light of Code Civ. Proc. § 1032(a)(4) and the contract itself, defendants' were entitled to recover attorney's fees as an item of costs (17 Cal. 4th 599, 609) .

The Court then turned to the central question of the case, whether Civ. Code § 1717 operated to bar recovery of attorney's fees as costs notwithstanding Code Civ. Proc. § 1032(a)(4) and the contract provision allowing their recovery (17 Cal. 4th 599, 609) .

The Court held that Civ. Code § 1717 applied to contract provisions for the recovery of attorney's fees, whether such provisions are unilateral, that is, allowing only one party to recover, or reciprocal, such as one allowing recovery by a "prevailing party," disapproving Honey Baked Hams, Inc. v. Dickens (1995) 37 Cal. App. 4th 421, 426, 43 Cal. Rptr. 2d 595 to the extent it is inconsistent with this conclusion (17 Cal. 4th 599, 614) .

The Court then noted that, by its terms, Civ. Code § 1717 applies in an action on a contract to enforce that contract. Thus, Civ. Code § 1717 only applies in an action that includes at least one contract claim, and if tort claims are also included, it applies only to attorney's fees incurred to litigate the contract claims (17 Cal. 4th 599, 615) . The Court disagreed, however, with the court of appeal's conclusion in this case that plaintiffs' contract claim was misnamed as actually sounded in tort. Civ. Code § 1717 therefore applied to the action, and, under Civ. Code § 1717(b)(2), defendants' were not "prevailing parties" and could not recover attorney's fees incurred in the defense of the contract claim (17 Cal. 4th 599, 615) .

Further, when Civ. Code § 1717(b)(2) applies, as in this case, it overrides with any conflicting language of the contract provision, based on the policy reasons underlying the enactment of Civ. Code § 1717. In other words, when plaintiff voluntarily dismisses a contract claim, defendant is barred from recovering attorney's fees as costs under Civ. Code §

1717(b)(2), even though the contract on its own terms authorizes recovery of those fees (17 Cal. 4th 599, 617 , emphasis original).

This bar applies, however, only to contract claims. If a plaintiff voluntarily dismisses an action that also asserts causes of action that do not sound in contract, those causes of action are not covered by Civ. Code § 1717, and attorney's fees may be recovered as costs under an attorney fee provision that permits recovery in litigating those non-contract causes of action. Similarly, if the action involves only tort claims, and a contract provision permits recovery under those circumstances, Civ. Code § 1717 does not apply to bar their recovery (17 Cal. 4th 599, 617) .

The Court rejected plaintiffs' argument that language in Code Civ. Proc. § 1033.5(c)(5) meant that attorney's fees could only be recovered as costs when Civ. Code § 1717 applies, and thus that no fees incurred to litigate tort or noncontractual claims are recoverable under a contract provision that is outside the scope of Civ. Code § 1717. The Court held that Code Civ. Proc. § 1033.5(c)(5) merely specifies the procedural methods by which a court may fix attorney's fees to be awarded as costs, and that this statute's reference to Civ. Code § 1717 is solely to specify that, for purposes of determining which procedures may be used to recover fees under Civ. Code § 1717, the methods applicable to contractual, not statutory, claims, apply (17 Cal. 4th 599, 617-619) .

Thus, with respect to Civ. Code § 1717, the court concluded that it applied to contract causes of action, and that Civ. Code § 1717(b)(2) precluded defendants from recovery any attorney's fees incurred in defense of contract claims, because under that provision they were not "prevailing" parties due to plaintiffs' voluntary dismissal of the action. Civ. Code § 1717 does not apply, however, to tort causes of action, and thus did not preclude recovery of attorney's fees by defendants incurred in defending tort (or other noncontractual) claims, when those fees are otherwise recoverable pursuant to the contract provision for fees and Code Civ. Proc. § 1032(a)(4) (17 Cal. 4th 599, 619) .

The Court then examined the effect of its holding in International Industries, Inc. v. Olen (1978) 21 Cal. 3d 218, 145 Cal. Rptr. 691, 577 P.2d 1031 . Plaintiffs argued that this earlier case established a rule that, in any claim for fees based on a contractual attorney fee provision, the fees are not recoverable if the action is terminated by pretrial dismissal, whether incurred defending contract or noncontract claims. The Court disagreed, holding that Olen applied only to situations within the scope of Civ. Code § 1717; a holding effectively superseded and codified by the 1981 amendment resulting in Civ. Code § 1717(b)(2) (17 Cal. 4th 599, 619-622) . The Court disapproved Jue v. Patton (1995) 33 Cal. App. 4th 456, 39 Cal. Rptr. 2d 364 and Ryder v. Peterson (1996) 51 Cal. App. 4th 1056, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 562 , to the extent these cases are inconsistent with this holding (17 Cal. 4th 599, 622 n.9).

In conclusion, the Court held that contractual attorney fee provisions are generally enforceable in voluntary pretrial dismissal cases except as barred by Civ. Code § 1717. Thus, in the present case, the Court held that defendants were entitled under the attorney fee provision to recover attorney's fees as costs to the extent the fees were incurred defending tort claims asserted in the action, and that Civ. Code § 1717 did not bar recovery of those fees. But defendants were barred by Civ. Code § 1717 from recovering any attorney's fees incurred defending the breach of contract claim (17 Cal. 4th 599, 622-623) .

In Gogri v. Jack in the Box Inc. (2008) 166 Cal. App. 4th 255, 82 Cal. Rptr. 3d 629 , the plaintiff and two other people were franchisees of the defendant. When the term of the franchise agreement was about to expire, the defendant offered to renew the franchise agreement on the condition that each franchisee execute a general release in the defendant's favor. When the plaintiff chose not to execute the general release, the defendant entered into a new franchise agreement with the two other people. The plaintiff sued the defendant for contract and tort causes of action. Each party filed motions for summary judgment. The plaintiff then filed a request for dismissal with prejudice. The defendant then filed an ex parte application requesting the voluntary dismissal be vacated, arguing it was untimely filed, and that the court grant the defendant's motion for summary judgment. The trial court vacated the voluntary dismissal of the complaint and granted the defendant's motion for summary judgment. The court granted the defendant's request for an award of reasonable attorney's fees and costs.

On appeal, the plaintiff argued that the trial court erred by awarding attorney's fees to the defendant because it had no jurisdiction to do so after he filed his voluntary dismissal of his complaint without prejudice. To the extent the trial court awarded the defendant attorney's fees incurred in defending against the contract causes of action, the court of appeal agreed (166 Cal. App. 4th 255, 274). Citing Santisas v. Goodin (1998) 17 Cal. 4th 599, 617, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 830, 951 P.2d 399 , the court held that the trial court had no authority to award attorney's fees under Civ. Code § 1717 on the plaintiff's contract causes of action. However, the court held, this conclusion does not affect the defendants' right to recover as costs the attorney's fees it incurred in defense of the tort claims. The court of appeal therefore remanded the case to the trial court to determine the attorney's fees the defendant incurred to defend the tort causes of action.

[a] Use of Form

This form is for use with the form set out in § 60.440, in support of a motion under *Civ. It calls for the court to exercise its discretion to declare a prevailing party when neither party has achieved an unqualified victory on all contract claims.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Court Has Discretion to Declare Prevailing Party

The facts and procedural background of Scott Co. of California v. Blount, Inc. (1999) 20 Cal. 4th 1103, 86 Cal. Rptr. 2d 614, 979 P.2d 974 , are discussed in § 60.83[3][a]. In that case, the Supreme Court, citing Hsu v. Abbara (1995) 9 Cal. 4th 863, 39 Cal. Rptr. 2d 824, 891 P.2d 804 (discussed in § 60.440[3][b]), stated that, when neither party achieves a complete victory on all the contract claims, it is within the discretion of the trial court to determine which party prevailed on the contract or to determine, alternatively, that neither party prevailed sufficiently for purposes of an award of attorney's fees under Civ. Code § 1717. In deciding whether there is a party prevailing on the contract, the trial court is to compare the relief awarded on the contract claim or claims with the parties' demands on those same claims and their litigation objectives as disclosed by the pleadings, trial briefs, opening statements, and similar sources (20 Cal. 4th 1103, 1109) .

In the case before it, the plaintiff sought to prove more than $2 million in damages but succeeded in establishing only about $440,000 of those damages. The Court held that, although the plaintiff did not achieve all of its litigation objectives, and thus was not automatically a party prevailing on the contract for purposes of Civ. Code § 1717, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in implicitly concluding that, on balance, plaintiff prevailed on the contract for purposes of Civ. Code § 1717. Thus, plaintiff ordinarily would be entitled to recover its attorney fees, in addition to its other costs, by virtue of the combined operation of the contractual attorney fees provision, Civ. Code § 1717, and Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1032 and 1033.5 (20 Cal. 4th 1103, 1109) . The Court then went on to discuss the extent to which this right to recover was cut off by operation of Code Civ. Proc. § 998.

In Acree v. General Motors Acceptance Corp. (2001) 92 Cal. App. 4th 385, 112 Cal. Rptr. 2d 99 , customers of an automobile finance company who had executed its standard conditional sales agreement, filed a class action for breach of contract and unfair business practices. The action was based on the defendant's purchase of collateral protection insurance, claiming that defendant charged exorbitantly for the insurance. The trial court certified the class. The defendant cross complained seeking to collect amounts members of the plaintiff class owed it under their sales agreements. The trial court denied defendant's motion to certify a cross-defendant class (92 Cal. App. 4th 385, 391) . After trial of the contract claims by jury and the claims for unfair competition, unjust enrichment and declaratory relief before the court as equitable, the jury found that the defendant breached the standard sales agreement and awarded actual damages; the trial court found the defendant had engaged in two unfair business practices and enjoined the defendant from engaging in them, which was later reversed on appeal. The trial court added prejudgment interest to the jury's award of damages, denied plaintiffs' equitable claims and denied the defendant relief on its cross-complaint. The trial court then found plaintiffs to be the prevailing party and awarded attorney's fees and costs (92 Cal. App. 4th 385, 392) .

The Court of Appeal affirmed, including the award of attorney's fees, finding that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in finding the plaintiff class to be the prevailing party. The court first held that the trial court properly determined that the plaintiff class was the prevailing party using the comparative approach as set forth in Hsu v.

Abbara (1995) 9 Cal. 4th 863, 39 Cal. Rptr. 2d 824, 891 P.2d 804 (discussed in § 60.440[3][b]) (92 Cal. App. 4th 385, 400) . The court next found that although only 14,000 of the 116,000 class members were awarded damages, including only one of the four named plaintiffs, the trial court properly refused to assess prevailing party status on an individual basis since liability was determined on a classwide basis because the class had a standard sales agreement with the defendant and the action did not involve multiple, independent contracts (92 Cal. App. 4th 385, 400-401) . Finally, the court held that under the comparative approach, there was substantial evidence to support a finding that the plaintiffs had obtained greater relief on the contract action (92 Cal. App. 4th 385, 402-403) .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

In Mix v. Tumanjan Development Corp. (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 1318, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 267 , an attorney sued his landlord in pro per under a lease agreement that contained an attorney's fees provision. In the course of the litigation, the attorney hired a law firm to analyze legal and factual issues, help with trial strategy, and assist the attorney Mix in all aspects of the litigation, including trial preparation, but did not associate the law firm of record, except once for the limited purpose of filing a reply brief and presenting oral argument on a summary judgment motion. During trial, the attorney conducted the courtroom proceedings and attorneys from the law firm drafted motions in limine, researched legal issues, drafted jury instructions and a special verdict form, helped with trial strategy, conducted the examination of the attorney, and received the jury verdict. The jury found in favor of the attorney and awarded him damages. The attorney moved for an award of fees and costs. The trial court granted defendant's motion for a new trial on the ground of juror misconduct, and the attorney appealed. An appellate specialist represented the attorney on appeal. The appellate court reversed and remanded to the trial court with directions to reinstate the judgment in favor of the attorney and to rule on fees and costs, and the trial court awarded the attorney attorney's fees and costs (102 Cal. App. 4th 1318, 1321-1322) .

The Court of Appeal affirmed the award. The court found that an attorney who chooses to represent himself or herself, and does not pay or become liable to pay any sum out of pocket for legal services, may not recover reasonable attorney fees as compensation for the time and effort expended by the attorney and the professional business opportunities lost as a result. However, if an attorney is in fact retained by the pro se litigant and renders legal services assisting in the lawsuit, the attorney need not be an attorney of record in order for the reasonable fees of the attorney to be awarded to a prevailing party. Further, there is no authority or reason to require a formal association on the record in order for attorney fees to be recoverable (102 Cal. App. 4th 1318, 1322-1325) .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Party Prevailing on Contract After Tender and Deposit

In Otay River Constructors v. San Diego Expressway (2008) 158 Cal. App. 4th 796, 70 Cal. Rptr. 3d 434 , in connection with its development of two related highway projects in San Diego County, San Diego Expressway (Expressway), entered into two design-build contracts with general contractor Otay River Constructors (Otay) referred to as the "Gap/Connector Contract" and the "Toll Road Contract," together referred to as the "Design-Build Contracts." The parties also entered into a third agreement, the "Coordination Agreement," to ensure that the Design-Build Contracts complemented and supplemented one another and operated in a coordinated manner to allow completion of the projects. Each contract contained a dispute resolution provision governing disputes arising out of it. The Gap/Connector Contract provided that disputes would be resolved by project and executive level negotiations and then by a nonbinding dispute resolution board and, if necessary, litigation. The Toll Road Contract contained similar dispute resolution procedures, except that it did not allow litigation and required binding arbitration. Disputes under the Coordination Agreement would be governed by the dispute resolution provision of the Toll Road Contract, i.e., binding arbitration. Otay initiated two arbitration proceedings against Expressway, claiming that the disputes arose under the Coordination Agreement and that Expressway breached that contract by demanding changes to certain drawings and refusing to execute a change order adjusting the contract price to reflect necessary retaining walls. In its arbitration demands, Otay admitted that the claims arose under the Gap/Connector Contract, but argued that the claims presented a dispute under the Coordination Agreement and under the Coordination Agreement binding arbitration was proper because the dispute procedures of the Toll Road Contract applied. After Expressway denied the claims, Otay filed a petition in superior court to compel arbitration under the Coordination Agreement, arguing that the disputes arose under the Coordination Agreement and must be arbitrated. Expressway opposed the petition, arguing that it never agreed to submit Gap/Connector Contract disputes unrelated to the Coordination Agreement to binding arbitration.

The trial court rejected Otay's argument that the Coordination Agreement modified or superseded the terms of the Gap/Connector Contract and found no ambiguities and inconsistencies between the Coordination Agreement and the Gap/Connector Contract. It noted that the parties were very sophisticated and could easily have stated that the Coordination Agreement overrode the dispute resolution provisions of the Gap/Connector Contract, but that the parties intended to leave the dispute resolution procedures contained in the Gap/Connector Contract as is. Accordingly, it denied the petition to compel arbitration because the claims arose out of the Gap/Connector Contract, which allowed for litigation of the disputes. Otay did not appeal the order denying its petition to compel arbitration. Expressway filed a motion for attorney's fees and costs, claiming it was the prevailing party on the contract because it obtained a final order denying Otay's petition to compel arbitration. After bifurcating the issue of entitlement to attorney fees and costs from the issue of the amount of any award, the trial court denied Expressway's motion on the ground it was not a prevailing party because the parties contemplated additional litigation (158 Cal. App. 4th 796, 800-801) .

The Court of Appeal reversed the denial of the attorney's fees, finding that the trial court erred in denying attorney's fees under Civil Code § 1717. The petition to compel arbitration under the Coordination Agreement was an action on the contract for purposes of Civ. Code § 1717. Expressway obtained a simple, unqualified win on the only contract claim at issue in the action, i.e., whether to compel arbitration under the Coordination Agreement. Accordingly, Expressway was the prevailing party as a matter of law because it defeated the only contract claim before the trial court in a discrete special proceeding (158 Cal. App. 4th 796, 805-808) .

_____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] IS NOT ENTITLED TO RECOVERY OF ALL ATTORNEY'S FEES EXPENDED BECAUSE HE/SHE DID NOT PREVAIL ON ALL THE LITIGATED ISSUES, AND THE AWARD FOR ATTORNEY'S FEES SHOULD THEREFORE BE APPORTIONED BETWEEN THE PARTIES PROSECUTING AND DEFENDING THE ACTION.

Prevailing Parties Not Necessarily Determined by Final Judgment. The party in whose favor the final judgment is entered is not necessarily deemed the prevailing party. When different parties prevail on different issues, the award for attorney's fees must be apportioned between the parties prosecuting and defending the action both at trial and on appeal (Epstein v. Frank (1981) 125 Cal. App. 3d 111, 124, 125, 177 Cal. Rptr. 831).

[a] Use of Form

This form of memorandum is for use with the general memorandum set out in § 60.460, in opposition to a motion to establish entitlement to an award of attorney's fees under Civ. Frank (1981) 125 Cal. App. 3d 111, 124-125, 177 Cal. Rptr. 831] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Prevailing Parties Not Necessarily Determined by Final Judgment

Epstein v. Frank (1981) 125 Cal. App. 3d 111, 177 Cal. Rptr. 831 , was an action brought by various payees under promissory notes against a limited partnership and its sole general partner to recover money due on the notes. The notes all contained provisions for attorney's fees. The trial court allowed recovery on some of the notes, but held that recovery on other notes was barred by the statute of limitations. The court denied recovery of interest on certain other notes because the notes were usurious. The court also determined that plaintiffs prevailed and awarded them attorney's fees. Plaintiffs appealed from the judgment insofar as it denied recovery. Defendants appealed from that portion of the judgment permitting recovery, and awarding plaintiffs attorney's fees.

The court of appeal reversed and remanded the matter to the trial court for determinations consistent with its ruling. The court upheld the trial court's ruling with regard to the statute of limitations provisions, but held that plaintiffs were entitled to receive interest on usurious notes at the legal rate from the date of maturity to the date of judgment (125 Cal. App. 3d 111, 118-124) . The court noted that each party contends that it was the prevailing party for purposes of recovering attorney's fees pursuant to Civ. Code § 1717. As a general rule, when claims and counterclaims arise in connection with a contract containing an attorney's fees provision, the party who obtains a favorable judgment is deemed to be the prevailing party, even though not obtaining all the relief sought in the action. However, the party in whose favor the final judgment is entered is not always deemed to be the prevailing party (125 Cal. App. 3d 111, 124) . The joinder of various plaintiffs in one action should not impose a different obligation for the payment of attorney's fees than would be incurred if each matter had been litigated separately. It would be contrary to the expressed provision of the promissory notes, and contrary to the intention of Civ. Code § 1717, to hold that a plaintiff or a group of plaintiffs who filed suit on several separate promissory notes is the prevailing party if it prevails on any one of the notes. In order to apportion attorney's fees appropriately between the litigants, the trial court must determine the amount of attorney's fees reasonably attributable to the prosecution and defense of the various notes involved in the proceedings both at trial and on appeal (125 Cal. App. 3d 111, 125) .

Counsel should note that the decision in Epstein was decided before the 1987 amendment to Civ. Code § 1717(b)(1) defining "party prevailing on the contract." Prior to this amendment, Civ. Code § 1717(b)(1) provided that the prevailing party for purposes of that section was generally the party entitled to recover costs of suit [see Stats. 1983, ch. 1073]. Civ. Code § 1717(b)(1) now provides that, except as provided in Civ. Code § 1717(b)(2), the party prevailing on the contract shall be the party who recovered a greater relief in action on the contract. The effect of this language on the holding in Epstein is unclear. For further discussion of this provision, see § 60.440[3][d].

Final Disposition Required Before Party Can Prevail. [3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Final Disposition Required Before Party Can Prevail

In 580 Folsom Associates v. Prometheus Development Co. (1990) 223 Cal. App. 3d 1, 272 Cal. Rptr. 227 , a defendant in a contractual dispute petitioned in the court of appeal for a writ of mandate to set aside certain trial court rulings against it. The court of appeal denied the petition without stating any reason and without issuing an alternative writ or an order to show cause. The trial court denied plaintiffs' subsequent motion under Civ. Code § 1717 for attorney's fees expended in opposing the writ proceeding. The court of appeal affirmed, noting that the denial of a writ petition without opinion is neither res judicata nor law of the case, and that a party opposing such a petition is not a prevailing party; the matter is clearly subject to later review should a party seek such review. The court concluded that the order of the trial court denying attorney's fees in the writ proceedings was correct on grounds the motion was prematurely filed. The court of appeal modified the trial court's order, however, to provide that the motion would be denied without prejudice to renewal if and when plaintiff became the prevailing party in the litigation (223 Cal. App. 3d 1, 29-30) .

In Lachkar v. Lachkar (1986) 182 Cal. App. 3d 641, 227 Cal. Rptr. 501 , plaintiffs, sole shareholders of a corporation that operated a restaurant and cocktail lounge, contracted to sell their business to defendants. During escrow, while they were operating the establishment as provided in the sale contract, defendants assigned the contract to a limited partnership, in which they were the limited partners. Plaintiffs contracted to become consultants for that limited partnership. Both the sale and consulting contracts contained arbitration clauses. Later, the parties had a disagreement, and plaintiffs gave notice and written demand for submission to arbitration. Plaintiffs then filed a petition to compel arbitration. Defendants denied they had refused to arbitrate and argued that plaintiffs were seeking to arbitrate matters under agreements that did not contain arbitration provisions. The trial court granted the petition to compel arbitration and awarded plaintiffs costs and attorney's fees. Defendants appealed the award of costs and attorney's fees.

The court of appeal reversed the order awarding costs and attorney's fees (182 Cal. App. 3d 641, 649) . The court said that an award under Civ. Code § 1717 could not stand because there was no prevailing party. Civ. Code § 1717 requires that there be some final disposition of the rights of the parties (182 Cal. App. 3d 641, 648) . The court analyzed the language of Civ. Code § 1717, saying that the language authorizing determination of who is the prevailing party, whether or not the suit proceeds to final judgment, does not imply that there need not be a final disposition. By providing that the prevailing party is the party who is entitled to recover costs of suit, the statute requires that there be some reckoning of the net success of the respective parties. That net success cannot be ascertained until the final termination of the suit. In ordering arbitration pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.2, the court was not determining the substantive rights of the parties. Because there was no reckoning of the net success of the parties, there was no prevailing party under the parties' agreements nor pursuant to Civ. Code § 1717 (182 Cal. App. 3d 641, 649) .

Counsel should note that Lachkar was decided before the 1987 amendment to Civ. Code § 1717(b)(1) defining "party prevailing on the contract." Prior to this amendment, Civ. Code § 1717(b)(1) provided that the prevailing party for purposes of that section was generally the party entitled to recover costs of suit [see Stats. 1983, ch. 1073]. For discussion of the new definition of party prevailing on the contract, see § 60.440[3][d].

This form of memorandum is for use with the general memorandum set out in § 60.460, in opposition to a motion to establish entitlement to an award of attorney's fees under Civ. Code § 1717, when the case was voluntarily dismissed or dismissed pursuant to settlement [Civ. Code § 1717(b)(2)].

Note that this prohibition does not apply to judgments entered pursuant to a settlement under Code Civ. Proc. § 998 [see Lanyi v. Goldblum (1986) 177 Cal. App. 3d 181, 187-191, 223 Cal. Rptr. 32 , discussed in § 60.444].

Note also that Civ. Code § 1717 applies only to contract claims. If an action is dismissed voluntarily, and it includes tort or other noncontractual claims, Civ. Code § 1717(b)(2) does not apply to these noncontractual claims. When a voluntary dismissal occurs, a defendant is a "prevailing party under Code Civ. Proc. § 1032(a)(4), and is entitled to costs, including attorney's fees when these are recoverable as costs, except as barred by Civ. Code § 1717(b)(2). Thus, a defendant may be able to recover attorney's fees incurred defending noncontractual claims, if the contract provision for attorney's fees permits recovery in defending such claims [see Santisas v. Goodin (1998) 17 Cal. 4th 599, 622-623, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 830, 951 P.2d 399 , discussed in § 60.463[3][a]].

See also § 60.440[2][c] for related chapters in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. See also § 60.440[2][b] for discussion of evidentiary support.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Prevailing Party After Dismissal

In Santisas v. Goodin (1998) 17 Cal. 4th 599, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 830, 951 P.2d 399 , plaintiff home buyers sued sellers for defects in the home, alleging both a claim for breach of contract and various tort causes of action. After discovery, plaintiff's voluntarily dismissed their action with prejudice. Defendants moved to recover attorney's fees as costs under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1021, 1032, 1033.5 and the attorney fee provision of the purchase contract, and this motion was granted by the trial court, awarding over $16,000 in attorney's fees as costs. On appeal by plaintiffs, the court of appeal affirmed.

A majority of the Supreme Court reversed. Defendants' initial argument was that the attorney fees were recoverable as litigation costs. The Court thus addressed the threshold issue, whether defendants' were entitled to recover costs, and concluded that they were, in fact, entitled to recover costs as a matter of right. Plaintiff's voluntarily dismissed the action, and defendants' are therefore "prevailing" parties entitled to costs under Code Civ. Proc. § 1032(a)(4), (b) (17 Cal. 4th 599, 606) .

The Court noted, that, on the record before it, it was undisputed that the parties entered into a purchase contract that included a provision for attorney's fees in the following terms: "[i]n the event legal action is instituted by ... any party to this agreement, or arising out of the execution of this agreement or the sale ... the prevailing party shall be entitled to receive from the other party a reasonable attorney fee to be determined by the court in which such action is brought" (17 Cal. 4th 599, 606-607) . The contract did not, however, define "prevailing party," nor was any extrinsic evidence offered on the issue. This term has more than one meaning under California law. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1032(a)(4) For purposes of recovering costs, a "prevailing party" includes a party in whose favor a judgment of dismissal has been entered. Under Civ. Code § 1717(b)(2), however, there is no "prevailing party" when the action has been voluntarily dismissed 17 Cal. 4th 599, 609) . The Court concluded that, because the term has not settled technical meaning as including or excluding a party in whose favor a dismissal has been entered, it would assume the parties understood the term in its ordinary or popular sense, disapproving Sweat v. Hollister (1995) 37 Cal. App. 4th 603, 611 n.7, 43 Cal. Rptr. 2d 399 to the extent it is inconsistent with this analysis (17 Cal. 4th 599, 609, 609 n.5). Giving the term its popular meaning, the Court concluded that the defendants' were prevailing parties under their agreement based on plaintiffs' voluntary dismissal, with prejudice of their action against defendant. Thus, in light of Code Civ. Proc. § 1032(a)(4) and the contract itself, defendants' were entitled to recover attorney's fees as an item of costs (17 Cal. 4th 599, 609) .

The Court then turned to the central question of the case, whether Civ. Code § 1717 operated to bar recovery of attorney's fees as costs, notwithstanding Code Civ. Proc. § 1032(a)(4) and the contract provision allowing their recovery (17 Cal. 4th 599, 609) .

The Court held that Civ. Code § 1717 applied to contract provisions for the recovery of attorney's fees, whether such provisions are unilateral, that is, allowing only one party to recover, or reciprocal, such as one allowing recovery by a "prevailing party," disapproving Honey Baked Hams, Inc. v. Dickens (1995) 37 Cal. App. 4th 421, 426, 43 Cal. Rptr. 2d 595 to the extent it is inconsistent with this conclusion (17 Cal. 4th 599, 614) .

The Court then noted that, by its terms, Civ. Code § 1717 applies in an action on a contract to enforce that contract. Thus, Civ. Code § 1717 only applies in an action that includes at least one contract claim, and if tort claims are also included, it applies only to attorney's fees incurred to litigate the contract claims (17 Cal. 4th 599, 615) . The Court disagreed, however, with the court of appeal's conclusion in this case that plaintiffs' contract claim was misnamed as actually sounded in tort. Civ. Code § 1717 therefore applied to the action, and, under Civ. Code § 1717(b)(2), defendants' were not "prevailing parties" and could not recover attorney's fees incurred in the defense of the contract claim (17 Cal. 4th 599, 615) .

Further, when Civ. Code § 1717(b)(2) applies, as in this case, it overrides with any conflicting language of the contract provision, based on the policy reasons underlying the enactment of Civ. Code § 1717. In other words, when plaintiff voluntarily dismisses a contract claim, defendant is barred from recovering attorney's fees as costs under Civ. Code § 1717(b)(2), even though the contract on its own terms authorizes recovery of those fees (17 Cal. 4th 599, 617 , emphasis original).

The Court concluded, however, that, because Civ. Code § 1717(b)(2), it does not bar recovery of fees incurred defending noncontract claims that would otherwise be recoverable under Code Civ. Proc. § 1032(a)(4) and the contract provision for fees. Thus, in the case of a voluntary dismissal, a defendant might recovery attorney's fees incurred defending tort claims arising from the contract, but not fees incurred defending any contract claims (17 Cal. 4th 599, 622-623) .

In Mitchell Land & Improvement Co. v. Ristorante Ferrantelli, Inc. (2007) 158 Cal. App. 4th 479, 70 Cal. Rptr. 3d 9 , a landlord brought an unlawful detainer action against a commercial lessee based on alleged violations of a lease provision requiring the premises only be used for lawful purposes. Specifically, the landlord claimed the tenant had unlawfully erected a tent-like covering over an open firepit in an outdoor seating area. After the tenant filed a motion for summary judgment, the landlord voluntarily dismissed the action. After the landlord's dismissal was entered, the lessee filed a motion seeking to be declared the prevailing party under Code Civ. Proc. § 1032 and sought attorney's fees under a lease provision providing that in an action or proceeding involving the premises, whether founded in tort, contract, or equity, the prevailing party would be entitled to reasonable attorney's fees, whether or not the action was pursued to judgment. Although the landlord did not dispute that the lessee was the prevailing party for purposes of its costs under Code Civ. Proc. § 1032, the landlord opposed an award of attorney's fees as prohibited by Civ. Code § 1717(b)(2). The trial court concluded § 1717 did not apply because the unlawful detainer action was not an action on a contract; rather, it was a basis for relief created by statute. The trial court awarded the lessee costs and attorney's fees (158 Cal. App. 4th 479, 482-483) .

The Court of Appeal reversed the attorney's fee award. Despite the fact the lessee was otherwise the prevailing party and otherwise entitled to its attorney's fees as costs pursuant to the terms of the lease, the court concluded that § 1717(b)(2) precluded the award. The court found this unlawful detainer proceeding in this case to be an action on a contract within the meaning of § 1717(b)(2), because the unlawful detainer action was based on an alleged breach of the lease during an unexpired term rather than an action to oust a holdover tenant following expiration of a lease, which would be an action is premised on tortious conduct (e.g., trespass), sounding in tort (158 Cal. App. 4th 479, 484-490) .

D & J, Inc. v. Ferro Corp. (1986) 176 Cal. App. 3d 1191, 222 Cal. Rptr. 656 , was a breach of contract action. After trial commenced and one witness had been examined, plaintiff moved to dismiss the action with prejudice under former Code Civ. Proc. § 581(5) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 581(e) (dismissal at plaintiff 's request after commencement of trial)]. The motion was granted. Defendant claimed attorney's fees as the prevailing party on the contract. The trial court determined that under Civ. Code § 1717(b)(2) there was no prevailing party and denied defendant's attorney's fee claim. Defendant appealed the denial of attorney's fees.

The court of appeal affirmed. Defendant contended that the dismissal after the commencement of the trial was an involuntary dismissal and therefore not within the purview of Civ. Code § 1717(b)(2). The court of appeal disagreed, saying that it is not the stage of the proceedings that distinguishes a voluntary dismissal from an involuntary one, but the plaintiff 's role in the dismissal (176 Cal. App. 3d 1191, 1194) .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Recovery of Attorney's Fees When Contract Void Because It Violates Public Policy

Bovard v. American Horse Enterprises, Inc. (1988) 201 Cal. App. 3d 832, 247 Cal. Rptr. 340 , began an action by the seller of a business to enforce promissory notes that were executed in connection with the sale of the business to defendant buyer. The promissory notes contained provisions for the award of attorney's fees. A stipulated judgment was entered against defendant. Defendant never signed the stipulation, claimed his attorney did not have authority to make it, and had that judgment vacated. Then, plaintiff filed a second amended complaint, including a cause of action for enforcement of the alleged settlement agreement. That cause of action was tried first. In the course of that trial, it became clear that the company was primarily engaged in the production of drug paraphernalia. The trial court dismissed the action on the ground that the contract was contrary to public policy, and struck a memorandum of costs and attorney fees filed by the buyer.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court concluded the trial court correctly declared the contract contrary to the policy of express law and therefore illegal and void (201 Cal. App. 3d 832, 841) . Concerning the attorney's fees sought by the buyer, the court followed Geffen v. Moss (1975) 53 Cal. App. 3d 215, 227, 125 Cal. Rptr. 687 , in which it was held that a party may not recover attorney's fees when it successfully defends an action on a contract on the ground the contract violated public policy. The court noted that a party to a contract who successfully argues its illegality stands on different ground than a party who prevails in an action on a contract by convincing the court the contract is inapplicable, invalid, nonexistent, or unenforceable for reasons other than illegality. Consistent with its decision that the sales contract was illegal and void, the court affirmed the trial court's order denying the buyer's claim for attorney's fees (201 Cal. App. 3d 832, 843) .

However, in Yuba Cypress Housing Partners, Ltd. v. Area Developers (2002) 98 Cal. App. 4th 1077, 120 Cal. Rptr. 2d 273 , the court distinguished Bovard because it involved a contract that was entirely unenforceable by either party due to its illegal object and enforced the attorney's fees clause. In Yuba Cypress, on learning that defendant had violated the Subdivided Lands Act (Bus. & Prof. Code § 11000 et seq.), plaintiff sought to rescind his real estate contract with defendant and recover moneys he had paid to defendant on the contract. After losing in the trial court, he prevailed on appeal. The appellate court reversed the judgment against him and remanded the case to the trial court with directions to calculate the reimbursement to which plaintiff was entitled and enter judgment in his favor. On remand, plaintiff moved for an award of attorney's fees and costs as the prevailing party under Civ. Code § 1717, pursuant to an attorney fee clause in the real estate contract. He sought to recover the fees and costs incurred at trial and on appeal. Defendant opposed the request and moved to tax fees and costs. Defendant argued that having obtained rescission of the contract on the ground that it violated the Subdivided Lands Act, plaintiff could not rely on the attorney's fee clause because the entire contract was void due to its illegality. The trial court ruled that the attorney's fee clause of the contract was enforceable, but denied the request for fees on appeal on the ground that the request was untimely (98 Cal. App. 4th 1077, 1080) .

The Court of Appeal affirmed the judgment to the extent it held the attorney's fees clause enforceable, and reversed the judgment to the extent that it denied plaintiff recovery for the attorney's fees incurred on appeal. The court held that the defendant was estopped from asserting that its violation of the Subdivided Land Act voided the entire contract, including the attorney's fees clause; otherwise, defendant would benefit from its own wrong. The court found that ordinarily, in an action on a contract providing for an award of attorney's fees, Civil Code section 1717 entitles the prevailing party to attorney's fees, even when the party prevails on the ground that the contract is inapplicable, invalid, unenforceable, or nonexistent, if the other party would have been entitled to attorney's fees had it prevailed (98 Cal. App. 4th 1077, 1081) . The court then noted that in Bovard v. American Horse Enterprises, Inc. (1988) 201 Cal. App. 3d 832, 247 Cal. Rptr. 340 (hereafter Bovard) and Geffen v. Moss (1975) 53 Cal. App. 3d 215, 125 Cal. Rptr. 687 , a different rule applies when a contract is held unenforceable because of illegality, because a party to the contract who successfully argues its illegality stands on different ground than a party who prevails in an action on a contract by convincing the court the contract is inapplicable, invalid, nonexistent or unenforceable for reasons other than illegality. Because courts generally will not enforce an illegal contract, there is no need for a mutual right to attorney's fees since neither party can enforce the agreement (98 Cal. App. 4th 1077, 1081-1082) . The court then found that in some cases effective deterrence of an illegal contract is best realized by enforcing the plaintiff's claim or allowing some other remedy because the forfeiture resulting from unenforceability of the contract is disproportionately harsh considering the nature of the illegality. In this case, the purpose of the Subdivided Lands Act is to protect members of the public who purchase lots or houses from developers. When a plaintiff purchases land under a contract that does not comply with the Act, courts will allow the plaintiff to enforce the contract against the seller or disaffirm the contract. Thus, the contract is voidable not void; since it does not have an illegal object, it is not one which neither party may enforce such that an attorney's fee clause contained therein also is unenforceable (98 Cal. App. 4th 1077, 1082-1083) . Plaintiff's choosing to void the contract did not preclude him from recovering attorney's fees under the contract clause; rather, defendant, who violated the Subdivided Lands Act, was estopped from asserting the invalidity of the contract (98 Cal. App. 4th 1077, 1083) .

4. Motion for Award of Attorney's Fees Under Civ. Code § 1717; Contract Provision

6-60 California Points & Authorities § 60.465

§ 60.465 Opposing Motion to Establish Entitlement to Fees in Action on Contract Under Civ. Code § 1717--Failure to File Timely, Noticed Motion

[1] FORM Opposing Motion to Establish Entitlement to Fees in Action on Contract Under Civ. Code § 1717--Failure to File Timely, Noticed Motion

[For caption, see § 60.460, with which this form should be combined.]

THE COURT SHOULD STRIKE _____ [PLAINTIFF'S or DEFENDANT'S] MOTION TO ESTABLISH ENTITLEMENT TO OR FIX ATTORNEY'S FEES IN ACTION ON CONTRACT BECAUSE IT WAS NOT NOTICED AND TIMELY FILED.

A. Applicable Procedure for Seeking Attorney's Fees Pursuant to Contract. Except as otherwise provided by statute, claims in civil cases for attorney's fees pursuant to a contract provision are subject to Rule 3.1702(b) or (c) of the California Rules of Court. The provisions of Rule 3.1702(b) or (c) apply whether a claim seeks a determination of entitlement to the fees, the amount of the fees, or both, and whether its seeks a determination because the contract provision refers to "reasonable" fees, requires a determination of the prevailing party, or for other reasons (Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1702(a)).

[EITHER]

B. Time to File Motion for Attorney's Fees. A notice of motion to claim attorney's fees for services up to and including the rendition of judgment in the trial court, including attorney's fees incurred on an appeal decided before the rendition of trial court judgment, must be served and filed within the time for filing a notice of appeal (Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1702(b)(1)). The parties may, by means of a stipulation filed before the expiration of the time allowed under Rule 3.1702(b)(1), extend the time for filing a motion for attorney's fees either (i) up to 60 days after the expiration of the time for filing a notice of appeal, or (ii) if a notice of appeal is filed, until the time within which a memorandum of costs on appeal must be served and filed under Rule 8.278(c) of the California Rules of Court (Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1702(b)(2)). For good cause, the trial judge may extend the time for filing the motion in the absence of a stipulation or for a longer period than allowed by stipulation (Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1702(d)).

[OR]

B. Time to File Motion for Attorney's Fees. A notice of motion to claim pursuant to a contract provision attorney's fees incurred on appeal, other than those claimed under Rule 3.1702(b) of the California Rules of Court, must be served and filed within the time for serving and filing the memorandum of costs on appeal under Rule 8.276(d) of the California Rules of Court (Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1702(c)(1)). The parties may, by means of a stipulation filed before the expiration of the time allowed under Rule 3.1702(c)(1), extend the time for filing a motion for attorney's fees up to an additional 60 days (Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1702(c)(2)). For good cause, the trial judge may extend the time for filing the motion in the absence of a stipulation or for a longer period than allowed by stipulation (Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1702(d)).

[CONTINUE]

C. Timely Motion for Attorney's Fees Required. The time for filing a motion for attorney fees is mandatory, and the court does not have discretion to disregard noncompliance (Russell v. Trans Pacific Group (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 1717, 1725, 24 Cal. Rptr. 2d 274).

D. Disregard of Procedural Deficiency Inconsistent With Legislative Intent. Authority stating a court, in its discretion, may ignore noncompliance with California Rules of Court, Rule 3.1702, does not conform to the intent of the Legislature in amending Code of Civil Procedure Section 1033.5 (see Gunlock Corp. v. Walk on Water, Inc. (1993) 15 Cal. App. 4th 1301, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 197). In amending Code of Civil Procedure Section 1033.5, the Legislature intended to make mandatory the requirement that attorney's fees be awarded only upon a noticed motion consistent with California Rules of Court, Rule 870.2 (Russell v. Trans Pacific Group (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 1717, 1724, 24 Cal. Rptr. 2d 274).

[a] Use of Form

This form is for use with the form set out in § 60.460, in opposition to a motion to establish entitlement to an award of attorney's fees under Civ. Code § 1717, when the motion was not served and filed within the mandatory time allowed by Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1702.

See also § 60.440[2][c] for related chapters in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. See also § 60.440[2][b] for discussion of evidentiary support.

Argument should include a discussion of the relevant dates, such as the date of mailing of the notice of entry of judgment or dismissal by the clerk or the date of the judgment, whichever is the relevant date for the start of the period during which the notice of appeal can be filed. Counsel should show why the motion for attorney's fees is not timely.

[d] Related Memoranda

This form may be combined with the form set out in § 60.13.

This form may be opposed by a countermotion for relief for untimely filing, supported by the memoranda set out in § 60.120 et seq.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Time to File Motion for Attorney's Fees

Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1702(b) sets the deadline for seeking attorney's fees up through the rendition of trial court judgment, including any fees incurred on an appeal that was decided prior to the trial court judgment. This deadline is determined by reference to the applicable periods for filing a notice of appeal under Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 8.104, 8.108.

Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1702(c) sets the deadline for claiming attorney's fees incurred on appeal, when there is no further litigation in the trial court. This deadline is determined by reference to the applicable period for filing the memorandum of costs on appeal under Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 8.278(c).

Note that when a party is entitled to contractual attorney's fees that may be fixed pursuant to a formula without the necessity of any determination by the trial court, the claim for attorney's fees must be made the memorandum of costs rather than by a noticed motion [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 3.1702(e)].

[b] Timely Motion for Attorney's Fees Required

In Russell v. Trans Pacific Group (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 1717, 24 Cal. Rptr. 2d 274 , the defendants, the prevailing parties in an action on a contract with an attorney's fees provision, filed a memorandum of costs, including amounts claimed as attorney's fees, before entry of judgment. The plaintiff filed a motion to tax costs, challenging the attorney's fees because the cost memorandum was not filed during the time allowed under former Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 870(a)(1), 870.2 [now see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 3.1700(a)(1), 3.1702]. The trial court granted the motion to tax costs as to the attorney's fees. The defendants filed a motion for relief under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, which the court denied.

The court of appeal affirmed. It held the defendants were required to file a noticed motion for attorney's fees, pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1033.5, during the time provided by former Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 870(a)(1) and 870.2 [now see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 3.1700(a)(1), 3.1702] (19 Cal. App. 4th 1717, 1723-1725) . The trial court did not have discretion to disregard the procedural deficiency (19 Cal. App. 4th 1717, 1725-1726) . While a motion for relief under Code Civ. Proc. § 473 is available to remedy the procedural deficiency, the court of appeal held the trial court did not err by denying the motion for relief (19 Cal. App. 4th 1717, 1728-1731) .

[c] Disregard of Procedural Deficiency Inconsistent With Legislative Intent

The court of appeal in Russell v. Trans Pacific Group (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 1717, 24 Cal. Rptr. 2d 274 , acknowledged contrary authority in Gunlock Corp. v. Walk on Water, Inc. (1993) 15 Cal. App. 4th 1301, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 197 .

In Gunlock, the defendant prevailed in an action on a contract with an attorney's fees provision but failed to file a motion for attorney's fees together with the cost memorandum, although the amount of attorney's fees was included in the cost memorandum. The trial court held it did not have discretion to disregard this procedural deficiency and was compelled by Code Civ. Proc. § 1033.5 and former Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 870.2 [now see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1702] to deny the attorney's fees. The court also denied the defendant's motion for relief under Code Civ. Proc. § 473 because counsel's ignorance--the reason for the procedural deficiency--was inexcusable.

The court of appeal reversed. It held the procedural requirements for filing a noticed motion for attorney's fees were not jurisdictional and, therefore, the trial court was not compelled to deny the attorney's fees (15 Cal. App. 4th 1301, 1304) . It concluded courts enjoy "substantial latitude in allowing fees to be awarded without strict compliance with statutory temporal and procedural limitations" (15 Cal. App. 4th 1301, 1305) .

The court of appeal in Russell disagreed with the holding in Gunlock. It found the Legislature, by amendment of Code Civ. Proc. § 1033.5 and the accompanying declaration of legislative intent, showed an intent to dispel uncertainty in the procedure required for obtaining attorney's fees (19 Cal. App. 4th 1717, 1728) . It therefore concluded the procedural requirements are mandatory, though not jurisdictional, and must be enforced (19 Cal. App. 4th 1717, 1728) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Timely Motion for Attorney's Fees Required

In Bankes v. Lucas (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 365, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 723 , the trial court awarded attorney's fees to the defendants, the prevailing parties in an action on a contract with an attorney's fees provision, even though the defendants did not make a motion for attorney's fees at the same time the cost memorandum was filed. The court of appeal, however, concluded neither party prevailed under the contract because the judgment was reversed in an earlier appeal; therefore, it reversed the award of attorney's fees (9 Cal. App. 4th 365, 367) . As an alternative basis for the reversal, the court of appeal held the trial court could not award attorney's fees because the defendants did not file a motion for attorney's fees at the same time they filed the cost memorandum as required by Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 870.2 (9 Cal. App. 4th 365, 371-372) .

In Nazemi v. Tseng (1992) 5 Cal. App. 4th 1633, 7 Cal. Rptr. 2d 762 , the defendant prevailed in the trial court on a contract containing an attorney's fees provision, and the judgment was affirmed in an earlier appeal. Before remittitur from the court of appeal, the defendant filed a memorandum of costs on appeal and moved for attorney's fees for both trial and appeal. The trial court awarded appeal costs and attorney's fees for both trial and appeal, and the plaintiffs appealed. The court of appeal reversed the award of attorney's fees for trial and affirmed the award of attorney's fees for appeal. It concluded the motion for attorney's fees was untimely as to trial fees but timely as to appeal fees under former Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 870.2 [now see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1702] (5 Cal. App. 4th 1633, 1638, 1640) . The court of appeal further held the notice of appeal from the original judgment did not toll the time for filing the cost memorandum and motion for attorney's fees incurred at trial (5 Cal. App. 4th 1633, 1638-1640) .

The facts and procedural background of Yuba Cypress Housing Partners, Ltd. v. Area Developers (2002) 98 Cal. App. 4th 1077, 120 Cal. Rptr. 2d 273 are discussed in § 60.464[3][a]. In that case, after the plaintiff prevailed on appeal and the appellate court remanded the case to the trial court to enter judgment in his favor, plaintiff moved for an award of attorney's fees as costs. The trial court, relying on former Cal. Rules Ct., Rule 870.2(c)(1) [now see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1702(c)(1)], concluded the motion was untimely with respect to fees incurred on appeal and taxed the costs by deducting that amount. The notice of issuance of the remittitur was mailed to the plaintiff on September 14, 1998, but plaintiff did not file his motion for appellate attorney's fees until June 25, 1999. The parties executed a stipulated judgment in favor of plaintiff in May 1999, and plaintiff filed his motion for attorney's fees on June 25, 1999. The judgment was entered on August 17, 1999, and notice of entry of judgment was mailed on August 26, 1999. Because the motion was filed after expiration of the 40-day time period specified in former Cal. Rules Ct., Rule 870.2(c)(1) [now see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1702(c)(1)], the trial court denied it as untimely (98 Cal. App. 4th 1077, 1083-1084) .

The Court of Appeal reversed. The court found that the trial court overlooked that former Cal. Rules Ct., Rule 870.2(c)(1) [now see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1702(c)(1)] explicitly specifies that it does not apply to attorney's fees on appeal claimed under former Cal. Rules Ct., Rule 870.2(b) [now see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1702(b)], which makes a notice of motion to claim attorney's fees for services up to and including the rendition of judgment in the trial court, including attorney's fees on an appeal before the rendition of judgment in the trial court, timely if served and filed within the time for filing a notice of appeal under former Cal. Rules Ct., Rules 2, 3 [now see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 8.104, 8.108]. Although plaintiff's appellate attorney's fees were incurred after rendition of an initial judgment in favor of defendants, that judgment was reversed and the case was remanded with directions for the trial court to enter a new judgment in favor of plaintiff. As a result, his appellate attorney's fees were incurred before the trial court's ultimate rendition of judgment in his favor. Former Cal. Rules Ct., Rule 870.2(b)(1) [now see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1702(b)(1)] applied. Plaintiff's motion for attorney's fees was filed prematurely, prior to the entry of judgment. Because the time frame in Cal. Rules Ct., Rule 8.104 governs the filing of a motion for attorney's fees as cost under former Cal. Rules Ct., Rule 870.2(b)(1) [now see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1702(b)(1)], a request for fees incurred before rendition of the judgment in the trial court may be timely even if it is filed prematurely prior to the entry of judgment (98 Cal. App. 4th 1077, 1085-1086) .

[For caption, see § 60.460, with which this form should be combined.]

THE COURT SHOULD EXERCISE ITS DISCRETION AND FIND THERE WAS NO PREVAILING PARTY IN THIS ACTION AND THEREFORE STRIKE _____ [PLAINTIFF'S or DEFENDANT'S] MOTION TO ESTABLISH ENTITLEMENT TO OR FIX ATTORNEY'S FEES IN THIS ACTION ON A CONTRACT.

A. Discretion of Trial Court Not to Declare Prevailing Party. In an action on a contract with an attorney's fees provision, the trial court may exercise its discretion and find there is no prevailing party under some circumstances. This discretion is founded in Civil Code Section 1717(b)(1). The trial court's exercise of discretion will be disturbed on appeal only if there is a clear showing of abuse of that discretion resulting in a miscarriage of justice (McLarand, Vasquez & Partners, Inc. v. Downey Savings & Loan Assn. (1991) 231 Cal. App. 3d 1450, 1456, 282 Cal. Rptr. 828).

B. Court May Consider Evidence at Trial. In making the determination that there is no prevailing party, the trial court is not limited to the pleadings. It may consider the evidence received at trial (Hilltop Investment Associates v. Leon (1994) 28 Cal. App. 4th 462, 466-468, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 552).

[a] Use of Form

This form is for use with the form set out in § 60.460, in opposition to a motion to establish entitlement to an award of attorney's fees under *Civ. [3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Discretion of Trial Court Not to Declare Prevailing Party

In McLarand, Vasquez & Partners, Inc. v. Downey Savings & Loan Assn. (1991) 231 Cal. App. 3d 1450, 1456, 282 Cal. Rptr. 828 , an architectural firm brought an action against the property owner for breach of contract and the owner cross complained against the firm. Neither prevailed on their complaints. The trial court found, even though the owner was entitled to costs, it was not entitled to attorney's fees.

The court of appeal affirmed. It held the trial court had the discretion to determine that neither party was the prevailing party for the purpose of awarding attorney's fees under Civ. Code § 1717. Fairness supported the trial court's exercise of discretion, so it would not be disturbed (231 Cal. App. 3d 1450, 1456) .

[b] Court May Consider Evidence at Trial

In Hilltop Investment Associates v. Leon (1994) 28 Cal. App. 4th 462, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 552 , a dispute arose over the right to a film. Cinema Force filed a complaint against Hilltop, claiming the rights. In response, Hilltop cross-complained against Cinema Force and Leon, the person who verified Cinema Force's original complaint, alleging Leon was the alter ego of Cinema Force. The trial court found in favor of Hilltop against Cinema Force but denied Hilltop's alter ego theory as to Leon, thus ruling in favor of Leon. Although Leon was technically a prevailing party eligible for an award of attorney's fees under the contract upon which the action was based, the trial court found there was no prevailing party, citing evidence presented at trial that Leon was the person who caused the difficulties.

The court of appeal affirmed. It sustained the trial court's discretion in finding there was no prevailing party. It held the trial court is not limited to the pleadings when determining whether there is a prevailing party, but may look to the evidence presented at trial (28 Cal. App. 4th 462, 466-467) .

Attorney or Other Party Acting in Propria Persona Is Not Entitled to an Award of Attorney's Fees. In an action on a contract with an attorney's fees provision, an attorney, or any other party, who chooses to represent himself or herself in the action does not "incur" or become liable for attorney's fees and therefore is not entitled to an award of such fees under Civil Code Section 1717 (*Trope v. [3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Attorney or Other Party Acting in Propria Persona Is Not Entitled to an Award of Attorney's Fees

In Trope v. Katz (1995) 11 Cal. 4th 274, 45 Cal. Rptr. 2d 241, 902 P.2d 259 , defendant contracted with plaintiff law firm to represent him in a marital dissolution proceeding. After later withdrawing as counsel in that action, plaintiff sought to recover $163,000 in fees from defendant, who refused to pay. Plaintiff brought an action to recover the fees pursuant to their contract with defendant. Defendant cross complained, alleging malpractice. The jury awarded plaintiff $163,000 under the fee agreement, but also found in favor of defendant's cross complaint, awarding the defendant $118,500 in damages. After entry of judgment, plaintiff moved for an award of attorney fees amounting to some $223,000 under the attorney fee provision of the contract. The trial court denied the motion on the ground that plaintiff law firm had represented itself throughout the litigation.

The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that an attorney who chooses to litigate in propria persona cannot recover "reasonable attorney's fees" under Civ. Code § 1717 as compensation for the time and effort expended on his or her own behalf or for resulting lost business opportunities (11 Cal. 4th 274, 292-293) . To the extent that they conflict with this holding, the Court disapproved the court of appeal decisions in Dameshghi v. Texaco Refining & Marketing, Inc. (1992) 3 Cal. App. 4th 1262, 6 Cal. Rptr. 2d 515 ; Garfield Bank v. Folb (1994) 25 Cal. App. 4th 1804, 31 Cal. Rptr. 2d 239 ; Jacobson v. Simmons Real Estate (1994) 23 Cal. App. 4th 1285, 28 Cal. Rptr. 2d 699 ; Hambrose Reserve, Ltd. v. Faitz (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 129, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 638 ; Renfrew v. Loysen (1985) 175 Cal. App. 3d 1105, 222 Cal. Rptr. 413 ; and Leaf v. City of San Mateo (1984) 150 Cal. App. 3d 1184, 198 Cal. Rptr. 447 (11 Cal. 4th 274, 292) .

The Court first noted that Civ. Code § 1717(a), by its terms, applies only to contracts specifically providing for the recovery of attorney fees that are "incurred to enforce that contract." To "incur" a fee is to become liable for or obligated to pay that fee. It follows that an attorney litigating in propria persona cannot be said to "incur" compensation for his or her time and lost business opportunities. Further, in both legal and general usage, a "fee" denotes a charge or consideration actually paid in exchange for legal representation, and an attorney litigating in propria persona pays no such compensation (11 Cal. 4th 274, 280) .

The Court found state case law deciding the issue before 1968 to be consistent with this view. This supported its conclusion that at the time Civ. Code § 1717 was enacted in 1968, the usual and ordinary meaning of the words "reasonable attorney's fees" was understood to be the consideration that a litigant pays or becomes liable to pay in exchange for legal representation, and that "attorney's fees" had such an established legal meaning. Absent any expression of different intent, the Legislature, in enacting the statute, intended these words to have their usual and established meaning (11 Cal. 4th 274, 282) .

The Court further concluded that Civ. Code § 1717 may not be construed to permit an attorney acting in propria persona to recover fees based on the value of the time spent on his or her own case. Other, nonattorney, parties acting in propria persona are clearly not entitled to recover attorney's fees under Civ. Code § 1717, and there is no basis for allowing disparate treatment of pro se litigants on the basis of their occupations. To permit disparate treatment would undermine the statute's purpose of providing a mutual remedy to both parties to a contract (11 Cal. 4th 274, 285-286) .

The Court finally rejected plaintiff 's arguments that attorney's fees should be recoverable by a pro se attorney litigant on public policy grounds; it expressly declined to decide the issue whether a party represented by in-house is a pro se litigant for the purposes of Civ. Code § 1717 (11 Cal. 4th 274, 288-292) .

[a] Use of Form

This form is for use with the form set out in § 60.460, in opposition to a motion to establish entitlement to an award of attorney's fees under Civ. Code § 1717, when the asserted basis for the award is the attorney's fees provision as an item of loss in an indemnification clause.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. See also § 60.442[2][b] for discussion of evidentiary support.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Indemnification Clause Cannot Be Basis for Attorney's Fees Award Under Civ. Code § 1717

In Campbell v. Scripps Bank (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 1328, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 635 , the sellers of real property sued the escrow holder for breach of contract for negligently causing escrow to close with loan terms not complying with terms of an agreement between the sellers and the buyer under which the sellers agreed to subordinate their position as the buyer's secured creditor in favor of other lenders, condition on acquisition and development loans complying with certain terms regarding maturity and points charged. A deed of trust of another secured lender, the sellers' deed of trust and the subordination agreement were recorded concurrently on close of the sale. The buyer's development plans then failed and the secured creditors foreclosed their security interests, leaving the sellers as sold-out junior lienholders whose security in the property was destroyed when the sale produced insufficient funds to pay the sellers (78 Cal. App. 4th 1328, 1331) . The trial court granted the escrow holder summary judgment (78 Cal. App. 4th 1328, 1332) , and awarded attorney's fees under an indemnification clause of the escrow instructions which included attorney's fees as an item of loss (78 Cal. App. 4th 1328, 1336-1337) .

The court of appeal affirmed the grant of summary judgment, but reversed the award of attorney's fees. The court held that inclusion of attorney's fees as an item of loss in a third-party claim indemnity provision does not constitute a provision for the award of attorney's fees in an action on contract as is required to trigger operation of Civ. Code § 1717 (78 Cal. App. 4th 1328, 1337) . The court held further that the provision, read as a whole and in context, was an indemnification clause that did not clearly and unambiguously put the principals to the escrow on notice that is was an attorney's fees clause providing for an award of fees to a prevailing party in litigation to enforce the escrow instructions (78 Cal. App. 4th 1328, 1337-1338) .

Myers Building Industries, Ltd. v. Interface Technology, Inc. (1993) 13 Cal. App. 4th 949, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 242 was an action by subcontractors against a company that had commissioned an office building and the company's general contractor to recover on mechanics' liens. The general contractor cross complained against the commissioning company, alleging breach of construction contract. The jury returned a special verdict in the general contractor's favor on its cross complaint, finding that the company had breached the contract, and the trial court thereafter awarded the contractor attorney's fees under the contract (13 Cal. App. 4th 949, 955-956) . The court of appeal reversed the fee award. The court found that the provisions containing attorney's fees applicable to the dispute between the general contractor and the company constituted third-party claims indemnity clauses not subject to the provisions of Civ. Code § 1717 (13 Cal. App. 4th 949, 968-975, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 242).

In Meininger v. Larwin-Northern California, Inc. (1976) 63 Cal. App. 3d 82, 135 Cal. Rptr. 1 , a painting subcontractor was awarded judgment in an action against the general contractor for breach of contract, but the trial court disallowed attorney's fees (63 Cal. App. 3d 82, 83-84) . The court of appeal affirmed, finding that the provision under which the subcontractor sought attorney's fees did not specifically provide for fees in an action on the contract, as required to trigger operation of Civ. Code § 1717, but, rather, provided for attorney's fees in third-party tort actions (63 Cal. App. 3d 82, 85) .

THE COURT SHOULD STRIKE [PLAINTIFF'S or DEFENDANT'S] MOTION TO ESTABLISH ENTITLEMENT TO ATTORNEY'S FEES IN THIS ACTION BECAUSE [DEFENDANT or PLAINTIFF] WAS NOT A SIGNATORY TO THE CONTRACT ON WHICH [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] BASES ENTITLEMENT TO ATTORNEY'S FEES AND WOULD NOT BE ENTITLED TO ENFORCE ATTORNEY'S FEES PROVISION.

Nonsignatory to Contract Containing Attorney's Fees Provision Is Not Liable for Attorney's Fees in Action on the Contract Unless Nonsignatory Would Be Entitled to Enforce Attorney's Fee Provision in Contract. In an action based on a contract brought by or against a nonsignatory, a signatory prevailing party is not entitled to an award of attorney's fees from a nonsignatory party unless there is a sufficient nexus between the parties such that the nonsignatory would be entitled to enforce, as a third party beneficiary, the attorney's fee provision in the contract (Whiteside v. Tenet Healthcare Corp. (2002) 101 Cal. App. 4th 693, 707-709, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 580).

This form is for use with the form set out in § 60.460, in opposition to a motion to establish entitlement to an award of attorney's fees under Civ. Code § 1717, when the asserted basis for the award is the attorney's fees provision in a contract to which the losing party was not a signatory.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

In Whiteside v. Tenet Healthcare Corp. (2002) 101 Cal. App. 4th 693, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 580 , a patient sued a healthcare corporation that operated a hospital, claiming that the corporation breached its admissions agreement and its agreement with the patient's health insurance company by accepting an additional payment from another insurer with whom the patient held a group health insurance policy. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of the healthcare corporation and awarded the healthcare corporation attorney's fees under the attorney's fees provision in the contract between the healthcare corporation and the insurer (101 Cal. App. 4th 693, 698) . After affirming the grant of summary judgment on the ground that the hospital was not precluded by its agreement with the patient's health insurer from seeking reimbursement from a third party payer, the court of appeal reversed the award of attorney's fees. The patient was not a signatory to the agreement between the hospital and the patient's health insurer. Further, the court found there was not a sufficient nexus between the hospital and the patient such that the patient would be entitled to enforce, as a third party beneficiary, the attorney's fee provision in the agreement because it was clear that the patient was a not third party beneficiary with regard to the entirety of the contract (101 Cal. App. 4th 693, 706-709) .

[1] FORM Opposing Motion to Establish Entitlement to Fees in Action on Contract Under Civil Code § 1717--Condition Precedent to Recovery of Fees Not Performed

THE COURT SHOULD STRIKE [PLAINTIFF'S or DEFENDANT'S] MOTION TO ESTABLISH ENTITLEMENT TO ATTORNEY'S FEES IN THIS ACTION BECAUSE HE/SHE/IT HAS NOT PERFORMED A CONDITION PRECEDENT TO THE RECOVERY OF FEES UNDER THE CONTRACT.

Prevailing Party Must Have Performed Conditions Precedent Under Contract to Be Entitled to Award of Attorney's Fees. In order to be entitled to an award of attorney's fees under a contract that provides for an award of fees to a party prevailing in an action to enforce the contract, the party must perform all other conditions precedent to an award of fees, such as initiating mediation to resolve the dispute prior to commencing litigation (Leamon v. Krajkiewcz (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 424, 431-433, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 362).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form is for use with the form set out in § 60.460, in opposition to a motion to establish entitlement to an award of attorney's fees under Civ. Code § 1717, when the prevailing party has not satisfied other conditions precedent specified in the contract, such as initiating mediation to resolve the dispute before commencing litigation.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should specify facts showing what the condition precedent in the contract was to an award of fees and how the prevailing party failed to satisfy it. See also § 60.442[2][b] for discussion of evidentiary support.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

Prevailing Party Must Have Performed Conditions Precedent Under Contract to Be Entitled to Award of Attorney's Fees

In Leamon v. Krajkiewcz (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 424, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 362 , the owner of a single-family residence listed the property for sale. Her next door neighbors expressed an interested in purchasing it, and proposed that a single real estate agent, who was a friend of the neighbors, represent both sides, to which the owner agreed. In the interim, the owner's daughter told her mother that she wanted the property. After informing the agent that her daughter wanted the property, she did not intend to sell to the neighbors, and she would not make an appointment, the agent and the neighbors came to her home. The agent told her that a verbal agreement was the same as a written one and threatened litigation if she did not go through with the sale. The agent then presented a residential purchase agreement and a disclosure form regarding a real estate agent's representing both seller and buyer. The agreement contained both a provision for an award of attorney's fees to the prevailing party in any action, proceeding, or arbitration arising out of the agreement, and a provision requiring mediation before resorting to arbitration or court action, other than a small claims court action. The agreement provided that if a party commences litigation without first attempting to resolve the matter through mediation, that party is not entitled to attorney's fees. The owner signed the agreement and other papers under duress. The owner's attorney subsequently informed the agent and the neighbors that the owner decided to cancel the sale of the home, mentioned the litigation threats and stated that her signature was procured under duress. The neighbors filed a small claims action for breach of contract. The owner filed a complaint to quiet title in the property and for infliction of emotional distress, and moved to consolidate the small claims action with the quiet title action. The cases were not consolidated because the small claims action was dismissed without prejudice. Counsel for the neighbors sent counsel for the owner a letter requesting mediation of the dispute in accordance with the agreement, but the owner did not comply. The owner filed an amended complaint to quiet title and obtain a judicial declaration that the agreement was void, but did not include a request for attorney's fees. The neighbors filed an answer and cross-complained, alleging breach of contract, specific performance, fraudulent conveyance and intentional inference with economic relationship and requesting attorney's fees with respect to the causes of action for breach of contract and specific performance. The owner's answer to the cross-complaint requested attorneys' fees. After a jury trial, the jury found there was no valid contract. After entry of judgment, the owner filed a memorandum of costs including a request for attorney's fees. The neighbors filed a motion to tax costs that asserted, among other things, that the owner never offered mediation prior to filing their complaint and therefore failed to comply with the requirements of the agreement for an award of attorney's fees. The trial court disallowed the entire request for attorney fees (107 Cal. App. 4th 424, 427-430) .

The Court of Appeal affirmed the disallowance of attorney's fees. The court held contractual conditions precedent to an award of attorney fees apply to a litigant who prevails by establishing the contract is invalid. The court found that there was no conflict between the mutuality of remedy embodied in Civ. Code § 1717 and the provision allowing a party who commences an action to recover attorney fees only if that party first sought to resolve the dispute through mediation (107 Cal. App. 4th 424, 432-433) . Requiring a party to mediate the question of the validity of contract does not necessarily mean that party concedes the contract is not voidable, because a request for mediation can clearly state the party's position that the contract is voidable or invalid and mediation is sought to preserve a claim for attorney's fees. The public policy of promoting mediation as a preferable alternative to judicial proceedings is served by requiring the party commencing litigation to seek mediation as a condition precedent to the recovery of attorney fees (107 Cal. App. 4th 424, 433) .

IN AN ACTION ON CONTRACT PROVIDING FOR THE RECOVERY OF ATTORNEY'S FEES, THE COURT SHALL FIX THE REASONABLE AMOUNT OF ATTORNEY'S FEES TO BE AWARDED AS AN ITEM OF COSTS TO THE PARTY PREVAILING ON THE CONTRACT.

A. Recovery of Reasonable Attorney's Fees in Action on Contract. When, in an action on a contract, the party prevailing on the contract is entitled to recover attorney's fees under Civil Code Section 1717, the court shall fix the reasonable amount of attorney's fees as an element of the costs of suit (Civ. Code § 1717(a); Code Civ. Proc. § 1033.5(a)(10), (c)(3), (c)(5)).

B. When Attorney's Fees Are Fixed. Attorney's fees, when awarded as an item of allowable costs, may be fixed either on a noticed motion or on entry of a default judgment, unless otherwise provided by stipulation of the parties (see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1033.5(a)(10)(A), (c)(5)).

C. Discretion of Trial Court in Determining Reasonable Attorney's Fees. In determining reasonable attorney's fees pursuant to Civil Code Section 1717, the trial court has wide latitude in determining the amount of the award [*PLCM v. [a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of a motion or application to fix the reasonable amount of attorney's fees to be awarded as costs pursuant to Civ. Code § 1717. It should be combined with other memoranda, as appropriate, set out in § 60.481 et seq.

Civ. Code § 1717 specifically provides that the attorney's fees awarded under that section are to be fixed by the court as an element of costs [Civ. Code § 1717(a); see also Code Civ. Proc. § 1033.5(a)(10) (attorney's fees authorized by contract are allowable item of costs), (c)(3) (allowable costs must be reasonable in amount), (c)(5) (attorney's fees awarded pursuant to Civ. Code § 1717 are allowable costs under Code Civ. Proc. § 1032)]. Attorney's fees authorized by contract, including fees awarded pursuant to Civ. Code § 1717, may be fixed either on a noticed motion or on entry of a default judgment, unless otherwise provided by stipulation of the parties [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1033.5(a)(10)(A), (c)(5)].

Typically, the court will fix the amount of attorney's fees to be awarded in accordance with an established schedule.

Any claim for fees that is not based on the court's established schedule of attorney's fees for actions on a contract shall bear the burden of proof [Code Civ. Proc. § 1033.5(c)(5)].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. Evidence cognizable by the court in such a motion proceeding should be submitted with the memorandum to support its factual statements. A request for judicial notice will support facts subject to such notice [Evid. Code § 450 et seq.]. Otherwise supporting affidavits or declarations under penalty of perjury should be submitted [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (affidavits), 2015.5 (declarations)], averring to such facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant or declarant as may be necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice and affidavits and declaration, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

Additional memoranda supporting a motion to fix attorney's fees are set out in § 60.481 et seq.

This form may also be combined, in an appropriate case, with the memoranda set out in § 60.440 et seq., when the motion to fix fees is combined with a motion to determine the party prevailing on the contract [see Civ. Code § 1717(b)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Recovery of Reasonable Attorney's Fees in Action on Contract

Under Civ. Code § 1717(a) and Code Civ. Proc. § 1033.5(a)(10), (c)(3), (c)(5), when, in an action on a contract, the party prevailing on the contract is entitled to recover attorney's fees under Civ. Code § 1717, the court is to fix the reasonable amount of attorney's fees as an element of the costs of suit.

[b] When Attorney's Fees Are Fixed

Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1033.5(a)(10)(A), (c)(5), attorney's fees, when awarded as an item of allowable costs, may be fixed either on a noticed motion or on entry of a default judgment, unless otherwise provided by stipulation of the parties.

[c] Discretion of Trial Court in Determining Reasonable Attorney's Fees

The facts and procedural background of PLCM v. Drexler (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 1084, 95 Cal. Rptr. 2d 198, 997 P.2d 511 are discussed in § 60.440[3][e]. In PLCM, the Supreme Court held that the trial court properly calculated attorney's fees to be awarded to an insurer for the services of its in-house counsel, based on their market value, specifically, the reasonable in-house attorney hours multiplied by the prevailing hourly rate in the community for comparable legal services (22 Cal. 4th 1084, 1094) . The Court held that the trial court has broad authority and wide latitude to determine the amount of a reasonable fee and under Civ. Code § 1717. The trial court's award will not be disturbed unless the appellate court is convinced that it is clearly wrong, i.e., it abused its discretion (22 Cal. 4th 1084, 1095) .

The trial court may make its own determination of the value of the services contrary to, or without the necessity for, expert testimony. The trial court makes its determination after consideration of a number of factors, including the nature of the litigation, its difficulty, the amount involved, the skill required in its handling, the skill employed, the attention given, the success or failure, and other circumstances in the case. Although the terms of the contract may be considered, they do not compel a particular award (22 Cal. 4th 1084, 1096) . In the instant case, the superior court based the award on the number of hours expended by in-house counsel multiplied by the prevailing market rate for comparable legal services in San Francisco, where counsel was located, which was a proper standard in calculating the fees. There was also sufficient evidence to support the amount of the award; in addition to the detailed documentation submitted by the insurer, the superior court was familiar with the quality of the services performed and the amount of time devoted to the case (22 Cal. 4th 1084, 1096) .

[d] Discretion of Trial Court to Fix Fees Is Not Limited by Local Court Rule

In Cruz v. Ayromloo (2007) 155 Cal. App. 4th 1270, 66 Cal. Rptr. 3d 725 , 32 tenants sued their former landlord on multiple causes of action stemming from the landlord's wrongful refusal to allow the tenants to return to their apartments after the city evacuated them because the building was unsafe. All of the tenants prevailed on their claims for forcible detainer, wrongful eviction, and negligent infliction of emotional distress. The trial court found the landlord had not legally evicted the tenants. The court further found, because other low-income tenants had in the meantime moved into the building, the tenants could no longer move back into the units and concluded monetary damages constituted the tenants' only remedy. The court calculated the landlord's additional profit due to re-renting the units at higher rates to the new tenants and awarded damages per unit. The court also awarded individual damages, as applicable to each tenant, for lost security deposits, emotional distress, and loss of personal property (155 Cal. App. 4th 1270, 1272-1273) .

Four of tenants who prevailed against the landlord on their breach of contract and other claims had written leases. The written leases included a contractual provision allowing for the recovery of attorney's fees to the prevailing party in any civil action "in connection with" the lease. The four tenants moved for a fee award pursuant to their leases. They excluded from the amount of fees sought all work that applied exclusively to other families or units. The landlord conceded the tenants were entitled to attorney's fees under Civ. Code § 1717, but only for fees incurred litigating the contract causes of action. The landlord challenged the reasonableness of the requested fees, noting the amount sought was 131 times the superior court's guidelines for fee awards in contract cases. Moreover, the landlord argued the tenants could not recover fees incurred in representing the other tenants who did not have written leases containing the attorney's fee clause. The trial court awarded fees to the tenants. In evaluating the reasonableness of the fees, the trial court reduced the requested fees to half the amount requested, because the trial court thought counsel knew this was a "mildly pro bono" type of work, and because of the relatively small amount at stake. The court then reduced this amount by another 25 percent to account for noncontract issues. The court further reduced this figure by another 20 percent to account for legal fees incurred for work done specifically for the other tenants, but noted that issues relating to the city's rent stabilization ordinance and the general issues were the same as to all building tenants. This resulted in an attorney's fees award that was 39 times the superior court's guidelines for fee awards in contract cases (155 Cal. App. 4th 1270, 1273-1274) .

The court of appeal affirmed the attorney's fees award. The appellate court held that the trial court did not err in granting fees that were several times higher than the schedule of suggested fees for contested contract cases in Los Angeles Superior Court Rule 3.2. The court noted that the fee guidelines in that rule apply when a contract provides for reasonable attorney fees "unless otherwise determined by the court." Thus, judges are free to depart from its provisions whenever the interests of justice require (155 Cal. App. 4th 1270, 1275) .

Moreover, to the extent a local rule conflicts with a state statute, the rule is invalid [citing Contractors Labor Pool, Inc. v. Westway Contractors, Inc. (1997) 53 Cal. App. 4th 152, 169, 61 Cal. Rptr. 2d 715] . Civ. Code § 1717 authorizes the trial court to award attorney fees and mandates reasonable attorney fees to be "fixed by the court." Here, the trial court permissibly departed from the guidelines and based its fee award on the "lodestar" method of calculating attorney fees. The award of fees was consistent with Civ. Code § 1717 (155 Cal. App. 4th 1270, 1276) .

[e] Discretion of Trial Court to Fix Fees Is Not Limited by Amount of Damages Awarded

Cruz v. Ayromloo (2007) 155 Cal. App. 4th 1270, 66 Cal. Rptr. 3d 725 , is discussed in [d], above. In addition to their other arguments, appellants contended that the trial court abused its discretion because the fee award was higher than the overall damages awarded to respondents. The appellate court stated that this argument was without merit. The court noted that it is not uncommon to award attorney's fees in an amount higher than the total damages awarded to a plaintiff or plaintiffs in a particular case, and that there was no authority for the proposition an award of attorney's fees must always be less than the award of damages in a given case (155 Cal. App. 4th 1270, 1276) .

IN AN ACTION ON CONTRACT PROVIDING FOR THE RECOVERY OF ATTORNEY'S FEES, THE COURT SHALL FIX THE REASONABLE AMOUNT OF ATTORNEY'S FEES TO BE AWARDED AS AN ITEM OF COSTS TO THE PARTY PREVAILING ON THE CONTRACT, WITHOUT APPORTIONMENT.

When Fees Need Not Be Apportioned Between Contract Cause of Action and Other Causes of Action. When a cause of action based on contract providing for attorney's fees is joined with other causes of action, the party prevailing on the contract may recover attorney's fees under Civil Code Section 1717 only as they relate to the contract action. Attorney's fees need not be apportioned, however, when they are incurred for representation on an issue common to both a cause of action in which fees are proper and one in which they are not allowed (Reynolds Metals Co. v. Alperson (1979) 25 Cal. 3d 124, 129, 158 Cal. Rptr. 1, 599 P.2d 83 ; Cruz v. Ayromloo (2007) 155 Cal. App. 4th 1270, 1276-1277, 66 Cal. Rptr. 3d 725 ; *Abdallah v. [3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] When Fees Need Not Be Apportioned Between Contract Cause of Action and Other Causes of Action

The facts and procedural background of Reynolds Metals Co. v. Alperson (1979) 25 Cal. 3d 124, 158 Cal. Rptr. 1, 599 P.2d 83 , are discussed in § 60.446. In Reynolds, the Supreme Court held that, when a cause of action based on a contract providing for attorney's fees is joined with other causes of action beyond the contract, the prevailing party may recover fees under Civ. Code § 1717 only as they relate to the contract action. Civ. Code § 1717 specifically refers to fees incurred to enforce the provisions of the contract. A litigant therefore, may not, increase recovery of attorney's fees by joining a cause of action in which attorney's fees are not recoverable to one in which an award is proper. Consequently, attorney's fees incurred solely for defending other causes of action are not recoverable (25 Cal. 3d 124, 129) . Attorney's fees need not, however, be apportioned when incurred for representation on an issue common to both a cause of action in which fees are proper and one in which they are not allowed (25 Cal. 3d 124, 129-130) . Therefore, all expenses incurred with respect to an issue that is common to the cause of action based on the contract and another cause of action qualify for an award of fees (25 Cal. 3d 124, 130) .

The facts and procedural background of Cruz v. Ayromloo (2007) 155 Cal. App. 4th 1270, 66 Cal. Rptr. 3d 725 , are discussed in § 60.480[3][d]. In Cruz, the Court of Appeal held that the trial court did not err in basing its attorney's fee award on more than solely the breach of contract claims, because the broad language of the attorney's fee clause in the lease agreement covered all fees in any civil action stemming from the lease. The attorney's fee clause provided that if civil action was instituted in connection with the lease, the prevailing party would be entitled to recover reasonable attorney's fees. The underlying civil action encompassed both breach of contract and tort causes of action arising from the tenants' leases with the landlord. The trial court did not have to base its award solely on breach of contract damages, because the lease contemplated recovery of attorney's fees for all claims in any civil action in connection with the lease. Apportionment of fees for the breach of contract and tort causes of action was unnecessary, because the broad language of the attorney's fee clause permitted recovery of attorney fees for breach of contract or any other claim asserted in connection with the lease (155 Cal. App. 4th 1270, 1276-1277) .

In Abdallah v. United States Bank (1996) 43 Cal. App. 4th 1101, 51 Cal. Rptr. 2d 286 , defendants sought a two-thirds reduction of an attorney's fees award under Civ. Code § 1717, on the ground that plaintiffs were entitled only to fees on the contract cause of action and not on the tort or RICO causes of action. The court of appeal rejected the contention, holding that a trial court has discretion to award fees incurred on both a contract cause of action and other causes of action, when the issue is common to both and the fee for the contract cause of action is proper, and that the trial court in this case did not abuse that discretion (43 Cal. App. 4th 1101, 1112) .

IN AN ACTION ON CONTRACT PROVIDING FOR THE RECOVERY OF ATTORNEY'S FEES, THE COURT MUST FIX THE REASONABLE AMOUNT OF ATTORNEY'S FEES TO BE AWARDED AS AN ITEM OF COSTS WITHOUT ALLOCATION BETWEEN MULTIPLE PARTIES REPRESENTED IF THE LIABILITY OF THE PARTIES IS SO FACTUALLY INTERRELATED THAT ALLOCATION WOULD BE IMPOSSIBLE.

Fees Need Not Be Allocated Between Multiple Parties When Allocation Is Impossible. In awarding attorney's fees under Civil Code Section 1717, allocation of attorney's fees incurred in representing multiple parties is not required when the liability of the parties is so factually interrelated that it would have been impossible to separate the activities into compensable and noncompensable time units (Cruz v. Ayromloo (2007) 155 Cal. App. 4th 1270, 1277, 66 Cal. Rptr. 3d 725).

would be impossible to separate the activities into compensable and noncompensable time units.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Fees Need Not Be Allocated Between Multiple Parties When Allocation Is Impossible

The facts and procedural background of Cruz v. Ayromloo (2007) 155 Cal. App. 4th 1270, 66 Cal. Rptr. 3d 725 , are discussed in § 60.480[3][c]. In Cruz, the Court of Appeal held that the trial court did not err in not apportioning the attorney's fee award because the tenants sought fees for legal work performed on their behalf, even though other tenants who did not have written leases containing the attorney's fee clause were incidental beneficiaries. Allocation of fees incurred in representing multiple parties was not required, because the tenants' various claims were inextricably intertwined, making it impracticable if not impossible to separate the multitude of conjoined activities into compensable or noncompensable time units (155 Cal. App. 4th 1270, 1277) .

Further, the four tenants with the written leases sought fees for legal work performed solely on their behalf, and the fees were awarded only to them and not to the other tenants. The four tenants and the other 28 tenants all lived in the same building, were evacuated from the building, and were not allowed to return to the building by the landlord. All tenants asserted the same causes of action. The attorneys conducted legal research pertaining to the overarching legal issues common to all tenants, including the local rent stabilization ordinance and the claims for forcible detainer, wrongful eviction, and negligent infliction of emotional distress. The attorneys had to do the same legal research and analysis in preparing their case on behalf of the four tenants, irrespective of the number of potential tenants benefitting from the legal work performed. The four tenants claimed they took careful measure not to seek attorney's fees for any legal work done for the exclusive benefit of the tenants who did not have a right to recover fees. However, the trial court still reduced the fees to account for legal fees incurred for work done specifically for the tenants who did not have a contractual right to attorney's fees. The other tenants without contracts containing the attorney fee clause may have been third party beneficiaries of the legal services rendered to the four tenants who had attorney's fees provisions in their respective leases. However, the fact that the other tenants incidentally benefitted from the legal work performed on behalf of the four tenants did not diminish the four tenants' contractual right to recover attorney's fees litigating issues common to all (155 Cal. App. 4th 1270, 1277-1278) .

Lodestar Method of Computing Attorney's Fees Applies. The lodestar method of calculating attorney's fees, based on the hourly rate of attorneys in the area and the number of hours expended on the case, and on the application of a multiplier to either increase or reduce that figure, is applicable in determining an attorney's fee award under Civil Code Section 1717 (PLCM v. [3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Lodestar Method of Computing Attorney's Fees Applies

The facts and procedural background of PLCM v. Drexler (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 1084, 95 Cal. Rptr. 2d 198, 997 P.2d 511 are discussed in § 60.440[3][e]. In PLCM, the Supreme Court held that for an award of attorney's fees pursuant to Civ. Code § 1717, the fee setting inquiry ordinarily begins with the "lodestar," i.e., the number of hours reasonably expended multiplied by the reasonable hourly rate, and the reasonable hourly rate is that prevailing in the community for similar work. The lodestar figure may then be adjusted, based on consideration of factors specific to the case, to fix the fee at the fair market value for the legal services provided. This approach anchors the trial court's analysis to an objective determination of the value of the attorney's services, ensuring that the amount awarded is not arbitrary (22 Cal. 4th 1084, 1095) .

In this case, the trial court awarded fees to an insurer using the lodestar method for representation by its in-house counsel. The party against whom fees were awarded contended that the court erred because it did not use a so-called "cost-plus" approach, based on a precise calculation of the actual salary, costs, and overhead of in-house counsel. The Court held that nothing in Civ. Code § 1717 compelled such an approach. The Court found that the cost-plus approach, in addition to being cumbersome, intrusive, and costly to apply, may distort the incentives for settlement and reward inefficiency, and that the lodestar method, as applied to the calculation of attorney fees for in-house counsel is presumably reasonable, although in exceptional circumstances, the trial court is not precluded from using other methodologies (22 Cal. 4th 1084, 1096-1097) .

In Sternwest Corp. v. Ash (1986) 183 Cal. App. 3d 74, 227 Cal. Rptr. 804 , plaintiff originally sued defendant who was found liable. An additional defendant was joined on the theory that he was a partner of the principal defendant and equally liable with him. The joined defendant was found not liable, was dismissed from the action, and was found entitled to attorney's fees under Civ. Code § 1717. The trial court determined the normal attorney's fees in the area, and awarded the joined defendant a recovery based on that fee and the hours expended on the case. It denied the joined defendant's request that the recovery for hours expended, the "lodestar recovery," should be enhanced because of the novelty and difficulty of the case, and because of the long delay in calculating and paying the amount of recovery. The joined defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed (183 Cal. App. 3d 74, 76) . The court observed that the trial court denied enhancement of lodestar fees because it felt that such enhancement could be awarded only in cases involving a private attorney general when the attorney's services were devoted to maintaining a public interest. The court said the trial court was wrong because it did have the discretion to grant that type of enhancement. Although the trial court has a wide discretion in making an award under Civ. Code § 1717, in the instant case the enhancement was not denied because of an exercise of discretion, but because of the trial court's erroneous view of its power. Thus, the court of appeal remanded the case to the trial court and directed it to enhance the lodestar award by the factor that the court, in its discretion, deems proper (183 Cal. App. 3d 74, 76) . After the trial court has performed all the necessary calculations, it must consider whether the total award is more than a reasonable amount and, if so, must reduce the Civ. Code § 1717 award so that it is a reasonable figure (183 Cal. App. 3d 74, 77) .

Note that after the Sternwest decision, Code Civ. Proc. § 1033.5(c)(5) was amended to provide that "[a]ny claim not based on the court's established schedule of attorney's fees for actions on a contract shall bear the burden of proof." Thus, any claim for fees that is based on the "lodestar" method of calculation must be supported by facts that support the use of that basis of computation in lieu of the court's established schedule for contract actions.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Reimbursement of Attorney's Out-of-Pocket Costs

Bussey v. Affleck (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 1162, 275 Cal. Rptr. 646 , was an action for collection on a promissory note that contained an attorney's fee provision. The plaintiff prevailed in the action, but the trial court's postjudgment order for attorney's fees and costs made virtually no allowance for any of the disbursements of plaintiff 's counsel in connection with the case. Disallowed expenses included expert witness fees, photocopying charges, messenger and express mail charges, telephone bills, and travel expenses, all of which were claimed as attorney's fees under Code Civ. Proc. § 1033.5, on the basis of defendants' agreement under the note to "pay all costs and expenses of collection including reasonable attorney's fees." Plaintiff appealed from the postjudgment order.

The court of appeal (a panel of Division Four, First District) reversed the postjudgment order for attorney's fees and costs insofar as it disallowed the disbursements of plaintiff 's counsel, and remanded the case for redetermination of the costs (225 Cal. App. 3d 1162, 1167) . The court held that when a contract provides for payment of costs and attorney's fees, the court may allow disbursements of counsel as attorney's fees under Code Civ. Proc. § 1033.5(a)(10) if they represent expenses ordinarily billed to a client and are not included in the overhead component of counsel's hourly rate (225 Cal. App. 3d 1162, 1166) . The court noted that the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 1033.5 do not dictate a contrary result. Insofar as counsel's disbursements are for expenses not included in the list of allowable costs in Code Civ. Proc. § 1033.5(a), the court has discretion to award them under Code Civ. Proc. § 1033.5(c)(4). Insofar as the disbursements are for costs that are not allowable under Code Civ. Proc. § 1033.5(b), unless "expressly authorized by law," the requisite authority is found in Code Civ. Proc. § 1021 and Civ. Code § 1717, which authorize contracting parties to stipulate for the payment of attorney's fees and costs. The court noted that disbursements of counsel that are "not reasonably necessary" to the conduct of litigation are disallowable, pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1033.5(c)(2), but that there was little dispute about the propriety of the outlay for expert witness's fees in the instant case; although the trial judge did not expressly order the parties to present expert testimony, he openly invited such testimony and suggested on at least five separate occasions prior to trial that such testimony would be helpful in connection with calculations under the note (225 Cal. App. 3d 1162, 1167) .

Unlike Bussey, however, the Third District Court of Appeal has not allowed a prevailing party to claim an attorney's out-of-pocket expenses under a contract allowing the recovery of attorney's fees regardless of whether independently allowed by statute, and has found that Bussey was wrongly decided [see Ripley v. Pappadopoulos (1994) 23 Cal. App. 4th 1616, 1622, 28 Cal. Rptr. 2d 878 , discussed in § 60.41]. In Robert L. Cloud & Associates, Inc. v. Mikesell (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 1141, 1154, 82 Cal. Rptr. 2d 143 , Division Five of the First Appellate District rejected Bussey and adopted Ripley. In Carwash of America-PO v. Windswept Ventures No. I (2002) 97 Cal. App. 4th 540, 541-544, 118 Cal. Rptr. 2d 536 , the Third District applied the rule in Ripley to prevailing defendants as well as prevailing plaintiffs, and held that when judgment is entered for a party on a claim for breach of a contract containing a provision permitting the prevailing party to recover expert witness fees, the fees may not be awarded as an item of costs but must be pleaded and proven separately.

Interest on Attorney's Fees Is Available. When there is a long delay in calculating and paying the amount of attorney's fees, interest on those attorney's fees should be awarded. The trial court will determine a rate of interest, and apply that rate to the period of delay, which is the period from the filing of the claim for attorney's fees and the date of computation of the award (*Sternwest Corp. v. [3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Interest on Attorney's Fees Is Available

The facts and procedural background of Sternwest Corp. v. Ash (1986) 183 Cal. App. 3d 74, 277 Cal. Rptr. 804 , are discussed in § 60.482. In Sternwest, the joined defendant sought interest on the attorney's fees due to the long delay in calculating and paying the amount of recovery. The trial court said that interest would be difficult, if not impossible, to calculate since the fees were incurred over a period of several years in varying amounts. The court of appeal found that statement to be a finding by the trial court that interest should be awarded. The appellate court said that the computation of interest on attorney's fees involves only simple arithmetic; the trial court must determine a rate of interest, and apply that rate to the period of delay. The court said the fairest period to chose in selecting the period of delay would be the period from the filing of the joined defendant's claim for attorney's fees to the date of computation of the award. A litigant cannot be expected to pay Civ. Code § 1717 fees until an appropriate demand is made on him or her. Moreover, if a claimant is delayed in filing a claim due to the conduct of the obligor, that amount of delay should be considered in determining the enhancement of the lodestar (183 Cal. App. 3d 74, 76) . The court concluded that the interest, computed at the rate of interest selected by the trial court, should be awarded in addition to the enhanced lodestar fees. Then the total judgment, including attorney's fees, will bear interest at the rate of 10 percent until paid, as provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 685.010 (183 Cal. App. 3d 74, 77) .

ATTORNEY'S FEES AWARDED UNDER CIVIL CODE SECTION 1717 TO _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT], AS THE PARTY PREVAILING ON THE CONTRACT, SHALL BE DEDUCTED FROM ANY DAMAGES AWARDED AGAINST HIM/HER/IT ON A CAUSE OF ACTION NOT BASED ON CONTRACT.

Deduction of Award of Fees From Damages Awarded in Favor of Party Not Prevailing on Contract. If the amount awarded under Civil Code Section 1717 exceeds the amount awarded the party not prevailing on the contract, the net amount shall be awarded the party prevailing on the contract and judgment may be entered in favor of the party prevailing on the contract for that net amount (*Civ. [3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Deduction of Award of Fees From Damages Awarded in Favor of Party Not Prevailing on Contract

Civ. Code § 1717(c) provides that in an action that seeks relief in addition to that based on a contract, if the party prevailing on the contract has damages awarded against it on causes of action not on the contract, the amounts awarded to the party prevailing on the contract under Civ. Code § 1717 are to be deducted from any damages awarded in favor of the party who did not prevail on the contract. If the amount awarded under Civ. Code § 1717 exceeds the amount awarded the party not prevailing on the contract, the net amount is to be awarded the party prevailing on the contract and judgment may be entered in favor of the party prevailing on the contract for that net amount.

THE AMOUNT OF POSTOFFER ATTORNEY'S FEES REQUESTED BY DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS RECOVERABLE UNDER CIVIL CODE SECTION 1717 AND CODE CIV. PROC. § 998 BECAUSE THE JUDGMENT IN FAVOR OF PLAINTIFF WAS NOT AS FAVORABLE AS DEFENDANT'S OFFER.

Court May Fix and Award Attorney's Fees Incurred After More Favorable Settlement Offer Was Made. When a plaintiff prevails on the contract, but the judgment in plaintiff's favor is less favorable than the defendant's prior settlement offer under Code Civ. Proc. § 998, the post-offer costs that the defendant is entitled to recover pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 998 includes post-offer attorney's fees when such fees are otherwise recoverable as an element of costs pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1032, 1033.5 (Scott Co. of California v. Code § 1717 gives the prevailing party the right to recover attorney's fees, those fees are recoverable as an element of costs pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1032, 1033.5 and, therefore, may be recovered by the defendant as post-offer costs under Code Civ. Proc. § 998 when the plaintiff does not obtain a judgment more favorable than the defendant's offer (*Scott Co. of California v. Blount, Inc. (1999) 20 Cal. 4th 1103, 1112-1116, 86 Cal. [3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Court May Fix and Award Attorney's Fees Incurred After More Favorable Settlement Offer Was Made

In Scott Co. of California v. Blount, Inc. (1999) 20 Cal. 4th 1103, 86 Cal. Rptr. 2d 614, 979 P.2d 974 , the defendant made a Code Civ. Proc. § 998 offer to the plaintiff of $900,000, which the plaintiff rejected. The contract upon which the action was based contained an attorney's fees provision. After a court trial, the court awarded the plaintiff $442,054 in damages. Pursuant to Civ. Code § 1717 and Code Civ. Proc. § 998, the court awarded the defendant $568,925 in postoffer attorney's fees as an element of postoffer costs. The court of appeal reversed the award of attorney's fees. It held the defendant was not entitled to postoffer attorney's fees.

The Supreme Court reversed the court of appeal's determination that the defendant could not recover its postoffer attorney's fees. It held that, since contractual attorney's fees are an element of costs under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1032, 1033.5 and the defendant was entitled to postoffer costs under Code Civ. Proc. § 998 because the offer was more favorable to the plaintiff than the judgment, the defendant was entitled to recover its postoffer attorney's fees (20 Cal. 4th 1103, 1112-1116) .

THE AMOUNT OF ATTORNEY'S FEES REQUESTED BY _____ [specify party, e.g., PLAINTIFF] _____ [name] IS UNREASONABLE AND EXCESSIVE AND THE AMOUNT OF FEES AWARDED, IF ANY, SHOULD NOT EXCEED $_____.

A. Discretion of Trial Court. The determination of what constitutes reasonable attorney's fees is within the discretion of the trial court (Serrano v. Priest (1977) 20 Cal. 3d 25, 49, 141 Cal. Rptr. 315, 569 P.2d 1303).

B. Fundamental Determination in Setting Fee. The fundamental determination which the trial court should make is a calculation of the attorney's services in terms of the time he or she has spent on the case (Serrano v. Priest (1977) 20 Cal. 3d 25, 48 fn. 23, 141 Cal. Rptr. 315, 569 P.2d 1303). The court must first make a finding on this factor as well as the value of these services, and after calculating the amount of fees on this basis, may then use its discretion in augmenting or diminishing this figure (Mandel v. Lackner (1979) 92 Cal. App. 3d 747, 758, 155 Cal. Rptr. 269).

C. Other Factors. Other factors to be considered by the trial court in setting a reasonable attorney's fee should include the nature of the litigation, its difficulty, the amount involved, the skill required, the skill employed, the attention given, the success or failure, and other circumstances in the case, [such as the prevailing party's failure to accept an early, reasonable settlement offer] (Meister v. Regents of University of California (1998) 67 Cal. App. 4th 437, 449-455, 78 Cal. Rptr. 2d 913 ; Melnyk v. Robledo (1976) 64 Cal. App. 3d 618, 624, 134 Cal. Rptr. 602).

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to a motion for an award of attorney's fees based on an equitable exception to the general rule against such awards, or where there is otherwise no express procedure for fixing the amount of the award. Thus, this form may be used to oppose a motion made under the common fund exception (§ 60.300 et seq.) or the substantial benefit exception (§ 60.340 et seq.) [but see § 60.340[2][a] on the arguable codification of the substantial benefit exception within the procedures of Code Civ. Proc. § 1021.5].

It may be combined with other memoranda, as appropriate, set out in § 60.551 et seq.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Evidence cognizable by the court in such a motion proceeding should be submitted with the memorandum to support its factual statements. A request for judicial notice will support facts subject to such notice [Evid. Code § 450 et seq.]. Otherwise supporting affidavits or declarations under penalty of perjury should be submitted [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (affidavits), 2015.5 (declarations)], averring to such facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant or declarant as may be necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. [3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Discretion of Trial Court

The facts and procedural background of Serrano v. Priest (1977) 20 Cal. 3d 25, 141 Cal. Rptr. 315, 569 P.2d 1303 , are discussed in § 60.320[3][c]. One of the firms representing plaintiffs contended that it was awarded inadequate fees. The Supreme Court found that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in the amount of fees which it awarded to plaintiffs' attorneys and stated that the experienced trial judge is the best judge of the value of professional services rendered in his or her court. The Court found that the trial court had made a careful compilation of the time spent and reasonable hourly compensation of each attorney and law student, and stated that compilation is properly fundamental to a trial court's determination of reasonable attorney's fees.

[b] Fundamental Determination in Setting Fee

The facts and procedural background of Serrano v. Priest (1977) 20 Cal. 3d 25, 141 Cal. Rptr. 315, 569 P.2d 1303 , are discussed in § 60.320[3][c]. This case is also discussed in § 60.550[3][a].

In Mandel v. Lackner (1979) 92 Cal. App. 3d 747, 155 Cal. Rptr. 269 (Mandel II), plaintiffs had obtained a judgment enjoining the Governor from closing state offices on Good Friday, enjoining the state controller from paying state employees for time taken off on that day, and awarding pre-judgment attorney's fees to plaintiff. The judgment was affirmed on a prior appeal, with the award of attorney's fees being affirmed on the basis of the substantial benefit theory, and the court of appeal remanded the matter for the trial court to hear a motion for attorney's fees for that appeal. The trial court granted the motion and entered a judgment for $75,000 payable by the state which appealed from the judgment. Only the amount of attorney's fees, and not the trial court's determination that plaintiff was entitled to such fees, was disputed in Mandel II.

The court of appeal applied the formulation for determining the amount of fees set out by the Supreme Court in Serrano v. Priest (1977) 20 Cal. 3d 25, 141 Cal. Rptr. 315, 569 P.2d 1303 (Serrano III), since the award in Serrano III was based on the equitable powers of the court, as was the award in Mandel II which was based on the substantial benefit theory. The formulation set out in Serrano III requires the trial court to first determine the essential factors of time spent by the attorney and the value of these services on a per-hour or other unit-of-time basis. Once the court makes its calculation, it may then use its discretion to make further calculations augmenting or diminishing the base figure by considering other factors. In Mandel II, these included: (1) the novelty and difficulty of the questions involved and the skill displayed in presenting them; (2) the extent to which the nature of the litigation precluded other employment by the attorneys; (3) the contingent nature of the fee award, (4) the fact that no award against the state would ultimately fall on the taxpayers; (5) the fact that the attorneys in question received public and charitable funding for the purpose of bringing law suits of the character of the lawsuit in question; and (6) the fact that the monies awarded would inure not to the individual benefit of the attorneys involved, but to the organizations by which they were employed. The court of appeal in Mandel II reversed the amount of fees awarded for the prior appeal, finding that the lower court had abused its discretion by failing to make the essential preliminary determinations as set out above.

[c] Other Factors

In Meister v. Regents of University of California (1998) 67 Cal. App. 4th 437, 78 Cal. Rptr. 2d 913 , the plaintiff sued the University of California Regents and a university dean for violation of the Information Practices Act of 1977 after the dean made public a confidential letter concerning the plaintiff's employment. After the plaintiff prevailed in the action, he sought an award of attorney's fees in excess of $500,000 under Civ. Code § 1798.48(b), which mandates an award of reasonable attorney's fees in a successful action under the Information Practices Act of 1977. The trial court, however, awarded only about $75,000 because the plaintiff had refused a favorable settlement offer early in the litigation and the litigation had achieved only limited success.

The court of appeal affirmed. It held the low amount of attorney's fees awarded was within the broad discretion of the trial court in determining the amount of a reasonable attorney's fee award. Since the evidence supported a conclusion the offer would have afforded the plaintiff as good or better relief than did the ultimate judgment, a reduction of fees to those earned before the offer was within the trial court's discretion (67 Cal. App. 4th 437, 449-455) .

In Melnyk v. Robledo (1976) 64 Cal. App. 3d 618, 134 Cal. Rptr. 602 , defendant claimed attorney's fees in her memorandum of costs and disbursements pursuant to the provisions of a note and trust deed. Plaintiff moved to tax costs and the trial court reduced the amount awarded for attorney's fees. Defendant appealed from the portion of the judgment in her favor awarding reduced attorney's fees. In affirming, the court of appeal stated that a trial court should make its determination of what constitutes reasonable attorney's fees after considering a number of factors including the nature of the litigation, its difficulty, the amount involved, the skill required and employed, the attention given, the success or failure and other circumstances in the case.

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Discretion of Trial Court

In White v. Moriarty (1993) 15 Cal. App. 4th 1290, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 200 , the trial court awarded the plaintiff a judgment on a promissory note that included an award for attorney fees and costs. On appeal, the defendant claimed that the trial court erred in failing to reduce the award by striking portion's of the plaintiff 's attorney's billing for certain telephone conversations. The appellate court determined that the record on appeal indicated that at least some of the disputed telephone calls related to the plaintiff. The defendant did not explain why the other unexplained calls were improperly charged, and the trial court had already heard these arguments and made some deductions for time billed when it calculated the award of attorney fees. On this record, the appellate court upheld the award because the defendant failed to show that the trial court had abused its discretion (15 Cal. App. 4th 1290, 1296-1297) .

THE AMOUNT OF ATTORNEY'S FEES REQUESTED BY _____ [specify party, e.g., PLAINTIFF] _____ [name] IS UNREASONABLE AND EXCESSIVE, IN THAT IT IS NOT SUPPORTED BY THE EVIDENCE.

Award of Attorney's Fees Must Be Supported by Evidence. In the absence of such crucial information as the number of hours worked, billing rates, the types of issues dealt with, and appearances made on the client's behalf, the trial court must guess at the actual value of the attorney's services. Such guessing is unacceptable and cannot be the basis for an award of fees. To petition successfully for attorney's fees an attorney must present evidence, documentary and oral, of the services actually performed, and expert opinion regarding what would be a reasonable fee for such services (Martino v. Denevi (1986) 182 Cal. App. 3d 553, 558-559, 227 Cal. Rptr. 354).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Award of Attorney's Fees Must Be Supported by Evidence

In Martino v. Denevi (1986) 182 Cal. App. 3d 553, 227 Cal. Rptr. 354 , plaintiff sought dissolution of his partnership with defendant, and an accounting and damages. Defendant cross complained, alleging plaintiff 's breach of the partnership agreement, and fraud. The trial court ordered a reference, which was conducted with the cooperation of both parties. Later, over plaintiff 's objections, the reference report was adopted by the court to be used in determining the parties' respective interests in the partnership. The trial court also awarded defendant attorney's fees. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, except the award of attorney's fees, which it remanded for a rehearing (182 Cal. App. 3d 553, 560) . In its discussion of attorney's fee the court said that to enable the trial court to determine whether attorney fees should be awarded and in what amount, an attorney should present evidence, documentary and oral, of the services actually performed; and expert opinion regarding what would be a reasonable fee for such services (182 Cal. App. 3d 553, 558-559) . In many cases the trial court will be aware of the nature and extent of the attorney's services from its observation of the trial proceedings and the pretrial and discovery proceedings. However, in the absence of such crucial information as the number of hours worked, billing rates, the types of issues dealt with, and appearances made on the client's behalf, the trial court is placed in the position of simply guessing at the actual value of the attorney's services. That practice is unacceptable and cannot be the basis for an award of fees. Testimony of an attorney regarding the number of hours worked on a particular case is sufficient evidence to support an award of attorney's fees, even in the absence of detailed time records (182 Cal. App. 3d 553, 559) . The only evidence presented in support of the motion for attorney's fees was the request for a flat fee for "services rendered." No documents, such as billing or time records, were submitted, nor was an attempt made to explain, in more than general terms, the extent of services rendered to the client. That evidence was not sufficient to support the award (182 Cal. App. 3d 553, 559-560) .

THE AMOUNT OF ATTORNEY'S FEES REQUESTED BY _____ [specify party, e.g., PLAINTIFF] _____ [name] IS NOT RECOVERABLE UNDER CIVIL CODE SECTION 1717 BECAUSE THE INCLUSION OF ATTORNEY'S FEES AS AN ITEM OF LOSS IN AN INDEMNITY CLAUSE DOES NOT PROVIDE FOR FEES.

Award of Attorney's Fees Not Available if Based on a Loss Subject to an Indemnity Agreement. A provision including attorney's fees as an item of loss recoverable in an indemnity clause is not a provision for attorney's fees in an action to enforce the contract and therefore is not made reciprocal and applicable to the entire contract by *Civ. [b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Award of Attorney's Fees Not Available If Based on a Loss Subject to an Indemnity Agreement

In Southern Pacific Thrift & Loan Assn. v. Savings Assn. Mortgage Co. (1999) 70 Cal. App. 4th 634, 82 Cal. Rptr. 2d 874 , a contract at issue in the litigation contained an indemnity agreement, which was not the source of recovery in the litigation. The indemnity agreement included attorney's fees as an item of loss that could be recovered in an indemnity action. The trial court denied the prevailing party's request for attorney's fees.

The court of appeal affirmed. It held the provision including attorney's fees as an item of loss in the indemnity agreement did not provide for attorney's fees in an action to enforce the contract. Therefore, attorney's fees were not made reciprocal and applicable to the entire contract by Civ. Code § 1717 (70 Cal. App. 4th 634, 642-643) .

THE COURT SHOULD ORDER PLAINTIFF TO FURNISH SECURITY BECAUSE PLAINTIFF IS A VEXATIOUS LITIGANT AND THERE IS NO REASONABLE PROBABILITY THAT PLAINTIFF WILL PREVAIL IN THE LAWSUIT.

A. Motion for Security. At any time until final judgment is entered, a defendant in any litigation pending in any California court may make a noticed motion to be heard before the court for an order requiring the plaintiff to furnish security based on a showing that the plaintiff is a vexatious litigant and that there is not a reasonable probability that plaintiff will prevail in the litigation against the moving defendant (Code Civ. Proc. § 391.1).

B. Order for Security. If after hearing evidence on a motion for security the court determines that the plaintiff is a vexatious litigant and that there is no reasonable probability that plaintiff will prevail in the litigation against the moving defendant, the court shall order the plaintiff to furnish, for the benefit of the moving defendant, security of such nature in such amount and within such time as the court fixes (see Code Civ. Proc. § 391.3).

C. "Security" Defined. "Security" means an undertaking to assure payment to the party for whose benefit the undertaking is required to be furnished, of the party's reasonable expenses, including attorney's fees and not limited to taxable costs, incurred in or in connection with a litigation instituted, caused to be instituted, or maintained or caused to be maintained by a vexatious litigant (Code Civ. Proc. § 391.1(c)).

This form may be used in support of a motion brought under Code Civ. Proc. § 391.1 for an order requiring plaintiff to furnish security on the grounds that plaintiff is a vexatious litigant as defined by Code Civ. Proc. § 391(b). It should be combined with other memoranda, as appropriate, set out in § 60.601 et seq.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case, showing that plaintiff is a vexatious litigant in Code Civ. Proc. § 391(b).

Evidence cognizable by the court in such a proceeding should be submitted with the memorandum to support its factual statements. A request for judicial notice will support facts subject to such notice [Evid. Code § 450 et seq.]. Otherwise supporting affidavits or declarations under penalty of perjury should be submitted [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (affidavits), 2015.5 (declarations)], averring to such facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant or declarant as may be necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. For further legal background, research guides, and forms relating to judicial notice and affidavits and declaration, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 15, Affidavits, Certificates, and Declarations , and Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

The court may also consider oral evidence of witnesses at the hearing on a motion to determine whether a plaintiff comes within the statutory definition of a vexatious litigant [see Code Civ. Proc. § 391.1; Taliaferro v. Hoogs (1965) 237 Cal. App. 2d 73, 75, 46 Cal. Rptr. 643] .

of perjury in support of motion for an order requiring plaintiff to furnish security, an order requiring plaintiff to furnish security, an undertaking by individual sureties and a notice of filing security, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 174, Costs and Attorney's Fees (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

This form may be combined with other memoranda related to motions for security, as appropriate, set out in § 60.620 et seq. (when plaintiff is nonresident individual or alien corporation).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Motion for Security

Code Civ. Proc. § 391.1 provides that at any time until final judgment is entered, a defendant in any litigation pending in any California court may make a noticed motion to be heard before the court for an order requiring the plaintiff to furnish security based on a showing that the plaintiff is a vexatious litigant and that there is not a reasonable probability that plaintiff will prevail in the litigation against the moving defendant.

[b] Order for Security

Code Civ. Proc. § 391.3 provides that if after hearing evidence on a motion for security the court determines that the plaintiff is a vexatious litigant and that there is no reasonable probability that plaintiff will prevail in the litigation against the moving defendant, the court shall order the plaintiff to furnish, for the benefit of the moving defendant, security of such nature in such amount and within such time as the court fixes.

[c] "Security" Defined

Code Civ. Proc. § 391.1(c) defines security, for purposes of the vexatious litigant, as an undertaking to assure payment to the party for whose benefit the undertaking is required to be furnished, of the party's reasonable expenses, including attorney's fees and not limited to taxable costs, incurred in or in connection with a litigation instituted, caused to be instituted, or maintained or caused to be maintained by a vexatious litigant.

Any person who in the immediately preceding seven-year period has commenced, prosecuted or maintained in propria persona at least five law suits other than in a small claims court that have been finally adversely determined or unjustifiably permitted to remain pending at least two years without having been brought to trial or hearing is a vexatious litigant (*Code Civ. [3] Discussion of Authorities

Code Civ. Proc. § 391(b)(1) provides that any person who in the immediately preceding seven-year period has commenced, prosecuted or maintained in propria persona at least five law suits other than in a small claims court that have been finally adversely determined or unjustifiably permitted to remain pending at least two years without having been brought to trial or hearing is a vexatious litigant.

In Stolz v. Bank of America (1993) 15 Cal. App. 4th 217, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 19 , the trial court dismissed the plaintiff 's action against a bank for failing to furnish security as required by vexatious litigation statutes. In affirming the judgment, the appellate court interpreted the limitations period under Code Civ. Proc. § 391(b)(1), which includes in the definition of vexatious litigant a person who "in the immediately preceding seven-year period has commenced, prosecuted or maintained in propria persona at least five law suits" meeting specified criteria. The appellate court determined that the seven-year period is measured retroactively from the date a party files a motion for security under Code Civ. Proc. § 391. In addition, litigation commenced outside the seven-year period counts against a litigant if the litigation is prosecuted or maintained during that period (15 Cal. App. 4th 217, 224-225) .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Vexatious Litigant Under Code Civ. Proc. § 391(b)(2)

Code Civ. [4] Additional Authorities

[a] Vexatious Litigant Under Code Civ. Proc. § 391(b)(2)

In First Western Development Corp. v. Superior Court (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 860, 261 Cal. Rptr. 116 , the trial court denied as "premature" a motion for an order to have plaintiff furnish security as a vexatious litigant. The defendants filed a petition for writ of mandate in the court of appeal, and the court issued the writ, directing plaintiff to post a security bond. The court of appeal determined that plaintiff was a vexatious litigant pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 391(b)(2), because of plaintiff 's repeated attempts to relitigate issues that had been finally determined, his filing of a multiplicity of new actions based on the same facts and issues, and his filing of writ petitions and appeals from practically every order of the trial court (212 Cal. App. 3d 860, 869) .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Application of Vexatious Litigant Statutes When Plaintiff Is Currently Represented by Counsel

In Camerado Ins. Agency, Inc. v. Superior Court (1993) 12 Cal. App. 4th 838, 16 Cal. Rptr. 2d 42 , plaintiff, while represented by counsel, sued defendant, alleging causes of action sounding in contract and tort. The defendant moved for an order requiring plaintiff to furnish security, asserting that the plaintiff had, among other things, commenced at least five litigations in propria persona during the past seven years, and that plaintiff met the criteria for a vexatious litigant under Code Civ. Proc. § 391(b)(1). The trial court, however, concluded that when read as a whole, Code Civ. Proc. § 391 applies only to litigants acting in propria persona in the civil action in which the vexatious litigant motion is brought. Accordingly, because plaintiff had at all times been represented by counsel in the underlying litigation, the court denied defendant's motion for security without considering evidence on the question whether plaintiff met the other statutory criteria of a vexatious litigant. The defendant sought a writ of mandate from the court of appeal directing the superior court to set aside its order denying defendant's motion.

The court of appeal issued a peremptory writ of mandate directing the superior court to vacate its order denying defendant's motion for security and directing the court to consider the merits of the motion. The court examined the four subdivisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 391(b) setting forth defining acts that transform a plaintiff into a vexatious litigant. The court noted that although Code Civ. Proc. § 391(b)(2) and (b)(3) refer to a person acting in propria persona in the very proceeding in which a defendant attempts to obtain an order requiring the plaintiff to furnish security, Code Civ. Proc. § 391(b)(1) and (b)(4) do not. The court concluded that the Legislature intended the vexatious litigant statutes to apply, at least as to the acts described in subsections (b)(1) and (b)(4), to persons currently represented by counsel whose conduct was vexatious when they represented themselves in the past (12 Cal. App. 4th 838, 842) .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Judicial Notice of Prior Proceedings

In Taliaferro v. Hoogs (1965) 236 Cal. App. 2d 521, 46 Cal. Rptr. 147 , cross complainant appealed from a judgment dismissing his action against cross defendant Hoogs. The action was dismissed for cross complainant's failure to provide security pursuant to the vexatious litigant statutes [Code Civ. Proc. § 391 et seq.]. Cross complainant contended on appeal that these sections were unconstitutional and that even if they were constitutional, there was no evidence that he was a vexatious litigant as defined by the statute. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, as it found that the statute is constitutional and that sufficient evidence was produced at the hearing on the motion. The court stated that cross defendant's lengthy and detailed affidavit related more than enough of the required litigations to bring appellant within the definition of a vexatious litigant under Code Civ. Proc. § 391(b)(1), (2). The court stated that cross complainant had failed to present any counter affidavits or to include the transcript of the proceedings as part of the record on appeal. The court noted that the trial court could also take judicial notice of the many prior proceedings had before it and before the appellate courts of this state.

[a] Plaintiff Is Nonresident Individual or Foreign Corporation and Defendant Will Likely Prevail in Action

Code Civ. Proc. § 1030(a)* and *(b) provide that if the plaintiff in an action or special proceeding resides out of state or is a foreign corporation], the defendant may at any time apply by noticed motion for an order requiring the plaintiff to file an undertaking to secure an award of costs and attorney's fees which may be awarded in the action or proceeding, on the grounds that the plaintiff resides out of state or is a foreign corporation and that there is a reasonable possibility that defendant will obtain judgment in the action or proceeding.

[b] Code Civ. Proc. § 1030 Is Constitutional as Applied to Nonresident Individuals and Foreign Corporations

Shannon v. Sims Service Center, Inc. (1985) 164 Cal. App. 3d 907, 210 Cal. Rptr. 861 , was an action for personal injuries brought by an Oklahoma resident. Plaintiff requested a trial de novo following mandatory arbitration in which the arbitrator found for defendant. After the trial date was set, defendant moved for and was granted an order that plaintiff post security for costs and attorney's fees under Code Civ. Proc. § 1030. Plaintiff was ordered to post a $1,000 undertaking by the date of trial, which was 13 days after the order was made. On the date of trial defendant moved to dismiss the action on the ground that plaintiff had failed to post the undertaking. The trial court granted the motion and plaintiff appealed, contending, in part, that Code Civ. Proc. § 1030 is unconstitutional.

The court of appeal affirmed the dismissal. It held that Code Civ. Proc. § 1030 provides constitutional due process protection since it does not unfairly discriminate against nonresidents. Moreover, it was not unconstitutionally applied here. The 1980 amendment to the statute corrected prior constitutional infirmities. The statutory hearing process is now the same as for pretrial motions and meets the minimum standards for due process enunciated in Beaudreau v. Superior Court (1975) 14 Cal. 3d 448, 121 Cal. Rptr. 585, 535 P.2d 713 , as stated in Gonzales v. Fox (1977) 68 Cal. App. 3d Supp. 16, 137 Cal. Rptr. 312 . Gonzales, which held the former version of Code Civ. Proc. § 1030 unconstitutional, stated that Beaudreau requires a meaningful pretrial hearing that allows an inquiry into the validity of the claim, the reasonableness of the amount of the bond to be posted (and, inferentially, the reasonableness of not requiring any bond), and the ability of a person to furnish a bond. Here, evidence as to the validity of the claim was presented by both parties, the undertaking ordered was substantially less than costs prospectively awardable to defendant, and defendant showed, by declaration, a reasonable possibility of prevailing on the merits by proper reference to the results of the earlier arbitration hearing. It was plaintiff 's burden to prove inability to furnish an undertaking and he had not done so (164 Cal. App. 3d 907, 912-914) .

[For caption, see § 60.620, with which this form should be combined.]

THE COURT MAY FIND THAT THE PLAINTIFF IS A NONRESIDENT, FOR PURPOSES OF ORDERING PLAINTIFF TO POST SECURITY, BASED ON THE DEFENDANT'S DECLARATION.

Uncontroverted Declaration of Nonresidency as Sufficient Evidence. A defendant's declaration filed in support of a motion made pursuant to Section 1030(a) and (b) of the Code of Civil Procedure requesting that a nonresident plaintiff be ordered to post security, which alleges that the plaintiff is a nonresident and is based on the plaintiff 's uncontroverted sworn answers to interrogatories admitting nonresidency, is sufficient evidence to sustain a trial court's finding that the plaintiff is a nonresident (Shannon v. Sims Service Center, Inc. (1985) 164 Cal. App. 3d 907, 915-916, 210 Cal. Rptr. 861).

This form is for use with the form set out in § 60.620, in support of a motion by defendant to require plaintiff who is a nonresident individual or foreign corporation to post security for costs and attorney's fees in an action or special proceeding in which there is a reasonable possibility that defendant will obtain judgment (Code Civ. Proc. § 1030(a), (b)), to state that a declaration may constitute evidence of nonresidency.

Counsel must attach an affidavit (or declaration; see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5) to the motion for security supporting the grounds for the motion and setting forth the nature and amount of the costs and attorney's fees defendant has incurred and expects to incur by the conclusion of the action or special proceeding, along with a memorandum [Code Civ. Proc. § 1030(b)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Uncontroverted Declaration of Nonresidency as Sufficient Evidence

The facts and procedural background of Shannon v. Sims Service Center, Inc. (1985) 164 Cal. App. 3d 907, 210 Cal. Rptr. 861 , are discussed in § 60.620[3][b]. In Shannon, plaintiff contended on appeal, in part, that insufficient evidence supported the finding of his nonresidency. However, the court of appeal held that sufficient evidence supported the finding of nonresidency since plaintiff admitted his Oklahoma residency in sworn answers to interrogatories, which were uncontroverted by plaintiff, and an appellate court will uphold the trial court's findings if any substantial evidence supports them (164 Cal. App. 3d 907, 911) .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Burden on Motion

In Muller v. Tanner (1969) 2 Cal. App. 3d 445, 82 Cal. Rptr. 738 , plaintiff appealed from a judgment of dismissal signed, filed, and entered after his failure to post security as required by an order which determined he was a vexatious litigant and ordered him to post $5,000 in cash or bond within 10 days of the order. The trial court found the vexatious litigant statutes [Code Civ. Proc. § 391 et seq.] to be constitutional, but held that there had been irregularities which prevented plaintiff from having an adequate hearing on the issues raised by defendant's motion for security. The court of appeal reversed the judgment because defendant's showing was inadequate to support the order for security on which the judgment was based.

Plaintiff had filed a request for entry of default in his action in propria persona for legal malpractice on the same day as defendant filed a notice of motion to declare plaintiff a vexatious litigant and for security under the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 391 et seq. Defendant then filed a notice of a motion to set aside the default to be heard on the same day as his motion for security. Plaintiff moved to continue the motions to another day as he was required to appear before the court in another county on other matters on the day on which the motions were set to be heard. The court denied plaintiff 's motion for a continuance because plaintiff refused to accept the court's condition for granting the continuance. Plaintiff filed a motion to reconsider and vacate the order denying his motion for a continuance. He also filed motions to set aside the minute orders, made in his absence, granting defendant's motions to set aside the default and for security. Plaintiff then made a motion, apparently under Code Civ. Proc. § 170.6, to disqualify the judge who had heard all of the matters. A second judge ruled that the previous orders for security and setting aside the entry of default were valid. Several months later, the disqualified judge signed a judgment of dismissal under Code Civ. Proc. § 391.4 for failure to furnish security.

The court of appeal stated that the record failed to sustain the order requiring security and that a further hearing on the merits was required. The court assumed that the record supported a finding that plaintiff was a vexatious litigant under Code Civ. Proc. § 391(b)(1). However, the second prerequisite for granting the motion is that there is no reasonable probability that the plaintiff would prevail in the litigation against the defendant. The only evidence on this point was the complaint itself and the conclusion expressed in the statutory language in defendant's affidavit. Under the general rules applying to proceedings on motions for security as set out in Burt v. Irvine Co. (1965) 237 Cal. App. 2d 828, 47 Cal. Rptr. 392 , the burden of establishing the statutory condition is on the party moving for security. The court reversed the judgment of dismissal since the affidavit was conclusory, and, therefore, there was no evidence to sustain one of the two bases on which the order for security depended.

[b] Showing Required

In Roston v. Edwards (1982) 127 Cal. App. 3d 842, 179 Cal. Rptr. 830 , plaintiffs brought two separate civil actions, and defendants in both actions moved for orders requiring plaintiffs to furnish security as vexatious litigants under Code Civ. Proc. § 391 et seq. Both motions were granted, as were subsequent motions to dismiss when plaintiffs failed to post the required securities. On appeal, plaintiffs contended that the evidence considered by the two trial court judges was insufficient to show that plaintiffs were vexatious litigants.

In reversing the trial court's decision, the court of appeal noted that under Code Civ. Proc. § 391.1, a motion for an order requiring a plaintiff to furnish security must be based on a showing that plaintiff is a vexatious litigant as defined by statute and that there is no reasonable probability that plaintiff will prevail in the litigation (127 Cal. App. 3d 842, 846) . The court concluded that the evidence considered by the trial court in both actions was insufficient to show that plaintiffs were vexatious litigants as defined in Code Civ. Proc. § 391(b) (127 Cal. App. 3d 842, 848) .

Conclusory Affidavit Insufficient. [3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Previous Litigation Not Finally Determined

In Finn v. Drag (1982) 135 Cal. App. 3d 360, 185 Cal. Rptr. 357 , plaintiff brought an action in propria persona seeking damages and injunctive relief. Defendant moved for an order requiring plaintiff to furnish security as a vexatious litigant pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 391. Defendant based her motion on plaintiff 's filing of her action, and her motions to disqualify the trial judge pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 170.6, to vacate the order sustaining defendant's demurrer, and to set aside the judgment of dismissal on grounds of extrinsic fraud pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 473, as well as her petition for a writ of prohibition and mandate in the court of appeal seeking to set aside the trial court's order sustaining the demurrer. The trial court, in addition to denying plaintiff 's motion to vacate, granted defendant's motion for security. Plaintiff appealed, contending among other things, that the evidence was insufficient to show that she was a vexatious litigant.

The court of appeal, although dismissing plaintiff 's appeal as untimely, nonetheless reversed that portion of the trial court's order requiring plaintiff to post security as a vexatious litigant pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 391. The court noted that a vexatious litigant was any person who, in the immediately preceding seven-year period, had commenced, prosecuted, or maintained in propria persona at least five litigations, other than in a small claims court, that had been finally determined, or who, after a litigation had been finally determined against him or her, repeatedly relitigated or attempted to relitigate in propria persona against the same defendant as to whom the litigation was finally determined [Code Civ. Proc. § 391(b)]. The term "finally determined," the court observed, was not defined in the statute, nor had it been previously construed in reported decisions. The court of appeal stated that by applying an equally broad definition to "finally determined," the trial court could have concluded that the litigation in question was final against plaintiff on expiration of the 30-day period for the amendment of her complaint following the trial court's granting of defendant's demurrer. However, the court, citing prior California law as to the test for finality of a judgment, held that the same standards applied, and that for purposes of Code Civ. Proc. § 391(b), a litigation is final when all avenues for direct review have been exhausted or the time to initiate direct review or petition for certiorari in the United States Supreme Court has expired. Consequently, the court concluded that the evidence was insufficient to show that plaintiff was a vexatious litigant (135 Cal. App. 3d 360, 368-369) .

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to a motion by defendant to require plaintiff to furnish security for costs. The form may be used to oppose a motion for security under *Code Civ. [3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Burden on Motion

For discussion, see § 60.630[3][a].

[b] Relief for Indigent Plaintiffs

In Conover v. Hall (1974) 11 Cal. 3d 842, 114 Cal. Rptr. 642, 523 P.2d 682 , plaintiffs were recipients of Aid to Families With Dependent Children (AFDC) and had monthly work-related expenses which regularly exceeded $50. They initiated an action challenging the $50 per month standard work expense allowance of former Welf. & Inst. Code § 11451.6. The trial court issued a preliminary injunction without requiring plaintiffs to post an injunction bond under Code Civ. Proc. § 539 to cover defendants' potential damages. On appeal, defendants contended that the injunction was improper on several grounds, including the ground that the court lacked authority to waive the bond requirement of Code Civ. Proc. § 539 which they claimed was mandatory. In upholding the trial court, the Supreme Court reviewed the common law authority of California courts to dispense with litigation fees in the case of poor litigants. The Court stated that several courts of appeal have concluded that under proper circumstances California courts have the power to dispense with bond requirements intended to protect an adversary's financial interest. They stated that in Sutter County v. Superior Court (1966) 244 Cal. App. 2d 770, 53 Cal. Rptr. 424 (discussed below), the court of appeal held that a trial court had authority, despite the seemingly mandatory language of Gov. Code § 947 [repealed by Stats. 1980, ch. 114], to waive a bond requirement intended to secure defendant county's costs of suit. The court also discussed Bank of America v. Superior Court (1967) 255 Cal. App. 2d 575, 63 Cal. Rptr. 366 (trial court properly waived security for costs requirement of Code Civ. Proc. § 1030 for nonresident plaintiffs) and Roberts v. Superior Court (1968) 264 Cal. App. 2d 235, 70 Cal. Rptr. 226 (poor litigant permitted to file appeal without appeal bond required under Code Civ. Proc. § 985.5). Although these cases concerned cost bonds rather than a damage bond such as the one before the Court, the Court stated that the function of both is to protect the monetary interests of adversary parties and since courts have authority to waive security in the case of cost bonds, then the courts retain a similar authority to dispense with the damage bond requirement of Code Civ. Proc. § 539. Relying on Sutter County, the Court stated that a formal in forma pauperis petition is not required for this relief. The Court found that although the trial court apparently had not conducted any formal inquiry into the total assets of the plaintiffs, the court could reasonably have concluded from the facts before it that plaintiffs were poor and could not afford to post an injunction bond. The pleadings established that plaintiffs were welfare recipients and that none had a gross monthly income of more than $540. The court stated that the trial court had not abused its discretion in permitting the preliminary injunction to issue without an undertaking, since plaintiffs, in view of their meager resources, could not afford to post the significant undertaking that would have been necessary under the statute.

Muller v. Tanner (1969) 2 Cal. App. 3d 445, 82 Cal. Rptr. 738 , is discussed in § 60.630[3][a]. Plaintiff contended that the vexatious litigant statute [Code Civ. Proc. § 391 et seq.] conflicts with the right to sue in forma pauperis. The court stated that plaintiff 's standing to raise this issue as an indigent was not revealed by the record. Nevertheless, the court added that if there were a conflict between the vexatious litigant statute and the right to proceed in forma pauperis, the statutory restriction under Code Civ. Proc. § 391 et seq. would have to yield to the right to proceed in forma pauperis.

In Sutter County v. Superior Court (1966) 244 Cal. App. 2d 770, 53 Cal. Rptr. 424 , plaintiff brought a personal injury action against defendant Sutter County. The county served a demand under Gov. Code § 947 (declared unconstitutional in Beaudreau v. Superior Court (1975) 14 Cal. 3d 448, 121 Cal. Rptr. 585, 535 P.2d 713 , and subsequently repealed by Stats. 1980, ch. 114) for an undertaking as security for costs. Plaintiff moved the court for an order permitting her to proceed without the bond, asserting her financial inability to obtain the bond. The court had plaintiff 's declaration which disclosed her assets and income before it and granted her motion on the ground that she had inadequate means to furnish security for costs. Defendant sought a writ of mandamus compelling the Superior Court to vacate its order. The court of appeal discharged its alternative writ and denied defendant's petition. The court of appeal stated that there is a significant distinction between an indigent litigant's fees and the opposing party's costs. The court found, however, that subjection of cost bond requirements to the common-law power of the court to permit a litigant to proceed in forma pauperis is consistent with, and perhaps required by, the California doctrine, and that that power includes allowing waiver of security for costs as well as suspension of fees.

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Relief for Indigent Plaintiffs

In Fuller v. California (1969) 1 Cal. App. 3d 664, 82 Cal. Rptr. 78 , the state filed a demand for an undertaking under Gov. Code § 947 (declared unconstitutional in Beaudreau v. Superior Court (1975) 14 Cal. 3d 448, 121 Cal. Rptr. 585, 535 P.2d 713). Defendant filed a motion to dismiss the action as to the state since the undertaking was not filed within the statutory time. Plaintiff filed an affidavit in opposition to the motion, stating that she did not have any funds to care for herself or to prosecute the action, that her attorneys were handling the case on a contingent fee basis, and that she was receiving county aid and medical attention. The trial court granted the motion to dismiss, and the court of appeal held that the trial court had not abused its discretion in dismissing the action. The court of appeal made a distinction between personal inability to pay costs and inability to obtain sureties on an undertaking, and stated that it seems that a poor plaintiff should make a prima facie showing that he or she has unsuccessfully sought to obtain such an undertaking or is unable to furnish an undertaking. The court stated that generally, in jurisdictions which have passed on the question of the sufficiency of such an affidavit, a statement in the affidavit that plaintiff is unable to give security for costs is sufficient. The court stated that in Sutter County v. Superior Court (1966) 244 Cal. App. 2d 770, 53 Cal. Rptr. 424 , and in Bank of America v. Superior Court (1967) 255 Cal. App. 2d 575, 63 Cal. Rptr. 366 , the courts granted relief although the plaintiffs' declarations did not contain specific statements of inability to obtain an undertaking. Plaintiff in Roberts v. Superior Court (1968) 264 Cal. App. 2d 235, 70 Cal. Rptr. 226 , in which the court of appeal held that the trial court's refusal to dispense with an undertaking was error, had presented declarations showing that he was indigent and could not obtain an undertaking. The court concluded that although Sutter County and Bank of America held that it was not an abuse of discretion to dispense with an undertaking on a showing that did not specify inability to obtain sureties, it does not follow that the trial judge abused his discretion in refusing to dispense with an undertaking on a showing that contained no reference to any attempt to obtain sureties or to inability to do so. The court concluded that the trial court had discretion to deny plaintiff 's motion on the sole ground that while plaintiff showed her present inability to make any payment, she made no showing of her inability to obtain sureties against a future contingency.

Note that in Conover v. Hall (1974) 11 Cal. 3d 842, 114 Cal. Rptr. 642, 523 P.2d 682 (discussed in § 60.640[3][b]), the Supreme Court did not mention Fuller, and the Court inferred plaintiffs' inability to post the injunction bond from their indigence. The bond in Conover would probably have been for several million dollars [see Conover v. Hall (1974) 11 Cal. 3d 842, 852 n.7, 114 Cal. Rptr. 642, 523 P.2d 682] .

[b] Non-Resident Individual or Foreign Corporation Cross-Complainants

In Yao v. Superior Court (2002) 104 Cal. App. 4th 327, 127 Cal. Rptr. 2d 912 , Lovell sued Yao on a variety of causes of action based on an agreement to form a production company and develop a film project. Yao cross-complained against Lovell, alleging causes of action arising out of the same factual matrix alleged in the original complaint. Citing Code Civ. Proc. § 1030, Lovell filed a motion for an order requiring Yao to post security to continue to prosecute her cross-complaint. Lovell offered evidence Yao was not a California resident but instead a citizen of Hong Kong residing in Canada. Yao's opposed the motion. She did not contest that she was not a California resident, but she contended Section 1030's requirement of posting a bond did not embrace a "cross-complainant" but applied only to a "plaintiff." The trial court granted Lovell's motion for security and required Yao to post $10,000 security within 20 days of its order. Yao filed a petition for a writ of mandate to overturn the trial court's order, and the Court of Appeal stayed the trial court's order requiring Yao to post security and later, after receiving preliminary opposition to Yao's petition and copies of the court's minute order and the reporter's transcript of the hearing held on the motion, issued an alternative writ of mandate (104 Cal. App. 4th 327, 329-330) .

The Court of Appeal granted a peremptory writ of mandate compelling the trial court to set aside its order granting the motion to require Yao to post security and to enter an order denying the motion. The court held that when a California resident sues an out-of-state defendant and the defendant responds, in part, by filing a cross-complaint against the plaintiff, the plaintiff/cross-defendant cannot move the court to require the defendant/cross-complainant to post security in order to prosecute the cross-complaint under Code Civ. Proc. § 1030 for two reasons. The court held first that § 1030 unambiguously refers only to a "plaintiff," and when the Legislature intends for a specific statutory provision to apply to both a plaintiff and cross-complainant, it expressly indicates that intent (104 Cal. App. 4th 327, 332-333) . The second reason is that to construe § 1030 to include an out-of-state cross-complainant would not promote the policy served by the statute (104 Cal. App. 4th 327, 333-334) .

This form may be used by defendant in support of a motion for dismissal of an action or special proceeding on the ground that plaintiff, who is a nonresident individual or foreign corporation, failed to post security for costs and attorney's fees within the time period previously ordered by the court pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1030. The motion is based on Code Civ. Proc. § 1030(d). It should be combined with additional memoranda, as appropriate, set out in § 60.651 et seq.

It should be noted that unlike a motion for security pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1030(a), (b), there is no express requirement of a noticed motion for dismissal pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1030(d) if plaintiff fails to post security within the time previously ordered by the court [see, e.g., Shannon v. Sims Service Center, Inc. (1985) 164 Cal. App. 3d 907, 911, 210 Cal. Rptr. 861 (trial court dismissed oral motion at date set for trial, which was also date for compliance with order for security)]. However, in the event that no further court appearance for the parties has been scheduled that coincides in time to the date for compliance with the court's order for security, counsel may wish to use a noticed motion.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Evidence cognizable by the court in such a motion proceeding should be submitted with the memorandum to support its factual statements. A request for judicial notice will support facts subject to such notice [Evid. Code § 450 et seq.]. Otherwise supporting affidavits or declarations under penalty of perjury should be submitted [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009 (affidavits), 2015.5 (declarations)], averring to such facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant or declarant as may be necessary to establish the ground or grounds of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702]. [3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Action or Proceeding Should Be Dismissed for Failure to Post Security

Code Civ. Proc. § 1030(d) provides that if the plaintiff is a nonresident individual or foreign corporation and fails to file an undertaking ordered pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1030 within the time allowed by the court, the plaintiff 's action or special proceeding must be dismissed as to the defendant in whose favor the order requiring the undertaking was made.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Code Civ. Proc. § 1030 Is Constitutional as Applied to Nonresident Individuals and Foreign Corporations

Shannon v. Sims Service Center, Inc. (1985) 164 Cal. App. 3d 907, 210 Cal. Rptr. 861 , was an action for personal injuries brought by an Oklahoma resident. Plaintiff requested a trial de novo following mandatory arbitration in which the arbitrator found for defendant. After the trial date was set, defendant moved for and was granted an order that plaintiff post security for costs and attorney's fees under Code Civ. Proc. § 1030. Plaintiff was ordered to post a $1,000 undertaking by the date of trial, which was 13 days after the order was made. On the date of trial defendant moved to dismiss the action on the ground that plaintiff had failed to post the undertaking. The trial court granted the motion and plaintiff appealed, contending, in part, that Code Civ. Proc. § 1030 is unconstitutional.

The court of appeal affirmed the dismissal. It held that Code Civ. Proc. § 1030 provides constitutional due process protection since it does not unfairly discriminate against nonresidents. Moreover, it was not unconstitutionally applied here. The 1980 amendment to the statute corrected prior constitutional infirmities. The statutory hearing process is now the same as for pretrial motions and meets the minimum standards for due process enunciated in Beaudreau v. Superior Court (1975) 14 Cal. 3d 448, 121 Cal. Rptr. 585, 535 P.2d 713 , as stated in Gonzales v. Fox (1977) 68 Cal. App. 3d Supp. 16, 137 Cal. Rptr. 312 . Gonzales, which held the former version of Code Civ. Proc. § 1030 unconstitutional, stated that Beaudreau requires a meaningful pretrial hearing that allows an inquiry into the validity of the claim, the reasonableness of the amount of the bond to be posted (and, inferentially, the reasonableness of not requiring any bond), and the ability of a person to furnish a bond. Here, evidence as to the validity of the claim was presented by both parties, the undertaking ordered was substantially less than costs prospectively awardable to defendant, and defendant showed, by declaration, a reasonable possibility of prevailing on the merits by proper reference to the results of the earlier arbitration hearing. It was plaintiff 's burden to prove inability to furnish an undertaking and he had not done so (164 Cal. App. 3d 907, 912-914) .

Court May Shorten Time for Compliance With Order for Security on Showing of Good Cause. The provision of Section 1030(d) of the Code of Civil Procedure that a plaintiff who has been ordered to file an undertaking do so not later than 30 days after service of the court's order requiring it or within a greater time allowed by the court is directory, not jurisdictional and mandatory, and the court may shorten the time for compliance on a showing of good cause (*Shannon v. [3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Court May Shorten Time for Compliance With Order for Security on Showing of Good Cause

The facts and procedural background of Shannon v. Sims Service Center, Inc. (1985) 164 Cal. App. 3d 907, 210 Cal. Rptr. 861 , are discussed in § 60.651. In Shannon, plaintiff contended on appeal, in part, that Code Civ. Proc. § 1030(d) requires the court to give a plaintiff at least 30 days within which to post security for attorney's fees and costs, and that the trial court's action of shortening that time period divested the court of jurisdiction to dismiss the action. However, the court of appeal held that the provision of Code Civ. Proc. § 1030(d) requiring a plaintiff to file an undertaking "not later than 30 days after service of the court's order requiring it or within a greater time allowed by the court" does not prohibit the court from ordering a shorter compliance time on a showing of good cause, as was the case here. The Legislature could have placed jurisdictional parameters had it desired to do so, but no statutory prohibition against a lesser period exists. Therefore, the 30-day provision is directory, not mandatory, and does not divest the court of jurisdiction if, for good cause, it exercises its discretion to reduce the time for compliance (164 Cal. App. 3d 907, 915-917) .

6-61 California Points & Authorities § 61.03

§ 61.03 Definitions Relating to Compulsory Cross Complaint

"Complaint" means a complaint or cross complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 426.10(a)]. "Plaintiff" means a person who files a complaint or cross complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 426.10(b)]. "Related cause of action" means a cause of action that arises out of the same transaction, occurrence, or series of transactions or occurrences as the cause of action that the plaintiff alleges in his or her complaint [*Code Civ. CHAPTER 61 CROSS COMPLAINTS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

6-61 California Points & Authorities § 61.04

§ 61.04 Use of Cases Interpreting Former Statutes

Code Civ. Proc. § 428.10(a), pertaining to permissive cross complaints by a party against any of the parties who filed a complaint or cross complaint against him or her, is similar to former Code Civ. Proc. § 438, which provided for a counterclaim. However, under prior law, some causes that a party had against an opposing party did not qualify as counterclaims because they did not satisfy the "diminish or defeat" or "several judgment" requirements. These requirements are not continued, and the new section permits unlimited scope to a cross complaint against an opposing party [see Legislative Committee Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 428.10].

Code Civ. Proc. § 428.10(b) pertains to cross complaints by a party against any person, whether or not that person is already a party to the action, if the cause of action asserted in the cross complaint arises out of the same transaction or occurrence or involves the same property or controversy. This section generally continues the rule under former Code Civ. Proc. § 442 that a cross complaint may be asserted against any person, whether or not a party to the action, if the cause of action asserted in the cross complaint arises out of the same transaction or occurrence or involves the same property or controversy [see Legislative Committee Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 428.10].

Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30, pertaining to compulsory cross complaints, continues the substance of the former compulsory counterclaim rule, former Code Civ. Proc. § 439. However, since the scope of a cross complaint is expanded to include claims that would not have met the "defeat or diminish" or "several judgment" requirements of former Code Civ. Proc. § 439, the scope of the former rule is expanded by Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30 to include some causes of action that formerly were not compulsory [see Legislative Committee Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30].

Code Civ. Proc. § 426.50, pertaining to leave to amend a pleading or to file a cross complaint to assert an unpleaded cause of action, continues the similar provisions that had been contained in former Code Civ. Proc. § 439. The new section simply reiterates the long standing rule favoring the allowance of amended pleadings [see Foot's Transfer & Storage Co. v. Superior Court (1981) 114 Cal. App. 3d 897, 900-901, 171 Cal. Rptr. 1] .

The current versions of the statutes discussed in the paragraphs above became operative in 1972. This chapter does contain some cases that were decided under the former statutes, but only if the provisions of the former statutes being applied by the court were continued without significant change in the current statutes.

Generally, a memorandum must not exceed 15 pages in length, or in the case of a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication, 20 pages in length. A reply or closing memorandum may not exceed 10 pages in length [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113(d)]. The page limit does not include exhibits, declarations, attachments, the table of contents, the table of authorities, or the proof of service [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113(d)]. [a] Use of Form

The foregoing memorandum may be submitted in support of a motion for leave to file a permissive cross complaint against the party who filed the complaint or cross complaint [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 428.10(a), 428.50(c)]. This form should be used when the moving party has not filed a cross complaint before or at the same time as his or her answer to the complaint or cross complaint filed against him or her pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 428.50(a) [Code Civ. Proc. § 428.50(c)].

Code Civ. Proc. § 428.10(a) governs cross complaints against another party, while Code Civ. Proc. § 428.10(b) governs cross complaints against any person. It should be noted that these provisions are independent of each other, and it is necessary only that the party seeking to file a cross complaint come within one of the subdivisions [see § 61.21, based on Code Civ. Proc. § 428.10(b)].

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should state facts showing that the cross complaint states a cause of action, and that the cause of action is against the person or persons who filed the original complaint or cross complaint. The cause of action in the cross complaint may be wholly unrelated to the claim in cross defendant's complaint or cross complaint [see Code Civ. Proc. § 428.10(a)]. Additionally, counsel should state facts showing why granting leave to file the cross complaint is in the interests of justice [see Code Civ. Proc. § 428.50(c)].

Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.110(c) requires that a cross complaint against a party who has appeared in the action be accompanied by proof of service of the cross complaint at the time it is filed.

[b] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in §§ 61.23 -61.29 may be used to oppose the motion supported by the foregoing points and authorities.

A. Filing of Permissive Cross Complaint Against Any Person Alleged to Be Liable. A party against whom a cause of action has been asserted in a complaint or cross complaint may file a cross complaint setting forth any cause of action he or she has against a person alleged to be liable thereon, whether or not that person is already a party to the action, if the cause of action asserted in his or her cross complaint _____ [arises out of the same transaction, occurrence, or series of transactions or occurrences as the cause brought against him or her and/or asserts a claim, right or interest in the property or controversy that is the subject of the cause brought against him or her] (*Code Civ. B. Leave May Be Granted. [See § 61.20, Paragraph B.]

[Optional] C. "Transaction" Relates to Facts and Not to Type of Relief Sought. Under Section 428.10(b) of the Code of Civil Procedure the facts surrounding the cause of action, not the form of the complaint, are determinative of what constitutes the "transaction" for the purpose of filing a cross complaint. Thus, if a party's pleading sets forth matter inextricably related to the matter forming the basis of the complaint, it meets the statutory requirements of a cross complaint and it is immaterial that the relief sought thereby is independent of that prayed for in the complaint (see American Motorcycle Assn. v. Superior Court (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 578, 605, 146 Cal. Rptr. 182, 578 P.2d 899 ; Roylance v. Doelger (1962) 57 Cal. 2d 255, 261, 262, 19 Cal. Rptr. 7, 368 P.2d 535 ; *Kent v. [Optional] D. Cross Complaint Not Barred in Eminent Domain Proceeding When Asserted Under Code Civ. Proc. § 428.10(b). Although Section 428.10(a) of the Code of Civil Procedure bars the filing of a cross complaint against the plaintiff when the action was commenced under the eminent domain statutes (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1230.010-1273.050), cross complainant may assert a claim under Section 428.10(b) of the Code of Civil Procedure against any person other than the plaintiff if the cause of action asserted in the cross complaint arises out of the same transaction, occurrence, or series of transactions or occurrences as the cause of action stated against the cross complainant in the condemning entity's complaint (Code Civ. Proc. § 428.10(b); City of Mountain View v. Superior Court (1975) 54 Cal. App. 3d 72, 83, 126 Cal. Rptr. 358).

The foregoing memorandum may be submitted in support of a motion for leave to file a permissive cross complaint by a party against any person alleged to be liable, whether or not the person is already a party to the action [Code Civ. Proc. § 428.10(b)]. This form should be used when the party has not filed a cross complaint before the court has set a date for trial pursuant to the requirements of Code Civ. Proc. § 428.50(b) [Code Civ. Proc. § 428.50(c)].

Code Civ. Proc. § 428.10(a) governs cross complaints against another party, while Code Civ. Proc. § 428.10(b) governs cross complaints against any person. It should be noted that these provisions are independent of each other, and it is necessary only that the party seeking to file a cross complaint come within one of the subdivisions [see § 61.20, based on Code Civ. Proc. § 428.10(a)].

The grounds for the motion are that the cause of action asserted in the cross complaint (1) arises out of the same transaction, occurrence, or series of transactions or occurrences as the cause brought against the party filing the cross complaint; or (2) asserts a claim, right, or interest in the property or controversy that is the subject of the cause brought against the party filing the cross complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 428.10(b)]. The filing of the cross complaint must also be in the interest of justice [Code Civ. Proc. § 428.50(c)].

Optional Paragraph C should be used when it is anticipated that the person opposing the motion will argue that the cause of action in the cross complaint does not arise out of the same transaction as the complaint. For example, the paragraph could be used when the plaintiff sought legal relief and the cross complainant seeks equitable relief, or vice versa [see Roylance v. Doelger (1962) 57 Cal. 2d 255, 261, 262, 19 Cal. Rptr. 7, 368 P.2d 535 ; Kent v. Clark (1942) 20 Cal. 2d 779, 786, 128 P.2d 868] .

Optional Paragraph D should be used when a party to an eminent domain proceeding has a cause of action against any person, other than plaintiff, who is alleged to be liable on the cause of action which arises out of the same transaction, occurrence, or series of transactions or occurrences as the cause of action stated against the party in the condemning entity's complaint.

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should show that the party requesting leave to file the cross complaint has a cause of action against a person who is alleged to be liable on the complaint or cross complaint filed against the party. Counsel should also show that the cause of action either arises out of the same transaction, occurrence, or series of transactions or occurrences as the cause in the complaint or cross complaint against the filing party, or asserts a claim, right, or interest in the property or controversy that is the subject of the cause in the complaint or cross complaint against the filing party.

Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 201.7(c) requires that a cross complaint against a party who has appeared in the action be accompanied by proof of service of the cross complaint at the time it is filed; if the cross complaint adds new parties, the cross complaint must be served on all parties and proofs of service on the new parties must be filed within thirty days of the filing of the cross-complaint.

[b] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in §§ 61.22 -61.29 may be used to oppose the motion supported by the foregoing points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] "Transaction" Relates to Facts and Not to Type of Relief Sought

American Motorcycle Assn. v. Superior Court (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 578, 146 Cal. Rptr. 182, 578 P.2d 899 , was an action to recover damages for injuries incurred while participating in a cross country motorcycle race for novices. Defendant American Motorcycle Assn. (AMA) sought leave of court to file a cross complaint after filing its answer. The trial court denied defendant's motion. Defendants sought a writ of mandate and the court of appeal issued an alternative writ. The Supreme Court ordered a hearing of the case on its own motion.

The Court held that when concurrent tortfeasors are sued for damages for negligence, a defendant may cross complain for partial indemnity against another alleged concurrent tortfeasor who was not joined as a defendant (20 Cal. 3d 578, 606) . In making its decision the Court stated that the Roylance rule, discussed below, had been specifically codified in Code Civ. Proc. §§ 428.10-428.80 (20 Cal. 3d 578, 605) .

Roylance v. Doelger (1962) 57 Cal. 2d 255, 19 Cal. Rptr. 7, 368 P.2d 535 , involved a controversy between an insured, its alleged liability insurer, and third parties whom defendant insurer by cross complaint claimed were the real tortfeasors ultimately liable to the injured persons. Plaintiff corporation paid a judgment of property damages to owners and then instituted an action against the insurer for indemnity. Defendant insurer in turn filed a cross complaint for declaratory relief naming new third-party defendants. The purpose of the cross complaint was to establish a right to indemnity from the cross defendants, who were not parties to the original action. Cross defendants moved to strike the cross complaint on the ground that it was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, and constituted an attempt to collaterally attack a final judgment. The trial court granted the motion, and defendant appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed. Defendant asserted that the trial court abused its discretion in striking the cross complaint. The Court identified the question at issue in the case to be whether or not under the circumstances defendant was entitled to seek declaratory relief through the medium of a cross complaint (57 Cal. 2d 255, 258) . The Court held that striking of the cross complaint was erroneous under the circumstances involved in this case, as discussed above, and that the proper procedure was to permit and sustain the filing of the cross complaint under circumstances falling within the language of former Code Civ. Proc. § 442 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 428.10) (57 Cal. 2d 255, 262) . The Court stated that the fact that the original complaint may seek equitable relief while the cross complaint pleads an action legal in nature has been held not to bar the filing of the latter and the converse appears to be equally permissible (57 Cal. 2d 255, 261) .

Kent v. Clark (1942) 20 Cal. 2d 779, 128 P.2d 868 , was an action of ejectment brought by vendors of realty against a vendee in default under an executory contract of sale. The vendee set up fraud in the inception of the contract by way of cross complaint, praying for a decree declaring the contract to be rescinded and for damages. Plaintiffs objected to the cross complaint. The trial court sustained the objection and gave judgment for plaintiffs, and the vendee appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed. The Court held that the facts relied on by the vendee furnished a proper basis for her cross complaint and that the facts surrounding the cause of action and not the form of the complaint are determinative of what constitutes the "transaction." If defendant's pleading sets forth matter inextricably related to the matter forming the basis of the plaintiffs' complaint, it meets the statutory requirements of a cross complaint, and it is immaterial that the relief sought thereby is independent of that prayed for in the complaint (20 Cal. 2d 779, 786) .

[b] Cross Complaint Not Barred in Eminent Domain Proceeding When Asserted Under Code Civ. Proc. § 428.10(b)

City of Mountain View v. Superior Court (1975) 54 Cal. App. 3d 72, 126 Cal. Rptr. 358 , was an action by plaintiff for condemnation of certain described and enumerated parcels of land for street and related purposes. Defendant Barnes was named as one of 60 condemnees in the action. Defendant filed an answer, plaintiff demurred and moved to strike a portion of the answer regarding relocation expenses, and the trial court granted the motion. Defendant filed an amended answer, to which plaintiff filed a general demurrer and moved to strike the relocation expense paragraph. The trial court overruled the demurrer and denied the motion. Plaintiff then commenced proceedings for a writ of mandate to direct the court to set aside its holding.

The court of appeal held that defendant could seek to recover the "fixed relocation payment" in the condemnation action by way of cross complaint but not by answer. Thus, the court granted peremptory relief as prayed, but qualified it by requiring the trial court to grant defendant leave to perfect its statement in a cross complaint (54 Cal. App. 3d 72, 77, 83) . The court concluded that in an action brought under the eminent domain law for acquisition of real property for a public use, a condemnee defendant may only allege in his or her answer the amount of "just compensation" which he or she claims, but may allege a cause of action for affirmative relief against the city, if he has one, in a cross complaint filed with--but separate from--his answer in the action (54 Cal. App. 3d 72, 82) . The court held that although Code Civ. Proc. § 428.10(a) does not authorize the filing of a cross complaint in an action in eminent domain, Code Civ. Proc. § 428.10(b) does if the cause of action asserted in the cross complaint arises out of the same transaction as the cause of action stated in the condemning entity's complaint. The court determined that defendant could file a cross complaint because his constitutional entitlement to just compensation as a condemnee and his claim to a fixed relocation payment under the relocation assistance law arose from the same transaction (54 Cal. App. 3d 72, 83) .

The foregoing memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a motion for leave to file a permissive cross complaint when the cause of action in the proposed cross complaint does not arise out of the same transaction, occurrence, or series of transactions or occurrences as the cause brought against the moving party, or does not assert a claim, right, or interest in the property or controversy that is the subject of the cause brought against the moving party [see Code Civ. Proc. § 428.10(b); Bracey v. Gray (1944) 65 Cal. App. 2d 282, 286, 150 P.2d 564] .

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should show that the matter alleged in the cross complaint neither arises out of the same transaction, occurrence, or series of transactions or occurrences that is the basis of the complaint, nor asserts a claim, right, or interest in the property or controversy that is the subject of the cause brought against the cross complainant.

In an appropriate case, the foregoing memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a motion for leave to file a permissive cross complaint supported by the points and authorities set out in § 61.21.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Matter Alleged in Cross Complaint Must Bear Necessary and Proper Relation to Matter Constituting Cause of Action in Complaint

Bracey v. Gray (1944) 65 Cal. App. 2d 282, 150 P.2d 564 , arose out of an action for possession of property held by defendants as a joint homestead which was lost by foreclosure on the trust deed and acquired at a foreclosure sale by plaintiff. One defendant had signed a quit claim deed to the purchasers at the foreclosure sale. There was a previous action against the other defendant for possession in which judgment was given for plaintiffs. Both defendants moved for a new trial and to vacate and set aside the judgment. The motion was denied by the trial court. Defendants appealed and the court of appeal affirmed. This action was brought against defendants for damages due to their possession. Defendants in their answer admitted the previous judgment but alleged that the judgment was ineffectual and void because of reversible error in the two previous cases. When the case was placed on the trial calendar for the purpose of setting a date for hearing, defendants moved for permission to file a cross complaint. The motion was denied and defendants appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the order denying permission to file a cross complaint. The court found that defendants' cross complaint was predicated solely on defendants' alleged right of possession of the real property in question, which was the subject matter of the original actions, and had been decided adversely to them. These judgments had become final and were complete answers to defendants' allegations in the cross complaint. The court held that the cross complaint was purely an attempt to try again the issues previously decided against them in both of the former cases. The sole purpose of the present action was for a money judgment against the persons signing the undertaking as principals and as sureties and had nothing to do with nor was any issue made therein in regard to the title or possession of the real property which was in controversy in the previous cases (65 Cal. App. 2d 282 ,. 285). It is not the purpose of a cross complaint to allow persons having independent claims against each other to settle them all in one action on the sole ground that as they have been brought into court to contend against each other with respect to one case or dispute, they should at the same time and place settle all matters of controversy existing between them. The test is whether or not the matter alleged in the cross complaint bears the necessary and proper relation to the matter constituting the cause of action. It is true that if this relation is present it is immaterial that the relief sought by the cross complaint is independent of and different from that prayed for in the complaint. The court held that the proposed cross complaint did not meet the requirement of former Code Civ. Proc. § 442 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 428.10) because the present cause of action was merely a request for a money judgment against the persons signing the undertaking on appeal, and the purported claim of defendants as set forth in the cross complaint had no connection with the liability of either the principals or sureties therein (65 Cal. App. 2d 282, 286) .

The foregoing memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a motion for leave to file a permissive cross complaint on the ground that leave to file is not in the interests of justice [see Code Civ. Proc. § 428.50(c); Slankard v. Wagnon (1919) 181 Cal. 135, 145, 183 P 562] .

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should show that the filing of the cross complaint would not be in the interest of justice, for example, that defendant was guilty of protracted delay and the facts relied on in the cross complaint existed when the answer was filed [see, e.g., People v. City of Los Angeles (1960) 179 Cal. App. 2d 558, 567-568, 4 Cal. Rptr. 531] .

In an appropriate case, the foregoing memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a motion for leave to file a permissive cross complaint supported by the points and authorities set out in §§ 61.20 and 61.21.

For discussion and forms relating to motions for leave to file permissive cross complaints, see Ch. 123, Complaints and Cross Complaints in California Forms of Pleading and Practice.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Leave to File Cross Complaint Is Within Discretion of Court

Slankard v. Wagnon (1919) 181 Cal. 135, 183 P. 562 , was an action for damages on account of a breach of contract whereby defendant promised to indemnify plaintiff for a shortage in acreage of a tract of land sold by a third party to defendant and conveyed on defendant's account to plaintiff. After testimony and during argument, defendant's counsel requested leave to file a cross complaint for rescinding the contract. Plaintiff's counsel objected, and the trial court expressed doubt as to whether or not it would grant the request. Defendant's counsel stated it would be considered denied. The trial court gave judgment for plaintiff and defendant appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed. Defendant insisted that he was refused permission to file a cross complaint and that such refusal was error necessitating reversal of the judgment. The Court held that amendments to pleadings and the filing of new pleadings are so thoroughly within the discretion of the superior court that an appellate court is slow to hold as serious error a refusal to permit a change in the theory of a defense or a case for plaintiff at the eleventh hour. The Court stated that this discretion of the trial court either in granting or refusing permission to file new pleadings will not be disturbed except in case of evident abuse thereof. In this instance the Court found no abuse since defendant knew, long before he went to trial, that the deed to plaintiff, by its terms, included 215 acres. He knew all of the circumstances surrounding and preceding the execution of the last agreement with plaintiff, yet he did not ask for a rescission of the contract until after he had put in all of his evidence and rested (181 Cal. 135, 145) .

People v. City of Los Angeles (1960) 179 Cal. App. 2d 558, 4 Cal. Rptr. 531 , was an action for condemnation of land owned by the city of Los Angeles for the construction of a state highway. The action was brought by the state against the city and a private individual, Griffith, whose ancestors donated the land to the city. Griffith's answer to the complaint asserted no reversionary right and sought no damages for the taking of the land. Three years and five months after filing his answer, Griffith moved for leave to file a cross complaint against plaintiff and the city, alleging a reversionary right and damages for its taking, as well as other causes of action. The motion was denied. The trial court gave judgment for plaintiff condemning the land. The city was granted compensation but Griffith was denied any compensation. Griffith appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court held that a defendant has the right to file a cross complaint at the time of filing his or her answer under former Code Civ. Proc. § 442 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 428.10) but thereafter leave to file such a pleading becomes a matter of discretion for the trial court (179 Cal. App. 2d 558, 567) . The court found neither abuse of discretion nor error of law in the denial, stating that in addition to the questions of law involved, the trial court had no doubt considered the delay, the pretrial proceedings, the explanation for the delay, and information disclosing that the facts relied on by defendant existed when the answer was filed (179 Cal. App. 2d 558, 567-568) .

[a] Leave to File Permissive Cross Complaint Properly Denied When Subject to Demurrer

In Glogau v. Hagan (1951) 107 Cal. App. 2d 313, 237 P.2d 329 , plaintiff as an assignee sued for damages for legal services alleged to have been rendered to defendants. Judgment was entered against defendants J.A. Hagan and Evert L. Hagan, and defendants appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment. Defendants argued to the appellate court that they were prejudiced by the trial court's refusal to allow defendant J.A. Hagan to file a cross complaint. The court found that there was no abuse of discretion in the trial court's refusal to allow J.A. Hagan to file his cross complaint. The court stated that a defendant may file a cross complaint at the time of answering, but if he or she seeks to file it at a later time he or she may do so only by permission of the court. The court held that in order to defeat the trial court's ruling it must be shown that it abused its discretion. In this case, the court found that the trial court had wisely exercised it's discretion. In discussing the reasons for the trial court's sound exercise of discretion, the court found that the cross complaint was demurrable, and held that this alone provided ample ground for rejecting it (107 Cal. App. 2d 313, 320) .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Denial of Leave to File Permissive Cross Complaint Proper When Another Suit Pending on Same Matter

The facts and procedural background of Glogau v. Hagan (1951) 107 Cal. App. 2d 313, 237 P.2d 329 , are discussed in § 61.24[3][a]. The court of appeal, in affirming the trial court's refusal to permit the filing of a cross complaint, found that the trial court had not abused its discretion by denying defendant's motion for leave to file his cross complaint. In evaluating the trial court's exercise of discretion, the court of appeal found that a prior action based on the causes alleged in the cross complaint was still pending and held that the pendency of a suit involving the same matters alleged in a proposed cross complaint is justification for rejecting leave to file the cross complaint (107 Cal. App. 2d 313, 320) .

The foregoing memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a motion for leave to file a permissive cross complaint when a party has unnecessarily delayed seeking permission to file it.

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should show there was a delay in filing the cross complaint and that the delay was not excused or necessary.

In an appropriate case, the foregoing memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a motion for leave to file a permissive cross complaint supported by the points and authorities set out in §§ 61.20 and 61.21.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Denial of Leave to File Permissive Cross Complaint Proper When Unnecessary Delay in Filing Cross Complaint

Nels E. Nelson, Inc. v. Tarman (1958) 163 Cal. App. 2d 714, 329 P.2d 953 , was an action for materials and services furnished with knowledge and consent and at the request of defendant Tarman. Defendant Tarman filed an answer, and then asked for leave to file a cross complaint against his codefendant for damages in lieu of specific performance on a contract for the sale of a house. The trial court denied the motion, and defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court found that the record did not show a reason for the trial court's denial of the motion to file the cross complaint. The court stated that a defendant may file a cross complaint at time of answering, but thereafter, it may be done only by permission of the court. The ruling of the trial court was within its discretion and would be reversed only on a showing that the court abused its discretion. Here, the court found that the motion had not been made until seven months after the answer was filed, and that the case referred to in the proposed cross complaint involved other persons. The court held that to inject the cross complaint into the case would have made for confusion, therefore the trial court did not abuse its discretion (163 Cal. App. 2d 714, 730) .

The facts and procedural background of Glogau v. Hagan (1951) 107 Cal. App. 2d 313, 237 P.2d 329 , are discussed in § 61.24[3][a]. The court of appeal, in affirming the trial court's decision, found that the trial court had not abused its discretion by denying defendant's motion for leave to file his cross complaint. In evaluating the trial court's exercise of its discretion, the court of appeal stated that when the motion was made the answers had been on file for 11 months. The court held that such dereliction of defendants was sufficient cause for denying the motion (107 Cal. App. 2d 313, 320) .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Denial of Leave to File Permissive Cross Complaint When Judgment Already Entered

City of Hanford v. Superior Court (1989) 208 Cal. App. 3d 580, 256 Cal. Rptr. 274 , was a proceeding in mandate to compel the trial court, among other things, to vacate its order granting leave to file a cross complaint after judgment had been entered on the underlying complaint, from which judgment an appeal had been taken and was pending. In granting the writ, the court said a cross complaint cannot be filed after judgment has been entered in the trial court on the underlying complaint (208 Cal. App. 3d 580, 584) . The court quoted the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 428.50 and said that Code Civ. Proc. § 428.50(c) addresses all cross complaints other than those mentioned in Code Civ. Proc. § 428.50(a) and (b) (which specify the time within which the cross complaint under those subdivisions may be filed) and provides that they can only be filed with leave of court, which may be granted in the interest of justice at any time "during the course of the action" (208 Cal. App. 3d 580, 586-587) . The court accepted petitioners' argument that the quoted phrase means any time from the commencement of the action until judgment is entered, and rejected the argument that the cross complaint could be filed at any time during the pendency of the action as defined in Code Civ. Proc. § 1049 (an action is deemed to be pending from the time of its commencement until its final determination on appeal, or until the time for appeal has passed, unless the judgment is sooner satisfied) (208 Cal. App. 3d 580, 587) . The court reasoned that to allow a party to assert a cross complaint while a case is pending on appeal could create chaos in the appellate process. The court said that the purpose of the rule depriving the trial court of jurisdiction pending appeal in civil actions is to protect the jurisdiction of the appellate court, that the rule prevents the trial court frm rendering the appeal futile by changing the judgment into something different from the judgment appealed, and that if the cross complaint share identity with the issues in the complaint, further litigation on those issues is necessary to resolve the controversy, and the entered judgment is, in effect, interlocutory and nonappealable. The court said the cross complainant should not be permitted to circumvent the appellate rights of other parties by injecting additional claims into the lawsuit while the case is pending on appeal (208 Cal. App. 3d 580, 588) .

[a] Use of Form

The foregoing memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a motion for leave to file a permissive cross complaint against plaintiff when the action involves an eminent domain proceeding [Code Civ. Proc. § 428.10(a)].

Code Civ. Proc. § 428.10(a) and (b) are completely independent provisions, and it is necessary only that the person seeking to file the cross complaint come within the provisions of one of the subdivisions. Although Code Civ. Proc. § 428.10(a) bars the filing of a cross complaint against plaintiff when the action is commenced under the eminent domain statutes, a person seeking to file a cross complaint could assert a claim under Code Civ. Proc. § 428.10(b) if the cause of action in the cross complaint either arises out of the same transaction, occurrence, or series of transactions or occurrences as the cause brought against him or her or asserts a claim, right, or interest in the property or controversy that is the subject of the cause brought against him or her [see Code Civ. Proc. § 428.10(b); City of Mountain View v. Superior Court (1975) 54 Cal. App. 3d 72, 82, 126 Cal. Rptr. 358] .

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should show that the cause of action in the cross complaint is against plaintiff and that proceeding involved is one for eminent domain.

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a motion for leave to file a permissive cross complaint in a special proceeding [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1063 et seq.; Fam. Code §§ 1800 et seq., 4900 et seq.] when there is no specific statutory authority for filing a cross complaint.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should show that the matter which is the subject of the complaint is a special proceeding and that there is no specific statute authorizing the use of cross complaints in the proceeding. Counsel should also show that application of Code Civ. Proc. § 428.10 would not be in harmony with the purposes of the particular type of suit.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion and forms relating to motions for leave to file permissive cross complaints, see Ch. 123, Complaints and Cross Complaints , in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Cross Complaint Not Specifically Authorized in Special Proceedings

In Tide Water Assoc. Oil Co. v. Superior Court (1955) 43 Cal. 2d 815, 279 P.2d 35 , the state brought suit to enjoin unreasonable waste of gas. Certain defendants filed a cross complaint seeking to enjoin other defendants from wasting gas and to recover damages from all but one of them for past waste. Demurrers to the cross complaint were overruled, and motions to strike it were denied. Defendants then sought a writ of prohibition, claiming that the trial court had no power to consider a cross complaint in that type of suit.

The Supreme Court denied the writ. The Court stated that former Code Civ. Proc. § 442 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 428.10) was a general provision which, in the absence of a specific statute to the contrary, was sufficiently broad to permit the use of a cross complaint in any "action" but that it did not on its face authorize the use of a cross complaint in a "special proceeding" (43 Cal. 2d 815, 821) . The Court eventually found this case to involve an "action" and not a "special proceeding," and held that a cross complaint could be filed (43 Cal. 2d 815, 822-823) .

It should be noted that although the Supreme Court in Tide Water determined that the cross complaint was permissible because the suit was an action within the meaning of former Code Civ. Proc. § 442 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 428.10), in dictum the Court pointed out that even if the suit were held to be a special proceeding, it would not necessarily follow that a trial of the issues raised by the cross complaint would be in excess of the court's jurisdiction. If the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure are harmonious with the objects and purposes of the proceeding although those provisions are not specifically made applicable by the statute that creates the proceeding, the court by its inherent power and by its power under Code Civ. Proc. § 187 may adopt any suitable method of practice, both in ordinary actions and special proceedings, if the procedure is not specified by statutes or by rules adopted by the Judicial Council. Thus, even if a suit is held to be a special proceeding, it is within the power of the court to pass on the question of whether or not application of Code Civ. Proc. § 428.10 would be in harmony with the purposes of the particular type of suit (43 Cal. 2d 815, 825-826) .

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a motion to strike a cross complaint when the cross complaint has been filed by a party against any of the parties who filed the complaint or cross complaint after the answer has been filed and that party has not obtained leave of the court to file the cross complaint [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 428.50(a), (c), 435]. The form may be adapted for use to support a motion for summary judgment by cross defendant.

It should be noted that motions to strike are not available in limited civil cases court except on the ground that the damages or relief sought are not supported by the allegations of the complaint [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 91(a), 92(d)]. As the specific ground for the form is not expressly prohibited from being raised by Code Civ. Proc. § 92, it appears that the points and authorities may be adapted for use in a motion for summary judgment by cross defendant in a limited civil case.

Optional Paragraph D should be used when the cross complaint has been filed before an amended answer, but after the original answer [see United States Nat. Bank v. Bank of America (1963) 214 Cal. App. 2d 74, 76, 29 Cal. Rptr. 277] .

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should show that the cross complaint was filed against the party who filed the complaint or cross complaint but after the answer, and that permission to file it was not obtained.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Cross Complaint Against Party Must Be Filed Before or With Answer, Not Amended Answer

In United States Nat. Bank v. Bank of America (1963) 214 Cal. App. 2d 74, 29 Cal. Rptr. 277 , plaintiffs brought an action against defendant United States National Bank alleging improper payment of a check which was charged against plaintiffs' account. Defendant filed a cross complaint against the Bank of America praying for a judgment against that bank in the event a judgment should be entered against it on plaintiffs' cause of action. Cross defendant attacked the cross complaint by general demurrer and motion to strike, the latter based on the ground that the pleading came too late and without leave of court. The trial court granted both the motion and the demurrer and entered a judgment striking the cross complaint and decreeing that cross complainant take nothing by reason of it. Cross complainant appealed.

The court of appeal modified and affirmed. Cross complainant contended that the cross complaint was not filed late since it was filed at the same time as the amended answer, therefore leave of court was not required. The court held that the statute did not authorize the filing of a cross complaint at the same time that an amended answer was filed but only when the original answer was filed (214 Cal. App. 2d 74, 76) .

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a motion to strike any cross complaint, other than one filed by a party against a party who filed the complaint or cross complaint against him or her, when the cross complaint was filed after the trial date was set without the permission of the court [Code Civ. Proc. § 428.50(b), (c)]. The foregoing form may be adapted for use to support a motion for summary judgment by cross defendant.

It should be noted that motions to strike are not available in limited civil cases except on the ground that the damages or relief sought are not supported by the allegations of the complaint [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 91(a), 92(d)]. As the specific ground for the form is not expressly prohibited from being raised by Code Civ. Proc. § 92, it appears that the points and authorities may be adapted for use in a motion for summary judgment by cross defendant in a limited civil case.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should show that the cross complaint, filed subject to Code Civ. Proc. § 428.10(b) and desired to be struck, was filed after the trial date was set and without the court's permission.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Leave of Court Required to File Third-Party Cross Complaint Even if Original Trial Date Vacated

In Loney v. Superior Court (1984) 160 Cal. App. 3d 719, 206 Cal. Rptr. 769 , an action had been set for trial three times after defendants had answered the complaint, but the last trial date was vacated by stipulation of the parties. When no trial date was pending, defendants filed a cross complaint against a third party. The cross complaint alleged that the facts underlying the claim were discovered in early 1981, the same year the amended complaint in the original action was filed. Cross defendant requested the court to strike the cross complaint because it was not timely filed, and the court ordered it stricken. Defendants sought an extraordinary writ directing the trial court to vacate its order, arguing that since no trial date was set when they filed their cross complaint, they were entitled to do so as a matter of right under Code Civ. Proc. § 428.50(b).

The court of appeal denied the writ. The court approved of cross defendant's argument that Code Civ. Proc. § 428.50(b) requires leave of court to file a third-party cross complaint anytime after the first trial date is set, regardless of whether or not that date is later vacated (160 Cal. App. 3d 719, 722) . The court stated that defendants' construction of the statute would significantly alter the effect of the statute (160 Cal. App. 3d 719, 722-723) . Looking to practical considerations, the court pointed out that at the time of trial setting, it may be assumed that the original parties have engaged in discovery and investigated the applicable law and facts, and have learned of any additional causes of action or new parties that should be included in the litigation. Thus, the assignment of the first trial date becomes a logical point at which to cut off the right to file cross complaints bringing in new parties without permission of court. The court also noted that the legislative history of the statute lent indirect support to its interpretation (160 Cal. App. 3d 719, 723) .

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a motion to strike a cross complaint when a cause of action was not asserted in a complaint or cross complaint against the party filing the cross complaint [see Dabney v. Shippey (1974) 40 Cal. App. 3d 990, 993, 115 Cal. Rptr. 526] . The foregoing form may be adapted for use to support a motion for summary judgment by cross defendant.

It should be noted that motions to strike are not available in limited civil cases except on the ground that the damages or relief sought are not supported by the allegations of the complaint [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 91(a), 92(d)]. As the specific ground for the form is not expressly prohibited from being raised by Code Civ. Proc. § 92, it appears that the points and authorities may be adapted for use in a motion for summary judgment by cross defendant in a limited civil case.

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should show that the cause of action asserted in the complaint was not asserted against the person filing the cross complaint.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Cause of Action Not Asserted Against Party Seeking Leave to File Cross Complaint

Dabney v. Shippey (1974) 40 Cal. App. 3d 990, 115 Cal. Rptr. 526 , was an appeal from an order striking cross complainants' cross complaint by which they sought to intervene in an action alleging fraud in connection with transfer of corporate stock. Although the action was not against cross complainants, in their complaint plaintiffs mentioned them in their allegation that defendants had induced, through fraud, the sale of stock to one of its subsidiaries in order to effect a merger. Cross complainants tried to enter the case by accepting service as fictitiously named defendants. They answered and at the same time filed a cross complaint naming defendants as cross defendants. Defendants moved to strike the cross complaint. The trial court granted the motion and cross complainants appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the decision. Cross complainants contended that they were entitled under Code Civ. Proc. § 428.10 to file a cross complaint because they were parties "against whom a cause of action has been asserted in a complaint or cross complaint." The court held that although plaintiffs did allege that, after the sale, defendants and cross complainants made numerous changes in the operations and management of the company to plaintiffs' detriment, the mere fact that cross complainants were mentioned by name in the complaint did not establish that a cause of action was asserted against them. The court found that the references did not amount to a cause of action for fraud, but on the contrary, the fact that they were mentioned in the complaint but not as a joined as defendants supported the conclusion that plaintiffs did not assert a cause of action against them (40 Cal. App. 3d 990, 992-993) . As to the contention that cross complainants were parties in that they were two of the fictitious defendants mentioned in the complaint as participants and co-conspirators in the fraud, deceit and misrepresentations, the court held that plaintiff knew their names and all facts at the time of filing the complaint. Thus, Code Civ. Proc. § 474, governing fictitious defendants, did not apply to them so as to make them defendants (40 Cal. App. 3d 990, 993) .

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a motion to strike a cross complaint when the cross complaint fulfills the requirements of Code Civ. Proc. § 428.10 [see Roylance v. Doelger (1962) 57 Cal. 2d 255, 262, 19 Cal. Rptr. 7, 368 P.2d 535 ; Linday v. American President Lines, Ltd. (1963) 214 Cal. App. 2d 146, 149, 29 Cal. Rptr. 465] . Code Civ. Proc. § 428.10(a) governs cross complaints against any parties who filed the complaint or cross complaint against cross complainant, while Code Civ. Proc. § 428.10(b) governs cross complaints against any person alleged to be liable thereon if the cause of action satisfies the transaction or occurrence test or asserts a claim in the property or controversy that is the subject of the original action.

It should be noted that motions to strike are not available in limited civil cases except on the ground that the damages or relief sought are not supported by the allegations of the complaint [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 91(a), 92(d)].

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should show that the cross complaint fulfills all the requirements of Code Civ. Proc. § 428.10(a) or (b) and that to strike the cross complaint would be erroneous.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Court's Discretion to Strike Cross Complaint Limited

The facts and procedural background of Roylance v. Doelger (1962) 57 Cal. 2d 255, 19 Cal. Rptr. 7, 368 P.2d 535 , are discussed in § 61.21[3][a]. In Roylance, the trial court granted a motion to strike the cross complaint, but this order was reversed by the Supreme Court on appeal. The Court expressly rejected the argument that the trial court was entitled to strike a cross complaint that raised much more complicated issues than those raised by the complaint and answer. The Court concluded that the cross complaint fulfilled all of the requirements of former Code Civ. Proc. § 442 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 428.10) and accordingly should not have been stricken, pointing out that in the event the trial court determined that the issues raised by the cross complaint should be tried separately from those raised by the complaint and answer, the proper procedure is to sever the action pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1048 (57 Cal. 2d 255, 262) .

Linday v. American President Lines, Ltd. (1963) 214 Cal. App. 2d 146, 29 Cal. Rptr. 465 , was an action against an employer to recover for injuries sustained when plaintiff was assaulted by a fellow crew member. Defendant filed a cross complaint against his assailant seeking indemnity against cross defendant for any damages which it might ultimately sustain as a result of plaintiff's injury. Plaintiff moved to strike the cross complaint on the grounds that it was not asserted in good faith and that it was asserted for the purpose of prejudicing plaintiff's action. The trial court granted the motion and ordered the cross complaint stricken. Defendant and cross complainant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. Plaintiff's sole argument on appeal in support of the order striking the cross complaint was that a cross complaint, even though fulfilling the requirements of former Code Civ. Proc. § 442 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 428.10), may be disallowed if the trial court in the exercise of its discretion concludes that prejudice will otherwise result to the plaintiff. In reversing the trial court's decision, the court of appeal found that California cases construing former Code Civ. Proc. § 442 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 428.10) clearly establish that a trial court has no absolute discretion to strike a cross complaint that fulfills the requirements of that section (214 Cal. App. 2d 146, 148-149) .

A. Failure to Plead Related Cause of Action Was Due to Oversight, Inadvertence, Mistake, Neglect, or Other Cause. A party who fails to plead a related cause of action subject to the requirements of Sections 426.10-426.70 of the Code of Civil Procedure through oversight, inadvertence, mistake, neglect, or other cause may apply to the court for leave to amend his or her pleading or file a cross complaint to assert the cause at any time during the course of the action (Code Civ. Proc. § 426.50; see also Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30 (requirement for alleging related cause of action)).

B. Related Cause of Action Defined. A "related cause of action" for purposes of compulsory cross complaints means a cause of action that arises out of the same transaction, occurrence, or series of transactions or occurrences as the cause of action that the plaintiff or cross complainant alleges in his or her complaint or cross complaint (Code Civ. Proc. § 426.10(c); see Code Civ. Proc. § 426.10(a), (b)).

C. Granting of Permission Mandatory if Moving Party Acted in Good Faith. The court, after notice to the adverse party, shall grant, on such terms as may be just to the parties, leave to amend the pleading or file the cross complaint to assert a related cause of action if the party who failed to plead the cause acted in good faith (Code Civ. Proc. § 426.50; see Foot's Transfer & Storage Co. v. Superior Court (1981) 114 Cal. App. 3d 897, 900-901, 171 Cal. Rptr. 1).

D. Good Faith Must Be Given Liberal Construction. Section 426.50 of the Code of Civil Procedure shall be liberally construed to avoid forfeiture of causes of action, and what constitutes good faith or the lack of it must be determined in light of and in conformity with the liberality conferred on the trial courts by the section and by prior law (Code Civ. Proc. § 426.50; Foot's Transfer & Storage Co. v. Superior Court (1981) 114 Cal. App. 3d 897, 902, 171 Cal. Rptr. 1).

E. Strong Showing of Bad Faith Required to Deny Right to Amend Pleading or File Cross Complaint. In order to support a finding that a party has not acted in good faith in amending his or her pleading or filing a cross complaint, there must be a strong showing of bad faith; mere delay is generally insufficient to constitute bad faith, absent a showing that the amendment of the pleading or filing of the cross complaint would work a substantial injustice to the opposing party and would prejudice that party's position in some way (see Foot's Transfer & Storage Co. v. Superior Court (1981) 114 Cal. App. 3d 897, 902-903, 171 Cal. Rptr. 1).

[a] Use of Form

The foregoing memorandum may be submitted in support of a motion for leave to amend a cross complaint or to file a compulsory cross complaint to assert a related cause of action against plaintiff when failure to assert the related cause of action was due to oversight, inadvertence, mistake, neglect, or other cause and the party who failed to plead the cause acted in good faith [see Code Civ. Proc. § 426.50; see Code Civ. Proc. § 426.10(c) (definition of "related cause of action")]. As the term "plaintiff" also means cross complainant for purposes of the requirements of Code Civ. Proc. §

426.30(a) [see Code Civ. Proc. § 426.10(b)], the form may be adapted for use by a cross defendant seeking to amend a permissive cross complaint or to file a compulsory cross complaint against the cross complainant.

The grounds for relief in Code Civ. Proc. § 426.50 are similar to those set forth in the general discretionary relief statute, Code Civ. Proc. § 473 (mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect). Code Civ. Proc. § 426.50 supplements the authority provided generally to amend pleadings, and does not preclude relief from a judgment or order under Code Civ. Proc. § 473 [see Legislative Committee Comments to Code Civ. Proc. § 426.50]. For memoranda or points and authority regarding relief under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, see Ch. 70, Defaults, Default Judgments, and Relief From Judgments and Orders .

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should state facts showing oversight, inadvertence, mistake, neglect, or other reason for failing to assert the compulsory related cause of action against plaintiff or cross complainant, and showing that any delays in asserting the cause of action would not work a substantial injustice on the opposing party or prejudice that party's position in any way. For example, counsel may show that defendant failed to assert the cause of action because he or she was in settlement negotiations [see Dunzweiler v. Superior Court (1968) 267 Cal. App. 2d 569, 579, 73 Cal. Rptr. 331] .

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion and forms relating to motions for leave to amend a cross complaint or file a compulsory cross complaint to assert a related cause of action, see Ch. 123, Complaints and Cross Complaints in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Granting of Permission Mandatory if Moving Party Acted in Good Faith

In Foot's Transfer & Storage Co. v. Superior Court (1981) 114 Cal. App. 3d 897, 171 Cal. Rptr. 1 , plaintiff filed a complaint for breach of contract against defendant in March 1978, to which defendant did not respond and a default was taken but was subsequently vacated. Defendant filed an answer in November 1978, but the answer did not allege any affirmative defenses or counterclaims. After the answer was filed in April 1979, defendant requested plaintiff's counsel to stipulate to entry of a cross complaint in the action. Plaintiff rejected the stipulation in November 1979. Defendant then moved for permission to file a cross complaint. The motion was heard and denied and a motion for reconsideration was also heard and denied. Defendant petitioned for a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to grant defendant the right to file a cross complaint.

The court of appeal granted the writ. The court noted that the word "shall" in Code Civ. Proc. § 426.50 is mandatory with respect to allowing an amendment of a pleading or the filing of a cross complaint. However, since Code Civ. Proc. § 426.50 also provides that the court shall grant leave to a party to amend his pleading or to file a cross complaint "if the party who failed to plead the cause acted in good faith," the trial court is allowed some "modicum of discretion" in determining whether or not a defendant has acted in good faith (114 Cal. App. 3d 897, 900-901) . The court nevertheless held that the evidence to support the trial court's denial of the motion to file the compulsory cross complaint was insufficient as a matter of law, and granted a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to allow its filing (114 Cal. App. 3d 897, 904) .

For further discussion regarding the court's "modicum of discretion," see Gherman v. Colburn (1977) 72 Cal. App. 3d 544, 559, 140 Cal. Rptr. 330 (discussed in § 61.71[3][a]), and Silver Organizations Ltd. v. Frank (1990) 217 Cal. App. 3d 94, 99, 265 Cal. Rptr. 681 (discussed in §§ 61.70[3][a] and 61.70[3][c]).

[b] Good Faith Must Be Given Liberal Construction

The facts and procedural background of Foot's Transfer & Storage Co. v. Superior Court (1981) 114 Cal. App. 3d 897, 171 Cal. Rptr. 1 , are discussed in § 61.70[3][a]. In deciding that defendant had acted in good faith in filing the cross complaint, the court stated that since the court's objective is to encourage trial on the merits whenever possible, the granting of leave to file a cross complaint is of particular importance in avoiding forfeiture of causes of action because of the principle expressed in Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30 that cross complaints relating to the subject of the action must be filed therein or are deemed lost (114 Cal. App. 3d 897, 900-901) . The court noted that the trial court's denial of defendant's motion implied a finding that defendant had not acted in good faith. The court stated that such a finding would be affirmed if there was substantial evidence to support it. The court held that what constitutes "good faith" or lack of it under Code Civ. Proc. § 426.50 must be determined in light of and in conformity with the liberality conferred on the trial courts by the section and by prior law. The court concluded that this principle of liberality requires that a strong showing of bad faith be made in order to support a denial of the right to file a cross complaint under this section (114 Cal. App. 3d 897, 902) .

[c] Strong Showing of Bad Faith Required to Deny Right to Amend Pleading or File Cross Complaint

The facts and procedural background of Foot's Transfer & Storage Co. v. Superior Court (1981) 114 Cal. App. 3d 897, 171 Cal. Rptr. 1 , are discussed in § 61.70[3][a]. In holding that defendant had acted in good faith in filing the cross complaint, the court concluded that the principle of liberality in construing "good faith" requires a strong showing of bad faith be made in order to support a denial of the right to file a compulsory cross complaint (114 Cal. App. 3d 897, 902) . The court stated that bad faith would be found when it appears that a delayed cross complaint, if allowed, would work a substantial injustice to the opposing party and would prejudice that party's position in some way. Plaintiff contended that defendant had acted in bad faith because it waited 23 months after service of the complaint and 16 months after it had filed its answer to the complaint before asserting the right to file a cross complaint. The court stated that Code Civ. Proc. § 426.50 expressly mentioned a party's neglect as one circumstance under which relief may be given and found nothing in the record to suggest that defendant was unusually reprehensible in this regard. In addition, the court found that plaintiff had waited for two years to file his action and that his counsel had equivocated concerning the stipulation for a considerable length of time while conducting discovery concerning defendant's claims. Therefore, the court found no substantial injustice or prejudice to plaintiff by the filing of defendant's cross complaint (114 Cal. App. 3d 897, 903) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Granting of Permission Mandatory if Moving Party Acted in Good Faith

Silver Organizations Ltd. v. Frank (1990) 217 Cal. App. 3d 94, 265 Cal. Rptr. 681 , was an action on a promissory note in which the defendants filed answers in propria persona, delaying the retention of an attorney while they attempted to settle the case. After the case was set for trial and the settlement efforts proved unsuccessful, defendants secured an attorney willing to take the case. The attorney pursued investigation and formal discovery, uncovered grounds for a compulsory cross complaint, and filed a motion to file a cross complaint pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 426.50. The trial court denied the motion. The case was tried by the court, and judgment was entered for plaintiffs. Defendants appealed, contending that under Code Civ. Proc. § 426.50 the trial court was mandated to grant the motion unless there was a strong showing of bad faith, and no such showing had been made. The court of appeal reversed because there was no substantial evidence to support a finding that defendants were acting in bad faith (217 Cal. App. 3d 94, 97) . The court rejected the view that the trial court may exercise discretion in the denial of a motion to file a compulsory cross complaint (217 Cal. App. 3d 94, 98) , and held that a motion to file a cross complaint at any time during the course of an action must be granted when forfeiture would otherwise result, unless bad faith of the moving party is demonstrated. Factors such as oversight, inadvertence, neglect, mistake, or other cause are insufficient grounds to deny the motion unless accompanied by bad faith (217 Cal. App. 3d 94, 99) .

[b] Good Faith Must Be Given Liberal Construction

Dunzweiler v. Superior Court (1968) 267 Cal. App. 2d 569, 73 Cal. Rptr. 331 , was an action for damages for personal injuries resulting from an automobile collision. Defendant delayed for ten months after plaintiff had filed the complaint before requesting his attorneys to file a cross complaint for his injuries. After plaintiff's attorneys withdrew their consent to stipulate to the filing of a cross complaint, defendant moved for permission to file the cross complaint. The trial court denied the motion, but on appeal by defendant, the court of appeal reversed. The court found that defendant's delay in seeking the cross complaint was neither unexplained nor unexcused because all but two months of the delay were reasonably accounted for and excused by settlement negotiations (267 Cal. App. 2d 569, 579) . Thus, this delay could not be held to amount to a lack of due diligence (267 Cal. App. 2d 569, 580) . The court held that in view of the policy in favor of allowing issues to be fully litigated, and because the trial court's order, if upheld, would deny petitioner his day in court, the order tended to impede or defeat the ends of substantial justice (267 Cal. App. 2d 569, 580-581) .

[c] Strong Showing of Bad Faith Required to Deny Right to Amend Pleading or File Cross Complaint

The facts and procedural background of Silver Organizations Ltd. v. Frank (1990) 217 Cal. App. 3d 94, 265 Cal. Rptr. 681 , are discussed in § 61.70[3][a]. In reversing judgment for plaintiffs after the trial court's denial of defendants' motion for leave to file a compulsory cross complaint, the court of appeal noted the holding in Gherman v. Colburn (1977) 72 Cal. App. 3d 544, 559, 140 Cal. Rptr. 330 (discussed in § 61.71[3][a]), in which the court had stated that Code Civ. Proc. § 426.50 allows the trial court some "modicum of discretion" in determining whether a defendant acted in good faith. The court in Silver held that despite this "modicum of discretion," substantial evidence must support the trial court's decision (217 Cal. App. 3d 94, 99) . Substantial evidence of bad faith will obviously negate the good faith that is required for granting a motion under Code Civ. Proc. § 426.50 (217 Cal. App. 3d 94, 100) . "Bad faith" is defined as the opposite of "good faith," generally implying or involving actual or constructive fraud, or a design to mislead or deceive another, or a neglect or refusal to fulfill some duty or some contractual obligation, not prompted by an honest mistake, but by some interested or sinister motive, not simply bad judgment or negligence, but rather the conscious doing of a wrong because of dishonest purpose or moral obliquity; it contemplates a state of mind affirmatively operating with furtive design or ill will (217 Cal. App. 3d 94, 100) . The court concluded that its review of the entire record failed to reveal, directly or inferentially, any substantial evidence of bad faith by the defendants, and that looking at the entire period between the filing of the complaint and the denial of the motion, a time frame of less than six months, it found nothing in defendants' words or conduct remotely suggesting dishonest purpose, moral obliquity, sinister motive, furtive design, or ill will (217 Cal. App. 3d 94, 100) .

The foregoing memorandum may be submitted to oppose a motion for leave to amend a cross complaint or to file a compulsory cross complaint to assert a related cause of action against plaintiff [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 426.30(a), 426.50]. As the term "plaintiff" also means cross complainant for purposes of the requirements of Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30(a) [see Code Civ. Proc. § 426.10(b)], the form may be adapted for use by a cross defendant seeking to amend a permissive cross complaint or to file a compulsory cross complaint against the cross complainant.

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should show that the moving party delayed filing a cross complaint asserting a related cause of action for 30 days or more after service of the summons [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 412.20(a), 432.10]. Counsel should also show that this delay was not excused, for example, by settlement negotiations, and that to allow the moving party to file the cross complaint now would work a substantial injustice to the opposing party and would prejudice his or her position in some way.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion and forms relating to motions for leave to amend a cross complaint or file a compulsory cross complaint to assert a related cause of action, see Ch. 123, Complaints and Cross Complaints in California Forms of Pleading and Practice.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Substantial Injustice and Prejudice to Opposing Party Constitutes Bad Faith

In Gherman v. Colburn (1977) 72 Cal. App. 3d 544, 140 Cal. Rptr. 330 , plaintiff sought to establish the existence of a joint venture and its breach. Plaintiff requested an accounting but dismissed this cause of action before trial. In their answer, defendants denied that a joint venture had ever existed. However, on the day of trial, defendants shifted their position to demand, by a proposed cross complaint, an accounting with respect to the joint venture they had claimed did not exist. The trial court denied defendants the right to file the cross complaint. The case went to trial and the jury found in favor of plaintiff. Defendants appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court dismissed defendant's contention that there could be but one form of action here, thus making their proposed cross complaint for an accounting a compulsory cross complaint under Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30(a), the filing of which is mandatory, and giving the trial court no choice or discretion but to grant their motion. The court found that an action for judicial dissolution and accounting was not the only permissible action here and that the law did not deprive the court of choice or discretion when a defendant seeks to file a so-called compulsory cross complaint that is not timely and which is not filed in good faith (72 Cal. App. 3d 544, 558) . The court stated the it was true that Code Civ. Proc. § 426.50 requires the court to grant a defendant's application for permission to file a cross complaint at any time during the course of the action if the party who failed to plead the cause acted in good faith, but that the statutory terminology allows the court some modicum of discretion in determining whether or not a defendant has acted in good faith. The court held that when the defendant fails to act for a period of over 30 days and waits until the first day of trial, such conduct may be interpreted as evidence of a lack of good faith, especially when coupled with the long history of litigation between the parties, which demonstrates that both sides were jockeying for position over the right to a jury trial (72 Cal. App. 3d 544, 559) . The court concluded that the trial court impliedly found that by attempting to file a cross complaint on the first day of trial, defendants were not acting in good faith but that the motion for leave to file a cross complaint was merely a tactical maneuver to deprive plaintiffs of a right to a jury trial (72 Cal. App. 3d 544, 559-560) .

The facts and procedural background of Foot's Transfer & Storage Co. v. Superior Court (1981) 114 Cal. App. 3d 897, 171 Cal. Rptr. 1 , are discussed in § 61.70[3][a]. In Foot's, the court of appeal held that defendant had acted in good faith in filing the cross complaint. In making this decision the court held that a strong showing of bad faith is required to support an order to deny defendant the right to file a compulsory cross complaint (114 Cal. App. 3d 897, 902) . The court held that bad faith would be found when it appeared that a delayed cross complaint, if allowed, would work a substantial injustice to the opposing party and would prejudice that party's position in some way. In this case, the court found that no substantial injustice or prejudice to plaintiff would result from the filing of defendant's cross complaint (114 Cal. App. 3d 897, 903) .

The rule regarding the court's "modicum of discretion," first stated in Gherman and repeated in Foot's Transfer, supra , was criticized in Silver Organizations Ltd. v. Frank (1990) 217 Cal. App. 3d 94, 99, 265 Cal. Rptr. 681 (discussed in § 61.70[3][a]).

DEFENDANT'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE THE ACTION SUED ON IS BARRED FOR FAILURE TO HAVE PLEADED IT AS A COMPULSORY CROSS COMPLAINT IN A PRIOR ACTION BETWEEN THE PARTIES.

A. Summary Judgment for Defendant. A defendant may move for summary judgment if it is contended that the action has no merit, and the motion shall be granted if all the papers submitted show that there is no triable issue as to any material fact and that defendant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law (Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(a), (c)).

B. Judicial Notice. A motion for summary judgment shall be supported by, among other matters, matters of which judicial notice must or may be taken (Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)(1)).

C. Court May Take Judicial Notice of Court Records. The court is expressly authorized to take judicial notice of the records of any court of California or any court of record of the United States or of any state of the United States (Evid. Code § 452(d)) and is required to take such judicial notice on the request of any party if notice of the request is given and the party furnishes the court with sufficient information to enable it to take judicial notice of the matter (Evid. Code § 453; see Evid. Code § 11 (defining "shall" as mandatory)).

[ADD, if not already included in the Notice of Motion]

D. Specification of Matter to Be Judicially Noticed. The court is hereby expressly requested to take judicial notice of that certain action in _____ (this court or specify other court), entitled _____ vs. _____, No. _____, and specifically of the following pleadings and papers in that action, copies of which are attached hereto as Exhibits _____ [specify, e.g., A and B]: _____ (list and attach copies of all papers necessary to show that the present action should have been filed in the prior action as a compulsory cross complaint within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 426.10(c) and 426.30, above [see Evid. Code § 453(b)], e.g., the complaint, the answer, the court's statement of decision, and the judgment)].

[CONTINUE]

E. Party Is Barred From Asserting Action Which Should Have Been Pleaded as Cross Complaint in Prior Related Action. With exceptions not here applicable, if a party against whom a complaint has been filed and served fails to allege in a cross complaint any related cause of action which at the time of serving his or her answer to the complaint he or she has against the plaintiff, such party may not thereafter in any other action assert against the plaintiff the related cause of action not pleaded (Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30(a)). Thus, claims that could have been raised by cross complaint in a prior action between the parties are barred by Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30(a) (Hulsey v. Koehler (1990) 218 Cal. App. 3d 1150, 1153, 267 Cal. Rptr. 523 ; Saunders v. New Capital for Small Businesses, Inc. (1964) 231 Cal. App. 2d 324, 333, 41 Cal. Rptr. 703 (decided under former Code Civ. Proc. § 439 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30])).

F. Related Cause of Action Defined. "Related cause of action" means a cause of action that arises out of the same transaction, occurrence, or series of transactions or occurrences as the cause of action which the plaintiff alleges in the complaint (Code Civ. Proc. § 426.10(c)).

[Optional] G. Determining Whether Cause of Action Arose Out of Same Transaction. In determining whether a cause of action arose out of the same transaction, occurrence, or series of transactions or occurrences as the cause of action alleged in the prior action as the foundation of the plaintiff's claim in that action, the term "transaction" is not limited to a single, isolated act or occurrence, but may embrace a series of acts or occurrences logically interrelated (Currie Medical Specialties, Inc. v. Bowen (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 774, 777, 186 Cal. Rptr. 543 ; Sylvester v. Soulsburg (1967) 252 Cal. App. 2d 185, 190-191, 60 Cal. Rptr. 218 (decided under former Code Civ. Proc. § 439 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30]); Align Technology, Inc. v. Tran (2009) 179 Cal. App. 4th 949, 967, 102 Cal. Rptr. 3d 343 ; Saunders v. New Capital for Small Businesses, Inc. (1964) 231 Cal. App. 2d 324, 336, 41 Cal. Rptr. 703 (same)).

[Optional] H. Applicability of Rule Whether Prior Action Sounded in Contract or Tort. Code of Civil Procedure Section 426.50(b) applies whether the complaint is in contract and the cross complaint is in tort, or vice versa ( Sylvester v. Soulsburg (1967) 252 Cal. App. 2d 185, 191, 60 Cal. Rptr. 218 (decided under former Code Civ. Proc. § 439 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30])).

[Optional] I. Applicability of Rule Despite Plaintiff's Voluntary Dismissal of Defendant Without Prejudice. The critical time period to which Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30 looks is that point in time when the complaint has been filed and served against a defendant and the defendant fails to allege in a cross complaint any related cause of action which at the time of serving his or her answer to the complaint he or she has against the plaintiff [AL Holding Co. v. O'Brien & Hicks, Inc. (1999) 75 Cal. App. 4th 1310, 1313-1314, 89 Cal. Rptr. 2d 918] . Thus, when the plaintiff voluntarily dismisses plaintiff's complaint as to the defendant without prejudice after the defendant has answered without having filed a cross complaint against the plaintiff on a related cause of action, the defendant is thereafter barred from proceeding against the former plaintiff on that related cause of action (see AL Holding Co. v. O'Brien & Hicks, Inc. (1999) 75 Cal. App. 4th 1310, 1313-1314, 89 Cal. Rptr. 2d 918).

[Optional] J. Applicability of Rule to Assignee of Defendant Despite Plaintiff's Voluntary Dismissal of Defendant Without Prejudice. The critical time period to which Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30 looks is that point in time when the complaint has been filed and served against a defendant and the defendant fails to allege in a cross complaint any related cause of action which at the time of serving his or her answer to the complaint he or she has against the plaintiff [AL Holding Co. v. O'Brien & Hicks, Inc. (1999) 75 Cal. App. 4th 1310, 1313-1314, 89 Cal. Rptr. 2d 918] . Thus, when the plaintiff voluntarily dismisses plaintiff's complaint as to the defendant without prejudice after the defendant has answered without having filed a cross complaint against the plaintiff on a related cause of action, and the defendant thereafter assigns its rights to the related cause of action, the assignee is barred from proceeding against the former plaintiff on that related cause of action in a later action (AL Holding Co. v. O'Brien & Hicks, Inc. (1999) 75 Cal. App. 4th 1310, 1313-1314, 89 Cal. Rptr. 2d 918).

[Optional] K. Applicability of Rule When Prior Action Was in Federal Court. The rule that the present action is barred when it should have been raised as a compulsory cross complaint in a prior action between the parties but was not applies when the prior action between the parties was in a federal court and plaintiff's claim in the present action was within the federal court's jurisdiction in the earlier action and was thus a compulsory counterclaim (Currie Medical Specialties, Inc. v. Bowen (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 774, 776-777, 186 Cal. Rptr. 543).

[Optional] L. Compulsory Cross Complaint to Cross Complaint Required. Code of Civil Procedure Section 426.30 requires the filing of a compulsory cross complaint when a party has a cause of action related to the cause of action asserted in a cross complaint filed against him or her (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 426.10(a) ("complaint" includes cross complaint), (b) ("plaintiff" includes cross complainant), 426.30(a); Ranchers Bank v. Pressman (1971) 19 Cal. App. 3d 612, 619, 97 Cal. Rptr. 78 (decided under former Code Civ. Proc. § 439 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30])).

M. Bar Is Aspect of Doctrine of Res Judicata. Code Civ. Proc. § 428.30(b) embodies a special aspect of the doctrine of res judicata (Hulsey v. Koehler (1990) 218 Cal. App. 3d 1150, 1157, 267 Cal. Rptr. 523).

N. Raising Defense of Res Judicata by Motion for Summary Judgment. The defense of res judicata may be properly raised on a motion for summary judgment (Saunders v. New Capital for Small Businesses, Inc. (1964) 231 Cal. App. 2d 324, 331, 41 Cal. Rptr. 703).

[a] Use of Form

This memoranda may be submitted in support of a motion for summary judgment on the ground that plaintiff's cause of action is barred because it was not pleaded as a compulsory cross complaint in a prior related action by the defendant against the plaintiff [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 426.10(c), 426.30(a)].

Optional Paragraph G should be included if necessary to show that the present action is a related cause of action.

Optional Paragraph H may be included if the prior action was based on tort and plaintiff's present claim is based on contract, or vice versa.

Optional Paragraph I should be used if in the former action defendant answered plaintiff's complaint, but did not serve plaintiff with a cross complaint alleging a related cause of action against plaintiff, and plaintiff thereafter voluntary dismissed the complaint as to the defendant without prejudice.

Optional Paragraph J should be used instead of Optional Paragraph I if, in addition to those circumstances, defendant assigned its rights to the related cause of action after having been voluntarily dismissed.

Optional Paragraph K should be included if the prior action was in a federal court.

Optional Paragraph L should be used when the plaintiff in the present action was a cross defendant in the prior action and could have asserted his or her present claim by way of cross complaint against the cross complainant in that action (if this is the fact situation, the terms "plaintiff" and "defendant" in this form should be changed to "cross complainant" and "cross defendant," accordingly).

This form may be modified to include, when appropriate, the additional points set in § 61.94.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, defendant should show (1) the existence of a prior action between the parties in which the present defendant sued the present plaintiff; (2) that the present action, if it exists at all, existed at the time the present plaintiff filed his or her answer to the complaint in the prior action (see § 61.99); and (3) that the present plaintiff failed to assert the present claim by cross complaint in the prior action.

[b] Judicial Notice

In making his or her proof, the defendant should request that the court take judicial notice of the prior action (see Paragraphs B-D) [Evid. Code § 452(d)] and furnish the court with sufficient information to enable it to take judicial notice of the matter [Evid. Code § 453(b)]. For example, if the prior action was in another court, defendant should furnish the court with certified copies of the pleadings, statement of decision if any, judgment, and any other relevant records in the prior action necessary to enable the court to determine the motion [see Evid. Code § 453]. If the prior action was in the same court, counsel should specifically identify the pleadings and papers in the court's file and records relating to that case on which he or she relies and submit copies of the relevant papers with the notice of motion and memorandum. However, practice varies from court to court and counsel should, if unfamiliar with the practice of the court in which the action is pending, check with the judge's courtroom clerk or the court clerk's office to ascertain the specific procedure for having the court's file and records in the prior case presented to the judge in the present case.

[c] Exceptions to Compulsory Cross Complaint Statute

Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30 does not apply if either (1) the court in which the action is pending has no jurisdiction to render a personal judgment against the person who failed to plead the related cause of action (see § 61.96), or (2) the person who failed to plead the related cause of action did not file an answer to the complaint (see § 61.97) [Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30(b)].

In addition, Code Civ. Proc. §§ 426.10-426.70 do not apply if either of the following are established: (1) the cause of action not pleaded requires for its adjudication the presence of additional parties over whom the court cannot acquire jurisdiction (see § 61.96); or (2) at the time the action was commenced, the cause of action not pleaded was the subject of another pending action (see § 61.96) [Code Civ. Proc. § 426.40].

Moreover, Code Civ. Proc. §§ 426.10-426.70 do not apply: (1) to special proceedings, as distinguished from civil actions (see § 61.98), with the exception of eminent domain proceedings (see § 61.94) [Code Civ. Proc. § 426.70]; (2) to actions in small claims court; and to actions brought solely for declaratory relief under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1060-1062.5 (see § 61.98) [Prob. Code § 426.60].

[f] Opposing Memoranda

The points and authorities set out in §§ 61.95 -61.100 may in an appropriate case be used to oppose a motion for summary judgment supported by this memorandum.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Party Is Barred From Asserting Action Which Should Have Been Pleaded as Cross Complaint in Prior Related Action

In Hulsey v. Koehler (1990) 218 Cal. App. 3d 1150, 267 Cal. Rptr. 523 , discussed in § 61.90[3][h]; (and discussed more fully in § 61.101[3][a]), the court of appeal said that Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30 is California's compulsory cross complaint statute which bars claims that could have been raised by cross complaint in a prior action between the parties (218 Cal. App. 3d 1150, 1153) .

Saunders v. New Capital for Small Businesses, Inc. (1964) 231 Cal. App. 3d 324, , is more fully discussed in § 61.90[3][b]. In Saunders, the court of appeal said that if a claim arising out of the same transaction on which the complaint is based and which tends to diminish or defeat plaintiff's recovery is not pleaded as a counterclaim (now a cross complaint [see Code Civ. Proc. § 428.80]), it is forever barred under the provisions of former Code Civ. Proc. § 439 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30(a)] (231 Cal. App. 3d 324, 333) .

[b] Determining Whether Cause of Action Arose Out of Same Transaction

The facts and procedural background of Currie Medical Specialties, Inc. v. Bowen (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 774, 186 Cal. Rptr. 543 , are discussed in § 61.90[3][f]. In affirming the summary judgment for defendant, the court of appeal said that the transaction or occurrence test does not require an absolute identity of factual backgrounds for the two claims, but only a logical relationship between them (136 Cal. App. 3d 774, 777) . The court found that the claims of defendant and plaintiff involved common issues of law and fact and held that overlap of issues satisfied the logical relation approach to the transaction or occurrence test. The court held that the logical relation test was not improperly broad when it is used to bar a claim because the waiver provision of Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30 is mandatory and the policy in favor of hearing all related claims in a single action controls (136 Cal. App. 3d 774, 777) .

Sylvester v. Soulsburg (1967) 252 Cal. App. 2d 185, 60 Cal. Rptr. 218 , was an action for damages for trespass to real and personal property and for conspiracy to trespass. In a prior action the present defendants had sued the present plaintiffs to terminate a contract for the purchase of the real and personal property, the parties stipulated to a judgment of dismissal for which consideration was given, and the action was dismissed. The trial court dismissed the present action on the ground the former action was a bar to any claim which the plaintiffs could have, as defendants, asserted against the present defendants as plaintiffs in the prior action.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment of dismissal, stating that the issue was whether the subject matter of the potential counterclaim (now cross complaint [see Code Civ. Proc. § 428.80]) arose from the same "transaction" which formed the basis of the complaint, since former Code Civ. Proc. § 439 [now see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 426.10(c), 428.30(a)] bars a subsequent action only when it arises from the same transaction. The purpose of former Code Civ. Proc. § 439 is to provide for settlement in a single action of all conflicting claims between parties arising out of the same transaction and thus avoid multiplicity of actions and judgments. To achieve this purpose, the statute has been liberally construed. The term "transaction" is not limited to a single, isolated act or occurrence, but may embrace a series of acts or occurrences logically interrelated (252 Cal. App. 2d 185, 190-191) . It embraces almost any activity by a person which affects another's right and out of which a cause of action may arise (252 Cal. App. 2d 185, 191) .

In Align Technology, Inc. v. Tran (2009) 179 Cal. App. 4th 949, 102 Cal. Rptr. 3d 343 , plaintiff employer brought a suit against a former employee alleging breach of contract and conversion of patents. The employee demurred on the grounds that the employer's claims were barred under Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30, because they should have been raised in a prior suit, in which the employee had cross-complained for wrongful termination in an action brought against him by the employer. The trial court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend.

On appeal, the court held that the employer's claims for breach of contract and conversion of patents were logically related to the former employee's cross-complaint for wrongful termination in the prior action because they arose from the parties' employment relationship and because the employer's claims were of such a nature as might be raised in responding to a wrongful termination claim. Thus, the claims were related causes of action as defined in Code Civ. Proc. § 426.10(c) (179 Cal. App. 4th 949, 967) . Moreover, the allegations of the complaint did not clearly show that any of the claims arose after the employer answered the cross-complaint; thus, the demurrer was properly sustained. However, the trial court erred in denying leave to amend because the employer made a sufficient showing that its complaint could be amended to allege that the claims at issue arose after the employer had filed its answer to the cross-complaint in the prior action (179 Cal. App. 4th 949, 970) .

Saunders v. New Capital for Small Businesses, Inc. (1964) 41 Cal. Rptr. 703 , was an action to recover for services rendered. Defendant's motion for summary judgment was granted on the ground the action was barred because plaintiff had failed to file his claim as a compulsory cross complaint in defendant's prior action against plaintiff to recover money plaintiff was alleged to have secretly taken from defendant for services provided.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the action was barred because the present cause of action arose out of the same transaction that was involved in the prior suit (231 Cal. App. 2d 324, 337-339). The court stated that the obvious intent of the Legislature in enacting former Code Civ. Proc. § 439 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30(a)] was to provide for the settlement in a single action of all conflicting claims between the parties arising out of the same transaction and thus to avoid multiplicity of actions and conflicting judgments. While the case by case treatment may not have developed a definitive and crystal clear concept of the term "transaction" as used in former Code Civ. Proc. § 439, there is every indication that the term has been liberally construed to the end of achieving the above legislative purpose (231 Cal. App. 2d 324, 334). The term "transaction" is not confined to a single, isolated act or occurrence such as, for example, a contract, a lease, or an automobile collision but may embrace a series of acts or occurrences logically interrelated (231 Cal. App. 2d 324, 336).

Note that in Sylvester v. Soulsburg (1967) 252 Cal. App. 2d 185, 60 Cal. Rptr. 218 , above, both the trial court and the appellate court characterized the bar of former Code Civ. Proc. § 439 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30(a)] as a form of "collateral estoppel." In Saunders v. New Capital for Small Businesses, Inc. (1964) 41 Cal. Rptr. 703 , above, the appellate court, although it recognized that the doctrine of res judicata, in its secondary aspect as a collateral estoppel, applies only to issues in the second action which were actually litigated in the first action (231 Cal. App. 2d 324, 331) , nevertheless characterized the bar of former Code Civ. Proc. § 439 as a statutory extension of "collateral estoppel" (231 Cal. App. 2d 324, 333) . Each of these cases applied former Code Civ. Proc. § 439 to preclude issues which had not been previously litigated, and in each case former Code Civ. Proc. § 439 was raised as a defense at the outset of the proceedings. This use of the term "collateral estoppel" to describe the effect of former Code Civ. Proc. § 439 was criticized by the court of appeal in Hulsey v. Koehler (1990) 218 Cal. App. 3d 1150, 267 Cal. Rptr. 523 (discussed in § 61.90[3][h]), as a "misapplication of terminology," since it is clear that the doctrine of collateral estoppel operates to bar only those issues which have been actually litigated and decided. Hulsey held that the bar of Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30(a) serves the same purpose as, and is a special aspect of, the doctrine of res judicata, and not collateral estoppel. The distinction between the two is twofold: (1) res judicata bars issues that were or could have been raised in the prior action, whereas collateral estoppel applies only to issues actually litigated in the prior action; and (2) res judicata must be pleaded as an affirmative defense (see § 61.101), whereas collateral estoppel need not be specially pleaded (218 Cal. App. 2d 1150, 1156-1157) .

[c] Applicability of Rule Whether Prior Action Sounded in Contract or Tort

In Sylvester v. Soulsburg (1967) 252 Cal. App. 2d 185, 60 Cal. Rptr. 218 , which is more fully discussed in § 61.90[3][i], the plaintiffs contended that the potential counterclaim (now cross complaint [see Code Civ. Proc. § 428.80]) which they could have urged in the first case would not have been sufficient because the complaint in the first case was based on contract and the counterclaim, if any, would have been based on tort, and, also, in somewhat similar vein, that the plaintiffs in the first case were acting in the capacity of a person claiming under contract, and the potential counterclaimants would have been acting in the capacity of a person injured by tort.

The court of appeal said that the attempted distinction is not sound, that the complaint may be in contract and the counterclaim in tort, or vice versa, and that many cases which have applied former Code Civ. Proc. § 439 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30(b)] involved both contract and tort (252 Cal. App. 2d 185, 191) .

[d] Applicability of Rule Despite Plaintiff's Voluntary Dismissal of Defendant Without Prejudice

In AL Holding Co. v. O'Brien & Hicks, Inc. (1999) 75 Cal. App. 4th 1310, 89 Cal. Rptr. 2d 918 , in a former action after plaintiff reached a settlement with one of the defendants, plaintiff voluntarily dismissed its complaint without prejudice as to a remaining defendant. That defendant had answered plaintiff's first amended complaint, but had not file a cross complaint against plaintiff. Thereafter, that defendant assigned its rights to a related cause of action that it had against the plaintiff in the former action. The assignee then brought suit on the related cause of action, i.e., a claim on an amount due on an open book account, against the former plaintiff. The former plaintiff, now defendant in the current action, filed a demurrer to the complaint and sought judicial notice of its 1995 complaint, of plaintiff's assignor's answer to the 1995 complaint, and of plaintiff's assignor's 1996 settlement conference statement. The trial court took judicial notice of them and sustained the demurrer without leave to amend. The plaintiff assignee appealed (75 Cal. App. 4th 1310, 1312) .

The court of appeal affirmed. Plaintiff argued that its complaint could not be barred by its assignor's failure to file a cross complaint in the former action because once plaintiff (now defendant) voluntarily dismissed its complaint against plaintiff's assignor there was no longer any lawsuit in which plaintiff's assignor was required to bring its transactionally related claim. Plaintiff did not contest that its claim was not transactionally related, but rather contended that once the former plaintiff voluntarily dismissed there was no "related cause of action" nor was plaintiff's assignor any longer a "party against whom a complaint has been filed or served" within the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30 (75 Cal. App. 4th 1310, 1313) . In addressing this argument the court stated that the critical time period to which Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30 looks is that point in time when the complaint has been filed and served against a defendant and the defendant fails to allege in a cross complaint any related cause of action which at the time of serving his or her answer to the complaint he or she has against the plaintiff. The court noted that the judicially noticed documents demonstrated that plaintiff assignor's answer to the first amended complaint was dated March 30, 1995. Neither then nor at any point up to the settlement conference statement dated June 27, 1996, had plaintiff's assignor either filed or sought leave to file a cross complaint on its open book account claim. Accordingly that claim was barred when plaintiff attempted to assert it in 1997. Such is the clear import of the statutory language (75 Cal. App. 4th 1310, 1313-1314) .

[e] Applicability of Rule to Assignee of Defendant Despite Plaintiff's Voluntary Dismissal of Defendant Without Prejudice

AL Holding Co. v. O'Brien & Hicks, Inc. (1999) 75 Cal. App. 4th 1310, 89 Cal. Rptr. 2d 918 , is discussed in § 61.90[3][d].

[f] Applicability of Rule When Prior Action Was in Federal Court

Currie Medical Specialties, Inc. v. Bowen (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 774, 186 Cal. Rptr. 543 , was an action between two suppliers of labels to hospitals for breach of contract, fraud, negligent misrepresentation, intentional interference with prospective business advantage, and unfair competition. In a prior action, defendant had sued plaintiff in federal court for violating the Lanham Act (15 U.S.C. §§ 1051-1127) and for unfair competition. In the federal action, plaintiff answered but filed no counterclaim, and the suit was dismissed with prejudice by stipulation of the parties. In the present action, defendant moved for summary judgment on the ground that plaintiff's action was barred under Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30(b) for failure to assert it as a mandatory counterclaim in the federal action. The trial court granted the motion, having found that plaintiff's claim in the current action was a compulsory counterclaim in the earlier case and barred by Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court stated that the sole issue was whether plaintiff's claim based on termination of the contract was a compulsory counterclaim in the federal action under Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30(a). The court said the dispute focused on whether the federal court could have heard the claim under its ancillary jurisdiction, and that if plaintiff's claim arose out of the same transaction or occurrence which was the basis of the defendant's complaint in the federal action, it was covered by ancillary jurisdiction and was a compulsory counterclaim (136 Cal. App. 3d 774, 776) . The court said that the transaction or occurrence test was dispositive of the entire action because it settled the ancillary jurisdiction question and defined "related cause of action" [see Code Civ. Proc. § 426.10(c)] as the term is used in Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30 (136 Cal. App. 3d 774, 776) . The court concluded that the overlap of issues satisfied the logical relation approach to the transaction or occurrence test, that this common transaction, in turn, created ancillary jurisdiction, that the exception to Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30 found in Code Civ. Proc. § 426.40 (relating to actions in which a cross complaint is prohibited by state or federal law) did not apply to plaintiff's claim, and that the federal action was the proper time and place for the adjudication of plaintiff's claim (136 Cal. App. 3d 774, 777) .

[g] Compulsory Cross Complaint to Cross Complaint Required

In Ranchers Bank v. Pressman (1971) 19 Cal. App. 3d 612, 97 Cal. Rptr. 78 , defendant agreed to purchase an automobile agency from Knoll and made arrangements to finance the purchase through plaintiff. Defendant defaulted on the loan and attempted to rescind the purchase agreement. Plaintiff brought suit against defendant to recover the balances due on conditional sale contracts assigned by defendant and more than 90 days delinquent, and the amount of the difference between the money loaned defendant on trust receipts and the proceeds of the bank's liquidation of the pledged automobiles. In this suit, defendant cross complained against plaintiff for rescission and damages, naming Knoll as cross defendant. Subsequently, Knoll brought an independent suit against defendant on the promissory note that was the consideration for the sale of the automobile agency. Defendant demurred to Knoll's complaint on the ground the obligation sued on should have been pleaded as a counterclaim (now cross complaint [see Code Civ. Proc. § 428.80]) to defendant's cross complaint against him, and that an independent suit on the obligation was barred by former Code Civ. Proc. § 439 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30(a)]. The demurrer was overruled and the defendant pleaded the bar of the statute as an affirmative defense. By stipulation of the parties, the two suits were consolidated for the purposes of trial. The trial court found for plaintiff on each of its claims and on the cross complaint, and found in favor of Knoll on the promissory note. Defendant appealed from the two judgments.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court held that a compulsory counterclaim (now cross complaint [see Code Civ. Proc. § 428.80]) is required to a cross complaint when the tests for a compulsory counterclaim are met (19 Cal. App. 3d 612, 620) . The court found that a compulsory counterclaim was required in this case, but held the error of noncompliance was cured by consolidation of the cases (see § 61.100) (19 Cal. App. 3d 612, 621-622) .

[h] Bar Is Aspect of Doctrine of Res Judicata

In Hulsey v. Koehler (1990) 218 Cal. App. 3d 1150, 267 Cal. Rptr. 523 (discussed more fully in § 61.101[3][a]), the court of appeal said that since Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30 bars claims which the party failed to assert by cross complaint in a prior action arising from the same occurrence, it necessarily bars issues which were never litigated and never actually decided, and, hence, the scope and effect of Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30 is analogous to that of res judicata rather than collateral estoppel (218 Cal. App. 3d 1150, 1157) . Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30 serves the same purpose as the doctrine of res judicata by requiring the settlement in a single action of all conflicting claims between the parties arising from the same transaction (218 Cal. App. 3d 1150, 1157) . The court could discern no difference between the operation of Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30 and the doctrine of res judicata and said that, in fact, the California Supreme Court (citing Clark v. Lesher (1956) 46 Cal. 2d 874, 881-882, 299 P.2d 865) has recognized that the statutory predecessor to Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30 (former Code Civ. Proc. § 439) constitutes a special aspect of res judicata (218 Cal. App. 3d 1150, 1157) .

[i] Raising Defense of Res Judicata by Motion for Summary Judgment

In Saunders v. New Capital for Small Businesses, Inc. (1964) 231 Cal. App. 2d 324 , discussed in § 61.90[3][b], the court of appeal said the defense of res judicata may be properly raised on a motion for summary judgment (231 Cal. App. 2d 324, 331).

[a] Use of Form

This memoranda may be submitted in support of a demurrer to the complaint on the ground that the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action because it appears from matters of which the court may take judicial notice that the action is barred because it was not pleaded as a compulsory cross complaint in a prior related action by the defendant against the plaintiff [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 426.10(c), 426.30(b)].

This form may be modified to include, when appropriate, additional points and authorities set in §§ 61.90 and 61.94.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Raising Defense by Demurrer That Action Is Barred for Failure to Plead It in Prior Related Action

The facts and procedural background of Ranchers Bank v. Pressman (1971) 19 Cal. App. 3d 612, 97 Cal. Rptr. 78 , are discussed in § 61.90[3][g]. As pointed out there, defendant's demurrer to Knoll's complaint on the ground the obligation sued on should have been pleaded as a counterclaim (now cross complaint [see Code Civ. Proc. § 428.80]) to defendant's cross complaint against him, and that an independent suit on the obligation was barred by former Code Civ. Proc. § 439 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30(a)], was overruled, and the defendant then pleaded the bar of the statute as an affirmative defense (19 Cal. App. 3d 612, 616). The court of appeal found that, under former Code Civ. Proc. § 439, a compulsory counterclaim was required, but it held the error of noncompliance was cured by the consolidation of the cases (see § 61.100) (19 Cal. App. 3d 612, 621-622). The court nevertheless noted that the overruling of the demurrer was error and that had the defendant sought extraordinary relief prior to trial, he might have prevailed, that by answering he may be regarded as having waived the objection, and that, in any event, he appeared to have waived the error by stipulating to the consolidation of the actions for trial (19 Cal. App. 3d 612, 622 n.4).

This memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30(a) (barring subsequent suits on related causes of action that should have been pleaded in a compulsory cross complaint in a prior action between the parties) applies in eminent domain proceedings.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum, but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum supporting or a motion or demurrer that raises the objection that an action is barred because of the plaintiff's failure to plead it as a compulsory cross complaint in a prior action between the same parties [Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30(a); see, e.g., §§ 61.90 -61.92]. It may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, if the present action is for inverse condemnation, counsel should show that there was a prior eminent domain proceeding to which plaintiff and defendant were parties, that defendant had asserted a cause of action against plaintiff in that proceeding, that plaintiff had a cause of action against defendant for inverse condemnation at the time plaintiff filed his or her answer to that complaint, that plaintiff failed to assert that cause in the previous proceeding, and that the bar of Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30(a) is applicable to eminent domain proceedings.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Compulsory Cross Complaint Rules Applicable in Eminent Domain Proceeding

Klopping v. City of Whittier (1972) 8 Cal. 3d 39, 104 Cal. Rptr. 1, 500 P.2d 1345 , involved actions in eminent domain and inverse condemnation. In November 1965, defendant instituted condemnation proceedings against plaintiff and others. In November 1966, the condemnation suits were dismissed. On July 6, 1967, plaintiff sued the city for damages caused by defendant prior to condemnation of property owned by plaintiff. On August 21, 1969, defendant brought a second condemnation suit against plaintiff in which plaintiff's land was taken. Thereafter, the trial court sustained demurrers to plaintiff's complaint and dismissed the action. Plaintiff appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed. The Court held that since plaintiff's land was taken in a second condemnation proceeding that proceeded to judgment, plaintiff should have claimed the damages now sought as part of the eminent domain award. Although plaintiff brought the inverse condemnation suit before the city instituted its second condemnation proceeding, the eminent domain proceeding proceeded to final judgment first. The Court held that since the loss could have been claimed in the eminent domain suit, plaintiff was barred from seeking those damages in inverse condemnation once the condemnation proceeding became final (8 Cal. 3d 39, 58) .

Proc. § 426.30(a)]--Plaintiff Who Voluntarily Dismisses Complaint When Cross Complaint Has Been Filed Must Refile Case as Cross Complaint in Original Action

[The following may be included in a general memorandum supporting a motion or demurrer that objects to an action on the ground that it is barred under Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30(a) (see, e.g., §§ 61.90 -61.92).]

A PLAINTIFF WHO VOLUNTARILY DISMISSES A COMPLAINT WITHOUT PREJUDICE CANNOT, AS A MATTER OF RIGHT, COMMENCE A NEW ACTION ALLEGING RELATED CAUSES OF ACTION THAT ARE ALSO RELATED TO CLAIMS STILL PENDING IN A CROSS COMPLAINT IN THE ORIGINAL ACTION.

Compulsory Cross Complaint Requirements Apply to Complaint Filed After Voluntary Dismissal Without Prejudice. Code of Civil Procedure Section 426.30 precludes a plaintiff who voluntarily dismissed his or her complaint without prejudice from bringing a new action based on claims arising from the same transaction that served as the basis for the defendant's cross complaint in the first action. To permit the dismissal and refiling of an action to function as an automatic exception to the compulsory cross complaint requirement would encourage just the kind of piecemeal litigation Code of Civil Procedure Section 426.30 is intended to prohibit. The claims plaintiff attempted to assert as a new action should have been filed as a compulsory cross complaint in the first action (Carroll v. Import Motors, Inc. (1995) 33 Cal. App. 4th 1429, 1435-1436, 39 Cal. Rptr. 2d 791).

This memoranda may be submitted in support of the contention that Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30(a) (barring subsequent suits on related causes of action that should have been pleaded in a compulsory cross complaint in a prior action between the parties) applies to the refiling of a voluntarily dismissed complaint when a cross complaint to the dismissed complaint remains pending.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum, but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum supporting a motion or demurrer that raises the objection that an action is barred because of the plaintiff's failure to plead it as a compulsory cross complaint in a prior action between the parties [Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30(a); see, e.g., §§ 61.90 -61.92]. The case on which the form is based addressed the issue on a motion to strike [see Carroll v. Import Motors, Inc. (1995) 33 Cal. App. 4th 1429, 1432, 39 Cal. Rptr. 2d 791] . For general forms of memoranda supporting motions to strike, see Ch. 160, Motions to Strike in this set. The form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Compulsory Cross Complaint Requirements Apply to Complaint Filed After Voluntary Dismissal Without Prejudice

Carroll v. Import Motors, Inc. (1995) 33 Cal. App. 4th 1429, 39 Cal. Rptr. 2d 791 , involved a dispute over the amount plaintiff owed when he traded in a leased automobile. Plaintiff filed an action for rescission, fraud, cancellation of written instrument, declaratory and injunctive relief, and punitive damages. One defendant answered and filed a cross complaint for breach of contract, another defendant filed a cross complaint requesting a deficiency judgment against the plaintiff. The plaintiff voluntarily dismissed the complaint without prejudice the day before the hearing on a summary judgment motion. Shortly thereafter, the plaintiff filed a new complaint against the same parties, similar to the first complaint, but adding a cause of action for negligent misrepresentation. Plaintiff subsequently moved to consolidate the second action with the remainder of the first action, that is, the still-pending cross complaints. The defendants in the second action moved to strike the complaint on the ground that the claims in it were related to those asserted in the pending action and were required to be filed as a compulsory cross complaint in that action. The trial court granted the motion to strike without leave to amend and dismissed the action. An order conditionally granting the motion to consolidate was vacated nunc pro tunc and the motion denied based on the dismissal. Plaintiff appealed from the judgment dismissing the action.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court found no prior cases that addressed whether a plaintiff who voluntarily dismisses a complaint without prejudice may bring a new action on the same matter when there is a related cross complaint pending in the original action (33 Cal. App. 4th 1429, 1435) . The court looked to the strict policy against multiplicity of actions in concluding that Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30 precludes a plaintiff who voluntarily dismisses his or her complaint without prejudice from bringing a new action based on claims arising from the same transaction that served as the basis for the defendant's cross complaint in the first action (33 Cal. App. 4th 1429, 1435-1436) .

The court rejected the plaintiff's contention that the absolute right to bring a new action after voluntary dismissal without prejudice rendered Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30 inapplicable. The court indicated that the plaintiff's proper recourse was to request leave of court to file a late compulsory cross complaint in the original action (33 Cal. App. 4th 1429, 1434-1436) . The plaintiff also argued that had his motion to consolidate been granted, the result would have been the same as if he had filed a cross complaint in the original action and the purposes of Section 426.30 would have been fulfilled, and that therefore equity mandated the granting of the motion to consolidate. The court rejected this contention, again pointing to plaintiff's recourse in moving to file a compulsory cross complaint in the original action and observing that equity's abhorrence of a forfeiture does not excuse compliance with the law (33 Cal. App. 4th 1429, 1436-1437) . The court did note however, that they were not inquiring into whether there might be situations in which equitable considerations not present in this case might come into play to require exceptions to the mandatory cross complaint requirement (33 Cal. App. 4th 1429, 1437 n.13).

The foregoing memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a defendant's motion for summary judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c], or general demurrer to the complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)], on the ground that plaintiff's action is barred because the plaintiff failed to plead it in a compulsory cross complaint in a prior related action by the defendant against the plaintiff [Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30(a)], or in opposition to a motion for separate trial of the affirmative defense that the action is barred on the foregoing ground [see Code Civ. Proc. § 597]. The ground of opposition is that the defendant was not a party to the prior action, or the cause of action asserted against the defendant does not relate to the cause of action asserted in the prior action, or both. "Related cause of action" means a cause of action which arises out of the same transaction, occurrence, or series of transactions or occurrences as the cause of action which the plaintiff alleges in his or her complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 426.10(c)].

With appropriate modifications, the foregoing form may also be adapted for use if the present plaintiff was a cross defendant and the present defendant a cross complainant in the prior action [see Code Civ. Proc. § 426.10(a) (defining "complaint" as meaning a complaint or cross complaint) and (b) (defining "plaintiff" as meaning a person who files a complaint or cross complaint); see also § 61.90, Optional Paragraph J].

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should show either that defendant in this action was not a party to the previous action or that the cause of action asserted in this action does not relate, that is, does not arise out of the same transaction, occurrence, or series of transactions or occurrences, as the cause of action asserted in the previous action [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 426.10(c), 426.30(a); see also cases discussed in § 61.90[3][b]].

In an appropriate case, the foregoing memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a motion or demurrer supported by the points and authorities set out in §§ 61.90 -61.93.

For related forms, see §§ 61.90[2][d], [e], 61.91[2][b], [c], and 61.92[2][b], [c].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defendant Was Not a Party to the Former Action

Insurance Co. of North America v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co (1982) 128 Cal. App. 3d 297, 180 Cal. Rptr. 244 , was an action by plaintiff, an insurance company, against defendant, another insurance company, for declaratory relief. In a previous action, Her Majesty Industries (HMI), a party insured by defendant, sued plaintiff for declaratory relief and damages. The trial court in the present action found that the judgment entered in the earlier action determined the issues involved in this case, and sustained a demurrer to the complaint. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. Defendant alleged, inter alia, that because the former action brought by HMI was for both declaratory relief and for damages and therefore related to the cause of action in this action, plaintiff had a duty to file a compulsory cross complaint. The court held that because defendant was not a party in the previous action there was no requirement that a compulsory cross complaint be filed in the former action as to any claim plaintiff might have against defendant, although plaintiff could have filed a permissive cross complaint against defendant in the former action. The court stated that by taking the latter course, plaintiff could have asserted any claims it might have against defendant based on the respective policies issued by both companies but held that plaintiff's failure to file a permissive cross complaint has no effect on its present ability to pursue its rights against defendant (128 Cal. App. 3d 297, 303) .

[b] Cause of Action Not Related

In Jones v. Mortimer (1946) 28 Cal. 2d 627, 170 P.2d 893 , plaintiff was a creditor and shareholder of an association that was in the process of liquidation. The Building and Loan Commissioner that was handling the liquidation assessed plaintiff $400 for his liability as a shareholder. Plaintiff failed to pay the sum assessed against him. Plaintiff instituted a suit against the association and the commissioner to recover for the services rendered to the association and obtained a judgment in his favor. The assessment of the levy against plaintiff was not pleaded as a counterclaim (now cross complaint [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 426.30(a), 428.80]) by the commissioner in that action. Since the commissioner was paying creditors' claims to the extent of 50 percent of the amount proved against the association, he reduced the judgment by one-half and then set off the assessment of $400 against that amount. On being notified of the setoff, plaintiff refused to accept it. Plaintiff filed for a writ of execution or other relief to obtain enforcement of his judgment. Plaintiff contended that the commissioner had lost the right to setoff by not filing a compulsory cross complaint in plaintiff's action. The superior court denied plaintiff's petition and plaintiff appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed the lower court's decision. The Court held that the transaction involved in plaintiff's action was for services rendered to the association, whereas the assessment against plaintiff was based on his liability as a stockholder of the corporation. In interpreting the word "transaction" in former Code Civ. Proc. § 439 [now see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 426.10(c), 426.30(a)] the Court gave the word its broadest meaning and held that the two claims involved here could not be brought within its meaning. They arose out of two separate and wholly independent transactions (28 Cal. 2d 627, 630) .

Carey v. Cusack (1966) 245 Cal. App. 2d 57, 54 Cal. Rptr. 244 , was an action in quantum meruit to recover for brokers' services in subdividing defendants' property. Defendants moved to dismiss the complaint as the action was barred by the compulsory counterclaim statute, former Code Civ. Proc. § 439 (now compulsory cross complaint statute [Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30(a)]). The trial court denied the motion and gave judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appealed and the court of appeal affirmed. The court applied the test established in Saunders v. New Capital for Small Businesses, Inc. (1964) 231 Cal. App. 2d 324, 336, 41 Cal. Rptr. 703 (discussed in § 61.90[3][b]), for whether or not claims arise out of the same transaction, which is whether or not there is a continuous, subsisting relationship between the plaintiff and defendant. Applying that test to the case at hand, the court found that the brokers' action against defendant could not be held to come out of the same relationship as the previous action, since that action was based on a different agreement than the one involved here and that they were two separate and distinct transactions, devoid of any logical interrelation. Thus, the instant action did not meet the "same transaction" requirement of former Code Civ. Proc. § 439 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30(a)] (245 Cal. App. 2d 57, 65-66) .

The foregoing memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a defendant's motion for summary judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c], or a general demurrer to the complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)], on the ground that plaintiff's action is barred because the plaintiff failed to plead it in a compulsory cross complaint in a prior related action by the defendant against the plaintiff [Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30(a)], or in opposition to a motion for separate trial of the affirmative defense that the action is barred on the foregoing ground [see Code Civ. Proc. § 597]. The ground of opposition is that (1) the court in which the prior action was filed did not have jurisdiction to render a personal judgment against the person who failed to file the related cause of action [Code Civ. Proc. § 426.10(b)(1)], or (2) the cause of action not pleaded required for its adjudication the presence of additional parties over whom the court could not acquire jurisdiction [Code Civ. Proc. § 426.40(a)], or (3) both the court in which the action was pending and any other court to which the action was transferable pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 396 (transfer from court lacking to court having subject matter jurisdiction) were prohibited by the federal or state constitution or by a statute from entertaining the cause of action not pleaded [Code Civ. Proc. § 426.40(b)], or (4) at the time the prior action was commenced, the cause of action not pleaded was the subject of another pending action [Code Civ. Proc. § 426.40(c)].

With appropriate modifications, the foregoing form may also be adapted for use if the present plaintiff was a cross defendant and the present defendant a cross complainant in the prior action [see Code Civ. Proc. § 426.10(a) (defining "complaint" as meaning a complaint or cross complaint) and (b) (defining "plaintiff" as meaning a person who files a complaint or cross complaint); see also § 61.90, Optional Paragraph J].

Code Civ. Proc. § 426.40(b) is designed to meet problems that may arise when the federal courts have jurisdiction to enforce a cause of action created by federal statute. In cases where the state and federal courts have concurrent jurisdiction, if the cause of action created by the federal statute arises out of the same transaction or occurrence, Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30 requires joinder in the state court proceeding, and Code Civ. Proc. § 426.40(b) is not applicable. When the federal court has exclusive jurisdiction over the federal cause of action, Code Civ. Proc. § 426.40, recognizing that the federal cause of action is not permitted to be brought in the state court, provides an exception to the compulsory joinder or compulsory cross complaint requirements [see Assembly Legislative Committee Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 426.40].

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should show that the court was unable to hear the case for one of the reasons set forth in Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30(b) or 426.40.

In an appropriate case, the foregoing memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a motion or demurrer supported by the points and authorities set out in §§ 61.90 -61.93.

The foregoing memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a defendant's motion for summary judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c], or a general demurrer to the complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)], on the ground that plaintiff's action is barred because the plaintiff failed to plead it in a compulsory cross complaint in a prior related action by the defendant against the plaintiff [*Code Civ. The ground of opposition is that Code Civ. Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should show that an answer was not filed in the previous action by the party bringing the present action.

In an appropriate case, the foregoing memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a motion or demurrer supported by the points and authorities set out in §§ 61.90 -61.93.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Cross Complaint Not Required When Answer Not Filed

Manning v. Wymer (1969) 273 Cal. App. 2d 519, 78 Cal. Rptr. 600 , was an action for damages arising out of automobile accident. In a previous action defendant had sued plaintiff and a settlement was effected whereby $800 was paid to defendant in exchange for a dismissal of the action. No answer to the complaint was filed in that action. The parties had agreed that the settlement would not be prejudicial to plaintiff's action. However, the trial court did not know of this agreement and dismissed the action with prejudice. In the present action, defendant moved for a summary judgment on the ground that the dismissal with prejudice of the previous action was a bar to proceeding further in this action. The trial court granted summary judgment to defendant and refused to set aside its order after additional facts were made a matter of record. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court held that the failure of plaintiff to file a counterclaim, as required by former Code Civ. Proc. § 439 (now a cross complaint [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 426.30(a), 428.80]), to defendant's complaint in the former action was not a bar to proceeding with the present action. The court held that since plaintiff was not required to file an answer in that action he was not required to file a counterclaim (273 Cal. App. 2d 519, 525) . In order to invoke an estoppel for failure to file a counterclaim, the issues must be joined (273 Cal. App. 2d 519, 525-526) .

The foregoing memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a defendant's motion for summary judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c], or a general demurrer to the complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)], on the ground that plaintiff's action is barred because the plaintiff failed to plead it in a compulsory cross complaint in a prior related action by the defendant against the plaintiff [Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30(a)], or in opposition to a motion for separate trial of the affirmative defense that the action is barred on the foregoing ground [see Code Civ. Proc. § 597]. The ground of opposition is that Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30(a) does not apply to special proceedings [see Code Civ. Proc. § 426.60(a)]. For an exception in the case of proceedings in eminent domain, see Code Civ. Proc. § 426.70 and § 61.93. An alternative ground is that Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30(a) does not apply to an action solely for declaratory relief [Code Civ. Proc. § 426.60(c)].

With appropriate modifications, the foregoing form may also be adapted for use if the present plaintiff was a cross defendant and the present defendant a cross complainant in the prior action [see Code Civ. Proc. § 426.10(a) (defining "complaint" as meaning a complaint or cross complaint) and (b) (defining "plaintiff" as meaning a person who files a complaint or cross complaint); see also § 61.90, Optional Paragraph J].

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should show that the previous action was either a special proceeding or the sole relief sought in the previous action was declaratory relief.

In an appropriate case, the foregoing memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a motion or demurrer supported by the points and authorities set out in §§ 61.90 -61.93.

For related forms, see §§ 61.90[2][d], [e], 61.91[2][b], [c], and 61.92[2][b], [c].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Cross Complaint Not Required in Special Proceedings

Tide Water Assoc. Oil Co. v. Superior Court (1955) 43 Cal. 2d 815, 279 P.2d 35 , was a proceeding in prohibition to prevent the trial court from trying issues raised by a cross complaint in a suit brought by the state to enjoin unreasonable waste of gas.

The Supreme Court denied the writ. The Court stated that former Code Civ. Proc. § 442 [now see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 422.10 (defining pleadings allowed in "civil actions" as including cross complaints), 428.10 (permissive cross complaint statute); see also Code Civ. Proc. § 426.60(a) (set forth in Paragraph A)] was a general provision that, in the absence of a specific statute to the contrary, is sufficiently broad to permit the use of a cross complaint in any "action," but does not on its face authorize the use of a cross complaint in a "special proceeding" (43 Cal. 2d 815, 821) .

[b] Civil Actions and Special Proceedings Distinguished

In Tide Water Assoc. Oil. Co. v. Superior Court (1955) 43 Cal. 2d 815, 279 P.2d 35 (discussed in § 61.98[3][a]), the Supreme Court quoted Code Civ. Proc. §§ 22 and 23 (43 Cal. 2d 815, 821) , and said that, as a general rule, a special proceeding is confined to the type of case which was not, under the common law or equity practice, either an action at law or a suit in equity (43 Cal. 2d 815, 822) . The Court found the present case to be one to enjoin the unreasonable waste of gas and stated that an injunction is an equitable remedy (43 Cal. 2d 815, 822) . Accordingly, the Court held this to be an action and not a special proceeding (43 Cal. 2d 815, 823) .

[c] Cross Complaint Not Required When Action Solely for Declaratory Relief

In Russo v. Scrambler Motorcycles (1976) 56 Cal. App. 3d 112, 127 Cal. Rptr. 913 , plaintiff filed a complaint for money against defendants after one defendant had filed an action for declaratory relief, dissolution of partnership, accounting, appointment of receiver, quiet title to partnership real property, and damages. In the previous action, the cause of action for declaratory relief expressly named plaintiff herein. Defendants in the present action answered the complaint with a general denial and added as an affirmative defense that each cause of action was barred by the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 426.10-426.70 because plaintiff had failed to file a cross complaint in the other action. Defendants moved for summary judgment relying on Code Civ. Proc. §§ 426.10-426.70. The trial court granted the motion and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court found that the trial court had made no express reference to Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30 or to any of its concomitant sections in its decision, but in light of defendants' express reliance on these statutes in their motion and the fact that no other grounds were raised, stated that it was a reasonable assumption that the trial court based its determination thereon. The court stated that Code Civ. Proc. § 426.60(c) expressly provides that Code Civ. Proc. §§ 426.10-426.70 do not apply when the only relief sought is a declaration of the rights and duties of the respective parties in an action for declaratory relief. The court concluded that the trial court erred in granting summary judgment because the only cause of action naming plaintiff herein was based on averments of declaratory relief (56 Cal. App. 3d 112, 116-117) . Although the complaint in the previous suit contained causes of action other than that for declaratory relief, these were clearly not directed against plaintiff herein, and thus "the only remedy" sought by defendants against plaintiff herein was a declaration of the rights and duties of the parties (56 Cal. App. 3d 112, 117) .

The foregoing memorandum may be submitted by plaintiff in opposition to a defendant's motion for summary judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c], or a general demurrer to the complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)], on the ground that plaintiff's action is barred because the plaintiff failed to plead it in a compulsory cross complaint in a prior related action by the defendant against the plaintiff [Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30(a)], or in opposition to a motion for separate trial of the affirmative defense that the action is barred on the foregoing ground [see Code Civ. Proc. § 597]. The ground of opposition is that the bar of Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30(a) does not apply because the cause of action sued on did not exist at the time plaintiff's answer in the prior action was served, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30(a).

With appropriate modifications, the foregoing form may also be adapted for use if the present plaintiff was a cross defendant and the present defendant a cross complainant in the prior action [see Code Civ. Proc. § 426.10(a) (defining "complaint" as meaning a complaint or cross complaint) and (b) (defining "plaintiff" as meaning a person who files a complaint or cross complaint); see also § 61.90, Optional Paragraph J].

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should show that the cause of action asserted in the complaint arose after plaintiff's answer to the complaint in the prior action had been served.

In an appropriate case, the foregoing memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a motion or demurrer supported by the points and authorities set out in §§ 61.90 -61.93.

For related forms, see §§ 61.90[2][d], [e], 61.91[2][b], [c], and 61.92[2][b], [c].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Cause of Action Arose After Answer Was Served

E.L. White, Inc. v. City of Huntington Beach (1978) 21 Cal. 3d 497, 146 Cal. Rptr. 614, 579 P.2d 505 , was an action for indemnity and equitable contribution. Defendant contended that plaintiff's action was barred in its entirety by reason of Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30 dealing with compulsory cross complaints. The trial court entered a judgment of dismissal following an order sustaining, without leave to amend, a demurrer to plaintiff's first amended complaint. Plaintiff appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed the judgment of dismissal. Plaintiff contended that the bar of Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30 was not applicable, both by its own terms and by specific statutory exemption. The Court stated that it was well settled that a cause of action for implied indemnity does not accrue or come into existence until the indemnitee has suffered actual loss through payment. The Court found that the causes of action against defendant did not arise until more than two years after the filing of their answer to defendant's complaint, when they made payment following affirmance of a casualty judgment on appeal. The Court held that the causes of action they now seek to assert, even if related to any of those stated in defendant's prior action, were not causes that at the time of serving their answer to the complaint they had against plaintiff (21 Cal. 3d 497, 505-506) .

The facts and procedural background of Russo v. Scrambler Motorcycles (1976) 56 Cal. App. 3d 112, 127 Cal. Rptr. 913 , are discussed in § 61.98[3][c]. The court of appeal reversed the trial court's decision granting summary judgment to defendants. Quoting Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30(a), the court said that "[I]f a party against whom a complaint has been filed and served fails to allege in a cross complaint any related cause of action which (at the time of serving his answer to the complaint) he has against the plaintiff" (court's italics), he or she may not thereafter assert it against plaintiff in any other action; and the averments of all three causes of action of the within complaint reasonably can be construed as intending to seek relief in relation to events which occurred subsequent to the time plaintiff filed his answer to the complaint in the prior case (56 Cal. App. 3d 112, 117) . Regarding the first cause of action in the present cases, the court found that plaintiff was discharged after the answer was filed and the money sued for was owed at that time. Regarding the cause of action for recovery of a penalty under the Labor Code, the court found that this could be filed at any time before the expiration of the statute of limitations on an action for wages from which the penalties arise, and that since defendants did not contend that the statute had run, it could reasonably be assumed that plaintiff was entitled to initiate suit on this case after his answer was filed (56 Cal. App. 3d 112, 117) . The court found the third cause of action to in part expressly aver that defendants' acts were fraudulent and deceitful in that defendants and each of them did induce plaintiff to enter into and perform the oral contract of employment, and noted that the averments could properly be interpreted as seeking some recovery for events occurring prior to the filing of the answer. However, the court held that since neither defendants' motion for summary judgment nor the judgment itself attempted to segregate such events from those pleaded which occurred subsequent to that date, the summary judgment, which indiscriminately struck down the entire complaint, could not stand (56 Cal. App. 3d 112, 118) .

Note that Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30(a) bars related causes of action not pleaded as compulsory cross complaints only if the cause of action existed at the time the answer to the complaint in the prior action was "served." An answer is served before it is filed, and the proof of service normally accompanies the original of the answer filed [see, e.g., Code Civ. Proc. § 1013a (relating to proof of service by mail, requiring that the proof set forth the exact title of the document "served and filed" in the cause)]. Since the causes of action in each of the foregoing cases did not exist at the time the answer to the complaint in the prior action was filed, but did exist at the time of the present lawsuit, they necessarily did not exist at the time the answer in the prior action was served.

The foregoing memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a defendant's motion for summary judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c], or a general demurrer to the complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)], on the ground that plaintiff's action is barred because the plaintiff failed to plead it in a compulsory cross complaint in a prior related action by the defendant against the plaintiff [Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30(a)], or in opposition to a motion for separate trial of the affirmative defense that the action is barred on the foregoing ground [see Code Civ. Proc. § 597]. The ground of opposition is that the bar of Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30(a) does not apply because the present and the prior actions have been consolidated for trial.

With appropriate modifications, the foregoing form may also be adapted for use if the present plaintiff was a cross defendant and the present defendant a cross complainant in the first action [*see Code Civ. Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should show that the present action was consolidated with the action which required filing of a cross complaint.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Consolidation of Actions Cures Noncompliance With Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30

The facts and procedural background of Ranchers Bank v. Pressman (1971) 19 Cal. App. 3d 612, 97 Cal. Rptr. 78 , are discussed in § 61.90[3][g]. The court of appeal affirmed judgments against defendant resulting from two actions that were consolidated for purposes of trial. The court stated that a compulsory counterclaim (now cross complaint) is required to a cross complaint when the tests for a compulsory counterclaim are met. The court found that a compulsory cross complaint was required in the first action because all of the claims at issue in the two actions arose out of the same transaction (19 Cal. App. 3d 612, 620-621) . However, the court held that since the consolidation of the two actions for trial accomplished the purpose of former Code Civ. Proc. § 439 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30], that of avoiding the forfeiture of one plaintiff's claim on the note, the consolidation cured the error of noncompliance with former Code Civ. Proc. § 439 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30] (19 Cal. App. 3d 612, 621-622) .

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a defendant's motion for summary judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] on the ground that plaintiff's action is barred because the plaintiff failed to plead it in a compulsory cross complaint in a prior related action by the defendant against the plaintiff [Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30(a)]. The ground for opposition is that defendant waived the defense of the bar of Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30(b) by failing to plead it as an affirmative defense.

With appropriate modifications, the foregoing form may also be adapted for use if the present plaintiff was a cross defendant and the present defendant a cross complainant in the prior action [see Code Civ. Proc. § 426.10(a) (defining "complaint" as meaning a complaint or cross complaint) and (b) (defining "plaintiff" as meaning a person who files a complaint or cross complaint); see also § 61.90, Optional Paragraph J].

This memoranda may also be combined with a form of memorandum relating to another specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue that the defense was waived by the defendant's failure to plead it as an affirmative defense. For example, they may be included in a memorandum in opposition to a motion to amend the answer under Code Civ. Proc. § 473(a), to allege the defense. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

In an appropriate case, this memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a motion supported by the points and authorities set out in §§ 61.90 and 61.93.

For related forms, see § 61.90[d][e].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defense That Action Is Barred by Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30 Is Waived If It Is Not Specially Pleaded

Hulsey v. Koehler (1990) 218 Cal. App. 3d 1150, 267 Cal. Rptr. 523 , was an action for declaratory relief and reformation of a promissory note executed in connection with the plaintiffs' sale of a mobilehome park to the defendant. Although defendant had pleaded, as an affirmative defense, that the complaint did not state facts sufficiently to constitute a cause of action, she did not specifically plead that the action was barred under the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30(a). At trial, defendant moved to amend her answer to assert Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30(a) as an affirmative defense, alleging that the cause of action for reformation was barred because plaintiffs had failed to seek reformation by cross complaint in an earlier lawsuit filed by defendant against the plaintiffs for claims arising from the sale of the mobilehome park. The trial court denied the motion as untimely, and defendant appealed from the subsequent judgment for plaintiffs. She contended that (1) the trial court had abused its discretion in denying her motion to amend, and (2) defendant was entitled to assert Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30(a) as a defense even without amending her answer, because, like the doctrine of collateral estoppel, it did not have to be specially pleaded as an affirmative defense (218 Cal. App. 3d 1150, 1153, 1156) .

The court of appeal disagreed with both contentions and affirmed the judgment (218 Cal. App. 3d 1150, 1153, 1160) . Although the court agreed that a party is not required specially to allege collateral estoppel as a defense, the court held that the compulsory cross complaint rule of Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30 is not an extension of the collateral estoppel doctrine, that the application of this doctrine to foreclose the subsequent litigation of an issue requires that the issue must have, in fact, been litigated and decided in the prior action (218 Cal. App. 3d 1150, 1156) . The court held that, because Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30 bars claims which the party failed to assert by cross complaint in a prior action arising out of the same occurrence, it necessarily bars issues that were never litigated and never actually decided (218 Cal. App. 3d 1150, 1156) , and that the scope and effect of Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30(a) is analogous to that of res judicata rather than collateral estoppel (218 Cal. App. 3d 1150, 1157) . The court held that the defense under Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30(a), being analogous to the doctrine of res judicata, must be specially pleaded, and that failure to plead it constitutes a waiver of the defense (218 Cal. App. 3d 1150, 1157) . The court further held that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying as untimely defendant's motion at trial to amend (218 Cal. App. 3d 1150, 1153, 1158-1159) .

Note that the court in Hulsey characterized as a misapplication of terminology (218 Cal. App. 3d 1150, 1158) the statements in Sylvester v. Soulsburg (1967) 252 Cal. App. 2d 185, 193, 60 Cal. Rptr. 218 , and Saunders v. New Capital for Small Businesses, Inc. (1964) 231 Cal. App. 2d 324, 332-333 , that the defense authorized by former Code Civ. Proc. § 439 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30(a)] is a form or extension of collateral estoppel [see also discussion of these cases in § 61.90[3][b]].

[b] Defense That Action Is Barred Is Not Included in Defense That Complaint Fails to State Cause of Action

The facts and procedural background of Hulsey v. Koehler (1990) 218 Cal. App. 3d 1150, 267 Cal. Rptr. 523 , are discussed in § 61.101[3][a]. In affirming the judgment for the plaintiffs, the court of appeal said that since a defense based on Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30 must be specially pleaded, it rejected defendant's contention that her affirmative defense of failure to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action effectively incorporated the Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30 defense and was sufficient to raise it (218 Cal. App. 3d 1150, 1158) .

The foregoing memorandum may be submitted in support of a motion to dismiss an appeal from an order denying a motion for leave to file a cross complaint when the parties involved in the cross complaint were the same as those involved with the original complaint. The foregoing form is for use in a proceeding involving an appeal from a superior court order. It may be adapted for use in a proceeding in the appellate department of the superior court.

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should show, for example, that defendant filed the cross complaint against persons who were not parties to the action, that those persons did not appear at the hearing on the motion, and that the rights as between defendant and the new parties were not adjudicated.

[c] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 61.121 may be used to oppose the motion supported by the foregoing points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Appeal Only From Final Judgment

In Evans v. Dabney (1951) 37 Cal. 2d 758, 235 P.2d 604 , the trustees of an inter vivos trust brought an action for declaratory relief against defendants, trustors, and beneficiaries under the trust. Defendants answered, cross complained, and moved to add other parties as cross defendants. Plaintiffs demurred to the cross complaint. The trial court by minute order denied the motion to add parties and sustained the demurrer to the cross complaint without leave to amend. A judgment on issues raised by the complaint and the answer was not entered. Defendants noticed an appeal from the minute order insofar as it denied leave to bring in new parties as cross defendants and the ensuing judgment decreeing solely that cross complainants take nothing by this action against cross defendants.

The Supreme Court affirmed. The Court held that the orders and judgment are not appealable and the purported appeals must be dismissed. The Court stated that it was settled that an order sustaining a demurrer is not appealable. Defendants argued that the order denying their motion and the judgment that they take nothing by their cross complaint should be appealable because the controversy as to which plaintiffs seek declaratory relief and the matters which defendants wish tried in their cross action all concern administration of the same trust and should be tried together. The Court stated that this was nothing more than an argument that when an interlocutory ruling of the trial court is wrong it should be appealable (37 Cal. 2d 78, 759) . The Court found the judgment here not to be a final disposition of the matters that defendants seek to raise by their cross complaint and that the questions which defendants have attempted to present on this appeal could properly be determined only on the appeal from the final judgment (37 Cal. 2d 758, 760) .

In People ex rel. Dept. Pub. Wks. v. Clausen (1967) 248 Cal. App. 2d 770, 57 Cal. Rptr. 227 , defendant property owner cross complained against plaintiff state in an eminent domain action for trespass. Plaintiff demurred generally to the cross complaint and moved to strike it. The trial court denied the motion to strike but sustained the demurrer with leave to amend. Defendant then filed an amended cross complaint naming as cross defendants plaintiff and a new cross defendant. Plaintiff demurred generally and specially to the amended cross complaint and moved to strike it on the grounds that defendant had not obtained permission of the court to file the amended cross complaint and that the cross complaint did not have the required subject matter relationship to the complaint. The trial court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend and granted the motion to strike. Defendant appealed from both the order sustaining the demurrer and the judgment dismissing the cross complaint.

The court of appeal dismissed the appeal from the order sustaining plaintiff's demurrer to the amended cross complaint because a demurrer is not appealable, and it reversed the order striking the amended cross complaint as to plaintiff. In considering the appealability of the order and dismissal, the court stated that it is the general rule that when parties to a cross complaint are identical to the parties to the original action, an order striking a cross complaint is not appealable because it does not constitute a final judgment. The propriety of such an order is reviewable on appeal from the final judgment. If, on the other hand, the cross complaint names new parties or codefendants, the order striking a cross complaint may constitute a final and appealable judgment, provided it adjudicates rights as between the cross complainant and the new parties or the codefendant cross defendant (248 Cal. App. 2d 770, 776) . However, when the new parties or the codefendant cross defendants have not been served and have not appeared, an order striking the cross complaint on motion of the plaintiff adjudicates nothing between the cross complaint and the new parties or codefendant cross defendants, but only adjudicates rights as between the plaintiff and the cross complainant. In such a case the order striking out the cross complaint is not appealable (248 Cal. App. 2d 770, 776-777) . In the present case the court found that the new cross defendant had been served but did not formally appear in the action or at the hearing on the motion to strike the cross complaint, which would normally preclude defendant from appealing the order granting the motion to strike the cross complaint. However, the order purported to strike the amended cross complaint as to plaintiff and new cross defendants, and the new cross defendants deemed that the motion to strike was made on its behalf in view of the fact that it obtained a judgment of dismissal predicated on the order granting plaintiff's motion. Thus, the court held that there was an appearance by the new cross defendants and an adjudication of rights as between it and defendant sufficient to make the order a final adjudication of the validity of the cross complaint as to the new cross defendants. The order striking the amended cross complaint was appealable, as was the judgment of dismissal as to the new parties (248 Cal. App. 2d 770, 778) .

[b] Review on Appeal From Summary Judgment Not Appropriate Except in Specified Circumstances

Security Pacific National Bank v. Adamo (1983) 142 Cal. App. 3d 492, 191 Cal. Rptr. 134 , was an action on a promissory note made by a corporation and guaranteed by several shareholders. The guarantors moved for leave to file an amended cross complaint. The trial court denied the motion. Plaintiff moved for summary judgment on the complaint. The trial court granted summary judgment against defendants in favor of plaintiff and six defendants appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court found defendants' primary purpose in appealing to be to secure review of the order denying the motion to file the cross complaint (142 Cal. App. 492, 494) . The court held that an order denying a motion for leave to file an amended cross complaint is not appealable. However, orders denying leave to file a cross complaint will be reviewable on appeal from summary judgment if it necessarily affects that judgment, involves the merits of the action, or substantially affects the rights of appellants. Here the court found none of these requirement were met (142 Cal. App. 492, 496) . The court found that the proposed fourth amended cross complaint was irrelevant on plaintiff's motion and could not expand the issues of which the summary judgment disposed. The court held that the order denying leave to file the cross complaint did not involve the merits of the main action to which the summary judgment notion was addressed; it affected neither the summary judgment entered in that action nor the substantial rights of appellants as defendants therein. Therefore the order was not reviewable (142 Cal. App. 492, 496) .

In ECC Construction, Inc. v. Oakpark Calabasas Homeowners Ass'n (2004) 122 Cal. App. 4th 994, 19 Cal. Rptr. 3d 340 , the court considered whether defendant's notice of appeal was timely as to claims raised in its cross-complaint where the original judgment as to the cross-complaint was entered on August 5, and the appeal was filed November 18. The court held that where a complaint and cross-complaint involving the same parties have been filed, there is no final, appealable judgment until both have been resolved (122 Cal. App. 4th 994, 1002) . Under the one final judgment rule, a defendant could not appeal from a judgment as to its cross-complaint while proceedings remained pending as to the complaint; defendant could appeal only from a final judgment which resolved both the complaint and the cross-complaint. Here, the judgment was not final and appealable as to plaintiff's complaint until October 18, and notice of ruling was served on October 24, giving defendant until November 25 to file its appeal (122 Cal. App. 4th 994, 1002, 1003) .

This memorandum can be used to oppose a motion to dismiss an appeal from an order denying a motion for leave to file a cross complaint when the parties to the cross complaint are not the same as the parties to the complaint or the order finally disposes of the action as to appellants due to jurisdictional requirements of the cross complaint.

The third ground for this motion, that the superior court ordered the matter retransferred to municipal court, may or may not apply when the superior and municipal courts have been unified. In that situation, the issue would be that the superior court reclassified a case from a limited civil case to a case of unlimited jurisdiction because of a cross complaint and, based on striking the cross complaint, reclassified it back to being a limited civil case [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 403.030, 403.040]. Counsel may wish to use this form as the starting point in an argument that the rule of appealability that applies when a case is retransferred back to municipal court should apply by analogy when a case is reclassified as a limited civil case. As yet, however, there is no authority to directly support this argument.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should show, for example, that defendant filed the cross complaint against a codefendant or third party and the order denying leave to file the cross complaint is dispositive of the issues between these parties, or that defendant was allowed to file a cross complaint in a municipal court action and because the issues raised in the cross complaint were beyond the jurisdiction of the court, the case was transferred to superior court.

In an appropriate case, the memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a motion to dismiss an appeal supported by the memorandum set out in § 61.120.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Order Final and Appealable

Herrscher v. Herrscher (1953) 41 Cal. 2d 300, 259 P.2d 901 , was an action brought on behalf of an unborn child by its guardian ad litem, the mother, for determination that defendant was the father and for support costs, attorney's fees, and medical care of plaintiff's mother during pregnancy and pending birth of plaintiff. Defendant filed an answer and a cross complaint. The cross complaint prayed that the complaint be dismissed; that judgment be rendered declaring the nonexistence of the relationship of parent and child between cross complainant and purported plaintiff; for damages for injury to his credit and reputation; and for other relief. Cross defendant filed a demurrer to the cross complaint and also filed notice of motion to strike the cross complaint on the ground that it was not filed in good faith and that it was sham, irrelevant, and frivolous. The trial court ordered the demurrer off calendar and granted the motion to strike the cross complaint. Defendant appealed the trial court's decision granting plaintiff's motion to strike defendant's cross complaint.

The Supreme Court dismissed the appeal. On appeal, plaintiff contended that an order dismissing a cross complaint or striking it is not an appealable order and that the order from which this appeal is taken is not a final order and therefore is not appealable. The Court held that an order granting a motion to strike a cross complaint is equivalent to an order dismissing the cross complaint. When the parties to the cross complaint are not identical with the parties to the original action, the order amounts to a final adjudication between the cross complainants and cross defendants and is appealable (41 Cal. 2d 300, 303) . The Court stated that it has long been the rule in California that an order of dismissal is to be treated as a judgment for the purposes of taking an appeal when it finally disposes of the particular action and prevents further proceedings as effectually as would any formal judgment (41 Cal. 2d 300, 303-304) . However, in this case, since no written order was filed, there was no final order on file and the minute order was not appealable (41 Cal. 2d 300, 306) .

In Atherley v. MacDonald, Young & Nelson (1955) 135 Cal. App. 2d 383, 287 P.2d 529 , appellants and respondent were joined as codefendants in an action for personal injuries received by plaintiff in a fall. Appellants filed a cross complaint against their codefendant, the respondent, alleging that respondent had agreed to construct the stairway on which plaintiff fell and had agreed to hold appellants harmless from any liability caused by the act, omission, or negligence of respondent. The cross complaint asked for declaratory judgment establishing the rights and liabilities of the parties under the contract. The trial court granted a motion by respondent to strike the cross complaint and sustained a demurrer to it without leave to amend. Appellants appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court held that when one defendant's cross complaint is aimed at another defendant, an order striking it is treated as a final judgment from which the cross complainant may appeal (135 Cal. App. 2d 383, 385) .

In Keenan v. Dean (1955) 134 Cal. App. 2d 189, 285 P.2d 300 , an unlawful detainer action, the premises were surrendered prior to commencement. Defendant cross complained to recover damages for alleged libel. Because the cross complaint sought damages in excess of the municipal court's jurisdictional limits, the matter was transferred to the superior court. On plaintiff's motion, the superior court ordered the cross complaint stricken. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal found that the cross complaint was in fact a counterclaim and affirmed the order striking it on the ground that it did not and could not be amended to state a cause of action. However, the court held that the order was appealable on the ground that the superior court would have to return the case for trial to the municipal court under Code Civ. Proc. § 396. Thus the order would not otherwise be subject to review (134 Cal. App. 2d 189, 192) .

It should be noted that the same appellate court in Wexler v. Goldstein (1956) 146 Cal. App. 2d 410, 414, 304 P.2d 41 , disapproved of the dictum in Keenan that the provision for retransfer to the municipal court in former Code Civ. Proc. § 396 are mandatory. The court in Wexler stated that under former Code Civ. Proc. § 396 a court is given the discretion to either transfer back to the municipal courts or retain jurisdiction when what otherwise would be a lack of jurisdiction is determined at the trial or hearing (146 Cal. App. 2d 410, 414) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Order Final and Appealable

Linnick v. Sedelmeier (1968) 262 Cal. App. 2d 12, 68 Cal. Rptr. 334 , was an action in municipal court to recover an amount allegedly due on two promissory notes in which defendant cross complained to rescind an agreement for the purchase of stock beyond the jurisdictional limit of the municipal court. The action was transferred to the superior court. The parties then stipulated to dismissing the cross complaint and adding special defenses to the answer. On appeal from the ensuing judgment, the court of held that the superior court lacked jurisdiction as a result of the stipulation, and thus reversed the judgment and order the matter retransferred to the municipal court for retrial (262 Cal. App. 2d 12, 15-16) .

The party against whom a complaint has been filed may object to the complaint by demurrer on the ground that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action where such ground appears on the face of the complaint [or from any matter of which the court is required to or may take judicial notice] (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 430.10(e), 430.30(a)).

B. Resulting Damage as Necessary to Cause of Action in Negligence. A negligent act which does not result in detriment or damage does not constitute a cause of action for damages, and in the absence of a compensable injury, a plaintiff must be denied damages in a negligence action (Fields v. Napa Milling Co. (1958) 164 Cal. App. 2d 442, 447-448, 330 P.2d 459).

C. Demurrer Properly Sustained Where No Compensable Injuries Result From Negligence. A defendant's demurrer on the ground that a complaint alleging negligence fails to state a cause of action is properly sustained when no compensable injuries are alleged to have resulted from the negligent act (Anthony v. Kelsey-Hayes Co. (1972) 25 Cal. App. 3d 442, 447, 102 Cal. Rptr. 113).

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint alleging negligence when the demurrer asserts that the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in negligence in that it appears on the face of the complaint, or from any matter of which the court is required or may take judicial notice, that the plaintiff failed to suffer any detriment or damage as a result of the alleged negligence.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Resulting Damage as Necessary to Cause of Action in Negligence

In Fields v. Napa Milling Co. (1958) 164 Cal. App. 2d 442, 330 P.2d 459 , a mother and her two daughters brought a negligence action against defendants, the owner of a truck and the employee who was driving, for personal injuries sustained in a collision between the mother's automobile and the truck. At the conclusion of a trial without jury, the trial court rendered judgment for one of the daughters and denied recovery to the second daughter and the mother. Plaintiffs appealed from the part of the judgment denying the second daughter recovery, contending that the second daughter was entitled to recover nominal damages. The court of appeal affirmed that part of the judgment appealed from, holding that no cause of action arises in negligence unless the negligence results in an injury. Thus, proof of resulting damage is essential to a plaintiff's cause of action in negligence. Accordingly, a plaintiff cannot recover damages in a negligence action where there is no actual loss. The court of appeal found that plaintiffs' counsel had stated several times during the course of the trial that the second daughter was not injured in the accident. In addition, the girl's mother had testified to the same fact. Therefore, the trial court did not err in finding that the second daughter suffered no compensable injury or in denying her damages (164 Cal. App. 2d 442, 447-448) .

[b] Demurrer Properly Sustained Where No Compensable Injuries Result From Negligence

In Anthony v. Kelsey-Hayes Co. (1972) 25 Cal. App. 3d 442, 102 Cal. Rptr. 113 , plaintiffs brought an action in negligence, strict liability, and breach of implied warranty for damages allegedly suffered from defective wheels manufactured by one defendant and used as a component in trucks manufactured by the other defendant. In their complaint, plaintiffs failed to allege that any damages arising from either personal injuries or property damage to their vehicles was attributable to the wheels they claimed to be defective. However, in their amended and supplemental complaint, plaintiffs did seek compensatory damages for the general depreciation in the value of their vehicles once the safety risk became known and for indefinite possible loss flowing from the loss of commercial use of their vehicles. Defendants' general demurrers to the complaint and to the amended and supplemental complaint were sustained. The action was dismissed following the sustaining of the demurrer to plaintiff's amended and supplemental complaint without leave to amend. Plaintiffs appealed from the order of dismissal, and the court of appeal affirmed holding that the only damages recoverable in a negligence action against a defendant not in privity with a plaintiff are damages for personal injuries and property damage. Because the depreciation claimed by plaintiffs was not alleged to be due to any physical property damage, plaintiffs could not recover for it in their negligence action against the two manufacturers. The plaintiffs had thus failed to allege any compensable damages resulting from defendants' negligence, and the trial court had properly sustained defendants' demurrer on the ground that the complaint did not state a cause of action in negligence (25 Cal. App. 3d 442, 447) .

PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT FAILS TO STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION FOR EXEMPLARY DAMAGES SINCE IT ALLEGES _____ [OPPRESSION, or FRAUD, or MALICE or combination of these] IN CONCLUSIONARY TERMS AND DOES NOT ALLEGE ULTIMATE FACTS.

A. Objection by Demurrer. [See § 64.20, Paragraph A.]

B. Ultimate Facts as Required to Be Alleged. To support exemplary damages, the complaint must allege ultimate facts of the defendant's oppression, fraud, or malice (Cyrus v. Haveson (1976) 65 Cal. App. 3d 306, 316-317, 135 Cal. Rptr. 246 ; Civ. Code § 3294).

[Optional] C. Conclusory Allegations of Fraud Not Saved by Liberal Construction. Vague, conclusory allegations of fraud or falsity may not be rescued by the rule of liberal construction (G.D. Searle & Co. v. Superior Court (1975) 49 Cal. App. 3d 22, 29, 122 Cal. Rptr. 218).

[Optional] D. Pleading Fraud Without Adequate Specificity. An allegation that defendant acted fraudulently is without adequate specificity to support an award of exemplary damages (Lehto v. Underground Constr. Co. (1977) 69 Cal. App. 3d 933, 944, 138 Cal. Rptr. 419).

[Optional] E. Pleading Malice in Conclusionary Terms. An allegation that defendant acted maliciously and in wanton disregard of plaintiff's rights pleads malice in conclusionary terms (Cyrus v. Haveson (1976) 65 Cal. App. 3d 306, 317, 135 Cal. Rptr. 246).

[Optional] F. Malice Not Alleged Without Allegation of Intent or Conscious Disregard of Safety. A complaint fails to plead malice as a ground for an award of exemplary damages where it fails to allege, directly or in equivalent terms, that defendant either intended to injure plaintiff or acted despicably in willful and conscious disregard of plaintiff's safety or rights (G.D. Searle & Co. v. Superior Court (1975) 49 Cal. App. 3d 22, 32-33, 122 Cal. Rptr. 218); see also Civ. Code § 3294(c)(1)).

[Optional] G. Allegations Not Charging Malice in Nondeliberate Injury Cases. When nondeliberate injury is charged, allegations that the defendant's conduct was wrongful, willful, wanton, reckless, or unlawful do not support a claim for exemplary damages and do not support a claim for exemplary damages and do not charge malice (G.D. Searle & Co. v. Superior Court (1975) 49 Cal. App. 3d 22, 29, 122 Cal. Rptr. 218); see also Civ. Code § 3294(c)(1)).

This form of points and authorities may be used in an action for tort damages where plaintiff seeks exemplary or punitive damages but alleges the ground of fraud, malice, or oppression in conclusionary terms. Optional Paragraph D may be used when plaintiff attempts to plead fraud as a basis for exemplary damages. Optional Paragraphs E-G may be used in various situations when plaintiff attempts to plead malice as the ground for the exemplary damage claim.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, these points and authorities may be used to support a motion for judgment on the pleadings [Cohen v. Groman Mortuary, Inc. (1964) 231 Cal. App. 2d 1, 3, 8, 41 Cal. Rptr. 481 , disapproved on other grounds, Christensen v. Superior Court (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 868, 889] .

[c] Definitions of Punitive and Exemplary

The word "punitive" is used to describe damages awarded for the purpose of punishing the wrongdoer. The word "exemplary" is used to describe damages awarded for the purpose of setting an example for other potential wrongdoers. However, these words are used interchangeably by the courts since the prerequisites for recovery of punitive or exemplary damages are the same. In this chapter, the term "exemplary damages" is used in the forms for the purpose of consistency.

[d] Malice as Conscious Disregard of Rights or Safety of Others

Civ. Code § 3294(c), defines malice, oppression, and fraud. In particular, "malice" is defined as despicable conduct which is intended by the defendant to cause injury to the plaintiff, or which is carried on by the defendant with willful and conscious disregard of the safety or rights of others [Civ. Code § 3294(c)(1)]. This definition is for use in Civ. Code § 3294(a), which provides for punitive damages in any action other than one for breach of contract, where it is proven by clear and convincing evidence that the defendant has been guilty of malice, oppression, or fraud [Civ. Code § 3294(c)].

G.D. Searle & Co. v. Superior Court (1975) 49 Cal. App. 3d 22, 122 Cal. Rptr. 218 , which was cited as authority for the points in Paragraphs F and G, contains the suggestion that "conscious disregard of safety" may be an appropriate definition of malice, which might justify a punitive damages award when nondeliberate injury is alleged [G.D. Searle & Co. v. Superior Court (1975) 49 Cal. App. 3d 22, 32, 122 Cal. Rptr. 218] . Therefore, although Searle predated the enactment of the statutory definition of malice contained in Civ. Code § 3294(c), its discussion of what must be alleged to state a cause of action for punitive damages (conscious disregard of safety) has been codified in Civ. Code § 3294(c), and thus Searle remains viable authority.

However, under the 1987 amendment to Civ. Code § 3294, the plaintiff must show that the defendant's conduct was in willful, as well as conscious, disregard of the rights or safety of others [Civ. Code § 3294(c)(1)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Ultimate Facts as Required to Be Alleged

Cyrus v. Haveson (1976) 65 Cal. App. 3d 306, 135 Cal. Rptr. 246 , involved, in part, five causes of action arising from defendants' eviction of plaintiff from her apartment, and plaintiff's loss of personal property. Plaintiff sought compensatory and punitive damages. Following a default judgment, defendants appealed contending, in part, that the complaint failed to allege facts sufficient to support exemplary damages. Plaintiff's first cause of action was for breach of contract and her second cause of action alleged forcible entry and detainer and that defendants acted maliciously and were guilty of wanton disregard of the rights of plaintiff in that plaintiff had lawful possession of the premises and had not received notice to quit or consented to defendants' entering and taking possession. The third cause of action alleged conversion of personal property and that defendants acted willfully, wantonly, and maliciously. Plaintiff's fourth cause of action asserting trespass alleged that defendants' conduct in placing another tenant in her apartment was malicious and in wanton disregard of her rights. The fifth cause of action, captioned one for intentional infliction of emotional distress, alleged that defendants' acts of ejection were willful, malicious, deliberate, and without probable cause.

The court of appeal held that to support punitive damages, the complaint asserting a cause of action under which punitive damages can be obtained must allege ultimate facts of the defendants' oppression, fraud, or malice. The court noted that malice is properly pleaded by alleging the wrongful motive, intent, or purpose and a general allegation of that intent is sufficient. Since the first cause of action was for breach of contract, the court concluded that it did not support a claim for punitive damages. According to the court, the allegations in plaintiff's second cause of action pleaded malice only in conclusionary terms. There was no allegation that defendants intentionally, as opposed to negligently or mistakenly, disregarded plaintiff's right to possession or were aware that she had not received notice to quit. The court concluded that no wrongful motive or purpose was stated in the complaint. The court further held that the third and fourth causes of action alleged malice in general terms and omitted factual allegations of wrongful motive, intent, or purpose thus also failing to allege facts supporting exemplary damages. In the fifth cause of action, the court concluded that when plaintiff's allegations that defendants' acts of ejection were willful, malicious, deliberate and without probable cause were read in conjunction with those in the second, third, and fourth causes of action, there still was no general or specific allegation of wrongful motive, intent, or purpose. Consequently, the court held that the allegations of the complaint did not state a cause of action for punitive damages and it struck the punitive damages award from the judgment (65 Cal. App. 3d 306, 316-317) .

[b] Conclusory Allegations of Fraud Not Saved by Liberal Construction

G.D. Searle & Co. v. Superior Court (1975) 49 Cal. App. 3d 22, 122 Cal. Rptr. 218 , was a personal injury action in which plaintiff sought general and exemplary damages for pathological effects to plaintiff caused by oral contraceptives manufactured and sold by defendant. Defendant filed a general and special demurrer aimed in part at the sufficiency of the exemplary damage allegations. The trial court overruled the demurrer and defendant sought review by writ of mandate. In support of plaintiff's claim for exemplary damages, she alleged that at the time plaintiff used defendant's product, the product was defective since defendant failed to give directions and warning as to the use of the product to prevent it from being dangerous and unsafe for its intended purpose. Plaintiff further alleged that defendant knew that the product was defective and that defendant willfully and knowingly placed it on the market and knew that it would be sold to, prescribed for, and used by members of the general public without knowledge of the hazards to the users, that defendant knew and implicitly represented by the defective product's presence on the market that it could safely do the job for which it was developed, and that defendants wrongfully, knowingly, and willfully acted in complete disregard of plaintiff's implicit reliance on defendants' implicit representations of safety. In the trial court plaintiff argued that fraud was the gravamen of her punitive damages claim but on appeal she shifted position contending that the complaint sufficiently pleaded malice as a basis for the award.

In examining the allegations supporting the exemplary damage claim, the court of appeal stated that a preliminary inquiry was whether a pleading of malice as a basis for exemplary damages should be judged by the relatively strict standards governing an inquiry into jury instructions or evidentiary support for a jury award. According to the court, notwithstanding relaxed pleading criteria, certain tortious injuries demand firm allegations. Vague, conclusory allegations of fraud or falsity may not be rescued by the rule of liberal construction. Since plaintiff had changed positions from alleging fraud as a basis for the punitive damages to alleging malice, the court examined plaintiff's allegations to determine whether the elements of malice were adequately pleaded. The court concluded that plaintiff's allegation of wrongful, knowing, and willful conduct was conclusory and that the complaint failed to plead malice as a ground for the exemplary award. Consequently, the court issued the writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate its order overruling defendant's demurrer and to sustain the demurrer with leave to amend (49 Cal. App. 3d 22, 29) .

[c] Pleading Fraud Without Adequate Specificity

Lehto v. Underground Constr. Co. (1977) 69 Cal. App. 3d 933, 138 Cal. Rptr. 419 , was an action in which plaintiff sought to recover special and exemplary damages for fraud and the breach of a collective bargaining contract. The trial court sustained defendants' demurrer on the ground that the statute of limitations had run. Plaintiff's complaint involved three causes of action involving grievances arising out of defendant employer's dismissals of plaintiff from his job. These disputes were submitted to arbitration with results unfavorable to plaintiff. The complaint further alleged that defendants conspired with the union to deprive plaintiff of his rights under the collective bargaining agreements, and that defendants acted maliciously and fraudulently. On appeal, the court of appeal concluded that plaintiff's allegations supporting the punitive damages claim were without adequate specificity. The court held that it is essential that the facts and circumstances which constitute the fraud should be set out clearly, concisely, and with sufficient particularity to notify the opposite party of what he or she is called on to answer and to enable the court to determine whether, on the facts pleaded, there is a foundation for the charge of fraud. According to the court, an allegation that defendants acted maliciously and fraudulently is not sufficient. The court reversed the trial court's judgment since it found that a longer statute of limitations was applicable and directed the court to give plaintiff leave to amend his complaint as to the allegations giving rise to punitive damages (69 Cal. App. 3d 933, 944) .

[d] Pleading Malice in Conclusionary Terms

Cyrus v. Haveson (1976) 65 Cal. App. 3d 306, 135 Cal. Rptr. 246 , is discussed in § 64.21[3][a].

[e] Malice Not Alleged Without Allegation of Intent or Conscious Disregard of Safety

The factual background of G.D. Searle & Co. v. Superior Court (1975) 49 Cal. App. 3d 22, 122 Cal. Rptr. 218 , is discussed in § 64.21[3][b].

In reviewing the allegations of plaintiff's complaint, the court noted that the complaint did not charge defendant with knowledge of the dangerous potential of its product, but only with awareness that unspecified products of that type might cause injury. Additionally, it did not allege that defendant knew its implicit representations of safety were false, but instead alleged that defendant knew that its products could safely do the job. Consequently, the court found that plaintiff's allegation of wrongful, knowing, and willful conduct was conclusory. The court further held that it failed to allege directly or in equivalent terms, that defendant either intended to injure consumers of its product or acted in conscious disregard of their safety. As a result it failed to plead malice as a ground for the exemplary damages award (49 Cal. App. 3d 22, 32-33) .

[f] Allegations Not Charging Malice in Nondeliberate Injury Cases

The factual background of G.D. Searle & Co. v. Superior Court (1975) 49 Cal. App. 3d 22, 122 Cal. Rptr. 218 , is discussed in § 64.21[3][b]. The court of appeal, in determining whether plaintiff adequately pleaded a basis for exemplary damages, noted that when a plaintiff alleges an intentional wrong, a prayer for exemplary damage may be supported by pleading that the wrong was committed willfully or with a design to injure. However, when nondeliberate injury is charged, allegations that the defendant's conduct was wrongful, willful, wanton, reckless, or unlawful do not support a claim for exemplary damages. Such allegations do not charge malice (49 Cal. App. 3d 22, 29) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Ultimate Facts as Required to Be Alleged

In Smith v. Superior Court (1992) 10 Cal. App. 4th 1033, 13 Cal. Rptr. 2d 133 , the plaintiff sued her lawyers for malpractice in representing her in connection with the dissolution of her marriage. She alleged that she suffered various economic injuries and emotional distress, and sought to recover punitive damages. The trial court denied the lawyers' motion to strike the allegations regarding punitive damages. On the lawyers' petition for an extraordinary writ, the court of appeal directed the trial court to vacate its order and grant the motion to strike (10 Cal. App. 4th 1033, 1035, 1042) .

In reaching its decision, the court of appeal noted that the plaintiff sought punitive damages for the alleged failure of the defendants to adequately represent her and her property interests. Relying on G.D. Searle & Co. v. Superior Court (1975) 49 Cal. App. 3d 22, 122 Cal. Rptr. 218 , and Brousseau v. Jarrett, 73 Cal. App. 3d 864, 141 Cal. Rptr. 200 , the court held that the plaintiff's conclusory allegations of fraud, oppression, and malice did not support a prayer for punitive damages because they were not supported by specific factual allegations (10 Cal. App. 4th 1033, 1041-1042) .

Brousseau v. Jarrett (1977) 73 Cal. App. 3d 864, 141 Cal. Rptr. 200 , was a medical malpractice action in which plaintiff sought compensatory and exemplary damages from defendant. The trial court sustained defendant's general demurrer which was brought in part on the ground that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action for the recovery of punitive damages. The court of appeal affirmed as to this ground but reversed on other grounds. According to the complaint, plaintiff, who had suffered injuries when struck by an uninsured motorist, was entitled to compensation for damages up to a certain amount under the terms of his father's insurance policy. Plaintiff alleged that he had consulted defendant, a physician and surgeon, to treat his injuries. He further alleged that defendant's medical reports to plaintiff's insurance company concerning plaintiff's prognosis stated that defendant believed plaintiff would have no residual disability from the accident although defendant knew or should have known that plaintiff's injuries were of a potentially more serious nature and although he knew such reports were used as a basis for settlement of claims against the insurance company. According to plaintiff, as a proximate result of defendant's conduct, plaintiff suffered damages in the form of attorney's fees and litigation costs reasonably incurred in order to secure a more advantageous resolution of plaintiff's claim against his insurance company. Plaintiff further alleged that defendant's conduct was intentional, willful, fraudulent, and done with a wanton, reckless disregard of the possible injurious consequences and consequently, plaintiff was entitled to exemplary damages. The court of appeal held that the count seeking punitive damages did not state a cause of action for the recovery of punitive damages because its conclusory characterization of defendant's conduct as intentional, willful, and fraudulent was a patently insufficient statement of oppression, fraud, or malice, express or implied, within the meaning of former Civ. Code § 3294 [now see Civ. Code §

3294(a)], which no longer contains the phrase, "express or implied").

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in an action for tort damages for personal injuries where defendant's injury to plaintiff was nondeliberate but plaintiff did not allege that defendant acted in conscious disregard of plaintiff's safety.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Malice as Willful and Conscious Disregard of Rights or Safety of Others

Civ. Code § 3294(c)(1) defines "malice" under Civ. Code § 3294(a), which provides for punitive damages, as conduct which is intended by the defendant to cause injury to the plaintiff, or despicable conduct which is carried on by the defendant with willful and conscious disregard of the safety or rights of others [see Civ. Code § 3294(c)].

Prior to 1987 legislation amending Civ. Code § 3294(c)(1), "malice," as applicable when a defendant's conduct was not intended to cause injury to the plaintiff, was defined as conduct that is carried on by the defendant with conscious disregard of the safety or rights of others. There was no requirement that the defendant's conduct be "despicable" or that the conduct be carried out with a "willful" disregard of the safety or rights of others. This prior definition of malice applies in any action in which the trial commenced prior to January 1, 1988 [see Civ. Code § 3294(e)].

Both Searle and O'Hara, which are authority for the point in Paragraph B, were decided prior to the enactment of Civ. Code § 3294(c). Nevertheless, both cases retain their validity in that they stand for the proposition that where there is nondeliberate injury, plaintiff must plead and prove that the defendant acted with conscious disregard for the plaintiff's safety [see Civ. Code § 3294(c)(1)]. Under the 1987 amendment to Civ. Code § 3294, however, plaintiff must also allege that the defendant's conduct was in willful, as well as in conscious, disregard of safety [Civ. Code § 3294(c)(1)].

In actions in which the initial trial has not commenced prior to January 1, 1988, malice must be established by "clear and convincing" evidence [see Civ. Code § 3294(a), (e)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Conscious Disregard of Safety as Required Where Injury Not Deliberate

O'Hara v. Western Seven Trees Corp. (1977) 75 Cal. App. 3d 798, 142 Cal. Rptr. 487 , was an action in which plaintiff sought damages from the owners and operators of the apartment complex where plaintiff resided to compensate her for being raped in her apartment. In one of plaintiff's causes of action, she alleged that defendants knowingly misrepresented the safety and security of the apartment complex with the intent to induce plaintiff to rent an apartment and she sought punitive damages on the basis that the misrepresentations were fraudulent. The trial court sustained defendants' general demurrer. Before plaintiff rented an apartment from defendants, a man had raped several tenants of the apartment complex. Plaintiff alleged in her complaint that defendants knew of the crimes, were aware of the conditions indicating a likelihood that the rapist would repeat his attacks, and had been supplied by the local police with composite drawings of the suspect and a general description of his modus operandi. Plaintiff further alleged that defendants assured plaintiff that the premises were safe and were patrolled at all times by professional guards although they knew the statements were false. Defendants disclosed no information concerning the assaults. Plaintiff pleaded that, believing and relying on defendants' representations, she was induced to rent an apartment. Several months later she was raped in her apartment by a man she subsequently identified as being the same person depicted in the composite drawings which had been supplied to defendants and which were still in their possession. The court of appeal reversed the trial court's decision stating that the complaint stated causes of action against the defendants. In determining whether the facts alleged in the deceit cause of action could support punitive damages under Civ. Code § 3294, the court noted that evil motive is the central element of the malice which justifies an exemplary damages award. The court stated that where the injury is no deliberately inflicted by the defendant, as was true in this case, the plaintiff must prove that the defendant acted with conscious disregard of the plaintiff's safety. Since defendants allegedly knew of the serious potential danger to plaintiff as a female tenant yet they intentionally misled her in order to advance their pecuniary interest in renting an apartment, conscious disregard of plaintiff's safety was sufficiently alleged.

The factual background of G.D. Searle & Co. v. Superior Court (1975) 49 Cal. App. 3d 22, 122 Cal. Rptr. 218 , is discussed in § 64.21[3][b]. The court noted that when nondeliberate injury is charged, allegations that defendant's conduct was wrongful, willful, wanton, reckless, or unlawful do not support a claim for exemplary damages and do not charge malice. However, the phrase conscious disregard has been used to describe the highly culpable state of mind which justifies an exemplary damages award. The court suggested conscious disregard of safety as an appropriate description of the animus malus which may justify an exemplary damage award when nondeliberate injury is alleged. In examining plaintiff's complaint, the court noted that it did not charge defendant with knowledge of the dangerous potential of its product, but only with awareness that unspecified products of that type might cause injury. The allegation of wrongful, knowing, and willful conduct was conclusory. The complaint failed to allege, directly or in equivalent terms, that defendant either intended to injure consumers of its product or acted in conscious disregard of their safety and consequently, the court held that the complaint failed to plead malice as a ground for exemplary damages.

[Caption. See § 64.20.]

PUNITIVE DAMAGES ARE NOT RECOVERABLE WHEN A PERSON COMMITS A TECHNICAL BATTERY UNDER A GOOD FAITH MISTAKE OF FACT.

Good Faith Mistake of Fact. A person who commits the tort of battery while acting under a good faith mistake of fact is not liable for punitive damages (Ebaugh v. Rabkin (1972) 22 Cal. App. 3d 891, 895, 99 Cal. Rptr. 706).

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a demurrer to a complaint for exemplary damages based on battery when defendant committed the alleged battery under a good faith mistake of fact.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Good Faith Mistake of Fact

In Ebaugh v. Rabkin (1972) 22 Cal. App. 3d 891, 99 Cal. Rptr. 706 , a medical malpractice suit for unauthorized surgery performed when plaintiff's identity was confused with that of another patient, the jury awarded plaintiff compensatory and punitive damages. The court of appeal reversed the portion of the verdict awarding punitive damages for lack of the requisite element of malice on the part of defendant. The malice required for recovery of punitive damages in a tort action, held the court, implies an act conceived with criminal indifference towards the obligations owed to others. In the instant case, defendant had committed the technical battery of unauthorized surgery due to an inadvertent mistake as to the identity of his patient, and had ceased surgery as soon as the error was discovered. There was no finding of an intent to injure plaintiff, stated the court, and negligence alone, even gross negligence, does not justify an award of punitive damages (22 Cal. App. 3d 891, 894) . Such damages are not recoverable when a person, acting in good faith, commits the tort of battery under a mistake of fact (22 Cal. App. 3d 891, 895) .

NOTE:

For the purposes of obtaining punitive damages pursuant to Civ. Code § 3294(a), malice is defined as conduct intended by the defendant to cause injury to the plaintiff, or despicable conduct which is carried on by the defendant with willful and conscious disregard of the safety or rights of others [Civ. Code § 3294(c)(1)]. The statutory definition of malice is thus consistent with the rule in the Ebaugh case.

[Caption. See § 64.20.]

PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT FAILS TO STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION FOR EXEMPLARY DAMAGES AGAINST DEFENDANT FOR AN ACT OF ITS EMPLOYEE, SINCE IT DOES NOT ALLEGE THAT THE EMPLOYEE WAS UNFIT AND THE EMPLOYER HAD ADVANCE KNOWLEDGE OF THE EMPLOYEE'S UNFITNESS AND EMPLOYED HIM/HER WITH CONSCIOUS DISREGARD OF THE RIGHTS AND SAFETY OF OTHERS; THAT THE EMPLOYER AUTHORIZED OR RATIFIED THE WRONGFUL CONDUCT; OR THAT THE EMPLOYER WAS PERSONALLY GUILTY OF FRAUD, OPPRESSION, OR MALICE.

A. Exemplary Damages Not Awardable Against Employer for Employee's Act Unless Certain Circumstance Present. Exemplary damages may not properly be awarded against an employer for the conduct of an employee unless the employer (1) had advance knowledge of the unfitness of the employee, and employed him or her with conscious disregard of the rights or safety of others, (2) authorized or ratified the wrongful conduct, or (3) was personally guilty of fraud, oppression, or malice (Civ. Code § 3294(b)).

[Optional] B. Persons Who May Cause Corporation to Be Liable for Punitive Damages. A corporate employer is only liable for punitive damages for the conduct of its employee when an officer, director, or managing agent has advance knowledge of an employee's unfitness, but nevertheless employs him or her with conscious disregard of the rights or safety of others, or when such a person ratifies an employee's wrongful conduct, or when such person is personally guilty of fraud, oppression, or malice (Civ. Code § 3294(b); see White v. Ultramar, Inc. (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 563, 566-567, 573-577, 88 Cal. Rptr. 2d 19, 981 P.2d 944).

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a demurrer to a complaint in a tort action in which exemplary damages are sought where the wrongful act was committed by defendant's employee and the complaint does not allege any of the circumstances under which an employer may be liable for exemplary damages for its employee's act. Paragraph B is for use by a defendant which is a corporation.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Exemplary Damages Not Awardable Against Employer for Employee's Act Unless Certain Circumstances Present

Civ. Code § 3294(b), enacted in 1980, provides rules for holding employers liable for punitive damages for the torts of their employees. The statute provides for a number of situations in which an employer will be so liable, including authorization or ratification of the wrongful act, hiring an unfit employee with advance knowledge of his or her unfitness in conscious disregard of the rights or safety of others, or being personally guilty of fraud, malice, or oppression as defined in Civ. Code § 3294(c). In addition, Civ. Code § 3294(b) sets forth the persons whose acts will give rise to liability for punitive damages on the part of a corporate employer for the wrongful conduct of an employee.

[b] Persons Who May Cause Corporation to Be Liable for Punitive Damages

In White v. Ultramar, Inc. (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 563, 88 Cal. Rptr. 2d 19, 981 P.2d 944 , the plaintiff, the former employee of a convenience store, brought an action for wrongful termination against his former corporate employer based on the actions of the supervisory employee who was primarily responsible for his termination. The defendant argued that the plaintiff was terminated for taking soda in a store cup without paying for it, in violation of company policy, while plaintiff alleged that he was terminated in retaliation for testifying at the unemployment hearing of another former employee. At trial, the jury found for the plaintiff and awarded compensatory and punitive damages, and the trial court added an award of attorney's fees. The court of appeal reversed the award of attorney's fees, but otherwise affirmed. The court of appeal held that the punitive damages award was appropriate under Civ. Code § 3294(b), concluding that the ability to hire and fire employees renders a supervisory employee a "managing agent" under that statute. The Supreme Court granted review limited to the question of the entitlement to punitive damages.

The Supreme Court affirmed the award of punitive damages, but disagreed with the court of appeal's conclusion that the ability to hire and fire employees is sufficient to render a supervisory employee a "managing agent." Instead, the Supreme Court held that the "managing agent" of a corporation for purposes of establishing an entitlement to exemplary damages under Civ. Code § 3294(b) includes only those corporate employees who exercise substantial independent authority and judgment in their corporate decisionmaking so that their decisions ultimately determine corporate policy (21 Cal. 4th 563, 566-567) . The Court concluded that when the legislature amended Civ. Code § 3294 in 1980, they intended to limit the liability of corporate employers for punitive damages in that fashion, in accordance with the Supreme Court's construction of the statute as it existed at the time of the amendment. The Court also noted that the legislature placed the term "managing agent" next to the terms "officer" and "director," suggesting that a managing agent must be more than a mere supervisory employee (21 Cal. 4th 563, 572-573) . As the Court noted, equating a managing agent with a supervisor would effectively render a corporate employer liable for punitive damages in most employment cases (21 Cal. 4th 563, 575) . The Supreme Court then applied the standard to the case before it and held that the supervisory employee who fired the plaintiff was a managing agent, because she had responsibility for managing eight stores and at least 65 employees, which was a significant amount of the employing corporation's business (21 Cal. 4th 563, 577) .

[c] Clear and Convincing Evidence Required

In Barton v. Alexander Hamilton Life Ins. Co. of Am. (2003) 110 Cal. App. 4th 1640, 3 Cal. Rptr. 3d 258 , the plaintiff sued his insurer and insurance agent for fraud and negligent misrepresentations in connection with the purchase of a life insurance policy. The jury found for the plaintiff and awarded compensatory damages, although the trial court had granted nonsuit on the plaintiff's claim for punitive damages. The trial court then granted the defendants' motion for a new trial on the issue of damages alone, but still did not allow the plaintiff to present his punitive damages claim to the jury. The plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed and in the process rejected the plaintiff's argument that the evidentiary showing of Civ. Code § 3294(b), required to hold the insurer liable for punitive damages for the act of the insurance agent, was satisfied by a preponderance of the evidence. The court held that the correct standard was one of clear and convincing evidence. Because the standard for proving oppression, fraud, or malice required to recover punitive damages under Civ. Code § 3294(a) was clear and convincing evidence, the court concluded that the same standard applied to the showing required by Civ. Code § 3294(b). The court then held that the trial court applied the correct standard of proof to the plaintiff's punitive damages claim and that, in any event, the trial court did not err because the plaintiff failed to provide any evidence to show that the insurance agent was a managing agent of the insurer or that the insurer company ratified the agent's conduct (110 Cal. App. 4th 1640, 1644) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Persons Who May Cause Corporation to Be Liable for Punitive Damages

In Roby v. McKesson Corp. (2009) 47 Cal. 4th 686, 101 Cal. Rptr. 3d 773, 219 P.3d 749 , plaintiff brought an action for wrongful termination, discrimination, and harassment against her former employer and, with regard to the harassment claim, against her former supervisor. After a jury trial, plaintiff was awarded almost $3 million in compensatory damages and $15 million in punitive damages. The Court of Appeal reduced the compensatory damages award to $1.4 million and the punitive damages award to $2 million. The California Supreme Court reinstated part of the compensatory damages award disallowed by the court of appeal, bringing the total amount of compensatory damages to $1.9 million, and modified the punitive damages award to that same amount. In analyzing the plaintiff's entitlement to punitive damages, the Court concluded that the employer could not be held liable for punitive damages based merely on the conduct of the plaintiff's former supervisor. The Court noted that this supervisory employee worked at a local distribution center and supervised only four employees, although the company employed over 20,000. In those circumstances, the supervisor who was sued was not a managing agent for purposes of establishing a claim to punitive damages against the employer (47 Cal. 4th 686, 714) .

In Cruz v. HomeBase (2000) 83 Cal. App. 4th 160, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 435 , the plaintiff sued a chain store company, a security guard at one of its stores, and the guard's supervisor, based on an incident at the store during which the plaintiff was accused of stealing, handcuffed, physically and verbally attacked, and sent to jail. The plaintiff sought compensatory and punitive damages for battery, false imprisonment, and malicious prosecution. After prevailing on the battery cause of action in the first trial, the trial court declared a mistrial as to the other actions, which were subsequently retried. At retrial, the plaintiff prevailed and was awarded both compensatory and punitive damages. The court of appeal affirmed the compensatory damages award but reversed the award of punitive damages that had been rendered against the chain store company. The court of appeal concluded, first, that the security guard's supervisor was not a managing agent, because he was supervisor of only one aspect of the operations of a single store in a chain of stores (83 Cal. App. 4th 160, 168) . The court also rejected the argument that by not firing employees after receiving reports casting doubt on their fitness, the corporation effectively ratified their misconduct. The court noted that a punitive damages award based on ratification by a corporate employer requires that the corporate employer have actual knowledge of the misconduct. Because the internal corporate reports of the incident submitted by the guard and his supervisor did not mention the misconduct alleged by the plaintiff, there was no evidence that an officer, director, or managing agent of the corporation during the relevant time period had actual knowledge of the misconduct alleged by the plaintiff (83 Cal. App. 4th 160, 168) .

In Kelly-Zurian v. Wohl Shoe Co. (1994) 22 Cal. App. 4th 397, 27 Cal. Rptr. 2d 457 , the plaintiff had sued her former employer, alleging that it was liable for the sexual harassment committed by the plaintiff's supervisor. The trial was bifurcated, with the punitive damages to be tried separately from the issues of liability and compensatory damages. The jury entered a verdict in favor of the plaintiff against the supervisor, but found in favor of the employer. The trial court granted the plaintiff's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict against the employer, awarding plaintiff compensatory damages, but denied the motion as to punitive damages. Both parties appealed.

The court of appeal held that the trial court acted properly in denying the motion as to punitive damages. Although the trial court apparently believed that even conduct of a managing agent must be ratified, which is not required by Civ. Code § 3294(b), the court of appeal held that the evidence did not establish that the supervisor was in fact a "managing agent" under Civ. Code § 3294(b) (22 Cal. App. 4th 397, 421-422) . Although the supervisor had the power to terminate plaintiff's employment, the court noted that plaintiff had presented no evidence that the supervisor was in a policymaking position. The employer had introduced substantial evidence that the supervisor did not have the power to change or establish business policy, or even to change plaintiff's salary without corporate approval. The court held that the evidence therefore established that the supervisor was not a managing agent, and that the employer could not be liable for punitive damages based on the supervisor's conduct (22 Cal. App. 4th 397, 422) .

This form of memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint alleging damages for loss of consortium when the demurrer asserts that the complaint fails to state a cause of action in that the plaintiff has no standing to bring such a cause of action. The alternative paragraphs are for use depending on the plaintiff's relationship to the person whose society and comfort the plaintiff is allegedly denied.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 64.44 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Loss of Consortium Not Actionable by Unmarried Cohabitant

In Elden v. Sheldon (1988) 46 Cal. 3d 267, 250 Cal. Rptr. 254, 758 P.2d 582 , plaintiff sustained serious personal injuries when the car in which he was a passenger was hit by another car. Plaintiff sued defendants, driver and owner of the other car, for damages for personal injuries, negligent infliction of emotional distress, and loss of consortium. The last two causes of action were based on plaintiff's witnessing the injury and death (in the accident) of the woman with whom he shared a cohabitant relationship allegedly akin to a marital relationship. Defendants demurred to these causes of action, on the ground that plaintiff and the decedent were not married. The trial court sustained the demurrer and dismissed those causes of action. Plaintiff appealed.

The California Supreme Court affirmed. It decided not to extend the ability to recover for loss of consortium to unmarried cohabiting couples with a stable and significant relationship parallel to a marital relationship (46 Cal. 3d 267, 277) . Citing Borer v. American Airlines, Inc. (1977) 19 Cal. 3d 441, 138 Cal. Rptr. 302, 563 P.2d 858 [see § 64.25[3][b]], the Court said judicial recognition of a cause of action for loss of consortium must be narrowly circumscribed because of the intangible nature of the loss, the difficulty of measuring damages, and the possibility of an unreasonable increase in the number of persons who would be entitled to sue for the loss of a loved one. The Court observed that case law holds that the right to recover for loss of consortium is founded on the relationship of marriage, and absent such a relationship the right does not exist. The Court specifically disapproved Butcher v. Superior Court (1983) 139 Cal. App. 3d 58, 188 Cal. Rptr. 503 , in which the court of appeal allowed a woman in a de facto spousal relationship to recover damages for loss of consortium (46 Cal. 3d 267, 278-279) . The Court explained that its decision was also influenced by the state's interest in promoting the responsibilities of marriage and the difficulty of assessing the emotional, sexual, and financial relationship of cohabiting parties to determine whether their arrangement was the equivalent of a marriage (46 Cal. 3d 267, 279) . In its discussion of negligent infliction of emotional distress, the Court elaborated on the importance of these factors. The state has a strong interest in the marriage relationship; to the extent unmarried cohabitants are granted the same rights as married persons, the state's interest in promoting marriage is inhibited. The policy favoring marriage is rooted in the necessity of providing an institutional basis for defining the fundamental relational rights and responsibilities of persons in organized society. Formally married couples are granted significant rights and bear important responsibilities toward one another that are not shared by those who cohabit without marriage. Moreover, allowance of such a cause of action would impose a difficult burden on the courts. It would require them to inquire into the relationship of the partners to determine whether the emotional attachment of the family relationship existed between the parties and whether the relationship was stable and significant. A determination of whether cohabitants may recover damages based on such matters as the sexual fidelity of the parties and their emotional and economic ties would require a court to undertake a massive intrusion into the private life of the partners. Further, application of these factors would not provide a sufficiently definite and predictable test to allow or consistent application from case to case (46 Cal. 3d 267, 274-276) . Finally, the Court distinguished Marvin v. Marvin (1976) 134 Cal. Rptr. 815, 18 Cal. 3d 660, 557 P.2d 106 , as essentially a contract case (46 Cal. 3d 267, 279) .

[b] Loss of Consortium Not Actionable by Children

Borer v. American Airlines, Inc. (1977) 19 Cal. 3d 441, 138 Cal. Rptr. 302, 563 P.2d 858 , was an action for damages for loss of consortium brought by the nine children of a woman who sustained serious injuries when the cover on a lighting fixture at the terminal of defendant airline fell and struck her. Plaintiffs claimed that as a result of their mother's physical injuries, each of them was deprived of the services, society, companionship, affection, tutelage, direction, guidance, instruction and aid in personality development, all with its accompanying psychological, educational and emotional detriment, by reason of their mother being unable to carry on the usual duties of a mother. Defendant demurred to the complaint for failure to state a cause of action. The trial court sustained the demurrer and dismissed the suit. Plaintiffs appealed.

The California Supreme Court affirmed. The Court said there are strong policy reasons against extension of liability to loss of consortium of the parent-child relationship. Loss of consortium is an intangible, nonpecuniary loss; monetary compensation will not compensate plaintiffs for the loss of companionship and guidance of their mother. The Court summarized that plaintiffs suffered a loss for which there is no compensation; monetary compensation is essentially unrelated to that loss. The Court said the social burden of providing damages for loss of parental consortium could not be ignored merely because such money initially comes from the negligent defendant or his or her insurer. The burden would be borne by the general public in increased insurance premiums or in the enhanced danger that accrues from the greater number of people who do without any insurance. It said the cost of administration of a system to determine and pay consortium awards also had to be considered; since virtually every serious injury to a parent would engender a claim for loss of consortium on behalf of each of his or her children, the expense of settling or litigating such claims would be sizable. The Court said that the inadequacy of monetary damages to make whole the loss suffered, considered in light of the social cost of paying such awards, constitutes a strong reason for refusing to recognize the asserted claim (19 Cal. 3d 441, 447) . The Court articulated a second reason for rejecting a cause of action for loss of parental consortium: the difficulty of measuring damages. Because of its intangible character, damages for such a loss are difficult to define and quantify. Such difficulty leads to the risk of double recovery, since it is difficult to distinguish the loss to the mother from her inability to care for her children from the loss to the children from the mother's inability to care for them. The Court said Rodriguez v. Bethlehem Steel Corp. (1974) 12 Cal. 3d 382, 115 Cal. Rptr. 765, 525 P.2d 669 [see § 64.44], did not disregard the intangible character of damages and the difficulty of measuring such damages, but held that in the context of a spousal relationship, the policy arguments against liability do not suffice to justify a holding denying a cause of action (19 Cal. 3d 441, 448) .

The Court rejected plaintiffs' contention that no adequate ground exists to distinguish a cause of action for loss of spousal consortium from one for loss of parental consortium and articulated three reasons for its position: (1) the spousal action for loss of consortium rests in large part on the impairment or destruction of the sexual life of the couple, and no similar element of damage appears in a child's suit for loss of consortium; (2) actions by children for loss of parental consortium create problems of multiplication of actions and damages not present in the spousal context; and (3) the proposition that a spouse has a cause of action for loss of consortium, but that a child does not, finds overwhelming approval in the decisions of other jurisdictions (19 Cal. 3d 441, 448-449) .

Plaintiffs also contended that not allowing a child to recover for loss of parental consortium would distinguish between the rights of the child of a seriously disabled parent and those of a deceased parent, without any rational basis for that distinction in contravention of the equal protection of the laws. Plaintiffs pointed out that under a Code Civ. Proc. § 377 wrongful death action, a child may recover the value of the deceased parent's affection and society (19 Cal. 3d 441, 451) . The Court said there are two significant distinctions between the child whose parent is killed and one whose parent is disabled, both of which flow from the fact that in the latter case the living victim retains his or her own cause of action. The first distinction relates to the historical purpose of the wrongful death statutes. Common law did not permit the heirs of a deceased victim to bring a cause of action against the tortfeasor, thus making it more profitable to kill than to scratch a victim. The wrongful death statutes eliminated this inequity. Additionally, recovery for the loss of the affection and society of the deceased is allowed in recognition that if damages were limited to pecuniary loss, recovery frequently would be barred by the heirs' inability to prove such loss in the case of nonworking family members, even though their death represents a substantial injury to the family. Recovery for loss of affection and society also fulfills a deeply felt social belief that a tortfeasor who kills someone should not escape liability completely, no matter how unproductive the victim. By contrast, when a parent is disabled, the tortfeasor cannot escape with impunity, for the immediate victim of the tort retains a cause of action for the injuries inflicted. A claim by the child is not essential to prevent the tortfeasor from escaping liability. The second distinction is that the wrongful death action serves as the only means by which the family unit can recover compensation for the loss of parental care and services in the case of the wrongful death of the parent. While the parents live, however, the tangible aspects of the child's loss can be compensated in the parent's own cause of action (19 Cal. 3d 441, 451-452) . The Court concluded that the distinction between damages for loss of affection and society to a child whose parent has been tortiously killed, and the denial of such damages to a child whose parent has been disabled, rests on a rational basis (19 Cal. 3d 441, 452-453) .

In Nix v. Preformed Line Prods. Co. (1985) 170 Cal. App. 3d 975, 216 Cal. Rptr. 581 , after her husband was severely injured from a fall on his job site and rendered unable to speak or care for himself, plaintiff filed a complaint against defendant, her husband's employer. The complaint alleged several causes of action, and included one for loss of parental consortium, brought on behalf of the couple's two sons. Defendant demurred to that cause of action. The trial court granted the demurrer and dismissed that cause of action. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. Plaintiff urged that Borer v. American Airlines, Inc. (1977) 19 Cal. 3d 441, 138 Cal. Rptr. 302, 563 P.2d 858 , in which the California Supreme Court refused to create a cause of action for loss of parental consortium, should be reevaluated in light of society's increased recognition of the need to protect the rights of children. The court reviewed the Borer holding and reasoning, particularly the way it distinguished itself from Rodriguez. It quoted from Justice Mosk's dissent in which he severely criticized the Borer majority, and although clearly not in agreement with Borer, the court concluded that it was forced to follow that case (170 Cal. App. 3d 975, 977-981) . The court noted that Borer observed that no other state recognized a claim for loss of parental consortium. The court pointed out that since then several states have recognized such a cause of action (170 Cal. App. 3d 975, 981-984) . The court concluded that these developments, plus the many discussions criticizing the Borer result, prompted it to point to the inconsistency in the law between husband and wife on the one hand, and parent and child on the other, and suggested that Borer should be reconsidered (170 Cal. App. 3d 975, 986) .

[c] Loss of Consortium Not Actionable by Parents

In Baxter v. Superior Court (1977) 19 Cal. 3d 461, 138 Cal. Rptr. 315, 563 P.2d 871 , plaintiffs' 16-year-old son was given a general anesthetic in preparation for diagnostic procedures and possible surgery. As a result of the anesthetic, he was rendered unconscious and remained comatose for four months. When he awoke, he had been reduced to the mental age of three, suffered total blindness, severe impairment of his hearing, and partial paralysis of his right side. Plaintiffs and their son filed suit against defendant hospital and attending physicians. In addition to other causes of action, plaintiff parents sought damages for their loss of their son's support, comfort, protection, society, and pleasure. Defendants demurred to those causes of action, asserting that California law does not recognize a parent's right to recover for loss of filial consortium. The trial court sustained the demurrer. Plaintiffs petitioned the court of appeal for a writ of mandate to require the trial court to order defendants to answer. The court of appeal issued an alternative writ, but after argument discharged that writ and denied relief.

The California Supreme Court discharged the alternative writ and denied the petition for a peremptory writ. The Court framed the question presented as whether the parents of an injured child can state a cause of action for the loss of the affection and society of their child. The Court said those reasons explained in Borer v. American Airlines, Inc. (1977) 19 Cal. 3d 441, 138 Cal. Rptr. 302, 563 P.2d 858 , in particular the intangible nature of the injury and the danger of multiplication of claims and liability, applied to the issue of a parental claim for loss of filial consortium. The intangible character of the loss, which can never really be compensated by money damages, the difficulty of measuring damages, and the dangers of double recovery of multiple claims and of extensive liability all apply similarly to both cases. The Court concluded that while the risk of multiple claims and disproportionate awards is slightly less, since an injured child has only two parents who can sue for loss of consortium, while an injured parent may have many children, that minor difference does not suffice to justify allowing a parental cause of action while denying a child's claim (19 Cal. 3d 461, 464) . The Court observed that although some other jurisdictions recognize a distinction between the rights of parents and children, the majority of them sustain the parental cause of action merely by citing the common-law right of a parent to recover for loss of a child's services and by treating the child's affection and companionship as among the services to which the parent is entitled. The Court opined that the absence of any comparable common-law right of action for the child accounts for the dearth of decisions permitting the child to recover for loss of parental affection and society. It found that the existence of a common-law right to recover for the loss of a child's earnings and services is not a sufficient basis to distinguish a parent's suit for loss of consortium from the child' claim denied in Borer. The common-law right dates from the period when the child's labor served as an important economic resource of the family. Today the parent's right to a child's earnings and services is rarely of economic value; it exists less as a significant legal right than as an historical curiosity. Although the parents' right to their child's earnings and services is established by statute in California, the few decisions enforcing that right grant recovery only for loss of earnings or services of economic value (19 Cal. 3d 461, 465) . The court concluded that a parent has no cause of action in negligence to recover damages for loss of filial consortium (19 Cal. 3d 461, 466) .

[a] Loss of Consortium Not Actionable by Children

In Tullai v. Homan (1987) 195 Cal. App. 3d 1184, 241 Cal. Rptr. 255 , plaintiffs' son was severely injured and rendered a quadriplegic when the car in which he was a passenger was involved in an accident. In addition to several causes of action brought on behalf of their son against a variety of defendants, including the driver, the owner, and the manufacturer of the car, plaintiffs brought a cause of action on their own behalf for loss of parent-child consortium. Defendants demurred, on the ground that no cause of action was stated. The trial court severed that cause of action and dismissed it. The court of appeal affirmed. The court reviewed plaintiffs' contentions, and noted that they had been addressed by the California Supreme Court in Borer v. American Airlines, Inc. (1977) 19 Cal. 3d 441, 138 Cal. Rptr. 302, 563 P.2d 858 . The court said it was bound to follow that Court's clear expressions on the subject, and suggested to plaintiffs that their argument that Borer should be reconsidered must be addressed to that court (195 Cal. App. 3d 1184, 1186-1187) . The court rejected defendants' contention that sanctions should be imposed against plaintiffs for a frivolous appeal, citing Nix as indication that plaintiffs were not alone in desiring a reconsideration of Borer (195 Cal. App. 3d 1184, 1187-1188) .

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a defendant's general demurrer to a complaint that seeks damages for economic damages based on allegations of defendant's negligence, when the demurrer asserts that economic damages are not available in a negligence action because there is no special relationship between the parties. The optional paragraphs are for use in setting forth the absence of any allegations in the complaint that establish the existence of any special relationship between the parties.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the relationship of the parties, and should show that there was no "special relationship" between the parties, as defined by case law [see Ott v. Alfa-Laval Agri, Inc. (1995) 31 Cal. App. 4th 1439, 1455, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 790] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Economic Damages Not Available in Negligence Action Absent Special Relationship Between Parties

In Ott v. Alfa-Laval Agri, Inc. (1995) 31 Cal. App. 4th 1439, 1455, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 790 , plaintiffs, owners of a dairy farm, sued defendants, milking machine manufacturers, for lost profits. The negligence count of the complaint alleged that defendant negligently designed and manufactured milking systems which plaintiff used, and also negligently trained and directed plaintiff in the installation of these milking systems. At the beginning of the trial, defendants obtained a ruling by way of a motion for judgment on the pleadings that economic losses were not a compensable element of damages in an action for negligence. After trial, the jury returned a special verdict that granted an award of general damages on the negligence count. The defendants then moved for judgment notwithstanding the verdict on this count, and the motion was granted by the trial court. Plaintiffs appealed, claiming that economic damages are recoverable in tort actions.

The court of appeal disagreed with the trial court's reasons for its ruling, but affirmed the grant of judgment on the pleadings with regard to the negligence-based claims for economic damages. The court held that, contrary to the trial court's conclusion, economic damages can be recovered under some circumstances in an action for negligence. However, for such a cause of action to arise there must be a "special relationship" between the parties that gives rise to a duty on the part of the defendant to use due care to avoid economic injury to the plaintiff (31 Cal. App. 4th 1439, 1448) .

[b] Failure to Prove That Transaction Was Intended to Affect Plaintiff Precludes Finding of Special Relationship

The facts and procedural background of Ott v. Alfa-Laval Agri, Inc. (1995) 31 Cal. App. 4th 1439, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 790 , are discussed in § 64.26[3][a]. Whether such a special relationship exists is determined by a six-part test, including an examination of the extent to which the transaction was intended to affect the plaintiff (31 Cal. App. 4th 1439, 1449) . In this case, the court concluded that there was no evidence suggesting that defendant's milking system was intended to affect the plaintiffs in any way particular to them, as opposed to all potential purchasers of the equipment (31 Cal. App. 4th 1439, 1455) . The absence of this foundation precluded a finding of special relationship necessary to the recovery of economic damages for negligence.

[c] Failure to Prove Forseeability of Harm to Plaintiff Precludes Finding of Special Relationship

The facts and procedural background of Ott v. Alfa-Laval Agri, Inc. (1995) 31 Cal. App. 4th 1439, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 790 , are discussed in § 64.26[3][a]. One of the six aspects of the test used by the court in determining whether a special relationship exists between the parties sufficient to justify recovery of economic damages in a tort action, is the foreseeability of harm to the plaintiff (31 Cal. App. 4th 1439, 1449) . In this case, the plaintiffs used the defendant's first milking machine for 15 years without noticing the decline in the milk production alleged in the complaint. The defects in the system did not produce a noticeable result until the system was merged with a new generation of technology. The court concluded that this demonstrated that the deficiencies in the system were not reasonably foreseeable when the system was installed (31 Cal. App. 4th 1439, 1456) . Since the injury was not foreseeable, there was no special relationship as required for a recovery of economic damages for negligence.

§ 64.27 Supporting Contention That Plaintiff Unable to Prove Damages--Evidence of Lost Profits Too Speculative

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF CANNOT PROVE DAMAGES IN THE FORM OF LOST BUSINESS PROFITS BECAUSE PLAINTIFF'S EVIDENCE SUPPORTING THE CLAIM FOR LOST PROFITS IS TOO SPECULATIVE AND UNCERTAIN.

Evidence of Lost Profits Too Uncertain to Support Recovery. A plaintiff cannot recover in tort for lost profits caused by a defendant's negligence if the evidence supporting the claim for lost profits does not show to a reasonable certainty that the interrupted business would actually have made a profit (Kids' Universe v. In2Labs (2002) 95 Cal. App. 4th 870, 887-888, 116 Cal. Rptr. 2d 158).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the plaintiff cannot recover damages for lost profits because the plaintiff's evidence in support of those damages is insufficient to prove any amount of lost profits to a reasonable certainty.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which these points are raised, such as a motion for summary judgment. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the evidence offered by the plaintiff and argue that this evidence is too uncertain or speculative to support a claim for lost profits.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Evidence of Lost Profits Too Uncertain to Support Recovery

In Kids' Universe v. In2Labs (2002) 95 Cal. App. 4th 870, 116 Cal. Rptr. 2d 158 , the plaintiffs were the owners of a children's retail store that sold toys, educational products, and computer training services for children. The defendants leased office space above the plaintiffs' store. In mid-November 1997, one of the defendants' employees left water running in a sink overnight, which caused damage to the plaintiffs' store. Although the defendants' insurer paid $200,000 to the plaintiffs to cover those damages, the plaintiffs brought a negligence action two years later to recover for the lost profits they allege they would have made had they been able to launch their planned Internet web site in late November 1997 as they had planned, rather than spend the time repairing the store. At the time of the accident, the plaintiffs had only five employees, and although they had operated a modest web site since 1995, they had averaged only about $500 in annual revenue from sales over the Internet. However, they argued that they had business deals in place to greatly increase their Internet retailing, including deals with other Internet sites that would have greatly increased the exposure of their own web site without an expensive upfront outlay of capital on their part. They also presented the declaration of an economics expert who offered the opinion, based on researching the experience of another Internet toy seller with similar deals made during the relevant time period, that the plaintiffs' business plans, if completed, could have attracted significant investment capital and led to a substantial increase in the valuation of the plaintiffs' business. However, by the time the plaintiffs' store repairs were completed in early 1998, because of changes in Internet business opportunities, the plaintiffs' opportunities for substantially increasing the exposure of their Internet web site without large capital outlays had vanished. The plaintiffs were financially unable to proceed with their plans and filed suit against the defendants. The defendants moved for summary judgment on the grounds that the plaintiffs' evidence of lost profits, the only type of damages claimed in the suit, was too speculative to raise a triable issue of fact as to any damages. The trial court agreed and rendered judgment for defendants, and the plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court reviewed relevant case law establishing that although the loss of prospective profits is recoverable if the evidence makes reasonably certain the occurrence and amount of the loss, when the operation of an unestablished business is prevented or interrupted, damages for prospective profits may not be recovered if their occurrence is uncertain, contingent, or speculative. In the absence of operating experience sufficient to permit a reasonable estimate of probable income and expense, damages for lost profits may be denied (95 Cal. App. 4th 870, 883-884) . Applying these general principles to the case before it, the court of appeal concluded that the plaintiffs could not recover for lost profits, because they had no evidence from which a reasonable trier of fact could conclude with reasonable certainty that the plaintiffs would have actually made a profit from replacing their existing web site with a greater Internet presence. Although the plaintiffs had five years experience as toy retailers, their web site had not previously been operated as a profit-making venture because it had generated only modest revenues. Furthermore, the on-line market for toys was not an established market, and the scenario described by the plaintiffs was rife with speculation. The plaintiffs presented no evidence of how their business would have been affected by competing Internet retailers, how many of the viewers of their web site would have actually made purchases, the level of purchases that would have been necessary to make the enterprise profitable, or how much venture capital their enterprise might have attracted. Finally, the court noted that the plaintiffs' expert's comparison of their lost opportunity to that of another Internet toy retailer was based on news articles, rather than any actual data, and on an assumption without analysis that the plaintiffs' business would have been roughly equal to this competitor, and that his analysis provided no way to determine what actual profits were lost (95 Cal. App. 4th 870, 887-888) .

[a] Evidence of Lost Profits Too Uncertain to Support Recovery

In Parlour Enterprises, Inc. v. Kirin Group, Inc. (2007) 152 Cal. App. 4th 281, 61 Cal. Rptr. 3d 243 , plaintiffs were ice cream parlor franchisees and related partnerships who sued franchisors for unilaterally terminating a subfranchise agreement. Plaintiffs sought damages for lost anticipated profits from multiple franchises, although only one franchise had been built and in operation when the agreement was terminated. At trial, the jury awarded over $6,000,000 in damages to plaintiffs based on lost profits from all of the projected franchises, but the court of appeal reversed most of the award. The court of appeal held that plaintiffs' evidence of lost anticipated profits, most of which was presented in the form of testimony from an expert witness, was too speculative and lacked factual detail. The court recognized that if lost anticipated profits are from a business not yet in operation when the actionable conduct occurred, damages may be established with reasonable certainty using expert testimony, economic and financial data, market surveys and analyses, business records of similar enterprises, and the like (152 Cal. App. 4th 281, 288) . However, plaintiffs failed to explain the factual underpinnings for the projections used and justify why the projections constituted reliable indicators of future anticipated profits. Some of the projections used by plaintiffs' expert were generated by one of the plaintiffs for purposes of attracting investors, based on optimistic assumptions, and contained disclaimers stating that they were not based on actual operations and were not assured to reflect actual results. Moreover, no factual details were provided as to how the numbers in these projections were created (152 Cal. App. 4th 281, 289-290) .

In addition, while the expert based his testimony in part on market data on other ice cream parlors and a restaurant chain that serves both food and ice cream, as did the franchises at issue here, the court noted that plaintiffs failed to provide details of these other businesses and explain how they were sufficiently similar to the franchises here. Without such factual background, plaintiffs' evidence was too speculative to support damages for lost anticipated profits from the restaurants that were not yet in existence (152 Cal. App. 4th 281, 290) .

§ 64.28 Supporting Contention That Shareholder May Not Recover Lost Future Corporate Profits

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE PLAINTIFF, AS A SHAREHOLDER IN A CORPORATION, MAY NOT RECOVER ON THE PLAINTIFF'S OWN BEHALF FOR THE LOST FUTURE PROFITS THAT MAY HAVE BEEN SUFFERED BY THAT CORPORATION.

Shareholder Cannot Recover for Lost Future Profits of Corporation. A corporate shareholder does not have an ownership interest in corporate profits and cannot recover individually for lost future profits suffered by the corporation (Sole Energy Co. v. Petrominerals Corp. (2005) 128 Cal. App. 4th 212, 232, 26 Cal. Rptr. 3d 798).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a plaintiff who is a shareholder or putative shareholder in a corporation may not recover as damages in the plaintiff's individual capacity for the lost future profits sustained by the corporation.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which these points are raised, such as in a motion for summary judgment. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Thus, for example, counsel should include facts showing that the plaintiff was a shareholder in a corporation, that the damages sought by the plaintiff are damages for lost profits that would have been earned by the corporation, and that the plaintiff, suing in the plaintiff's individual capacity, has no right to recover these lost corporate profits.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Shareholder Cannot Recover for Lost Future Profits of Corporation

In Sole Energy Co. v. Petrominerals Corp. (2005) 128 Cal. App. 4th 212, 26 Cal. Rptr. 3d 798 , the plaintiffs were two businessmen and their companies who combined to form a corporation, although the corporation never issued any stock. The plaintiffs engaged in negotiations in which their corporation would purchase the oil and gas assets of another company. Prior to actual incorporation, the plaintiffs submitted a non-binding letter of intent proposing their purchase, which was signed by principals of the selling company. However, a few months later, when the plaintiffs received a formal commitment for financing of their proposed purchase, there were differences between the parties on the terms of the sale that could have prevented the deal from being finalized, but during a phone call a few days later, one of the plaintiffs reached an oral agreement with one of the principals of the selling company to finalize the sale, although no purchase price or other details were included. Three days later, the selling company terminated the deal and ended up selling to another company. Alleging that they had a contractual agreement to purchase the assets at issue, the plaintiffs brought suit for interference with contract and prospective economic advantage against the eventual purchasing company and a financial consultant who had provided services to the selling and buying companies that were instrumental in facilitating the sale. After a jury trial, the plaintiffs were awarded over $20 million in damages, which included damages for profits that their corporation allegedly would have earned if their purchase transaction had been completed. However, the trial court granted the defendants' JNOV motions on some of the causes of action, although it denied JNOV motions on other causes of action. Both the plaintiffs and the defendants appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed in part and reversed in part. Addressing the issue of damages awarded to the plaintiffs for the lost profits that would have been earned by the plaintiffs' corporation, had it been able to purchase the oil and gas assets it sought, the court noted the established rule that corporate shareholders do not have an ownership interest in corporate profits. Because corporate profits belong to the corporation and not to the shareholders individually, lost profits are an injury to the corporation and therefore derivative in nature. If lost corporate profits are sought as damages, the gravamen of the complaint is injury to the corporation, rather than injury to an individual shareholder. Although the individual plaintiffs may have been able to recover for the loss or diminution in value of the shares they would have received in the purchasing corporation they formed, they presented no evidence of these damages, but only evidence of lost corporate profits. Because they sued in their individual capacities and did not bring a derivative suit on behalf of the corporation, the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover for lost corporate profits (128 Cal. App. 4th 212, 232-233) . The result was not altered merely because the plaintiffs' corporation never actually went into business and never actually issued any stock. The evidence presented at trial on the issue of damages assumed that the corporation would have done so if the proposed purchase had not been thwarted (128 Cal. App. 4th 212, 214) .

WHEN AN INTENTIONAL WRONG IS ALLEGED, A GENERAL ALLEGATION OF MALICIOUS INTENT IS SUFFICIENT TO SUPPORT A CLAIM FOR EXEMPLARY DAMAGES.

A. General Allegation of Intent as Sufficient. In cases of intentional torts, malice is properly pleaded by alleging the wrongful motive, intent, or purpose and a general allegation of intent is sufficient to support a claim for exemplary damages (Unruh v. Truck Ins. Exch. (1972) 7 Cal. 3d 616, 632, 102 Cal. Rptr. 815, 498 P.2d 1063 ; see also Civ. Code § 3294(c)(1)).

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a demurrer to a complaint in a tort action seeking exemplary damages where plaintiff has alleged an intentional wrong and also has alleged generally defendant's wrongful malicious intent, motive, or purpose.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Statutory Definition of Malice

Civ. Code § 3294(c)(1), defines "malice" as conduct which is intended by the defendant to cause injury to the plaintiff, or despicable conduct which is carried on by the defendant with willful and conscious disregard of the safety or rights of others. This definition is for use in Civ. Code § 3294(a), which provides for punitive damages in any action other than one for breach of contract, where it has been proven by clear and convincing evidence that the defendant has been guilty of malice, fraud, or oppression [Civ. Code § 3294(c)].

Both Unruh and Searle, cited as authority for the points in Paragraphs A and B, were decided before the enactment of this statutory definition of malice. However, since malice is defined in the intentional tort context as conduct intended to cause injury, then a general allegation of wrongful intent as in Unruh or a design to injure as in Searle will be sufficient an allegation of malice within Civ. Code § 3294(c)(1) to support a claim for punitive damages.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] General Allegation of Intent as Sufficient

Unruh v. Truck Ins. Exch. (1972) 7 Cal. 3d 616, 102 Cal. Rptr. 815, 498 P.2d 1063 , was an action by an industrially injured employee against her employer's worker's compensation insurance carrier for damages for the negligent and intentional acts of the carrier. In one count of the complaint, plaintiff incorporated by reference the preceding four counts which stated causes of action on theories of negligence, assault, conspiracy, and intentional infliction of emotional distress and alleged that the acts of defendants were willful and malicious whereby plaintiff sought punitive damages. The trial court sustained defendants' demurrers to the complaint brought on the ground that each count failed to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in that it appeared on the face of the complaint that the court had no jurisdiction over the subject matter of the action since the Workmen's Compensation Appeals Board had exclusive jurisdiction. The Supreme Court affirmed as to the negligence counts and reversed as to the counts alleging intentional torts. With respect to the count setting forth a claim of punitive damages, the Court noted that malice is properly pleaded by alleging the wrongful motive, intent, or purpose. A general allegation of such intent is sufficient to support a claim for exemplary damages. The Court held that plaintiff's exemplary damage claim was properly assertable in conjunction with the counts asserting causes of action for assault and intentional infliction of emotional distress, but not with the counts alleging mere negligence. Consequently, the Court concluded that the trial court erred in sustaining defendant's demurrer to the punitive damages count.

[b] Pleading Malice Where Intentional Wrong Alleged

The factual background of G.D. Searle & Co. v. Superior Court (1975) 49 Cal. App. 3d 22, 122 Cal. Rptr. 218 , is discussed in § 64.21[3][b]. The court of appeal, in determining whether plaintiff adequately pleaded a basis for exemplary damages, stated that when a plaintiff alleges an intentional wrong, a prayer for exemplary damage may be supported by pleading that the wrong was committed willfully or with a design to injure.

PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT PLEADS A CAUSE OF ACTION FOR PUNITIVE DAMAGES SINCE CONSCIOUS DISREGARD OF THE SAFETY OF OTHERS MAY CONSTITUTE MALICE WITHIN THE MEANING OF CIVIL CODE SECTION 3294 AND PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT ALLEGES THAT DEFENDANT WILLFULLY AND CONSCIOUSLY DISREGARDED PLAINTIFF'S SAFETY.

A. Willful and Conscious Disregard of Safety as Malice. Willful and conscious disregard of the safety of others constitutes malice under Section 3294 of the Civil Code, which authorizes exemplary damages (Civ. Code § 3294(c)(1); see Taylor v. Superior Court (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 890, 895, 157 Cal. Rptr. 693, 598 P.2d 854 ; G.D. Searle & Co. v. Superior Court (1975) 49 Cal. App. 3d 22, 32, 122 Cal. Rptr. 218).

[Optional] B. Driving While Intoxicated as Malicious Act When Driver Disregards Dangerous Consequences. The act of operating a motor vehicle while intoxicated may constitute an act of malice authorizing exemplary damages if performed under circumstances which disclose a conscious disregard of the probable dangerous consequences (*Taylor v. [Optional] C. [a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a demurrer to a complaint in a tort action where defendant claims that plaintiff's complaint does not state a cause of action for exemplary damages because it does not allege oppression, fraud, or malice but the complaint alleges that defendant consciously disregarded plaintiff's safety.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Statutory Definition of Malice

Civ. Code § 3294(c) defines "malice" as conduct that is intended by the defendant to cause injury to the plaintiff, or despicable conduct that is carried on by the defendant with reckless and conscious disregard of the safety or rights of others [Civ. Code § 3294(c)(1)]. This definition is for use in Civ. Code § 3294(a), which provides for punitive damages in any action other than one for breach of contract, when it is proven by clear and convincing evidence that the defendant has been guilty of malice, fraud, or oppression [Civ. Code § 3294(c)].

Prior to 1987 legislation amending Civ. Code § 3294(c), "malice," as applicable when a defendant's conduct was not intended to cause injury to the plaintiff, was defined as conduct that is carried on by the defendant with conscious disregard of the safety or rights of others. There was no requirement that the defendant's conduct be "despicable" or that the conduct be carried out with a "willful," as well as a conscious, disregard of the safety or rights of others. The earlier definition of malice applies in any action in which the trial commenced prior to January 1, 1988 [see Civ. Code § 3294(c)(1), (e)]. In actions in which the trial is commenced on or after January 1, 1988, malice must be established by "clear and convincing evidence" [see Civ. Code § 3294(a), (e)].

Both Taylor and Searle, cited as authority for the points in Paragraphs A and B, were decided prior to the 1980 enactment of Civ. Code § 3294(c). However, since the "conscious disregard" component of malice has been codified in Civ. Code § 3294(c), Taylor and Searle are still valid, insofar as they hold that a punitive damages claim can be pleaded by alleging conscious disregard of the safety of others. Under the 1987 amendment to Civ. Code § 3294, however, the plaintiff must also allege that the defendant's conduct was in willful, as well as in conscious, disregard of safety [Civ. Code § 3294(c)(1)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Willful and Conscious Disregard of Safety as Malice

Taylor v. Superior Court (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 890, 157 Cal. Rptr. 693, 598 P.2d 854 , decided prior to the 1980 addition of Civ. Code § 3294(c), was a personal injury action brought against an intoxicated driver in which punitive damages were sought. Defendant demurred contending that punitive damages could not be assessed against a negligent, intoxicated driver, at least in the absence of allegations to the effect that the driver actually intended to cause an accident or injury. The trial court sustained the demurrer insofar as it sought recovery of punitive damages and plaintiff filed mandate proceedings. Plaintiff's complaint alleged, in pertinent part, that the car driven by defendant collided with plaintiff's car, causing plaintiff serious injuries, that defendant is and for a substantial period of time had been an alcoholic well aware of the serious nature of his alcoholism and of his inclination to drive a motor vehicle while under the influence of alcohol, and that defendant was aware of the dangerousness of his driving while intoxicated. The complaint further alleged that defendant had previously caused a serious accident while driving under the influence of alcohol and that defendant had been arrested and convicted for drunken driving on numerous prior occasions. Based on these allegations, plaintiff asserted that defendant acted with a conscious disregard of plaintiff's safety.

In reversing the trial court's decision, the Supreme Court noted that defendant's successful demurrer was based on plaintiff's failure to allege any actual intent of defendant to harm plaintiff or others. The Court stated that in order to justify the imposition of punitive damages, defendant must act with the intent to vex, injure, or annoy, or with a conscious disregard of the plaintiff's rights. Additionally, the Court expressed its concurrence with the Searle court's observation that a conscious disregard of the safety of others may constitute malice within the meaning of former Civ. Code § 3294 (now see Civ. Code § 3294(c)) [see discussion in § 64.22[3][a]]. In order to justify an award of punitive damages on this basis, the Court noted that plaintiff must establish that the defendant was aware of the probable dangerous consequences of his conduct and that he willfully and deliberately failed to avoid the consequences. The Court held that plaintiff's complaint contained sufficient allegations from which it could reasonably be concluded that defendant consciously disregarded the safety of others.

The factual background of G.D. Searle & Co. v. Superior Court (1975) 49 Cal. App. 3d 22, 122 Cal. Rptr. 218 , is discussed in § 64.21[3][b]. In reviewing the allegations of the complaint, the court noted that the phrase a "conscious disregard" has been used to describe the highly culpable state of mind which justifies an exemplary award. The court suggested that conscious disregard of safety was an appropriate description of the animus malus which may justify an exemplary damage award when nondeliberate injury is alleged. Since plaintiff's complaint failed to allege, directly or in equivalent terms, that defendant either intended to injure consumers of its product or acted in conscious disregard of their safety, it failed to plead malice as a ground for exemplary damages.

[b] Driving While Intoxicated as Malicious Act When Driver Disregards Dangerous Consequences

The factual background of Taylor v. Superior Court (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 890, 157 Cal. Rptr. 693, 598 P.2d 854 , is discussed in § 64.41[3][a]. The Court concluded that the act of operating a motor vehicle while intoxicated may constitute an act of malice under former Civ. Code § 3294 [now see Civ. Code § 3294(c)] if performed under circumstances which disclose a conscious disregard of the probable dangerous consequences and held that plaintiff's complaint alleged a cause of action for punitive damages.

[c] Wanton and Reckless Misconduct as Conscious Disregard of Safety

In Nolin v. National Convenience Stores, Inc. (1979) 95 Cal. App. 3d 279, 157 Cal. Rptr. 32 , plaintiff sued for damages for injuries sustained in a slip and fall accident on defendant's premises. One of plaintiff's causes of action requested punitive damages on the basis that defendant's reckless, wanton, and intentional misconduct and its callous and conscious disregard for her safety had caused plaintiff injury. The jury awarded plaintiff punitive damages. On appeal, defendant contended that there was insufficient evidence to support the giving of an instruction on punitive damages to the jury since, as a matter of law, defendant's conduct did not meet the criteria set forth in former Civ. Code § 3294 [now see Civ. Code § 3294(a)] of oppression, fraud, or malice. Plaintiff claimed that she fell because of the presence of foreign substances consisting mainly of oil and gasoline near the self-service gasoline pumps on defendant's premises. According to the evidence, defendant was interested in a minimum-expense operation. It employed no maintenance personnel, did not have the necessary equipment for handling oil sold to customers, and operated the store with only one clerk at a time. The employees who observed the danger around the pump area communicated it to supervisory personnel who did not take any steps to remedy the situation.

Affirming the judgment, the court of appeal noted that the case involved an unintentional tort in which malice was the basis for the exemplary damage award. According to the court, conduct classified only as unintentional carelessness, while it may constitute negligence or even gross negligence will not support an award of punitive damages. However, the court pointed out that in Donnelly v. Southern Pac. Co. (1941) 18 Cal. 2d 863, 869-870, 118 P.2d 465 , the Court stated that a nonintentional tort can have the characteristics of an intentional tort to the extent of embracing the concept of malice as used in former Civ. Code § 3294 [now see Civ. Code § 3294(a)] when the person, with no intent to cause harm intentionally performs an act so unreasonable and dangerous that he knows or should know that it is highly probable that harm will result. Such a tort is most accurately designated as wanton and reckless misconduct. The court stated that Donnelly's wanton and reckless misconduct standard for justifying an award of punitive damages in the case of an unintentional tort does not do violence to the requirement of evil motive nor does it authorize an award of punitive damages for recklessness alone. The evil motive for malice is found in an intention to perform an act that the actor knows or should know will very probably cause harm. The court noted that the Donnelly concept of wanton and reckless misconduct has also been described as a defendant's conduct which constitutes a conscious disregard of the plaintiff's rights or a conscious disregard of the safety of others. According to the court, all of these phrases used to define malice for an unintentional tort have the same meaning in announcing a rule of law that authorizes an award of punitive damages for a nonintentional tort if defendant's conduct that causes injury is of such severe or shocking character that it warrants the same treatment as that accorded to willful misconduct.

The court concluded that the evidence was amply sufficient to justify the jury's determination of malice and an award of punitive damages, since it showed that a dangerous condition existed around defendant's gas pumps causing a peril to both customers and employees of fire and slipping and falling. Defendant's established inattention to the danger showed a complete lack of concern regarding the harmful potential of the probability and likelihood of injury.

NOTE:

Whether wanton and reckless conduct will support an award of punitive damages is still an unresolved issue. First, the 1987 amendments to Civ. Code § 3294(c)(1), in which the definition of malice was changed from simply "conscious disregard" to "willful and conscious disregard," must be considered. Further, the cases construing the prior definition are not fully in harmony.

In G.D. Searle & Co. v. Superior Court (1975) 49 Cal. App. 3d 22, 31, 122 Cal. Rptr. 218 , the court surveyed the numerous terms used to describe malice in the case law, and noted that in dictum the Court in Donnelly v. Southern Pac. Co. (1941) 18 Cal. 2d 863, 869-870, 118 P.2d 465 , described wanton and reckless misconduct as synonymous with the malice justifying an exemplary damage award. The court in Searle stated that the term "reckless disregard" and "reckless misconduct," used in isolation, distort the spirit of Civ. Code § 3294. The Searle court did not indicate whether combining the term "reckless misconduct" with the term "wanton" adequately describes the state of mind justifying exemplary damages. However, in formulating a new phrase, "conscious disregard of safety," [now see Civ. Code § 3294(c)(1)] as an appropriate description of the malice which may justify punitive damages when nondeliberate injury is alleged, it impliedly rejects the Donnelly Court's term "wanton and reckless misconduct" as a sufficient description of malice.

NOTE:

In Peterson v. Superior Court (1982) 31 Cal. 3d 147, 158, 181 Cal. Rptr. 784, 642 P.2d 1305 , the California Supreme Court cited Nolin for its language that nonintentional conduct may support an award of punitive damages if the defendant intentionally performs an act for which he or she knows or should know that it is highly probable that harm will result (emphasis added). Subsequently, in Bell v. Sharp Cabrillo Hosp. (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 1034, 260 Cal. Rptr. 886 , the court of appeal noted a conflict between this language in Peterson and Nolin and the language in other cases, first used in Taylor v. Superior Court (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 890, 895-896, 157 Cal. Rptr. 693, 598 P.2d 854 [see § 64.41[3][a]], that conscious disregard requires that the defendant be aware of the probable dangerous consequences of the conduct and willfully and deliberately fail to avoid those consequences [see also Hasson v. Ford Motor Co. (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 388, 402, 185 Cal. Rptr. 654, 650 P.2d 1171 ; Penner v. Falk (1984) 153 Cal. App. 3d 858, 867, 200 Cal. Rptr. 661] . The standard enunciated in the Taylor line was labeled "subjective awareness," or a requirement that the defendant actually know of the risk involved. The standard of Peterson and Nolin was labeled as "constructive awareness," it being sufficient if the defendant should have known of the risk associated with wanton and reckless misconduct [Bell v. Sharp Cabrillo Hosp. (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 1034, 1043-1046, 260 Cal. Rptr. 886] . The court found in unnecessary to resolve the apparent conflict, finding on the facts of the case that allegations that a hospital acted in conscious disregard of a patient's safety by granting staff privileges to a negligent surgeon to be insufficient under either standard [Bell v. Sharp Cabrillo Hosp. (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 1034, 1046-1048, 260 Cal. Rptr. 886] .

There is one path by which, perhaps, subjective and constructive awareness may be harmonized. Under the subjective-awareness standard, malice and oppression based on conscious disregard may be inferred from the circumstances of the defendant's conduct [see J.R. Norton Co. v. General Teamsters, Warehousemen & Helpers Union, Local 890 (1989) 208 Cal. App. 3d 430, 444, 256 Cal. Rptr. 246] . If the defendant's conduct is so wanton and reckless as to suggest the application of the constructive-awareness standard, it might be inferred from the nature of the conduct that the defendant actually knew of the risk involved.

This approach finds support in the facts and circumstances of Taylor. In holding that an intoxicated person acts in conscious disregard of the rights and safety of others by operating a motor vehicle while in such a state, the Court was not concerned with whether the driver was actually aware (as required by the subjective-awareness standard) or merely should have been aware (as is sufficient under the constructive-awareness standard) of the risk. Rather, the court viewed it as a "commonly understood risk" [Taylor v. Superior Court (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 890, 895-897, 157 Cal. Rptr. 693, 598 P.2d 854] . In other words, it was applying common sense to infer actual knowledge from the circumstances of the case. Thus the constructive-awareness standard might be viewed as an extension of the subjective-awareness standard, that one may be presumed to have actual knowledge of the probable injurious consequences of wanton and reckless conduct.

[d] Disregard of Public Safety by Manufacturer of Defectively Designed Product as Malice

Grimshaw v. Ford Motor Co. (1981) 119 Cal. App. 3d 757, 174 Cal. Rptr. 348 , arose out of an accident in which the driver of an automobile (the "Pinto") manufactured by defendant was killed, and a passenger was seriously injured. The passenger and the heirs of the driver brought an action against defendant manufacturer based on a theory of strict liability for design defect. The driver and passenger were injured when the automobile caught fire after being hit from behind. The evidence at trial showed that defendant's top management had been aware, by conducting safety engineering tests, that several design features of the Pinto would expose consumers to serious injury or death in 20 or 30 mile-per-hour collisions. Defendant's top management was also aware of the ease and low cost with which improvements in the design could be made, but on the basis of a cost-benefit analysis, and because the Pinto was a rush project, defendant made a conscious decision to defer improvements on the defective design.

The trial court held that since plaintiff heirs had brought an action for wrongful death, they could not recover punitive damages. Plaintiff passenger, however, was awarded punitive damages of $125 million, following a jury trial. On defendant's motion for new trial, the trial court reduced the punitive damages award to $3.5 million, with plaintiff's consent, as a condition of denying the motion. Defendant appealed from the judgment and from the trial court's denial of its motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment. Defendant argued that punitive damages are inappropriate to an unintentional tort such as strict products liability because "malice," as used in Civ. Code § 3294, requires an intent to injure the person harmed. The court rejected defendant's argument and held that malice also includes a conscious disregard of the probability that the actor's conduct will result in injury to others (119 Cal. App. 3d 757, 808) . The court stated that this definition of malice includes conduct showing callous and conscious disregard of public safety by the manufacturer of a defectively designed, mass-produced product. The court held that punitive damages are particularly appropriate in such cases because they are the most effective remedy for consumer protection against defective products (119 Cal. App. 3d 757, 810) . The court also held that there was substantial evidence in the instant case to support a finding of malice and corporate responsibility for malicious conduct (119 Cal. App. 3d 757, 812, 814) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Willful and Conscious Disregard of Safety as Malice

In Penner v. Falk (1984) 153 Cal. App. 3d 858, 200 Cal. Rptr. 661 , a tenant brought a negligence action against his landlords for personal injuries sustained in a common area of the premises. The court of appeal reversed a judgment dismissing his complaint after a demurrer was sustained without leave to amend, holding, inter alia, that the complaint pleaded facts sufficient to support an award of punitive damages for malice. The court cited Civ. Code § 3294(c)(1) as defining malice to include conscious disregard for the safety of others, and stated that, to support an award on this basis, a plaintiff must establish that the defendant was aware of the probable dangerous consequences of his or her conduct, yet willfully and deliberately failed to avoid those consequences. In the case at bench, this standard was sufficiently met by alleging that the landlords knew of the dangerous condition of the premises for two years, were capable of taking curative measures, yet failed to do so (153 Cal. App. 3d 858, 867) .

In Hilliard v. A.H. Robins Co. (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 374, 196 Cal. Rptr. 117 , plaintiff sought an award of punitive damages from defendant based on her claim that in manufacturing and marketing an intrauterine device, defendant had acted with conscious disregard of the safety of users of the device by inadequately testing the device, and by failing to make the devices visible under X rays. The trial court directed a verdict for defendant on the punitive damages claim after the jury returned a verdict for plaintiff in the compensatory damage part of the bifurcated trial. The court of appeal reversed, holding that the jury could have concluded from plaintiff's substantial, competent, admissible, and relevant evidence that all of the factual elements necessary for punitive damages were proved to their satisfaction by a preponderance of the evidence: that defendant acted with conscious disregard for the rights or safety of others, that it was aware of the probable dangerous consequences of its conduct, and that defendant willfully and deliberately failed to avoid these consequences (148 Cal. App. 3d 374, 398) .

Seimon v. Southern Pac. Transp. Co. (1977) 67 Cal. App. 3d 600, 136 Cal. Rptr. 787 , was an action for damages for personal injuries to a truck driver received when his truck was struck by a train at defendant's railroad crossing. At the conclusion of plaintiff's case, the trial court granted defendant's motion for nonsuit as to the willful misconduct count. On appeal, plaintiff charged that it was error for the trial court to grant a nonsuit so as to remove the issue of punitive damages from the jury's consideration.

The court of appeal noted that animus malus or evil motive is the central element of the malice which justifies an award of punitive damages. Using the Searle court's description of conscious disregard of safety as an appropriate description of the animus malus requisite to a punitive damages award, the court examined plaintiff's allegation that defendant failed to provide adequate crossing protection. It noted that the record was filled with evidence illustrating the peculiarly dangerous character of the railroad crossing at which plaintiff was injured. The train traffic was light but the automobile traffic was much heavier. The crossing in the direction from which plaintiff approached was a blind one with two buildings on either side of the street but there were no visual warnings of oncoming trains. This danger was increased by the 59 degree angle at which the tracks intersected the street, and by the somewhat confusing street pattern at the crossing. The crossing angle made it more difficult for the motorist to check for train traffic and to judge the speed of approaching trains and the street pattern at the crossing tended to divert the motorist's attention from the tracks. Finally, the buildings before the crossing reduced both audible and visual signals from oncoming trains. Prior to plaintiff's accident, two other motorists approaching from the same direction as plaintiff had been hit by trains at the crossing. The court noted that plaintiff also established that defendant for some time had been aware of the highly dangerous nature of the crossing but, in spite of this knowledge, had failed to take any corrective action.

The court concluded that this evidence added up to more than benign neglect by defendant, and that the jury could have decided from this evidence that defendant had displayed a conscious and callous indifference to, or disregard of, probable harm to motorists at the crossing. The court held that it could not say, as a matter of law, that there was such a paucity of evidence on the issue of malice as to preclude the jury from considering the propriety of an award of punitive damages against defendant. Consequently, the court reversed the trial court's decision and concluded that a retrial should be had on the issue of punitive damages.

Peterson v. Superior Court (1982) 31 Cal. 3d 147, 181 Cal. Rptr. 784, 642 P.2d 1305 , was a proceeding for a writ of mandate commanding the trial court to grant petitioner/plaintiff's motion for leave to file an amended complaint to allege facts justifying an award of punitive damages in an action by the passenger of a vehicle against its drunk driver. In granting the writ, the Supreme Court held that the rule establishing that punitive damages are recoverable from an intoxicated driver, set forth in Taylor v. Superior Court (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 890, 892, 157 Cal. Rptr. 693, 598 P.2d 854 [see § 64.41[3][b]], applied retroactively to accidents that occurred and complaints that were filed prior to the judicial decision establishing the rule, and disapproved, to the extent of any inconsistency, Mau v. Superior Court (1980) 101 Cal. App. 3d 875, 877-882, 161 Cal. Rptr. 895 .

The proposed amended complaint alleged that after consuming alcohol, defendant drove with plaintiff in the vehicle at speeds in excess of 100 miles per hour, that plaintiff objected to the high speed and demanded that defendant properly control the vehicle, that the parties stopped at a restaurant where defendant consumed additional alcoholic beverages, that they returned to the car and that defendant then drove at a speed well in excess of 75 miles per hour, lost control of the vehicle, and injured plaintiff, and that defendant drove the vehicle with knowledge that probable serious injury to other persons would result and in conscious disregard of the safety of plaintiff (31 Cal. 3d 147, 162) . The Court stated that the gravamen of the proposed complaint was that defendant became intoxicated and thereafter drove a car while in that condition, despite his knowledge of the safety hazard he created thereby, and that the proposed complaint stated facts sufficient to support an award of punitive damages (31 Cal. 3d 147, 163) .

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a demurrer to a complaint for exemplary damages in a tort action where defendant claims that plaintiff has not alleged sufficiently the grounds for defendant employer being held liable for its agent's acts but plaintiff alleged that a defendant had authorized its agent's acts.

Where appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used in opposition to a demurrer supported by the points and authorities in § 64.24.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Allegation That Person Acted With Corporation's Permission and Consent as Sufficient for Exemplary Damage Purposes

The factual background of O'Hara v. Western Seven Trees Corp. (1977) 75 Cal. App. 3d 798, 142 Cal. Rptr. 487 , is discussed in § 64.22[3][a]. On appeal, the corporate defendants contended that no facts were alleged to support punitive damages against them. However, plaintiff alleged that the misrepresentations were made by persons who acted with the permission and consent of all the defendants. According to the court of appeal, for the purpose of meeting a general demurrer, this was a sufficient allegation that the corporations had authorized their agent's acts. Since a corporation is liable for punitive damages when it authorizes the wrongful act, the court reversed the trial court's judgment sustaining defendant's general demurrer.

NOTE:

O'Hara was decided before the enactment of Civ. Code § 3294(c) in 1980. However, one of the bases of an employer's liability for punitive damages for acts of an employee of the employer is that the employer authorized or ratified the wrongful conduct for which the damages are awarded. Because O'Hara gives an example of allegations which show authorization, it is still good authority for the point in this form.

§ 64.43 Opposing Demurrer to Complaint for Exemplary Damages [Civ. Code § 3294] in Tort Action--Exemplary Damages Award Can Be Based on Conduct in Employment Capacity by Employee Having Discretion to Make Important Decisions as Acting in Managerial Capacity

[Caption. See § 64.40.]

DEFENDANT EMPLOYER'S DEMURRER SHOULD BE OVERRULED BECAUSE EXEMPLARY DAMAGES CAN BE ASSESSED AGAINST AN EMPLOYER BASED ON CONDUCT BY AN EMPLOYEE WHO HAS SUFFICIENT DISCRETION TO MAKE DECISIONS THAT WILL DETERMINE EMPLOYER'S POLICY, AS LONG AS THE EMPLOYEE WAS ACTING IN EMPLOYMENT CAPACITY WHEN CONDUCT OCCURRED.

A. Conduct in Employment Capacity Supports Award. In performing, ratifying, or approving malicious conduct, the conduct of one acting in a managerial capacity, while acting as the organization's representative, can be the basis for an award of exemplary damages against the employer (College Hosp., Inc. v. Superior Court (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 704, 723, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 898, 882 P.2d 894).

B. Employee With Decision Making Discretion as Acting in Managerial Capacity. The determination of whether or not an employee acts in a managerial capacity does not hinge necessarily on his or her level in the hierarchy of the employer's organization, but rather on the degree of discretion the employee possesses in making decisions that will ultimately determine the employer's policy (Egan v. Mutual of Omaha Ins. Co. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 809, 822-823, 157 Cal. Rptr. 482, 598 P.2d 452).

[Optional] C. These points and authorities may be submitted by a plaintiff in opposition to a demurrer to a complaint seeking punitive damages in a tort action, when the defendant was the employer of the tortfeasor and claims it is not liable for punitive damages based on the employee's conduct. The defendant's contention opposed by this form is that the tortfeasor was not in a position exercising policymaking authority, and therefore is not a person whose conduct can be the basis of a punitive damages award against the employer.

Paragraph A argues that the employee's conduct in ratifying, performing, or approving the alleged malicious conduct was done in his or capacity as the employer's representative, and so may be the basis for a punitive damages award [see College Hosp., Inc. v. Superior Court (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 704, 723, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 898, 882 P.2d 894] . Paragraph B may be used to argue that the tortfeasor acted in a "managerial capacity" and that therefore the employer can be liable for punitive damages based on the tortfeasor's conduct.

Optional Paragraph C may be used if the employer is a corporation, in which case plaintiff must establish that the tortfeasor (or the person who hired the tortfeasor with advance knowledge of the employee's unfitness, and with conscious disregard of the rights and safety of others, or who authorized or ratified the wrongful conduct) was an officer, director, or managing agent of the corporation [Civ. Code § 3294(b)].

Because of the difference between "managerial capacity" and "managing agent," counsel should be sure to use the latter phrase when the defendant is a corporation [compare Egan v. Mutual of Omaha Ins. Co. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 809, 822-823, 157 Cal. Rptr. 482, 598 P.2d 452 (under law before 1980 amendment to Civ. Code § 3294, employer could be liable based on conduct of employee who had authority to decide disposition of insurance claims without supervision); with White v. Ultramar, Inc. (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 563, 566-567, 88 Cal. Rptr. 2d 19, 981 P.2d 944 (under 1980 amendment to Civ. Code § 3294(b), corporate employee who exercises substantial independent authority and judgment in his or her corporate decisionmaking so that decisions ultimately determine corporate policy is "managing agent" whose actions may support corporation's liability for punitive damages)].

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts supporting the conclusion that the employer's liability is based on conduct by a person who had the authority to make policy for the defendant employer, at least to an extent sufficient to survive a demurrer.

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, this form of points and authorities may be used in opposition to a demurrer supported by the points and authorities in § 64.24.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Conduct in Employment Capacity Supports Award

In College Hosp., Inc. v. Superior Court (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 704, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 898, 882 P.2d 894 , plaintiff's complaint had alleged that College Hospital (hospital) was liable for injuries resulting from plaintiff's seduction by a member of the hospital staff while plaintiff was a patient. Plaintiff moved to amend the complaint (pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 425.13(a)) to allege a claim for punitive damages. The trial court permitted the amendment, and hospital petitioned for a writ of mandate to set aside that ruling. The court of appeal denied the writ, primarily on the ground that the motion under § 425.13(a) required only a prima facie showing regarding the punitive damages claim, without any weighing of the evidence. The Supreme Court granted review, and reversed.

The Court agreed with plaintiff's contention regarding the requisite showing under § 425.13(a), but held that plaintiff had not made that showing based on the allegations of seduction by a member of the hospital staff. The Court held that, in order to hold an employer liable for punitive damages based on conduct of an employee, that conduct (either performing, approving, or ratifying the malicious conduct) must have been as the organization's representative, not in some other capacity (8 Cal. 4th 704, 723) . Because plaintiff could not allege that the staff member's conduct was within the scope of his employment, hospital could not be liable for punitive damages even if he did qualify as a "managing agent" under Civ. Code § 3294(b) (8 Cal. 4th 704, 724) .

[b] Employee With Decision-Making Discretion as Acting in Managerial Capacity

In Egan v. Mutual of Omaha Ins. Co. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 809, 157 Cal. Rptr. 482, 598 P.2d 452 , plaintiff sued an insurance company and two of its employees, Segal and McEachen for compensatory and punitive damages for breach of a health and disability insurance policy. The policy provided for lifetime benefits if plaintiff became totally disabled as a result of an accidental injury or sickness sufficiently severe to cause confinement to insured's residence. Benefits for a nonconfining illness were payable for three months only. After a work-related injury, plaintiff received payments under the policy for a three-month period. Later plaintiff filed a supplemental claim stating he was unable to return to work. McEachen, an agency claims manager, reviewed plaintiff's records and later visited plaintiff at home. McEachen testified he merely discussed contradictions in the claim form but plaintiff testified that McEachen informed him no further benefits were due because he was not disabled but merely unable to find work. Plaintiff submitted another claim to defendant insurance agency after surgery on his back. The physician's portion of the claim form included an estimate by the surgeon that plaintiff might be able to return to work in three to six months. The claim was assigned to defendant Segal. Segal never attempted to contact plaintiff's physicians although such efforts would ordinarily have been made by a claim adjuster. Based on Segal's review of medical records, plaintiff's condition was reclassified from injury to nonconfining illness. Segal visited plaintiff telling him he was suffering from an illness not an injury and giving him a check for the three months maximum disability payments for a nonconfining illness. Segal testified that he acted at the direction of a higher authority although he could not recall who directed him and the defendant insurance company's files contained no written directive to him. The trial court in directing a verdict against defendants, ruled as a matter of law that defendants' failure to have plaintiff examined by a doctor of their choice or to consult with plaintiff's treating physicians violated the covenant of good faith and fair dealing. The jury awarded plaintiff general and punitive damages against all three defendants. On appeal, defendant insurance company asserted that the actions of McEachen and Segal could not be imputed to the company for the purpose of exemplary damages since neither could be considered managerial employees because neither was involved in high-level policy making. The Supreme Court stated that the determination of whether employees act in a managerial capacity does not hinge necessarily on their level in the corporate hierarchy. According to the Court, the critical inquiry is the degree of discretion the employees possess in making decisions that will ultimately determine corporate policy. The Court stated that when employees dispose of insureds' claims with little, if any, supervision, they possess sufficient discretion for the law to impute their actions concerning those claims to the corporation. The Court held that the authority vested in McEachen and Segal was sufficient to justify the imposition of punitive damages against the insurance company. The record demonstrated that they exercised broad discretion in the disposition of plaintiff's claim and the authority exercised by McEachen and Segal necessarily resulted in the ad hoc formulation of policy. The Court also noted that it was concerned with an insurance company dealing with disability insurance, not just any corporation, and that to plaintiff, the claims representatives' actions were actions of defendant. Defendant insurance company should not be allowed to insulate itself from liability by giving an employee a nonmanagerial title and relegating to him crucial policy decisions [quoting concurring and dissenting opinion in prior case]. The Supreme Court reversed as to the individual defendants since they were the insurance company's agents and not parties to the insurance contract and hence not subject to the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. The Court affirmed as to the compensatory damage award against the company but reversed as to the punitive damages award on the ground that it was excessive as a matter of law (24 Cal. 3d 809, 822-823) .

NOTE:

Under Civ. Code § 3294(b), enacted by 1980 legislation, an employer cannot be liable for punitive damages unless the employer had advance knowledge of the unfitness of the employee and employed him or her with a conscious disregard of the rights or safety of others or authorized or ratified the wrongful conduct for which the damages are awarded or was personally guilty of oppression, fraud, or malice [Civ. Code § 3294(b)]. In addition, with respect to a corporate employer, the advance knowledge and conscious disregard, authorization, ratification, or act of oppression, fraud, or malice must be on the part of an officer, director, or managing agent of the corporation [Civ. Code § 3294(b)]. These statutory limitations should not affect the viability of Egan in cases involving non-corporate employers, but in cases involving corporate employers the use of the term "managing agent" is now governed by the standard established by the California Supreme Court in 1999 in White v. Ultramar, Inc. (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 563, 566-567, 88 Cal. Rptr. 2d 19, 981 P.2d 944 [see § 64.43[3][c]].

[c] Policymaking Authority Defines Managing Agent

In White v. Ultramar, Inc. (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 563, 88 Cal. Rptr. 2d 19, 981 P.2d 944 , the plaintiff, the former employee of a convenience store, brought an action for wrongful termination against his former corporate employer based on the actions of the supervisory employee who was primarily responsible for his termination. The defendant argued that the plaintiff was terminated for taking soda in a store cup without paying for it, in violation of company policy, while plaintiff alleged that he was terminated in retaliation for testifying at the unemployment hearing of another former employee. At trial, the jury found for the plaintiff and awarded compensatory and punitive damages, and the trial court added an award of attorney's fees. The court of appeal reversed the award of attorney's fees, but otherwise affirmed. The court of appeal held that the punitive damages award was appropriate under Civ. Code § 3294(b), concluding that the ability to hire and fire employees renders a supervisory employee a "managing agent" under that statute. The Supreme Court granted review limited to the question of the entitlement to punitive damages.

The Supreme Court affirmed the award of punitive damages, but disagreed with the court of appeal's conclusion that the ability to hire and fire employees is sufficient to render a supervisory employee a "managing agent." Instead, the Supreme Court held that the "managing agent" of a corporation for purposes of establishing an entitlement to exemplary damages under Civ. Code § 3294(b) includes only those corporate employees who exercise substantial independent authority and judgment in their corporate decisionmaking so that their decisions ultimately determine corporate policy (21 Cal. 4th 563, 566-567) . The Court concluded that when the legislature amended Civ. Code § 3294 in 1980, they intended to limit the liability of corporate employers for punitive damages in that fashion, in accordance with the Supreme Court's construction of the statute as it existed at the time of the amendment. The Court also noted that the legislature placed the term "managing agent" next to the terms "officer" and "director," suggesting that a managing agent must be more than a mere supervisory employee (21 Cal. 4th 563, 572-573) . As the Court noted, equating a managing agent with a supervisor would effectively render a corporate employer liable for punitive damages in most employment cases (21 Cal. 4th 563, 575) . The Supreme Court then applied the standard to the case before it and held that the supervisory employee who fired the plaintiff was a managing agent, because she had responsibility for managing eight stores and at least 65 employees, which was a significant amount of the employing corporation's business (21 Cal. 4th 563, 577) .

In Kelly-Zurian v. Wohl Shoe Co. (1994) 22 Cal. App. 4th 397, 27 Cal. Rptr. 2d 457 , plaintiff alleged that she had been sexually harassed by her supervisor, and sought to recover damages both from the supervisor and from his corporate employer. The jury found the supervisor liable and awarded plaintiff $125,000 in compensatory damages, and found that the supervisor had acted with oppression and malice, but exonerated the employer. The trial court granted plaintiff's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict against the employer for compensatory damages, but denied her motion for a new trial against the employer on the issue of punitive damages. All parties appealed, and the court of appeal affirmed the trial court's denial of the new trial motion concerning punitive damages against the employer (22 Cal. App. 4th 397, 422) .

The court of appeal noted that the trial court had mistakenly believed that authorization or ratification was required before punitive damages could be awarded against a corporation, even if the wrongful conduct was by an officer, director, or managing agent (22 Cal. App. 4th 397, 420-421) . Although this is not true--Civ. Code § 3294(b) does not require additional authorization or ratification in such a situation--the court held that there was no evidence that could have been the basis for a jury finding that the supervisor was a managing agent of the employer (22 Cal. App. 4th 397, 421) . The evidence that the supervisor was the highest-ranking employee in southern California, and had the power to control plaintiff's employment with the power to fire her, was held insufficient to establish that the supervisor was a managing agent. The court characterized that evidence as merely establishing his status as supervisor. Instead, the court relied on the evidence that the supervisor could not change or establish corporate policy in southern California to conclude that he was not a "managing agent," and therefore that his conduct could not be the basis of a punitive damages award against the corporate employer (22 Cal. App. 4th 397, 421-422) .

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a demurrer to a complaint when the defendant claims that the plaintiff's complaint does not state a cause of action for damages for loss of consortium because the plaintiff was not entitled to bring such an action, but the complaint alleges that the plaintiff was married to the person whose society and comfort the plaintiff has been deprived of.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 64.25.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Loss of Consortium Is Actionable

In Rodriguez v. Bethlehem Steel Corp. (1974) 12 Cal. 3d 382, 115 Cal. Rptr. 765, 525 P.2d 669 , plaintiffs, husband and wife, sued defendant, husband's employer, for damages. Plaintiff wife's cause of action was loss of consortium. As a result of an accident he sustained at work, husband was totally paralyzed in both legs and in his body below the mid-point of the chest, and partially paralyzed in one of his arms. Because he needed assistance in every activity of daily living, wife gave up her job to care for him around the clock. Plaintiff wife alleged that she was under physical and psychological strain, and that both their lives had been ruined by the accident, in that the injuries were permanent, and the couple, in their early twenties, were unable to have children. Defendant demurred to plaintiff wife's cause of action, on the ground that no recovery for any such loss is permitted in California. The trial court severed plaintiff wife's cause of action, sustained the demurrer, and dismissed that cause of action. The court of appeal affirmed the dismissal. Plaintiff wife appealed.

The California Supreme Court reversed. The Court overruled previous case law and held that each spouse has a cause of action for loss of consortium caused by a negligent or intentional injury to the other spouse by a third party (12 Cal. 3d 382, 408) . In its lengthy and compassionate analysis the Court explained that although loss of consortium may have physical consequences, it is principally a form of mental suffering (12 Cal. 3d 382, 401) . The concept of consortium includes not only loss of support or services, but also such elements as love, companionship, affection, society, sexual relations, solace, and more. The Court explained that with regard to each of these elements, the interest sought to be protected is personal to plaintiff wife, so that to compensate her for damage to that interest cannot result in double recovery if plaintiff husband is awarded damages for his own losses relating to those elements (12 Cal. 3d 382, 405) .

[b] Damages for Loss Sustained After Anticipated Death of Spouse Recoverable

In Boeken v. Philip Morris USA, Inc. (2010) 48 Cal. 4th 788, 108 Cal. Rptr. 3d 806, 230 P.3d 342 , plaintiff was the widow of a man who died from lung cancer in 2002 after smoking cigarettes since 1957. In 2000, plaintiff's husband sued a tobacco company for wrongfully causing his cancer and won a substantial damages award, although he died while an appeal of that award was pending. Also in 2000, plaintiff filed a separate action against the tobacco company for loss of consortium in which she sought damages for the "permanent deprivation" of her husband's loss of companionship and affection. About four months after filing, for reasons not disclosed in the record, plaintiff dismissed that action with prejudice. After her husband's death, plaintiff filed a wrongful death action against the tobacco company, again seeking compensation for the loss of her husband's companionship and affection. The trial court sustained defendant's demurrer on the grounds that plaintiff's wrongful death claim was barred by the doctrine of res judicata because plaintiff's previous loss of consortium action had involved the same primary right. The court of appeal affirmed, concluding that because plaintiff's potential damages in the loss of consortium included future loss of companionship and affection between the time of her husband's death and the time when he would have died of natural causes, and these were the same damages plaintiff sought in the wrongful death action, the dismissal with prejudice of the loss of consortium action constituted a res judicata that precluded plaintiff from relitigating the same injury. Plaintiff appealed.

The California Supreme Court affirmed. The Court concluded that because the complaint in the loss of consortium action alleged that defendant's wrongful conduct "permanently deprived" plaintiff of her husband's companionship and affection, the primary right not to be wrongfully deprived of spousal companionship and affection, and the corresponding duty not to wrongfully deprive a person of such, were the same as in plaintiff's wrongful death action. Given that plaintiff had dismissed the earlier action with prejudice, plaintiff was precluded from relitigating the same cause of action under the wrongful death statute (48 Cal. 4th 788, 798-799) . The Court also rejected plaintiff's argument that she could not have recovered damages in the loss of consortium action for loss of companionship and affection suffered after her husband's death. Noting the general rule that tort damages may include prospective damages that are sufficiently certain to occur, the Court held that a plaintiff spouse may recover damages for lost companionship and affection resulting from the anticipated premature death of the other spouse, if that premature death is sufficiently certain to occur and is caused by the injuries sustained due to the defendant's wrongful conduct. These prospective damages for the period after the injured spouse's death are to be based on the life expectancy that the injured spouse would have had if the injury had never occurred (48 Cal. 4th 788, 800) . The Court noted that plaintiff had specifically alleged in the loss of consortium action that she would be deprived of her husband's services and companionship in the future and that she had been "permanently deprived" of his consortium, presumably on the basis of the incurable nature of her husband's disease and the great likelihood of his premature death. These allegations were sufficient to bar plaintiff from seeking post-death loss of consortium damages in a subsequent wrongful death action (48 Cal. 4th 788, 800-801) .

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion to strike exemplary damage allegations in a case involving liability based solely on the defendant's participation in the market.

Counsel should insert facts and arguments into this form and any form that is used in combination with it to show the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel might include facts highlighting plaintiff's inability to pinpoint defendant as the manufacturer of the DES which her mother ingested, necessarily basing any liability of defendant solely on the participation in the market theory.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Exemplary Damages Not Available When Liability Based Solely on Participation in Market

In Magallanes v. Superior Court (1985) 167 Cal. App. 3d 878, 213 Cal. Rptr. 547 , plaintiff, suffering from cancer, brought an action to recover damages for injuries allegedly sustained by reason of her mother's ingestion of the drug diethylstilbestrol (DES) while plaintiff was in utero. Defendants were the alleged manufacturers and distributors of a substantial share of the DES available to plaintiff's mother. In addition to compensatory damages, plaintiff sought exemplary damages, alleging defendants acted with conscious disregard of the rights and safety of the general public. The trial court granted defendants' motions to strike the exemplary damage allegations. It granted plaintiff leave to move to amend to allege exemplary damages and suggested further discovery. After plaintiff's subsequent motion for reconsideration was heard and denied, she petitioned the court of appeal for writ of mandate to compel the trial court to vacate its order granting the motions to strike and to enter a new order denying the motions to strike.

After issuing an alternative writ of mandate, the court of appeal discharged it and denied the petition for peremptory writ of mandate. Plaintiff based defendants' liability on the market share theory articulated in Sindell v. Abbott Labs. (1980) 26 Cal. 3d 588, 163 Cal. Rptr. 132, 607 P.2d 924 . Under that theory, if plaintiff joins in the action the manufacturers of a substantial share of the DES that her mother might have taken, the burden of proof is shifted to defendants to demonstrate that they could not have made the substance that injured plaintiff. Compensatory damages are apportioned among defendants in accordance with the share each had of the appropriate market, unless any of them prove they could not have made the product which caused plaintiff's injuries. The court framed the issue as whether the rationale of Sindell for shifting the burden of proof of causation to the defendants, based on their share of the market, for the purpose of compensatory damages, should be applied to permit plaintiff to seek exemplary damages as well (167 Cal. App. 3d 878, 884) . Plaintiff relied on Morris v. Parke, Davis & Co. (C.D. Cal. 1983) 573 F. Supp. 1324 , which held that exemplary damages may be sought in a market share liability case controlled by California law. The court was not persuaded by Morris and its reliance on the doctrine of respondeat superior. While the market share rule of Sindell provides a logical and reasonable basis for awarding and apportioning compensatory damages, notwithstanding the inability of a plaintiff to identify the producer who supplied the injury-causing substance, the court said that significantly different considerations govern the imposition of exemplary damages. Exemplary damages are an individualized punishment and deterrent imposed on a particular and identified defendant whose malicious or oppressive acts are the proximate cause of the injury sustained by the plaintiff. The court discussed the many public policy considerations pertinent to awarding exemplary damages under a market share theory of liability, among them, the preservation of the rights of future claimants to compensatory damages, the potential for overkill, the punitive effect of numerous and substantial compensatory awards to present and future claimants, the attenuated deterrent effect of long belated awards, and the inherent unfairness of exemplary damages in the market share scheme. It concluded that these considerations precluded exemplary damages in market share liability cases. The court held that in order to impose exemplary damages, plaintiff must first identify the defendant who supplied the DES that was ingested by plaintiff's mother and caused the damages complained of, and also prove that that defendant acted with malice or oppression (167 Cal. App. 3d 878, 887-889) .

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion to strike the exemplary damages allegation in an action by a public entity.

Counsel should insert facts and arguments into this form and any form that is used in combination with it to show the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Exemplary Damages Not Recoverable by Public Entity

City of Los Angeles v. Shpegel-Dimsey, Inc. (1988) 198 Cal. App. 3d 1009, 244 Cal. Rptr. 507 , was an action by a city against a plastics company to recover firefighting costs and damages for injury to its property from a fire originating on the defendant's premises. The defendant had openly stored scrap plastics on its property in violation of the local fire code and had been cited numerous times for the violations, but failed to correct them. The fire escaped from the premises and as a result utility poles, conductors, and fixtures, owned and maintained by plaintiff, were damaged. Judgment was for the defendant, and the city appealed.

The court of appeal reversed on the ground that, although the city could not recover its costs for abating a public nuisance, as such costs are not authorized by the nuisance statutes, or, under the then existing law, for suppressing a fire, it was entitled to bring an action for negligence based on the defendant's fire code violations (198 Cal. App. 3d 1009, 1020-1023) . The court, however, rejected the city's claim that it was entitled to punitive damages (198 Cal. App. 3d 1009, 1023) . The court said that there is no California authority whatsoever expressly permitting a public entity to seek the recovery of punitive damages and that there are sound bases for refusing to permit such recovery in the absence of express statutory authorization (198 Cal. App. 3d 1009, 1023) . After pointing out that, as Civ. Code § 3294(a) clearly states, punitive damages are recoverable "for the sake of example and by way of punishing the defendant," the court explained: (1) a private party has no means of punishing a tortfeasor other than an award of exemplary damages, whereas, in contrast, a municipality has at its command the full force of its police power, and, by ordinance, may impose fines or other penal remedies; and (2) Gov. Code § 818 bars any award of punitive damages against a public entity. Consequently, although there is symmetry in the law governing maintenance of an action for negligence, there would be asymmetry in the type of damages recoverable were a public entity permitted to seek an award of punitive damages. Thus, permitting a governmental entity to seek recovery of punitive damages would raise serious questions of equal protection of the laws (198 Cal. App. 3d 1009, 1023) . The court quoted extensively from McAllister v. South Coast Air Quality Mgmt. Dist. (1986) 183 Cal. App. 3d 653, 228 Cal. Rptr. 351 , which upheld the constitutionality of Gov. Code § 818, and concluded that the public considerations quoted from that case do not support permitting a public entity to recover punitive damages from a private tortfeasor (198 Cal. App. 3d 1009, 1023-1025) . The court concluded that to permit a public entity to recover punitive damages for public injury from private tortfeasors while prohibiting a private party's recovery of those damages from a public entity clearly raises the spectre of a denial of equal protection of the laws (198 Cal. App. 3d 1009, 1026) .

DEFENDANT'S MOTION TO STRIKE THE EXEMPLARY DAMAGES ALLEGATIONS AND PRAYER SHOULD BE DENIED BECAUSE CIVIL CODE SECTION 3294(a) ALLOWS BOTH PRIVATE AND PUBLIC PLAINTIFFS TO RECOVER EXEMPLARY DAMAGES.

A. Civil Code Section 3294 Does Not Limit Recovery of Exemplary Damages to Private Plaintiffs. The language of Civil Code Section 3294(a) is unambiguous; it may not be read to limit recovery of exemplary damages to private plaintiffs (City of Sanger v. Superior Court (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 444, 449, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 436 ; Westlands Water Dist. v. Amoco Chem. Co. (9th Cir. 1991) 953 F.2d 1109, 1111 (applying California law)).

B. Purpose of Exemplary Damages Is Advanced Although Plaintiff Is Public Entity. Civil Code Section 3294(a) allows plaintiffs to recover exemplary damages "for the sake of example and by way of punishing the defendant." These purposes are advanced even if the party seeking exemplary damages is a public entity who has or could have punished the defendant through the exercise of its police power (City of Sanger v. Superior Court (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 444, 449, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 436).

C. Legislative Scheme That Allows Municipality to Recover Exemplary Damages While Denying Recovery of Exemplary Damages Against Municipality Is Not Denial of Equal Protection. A legislative scheme that allows both private and public parties to recover exemplary damages (see Civ. Code § 3294(a)) but protects public entities from liability for exemplary damages (see Gov. Code § 818) is not an unconstitutional denial of equal protection, because a rational basis exists for the distinction (City of Sanger v. Superior Court (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 444, 449-450, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 436 ; Westlands Water Dist. v. Amoco Chem. Co. (9th Cir. 1991) 953 F.2d 1109, 1111 (applying California law)).

D. California Supreme Court Would Not Follow City of Los Angeles. The decision in City of Los Angeles v. Shpegel-Dimsey, Inc. (1988) 198 Cal. App. 3d 1009, 244 Cal. Rptr. 507 , limiting Civil Code Section 3294(a) to private plaintiffs, should not be followed, because it is contrary to statutory language and public policy and would not be followed by the California Supreme Court (Westlands Water Dist. v. Amoco Chem. Co. (9th Cir. 1991) 953 F.2d 1109, 1111 (applying California law)).

CAUTION:

City of Los Angeles v. Shpegel-Dimsey, Inc. (1988) 198 Cal. App. 3d 1009, 244 Cal. Rptr. 507 , held that Civ. Code § 3294 does not allow a municipality to recover punitive damages. For a memorandum of points and authorities supporting a motion to strike an exemplary damages allegation from a public entity's complaint on the grounds of this decision, see § 64.61.

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion to strike a claim for exemplary damages in an action brought by a public entity. This form cites points and authorities in direct conflict with the arguments presented in support of the motion to strike in § 64.61.

Counsel should insert facts and arguments into the form and any form that is used in combination with it to show the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Civil Code Section 3294 Does Not Limit Recovery of Exemplary Damages to Private Plaintiffs

In City of Sanger v. Superior Court (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 444, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 436 , the City of Sanger sued several chemical and oil companies for negligence, nuisance, trespass, and product defect. The complaint included a claim for exemplary damages, on the grounds that the defendants had used or sold chemicals that contaminated the city's water system with knowledge, or reckless disregard, of the fact that the chemicals were toxic and dangerous to humans and would contaminate or destroy the city's property. Defendants moved for, and the trial court granted, judgment on the pleadings as to the exemplary damages claim, relying on the holding in City of Los Angeles v. Shpegel-Dimsey, Inc. (1988) 198 Cal. App. 3d 1009, 244 Cal. Rptr. 507 (discussed in § 64.61[3][a]), that a municipality cannot recover exemplary damages. The trial court denied the city's motion for reconsideration and the city appealed. The court of appeal refused to follow City of Los Angeles and issued a writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate its order granting the motion for judgment on the pleadings and to issue a new order denying the motion.

Civ. Code § 3294(a) provides that a plaintiff in an action for the breach of an obligation that does not arise in contract may recover, in addition to actual damages, "damages for the sake of example and by way of punishing the defendant." A plaintiff may recover exemplary damages when the defendant has been guilty of oppression, fraud, or malice. The court held that the language of Civ. Code § 3294 unambiguously allows all plaintiffs, both public and private, to recover exemplary damages. It may not be read to limit recovery of exemplary damages to private parties (8 Cal. App. 4th 444, 449) .

The court articulated several reasons that it attached no significance to the legislature's failure to amend Civ. Code. § 3294 following the City of Los Angeles decision. City of Los Angeles was recently decided and no petition for review was filed. Furthermore, it was not clear whether the case based its holding on statutory construction or equal protection grounds. Therefore, no presumption arose that the legislature agreed with statutory construction at odds with unambiguous statutory language (8 Cal. App. 4th 444, 449) .

In Westlands Water Dist. v. Amoco Chem. Co. (9th Cir. 1991) 953 F.2d 1109 , a California water district sued a chemical company and other defendants for strict products liability, negligence, breach of express warranty, breach of implied warranty, and fraud arising out of the sale of an allegedly defective pipe sold to the water district and used in a pipeline distribution system. The U.S. District Court for the Northern District of California granted a motion to strike an exemplary damages claim. The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals reversed.

The court refused to apply the rationale of City of Los Angeles to water districts, holding that the plain language of Civ. Code § 3294 would allow all plaintiffs, both public and private, to recover exemplary damages. It refused to adopt the defendant's argument that because Civ. Code § 3294 does not specifically address and include public entities, the conclusion of City of Los Angeles is not contrary to statutory language and must be followed (953 F.2d 1109, 1111) . The court distinguished City of Los Angeles to the extent that that decision in that case was based on the authority of the municipal plaintiff to use its police power to punish the defendant for its actions. The authority of the water district in this case--to make rules and regulations regarding the distribution of water--is not comparable to the greater authority of a municipality to impose criminal sanctions (953 F.2d 1109, 1112) .

[b] Purpose of Exemplary Damages Is Advanced Although Plaintiff Is Public Entity

The factual and procedural background of City of Sanger v. Superior Court (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 444, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 436 , is discussed in § 64.80[3][a]. In discussing the case, the court of appeal noted that the purpose of Civ. Code § 3294(a) is to allow a plaintiff to recover damages "for the sake of example and by way of punishing the defendant" (8 Cal. App. 4th 444, 449) . The court stated that the purpose of Civ. Code § 3294(a) is advanced even if the party seeking exemplary damages is a public entity who has or could have punished the defendant through the exercise of its police power (8 Cal. App. 4th 444, 449) .

[c] Legislative Scheme That Allows Municipality to Recover Exemplary Damages While Denying Recovery of Exemplary Damages Against Municipality Is Not Denial of Equal Protection

The facts and procedural background of City of Sanger v. Superior Court (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 444, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 436 , are discussed in § 64.80[3][a]. In reversing the trial court's judgment on the pleadings as to the exemplary damages claim, the court of appeal addressed the constitutionality of a legislative scheme that allows both private and public parties to recover exemplary damages (Civ. Code § 3294(a)) but protects public entities from liability for exemplary damages (Gov. Code § 818). The court held that this scheme was not an unconstitutional denial of equal protection, because there was a rational basis for the distinction (8 Cal. App. 4th 444, 449-450) .

Under California law, private parties may recover exemplary damages and may be liable for exemplary damages, while public entities may recover exemplary damages, but are not liable for exemplary damages. The court recognized that this scheme might lack symmetry, but held that it did not deny equal protection, because a rational basis for the distinction existed. That is, requiring a public entity to pay exemplary damages would punish the very group that the imposition of exemplary damages was intended to benefit. The court cited McAllister v. South Coast Air Quality Mgmt. Dist. (1986) 183 Cal. App. 3d 653, 228 Cal. Rptr. 351 , for the proposition that this distinction is constitutional. Furthermore, requiring private parties to pay exemplary damages to both public and private defendants has a rational basis: it furthers the goal of punishment and deterrence of wrongdoing (8 Cal. App. 4th 444, 450) .

The court did not address the municipality's arguments that the present case differed from City of Los Angeles with regard to the power of the City of Sanger to regulate the conduct of the defendants, because it concluded that City of Los Angeles was wrongly decided (8 Cal. App. 4th 444, 450) .

The facts and procedural background of Westlands Water Dist. v. Amoco Chem. Co. (9th Cir. 1991) 953 F.2d 1109 , are discussed in § 64.80[3][a]. The court held that the treatment of public and private parties with regard to exemplary damage awards and liability under California law is not a denial of equal protection. Gov. Code § 818, which bars an award of exemplary damages against a public entity, has been upheld as constitutional in McAllister v. South Coast Air Quality Mgmt. Dist. (1986) 183 Cal. App. 3d 653, 656-661, 228 Cal. Rptr. 351 . Preventing punishment of the general public through the imposition of exemplary damages against a public entity and allowing a public entity that lacks traditional police powers to punish wrongdoers that injure the general public are both legitimate state objectives that would withstand an equal protection claim (953, F.2d 1109, 1113).

[d] California Supreme Court Would Not Follow City of Los Angeles

The facts and procedural background of Westlands Water Dist. v. Amoco Chem. Co. (9th Cir. 1991) 953 F.2d 1109 , are discussed in § 64.80[3][a]. In discussing the case, the court refused to apply the rationale of City of Los Angeles to water districts, noting that the task of a federal court in a diversity case, when the issue presented has not yet been decided by the state's highest court, is to predict how the state high court would resolve it. The court relied on State Farm Fire & Cas. Co. v. Abraio (9th Cir. 1989) 874 F.2d 619, 621 , for the proposition that when an intermediate appellate court has ruled on the issue, a federal court is not required to follow that decision if there is convincing evidence that the state supreme court would decide differently (953 F.2d 1109, 1111) . The court distinguished City of Los Angeles to the extent that the decision in that case was based on the authority of the municipal plaintiff to use its police power to punish the defendant for its actions. The authority of the water district in this case to make rules and regulations regarding the distribution of water is not comparable to the greater authority of a municipality to impose criminal sanctions (953 F.2d 1109, 1112) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Civil Code Section 3294 Does Not Limit Recovery of Exemplary Damages to Private Plaintiffs

In City of Glendale v. Superior Court (2002) 95 Cal. App. 4th 1266, 116 Cal. Rptr. 2d 16 , an attorney sued a city to recover a contingency fee that the city allegedly owed him. The city filed a cross-complaint for fraud against the attorney in which the city sought to recover compensatory and punitive damages. The attorney moved to strike the city's request for punitive damages, and the trial court granted the motion under the authority of City of Los Angeles v. Shpegel-Dimsey, Inc. (1988) 198 Cal. App. 3d 1009, 244 Cal. Rptr. 507 , discussed in § 64.61[3][a], which held that a public entity may not recover punitive damages. The court of appeal issued a writ of mandate directing the trial court to strike the order granting the motion. Recognizing that the trial court's order was consistent with City of Los Angeles, the court of appeal refused to follow that opinion and instead agreed with the analysis of City of Sanger v. Superior Court (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 444, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 436 , described in § 64.80[3][a], which held that a public entity may recover punitive damages from a private plaintiff. In reaching its conclusion, the court of appeal agreed with City of Sanger that the holding in City of Los Angeles is inconsistent with the plain language of Civ. Code § 3294 (95 Cal. App. 4th 1266, 1270) .

[b] Purpose of Exemplary Damages Is Advanced Although Plaintiff Is Public Entity

The factual and procedural background of City of Glendale v. Superior Court (2002) 95 Cal. App. 4th 1266, 116 Cal. Rptr. 2d 16 , is described in § 64.80[4][a]. The court of appeal also agreed with City of Sanger that the public purpose advanced by the imposition of punitive damages would be furthered by allowing a city to recover punitive damages. The court noted that unlike the plaintiff in City of Los Angeles, the municipality seeking punitive damages in this case lacked the police power to impose fines or criminal sanctions on individual tortfeasors, making the ability to seek punitive damages even more valuable to punish tortfeasors (95 Cal. App. 4th 1266, 1270-1271) .

[c] Legislative Scheme That Allows Municipality to Recover Exemplary Damages While Denying Recovery of Exemplary Damages Against Municipality Is Not Denial of Equal Protection

The factual and procedural background of City of Glendale v. Superior Court (2002) 95 Cal. App. 4th 1266, 116 Cal. Rptr. 2d 16 , is described in § 64.80[4][a]. The court of appeal also agreed with City of Sanger that allowing a public entity to recover punitive damages from a private party, even though a public entity may not be held liable for punitive damages to a private plaintiff, does not result in a denial of equal protection. This apparent asymmetry is rationally related to a legitimate governmental goal. Requiring a public entity to pay punitive damages would ultimately punish the group intended to benefit from the punishment, while requiring private parties to pay punitive damages regardless of whether the plaintiff is a private or public party furthers the punitive and deterrent goals of punitive damages (95 Cal. App. 4th 1266, 1271-1272) .

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for nonsuit on the plaintiff's claim for punitive damages, when the motion is made on the ground that plaintiff has not introduced evidence that a reasonable jury could find to be clear and convincing proof of malice, fraud or oppression.

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 64.120 may be used to oppose the motion supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Nonsuit on Punitive Damages Claim

In Hoch v. Allied-Signal, Inc. (1994) 24 Cal. App. 4th 48, 29 Cal. Rptr. 2d 615 , plaintiffs sued Allied-Signal, the manufacturer of seat belts used in their daughter's automobile, for the wrongful death of the daughter, who had been killed when her car rolled over. The action was based on negligence and strict product liability theories, and plaintiff also sought punitive damages from Allied-Signal in a survival action, alleging that Allied-Signal acted with conscious disregard of the rights and safety of others by permitting its seat belts to be installed without adequate testing to ensure that the seat belts could not open during an accident. At the close of plaintiffs' case, Allied-Signal moved for nonsuit as to the punitive damages claim, and the trial court granted the motion. Plaintiffs appealed, and the court of appeal affirmed.

The court initially rejected plaintiffs' argument that a nonsuit could not be granted as to a punitive damages claim, noting that Code Civ. Proc. § 581c(b) authorizes nonsuit "as to some but not all of the issues involved in the action" (24 Cal. App. 4th 48, 58) . Turning to the proper standard for motions for nonsuit concerning punitive damages claims, the court noted the high standard applicable to motions for nonsuit generally: only if, after indulging in every legitimate inference favorable to plaintiffs, the court finds there is no evidence of sufficient substantiality to support a verdict in plaintiffs' favor, is a judgment of nonsuit proper (24 Cal. App. 4th 48, 58-59) . To establish a claim for punitive damages, plaintiffs have the additional burden of establishing oppression, fraud, or malice by clear and convincing evidence pursuant to Civ. Code § 3294 (24 Cal. App. 4th 48, 59) . The court rejected the argument that a nonsuit is therefore proper whenever the court deems the plaintiff's evidence less than clear and convincing (24 Cal. App. 4th 48, 59) . Instead, the court held that the issue is still one of fact for the jury if reasonable minds could differ over whether the evidence supports a punitive damages award (24 Cal. App. 4th 48, 59) . A nonsuit is therefore proper only if the trial court determines that no reasonable jury could find the plaintiff's evidence to be clear and convincing proof of malice, fraud, or oppression (24 Cal. App. 4th 48, 60-61) . Applying this standard to the case before it, the court of appeal found that the evidence did not support a conclusion that Allied-Signal acted with conscious disregard of the safety of others, and that the nonsuit was therefore properly granted (24 Cal. App. 4th 48, 61-62) .

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion for nonsuit on the plaintiff's claim for punitive damages, when the motion is made on the ground that plaintiff has not introduced evidence that a reasonable jury could find to be clear and convincing proof of malice, fraud or oppression. The opposition asserts that a reasonable jury could find the proof sufficient under that standard.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the evidence of oppression, fraud, or malice on the defendant's part that could be the basis of a reasonable jury's conclusion that clear and convincing evidence justifies an award of punitive damages.

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the motion supported by the points and authorities in § 64.100.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Showing Insufficient for Nonsuit on Punitive Damages Claim

The facts and procedural background of Hoch v. Allied-Signal, Inc. (1994) 24 Cal. App. 4th 48, 29 Cal. Rptr. 2d 615 , are discussed in § 64.100[3][a]. Although the court of appeal affirmed the nonsuit granted by the trial court, the court stated that nonsuit is not proper merely because the trial court deems plaintiff's evidence to be less than clear and convincing (24 Cal. App. 4th 48, 59) . Rather, nonsuit is proper only if no reasonable jury could find the plaintiff's evidence to be clear and convincing proof of oppression, fraud, or malice (24 Cal. App. 4th 48, 60-61) . Thus, a showing that a reasonable jury could find the plaintiff's evidence sufficient would require the court to deny the motion for nonsuit.

IT IS PROPER TO GRANT A MOTION FOR A NEW TRIAL IF THE DAMAGES AWARDED ARE EXCESSIVE.

A. Motion for New Trial. On the application of the party aggrieved, the _____ [verdict or decision] may be vacated, in whole or in part, and a new trial granted, on all or some of the issues on the ground that the damages are excessive, if substantial rights of the aggrieved party are materially affected thereby (Code Civ. Proc. § 657(5)).

B. Trial Court's Power to Determine Excessiveness of Damages. The proper procedure for determining whether the damages awarded are excessive is to bring the question before the trial court on a motion for a new trial (Schroeder v. Auto Driveaway Co. (1974) 11 Cal. 3d 908, 918, 114 Cal. Rptr. 622, 523 P.2d 662). In ruling on the motion, the trial judge sits as a thirteenth juror with the power to weigh the evidence and judge the credibility of witnesses, and a judge who believes that the damages awarded by the jury are excessive has the duty to reduce the damages (Bazzoli v. Nance's Sanitarium, Inc. (1952) 109 Cal. App. 2d 232, 243, 240 P.2d 672).

C. When Damages Excessive. If the jury's award does not meet the test of reasonableness, the trial court has the duty to reduce it (Neumann v. Bishop (1976) 59 Cal. App. 3d 451, 490, 130 Cal. Rptr. 786).

[Optional] D. New Trial Limited to Damages and Conditioned on Failure to Consent to Remittitur. If the ground for granting a new trial limited to the issue of damages after a trial by jury is excessive damages, the court may in its discretion grant the new trial subject to the condition that the motion for a new trial is denied if the party in whose favor the verdict has been rendered consents to a reduction of so much thereof as the court in its independent judgment determines from the evidence to be fair and reasonable [Code Civ. Proc. § 662.5(b); see Teitel v. First L.A. Bank (1991) 231 Cal. App. 3d 1593, 1602-1606, 282 Cal. Rptr. 916] .

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for a new trial on the ground of excessive damages. Optional Paragraph D may be used if the ground of excessive damages is the only one being raised, and moving party wants to request the court to give the plaintiff the opportunity to consent to a reduction in damages in lieu of having the court grant a new trial.

Where appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Trial Court's Power to Determine Excessiveness of Damages

In Schroeder v. Auto Driveaway Co. (1974) 11 Cal. 3d 908, 114 Cal. Rptr. 622, 523 P.2d 662 , defendant, a common carrier furnishing drivers for hire, contracted with plaintiffs, an elderly Arizona couple who wanted to carry a large quantity of second-hand goods to California for a new store, for a driver to drive the couple's loaded van. The shipping order and freight bill provided in small print on the back of the form for defendant's limited liability. On a detour for sight-seeing purposes, the van was destroyed and its contents either lost or damaged. Defendant did not attempt to complete transportation of the goods to their destination but removed them to another location where they were damaged. Plaintiffs brought an action for breach of contract, fraudulent misrepresentation, and conversion against defendant. At the conclusion of trial, the jury awarded plaintiffs compensatory and punitive damages. Defendant did not move for a new trial but, rather appealed from the adverse judgment contending, in part, that the award of compensatory and punitive damages was excessive. The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment on the issues of liability and damages. It held, in part, that the point that damages are excessive cannot be raised for the first time on appeal but must be presented to the lower court on a motion for a new trial. Consequently, a defendant who had failed to move for a new trial was precluded from arguing on appeal that the award of damages was excessive. The Supreme Court reasoned that the trial court is in a better position to determine whether a damage award is influenced by passion or prejudice and, unlike an appellate court, is vested with the power to weigh the evidence and resolve its credibility. Thus, a defendant who first challenges a damage award on appeal without a motion for a new trial unnecessarily burdens the appellate court with issues that can and should be resolved at the trial level.

In Bazzoli v. Nance's Sanitarium, Inc. (1952) 109 Cal. App. 2d 232, 240 P.2d 672 , the jury rendered a verdict for plaintiff in the amount of $15,000 for injuries he sustained while on premises owned and operated by defendant. Defendant, who appealed from the judgment, had raised the issue of excessive damages on a motion for a new trial which the trial court denied. In affirming the judgment, the court of appeal relied on earlier cases and pointed out that the standards to be applied by trial and appellate courts in determining whether damages are excessive are very different. The trial judge sits as a thirteenth juror with the power to weigh the evidence and judge the credibility of witnesses. A trial judge who has been presented with the question and believes that the damages awarded by the jury are excessive has the duty of reducing the damages. However, an appellate court cannot weigh the evidence and judge credibility of witnesses and an award of damages must be so large as to indicate passion or prejudice on the part of the jurors before an appellate court may hold it to be excessive. Counsel should not that in Schroeder, the Supreme Court referred to the trial court's superior position for determining whether a damage award is influenced by passion and prejudice, citing Code Civ. Proc. § 657. At the time that Schroeder was decided, however, the legislature had already removed the reference to "passion and prejudice" from Code Civ. Proc. § 657. Furthermore, the Legislative Committee Comment to this section states that the former language purporting to limit the ground of excessive damages to an award influenced by "passion or prejudice" was eliminated as unnecessary, and that the trial judge is able to grant a new trial when, after weighing the evidence, he or she is convinced from the entire record that the award of damages is clearly excessive.

[b] When Damages Excessive

Plaintiff in Neumann v. Bishop (1976) 59 Cal. App. 3d 451, 130 Cal. Rptr. 786 , accepted, in conformance with the trial court's order on defendant's motion for a new trial, a reduction to $280,000 from the $362,389 awarded plaintiff by the jury's verdict. Defendant appealed from the judgment on several grounds including the ground that the amount of the judgment, as reduced, was excessive. In affirming the judgment, the court of appeal pointed out that the trial court had determined that plaintiff's special damages, presented and projected, were about $111,000, and that the trial court reduced the sum awarded to $280,000 on the ground that the maximum reasonable general damages for plaintiff's primary injury (to her femur) was $165,000 with a maximum total compensation of $275,000. The court of appeal then quoted from Beagle v. Vasold (1966) 65 Cal. 2d 166, 179-180, 53 Cal. Rptr. 129, 417 P.2d 673 , to the effect that no matter what manner of calculation is proposed by counsel or used by the jury, the verdict must meet the test of reasonableness, and if it does not, the trial court has the duty to reduce the verdict. The court of appeal noted that the power of an appellate court differs materially from that of a trial court, in that the appellate court may interfere on the ground that the judgment is excessive only if the verdict is so large that, at first blush, it shocks the conscience and suggests passion, prejudice, or corruption on the part of the jury. Since the award as reduced was not excessive under this standard, the court affirmed the judgment.

[c] New Trial Limited to Damages and Conditioned on Failure to Consent to Remittitur

In Teitel v. First L.A. Bank (1992) 231 Cal. App. 3d 1593, 282 Cal. Rptr. 916 , the jury awarded plaintiff $500,000 in punitive damages. The defendant bank made posttrial motions for new trial and also for judgment notwithstanding the verdict (JNOV) The motion for new trial was made on a number of grounds, including that the award of punitive damages was excessive and remittitur was appropriate. The motion for JNOV was made on the ground that the award of punitive damages was not supported by substantial evidence or, in the alternative, that the amount of punitive damages awarded was excessive as a matter of law. The trial court denied the motion for new trial, but granted the motion for JNOV only for the purpose of reducing the award of punitive damages to $50,000 (231 Cal. App. 3d 1593, 1601) .

The court of appeal held that the procedure followed by the trial court to reduce the award of punitive damages was improper. The record contained substantial evidence in support of some award of punitive damages; only the amount might be deemed excessive. JNOV may not be used in lieu of remittitur simply to reduce the amount. In dicta, in a footnote, the court stated that JNOV for an amount less than the jury verdict would seem appropriate if there can be no dispute over the amount. Such an order might have been appropriate, for example, if the plaintiff were entitled to no punitive damages at all, and the trial court had reduced the judgment to the adjudicated amount of compensatory damages (231 Cal. App. 3d 1593, 1605 n.6). The new trial and remittitur procedure is the exclusive remedy for a trial court to employ if some damages are properly awarded, but the amount is excessive. If JNOV were an appropriate means to reduce damages, there would be no need for the new-trial remittitur statute (231 Cal. App. 3d 1593, 1605) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] When Damages Excessive

In Mokler v. County of Orange (2007) 157 Cal. App. 4th 121, 68 Cal. Rptr. 3d 568 , a former employee brought an action for retaliatory discharge against a county. While plaintiff prevailed at trial on her claim and was awarded $1.6 million in noneconomic damages, the trial court granted a new trial on damages when plaintiff rejected a remitted noneconomic damages amount of $125,000. The court of appeal held the order for a new trial was supported by substantial evidence. The court noted that plaintiff did not require medical or professional attention after her termination, suffered no apparent damage to her reputation, suffered no apparent scorn or ridicule by the public, and needed only two weeks to find new employment. In addition, given her ability to find new employment quickly, plaintiff did not suffer the economic worries that typically exacerbate the emotional distress suffered by persons who are wrongfully terminated and are unable to find comparable new employment quickly (157 Cal. App. 4th 121, 146-147) .

In Tramell v. McDonnell Douglas Corp. (1984) 163 Cal. App. 3d 157, 209 Cal. Rptr. 427 , the court of appeal affirmed the order granting a new trial in a wrongful death action on the ground of excessive damages [see Civ. Code § 657(5)]. The trial court found that there was extensive discussion among jurors to inflate their verdict to compensate for attorneys' fees and taxes. The declaration of the foreperson submitted by the defendant, which the trial court found to be true, showed that the jurors discussed attorneys' fees. Furthermore, the jurors commented that both governments could use the money and that individual jurors would benefit thereby. Because the trial court's finding was based on competent, although contradictory, evidence, the court of appeal concluded that the finding should not be disturbed on appeal (163 Cal. App. 3d 157, 172-173) .

In Drust v. Drust (1980) 113 Cal. App. 3d 1, 169 Cal. Rptr. 750 , after a jury in a personal injury action determined that plaintiff would not earn income in the future and compensated him for this loss, it also awarded him an item of expense necessary to earn income in the future. The court of appeal found this patently inconsistent, reversed that portion of the judgment relative to damages, and remanded the case for retrial on the issue of damages only (113 Cal. App. 3d 1, 11) .

IT IS PROPER TO GRANT A MOTION FOR A NEW TRIAL ON THE GROUND OF EXCESSIVE DAMAGES IF THERE IS NO REASONABLE RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN THE AWARD OF PUNITIVE DAMAGES AND DEFENDANT'S NET ASSETS, IF THE AWARD OF PUNITIVE DAMAGES IS LARGER THAN AND BEARS NO REASONABLE RELATIONSHIP TO THE AWARD OF COMPENSATORY DAMAGES, IF THE PUNITIVE DAMAGES AWARDED ARE DISPROPORTIONATE TO DEFENDANT'S CULPABILITY, OR IF THE PUNITIVE DAMAGES AWARDED ARE DESIGNED TO PUNISH DEFENDANT FOR HARM DONE TO OTHER HYPOTHETICAL POTENTIAL PLAINTIFFS AND NOT LIMITED TO AN AMOUNT APPROPRIATE TO PUNISH FOR THE HARM DONE TO THE ACTUAL PLAINTIFFS.

[EITHER]

E. Punitive Damages Exceeding and Bearing No Reasonable Relationship to Compensatory Damages as Excessive. In cases in which an award of punitive damages exceeds the award of compensatory damages, the award of punitive damages is excessive if it bears no reasonable relationship to the amount of compensatory damages awarded (Simon v. San Paolo U.S. Holding Co., Inc. (2005) 35 Cal. 4th 1159, 1181-1183, 29 Cal. Rptr. 3d 379, 113 P.3d 63 ; *Schroeder v. Auto Driveaway Co. (1974) 11 Cal. 3d 908, 922, 114 Cal. [AND/OR]

F. Punitive Damages Not Reasonably Related to Defendant's Wealth as Excessive. Punitive damages which do not bear a reasonable relationship to defendant's net assets are excessive (Little v. Stuyvesant Life Ins. Co. (1977) 67 Cal. App. 3d 451, 469, 136 Cal. Rptr. 653).

[AND/OR]

G. Punitive Damages Disproportionate to Defendant's Culpability as Excessive. The particular nature of defendant's acts should be considered in determining whether an award of punitive damages is excessive since the more reprehensible the act, the greater the appropriate punishment, assuming all other factors are equal (Roby v. McKesson Corp. (2009) 47 Cal. 4th 686, 713-717, 101 Cal. Rptr. 3d 773, 219 P.3d 749 ; Neal v. Farmers Ins. Exch. (1978) 21 Cal. 3d 910, 928, 933, 148 Cal. Rptr. 389, 582 P.2d 980).

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for a new trial on the ground of excessive damages when the larger amount of punitive damages awarded bears no reasonable relationship to the compensatory damages awarded.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Punitive Damages Exceeding and Bearing No Reasonable Relationship to Compensatory Damages as Excessive

In Simon v. San Paolo U.S. Holding Co., Inc. (2005) 35 Cal. 4th 1159, 29 Cal. Rptr. 3d 379, 113 P.3d 63 , the plaintiff had attempted to purchase a commercial building at a price of $1.1 million and, during the course of negotiations, had entered into a letter of intent with the seller's agent to negotiate exclusively while they completed the transaction. However, the seller's agent, for reasons undisclosed by the record, decided that it would be more advantageous to sell to another buyer and cancelled the transaction with the plaintiff, allegedly because the plaintiff would not agree to a shortened period for completing inspections and releasing his deposit. The very next morning, the agent completed an agreement to sell the building to the alternate buyer, although he denied that he had been negotiating with this buyer while the plaintiff was still actively negotiating to buy the building. The plaintiff sued for breach of contract and promissory fraud. The jury found that no enforceable contract existed, but found for the plaintiff on the promissory fraud action and awarded $5,000 in compensatory damages, which was the amount that the plaintiff lost in reliance on the false promise to sell when he hired an attorney to help complete the transaction. The jury also awarded $2.5 million in punitive damages, reduced on retrial to $1.7 million. The defendant appealed the amount of punitive damages. The court of appeal eventually affirmed the award, concluding that $1.7 million was not excessive in light of the "continuous and intricate" deceit perpetrated by the seller's agent and in light of the fact that the actual harm to the plaintiff was $400,000, which represented the amount of profit that the plaintiff would have made by purchasing the building for $1.1 million when its actual market value was estimated at $1.5 million. The defendant appealed again.

Relying solely on federal constitutional standards, the California Supreme Court reduced the amount of punitive damages to $50,000 and affirmed the judgment as modified. The Court noted that in some rare circumstances, it may be appropriate to proportion punitive damages to some measure of harm other than the actual amount of compensatory damages awarded, such as to uncompensated harm or to the potential harm that was actually intended by the tortfeasor or was reasonably likely to occur from the tortfeasor's conduct. However, proportioning the punitive damages award to the lost $400,000 in profit experienced by the plaintiff was improper, because there was no causal connection between the defendant's false promises and the plaintiff's lost profit. The Court concluded that if the seller's agent had not made the false promises on which the plaintiff relied, the plaintiff still would not have acquired the building, given the lack of a binding contract to sell to the plaintiff. Thus, the only damage actually caused by the defendant's fraud was the $5,000 out-of-pocket loss that the plaintiff suffered (35 Cal. 4th 1159, 1173-1175) . With this as the proper measure of compensatory damages, the Court then considered the amount of punitive damages that would be permissible under federal constitutional standards. The California Supreme Court interpreted statements by the United States Supreme Court to mean that absent special justification, ratios between punitive damages and a plaintiff's actual or potential compensatory damages that are greater than nine or 10 to one are constitutionally suspect and cannot survive appellate scrutiny under the due process clause (35 Cal. 4th 1159, 1182) . After evaluating the record, the Court concluded that the reprehensibility of the defendant's conduct was relatively low, given that only a modest amount of economic harm was caused and there was no evidence of a repeated pattern of fraudulent conduct towards other potential buyers (35 Cal. 4th 1159, 1180-1181) . Although the award of compensatory damages was also relatively small, the Court held that a 10-to-1 ratio between compensatory and punitive damages would be appropriate in this case (35 Cal. 4th 1159,

Schroeder v. Auto Driveaway Co. (1974) 11 Cal. 3d 908, 114 Cal. Rptr. 622, 523 P.2d 662 , is discussed in § 64.140[3][a]. The plaintiffs were awarded punitive damages in a sum less than one-half the amount of compensatory damages awarded. Defendants contended on appeal that the amount of punitive damages awarded to plaintiffs was excessive in relationship to the actual injury suffered by plaintiffs. The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment on the ground that defendants' failure to move for a new trial precluded them from contending on appeal that the award of damages was excessive. Nevertheless, the Supreme Court enunciated the principle that an award of punitive damages must bear a reasonable relationship to actual damages but found that this rule had no application where, as in the case before it, the amount of punitive damages did not exceed the amount of compensatory damages awarded (11 Cal. 3d 908, 922) .

In Little v. Stuyvesant Life Ins. Co. (1977) 67 Cal. App. 3d 451, 136 Cal. Rptr. 653 , plaintiff was a draftsperson who was insured under a group program of life, hospitalization, and disability insurance sponsored, in part, by her employer. At the time the insurer undertook to insure her, she had a lengthy medical history. After the insurance went into effect, she suffered a total disability. The insurer paid plaintiff disability payments under the policy for a time and then terminated payments on the advice of its own physician. As a result of the termination of payments, plaintiff lost her house, was unable to meet her other financial obligations, and, depressed by her financial problems, attempted suicide. She subsequently brought an action against the insurer for declaratory relief and for compensatory and punitive damages for intentional infliction of emotional distress. At the trial, the jury found plaintiff to be totally disabled and entitled to payments under the policy. The jury also awarded plaintiff substantial compensatory and punitive damages. The insurer's motion for a new trial on the issue of damages was denied and the insurer appealed. The insurer contended, in part, that the punitive damages award was excessive as a matter of law. The court of appeal agreed and, affirming the remainder of the judgment, reversed and remanded for a new trial on the issue of punitive damages. The court of appeal noted that because the primary purpose of punitive damages is to punish the defendant and make an example of him or her, the punitive damages awarded should bear a reasonable relationship to defendant's net assets. Additionally, an award of punitive damages should bear a reasonable relationship to the compensatory damages awarded. Although there is no fixed ratio by which to determine the propriety of such an award, the court of appeal found that the award in a ratio of 14-to-1 of punitive to compensatory damages was excessive and grossly disproportionate to the insurer's wealth and to the compensatory damages awarded (67 Cal. App. 3d 451, 469) .

NOTE:

Recognizing that there is no bright-line ratio between compensatory and punitive damages that meets federal constitutional due process requirements, the United States Supreme Court has suggested that single-digit ratios, such as 4-to-1 or 5-to-1, are more likely to comport with due process than will larger ratios [State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Campbell (2003) 538 U.S. 408, 425, 123 S. Ct. 1513, 155 L. Ed. 2d 585] . The Court admitted, however, that larger ratios may be acceptable in cases involving especially egregious conduct that results in a relatively small amount of economic damage. Conversely, a smaller ratio may be all that will be constitutionally tolerated when the defendant's conduct has resulted in a substantial award of compensatory damages [State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Campbell (2003) 538 U.S. 408, 425-426, 123 S. Ct. 1513, 155 L. Ed. 2d 585 (award with ratio of 145-to-1 reversed because substantial compensatory damage award of $1 million fully compensated plaintiffs for emotional distress caused by failure of insurance company to settle third-party claim)].

Applying the U.S. Supreme Court's guidelines, the California Supreme Court held in Roby v. McKesson Corp., discussed in [c], below, that a 1-to-1 ratio was the appropriate maximum when the plaintiff was awarded almost $2 million in compensatory damages, which included an award of $1.3 million in non-economic damages that may have included a punitive component reflecting the jury's indignation at the defendant's conduct [Roby v. McKesson Corp. (2009) 47 Cal. 4th 686, 718-719, 101 Cal. Rptr. 3d 773, 219 P.3d 749] .

[b] Punitive Damages Not Reasonably Related to Defendant's Wealth as Excessive

Little v. Stuyvesant Life Ins. Co. (1977) 67 Cal. App. 3d 451, 469, 136 Cal. Rptr. 653 , is discussed in § 64.141[3][a].

NOTE:

The plaintiff has the burden of establishing the defendant's financial condition to support an award of punitive damages [Adams v. Murakami (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 105, 123, 284 Cal. Rptr. 318, 813 P.2d 1348] . Therefore, a plaintiff's inadequate showing concerning the defendant's wealth would also be a basis for opposing an award of punitive damages. For discussion of Adams, see § 64.175[3][a].

[c] Punitive Damages Disproportionate to Defendant's Culpability as Excessive

In Roby v. McKesson Corp. (2009) 47 Cal. 4th 686, 101 Cal. Rptr. 3d 773, 219 P.3d 749 , plaintiff brought an action for wrongful termination, discrimination, and harassment against her former employer and, with regard to the harassment claim, against her former supervisor. Plaintiff suffered from panic attacks that caused her to miss time from work and scratch at her arms, causing open sores, and her medication produced unpleasant body odor. Plaintiff's physical problems and absences from work resulted in tension between her and her immediate supervisor, who often made negative comments about plaintiff in front of other workers and ostracized plaintiff in the office by ignoring her, refusing to respond to her greetings and questions, and making disapproving facial expressions when plaintiff took breaks because of her panic attacks. Plaintiff's employment was eventually terminated because her absences violated the employer's attendance policy. After a jury trial, plaintiff was awarded almost $3 million in compensatory damages and $15 million in punitive damages. The court of appeal reduced the compensatory damages award to $1.4 million and the punitive damages award to $2 million. Plaintiff appealed.

The California Supreme Court reinstated part of the compensatory damages award disallowed by the court of appeal, bringing the total amount of compensatory damages to $1.9 million, and modified the punitive damages award to that same amount. In analyzing the plaintiff's entitlement to punitive damages, the Court first analyzed the reprehensibility of the defendant's conduct as required by recent U.S. Supreme Court decisions. The Court concluded that the employer could not be held liable for punitive damages based merely on the conduct of the plaintiff's supervisor, as she was not a managing agent for purposes of establishing a claim to punitive damages against the employer (47 Cal. 4th 686, 714) . Thus, the right to recover punitive damages from the employer depended on the conduct of the employer's more senior managers. The Court concluded that the evidence only weakly supported the jury's finding that a managing agent of the employer was informed of the harassing conduct of plaintiff's supervisor and ratified it, either expressly or by inaction. While plaintiff had complained more than once to her distribution center manager about her ongoing conflict with her supervisor, these complaints did not link her conflict with her medical condition and thus did not put the employer on notice that statutory anti-discrimination and harassment rights might be implicated. The Court noted that at only one meeting attended by mid-level managers did plaintiff make a statement that might have notified the employer of the nature of the problem, although no action was taken based on plaintiff's complaint at that meeting. However, even if the employer may have been on notice based on this one meeting and the failure to act against plaintiff's supervisor might have constituted managerial malfeasance, the Court noted that there was no evidence of any repeated corporate misconduct. Moreover, the Court found no evidence that the adoption of the attendance policy that resulted in plaintiff's termination was motivated by a desire to discriminate, even though it may have had that impact. Taking into account all of these factors, the Court concluded that while civil penalties were warranted, the reprehensibility of the employer's conduct was at the low end of the range of wrongdoing that could support an award of punitive damages (47 Cal. 4th 686, 715-717) .

The Court went on to hold that 1-to-1 ratio between punitive and compensatory damages was the constitutionally appropriate maximum under the facts, as most of the actionable conduct was committed by a low-level supervisor and the conduct of the corporate employer in not responding to a single complaint brought by the employee was not very reprehensible. The Supreme Court also noted that the plaintiff was awarded almost $2 million in compensatory damages, which included an award of $1.3 million in non-economic damages that may have included a punitive component reflecting the jury's indignation at the way the plaintiff was treated by her employer (47 Cal. 4th 686, 718-719) .

In Neal v. Farmers Ins. Exch. (1978) 21 Cal. 3d 910, 148 Cal. Rptr. 389, 582 P.2d 980 , plaintiff brought an action for compensatory and punitive damages for the bad-faith failure of her insurance company to pay uninsured motorist's benefits to her in accordance with the terms of a policy under which she was an insured. Plaintiff died during the pendency of the action, and her husband was substituted as plaintiff, as the administrator of her estate. The jury returned a verdict for plaintiff in the total amount of $1,548,211.35. Defendant moved for a new trial, and the trial court granted a new trial on the sole issue of damages unless plaintiff consented to a reduction of the verdict to $749,011.48. Plaintiff filed a consent and defendant appealed on the judgment entered accordingly. Defendant contended on appeal that the reduced verdict was excessive as a matter of law, and plaintiff filed a cross appeal on the ground that the trial court did not comply with Code Civ. Proc. § 657 because it did not state the reasons for its order. Plaintiff also contended that the record did not provide substantial support for the trial court's ruling that the damages awarded by the jury were excessive. The court of appeal upheld the trial court's order including the trial court's determination that the amount of the original verdict awarded for punitive damages was excessive. The court of appeal also stated that the verdict, as reduced by the trial judge on plaintiff's consent to the remittitur, was not excessive as a matter of law. In supporting the trial court's determinations relating to the punitive damages as awarded and reduced, the court of appeal discussed the factors relating to punitive damages which were properly considered by the trial court. The court of appeal stated that one factor is the particular nature of defendant's acts in light of the whole record since the more reprehensible the act, the greater the appropriate punishment, assuming all other factors are equal. The court stated that the jury and the trial court could properly have concluded that defendant's conduct was reprehensible, involving a calculated attempt to take advantage of a series of family tragedies (serous illness of the original plaintiff and her son) to effect a low settlement and thereby retain monies rightfully due to the insured. Other factors properly considered by the trial court were the amount of compensatory damages awarded and defendant's wealth (21 Cal. 3d 910, 928, 933) .

NOTE:

The United States Supreme Court has provided similar guidelines for reviewing courts to use to ensure that an award of punitive damages meets federal constitutional due process requirements. Those guidelines include the reprehensibility of the conduct, the disparity between the harm or potential harm suffered by the plaintiff and the punitive damages award, and the difference between the punitive damages award and any civil penalties that are authorized or imposed in comparable cases [State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Campbell (2003) 538 U.S. 408, 418, 123 S. Ct. 1513, 155 L. Ed. 2d 585 ; BMW of N. Am., Inc. v. Gore (1996) 517 U.S. 559, 574-585, 116 S. Ct. 1589, 134 L. Ed. 2d 809] .

[d] Prejudgment Interest Not Included When Comparing Compensatory Damages to Punitive Damages

In Amerigraphics, Inc. v. Mercury Casualty Co. (2010) 182 Cal. App. 4th 1538, 107 Cal. Rptr. 3d 307 , plaintiff company sued its insurer for breach of contract and bad faith after the insurer denied plaintiff's claim for flood damage coverage. Defendant insurer's failure to pay plaintiff's claim in a timely manner effectively caused plaintiff to go out of business. After a jury trial, judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff and compensatory damages awarded of $130,000, prejudgment interest of $40,000, and punitive damages of $1,700,000. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed in part, but reduced the amount of punitive damages to $500,000. The court concluded that the evidence was sufficient to support a punitive damages award, as it showed that the insurer was intentionally dishonest and consciously disregarded plaintiff's rights in the following manner: the insurer never advised plaintiff about the available coverage, told the plaintiff there was no coverage for business income and tenant improvements, denied plaintiff's tenant-improvements claim based on an investigation that never took place, and allowed the claim to languish for months (182 Cal. App. 4th 1538, 1559) . The court then held, however, that under these facts, a punitive damages award that was 10 times the amount of compensatory damages and prejudgment interest combined was excessive pursuant to relevant constitutional guidelines. In so holding, the court rejected the claim that prejudgment interest could be considered when comparing the ratio of punitive damages to compensatory damages. Instead, the correct base figure is the amount of actual damages as determined by the jury (182 Cal. App. 4th 1538, 1565) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Punitive Damages Exceeding and Bearing No Reasonable Relationship to Compensatory Damages as Excessive

In Walker v. Farmers Ins. Exchange (2007) 153 Cal. App. 4th 965, 63 Cal. Rptr. 3d 507 , plaintiffs, who shared a condominium, brought suit against the insurer of their homeowners association after the insurer refused to provide a defense to plaintiffs. The underlying insurance claim arose after one of the plaintiffs accidentally injured another person when utilizing an automatic garage door opener. The garages in the condominium unit were detached from the individual units and located in a common area and thus arguably covered under the association's policy. Plaintiffs' suit alleged breach of contract and bad-faith refusal to defend. The jury awarded plaintiffs nearly $1,700,000 in compensatory damages, most of which was for emotional distress, and $8,338,255 in punitive damages. Plaintiffs accepted a reduction in punitive damages to $1,500,000 to avoid a retrial on punitive damages. The court of appeal affirmed the punitive damage award. The court held that because the plaintiffs received a substantial amount of compensatory damages, including $750,000 each for emotional distress, that a 1-to-1 ratio between punitive and compensatory damages was appropriate under the circumstances. The court noted that the large emotional distress awards contained a punitive element, given that plaintiffs' economic losses were relatively small and no physical harm was involved. The court also noted that defendant's conduct was not overly reprehensible, as it consisted primarily of a single decision to deny plaintiffs' tender of defense in the underlying claim (153 Cal. App. 4th 965, 974-975) .

In Jet Source Charter, Inc. v. Doherty (2007) 148 Cal. App. 4th 1, 55 Cal. Rptr. 3d 176 , plaintiff was a private aircraft chartering business that sued another company that had been hired by plaintiff to find and broker the purchase and sale of aircraft. The suit was based in part on defendant's practice of misrepresenting to plaintiff the cost of aircraft purchased for plaintiff. Defendant would report to plaintiff that an aircraft cost a particular amount, when in fact the actual purchase price was lower, and when plaintiff paid the reported purchase price, defendant would retain the difference. Plaintiff prevailed at trial and was awarded $6.5 million in compensatory damages, and $26 million in punitive damages. The court of appeal reduced the amount of punitive damages to no more than $6.5 million. The court held that a 1-to-1 ratio was appropriate because the harm was entirely economic in nature and involved business fraud perpetrated by a fiduciary against an experienced business, rather than against a vulnerable victim. The court also noted that the substantial compensatory damages award was largely restitutionary in nature (148 Cal. App. 4th 1, 11) .

In Boeken v. Philip Morris, Inc. (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 1640, 26 Cal. Rptr. 3d 638 , a fraud and products liability action against a large tobacco company, the trial court awarded compensatory and punitive damages to the survivors of a decedent who died from cancer caused by years of cigarette smoking. At trial, the plaintiffs had argued that the defendant's cigarette advertising and public statements in the 1950s and 1960s, which presented false images of health, sophistication, and machismo, had enticed the decedent to begin smoking and to continue to smoke despite mounting evidence from the scientific community that smoking was unhealthy and caused cancer. The jury awarded $5.5 million in compensatory damages and $3 billion in punitive damages, although the trial court reduced the punitive damages to $100 million. To keep the punitive damages award within the constitutional parameters set by the United States Supreme Court, the court of appeal further reduced the punitive damages award to $50 million. The court of appeal concluded that a ratio between punitive and compensatory damages that was greater than a single digit was not justified in light of another substantial punitive damages award against the defendant in a different case for the same conduct and other incentives in place for the defendant to change its past practices. However, the court concluded that a 9-to-1 ratio was warranted, given the extreme reprehensibility of the defendant's longstanding conduct in adding substances to its cigarettes to increase their addictiveness, in gaining smokers by fraud and through its long denial of the dangers of smoking, and in marketing a product that was more dangerous than consumers expected (127 Cal. App. 4th 1640, 1703) .

In Bardis v. Oates (2004) 119 Cal. App. 4th 1, 14 Cal. Rptr. 3d 89 , the plaintiffs sued a former business partner and his corporation for fraud and breach of fiduciary duties after the defendants' self-dealing and deceptive business practices resulted in the enrichment of the defendants at the expense of the partnership and in violation of the partnership agreement. After a trial verdict for the plaintiffs, the court of appeal reduced a punitive damages award from $7 million to $1.5 million on a compensatory damages award of $165,000. Applying the principles provided by the United States Supreme Court in State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Campbell (2003) 538 U.S. 408, 123 S. Ct. 1513, 155 L. Ed. 2d 585 , the court concluded that the amount of punitive damages awarded by the jury did not meet constitutional due process requirements. Although the defendants' conduct was highly reprehensible, the conduct caused only economic harm to other experienced business persons, and there was no threat of physical harm. Moreover, the award had to be based on the harm done only to these plaintiffs and could not properly be inflated to reflect that the defendants may have engaged in similar deceptive conduct in business dealings with other partners. The court also noted that civil penalties for similar types of fraudulent conduct usually reflect a three-to-one ratio between actual and punitive damages (119 Cal. App. 4th 1, 21-24) . However, the court concluded that a punitive damages-to-compensatory damages ratio of just over 9-to-1 was justified in this case because the defendants' conduct was highly reprehensible and the amount of compensatory damages did not fully reflect the outrageousness of the conduct. The court also noted that given the defendants' estimated worth of between $600 million and $800 million, a lesser amount would not be sufficiently punitive (119 Cal. App. 4th 1, 26-27) .

In Textron Fin. Corp. v. Nat'l Union Fire Ins. Co. (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 1061, 13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 586 , the plaintiff was a financial corporation that loaned funds to a tour bus company for purchasing a bus and received a security interest in the bus. As required by the plaintiff, the tour bus company purchased insurance for the bus. The plaintiff was listed as a payee on the policy and was required to be notified in advance if the insurer canceled the policy. Because of a downturn in business, the tour bus company failed to keep up with the insurance premium payments, and the policy was terminated. However, the insurer failed to send notice of the cancellation to the plaintiff. An agreement was worked out with the insurer that allowed the tour bus company to keep its insurance coverage, although the tour bus company had to agree to keep certain buses out of use, which included the bus in which the plaintiff had its security interest. A few months later, this bus was extensively damaged in an accident. The insurer denied the claim submitted by the tour bus company and prepared an endorsement deleting the bus from the policy retroactively to a date before the accident. The tour bus company then defaulted on the plaintiff's loan and declared bankruptcy. The plaintiff filed a claim with the insurer for the damage to the bus, but the claim was denied on the grounds that the bus had been deleted from the policy before the accident, even though the plaintiff had a copy of the endorsement deleting coverage on that bus reflecting a preparation date that was a month after the accident. The plaintiff sued the insurer on various tort and contract theories and prevailed at trial. The plaintiff was awarded approximately $90,000 in compensatory damages on the tort actions and $75,000 on a contract claim, as well as $10,000,000 in punitive damages, which the trial court reduced to $1,700,000.

On appeal, the court of appeal reversed the award of punitive damages unless the plaintiff agreed to a reduction to $360,000. In applying the United States Supreme Court decision in State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Campbell (2003) 538 U.S. 408, 123 S. Ct. 1513, 155 L. Ed. 2d 585 , the court of appeal concluded that although the insurer's conduct in trying to cover up its potential liability under the policy was sufficiently reprehensible to warrant an award of punitive damages, the compensatory damages awarded provided the plaintiff with a full recovery for the harm done. Therefore, although the insurer's wealth was great enough to support a much higher award, the court held that due process would allow an award of only $360,000, an amount that was approximately four times the amount of compensatory damages awarded on the tort claims (118 Cal. App. 4th 1061, 1081-1085) .

In Rosener v. Sears, Roebuck & Co. (1980) 110 Cal. App. 3d 740, 168 Cal. Rptr. 237 , plaintiffs brought an action against defendant for damages for breach of contract and fraud and deceit in connection with defendant's breach of home improvement contracts. After a jury trial, the trial court entered judgment in favor of plaintiffs for $158,000 in compensatory damages and $10 million in punitive damages.

On appeal, defendant contended that even though the evidence justified some award of punitive damages, the amount fixed by the jury was excessive as a matter of law. The court of appeal concluded, after reviewing the evidence and prior case law, that the $10 million punitive damages verdict was clearly excessive, not reasonably related to either the compensatory damages or the nature of defendant's conduct, and so grossly disproportionate as to be indicative of passion and prejudice on the part of the jury. The court relied, in part, on Neal v. Farmers Ins. Exch. (1978) 21 Cal. 3d 910, 928, 148 Cal. Rptr. 389, 582 P.2d 980 [see § 64.41[3][c]] and on Little v. Stuyvesant Life Ins. Co. (1977) 67 Cal. App. 3d 451, 469-470, 136 Cal. Rptr. 653 [see § 64.141[3][a]] (110 Cal. App. 3d 740, 754) . The court therefore vacated the amount of the punitive damages award and remanded the case for a new trial on the issue of punitive damages only, unless plaintiffs filed a written consent to reduction of the punitive damages award to $2.5 million within 30 days, in which case the judgment would be modified to award plaintiffs punitive damages in that amount and, as modified, affirmed in its entirety (110 Cal. App. 3d 740, 757) .

[b] Punitive Damages Not Reasonably Related to Defendant's Wealth as Excessive

In Gerard v. Ross (1988) 204 Cal. App. 3d 968, 251 Cal. Rptr. 604 , the plaintiff brought an action for malicious prosecution against several parties, including the defendant, an attorney. The jury awarded punitive damages of $50,000 against the defendant, but no compensatory damages. The trial court conditionally granted the defendant's motion for a new trial unless the plaintiff would accept a remittitur of the punitive damages to $25,000. The plaintiff accepted the remittitur, but appealed. The court of appeal held that the trial court's action was not an abuse of discretion under the circumstances, because there was evidence supporting the trial court's determination that the $50,000 award did not bear a reasonable relationship to the defendant's assets or annual income (204 Cal. App. 3d 968, 979) .

In Delos v. Farmers Ins. Group (1979) 93 Cal. App. 3d 642, 155 Cal. Rptr. 843 , the insured and her husband brought an action for compensatory and punitive damages against their insurer and insurance group for bad-faith refusal of uninsured motorist coverage. The jury awarded compensatory damages and punitive damages of $4 million. The trial court granted defendants' motion for a new trial on the issue of punitive damages, unless plaintiffs consented to a reduced award of $350,000. Plaintiffs filed a cross appeal on the remittitur.

The court of appeal, affirming the trial court, held that the $4 million punitive damages award was excessive in relation to defendants' wealth, in view of the likelihood of other lawsuits and multiple punitive awards, each of which would be sufficient to punish defendants completely for the misconduct involved (93 Cal. App. 3d 642, 667) .

This form of points and authorities may be used in support of a motion for new trial on the ground that plaintiff did not introduce sufficient evidence of defendant's financial condition to support the award of punitive damages against defendant. Paragraph E sets forth the basic principle that plaintiff has the burden of establishing defendant's financial condition. Optional Paragraph F may be used if defendant did not object to the plaintiff's failure to introduce evidence of defendant's financial condition or to the inadequacy of evidence presented. Optional Paragraph G is for use if the evidence of financial condition does not establish the financial condition of the defendant specifically, but refers to some other corporate entity. Optional Paragraph H is for use if the plaintiff's evidence of defendant's wealth is evidence of past wealth, rather than of the defendant's current worth. Optional Paragraph I is for use if the plaintiff's evidence of defendant's wealth fails to include evidence of defendant's financial liabilities. If evidence of financial condition has been introduced but the sufficiency of the evidence is disputed, counsel may wish to argue in the alternative that the award is disproportionate to the financial condition established by the evidence [see § 64.141].

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, defendant should discuss any evidence introduced by plaintiff that relates to defendant's financial condition, and the ways in which the evidence falls short of plaintiff's burden of proof.

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 64.175 may be used to oppose the motion supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff Has Burden of Establishing Defendant's Financial Condition

The facts and procedural background of Adams v. Murakami (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 105, 284 Cal. Rptr. 318, 813 P.2d 1348 , are discussed in § 64.175[3][a]. To support its holding that plaintiff rather than defendant should bear the burden of establishing defendant's financial condition, the Court noted that Evid. Code § 500 requires the party asserting a claim to bear the burden of establishing any fact essential to that claim (54 Cal. 3d 105, 119) . The Court also found its conclusion supported by what it perceived to be the fundamental unfairness of requiring a defendant to argue both that punitive damages should not be awarded, and that its financial condition justifies a relatively small award; the latter argument can easily be seen as a tacit admission that some punitive damages are justified (54 Cal. 3d 105, 120-121) . The Court therefore held that a plaintiff seeking to recover punitive damages must bear the burden of establishing the defendant's financial condition (54 Cal. 3d 105, 123) .

[b] Failure to Establish Financial Condition Not Subject to Waiver

In Tomaselli v. Transamerica Ins. Co. (1994) 25 Cal. App. 4th 1269, 31 Cal. Rptr. 2d 433 , plaintiffs sued to recover compensatory and punitive damages based on allegations of bad-faith insurance practices. The jury found for plaintiffs, and awarded damages for breach of contract, emotional distress damages based on the tort of unreasonable claims practices, and punitive damages. Defendant appealed, arguing with respect to the punitive damages award that the award was not supported by sufficient evidence, and the court of appeal reversed the punitive damages award.

The court stated that the award could be reversed on either of two grounds: that plaintiff failed to establish defendant's financial condition, and that the evidence was insufficient to establish malice, fraud, or oppression. In discussing the financial condition evidence, the court rejected plaintiff's argument that defendant's failure to object to the evidence introduced--an annual report of "Transamerica Corporation" that included data on "Transamerica Insurance Group"--waived any later attack on the sufficiency of the evidence. The requirement that plaintiff produce evidence of defendant's financial condition is imposed as a matter of public policy, and therefore is not subject to waiver (25 Cal. App. 4th 1269, 1282) . Because of the public's interest in meaningful scrutiny of punitive damages awards, a private litigant cannot by inaction waive the requirement (25 Cal. App. 4th 1269, 1284) .

[c] Financial Condition Evidence Must Relate Specifically to Defendant

The facts and procedural background of Tomaselli v. Transamerica Ins. Co. (1994) 25 Cal. App. 4th 1269, 31 Cal. Rptr. 2d 433 , are discussed in § 64.142[3][b]. The court held that the Transamerica Corporation annual report, which set out financial data for "Transamerica Insurance Group," did not establish the financial condition of defendant, Transamerica Insurance Company. Although defendant may be within the group, the group was not the issuer of the insurance policy involved in the litigation; the court held that there was no evidence regarding the financial condition of defendant (25 Cal. App. 4th 1269, 1283) .

The court also rejected the contention that application of the alter ego doctrine could make the evidence sufficient if plaintiff can show that defendant and Transamerica Insurance Group were alter egos. The court declined to follow the reasoning of Downey Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Ohio Cas. Ins. Co. (1987) 189 Cal. App. 3d 1072, 1100, 234 Cal. Rptr. 835 , finding that the case was substantively flawed due to the court's failure to discuss the apparent lack of notice and opportunity to litigate the alter ego question afforded to the parent company, and its failure to apply all of the tests (such as commingling of assets and inadequate capitalization) that must be met to establish the alter ego doctrine (25 Cal. App. 4th 1269, 1285) . The court also noted that the alter ego doctrine is equitable in nature, and depends on a showing that an inequitable result would follow if corporate separateness is respected, and that plaintiff did not show that an injustice would result if the punitive damages award was limited by the defendant's financial condition rather than by the condition of the parent company (25 Cal. App. 4th 1269, 1285-1286) .

[d] Evidence Must Show Defendant's Current Worth

In Kelly v. Haag (2006) 145 Cal. App. 4th 910, 52 Cal. Rptr. 3d 126 , plaintiff, the owner of a condominium, successfully sued a contractor for fraud and negligence and was awarded $75,000 in punitive damages by the trial court. At trial, however, the plaintiff had presented no evidence of the contractor's net worth. Instead, plaintiff had relied on admissions that defendant had made to plaintiff's sister two years before trial about the purchase of a large home, for which defendant paid approximately $800,000, as well as knowledge of defendant's ownership of another home. The trial court took judicial notice of the fact that property values had generally appreciated in the two years since defendant's admissions and concluded that defendant had a minimum net worth of $750,000. Defendant appealed the punitive damages award as being unsupported by the evidence.

The court of appeal reversed the award of punitive damages, concluding that plaintiff had failed to carry his burden to provide evidence of defendant's worth at the time of trial. The court noted that plaintiff had presented no evidence that defendant still owned either property at the time of trial. Even assuming that defendant may still have owned the properties, plaintiff presented no evidence regarding encumbrances on the properties or of any other liabilities defendant may have had at the time of trial. Defendant had expressed an intent two years before trial to take a second mortgage, yet no evidence was provided at trial concerning that loan (145 Cal. App. 4th 910, 917) . Although plaintiff noted that the defendant was free to appear at trial to present evidence of different assets or liabilities, but failed to do so, the court rejected this argument, noting that plaintiff bore the burden of proving that defendant had sufficient worth at the time of trial to support the award of punitive damages (145 Cal. App. 4th 910, 918) .

[e] Evidence Must Show Defendant's Financial Liabilities

In Baxter v. Peterson (2007) 150 Cal. App. 4th 673, 58 Cal. Rptr. 3d 686 , plaintiff tenant sued his landlord for fraud, alleging that defendant promised plaintiff an option to buy his house upon expiration of his lease after using his own money to renovate it, but that defendant did not honor this promise and never had any intention of doing so. Plaintiff was awarded compensatory damages of $250,000 and punitive damages of $75,000. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed in part and reversed in part. The court of appeal reversed the award of punitive damages on the grounds that plaintiff had failed to provide sufficient evidence of the defendant's financial condition and ability to pay. Plaintiff presented evidence of defendant's job, but no salary information. Plaintiff also presented evidence of defendant's ownership of several properties and their value, but failed to present complete evidence of the amount of income or profit these properties generate. In fact, plaintiff failed to present any evidence of defendant's financial liabilities or whether any of the defendant's properties were mortgaged or otherwise encumbered. In the absence of such evidence, plaintiff failed to present a complete picture of defendant's actual wealth sufficient to support an award of punitive damages. Because plaintiff had been given a full and fair opportunity to present his case for punitive damages at trial, the court held that the issue was not subject to retrial (150 Cal. App. 4th 673, 680-681) .

THE AWARD FOR COMPENSATORY DAMAGES WAS EXCESSIVE AS A MATTER OF LAW BECAUSE IT WAS DUE TO THE IMPROPER SUBMISSION OF AN EXEMPLARY DAMAGES ISSUE TO THE JURY.

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be used in support of a motion for new trial on the ground that an award for compensatory damages is excessive as a matter of law, if the issue of exemplary damages was erroneously presented, and the jury consequently awarded a high amount of compensatory damages [see California Shoppers, Inc. v. Royal Globe Ins. Co. (1985) 175 Cal. App. 3d 1, 67-68, 221 Cal. Rptr. 171] .

[B] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Therefore, counsel should discuss facts showing that the issue of exemplary damages was erroneously presented to the jury, and that the jury awarded an excessive amount of compensatory damages in order to punish defendant rather than to compensate plaintiff for damages actually suffered.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Excessive Compensatory Damages Based on Erroneously Presented Exemplary Damages Issue

In California Shoppers, Inc. v. Royal Globe Ins. Co. (1985) 175 Cal. App. 3d 1, 221 Cal. Rptr. 171 , an insured brought an action against its insurer to recover damages for causes of action concerning the insurance contract. Plaintiff alleged that defendant (1) refused to indemnify plaintiff for a judgment awarded against it in a third-party action, (2) failed to defend that action, (3) breached the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing with regard to the failure to defend, and (4) committed fraud at the time the insurance was purchased. The trial court allowed the issue of exemplary damages to go to the jury, and plaintiff's counsel urged the jury to return a large compensatory damage award in order to justify and uphold a substantial punitive damages award. Plaintiff's counsel also argued that defendant was a large and wealthy company, and should be punished by a large compensatory damage award. The jury verdict awarded plaintiff, inter alia, punitive damages and a high compensatory damages award for economic or business loss. Defendant moved for a new trial and for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. The trial court denied the former, and granted the latter only in regard to the exemplary damages. Defendant appealed from the judgment, and plaintiff cross-appealed from the postjudgment order striking the exemplary damages award.

The court of appeal affirmed with regard to the exemplary damages, and reversed with regard to other issues, including the award of compensatory damages for economic or business loss. The court held that the injection of the exemplary damage issue into the trial could not help but have prejudiced the jury against defendant (175 Cal. App. 3d 1, 67) . The basis for awarding compensatory damages is not to support an award of exemplary damages, but rather to compensate a plaintiff for the actual damages suffered. Because the improper injection of the exemplary damages issue into the case permitted plaintiff's counsel to appeal to the passions of the jury, the court held that defendant was prejudiced and reversed the award of compensatory damages for economic and business loss (175 Cal. App. 3d 1, 68) .

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a defendant's motion for a new trial on the ground of excessive damages, based on the contention that a jury award of punitive damages is improper if there is no accompanying award of compensatory damages.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the absence of compensatory damages, and, if appropriate, attach the jury form showing the lack of compensatory damages [see Cheung v. Daley (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 1673, 1677, 42 Cal. Rptr. 2d 164] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Jury Determination of Fraud Does Not Override Requirement That Exemplary Damage Award Be Accompanied by Compensatory Damages Award

In Cheung v. Daley (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 1673, 42 Cal. Rptr. 2d 164 , the jury found by a special verdict that the total amount of compensatory damages to which the plaintiff's were entitled was "0.00." The jury further found that the defendant had acted with fraud, oppression, or malice, for which they awarded plaintiffs exemplary damages of $92,000. Plaintiffs accepted remittitur to a lesser amount, and judgment was entered. Defendant then appealed.

The court of appeal ruled that an award of exemplary damages must be accompanied by an award of compensatory damages, and reversed the judgment (35 Cal. App. 4th 1673, 1678) . The court noted that the Supreme Court has stated that the foundation for the recovery of exemplary damages rests upon the fact that substantial damages have been sustained, and that exemplary damages cannot be made the basis of recovery independent of a showing that would entitle the plaintiff to an award of actual damages (35 Cal. App. 4th 1673, 1675) . Whether the plaintiff acted with fraud, oppression, or malice was thus irrelevant in light of the finding that plaintiffs suffered no compensable damages (35 Cal. App. 4th 1673, 1677) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Jury Determination of Fraud Does Not Override Requirement That Exemplary Damage Award Be Accompanied by Compensatory Damages Award

In California v. Altus Finances S.A. (9th Cir. 2008) 540 F.3d 992 , a jury specifically found that defendant committed intentional misrepresentations and concealed material facts. However, the jury also found that plaintiff was entitled to "$ 0" in compensatory damages, although it went on to award punitive damages of $700 million. The trial court vacated the award of punitive damages and the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed. The Court of Appeals, relying on Cheung v. Daley, which is discussed in [3][a], above, held that no punitive damages are allowed under California law if compensatory damages, even nominal damages, are available to be awarded to and sought by a plaintiff, but a jury expressly decides to award no compensatory damages (540 F.3d 992, 1002) .

A. Punitive Damages for Harm to Nonparties Unconstitutional. While harm caused to nonparties may be considered when evaluating the reprehensibility of a defendant's conduct, an award of punitive damages specifically intended to punish for harm allegedly caused to nonparties violates federal due process (*Philip Morris USA v. [a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a defendant's motion for a new trial on the ground of excessive damages, based on the contention that the jury award of punitive damages improperly attempts to punish defendant for harm caused to nonparties.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the evidence and argument presented at trial dealing with the harm defendant's conduct allegedly caused to nonparties to the suit and attempt to show how the jury used that evidence and argument to inflate the amount of punitive damages awarded. Counsel should also provide evidence that the trial court failed to take steps to prevent the jury from improperly using evidence of the harm or potential harm caused to nonparties.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Punitive Damages for Harm to Nonparties Unconstitutional

In Philip Morris USA v. Williams (2007) 549 U.S.346, 127 S. Ct. 1057, 166 L. Ed. 2d 940 , plaintiff was the widow of a smoker who sued a large tobacco company on behalf of her husband's estate, alleging that the defendant knowingly and falsely represented that smoking was safe. An Oregon jury awarded plaintiff about $821,000 in compensatory damages, as well as $79.5 million in punitive damages. The Oregon Supreme Court eventually upheld the damage awards, specifically finding that the punitive damages award was not "grossly excessive." In reaching this conclusion, the Court rejected the defendant's argument that the U.S. Constitution prohibits a state jury from using punitive damages to punish a defendant for harm to nonparties. Defendant had argued that because plaintiff's attorney had argued to the jury the potential damage that defendant's conduct had on other smokers who were not parties to the lawsuit, the trial court erred in refusing to instruct the jury that they were not to impose punitive damages for harm caused to nonparties.

The United States Supreme Court granted defendant's writ of certiorari and reversed. The Supreme Court agreed that harm caused to nonparties may be considered when evaluating the reprehensibility of a defendant's conduct, such as when the evidence shows that the conduct that harmed the plaintiff also posed a substantial risk of harm to the general public. Beyond that limited use of evidence of harm caused to nonparties, however, the Court held that an award of punitive damages specifically intended to punish for harm allegedly caused to nonparties is unconstitutional, as it amounts to a taking of property without due process. The Court noted that a defendant threatened with punishment for injury to nonparties has no opportunity to defend against the charges. In addition, permitting such punishment, according to the Court, would add a near standardless dimension to the punitive damages equation and magnify the due process concerns with preventing arbitrariness, uncertainty, and lack of notice. The Court also could find no authority to support the use of punitive damages to punish a defendant for harming others (579 U.S. 346, 127 S. Ct. 1057, 1062-1064) . The Court concluded that if there exists in a particular case a significant risk that the jury may be confused as to how evidence of harm to nonparties may be used, a court must, upon request, take steps to alleviate the confusion, although it left to the states the fashioning of appropriate protections (549 U.S. 346, 127 S. Ct 1057, 1065) . Because the Oregon Supreme Court's opinion focussed on more than reprehensibility and indicated that it considered it to be appropriate to actually punish for harm to nonparties, the United States Supreme Court remanded for reconsideration, and perhaps retrial, of the punitive damages award, without addressing itself whether the initial $79.5 million award was grossly excessive (549 U.S. 346, 127 S. Ct. 1057, 1064-1065) .

[b] Evidence of Dissimilar Misconduct Committed Against Nonparties Inadmissible

In Holdgrafer v. Unocal Corp. (2008) 160 Cal. App. 4th 907, 73 Cal. Rptr. 3d 216 , plaintiffs were owners of commercial property damaged by subsurface contamination caused by leakage from oil pipelines owned by defendant. Defendant acknowledged the contamination and assured plaintiffs for over a decade that the company would work with plaintiffs to ensure that they would not suffer a loss in property value from the contamination. During the lengthy time period that the parties negotiated, defendant took steps to prevent further contamination and assisted in protecting plaintiffs from negative financial impact by, among other things, making and guaranteeing loans to plaintiffs. However, defendant contended that the contamination would not require an expensive excavation but would dissipate over time on its own. When plaintiffs concluded that they were not satisfied with the steps taken by defendant, plaintiffs sued defendant for negligence, nuisance, and trespass. The jury awarded over $2.5 million in compensatory damages and $10 million in punitive damages, although the trial court reduced the punitive damage award to $5 million. The punitive damage award was predicated largely on substantial evidence admitted at trial showing that employees of defendant had committed extensive acts of denial and concealment in relation to other spills and leaks associated with other facilities. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the compensatory damage award, but reversed the award of punitive damages. Relying on the United States Supreme Court's due process jurisprudence restricting the use of evidence of other acts of misconduct when awarding punitive damages, the court of appeal concluded that the trial court committed reversible error in admitting evidence of other misconduct that was dissimilar to the misconduct alleged by plaintiffs. In seeking punitive damages, plaintiffs had argued that defendant's corporate policy was to deny and cover up leaks and spills, relying almost exclusively on evidence that defendant had concealed other spills and leaks from the public and government agencies, denied responsibility for resulting contamination, and misrepresented the magnitude of environmental damage sustained. The harm alleged by plaintiffs, however, had nothing to do with such denials and misrepresentations. Defendant had reported the relevant contamination to the state and affected property owners. After defendant's voluntary revelation, state and private entities continuously monitored the contamination and defendant continued to disclose relevant information. They also continued to negotiate with plaintiffs over the best ways to contain the damage and provided plaintiffs with financial assistance to protect the value of plaintiffs' investment. Only when plaintiffs determined that they were not satisfied with the result did they bring suit. The court of appeal concluded that the trial court's admission of dissimilar evidence of defendant's conduct in response to other spills and leaks, especially when no limiting instruction was given, invited the jury to punish defendant for unrelated misconduct that had no effect on plaintiffs, in violation of federal due process concerns (160 Cal. App. 4th 907, 928-932) .

[a] Punitive Damages for Harm to Nonparties Unconstitutional

In Bullock v. Philip Morris USA, Inc. (2008) 159 Cal. App. 4th 655, 71 Cal. Rptr. 3d 775 , plaintiff was a cigarette smoker who sued a tobacco company for products liability and fraud based on the company's long-term efforts to hide the harmful health effects of cigarette smoking from their customers and the general public. A jury awarded plaintiff compensatory damages and $28 billion dollars in punitive damages, although the trial court reduced the amount of punitive damages to $28 million dollars. The court of appeal, after reviewing the United States Supreme Court decision in Philip Morris USA v. Williams, described in [3][a], above, held that it was prejudicial error for the trial court to refuse the defendant's request to instruct the jury that they were not permitted to impose punishment for harm suffered by persons other than the plaintiff. The court noted that at trial, plaintiff's counsel had argued that for every trial brought by a smoker against the defendant, 28,000 persons had died from the harmful effects of smoking, and the $28 billion in punitive damages awarded by the jury amounted to $1 million for each of these purported deaths. In light of this record, the court concluded that failure to give defendant's requested instruction was prejudicial error (159 Cal. App. 4th 655, 693-695) .

[a] New Trial on Issue of Damages Where Defendant Surprised by Damages Presented at Trial

In Campain v. Safeway Stores, Inc. (1972) 29 Cal. App. 3d 362, 104 Cal. Rptr. 752 , plaintiff brought a personal injury action against defendant. In her complaint, plaintiff prayed for damages for pain and suffering, medical expenses, and loss of earnings. At her deposition prior to trial, plaintiff stated that she was not employed at the time of the accident and did not lose any immediate employment as a result of her slip and fall in defendant's store. Plaintiff subsequently indicated through her answers to interrogatories that she was not making any claim for lost wages, earnings, or earning capacity resulting from the accident in her answers to defendant's interrogatories. Thereafter, plaintiff moved, and was granted permission, to amend her complaint to pray for increased damages. However, neither the papers submitted nor the argument on the motion to amend the complaint referred to a loss of earnings or to future earnings. At the trial, plaintiff sought to introduce evidence of her prospective employment at the time of the accident and her plans for future employment. This evidence was admitted over defendant's objection. The jury awarded plaintiff compensatory damages in an amount reduced on defendant's motion for a new trial. Both parties appealed. The court of appeal granted defendant a new trial solely on the issue of damages on the ground that defendant was genuinely surprised by the introduction of evidence of loss of earnings and was thereby prejudiced in its defense. The court of appeal reasoned that defendant was entitled to rely on pretrial discovery in preparing its case for trial. Thus, defendant was denied a fair opportunity to prepare to meet the issue of lost earnings and future earnings by plaintiff's assertions that she was not claiming them as damages.

Optional Paragraph C may be used if the motion is being limited to the issue of inadequate damages and the jury determined the issue of liability. [3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] New Trial as Proper if Plaintiff Clearly Entitled to Larger Recovery

In Crowe v. Sacks (1955) 44 Cal. 2d 590, 599, 283 P.2d 689 , two plaintiffs brought an action against defendant for personal injuries sustained by them in an automobile collision. At the conclusion of the trial, the jury returned a verdict in favor of each of the plaintiffs which the judge found to be inadequate and the result of the jury's compromise of the issues of negligence and damages. The trial judge then returned the jury for further deliberations to reconsider its verdict. The jury subsequently returned a verdict in favor of both of the plaintiffs which awarded each of them an amount commensurate with their actual damage. Defendant's motions to enter the original verdict and for a new trial were denied and defendant appealed, arguing that the trial court committed prejudicial error in returning the jury for further deliberations. The Supreme Court held, in part, that the trial court could have granted a motion for a new trial if it was dissatisfied with the amount of the jury's verdict. It stated that a trial judge may set aside a verdict on a motion for a new trial when a plaintiff, who is entitled to a recovery, is clearly entitled to a larger amount than that allowed by the jury. Thus, in the absence of an insufficient or defective verdict, the trial court erred procedurally to defendant's prejudice when it sent the jury back for further deliberations with the statement that the damages awarded in its original verdict were grossly inadequate (44 Cal. 2d 590, 599) .

[b] Discretion to Grant New Trial Limited to Damages

In Myers v. King (1969) 272 Cal. App. 2d 571, 77 Cal. Rptr. 625 , plaintiff brought an action against defendant for personal injuries sustained when plaintiff was struck from behind by defendant's automobile as he walked down a roadway facing on-coming traffic. At the conclusion of the trial, the jury awarded plaintiff both special damages and general damages. The trial court thereafter granted plaintiff's motion for a new trial limited to the issue of damages subject to the condition that the motion would be denied if defendant consented to an additur specified by the trial court. Defendant did not consent and appealed from the judgment and order granting a new trial. Defendant contended, in part, that the trial court abused its discretion in granting a new trial limited to the issue of damages. The court of appeal affirmed the order granting the new trial limited to damages, noting that the decision to limit a new trial to the issue of damages rests in the discretion of the trial court and that such a decision is proper when it can be reasonably said that the liability issue has been determined by the jury. The court of appeal found that the liability issue was not close in the case before it in that there was uncontradicted evidence that defendant was attempting to pass another vehicle when he negligently struck plaintiff. The court of appeal then concluded that the low amount awarded as general damages resulted from the jury's difficulty in assessing damages rather than from its inability to decide the liability issue (272 Cal. App. 2d 571, 581) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] New Trial Is Proper if Plaintiff Clearly Entitled to Larger Recovery

In Katiuzhinsky v. Perry (2007) 152 Cal. App. 4th 1288 , plaintiffs were injured in an automobile accident and filed a personal injury lawsuit. Medical providers who treated plaintiffs filed liens in this lawsuit to recover for medical services they provided, but sold these liens to a financial services company for approximately 50 percent of the billed amounts. While plaintiffs remained liable to the financial services company for the full billed amount for the medical services, the trial court limited plaintiffs' evidence of past medical expenses to the reduced amount that the financial services company paid for the liens. The jury returned a verdict awarding this reduced amount as damages for medical expenses. The court of appeal reversed and remanded for a new trial on damages. The court of appeal held that the amount billed by the medical care providers was admissible as evidence of the nature and extent of plaintiffs' injuries and relevant to assessment of an overall damage award (152 Cal. App. 4th 1288, 1295-1296) . The court also held that the trial court erred in limiting the amount of damages for medical expenses to the amount paid by the financial services company. The court noted that plaintiffs remained liable to that company for the full amount billed by the medical care providers, and as such, the jury's award did not fully compensate plaintiffs for their expenses. The court also noted that while the medical care providers sold their liens to the financial services company at a discount, and in return received the convenience of immediate payment without the trouble of having to pursue recovery from plaintiffs, they were under no obligation to do so, and the amounts originally billed still reflected on the reasonable value of the services plaintiffs received at the time the services were rendered (152 Cal. App. 4th 1288, 1296-1298).

[b] Discretion to Grant New Trial Limited to Damages

In Tan Jay Int'l, Ltd. v. Canadian Indem. Co. (1988) 198 Cal. App. 3d 695, 243 Cal. Rptr. 907 , an action by an insured against its insurer based on the insurer's refusal to defend and settle a third-party suit, the jury awarded the plaintiff compensatory damages of $5,300,000 and punitive damages of $35,000,000. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's granting of a motion for new trial limited to the issue of damages, on the ground that the punitive damages were excessive. The court held that the factors in assessing the choice of a limited new trial versus an entire new trial are the following: (1) whether liability was clearly established at the first trial; (2) whether evidence concerning damages was insufficient or entirely nonexistent; and (3) whether prejudice to a party would result from the choice of one disposition over the other (198 Cal. App. 3d 695, 705) .

In Liodas v. Sahadi (1977) 19 Cal. 3d 278, 137 Cal. Rptr. 635, 562 P.2d 316 , plaintiff, the trustee of a bankrupt estate, brought an action against defendant for damages for fraud and breach of fiduciary obligation. At the conclusion of the trial, the jury awarded plaintiff substantial compensatory and punitive damages. Defendant's motion for a new trial was granted by the trial court but was limited to the issue of damages. Both plaintiff and defendant appealed from the order, defendant appealing insofar as the order restricted the new trial to the issue of damages. The Supreme Court held, in part, that the decision to limit a new trial to the issue of damages rests in the discretion of the trial judge who may order the new trial limited to damages when the issue of liability has been determined by the jury. However, the Supreme Court found that, as a result of erroneous damages instructions, it was impossible to determine the basis on which liability was predicated in the case before it. A new trial limited to damages would have been prejudicial to defendant since defendant's liability would have been assumed in such a trial, and the Supreme Court therefore, ordered a new trial on all issues.

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for a new trial on the ground of inadequate damages in a tort action when a verdict is limited to a plaintiff's special damages and no allowance is made for the plaintiff's pain and suffering. If the argument is being made that the award of general damages is so small, compared to the nature and extent of the injuries sustained, that it is essentially no award at all, the bracketed language in Point F should be included.

Where appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Verdict Limited to Special Damages and No Allowance for General Damages

In Gallentine v. Richardson (1967) 248 Cal. App. 2d 152, 56 Cal. Rptr. 237 , plaintiff brought a negligence action against defendant for personal injuries sustained in a hunting accident. At the conclusion of the trial, the jury awarded plaintiff the exact amount of special damages for medical expenses and lost earnings stipulated to by the parties, and nothing for plaintiff's pain, suffering, inconvenience, shock, or mental suffering. Plaintiff sought a new trial confined to the issue of damages, maintaining that the award was inadequate. Plaintiff's motion was denied and plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal reversed the judgment, holding that an award limited strictly to special damages was inadequate as a matter of law in a case where substantial general damages were obviously incurred and where a strong case of negligence had been made. Therefore, the trial court's denial of plaintiff's motion for a new trial was an abuse of its discretion. However, the court of appeal granted a new trial on all of the issues rather than one limited to the issue of damages because the court believed that the small award to plaintiff resulted from the jurors' compromise on the issue of defendant's liability.

[b] Such Verdict as Inadequate as Matter of Law in Personal Injury Action

Gallentine v. Richardson (1967) 248 Cal. App. 2d 152, 56 Cal. Rptr. 237 , is discussed in § 64.147[3][a]. The court of appeal reversed the judgment after finding the damages to be inadequate as a matter of law.

NOTE:

Because the standard used by the trial court is not as strict [see, e.g., Bazzoli v. Nance's Sanitarium, Inc. (1952) 109 Cal. App. 2d 232, 243, 240 P.2d 672] , it does not appear necessary for a plaintiff to show that the damages were inadequate as a matter of law for the trial court to grant a new trial. However, counsel may wish to use the Gallentine case as authority where the damages do appear to be so inadequate that they are inadequate as a matter of law.

In Haskins v. Holmes (1967) 252 Cal. App. 2d 580, 60 Cal. Rptr. 659 , plaintiff brought an action against defendant for severe personal injuries arising from an assault and battery. In a trial by court, the judge did not make any express finding that plaintiff suffered pain, physical discomfort, shock, or inconvenience as a result of his injuries but specifically concluded that plaintiff suffered personal injuries and general damages as a result of the assault and battery by defendant. However, the trial judge awarded plaintiff general damages of only a few dollars over the amount of his special damages for medical, surgical, and hospital expenses. Plaintiff's motion for a new trial on the ground that the damages awarded were grossly inadequate as a matter of law was denied. Plaintiff then appealed, and the court of appeal reversed and remanded the action for a new trial solely on the issue of the amount of damages. The court of appeal inferred that the insignificant amount awarded over the sum of plaintiff's special damages was the amount intended to be awarded as general damages. Since the trial judge had also found that plaintiff's injuries were severe, it was obvious to the court of appeal that substantial pain, suffering, shock, and inconvenience necessarily and inevitably accompanied the injuries, surgery, and medical and hospital care. Thus, the general damages awarded were so small compared to the nature and extent of the injuries sustained by plaintiff that the case fell within the category of cases in which no general damages at all were awarded despite a plaintiff's pain and suffering. Therefore, the award of general damages was inadequate as a matter of law and the denial of a new trial on the issue of damages was an abuse of the trial court's discretion.

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Verdict Limited to Special Damages and No Allowance for General Damages

In Dodson v. J. Pacific, Inc. (2007) 154 Cal. App. 4th 931, 64 Cal. Rptr. 3d 920 , plaintiff suffered an injury to his back and neck while attempting to avoid a large metal cylinder that had slipped from a forklift on defendant's premises. While plaintiff did not seek immediate medical care, he eventually required back surgery and underwent several months of physical therapy. Plaintiff sued defendant for general negligence and premises liability. The jury found that defendant had been negligent and this negligence was a cause of plaintiff's injury. Because plaintiff was found by the jury to have been 50 percent at fault, the jury awarded plaintiff an amount that compensated plaintiff for half his costs of surgery and part of his physical therapy. However, the award apparently included no amount for plaintiff's pain and suffering. The court of appeal reversed the judgement and remanded for a new trial on damages. The jury had specifically found that defendant's negligence was partly responsible for plaintiff's injury, requiring surgery and physical therapy. The court concluded that under those circumstances, the plaintiff must necessarily have suffered at least some pain and suffering, and the damage award was inadequate as a matter of law for failing to include compensation for that pain and suffering (154 Cal. App. 4th 931, 938) .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Pecuniary Loss in Excess of Verdict and Insufficient Allowance for Pain and Suffering

In Jehl v. Southern Pac. Co. (1967) 66 Cal. 2d 821, 59 Cal. Rptr. 276, 427 P.2d 988 , plaintiff suffered personal injuries while employed in defendant's railroad yard. Plaintiff brought an action against defendant, and, at the conclusion of the trial, the jury returned a verdict in favor of plaintiff. Plaintiff successfully moved for a new trial on the issue of damages on the ground that the damages awarded were inadequate. Defendant then appealed from the order granting a new trial on the issue of damages, contending that the trial court abused its discretion in concluding that the damages awarded were inadequate. The Supreme Court held, in part, that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in granting a new trial on the ground of inadequate damages because it did not appear from the record that the verdict was adequate as a matter of law. The trial court could have reasonably concluded from the evidence presented that plaintiff's pecuniary losses alone would have exceeded the amount of the verdict and that a substantial additional amount should have been allowed for pain and suffering. Defendant also contended that the trial court should have given defendant the option to consent to an additur before granting plaintiff's motion for a new trial. At the time of plaintiff's motion, California case law did not permit additur. The Supreme Court adopted the principle of additur thus disposing of defendant's appeal by ruling that the order granting plaintiff's motion for a new trial be affirmed unless the trial court in its discretion ordered an additur.

[b] Such Award Inadequate as Matter of Law in Personal Injury Action

In Thompson v. Mattucci (1963) 223 Cal. App. 2d 208, 35 Cal. Rptr. 741 , plaintiff brought an action against defendant for personal injuries sustained when defendant's automobile was involved in a rear-end collision with the automobile in which plaintiff was a passenger. At the trial, plaintiff's medical bills were admitted as evidence. However, at the conclusion of the trial, the jury returned a verdict in favor of plaintiff that constituted less than the amount shown by plaintiff's medical expenses. Plaintiff appealed on the ground that the award was inadequate as a matter of law. The court of appeal agreed, reversing and remanding the action for a new trial solely on the issue of damages. The court of appeal held that an award in a personal injury action which neither covered the amount of hospital and medical expenses necessarily incurred, nor allowed anything for pain and suffering invariably accompanying the injuries sustained, was inadequate as a matter of law.

NOTE:

In Thompson, the court of appeal reversed the judgment after finding the damages to be inadequate as a matter of law, since the standard used by the trial court is not as strict [see, e.g., Bazzoli v. Nance's Sanitarium, Inc. (1952) 109 Cal. App. 2d 232, 243, 240 P.2d 672] , it does not appear necessary for a plaintiff to show that the damages were inadequate as a matter of law for the trial court to grant a new trial on the ground of inadequate damages. However, counsel may wish to use Thompson as authority where the damages do appear to be so inadequate that they are inadequate as a matter of law.

[Caption. See § 64.140.]

IT IS PROPER TO GRANT A NEW TRIAL IF PLAINTIFF'S EVIDENCE IS INSUFFICIENT TO SUPPORT AN AWARD OF EXEMPLARY DAMAGES.

A. Motion for New Trial. On the application of the party aggrieved, the _____ [verdict or decision] may be vacated, in whole or in part, and a new trial may be granted, on the ground that the evidence is insufficient to justify the _____ [verdict or decision], if substantial rights of the aggrieved party are materially affected thereby (Code Civ. Proc. § 657(6)).

B. Exemplary Damage Award as Erroneous When Evidence Does Not Show Required Grounds. In order to justify an award of exemplary damages, it must be proven by clear and convincing evidence that the defendant has been guilty of oppression, fraud, or malice (see Civ. Code § 3294(a)), and insufficient evidence thereof will not support an award of punitive damages (see Civ. Code § 3294(a), Code Civ. Proc. § 657(6)).

[EITHER, if plaintiff based his or her exemplary damage claim on oppression.]

C. Oppression Defined. Oppression, as used in Civ. Code § 3294(a), is despicable conduct that subjects a person to cruel and unjust hardship in conscious disregard of his or her rights (Civ. Code § 3294(c)(2); *see also Roth v. Shell Oil Co. (1960) 185 Cal. App. 2d 676, 681-682, 8 Cal. Rptr. 514 , disapproved on other grounds, Templeton Feed & Grain v. Ralston Purina Co. [OR, if plaintiff based his or her exemplary damages claim on malice.]

C. Malice Defined. Malice, as used in Civ. Code § 3294(a), is conduct that is intended by the defendant to cause injury to the plaintiff, or despicable conduct that is carried on by the defendant in willful and conscious disregard of the safety or rights of others (Civ. Code § 3294(c)(1)).

[OR, if plaintiff based his or her exemplary damages claim on fraud.]

C. Fraud Defined. Fraud, as used in Civ. Code § 3294(a), is an intentional misrepresentation, deceit, or concealment of a material fact known to defendant with an intention on the part of defendant to thereby deprive a person of legal rights or property, or otherwise to cause injury (Civ. Code § 3294(c)(3); see also Fletcher v. Western Nat'l Life Ins. Co. (1970) 10 Cal. App. 3d 376, 405, 89 Cal. Rptr. 78).

[Optional] D. Establishing Conscious Disregard of Other's Safety. In order to justify an award of exemplary damages on the basis of conscious disregard of the safety of others, plaintiff must establish that defendant was aware of the probable dangerous consequences of his or her conduct, and that he or she willfully and deliberately failed to avoid those consequences (Taylor v. Superior Court (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 890, 895-896, 157 Cal. Rptr. 693, 598 P.2d 854).

[Optional] E. Breach of Duty of Good Faith and Fair Dealing as Not Sufficient for Exemplary Damage Award. Defendant's violation of its duty of good faith and fair dealing does not alone necessarily establish that defendant acted with the requisite intent to injure plaintiff which is necessary for an award of exemplary damages (Silberg v. California Life Ins. Co. (1974) 11 Cal. 3d 452, 462-463, 113 Cal. Rptr. 711, 521 P.2d 1103).

[Optional] F. No Malice Where Insurer Interpreted Contract in Good Faith. Although an insurance policy that is reasonably susceptible of two interpretations should be construed in favor of the insured, a finding of malice cannot be predicated on the fact of a divergent interpretation of the contract as long as the insurer's interpretation was rendered in good faith. In order to support an exemplary damage award, there must be evidence that the insurer's contract interpretation was unreasonable or undertaken in bad faith (Mason v. Mercury Cas. Co. (1976) 64 Cal. App. 3d 471, 475, 134 Cal. Rptr. 545).

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for a new trial in a tort action in which plaintiff was awarded exemplary damages but the evidence was insufficient to support the award in that plaintiff did not prove that defendant was guilty of malice, oppression, or fraud. Optional Paragraph E is for use when the evidence showed that defendant insurance company violated its duty of good faith and fair dealing but there was no evidence that defendant also was guilty of oppression, fraud, or malice. Optional Paragraph F is for use when the exemplary damages award apparently was based on the fact that defendant insurance company's interpretation of an insurance policy differed from plaintiff's interpretation.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Uses

In an appropriate case, the defendant could bring a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict [see Code Civ. Proc. § 629] on the issue of exemplary damages on the ground that there was no substantial evidence in the record sufficient to support exemplary damages award.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Motion for New Trial

Insufficiency of evidence to justify a verdict or decision is a ground for granting a new trial [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(6)]. Accordingly, if in a tort action plaintiff was awarded exemplary damages, and the evidence is insufficient to support the award in that plaintiff did not show by clear and convincing evidence that defendant was guilty of oppression, malice, or fraud, a motion for new trial on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence would be appropriate.

A party seeking a new trial must file a notice of intention to move for a new trial [Code Civ. Proc. § 659] supported by a memorandum of points and authorities [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 203], and a motion on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict or other decision must be made on the minutes of the court [Code Civ. Proc. § 658]. Where the motion is made on the minutes, reference may be made to any depositions or documentary evidence offered at trial, and to the court reporter's report of the proceedings or any certified transcript of the report [Code Civ. Proc. § 660]. For more complete analysis of motions for new trial, see Ch. 155, Motions After Trial in this publication.

[b] Exemplary Damage Award as Erroneous When Evidence Does Not Show Required Grounds

As amended in 1987, Civ. Code § 3294(a) requires that, before punitive damages can be awarded, the defendant must be proven guilty of oppression, fraud, or malice by clear and convincing evidence [Civ. Code § 3294(a)]. Clear and convincing evidence has been defined as "clear, explicit, and unequivocal," "so clear as to leave no substantial doubt," and "sufficiently strong to demand the unhesitating assent of every reasonable mind" [People v. Martin (1970) 2 Cal. 3d 822, 833 fn. 14, 87 Cal. Rptr. 709, 471 P.2d 29] . A motion for a new trial may be granted when the evidence supporting the plaintiff's punitive damages claim has failed to meet the "clear and convincing" standard [Civ. Code § 3294(a); Code Civ. Proc. 657(6)]. The "clear and convincing" standard of proof applies only to actions in which the trial is commenced on or after January 1, 1988 [Civ. Code § 3294(e)]. In actions in which the initial trial commenced prior to January 1, 1988, it would appear that malice, oppression, and fraud could be proven by a preponderance of the evidence.

[c] Oppression Defined

In Roth v. Shell Oil Co. (1960) 185 Cal. App. 2d 676, 8 Cal. Rptr. 514 , disapproved on other grounds, Templeton Feed & Grain v. Ralston Purina Co. (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 461, 72 Cal. Rptr. 344, 446 P.2d 152 , an action for damages for trespasses, the jury rendered a verdict in favor of plaintiffs for compensatory and punitive damages. The trial court granted defendant's motion for a new trial on the grounds of insufficiency of the evidence and excessiveness of the verdict unless plaintiffs filed a written consent to a reduction of the punitive damages award. Plaintiffs filed a consent and a new trial was denied. Defendant appealed and the court of appeal affirmed the judgment. Plaintiffs operated a service station and sold defendant's products under a dealer sales contract with defendant. They lived on the same premises. One of defendant's employees observed plaintiffs' station for a certain period of time and concluded that it was no longer in operation because he found it closed on occasions during normal business hours and at one time saw a closed sign posted on it. He recommended to his superior that the account with plaintiffs be closed, the contract terminated, and defendant's identifying signs removed. On this recommendation and without checking with the district office, making any further inquiry, or giving written notice of the contract's termination, defendant's employee ordered an independent contractor to remove defendant's sign and pole and paint out defendant's colors on the gasoline pumps and building, and discontinued service to the station. This was done on two separate occasions. Defendant later discovered there had been no termination of the contract and no actual cessation of service and offered to restore plaintiffs' premises to their former condition. At trial, defendant's distributor testified that he had insisted on written instructions concerning the cancelling of the contract to keep himself clear of any after-effects.

The court of appeal noted that punitive damages may be recovered where defendant has been guilty of oppression, fraud, or malice, express or implied. According to the court, as between oppression and malice, there must be some evidence of one or the other of these elements to justify the jury in making the award. The court stated that the question was whether or not a jury might draw an inference from the evidence produced that there was a conscious disregard for the rights of others which constituted an act of subjecting plaintiffs to cruel and unjust hardship. The court also noted that oppression has been defined as an act of subjecting someone to cruel and unjust hardship, and the jury was instructed according to these definitions.

In Trammell v. Western Union Tel. Co. (1976) 57 Cal. App. 3d 538, 129 Cal. Rptr. 361 , plaintiff sued defendant, in part, for punitive damages, alleging that defendant was motivated by malice, ill will, oppression, and fraud in misrepresenting to plaintiff's former employer that defendant had delivered a telegram to plaintiff knowing that plaintiff would lose his job if his employer thought he had received the message. After a jury awarded plaintiff punitive damages, the trial court granted defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict on the issue of punitive damages. When plaintiff's employer was able to rehire him after a lay-off period, it sent a message to defendant to telegram plaintiff regarding a return to work, and to report to the employer that the message was received and signed for by the party to whom it was sent. Defendant notified the employer that plaintiff had received its telegram although, in fact, he had not. When plaintiff did not contact his employer as instructed in the telegram, he was terminated. When plaintiff learned that a telegram had been sent to him, and that he had been terminated for not responding, he contacted defendant. He testified that he told one of defendant's employees that the only way he could regain his job was if one of defendant's officials admitted that a mistake had been made and that he had not received the telegram. One of defendant's employees made a customer inquiry, handling it to the extent of his authority. The matter was later referred to another office where another employee handled the inquiry. In determining whether there was substantial evidence for the jury to have made a finding of malice or oppression, the court of appeal stated that oppression means subjecting a person to cruel and unjust hardship in conscious disregard of his rights. The court noted that the conduct which plaintiff asserted as the basis of his punitive damages claim was the failure of defendant to act speedily to admit or correct the mistake made in the delivery of the telegram. Assuming that defendant did have a duty to plaintiff to admit or correct a mistake made in the delivery, the record still failed to show substantial evidence that defendant's employees acted with either malice or oppression in not providing information to correct or show the mistake at an earlier date. Since one employee took all the action that he was allowed to take on plaintiff's complaint, the court held that it cannot be said that his conduct was improper or motivated by oppression or malice. Similarly, there was no evidence that the other employee had any knowledge that processing plaintiff's complaint more quickly would affect plaintiff's ability to regain his job nor was there any evidence from which it could be inferred that in not responding more quickly, the employee acted with malice or oppression towards plaintiff. Consequently, the court affirmed the trial court's decision.

NOTE:

Civ. Code § 3294, as amended in 1987, defines "oppression" as despicable conduct that subjects a person to cruel and unjust hardship in conscious disregard of that person's rights. Unlike the definition used in the original version of Civ. Code § 3294, the amended definition requires that the defendant's conduct be "despicable" [Civ. Code § 3294(c)(2)]. The amended statute applies in all actions in which the initial trial has not commenced before January 1, 1988 [Civ. Code § 3294(e)]. The holdings in the cases discussed above are still valid inasmuch as they appear to be consistent with Civ. Code § 3294 as amended in 1987.

[d] Fraud Defined

In Fletcher v. Western Nat'l Life Ins. Co. (1970) 10 Cal. App. 3d 376, 89 Cal. Rptr. 78 , the plaintiff sought damages, in part, for intentional infliction of emotional distress. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, awarding compensatory and punitive damages against the defendant insurance company and its claims supervisor, Amason. Defendants moved for judgment notwithstanding the verdict and for a new trial. The trial court denied the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict and defendant Amason's motion for new trial. After the plaintiff accepted a remission of the punitive damages award against the insurance company, the company's motion for new trial was denied.

The plaintiff had purchased a disability insurance policy from defendant insurance company which provided for monthly payments to plaintiff should he become totally disabled. Payments were limited to a maximum period of two years in the event of sickness and 30 years in the event of injury. The plaintiff thereafter had an accident at work which caused various injuries, and was eventually terminated by his employer. There was virtually unanimous agreement by the physicians connected with the case that the plaintiff was disabled because of an injury to his back resulting from the accident. The defendant insurance company had knowledge of almost all of the doctors' reports. More than a year after the accident, defendant Amason concluded that the claim should be paid under the sickness provision of the policy which exposed the company to liability for only two years. The plaintiff was informed of this. Then the defendants informed plaintiff that they regarded his condition as one of a congenital nature, and contested the validity of the policy because the plaintiff had not informed them of any such defect. After plaintiff retained an attorney, the defendant company dropped the contest and resumed some payments. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, holding that the plaintiff had stated a case for intentional infliction of mental distress. Defendants contended on appeal that Civ. Code § 3294 providing for the imposition of punitive damages is unconstitutional because of the vagueness of the words "guilty of oppression, fraud, or malice" as used in the statute. In rejecting this contention, the court of appeal noted that a statute is sufficiently certain if it employs words of long usage or with a common law meaning notwithstanding an element of degree in the definition as to which estimates might differ. The court held that oppression and malice have well established meanings. It further noted that although fraud may technically refer to a number of different legal problems, it is a work of common usage and has a commonly accepted meaning: an instance or an act of trickery or deceit especially when involving misrepresentation; an intentional misrepresentation, concealment, or nondisclosure for the purpose of inducing another in reliance on it to part with some valuable thing or to surrender a legal right. Consequently, the court held that Civ. Code § 3294 is not unconstitutionally vague (10 Cal. App. 3d 376, 405) .

[e] Establishing Conscious Disregard of Others' Safety

The factual background of Taylor v. Superior Court (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 890, 157 Cal. Rptr. 693, 598 P.2d 854 , is discussed in § 64.41[3][a]. In discussing the case, the Supreme Court stated that in order to justify an award of punitive damages on the basis of conscious disregard of the safety of others, plaintiff must establish that the defendant was aware of the probable dangerous consequences of his conduct and that he willfully and deliberately failed to avoid the consequences. The Court held that plaintiff's complaint contained sufficient allegations from which it could reasonably be concluded that defendant consciously disregarded the safety of others (24 Cal. 3d 890, 895-896) .

[f] Breach of Duty of Good Faith and Fair Dealing as Not Sufficient for Exemplary Damage Award

In Silberg v. California Life Ins. Co. (1974) 11 Cal. 3d 452, 113 Cal. Rptr. 711, 521 P.2d 1103 , plaintiff sought a declaration that defendant was liable under an insurance policy issued to plaintiff by defendant insurance company and sought damages for physical and mental distress. Plaintiff alleged in part, that defendant was guilty of fraud, bad faith, and malicious and oppressive conduct, and that plaintiff was entitled to both compensatory and punitive damages. The jury found for plaintiff but after judgment on the verdict was rendered, the trial court granted defendant's motion for a new trial on the grounds of insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict, error in law, and excessive damages. The insurance policy issued to plaintiff by defendant provided that defendant would pay for hospital care up to a certain limit with an exclusion for losses caused by injuries for which compensation was payable under worker's compensation law. Plaintiff was injured while performing incidental services for the landlord of his business premises. He filed a claim with defendant and also instituted proceedings to obtain worker's compensation benefits. The worker's compensation carrier denied coverage on the ground plaintiff was not an employee at the time of injury. A hearing was later held by the Worker's Compensation Appeals Board and the proceeding was settled by compromise and release because the evidence was in conflict as to whether plaintiff's injury occurred in the course of employment. Plaintiff underwent four operations for his injuries and was compelled to change hospitals and surgeons for the operations because of defendant's failure to pay his claims. Ultimately, he lost his business, was compelled to change his residence five times for inability to pay rent, and had difficulty in affording medication to ease his constant pain. His utilities were turned off several times for nonpayment, and his wheelchair was repossessed. Plaintiff also suffered two nervous breakdowns. At trial the manager of defendant's claims department testified that defendant refused to pay plaintiff's claims because it was waiting for the outcome of the worker compensation proceeding to determine if there was liability under the policy. The evidence conflicted as to the insurance industry custom regarding the payment of hospital benefit claims in these circumstances. Several witnesses for defendant testified that during pendency of a worker's compensation proceeding, it was customary to deny benefits or to suspend judgment on an insured's claim until the worker's compensation coverage question was decided. A witness for plaintiff testified that the custom was to pay the claim if the worker's compensation carrier denied liability and the insured had suffered severe injuries, and that if benefits were awarded, the insurer could impose a lien on the sums paid under worker's compensation.

The Supreme Court stated that a plaintiff who is entitled to compensatory damages is not therefore also entitled to exemplary damages. In order to justify exemplary damages, the defendant must be guilty of oppression, fraud, or malice. He must act with the intent to vex, injure or annoy, or with a conscious disregard of the plaintiffs' rights. The Court stated that, although it had concluded that defendant violated its duty of good faith and fair dealing, this alone did not necessarily establish that defendant acted with the requisite intent to injure plaintiff. The Court found that the trial court properly held that the evidence was insufficient to support a finding of exemplary damages and affirmed the trial court's judgment in that respect, although it reversed the order granting a new trial on the issue of defendant's liability for compensatory damages.

[g] No Malice Where Insurer Interpreted Contract in Good Faith

Mason v. Mercury Cas. Co. (1976) 64 Cal. App. 3d 471, 134 Cal. Rptr. 545 , involved an action against defendant insurance company for damages for defendant's denial of liability under plaintiff's insurance policy on the grounds the policy had lapsed. Plaintiff prayed for punitive damages on the ground that defendant had willfully and wantonly breached its fiduciary relationship with plaintiff by refusing payment. Plaintiff's insurance policy was in effect from December 31, 1970 to December 31, 1971. On December 31, 1971, but after 12:01 a.m. on December 30, 1971, plaintiff's mother mailed to defendant a check and a renewal notice plaintiff had received earlier. The check and notice were received by defendant on January 3, 1972. On the same day, but after receipt of the check, plaintiff made a claim. Defendant denied the claim because the policy period ran to, but not through, December 31, 1971. The jury awarded plaintiff actual and punitive damages and the trial court granted a motion for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict on the punitive damages cause of action and granted a motion for new trial to take effect only if the order granting the judgment notwithstanding the verdict was reversed on appeal. On appeal, plaintiff contended that oppression or wanton disregard of its rights was shown when defendant chose to interpret the terms of the policy concerning the expiration date in an unfavorable manner to plaintiff. The court of appeal noted that when an insurance policy is reasonable susceptible of two interpretations, it should be construed in favor of the insured. However, the crux of the matter is that a finding of malice cannot be predicated on the mere fact of a divergent interpretation of an insurance contract as long as the insurer's interpretation was rendered in good faith. The court noted that there was testimony that it was custom and practice in the industry that a policy expired a minute after midnight on the anniversary date of the policy. However, the court stated that, even without such testimony, plaintiff failed to meet his burden of proof regarding malice in that he did not adduce any evidence to show that the interpretation of the contract as to its expiration time was unreasonable or undertaken in bad faith. Although the jury by its verdict ignored the policy terms and disagreed with defendant's claim that it was in accordance with insurance industry policy at the time that the policy ran to rather than up to and including December 31, the court concluded that there simply was no evidence that defendant's interpretation of the contract was unreasonable or undertaken in bad faith and, according to the court, such evidence was necessary for the award of punitive damages.

[a] Exemplary Damage Award as Erroneous Where Evidence Does Not Show Required Grounds

The factual background of Silberg v. California Life Ins. Co. (1974) 11 Cal. 3d 452, 113 Cal. Rptr. 711, 521 P.2d 1103 , is discussed in § 64.149[3][f]. In affirming the trial court's judgment regarding the exemplary damage awards, the Supreme Court held that the evidence demonstrated as a matter of law that defendant's failure to pay benefits under the policy constituted bad faith, but that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in ruling that the evidence was insufficient to support an award of exemplary damages. The Court noted that in granting a new trial, the trial court had stated that the evidence was insufficient to justify the punitive damages award because defendant was not put on notice by cases previously decided that its interpretation of the policy was incorrect and because there was insufficient evidence of a practice in the insurance industry to pay a disputed claim and then file a lien in the worker's compensation proceeding to recover the payments made. The Court held that the trial court's conclusion that defendant was not guilty of oppressive conduct did not constitute a manifest and unmistakable abuse of discretion.

[b] Establishing Conscious Disregard of Other's Safety

The court of appeal in Da Silva v. Pacific King, Inc. (1987) 195 Cal. App. 3d 1, 240 Cal. Rptr. 395 , affirmed a judgment for an injured seaman. The judgment did not include an award of punitive damages, and the plaintiff claimed an error in the jury instructions. The court held that violation of a National Marine Fisheries Service regulation (hereinafter "NMFS"), enforcement of which had been suspended by NMFS pending reconsideration of its appropriateness, would not support a finding of conscious disregard of the safety of others (195 Cal. App. 3d 1, 7) .

[c] Breach of Duty of Good Faith and Fair Dealing as Not Sufficient for Exemplary Damage Award

In Travelers Ins. Co. v. Lesher (1986) 187 Cal. App. 3d 169, 231 Cal. Rptr. 791 , overruled on other grounds, Buss v. Superior Court (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 35, 50, 65 Cal. Rptr. 2d 366, 939 P.2d 766), the insurer undertook defense of several anti-trust actions against the insured, reserving its rights, then brought an action for declaratory relief against insured to determine its duty to defend and indemnify, and to recover its fees and costs. Both parties filed affidavits in the declaratory relief action that compromised defendant's position in the anti-trust actions, as a result of which defendant's counsel withdrew from those cases. The insurer and insured disagreed concerning which of them should choose substitute counsel, and the insurer hired one shortly before the trial of one of the anti-trust cases. The insured filed a cross-complaint against the insurer alleging, inter alia, insurance bad faith, and the jury awarded $1.5 million compensatory and $1.5 million punitive damages, partly on the ground that the insurer's delay in appointing new counsel damaged the insured's negotiation position in settling the anti-trust cases. The court of appeal reversed only the punitive damages award, holding that evidence that the insurer is liable for bad faith does not, by itself, necessarily establish that it has acted with the requisite intent to justify an award of punitive damages (187 Cal. App. 3d 169, 199-202, 204) .

In Patrick v. Maryland Cas. Co. (1990) 217 Cal. App. 3d 1566, 267 Cal. Rptr. 24 , plaintiff sued his insurer on a bad-faith theory, alleging that the insurer's delay in paying his claim for wind damage to his roof had led to his injury when he attempted to repair the roof himself. The court of appeal reversed the judgment in plaintiff's favor on the ground that the jury had not been instructed on comparative fault principles. The court noted that comparative negligence is not a complete defense to a claim for punitive damages, and so determined whether or not there was sufficient evidence to support the jury's award of punitive damages to plaintiff. The court characterized the insurer's claims-handling as "shoddy," "witless," and "infected with symptoms of bureaucratic inertia and inefficiency."

Nevertheless, it denied punitive damages under the view that inept and negligent claim handling may be bad faith, but it is not malice (217 Cal. App. 3d 1566, 1575-1576) .

The factual and procedural background of Delos v. Farmers Ins. Group (1979) 93 Cal. App. 3d 642, 155 Cal. Rptr. 843 , is discussed in § 64.141[4][b]. The court of appeal noted in dictum that breach of fiduciary duty alone without malice, fraud, or oppression does not permit an award of punitive damages (93 Cal. App. 3d 642, 656-657) .

[Caption. See § 64.140].

THE COURT SHOULD GRANT DEFENDANTS' MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL ON THE ISSUE OF DAMAGES BECAUSE EXPERT TESTIMONY ON HEDONIC DAMAGES WAS INADMISSIBLE AS A MATTER OF LAW AND ITS ADMISSION WAS PREJUDICIAL.

A. Motion for New Trial. [See § 64.140, Paragraph A].

B. Double Damages Prohibited. Expert testimony on hedonic damages, or damages to compensate for the loss of enjoyment of life, is inadmissible as a matter of law because of its potential for misleading the jury to award double damages (Loth v. Truck-A-Way Corp. (1998) 60 Cal. App. 4th 757, 766, 70 Cal. Rptr. 2d 571).

C. Computation Method Not Matter For Expert Testimony. The method of computing hedonic damages, or damages to compensate for the loss of enjoyment of life, is not a matter for which expert testimony is admissible (Loth v. Truck-A-Way Corp. (1998) 60 Cal. App. 4th 757, 767, 70 Cal. Rptr. 2d 571).

D. Prejudicial Effect of Testimony. If it is reasonably probable that the jury awarded plaintiff a double recovery on the basis of the expert testimony on hedonic damages, the admission of the testimony is prejudicial (Loth v. Truck-A-Way Corp. (1998) 60 Cal. App. 4th 757, 769, 70 Cal. Rptr. 2d 571).

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a defendants' motion for new trial on damages on the ground that expert testimony on hedonic damages was inadmissible as a matter of law, and that such admission was prejudicial because it most likely resulted in a double recovery for the plaintiff.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should provide facts showing that over defendants' objection at trial plaintiff's expert testified regarding hedonic damages, or damages to compensate for the loss of enjoyment of life. Counsel should then argue that this testimony was inadmissible as a matter of law, and that its admission resulted in prejudice because it most likely resulted in a double recovery for plaintiff.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Double Damages Prohibited

Loth v. Truck-A-Way Corp. (1998) 60 Cal. App. 4th 757, 70 Cal. Rptr. 2d 571 , involved an issue of first impression; whether expert testimony on the value of life and how to compute hedonic damages, or damages to compensate for the loss of life, was admissible in a personal injury trial. The lawsuit arose from an automobile accident, defendants conceded liability at trial and the only issue for the jury was damages. At trial over defendants' objection, plaintiff's expert economist testified that he had computed the basic economic value of life. He told the jury the baseline value of an average person's remaining 44-year life expectancy was $2.3 million. He also explained that after adjusting the baseline value to account for the plaintiff's expected lifespan, the jury could calculate the plaintiff's hedonic damages by multiplying the percentage of the plaintiff's disability by the adjusted baseline figure. After listening to this testimony the jury awarded the plaintiff substantial general damages. The trial court denied defendants' motion for new trial or remittitur, defendants appealed.

The court of appeal reversed and remanded for a new trial on damages. It held that the expert's testimony on hedonic damages was inadmissible as a matter of law and that its admission was prejudicial (60 Cal. App. 4th 757, 760) . Defendants objected to the expert's testimony on several grounds. The first was that the expert's testimony was inadmissible because of its potential for misleading the jury to award double damages. This objection was based on the prohibition against separately instructing the jury on general damages for pain and suffering and damages for loss of enjoyment of life. Separate instructions on pain and suffering and loss of enjoyment of life are prohibited because they could mislead a jury to award double damages for the same injury. The court ruled that this objection was valid and that as a matter of law the expert's testimony should have been excluded on this ground (60 Cal. App. 4th 757, 766) .

[b] Computation Method Not Matter For Expert Testimony

The facts and procedural background of Loth v. Truck-A-Way Corp. (1998) 60 Cal. App. 4th 757, 70 Cal. Rptr. 2d 571 , is discussed in § 64.150[3][a]. At trial defendants also objected on the ground that the method of computing hedonic damages was not a matter for which expert testimony was admissible under Evid. Code § 801. The court of appeal held that this objection was sound and that the expert's testimony should have been excluded on this ground (60 Cal. App. 4th 757, 767) . According to the court, a plaintiff's loss of enjoyment of life was not a subject that was sufficiently beyond common experience that the opinion of an expert would assist the trier of fact. Moreover, no amount of expert testimony on the value of life could possibly help a jury decide that difficult question. The court acknowledged that our present system of requiring a jury to determine, without the benefit of a mathematical formula, the amount of a general damage award was not without its faults. However, it reasoned that unless and until the legislature devised a method for computing pain and suffering damages, a plaintiff could not supply, through expert testimony or otherwise, his or her own formula for computing these damages. Finally, the court noted that its decision was consistent with other jurisdictions which have also excluded hedonic damages expert testimony (60 Cal. App. 4th 757, 768) .

[c] Prejudicial Effect of Testimony

The facts and procedural background of Loth v. Truck-A-Way Corp. (1998) 60 Cal. App. 4th 757, 70 Cal. Rptr. 2d 571 , is discussed in § 64.150[3][a]. Having determined that the expert testimony on hedonic damages was inadmissible as a matter of law, the court next addressed the issue of whether the admission of this testimony resulted in prejudice to the defendants; whether it was reasonably probable that a different result would have been reached absent the error. According to the court loss of enjoyment of life was simply one component of pain and suffering damages; and presenting the jury with a formula for separately calculating hedonic damages created a risk of double recovery for pain and suffering and loss of enjoyment of life. The jury heard plaintiff's testimony regarding the drastic lifestyle changes she had made because of her injuries and was told it could award "reasonable compensation for any pain, discomfort, fears, anxiety and other mental and emotional distress suffered by the plaintiff and of which injury was a cause and for similar suffering reasonably certain to be experienced in the future from the same cause." This testimony alone was sufficient to support a general damages award that included compensation for loss of enjoyment of life, said the court. In addition, the jury heard the expert's testimony on how much a life was worth and how to calculate hedonic damages by multiplying that figure by the percentage of plaintiff's disability. While the judge correctly instructed the jury that there was no single mathematical formula for computing pain and suffering damages, the instruction was, according to the court, insufficient to cure the error of admitting the expert's testimony. Therefore, because it was reasonably probable and almost a certainty that the jury awarded a double recovery to plaintiff, the court ultimately held that admission of the expert's testimony was prejudicial in this case (60 Cal. App. 4th 757, 769) .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Motion for New Trial Properly Denied if Jury Resolved Conflicting Evidence

In Torres v. Los Angeles (1962) 58 Cal. 2d 35, 22 Cal. Rptr. 866, 372 P.2d 906 , plaintiff sued a municipality for personal injuries sustained when two of the municipality's fire engines collided with each other and thereafter collided with a stopped vehicle in which plaintiff was a passenger. The jury awarded plaintiff substantial compensatory damages for her personal injuries after hearing the conflicting testimony of several medical experts at the trial of the action. The trial court denied defendant's motion for a new trial. Defendant then appealed from the judgment, in part, on the ground that the damages awarded to plaintiff were excessive and not supported by the evidence. The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment, holding, in part, that a trial court may deny a motion for a new trial and may refuse to reassess damages in an action when it is apparent that the jury resolved conflicting evidence in making its award of damages. Because the extent of damages suffered for any injury and the amount of pain and suffering resulting from that injury cannot be measured by any absolute monetary standard, the determination of the jury and trial court were entitled to great weight. An appellate court, the Supreme Court stated, should decide only whether the verdict is so out of line with reason that it shocked the conscience of the court and necessarily implied that the verdict resulted from the jury's passion and prejudice. Thus, where a jury resolved conflicting evidence in plaintiff's favor, a verdict was not excessive as a matter of law, and the trial court acted properly in refusing to grant a new trial or to reassess the damages.

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Motion for New Trial Properly Denied if Jury Resolved Conflicting Evidence

In Ray v. Jackson (1963) 219 Cal. App. 2d 445, 33 Cal. Rptr. 339 , plaintiff brought an action against defendant for personal injuries sustained when defendant's automobile pulled out of a line of blocked cars and struck plaintiff. The jury returned a verdict in plaintiff's favor at the conclusion of the trial of the action. The trial court then denied defendant's motions for a new trial on the ground of excessive damages and for a reduction of the damages awarded to plaintiff. On appeal by defendant, the court of appeal affirmed the judgment, ruling, in part, that the trial court did not err in denying defendant's motions for a new trial and for a reduction of damages. The court of appeal, noting the conflicting medical testimony presented at the trial, concluded that the jury, and later the trial judge, were in the best position to see and hear the witnesses and to see the injury and the impairments resulting from the injury and, thus, better able to evaluate them. Therefore, the damages awarded were not excessive, as a matter of law, as being out of line with reason so as to shock the conscience of the appellate court or to imply that the verdict had resulted from passion and prejudice.

[a] No Reduction of Damages Where Party Fails to Show Matters With Respect to Mitigation

In Barber v. LeRoy (1974) 40 Cal. App. 3d 336, 115 Cal. Rptr. 272 , plaintiff was the holder of a promissory note secured by a security agreement on certain restaurant fixtures. On defendants' default of the promissory note, plaintiff foreclosed on the fixtures, purchasing them at a subsequent private sale. Crediting defendants with the purchase price of the fixtures, plaintiff sought a deficiency judgment against defendants for the balance due under the promissory note. Defendants sought damages against plaintiff for breach of the lease agreement, which was part of the transaction, claiming that plaintiff acted in bad faith in demanding a larger rental figure than was reasonable when defendants exercised their option to renew the lease on the restaurant premises. The trial court found in favor of defendants, holding that plaintiff was precluded from obtaining a deficiency judgment against defendants because plaintiff failed to comply with statutes governing the recovery and disposition of collateral by a secured party. The trial court also awarded defendants the reasonable value of their restaurant business at the time plaintiff took over, less the balance due on the promissory note. After plaintiff's motion for a new trial was denied, plaintiff appealed, contending, in part, that defendants had a duty to minimize their damages after the lease was breached. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment. It held that, although plaintiff claimed that defendants had a duty to minimize their damages and that their damages should be reduced by the amount by which their personal services could have been employed elsewhere after the breach, plaintiff made no effort to prove these matters at trial. The court of appeal held that the burden of proof with respect to showing matters in mitigation of damages as a result of a wrongdoer's act is on the wrongdoer. Thus, a wrongdoer, like plaintiff, who fails to make any showing in reduction of damages, does not have the right to complain thereafter of a court's failure to apply the principle of mitigation of damages.

NOTE:

Although Barber is a contract action, the rule regarding the burden of showing matters in mitigation of damages also is applied in tort actions [see, e.g., Baruh v. Kuhl (1963) 213 Cal. App. 2d 266, 273-274, 28 Cal. Rptr. 573] .

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted by a plaintiff in opposition to a motion for new trial on the ground of excessive damages where defendant has asserted that plaintiff failed to mitigate damages but the evidence at trial showed that plaintiff was financially unable to make the expenditures necessary to mitigate damages.

Where appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Person Financially Unable to Mitigate Not Required to Mitigate Damages

Valencia v. Shell Oil Co. (1944) 23 Cal. 2d 840, 147 P.2d 558 , was an action for damages resulting from the loss of use of plaintiff's truck which was injured by a tank falling from a truck owned by defendant. Defendant ordered that repairs be made to plaintiff's truck and agreed to pay for them and for renting a truck while plaintiff's truck was being repaired. However, defendant refused to pay the repair bill because plaintiff declined to sign a release of all claims arising out of the accident and the repair garage refused to deliver the truck until the bill was paid. Before trial, defendant paid both the repair and rental bills. The trial was concerned solely with the issue of damages since defendant stipulated to liability for the damage to plaintiff's truck, and the trial court entered judgment for plaintiff for damages for loss of use of the truck. Affirming, the court of appeal stated that where a vehicle is damaged by the wrongful act of another, the owner is entitled to recover for the damage done to the vehicle and for the loss sustained by being deprived of its use. However, the injured party must exercise reasonable care and diligence to avoid loss or minimize the resulting damages and cannot recover for losses which might have been prevented by reasonable efforts or expenditures on his part, and thus an owner's recovery for being deprived of the use of a damaged vehicle is generally determined with reference to the period of time reasonably required for the repairs. In reviewing whether plaintiff had the duty to minimize damages, the court pointed out that this duty does not require an injured person to do what is unreasonable or impracticable so that when expenditures are necessary for minimization of damages, the duty does not run to a person who is financially unable to make such expenditures. Although the trial court did not make an express finding regarding plaintiff's ability or inability to pay the repair bill, it did find that plaintiff was, by reason of defendant's negligence and the wrongful failure of defendant to pay the repair bill, deprived of the use of his truck. The court held that a necessary implication of this finding was that plaintiff was unable to pay the repair bill and pointed out that there was ample evidence presented at trial to support this implied finding.

[a] Person Financially Unable to Mitigate Not Required to Mitigate Damages

Jordan v. Talbot (1961) 55 Cal. 2d 597, 12 Cal. Rptr. 488, 361 P.2d 20 , was an action involving forcible entry and detainer, and conversion of personal property. After plaintiff failed to pay her rent for two months, defendant entered her apartment without her consent, removed and stored her furniture, and refused to allow her to reoccupy the apartment. A jury returned a verdict for plaintiff, but the trial court granted defendant's motion for a new trial. Affirming, the court of appeal held that defendant was not guilty of conversion and therefore plaintiff was entitled only to actual damages in an amount sufficient to compensate her for any impairment of the property or loss of its use. The court additionally stated that plaintiff had a duty to minimize damages. Since plaintiff knew that her property was being held in storage in her name, she was under a duty to recover her goods as soon as possible and was entitled only to storage costs for whatever time was reasonable to make new arrangements. However, the court pointed out that on retrial, plaintiff could show that she was without funds or means of obtaining them to pay the storage costs and in that case she would not be under a duty to recover the furniture to minimize damages. Quoting from Valencia v. Shell Oil Co. (1944) 23 Cal. 2d 840, 147 P.2d 558 [see § 64.172[3][a]], the court held that the duty to minimize damages does not require an injured person to do what is unreasonable or impracticable and consequently, when expenditures are necessary for minimization of damages, the duty does not run to a person who is financially unable to make such expenditures.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Awards for Similar Injuries Not Determinative

In Bigboy v. County of San Diego (1984) 154 Cal. App. 3d 397, 201 Cal. Rptr. 226 , plaintiff was a young man who had been severely injured and rendered paraplegic in an automobile accident when the car in which he was a passenger went off the road at a dangerous curve. Plaintiff's action against the county had been severed from the action against the automobile driver. At trial, plaintiff had shown that there had been many accidents at that spot, that the curve was known to be dangerous, and that the county could have corrected the dangerous condition by posting a warning sign which would have cost less than $200. The jury brought in a verdict of $2.25 million for plaintiff. The trial court denied defendant's motion for new trial contingent on plaintiff's acceptance of a remittitur of the award to $1.75 million. When plaintiff refused the remittitur, the court granted the motion for new trial. The judge based his opinion on the fact that the award of damages was excessive, which he determined in part by his comparison of the award with awards in similar cases.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that the judge was not allowed to substitute his judgment for that of the jury on the question of damages unless it appeared from the record that the jury verdict was improper. The court stated that evidence of the range of awards in other cases would not have been proper for the jury's consideration, because of the vast variety of and disparity between awards in other cases, which demonstrates that injuries can seldom be measured on one scale. The measure of damages suffered is a factual question that is within the province of the trier of fact. The court stated that the trial judge's personal opinion based on the ranges of awards in other cases did not show that the jury should have reached a different conclusion and was therefore an irrelevant consideration, not a lawful basis, for granting the new trial order and issuing the remittitur (154 Cal. App. 3d 397, 406-407) .

In Henninger v. Southern Pac. Co. (1967) 250 Cal. App. 2d 872, 59 Cal. Rptr. 76 , plaintiff was a conductor-brakeman who brought an action for damages for personal injuries he sustained in the course of his work for defendant. Defendant admitted its liability so that the sole issue to be determined at trial was the issue of damages. At the conclusion of the trial, the jury awarded plaintiff a sizeable amount of damages. Defendant appealed from the judgment entered on this verdict alleging, in part, that the judgment was excessive as a matter of law and, therefore, should be either reduced or reversed and a new trial ordered. In their appellate briefs, both plaintiff and defendant referred to cases involving damages awarded for similar injuries. In affirming the judgment, the court of appeal stated, in part, that the question of whether or not damages are excessive must be determined in each case on that case's own peculiar facts and circumstances. Thus, a verdict is not excessive as a matter of law merely because the amount awarded is larger than the damages ordinarily awarded in cases involving similar injuries. The court of appeal held that, in light of the catastrophic injuries to plaintiff, his medical expenses, accrued wage loss, cost of rehabilitation, future wage loss, and future cost of a paid attendant, the verdict was not so large as to suggest any element of passion or prejudice on the part of the jury (250 Cal. App. 2d 872, 883) .

NOTE:

The standard applied by an appellate court in deciding whether damages are excessive is stricter than the standard applied by the trial court [see § 64.140[3][a], [b]]].

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Awards for Similar Injuries Not Determinative

In Fortman v. Hemco, Inc. (1989) 211 Cal. App. 3d 241, 259 Cal. Rptr. 311 , a court again rejected an argument that damages were excessive because the amount was "precedent shattering" (211 Cal. App. 3d 241, 261) . The court also found that the damages were not excessive merely because they were disproportionate to the aggregate sum of good-faith pretrial settlements (211 Cal. App. 3d 241, 260-261) .

Grimshaw v. Ford Motor Co. (1981) 119 Cal. App. 3d 757, 174 Cal. Rptr. 348 , is discussed in § 64.41[3][d]. The defendant appealed a judgment awarding one plaintiff $3.5 million in punitive damages. Defendant argued, among other things, that $3.5 million was an excessive amount, because defendant's conduct was less reprehensible than that for which punitive damages had been awarded in California in the past, and because it was the highest such award ever upheld in California. The court of appeal determined that the amount was reasonable and not excessive (119 Cal. App. 3d 757, 819) . It held that in determining whether or not a punitive damages award is excessive, comparison of the award with other awards in other cases is inappropriate (119 Cal. App. 3d 757, 818-819) . In addition, the fact that the award may set a precedent by its size does not of itself render the award suspect (119 Cal. App. 3d 757, 819) .

In Rodriguez v. McDonnell Douglas Corp. (1978) 87 Cal. App. 3d 626, 151 Cal. Rptr. 399 , plaintiff, a construction worker rendered triplegic in a job-site accident, was awarded over $4 million in damages by a jury. Defendant's motion for new trial was denied, and defendant appealed the denial and the judgment, contending that damages were excessive. Defendant argued that in a more serious case, a plaintiff was rendered quadriplegic, yet received a smaller award. Plaintiff pointed to similar cases with higher awards. The court of appeal sustained plaintiff's award, stating that to measure the validity of an award of damages by making a comparison with other cases would constitute a prohibitive invasion into the realm of factfinding (87 Cal. App. 3d 626, 655) .

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion for a new trial made on the ground of excessive damages when the moving party claims that the excessiveness of the damages arises solely from the disparate ratio between punitive and compensatory damages.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Disparate Ratio as Not Establishing Excessiveness of Award of Punitive Damages

In Zhadan v. Downtown L.A. Motors (1976) 66 Cal. App. 3d 481, 136 Cal. Rptr. 132 , plaintiff brought an action for conversion seeking both compensatory and punitive damages against an automotive repair dealer who took plaintiff's car from her garage after plaintiff refused to pay certain repair bills. Defendant cross complained for the value of goods and services rendered and sought both compensatory and punitive damages for plaintiff's interference with its garagemen's lien. At the conclusion of the trial, the jury found in plaintiff's favor and awarded her substantial compensatory and punitive damages. Without stating its reason, the trial court granted defendant's motion for a new trial on the ground of excessive damages conditional on plaintiff's remittitur of punitive damages to a specified amount. When plaintiff did not consent to the reduction of punitive damages, the order for a new trial took effect and both parties appealed. Defendant contended, in part, that the award of punitive damages was so excessive as to indicate passion and prejudice on the part of the jury. The court of appeal held, in part, that the evidence that defendant had violated the statutory provisions designed to protect consumers from unscrupulous automotive repair dealers justified the imposition of substantial punitive damages. However, the amount of an award of punitive damages could vary widely, depending on such additional factors as the importance of the policy violated by defendant's conduct, the degree and extent, both qualitatively and quantitatively, of the violation, and the financial circumstances of defendant. The court of appeal found that the punitive damages awarded in this case exceeded one-third of defendant's net worth. In the absence of clear evidence showing a continuing course of conduct involving large-scale, flagrant violations of state statutory policy, the award of punitive damages was excessive because its effect was to deter defendant's conduct to the point of putting defendant out of business. The court of appeal reasoned that when an award of punitive damages is so grossly disproportionate to a defendant's net worth as to put the defendant out of business, the award is presumptively based on a jury's passion and prejudice. The court of appeal reversed the conditional order for a new trial on the issue of damages and reinstated the judgment because the trial court had failed to make an adequate specification of reasons. However, since the court of appeal concluded that the punitive damages award was excessive, it remanded the case for a new trial on all of the issues.

NOTE:

In distinguishing Wetherbee v. United Ins. Co. of Am. (1971) 18 Cal. App. 3d 266, 95 Cal. Rptr. 678 , the court in Zhadan cites the rule that the excessiveness of a punitive damages award cannot be established by reference alone to the disparate ratio between it and the compensatory award. The court in Zhadan went on to find that the punitive damages awarded by the jury were excessive, but counsel using this form will be arguing the opposite point--that is, that the punitive damages awarded were not excessive. Zhadan is still useful authority, however, because it arose in the context of a motion for a new trial.

In Wetherbee v. United Ins. Co. of Am. (1971) 18 Cal. App. 3d 266, 95 Cal. Rptr. 678 , the court found that the punitive damages were not excessive, but the court determined this issue on an appeal from the judgment, and did not apply the same standard as would be used by the trial court. Defendant claimed that the punitive damages were excessive, after the trial court had refused to upset the award on a motion for a new trial. Counsel should note that under such circumstances, the appellate court will hesitate to declare the amount excessive unless, on a consideration of the entire record, it must be said that the award was excessive, a stricter standard than the one used on a motion for a new trial. Wetherbee was an action by plaintiff insured against defendant insurer for declaratory relief, breach of contract, and misrepresentation. The jury awarded $1,050 in actual damages, and $200,000 in punitive damages. Defendant pointed to the disparate ratio of these awards, and the court of appeal, relying on Finney v. Lockhart (1950) 35 Cal. 2d 161, 164, 217 P.2d 19 , stated that there is no fixed ratio by which to determine a proper proportion between the two classes of damages.

Reasonability of Ratio Between Punitive and Compensatory Damages Influenced by Reprehensibility of Defendant's Conduct

In Johnson v. Ford Motor Co. (2005) 35 Cal. 4th 1191 , 29 Cal. Rptr. 3d 401 , 113 P.3d 82 , the plaintiffs were the buyers of a previously owned automobile that was only a year old at the time of their purchase. The plaintiffs had been told at the time by the Ford dealership from which they bought the car that the previous owner had traded the car in for a newer model, and when they asked about the car's repair history, they were shown a computer print-out indicating no significant prior repairs. They were not told that the previous owner had in fact had numerous problems with the car's transmission, resulting in one complete transmission replacement, and that the problems apparently escaped the dealer's attempts at repair. The plaintiffs were also not informed that the previous owner had sought to have the car repurchased by the dealer under the California "lemon law," Civ. Code § 1790 et seq., but the Ford district customer service manager determined that the car did not qualify as a "lemon" under the statute. Instead, the previous owner was given a $1,500 credit toward a trade-in on a new car. The plaintiffs experienced similar problems with the car after their purchase, and after two transmission replacements of their own, they learned of the problems that the previous owner had experienced. The plaintiffs sued Ford Motor Co. and the dealership for intentional and negligent misrepresentation and concealment, as well as for numerous statutory violations, including a violation of the lemon law. The plaintiffs settled with the dealership and went to trial against Ford Motor Co. The plaintiffs introduced evidence at trial that the misconduct described above was merely part of a corporate-wide attempt by Ford to avoid the mandatory buy-back provisions of state lemon laws through a program of trade-in credits and a corporate policy specifically engineered to undercount the number of attempted repairs on a vehicle for purposes of applying these lemon laws. The jury found for the plaintiffs, awarded $17,811 in compensatory damages, and assessed $10 million in punitive damages. The amount of punitive damages was based on an estimate of how much money Ford had saved over a two-year period by issuing trade-in credits rather than repurchasing vehicles that should have been classified as lemons. The court of appeal affirmed, but reduced the amount of punitive damages to $53,435, representing roughly three times the amount of compensatory damages. The court of appeal relied on its earlier analysis in Romo v. Ford Motor Co. (2003) 113 Cal. App. 4th 738, 6 Cal. Rptr. 3d 793 , which held that under the United States Supreme Court's decision in State Farm Mut. Auto Ins. Co. v. Campbell (2003) 538 U.S. 408, 123 S. Ct. 1513, 155 L. Ed. 2d 585 , federal due process considerations required that the amount of punitive damages awarded must punish only for the specific conduct that harmed the plaintiff in the particular case and prevented a state from imposing an amount of punitive damages designed to punish a defendant for an overall course of conduct. The plaintiff appealed.

The California Supreme Court reversed. The Court rejected the conclusion of the court of appeal in Romo v. Ford Motor Co. that states were no longer permitted, after State Farm, to consider an overall course of misconduct by the defendant in determining the amount of punitive damages that is constitutionally permissible in a particular case. The Court reviewed the relevant United States Supreme Court decisions, including State Farm, and concluded that these cases did not prohibit a state court, in awarding or reviewing punitive damages, from considering the defendant's illegal or wrongful conduct toward others, if this conduct was similar to the misconduct that injured the plaintiffs (35 Cal. 4th 1191, 1204) . To the contrary, the United States Supreme Court had made clear that the most important consideration in determining an appropriate amount of punitive damages was the reprehensibility of the defendant's conduct, and that the frequency and profitability of the defendant's misconduct were relevant to evaluating the reprehensibility of the misconduct. Therefore, although the Court recognized that due process requires a reasonable proportionality between punitive damages and the amount of compensatory damages awarded to the particular plaintiff, the determination of what constitutes a reasonable proportionality under the particular facts depends on the reprehensibility of the conduct, which requires evidence of whether the misconduct was an isolated instance or part of a wider pattern of similar misconduct perpetrated against other parties. The Court did caution, however, that scale and profitability of a course of misconduct cannot justify an award of punitive damages that is grossly excessive in relation to the harm done or threatened (35 Cal. 4th 1191, 1207) .

The Court then rejected the plaintiffs' argument, accepted at trial, that the defendant in this case could be forced to disgorge, as punitive damages, the amount of profit that the defendant allegedly made by attempting to avoid application of state lemon laws. Although stopping short of deciding whether a plaintiff could ever justify an award of punitive damages on the basis of total profits earned from a course of misconduct, the Court concluded that the plaintiffs failed to offer sufficient justification in this case. The plaintiffs failed to explain why a two-year period was selected to estimate Ford's profits, they offered no evidence to show that all vehicles given trade-in credits would have been subject to the California lemon law, and they failed to show that other consumers buying traded-in vehicles were kept in the dark about the repair history of their cars (35 Cal. 4th 1191, 1211-1212) . Although the Court agreed with the court of appeal that the $10 million award of punitive damages was excessive, the Court remanded to the court of appeal to reevaluate its determination of an appropriate amount, taking into consideration that evidence of Ford's broader pattern of misconduct was relevant to determining reprehensibility and could be considered in setting an appropriate award (35 Cal. 4th 1191, 1213) .

[a] Disparate Ratio as Not Establishing Excessiveness of Award of Punitive Damages

In Wyatt v. Union Mortgage Co. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 773, 157 Cal. Rptr. 392, 598 P.2d 45 , plaintiffs brought an action against a mortgage loan broker for breach of its fiduciary duty, alleging a fraudulent conspiracy as well. The jury assessed a total of $25,000 compensatory damages and $200,000 punitive damages. On appeal, defendants urged, among other grounds, that the punitive damages were excessive as a matter of law. In rejecting this contention, the Supreme Court stated that the purpose of punitive damages is to penalize wrongdoers in a way that will deter them and others from repeating the wrongful conduct in the future, and that the amount of punitive damages sufficient to accomplish this purpose in a particular case is not susceptible of mathematical definition.

In Sommer v. Gabor (1995) 40 Cal. App. 4th 1455, 48 Cal. Rptr. 2d 235 , plaintiff recovered damages for defamation based on defendant's defamatory statements printed in a magazine about plaintiff. Defendant appealed, contending since there were no special damages, the award of general damages was excessive, and that the punitive damages award would fail if the compensatory damage award were vacated. Furthermore, defendant asserted that punitive damages awards in defamation cases are routinely reduced on appeal where the actual damage is small. The court of appeal recognized that damages are excessive where the recovery is so grossly disproportionate to the injury that the award may be presumed to have been the result of passion or prejudice. However, the court rejected defendant's attacks on the substantiality of the evidence to support the damage award as nothing more than challenges to the credibility of the witnesses. The court concluded that there was no indication that the jury award was grossly disproportionate to the injury or the result of passion or prejudice (40 Cal. App. 4th 1455, 1470-1471) . The court thus affirmed the judgment in favor of plaintiff.

In Downey Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Ohio Cas. Ins. Co. (1987) 189 Cal. App. 3d 1072, 234 Cal. Rptr. 835 , a bad-faith insurance action brought by a financial institution regarding indemnification resulting from an employee's dishonest acts, the jury returned a verdict for plaintiff awarding approximately $150,000 in compensatory damages, and $5 million in punitive damages. Defendant appealed on the ground, inter alia, that the punitive damages award was excessive. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that an award of punitive damages will be reversed as excessive only when the entire record viewed most favorably to the judgment indicates the award was the result of passion and prejudice. Inasmuch as the plaintiff was a solvent corporation with substantial assets, it is unlikely that the jury was motivated by passion and prejudice; and based on the evidence presented, the punitive damages award equal to 32 times the compensatory damages award is not unreasonable as a matter of law (189 Cal. App. 3d 1072, 1097-1100) .

In Devlin v. Kearny Mesa AMC/Jeep/Renault, Inc. (1984) 155 Cal. App. 3d 381, 202 Cal. Rptr. 204 , the court of appeal upheld the trial court's award of punitive damages 27 times the amount of compensatory damages, finding the award not excessive as a matter of law. After discussing the factors to be considered in assessing a punitive damages award, the court said that punitive damages should bear a reasonable relationship to compensatory damages, and that there is no fixed ratio to determine what is reasonable; instead, a fluid process that varies with the parties and the facts is employed (155 Cal. App. 3d 381, 390) .

In Betts v. Allstate Ins. Co. (1984) 154 Cal. App. 3d 688, 201 Cal. Rptr. 528 , an insured sued her insurer for bad-faith refusal to accept a third-party claimant's settlement offer within policy limits, eventually obtaining an award of $1,000,000 compensatory and $3,000,000 punitive damages. The trial court denied the insurer's motion for a new trial after the insured consented to a reduction in the compensatory award to $550,000. The insurer appealed and the court of appeal affirmed. Insurer contended that the award of punitive damages was excessive as a matter of law, since it bore a much higher ratio to the compensatory award than that originally assigned by the jury. The court rejected this argument, noting that courts do not evaluate the reasonableness of the relation between punitive and compensatory damages by any rigid formula but rather by a fluid process of adding and subtracting different considerations: if the defendant's conduct is sufficiently reprehensible, the ratio between compensatory and punitive damages is less important, while the ratio carries more weight if the ratio is extremely high and the conduct is somewhat less reprehensible. The proper consideration is whether the punitive damages award bears a reasonable relationship to its principal purpose of punishment and deterrence (154 Cal. App. 3d 688, 712) . The court held that the award was proper in view of the insurer's highly reprehensible conduct and the reasonable relation of the amount of the award to the insurer's wealth (154 Cal. App. 3d 688, 711-713) .

H. Opposing Motion for New Trial

6-64 California Points & Authorities § 64.175

§ 64.175 Opposing Defendant's Motion for New Trial [Code Civ. Proc. § 659] Made on Ground of Excessive Damages [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(5)]--Record Contains Sufficient Evidence of Defendant's Financial Condition to Support Exemplary Damages Award

[Caption. See § 64.170.]

DEFENDANT'S MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL SHOULD BE DENIED BECAUSE SUFFICIENT EVIDENCE OF DEFENDANT'S FINANCIAL CONDITION, BASED ON _____ [DEFENDANT'S NET WORTH or THE PROFIT DEFENDANT REALIZED FROM THE MISCONDUCT THAT WAS THE BASIS OF THE ACTION], EXISTS ON THE RECORD TO SUPPORT THE EXEMPLARY DAMAGES AWARDED.

A. New Trial Precluded Unless Court Convinced That Court or Jury Clearly Should Have Reached Different Result. [See § 64.170, Paragraph A.]

B. Exemplary Damages Award Must Be Supported by Sufficient Evidence of Defendant's Financial Condition. An award of exemplary damages must be based on evidence of the defendant's financial condition sufficient to provide a reviewing court with a basis for determining whether the award is excessive (Adams v. Murakami (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 105, 108-110, 116, 284 Cal. Rptr. 318, 813 P.2d 1348).

C. Evidence of Defendant's Financial Condition Sufficient to Support Award of Exemplary Damages May Be Based on Either Defendant's Net Worth, or Profits Gained by Defendant's Misconduct. Although a defendant's net worth is generally considered to be the best measure of a defendant's financial condition for the purpose of assessing punitive damages, evidence of the amount of monetary gain that the defendant realized from the misconduct is sufficient to support an award that does not exceed that amount (Cummings Med. Corp. v. Occupational Med. Corp. (1992) 10 Cal. App. 4th 1291, 1299-1300, 13 Cal. Rptr. 2d 585 ; see Adams v. Murakami (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 105, 116 n.7, 284 Cal. Rptr. 318, 813 P.2d 1348 (declining to adopt either method)).

[Optional] D. Federal Rule, Which Imposes Burden of Proof on Defendant, Applies to Recovery Under Federal Law. The federal rule regarding whether or not a punitive damages award is excessive applies to a recovery based on federal law. Because, under federal law, the defendant has the burden of proving that punitive damages are excessive in light of the defendant's financial condition, the plaintiff's failure to introduce evidence regarding the financial condition of the defendant does not render a punitive damages award improper (Chavez v. Keat (1995) 34 Cal. App. 4th 1406, 1410-1411, 1416, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 72).

[Optional] E. Mitigating Evidence of Punitive Damages Awards Imposed in Other Cases Must Have Been Presented to Jury. If a defendant wishes to attack a punitive damages award on the ground that other such awards have already sufficiently punished it for the same conduct, evidence of the other awards must be presented to the jury (Stevens v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1996) 49 Cal. App. 4th 1645, 1665, 57 Cal. Rptr. 2d 525).

[Optional] F. Future Earning Capacity May Be Considered in Determining Present Net Worth. A jury may consider the future earning capacity of the defendant in determining the appropriate amount for an award of punitive damages (Rufo v. Simpson (2001) 86 Cal. App. 4th 573, 620-622, 103 Cal. Rptr. 2d 492).

[Optional] G. Negative Net Worth Does Not Necessarily Preclude Award of Punitive Damages. A negative net worth does not preclude an award of punitive damages as a matter of law if other evidence indicates an ability to pay (see Zaxis Wireless Commc'ns, Inc. v. Motor Sound Corp. (2001) 89 Cal. App. 4th 577, 582-583, 107 Cal. Rptr. 2d 308).

[Optional] H. Defendant's Worth Not Limited to Worth Derived From Activities in California. Evidence of the financial condition of the defendant is not limited to the defendant's financial condition as it relates to its business activities in California, but properly includes the defendant's overall worth (Buell-Wilson v. Ford Motor Co. (2006) 141 Cal. App. 4th 525, 566, 46 Cal. Rptr. 3d 147).

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion for a new trial based on the assertion that the damages are excessive because an award of exemplary damages is not supported by evidence of the defendant's financial condition, when the moving party claims that the record contains sufficient evidence of defendant's financial condition. The plaintiff's claim can be supported by either evidence of the defendant's net worth, or by evidence of the monetary gain that the defendant realized from the misconduct proven in the action.

Optional Paragraph D may be used in an action in which the right to recovery of punitive damages is based on federal law if the jury awarded punitive damages despite plaintiff's not having introduced any evidence of the defendant's financial condition.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should refer to the evidence in the record that either establishes the defendant's net worth, or shows the gain defendant realized from the misconduct; and counsel should argue that the award of exemplary damages

is not excessive in light of that evidence. If Optional Paragraph C is included, counsel should point out that plaintiff's failure to introduce evidence on defendant's financial worth does not preclude an award of punitive damages under federal law, since the federal rule places on defendant the burden of proving that punitive damages are excessive in light of the defendant's financial condition.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Exemplary Damages Award Must Be Supported by Sufficient Evidence of Defendant's Financial Condition

In Adams v. Murakami (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 105, 284 Cal. Rptr. 318, 813 P.2d 1348 , a convalescent hospital patient who was a diagnosed chronic schizophrenic of low intelligence sued, through her conservator, the hospital and her attending physician for medical malpractice, battery, and intentional infliction of emotional distress. She alleged that, as a result of the wrongful acts and omissions of the defendants, she became pregnant by another patient and gave birth to a son who was diagnosed as mentally retarded and autistic. Her claims against the hospital were settled and her claims against the doctor proceeded to jury trial. Neither the plaintiff nor the doctor introduced evidence at trial regarding the doctor's financial condition. The jury returned a verdict for the patient and the trial court awarded damages, including $750,000 in punitive damages. The doctor appealed the punitive damages award on the ground that the patient had not introduced evidence of the doctor's financial condition. The court of appeal rejected the argument and affirmed the award without discussion of the financial condition issue.

The Supreme Court reversed and remanded the punitive damages award, holding that evidence of a defendant's financial condition is a prerequisite to a punitive damages award. The purpose of a punitive damages award is to punish and deter the defendant. A reviewing court cannot make a fully informed determination of whether a punitive damages award is appropriate or excessive in light of this purpose, without evidence of the defendant's financial condition (54 Cal. 3d 105, 110-112) . Moreover, the Court held that the plaintiff who seeks to recover punitive damages has the burden of establishing the defendant's financial condition (54 Cal. 3d 105, 123) .

[b] Evidence of Defendant's Financial Condition Sufficient to Support Award of Exemplary Damages May Be Based on Either Defendant's Net Worth, or Profits Gained by Defendant's Misconduct

The factual and procedural background of Adams v. Murakami (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 105, 284 Cal. Rptr. 318, 813 P.2d 1348 , is discussed in § 64.175[3][a]. The Court declined to address what would constitute sufficient evidence of a defendant's financial condition, because no evidence at all regarding defendant's financial condition had been presented in the case. However, the Court noted both the defendant's contention that the best measure of its financial condition would be evidence of net worth, and the contention in an amicus brief that the profitability of the defendant's misconduct would be the proper measure; the Court stated that it could not conclude that any particular method is superior to all others, or that a single standard is appropriate in all cases (54 Cal. 3d 105, 116 n.7).

In Cummings Med. Corp. v. Occupational Med. Corp. (1992) 10 Cal. App. 4th 1291, 13 Cal. Rptr. 2d 585 , the trial court, as a sanction for discovery abuse, entered a default judgment in favor of the purchaser of a medical center on its cross-complaint against the seller and struck the seller's complaint and cross complaint. The judgment included an award of punitive damages as well as compensatory damages, based on evidence that the seller had profited from its fraudulent conduct in the amount of $1,598,300; the judgment was for $1 million in compensatory damages (the amount sought in the complaint), and $1 million in exemplary damages. The seller appealed, arguing that no evidence of its net worth was presented at the damages hearing.

The court of appeals upheld the punitive damages award, but reduced the amount of the award. Relying on Adams v. Murakami (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 105, 284 Cal. Rptr. 318, 813 P.2d 1348 , the court held that the fact that no evidence was offered regarding the seller's net worth did not make the punitive damages award improper. Evidence of the profitability of the defendant's misconduct satisfies the requirement that the trier of fact consider the financial condition of the particular defendant, and an award that does not exceed the amount of that gain cannot be excessive. However, because no other evidence of the seller's financial condition was presented, the court of appeal reduced the punitive damages award so that the total amount of compensatory and punitive damages did not exceed the amount of the illegal gain the seller realized from its misconduct (10 Cal. App. 4th 1291, 1299-1301) .

[c] Federal Rule, Which Imposes Burden of Proof on Defendant, Applies to Recovery Under Federal Law

In Chavez v. Keat (1995) 34 Cal. App. 4th 1406, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 72 , plaintiff sued for damages under both state and federal law. At trial, neither plaintiff nor defendant introduced any evidence of the defendant's financial condition. The jury rejected all claims based on state law, but awarded compensatory and punitive damages based on the federal claim. Defendant appealed on the grounds that, first, the punitive damages award was excessive, arguing that a punitive damages award violates federal due process unless evidence of the defendant's financial condition is introduced and the burden of producing that evidence is on the plaintiff, and second, that California law should apply to the question of whether the punitive damages award was excessive.

The court of appeal rejected the defendant's arguments, and affirmed the judgment granting punitive damages (34 Cal. App. 4th 1406, 1416) . The court initially recognized that a punitive damages award is excessive if it is disproportionate to the defendant's ability to pay (34 Cal. App. 4th 1406, 1410) . The court also noted that the rule in California is that if there is no evidence in the record regarding the defendant's ability to pay, the award of punitive damages is excessive as a matter of law, and that the burden of producing that evidence is on plaintiffs. However, under federal law it is the defendant who carries the burden of introducing financial evidence, and if a defendant makes no effort to satisfy that burden, then punitive damages may be awarded despite incomplete knowledge of defendant's financial position (34 Cal. App. 4th 1406, 1410-1411) . The defendant's contention that due process requires evidence of a defendant's finances as a basis for a punitive damages award was premised on the claim that the California rule rested on due process principles. However, in establishing the California rules for review of punitive damages, the Supreme Court expressly based those rules on state common law (34 Cal. App. 4th 1406, 1411) . The defendant's second contention, that the California rule regarding review of punitive damages is a procedural rule that applies when determining rights under federal law, was also incorrect. Generally, when an action founded on a federal statute is brought in a state court, the law of the state controls in matters of practice and procedure (34 Cal. App. 4th 1406, 1413) . However, the court held that the California rule requiring the introduction of evidence of financial condition to support a punitive damages award is a rule of substantive law (34 Cal. App. 4th 1406, 1415) . Since a state court cannot apply its own substantive law when adjudicating federal claims, the trial court properly applied the federal rule, imposing on the defendant the obligation to introduce any evidence of financial condition if that evidence was to be considered.

[d] Mitigating Evidence of Punitive Damages Awards Imposed in Other Cases Must Have Been Presented to Jury

In Stevens v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1996) 49 Cal. App. 4th 1645, 57 Cal. Rptr. 2d 525 , a plaintiff sued defendant alleging that it had manufactured, distributed and marketed asbestos products that caused his asbestosis and cancer. During jury selection, plaintiff died and his estate was substituted as plaintiff. At trial defendant moved in limine to strike plaintiff's demand for punitive damages contending prior punitive and compensatory damages awarded against it had fulfilled the purposes of punitive damages and precluded any further awards as a matter of law. The trial court denied the motion. At the punitive damages phase of the trial defendant did not present evidence of the punitive damages awarded against it in other cases, which it had cited to the trial court on its motion in limine. The jury assessed punitive damages of two million dollars. Defendant moved for a new trial, or for a reduction in the punitive damages award. Alternately, it moved for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. The trial court again denied the motions. Defendant appealed, arguing that the punitive damages award was excessive.

The court of appeal rejected defendant's argument and affirmed the punitive damages award. The court ruled that it would not consider evidence of awards in other asbestos cases that was not presented to the jury, and concluded that the evidence defendant did present in this case was insufficient to establish that the point of "overkill" had been reached (49 Cal. App. 4th 1645, 1659) . The court rejected defendant's arguments that they should not be required to give the jury "highly inflammatory evidence" of other punitive damages awards, and that the court could take judicial notice of other cases in which punitive damages were awarded against defendant. As to the first argument, the court stated that it believed juries were capable of properly evaluating the impact of other awards against the defendant when weighing the deterrent effect of a punitive damages award and suggested that a jury instruction could be given to ensure that evidence of other awards was not used to increase punitive damages, but only to decrease them if the jury concluded the level of deterrence and punishment already imposed justified a lesser award, or no award at all. As to the judicial notice argument, the court found that even if it took judicial notice of the cases cited by defendant, it would not have enough information to gauge the actual impact of the awards in those cases because it had no evidence that defendant had actually paid the awards, nor could it tell whether those awards arose from the same conduct for which defendant was punished in this case. The court said that in order for evidence of other awards to have probative value, it must be tested in an adversary setting, giving the plaintiff a chance to probe the underlying facts. The court noted that courts in other jurisdictions have held that evidence of other punitive damages awards must be presented to the jury before the argument is raised in a reviewing court. The court also noted that it was not the first appellate court to make this point to defendants, stating that it appeared that defendant deliberately withheld the evidence, reserving it for attacks on the award of punitive damages on motion for new trial and on appeal, a strategy which improperly curtailed the jury's fact-finding prerogative. Lastly, the court ruled that its decision did not give the plaintiff the right to introduce evidence of other punitive damages awards (49 Cal. App. 4th 1645, 1665) .

[e] Future Earning Capacity May Be Considered in Determining Present Net Worth

In Rufo v. Simpson (2001) 86 Cal. App. 4th 573, 103 Cal. Rptr. 2d 492 , the defendant was sports celebrity O.J. Simpson, who was found civilly liable for killing his former wife and her friend, despite being acquitted of criminal murder charges. The jury found that the homicides were committed willfully and wrongfully, with oppression and malice, and awarded $8.5 million in compensatory damages on the wrongful death claim brought by the parents and heirs of the slain friend, minor compensatory damages and $12.5 million in punitive damages on the survival action brought by the friend's father, and minor compensatory damages and $12.5 million in punitive damages on the survival action brought by the representative of the estate of Simpson's former wife. The defendant appealed, seeking a new trial on the basis of numerous alleged errors in the admission and exclusion of evidence and alleged juror misconduct. He also argued on appeal that the compensatory and punitive damages awards were excessive as a matter of law.

The court of appeal affirmed. As part of the challenge to the punitive damages awards, which exceeded the defendant's current net asset worth, the defendant argued that the trial court erred in allowing the plaintiffs' expert, who marketed and licensed sports and entertainment personalities, to testify as to the defendant's capacity to earn income in the future by exploiting his name and likeness. The court of appeal disagreed. The court noted uncontradicted testimony by an accounting expert that it was proper under accounting principles to reflect the present value of future earning capacity in a statement of net worth (86 Cal. App. 4th 573, 620-621) . Moreover, although net worth is the most common measure of wealth used in assessing punitive damages, the court noted that it is not the exclusive measure. The court rejected the defendant's contention that the evidence of his future financial prospects was legally irrelevant or improper. Because the proper level of punitive damages is an amount high enough that the defendant cannot absorb it with little or no discomfort, but not so high that it destroys the defendant financially, the defendant's future financial prospects were relevant to the issue of the defendant's ability to absorb the punitive damages award (86 Cal. App. 4th 573, 621-622) . The court also held that determining the credibility of plaintiffs' expert on the issue of the defendant's prospects for exploiting his name and likeness, as well as evaluating the conflicting testimony from the defendant's experts, was an issue of fact for the jury (86 Cal. App. 4th 573, 622-623) . Finally, the court of appeal concluded that the amount of the award was not excessive, under the unusual circumstances of the case, even though it may have exceeded the value of the defendant's current assets. In addition to the heinousness of the defendant's conduct, the court noted that the defendant was a wealthy man with prospects to gain more wealth in the future and that the defendant had pension funds worth $4.1 million that were exempt from execution to pay a damages award, which guaranteed that the defendant would continue to enjoy a comfortable living (86 Cal. App. 4th 573, 624-625) .

[f] Negative Net Worth Does Not Necessarily Preclude Award of Punitive Damages

In Zaxis Wireless Commc'ns, Inc. v. Motor Sound Corp. (2001) 89 Cal. App. 4th 577, 107 Cal. Rptr. 2d 308 , the plaintiff sued the defendant for false representations that the defendant allegedly made to the plaintiff to induce the plaintiff to continue as a subagent for the defendant in the business of selling phones and related services to the public. The jury found for the plaintiff and awarded compensatory damages for fraud and breach of contract. After a separate trial on punitive damages, the jury awarded $300,000. Based on evidence that the defendant currently had a net worth of negative $6.3 million, the defendant moved for nonsuit and judgment notwithstanding the verdict, arguing that an award of punitive damages was precluded as a matter of law. The trial court denied the motions, and the defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court concluded that net worth is too easily manipulated to be the sole standard for measuring a defendant's ability to pay, and in this case, the negative net worth was calculated only on the strength of accumulated depreciation of $4.9 million and a note to the corporation's sole shareholder of $6 million. Because the defendant had annual revenues well in excess of $200 million, had cash on hand and a checking account balance of $19 million, and had a line of credit of $50 million, of which over $5 million was still available, the plaintiff had demonstrated the defendant's ability to pay, and the $300,000 punitive damages award was not excessive as a matter of law (89 Cal. App. 4th 577, 582-583) .

[g] Defendant's Worth Not Limited to Worth Derived From Activities in California

In Buell-Wilson v. Ford Motor Co. (2006) 141 Cal. App. 4th 525, 46 Cal. Rptr. 3d 147 , plaintiffs were a wife, who was rendered a paraplegic because of injuries sustained when her sport utility vehicle (SUV) rolled over, and her husband. They filed suit against the vehicle manufacturer for products liability and loss of consortium. Plaintiff's evidence showed that defendant released the SUV to market even though defendant knew its design was prone to rollovers, and even though it failed to reinforce the vehicle's roof although the cost to do so amounted to approximately $20 per vehicle. The jury awarded $110,000,000 in compensatory damages to the wife, $13,000,000 on the husband's loss of consortium claim, and $246,000,000 in punitive damages. The trial court reduced the wife's compensatory damages to $70,000,000, reduced the husband's award to $5,000,000, and reduced the punitive damages to $75,000,000. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed in part, but otherwise affirmed the judgment. The court reduced the wife's award of noneconomic compensatory damages from $65,000,000 to $18,000,000, after determining that the jury's award, even after reduction by the trial judge, was the result of passion or prejudice. In making that reduction, the court noted that the plaintiff's own attorney had only argued to the jury that a noneconomic damage award of approximately $18,000,000 would be reasonable (Alvis v. County of Ventura (2009) 178 Cal. App. 4th 536, 547-550, 100 Cal. Rptr. 3d 494 . In reviewing the punitive damage award, the court rejected defendant's argument that evidence of defendant's net worth should have been limited to evidence of its worth derived from its sales in California. The court noted that while it may be inappropriate at times to consider out-of-state wrongful conduct when imposing punitive damages, consideration of the defendant's overall wealth was permissible to ensure that the amount of punitive damages awarded sufficiently deterred future wrongful conduct (141 Cal. App. 4th 525, 565-566) . The court nonetheless reduced the punitive damages award to $55,000,000, which reflected roughly a 2-to-1 ratio with the total compensatory damages award, after concluding that the previous amount was unconstitutionally large given the large compensatory damage award (Alvis v. County of Ventura (2009) 178 Cal. App. 4th 536, 100 Cal. Rptr. 3d 494 .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Exemplary Damages Award Must Be Supported by Sufficient Evidence of Defendant's Financial Condition

In County of San Bernardino v. Walsh (2007) 158 Cal. App. 4th 533, 69 Cal. Rptr. 3d 848 , plaintiff county sued multiple defendants to recover damages suffered as a result of defendants' bribery of county officials in order to win public contracts. The county obtained a money judgment, which included disgorgement of profits and punitive damage awards of $1,000,000 and $500,000 against two defendants, and the court of appeal affirmed. In upholding the punitive damage awards, the court of appeal rejected the claim of those defendants that the awards were not supported by sufficient evidence of defendants' financial condition and they lacked the resources to pay the awards. The court of appeal agreed with the trial court's conclusion that these defendants had systematically and deceitfully manipulated and concealed assets and net worth and had provided evasive or knowingly false testimony on the issue at trial, which provided the trial court with wide latitude to make inferences unfavorable to the defendant when setting an amount of punitive damages. The court noted evidence indicating that one defendant had hidden at least $3.7 million in an account in the Cayman Islands, had deposited $600,000 into a private retirement account, put $450,000 toward the purchase of two houses, transferred $340,000 to his spouse upon their divorce, although he continued to live with her, and gave his ex-wife their residence, which was subsequently sold for $825,000. Evidence also indicated that this defendant continued to use assets transferred to his wife after their stipulated divorce. Evidence on the financial condition of the other defendant showed that he had transferred two investment properties to his wife, he was working for his wife as an employee at the time of trial, and he and his wife owned more than $2,000,000 in assets, as well as equity in real property of $369,000. In addition, this defendant received over $11,000 a month in retirement benefits, much of which was exempt from execution by creditors, and owned a $388,942 interest in an exempt private retirement plan (158 Cal. App. 4th 533, 546-547) .

[b] Evidence of Defendant's Financial Condition Sufficient to Support Award of Exemplary Damages May Be Based on Either Defendant's Net Worth, or Profits Gained by Defendant's Misconduct

In Stevens v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1996) 49 Cal. App. 4th 1645, 57 Cal. Rptr. 2d 525 , plaintiff sued defendant alleging that it had manufactured, distributed and marketed asbestos products that caused his asbestosis and cancer. During jury selection, plaintiff died and his estate was substituted as plaintiff. The jury awarded plaintiff both economic and punitive damages. Defendant appealed, arguing among other things, that the punitive damages award was excessive as a matter of law because it exceeded the profits defendant realized on the sale of the asbestos insulation product to which decedent was exposed. The court of appeal rejected this argument and affirmed the punitive damages award. This decision was based on three rules: that the amount of a defendant's profits did not limit a punitive damages award [Cummings Med. Corp. v. Occupational Med. Corp. (1992) 10 Cal. App. 4th 1291, 13 Cal. Rptr. 2d 585] ; that profits might not accurately reflect a defendant's financial condition [Kenly v. Ukegawa (1993) 16 Cal. App. 4th 49, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 771] ; and that a fully informed determination required evidence of the defendant's overall financial condition [Adams v. Murakami (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 105, 284 Cal. Rptr. 318] . Since in this case sales of the asbestos insulation product to which decedent was exposed approximated only two percent of defendant's total sales, and an even smaller percentage of its total profits, the court ruled that defendants profits did not proved an accurate indication of its financial condition or the likely punitive and deterrent impacts of a punitive damages award (49 Cal. App. 4th 1645, 1660) .

In Lara v. Cadag (1993) 13 Cal. App. 4th 1061, 16 Cal. Rptr. 2d 811 , a nursing intern sued a doctor for sexual assault. The trial court found in favor of the plaintiff, awarding her compensatory damages and punitive damages in the amount of $70,000. The defendant appealed, arguing that the punitive damages award was improper because the plaintiff had failed to meet her obligation to present evidence of the defendant's financial condition. The only evidence relating to defendant's financial condition was adduced during cross examination of defendant, and indicated that defendant had an income of approximately $100,000 per year. The court of appeal reversed, holding that this was insufficient to support an award of punitive damages. The court relied on the reasoning in Adams v. Murakami (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 105, 284 Cal. Rptr. 318, 813 P.2d 1348 , to find that the trial record contained no meaningful evidence of the defendant's financial condition. Absent evidence of the defendant's assets and liabilities, there is no basis for determining whether the award is large enough to deter future misconduct (it may not be if defendant had millions of dollars in assets and no liabilities), or excessive (as it could be if the award would force defendant into bankruptcy (13 Cal. App. 4th 1061, 1064) . The court recognized that Cummings Med. Corp. v. Occupational Med. Corp. (1992) 10 Cal. App. 4th 1291, 1299-1300, 13 Cal. Rptr. 2d 585 , held that net profits could be an appropriate measure of punitive damages. However, it held that, in this case, net profits were not an appropriate measure of punitive damages because no monetary gain flowed from the defendant's misconduct (13 Cal. App. 4th 1061, 1065) .

§ 64.176 Supporting Contention That Punitive Damages May Be Awarded Despite Lack of Evidence of Defendant's Financial Condition--Defendant Disobeyed Lawful Court Order to Produce Financial Records

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PUNITIVE DAMAGES MAY BE AWARDED AGAINST A DEFENDANT DESPITE THE PLAINTIFF'S LACK OF EVIDENCE OF THE DEFENDANT'S FINANCIAL CONDITION IF THE DEFENDANT HAS DISOBEYED A LAWFUL COURT ORDER TO PROVIDE FINANCIAL RECORDS AND THESE RECORDS WERE THE ONLY MEANS BY WHICH THE PLAINTIFF COULD PROVE THE DEFENDANT'S FINANCIAL CONDITION.

Punitive Damages May Be Awarded if Defendant Disobeys Court Order to Provide Financial Records. If punitive damages have been awarded, a defendant waives the right to complain about the plaintiff's lack of evidence of the defendant's financial condition if the defendant disobeys a lawful court order to provide financial records and these records are the only means by which the plaintiff could meet the burden of proving the defendant's financial condition (Mike Davidov Co. v. Issod (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 597, 608-609, 92 Cal. Rptr. 2d 897).

This form may be submitted to support a claim that punitive damages may be awarded despite the plaintiff's failure to meet his or her burden of proving the defendant's financial condition, if the defendant disobeyed a lawful court order to provide financial records and those records were the only means by which the plaintiff could prove the defendant's financial condition.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Counsel should show that the court ordered the defendant to provide financial records and that the defendant failed to do so, and counsel should argue that the plaintiff could not prove the defendant's financial condition without these records.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Punitive Damages May Be Awarded if Defendant Disobeys Court Order to Provide Financial Records

In Mike Davidov Co. v. Issod (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 597, 92 Cal. Rptr. 2d 897 , the plaintiff was a diamond dealer who loaned two diamonds to another dealer on the condition that the diamonds would be returned the same day after they were shown to a prospective customer. The stones were not returned as promised on that day, and after the plaintiff's repeated attempts to retrieve the stones, the defendant finally admitted that he could only return one of the stones and that the other had been sent out of the office and had not been returned. The plaintiff sued the other dealer for fraud, breach of contract, and other causes of action. The defendant then filed for bankruptcy, which stayed the action for breach of contract, and the matter went to bench trial on the other causes of actions. The trial court found for the plaintiff on the fraud action, awarding compensatory damages of $20,000, plus interest. The plaintiff also sought punitive damages, and the court scheduled a hearing for the next day at which time the plaintiff would have the opportunity to provide evidence of the defendant's financial condition to support a punitive damages award. The trial court also ordered the defendant to produce all records regarding his net worth by the next day and turn over all such records to the plaintiff's counsel. The defendant's counsel objected to the requirement that his client turn over the records, because they had not been requested during discovery or subpoenaed, but after the plaintiff pointed out that he had been precluded from seeking discovery of the defendant's financial records until liability for punitive damages had been established, the court declined to withdraw its order to produce the records. However, the defendant did not bring in his financial records as ordered. The trial court nonetheless awarded $96,000 in punitive damages, even without evidence of the defendant's financial condition, by selecting an amount that was slightly more than four times the amount of compensatory damages. The defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. On the issue of punitive damages, the court of appeal rejected the defendant's argument that the award of punitive damages was improper because the plaintiff presented no evidence of the defendant's financial condition. Although noting the established principle that a plaintiff must present such evidence to support an award of punitive damages, the court also noted that the defendant was ordered to produce his financial records, that this order was never rescinded, and that the defendant did not argue on appeal that the order was improper. Because the defendant was under a lawful order to produce his financial records and failed to do so, the court held that the defendant waived the right to complain that the plaintiff failed to present evidence of the defendant's financial condition (78 Cal. App. 4th 597, 608-609) . The court of appeal then affirmed the award of punitive damages, because the financial records were the only source of information regarding the defendant's financial condition available to the plaintiff, the defendant improperly deprived the plaintiff of the opportunity to meet his burden of proof on the issue, and the defendant did not point to any evidence in the record to suggest that the amount of punitive damages awarded was excessive (78 Cal. App. 4th 597, 609) .

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion for a new trial limited to the issue of damages on the ground of inadequate damages when the question of liability was close, the damages awarded appear grossly inadequate, and other circumstances indicate prejudice or an improper compromise of the issues of liability or damages by the jury.

Counsel should carefully consider the implications of this form before submitting a memorandum of points and authorities on this ground. Defendant, in order to avoid a new trial to determine the issue of damages alone, is placed in the position of arguing that the damages awarded to plaintiff are grossly inadequate. Under the cases cited, it appears that in order to avoid a new trial on all of the issues, including liability, and to avoid a new trial on the issue of damages alone, counsel for defendant must present this argument. However, counsel for defendant might not wish to make this argument unless the damages are so grossly inadequate that a retrial on at least the damages issue appears likely.

Where appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] New Trial Limited to Damages Improper Where Close Liability Question and Grossly Inadequate Damages

In Rose v. Melody Lane (1952) 39 Cal. 2d 481, 247 P.2d 335 , plaintiff brought a negligence action for damages for personal injuries sustained by him when a bar stool on which he was sitting collapsed. At the conclusion of the trial, the jury returned a verdict awarding plaintiff $1 for pain and suffering and an amount constituting less than the amount of special damages he was shown to have incurred as special damages. Thereafter, plaintiff's motion for new trial on the issue of damages was granted and defendant appealed. The Supreme Court reversed the judgment and order for a limited new trial when it determined that the issue of liability had not been properly determined at trial. It stated that the granting of a new trial limited to the issue of damages was improper when the question of liability was close, the damages were grossly inadequate, and there were other circumstances which indicated that the verdict resulted from prejudice or an improper compromise. It found that the issue of liability had been sharply contested at trial and that the jury had had difficulty in determining whether or not defendant was negligent. It also found that the jury failed to compensate for special damages indicated by the evidence or for pain and suffering established by the testimony of a medical witness. It held that a jury's failure to compensate plaintiff for special damages indicated by the evidence, and failure to award plaintiff more than a trifling sum as general damages where plaintiff's injuries have been painful, established the fact that the jurors compromised the issue of liability. In such a case, a new trial limited to damages was improper in the absence of overwhelming evidence of defendant's negligence.

[b] Compromise on Issues of Liability and Damages in Personal Injury Action as Precluding Limited New Trial on Damages

Rose v. Melody Lane (1952) 39 Cal. 2d 481, 247 P.2d 335 , is discussed in § 64.177[3][a].

In Malcomson v. Pool (1969) 276 Cal. App. 2d 378, 81 Cal. Rptr. 58 , plaintiff suffered severe back injuries in an automobile collision with defendant. At the conclusion of the personal injury action brought by plaintiff, the jury awarded plaintiff damages in an amount which exceeded plaintiff's established medical specials by only a few dollars and made no allowance for plaintiff's significant loss of wages. The trial court granted plaintiff's motion for a new trial on the issue of damages, and defendant appealed. The court of appeal stated that, when a jury fails to compensate a plaintiff for the special damages indicated by the evidence, the only reasonable conclusion is that the jurors compromised the issues of liability and damages. Here, the jurors' failure to award the damages indicated by the evidence showed a compromise on the issues of liability and damages. Here, the jurors' failure to award the damages indicated by the evidence showed a compromise on the issues of liability and damages because the total amount of undisputed and readily measured damages in the event of defendant's negligence clearly exceeded the amount the jury awarded. Thus, a new trial limited to the issue of damages was improper in the absence of overwhelming evidence of defendant's negligence.

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] New Trial Limited to Damages Improper Where Close Liability Question and Grossly Inadequate Damages

In Wilson v. R.D. Werner Co. (1980) 108 Cal. App. 3d 878, 166 Cal. Rptr. 797 , plaintiff brought an action for damages for personal injuries sustained when he fell from a ladder manufactured by defendant. The jury awarded plaintiff damages in the sum of $10,000. The trial court granted a new trial limited to the damages issue, on the ground that the jury's damages award was inadequate. Defendant appealed from the order insofar as it limited the new trial to the issue of damages. The court of appeal reversed the order and remanded the case for a new trial on all issues. The court noted that the record contained evidence demonstrating that, given the finding of liability, the damages awarded to plaintiff were inadequate as a matter of law, since plaintiff's uncontradicted medical expenses and damages from loss of earning capacity for the period during which he was unable to engage in any gainful employment totaled $10,300. The jury's award of $10,000, which approximately compensated plaintiff for his medical expenses and temporary loss of income due to inability to engage in gainful employment, failed to compensate him at all for his undisputed pain and suffering, and was thus inadequate as a matter of law. The court concluded, however, that the judgment had to be reversed in its entirety. Although a retrial may be limited to damages when the evidence of liability is overwhelming, a case must be remanded for retrial on all issues when the evidence on liability is in sharp conflict and the award is manifestly so inadequate as to suggest a compromise verdict (108 Cal. App. 3d 878, 883) . In this case, the parties' expert witnesses offered sharply conflicting testimony about whether the ladder manufactured by defendant was defective. The conflicting evidence of liability, the clear inadequacy of the damages award, and the additional fact that the jury returned a 9 to 3 verdict all indicated that the jury verdict was probably the result of a compromise on the liability issue. Thus, the court stated, a new trial on all issues was required (108 Cal. App. 3d 878, 884) .

§ 64.190 Supporting Contention That Collateral Source Rule Precludes Reduction in Damages Awarded to Plaintiff by Amount Received From Source Wholly Independent of Defendant as Compensation for Plaintiff's Injuries

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE COLLATERAL SOURCE RULE PRECLUDES ANY REDUCTION OF PLAINTIFF'S DAMAGES BASED ON AMOUNTS PLAINTIFF RECEIVED FROM A SOURCE WHOLLY INDEPENDENT FROM THE DEFENDANT AS COMPENSATION FOR PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES.

A. Payments From Collateral Source May Not Reduce Defendant's Liability. If an injured party receives compensation for his or her injuries from a source that is wholly independent of the tortfeasor, such compensation may not be deducted from the amount of damages that the plaintiff would otherwise have been entitled to (Helfend v. Southern Cal. Rapid Transit Dist. (1970) 2 Cal. 3d 1, 6, 84 Cal. Rptr. 173, 465 P.2d 61).

[Optional] B. Employee Benefits Are Collateral Source. If an injured party receives compensation through an employee benefit program for injuries caused by a tortfeasor, the compensation is a collateral source and may not be used to reduce the tortfeasor's liability (Helfend v. Southern Cal. Rapid Transit Dist. (1970) 2 Cal. 3d 1, 13-14, 84 Cal. Rptr. 173, 465 P.2d 61 ; McQuillan v. Southern Pac. Co. (1974) 40 Cal. App. 3d 802, 807-808, 115 Cal. Rptr. 418).

[Optional] C. Collateral Source Rule Applies to Governmental Entities. The collateral source rule applies to governmental entities in the same manner that it applies to all other tortfeasors (Helfend v. Southern Cal. Rapid Transit Dist. (1970) 2 Cal. 3d 1, 14, 84 Cal. Rptr. 173, 465 P.2d 61).

[Optional] D. Payment by Codefendant for Separate Tort Is Within Collateral Source Rule. Payment made by a codefendant who is not a joint tortfeasor, but whose liability is based on a separate tort, is within the collateral source rule and does not require that a subsequent judgment be offset by the amount of the payment by the codefendant (Kardly v. State Farm Mut. Auto Ins. Co. (1989) 207 Cal. App. 3d 479, 485-487, 255 Cal. Rptr. 40).

[Optional] E. Collateral Source Rule Applies to Gratuitous Salary Continuation. The collateral source rule applies to gratuitous salary continuation payments made for a period during which the plaintiff was unable to continue working because of the injury, regardless of whether the plaintiff has promised to repay the salary payments (Arambula v. Wells (1999) 72 Cal. App. 4th 1006, 1008, 1010-1014, 85 Cal. Rptr. 2d 584).

[Optional] F. Collateral Source Rule Applies to Social Security and Similar Pension Benefits. If Social Security or similar pension benefits are paid to a retiree prior to his or her death, and are replaced after death by death benefits paid to a surviving beneficiary, the collateral source rule applies, and these payments may not be used to reduce a tortfeasor's liability for the decedent's death (McKinney v. California Portland Cement Co. (2002) 96 Cal. App. 4th 1214, 1224-1227, 117 Cal. Rptr. 2d 849).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that the collateral source rule precludes the deduction from the damages awarded to plaintiff of the amount of compensation received by the plaintiff from a source that is wholly independent of the tortfeasor as compensation for his or her injuries [Helfend v. Southern Cal. Rapid Transit Dist. (1970) 2 Cal. 3d 1, 6, 84 Cal. Rptr. 173, 465 P.2d 61] . However, an important exception to the collateral source rule applies in cases involving health care providers [see Civ. Code § 3333.1; see also § 64.210].

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the collateral source rule was violated. They may be used, for example, in a motion for a new trial on the issue of damages. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 64.210 or § 64.211 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Payments From Collateral Source May Not Reduce Defendant's Liability

In Helfend v. Southern Cal. Rapid Transit Dist. (1970) 2 Cal. 3d 1, 84 Cal. Rptr. 173, 465 P.2d 61 , plaintiff brought suit against the transit district, a public entity, for injuries sustained in a traffic accident. At trial, the court refused to admit evidence that the plaintiff received compensation for some of his medical expenses from a Blue Cross plan, and entered judgment after a jury verdict against defendant without reducing the jury's damage award.

The Supreme Court affirmed. While noting inroads in the doctrine, it held that the collateral source rule was still valid in California in cases in which the plaintiff has been compensated by an independent collateral source, such as insurance, pension, continued wages, or disability payments, for which he or she had actually or constructively paid, or in cases in which the collateral source would be recompensed from the tort recovery through subrogation, refund of benefits, or some other arrangement (2 Cal. 3d 1, 13-14) .

[b] Employee Benefits Are Collateral Source

Helfend v. Southern Cal. Rapid Transit Dist. (1970) 2 Cal. 3d 1, 84 Cal. Rptr. 173, 465 P.2d 61 , is discussed in § 64.190[3][a]. In addition to its general reaffirmation of the collateral source rule, the Court held that plaintiff's recovery of medical insurance benefits constituted a collateral source, and that the amount recovered from that source could not be deducted from plaintiff's compensatory damages award (2 Cal. 3d 1, 14) .

In McQuillan v. Southern Pac. Co. (1974) 40 Cal. App. 3d 802, 115 Cal. Rptr. 418 , the survivors of a public employee who was killed by a train owned by Southern Pacific brought a wrongful death action. The decedent's employer, the State of California, and Southern Pacific were both at fault in causing the death. At trial, the court rejected the argument of Southern Pacific that death benefits that plaintiffs received through the Public Employee's Retirement System (PERS) should reduce its liability. The court of appeal affirmed. It held that the collateral source rule prohibited a reduction in damages by the amount of the death benefits paid since the contributions made by the State to PERS were made not as a tortfeasor but rather pursuant to its contractual and statutory obligation (40 Cal. App. 3d 802, 808) .

[c] Collateral Source Rule Applies to Governmental Entities

Helfend v. Southern Cal. Rapid Transit Dist. (1970) 2 Cal. 3d 1, 84 Cal. Rptr. 173, 465 P.2d 61 , is discussed in § 64.190[3][a]. In addition to its general holding reaffirming the validity of the collateral source rule, the Court held that the collateral source rule applies to governmental entities in the same manner that it applies to all other tortfeasors (2 Cal. 3d 1, 16) .

[d] Payment by Codefendant for Separate Tort Is Within Collateral Source Rule

In Kardly v. State Farm Mut. Auto Ins. Co. (1989) 207 Cal. App. 3d 479, 255 Cal. Rptr. 40 , plaintiff sued his insurance company for damages allegedly suffered by the insurer's bad-faith handling of first-party claims arising from an automobile accident. The plaintiff had already recovered damages in a personal injury action against the negligent driver. The trial court in the second action found that the rule against double recovery barred recovery by plaintiff, granted the insurer's motion for nonsuit, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court noted the exception to the collateral source rule under which collateral recovery is not allowed from a joint tortfeasor, because the source of recovery is not wholly independent (207 Cal. App. 3d 479, 485) . However, the court held that this exception does not apply merely because both tortfeasors' conduct related to the same incident (here, the automobile accident). The court rejected the insurer's claim that it was a joint tortfeasor with the other driver, and merely aggravated the mental distress suffered in the accident; the insurer's malfeasance arose from the breach of duties arising from the insurance contract, and was not a foreseeable risk of the automobile accident in the way that subsequent medical malpractice can be. The plaintiff's recovery from the negligent driver is not related to the potential liability of the insurer, so the joint tortfeasor exception does not apply to offset any recovery against the insurer (207 Cal. App. 3d 479, 485-487) .

[e] Collateral Source Rule Applies to Gratuitous Salary Continuation

In Arambula v. Wells (1999) 72 Cal. App. 4th 1006, 85 Cal. Rptr. 2d 584 , the plaintiff was injured in an automobile accident with the defendant, who admitted fault for the accident. The plaintiff had been employed by a family-owned business in which his brother owned 70 percent of the stock, and his brother chose to continue paying the plaintiff his full salary when the plaintiff was unable to work, without exacting a promise of repayment. The negligence suit filed against the defendant went to trial on causation and damages, and the judge instructed the jury not to award damages for lost earnings because his employer had paid the plaintiff's salary without a requirement or agreement of repayment. The jury returned a damages award for the plaintiff, but without damages for lost earnings. The plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that the collateral source rule applied to the gratuitous salary continuation payments and that the plaintiff should have been allowed to recover for lost earnings if the evidence otherwise supported such an award. The court rejected the argument that Helfend v. Southern Cal. Rapid Transit Dist. [see § 64.190[3][a]] established an exception to the collateral source rule for gratuitous benefits if the injured party has incurred no expense, obligation, or liability (72 Cal. App. 4th 1006, 1010) . The court, noting that the plaintiff had not promised to repay the gratuitous salary (72 Cal. App. 4th 1006, 1008) , cited Supreme Court statements that preceded the decision in Helfend that indicated that the collateral source rule could be applied even if the collateral payments were gratuitous. The court concluded that the dicta from Helfend relied on by the defendant could not be used to overrule those statements. The court also noted that appellate court opinions subsequent to Helfend had not read the pertinent language so expansively and that a majority of other jurisdictions and commentators would apply the rule to gratuitous payments. Finally, the court concluded that the same public policy concerns that support application of the collateral source rule if insurance benefits have been received, support application of the doctrine if gratuitous charitable assistance is received, especially if the assistance is received from a family member. The court concluded that a tortfeasor should not be entitled to reap a benefit merely because a family member of the victim chose to provide monetary assistance (72 Cal. App. 4th 1006, 1012-1014) .

[f] Collateral Source Rule Applies to Social Security and Similar Pension Benefits

In McKinney v. California Portland Cement Co. (2002) 96 Cal. App. 4th 1214, 117 Cal. Rptr. 2d 849 , the plaintiffs were the wife and children of a retired decedent whose death was caused by lung cancer. Although cigarette smoking probably played at least some role in causing the cancer, the plaintiffs filed a wrongful death suit against asbestos manufacturers who provided asbestos-containing products used by the decedent during his working career. At trial, the jury found that the two remaining defendants were partially liable for the death and awarded both economic and noneconomic damages. The defendants appealed, arguing that the trial court erred in denying a motion to suppress all evidence of the decedent's pension and Social Security income.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, rejecting the defendants' argument that if the collateral source rule precludes an offset of damages in the amount of the pension benefits, then it should also preclude a plaintiff from referring to a deceased spouse's pension when proving lost financial contributions to the household. The court held that the Social Security retirement benefits paid to the decedent in this case prior to his death could not be used to diminish the defendants' tort liability, even though the spouse became eligible for Social Security death benefits in her own name, based on the decedent's earnings, after the decedent's death. The court concluded that the death benefit paid to the surviving spouse did not exist before the death and was a separate benefit from the pre-death benefit paid to the decedent. Therefore, as a classic collateral source, evidence of the plaintiff's receipt of death benefits could not be used as proof that the plaintiff did not suffer economic loss when the pre-death benefits paid to her husband were discontinued (96 Cal. App. 4th 1214, 1224-1226) . Similarly, the court held that union pension benefits paid to the decedent before his death were in the nature of salary continuation payments that ended with his death and were properly considered when calculating the spouse's claim of loss of support, even though the decedent's spouse received separate death benefit payments from the same source after the decedent's death (96 Cal. App. 4th 1214, 1226-1227) .

[4] Additional Authorities

Hanif v. Housing Auth. (1988) 200 Cal. App. 3d 635, 246 Cal. Rptr. 192 , was a personal injury action by a child struck by a car, in which a judgment for plaintiff was modified to reduce the amount awarded for past medical expenses to the actual amount paid by Medi-Cal. on plaintiff's behalf, and affirmed as modified. The court of appeal held that plaintiff's recovery of special damages of the amount paid for injury-related medical care and services was not affected by the fact that payments were made by Medi-Cal. on plaintiff's behalf (200 Cal. App. 3d 635, 639) . The court said that, under the collateral source rule, plaintiff is deemed to have personally paid or incurred liability for these services and is entitled to recompense accordingly (200 Cal. App. 3d 635, 640) . The court added that the result was not unreasonable or unfair in light of Medi-Cal's subrogation and judgment lien rights (200 Cal. App. 3d 635, 640) .

[b] Collateral Source Rule Applies to Gratuitous Salary Continuation

In Smock v. State of California (2006) 138 Cal. App. 4th 883, 41 Cal. Rptr. 3d 857 , the plaintiff, a partner in a law firm, was involved in a motorcycle accident and recovered a judgment against the driver of the car that hit him and against the state, based on a dangerous condition of public property. During the period of the plaintiff's convalescence, the plaintiff was paid his full salary by his law firm. At trial, the court applied the collateral source rule and refused to allow evidence that the plaintiff had continued to receive his full salary while he was hurt, and the jury awarded damages for lost wages. On appeal, the state argued that the trial court erred by applying the collateral source rule to what were essentially gratuitous salary payments made to the plaintiff by the law firm. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's ruling. The court held that it was established law that the collateral source rule applied to payments made by third parties regardless of whether the payments were made gratuitously or under some other obligation (138 Cal. App. 4th 883, 887-888) .

6-64 California Points & Authorities § 64.191

§ 64.191 Supporting Contention That Plaintiff Is Entitled to Recover as Item of Special Damages Reasonable Value of Nursing Services Rendered by Member of Plaintiff's Family

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF IS ENTITLED TO RECOVER FROM THE DEFENDANT THE REASONABLE VALUE OF NURSING SERVICES REQUIRED BY DEFENDANT'S TORTIOUS CONDUCT; THE FACT THAT SUCH SERVICES WERE RENDERED BY A MEMBER OF PLAINTIFF'S FAMILY WITHOUT AN AGREEMENT FOR OR EXPECTATION OF PAYMENT IS IRRELEVANT.

A. Right to Recover for Nursing Services Rendered. The reasonable value of nursing services required by a defendant's tortious conduct may be recovered from the defendant even though the services were rendered by members of the injured person's family and without an agreement or expectation of payment (Hanif v. Housing Auth. (1988) 200 Cal. App. 3d 635, 644, 246 Cal. Rptr. 192).

B. Amount Recoverable. Where services in the way of attendance and nursing are rendered by a member of the plaintiff's family, the amount for which the defendant is liable is the amount for which reasonably competent nursing and attendance by others could have been obtained (Hanif v. Housing Auth. (1988) 200 Cal. App. 3d 635, 644, 246 Cal. Rptr. 192).

[Optional] C. Lack of Professional Skill. The recognized measure for attendant care is the prevailing market rate for those who perform such services, and the family member's relative lack of skill in professional home nursing is irrelevant on this issue (Hanif v. Housing Auth. (1988) 200 Cal. App. 3d 635, 645-646, 246 Cal. Rptr. 192).

[Optional] D. Services by Person Legally Obligated to Provide Them. The fact that the injured party is a spouse or child and had a legal right to the nursing services provided by the other spouse or parent does not as a general rule prevent recovery of their value (Hanif v. Housing Aut. (1988) 200 Cal. App. 3d 635, 644-645, 246 Cal. Rptr. 192).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the party's contention that the plaintiff is entitled to recover the reasonable value of nursing services required by the defendant's tortious conduct, even though those services were rendered by a family member.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue of the right to recover from a tortfeasor the value of attendant and nursing services performed by a family member without an agreement or expectation of payment. For example, they may be submitted in opposition to a motion by the defendant to strike from the complaint the allegations relating to such damages or in opposition to a motion for summary adjudication of that issue. They might also be submitted in support of a motion for a new trial where these damages were not allowed on the erroneous ground they are not authorized. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include facts that specifically show what attendant and nursing services were performed, the time required to perform them, and the going commercial rate for such services.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Right to Recover for Nursing Services Rendered

Hanif v. Housing Auth. (1988) 200 Cal. App. 3d 635, 246 Cal. Rptr. 192 , was a personal injury action by a child struck by a car in which judgment was rendered for the plaintiff, and defendant appealed. The trial court had found that immediately following plaintiff's initial hospitalization, and excluding an intervening 10-day second hospitalization, plaintiff's parents provided the following home attendant care: helping plaintiff get into and out of bed, helping him to and from the bathroom, changing his bandages, exercising his limbs, feeding him, administering prescribed medications, applying creams and lotions to his body, attending him while he was in pain (nighttime as well as daytime), assisting him in the use of a wheelchair, assisting him in learning to walk again, assisting him in the use of crutches, and generally acting as a practical nurse (200 Cal. App. 3d 635, 644) . The trial court found that 24-hour home attendant care was reasonably necessary and actually provided by plaintiff's parents, that plaintiff's parents had insufficient resources to hire a home nurse, that Medi-Cal. disapproved home nursing care for plaintiff, and that the reasonable value of such home nursing care, could it have been obtained, was $8 per hour (200 Cal. App. 3d 635, 644) . Damages were awarded for the reasonable value of this home attendant care in the amount of $21,696, calculated by multiplying the hourly rate by 2,712 hours (200 Cal. App. 3d 635, 644) . On appeal, defendant contended that the reasonable value of the home-care attendant services performed by plaintiff's parents was an improper item of damages and that, even assuming it was recoverable, the amount awarded was excessive.

In modifying the judgment on another issue and affirming it as modified, the court of appeal rejected both of defendant's contentions. The court said that a person injured by another's tortious conduct is entitled to recover the reasonable value of medical care and services required and attributable to the tort (200 Cal. App. 3d 635, 640) and that the rule is established that the reasonable value of nursing services required by a defendant's tortious conduct may be recovered from the defendant even though the services were rendered by members of the injured person's family and without an agreement or expectation of payment (200 Cal. App. 3d 635, 644) .

[b] Amount Recoverable

The facts and procedural background of Hanif v. Housing Auth. (1988) 200 Cal. App. 3d 635, 246 Cal. Rptr. 192 , are discussed in § 64.191[3][a]. In affirming the judgment as modified, the court of appeal said that where services in the way of attendance and nursing are rendered by a member of the plaintiff's family, the amount for which the defendant is liable is the amount for which reasonably competent nursing and attendance by others could have been obtained (200 Cal. App. 3d 635, 644) .

[c] Lack of Professional Skill

The facts and procedural background of Hanif v. Housing Auth. (1988) 200 Cal. App. 3d 635, 246 Cal. Rptr. 192 , are discussed in § 64.191[3][a]. In affirming the judgment as modified, the court of appeal held meritless defendant's argument that plaintiff's parents, being unskilled, were not worth the hourly rate that it would have cost to hire a trained home nurse (200 Cal. App. 3d 635, 645) . The court said that the recognized measure for attendant care is the prevailing market rate for those who perform such services, and the family member's relative lack of skill in professional home nursing is irrelevant on this issue (200 Cal. App. 3d 635, 645-646) .

[d] Services by Person Legally Obligated to Provide

The facts and procedural background of Hanif v. Housing Auth. (1988) 200 Cal. App. 3d 635, 246 Cal. Rptr. 192 , are discussed in § 64.191[3][a]. In affirming the judgment as modified, the court of appeal said the fact that the injured party had a legal right to the nursing services (as in the case of a spouse) does not as a general rule prevent recovery of their value (200 Cal. App. 3d 635, 644-645) .

§ 64.192 Supporting Contention That Plaintiff May Introduce Evidence That Plaintiff Personally Paid for Medical Expenses Incurred as Result of Injury

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

EVIDENCE THAT THE PLAINTIFF PAID FOR PAST MEDICAL EXPENSES PERSONALLY IS ADMISSIBLE AT TRIAL TO PROVE THE DAMAGES INCURRED BY THE PLAINTIFF.

Evidence of Plaintiff's Payment of Medical Expenses Admissible. If the plaintiff has paid for past medical services out of his or her own pocket, evidence of this payment is admissible to prove damages (Smalley v. Baty (2005) 128 Cal. App. 4th 977, 984-987, 27 Cal. Rptr. 3d 575).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a plaintiff who has paid his or her own medical expenses incurred as a result of the injury caused by the defendant may introduce evidence of that payment at trial.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which these points are raised. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Thus, for example, counsel should include facts showing that the plaintiff paid his or her own medical expenses related to the injury at issue.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Evidence of Plaintiff's Payment of Medical Expenses Admissible

In Smalley v. Baty (2005) 128 Cal. App. 4th 977, 27 Cal. Rptr. 3d 575 , the plaintiff's car was rear-ended by another vehicle. The plaintiff complained of pain and stiffness to his neck and back and was also diagnosed with a hernia, which required surgery. The plaintiff underwent extensive physical therapy for spasms, which he paid for out of his own pocket. The plaintiff sued the driver of the other car and that driver's employer. The defendants admitted liability, but contested damages. The defendants filed a motion with the trial court to exclude evidence that the plaintiff paid his own medical expenses, and the trial court granted the motion. Therefore, the plaintiff was allowed to show that medical expenses had been incurred and paid, but not that he had paid them personally. The jury then returned a verdict for the plaintiff, but awarded an amount for past economic damages that was less than half the amount that the plaintiff had already paid for medical expenses. The plaintiff filed a motion for new trial, which was denied, and the plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court held that evidence that the plaintiff had paid for past medical services out of his own pocket was admissible to prove his damages. On the issue of relevancy of the evidence to prove damages, the court noted that whether a medical bill had been paid or not paid was relevant and admissible on the issue of the reasonableness of the expense. The court also noted that there was no more reliable evidence that a bill had been paid than evidence that the plaintiff, in fact, paid it. The court also concluded that the considerations justifying the collateral source rule could not be relied on to exclude the evidence. To the contrary, because the goal of the collateral source rule was to make it appear that the plaintiff, rather than an insurer, bore the financial burden of incurred medical expenses, evidence that the plaintiff actually paid those expenses personally was consistent with the collateral source rule. In addition, the court noted that the defendants at trial had been permitted to introduce expert opinion testimony suggesting that the plaintiff may have been malingering in order to boost his potential damages at trial. According to the court, this suggestion of malingering may have explained why the jury awarded less in economic damages than the amount of medical bills incurred. Therefore, the plaintiff was clearly prejudiced by not being allowed to refute this suggestion of malingering with evidence that he had been paying for his own medical expenses without any guarantee that he would recover these expenses in his suit against the defendants (128 Cal. App. 4th 977, 984-987) .

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

INTRODUCTION OF EVIDENCE THAT THE PLAINTIFF RECEIVED COMPENSATION FROM A SOURCE WHOLLY INDEPENDENT FROM THE DEFENDANT IS PROPER IN THIS CASE, BECAUSE SUCH EVIDENCE IS EXPRESSLY ADMISSIBLE IN ACTIONS FOR PERSONAL INJURY AGAINST A HEALTH CARE PROVIDER BASED ON PROFESSIONAL NEGLIGENCE.

Payments From Collateral Source May Be Introduced in Action for Professional Negligence Against Health Care Provider. In an action for personal injury against a health care provider based on professional negligence, the defendant may introduce evidence of any amount payable to the plaintiff as a result of the injury pursuant to certain types of collateral sources, including health and accident insurance (Civ. Code § 3333.1).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that the collateral source rule precludes introduction of evidence of payments made to plaintiff by collateral sources. It should be noted that even when the collateral source rule applies, admission of evidence that plaintiff was compensated by a collateral source may be deemed harmless error [see Lewis v. County of Contra Costa (1955) 130 Cal. App. 2d 176, 179, 278 P.2d 756] .

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the collateral source rule was violated. They may be used, for example, in opposing a motion for a new trial on the issue of damages. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include facts that specifically show that the requirements of Civ. Code § 3333.1 have been satisfied.

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 64.190.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Payments From Collateral Source May Be Introduced in Action for Professional Negligence Against Health Care Provider

Civ. Code § 3333.1 provides that in an action for personal injury against a health care provider based on professional negligence, the defendant may introduce evidence of any amount payable to the plaintiff as a result of the injury pursuant to (1) the Social Security Act, (2) any state or federal income disability or workers' compensation act, (3) any health, sickness or income-disability insurance, (4) accident insurance that provides health benefits or income-disability coverage, and (5) any other contract or agreement of any group, organization, partnership or corporation to provide, pay for, or reimburse the cost of medical, hospital, dental, or other health care services. However, Civ. Code § 3333.1 also provides that the plaintiff is entitled to introduce the amount paid to secure the right to the collateral source, and it further provides that the collateral source shall not be subrogated to the rights of the plaintiff against the defendant.

INTRODUCTION OF EVIDENCE THAT PLAINTIFF RECEIVED COMPENSATION FROM A SOURCE WHOLLY INDEPENDENT FROM THE DEFENDANT IS PROPER IN THIS CASE, BECAUSE SUCH EVIDENCE IS ADMISSIBLE SUBJECT TO THE DISCRETION OF THE COURT TO SHOW PLAINTIFF'S MOTIVE FOR MALINGERING.

Payments From Collateral Source May Be Introduced to Prove Plaintiff's Motive for Malingering. When evidence that plaintiff's receipt of compensation for his or her injuries from a collateral source has substantial probative value as proof that plaintiff is a malingerer, the evidence is admissible within the discretion of the trial court notwithstanding the collateral source rule (see Hrnjak v. Graymar, Inc. (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 725, 733, 94 Cal. Rptr. 623, 484 P.2d 599).

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include facts that specifically show that the evidence offered is relevant to show that plaintiff had a motive to malinger, and that the probative effect of the evidence would outweigh any substantial danger of undue prejudice, confusion of the issues, or misleading the jury [see Evid. Code § 352].

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 64.190.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Payments From Collateral Source May Be Introduced to Prove Plaintiff's Motive for Malingering

In Hrnjak v. Graymar, Inc. (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 725, 94 Cal. Rptr. 623, 484 P.2d 599 , the plaintiff brought a personal injury suit after being injured when defendant's truck collided with his vehicle. The trial court allowed the defendant to introduce evidence of the fact that plaintiff received insurance benefits from two collateral sources. The evidence was admitted to show that plaintiff had a motive for malingering, that is, that the collateral receipts made it financially beneficial to the plaintiff to feign injury and to maintain the appearance of disability. The Supreme Court reversed, but in so doing, it established a rule by which such evidence may be introduced in a proper case. It held that the introduction of evidence of a collateral source to show a plaintiff's motive to malinger is within the discretion of the trial court under Evid. Code § 352. Such evidence may be admitted if the trial court examines all the relevant facts in the case, such as the amount of plaintiff's out-of-pocket medical expenses, past and future earning capacity, and the seriousness of plaintiff's injuries, and then is satisfied that the evidence of the collateral source receipts establishes that the plaintiff was motivated by the insurance receipts rather than by the disabling extent of his or her injuries (4 Cal. 3d 725, 733) . The Court then found that the decision of the trial judge to allow introduction of the evidence of plaintiff's collateral sources was an abuse of discretion in light of its marginal relevance on the issue of malingering and its highly prejudicial impact (4 Cal. 3d 725, 732-734) .

§ 64.212 Opposing Contention That Collateral Source Rule Precludes Evidence of Collateral Source Payment--Evidence of Receipt of Disability Pension May Be Admitted If Plaintiff Seeks Recovery for Loss of Regular Pension

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

INTRODUCTION OF EVIDENCE THAT PLAINTIFF RECEIVED A DISABILITY PENSION IS APPROPRIATE IN THIS CASE BECAUSE PLAINTIFF SEEKS TO RECOVER DAMAGES FOR LOSS OF REGULAR PENSION BENEFITS, AND IT WOULD BE INEQUITABLE TO ALLOW PLAINTIFF TO RECOVER FOR LOST REGULAR PENSION BENEFITS AND CONCEAL EVIDENCE OF THE DISABILITY PENSION BENEFITS THAT WERE PAID IN LIEU OF THE REGULAR PENSION.

Evidence of Disability Pension May Be Admitted If Plaintiff Seeks Recovery for Lost Regular Pension. If a plaintiff seeks to recover damages for the loss of a regular pension, the collateral source rule should not prevent a defendant from introducing evidence that the plaintiff, because of the injury, is receiving disability pension benefits in lieu of that regular pension (Rotolo Chevrolet v. Superior Court (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 242, 246-247, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 283).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that the collateral source rule precludes the introduction of evidence that the plaintiff is receiving a disability pension because of the injury. The basis for opposition is that if a plaintiff seeks to recover for the loss of a regular pension, it would be inequitable for the plaintiff to conceal the fact that the plaintiff is receiving a disability pension in lieu of the regular pension.

These points and authorities should be combined with others pertaining to the procedural context in which they are to be raised. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. Thus, counsel should include facts showing that the plaintiff is seeking to recover damages for the loss of a regular pension, but is receiving a disability pension instead of that regular pension.

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 64.190.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Evidence of Disability Pension May Be Admitted If Plaintiff Seeks Recovery for Lost Regular Pension

In Rotolo Chevrolet v. Superior Court (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 242, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 283 , the plaintiff was injured due to a defective vehicle provided to his employer by the defendant, a car dealer, and this injury allegedly compelled the plaintiff's retirement. Because his retirement was caused by an on-the-job injury, the plaintiff received a disability pension instead of the regular pension he would otherwise have received. The plaintiff's suit against the defendant sought damages for lost income and for the loss of his regular pension, and the plaintiff filed a pre-trial motion in limine seeking to prevent the defendant from introducing evidence at trial that the plaintiff was receiving a disability pension because of the injury. The trial court granted the motion based on the collateral source rule, and the defendant filed a petition for writ of mandate.

The court of appeal granted the defendant's petition. The court recognized that although employee benefits are generally considered a collateral source, the collateral source rule should not prevent the defendant in this case from introducing evidence that the plaintiff would receive disability pension benefits because of his injury. The court of appeal concluded that it would be inequitable for the plaintiff to claim that he lost his retirement pension because of the injury, if in fact the injury merely caused him to receive a disability pension instead. The court also noted that allowing the plaintiff to prevent introduction of evidence of his disability pension would effectively allow the plaintiff to receive triple compensation for the injury, in the form of damages for lost income, damages for the lost regular pension, and benefits actually paid under the disability pension (105 Cal. App. 4th 242, 246-247) . The court did recognize, however, that the plaintiff might be able to recover for the amount that his regular pension would have exceeded his disability pension (105 Cal. App. 4th 242, 248) .

A. Market Share Rule Inapplicable to Asbestos Litigation. The market share rule which bars punitive damages against manufacturers of fungible goods who prove that they could not have made the product causing the plaintiff's injuries, does not apply in asbestos personal injury litigation (Stevens v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1996) 49 Cal. App. 4th 1645, 1668-1669, 57 Cal. Rptr. 2d 525).

B. Fraud-On-The-Market Doctrine Inapplicable to Asbestos Litigation. The fraud-on-the-market doctrine, which provides a presumption of reliance to plaintiffs alleging misrepresentations in the sale of securities, does not apply in asbestos personal injury litigation (*Stevens v. [a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to defendant's contention that punitive damages are precluded as a matter of law in asbestos litigation.

These points and authorities should be combined with others pertaining to the procedural context in which they are to be raised. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. In particular, counsel should include specific facts showing that the nature of the asbestos personal injury litigation, and point to the record's failure to indicate the potentially crushing liability presented by other damage awards against defendant.

For discussion and forms relating to punitive damages generally, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch.177, Damages (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Market Share Rule Inapplicable to Asbestos Litigation

In Stevens v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1996) 49 Cal. App. 4th 1645, 57 Cal. Rptr. 2d 525 , plaintiff sued defendant alleging that it had manufactured, distributed and marketed asbestos products that caused his asbestosis and cancer. During jury selection, plaintiff died and his estate was substituted as plaintiff. The jury awarded plaintiff both economic and punitive damages. Defendant appealed, arguing among other things, that punitive damages were precluded as a matter of law in asbestos litigation.

The court of appeal affirmed the punitive damages award, stating that while there was a danger of "overkill" by repeated awards of punitive damages in asbestos cases, that danger had to be established by an adequate record before an appellate court could do something about it. In this case the court ruled that defendant's legal arguments were not supported by such a record and thus, did not persuade it to ban punitive damages in asbestos litigation as a matter of law (49 Cal. App. 4th 1645, 1668) . Defendant argued that the market share rule, which bars punitive damages against manufacturers of fungible goods who prove that they could not have made the product causing the plaintiff's injuries, also barred punitive damages against it in this case. Specifically, defendant's argued that this ban was supported by Magallanes v. Superior Court (1985) 167 Cal. App. 3d 878, 213 Cal. Rptr. 547 , in which the court held that punitive damages were not recoverable in actions brought under the market share rule because a plaintiff could not identify the defendant who supplied the injury causing product or prove that defendant acted with malice and oppression. The court found that because of the diversity of asbestos products, the market share rule did not apply to asbestos personal injury litigation, and that Magallanes was inapplicable to this case because plaintiff was able to identify defendant as the supplier of products which exposed decedent to asbestos, and proved causation, malice and oppression (49 Cal. App. 4th 1645, 1668-1669) .

[b] Fraud-On-The-Market Doctrine Inapplicable to Asbestos Litigation

The factual and procedural history of Stevens v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1996) 49 Cal. App. 4th 1645, 1668-1669, 57 Cal. Rptr. 2d 525 is discussed in § 64.213[3][a]. Defendant argued that the fraud-on-the-market doctrine, which provides a presumption of reliance to plaintiffs alleging misrepresentations in the sale of securities applied to ban the punitive damages award in this case. Defendant, citing Mirkin v. Wasserman (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 1082, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 101 as authority, contended that two policy reasons supported the application of this doctrine to asbestos litigation: the potentially crushing liability presented by actual damages, and the danger of overkill if juries in several lawsuits were able to assess punitive damages for the same transaction. The court found defendant's reliance on Mirkin to be misplaced because: (1) the record in this case did not indicate that defendant was likely to be crushed by other damage awards; (2) the fundamental considerations underlying the ban on punitive damages in securities litigation, that the burden on the securities business from punitive damages outweighs their contribution to the enforcement of securities laws, did not apply in asbestos litigation; and (3) the other policy reasons cited by the Mirkin court were not pertinent or persuasive in asbestos litigation (49 Cal. App. 4th 1645, 1671) .

[Caption. See § 64.170.]

CIVIL CODE SECTION 3295(d) DOES NOT ENTITLE DEFENDANT TO A NEW TRIAL ON LIABILITY AND COMPENSATORY DAMAGES FOLLOWING THE REVERSAL OF AN AWARD OF PUNITIVE DAMAGES.

A. Same Trier of Fact Provision. On application of any defendant, a court must preclude the admission of evidence of that defendant's profit or financial condition until after the trier of fact returns a verdict for plaintiff awarding actual damages and finds that a defendant is guilty of malice, oppression, or fraud in accordance with Civil Code Section 3294. Evidence of profit and financial condition must be presented to the same trier of fact that found for the plaintiff and found one or more defendants guilty of malice, oppression, or fraud (Civ. Code § 3295(d)).

B. No New Trial on Liability and Compensatory Damages Required. The same-trier-of-fact restriction, Civil Code Section 3295(d), does not entitle a defendant to a new trial on liability and compensatory damages following a reversal of a punitive damages award (Torres v. Automobile Club of S. Cal. (1997) 15 Cal. 4th 771, 778, 782, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 859, 937 P.2d 290).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that under Civil Code Section 3295(d) defendant is entitled to a new trial on liability and compensatory damages following reversal of a punitive damages award.

These points and authorities should be combined with others pertaining to the procedural context in which they are to be raised. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should provide facts showing a prior reversal of a punitive damages award and argue that this ruling does not entitle defendant to a new trial on liability and compensatory damages under Civil Code Section 3295(d).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No New Trial on Liability and Compensatory Damages Required

Torres v. Automobile Club of S. Cal. (1997) 15 Cal. 4th 771, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 859, 937 P.2d 290 , was the third in a series of lawsuits arising out of an auto accident in which plaintiff and his son were injured. In the first action plaintiff and his son obtained a default judgment against the driver of the vehicle that collided with them. In the second lawsuit plaintiff and his son prevailed against the insurer of the vehicle that collided with them. In the third action, plaintiff was awarded economic and noneconomic damages against the insurer for violations of Ins. Code § 790.03 and his son was awarded noneconomic damages only. The jury also found the insurer guilty of malice, fraud and oppression, and in a subsequent hearing awarded punitive damages. The trial court granted the insurer's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict as to the son, finding no evidence to support the award, but denied the balance of the motion, thus affirming the judgment in plaintiff's favor as well as the punitive damages award. The insurer appealed. The court of appeal reversed, holding that (1) plaintiff had not made a sufficient showing for the recovery of noneconomic damages, and (2) that the punitive damages award was excessive. Even though there was no question of error regarding the issue of liability or the amount of economic damages, the court nevertheless remanded the entire action for a complete retrial. While recognizing that a reversal of only a portion of a judgment ordinarily does not require a full retrial, the court of appeal believed that Civ. Code § 3295(d), did not allow for a retrial of only the amount of punitive damages. The California Supreme Court granted review to address this limited issue.

The Supreme Court reversed the judgment of the court of appeal insofar as it ordered a complete retrial of all issues and directed the court of appeal to remand the action to the trial court for a retrial limited to punitive damages. The Court held that based upon the application of firmly established rules of statutory construction, the same-trier-of-fact restriction, Civ. Code § 3295(d), does not entitle a defendant to a new trial on liability and compensatory damages following a reversal of a punitive damages award (15 Cal. 4th 771, 782) . Defendants had interpreted the statutory provision to mean that the issues of liability, compensatory and punitive damages must always be decided by the same trier of fact, and that therefore these issues may never be decided by different juries. Construed in this manner, Civ. Code § 3295(d) effectively granted defendants the unqualified right to a complete retrial whenever the punitive damages portion of a judgment was reversed. The Supreme Court rejected this interpretation. Initially, the Court examined the same-trier-of-fact restriction in light of the nature and purpose of the enactment, as well as the overall statutory context. It stated that requiring bifurcated issues to be submitted to a single trier of fact promoted judicial economy and avoided delay, and that the purpose of the restriction was to safeguard defendants against the premature disclosure, of their profits and financial condition. The Court went on to find that disclosing these matters threatened no prejudice once a bifurcated trial had been held and the issues of liability, compensatory damages and malice, oppression and fraud had been resolved against the defense by both the trier of fact and the court of appeal. Therefore, the Court determined that it was unnecessary to construe the provision to apply to retrials in order to give full effect to the statute's protective purpose, since the statute itself was silent as to whether the provision precluded retrials limited to the issue of punitive damages, the Court reviewed the legislative history for clues as to the legislature's intent in enacting the restriction. It found nothing from which to infer a legislative intent to afford defendants a right to a complete retrial whenever punitive damages were reversed on appeal. The Court said that, if anything, the legislative history confirmed the view that the provision was intended simply as a restriction on a defendant's right to a bifurcation of the issues (15 Cal. 4th 771, 779) . The Court then applied the following rule of statutory construction: that courts should not presume the legislature in the enactment of statutes intended to overthrow long-established principles of law unless that intention is made clear either by express declaration or by necessary implication and determined that Civ. Code § 3295(d) did not evince a clear expression of intent to strip the appellate courts of their authority to order retrials limited to the issue of punitive damages. Moreover, the Court found it unnecessary to construe the statute in this manner in order to give it effect. Accordingly, it concluded that the statute did not compel a complete retrial on the reversal of a punitive damages award (15 Cal. 4th 771, 780) .

§ 64.215 Opposing Contention That Defendant Is Entitled to New Trial on Liability and Compensatory Damages Following Deadlock of Original Jury on Liability for Punitive Damages [Civ. Code § 3295(d)]

[Caption. See § 64.170.]

CIVIL CODE SECTION 3295(d) DOES NOT ENTITLE DEFENDANT TO A NEW TRIAL ON LIABILITY AND COMPENSATORY DAMAGES IF THE ORIGINAL JURY DEADLOCKS ON THE ISSUE OF LIABILITY FOR PUNITIVE DAMAGES AND THE TRIAL COURT ORDERS A RETRIAL LIMITED TO THAT ISSUE.

A. Same Trier of Fact Provision. [See § 64.214, Paragraph A].

B. Trial Court Authorized to Order Retrial of Only Punitive Damages. Despite Civil Code Section 3295(d), a trial court has the authority to order a retrial limited to the issues of malice and, if necessary, punitive damages, without a retrial of all issues relating to liability and compensatory damages, if the original jury deadlocks on the issue of malice (Barmas, Inc. v. Superior Court (2001) 92 Cal. App. 4th 372, 374-377, 112 Cal. Rptr. 2d 71).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that under Civ. Code § 3295(d) the defendant is entitled to a retrial on liability and compensatory damages if the trial court orders a new trial because the original jury deadlocked on the issue of punitive damages.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Thus, counsel should include facts showing that a retrial has been ordered on the issue of punitive damages and argue that this order does not entitle the defendant to a new trial on liability and compensatory damages under Civ. Code § 3295(d).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Trial Court Authorized to Order Retrial of Only Punitive Damages

In Barmas, Inc. v. Superior Court (2001) 92 Cal. App. 4th 372, 112 Cal. Rptr. 2d 71 , the plaintiffs filed suit alleging various tort and contract claims against the defendant. Before trial, the court granted the plaintiff's motion to bifurcate the liability and punitive damages phases of trial. At the conclusion of the first phase, the jury found for the plaintiffs and awarded compensatory damages. On trial of the punitive damages claim, the jury deadlocked eight to four against the defendant on the issue of whether the defendant was guilty of malice. After concluding further deliberations would not be fruitful, the trial court discharged the jury. The plaintiffs moved the trial court for an order granting retrial of the issue of malice and, if appropriate, punitive damages. In opposition, the defendant argued that under Civ. Code § 3295(d), the plaintiffs must either agree to a retrial of all issues or accept the jury's compensatory damages award and allow a judgment for that amount to be entered. The trial court granted the plaintiffs' motion and ordered a retrial limited to issues of malice and, if appropriate, punitive damages. The defendant petitioned for writ of mandate or prohibition.

The court of appeal denied the defendant's writ petition. The court held that a trial court has the authority to order a retrial limited to the issues of malice and, if necessary, punitive damages, without a retrial of all issues relating to liability and compensatory damages, if the original jury deadlocks on the issue of malice. The court noted that Code Civ. Proc. § 616 authorizes a trial court to order a retrial if a jury is discharged without having rendered a verdict, and retrials may be limited to only certain issues (92 Cal. App. 4th 372, 375) . The court then reviewed the holding and rationale of the California Supreme Court in Torres v. Automobile Club of S. Cal. (1997) 15 Cal. 4th 771, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 859, 937 P.2d 290 [see § 64.214[3][a]], which held that a retrial limited to the issue of liability for punitive damages was permissible if an award of excessive punitive damages is reversed on appeal. The court of appeal concluded that the Supreme Court's rationale was just as applicable under the facts of the case before it. The requirement that the same trier of fact decide the punitive damages issue as decided the compensatory damages issue was intended to promote judicial economy when a case is bifurcated. The legislature did not intend to abrogate the power of the trial courts to authorize retrials or partial retrials if otherwise appropriate (92 Cal. App. 4th 372, 375-376) . In addition, in contrast to Torres, in which the original jury determined the issue of malice, the defendant in this case would receive an additional safeguard in that the new jury would be required to decide in the first instance whether the defendant's conduct was malicious, and any award of punitive damages would then be made in light of the specific conduct that the new jury found to be malicious (92 Cal. App. 4th 372, 376-377) .

[a] Trial Court Authorized to Order Retrial of Only Punitive Damages

In Bullock v. Philip Morris USA, Inc. (2008) 159 Cal. App. 4th 655, 71 Cal. Rptr. 3d 775 , plaintiff was a cigarette smoker who sued a tobacco company for products liability and fraud based on the company's long-term efforts to hide the harmful health effects of cigarette smoking from their customers and the general public. A jury awarded plaintiff compensatory damages and $28 billion dollars in punitive damages, although the trial court reduced the amount of punitive damages to $28 million dollars. The court of appeal held that it was prejudicial error for the trial court to refuse the defendant's request to instruct the jury that they were not permitted to impose punishment for harm suffered by persons other than the plaintiff (159 Cal. App. 4th 655, 693-695). The court remanded for retrial limited to the amount of punitive damages, however, and rejected defendant's contention that the retrial had to encompass determination of liability and compensatory damages as well. The court noted that defendant's liability, the amount of compensatory damages, and oppression, fraud, or malice were determined in the original trial without prejudicial error. As such, the court held that it was proper to order a retrial limited to the amount of punitive damages, even though the evidence presented to the new jury on retrial would likely be much of the same evidence presented in the earlier trial. The court concluded that requiring the jury to consider the degree of reprehensibility of defendant's conduct that harmed this specific plaintiff would provide sufficient assurance that the new jury would based its award of punitive damages on the same course of conduct that the first jury used to support a finding of oppression, fraud, or malice (159 Cal. App. 4th 655, 696-701) .

§ 64.216 Opposing Contention That Award of Punitive Damages Must be Reduced When Compensatory Damage Award is Reduced

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF'S AWARD OF PUNITIVE DAMAGES NEED NOT BE REDUCED MERELY BECAUSE THE JURY'S AWARD OF COMPENSATORY DAMAGES WAS REDUCED, IF THE PUNITIVE DAMAGES AWARD IS NOT OTHERWISE EXCESSIVE.

Reduction of Punitive Damages Not Mandated When Compensatory Damages Reduced. A trial court may issue a remittitur as to compensatory damages, but refuse to grant a reduction in punitive damages, so long as the punitive damage award still bears a reasonable relation to the reduced compensatory damage award and the award is not otherwise excessive (McGee v. Tucoemas Federal Credit Union (2007) 153 Cal. App. 4th 1351, 1362, 63 Cal. Rptr. 3d 808).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a trial court's reduction in the jury's compensatory damages award mandates a corresponding reduction in punitive damages.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should describe the defendant's conduct justifying the award of punitive damages and argue that the current punitive damages award is appropriate, taking into consideration the new amount of compensatory damages, the reprehensibility of the defendant's conduct, and the deterrent effect of the award in light of defendant's financial resources.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Reduction of Punitive Damages Not Mandated When Compensatory Damages Reduced

In McGee v. Tucoemas Federal Credit Union (2007) 153 Cal. App. 4th 1351, 63 Cal. Rptr. 3d 808 , plaintiff was the former employee of a federal credit union who sued her former employer for employment discrimination. Plaintiff alleged that following her cancer surgery and chemotherapy, the credit union engaged in a pattern of conduct designed to humiliate her and force her to quit, refused to provide reasonable medical accommodation, threatened to fire her if she did not return to work after four months, and when she did return within that period, the credit union demoted her, cut her pay, and canceled her medical coverage. The jury awarded plaintiff $2 million in compensatory damages and $1.2 million in punitive damages, but plaintiff agreed to a $750,000 reduction in compensatory damages in order to avoid a new trial. Defendant appealed, arguing that as a federal credit union, it was immune from liability for punitive damages. Alternatively, defendant argued that the punitive damages award should have been reduced when the compensatory damages were reduced.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment. The court first held that, unlike the federal government, a federal instrumentality such as a federal credit union is not entitled to immunity from punitive damages merely by virtue of its status as a federal instrumentality. If Congress has provided that the instrumentality may sue and be sued, as was the case with the credit union, immunity from punitive damages is generally deemed to have been waived as an incident of suit (153 Cal. App. 4th 1351, 1359) . The court of appeal then held that the reduction in compensatory damages did not necessarily mandate a corresponding reduction in punitive damages. The court noted that a trial court may issue a remittitur as to compensatory damages, but refuse to grant a reduction in punitive damages, so long as the punitive damage award still bears a reasonable relation to the reduced compensatory damage award and the award is not otherwise excessive. In the instant case, the court concluded that the existing punitive damages award was not excessive as a matter of law. The evidence demonstrated the reprehensibility of defendant's conduct, and the punitive damages award bore a reasonable relation to the reduced compensatory damages award, with an approximate 1-to-1 ratio between the two. Moreover, there was no evidence that the award would constitute an undue financial burden on the credit union (153 Cal. App. 4th 1351, 1362).

§ 64.217 Opposing Contention That Plaintiff May Recover as Compensatory Damage Amount Plaintiff Has Not Yet Paid to Third Party to Settle Related Claim

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF MAY NOT RECOVER AS COMPENSATORY DAMAGES AN AMOUNT PLAINTIFF HAS NOT YET PAID TO SETTLE A THIRD-PARTY CLAIM ALLEGEDLY CAUSED BY DEFENDANT'S CONDUCT, ABSENT EVIDENCE DEMONSTRATING TO A REASONABLE CERTAINTY THAT PLAINTIFF WILL ACTUALLY PAY THAT CLAIM.

Defendant Not Liable for Unpaid Obligation to Third Party. If a plaintiff seeks damages to compensate for a liability owed to a third party caused by defendant's actionable conduct, but plaintiff has not yet paid that third-party liability, plaintiff must provide more than just evidence of an obligation to pay, but must prove to a reasonable certainty that plaintiff could and would pay the liability (Green Wood Industrial Co. v. Forceman Internat. Development Group, Inc. (2007) 156 Cal. App. 4th 766, 777-778, 67 Cal. Rptr. 3d 624).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a plaintiff may recover as compensatory damages an amount that plaintiff has not yet paid, but may have agreed to pay, to settle a claim with a third party allegedly caused by defendant's conduct.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include facts showing that plaintiff has not paid the amount allegedly owed to the third party and any facts calling into question the certainty that plaintiff will actually pay the third party in the future.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defendant Not Liable for Unpaid Obligation to Third Party

In Green Wood Industrial Co. v. Forceman Internat. Development Group, Inc. (2007) 156 Cal. App. 4th 766, 67 Cal. Rptr. 3d 624 , plaintiff company agreed to purchase scrap metal from a scrap metal business in order to resell the metal to a Chinese company at a profit. Plaintiff paid $1,074,548 for the metal, with $862,500 of that amount coming from the Chinese buyer. However, the scrap metal plaintiff paid for never existed. Plaintiff sued the seller and other defendants involved in the fraud. The jury returned a verdict in favor of plaintiff and awarded $1,508,416 in compensatory damages, which included damages for plaintiff's lost profits and $274,868 plaintiff allegedly owed the Chinese buyer for nondelivery of goods. One defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reduced the compensatory damage award to eliminate recovery of the amount plaintiff allegedly owed the Chinese buyer, but otherwise affirmed. The court of appeal held that if a plaintiff seeks damages to compensate for a liability owed to a third party caused by defendant's actionable conduct, but plaintiff has not yet paid that third-party liability, plaintiff must provide more than just evidence of an obligation to pay. As with other types of prospective damage, a plaintiff must prove to a reasonable certainty that plaintiff could and would pay the liability, and a statement by plaintiff that he or she agreed to pay the third party a certain amount is insufficient (156 Cal. App. 4th 766, 777-778) . In the instant case, plaintiff had not yet paid any portion of the amount it claimed it agreed to pay the Chinese buyer to settle its claim. In addition, plaintiff presented no evidence that any such agreement would be enforceable in China, or that the liability could and would be enforced by the buyer in the United States or elsewhere or would otherwise be paid. The court noted that no other evidence was presented to the jury from which it could conclude that it was reasonably certain that plaintiff would ever have to pay the money. The court also noted that while the Chinese buyer's claim against plaintiff was for its own lost profits, plaintiff presented no evidence to establish the fact or amount of these lost profits other than the Chinese buyer's mere claim. Under these circumstances, the court concluded that the evidence was insufficient to support recovery by the plaintiff of the $274,868 plaintiff allegedly owed the Chinese buyer (156 Cal. App. 4th 766, 778) .

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a demurrer to a complaint for damages for breach of contract when it does not appear from the allegations in plaintiff's complaint that plaintiff suffered an injury or was damaged in any way by defendant's action or inaction.

Counsel should note that in addition to causation, foreseeability of the damage to plaintiff is necessary in an action for damages for breach of contract. However, whether or not the parties foresaw or contemplated certain damages at the time of contracting is ordinarily not an issue which can be resolved on demurrer (Weaver v. Bank of America (1963) 59 Cal. 2d 428, 434, 30 Cal. Rptr. 4, 380 P.2d 644).

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities set out in § 65.41 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a demurrer to a complaint supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Proximate Cause Required

Patent Scaffolding Co. v. William Simpson Constr. Co. (1967) 256 Cal. App. 2d 506, 64 Cal. Rptr. 187 , was an action by three insurance companies in the name of their insured to recover damages for breach of contracts involving construction. Defendant contractor entered into a subcontract with plaintiff's insured whereby the latter was to furnish scaffolding and other equipment for use during construction and, according to the contract, the insured's work and materials at the project site were to be protected from fire loss and damage by insurance procured by defendant contractor or defendant owner. Both defendants failed to procure such insurance. During construction a fire destroyed some of the insured'sequipment but defendants refused to compensate it for the loss. Plaintiffs paid their insured for the damage under an insurance policy the latter had taken out on the equipment prior to contracting with defendants. The trial court entered judgment in favor of the insured as nominal plaintiff against defendant contractor and in favor of defendant owner against plaintiffs concluding that the insurers were not entitled to recover the amounts they had paid to insured from the owner because the insured was not a third-party beneficiary of the contract between defendant owner and defendant contractor. The court of appeal reversed noting that if the insured had had no insurance, it could have recovered damages from defendant contractor for all detriment proximately caused by the contractor's breach of its contractual duty to procure insurance. But once the insured was fully compensated for its fire loss, it could not have successfully sued the contractor for breach of contract. Furthermore, the insured suffered no uncompensated detriment caused by the contractors breach of contract. It could not recover the cost of premiums it had paid to the insurers because it did not incur that expense as a consequence of its contract with the contractor or as a result of the contractor's breach of contract. Recording to the court a breach of contract without damage is not actionable and damages are not recoverable which are not causally connected with the breach.

[b] Injury as Required to Follow From Defendant's Act

Southall v. Security Title Ins. & Guar. Co. (1952) 112 Cal. App. 2d 321, 246 P.2d 74 , was an action against an escrow agent for costs and attorney's fees expended by plaintiff in an action for specific performance of a real estate purchase agreement. Plaintiff alleged that defendant failed to inform plaintiff that deeds necessary for the vesting of title in plaintiff had not been delivered to defendant and that the title search was completed. The trial court sustained defendant's demurrer on the grounds that the statute of limitations had run. The court of appeal affirmed holding that the demurrer could properly have been sustained on the ground that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against defendant since the conclusion that plaintiff was injured by an omission of defendant did not follow from plaintiff's pleading. The court found that plaintiff's loss or damage, attorney's fees and costs in the specific performance suit, were caused solely and proximately by the sellers' failure to perform their agreement and not by defendant's action or lack of action. Even assuming that defendant's failure to advise plaintiff that the necessary deeds had not been deposited resulted in a delay in securing title to the property, it was not alleged that any damage resulted from such delay. The court concluded that defendant was under no duty to secure the necessary documents and that its asserted breach of contract in the matter of advising plaintiff that the deeds had not been deposited with it could not be held to have any causal connection with the fact that plaintiff was obliged to bring a suit for specific performance against the sellers.

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Proximate Cause Required

In McDonald v. John P. Scripps Newspaper (1989) 210 Cal. App. 3d 100, 257 Cal. Rptr. 473 , the court of appeal affirmed a judgment for the defendant that was entered after the trial court sustained a demurrer without leave to amend. The plaintiff alleged that he lost a spelling bee sponsored by the defendant because the defendant had advanced another contestant in violation of the rules. The other contestant correctly spelled a word that the plaintiff misspelled. The court of appeal said that the complaint did not show any harm to the plaintiff resulting from the defendant's breach. Whether the action is in tort or contract, compensatory damages cannot be recovered unless there is a causal connection between the act or omission complained of and an injury sustained by the plaintiff (210 Cal. App. 3d 100, 104) . The plaintiff lost the spelling bee because he misspelled a word, and it was irrelevant that the winning contestant had no right to advance in the contest (210 Cal. App. 3d 100, 104) .

In Metzenbaum v. R.O.S. Associates (1986) 188 Cal. App. 3d 202, 232 Cal. Rptr. 741 , the court of appeal affirmed a directed verdict for the defendant in a real estate loan broker's action for a commission based on the defendant's having obtained a loan elsewhere during the term of their contract. The facts established that the plaintiff's performance was impossible; therefore, the plaintiff's injury, if any, did not flow from the defendant's breach (188 Cal. App. 3d 202, 211-214) .

In Postal Instant Press, Inc. v. Sealy (1996) 43 Cal. App. 4th 1704, 51 Cal. Rptr. 2d 365 , the court of appeal held that a franchisee's failure to make past royalty payments was not a proximate or "natural and direct" cause of the franchisor's failure to receive future royalty payments (43 Cal. App. 4th 1704, 1713) . Therefore, an award of future lost royalties and advertising fees violated Civ. Code § 3359, prohibiting damages that are unreasonable, unconscionable, or grossly oppressive (43 Cal. App. 4th 1704, 1717-1718) .

When appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law raised.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Damages Sought Cannot Be Proven With Reasonable Certainty

Vestar Development v. General Dynamics Corporation (9th Cir. 2001) 249 F.3d 958 , was an action by a prospective buyer of property against the prospective seller for breach of an agreement to negotiate. Plaintiff had sent defendant a letter of understanding, which "set forth the proposed business terms and conditions which will provide the basis for completing a formal Purchase & Sale Agreement" and provided that defendant would negotiate exclusively with plaintiff for 90 days. The parties both signed the letter. Subsequently, defendant sold the property to a third party. Plaintiff expressly did not seek reliance damages, but sought only lost profits it expected to make by constructing a shopping center on the parcel it sought to buy and leasing space to merchants. Plaintiff originally filed suit in California Superior Court and the defendant removed the diversity case to federal district court.

The first amended complaint alleged that plaintiff had been damaged by "the inability to purchase and develop" the property and sought damages of $48 million. The district court granted defendant's motion to dismiss because the only damages sought were lost profits. The court reasoned that the amount was too speculative and that causation was too attenuated. Plaintiff moved for clarification or reconsideration, and the district court denied the motion. It stated that plaintiff could not prove damages with reasonable certainty as required by California law, and that damages for breach of an agreement to negotiate are usually confined to reliance damages. Because plaintiff was seeking only lost profits, it requested that if its motion was denied, the complaint be dismissed in its entirety. The district court dismissed the complaint and plaintiff appealed (249 F.3d 958, 959-960) .

The Ninth Circuit affirmed. It stated that because the parties never reached an agreement of sale, the terms of which would be necessary to determine lost profits, the only damages sought could not be proven with reasonable certainty, as required by California law. Civ. Code § 3301 requires damages to be certain, and no damages may be recovered for a breach of contract which are not clearly ascertainable in both nature and origin. Plaintiff could satisfy that standard only with respect to reliance damages. However, it sought only lost profits. There was no way to evaluate, other than through speculation, the profits that plaintiff might have made. The letter of understanding between the parties did not set forth any terms, and was not even binding except as to the duty to negotiate. There was no way to know what the terms of the eventual sale would have been, or even if a deal would have been reached. Accordingly, on those facts, assessing lost profits by the hypothetical terms of a never-formed deal would require impermissible speculation (249 F.3d 958, 961-962) .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff Cannot Establish Reliance Damages, Which Are the Only Form of Recovery Available in an Action on a Contract to Negotiate an Agreement

In Copeland v. Baskin Robbins U.S.A. (2002) 96 Cal. App. 4th 1251, 117 Cal. Rptr. 2d 875 , the individual purchaser of an ice cream manufacturing plant brought an action for breach of contract against the seller. When the parties were negotiating for the sale, plaintiff purchaser made it clear that plaintiff's agreement to purchase the plant was contingent on defendant seller's agreement to purchase the ice cream plaintiff manufactured there. This ice cream purchase arrangement, known as "co-packing," was critical to the deal. Defendant sent plaintiff a letter setting forth the terms for the sale of the plant, in which it stated it would agree, subject to a separate co-packing agreement and negotiated pricing, to provide plaintiff with a three-year co-packing agreement. Plaintiff accepted the terms of the letter by signing the statement and returning it along with a $3,000 non-refundable deposit check. The parties then continued negotiating over the terms of the co-packing agreement. The issues to be settled included the price defendant would pay for the ice cream, the flavors that plaintiff would produce, and who would bear loss from spoilage. Defendant thereafter wrote to plaintiff breaking off negotiations over the co-packing arrangement, and returned the deposit. Plaintiff brought an action for breach of contract, claiming he suffered expectation damages in the form of lost profits. His discovery responses did not provide or allege that he could provide evidence of damages he suffered as a result of his reliance on defendant's promise to negotiate a co-packing agreement.

The trial court granted defendant's motion for summary judgment, concluding that the letter failed as a contract because the essential terms of the co-packing deal were never agreed upon and there was no reasonable basis upon which to determine them. The court of appeal affirmed on a different ground. The court first noted that plaintiff, rather than insisting that the parties had formed a co-packing contract which defendant had breached, claimed that the letter between the parties constituted a contract to negotiate the remaining terms of the co-packing agreement. Plaintiff claimed that defendant breached this contract by refusingwithout excuse to continue negotiations, or alternatively, by failing to negotiate in good faith. Although noting that no reported California case has held that breach of a contract to negotiate an agreement gives rise to a cause of action for damages, the court held that a contract to negotiate an agreement is distinguishable from a so-called "agreement to agree," and can be formed and breached just like any other contract. The court first stated that it found no reason why in principle the parties could not enter into a valid, enforceable contract to negotiate the terms of a co-packing agreement. The contract to negotiate the terms of a second agreement was neither illegal or immoral pursuant to Civ. Code § 1667. The court further found that a contract to negotiate the terms of an agreement differs from a mere agreement to agree because failure to agree is not itself a breach of a contract to negotiate. A party will be liable only if a failure to reach ultimate agreement resulted from a breach of that party's obligation to negotiate or to negotiate in good faith (96 Cal. App. 4th 1251, 1256-1257) .

The court ultimately held, however, that the appropriate remedy for breach of a contract to negotiate is damages caused by the injured party's reliance on the agreement to negotiate, as opposed to damages for the injured party's lost profits under the prospective contact. Reliance damages include plaintiff's out-of pocket costs in conducting the negotiations, and any lost opportunity costs (96 Cal. App. 4th 1251, 1260-1263) .

A defendant is entitled to summary judgment if it shows that one or more elements of the cause of action cannot be established by the plaintiff (Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(o)(2)). A defendant may make this showing through argument as well as through the plaintiff's discovery responses if they demonstrate that plaintiff does not possess and cannot obtain needed evidence to establish the cause of action. In Copeland, defendant showed through plaintiff's complaint and discovery responses that plaintiff could not establish reliance damages. In the complaint, plaintiff disavowed reliance damages, e.g., time spent, expenses incurred, and opportunities missed while negotiating with defendant. The court therefore concluded that the allegations in plaintiffs' complaint, together with his discovery responses, constituted a sufficient showing that plaintiff did not possess, and could not reasonably obtain, needed evidence to establish reliance damages, and thus defendant was entitled to summary judgment (96 Cal. App. 4th 1251, 1263-1264) .

[b] Damages for Lost Profits Not Recoverable

The facts and procedural context of Copeland v. Baskin Robbins U.S.A. (2002) 96 Cal. App. 4th 1251, 117 Cal. Rptr. 2d 875 , are discussed under § 65.22[3][a]. In Copeland, the court ruled that the appropriate remedy for breach of a contract to negotiate is not damages for the injured party's lost profits under the prospective contact, but rather damages caused by the injured party's reliance on the agreement to negotiate (96 Cal. App. 4th 1251, 1260-1263) . In the complaint, plaintiff had sought only damages derived from what he would have received if the underlying contract had been consummated, i.e., lost profits. Satisfactory proof of such damages was impossible because there was no way to know what the eventual terms of the co-packing agreement would have been, or even if the parties would have reached an agreement (96 Cal. App. 4th 1251, 1263-1264) .

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a demurrer to a complaint for damages for breach of contract when the defendant asserts that the complaint fails to state a cause of action and the only grounds on which the demurrer is brought is that plaintiff alleged the wrong rule by which damages should be determined.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Alleging Incorrect Rule Is Not Fatal

Warfield v. Basso (1923) 62 Cal. App. 47, 216 P. 48 , as an action for damages for breach of an agreement by defendant to sell a truck to plaintiff. Plaintiff alleged that the truck was bought for use in his business and that plaintiff was damaged in the sum of $400 by the inability to use the truck. Plaintiff further alleged that defendant had not paid the damage of $658.80 (the price plaintiff was to pay defendant for the truck) or $400 (the amount plaintiff was damaged by not being able to use the truck) or any part thereof. Plaintiff prayed for judgment in the amount of $1,058.80 (the total of the two amounts mentioned above) and costs of suit. The trial court sustained defendant's demurrer on the ground that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The court of appeal reversed noting that when the facts stated in the complaint show that plaintiff is entitled to damages of some sort, it is not a fatal error that the pleader has mistaken the rule by which such damages should be determined [citing and discussing out of state decisions]. Consequently, the court found that the complaint stated a cause of action (62 Cal. App. 47, 49) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Alleging Incorrect Rule Is Not Fatal

Daum v. Superior Court (1964) 228 Cal. App. 2d 283, 39 Cal. Rptr. 443 , involved a proceeding in mandamus to compel a court to permit petitioners to file a second amended complaint in an action on a contract. Petitioners had entered into a contract whereby they were to act as exclusive agents in the negotiation and procurement of long term leases of commercial sites in a shopping center and whereby their payment was conditioned on the accrual of the shopping center's right to payment of the first rental payment under each lease and the procurement of a construction loan and long term loan to cover on-site construction costs. Petitioners filed a complaint against the shopping center for the amount owing as a result of their negotiating long term leases and obtaining a commitment for a long term lease. The trial court sustained defendant's demurrer without leave to amend until such time as the conditions precedent in the contract had occurred and later denied petitioners' motion to vacate this order and to file a second amended complaint based on anticipatory breach. Reversing the trial court, the court of appeal noted that courts should be liberal in allowing amendments to a complaint. Although the right to amend should be denied if a change is made in the liability sought to be enforced against defendant, or if it appears to a certainty that no basic right of action can possibly exist or no relief can possibly be granted, where the facts stated in the complaint show that plaintiff is entitled to damages of some sort, it is not a fatal error that the pleader has mistaken the rule by which those damages should be determined and an amendment should be allowed (dicta). The court concluded that petitioners should have been allowed to amend their complaint since they were not attempting to introduce an entirely new cause of action but were merely proposing a change in the theory of their action.

These points and authorities may be used in opposition to a general demurrer to a complaint for damages for breach of contract when the defendant asserted that the damages claimed by plaintiff were not in the contemplation of the parties at the time of contracting, but it was reasonably certain that plaintiff would have received the benefits of the contract if defendant had not breached it. As noted in § 65.20, whether or not the parties contemplated certain damages at the time of contracting is not ordinarily an issue that can be resolved on demurrer [Weaver v. Bank of America (1963) 59 Cal. 2d 428, 434, 30 Cal. Rptr. 4, 380 P.2d 644] .

This form may also be used in opposition to a demurrer supported by the points and authorities of § 65.20, which states that plaintiff's complaint fails to state a cause of action since the conclusion that plaintiff was injured does not follow from the pleading.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Benefits Reasonably Certain to Have Occurred

Williams v. Krumsiek (1952) 109 Cal. App. 2d 456, 241 P.2d 40 , was an action for damages arising out of defendant's breach of a property exchange agreement resulting in plaintiffs' loss of a broker's commission. Defendant entered into an agreement arranged by plaintiffs with two other parties for the exchange of real properties. The other parties to the agreement were to pay their share of plaintiffs' commission from the first crops grown on the property they were to receive from defendant but defendant refused to perform the agreement causing plaintiffs to lose this commission since the other parties never received possession of the property on which they were to produce crops. The trial court sustained defendant's general demurrer. The court of appeal reversed, holding that defendant's contention that plaintiffs did not state a cause of action because the damages set forth were not within the contemplation of the parties at the time of contracting was without merit. The court noted that although damages which are purely speculative, fanciful, and imaginative cannot be recovered, if the benefits claimed were reasonably certain to have been realized but for the wrongful act of the opposing party, recovery should be allowed. Since defendant was a party to the agreement by which plaintiffs were to receive a commission from the other parties to the agreement, defendant must have known that if she was not willing to complete the contract but the other parties were, she should be obligated to pay plaintiffs all of the commission provided for in the exchange agreement and consequently, it was contemplated that she would pay the other parties' commission in the event that she breached the contract (109 Cal. App. 2d 456, 459) .

[a] Benefits Reasonably Certain to Have Occurred

In Resort Video, Ltd v. Laser Video, Inc. (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 1679, 42 Cal. Rptr. 136 , the court of appeal affirmed the trial court's order granting a new trial on the ground of excessive damages. The court held that the evidence failed to provide the degree of reasonable certainty necessary to support the $975,000 damage award to appellant, a resort promotional video company, for anticipated lost profits resulting from the breach of contract for the purchase and sale of replicated video discs. Although unestablished businesses have been permitted to claim lost profit damages when the owners have experience in the business they are seeking to establish and when the business is in an established market, the owner in this case was unable to produce any evidence of either an operating history of the venture or of operating histories of comparable businesses. Therefore, it was speculative whether appellant, who lacked prior experience inthe resort promotional business, would have generated sufficient business to lay claim to any lost profits (35 Cal. App. 4th 1679, 1698-1700) . Further, the evidence was insufficient to prove the value of the company, which closed as a result of the breach of contract for purchase and sale of the replicated discs, when the only evidence proffered by appellant was of a third party's investment in the business and of expenses incurred in operating the business (35 Cal. App. 4th 1679, 1700-1701) .

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion to strike the part of a complaint for damages for breach of contract seeking punitive damages. There apparently is no California case directly authorizing the use of a motion to strike improper damage allegations. However, some California attorneys have used motions to strike under this circumstance. The ground for the motion is apparently surplusage [see Barr v. Southern Cal. Edison Co. (1914) 24 Cal. App. 22, 25, 140 P. 47] .

If the claim for punitive damages is set up as a separate count, it appears that the count could be attacked by a general demurrer or a motion for judgment on the pleadings [see Tarasoff v. Regents of University of California (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 425, 433, 131 Cal. Rptr. 14, 551 P.2d 334 (general demurrer sustained as to count seeking punitive damages); Stencel Aero Eng'r Corp. v. Superior Court (1976) 56 Cal. App. 3d 978, 984, 987, 128 Cal. Rptr. 691 (motion for judgment on pleadings made against count claiming punitive damages)]. Since a motion to strike may not be used when a demurrer lies [see Warren v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. (1971) 19 Cal. App. 3d 24, 41, 96 Cal. Rptr. 317 (ground for demurrer as not proper ground for motion to strike)] and research has not revealed a case specifically authorizing a motion to strike improper damage claims, counsel may want to alternatively bring a motion to strike and a general demurrer.

It appears that a motion for summary judgment would be improper when punitive damages have been incorrectly requested since the issue is not whether a triable issue of fact exists. Instead the defect appears on the face of the complaint, and a motion for judgment on the pleadings would be a properprocedure [see Mulkey v. Reitman (1966) 64 Cal. 2d 529, 531-532, 50 Cal. Rptr. 881, 413 P.2d 825] . However, under some circumstances, such as when the breach of contract also involves a tort, a triable issue of fact might exist and counsel might want to bring a motion for summary judgment. In such a case, counsel may obtain a protective order protecting defendant from questions concerning his or her financial affairs and net worth [see Cobb v. Superior Court (1979) 99 Cal. App. 3d 543, 548-551, 160 Cal. Rptr. 561] .

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, these points and authorities may be used to support a motion for new trial on the ground of excessive damages or a motion to vacate judgment and enter a new judgment.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Punitive Damages Not Recoverable

Contractor's Safety Ass'n v. California Compensation Ins. Co. (1957) 48 Cal. 2d 71, 307 P.2d 626 , was an action to recover dividends on an agreement made in conjunction with the purchase of a policy of worker's compensation insurance by which defendant was to pay plaintiff a dividend if the latter's loss-premium ratio was at or below a certain percentage, provided that a surplus was available to pay the dividend. Plaintiff alleged that defendant failed to pay dividend although all the requirements were satisfied. Additionally, plaintiff prayed for punitive damages alleging that defendant acted maliciously and oppressively when, without notifying plaintiff, it resolved that no dividend would be paid except by resolution of defendant's board of directors and reduced plaintiff's dividend because plaintiff ceased to do business with defendant approximately nine months after plaintiff accepted defendant's offer concerning the dividend. The trial court sustained defendant's oral demurrer to the introduction of evidence by plaintiff, apparently on the ground the dividend agreement was illegal. In affirming, the Supreme Court noted that the count of the complaint in which plaintiff prayed for punitive damages was based on breach of contract and punitive damages may not be awarded in an action based on breach of contract even though the defendant's breach was willful or fraudulent [relying on prior case law] (48 Cal. 2d 71, 77) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Punitive Damages Not Recoverable

Miller v. Fairchild Industries (9th Cir. 1989) 885 F.2d 498 , was a wrongful termination action in which the court of appeals, applying California law, upheld the rule that under Civ. Code § 3294(a) punitive damages are not recoverable for breach of contract (885 F.2d 498, 510) .

In Myers Bldg. Industries, Ltd. v. Interface Technology, Inc. (1993) 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 242 , the jury returned a special verdict in favor of cross plaintiff finding that cross defendant had breached its contract with cross plaintiff. The jury found that cross defendant had acted with "oppression, fraud, or malice" toward cross plaintiff, but it did not make any factual findings for a fraud or other tort cause of action. A trial on punitive damages followed. The jury returned a verdict awarding punitive damages. On the cross defendant's appeal, the court of appeal modified the judgment to strike the punitive damage award. It held that the special verdict rendered by the jury could not support a punitive damage award in the absence of a tort finding. The court stated that an award of punitive damages is not supported by a verdict based merely on breach of contract, even where the defendant's conduct in breaching the contract was willful, fraudulent, or malicious (13 Cal. App. 3d 949, 959-961) .

Dryden v. Tri-Valley Growers (1977) 65 Cal. App. 3d 990, 135 Cal. Rptr. 720 , was an action based in part on the tort theory of intentional interference with contractual relationships. Following the execution of a contract providing for the sale of waste products from olive oil production, a legal dispute arose between the contractual parties. The parties owning the olive oil processing plant advised plaintiffs that they intended to rescind and cancel the contracts. Plaintiffs brought suit against defendant, who had subsequently bought the plant from the original party to the contract, alleging that by buying the plant, defendant interfered with and induced the breach of the contract. The trial court sustained defendant's general demurrer. Affirming, the court of appeal noted that the record showed that defendant was actually a party to the contract since the agreement provided that the provisions were binding on the seller and its successors. The court held that if an action is brought for interference with a contractual relationship by one party to a contract against another who is also a party to that same contract, the plaintiff's complaint is, in essence, based on breach of contract and to allow plaintiff to sue under the tort theory of wrongful interference with contractual rights would be superfluous and would also enable plaintiff to recover tort damages to which plaintiff is not entitled. The court noted that punitive damages may not be awarded in an action based on breach of contract even though defendant's breach was willful or fraudulent and consequently, plaintiff should not be allowed to recover punitive damages.

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion to strike the part of a complaint for damages for breach of contract seeking damages for physical injury and/or mental suffering, Paragraph B states the general rule. Paragraphs C and D are for use in particular situations, namely rescission based on fraud in sales or exchanges of real property and breach of contracts for medical services. For further discussion of the use of a motion to strike when plaintiff seeks damages which he or she may not obtain in a breach of contract action, see § 65.60[2].

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Damages for Physical Injury and Mental Distress Not Recoverable in Breach of Contract Action

In Erlich v. Menezes (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 543, 87 Cal. Rptr. 2d 886, 981 P.2d978, plaintiff homeowners sued the contractor who built their new house for breach of contract, fraud, negligent misrepresentation, and negligent construction, claiming emotional distress resulting from the condition of the house and defendant's unsuccessful repair attempts. The jury found that defendant breached the construction contract by negligently constructing the house, but was not guilty of fraud or negligent misrepresentation. The jury awarded the homeowners the full cost necessary to repair their home as well as damages for emotional distress caused by the contractor's negligent performance. The court of appeal affirmed. The supreme court reversed and remanded, holding that since the contractor's negligence directly caused only economic injury and property damage, and breached no duty independent of the contract, the homeowners could not recover damages for emotional distress based upon breach of a contract to build a house (21 Cal. 4th 543, 548) .

The court initially stated the rule set forth in Civ. Code § 3300 that in an action for breach of contract, the measure of damages is the amount that will compensate the aggrieved party for all the detriment proximately caused thereby, or which, in the ordinary course of things, would be likely to result therefrom. Contract damages generally are limited to those within the contemplation of the parties when the contract was entered into or at least reasonably foreseeable by them at that time; consequential damages beyond the expectation of the parties are not recoverable. The court articulated the issue in this case as whether a negligent breach of a contract will support an award of damages for emotional distress--either as tort damages for negligence, or as consequential or special contract damages (21 Cal. 4th 543, 550-551) .

The court first noted that the court of appeal permitted plaintiffs to recover both full repair costs as normal contract damages and emotional distress damages as a tort remedy. However, conduct amounting to a breach of contract becomes tortious only when it also violates a duty independent of the contract arising from principles of tort law. For example, tort damages have been permitted in contract cases in which the duty that gives rise to tort liability is either completely independent of the contract or arises from conduct which is both intentional and intended to harm. Under the facts of this case, the court concluded that tort damages were not available (21 Cal. 4th 543, 552-558) . Next, the court considered whether damages for emotional distress should be included as consequential or special damages in a contract claim. It noted that damages for mental suffering and emotional distress are generally not recoverable in an action for breach of an ordinary commercial contract in California. Courts have carved out a narrow range of exceptions to the general rule of exclusion only when emotional tranquillity is the contract's essence. The court held that the balance of policy considerations--the potential for significant increases in liability in amounts disproportionate to culpability, the court's inability to formulate appropriate limits on the availability of claims, and the magnitude of the impact on stability and predictability in commercial affairs--counseled against expanding contract damages to include mental distress claims in negligent construction cases (21 Cal. 4th 543, 558-561) .

Westwater v. Grace Church (1903) 140 Cal. 339, 73 P. 1055 , was an action by plaintiff for damages for humiliation, mental agony, and physical sickness suffered as a result of being intentionally dismissed without notice from position as vocalist in defendant's choir. The trial court sustained defendant's demurrer (unclear as to ground). Affirming, the Supreme Court held that in an action on a breach of contract, defendant cannot be held liable for damages to plaintiff's health nor for injury to her feelings or reputation since those damages are not proximately caused by defendant's breach in wrongfully discharging plaintiff nor would they be likely to result in the ordinary course of things as required by Civ. Code § 3300 (providing for damages in breach of contract actions) (140 Cal. 339, 341-342) .

Sawyer v. Bank of America (1978) 83 Cal. App. 3d 135, 145 Cal. Rptr. 623 , was an action against a bank to recover damages for fire damage to plaintiff's truck on which insurance coverage had lapsed because of defendant's breach of an oral agreement to obtain and maintain insurance. Plaintiff introduced evidence that the financial strain imposed on him by being required to pay for repairs to his truck caused him to be nervous, upset, and to lose sleep. The jury awarded plaintiff general damages in addition to actual damages and punitive damages. Reversing as to the general damages, the court of appeal found that there was no possible support in the evidence for this award except on the basis of compensation for insomnia and emotional distress. The court held that those damages may not be awarded in an action for breach of contract. It rejected plaintiff's claim that the award was based on a tort cause of action by finding that it is not a tort for a contractual obligor to dispute his liability under a contract and by concluding that the case did not involve the tort of breaching an implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing since such a tort consists of bad faith action, extraneous to the contract, with the intention to frustrate the obligee's enjoyment of contract rights (83 Cal. App. 3d 135, 139) .

[b] Damages for Mental Distress Not Recoverable in Action for Fraud and Rescission

In re Marriage of McNeill (1984) 160 Cal. App. 3d 548, 206 Cal. Rptr. 641 , was a dissolution action consolidated with husband's action for fraud, for cancellation of a marital settlement agreement and a deed, and to quiet title. The trial court awarded husband rescission of the deed and damages based on fraud, including $30,000 for emotional distress. Citing O'Neil v. Spillane (1975) 45 Cal. App. 3d 147, 159, 119 Cal. Rptr. 254 , the court of appeal reversed the award, saying regardless of whether they were based on Civ. Code § 1692 (rescission) or Civ. Code § 3343 (damages for fraud in the purchase, sale, or exchange ofproperty) the award of damages for emotional distress as an element of consequential damages could not be upheld (160 Cal. App. 3d 548, 559) .

Counsel should note that In re Marriage of McNeill (1984) 160 Cal. App. 3d 548, 206 Cal. Rptr. 641 , was disapproved on another ground in In re Marriage of Fabian (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 440, 448-451, 224 Cal. Rptr. 333, 715 P.2d 253 .

[c] Damages for Mental Distress Barred by Medical Standard of Care

Defendant in Selden v. Dinner (1993) 17 Cal. App. 4th 166, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 153 , promised to perform a preventative mastectomy and reconstructive surgery on plaintiff's right breast before plaintiff's medical coverage expired. Plaintiff's mother and grandmother had died of breast cancer. Plaintiff had previously undergone a mastectomy when cancer was found in her left breast. On the day that surgery was scheduled, in a hospital where defendant's application for surgical privileges had not yet been approved, there was disagreement over whether the hospital would allow defendant to proceed. It was finally agreed that defendant could perform the surgery with another surgeon to monitor the operation, but by the time that agreement was reached, defendant felt too upset to properly perform the surgery, and postponed it for that reason. Plaintiff's medical coverage expired without defendant's having performed the surgery. This caused plaintiff to experience feelings of helplessness, fear, and depression. Plaintiff shook constantly, could not stop crying, and began taking tranquilizers and later antidepressants. Beginning seven months later and over a ten-month period, plaintiff had another physician perform five surgical procedures to accomplish similar results, except that reconstruction was by way of implant instead of the abdominal island flap procedure, for which defendant was noted and that defendant had agreed to perform. Plaintiff sued defendant for breach of contract, detrimental reliance, intentional and negligent infliction of emotional distress, and medical nonfeasance.

At trial, plaintiff was not prepared to present any expert medical testimony, so the trial court did not allow the professional negligence claim to be tried. The trial court also ruled that plaintiff could not recover damages for emotional distress as an element of the breach of contract claim and granted nonsuit with respect to the claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress. Plaintiff was awarded $400,000 in damages. The verdict form used did not separate damages, but evidence of economic damages supported at most $30,000, so the remainder of $370,000 must have been awarded for emotional distress. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed as to the emotional distress damages, and remanded for determination of plaintiff's contract damages. Plaintiff argued that since it was clear that she desired the surgery for emotional reasons, defendant should have expected that failure to perform the surgery would have a devastating emotional impact on her, and that this brought her within the exception allowing recovery of damages for emotional distress caused by breach of a contract that, by its nature, puts defendant on notice that breach will cause emotional suffering (17 Cal. App. 4th 166, 172-173) . The court considered defendant's obligation to meet the standard of professional care critical, and was unwilling to create a substantial incentive that conflicts with that obligation. If the standard of care, which can only be established by way of expert medical testimony, required defendant to cancel the surgery because of defendant's emotional state, imposing liability for emotional distress damages on a breach of contract theory would create a powerful financial incentive for the physician to act below the standard of care. In refusing to create such an incentive, the court of appeal noted that the California Supreme Court has consistently found that when there is a conflict, the public concerns articulated in our system of tort law must prevail over private interests embodied in contracts (17 Cal. App. 4th 166, 173) . The court also noted that none of the cases that permitted recovery of emotional distress damages involved a defendant who was subject to potentially conflicting tort and contract obligations (17 Cal. App. 4th 166, 173-174) .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Tort Damages for Breach of Implied Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing Not Recoverable Outside Insurance Context

Freeman & Mills v. Belcher Oil Co. (1995) 11 Cal. 4th 85, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 420, 900 P.2d 669 , involved an action seeking tort and contract damages arising from defendant's failure to pay for plaintiff's accounting services rendered to a law firm acting on plaintiff's behalf. Defendant oil company had retained a law firm with the understanding that defendant was to pay for costs the law firm incurred on defendant's behalf, including accountants' fees. Defendant eventually terminated the law firm, and plaintiffs billed the firm for its services and costs. When the law firm did not pay the bill, plaintiff sought payment from defendant. Defendant did not pay, and plaintiff sued defendant, alleging breach of contract, bad faith denial of contract, and quantum meruit. The jury entered a special verdict in favor of plaintiff, finding that defendant had breached the contract and acted in bad faith, and awarded compensatory and punitive damages. The trial court granted plaintiff's post-trial motions to correct the jury's verdict and to reflect different amounts for compensatory and punitive damages, as well as to award attorney's fees as sanctions and prejudgment interest. Defendant appealed from the corrected judgment, and plaintiff appealed from a mid-trial order denying its motion to amend the complaint to add a cause of action for fraud. However, the court of appeal, finding no "special relationship" sufficient to justify a tort recovery under Seaman's Direct Buying Service, Inc. v. Standard Oil Co. (1984) 36 Cal. 3d 752, 206 Cal. Rptr. 354, 686 P.2d 1158 , reversed the judgment and remanded the case to the trial court for a retrial limited to the issue of damages under the breach of contract cause of action.

The California Supreme Court affirmed the judgment of the court of appeal (11 Cal. 4th 85, 103) . The Supreme Court explained that developments occurring subsequent to the Seaman's decision, in which the Court had recognized the tort of "bad faith denial of contract," had convinced the Court that Seaman's was incorrectly decided and should be overruled (11 Cal. 4th 85, 93) . These developments included (1) subsequent California Supreme Court decisions indicating a continuing reluctance, originally reflected in Seaman's itself, to authorize tort recovery for noninsurance contract breaches [see Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 683-693, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373 , discussed below Hunter v. Up-Right, Inc. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 1174, 1180-1182 , discussed in Ch. 105, Fraud and Deceit ; Applied Equipment Corp. v. Litton Saudi Arabia Ltd. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 503, 515-516, 28 Cal. Rptr. 2d 475, 869 P.2d 454 , discussed in Ch. 46, Conspiracy] (11 Cal. 4th 85, 93-95) ; (2) subsequent decisions of the courts of appeal, reaching varying, and often inconsistent, conclusions in response to Seaman's [see, e.g., Quigley v. Pet, Inc. (1984) 162 Cal. App. 3d 877, 208 Cal. Rptr. 394 ; Okun v. Morton (1988) 203 Cal. App. 3d 805, 250 Cal. Rptr. 220] (11 Cal. 4th 85, 95-97) ; (3) compelling policy reasons recognized by many of the pertinent court of appeal decisions, focusing on the different objectives underlying the remedies for tort and contract breach (11 Cal. 4th 85, 97-98) ; (4) criticism by courts in other jurisdictions, observing generally that Seaman's ambiguous holding had caused widespread confusion among lower courts, generated substantial litigation costs, and interfered with contractual relationships (11 Cal. 4th 85, 98-100) ; and (5) scholarly commentary critical of the Seaman's holding and its underlying analysis, observing generally that Seaman's decision has generated widespread confusion among judges and juries, excessive damage awards, and overcrowded court dockets (11 Cal. 4th 85, 100-102) .

For the reasons noted above, the Court concluded that the former rule enunciated in Seaman's --that a party to a contract may incur tort remedies when, in addition to breaching the contract, it seeks to shield itself from liability by denying, in bad faith and without probable cause, that the contract exists--is no longer viable (11 Cal. 4th 85, 102-103) . The applicable general rule now precludes tort recovery for noninsurance contract breach, at least in the absence of violation of an independent duty arising from principles of tort law, other than the bad faith denial of the existence of, or liability under, the breached contract (11 Cal. 4th 85, 102) .

The Court's opinion contained no statement regarding the effect of its decision on pending actions. Thus, it appears that the decision is fully retroactive and bars and pending claims based on the abrogated cause of action [see Moradi-Shalal v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Companies (1988) 46 Cal. 3d 287, 305, 240 Cal. Rptr. 116, 758 P.2d 58 ; Peterson v. Superior Court (1982) 31 Cal. 3d 147, 151-152, 181 Cal. Rptr. 784, 642 P.2d 1305] .

In Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373 , the California Supreme Court affirmed the dismissal of an at-will employee's cause of action for tortious breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing. The Court held that the employer-employee relationship was not a special relationship, that is, was not sufficiently similar to that of insurer and insured to warrant judicial extension of the proposed additional tort remedies in view of countervailing concerns about economic policy and stability, the traditional separation of contract and tort law, and the numerous protections against improper terminations already afforded to employees (47 Cal. 3d 654, 693) . The Court criticized lower court opinions that extended tort remedies to wrongful termination actions without comprehensive consideration of the implications of doing so (47 Cal. 3d 654, 688) . For additional discussion of Foley, see Ch. 100, Employer and Employee: Wrongful Termination and Discipline . For discussion and forms relating to tort liability in an insurance contract setting, see Ch. 120, Insurance .

The Court did not address in Foley whether its holding was retroactive or prospective, but said it would deal with that matter in later cases when it had the benefit of briefs and argument on the subject (47 Cal. 3d 654, 700 n.42). In Newman v. Emerson Radio Corp. (1989) 48 Cal. 3d 973, 993, 258 Cal. Rptr. 592, 772 P.2d 1059 , the Court determined that Foley applied retroactively to all cases not yet final on January 30, 1989.

[a] Tort Damages for Breach of Implied Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing Not Recoverable Outside Insurance Context

In Cates Construction, Inc. v. Talbot Partners (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 28, 86 Cal. Rptr. 2d 855, 980 P.2d 407 , the contractor on a condominium project and its performance surety sued the developer and the developer's lender for breach of construction contract and to foreclose on a mechanic's lien. The developer and lender asserted cross-complaints, including one by the developer as obligee against the surety for bad faith. The trial court ruled against the contractor and surety on all of their claims. It also awarded compensatory damages to the developer and lender on their contract claims, and awarded punitive damages to the developer against the surety on the bad faith claim. The surety and contractor appealed. The court of appeal affirmed in part, modified in part, and remanded.

The Supreme Court granted review and held that, as a matter of law, a developer may not recover in tort for a surety's breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing implied in a performance bond. It thus reversed the judgment of the court of appeal to the extent it affirmed the underlying award of tort damages for breach of the implied covenant and permitted an award of punitive damages.

The court initially noted that because the covenant of good faith and fair dealing essentially is a contract term that aims to effectuate the contractual intentions of the parties, compensation for its breach has almost always been limited to contract rather than tort remedies. There is only one exception to that general rule: tort remedies are available for a breach of the covenant in cases involving insurance policies, for a variety of policy reasons. Significantly, the Supreme Court has never recognized the availability of tort remedies for breaches occurring in the context of a construction performance bond or any other so-called "contract of suretyship" (21 Cal. 4th 28, 43-44) . The question in this case waswhether the exceptional approach thus far reserved for breaches in the insurance policy setting should be extended to breaches in the context of a surety bond given to assure performance on a construction contract. The developer argued in essence that a performance bond is a form of insurance and that breaches in the performance bond context justify the same extraordinary remedies that are available in insurance policy cases. The surety argued that performance bonds are fundamentally different from insurance policies and fail to warrant similar treatment. The court first determined that the mere inclusion of surety arrangements in the Insurance Code was not determinative of the issue (21 Cal. 4th 28, 47-52) . It next found that tort recovery is considered appropriate in the insurance policy setting because those contracts are characterized by elements of adhesion and unequal bargaining power, public interest, and fiduciary responsibility, but that construction performance bonds are not marked by such elements (21 Cal. 4th 28, 52-59) . The court then reviewed authorities from other states but was unpersuaded by the decisions that allow tort recovery, as they failed to give appropriate consideration to the material differences between insurance policies and performance bonds and the differing relations between the parties thereto (21 Cal. 4th 28, 59-60) . Finally, considering that contract law exists to enforce legally binding agreements between parties and tort law is designed to vindicate social policy, the court held that tort recovery was not appropriate for a breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing in the context of a construction performance bond. Recovery for a surety's breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing is properly limited to those damages within the contemplation of the parties at the time the performance bond is given or at least reasonably foreseeable by them at that time (21 Cal. 4th 28, 60-61) .

In Norager v. Nakamura (1996) 42 Cal. App. 4th 1817, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 481 , plaintiff moved on the last day of trial to amend his complaint to allege bad faith denial of the existence of a contract, relying on Seaman's Direct Buying Service, Inc. v. Standard Oil Co. (1984) 36 Cal. 3d 752, 206 Cal. Rptr. 354, 686 P.2d 1158 . The court granted the motion and subsequently found in favor of plaintiff. The defendant appealed, contending that the trial court erred in allowing the amendment to the complaint. While the appeal was pending, the Supreme Court issued the decision in Freeman & Mills, Inc. v. Belcher Oil Co. (1995) 11 Cal. 4th 85, 44 Cal. Rptr. 420, 900 P.2d 669 , overruling Seaman's. Finding neither any unfairness nor any public policy reason why Freeman should not be given retroactive effect, the court concluded that it should disapprove that portion of the judgment that was based on the bad faith denial of contract cause of action (42 Cal. App. 4th 1817, 1821) .

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion to strike the part of a complaint seeking tort damages for breach of a commercial contract that is allegedly in violation of public policy. For further discussion of the use of a motion to strike when plaintiff seeks damages that he or she may not obtain in a breach of contract action, see § 65.50[3][a].

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

With appropriate modifications, this memorandum may be used to support a motion for new trial on the ground of excessive damages or a motion to vacatejudgment or enter a new judgment.

[b] Related Form

This form asserts the specific argument that breach of a contract in violation of public policy will not support a tort recovery outside the employment context. In Freeman & Mills v. Belcher Oil (1995) 11 Cal. 4th 85, 102-103, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 420, 900 P.2d 669 , the California Supreme Court held that breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing outside the insurance context will not give give rise to a tort cause of action, absent an independent duty arising from principles of tort law, and the Court further held that there was no tort liability for bad faith denial of the existence of, or liability under, the breached contract. While the Harris case cited as authority in this comment [see Harris v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 70, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 649] is consistent with Freeman & Mills in limiting tort recovery for breach of contract, and therefore remains good law, counsel should be aware that the holdings in Freeman & Mills and Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 669, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373 , may also be relevant in the type of fact context in which this form might be used. For points and authorities based on Freeman & Mills and Foley, and discussion of these decisions, see § 65.62.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Tort Damages for Breach of Commercial Contract in Violation of Public Policy Not Recoverable

Harris v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 70, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 649 , involved a dispute between a minimart franchisor and a franchise operator. Plaintiff, the franchise operator, claimed that defendant franchisor mistreated him by failing to repair and refurbish his unit as promised, in retaliation for his failure to comply with defendant's pricing dictates and his report to authorities of an underground gasoline leak. Plaintiff filed a complaint against defendant setting forth, inter alia, a cause of action for tortious breach of written contract in violation of public policy. The jury awarded compensatory and punitive damages on this cause of action. Defendant moved for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, and the trial court granted the motion. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal concluded that the trial court properly granted judgment notwithstanding the verdict on the tortious breach of contract claim (14 Cal. App. 4th 70, 73, 82) . The court stated that case law does not support the broad proposition that breach of a commercial contract in violation of public policy entitles the injured party to tort damages (14 Cal. App. 4th 70, 77) . Under Tameny v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 167, 164 Cal. Rptr. 839, 610 P.2d 1330 , and later cases, there is a "Tameny" cause of action, sounding in tort, for breach of an employment contract if the basis of the employee's discharge contravenes a fundamental public policy grounded in constitutional or statutory provisions (14 Cal. App. 4th 70, 74-75) . A Tameny cause of action, however, has not been recognized outside of the employment context (14 Cal. App. 4th 70, 75) . Under California law, tort liability has been imposed for essentially contract-based claims only if (1) the defendant's conduct constitutes a tort as well as a breach of the contract, (2) the parties to the contract have a "special relationship" characterized by elements of public interest, adhesion, and fiduciary responsibility, or (3) the breach is accompanied by bad-faith denial of the contract. (Note that Freeman & Mills v.

Belcher Oil (1995) 11 Cal. 4th 85, 102-103, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 420, 900 P.2d 669 , decided after Harris and discussed in § 65.62, has since abrogated this third cause of action.) The court noted that plaintiff's claim for breach of commercial contract in violation of public policy fit within none of these situations (14 Cal. App. 4th 70, 80) .

The court considered the possibility of extending the breadth of the Tameny principle, but declined to do so. It remarked that compelling public policy reasons would militate against recognition of a new tort for breach of contract in violation of public policy (14 Cal. App. 4th 70, 82) . A broad extension of tort remedies to commercial contracts would create the potential of turning many breach of contract disputes into punitive damages claims, thus undermining commercial stability (14 Cal. App. 4th 70, 81) . Additionally, the California Supreme Court has cautioned against judicial activism when an extension of tort remedies is sought for a duty whose breach previously has been compensable by contract remedies (14 Cal. App. 4th 70, 81-82) . Lastly, when significant policy judgments affecting commercial relationships are implicated, the determination is best suited for legislative decision making; legislatures, in making such policy decisions, have the ability to gather empirical evidence, solicit the advice of experts, and hold hearings at which all interested parties may present evidence and express their views (14 Cal. App. 4th 70, 82) .

NOTE:

For additional discussion of limitations on the cause of action permitted in Tameny, in which an employee was terminated for refusal to violate a penal statute, see Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 669, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373 , noted in § 65.62 and discussed in greater detail in Ch. 100, Employer and Employee: Wrongful Termination and Discipline.

ALTHOUGH PUNITIVE DAMAGES ARE NOT RECOVERABLE IN AN ACTION FOR BREACH OF CONTRACT, THEY MAY BE AWARDED WHEN A DEFENDANT FRAUDULENTLY INDUCES PLAINTIFF TO ENTER INTO A CONTRACT [EVEN WHEN RESCISSION IS AWARDED].

A. Punitive Damages Recoverable Although Tort Involved Breach of Contract. If an action is in tort, punitive damages may be recovered on a proper showing of malice, fraud, or oppression, even though the tort incidentally involved a breach of contract (Miller v. National American Life Ins. Co. (1976) 54 Cal. App. 3d 331, 336, 126 Cal. Rptr. 731).

B. Punitive Damages as Recoverable by Party Fraudulently Induced to Enter Contract. Although punitive damages are not recoverable in an action for breach of contract no matter how willful, malicious, or fraudulent the breach, punitive damages may be awarded when a defendant fraudulently induces the plaintiff to enter into a contract (Walker v. Signal Co., Inc. (1978) 84 Cal. App. 3d 982, 996, 149 Cal. Rptr. 119 ; Glendale Fed. Sav. & Loan Assoc v. Marina View Heights Dev. Co. (1977) 66 Cal. App. 3d 101, 135 Cal. Rptr. 802).

[Optional] C. Punitive Damages Recoverable When Rescission Is Awarded. Punitive damages may be awarded along with rescission to a party fraudulently induced to enter a contract (*In re Marriage of McNeill (1984) 160 Cal. These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion to strike part of a complaint for damages for breach of contract and fraud or fraud and rescission when defendant asserts that punitive damages may not be awarded because the action is based on breach of contract, but plaintiff alleged that he or she was fraudulently induced to enter the contract.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

In an appropriate case these points and authorities may be used in opposition to a motion to strike part of a complaint supported by the points and authorities set out in § 65.60.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Punitive Damages Recoverable Although Tort Involved Breach of Contract

In Miller v. National American Life Ins. Co. (1976) 54 Cal. App. 3d 331, 126 Cal. Rptr. 731 , plaintiff brought suit against defendant for breach of a contract of disability insurance and fraud in inducing plaintiff to enter the contract. After a jury trial, judgment was entered for plaintiff for both general and punitive damages. The court denied defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict but conditionally granted its motion for new trial on the issue of punitive damages unless plaintiff would remit part of the punitive damage award. Plaintiff filed the remittitur. However, defendant appealed from the judgment and the orderdenying the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict limiting its appeal to the issues of fraud and punitive damages. Affirming, the court of appeal stated that punitive damages are not available in an action based solely on breach of a contractual obligation even where the breach is intentional, willful, or in bad faith. However, if the action is also in tort, exemplary damages may be recovered on a proper showing of malice, fraud, or oppression even though the tort incidentally involves a breach of contract. The court held that plaintiff's claim of fraud, although incident to the contract, was in tort, and supported a punitive damage award on proper proof. The court noted that the trial court had correctly instructed that, in order to award punitive damages, the jury first would have to find for plaintiff on the fraud cause of action and that a finding for plaintiff on the breach of contract cause alone would only support compensatory damages.

[b] Punitive Damages as Recoverable by Party Fraudulently Induced to Enter Contract

Walker v. Signal Co., Inc. (1978) 84 Cal. App. 3d 982, 149 Cal. Rptr. 119 , was an action by plaintiffs against defendants for breach of a construction contract and fraud. After a jury trial, a judgment was entered for plaintiffs which included judgment against two of the defendants for punitive damages. Plaintiffs had entered into a contract with the defendants against whom the punitive damages judgment was rendered to buy a residential home and had obtained a specific date in the contract for completion of the home in order to avoid the capital gains tax from the sale of their previous residence. Plaintiffs signed a second contract approximately one month after signing the first one under which they agreed to pay a certain sum for the construction of the house previously described in the real estate purchase agreement. A month later they received a letter from the vice president of one of the defendants guaranteeing completion of the house three months after the original date stated. Later one of the defendants' superintendent of construction stated that the project would be given priority but inexplicable delays in actual construction occurred. The home was finally completed almost five months after the last day for the beneficial income tax consequence. On appeal, defendants contended that plaintiffs were not entitled to punitive damages because their action was for breach of contract and not for fraud. Affirming the judgment for punitive damages, the court of appeal stated that punitive damages are not recoverable in an action for breach of contract no matter how willful, malicious, or fraudulent the breach but they may be awarded where a defendant fraudulently induces the plaintiff to enter the contract. Since the jury and trial judge found that the conduct of defendants fraudulently induced the contractual relationship, the award of punitive damages was proper.

Glendale Fed. Sav. & Loan Assoc v. Marina View Heights Dev. Co. (1977) 66 Cal. App. 3d 101, 135 Cal. Rptr. 802 , involved a dispute between a lending institution and a corportate land developer and its principals over their respective rights and obligations under certain loan and guarantee agreements. The developers defaulted and the lending institution commenced nonjudicial foreclosure proceedings. The loan agreement provided that plaintiff would advance to the developer funds for the purpose of completing some offsite improvements on a parcel of land and that the developer would complete the improvement and development of the property within a certain number of months. Based on the agreement terms and extrinsic evidence, the trial court found that, at the time the agreement was executed, the developer and its principals intended to use certain sums for purposes other than the one provided for in the written agreement and that these parties fraudulently and in bad faith diverted a portion of plaintiff's loan proceeds earmarked for use on the property to other uses and purposes. The trial court concluded that the promise to use the loan proceeds to improve the property with no intention of doing so constituted promissory fraud and entered judgment for plaintiff against the principals for damages including an amount for exemplary damages. Affirming, the court of appeal held that the principals committed a fraud on plaintiff in inducing it to make the loan based on a false promise as to the use of the loan funds. The court noted that, although punitive damages may not ordinarily be awarded for breach of contract, whether the breach is intentional, willful, or in bad faith, those damages may be awarded where the defendant fraudulently induces the plaintiff to enter a contract. Consequently, plaintiff could recover punitive damages.

[c] Punitive Damages Recoverable When Rescission Is Awarded

In re Marriage of McNeill (1984) 160 Cal. App. 3d 548, 206 Cal. Rptr. 641 , was a dissolution action consolidated with husband's action for fraud, for cancellation of a marital settlement agreement and a deed, and to quiet title. Wife lied to husband, telling him she was an attorney, had a master's degree in accounting, and had cancer. Husband moved out of the family residence at wife's urging and because he believed she needed complete rest and quiet as she was undergoing chemotherapy. Telling husband she had 90 days to live, wife induced him to sign papers he believed were documents transferring their property to a trust. What he in fact signed were a property settlement agreement and a deed to her of his interest in the community property residence. Upon discovering the truth one year later, he brought the action to set aside the agreement and deed and for fraud. The trial court awarded husband rescission of marital settlement agreement and the deed, consequential damages based on fraud of $10,000 for loss of use of the property, and $32,000 as exemplary damages. Relying on Millar v. James (1967) 254 Cal. App. 2d 530, 62 Cal. Rptr. 335 (discussed below), the court of appeal upheld the award of punitive damages (160 Cal. App. 3d 548, 561) . Counsel should note that In re Marriage of McNeill (1984) 160 Cal. App. 3d 548, 206 Cal. Rptr. 641 , was disapproved on another ground in In re Marriage of Fabian (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 440, 448-451, 224 Cal. Rptr. 333, 715 P.2d 253 .

In Millar v. James (1967) 254 Cal. App. 2d 530, 62 Cal. Rptr. 335 , plaintiff had been tricked into signing a subordination agreement subordinating the purchase money trust deed, of which she was beneficiary, to a first trust deed securing a loan from two defendants to another defendant. The case was tried by the court sitting without a jury. She was awarded cancellation of the deed to James and quieting of her title against the trust deed on payment of certain sums, but the trial court did not award punitive damages. The court of appeal reversed and remanded to require findings on the issue of exemplary damages, saying that Civ. Code § 1692 authorized full relief in cases of rescission and that included exemplary damages when appropriate (254 Cal. App. 2d 530, 533) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Punitive Damages Recoverable When Rescission Is Awarded

In Douglas v. Ostermeier (1991) 1 Cal. App. 4th 729, 2 Cal. Rptr. 2d 594 , the court of appeal affirmed a judgment awarding plaintiff rescission of a $24,000 contract, $10,000 compensatory damages for fraud, and $187,000 in punitive damages. Plaintiffs purchased a car from defendant for $24,354. They believed the car was an 1978 450 SLC Mercedes, but in fact it was a composite of a 1978 Mercedes that had been in an accident and the frame of a 1973 Mercedes that had been gutted by fire. The primary issue on appeal was the amount of punitive damages. The court said that while rescission and restitution are equitable remedies and generally not considered part of an award of compensatory damages, equitable remedies are properly considered in assessing entitlement to and the proper amount of punitive damages (1 Cal. App. 4th 729, 750 n.3). Plaintiffs had to return the car, which was worth half of the amount that they had paid for it, so some portion of the money they received back through rescission represented a net monetary award to them (1 Cal. App. 4th 729, 750) .

[Caption. See § 65.80.]

PLAINTIFF MAY RECOVER PUNITIVE DAMAGES IN AN ACTION AGAINST AN INSURANCE COMPANY WHEN THE SUIT IS BASED ON THE TORTIOUS BREACH BY THE INSURER OF THE IMPLIED OBLIGATION TO DEAL FAIRLY AND IN GOOD FAITH WITH ITS INSURED, IF THE INSURANCE COMPANY ACTED OPPRESSIVELY, FRAUDULENTLY, OR MALICIOUSLY.

B. Punitive Damages Recoverable for Tortious Breach of Insurance Obligation. Punitive damages may properly be awarded in an action against an insurer for breach of its covenant of good faith and fair dealing when the conditions of Section 3294 of the Civil Code are met, that is, when it is proven by clear and convincing evidence that the insurer has been guilty of oppression, fraud, or malice (Civ. Code § 3294(a); see Egan v. Mutual of Omaha Ins. Co. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 809, 819-820, 157 Cal. Rptr. 482, 598 P.2d 452 ; *Neal v. Farmers Ins. Exchange (1978) 21 Cal. 3d 910, 922-923, 148 Cal. [a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion to strike part of a complaint for damages for breach of an insurance contract if the defendant asserted that punitive damages are not recoverable because the action is based on contract but the suit is actually based on the tortious breach by the insurer of its implied obligation to deal fairly and in good faith with its insured and the insurer acted oppressively, fraudulently, or maliciously. The breach of the obligation of good faith and fair dealing is not enough in itself to allow recovery of punitive damages. Plaintiff must comply with Civ. Code § 3294 (allowing recovery of punitive damages) by showing that defendant also was guilty of oppression, fraud, or malice [Neal v. Farmers Ins. Exchange (1978) 21 Cal. 3d 910, 922, 148 Cal. Rptr. 389, 582 P.2d 980 ; Silberg v. California Life Ins. Co. (1974) 11 Cal. 3d 452, 462, 113 Cal. Rptr. 711, 521 P.2d 1103] .

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used in opposition to a motion to strike part of a complaint supported by the points and authorities set out in § 65.60.

With appropriate modifications, these points and authorities may be used to oppose a demurrer or motion for judgment on the pleadings.

[c] Measure of Assessing Punitive Damages Against Insurer

In assessing the amount of punitive damages to be awarded against an insurer, the following factors are considered [Neal v. Farmers Ins. Exchange (1978) 21 Cal. 3d 910, 928, 148 Cal. Rptr. 389, 582 P.2d 980] :

(1) The particular nature of defendant's acts (different acts may be of varying degrees of reprehensibility, and the more reprehensible the act, the greater the appropriate punishment, assuming all other factors are equal);

(2) The amount of compensatory damages awarded (in general, even an act of considerable reprehensibility will not be seen to justify a proportionally high amount of punitive damages if the actual harm suffered from it is small); and

(3) The defendant's wealth (the function of deterrence will not be served if the wealth of the defendant allows him or her to absorb the award with little or no discomfort; by the same token, the function of punitive damages is not served by an award which, in light of the defendant's wealth and the gravity of the particular act, exceeds the level necessary to properly punish and deter).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Punitive Damages Recoverable for Tortious Breach of Insurance Obligation

Counsel should note that Civ. Code § 3294 was substantially amended in 1987. In actions in which the initial trial had not commenced before January 1, 1988, an insurer's malice, fraud, or oppression must be proven by "clear and convincing" evidence before punitive damages may be awarded [see Civ. Code § 3294(a), (e)]. This evidentiary standard was not applicable when the cases cited above were decided. Nevertheless, these cases (and the cases cited in § 65.81[4][a]) may be cited for the general proposition that punitive damages may be recoverable under Civ. Code § 3294 for the tortious breach of an insurance obligation by an insurer.

Egan v. Mutual of Omaha Ins. Co. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 809, 157 Cal. Rptr. 482, 598 P.2d 452 , was an action against an insurance company and others for compensatory and punitive damages arising out of a breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing implied in a health and disability insurance policy. The trial court directed a verdict against defendants, ruling, as a matter of law, that defendants' failure to have had plaintiff examined by a doctor of their choice or to have consulted with the physician and surgeon who were treating plaintiff violated the covenant of good faith and fair dealing. The trial court submitted to the jury the issues of causation and compensatory and punitive damages. The jury returned verdicts against all defendants, assessing compensatory and punitive damages against each in specified amounts. It assessed general damages of $45,600, damages for emotional distress of $78,000, and punitive damages of $5million against the insurance company. Defendants appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment insofar as it awarded compensatory damages against the insurance company, but reversed the judgment in all other respects. The punitive damages award against the insurance company was reversed solely on the ground that the amount awarded was excessive as a matter of law (24 Cal. 3d 809, 824) . The Court nevertheless upheld the propriety of a punitive damages award. After a "brief analysis" of the record, the Court was "convinced" that substantial evidence supported the jury's decision to assess punitive damages and that the record as a whole contained substantial evidence from which the jury might reasonably find that defendant had acted maliciously, with an intent to oppress, and in conscious disregard of the rights of the insured (24 Cal. 3d 809, 821-822) .

Neal v. Farmers Ins. Exchange (1978) 21 Cal. 3d 910, 148 Cal. Rptr. 389, 582 P.2d 980 , was an action by an insured for compensatory and punitive damages against an insurer for bad-faith failure to pay uninsured motorist benefits under an automobile insurance policy in which plaintiff was the named insured. Plaintiff was seriously injured in an intersection accident when the car in which she was riding and which was being driven by her husband was, while making a left turn, hit broadside by an uninsured motorist. Plaintiff's policy included a medical payment provision with a $5,000 limit and an uninsured motorist provision with a $15,000 limit. Some three months after the accident, defendant paid $5,000 pursuant to the medical payment coverage but declined to pay the policy limit of $15,000 under the uninsured motorist coverage. Its position was that the uninsured motorist coverage was to be decreased by the amount paid under the medical coverage. Almost three years after the accident, an arbitrator rendered a decision in plaintiff's favor on the issue of liability and reserved his decision on the question of offset. At the request of plaintiff's attorney, defendant then paid the first $10,000 under the uninsured motorist provision and six months later, when the arbitrator issued his decision on the question of offset in favor of plaintiff, it paid the final $5,000. Plaintiff then sued the insurer for damages for its prior bad faith in failing to pay the benefits. Plaintiff died from cancer during the pendency of the action and her husband, as administrator of her estate, was substituted as plaintiff. At trial, plaintiff proved compensatory damages of about $10,000 and that the insurer had gross assets of some $765 million, net assets of approximately $211 million, and a net income of nearly $45 million. The jury returned an undifferentiated verdict in plaintiff's favor for $1,548,211.35. The insurer's motion for new trial was denied on plaintiff's agreeing to remit all but $749011.48, and judgment was entered accordingly. Defendant appealed from the judgment, and plaintiff filed a cross appeal.

The Supreme Court affirmed. Citing Civ. Code § 3294, the Court held that an award of punitive damages is justified where a defendant has been guilty of oppression, fraud, or malice, that is, where the defendant had acted with the intent to vex, injure, or annoy, or with a conscious disregard of the plaintiff's rights (21 Cal. 3d 910, 922) . The Court was satisfied, after an examination of the whole record in a light most favorable to the judgment, that the award of punitive damages was proper. There was substantial evidence before the jury from which it might reasonably have concluded that defendant acted maliciously, with an intent to oppress, and in conscious disregard of the rights of its insured. That evidence, in brief, indicated that defendant's actions in the matter were all part of a conscious course of conduct, firmly grounded in established company policy, designed to utilize the lamentable circumstances in which the insured and her family found themselves, and the exigent financial situation resulting from it, as a lever to force a settlement more favorable to the company than the facts would otherwise have warranted (21 Cal. 3d 910, 922-923) . The Court concluded that the record clearly supported an award of punitive damages against defendant insurer (21 Cal. 3d 910, 923) .

The Court noted that while the record contained no direct evidence that, in pursuing the course of conduct that it did, the insurer acted with the indicated motivation and intent, the requisite state of mind, often referred to as "malice in fact," may be proved either expressly (by direct evidence probative on the existence of hatred or ill will) or by implication (by indirect evidence from which the jury may draw inferences (21 Cal. 3d 910, 923 n.6).

[b] Purpose of Punitive Damages Award

The factual background of Egan v. Mutual of Omaha Ins. Co. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 809, 157 Cal. Rptr. 482, 598 P.2d 452 , is discussed under § 65.81[3][a]. In affirming the judgment against the insurer for compensatory damages and reversing it as to the punitive damages solely on the ground that the amount of the award ($5 million) was excessive, the Supreme Court said that in the present context, the principal purpose of Civil Code § 3294 is to deter acts deemed socially unacceptable and, consequently, to discourage the perpetuation of objectionable corporate policies and that the special relationship between the insurer and the insured illustrates the public policy considerations that may support exemplary damages in cases such as this (24 Cal. 3d 809, 820) .

Quoting from Goodman and Seaton, Foreword: Ripe for Decision, Internal Workings and Current Concerns of the California Supreme Court, 62 Cal. L. Rev. 309, 346-347 (1974), the Court said that the insurers' obligations are rooted in their status as purveyors of a vital service labeled quasi-public in nature; that suppliers of services affected with a public interest must take the public's interest seriously, where necessary placing it before their interest in maximizing gains and limiting disbursements; that as a supplier of a public service rather than a manufactured product, the obligations of insurers go beyond meeting reasonable expectations of coverage; that the obligations of good faith and fair dealingencompass qualities of decency and humanity inherent in the responsibilities of a fiduciary; that insurers hold themselves out as fiduciaries; and that with the public's trust must go private responsibility consonant with that trust (24 Cal. 3d 809, 820) . The Court added that, furthermore, the relationship of insurer and insured is inherently unbalanced, that the adhesive nature of insurance contracts places the insurer in a superior bargaining position, and that the availability of punitive damages is thus compatible with recognition of insurers' underlying public obligations and reflects an attempt to restore balance in the contractual relationship (24 Cal. 3d 809, 820) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Punitive Damages Recoverable for Tortious Breach of Insurance Obligation

In Pistorius v. Prudential Insurance Co. (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 541, 176 Cal. Rptr. 660 , the court of appeal upheld a $1 million punitive damage award against an insurer in an action for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing based on insurer's unreasonable withholding of disability insurance benefits. The court stated that it was convinced from the whole record, and in particular from the facts that it had summarized in its opinion (123 Cal. App. 3d 541, 544-550) , that defendant insurer acted at the very least with a conscious disregard of plaintiff's rights (123 Cal. App. 3d 541, 553) . The court also held that the amount of the award was not excessive as a matter of law, noting that defendant's net income after taxes and dividends was $270 million, its gross assets were in excess of $50 billion, and its net worth was $2 billion (123 Cal. App. 3d 541, 554-555) .

Miller v. Elite Ins. Co. (1980) 100 Cal. App. 3d 739, 161 Cal. Rptr. 322 , was an appeal from a directed verdict in favor of plaintiff for compensatory damages and from a jury award of $150,000 in punitive damages arising from a breach of the insurer's implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. The court of appeal affirmed both the compensatory and the punitive damages award. Regarding the latter, the court held that because the insurer never informed the insured of the settlement offer within policy limits, never allowed the insured to contribute toward a possible settlement, and knowingly exposed the insured to damages of $11,000 when his claim could have been compromised for half that amount, the award was proper (100 Cal. App. 3d 739, 758) .

Richardson v. Employers Liab. Assur. Corp. (1972) 25 Cal. App. 3d 232, 102 Cal. Rptr. 547 , disapproved on other grounds by Gruenberg v. Aetna Ins. Co. (1973) 9 Cal. 3d 566, 108 Cal. Rptr. 480, 510 P.2d 1032 , was an action involving defendant's failure to settle promptly and in good faith plaintiffs' claims arising from an automobile accident with an uninsured motorist. Judgment was entered for plaintiffs after trial by jury. Reversing on the ground of attorney misconduct, the court of appeal discussed defendant's contention that punitive damages were not authorized. The court noted that there is an implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing in every insurance policy which requires an insurer to deal fairly and in good faith with an insured in handling the insured's claim against it. Defendant deliberately, willfully, and in bad faith withheld payment of the plaintiffs' claim months after it knew the claim to be valid, forced an arbitration hearing on the claim against which it knew it had no defense, and, even after the arbitration award was made, instructed its local office to try to make the best possible settlement and forced plaintiffs to resort to litigation to have the award judicially confirmed. According to the court this conduct was unconscionable and constituted a tortious breach of contract. Consequently, defendant's contention that the action was for damages for breach of contract, making punitive damages nonrecoverable, was incorrect. The fact that the conduct constituting the tort also involved a breach of a covenant implied by law in the insurance policy did not prevent the recovery of punitive damages under Civil Code § 3294 by the insured. The court held that defendant's further argument that the punitive damages award was not justified because there was no evidence of fraud, malice, or oppression was also without merit since plaintiff established malice and oppression on the part of the insurance company because they showed a motive and willingnss by the home office of defendant to vex and annoy plaintiffs and because defendant subjected plaintiffs to cruel and unjust hardship in conscious disregard of their rights.

These points and authorities may be used in opposition to a motion to strike part of a complaint for damages for breach of contract when defendant asserted that tortious damages are not recoverable because the action is based on contract. The ground for opposition is that breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing gives rise to an action in tort.

The decisional authority cited in this form is of questionable validity in light of the Supreme Court's decision in Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373 . [see also Newman v. Emerson Radio Corp. (1989) 48 Cal. 3d 973, 993, 258 Cal. Rptr. 592, 772 P.2d 1059 (holding that decision in Foley applies to all cases not yet final on January 30, 1989)]. In Foley, the Court held that the employer-employee relationship was not sufficiently similar to that of insurer and insured to warrant judicial extension of the proposed additional tort remedies, in view of countervailing concerns about economic policy and stability, the traditional separation of contract and tort law, and the numerous protections against improper terminations already afforded employees. the Court in Foley criticized lower-court opinions that extended tort remedies without comprehensive consideration of the implications of doing so [Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 693, 698, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373 ; for further discussion of the Foley decision with regard to the employer-employee relationship, see Ch. 100, Employer and Employee: Wrongful Termination and Discipline].

Consequently, it appears that tort liability for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing may well be limited to cases involving insurance contracts [for further discussion and forms relating to tort liability in an insurance contract setting, see Ch. 120, Insurance , in this set]. The Wallis criteria appear still to be valid [see Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 691 n.29, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373] , Thus, the authority cited in this form may be used in support of an argument that tort damages should be extended in a contractual setting involving a special relationship other than that of employer-employee.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used in opposition to a motion to strike part of a complaint supported by the points and authorities set out in §§ 65.60 and 65.62.

[a] Remedy in Tort Available for Breach of Implied Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing When Parties Have Special Relationship

In Wallis v. Superior Court (1984) 160 Cal. App. 3d 1109, 207 Cal. Rptr. 123 ,plaintiff was a 55-year-old man who had worked for defendant furniture manufacturer for 32 years. Plaintiff was laid off due to defendant's closing one of its plants. Before plaintiff was discharged, the parties entered a contract whereby defendant would pay plaintiff money each month until he was 65 and eligible for his accrued pension benefits and plaintiff would not compete with defendant. Prior to plaintiff's reaching age 65, defendant stopped the payments, claiming that it was under no legal obligation to pay plaintiff. An unskilled laborer dependent on the money for his survival, plaintiff filed a complaint against defendant on four causes of action, among them bad-faith breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. The trial court granted plaintiff partial summary judgment on the breach of contract action, and sustained defendant's demurrer to the bad-faith breach action without leave to amend. Plaintiff petitioned for a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to vacate its order sustaining the demurrer.

The court of appeal issued a peremptory writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate its order sustaining the demurrer. The court cited Seaman's Direct Buying Service, Inc. v. Standard Oil Co. (1984) 36 Cal. 3d 752, 206 Cal. Rptr. 354, 686 P.2d 1158 (discussed in § 65.62[3][a]), as authority for the extension of the tort of bad-faith breach to contracts other than insurance. It suggested that the extension should be to cases involving relationships with similar characteristics to those found in insurance contracts (160 Cal. App. 3d 1109, 1116) . The court analyzed the special characteristics of insurance contracts at length, noting that other contracts possess similar characteristics. The court found that for purposes of serving as a predicate to tort liability the following similar characteristics must be present in a contract: (1) the contract must be such that the parties are in inherently unequal bargaining positions; (2) the motivation for entering the contract must be a nonprofit motivation, e.g., to secure peace of mind, security, future protection; (3) ordinary contract damages are not adequate because (a) they do not require the party in the superior position to account for its actions, and (b) they do not make the inferior party whole; (4) one party is especially vulnerable because of the type of harm it may suffer and of necessity places trust in the other party to perform; and (5) the other party is aware of this vulnerability. Once these criteria are met the party in the stronger position has a heightened duty not to act unreasonably in breaching the contract, and to consider the interest of the other party as tantamount to its own. The precise nature and extent of the duty imposed by the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing will depend on the contractual purposes and must be defined in light of the parties' justified expectations (160 Cal. App. 3d 1109, 1118-1119) .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Damages for Physical Injury Are Recoverable Where Contract Relates to Comfort, Happiness, or Personal Welfare

Chelini v. Nieri (1948) 32 Cal. 2d 480, 196 P.2d 915 , was an action for damages for breach of a contract to preserve the body of plaintiff's mother. Defendant orally agreed to embalm the body so that it would keep almost forever and to provide a hermetically sealed casket. Plaintiff repeatedly informed defendant that he wanted his mother's body preserved because she had a horror of bugs and water and defendant repeatedly assured plaintiff that the body would last almost forever. Defendant knew at or about the time he agreed to preserve the body that at some indefinite future date plaintiff intended to move the casket and expected the body to be in such a state of preservation that defendant could place a ring and slippers on it. Eight months after the embalming, plaintiff requested that the casket be opened since plaintiff was disturbed by the ants and bugs crawling around the burial vault. When the casket was opened, it was discovered that plaintiff's mother's body had disintegrated and the skeleton was covered with insects. The jury awarded plaintiff general damages for his physical illness, suffering, and disability resulting from his discovery of the body's decomposed condition. Affirming as to the general damage award, the Supreme Court held that recovery of the damages for physical illness and suffering was proper under the rule laid down in Westervelt v. McCullough (1924) 68 Cal. App. 198, 208-209, 228 P. 734 [see discussion, below] which stated that whenever the terms of a contract relate to matters which concern directly the comfort, happiness, or personal welfare of one of the parties, or the subject matter of which is such as directly affects or moves the affection, self-esteem, or tender feelings of that party, he or she may recover damages for physical suffering or illness proximately caused by its breach (32 Cal. 2d 480, 482) .

Westervelt v. McCullough (1924) 68 Cal. App. 198, 228 P. 734 , was an action for damages for breach of an agreement whereby defendant promised plaintiff that if the latter permitted defendant to obtain a sheriff's deed to a house belonging to plaintiff, plaintiff and her husband could continue to live in the house as long as they wished. About six months after procuring the deed, defendant ousted plaintiff and her husband from the house. Plaintiff's complaint for breach of the agreement included a prayer for damages for the impairment of her health. The trial court found that defendant's acts caused great shock to plaintiff's nerves and caused plaintiff to become sick and impaired her health for a number of months. Affirming as to the damages for impairment for plaintiff's health, the court of appeal noted that the practical effect of the arrangement was to provide a home for plaintiff and her husband and to secure their maintenance for the remainder of their lives whereas its breach forced them to resort to the charity of friends and relatives for subsistence and shelter. After reviewing the law of other states specifically applicable to the situation, the court formulated the rule that whenever the terms of a contract relate to matters which concern directly the comfort, happiness, or personal welfare of one of the parties, or the subject matter of which is such as directly affects or moves the affection, self-esteem, or tender feelings of that party he or she may recover damages for physical suffering or illness proximately caused by its breach. In stating this rule, the court relied on authority relating to mental anguish since cases showing physical disability as the result of breach of contracts are unusual. Applying the rule, the court concluded that plaintiff could recover for impairment to her health under Civ. Code § 3300 since such damage was a detriment proximately caused by the breach because damage to her health was in the parties' contemplation when they contracted (68 Cal. App. 198, 208-209) .

[b] Insurance Contract Involves Party's Comfort

State Farm Mut. Auto Ins. Co. v. Allstate Ins. Co. (1970) 9 Cal. App. 3d 508, 88 Cal. Rptr. 246 , involved in part an award of damages for breach of an insurer's obligation to defend. A business employee was driving a truck insured by defendant when he collided with an automobile injuring two occupants. The injured parties sued the employee and the owner of the business and were awarded damages. At the time of the accident, the owner of the business had an insurance policy specifically covering another truck and a temporary substitute automobile. Defendant failed to defend the employee claiming that the truck involved in the accident was not a temporary substitute automobile and thus the truck was not covered by the policy and the company had no duty to defend. The trial court found that defendant's refusal to defend was improper and unjustified and awarded the employee damages including a sum for physical pain and emotional distress. Affirming as to the damages for refusal to defend, the court of appeal held that the award for pain and distress was proper whether it was under a tort orbreach of contract theory. The court noted that when the terms of a contract related to matters which directly concern the comfort, happiness, or personal welfare of one of the parties, that part may recover damages for physical suffering caused by the breach. The court found that a liability insurance policy is such a contract (9 Cal. App. 3d 508, 527-528) .

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion tostrike part of a complaint for damages for breach of contract when the defendant claims that damages for mental distress are not recoverable since the action is for breach of contract, but when the contract related to matters directly concerning the comfort, happiness, or personal welfare of the plaintiff or the subject matter of the contract directly affected or moved plaintiff's affection, self-esteem, or tender feelings. If physical injury did occur or if some element of intentional wrongdoing was present, counsel probably will want to include this fact in his or her memorandum.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Damages for Mental Suffering Is Recoverable When Contract Relates to Comfort, Happiness, or Personal Welfare

Windeler v. Scheers Jewelers (1970) 8 Cal. App. 3d 844, 88 Cal. Rptr. 39 , was an action in part for injuries to plaintiff's nervous system resulting in headaches, loss of sleep, aches and pains in arms and shoulders, and general nervousness caused by defendant's negligent breach of a bailment contract. Plaintiff entrusted some rings to defendant which she wanted made into an heirloom for her daughter emphasizing the sentimental value of the rings and stating that the rings were old family rings and were cherished mementos of her husband. Defendant mailed the rings by insured mail to a ring manufacturer, although he admitted at trial that registered mail was safer, but the rings never reached the destination and were never found. The jury awarded plaintiff damages including a sum for emotional distress. Affirming, the court of appeal noted that it is now well settled that there can be injury to one's nervous system as well as to one's body and addressed itself to the question of whether or not plaintiff could recover damages for mental suffering under the circumstances of the case. The court pointed out that the contract was one of bailment. Holding that mental suffering and emotional distress are elements of actual damages for breach of such a contract, the court stated the rule that whenever the terms of a contract relate to matters which directly concern the comfort, happiness, or personal welfare of one of the parties, or the subject matter of which is such as directly affects or moves the affection, self-esteem, or tender feelings of that party, she may recover damages for physical suffering or illness proximately caused by its breach. The court found that in its application this rule permits recovery for mental suffering. Since plaintiff made known to defendant at the time the bailment was created, the fact that the rings were cherished mementos of her husband which because of their sentimental value she wished to have made into an heirloom for her daughter, the contract related to matters directly concerning plaintiff's happiness and comfort and the jury was entitled to include in its award damages for physical suffering or illness (8 Cal. App. 3d 844, 851-852) .

[b] Contemplated and Foreseeable Result of Breach

Rogoff v. Grabowski (1988) 200 Cal. App. 3d 624, 246 Cal. Rptr. 185 , is discussed in § 65.62[3][a].

The complaint in Wynn v. Monterey Club (1980) 111 Cal. App. 3d 789, 168 Cal. Rptr. 789 was captioned "breach of contract, fraud, and negligence," and in it plaintiff sought to recover for defendants' breach of their agreement to bar plaintiff's spouse from their gambling clubs, which caused the disruption of the marriage and resulted in plaintiff's suffering physical and emotional distress. The spouse was a compulsive gambler, and plaintiff had agreed to pay gambling debts owed by the spouse to defendants if defendants would bar the spouse from the clubs and refuse to extend credit or check cashing privileges. The agreement was satisfactorily performed on both sides for about two years. Then the spouse began gambling again and cashing checks at defendants' clubs. The trial court entered summary judgment and judgment in defendants' favor, apparently in the beliefthat the agreement was illegal and unenforceable. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. Regarding the issue of the type of damages that plaintiff could recover, the court said that plaintiff's right to damages was a matter of proof within the confines of the general rule requiring proof of damages that flow from breach of contract. As for compensating plaintiff for physical and emotional harm, it is clear under the circumstances that the harm was reasonably foreseeable and was, in contemplation of the contracting parties, likely to result from a breach of the contract. Defendants knew the spouse's propensities, the impact they were having on the marriage, and knew that plaintiff's motivation in entering into the contract was to preserve the tranquility of the marriage and plaintiff's emotional well-being (111 Cal. App. 3d 789, 799) . The court noted that Molien v. Kaiser Foundation Hospitals (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 916, 920, 167 Cal. Rptr. 831, 616 P.2d 813 (discussed in § 65.85[3][c]), albeit a tort action, discarded the rule that mental suffering was compensable only when accompanied by physical injury (111 Cal. App. 3d 789, 800) . As this case sounded in contract, not tort, the court said the only limitation was that imposed by Civ. Code § 3300, which provides that the measure of damages for breach of contract is the amount that will compensate the aggrieved party for all the detriment proximately caused by the breach, or which, in the ordinary course of things would be likely to result from the breach. The court noted that Leavy v. Cooney (1963) 214 Cal. App. 2d 496, 29 Cal. Rptr. 580 had held pure mental and physical suffering compensable in a breach of contract action in which the parties had contemplated that a breach of the contract would result in humiliation and embarrassment to plaintiff. Here, the contract was one that by its nature put the defendants on notice that a breach would result in emotional and mental suffering by the plaintiff as well as other forms of compensable damage. In light of that conclusion, the court said, it was patent that defendants in moving for summary judgment did not negate triable issues of fact (111 Cal. App. 3d 789, 801) .

For discussion of the court's opinion relating to the enforceability of an agreement to bar another from a public place, see Ch. 35, Civil Rights: Unruh Civil Rights Act .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Contemplated and Foreseeable Result of Breach

Christensen v. Superior Court (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 868, 2 Cal. Rptr. 2d 79, 820 P.2d 101 , was a class action based on negligent mishandling of decedents' remains. The Supreme Court narrowed the class of third-party beneficiaries entitled to recover for damages for emotional distress to close family members who were aware that the funeral and/or crematory services were being performed and on whose behalf or for whose benefit the services were rendered (54 Cal. 3d 868, 876) . The Court said that tort recovery for breach of duty arising out of a third-party beneficiary contract is permitted, despite lack of privity, when the transaction was intended to benefit the third party and the harm to the third party was foreseeable (54 Cal. 3d 868, 891) .

The court of appeal in Saari v. Jongordon Corp. (1992) 5 Cal. App. 4th 797, 7 Cal. Rptr. 2d 82 , affirmed a judgment for a decedent's mother, sister, and longtime companion arising out of breach of a contract between the decedent, the companion, and defendant crematorium. With respect to the companion's claim for damages for emotional distress, the court said that an unrelated person who contracts with a crematorium for services regarding a decedent is entitled to recover damages for emotional distress arising out of the breach of that contract because such contracts are a well established exception to the general rule (5 Cal. App. 4th 797, 802-804) . These contracts so affect vital concerns of the contracting parties that severe emotional distress is a foreseeable result of a breach (5 Cal. App. 4th 797, 803-804) .

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion to strike part of a complaint for damages for breach of contract and tortious conduct when defendant asserts that damages for mental suffering are not recoverable because the action is based on contract but the action was also based on tortious conduct by defendant and plaintiff suffered serious emotional distress or defendant's conduct was intentional.

For further discussion of recovery of damages for emotional distress [see § 65.84], as well as Ch. 153, Mental Suffering and Emotional Distress. This conflict is also discussed in California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 362, Mental Suffering and Emotional Distress (Matthew Bender).

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[c] Propriety of Recovery for Mental Distress if Substantial Damage Occurred

This form is for use when plaintiff suffered serious emotional distress or defendant's conduct was intentional. The cases discussing recovery of damages for mental distress when no physical injury occurred and when the conduct was not intentional seem to be in irreconcilable conflict. The Supreme Court has stated that if a plaintiff alleges substantial damages for loss of property apart from damages for mental distress, the complaint is sufficiently pleaded with respect to mental distress without alleging that defendant's conduct was extreme and outrageous [Gruenberg v. Aetna Ins. Co. (1973) 9 Cal. 3d 566, 579-580, 108 Cal. Rptr. 480, 510 P.2d 1032] . A court of appeal, however, has stated that California courts have limited emotional suffering damages to cases involving either physical impact and injury to plaintiff or intentional wrongdoing by defendant. The court interpreted Gruenberg as involving bad faith and therefore as being an intentional tort case despite the absence in Gruenberg of language describing the case as one involving intentional conduct [Quezada v. Hart (1977) 67 Cal. App. 3d 754, 761-762, 136 Cal. Rptr. 815] . The court in Quezada noted that the conduct of defendant may be negligent as a matter of law but if it contains elements of intentional malfeasance or bad faith, damages for mental distress may be recovered. It appears that since the Supreme Court has said that damages for mental distress may be recovered when accompanied only by substantial damage to property [Gruenberg v. Aetna Ins. Co. (1973) 9 Cal. 3d 566, 579-580, 108 Cal. Rptr. 480, 510 P.2d 1032 ; Crisci v. Security Ins. Co. (1967) 66 Cal. 2d 425, 433-434, 58 Cal. Rptr. 13, 426 P.2d 173] without emphasizing any intentional conduct aspect, that mental distress damages could be recovered in such a situation even if defendant's conduct was not intentional or outrageous. However, the Supreme Court has not yet reconciled the court of appeal cases which hold differently.

Although the unreconciled cases have left the law unsettled as to when substantial damage to a property interest will support a claim for emotional distress, the importance of the conflict is diminished by the California Supreme Court's holding in Molien v. Kaiser Foundation Hosp. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 916, 928, 930, 167 Cal. Rptr. 831, 616 P.2d 813 , that recovery for negligent infliction of serious emotional distress may be had even though plaintiff suffers no physical injury. The function of the physical injury requirement was to provide a guarantee of the genuineness of the claim of emotional distress, a function which, the court noted, has also been served by the presence of an independent cause of action apart from physical injury substantially invading a clearly protected interest, or by outrageous intentional conduct [Molien v. Kaiser Foundation Hosp. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 916, 926, 927, 167 Cal. Rptr. 831, 616 P.2d 813] . In cases alleging negligent infliction of serious emotional distress, the guarantee of genuineness may now be provided by the general standard of proof as applied by the trier of fact in the circumstances of the case [Molien v. Kaiser Foundation Hosp. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 916, 930, 167 Cal. Rptr. 831, 616 P.2d 813] . The presence of factors, such as physical injury or substantial damage to a property interest, which courts have heretofore recognized as guarantees of the genuineness of mental distress claims should strengthen plaintiff's case for such claims, but under Molien, allegation of those factors should not be necessary.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Tortious Breach of Contract

Acadia, California, Ltd. v. Herbert (1960) 54 Cal. 2d 328, 353 P.2d 294 , was an action in part for damages for defendant's failure to comply with two agreements under which he was obligated to supply plaintiffs with water. The jury awarded plaintiffs damages including a sum for mental suffering. Affirming, the Supreme Court noted that plaintiffs could recover either in contract or in tort since defendant breached the agreement and his conduct in shutting off the water supply was tortious. According to the Court, an act that constitutes a breach of contract may also be tortious. The jury was properly instructed that it could not award damages under both contract and tort theories, but must select which theory, if either, was substantiated by the evidence. Since the jury awarded punitive damages it impliedly found that defendant had committed a tort and that he acted with malice or intent to oppress.

[b] Mental Distress Compensable if Conduct Tortious

Fletcher v. Western National Life Ins. Co. (1970) 10 Cal. App. 3d 376, 89 Cal. Rptr. 78 , was an action arising out of the conduct of defendants with respect to a disability insurance policy issued by defendant insurance company to plaintiff under which defendants threatened to and did refuse to make payments. The case was submitted to the jury on the cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress and the jury returned a verdict in favor of plaintiff. On appeal, one of the issues was whether or not defendants threatened and actual bad faith refusals to make payments under the disability insurance policy, and false and threatening communications done for the purpose of causing the insured to surrender his policy or disadvantageously settle a nonexistent dispute, could legally give rise to a cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress or some other cause of action sounding in tort. Affirming the jury verdict, the court of appeal noted that damages generally are not recoverable for mental suffering resulting from breach of contract on the theory that such damages are too uncertain, speculative, and remote. However, if the conduct is tortious, damages for emotional distress may be recovered despite the fact that the conduct also involved a breach of contract. The court found that the duty of good faith and fair dealing implied by law in insurance policies imposes on a disability insurer a duty not to threaten to withhold or actually withhold payments, maliciously and without probable cause, for the purpose of injuring its insured by depriving him of the policy's benefits. The court held that a violation of this duty sounds in tort notwithstanding that it also constitutes a breach of contract. Consequently, the defendants' actions were essentially tortious in nature and their conduct could legally be the basis for an action for damages for intentional infliction of emotional distress and recovery by plaintiff was proper.

[c] Mental Distress Damages Recoveable in Cases Involving Serious Emotional Distress or Outrageous Intentional Conduct

Molien v. Kaiser Foundation Hosp. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 916 , 167 Cal. Rtpr 831, 616 P.2d 813 , involved an amended complaint for damages for negligently inflicted emotional distress unaccompanied by physical injury. Plaintiff appealed from the judgment entered after a demurrer to the complaint was sustained. Plaintiff had alleged that he and his wife were members of defendant hospital's health plan, and that when his wife went to Kaiser for a routine physical examination, she was negligently examined and tested and informed by defendant physician that she had infectious syphilis, which was in fact false. Defendants knew plaintiff would learn of the diagnosis because they instructed his wife to so advise him. Thereafter, plaintiff had to undergo tests which revealed that he did not have syphilis. Nonetheless, his wife became upset and suspicious that plaintiff had engaged in extramarital activities, and the resulting tension and hostility caused the marriage to break up. Plaintiff further alleged that defendants knew or should have known that their diagnosis that his wife had and that he might have syphilis would cause him emotional distress, and that in fact he suffered extreme emotional distress and incurred medical expenses for counseling in an effort to save the marriage.

The Supreme Court reversed, recognizing negligent infliction of serious emotional distress as a tort independent of other injury. The primary issue beforethe Court on appeal was whether plaintiff was barred from recovery for negligent infliction of emotional distress because he did not suffer any physical injury. The Court noted that the primary justification for the physical injury requirement is to guard against false claims, but that this function is served by other guarantees in some instances, such as when substantial damages other than physical injury suffered by plaintiff serve to guarantee the genuineness of a claim for emotional distress damages, or when outrageous conduct serves as the guarantee of genuineness of a claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress. The Court condemned the physical injury requirement as allowing emotional distress damages when the distress is accompanied by the most trivial physical injury, while mechanically precluding recovery on potentially valid claims. The Court further criticized the rule because it encourages extravagant pleading and distorted testimony, and because the distinction between physical and emotional injury is unclear. The Court thus rejected the physical injury requirement, and held that, when the proof is not of a medically significant nature, the genuineness of the claim is guaranteed by the general standard of proof necessary to sustain a claim of serious emotional distress in the circumstances of the case. The Court quoted the standard adopted by the Hawaii Supreme Court: "serious mental distress may be found where a reasonable man, normally constituted, would be unable to adequately cope with the mental stress engendered by the circumstances of the case" (27 Cal. 3d 916, 927) .

[a] Mental Distress Damages Recoverable in Cases Involving Serious Emotional Distress, or Outrageous Intentional Conduct

Allen v. Jones (1980) 104 Cal. App. 3d 207, 163 Cal. Rptr. 445 , involved, in pertinent part, plaintiff's second amended complaint for damages for negligent performance of a contract. The only damages sought under the negligence cause of action were for emotional distress. Plaintiff appealed from a judgment entered after a demurrer to the second amended complaint was sustained. Plaintiff's second amended complaint alleged that he was the brother and nearest living relative of Ralph Allen and that on his brother's death, plaintiff entered into an oral contract with the defendant mortuary for the cremation and shipment of his brother's remains to Illinois. Plaintiff alleged that as a result of defendant's negligence in packaging the remains, they were lost, causing plaintiff great nervous shock, mental anguish, and humiliation. On appeal, the primary question was whether the action could be maintained when the only damage alleged was mental suffering. The court of appeal reversed the dismissal.

The court first recognized that severe mental distress was a foreseeable result of breach of the contract, notwithstanding the general rule that damages for mental suffering are not recoverable in an action for breach of contract. However, the court refused to base its decision on contract, stating that it is not clear whether mental distress without physical illness can ever support an action for breach of contract. (In this regard it is noteworthy that Allen was decided prior to the decision in Molien v. Kaiser Foundation Hosp. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 916, 167 Cal. Rptr. 831, 616 P.2d 813 , discussed under § 65.85[3][c], in which the physical injury requirement was discarded in actions for negligent infliction of serious emotional distress.) The court then found that plaintiff had pleaded an action in negligence as well as contract by alleging that the remains were lost due to defendant's negligent preparation of them for shipment, and held that damages for emotional distress are recoverable in tort for a mortuary's negligent mishandling of a corpse even though the plaintiff suffers no physical injury. The court reasoned that the psychological devastation likely to result from a mortuary's mistake requires that mortuaries be held to a high standard of care, and that the nature of the wrongful conduct necessarily present in such a case provides a sufficient guarantee of the genuineness of the claim of mental distress.

Fuentes v. Perez (1977) 66 Cal. App. 3d 163, 136 Cal. Rptr. 275 , was an action for breach of contract and negligence in which plaintiffs sought compensation from a contractor for damage to their home and personal belongings and for mental and physical pain and suffering resulting from the failure to temporarily cover plaintiffs' roofless house when it was raining. The jury awarded plaintiffs damages for emotional distress, shock, and injury to their nervous systems. Modifying the jury verdict by striking this portion of the award, the court of appeal found that the evidence did not reveal disturbance to the nervous system or other physical injuries but rather a psychological mental anguish occasioned by the contractor's conduct making plaintiffs' cause of action one for recovery for emotional distress. The court noted that California courts have permitted the recovery of damages for emotional distress alone without consequent physical injuries in cases involving extreme and outrageous intentional invasions of one's mental and emotional tranquility [relying on prior case law]. The court reviewed several cases in which damages for emotional distress were allowed but the rule permitting recovery without physical injury in specific situations was not mentioned, and concluded that generally the emotional distress was accompanied by some degree of physical injury and that most of the factual contexts involved mental distress triggered by what would reasonably be deemed intentional or reckless conduct which was extreme and outrageous. The court found that Windeler v. Scheers Jewelers (1970) 8 Cal. App. 3d 844, 88 Cal. Rptr. 39 [for a discussion of this case, see § 65.84[3][a]] was not contrary to the rule noting that in that case there was a special circumstance, known to the bailee, that the subject of the parties' bailment agreement had a sentimental value in excess of market value, and accordingly the court gave effect to the parties' agreement. After considering the evidence on which plaintiffs based their contention of emotional distress, the court concluded that it could not reasonably be deemed to discloseextreme and outrageous or reckless invasion of their mental and emotional tranquility and consequently the judgment was erroneously entered insofar as it awarded damages for emotional distress.

§ 65.86 Opposing Motion to Strike Part of Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 435-437] for Damages for Breach of Contract [Civ. Code § 3300] and Tortious Conduct [Civ. Code § 3333]--Mental Distress Damages Recoverable When Insurance Company Breaches Duty of Good Faith and Fair Dealing

[1] FORM Opposing Motion to Strike Part of Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 435-437] for Damages for Breach of Contract [Civ. Code § 3300] and Tortious Conduct [Civ. Code § 3333]--Mental Distress Damages Recoverable When Insurance Company Breaches Duty of Good Faith and Fair Dealing

PLAINTIFF MAY RECOVER DAMAGES FOR MENTAL DISTRESS IN AN ACTION AGAINST AN INSURANCE COMPANY IF THE COMPANY HAS BREACHED ITS DUTY OF GOOD FAITH AND FAIR DEALING AND PLAINTIFF HAS ALSO SUFFERED SUBSTANTIAL DAMAGE.

A. Breach of Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing Is Tort. Breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing implied in every insurance contract provides plaintiff with a tort action for bad faith notwithstanding that the acts complained of may also constitute a breach of contract (Jarchow v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co. (1975) 48 Cal. App. 3d 917, 940, 122 Cal. Rptr. 470 ; see Gruenberg v. Aetna Ins. Co. (1973) 9 Cal. 3d 566, 574, 108 Cal. Rptr. 480, 510 P.2d 1032).

B. Mental Distress Damages Recoverable. If defendant has failed to meet its duty of good faith and fair dealing, plaintiff may recover damages for mental distress when plaintiff has suffered substantial damage apart from the mental distress (Crisci v. Security Ins. Co. (1967) 66 Cal. 2d 425, 430, 434, 58 Cal. Rptr. 13, 426 P.2d 173 ; Jarchow v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co. (1975) 48 Cal. App. 3d 917, 940, 945, 122 Cal. Rptr. 470).

C. Showing Required. In order to recover damages for mental distress resulting from an insurer's breach of its covenant of good faith and fair dealing, it is necessary only to show that plaintiff suffered substantial economic losses apart from mental distress and not that the insurer's conduct was outrageous or that mental distress was severe (Gruenberg v. Aetna Ins. Co. (1973) 9 Cal. 3d 566, 579-580, 108 Cal. Rptr. 480, 510 P.2d 1032 (at pp. 580-581, n.10, disapproving any contrary language in Richardson v. Employers Liab. Assur. Corp. (1972) 25 Cal. App. 3d 232, 102

Cal. Rptr. 547)).

[EITHER]

D. Duty to Act Fairly in Handling Insured's Claims. Included in the insurer's duty to act in good faith and fairly is the duty not to withholdunreasonably payments due under the policy (Gruenberg v. Aetna Ins. Co. (1973) 9 Cal. 3d 566, 575, 108 Cal. Rptr. 480, 510 P.2d 1032).

[OR]

D. Duty to Accept Reasonable Settlement Offers. The covenant of good faith and fair dealing implied in every liability insurance policy obligates the insurer to treat offers to settle claims against its insured within limits of the insurance coverage without regard to its own special interest existing because of policy limits (Truestone, Inc. v. Travelers Ins. Co. (1976) 55 Cal. App. 3d 165, 169, 127 Cal. Rptr. 386).

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion to strike part of a complaint for damages for breach of contract when defendant asserts that plaintiff may not recover damages for mental distress because the action is based on contract, but the action involved the bad faith breach of defendant insurance company's duty of good faith and fair dealing and plaintiff suffered substantial economic losses in addition to the mental distress.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used in opposition to a motion to strike part of a complaint supported by the points and authorities set out in § 65.61.

NOTE:
In addition to the line of cases discussed in relation to this form which allow recovery of damages for emotional distress for breach of an insurer's duty of good faith and fair dealing, recovery may also be possible for negligent infliction of serious emotional distress. For further discussion, see § 65.85, as well as Ch. 153, Mental Suffering and Emotional Distress. [3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Breach of Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing Is Tort

Jarchow v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co. (1975) 48 Cal. App. 3d 917, 122 Cal. Rptr. 470 , involved in part an action against a title company for damages for its tortious conduct in failing to discover, disclose, or eliminate an easement on land bought by plaintiffs for which defendant had prepared a preliminary title report. The report indicated that there was one easement on the property but it failed to disclose a second easement (the Perez easement). After plaintiffs learned of the Perez easement they notified defendant who refused to initiate any action on plaintiffs' behalf after which plaintiffs filed an action against the Perezes and against defendant for damages. The jury found for plaintiffs against defendant.

Defendant contended that plaintiffs' complaint failed to state a cause of action and that the trial court erred in denying its motion for judgment on the pleadings. Affirming judgment, the court of appeal noted that every contract contains an implied in law covenant of good faith and fair dealing which provides that neither party will interfere with the other's rights to receive the benefits of the agreement. Breach of the covenant provides the injured party with a tort action for bad faith notwithstanding that the acts complained of may also constitute a breach of contract. The court held that this cause of action is applicable to all insurance contracts including policies of title insurance and consequently, plaintiffs could state a cause of action for bad faith, breach of the covenant of good faith, and fair dealing.

Gruenberg v. Aetna Ins. Co. (1973) 9 Cal. 3d 566, 108 Cal. Rptr. 480, 510 P.2d 1032 , in part, was an action against some insurance companies for failure to pay plaintiff benefits under several fire insurance policies. Plaintiff alleged that after a fire at his restaurant, a claims adjuster employed by one of the defendants informed an arson investigator that plaintiff had excessive fire coverage and thatplaintiff was later charged with arson and defrauding an insurer. He further alleged that defendants demanded that plaintiff appear for an examination relating to his claim for fire loss. Plaintiff's attorney requested that defendants waive the examination requirement until the criminal charges were concluded but defendants refused and warned that failure to appear would void coverage under the policies. Plaintiff alleged that defendants later informed plaintiff's attorney that they were denying liability under the policies because of plaintiff's failure to submit to the examination. After the criminal charges were dismissed, plaintiff's attorney told defendants that plaintiff was ready to submit to an examination but defendants reaffirmed that they were denying liability because of plaintiff's original failure to appear. Plaintiff further alleged that defendants were acting together to falsely imply that plaintiff had a motive to burn down his business in order to avoid paying the amounts due to plaintiff under the insurance policies. Plaintiff sought damages including damages for emotional distress resulting from defendants' outrageous conduct and bad faith. The trial court granted defendants' general demurrers. Reversing, the Supreme Court held that the complaint alleged a breach by defendants of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing implied in every insurance contract. In reaching this holding, the Court noted that breach of the duty of dealing fairly and in good faith is a tort.

[b] Mental Distress Damages Recoverable

Crisci v. Security Ins. Co. (1967) 66 Cal. 2d 425, 58 Cal. Rptr. 13, 426 P.2d 173 , was an action against plaintiff's insurer for damages including mental distress resulting from defendant's refusal to settle a claim against plaintiff within policy limits after which a jury awarded the injured party an amount far in excess of the policy amount. As a result of the large judgment entered against her, plaintiff became indigent, hysterical, and suicidal and her physical health declined. The trial court awarded damages to plaintiff including a sum for mental distress. Affirming, the Supreme Court noted that an action for failure to accept reasonable settlements, a duty imposed by the obligation of good faith and fair dealing implied in all insurance policies, sounds in both contract and tort. In such a case, plaintiff has a freedom of election between an action in tort and one in contract. An exception to this rule is a suit for personal injury caused by negligence where the tort character of the action is considered to prevail but no exception is applied in cases which relate to financial damage. Since the action involved a tort, the Court applied the general rule of tort damages which holds that an injured party may recover for all detriment caused whether or not it could have been anticipated. In accordance with this rule, mental suffering constitutes an aggravation of damages when it naturally ensues from the act complained of. The Court noted that the most common example of the award of damages for mental suffering is where the plaintiff suffers personal injuries in addition to mental distress as a result of either negligent or intentional misconduct by defendant. But, the Court continued, damages for mental distress have also been awarded in cases where the tortious conduct was an interference with property rights without any personal injuries apart from mental distress. Consequently, the Court concluded that a person who, as a result of defendant's tortious conduct, loses her property ad suffers mental distress may recover not only for the pecuniary loss but also for her mental distress, and plaintiff's recovery of damages for her mental distress was proper. The Court noted that this decision did not mean that in every case of breach of contract the injured party could recover such damages. In this case, the breach also constituted a tort. Moreover, plaintiff did not seek to obtain a commercial advantage by the contract but to protect herself against the risks of accidental losses including the mental distress which might follow from the losses. Among the considerations in purchasing liability insurance is the peace of mind and security it will provide in the event of an accidental loss and, the Court noted, recovery of damages for mental suffering has been permitted for breach of contracts which directly concern the comfort, happiness, or personal esteem of one of the parties.

The factual background of Jarchow v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co. (1975) 48 Cal. App. 3d 917, 122 Cal. Rptr. 470 , is discussed under § 65.86[3][a]. In affirming the award of general damages to plaintiffs, the court of appeal noted that every contract contains an implied in law covenant of good faith and fair dealing, a breach of which provides the injured party with a tort action for bad faith notwithstanding that the acts complained of may also constitute a breach of contract. The court found that since a primary consideration in purchasing insurance is the peace of mind and security it will provide when the contingency insured against arises, an insured may recover for any emotional distress suffered as a result of an insurer's bad faith as well as any other detriment proximately caused by the breach. The court further noted, however, that a number of decisions have suggested that the bad faith breach of an insurance agreement must result in substantial damages apart from those due to mental distress before an award for the emotional injury may be made. The court concluded that defendant's refusals to provide clear title to their property as to the two easements were acts of bad faith which breached the title insurance policy's implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing and that, since one easement was inextricably tied to the other easement dispute, it constituted a substantial cloud on plaintiffs' property and thus did substantial damage until it was removed.

The court of appeal determined that plaintiffs were entitled to damages for negligent infliction of emotional distress by defendant despite the fact that the distress did not result directly from or manifest itself in physical injury as required by the impact or injury rule. The court concluded that the use of the impact or injury requirement has been a response to public policy concerns raised by the problems of proof inherent in mental distress cases but the court stated that the only valid objection against recovery for mental distress is the danger offraudulent claims and this problem should be resolved by rules of proof rather than by imposition of limits on the negligence action itself. The court found that the Supreme Court decisions on the subject have shown a desire to abandon the impact or injury barrier in cases involving the intentional infliction of emotional distress. For example, in Crisci v. Security Ins. Co. (1967) 66 Cal. 2d 425, 58 Cal. Rptr. 13, 426 P.2d 173 (discussed above), the Supreme Court expressly rejected strict application of the impact or injury requirement reasoning that where an actionable claim has resulted in substantial damages apart from emotional distress, the danger of fictitious claims is greatly reduced. The Court noted that substantial damage constitutes actionable claims and substantial invasions of protected property interests. To ascertain the genuineness of a claim a court must determine whether plaintiff suffered an empirically verifiable injury: a detriment whose impact was readily observable and identifiable; an injury which could not be as easily fabricated as mental distress. Thus, if a complaint indicates that a plaintiff was deprived of the use of his real property or his financial resources, or suffered physical injury, or was deprived of the possession of a piece of personalty, he may reasonably have been said to have suffered substantial damages. The Court continued that substantial damage need not be compensable since such a requirement would not add to the guarantee of genuineness. Interference with one's legally protected interests is sufficient damage to satisfy the substantial damage test and to guard against potentially fraudulent emotional distress claims. Although Crisci was a tort action for breach of the implied covenant of good faith in an insurance contract, the Court noted that the Crisci court made no attempt to limit its comments to that particular cause of action. Consequently, the Court concluded that the impact or injury rule is no longer strictly applied in California and courts may adjudicate negligence claims for mental distress when sufficient guarantees of genuineness are found in the facts of the case--for example, when plaintiff has suffered substantial damage apart from the alleged emotional injury. Applying the substantial damage standard, the court concluded that defendant's negligent failure to list the Perez easement on plaintiffs' preliminary title report substantially damaged plaintiffs' financial and property interests which provided sufficient guarantees of the genuineness of plaintiffs' emotional distress claim to entitle plaintiffs to recover damages for mental distress.

[c] Showing Required

The factual background of Gruenberg v. Aetna Ins. Co. (1973) 9 Cal. 3d 566, 108 Cal. Rptr. 480, 510 P.2d 1032 , is discussed under § 65.86[3][a]. In reversing the judgment of dismissal as to defendant insurers, the Supreme Court rejected defendants' contention that plaintiff could not, as a matter of law, recover for emotional distress because plaintiff failed to allege conduct which was "extreme" and "outrageous"; that is, it rejected defendants' argument that the essential elements of a cause of action for the independent tort of intentional infliction of emotional distress was engrafted on a cause of action against an insurer for breach of its duty of good faith and fair dealing. The Court, after quoting from Crisci v. Security Ins. Co. (1967) 66 Cal. 2d 425, 58 Cal. Rptr. 13, 426 P.2d 173 (discussed under § 65.86[3][b]) said that in Crisci it did not suggest that to warrant recovery for mental distress the conduct of the insurer had to be "outrageous" or that the mental distress must be "severe"; rather, the Court had explained that the principal reason for limiting recovery of damages for mental distress was that to permit recovery of such damages would open the door to fictitious claims, to recovery for mere bad manners, and to litigation in the field of trivialities and that, obviously, where the claim is actionable and has resulted in substantial damages apart from those due to mental distress, the danger of fictitious claims is reduced (9 Cal. 3d 566, 579) . The Court noted that plaintiff alleged that he had suffered substantial economic losses apart from the mental distress in that he alleged that he suffered loss of earnings, that he was compelled to go out of business and as a result was unable to pay his business creditors, that he incurred the costs of defending lawsuits brought against him by his creditors, and that he incurred medical expenses. The Court concluded that since plaintiff had alleged substantial damages for loss of property apart from damages for mental distress, the complaint was sufficiently pleaded with respect to the latter element of damages (9 Cal. 3d 566, 580) . The Court said that Fletcher v. Western National Life Ins. Co. (1970) 10 Cal. App. 3d 376, 89 Cal. Rptr. 78 , did not express a different rule, that in Fletcher plaintiff's theory of recovery was predicated on the tort of intentional infliction of emotional distress alone, and that, quite naturally, the court there concluded that severe emotional distress was a requisite element of recovery. But the mere fact that the action there involved the liability of an insurer for its tortious conduct, measured by the elements of intentional infliction of emotional distress, does not mean that those same elements must be applied where, as here, recovery is sought on a totally distinct theory (9 Cal. 3d 566, 580) .

[d] Duty to Act Fairly in Handling Insured's Claims

The factual background of Gruenberg v. Aetna Ins. Co. (1973) 9 Cal. 3d 566, 108 Cal. Rptr. 480, 510 P.2d 1032 , is discussed under § 65.86[3][a]. In holding that the complaint alleged a breach by defendants of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, the Court noted that the duty of an insurer to act in good faith and fairly in handling the claim of an insured, that is, a duty not to withhold unreasonably payments due under a policy, is a duty included within the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing.

[e] Duty to Accept Reasonable Settlement Offers

Truestone, Inc. v. Travelers Ins. Co. (1976) 55 Cal. App. 3d 165, 127 Cal. Rptr. 386 , involved an action against a liability insurer by two individuals of aclosely held corporation for damages for the insurer's bad faith refusal to settle a claim covered by an insurance policy. The trial court granted defendant's demurrer to plaintiffs' cause of action which alleged that defendant's intentional and reckless conduct resulted in severe mental and emotional distress to plaintiffs. Reversing, the court of appeal held that plaintiffs had stated a cause of action for violation of defendant's obligation to act in good faith. The court noted that the covenant of good faith and fair dealing implied in every liability insurance policy obligates the insurer to treat offers to settle claims against its insured within limits of the insurance coverage without regard to its own special interest existing because of policy limits. The covenant thus imposes a duty on the insurer to accept reasonable settlement offers within the scope of its policy and breach of this duty creates causes of action in both contract and tort [relying on prior case law]. The court continued that while the law recognizes a cause of action in tort, the duty breached by the tortious conduct of an insurer refusing to settle in good faith flows from the contractual relationship. The insured does not seek to obtain a commercial advantage from the contract but to protect himself against the risks of accidental losses including the mental distress which might follow from the losses. Since peace of mind and security are a consideration in purchasing liability insurance, damages for mental suffering are included within those recoverable for the insurer's breach of duty to settle in good faith [relying on prior case authority].

Rptr. 13, 426 P.2d 173* (discussed under § 65.85[3][c]) in which the Supreme Court stated that an action for breach of the covenant of good faith sounds in both contract and tort; Comunale v. Traders & General Ins. Co. (1958) 50 Cal. 2d 654, 663, 328 P.2d 198 , in which the Supreme Court held that an action for breach of the covenant of good faith sounds in both contract and tort; and Fletcher v. Western National Life Ins. Co. (1970) 10 Cal. App. 3d 376, 401, 89 Cal. Rptr. 78 , in which the court of appeal said that violation of the insurer's duty to act reasonably and in good faith to settle claims against the insured by a third person sounds in tort notwithstanding that it may also constitute a breach of contract and that, similarly, an insurer's breach of its implied-in-law duty not to threaten to withhold payments under a disability policy maliciously and without probable cause for the purpose of injuring the insured by depriving him of the benefits of the policy sounds in tort notwithstanding that it also constitutes a breach of contract.

[b] Mental Distress Damages Recoverable

In Delos v. Farmers Insurance Group (1979) 93 Cal. App. 3d 642, 658, 155 Cal. Rptr. 843 , the court of appeal said that the unreasonable and bad-faith refusal of an insurer to pay a valid claim of its insured gives rise to the insurer's liability for all economic loss of the insured as well as consequential emotional distress.

IT IS PROPER TO GRANT A NEW TRIAL ON THE GROUND THAT THE DAMAGES ARE _____ [EXCESSIVE or INADEQUATE].

A. Motion for New Trial. On the application of the party aggrieved, the _____ [either verdict or decision] may be vacated, in whole or in part, and a new trial may be granted, on all or some of the issues, on the ground that the damages are _____ [either excessive or inadequate], if substantial rights of the aggrieved party are materially affected thereby (Code Civ. Proc. § 657).

[EITHER]

B. Trial Court's Power to Determine Excessiveness of Damages. The proper procedure for determining whether the damages awarded are excessive is to bring the question before the trial court on a motion for a new trial (Schroeder v. Auto Driveaway Co. (1974) 11 Cal. 3d 908, 918, 114 Cal. Rptr. 622, 523 P.2d 662).

[OR]

B. Trial Court's Power to Determine Inadequacy of Damages. The proper procedure for determining whether the damages awarded are inadequate is to bring the question before the trial court on a motion for a new trial (Mendoyama, Inc. v. Mendocino County (1970) 8 Cal. App. 3d 873, 877, 87 Cal. Rptr. 740).

C. Applicability of Code Civ. Proc. § 657(5) to Contract Actions. Code of Civil Procedure Section 657(5) providing that a new trial may be granted on the ground of excessive or inadequate damages applies to actions for damages arising from breach of contract (Harp v. Pease (1921) 52 Cal. App. 744, 745-746, 199 P. 863).

D. Judge Is Permitted to Reweigh Evidence. In passing on a motion for a new trial, the trial judge is entitled to reweigh the evidence and exercise his or her independent judgment and to grant a new trial if it clearly appears from the evidence believed by him or her that the damages were excessive or inadequate (Patterson v. Rowe (1952) 113 Cal. App. 2d 119, 122, 247 P.2d 949 ; see Code Civ. Proc. § 657).

[Defendant claiming excessive damages may add]

E. Purpose of Damage Award. Damages awarded for breach of contract attempt to approximate the agreed-upon performance. The goal is only to put the injured party in as good a position as if the defendant had not breached the contract. The injured party's damages, however, cannot exceed what it would have received if the contract had been fully performed on both sides. This limitation of damages for breach of a contract serves to encourage contractual relations and commercial activity by enabling parties to estimate in advance the financial risks of their enterprise (Lewis Jorge Construction Management, Inc. v. Pomona Unified School District (2004) 34 Cal. 4th 960, 967-968, 22 Cal. Rptr. 3d 340 ; Glendale Fed. Sav. & Loan Assoc v. Marina View Heights Dev. Co. (1977) 66 Cal. App. 3d 101, 123, 135 Cal. Rptr. 802).

[Defendant claiming excessive damages may add]

F. When Damages Are Excessive. If the jury's award does not meet the test of reasonableness, the trial court has the duty to reduce it (Neumann v. Bishop (1976) 59 Cal. App. 3d 451, 490, 130 Cal. Rptr. 786).

[Optional] G. Discretion to Grant New Trial Is Limited to Damages. The trial judge may limit an order for a new trial to the issue of damages if the issue of liability has been determined by the jury (Myers v. King (1969) 272 Cal. App. 2d 571, 581, 77 Cal. Rptr. 625).

[Defendant claiming excessive damages may add]

[Optional] H. New Trial Limited to Damages and Conditioned on Failure to Consent to Remittitur. If the ground for granting a new trial limited to the issue of damages after a trial by jury is excessive damages, the court may in its discretion grant the new trial subject to the condition that the motion for a new trial is denied if the party in whose favor the verdict has been rendered consentsto a reduction of so much thereof as the court in its independent judgment determines from the evidence to be fair and reasonable (Code Civ. Proc. § 662.5(b)).

[Plaintiff claiming inadequate damages may add]

[Optional] I. New Trial Limited to Damages and Conditioned on Failure to Consent to Additur. If the ground for granting a new trial limited to the issue of damages after a trial by jury is inadequate damages, the court may in its discretion grant the new trial subject to the condition that the motion for a new trial is denied if the party against whom the verdict has been rendered consents to an addition of so much thereto as the court in its independent judgment determines from the evidence to be fair and reasonable (*Code Civ. [a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted by defendant or plaintiff in support of a motion for a new trial on the ground that the damages awarded were excessive or inadequate. A defendant will bring the motion on the ground that the damages were excessive and a plaintiff will base the motion on the ground the damages were inadequate.

Optional Paragraph G may be used if the motion is being limited to the issue of damages and the jury determined the issue of liability. Optional Paragraphs H and I may be used if the ground of excessive or inadequate damages is the only one being raised and the moving party wants to request the court to give the plaintiff or the defendant the opportunity to consent to a reduction in or addition to the damages instead of having the court grant a new trial.

Code Civ. Proc. § 657 was amended in 1967 to include inadequate damages as a ground for granting a new trial. Prior to this amendment, motions for new trial when the damages award was inadequate were made and granted on the grounds of insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict or other decision [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(6)]. The same rules discussed in cases prior to the amendment would apply to a motion made under Code Civ. Proc. § 657(5) based on inadequate damages [Legislative Comm. Comment to 1967 amendment of Code Civ. Proc. § 657].

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Trial Court's Power to Determine Excessiveness of Damages

In Schroeder v. Auto Driveaway Co. (1974) 11 Cal. 3d 908, 114 Cal. Rptr. 622, 523 P.2d 662 , defendant common carrier furnished a driver to take plaintiff's van filled with new and secondhand goods to a location where plaintiff was going to open a store for sale of the goods. According to the terms of the contract, defendant driver was to take the most expeditious and suitable route but, instead, the driver took a sightseeing detour during which the van skidded off a road, destroying it and many of its contents. Plaintiff brought action in part for breach of contract under which defendants undertook to deliver the van and its contents undamaged. The jury returned a verdict for plaintiff. On appeal, defendants contended that the damages award was excessive. Affirming the jury's verdict, the Supreme Court noted that defendants failed to raise the issue of excessive damages before the superior court by a motion for a new trial. According to the Court, the point that damages are excessive cannot be raised for the first time on appeal but must be presented to the lower court on a motion for new trial [relying on prior case law]. Consequently, defendants, having failed to move for a new trial, could not contend on appeal that the damages awarded were excessive. In explaining its decision, the Court noted that when a jury returns its verdict, the trial court cannot grant judgment notwithstanding the verdict on its own motion merely on the ground that damages were excessive or inadequate. That issue must be raised by a motion for new trial and, absent exceptional circumstances, a trial court cannot grant a new trial on its own motion. Thus, because of defendants' failure to move for a new trial, the issue of adequacy for damages was neverpresented for decision by the trial judge (11 Cal. 3d 908, 918) .

[b] Trial Court's Power to Determine Inadequacy of Damages

In Mendoyama, Inc. v. Mendocino County (1970) 8 Cal. App. 3d 873, 87 Cal. Rptr. 740 , an action for damages for breach of a concession agreement, the trial court awarded plaintiff damages consisting of plaintiff's reasonable expenditures for performance made in faith on the contract excluding interest paid on loans on the basis that it was not reasonably necessary for performance. The trial court also refused plaintiff's claim for compensation for the hours devoted by plaintiff's president and secretary in endeavoring to carry out the agreement since they were acting for plaintiff in their performance of their duties as officers. Additionally, although finding that in attempting to perform, plaintiff transferred valuable subconcession rights to subconcessionaires in return for their performing some of plaintiff's obligations under the terms of the agreement between plaintiff and defendant, the trial court made no finding on the value of these transferred rights. On appeal, plaintiff claimed that it should have been allowed to cover for these items. Reversing the trial court, the court of appeal held that a motion for new trial is a condition precedent to urging inadequacy of damages on appeal. Since plaintiff did not make such a motion, it could not claim inadequate damages but, the court continued, this rule did not prevent plaintiff from urging errors in the instruction, even though those errors also resulted in an improper reduction of damages. After reviewing the points relating to erroneous rulings on the admission of evidence, the court concluded that plaintiff was entitled to recover for some of the items (8 Cal. App. 3d 873, 877) .

[c] Applicability of Code Civ. Proc. § 657(5) to Contract Actions

In Harp v. Pease (1921) 52 Cal. App. 744, 199 P. 863 , an action in assumpsit for money had and received, the jury returned a verdict for plaintiff. The trial court granted defendant's motion for new trial on the grounds, among others, that the damages were excessive, appearing to have been given under the influence of passion or prejudice. Plaintiff contended that the action was not one to recover damages within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 657(5) and that the trial court had no authority to grant the motion under that statute. Affirming the trial court's decision, the court of appeal noted that an action in assumpsit is one to cover damages for breach of an implied contract and consequently the action was one for damages. The court noted that the statute permits a new trial to be granted on the ground of excessive damages. Although the great majority of cases that rely on this ground are actions in tort, the court held that in the absence of any language in the code section itself that could be construed as indicating such an intention on the part of the Legislature, the court itself should not exclude from the scope of the word "damages" all reference to damages arising from breach of contract. Consequently, the trial court had the right, in its discretion, to grant the order on the ground that the damages were excessive (52 Cal. App. 744, 745-746) .

Counsel should note that the court's discussion concerned only the ground of excessive damages. However, the case was decided before Code Civ. Proc. § 657(5) was amended to include inadequate damages as a ground for a new trial, and the court's holding should apply to cases involving inadequate as well as excessive damages.

[d] Judge Is Permitted to Reweigh Evidence

Patterson v. Rowe (1952) 113 Cal. App. 2d 119, 247 P.2d 949 , was an action for personal injuries and property damage arising out of an automobile collision. The jury returned a verdict in plaintiff's favor after which plaintiff moved for new trial on the ground of inadequate damages. The trial court ordered a new trial on the issue of damages unless defendants agreed to an additur, and after defendants refused to so agree, the trial court ordered a new trial. Affirming, the court of appeal noted that a new trial may be granted or a judgment may be set aside on the ground of inadequacy of the compensation awarded. The court pointed out that it is the duty of the trial court in considering such a motion to weigh the evidence, to exercise its independent judgment and to grant a new trial if it clearly appears from the evidence believed by it that the damages were inadequate. On appeal the only question is whether the trial court abused its discretion in determining that the damages awarded were inadequate. Since there was a conflict in the evidence as to the extent and permanency of plaintiff's disability and the evidence would justify the award of increased general damages, the court held that it could not say as a matter of law that the trial court abused its discretion in granting a new trial (113 Cal. App. 2d 119, 122) .

[e] Purpose of Damage Award

In Lewis Jorge Construction Management, Inc. v. Pomona Unified School District (2004) 34 Cal. 4th 960, 22 Cal. Rptr. 3d 340 , defendant school district canceled its contract with plaintiff construction contractor following numerous construction delays. As a result, plaintiff's bonding company reduced plaintiff's performance bonding limits, which plaintiff claimed prevented it from obtaining other unspecified construction contracts with high performance bond requirements. Plaintiff sought and recovered in the trial court damages for profits it claimed to have lost on those other construction contracts (34 Cal. 4th 960, 965) .

After extensively reviewing the purpose of contract damages and the distinction between general and special damages for breach of contract, the California Supreme Court held that while lost profits damages are proper in certain kinds of cases, lost profits on future construction contracts were not properly damages in this case. Any loss of profits on future contracts due to decrease in bonding resulting from cancellation of this contract was neither a natural result of thecancellation, nor a risk of which defendant either was actually aware or must have been aware. To the contrary, plaintiff's ability to obtain future contracts was not within the scope of benefits reasonably to be anticipated from full performance of this particular contract (34 Cal. 4th 960, 975-978) .

For additional discussion of this case, see § 65.105.

The factual background of Glendale Fed. Sav. & Loan Assoc v. Marina View Heights Dev. Co. (1977) 66 Cal. App. 3d 101, 135 Cal. Rptr. 802 , is discussed in § 65.80[4][a]. In affirming the judgment for plaintiff, the court of appeal noted that the trial court had determined that since plaintiff was not fully secured on the date of the foreclosure sale, plaintiff was entitled to recover as damages the loss of security caused by the diversion of funds and the breach of the guarantee agreement and the court awarded plaintiff $700,000 for that loss of security. Plaintiff contended that it should have received, as the proper measure of damages, the amount required to bring the property into the condition it would have been in had the contract been fully performed instead of the loss of enhancement in value resulting from the failure to perform. Despite plaintiff's failure to move for a new trial, the court of appeal held that the contention presented a reviewable legal issue since it concerned the proper measure of damages and failure to move for a new trial does not preclude a party from attacking the errors of law committed by the trial court in ascertaining the amount of damage. The court noted that the measure of damages for breach of contract is the amount which will compensate the party aggrieved for all the detriment approximately caused thereby, or which, in the ordinary course of things, would be likely to result therefrom [quoting Civ. Code § 3300]. The court held that damages awarded should, insofar as possible, place plaintiff in the same position he or she would have been in had the contract been performed, but he or she should not be awarded more than the benefit which he or she would have received had the promisor performed [relying on prior case law]. The proper measure of damages for breach of a contract to construct improvements on real property where the work is to be done on plaintiff's property is ordinarily the reasonable cost to plaintiff of completing the work. However, when improvements are to be made on property not owned by the injured party, the proper measure of damages is the difference in value of plaintiff's property with and without the promised performance since that is the contractual benefit of which the injured party is deprived. Since plaintiff did not own the property on which the improvements were to be made, the court held that plaintiff was entitled to damages only to the extent noncompletion of the improvements impaired its security interest and consequently, the trial court's judgment that plaintiff could recover as damages the loss of security was proper (66 Cal. App. 3d 101, 123) . See also the discussion under § 65.87[3][f].

[f] When Damages Are Excessive

Plaintiff in Neumann v. Bishop (1976) 59 Cal. App. 3d 451, 130 Cal. Rptr. 786 , accepted, in conformance with the trial court's order on defendant's motion for a new trial, a reduction to $280,000 from the $362,289 awarded plaintiff by the jury's verdict. Defendant appealed from the judgment on several grounds including the ground that the amount of the judgment, as reduced, was excessive. In affirming the judgment, the court of appeal pointed out that the trial court had determined that plaintiff's special damages, present and projected, were about $111,000, and that the trial court reduced the sum awarded to $280,000 on the ground that the maximum reasonable general damages for plaintiff's primary injury (to her femur) was $165,000 with a maximum total compensation of $275,000. The court of appeal then quoted from Beagle v. Vasold (1966) 65 Cal. 2d 166, 179-180, 53 Cal. Rptr. 129, 417 P.2d 673 , to the effect that no matter what manner of calculation is proposed by counsel or used by the jury, the verdict must meet the test of reasonableness, and if it does not, the trial court has the duty to reduce the verdict. The court of appeal noted that the power of the appellate court differs materially from that of the trial court, in that the appellate court may interfere on the ground that the judgment is excessive only if the verdict is so large, that, at first blush, it shocks the conscience and suggests passion, prejudice, or corruption on the part of the jury. Since the award as reduced was not excessive under this standard, the court affirmed the judgment (59 Cal. App. 3d 451, 490) .

Counsel should note, however, that the Supreme Court in Schroeder v. Auto Driveaway Co. (1974) 11 Cal. 3d 908, 919, 114 Cal. Rptr. 622, 523 P.2d 662 , stated that the trial court is in a far better position than an appellate court to determine whether a damage award was influenced by "passion and prejudice" and cited Code Civ. Proc. § 657. The Court did not indicate in any way that Code Civ. Proc. § 657 was amended in 1967 to delete the language "passion and prejudice." Furthermore, the Legislative Committee comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 657 states that the former language purporting to limit the ground of excessive damages to an award influenced by "passion or prejudice" was eliminated as unnecessary, and that the trial judge is able to grant a new trial when, after weighing the evidence, he or she is convinced from the entire record that the award of damages is clearly excessive.

[g] Discretion to Grant New Trial Is Limited to Damages

In Myers v. King (1969) 272 Cal. App. 2d 571, 77 Cal. Rptr. 625 , plaintiff brought an action against defendant for personal injuries sustained when plaintiff was struck from behind by defendant's automobile as he walked down a roadway facing on-coming traffic. At the conclusion of the trial, the jury awarded plaintiff both special damages and general damages. The trial court thereafter grantedplaintiff's motion for a new trial limited to the issue of damages subject to the condition that the motion would be denied if defendant consented to an additur specified by the trial court. Defendant did not consent and appealed from the judgment and order granting a new trial. Defendant contended, in part, that the trial court abused its discretion in granting a new trial limited to the issue of damages. The court of appeal affirmed the order granting the new trial limited to damages, noting that the decision to limit a new trial to the issue of damages rests in the discretion of the trial court and that such a decision is proper when it can be reasonably said that the liability issue has been determined by the jury. The court of appeal found that the liability issue was not close in the case before it in that there was uncontradicted evidence that defendant was attempting to pass another vehicle when he negligently struck plaintiff. The court of appeal then concluded that the low amount awarded as general damages resulted from the jury's difficulty in assessing damages rather than from its inability to decide the liability issue (272 Cal. App. 2d 571, 581) .

[a] Trial Court's Power to Determine Excessiveness of Damages

In Resort Video, Ltd v. Laser Video, Inc. (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 1679, 42 Cal. Rptr. 136 , the court of appeal affirmed the trial court's order granting a new trial on the ground of excessive damages. The court held that the trial court's reasons were adequately specified and were sufficient to apprise both the appellant resort promoter and the court of appeal why the trial court considered the jury award of $975,000 for damages for breach of contract for purchase and sale of replicated discs excessive, and to support an order granting a new trial (35 Cal. App. 4th 1679, 1692-1696) . The court noted that the trial court did not merely state that the damages were excessive, it directed the appellate court's (and the appellant's) attention to the aspects of the record that supported the order. Quoting from Romero v. Riggs (1994) 24 Cal. App. 4th 117, 124, 29 Cal. Rptr. 2d 219 , the court concluded that "[n]o more is reasonably or sensibly to be required of the trial court" (35 Cal. App. 4th 1679, 1696) .

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted by defendant or plaintiff in support of a motion for new trial on the ground that the damages awarded were excessive or inadequate since an incorrect measure of damages was used to determine damages for breach of a contract to construct improvements on real property owned by plaintiff or on real property not owned by plaintiff.

When appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Improvements Made on Real Property Owned By Plaintiff

In Coughlin v. Blair (1953) 41 Cal. 2d 587, 262 P.2d 305 , plaintiffs bought a lot from defendants who agreed to pave a road to the property and install electricity and gas within a certain time period. After the time period had passed and defendants had failed to perform, plaintiffs brought suit seeking damages for the difference in value of the property with and without the utilities and road and recovered judgment for general damages in that amount. On appeal, the Supreme Court, in considering whether the trial court had applied the proper measure of damages, noted that the contract called for the installation of improvements that would greatly increase the value of plaintiff's property and that the consideration was paid in advance. The Court pointed out that if the work were to be done on plaintiff's property, the proper measure of damages would ordinarily be the reasonable cost to plaintiffs of completing the work. However, a different rule applies when the improvements are to be made on property that is not owned by the injured party. In that event the injured party is unable to complete the work himself and the proper measure of damages is the difference in value of plaintiff's property with and without the promised performance since that is the contractual benefit of which the injured party is deprived. The Court noted that, in this case, the contract was to be performed on property not owned by plaintiff over which plaintiffs had a nonexclusive easement and found that plaintiffs proved their damages on the theory that the proper measure was the difference in value of their lot with and without the promised performance. Since defendants never contended that plaintiffs had the right to pave the road and install the utilities or that they would be able to get the improvements independently of defendant, the Court affirmed the judgment.

Glendale Fed. Sav. & Loan Assoc v. Marina View Heights Dev. Co. (1977) 66 Cal. App. 3d 101, 135 Cal. Rptr. 802 , is discussed in § 65.87[3][e].

[b] Improvements Made on Real Property Not Owned by Plaintiff

Coughlin v. Blair (1953) 41 Cal. 2d 587, 262 P.2d 305 , is discussed under § 65.100[3][a].

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities is for use by defendant in support of a motion for a new trial on the ground that the damages awarded are excessive since the trial court awarded damages on the basis of the cost of repairs to the property but the value of the property itself was less than the cost of the repairs.

When appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Value of Land as Measure of Damages

Avery v. Fredericksen & Westbrook (1944) 67 Cal. App. 2d 334, 154 P.2d 41 , was an action for damages for breach of a contract under which plaintiff agreed to allow defendant to remove sand from plaintiff's land and defendant agreed to level off any portion of the property from which the sand was removed and to replace the top soil. After removal of the sand, defendants failed to level the land or to replace the top soil and plaintiff sued for the cost of doing such work. The trial court awarded damages in a much smaller amount based on the value of the land prior to the sand removal. Affirming, the court of appeal noted that for the breach of an obligation arising from contract, the measure of damages is the amount which will compensate the aggrieved party for all the detriment proximately caused thereby or which, in the ordinary course of things, would be likely to result therefrom [quoting Civ. Code § 3300]. The court further noted that no person can recover a greater amount in damages than he or she could have gained by the full performance thereof on both sides except in certain instances [quoting Civ. Code § 3358]. If the cost of repairing an injury to property and restoring it to its original condition amounts to less than the value of the property prior to the injury, according to the court, such cost is the proper measure of damages, but if the cost of restoration exceeds such value, then the value of the property is the proper measure [quoting prior case law]. Since the evidence showed that the market value of plaintiff's land had not depreciated following the sand removal, plaintiff was allowed the full value of the land and still had the land. Consequently, the court held that he had not suffered any detriment for which he was not compensated.

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for a new trial based on the ground of excessive damages where defendant contractor has proved that economic waste would result if the terms of the contract were carried out and the defects were remedied, but the measure of damages used by the trial court was the cost of making the building conform to contract specifications.

When appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Diminution in Market Value as Measure of Damages

Bayuk v. Edson (1965) 236 Cal. App. 2d 309, 46 Cal. Rptr. 49 , was an action for damages for the negligent performance of an oral contract for architectural services in connection with the construction of plaintiffs' home. Defects in the construction of the house included improper design of the floor, incorrect construction of a number of closets, inadequate outside doors for the climate, and improper laying of the kitchen tile and fitting of the outside sliding doors. The trial court awarded damages to plaintiffs based on the diminution in market value of the house due to the defects. On appeal, defendants contended that the amount of damages was unsupported by substantial evidence and that the method of measurement was improper. Affirming the trial court, the court of appeal noted that the trial judge had commented on the fact that neither party had responded to his suggestion to produce evidence of the cost to repair the damage. The trial judge in his findings stated however, that he believed, considering all the factors involved, that he had used the proper measure of damages on the evidence before him. The court of appeal also noted that a general building contractor testified at trial that the mistakes in design and construction were of such an extent that it would be economically unfeasible to repair the defects and that tearing out and repairing them would cost more than the cost of rebuilding the house in its entirety. Consequently, the method applied by plaintiffs to compute their damage, the diminution of market value due to the defects, was proper under the circumstances [noting prior case authority].

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be used in support of a motion for new trial on the ground of excessive damages where defendant proved at trial that plaintiff had a duty to mitigate but did not do so or that plaintiff did mitigate damages but this mitigation was not taken into account in computing the amount of damages.

When appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Duty to Mitigate Damages

Sackett v. Spindler (1967) 248 Cal. App. 2d 220, 56 Cal. Rptr. 435 , involved an action for money had and received in which defendant was awarded damages on his cross complaint for breach of contract. Plaintiff contracted to buy newspaper stock from defendant for which he made several payments but was unable to make the final payment on time and subsequent attempts to make payment also failed. As a result the financial condition of the newspaper suffered due to a lack of working capital and defendant attempted to improve his condition by borrowing money and cutting costs. The trial court specifically found that defendant had made reasonable efforts in minimizing damages. On appeal, plaintiff argued, in part, that this finding was not supported by the evidence. Affirming the judgment, the court of appeal stated that a party injured by a breach of contract is required to do everything reasonably possible to minimize his own loss and thus reduce the damages for which the other party has become liable. From this rule it follows that a person injured by a breach of contract cannot recover damages for detriment which he could have avoided by reasonable effort and without undue expense. According to the court, the question of whether the injured party has acted reasonably in mitigating damages is one of fact so that where the trial court has made findings of fact to the effect that the injured party has acted reasonably in minimizing his damages, this finding must be upheld on appeal if the record contains any substantial evidence in support of such finding. The court held that the record contained ample evidence tending to show that defendant acted reasonably in minimizing damages and consequently the trial court's judgment was proper.

[b] No Recovery for Avoidable Loss

Sackett v. Spindler (1967) 248 Cal. App. 2d 220, 56 Cal. Rptr. 435 , is discussed under § 65.103[3][a].

[c] Measure of Recovery by Discharged Employee

Parker v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp. (1970) 3 Cal. 3d 176, 89 Cal. Rptr. 737, 474 P.2d 689 , was an action for the recovery of compensation under contract for plaintiff's services as an actress in a motion picture. Defendantdecided not to produce the musical review for which plaintiff was hired but offered to employ plaintiff as leading actress in a western. Plaintiff refused the part and defendant pleaded as an affirmative defense that plaintiff deliberately failed to mitigate damages by unreasonably refusing the offer. The trial court granted plaintiff's motion for summary judgment and entered judgment for plaintiff for the amount plaintiff was to receive under the contract. Affirming, the Supreme Court noted that generally the measure of recovery for a wrongfully discharged employee is the amount of salary agreed on for the period of service less the amount which the employer affirmatively proves the employee has earned or with reasonable effort might have earned from other employment. However, before projected earnings from other employment opportunities not sought or accepted by the discharged employee can be applied in mitigation, the employer must show that the other employment was comparable or substantially similar to that of which the employee was deprived and an employee's rejection or failure to seek other employment of a different or inferior kind may not be used in order to mitigate damages. The Court noted that defendant raised no issue as to the reasonableness of plaintiff's efforts to obtain other employment so that the sole issue was whether plaintiff's refusal to accept defendant's substitute offer could be used in mitigation. The Court held that the trial court correctly ruled that plaintiff's refusal could not be applied in mitigation of damages because the offer of the lead in the western was one for different and inferior employment, and that the female lead as a dramatic actress in a western could not be considered the equivalent of or substantially similar to the lead in a song and dance production in which plaintiff's talents as a dancer as well as an actress would be used. Consequently, the trial court properly awarded plaintiff the amount of compensation provided for in the contract without taking into account any amount for mitigation.

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No Recovery for Avoidable Loss

In Henrici v. South Feather Land & Water Co. (1918) 177 Cal. 442, 170 P. 1135 , an action for damages for defendant's failure and refusal to furnish water to irrigate plaintiff's land, the trial court rendered judgment for plaintiff. Defendant, a water company, was the successor in interest to a corporation who made an agreement with plaintiff to furnish water to plaintiff for a specified fee. When defendant succeeded to the corporation's interest, it established a new system of rates which plaintiff refused to pay claiming that he should receive the water for the rate established in his agreement with defendant's predecessor. Defendant refused to furnish water to plaintiff and many of plaintiff's fruit trees and vines died. On appeal, defendant contended that the evidence did not support the finding with respect to damage. Agreeing with defendant, the Supreme Court noted that defendant never absolutely refused to furnish water but was always ready to supply plaintiff's land if plaintiff paid the rates demanded, and that if plaintiff had paid the increased rate without conceding its correctness, he could have saved his trees and vines, reducing his damage to a comparatively small amount. The Court held that it was plaintiff's duty to do so since the law imposed on a party injured by another's breach of contract the active duty of using all ordinary care and making all reasonable exertions to make the injury as small as possible. If by the plaintiff's negligence or willfulness the damages are unnecessarily increased, this increase falls on him. Consequently, the Court reversed the judgment holding that plaintiff could not recover from defendant for the damage caused by his own act in allowing the trees and vines to go without water when he knew he could, at a slight cost, have secured the water and reduced the damage.

Mayes v. Sturdy Northern Sales, Inc. (1979) 91 Cal. App. 3d 69, 154 Cal. Rptr. 43 , involved an action for breach of a franchise agreement and conspiracy to destroy plaintiff's business. After a trial before the court, the court entered judgment for plaintiff for damages for lost profits. Plaintiff had entered into a franchise agreement with a dog food company to sell its products in a specified area. According to the agreement, defendant was required to provide all necessary merchandise to plaintiff. The company was later sold and the new owners (defendants in this action) began to cut back on plaintiff's orders and to sell directly to stores with which plaintiff had had accounts. Plaintiff eventually stopped distributing because he could not get any dog food from defendants. On appeal, defendants contended in part that plaintiff failed to mitigate damages since he made only one unsuccessful attempt to locate work and although he was 59 years old, he had not intended to retire by breaking the franchise agreement. The court of appeal noted that a plaintiff cannot recover damages that would have been avoidable by his or her ordinary care and reasonable exertions. Failure to mitigate damages is an affirmative defense that must be pleaded and proved by defendants. The court held that since defendants did not plead failure to mitigate and since they presented no evidence of employment opportunities for a man of plaintiff's age and skills, defendants' contentions were without merit and the trial court's judgment was affirmed.

These points and authorities may be used in support of a motion for new trial on the ground of excessive damages when the contract that has been breached contained a provision allowing it to be terminated without cause by giving notice a specified time before the termination was to be effective and the damage award includes damages in excess of those that could accrue during a period equal to the length of the required notice.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For instance, the required notice period and facts regarding the breach should be set forth. The evidence from which damages were calculated, possibly net profit earned under the contract during the quarter or year prior to the breach, should be reviewed to show that the proper limitation was not applied in calculating damages.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Damages Limited to Those Accruing During Notice Period

Civ. Code § 3358 , which was cited by the court in Martin v. U-Haul Co. Of Fresno (1988) 204 Cal. App. 3d 396, 251 Cal. Rptr. 17 (discussed below), provides that, except as expressly provided by statute, no person can recover a greater amount in damages for the breach of an obligation, than he or she could have gained by full performance of that obligation on both sides.

Plaintiff in Martin v. U-Haul Co. Of Fresno (1988) 204 Cal. App. 3d 396, 251 Cal. Rptr. 17 had been an authorized rental dealer of defendant's equipment for about ten years. The dealership contract provided that it could be terminated by either party without cause on 30-days notice. Defendant had opened its own "moving center" in the same town as plaintiff's operation. Plaintiff intended to relocate to within one mile of that moving center. Plaintiff's field representative and other of defendant's officers knew of the planned move and had not voiced any objection. Some of defendant's officers claimed plaintiff was renting equipment, keeping the proceeds, and not reporting it to defendant. On August 31, 1981, defendant terminated the contract without notice by taking possession of all the rental equipment and removing it from plaintiff's business premises. Plaintiff earning approximately $9,400 in rental commissions during 1980. Plaintiff's 1981 earnings through August 8 amounted to approximately $5,800. Plaintiff sued for fraud, breach of contract, and tortious breach of the implied convenant of good faith and fair dealing. Judgment of nonsuit was entered for defendant on the first and third causes of action. The jury awarded plaintiff $29,000 plus costs, interest, and attorney's fees on the cause of action for breach of contract. Defendant moved for new trial on that cause of action. The motion was granted unless plaintiff agreed to reduction of damages to $725. Instead, plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the order conditionally granting the motion for new trial and remanded to allow plaintiff the election of accepting the $725 or requesting a new trial on the issue of damages. Judgment in favor of defendant on the first and third causes of action was affirmed. The court of appeal first discussed the general rule of foreseeability, citing Coughlin v. Blair (1953) 41 Cal. 2d 587, 603, 262 P.2d 305 (discussed in § 65.100[3][b]) and Glendale Fed. Sav. & Loan Assn v. Marina View Heights Dev. Co. (1977) 66 Cal. App. 3d 101, 123, 135 Cal. Rptr. 802 (discussed in § 65.87[3][e]). The court said that the specific rule that a termination clause limits recoverable damages to the notice period is consistent with the general requirement that contract damages are limited to those foreseeable by the parties at the time of contracting. Parties who agree that a contract may be terminated for any reason, or no reason, on the giving of specified notice could not reasonably anticipate that damages could exceed that notice period (204 Cal. App. 3d 396, 409) . The court then set forth Civ. Code § 3358 and reasoned that if defendant followed the notice requirement, it could have terminated the contract after providing 30-days notice. Thus, full performance by defendant would only have resulted in an additional 30 days of dealership business for plaintiff. That 30-day period was all plaintiff could reasonably be assured of remaining in business (204 Cal. App. 3d 396, 410) . Further, awarding the wronged party damages that exceed those attributable to the 30 days immediately following the breach would place that party in a better position than that resulting from full performance in accordance with the terms of the agreement (204 Cal. App. 3d 396, 410-411) . Therefore, the trial court was correct when it granted the motion for new trial conditioned on plaintiff's consent to a reduction in the damage award (204 Cal. App. 3d 396, 411) .

[1] FORM Supporting Defendant's Motion for New Trial on Ground of Excessive Damages--Award of Damages for Lost Profits on Unidentified and Unrelated Future Contracts Was Error

[Caption. See § 65.87].

PLAINTIFF IS NOT ENTITLED TO RECOVER DAMAGES FOR LOSS OF PROFITS ON UNIDENTIFIED AND UNRELATED FUTURE CONTRACTS THAT HAVE NOT YET BEEN EARNED OR AWARDED.

A. Lost Profits on Future Contracts Ordinarily Are Not Recoverable as General Damages. Lost profits on future unawarded and unrelated contracts ordinarily are not recoverable as general damages because ordinarily they do not flow directly and necessarily from a breach of contract, and are not part of the bargain of the parties (Lewis Jorge Construction Management, Inc. v. Pomona Unified School District (2004) 34 Cal. 4th 960, 973, 975, 22 Cal. Rptr. 3d 340).

B. Lost Profits on Future Contracts Ordinarily Are Not Recoverable as Special Damages. Lost profits on future contracts are not recoverable as special damages unless the special or particular circumstances from which they arise (1) were actually communicated to or known by the breaching party, or (2) were matters of which the breaching party should have been aware at the time of contracting. In addition, such damages must be pled with particularity, and must also be proven to be certain both as to their occurrence and their extent (albeit not with mathematical precision), whereas the damages sought by plaintiff in this case are necessarily uncertain and speculative (Lewis Jorge Construction Management, Inc. v. Pomona Unified School District (2004) 34 Cal. 4th 960, 968-969, 977, 22 Cal. Rptr. 3d 340).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be used in opposition to a plaintiff's claim for damages based on an alleged loss of future profits on unidentified contracts that have not yet been awarded. For example, it can be used to refute allegations that a defendant's breach of a construction contract resulted in a reduction of the plaintiff's contractor's bond, resulting, in turn in a loss of future business [see Lewis Jorge Construction Management, Inc. v. Pomona Unified School District (2004) 34 Cal. 4th 960, 22 Cal. Rptr. 3d 340] . In order for the defendant to defeat a claim for such damages, the defendant must be able to show that:

- The lost profits are not recoverable as general damages because they did not flow directly and necessarily from the breach of contract, and that theywere not part of the bargain of the parties [see Lewis Jorge Construction Management, Inc. v. Pomona Unified School District (2004) 34 Cal. 4th 960, 971-973, 22 Cal. Rptr. 3d 340] ; and

- The lost profits are not recoverable as special damages because [see Lewis Jorge Construction Management, Inc. v. Pomona Unified School District (2004) 34 Cal. 4th 960, 975-977, 22 Cal. Rptr. 3d 340] :

  - Their likelihood was neither actually communicated to or known by the defendant, nor was a matter that the defendant should have been aware of at the time of contracting, and/or

  - The damages are uncertain or speculative as to both their occurrence and their extent.

Lost profits damages are proper in certain kinds of cases. Thus, for example, these points and authorities are not designed to be used when the lost profits involve collateral transactions such as contracts involving crops, goods intended for resale, or an agreement creating an exclusive sales agency. It has been stated that the likelihood of lost profits from related or derivative transactions is so obvious in these situations that the breaching party must be deemed to have contemplated them at the inception of the contract [Lewis Jorge Construction Management, Inc. v. Pomona Unified School District (2004) 34 Cal. 4th 960, 968-969, 971-972, 22 Cal. Rptr. 3d 340 (citing cases)]. Rather, these points and authorities are intended to be used when the claimed future contracts are unrelated to the transaction involving the defendant's breach of contract.

Counsel should insert argument into the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Specifically, counsel should assert facts showing that [Lewis Jorge Construction Management, Inc. v. Pomona Unified School District (2004) 34 Cal. 4th 960, 973-977, 22 Cal. Rptr. 3d 340] :

- Defendant's assumption of liability for this type of damages was not within the contemplation of the parties and was not part of their bargain;

- Plaintiff never communicated to defendant the potential for this type of liability;

- Defendant was unaware of the potential for such damages under the facts of the case and had no reason to be aware of that potential; and

- The alleged damages were speculative and uncertain since there was no guarantee that plaintiff would have been awarded any future contracts, the amount of any such contracts, or that the failure to defendant's acts were the cause of plaintiff not obtaining the contracts.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Lost Profits on Future Contracts Ordinarily Are Not Recoverable as General Damages

In Lewis Jorge Construction Management, Inc. v. Pomona Unified School District (2004) 34 Cal. 4th 960, 22 Cal. Rptr. 3d 340 , a school district terminated a construction contract after the contractor failed to complete it in a timely manner. The contractor's bonding company then hired another construction company to complete the project, and first suspended and then later reduced the amount of bonding for the original contractor, which ultimately went out of business. The original contractor successfully sued the school district for breach of contract, recovering as damages approximately $3 million for potentially lost profits that the contractor claimed it would have earned on prospective construction contracts it never won because of its impaired bonding capacity. These lost profits were awarded as an element of general damages, and the court of appeal concluded that they were a proper item of general damages (34 Cal. 4th 960, 965) .

The California Supreme Court reversed, holding that it was improper to award lost profits from future construction contracts as an element of general damages. General damages are those that flow directly and necessarily from a breach of contract, or that are a natural result of a breach. Because general damages are a natural and necessary consequence of a contract breach, they are said to be within the contemplation of the parties, meaning that because their occurrence is sufficiently predictable, the parties at the time of contracting are deemed to have contemplated them (34 Cal. 4th 960, 968) . The Court observed that while unearned profits sometimes have been used as the measure of general damages for breach of a construction contract when the breaching party's conduct prevented the other side from undertaking performance, the profits involved were purely profits unearned on the very contract that was breached (34 Cal. 4th 960, 971) . In this case, the Court was unwilling to say that the parties' bargain included the contractor's potential profits on future construction projects it had not bid on or been awarded. Full performance by the school district would simply have provided the contractor with full payment of the contract price for the construction. Thus, award of lost profits as an element of general damages was improper (34 Cal. 4th 960, 975) .

[b] Lost Profits on Future Contracts Ordinarily Are Not Recoverable as Special Damages

The facts in Lewis Jorge Construction Management, Inc. v. Pomona Unified School District (2004) 34 Cal. 4th 960, 22 Cal. Rptr. 3d 340 are discussed in § 65.105[3][a]. In addition to holding that it was error to award lost profits on future construction contracts as an element of general damages, the CaliforniaSupreme Court also held that such an award also could not be sustained as an award of special damages. Although the construction company did not plead its lost future profits as special damages, the issue of their availability as special damages was presented to the jury, and the school district expressly stated that it was not relying on that pleading omission.

Special damages are those losses that do not arise directly and inevitably from any similar breach of any similar agreement, but rather are secondary or derivative losses arising from circumstances that are particular to the contract or to the parties. Under the rule of Hadley v. Baxendale (1854) 156 Eng. Rep. 145 , as articulated in the California case law, special damages are recoverable if the special or particular circumstances from which they arise (1) were actually communicated to or known by the breaching party, or (2) were matters of which the breaching party should have been aware at the time of contracting (34 Cal. 4th 960, 968-969) . The Court noted that such damages must be pled with particularity, and must also be proven to be certain both as to their occurrence and their extent, albeit not with mathematical precision. In this case, when the school district signed the contract it did not know what the contractor's balance sheet showed, or what criteria its surety ordinarily used to evaluate a contractor's bonding limits. Absent such knowledge, the profits that the contractor claimed it would have made on future, unawarded contracts were not actually foreseen or reasonably foreseeable, and hence were unavailable as special damages (34 Cal. 4th 960, 977) . The Court observed that although the school district's termination of the contract was "the first event in a series of misfortunes" that culminated in the contractor closing down its construction business, those consequences are not the natural and necessary result of the breach of every construction contract involving bonding (34 Cal. 4th 960, 978) .

DEFENDANT'S MOTION FOR A NEW TRIAL ON THE GROUND OF EXCESSIVE DAMAGES SHOULD BE DENIED SINCE DEFENDANT MADE INTENTIONAL MAJOR DEVIATIONS FROM THE CONTRACT TERMS

AND DID NOT PROVE THAT ANY ECONOMIC WASTE WOULD RESULT FROM MAKING THE BUILDING CONFORM TO CONTRACT REQUIREMENTS AND CONSEQUENTLY IT WAS PROPER TO DETERMINE DAMAGES BY THE COST OF CONFORMING THE BUILDING TO CONTRACT SPECIFICATIONS.

A. No New Trial Unless Jury Clearly Should Have Reached Different Decision. A new trial cannot be granted on the ground of excessive damages unless, after weighing the evidence, the court is convinced from the entire record, including reasonable inferences therefrom, that the jury clearly should have reached a different decision (Code Civ. Proc. § 657).

B. Cost of Conforming as Measure of Damages. If defendant contractor has made intentional major deviations from the contract terms and has not affirmatively proved that economic waste would result from making the building conform to the contract in that a substantial part of what has been done must be undone, the measure of damages is the amount required to make the building conform to the contract plans and specifications (Shell v. Schmidt (1958) 164 Cal. App. 2d 350, 360, 365-366, 330 P.2d 817).

These points and authorities may be used by a plaintiff to oppose a motion for new trial on the ground of excessive damages in an action for breach of a construction contract when the measure of damages used was the cost of making the building conform to contract specifications but defendant claims that this measure provides for excessive damages and that the proper measure is the diminution in market value of the building due to the defects.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Cost of Conforming as Measure of Damages

Shell v. Schmidt (1958) 164 Cal. App. 2d 350, 330 P.2d 817 , was an action to establish the amount of damages to be paid a contractor for breach of a building contract. A previous action had established that defendant had breached the contract. Plaintiffs were third-party beneficiaries of a contract between defendant and the federal government under which defendant was to build tract homes which plaintiffs bought. Defendant had difficulty getting materials required by the contract so it deviated from the contract specifications by not applying wood sheathing to the exterior walls and using construction paper covered with chicken wire instead, installing one floor furnace rather than two, and making the interior walls of sheet rock with taped joints instead of gypsum lath and plaster. One of defendant's expert witnesses testified at trial that the defects could be remedied easily by placing plywood over the exterior and stucco on that and placing wire netting on the interior walls and then plaster. At trial, plaintiffs claimed that the proper measure of damages for the contract breach was based on the cost theory or the cost of making the work done by defendant conform to the contract but defendant advanced the value theory or the difference between the value of the structure as planned and its value as built. The jury evidently agreed with plaintiffs and awarded damages based on making the work conform to the contract. Affirming, the court of appeal noted that the general measure of damages is the cost rule and the court examined the circumstances which result in the use of the value rather than the cost method [relying on prior case law and noted authorities on contracts]. One of the circumstances is proof of good faith or lack of willfulness. The court held that such proof is impossible if there have been intentional major deviations from the terms of the contract, and consequently, defendant did not prove good faith since its deviations from the contract specifications were done intentionally. Additionally, the court noted that another circumstance to be considered in determining the measure of damages is proof by defendant that a substantial part of what had been done must be undone or proof that economic waste would result from the replacement of the omissions and defects. Defendant did not prove this since, according to its expert, the defects could be remedied rather easily. Consequently, judgment for plaintiffs was proper (164 Cal. App. 2d 350, 360, 365-366) .

These points and authorities may be submitted by a plaintiff in opposition to a motion for new trial on the ground of excessive damages when defendant asserted that plaintiff did not mitigate damages when he or she should have and consequently the damage award should be reduced, but the contract involved in the action did not take all of plaintiff's time and plaintiff was able to perform other contracts at the same time.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Mitigation Not Applicable to Certain Contracts

Seaboard Music Co. v. Germano (1972) 24 Cal. App. 3d 618, 101 Cal. Rptr. 255 , involved an action in part against defendants for inducing the breach of a lease. Plaintiff, lessor of coin-operated equipment, leased a jukebox and pool table to a bar owner who subsequently hired defendants to sell his business. Defendants, after arranging the sale of the bar to a purchaser who did not want to assume the lease of the equipment, advised both seller and purchaser that the lease was invalid. The trial court found that the seller's repudiation and breach of the agreement was induced by defendants and awarded plaintiff damages consisting of the profits plaintiff would have made under the contract. Defendants contended in part that the amount of damages awarded was excessive since the trial court should have required plaintiff to mitigate damages by releasing the equipment it received back from the seller. Affirming the trial court's judgment, the court of appeal agreed that ordinarily a person injured by the breach of an obligation has the duty to minimize damages and avoid or reduce the loss suffered by the other party. However, although this rule generally is applicable to contracts for the use of some specific equipment or instrumentality, it does not apply to contracts not requiring all or a great portion of plaintiff's time or that do not preclude plaintiff from undertaking and being engaged contemporaneously in the performance of other contracts. Since the evidence showed that plaintiff had a warehouse full of equipment similar to that leased to the bar owner from which it served its customers and from which it could service any additional leases whether or not the bar owner fulfilled or breached his obligation, the court reasoned that requiring plaintiff to re-lease the equipment would result in plaintiff's forgoing profits which it would otherwise make in the normal course of its business. The rule of mitigation of damages may not be imposed to deprive plaintiff of the benefit of subsequent contracts which would have been available irrespective of the original breach and consequently, the court concluded that the trial court's ruling that plaintiff was not required to mitigate damages because it had the opportunity to re-lease the repossessed equipment was correct (24 Cal. App. 3d 618, 622-623) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Mitigation Not Applicable to Certain Contracts

In Valle de Oro Bank v. Gamboa (1994) 26 Cal. App. 4th 1686, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 329 , the trial court entered judgment for the defendant in an action by a bank for the balance due on a promissory note executed by the defendant, who obtained the loan to purchase a vehicle, the vehicle having been destroyed by fire at a time when the unpaid balance of the loan exceeded the insurance coverage obtained bythe defendant. The court of appeal reversed, with directions to enter judgment for the bank for principal and accrued interest, holding that the trial court had committed reversible error in allowing the jury to consider the doctrine of mitigation of damages against the bank based on its failure to obtain insurance on the vehicle for the bank's direct benefit (26 Cal. App. 4th 1686, 1694) . The court noted that the doctrine of mitigation of damages holds that a plaintiff who suffers damage as a result of either a breach of contract or a tort has a duty to take reasonable steps to mitigate those damages and will not be able to recover for losses that could have been thus avoided (26 Cal. App. 4th 1686, 1691) (citing Seaboard Music Co. v. Germano (1972) 24 Cal. App. 3d 618, 622-623, 101 Cal. Rptr. 255 , discussed in § 65.121[3][a]). The court explained that the doctrine of mitigation of damages typically comes into play when the event producing injury or damage has already occurred, and the injured person then has the obligation to avoid continuing or enhanced damages through reasonable efforts (26 Cal. App. 4th 1686, 1691) . The court noted that the doctrine is used sparingly in the contract or commercial context (26 Cal. App. 4th 1686, 1691) . The court further noted that the issue of mitigation of damages in this case arose in a unique context, in the application of the doctrine to a lender's action to collect on a contractual obligation for the repayment of a loan, the collateral having been destroyed, and the lender having not exercised a contractual option to insure against the loss (26 Cal. App. 4th 1686, 1691) . Holding that the doctrine of mitigation of damages did not apply in this case, the court reasoned that use of the doctrine in this case did not provide a shield against the unwarranted piling up of damages but, rather, constituted a sword against the bank's contractual right to recover damages resulting from defendant's breach of contract (26 Cal. App. 4th 1686, 1694) . The bank had fully performed under the contract by disbursing the loan proceeds to the defendant. Since the contractual obligation to obtain comprehensive insurance on the vehicle was the defendant's and not the bank's, there was no damage for the bank to mitigate (26 Cal. App. 4th 1686, 1694) .

These points and authorities may be submitted by plaintiff in opposition to a motion for new trial on the ground of excessive damages if defendant contends that the damages were excessive because plaintiff should have accepted other employment in mitigation of damages but the only other employment available toplaintiff was of a different or inferior kind to that from which he or she had been discharged.

When appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Burden of Proof

Healdsburg Police Officers Ass'n v. Healdsburg (1976) 57 Cal. App. 3d 444, 129 Cal. Rptr. 216 , involved an appeal from a peremptory writ of mandate issued by the trial court ordering respondent to reinstate petitioners with back pay in their employment as police officers with respondent. Respondent asserted that ordering reinstatement with back pay without offset compensation was erroneous. Affirming the trial court, the court of appeal noted that the burden of proof is on the party whose breach caused damage to establish matters relied on to mitigate damage. According to the court, respondent failed to carry this burden of proof by failing to show that during their absence petitioners made or could have made earnings which could have been considered in mitigation of damages.

[b] Accepting Employment Not Substantially Similar Not Required

The factual background of Parker v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp. (1970) 3 Cal. 3d 176, 89 Cal. Rptr. 737, 474 P.2d 689 , is discussed in § 65.103[3][c]. In affirming the trial court's judgment, the Supreme Court held that plaintiff's refusal to accept defendant's offer of employment in a western could not be applied in mitigation of damages since that offer was for a different and inferior job. The mere circumstance that the original offer of employment was for a position in a musical review calling on plaintiff's talents as a dancer as well as an actress, and was to be produced in Los Angeles, whereas the offer of substitute employment was a straight dramatic role in a western type story taking place in an opal mine in Australia demonstrates the difference in kind between the two employments. The Court concluded that the female lead as a dramatic actress in a western style motion picture could not be considered the equivalent of or substantially similar to the lead in a song-and-dance production. The Court held that an employer must show that the other employment available to the employee was comparable or substantially similar to that of which the employee was deprived and an employee's rejection or failure to seek other employment of a different or inferior kind may not be used in order to mitigate damages.

§ 65.140 Supporting Contention That Damages for Breach of Contract Should Not Be Offset by Plaintiff's Collateral Benefit--Plaintiff's Tax Benefits Are Not Mitigating Factor in Compensatory Damage Calculation

[1] FORM Supporting Contention That Damages for Breach of Contract Should Not Be Offset by Plaintiff's Collateral Benefit--Plaintiff's Tax Benefits Are Not Mitigating Factor in Compensatory Damage Calculation

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

TAX BENEFITS PLAINTIFF RECEIVED FROM CONTRACT ARE NOT PROPERLY CONSIDERED AS MITIGATING FACTOR IN COMPENSATORY DAMAGE CALCULATIONS FOR BREACH OF CONTRACT. [THEREFORE, IT IS PROPER TO EXCLUDE EVIDENCE OF ANY TAX BENEFITS THAT PLAINTIFF MIGHT HAVE DERIVED FROM THE CONTRACT].

A. Determination Whether to Grant Defendant Collateral Source Credit Is Within Discretion of Court. A court's decision not to grant a defendant collateral source credit does not rely on the same legal basis as a decision to apply the collateral source rule; whether or not to grant a credit is within the court's discretion (see DePalma v. Westland Software House (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 1534, 1539, 276 Cal. Rptr. 214).

B. Plaintiff's Tax Benefits Should Not Be Considered as Mitigating Factor in Calculating Compensatory Damages for Breach of Contract. There is no statutory or common law precedent in a breach of contract action to give defendants collateral source credit for income tax benefits that plaintiffs may have received under the contract (DePalma v. Westland Software House (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 1534, 1538-1546, 276 Cal. Rptr. 214).

Civ. Code § 3358 Does Not Require Collateral Source Credit for Tax Benefits. Section 3358 of the Civil Code does not require any tax benefits, which a successful plaintiff might have derived from a breached contract, to be deducted in calculating compensatory damages (DePalma v. Westland Software House (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 1534, 1541-1542, 276 Cal. Rptr. 214).

[Optional] D. Evidence of Tax Consequences to Plaintiff Resulting From Contract Excludable in Breach of Contract Action Pursuant to Evid. Code § 352. Evidence of contract's tax consequences to plaintiff is proper exercise of trial court's discretion under Section 352 of the Evidence Code given complicated, time consuming and confusing processes required to admit and consider such minimally relevant evidence (DePalma v. Westland Software House (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 1534, 1544-1545, 276 Cal. Rptr. 214).

[Optional] E. Federal Tax Benefit Rules Makes Overall Benefit to Plaintiff Unlikely. The federal "tax benefit rule," which allows the government to recapture past tax benefits awarded to a taxpayer if a subsequent event changes the basis or is fundamentally inconsistent with the premise on which a deduction was initially based, is likely to cancel out any tax benefits a successful plaintiff may have derived from a breached contract (DePalma v. Westland Software House (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 1534, 1543-1544, 276 Cal. Rptr. 214).

[Optional] F. Attempt to Factor in Tax Consequences Would Be Speculative and Complicated. It is very complicated and speculative to predict any actual tax savings a plaintiff might derive from a breached contract and resulting damage award. Even the most sophisticated attempts to do so would result only in guesswork. Thus, evidence relating to tax benefits derived by a plaintiff on account of a breached contract may be excluded under Section 352 of the Evidence Code as well as on grounds of irrelevancy (DePalma v. Westland Software House (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 1534, 1544-1545, 276 Cal. Rptr. 214 (dicta as to Evid. Code § 352)

[Optional]G. Public Policy Considerations Prohibit Crediting Breaching Party With Tax Benefits. Several public policy considerations prevent deduction of plaintiff's tax benefits under a contract from being deducted from damages awarded in a breach of contract action. It serves as a deterrent to breach of contracts in general. It allows the tax benefits to be reaped by the party the government intended to benefit by them and thus allows the purpose of a particular tax policy, for example, to encourage investment in capital equipment, to be carried into effect. It favors the parties who honor their contracts, not those who breach them. To allow the breaching party credit for the tax benefits would be to transfer any windfall from the party who honored the contract to the party who breached it (DePalma v. Westland Software House (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 1534, 1545-1546, 276 Cal. Rptr. 214).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that any income tax benefits derived by a plaintiff on account of a contract need not be deducted in calculating compensatory damages for the breach of that contract [DePalma v. Westland Software House (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 1534, 1538-1546, 276 Cal. Rptr. 214 ; see Civ. Code §§ 3300, 3358]. Optional Paragraph D may be used if the contention is being used to support the argument that evidence of the tax benefits the plaintiff received from the contract should be excluded on the ground that the probative value of the evidence is outweighed by the time-consuming and confusing nature of the evidence [see Evid. Code § 352]. The subsequent optional paragraphs are all likely to be applicable in every situation, but are designated as optional so counsel can determine the depth of argument he or she wishes to use.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the particular procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the collateral source rule is not applicable to deprive a successful plaintiff of tax benefits received under a breached contract. For instance, they may be used to support a motion for summary judgment, a motion for new trial, or if written authorities are submitted on a motion regarding exclusion of evidence. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the particular case and the point of law stated. For example, counsel may wish to discuss the specific tax benefits that plaintiff allegedly received from the contract, and the complexity of their determination.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Determination Whether to Grant Defendant Collateral Source Credit Is Within Discretion of Court

In DePalma v. Westland Software House (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 1534, 276 Cal. Rptr. 214 , plaintiff, a physician, purchased and licensed computer hardware and software from defendant to use for billing purposes. The equipment did not function as promised, and plaintiff filed causes of action for breach of contract, failure of consideration, restitution, breach of warranty, and unlawful business practices. Defendant attempted to introduce plaintiff's tax returns to show that plaintiff had taken depreciation allowances and investment tax credits for the purchase of the computer system. Defendant contended that those tax benefits should be considered as an offset to any compensatory damages awarded to plaintiff. The evidence was refused as irrelevant. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court first noted that the question of whether tax benefits that may have been received by a plaintiff in a breach of contract action should be considered in determining compensatory damages was one of first impression in California (225 Cal. App. 3d 1534, 1537) . The court noted that, although the collateral source rule has been applied in tort actions in California since 1946 [see §§ 64.210, 64.211], it has never been extended to breach of contract actions (225 Cal. App. 3d 1534, 1538) . The court also noted that the trial court had not applied the collateral source rule as such, but had merely declinedto give defendants collateral source credit based on any tax benefit received by plaintiff (225 Cal. App. 3d 1534, 1539) . The court stated that in refusing to allow the credit, the trial court acted within its discretion given the absence of any statutory or common law precedent in a breach of contract action for giving defendants collateral source credit for income tax benefits that plaintiffs may have received (225 Cal. App. 3d 1534, 1539-1540) .

The court discussed Civ. Code § 3300 (which provides that a plaintiff in a breach of contract action receive damages equivalent to the full detriment it has suffered) and Civ. Code § 3358 (which limits the plaintiff's award to no more than "full compensation"), but said those statutes were of little help in determining the question before it (225 Cal. App. 3d 1534, 1539) . In fact, both of those sections were enacted in 1872, before the federal income tax was instituted (225 Cal. App. 3d 1534, 1540 n.5)

The court relied on Montana, Texas, and U.S. Supreme Court cases to establish three reasons why the collateral source rule should not apply to contract cases to require a defendant to receive credit for any income tax benefits a plaintiff may have obtained. First, the federal income tax "tax benefit rule" [I.R.C. § 111] allows the government to recapture past tax benefits awarded to a taxpayer if a subsequent event changes the basis or is fundamentally inconsistent with the premise on which a deduction was initially based (225 Cal. App. 3d 1534, 1541) . Most likely, this rule will cancel out any tax benefits a plaintiff may have received (225 Cal. App. 3d 1534, 1542) . Although the rule does not work with the same precision as the California scheme for calculating compensatory damages, in part because of changes in tax rates between the year in which the benefits were taken and the year of recapture, California courts do not require damage determinations to be made to the exact dollar (225 Cal. App. 3d 1534, 1543) . Civ. Code § 3358 does not require the trier of fact to scrutinize a plaintiff's tax returns in order to determine the exact amount of compensatory damages (225 Cal. App. 3d 1534, 1543-1544) .

Second, it is very complicated and speculative to predict any actual tax savings a plaintiff might derive. Variables include (1) what portion of the damage award will actually be received; (2) the year or years in which the damage award will actually be received; (3) what the plaintiff's prevailing tax rate will be in the year(s) of receipt; and (4) how a damage award will be construed under the continuously changing Internal Revenue Code. Even the most sophisticated attempts to predict the tax consequences of a damage award for breach of contract would result only in guesswork (225 Cal. App. 3d 1534, 1544) . Furthermore, the court said, although Evid. Code § 352 is not controlling in this case, a fair application of it provides a ground for a reasonable judge to rule against the admission of evidence relating to tax benefits derived by a plaintiff on account of the breached contract. The court of appeal said it would have upheld such an exercise of the trial court's discretion if the trial court in this case had not ruled the evidence inadmissible on relevancy grounds (225 Cal. App. 3d 1534, 1544-1545) .

The third constellation of considerations relied on by the court of appeal in refusing to allow credit to the defendant for any tax benefits plaintiff may have derived from the contract were public policy considerations, including the policy of deterring breaches of contract. Such a deterrent is imposed if contracting parties know that they must compensate the other party in full, without being able to subtract any tax benefits the other party might receive. The court said that as interested participants in an already overloaded court system, they, as well as those who are counting on the performance of their contracts, have a vested stake in discouraging others from breaching their contracts (225 Cal. App. 3d 1534, 1545) . Even if there were no federal tax benefit rule, or the Internal Revenue Service decided against applying it in this case, and even if, for example, plaintiff's $40,000 damage award coupled with plaintiff's $40,000 tax benefits resulted in a windfall for the plaintiff, giving defendant credit for the tax benefits would result in a windfall for defendant (225 Cal. App. 3d 1534, 1545) . Not allowing the breaching party credit for the other party's tax benefits serves two purposes: it lets the tax benefits remain with the party for whom they were intended (e.g., here to implement the intended government purpose of encouraging investment in capital equipment) (225 Cal. App. 3d 1534, 1545-1546) , and it favors the parties who honor their contracts, not those who breach them (225 Cal. App. 3d 1534, 1546) .

[b] Plaintiff's Tax Benefits Should Not Be Considered as Mitigating Factor in Calculating Compensatory Damages for Breach of Contract

Subpart A of Part II contains points and authorities for use in supporting [see §§ 66.20 -66.27] and opposing [see §§ 66.29 -66.36] the contention that plaintiff may recover damages for wrongful death, and points and authorities supporting [see § 66.28] and opposing [see § 66.39] the contention that a wrongful death action is improperly pleaded because it omits a person entitled to bring the action. This subpart also includes points and authorities supporting [see §§ 66.40-66.40A] and opposing [see §§ 66.41 -66.42] the contention that collateral estoppel applies to a wrongful death action, and points and authorities supporting [see § 66.43] and opposing [see § 66.44] the contention that punitive damages are not recoverable in wrongful death actions.

Subpart B of Part II includes memoranda of points and authorities supporting [see §§ 66.60 and 66.61] and opposing [see §§ 66.64 and 66.65] the contention that a cause of action did not survive the death of the person who commenced, or would have been entitled to commence, the action or proceeding, and memoranda opposing contentions that specific elements of damages are not recoverable in a survival action [see §§ 66.66 and 66.67]. This subpart also includes points and authorities supporting [see § 66.68] and opposing [see § 66.69] the contention that punitive damages may not be recovered after the death of the defendant.

A. Wrongful Death Actions

6-66 California Points & Authorities § 66.20

§ 66.20 Supporting Contention That Plaintiff May Not Recover Damages for Wrongful Death--Plaintiff Is Not Person Entitled to Assert Wrongful Death Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF MAY NOT BRING THIS ACTION BECAUSE HE/SHE IS NOT A PERSON ENTITLED TO ASSERT A WRONGFUL DEATH CAUSE OF ACTION UNDER THE STATUTE.

A. Cause of Action Defined. If the death of a person was caused by the wrongful act or neglect of another, those persons designated by statute, or a personal representative on their behalf, may maintain an action for damages against the person causing the death (Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60).

B. Court Bound by Statute. Because the cause of action for wrongful death is wholly statutory in nature, the courts are bound by the legislature's declarations of how far it extends and in favor of whom it exists (see Justus v. Atchison (1977) 19 Cal. 3d 564, 571, 575, 139 Cal. Rptr. 97, 565 P.2d 122 , disapproved on other grounds, Ochoa v. Superior Court (1985) 39 Cal. 3d 159, 171, 216 Cal. Rptr. 661, 703 P.2d 1 ; Mayerhoff v. Kaiser Found. Health Plan, Inc. (1977) 71 Cal. App. 3d 803, 807, 138 Cal. Rptr. 319).

C. Entitled Persons Defined. A wrongful death claim may be asserted only by or on behalf of: (1) a decedent's surviving spouse, domestic partner, children, and issue of deceased children, or, if there is no surviving issue of the decedent, any person who would be entitled to the property of the decedent by intestate succession, including the surviving spouse or domestic partner; (2) whether or not qualified under (1), if they were dependent on the decedent, the putative spouse, children of the putative spouse, stepchildren, or parents; or (3) a minor, whether or not qualified under (1) or (2), if, at the time of the decedent's death, the minor resided for the previous 180 days in the decedent's household and was dependent on the decedent for one-half or more of the minor's support (Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60).

[Optional] D. Personal Representative Can Bring Action Only on Behalf of Entitled Person. Decedent's personal representative may bring an action for wrongful death only as the statutory trustee for persons designated by statute as entitled to a wrongful death cause of action, and cannot bring such an action if there is no person so entitled (Webster v. Norwegian Mining Co. (1902) 137 Cal. 399, 400-401, 70 P. 276 ; California State Auto. Ass'n, Inter-Ins. Bureau v. Jacobson (1972) 24 Cal. App. 3d 850, 852, 101 Cal. Rptr. 366).

[Optional] E. Putative Spouse Defined. As used in Code of Civil Procedure Section 377.60(b), a person is a "putative spouse" only if he/she is the surviving spouse of a void or voidable marriage who is found by the court to have believed in good faith that the marriage to the decedent was valid (Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60(b)).

[Optional] F. Potential Heirs May Not Bring Wrongful Death Action Unless They Are Entitled Persons. An action for wrongful death may not be maintained by or on behalf of persons who are potential heirs under the laws of intestate succession if those potential heirs are not entitled persons under the wrongful death statute (Mayo v. White (1986) 178 Cal. App. 3d 1083, 1088, 224 Cal. Rptr. 373).

[Optional] G. Heir's Disclaimer of Interest Does Not Affect Entitled Person Determination. An action for damages for wrongful death is personal and may not be assigned. Hence, an heir entitled to sue for wrongful death who files a disclaimer of interest in a decedent's estate, as authorized by Probate Code Sections 275-288, does not affect who may maintain an action for wrongful death (Mayo v. White (1986) 178 Cal. App. 3d 1083, 1090-1091, 224 Cal. Rptr. 373).

[Optional] H. Proof of Dependence on Decedent Required of Some Potential Plaintiffs. To be an entitled person under Code of Civil Procedure Section 377.60(a) or (b), plaintiff must allege and prove that he/she was dependent on the decedent (Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60(b), (c)).

[Optional] I. Adopted Child Not Entitled Person. Because an adoption severs the parent-child relationship, an adopted child does not have standing under Code of Civil Procedure Section 377.60 to bring an action for the wrongful death of his or her biological mother (Phraner v. Cote Mart, Inc. (1997) 55 Cal. App. 4th 166, 171, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 740).

[Optional] J. Child Not Entitled Person if Court Order Terminated Parent-Child Relationship. If a court order finally and conclusively terminates the relationship between a birth parent and his or her child, that child loses standing to sue for the wrongful death of that parent, regardless of whether the child has been adopted by another at the time of the death of the natural parent (Jackson v. Fitzgibbons (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 329, 335, 25 Cal. Rptr. 3d 478).

[Optional] K. Laws of Intestate Succession Apply to Resolve Disputes as to Status of Child. The laws of intestate succession apply when a question exists as to whether a party qualifies as a child of decedent with standing to bring a wrongful death action under Code of Civil Procedure Section 377.60(a) (Chey anna M. v. A.C. Nielsen Co. (1998) 66 Cal. App. 4th 855, 864-865, 78 Cal. Rptr. 2d 335).

[Optional] L. Subjective Good-Faith Belief in Validity of Marriage to Decedent Insufficient to Confer Standing to Bring Action. A plaintiff's good-faith belief in the validity of his or her marriage to the decedent does not confer standing to bring a wrongful death action if the belief that a lawful marriage existed is not objectively reasonable (Welch v. State of California (2000) 83 Cal. App. 4th 1374, 1378-1379, 100 Cal. Rptr. 2d 430).

[Optional] M. Status as Survivor of Decedent Determined at Time of Decedent's Death. A spouse, child, or issue of a decedent survives the decedent for purposes of establishing standing to sue for wrongful death if the spouse, child, or issue outlives the decedent, even if that person dies before actually filing a wrongful death action, in which case the proper plaintiff would be the personal representative or successor in interest of the surviving, but now deceased, spouse, child, or issue (Chavez v. Carpenter (2001) 91 Cal. App. 4th 1433, 1441-1444, 111 Cal. Rptr. 2d 534).

[Optional] N. Mexican "Concubine" Has No Standing to Bring Action. A "concubine" under Mexican law has no

standing to file a wrongful death action in California, because the relationship, although conferring some legal rights, does not confer all of the rights and duties of marriage (Rosales v. Battle (2003) 113 Cal. App. 4th 1178, 1184, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 13).

[Optional] O. Standing as Heir Determined Under California Law. California laws of intestate succession govern who may bring a wrongful death action in California, even if a foreign plaintiff is an heir under foreign law (Rosales v. Battle (2003) 113 Cal. App. 4th 1178, 1184-1185, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 13).

[Optional] P. Opposite-Sex Domestic Partners Not Meeting Statutory Criteria Lack Standing to Sue. Unmarried domestic cohabitants who do not meet the criteria for a domestic partnership as provided in Family Code Section 297 do not have standing to sue for wrongful death (Holguin v. Flores (2004) 122 Cal. App. 4th 428, 435-437, 18 Cal. Rptr. 3d 749).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a plaintiff may not recover damages for the wrongful death of a decedent because the plaintiff is not a person entitled to a wrongful death cause of action pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60. If a plaintiff is a personal representative, counsel may use optional Paragraph D. If a plaintiff alleges the status of a putative spouse, counsel may use optional Paragraph E and optional Paragraph K to refute that status. If plaintiffs are potential heirs who are not entitled to a wrongful death action, counsel may use optional Paragraph F. If plaintiffs are substituted heirs following a disclaimer of decedent's estate by actual heirs, counsel may use optional Paragraph G. If the dependency of the plaintiff on the decedent is disputed, counsel may use optional Paragraph H. If the plaintiff is an adopted child of the decedent, counsel may use optional Paragraph I.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of statutory entitlement. For example, this form may be used to support a demurrer to a complaint that fails to allege facts sufficient to show that the plaintiff is a person entitled to a wrongful death cause of action [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 430.10(e), 430.30(a)]. These points and authorities may also be used to support a defendant's motion for summary judgment [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should assert facts tending to establish that the plaintiff does not have a relationship with the decedent that entitles him or her to a wrongful death cause of action. If optional Paragraph E is used, counsel should show that the plaintiff alleging a relationship as a putative spouse fails to meet the statutory definition of putative spouse. If optional Paragraph H is used, counsel should discuss facts tending to show that the requisite dependence on the decedent either was not alleged, or did not in fact exist.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Court Bound by Statute

Justus v. Atchison (1977) 19 Cal. 3d 564, 139 Cal. Rptr. 97, 565 P.2d 122 , disapproved on other grounds, Ochoa v. Superior Court (1985) 39 Cal. 3d 159, 171, 216 Cal. Rptr. 661, 703 P.2d 1 , was a wrongful death action brought by a married couple, as heirs of their unborn child, against defendant hospital and physicians. The action arose out of the stillbirth of a fetus occurring in the course of delivery. The trial court sustained defendant's demurrer without leave to amend and entered a judgment of dismissal. Plaintiffs appealed to the Supreme Court, which affirmed on the ground that a fetus is not a "person" within the meaning of the wrongful death statute until there has been a live birth. In reaching its conclusion, the Court recognized that several of plaintiffs' contentions were supported by out-of-state decisions. Those decisions would be relevant if the cause of action was based on judge-made law, but in California the cause of action for wrongful death is a pure creature of statute. The Court repeated the oft-cited statement that the wrongful death action exists in California only so far and in favor of such person as the legislative power may declare (19 Cal. 3d 564, 571, 575) .

Mayerhoff v. Kaiser Found. Health Plan, Inc. (1977) 71 Cal. App. 3d 803, 138 Cal. Rptr. 319 , was a wrongful death action filed by decedent's dependent parents, alleging that the decedent's death was caused by defendant's negligent care and medical malpractice. Defendants demurred on the ground that the lawsuit was barred by the earlier dismissal with prejudice of a wrongful death action against defendants brought by decedent's spouse and child. The trial court sustained the demurrer, stating that it had taken judicial notice of the prior dismissal with prejudice and that all persons otherwise entitled to sue defendants were foreclosed by the prior proceedings. Plaintiffs appealed and the court of appeal affirmed, holding that the wrongful death statute contemplated only one action or joint actions by the various classes of persons entitled to sue. The responsibility placed on plaintiffs to join their action with all other wrongful death plaintiffs is the same responsibility or burden which has faced all individual plaintiffs since the original enactment of the wrongful death statute. In reaching this conclusion, the court considered language in Salmon v. Rathjens (1907) 152 Cal. 290, 294, 92 P. 733 [see § 66.28[3][a]], and Cross v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1964) 60 Cal. 2d 690, 694, 36 Cal. Rptr. 321, 388 P.2d 353 [see § 66.31[3][b]], stating that the statute gave a single joint cause of action to all the entitled plaintiffs and did not permit a series of suits by plaintiffs against the tortfeasor for their individual damages. To plaintiffs' argument that such an interpretation of the statute would allow parties in one cause of action to bind parties in a separate cause of action and require an entitled plaintiff to search out all other entitled plaintiffs, the court responded with language from Watkins v. Nutting (1941) 17 Cal. 2d 490, 498, 110 P.2d 384 , asserting that the suit must be brought in the name of the persons to whom the right is given. Finally, the court underlined the statutory language which states that the entitled plaintiffs may maintain an action for damages. The cause of action for wrongful death is wholly statutory in origin, so absent a constitutional basis for departure from a clear expression of legislative intent, the courts are bound thereby. Even though the statute was amended in 1968 to provide an action for dependent parents, there was no indication that the legislature intended to depart from the rule that only one action may be brought for wrongful death (71 Cal. App. 3d 803, 807) .

[b] Personal Representative Can Bring Action Only on Behalf of Entitled Person

Webster v. Norwegian Mining Co. (1902) 137 Cal. 399, 70 P. 276 , was a wrongful death action brought by the administrator of decedent's estate to recover damages for the death of decedent. Apparently, the trial court granted a judgment in favor of defendant on the ground that the failure of the complaint to allege that decedent left any heirs rendered the pleading fatally defective. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, holding that although the wrongful death statute authorizes the administrator of an estate to bring an action to recover damages for the death of a person, it permits the administrator to do so only on behalf of the heirs entitled to bring the action. If the existence of heirs is not alleged in the complaint, the court must assume that there are none (137 Cal. 399, 400-401) .

NOTE:
In 1993, the legislature amended the wrongful death statute to eliminate the use of the term "heirs" to delineate persons entitled to a wrongful death cause of action. Entitled persons include, but are not limited to, certain heirs [see Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60]. The requirement that wrongful death plaintiffs are limited to those persons specifically enumerated by statute, as set out in Paragraph C of this memorandum, still applies. However, the 1993 amendment was not intended to adversely affect the standing of any party who had standing to bring a wrongful death action under the prior law [see Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60(d), (e)].

California State Auto. Ass'n, Inter-Ins. Bureau v. Jacobson (1972) 24 Cal. App. 3d 850, 101 Cal. Rptr. 366 , was a wrongful death action brought by a stepfather in his capacity as special administrator for the wrongful death of his unadopted stepdaughter against the owner of the car she was driving at the time of the fatal collision. The owner's insurer then brought a declaratory relief action against the stepfather to determine the insurer's liability under the uninsured motorist provision of its policy. In the declaratory relief action, the trial court found that the stepfather was not an "heir" within the meaning of wrongful death statute as then written and the decedent had left no other heirs. Therefore, the decedent's stepfather could not recover for her wrongful death either individually as an heir or as the special administrator of her estate. The stepfather appealed, and the court of appeal affirmed. The decedent's stepfather was not entitled to maintain the action individually because he was not an "heir" as required by the statute. Furthermore, although the statute authorizes an action by a decedent's personal representative who acts as a statutory trustee for the decedent's heirs, a personal representative is not entitled to bring the action when, as here, there are no heirs (24 Cal. App. 3d 850, 852) .

NOTE:
In 1993, the legislature amended the wrongful death statute to eliminate the use of the term "heirs" to delineate persons entitled to a wrongful death cause of action. Entitled persons include, but are not limited to, certain heirs [see Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60]. The role of the personal representative as set out in optional Paragraph D of this memorandum remains the same.

[c] Potential Heirs May Not Bring Wrongful Death Action Unless They Are Entitled Persons

The facts and procedural background of Mayo v. White (1986) 178 Cal. App. 3d 1083, 224 Cal. Rptr. 373 , are discussed in § 66.20[3][d]. In reversing the judgment of dismissal with directions to allow the administrator to amend the complaint to add parents as plaintiffs, the court of appeal said that the decedent's brother and sisters, although potential heirs under former Prob. Code § 225 (now Prob. Code § 6402(c)), were not proper heirs at law and were ineligible to bring an action for wrongful death under former Code Civ. Proc. § 377 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60] (178 Cal. App. 3d 1083, 1088) .

NOTE:
In 1993, the legislature amended the wrongful death statute to eliminate the use of the term "heirs" to delineate persons entitled to a wrongful death cause of action. Entitled persons currently include persons who would be entitled to the decedent's property by intestate succession if there is no surviving spouse, domestic partner, child, or issue of deceased children [Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60(a)]. Thus, the determination of potential heirship can still be relevant under the revised statutory scheme. Moreover, the 1993 amendment was not intended to adversely affect the standing of any party who had standing to bring a wrongful death action under the prior law [see Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60(d), (e)]

[d] Effect of Heir's Disclaimer of Interest

Mayo v. White (1986) 178 Cal. App. 3d 1083, 224 Cal. Rptr. 373 , was an action for damages for wrongful death brought by the administrator of a minor's estate against two corporations and the minor's parents on behalf of the deceased minor's siblings. The deceased minor was riding a mini-cycle around the swimming pool in the backyard of his home when the cycle overturned and he was thrown into the pool. He died the following day. The complaint alleged that the parents had renounced heirship and any interests in the decedent's estate, that they were no longer the decedent's heirs at law, and that the suit was therefore brought on behalf of the siblings as the decedent's heirs at law. The first cause of action alleged that the corporate defendants were liable for decedent's death because of a defect in the mini-cycle that made it unstable, with a propensity to overturn. The second and third causes of action alleged the parents were responsible for their son's death in negligently failing to supervise and care for the boy's safety and in negligently maintaining their premises in failing to fence the swimming pool or otherwise make the backyard safe for minor children. The mother demurred generally and specially to the complaint contending that (1) the siblings were not heirs of the decedent within the meaning of former Code Civ. Proc. § 377 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60], and (2) the complaint was uncertain because it failed to state whether the renunciation of heirship was written or oral or properly filed. The trial court sustained the special demurrer and sustained the general demurrer without leave to amend. Plaintiff appealed, contending that because the parents had renounced any interest in the decedent's estate as authorized by the Probate Code, they must be treated as though they had predeceased the decedent and hence the siblings were heirs within the meaning of former Code Civ. Proc. § 37 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60].

The court of appeal rejected this contention and held that the general demurrer was properly sustained, but reversed with orders to permit the plaintiff leave to amend. The court said that a cause of action for wrongful death is personal to those persons authorized to maintain the suit under the statute, and may not be assigned (178 Cal. App. 3d 1083, 1090) .

The court stated that (1) in creating a cause of action for wrongful death the legislature has defined as "heirs" those persons who would be entitled to succeed to the decedent's property under the laws of intestate succession as provided in the Probate Code; (2) under those laws, when the decedent leaves neither spouse nor issue, the estate goes to the decedent's parents, or to the decedent's brothers and sisters if the parents are dead; and (3) the parents are the only proper heirs at law for the purposes of maintaining a wrongful death action under former Code Civ. Proc. § 377 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60]. With respect to the effect of the disclaimer, the court explained that a cause of action for wrongful death is clearly not an asset in the decedent's estate, but, on the contrary, is vested in entitled persons, and that any recovery is solely for the benefit of those persons to compensate them for injuries actually suffered by reason of the decedent's death. In view of this and the fact that the cause of action is not assignable, the court concluded that when the heirs renounce their heirship by filing a disclaimer of their interest in the decedent's estate, the disclaimer does not encompass their cause of action for wrongful death (178 Cal. App. 3d 1083, 1088-1091) .

NOTE:

In 1993, the legislature amended the wrongful death statute to eliminate the use of the term "heirs" to delineate persons entitled to a wrongful death cause of action. "Entitled persons" include, but is not limited to, certain heirs. The effect of an heir's disclaimer as set out in optional Paragraph G of this memorandum remains the same.

[e] Adopted Child Not Entitled Person

In Phraner v. Cote Mart, Inc. (1997) 55 Cal. App. 4th 166, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 740 an adopted child claimed that she was a child within the plain meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60 and thus entitled to bring an action for the wrongful death of her biological mother. The trial court granted defendants' motion for summary judgment on the ground that plaintiff lacked standing to assert a wrongful death action.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that plaintiff's adoption severed the parent-child relationship, thus she did not have standing under of Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60 to bring an action for the wrongful death of her biological mother (55

Cal. App. 4th 166, 171) . Plaintiff made a number of arguments, all of which were rejected by the court. First, the plaintiff relied on the fact that when the former statute, Code of Civ. Proc. § 377 was repealed and reenacted in 1992, the term "heir" was replaced by the term "children." She argued that this change was indicative of legislative intent to include children previously adopted in the class of people permitted to bring a wrongful death action. The court found that legislative history and case law indicated otherwise; that the change was intended to allow the children of a decedent to maintain an action for the wrongful death of a parent even though the parent's entire estate was community property bequeathed to the surviving spouse. Second, the plaintiff claimed that she was entitled to bring this action because she was decedent's child under the plain meaning of the word. Since the statute did not define "children," the court looked to Prob. Code § 6451, which governs the effect of an adoption on the parent and child relationship. That statute provides that an adoption severs the relationship of parent and child between an adopted person and a natural parent of the adopted person unless the natural parent and the adopted person lived together at any time as parent and child, or the natural parent was married to or cohabitating with the other natural parent at the time the person was conceived and died before the person's birth, and the adoption was by the spouse of either of the natural parents or after the death of either of the natural parents. In this case because plaintiff was taken home by her adoptive parents two days after she was born, never lived with her biological mother, and in all other ways failed to fit within the exception delineated above, the court determined that her parental relationship with her biological mother was severed by the adoption. Third, the plaintiff argued that the court should judicially create standing in wrongful death actions for children who, like her, maintained a relationship with their biological parent after the adoption. The court declined, stating that granting standing to plaintiff would expand the category of people able to recover for the loss beyond that which was contemplated by the legislature in drafting the statute. Finally, the plaintiff claimed that the failure to give her standing violated equal protection. The court disagreed, finding that it was not irrational that the legislature prohibits a child adopted by others to recover for the wrongful death of his or her biological parent (55 Cal. App. 4th 166, 171) .

[f] Child Not Entitled Person if Court Order Terminated Parent-Child Relationship

In Jackson v. Fitzgibbons (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 329, 25 Cal. Rptr. 3d 478 , the plaintiff was a minor child who brought a wrongful death action against a doctor accused of negligence in the death of the plaintiff's birth mother. However, a year and a half prior to the mother's death, the juvenile court had terminated the mother's parental rights over the plaintiff, and shortly after the mother's death, the plaintiff was adopted by her uncle, with whom she had been living for several years. The doctor filed a motion for summary judgment on the grounds that the plaintiff did not have standing to pursue a wrongful death action for the death of her birth mother because that parent-child relationship had been previously terminated by court order. The trial court granted the motion, and the plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court noted that an order terminating parental rights totally and irrevocably severs the parent-child relationship and extinguishes all rights and obligations between the parent and child, freeing the child for adoption by new parents (127 Cal. App. 4th 329, 334) . Because the termination order freed the plaintiff from her relationship with her birth mother, she had no standing to pursue a wrongful death action, and it made no difference that the plaintiff had not yet been formally adopted by her uncle at the time of the birth mother's death. The court noted that the wrongful death statute was intended to provide a mechanism to compensate for the loss of companionship and other losses associated with the death of a family member. If a parent-child relationship has been legally terminated, however, the child no longer has any expectation or right of recovery for the loss of comfort, companionship, or support of the parent (127 Cal. App. 4th 329, 335) . The court also rejected the plaintiff's claim that she had standing under Prob. Code §§ 6450, 6451, or 6402. The court held that those statutes, which deal with a child's right to intestate succession, do not purport to deal with the situation in which there has been a court order conclusively terminating the parent-child relationship. As such, they were inapplicable (127 Cal. App. 4th 329, 335-336 & n.4).

Cheyanna M. v. A.C. Nielsen Co. (1998) 66 Cal. App. 4th 855, 78 Cal. Rptr. 2d 335 , is discussed in § 66.30[3][a].

[h] Subjective Good-Faith Belief in Validity of Marriage to Decedent Insufficient to Confer Standing to Bring Action

In Welch v. State of California (2000) 83 Cal. App. 4th 1374, 100 Cal. Rptr. 2d 430 , the plaintiff brought a wrongful death action for the death of the man with whom she had been living for almost 30 years. Although the plaintiff and the decedent had conducted themselves as husband and wife, they never complied with the requirements for a valid marriage under California law. Although they had exchanged personal wedding vows and shared the benefits of their incomes and the burdens of their debts, filed joint tax returns as husband and wife, and held property as husband and wife, they never acquired a marriage license or engaged in a solemnization ceremony. The trial court granted the defendants' motion for summary adjudication of issues on the ground that the plaintiff did not have standing to sue for the wrongful death of the decedent, because she could not reasonably have believed she had a valid marriage with decedent and therefore she did not meet the statutory requirements for being considered a putative spouse. The plaintiff appealed, arguing that the facts sufficiently demonstrated that she believed in good faith that she had a valid marriage with the decedent, even in the absence of a marriage license or solemnization ceremony, and that in conjunction with the outward appearance of a marriage, summary adjudication of the issue of her good-faith belief was improper.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court held that a subjective good-faith belief in the validity of a marriage is not enough to confer status as a putative spouse under the wrongful death statute. Instead, the standard for determining whether the belief is held in good faith is an objective standard. Applying this objective standard to the plaintiff's situation, the court concluded that the plaintiff had no reasonable basis for believing that a valid marriage existed. The plaintiff and the decedent had made no attempt to comply with the procedural requirements for a lawful California marriage, even though the plaintiff must have known about these requirements because she had been legally married and divorced twice before living with the decedent. In addition, because California abolished common law marriage in 1895, the plaintiff's claim that their common law vows established a valid marriage was unreasonable as a matter of law (83 Cal. App. 4th 1374, 1378-1379) .

[i] Status as Survivor of Decedent Determined at Time of Decedent's Death

In Chavez v. Carpenter (2001) 91 Cal. App. 4th 1433, 111 Cal. Rptr. 2d 534 , the decedent was a 24-year-old, unmarried man who was killed by a drunk driver. The parents of the decedent brought suit for negligence and wrongful death against the drunk driver, as did the mother of the decedent's minor daughter. Although the decedent's daughter was alive at the time of the decedent's death, she died one month later in an unrelated automobile accident, eight months before the wrongful death action was filed. The defendant moved for summary adjudication of the action brought by the decedent's parents on the grounds that they had no standing to sue for wrongful death. The trial court granted summary adjudication for the defendant, and after all remaining claims were settled, a stipulated judgment was entered to facilitate appeal. The plaintiffs then appealed.

The court of appeal reversed on the grounds that a triable issue of fact remained as to whether the decedent's parents had standing to sue as financial dependents of the decedent, but agreed with the trial court that the parents had no standing to sue as heirs of the decedent. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60(a), a wrongful death action may be brought by an heir other than a surviving spouse, child, or issue of the decedent only if there is no surviving issue of the decedent. Therefore, the parents had standing to sue as heirs only if the decedent's daughter was not a surviving issue of the decedent. Using the common dictionary definition of "surviving," the court of appeal concluded that surviving issue are those who outlive the decedent. Although the court relied on the dictionary definition, the court noted that this conclusion was bolstered by Prob. Code § 6403(a), which indirectly defines a surviving intestate heir as one who outlives the decedent by 120 hours. Therefore, the decedent's minor daughter was a surviving issue and the parents had no standing to sue as heirs (91 Cal. App. 4th 1433, 1440-1442) . The court also rejected the plaintiffs' claim that survival must be determined as of the date that the wrongful death suit is filed. The court explained that a wrongful death cause of action arises when the decedent dies, the decedent's daughter was alive at the time of her father's death and therefore owned the cause of action, this wrongful death claim survived the daughter's subsequent death a month later, and therefore the party with proper standing to bring the wrongful death suit was the daughter's successor in interest, rather than the decedent's parents (91 Cal. App. 4th 1433, 1443-1444) .

[j] Mexican "Concubine" Has No Standing to Bring Action

In Rosales v. Battle (2003) 113 Cal. App. 4th 1178, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 13 , the plaintiffs were the four children of a man killed in a California car accident and the children's mother, all of whom were Mexican citizens living in Mexico. The plaintiffs brought a wrongful death action in California against the driver of the car that struck the decedent and that driver's employer. The defendants filed a motion for summary adjudication arguing that the children's mother did not have standing as a wrongful death plaintiff, because although the decedent and the woman lived together with the children when the decedent returned to Mexico on the weekends, the two were not married, and she did not otherwise qualify as a proper plaintiff under California law. The trial court granted the motion.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court noted that the decedent and the woman were not married under Mexican law, although the woman was formally recognized under Mexican law as the decedent's "concubine." Under Mexican law, that informal status, which is conferred in a formal judgment by a civil court, confers on the woman the right to inherit the man's estate on his death, the right to receive alimony from the man's estate under a valid will, and the right to collect the man's life insurance, funeral benefits, and retirement funds. However, the court also noted that the status does not confer all the rights and duties of a legal marriage, nor even the same rights of a common law marriage in the United States, pointing to the fact that either the "concubine" or her partner can end the relationship without the consent of the other. Because the relationship is not the equivalent of a marriage, or even a common law marriage, the court held that the status does not confer on the woman standing to bring a wrongful death action in California as a surviving spouse (113 Cal. App. 4th 1178, 1183-1184) .

[k] Standing as Heir Determined Under California Law

The factual and procedural background of Rosales v. Battle (2003) 113 Cal. App. 4th 1178, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 13 , is described in § 66.20[3][j]. The plaintiff also argued that she had standing as a wrongful death plaintiff in California because, as a concubine, she was an heir of the decedent under the laws of intestate succession in Mexico. However, for purposes of determining standing to bring an action for wrongful death in California, the court of appeal held that status as an heir is determined under California law. The plaintiff would not be entitled to inherit under California law because she was not married to the decedent, and therefore she had no standing as a wrongful death plaintiff in California (113 Cal. App. 4th 1178, 1184-1185) . The court also noted that even if the woman were an heir under California law, that status would not confer on her standing as a wrongful death plaintiff because the decedent left four surviving children. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60, status as an heir can confer standing as a wrongful death plaintiff only if there are no surviving issue of the decedent (113 Cal. App. 4th 1178, 1185-1186) .

[l] Opposite-Sex Domestic Partners Not Meeting Statutory Criteria Lack Standing to Sue

In Holguin v. Flores (2004) 122 Cal. App. 4th 428, 18 Cal. Rptr. 3d 749 , the plaintiff had been living with his girlfriend in an intimate and caring relationship for three years at the time of her death in a car accident. The plaintiff brought an action for wrongful death against the driver and the owner of the truck that collided with the decedent's car. The defendants demurred to the complaint on the grounds that the plaintiff did not have standing to sue because he was not married to the decedent and did not otherwise meet the statutory criteria for a domestic partner under Fam. Code § 297 as required to have standing to sue under the wrongful death statute, Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60. The plaintiff argued that he met all statutory requirements as a domestic partner of the decedent, except the requirement that he and his partner be of the same sex or that one of the partners be over the age of 62 and eligible for old-age social security benefits. The plaintiff further argued that extending the right to sue for wrongful death to some cohabiting couples but not to others solely on the basis of gender or age violated equal protection principles of both the United States and California Constitutions. The trial court disagreed and sustained the demurrer, and the plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court of appeal held that unmarried cohabitants who do not meet the criteria of Fam. Code § 297(a) and (b) do not have standing to sue for wrongful death. The court noted that Fam. Code § 297 explicitly states that persons of opposite sex may not constitute a domestic partnership under that statute unless one or both of the partners is over the age of 62. Moreover, the statutory history made it clear that the legislature intended to provide rights for domestic partnerships that met the statutory requirements and were registered as such, not to provide new rights and benefits for unmarried cohabiting couples in general (122 Cal. App. 4th 428, 435-437) . The court also noted that the right to recover for wrongful death is a right created solely by statute and that the legislature is not required to extend this right to every conceivable class of persons. The court then held that the legislative decision--to extend the right to sue for wrongful death to same-sex couples, who are not permitted by law to marry, and to older opposite-sex couples, who would suffer adverse economic consequences in the form of a loss of social security benefits if they married, but not to provide the right to sue for wrongful death to other opposite-sex couples who cohabit, but could marry without generally suffering adverse social security consequences--was a rational distinction that did not violate constitutional principles of equal protection (122 Cal. App. 4th 428, 437-443) .

[a] Entitled Plaintiffs Defined

Vogel v. Pan Am. World Airways, Inc. (S.D.N.Y. 1978) 450 F. Supp. 224 , was a wrongful death action brought by a decedent's meretricious spouse. A federal district court, applying the substantive law of California to a wrongful death action, held that a meretricious spouse did not qualify as an heir under former Code Civ. Proc. § 377(b)(2) (450 F. Supp. 224, 225-227) . The court stated that the rights accorded meretricious spouses in Marvin v. Marvin (1976) 18 Cal. 3d 660, 684, 134 Cal. Rptr. 815, 557 P.2d 106 , did not extend to qualifying as wrongful death plaintiffs since wrongful death remains purely a creature of statute (450 F. Supp. 224, 225-226) . The court also held that former Code Civ. Proc. § 377 did not deny plaintiff equal protection or due process since there were at least three sets of facts that reasonably could be conceived to justify the distinction between putative and meretricious spouses in former Code Civ. Proc. § 377(b) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60(b)]. The legislature could reasonably have concluded that: (1) the absence of a formal marriage ceremony evidenced a lack of permanent commitment, and the pecuniary loss to plaintiff would thus be too speculative to calculate; (2) the lack of any documentary evidence of a marriage ceremony, unlike the case of a putative spouse, may lead to fraudulent claims and complicated proof at trial; and (3) the failure to provide statutory property rights would encourage the state's citizens to enter into the recognized state interest of formal marriage (450 F. Supp. 224, 226) .

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF DOES NOT HAVE A WRONGFUL DEATH CAUSE OF ACTION BECAUSE THE ACTION IS NOT BASED ON THE DEATH OF A PERSON.

A. Wrongful Death Action Defined. [See § 66.20, Paragraph A.]

B. Court Bound by Statute. [See § 66.20, Paragraph B.]

C. Death of Person Is Required. A cause of action for wrongful death requires the death of a person (see Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60).

[Optional] D. Death of Fetus Cannot Be Basis of Action. The death of an unborn fetus does not meet the requirement that the action be based on the death of a person (Justus v. Atchison (1977) 19 Cal. 3d 564, 577-580, 139 Cal. Rptr. 97, 565 P.2d 122).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be used to oppose a wrongful death action on the ground that the action does not allege the death of a person. The optional paragraph sets forth the specific argument supported by case law, that the action cannot seek damages based on the death of an unborn fetus, but the general point could also be made, for example, if the action was filed before the decedent has actually died.

These points and authorities may be combined, where appropriate, with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that a wrongful death action requires the death of a person. For example, this form may be used to support an objection by demurrer to a complaint on the ground that it does not state facts sufficient to state a cause of action where such ground appears on the face of the complaint, or from any matter of which the court is required to or may take judicial notice [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 430.10(e), 430.30(a)]. These points and authorities may also be used to support a defendant's motion for summary judgment [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]. The points and authorities in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include discussion showing how the facts establish that the action is based on the death of an unborn fetus.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Death of Fetus Cannot Be Basis of Action

The factual background of Justus v. Atchison (1977) 19 Cal. 3d 564, 139 Cal. Rptr. 97, 565 P.2d 122 , is discussed in § 66.20[3][a]. After determining that the question of whether or not a wrongful death action may be based on the death of an unborn fetus is one of legislative intent, the Court concluded that when the legislature determines to confer legal personality on unborn fetuses for certain limited purposes, it expresses that intent in specific and appropriate terms. Although the Court did not believe that the legislature originally considered the question of unborn fetuses when it enacted former Code Civ. Proc. § 377 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60], it reasoned that the legislature had the opportunity to amend the statute in the ensuing century to achieve this purpose. The Court also rejected plaintiffs' argument that the Court's interpretation of former Code Civ. Proc. § 377 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60] denied them equal protection of the laws. Quoting from earlier California Supreme Court decisions, the Court analyzed the issue in terms of the legislature's constitutional obligation when if confers new rights of action on particular classes of citizens for injuries not previously actionable. The test employed is that the legislature's decision is conclusive unless it appears beyond rational doubt that the classification arbitrarily discriminates against persons or classes similarly situated. The Court could find no such arbitrary discrimination since the only heirs of the fetus are its parents for whom there is no appreciable economic loss, but a loss of consortium. Such a loss does not equal that of parents who have experienced the actual companionship of a child.

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT FAILS [BECAUSE IT or TO THE EXTENT THAT IT] DOES NOT CLAIM DAMAGES, THE ONLY RELIEF PERMITTED UNDER THE PROVISIONS OF CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE SECTION 377.61.

A. Wrongful Death Action Defined. [See § 66.20, Paragraph A.]

B. Court Bound by Statutory Definition. [See § 66.20, Paragraph B.]

C. Damages Are Required. Damages are the only remedy available in a wrongful death action, and must be alleged for a cause of action to be stated (Alvarez v. Wiley (1977) 71 Cal. App. 3d 599, 605-606, 139 Cal. Rptr. 550).

[Optional] D. Equitable Relief Unavailable. A cause of action based on decedent's wrongful death and brought in a state court is governed by the provisions of Code of Civil Procedure Section 377.60, which authorizes an action at law for damages only. Therefore, a cause of action for declaratory and injunctive relief predicated on wrongful death is not available[, notwithstanding the fact that if the action were brought in federal court and stated a cause of action under the federal Civil Rights Act (42 U.S.C.S. §§ 1983, 1988), equitable relief in addition to or independent of damages may be available] (Alvarez v. Wiley (1977) 71 Cal. App. 3d 599, 603-604, 139 Cal. Rptr. 550).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that no cause of action for wrongful death is stated if the complaint does not allege damages. In addition, the memorandum includes an optional contention that other relief is not available in a wrongful death action.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue regarding the limitation of remedies available in a wrongful death action to damages. For example, these points and authorities may be used to support a general demurrer to a complaint for wrongful death asserting that the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in that it appears on the face thereof that the complaint does not show a claim for damages (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 430.10(e), 430.30(a)). These points and authorities may also be used to support a defendant's motion for summary judgment [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

If both damages and equitable relief are claimed, a motion to strike the allegations and prayer seeking equitable relief [see Code Civ. Proc. § 435(b)] or for summary adjudication of the issue of equitable relief [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] may also be proper.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include a discussion showing that the action seeks relief other than damages or relief in addition to damages.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Damages Are Required

Alvarez v. Wiley (1977) 71 Cal. App. 3d 599, 139 Cal. Rptr. 550 , was a wrongful death action brought by the decedent's father. The only relief requested was declaratory and injunctive relief. The trial court sustained defendants' demurrers to the complaint with leave to amend and suggested that plaintiff might be able to state a cause of action for damages for the wrongful death of his son. Plaintiff elected to stand on his complaint and appealed from the resulting judgment of dismissal. On appeal, the court of appeal affirmed. The court noted that the remedy for wrongful death was purely a creature of statute, and a cause of action for wrongful death must stand or fall by the terms of the statute, which on its face authorizes only an action at law for damages and does not authorize equitable relief.

NOTE:

In 1993, the legislature revised, reorganized, and renumbered the wrongful death statute. The provisions regarding damages remain substantially the same and the requirement of damages as set out in Paragraph C of this memorandum still applies.

[b] Equitable Relief Unavailable

The facts and procedural background of Alvarez v. Wiley (1977) 71 Cal. App. 3d 599, 139 Cal. Rptr. 550 , are discussed in § 66.22[3][a]. In holding that the trial court properly sustained defendants' demurrer [see § 66.22[3][a]], the court of appeal considered what was evidently plaintiff's main contention on appeal: that his complaint stated a cause of action under the federal Civil Rights Act [42 U.S.C.S. §§ 1983, 1988] for the unconstitutional deprivation of plaintiff's right to his son's companionship. (The court held preliminarily that the complaint did not meet the requirements of a class action.) Plaintiff had likened his cause of action to that in Mattis v. Schnarr (8th Cir. 1974) 502 F.2d 588, 593-596 , in which the federal court of appeals held that plaintiff had stated a cause of action for declaratory relief based on a violation of plaintiff's constitutionally protected right to raise his minor son, who had been shot by defendant police officers while attempting to escape arrest. However, whatever the merits of plaintiff's theory, the court followed a Colorado Supreme Court decision [Jones v. Hildebrant (Colo. 1976) 191 Colo. 1,] and stated that if plaintiff had brought the action in a federal court, equitable relief may have been available by virtue of the provisions of 42 U.S.C.S. § 1983, which specifically permits an action in equity for unconstitutional deprivation of certain rights; but that whatever may be the theoretical basis for the action, the remedy for any cause of action based on wrongful death in California is limited to damages under the wrongful death statute.

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that there is a defense to the action that could have been asserted against the decedent, and that the defense may be asserted in the wrongful death action. The optional paragraph sets forth the specific defense that the decedent's assumption of the risk is a complete defense to a wrongful death action.

This form will be used to support a motion for summary judgment and should be combined with points and authorities relating to such a motion.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should point to facts showing the existence and terms of the agreement signed by decedent, as evidenced in the declaration supporting the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c], which should include a copy of the agreement itself attached to the declaration and incorporated by reference.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff Subject to Defenses Assertable Against Decedent

In Madison v. Superior Court (1988) 203 Cal. App. 3d 589, 250 Cal. Rptr. 299 , a wrongful death action, the decedent, plaintiffs' 19 year-old son, drowned while participating in a scuba diving training class make-up dive. During the dive, decedent had run low on air. The decedent's instructor accompanied him to the surface and directed him to swim toward a buoy that had been anchored prior to the commencement of the dive. The instructor then left decedent alone on the surface to continue the dive with another student, which was a violation of the "buddy-system" rule. About 10 minutes later, when the instructor and the other student surfaced, decedent was nowhere to be found. A search was commenced, and the decedent's body was located on the bottom. At the time he enrolled in the class, decedent had signed a written waiver and release by the terms of which he voluntarily released, discharged, waived, and relinquished any and all actions or causes of action for personal injury, property damage, or wrongful death arising from his participation in the class and its activities, and in which he had expressly stated his intent to exempt and relieve defendants from liability for personal injury, property damage, or wrongful death caused by negligence. Defendants' motion for summary judgment was denied, and defendants petitioned the court of appeal for a writ of mandate.

In ordering issuance of a peremptory writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate its order denying defendants' motion for summary judgment and to enter an order granting the motion, the court of appeal relied on cases finding it axiomatic that a plaintiff in a wrongful death action is subject to defenses that could have been asserted against the decedent (203 Cal. App. 3d 589, 600) . Because the release supported a complete defense against the action, the court held that the trial court should have granted the defendants' summary judgment motion.

[b] Assumption of Risk Is Complete Defense to Wrongful Death Action

The facts and procedural background of Madison v. Superior Court (1988) 203 Cal. App. 3d 589, 250 Cal. Rptr. 299 , are discussed in § 66.23[3][a]. The court held that the particular waiver and release agreement was not affected with a public interest and was valid, and that the legal effect of the release and waiver provisions of the agreement provided the defendants a complete defense to the plaintiffs' action. The court concluded that, as a result, no triable issue of fact was raised with respect to the legal meaning or effect of the agreement and that summary resolution of this issue in defendants' favor was required (203 Cal. App. 3d 589, 600) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Assumption of Risk Is Complete Defense to Wrongful Death Action

In Paralift, Inc. v. Superior Court (1993) 23 Cal. App. 4th 748, 29 Cal. Rptr. 2d 177 , the decedent had executed a detailed release in order to be able to engage in skydiving on an ongoing basis. The appellate court found the release to be valid and a complete bar to any recovery by the decedent's heirs in a wrongful death action, repeating the rule that it is axiomatic that a plaintiff in a wrongful death action is subject to defenses that could have been asserted against the decedent (23 Cal. App. 4th 748, 755) .

In Scroggs v. Coast Cmty. Coll. Dist. (1987) 193 Cal. App. 3d 1399, 239 Cal. Rptr. 916 , the plaintiff's decedent died while participating in a scuba diving class offered by the defendant community college. The decedent had signed a release agreement prior to participating in the class in which he had waived any claim on behalf of himself or his heirs against the college "by reason of any accidents, illness, injury or death, or other consequences arising or resulting directly or indirectly from participation in scuba diving under the auspices [of the college], occurring during said participation or any time subsequent thereto." On the basis of the release and waiver, the trial court granted defendant's motion for summary judgment.

Although the court of appeal reversed the summary judgment on the ground that there was no language in the release prepared by the college indicating the decedent intended to assume all risks of the activity and that the release did not encompass a waiver of defendant's negligence (193 Cal. App. 3d 1399, 1404) , the court said it was axiomatic that a plaintiff in a wrongful death action is subject to defenses that could have been asserted against the decedent and held that an express contractual assumption of the risk, combined with an express waiver of defendant's negligence, constitutes a complete defense to the surviving heirs's wrongful death action (193 Cal. App. 3d 1399, 1402) .

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted to oppose a wrongful death action that fails to allege facts supporting proximate cause between the defendant's act or neglect and the decedent's death.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of proximate cause. For example, these points and authorities may be used to support a general demurrer to a complaint for wrongful death asserting that the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in that it appears on the face thereof that defendant's act or neglect was not the proximate cause of decedent's death. These points and authorities may also be used to support a defendant's motion for summary judgment [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include discussion showing how other facts of the case do not establish that the defendant proximately caused the decedent's death.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Proximate Cause Is Required

Johnson v. Union Furniture Co. (1939) 31 Cal. App. 2d 234, 87 P.2d 917 , was a wrongful death action brought by a decedent's surviving spouse against defendant furniture company based on the theory that defendant's failure, as promised, to deliver a bed on schedule to plaintiff's home required the decedent to spend the night on a mattress spread on the floor, thus exposing him to cold and drafts, which exposure led to pneumonia causing his death two days later. The trial court sustained defendant's demurrer to the complaint without leave to amend and plaintiff appealed from the resulting judgment of dismissal. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that plaintiff had failed to allege that defendant's wrongful act was a direct and proximate cause of the injury. It was well settled that in order to maintain an action for damages based on the wrongful act or neglect of another, such an allegation and proof must be made.

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Proximate Cause Is Required

Bromme v. Pavitt (1992) 5 Cal. App. 4th 1487, 7 Cal. Rptr. 2d 608 , was a wrongful death action arising from alleged medical malpractice for failure to diagnose decedent's colon cancer. The court held that the trial court properly granted a partial nonsuit for the defendant that precluded the jury from considering any alleged negligence by defendant after June 1981. After that date, the decedent would not have had a greater than 50 percent chance of survival, even if the defendant had properly diagnosed and treated the condition (5 Cal. App. 4th 1487, 1499) . To recover for wrongful death, the plaintiff must prove that the defendant's wrongful act or neglect was a cause in fact of the decedent's death. To be a cause in fact, the wrongful act must be a substantial factor in bringing about the death. An actor's negligent conduct is not ordinarily a substantial factor if the harm would have occurred without that negligence. However, the court noted that, if two forces are actively operating, one due to the actor's negligence, and each force is sufficient to bring about the harm by itself, the actor's negligence may be a substantial factor (5 Cal. App. 4th 1487, 1498) .

§ 66.25 Supporting Contention That Plaintiff May Not Recover Damages for Wrongful Death--Statute of Limitations [Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1] Bars Action

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF'S WRONGFUL DEATH COMPLAINT IS BARRED BY THE TWO-YEAR PROVISION OF SECTION 335.1 OF THE CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE.

A. Two Years in Which to Commence Wrongful Death Action. Generally, a plaintiff must commence an action for wrongful death within two years (Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1; see also former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3) (one year, prior to 2003)).

B. Period of Limitation Runs From Time of Decedent's Death. The two-year (one-year, prior to 2003, under former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3)) limitations period runs from the date of the decedent's death (Arizmendi v. System Leasing Corp. (1971) 15 Cal. App. 3d 730, 735, 93 Cal. Rptr. 411 ; Walton v. Southern Pac. Co. (1935) 8 Cal. App. 2d 290, 304, 48 P.2d 108).

[Optional] C. Relation-Back Doctrine Does Not Apply When Adding New Plaintiff. If an attempt is made to add a plaintiff to a timely-filed wrongful death action, the limitations period runs to the time of amendment or intervention for that plaintiff and the "relation back" doctrine does not apply (San Diego Gas & Elec. Co. v. Superior Court (2007) 146 Cal. App. 4th 1545, 1552-1553, 53 Cal. Rptr. 3d 722).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be used to support a contention that an action for wrongful death is barred because it was commenced after the general statute of limitations period has run. If the wrongful death action involves medical malpractice, a special statute of limitations provision applies [see § 66.26].

These points and authorities may be combined, where appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue of the limitations period. For example, these points and authorities may be used to support a demurrer to a wrongful death complaint when the complaint fails to state facts constituting a cause of action in that it appears on the face thereof, or from a matter of which the court is required to or may take judicial notice, that the action is barred by the applicable statute of limitations [Baillargeon v. Department of Water & Power (1977) 69 Cal. App. 3d 670, 138 Cal. Rptr. 338 ; Bell v. Bank of Cal. (1908) 153 Cal. 234, 94 P. 889] . These points and authorities may also be used to support a defendant's motion for summary judgment [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]. The points and authorities in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include discussion showing that the facts establish that the action was commenced after the applicable statute of limitations period expired.

For forms of memoranda of points and authorities supporting and opposing demurrers on the ground of the bar of a statute of limitations, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings , and Ch. 143, Limitation of Actions .

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in §§ 66.31 -66.33 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a contention supported by this memorandum.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Period of Limitation Runs From Time of Decedent's Death

Arizmenti v. System Leasing Corp. (1971) 15 Cal. App. 3d 730, 93 Cal. Rptr. 411 , was a wrongful death action brought by the surviving spouse of a decedent. At the conclusion of the trial, the jury returned a verdict in favor of the surviving spouse, and judgment was entered accordingly. Meanwhile, the illegitimate minor children of the decedent, through their mother as guardian ad litem, and the half brother of the decedent brought a wrongful death action against defendant. The parties to the first action settled, stipulating to vacate the judgment and set aside the verdict in the action and dismiss it with prejudice to defendant. Subsequently, defendant moved for summary judgment in the second action on the ground that the settlement and dismissal of the wrongful death action brought by decedent's surviving spouse collaterally estopped these plaintiffs from asserting their claims insofar as the judgment in the prior action was res judicata. The trial court granted the motion and entered a judgment of dismissal. On plaintiffs' appeal, the court of appeal affirmed the dismissal of decedent's half brother on the grounds both that he was not an heir of the decedent and that the action had been filed more than a year after the decedent's death and was, therefore, barred by the statute of limitations in former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1 (two-year limitations period)]. However, it reversed the judgment of dismissal as to decedent's minor children [see § 66.31 for points and authorities regarding the tolling of the statute of limitations during a plaintiff's minority].

Walton v. Southern Pac. Co. (1935) 8 Cal. App. 2d 290, 48 P.2d 108 , was a wrongful death action brought by the administrator of decedent's estate against defendant on her own behalf as decedent's widow and on behalf of decedent's minor children. At the conclusion of the trial, the jury found in plaintiff's favor and awarded damages. Defendant appealed, arguing that a prior action brought by decedent in federal court against defendant for his personal injuries in the accident constituted a bar to plaintiff's wrongful death action. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment in plaintiff's favor. It held that the judgment of nonsuit on decedent's motion for a directed verdict at the conclusion of his presentation in the prior action did not constitute a bar to plaintiff's wrongful death action because the record in the prior action did not establish what may have been adjudicated in that action. Moreover, the cause of action for personal injuries and for wrongful death were not identical because of the difference in measures of damages to be applied. Finally, the court held that plaintiff was not barred from maintaining the action by the one-year statute of limitations for wrongful death actions because it runs from the date of decedent's death, not from the date of decedent's accident.

[b] Relation-Back Doctrine Does Not Apply When Adding New Plaintiff

In San Diego Gas & Electric Co. v. Superior Court (2007) 146 Cal. App. 4th 1545, 53 Cal. Rptr. 3d 722 , plaintiff was the widow of a Marine killed when a military helicopter struck utility lines. A timely wrongful death action was brought by some of the Marine's heirs against the utility company, although the widow was not originally listed as a plaintiff. On the eve of trial, plaintiffs sought leave to file an amended complaint adding the widow to the list of plaintiffs, even though the statute of limitations had already expired. The trial court allowed the amendment, concluding that the amended complaint related back to the original complaint. The court also noted that the defendant was not prejudiced by the amendment, as defendant already knew of the widow's existence and had received an economic analysis of her loss of support claim prior to expiration of the limitations period. Defendant sought writ relief.

The court of appeal issued a writ of mandate ordering the trial court to vacate its decision to allow the widow to be added as a plaintiff. The court noted the accepted principle that while wrongful death action is considered joint, single, and indivisible, each heir has a separate and personal cause of action. As such, the statute of limitations runs separately against each heir's cause of action (146 Cal. App. 4th 1545, 1551) . The court then reviewed Andersen v. Barton Memorial Hospital, Inc. (1985) 166 Cal. App. 3d 678, 212 Cal. Rptr. 626 , in which the court held that the relation-back doctrine did not save the untimely claim of a possible omitted heir seeking to join a timely-filed wrongful death action, because the omitted heir was asserting a new cause of action. Agreeing with the rationale of that earlier decision, the court held that because all wrongful death claimants must show the nature of his or her loss as a result of the decedent's death, the addition of an omitted heir after expiration of the limitations period necessarily adds a new cause of action that seeks to enforce an independent right. Thus, the relation-back doctrine does not apply, regardless of whether the defendant would be prejudiced by the addition of the omitted plaintiff. Assuming the statute of limitations had expired on the widow's claim, the trial court erred when allowing the amendment to add the widow as a plaintiff. The court remanded, however, to allow plaintiffs to amend their complaint to allege that the statute of limitations had been tolled (146 Cal. App. 4th 1545, 1552-1553) .

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF'S WRONGFUL DEATH COMPLAINT IS BARRED BY THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS GOVERNING MEDICAL MALPRACTICE ACTIONS.

Statute of Limitations for Medical Malpractice. In an action for injury or death against a health care provider based on such person's professional negligence, a plaintiff must file suit within three years after the date of injury or one year after the plaintiff discovers, or through the use of reasonable diligence should have discovered, the injury, whichever occurs first (Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5). This specific statute of limitations prevails over the more general statute of limitations applicable to wrongful death actions generally (see Washington v. Nelson (1979) 100 Cal. App. 3d 47, 52-53, 160 Cal. Rptr. 644).

[2] Comments

This memorandum of points and authorities may be used to oppose a medical malpractice action for wrongful death that is commenced after the applicable statute of limitations period has run.

The points and authorities may be combined, where appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue of the limitations period. For example, these points and authorities may be used to support a demurrer to a wrongful death complaint when the complaint fails to state facts constituting a cause of action in that it appears on the face thereof, or from a matter of which the court is required to or may take judicial notice, that the action is barred by the applicable statute of limitations [Baillargeon v. Department of Water & Power (1977) 69 Cal. App. 3d 670, 138 Cal. Rptr. 338 ; Bell v. Bank of Cal. (1908) 153 Cal. 234, 94 P. 889]

These points and authorities may be used to support a defendant's motion for summary judgment [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]. The points and authorities in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include discussion showing that the facts establish that the action is subject to the statute of limitations governing medical malpractice, and that the action was commenced after the applicable statute of limitations period had expired.

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in §§ 66.31 and 66.32 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a contention supported by this memorandum.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Statute of Limitations for Medical Malpractice

In Washington v. Nelson (1979) 100 Cal. App. 3d 47, 160 Cal. Rptr. 644 , over three years after decedent's death, plaintiff moved for leave to file an amended wrongful death complaint naming decedent's son as an additional heir. The trial court granted the motion over defendant's objection that the three-year period in Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5, governing actions against health care providers for professional negligence, barred the amended complaint. Defendant then moved to dismiss the cause as to the omitted heir under former Code Civ. Proc. § 581a [now see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 583.210-583.250] on the ground that the summons had not been served within three years after the commencement of the action. The court granted the motion, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, but on the ground that the action was barred by Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5. The court pointed out that plaintiff had convinced the trial court that if it held that Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 barred the filing of the amended complaint, the action would have to be dismissed as to plaintiff as well, since not all the heirs would have been named in the complaint. Relying on Cross v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1964) 60 Cal. 2d 690, 692-694, 36 Cal. Rptr. 321, 388 P.2d 353 , the court corrected the trial court by stating that, as the claim of each heir is a personal and separate cause of action, the running of the statute as to the omitted heir could not affect plaintiff's complaint. The court then noted that in the ordinary wrongful death action the statute of limitations is tolled during the child's minority; but that as of 1975, if the wrongful death is due to medical malpractice, the more specific statute of limitations in Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 is controlling. Quoting from Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5, the court found that the action was barred because it had not been commenced within three years from the date of decedent's death and there had been no argument that any of the tolling provisions in Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 applied (100 Cal. App. 3d 47, 52-53) .

[2] Comments

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted to support the contention that a plaintiff may not maintain an action for wrongful death if a previous wrongful death action against the same defendant was dismissed with prejudice. If the plaintiff is a child who was unborn and whose existence was unknown to the defendant in the prior action at the time a judgment in the prior action is given, counsel may use optional Paragraph D. Optional Paragraph E may be used to make the argument that a spouse who previously pursued a loss of consortium claim that included damages for post-death loss of affection and companionship is barred from seeking the same damages a second time in a wrongful death action.

These points and authorities may be combined, where appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue that the action is barred by a previous action. For example, these points and authorities may be used to support a general demurrer to a complaint for wrongful death asserting that the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in that it appears on the face thereof, or from a matter of which the court is required to or may take judicial notice, that a previous wrongful death action against the same defendant was dismissed with prejudice. These points and authorities may also be used to support a defendant's motion for summary judgment [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in §§ 66.41 and 66.42 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the contention supported by this memorandum.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Action Barred by Previous Action

Mayerhoff v. Kaiser Found. Health Plan, Inc. (1977) 71 Cal. App. 3d 803, 138 Cal. Rptr. 319 , is discussed in § 66.20[3][a]. In holding that the cause of action before it was barred because of the prior action against the same defendant, although brought by different plaintiffs, the court relied on the single and indivisible nature of the wrongful death cause of action, intended by the legislature to be brought on behalf of all persons entitled to bring the action. The court stated that the nature of the action therefore precluded a series of suits against the same defendant by individual plaintiffs (71 Cal. App. 3d 803, 806) .

[b] Previous Action Bars Action by Unborn Child Whose Existence Was Unknown to Defendant

Daubert v. Western Meat Co. (1903) 139 Cal. 480, 69 P. 297, 73 P. 244 , was a wrongful death action brought against defendant meat company by a son who was born after his father's death. The trial court sustained defendant's demurrer to the complaint and entered judgment for the defendant. Plaintiff appealed to the Supreme Court, which affirmed. The Court held that the earlier action of plaintiff's mother, commenced and brought to judgment prior to plaintiff's birth, was a bar to plaintiff's action. Under the statute, only one action is permitted, and, at that time, plaintiff's mother was the only heir of the deceased. There was no other heir entitled to bring the action or to be joined with her as plaintiff. The Court considered the possibility that the plaintiff might have accrued some form of action against defendant, if the defendant at the time of trial had known about its existence and not made him a party; but since defendant did not know about him, the Court concluded that it need not decide the question (139 Cal. 480, 482-483) .

NOTE:

Daubert should not be interpreted to mean that an unborn child is not an "heir." The case did not reach such a result, and it would appear that because an unborn child qualifies as an heir entitled to succeed to the estate of an intestate when born [see Prob. Code § 6407 (relatives conceived before decedent's death but born thereafter inherit as if born during decedent's lifetime); see also Prob. Code §§ 6570-6573 (children born after execution of will); Estate of Kurtz (1922) 190 Cal. 146, 150, 210 P. 959] , the child would also qualify as an heir under former Code Civ. Proc. § 377(b)(1). The remedies of the wrongfully excluded child after birth would thus appear to be that of any wrongfully excluded heir [see Watkins v. Nutting (1941) 17 Cal. 2d 490, 499, 110 P.2d 384 ; Helling v. Lew (1972) 28 Cal. App. 3d 434, 437 n.1, 104 Cal. Rptr. 789] . In addition, the fact that defendant did not know of the existence of the unborn child was a clear condition of the court's holding in Daubert. The court's holding may then be qualified by Arizmendi v. System Leasing Corp. (1971) 15 Cal. App. 3d 730, 739, 93 Cal. Rptr. 411 [see § 66.25[3][a]], in which the court of appeal held that certain heirs (illegitimate minors) who had not been joined in a wrongful death action were not collaterally estopped by a judgment in that action from bringing a second wrongful death action when their separate interests were not before the court in the earlier action and defendant knew of their existence but did not attempt to compel their joinder as parties to the action.

NOTE:

In 1993, the legislature amended the wrongful death statute to eliminate the use of the term "heirs" to delineate persons entitled to a wrongful death cause of action [see Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60]. Entitled persons include, but are not limited to, certain heirs. The application of the wrongful death statute to an unborn child whose existence is unknown to the defendant as set out in Paragraph D of this memorandum presumably still applies.

[c] Prior Litigation of Spouse's Loss of Consortium Claim Can Bar Recovery of Same Damages in Wrongful Death Action

In Boeken v. Philip Morris USA, Inc. (2010) 48 Cal. 4th 788, 108 Cal. Rptr. 3d 806, 230 P.3d 342 , plaintiff was the widow of a man who died from lung cancer in 2002 after smoking cigarettes since 1957. In 2000, plaintiff's husband sued a tobacco company for wrongfully causing his cancer and won a substantial damages award, although he died while an appeal of that award was pending. Also in 2000, plaintiff filed a separate action against the tobacco company for loss of consortium in which she sought damages for the "permanent deprivation" of her husband's loss of companionship and affection. About four months after filing, for reasons not disclosed in the record, plaintiff dismissed that action with prejudice. After her husband's death, plaintiff filed a wrongful death action against the tobacco company, again seeking compensation for the loss of her husband's companionship and affection. The trial court sustained defendant's demurrer on the grounds that plaintiff's wrongful death claim was barred by the doctrine of res judicata because plaintiff's previous loss of consortium action had involved the same primary right. The court of appeal affirmed, concluding that because plaintiff's potential damages in the loss of consortium included future loss of companionship and affection between the time of her husband's death and the time when he would have died of natural causes, and these were the same damages plaintiff sought in the wrongful death action, the dismissal with prejudice of the loss of consortium action constituted a res judicata that precluded plaintiff from relitigating the same injury. Plaintiff appealed.

The California Supreme Court affirmed. The Court concluded that because the complaint in the loss of consortium action alleged that defendant's wrongful conduct "permanently deprived" plaintiff of her husband's companionship and affection, the primary right not to be wrongfully deprived of spousal companionship and affection, and the corresponding duty not to wrongfully deprive a person of such, were the same as in plaintiff's wrongful death action. Given that plaintiff had dismissed the earlier action with prejudice, plaintiff was precluded from relitigating the same cause of action under the wrongful death statute (48 Cal. 4th 788, 798-799) . The Court also rejected plaintiff's argument that she could not have recovered damages in the loss of consortium action for loss of companionship and affection suffered after her husband's death. Noting the general rule that tort damages may include prospective damages that are sufficiently certain to occur, the Court held that a plaintiff spouse may recover damages for lost companionship and affection resulting from the anticipated premature death of the other spouse, if that premature death is sufficiently certain to occur and is caused by the injuries sustained due to the defendant's wrongful conduct. These prospective damages for the period after the injured spouse's death are to be based on the life expectancy that the injured spouse would have had if the injury had never occurred (48 Cal. 4th 788, 800) . The Court noted that plaintiff had specifically alleged in the loss of consortium action that she would be deprived of her husband's services and companionship in the future and that she had been "permanently deprived" of his consortium, presumably on the basis of the incurable nature of her husband's disease and the great likelihood of his premature death. These allegations were sufficient to bar plaintiff from seeking post-death loss of consortium damages in a subsequent wrongful death action (48 Cal. 4th 788, 800-801) .

A. Wrongful Death Action Defined. [See § 66.20, Paragraph A.]

B. Court Bound by Statutory Definition. [See § 66.20, Paragraph B.]

C. Entitled Persons Are Required Parties in Wrongful Death Actions. Because Code of Civil Procedure Section 377.60 authorizes a wrongful death action by all persons entitled to a wrongful death cause of action as a result of their relationship to the decedent and is a procedural statute establishing compulsory joinder, all entitled persons should be made parties to a wrongful death action as plaintiffs or, if their consent to be joined as plaintiffs cannot be obtained, as defendants (see Salmon v. Rathjens (1907) 152 Cal. 290, 294-295, 92 P. 733).

D. Wrongful Death Plaintiffs Have Duty to Join All Known Heirs. Omitted heirs are necessary parties and plaintiff heirs have a mandatory duty to join all known omitted heirs in a single action for wrongful death (Ruttenberg v. Ruttenberg (1994) 53 Cal. App. 4th 801, 808, 62 Cal. Rptr. 2d 78).

E. Proper Joinder Requires Service of Summons and Complaint. Wrongful death plaintiffs must properly join all appropriate defendants and proper joinder requires satisfying the statutory requirements for service. Neither "naming" a defendant as a nominal defendant in a wrongful death action, nor making sure that a named defendant has actual knowledge of the lawsuit is legally sufficient to accomplish joinder (Ruttenberg v. Ruttenberg (1994) 53 Cal. App. 4th 801, 808-809, 62 Cal. Rptr. 2d 78).

F. Wrongfully Omitted Heir May Sue Wrongful Death Plaintiffs for Failure to Join. An omitted heir has a remedy against the wrongful death plaintiffs who received the proceeds of a wrongful death suit; the heir is entitled to sue the plaintiffs who failed to join him or her for damages (Ruttenberg v. Ruttenberg (1994) 53 Cal. App. 4th 801, 809, 62 Cal. Rptr. 2d 78).

These points and authorities may be submitted to support the contention that a complaint in a wrongful death action is defective because it fails to join all entitled plaintiffs.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of compulsory joinder. For example, this form may be used in support of a general demurrer to a complaint for wrongful death, asserting that there is a defect or misjoinder of parties in that it appears on the face thereof, or from a matter of which the court is required to or may take judicial notice, that all the entitled plaintiffs have not been made parties to the wrongful death action [see Knott v. McGilvray (1899) 124 Cal. 128, 129, 56 P. 789] .

This form may also be used to support a defendant's motion under Code Civ. Proc. § 389 to compel the plaintiff to join an omitted person as a party. If a defendant fails to object to nonjoinder in his or her answer, these points and authorities may be used to support a motion to amend an answer to a wrongful death complaint to allege the non-joinder of omitted entitled plaintiffs [see Jolley v. Clemens (1938) 28 Cal. App. 2d 55, 75, 82 P.2d 51] . For forms of points and authorities supporting the contention that joinder of omitted entitled plaintiffs should be permitted, see § 66.39.

[b] Procedural Nature of Contention

The objection that a plaintiff has failed to join an omitted entitled person as a plaintiff, or a defendant if he or she refused to join in the action, is procedural and not jurisdictional [Cross v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1964) 60 Cal. 2d 690, 692-694, 36 Cal. Rptr. 321, 388 P.2d 353 ; Helling v. Lew (1972) 28 Cal. App. 3d 434, 437, 104 Cal. Rptr. 789] . Although the action is considered joint, which is to say that all entitled plaintiffs should join or be joined in the action [see Perkins v. Robertson (1956) 140 Cal. App. 2d 536, 543, 295 P.2d 972] , Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60 does not create a joint cause of action making the omitted entitled plaintiff an indispensable party and requiring dismissal of the action under Code Civ. Proc. § 389 if the entitled plaintiff has not been joined [see Cross v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1964) 60 Cal. 2d 690, 692-694, 36 Cal. Rptr. 321, 388 P.2d 353 (interpreting former Code Civ. Proc. § 377 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60)]. A demurrer is proper when a wrongful death complaint fails to join entitled persons [see Knott v. McGilvray (1899) 124 Cal. 128, 129, 56 P. 789] .

If the defendant timely objects that certain entitled plaintiffs have not been joined, the proper remedy is to abate the action or order the omitted entitled plaintiffs to join as parties [see Salmon v. Rathjens (1907) 152 Cal. 290, 295, 92 P. 733] . The fact that an entitled plaintiff was omitted in a complaint for wrongful death does not necessitate a reversal of a judgment for the named plaintiffs on appeal, unless the party complaining has been misled to his or her prejudice, or the error otherwise appears to have been injurious [Walker v. Etcheverry (1941) 42 Cal. App. 2d 472, 475, 109 P.2d 385] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Entitled Plaintiffs Are Required Parties in Wrongful Death Actions

Salmon v. Rathjens (1907) 152 Cal. 290, 92 P. 733 , was an action by two daughters against defendant for the wrongful death of their father. Defendant demurred to their complaint asserting a defect of parties in that there were heirs-at-law of the decedent [see former Code Civ. Proc. § 377 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60)] who had not been made parties to the action. The demurrer was overruled, and defendant subsequently filed his answer. The answer specifically denied the plaintiffs' allegations of relationship and heirship but did not raise the proposition that there were other heirs. During the course of the trial, defendant sought leave to amend his answer to allege on information and belief that plaintiffs were not the only heirs of the decedent and that there existed additional unknown heirs. Defendant's application for leave to amend the answer was opposed by plaintiffs and denied by the trial court. At the conclusion of the trial, the jury awarded plaintiffs damages for their father's wrongful death.

On the trial court's denial of his motion for a new trial, defendant appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment and order denying a new trial. It held, in part, that an action by only a portion of a decedent's heirs was not the action authorized by former Code Civ. Proc. § 377 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60 (entitled persons include, but are not limited to, certain heirs)]. Therefore, all heirs should be joined in a wrongful death action as plaintiffs or, if their consent to be joined as plaintiffs cannot be obtained, as defendants. Whenever all of the heirs of a decedent are not joined in the action, a defendant may make a timely objection to their omission. The Supreme Court found that defendant failed to object to the omission of heirs in his answer and waited to make the objection until the trial had commenced and was in progress. Even then, the Court said, defendant failed to show any reasonable ground for supposing that there might be other heirs. Defendant waived his objection by failing to assert it in a timely manner in his answer and there were no compelling reasons for allowing that waiver to be withdrawn (152 Cal. App. 290, 294-296) .

NOTE:

In 1993, the legislature amended the wrongful death statute to eliminate the use of the term "heirs" to delineate persons entitled to a wrongful death cause of action [see Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60)]. Entitled persons include, but are not limited to, certain heirs. The requirement that all entitled plaintiffs be parties to a wrongful death action as set out in Paragraph C of this memorandum still applies.

[b] Wrongful Death Plaintiffs Have Duty to Join All Known Heirs

In Ruttenberg v. Ruttenberg (1994) 53 Cal. App. 4th 801, 62 Cal. Rptr. 2d 78 ; a wrongful death complaint named an heir of the decedent as a nominal defendant, but plaintiffs failed either to serve the complaint on that heir or involve her in the subsequent settlement. Even though the omitted heir had knowledge that the wrongful death action existed, plaintiffs' failure to serve the complaint resulted in the failure to join the omitted heir in plaintiffs' wrongful death suit. The omitted heir (plaintiff) sued the other heirs who had omitted her (defendants) for constructive trust, accounting and apportionment, interference with prospective economic advantage, fraud, abuse of process and for negligent and intentional infliction of emotional distress. The trial court granted the defendants motion for judgment on the pleadings and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that omitted heirs are necessary parties and that wrongful death plaintiffs have a mandatory duty to join all known omitted heirs in a single action for wrongful death (53 Cal. App. 4th 801, 808) .

[c] Proper Joinder Requires Service of Summons and Complaint

The facts and procedural background of Ruttenberg v. Ruttenberg (1994) 53 Cal. App. 4th 801, 62 Cal. Rptr. 2d 78 ; are discussed in § 66.28[3][b]. In reversing the judgment on the pleadings, the court of appeal said that wrongful death plaintiffs cannot merely name a defendant who does not wish to participate in the action, and must do more than merely making sure that a named defendant has actual knowledge of the lawsuit. The wrongful death plaintiff must properly join all appropriate defendants and proper joinder requires satisfying the statutory requirements for service (53 Cal. App. 4th 801, 809) .

[d] Wrongfully Omitted Heir May Sue Wrongful Death Plaintiffs for Failure to Join

The facts and procedural background of Ruttenberg v. Ruttenberg (1994) 53 Cal. App. 4th 801, 62 Cal. Rptr. 2d 78 , are discussed in § 66.28[3][b]. The court of appeal reversed the judgment on the pleadings and remanded the matter for further proceedings. The court held that an omitted heir has a remedy against the wrongful death plaintiffs who received the proceeds of a wrongful death suit; the heir is entitled to sue the plaintiffs who failed to join him or her for damages. It said that plaintiffs may bring a wrongful death action without joining all known heirs, and the court may try that action, but in such a case plaintiffs proceed at their own peril. According to the court an omitted heir's right to a remedy in these circumstances supports the statutory purpose of limiting wrongful death actions to a single proceeding (53 Cal. App. 4th 801, 809) .

NOTE:

Although an omitted heir may have an action against a wrongful death plaintiff for failure to join the heir, as established in Ruttenberg v. Ruttenberg [see § 66.28[3][b]], the omitted heir does not have an action against the plaintiff's attorney for the omission, because the attorney owes no duty to a non-client under those circumstances [Hall v. Superior Court (2003) 108 Cal. App. 4th 706, 714-715, 133 Cal. Rptr. 2d 806] . However, if an omitted heir does recover from the wrongful death plaintiff for the omission, the wrongful death plaintiff may have an action for indemnity or contribution against his or her attorney for failing to advise the plaintiff about the need for joinder of an omitted heir [see Hall v. Superior Court (2003) 108 Cal. App. 4th 706, 715, 133 Cal. Rptr. 2d 806]

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Entitled Plaintiffs as Required Parties in Wrongful Death Actions

Walker v. Etcheverry (1941) 42 Cal. App. 2d 472, 109 P.2d 385 , was a wrongful death action brought by a guardian ad litem on behalf of certain plaintiffs. The trial court permitted the defendant to amend his answer on the first day of trial, to allege for the first time that there had been a nonjoinder of certain heirs in plaintiffs' wrongful death action. The omitted heir was plaintiffs' mother, who had brought the action on behalf of plaintiffs as their guardian ad litem. After findings and judgment had been filed, and defendant had moved for a new trial, by leave of court plaintiffs filed an amended complaint alleging the existence of the omitted heir but explicitly refusing to claim any damages on her account by reason of the decedent's death. The trial court denied defendant's motion for a new trial, ordered the findings amended to conform to the added allegations in plaintiffs' complaint, and modified its judgment accordingly. Defendant appealed from the modified judgment and the denial of his motion for a new trial. In affirming, the court of appeal stated that although there was a nonjoinder of parties plaintiff, this fact did not necessitate a reversal unless defendant had been misled to his prejudice or the error otherwise appeared to have been injurious. Having only the judgment roll before it, the court could neither find any evidence of prejudice or injury, nor see how such prejudice or injury could have arisen when defendant knew of the existence of the omitted heir from the date that the complaint had been served (42 Cal. App. 2d 472, 475) .

Knott v. McGilvray (1899) 124 Cal. 128, 56 P. 789 , was a wrongful death action brought by a wife for the wrongful death of her husband. In her complaint, plaintiff alleged that she was the wife of the decedent at the time of his injury and death and that she was the decedent's surviving widow. At the conclusion of the trial, judgment was entered against defendant. Defendant thereafter appealed from the adverse judgment and from the trial court's denial of his motion for a new trial, contending that plaintiff's complaint failed to state a cause of action inasmuch as the surviving wife had no cause of action for wrongful death and only the decedent's heirs had such a cause of action. The Supreme Court rejected defendant's contention and affirmed the judgment and order denying a new trial. It found that the surviving wife was an heir of the decedent under the laws of succession and that there was nothing in the record to show the existence of other heirs. In any event, the court stated, if it appeared on the face of the complaint that there were other heirs who were not joined, defendant should have objected in a demurrer. Similarly, if the existence of other heirs did not appear on the face of the complaint, defendant could have alleged their existence in an answer. Because the question of nonjoinder of heirs was not raised by defendant in either a demurrer or answer, the Supreme Court deemed that defendant had waived his objection. The Court also dismissed defendant's argument that the alleged nonjoinder of heirs made the cause of action as stated insufficient to support the judgment (124 Cal. 128, 129-130) .

PLAINTIFF IS AN ENTITLED PERSON WITHIN THE MEANING OF THE WRONGFUL DEATH STATUTE IN THAT HE/SHE IS THE _____ [specify relationship] OF THE DECEDENT AND WAS FINANCIALLY DEPENDENT ON THE DECEDENT AT THE TIME OF HIS/HER DEATH.

A. Specified Dependents Qualify as Entitled Person. Whether or not they qualify as a person entitled to a wrongful death cause of action under Code of Civil Procedure Section 377.60(a), certain other persons may bring a wrongful death action if they were dependent on the decedent (*Code Civ. B. Dependent Minors May Qualify as Entitled Person. A minor may bring an action for wrongful death if, at the time of decedent's death, the minor resided for the previous 180 days in the decedent's household and was dependent on the decedent for one-half or more of the minor's support (Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60(c)).

C. Degree of Dependency Required. One qualifies as a dependent if he/she was actually dependent to some extent on the decedent for the necessaries of life; thus, if a person received financial support from the deceased child which aided him/her in obtaining the things, such as shelter, clothing, food, and medical treatment, which one cannot and should not do without, the person is a dependent (see Perry v. Medina (1987) 192 Cal. App. 3d 603, 610, 237 Cal. Rptr. 532).

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a plaintiff is not a person entitled by statute to bring an action for wrongful death. The basis of the opposition is that plaintiff qualifies as a person entitled to bring a wrongful death action, as one of the persons entitled due to his or her dependence on the decedent [Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60(b), (c)].

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used to oppose a demurrer supported by the points and authorities in § 66.20.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include discussion showing the relationship of the plaintiff to the decedent, and facts demonstrating the plaintiff's dependence on the decedent.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Specified Dependents Qualify as Entitled Person

Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60 provides that when the death of a person is caused by the wrongful act or neglect of another, certain entitled persons or personal representatives on their behalf may maintain an action for damages against the person causing the death. Whether or not qualified under Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60(a), if they were dependent on the decedent, the putative spouse, children of the putative spouse, stepchildren, or parents may assert the cause of action [Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60(b)].

[b] Dependent Minors May Qualify as Entitled Person

Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60 provides that when the death of a person is caused by the wrongful act or neglect of another, certain entitled persons or personal representatives on their behalf may maintain an action for damages against the person causing the death. Whether or not qualified under Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60(a) or (b), a minor who, at the time of decedent's death, resided for the previous 180 days in the decedent's household and was dependent on the decedent for one-half or more of the minor's support may assert a wrongful death action [Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60(c)].

[c] Degree of Dependency Required

Perry v. Medina (1987) 192 Cal. App. 3d 603, 237 Cal. Rptr. 532 , was an action by the mother of decedent, claiming to be a dependent parent, for wrongful death of her son who was killed in an automobile accident. At the time of the accident, the decedent was in the process of divorcing his wife and had a minor daughter. When decedent left his wife he moved in with his mother for three or four months and paid her $100 a month for rent; he then got his own apartment but continued to buy his mother $100 worth of groceries a month, some of which he ate. He also gave his mother $50 a month to help her save for some surgery, but she spent the money and did not have the surgery. At the time of the son's death, the mother had an income of $400 per month (SSI and disability), and lived in a $200-per-month apartment with her other son, who did not pay rent but did pay the telephone bill and occasionally bought groceries. The defendants' motion for summary judgment was granted on the ground plaintiff was not a dependent parent within the meaning of former Code Civ. Proc. § 377 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60].

The court of appeal reversed. The court pointed out that the purpose of the legislation including dependent parents within the class of persons who can sue for wrongful death was to remedy the situation in which a parent, although not an heir under the law of intestate succession, depended for support and maintenance on the deceased child (192 Cal. App. 3d 603, 609) . After pointing out that dependency should be determined on a case-by-case basis, that no strict formula can be applied, and that the legislature did not suggest a formula as it did for dependent minors [see Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60(c) (restating formula of former Code Civ. Proc. § 377(b)(3))], the court held that a parent qualifies as a dependent if he or she was actually dependent to some extent on the decedent for the necessaries of life. Thus, if a parent received financial support from the deceased child that aided the parent in obtaining the things that one cannot and should not do without, such as shelter, clothing, food, and medical treatment, the parent is a dependent, and the death of the child results in a distinct pecuniary loss to the parent requiring the parent to find aid elsewhere for the basic things we all need (192 Cal. App. 3d 603, 610) .

PLAINTIFF IS ENTITLED TO PRESENT CLEAR AND CONVINCING EVIDENCE THAT PLAINTIFF IS THE CHILD OF DECEDENT IN ORDER TO ESTABLISH STANDING TO BRING A WRONGFUL DEATH ACTION SINCE PLAINTIFF WAS CONCEIVED BEFORE BUT BORN AFTER DEATH OF DECEDENT.

A. Laws of Intestate Succession Apply to Resolve Disputes as to Status of Child. The laws of intestate succession apply when a question exists as to whether a party qualifies as a child of decedent with standing to bring a wrongful death action under Code of Civil Procedure Section 377.60(a) (Cheyanna M. v. A.C. Nielsen Co. (1998) 66 Cal. App. 4th 855, 864-865, 78 Cal. Rptr. 2d 335).

B. Child Born After Death of Father May Establish Paternity by Any Clear and Convincing Evidence. When applying the laws of intestate succession for purposes of establishing the paternity of a child born after the death of the alleged father, it is deemed to be impossible for the decedent to have held the as-yet-unborn child out as his own, and thus, the child may subsequently attempt to prove paternity through any clear and convincing evidence (Cheyanna M. v. A.C. Nielsen Co. (1998) 66 Cal. App. 4th 855, 874, 78 Cal. Rptr. 2d 335).

This form may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a plaintiff is not a person entitled by statute to bring an action for wrongful death. The basis of the opposition is that plaintiff has clear and convincing evidence that plaintiff is the child of the decedent even though plaintiff was born after the death of decedent, entitling plaintiff to bring a wrongful death action under *Code Civ. In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used to oppose a demurrer or summary judgment motion supported by the points and authorities in § 66.20.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include discussion of the facts that allegedly will demonstrate that decedent is the biological father of the plaintiff child.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Laws of Intestate Succession Apply to Resolve Disputes as to Status of Child

In Cheyanna M. v. A.C. Nielsen Co. (1998) 66 Cal. App. 4th 855, 863-865, 78 Cal. Rptr. 2d 335 , plaintiff was a minor whose alleged unwed father died in a traffic accident before the plaintiff's birth. Plaintiff, along with the parents of decedent, brought suit for wrongful death against the driver who caused the accident and the driver's employers. Decedent's parents brought a motion for summary judgment alleging that plaintiff did not have standing to bring an action for wrongful death because decedent, before he died, did not openly hold her out as his own child prior to her birth, thus failing the test for establishing his paternity under the laws of intestate succession [see Prob. Code § 6400 et seq.]. Plaintiff countered by arguing that her standing should be determined not by the laws of intestate succession, but by the Uniform Act on Blood Tests to Determine Paternity [see Fam. Code § 7550 et seq.]. Plaintiff also argued that, even if the laws of intestate succession applied, it was impossible for decedent to have held her out as a "child" prior to her birth, and in light of such impossibility, the laws of intestate succession permit a child to establish paternity through any clear and convincing evidence [see Prob. Code § 6453(b)(3)]. The trial court ruled that the laws of intestate succession applied, but that since decedent, before his death, did not hold plaintiff out as his own child prior to her birth, plaintiff did not have standing to join as a plaintiff in the suit. Plaintiff child appealed.

The court of appeals affirmed the holding that the laws of intestate succession applied when resolving a question as to the standing of an alleged child of a decedent to bring a wrongful death action. The court noted that the relevant standing provision of the wrongful death statute, Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60(a), provides that "children" have standing to join as plaintiffs, but it does not define "children." The court also noted that under the law existing prior to 1993, the relevant statute conferred standing on "heirs," as defined by the intestacy statute [see former Code Civ. Proc. § 377]. Looking to case law and the legislative history of the current statute, the court concluded that the purpose of the legislative changes enacted in 1992, which replaced reference to "heirs" with reference to the surviving spouse, children, and issue of deceased children, was only to clarify that a decedent's children and issue of deceased children may maintain a wrongful death action even if the decedent's entire estate passes to a surviving spouse under community property laws. Thus, as under the former statute, standing to bring a wrongful death action remained linked to the intestacy laws.

[b] Child Born After Death of Father May Establish Paternity by Any Clear and Convincing Evidence

The facts and procedural background of Cheyanna M. v. A.C. Nielsen Co. (1998) 66 Cal. App. 4th 855, 868-877, 78 Cal. Rptr. 2d 335 , are discussed in § 66.30[3][a]. After determining that the laws of intestate succession applied to the issue of whether plaintiff had standing to join as a plaintiff in the wrongful death action, the court determined that the proper test for determining that a person is a "natural parent" is found in Prob. Code § 6453(b). Under that test, paternity may be established by clear and convincing evidence that the father has openly held out the child as his own; if it was impossible for the father to have held the child out as his own, the paternity of the biological father may be established by any clear and convincing evidence [see Prob. Code § 6453(b)(2)-(3)]. The court noted that the laws of instate succession do not specify whether "child" includes an unborn child or fetus. The court rejected application of Civ. Code § 43.1, which provides that "a child conceived, but not yet born, is to be deemed an existing person, so far as may be necessary for its interests in the event of its subsequent birth .....," since by its own language that statute applies only to the extent it benefits the child. The court then resorted to general legal principles found in case law suggesting that legislative action is normally required to confer legal status on unborn children. In the absence of specific legislative provision applicable to the facts of the case, the court held that for purposes of establishing the paternity of a child born after the death of the alleged father, it is impossible for a decedent to have held an as-yet-unborn child out as his own. Thus, the child may subsequently attempt to prove paternity through any clear and convincing evidence. The court further supported its conclusion by reference to legislative history suggesting that the "impossibility" provision was intended to apply to situations in which the alleged father died before the birth of the child.

PLAINTIFF'S WRONGFUL DEATH ACTION IS NOT BARRED BY THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS, BECAUSE THE STATUTE DID NOT RUN DURING THE TIME THAT PLAINTIFF WAS A MINOR.

A. Tolling of Statute of Limitations During Minority. If a person entitled to bring an action is under the age of majority at the time the cause of action accrues, the time of his or her disability is not a part of the time limited for the commencement of the action (Code Civ. Proc. § 352(a); Cross v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1964) 60 Cal. 2d 690, 692-693, 36 Cal. Rptr. 321, 388 P.2d 353).

[Optional] B. Tolling of Statute During Minority Not Affected by Running of Statute for Adult Plaintiffs. The running of the statute of limitations against adult persons entitled to a wrongful death cause of action does not affect the suspension of the statute during other plaintiffs' minority (Cross v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1964) 60 Cal. 2d 690, 692-693, 36 Cal. Rptr. 321, 388 P.2d 353 ; Arizmendi v. System Leasing Corp. (1971) 15 Cal. App. 3d 730, 736, 93 Cal. Rptr. 411).

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a contention that a minor plaintiff may not recover in a wrongful death cause of action because the statute of limitations period has run. These points and authorities may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a demurrer supported by the points and authorities in § 66.25. It should be noted that the general rule tolling the statute of limitations for the period of minority is subject to the exception in Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 for actions against health care providers based on professional negligence [see

Washington v. Nelson (1979) 100 Cal. App. 3d 47, 52, 160 Cal. Rptr. 644 ; see also § 66.26[3][a]].

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue that the statute of limitations was tolled while plaintiff was a minor. For example, these points and authorities may be used to oppose a demurrer to a wrongful death complaint when the demurrer asserts that the complaint fails to state facts constituting a cause of action in that it appears on the face thereof, or from a matter of which the court is required to or may take judicial notice, that the action is barred by the applicable statute of limitations [Baillargeon v. Department of Water & Power (1977) 69 Cal. App. 3d 670, 138 Cal. Rptr. 338 ; Bell v. Bank of Cal. (1908) 153 Cal. 234, 94 P. 889] . These points and authorities may be used to oppose a defendant's motion for summary judgment [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]. The points and authorities in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include discussion showing that the plaintiff was a minor during at least part of the time that the statute of limitations ran, and that the action was timely given the amount of time the running of the statute was suspended.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Tolling of Statute of Limitations During Minority

The facts and procedural background of Cross v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1964) 60 Cal. 2d 690, 36 Cal. Rptr. 321, 388 P.2d 353 , are discussed in § 66.31[3][b]. In reversing the judgment of dismissal, the Court held that under Code Civ. Proc. § 352, the statute of limitations for wrongful death was suspended during the period of plaintiffs' minority (60 Cal. 2d 690, 692) .

[b] Tolling of Statute During Minority Not Affected by Running of Statute for Adult Plaintiffs

In Cross v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1964) 60 Cal. 2d 690, 36 Cal. Rptr. 321, 388 P.2d 353 , the decedent was electrocuted as the result of contact with an electrical line maintained by defendant, and was survived by his wife and three minor children. Plaintiffs, who were decedent's minor children, brought a wrongful death action some years later through their mother as guardian ad litem. Defendant demurred to the complaint on the ground that the action was barred by the one-year limitation of former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1 (two-year limitations period)]. The trial court sustained the demurrer with leave to amend, plaintiffs declined to amend, and the trial court entered a judgment of dismissal from which plaintiffs appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed, stating that former Code Civ. Proc. § 377 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60] was a procedural statute establishing compulsory joinder and not a statute creating a joint cause of action [see Salmon v. Rathjens (1907) 152 Cal. 290, 294, 92 P. 733 ; see also § 66.28[3][a]]. Accordingly, each entitled person should be regarded as having a personal and separate cause of action. Therefore, the running of the statute of limitations against adult plaintiffs did not affect the rights of minor plaintiffs for whom the running of the statute was suspended (60 Cal. 2d 690, 692-693) .

The factual background of Arizmendi v. System Leasing Corp. (1971) 15 Cal. App. 3d 730 , 93 Cal. Rptr. 411 , is discussed in § 66.25[3][a]. The court of appeal relied on Cross to hold that, although the wrongful death action on behalf of the minor entitled persons was not filed until over two years after the death of decedent, the action was not barred by former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1] because the statute was tolled during the minority of these plaintiffs.

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

IF A PLAINTIFF WAS "BLAMELESSLY IGNORANT" OF HIS/HER CAUSE OF ACTION FOR WRONGFUL DEATH, THE ONE-YEAR PERIOD TO FILE SUIT COMMENCES ON THE DATE ON WHICH THE PLAINTIFF DISCOVERS, OR SHOULD HAVE DISCOVERED, HIS/HER INJURY IN THE FORM OF THE DEATH OF THE DECEDENT AND ITS TORTIOUS CAUSE.

A. General Rule Deferring Commencement of Personal Injury Actions Applicable to Wrongful Death Actions. Any general rule deferring commencement of the two-year period of limitations specified in Code of Civil Procedure Section 335.1 applicable to personal injury actions is also applicable to wrongful death actions (see Frederick v. Calbio Pharms. (1979) 89 Cal. App. 3d 49, 55, 152 Cal. Rptr. 922 ; see also former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3) (one-year period prior to 2003)).

B. Period Extended to Date Injury Discovered or Should Have Been Discovered. If the plaintiff in a wrongful death action was "blamelessly ignorant" of his or her cause of action because the death occurred without perceptible trauma, the statute of limitations does not begin to run until the plaintiff discovered, or should have discovered, his or her injury in the form of the death of his or her decedent and its tortious cause (Frederick v. Calbio Pharms. (1979) 89 Cal. App. 3d 49, 53-54, 152 Cal. Rptr. 292).

[2] Comments

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a wrongful death action is barred by the running of the two-year period of limitations set forth in Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1 (see former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3) (one-year period, prior to 2003)). The ground of opposition is that the plaintiff was "blamelessly ignorant" of his or her cause of action at the time of the death of the decedent and commenced the action within two years (one year, prior to 2003) after the date he or she discovered, or should have discovered, the injury in the form of the death of the decedent and its tortious cause. Thus, this form may be used if plaintiff alleges that he or she was blamelessly ignorant of the fact of the decedent's death or its tortious cause. For professional negligence actions against health care providers, the form would require modification to reflect the rule permitting an action to be timely under the delayed discovery rule beyond three years after the date of death only if tolled further by proof of fraud, intentional concealment, or the presence of a foreign body that has no therapeutic or diagnostic purpose in the injured person [see Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5].

This form may also be used to oppose a motion for summary judgment which is based on the running of the two-year statute of limitations set forth in Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1 (see former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3) (one year, prior to 2003)). In this case, plaintiff should attach affidavits (or declarations [Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) demonstrating that a triable issue of fact exists as to whether the delay in commencing the action was a result of plaintiff's blameless ignorance of the death or its tortious cause until a date no more than two years (one year, prior to 2003) after the action was commenced.

These points and authorities may be combined, where appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue of the discovery rule. For example, the point and authorities may be used to oppose a demurrer to a wrongful death complaint based on the running of the statute of limitations [Frederick v. Calbio Pharms. (1979) 89 Cal. App. 3d 49, 59, 152 Cal. Rptr. 292] .

This form must be combined with points and authorities supporting the plaintiff's allegations that his or her ignorance of the decedent's death or its tortious cause was blameless. In addition, the discovery rule requires that the complaint allege the time and manner of discovery, and the circumstances excusing delayed discovery [G.D. Searle & Co. v. Superior Court (1975) 49 Cal. App. 3d 22, 25-26, 122 Cal. Rptr. 218] . When applying the discovery rule, the date of accrual--that is, the date that triggers the running of the statute of limitations--is the date on which the plaintiff comes at least to suspect, or have reason to suspect, the factual basis for the elements of the cause of action [Norgart v. Upjohn Co. (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 383, 397-398, 981 P.2d 79 . 87 Cal. Rptr. 2d 453] . Therefore, the form should be combined with points and authorities that provide this general standard and support for the contention that the plaintiff's action was filed within two years (one year, prior to 2003) after that date [see Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1; see also former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3); California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 345, Limitation of Actions § 345.14].

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should demonstrate that the complaint was timely given the reasonably delayed discovery of the facts.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] General Rule Deferring Commencement of Personal Injury Actions Applicable to Wrongful Death

Actions

In Frederick v. Calbio Pharms. (1979) 89 Cal. App. 3d 49, 152 Cal. Rptr. 292 , the trial court entered judgment after it sustained defendants' demurrer to plaintiffs' wrongful death complaint on the ground of the running of the one-year statute of limitations. Plaintiffs had been given 30 days' leave to amend but had failed within that time to file an amended pleading. Plaintiffs had alleged that decedent had died as a result of being given doses of a drug defendants negligently, carelessly, and recklessly had caused to be distributed for experimental and investigational use without establishing the necessary safeguards and controls to prevent administering the drug to patients. Plaintiffs further alleged that they did not discover, nor could not have discovered by the exercise of reasonable diligence, the cause of death until the Food and Drug Administration recalled the drug one and a half years later because of certain side effects, one of which was the cause of decedent's death.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that a wrongful death action against a manufacturer based on negligence or products liability comes within the rule that a plaintiff who is blamelessly ignorant of his or her cause of action is not barred by a delay in bringing suit; therefore, the one-year period to file suit commences on the date on which the plaintiff discovers, or should have discovered, the injury in the form of the death of the decedent and its tortious cause. Relying on Wohlgemuth v. Meyer (1956) 139 Cal. App. 2d 326, 328 , it reasoned first that any general rule deferring commencement of the one-year period applicable to personal injury actions is similarly applicable to wrongful death claims (89 Cal. App. 3d 49, 55) . The only noted exception to this rule is that found in Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 for actions against health care providers, and defendants did not qualify as health care providers (89 Cal. App. 3d 49, 55 n.2) [see Washington v. Nelson (1979) 100 Cal. App. 3d 47, 52, 160 Cal. Rptr. 644 and § 66.26]. Reviewing a number of cases, including the "seminal" case of Huysman v. Kirsch (1936) 6 Cal. 2d 302, 312, 57 P.2d 908 , the United States Supreme Court decision in Urie v. Thompson (1949) 337 U.S. 163, 69 S. Ct. 1018, 93 L. Ed. 1282 , and G.D. Searle & Co. v. Superior Court (1975) 49 Cal. App. 3d 22, 25-26, 122 Cal. Rptr. 218 , cases that had applied the exception to personal injury actions based on medical malpractice, employers' liability, and products liability, respectively, the court concluded that because the exception had been applied in all these categories, as well as in a wrongful death action in one of these categories (Wohlgemuth v. Meyer, a medical malpractice action), it applied to any wrongful death action regardless of he categorical nature of the underlying cause of action (89 Cal. App. 3d 49, 56-59) .

[b] Period Extended to Date Injury Discovered or Should Have Been Discovered

The facts and procedural background of Frederick v. Calbio Pharms. (1979) 89 Cal. App. 3d 49, 152 Cal. Rptr. 292 , are discussed in § 66.32[3][a]. In applying the discovery rule to the case before it, the court considered whether plaintiffs' allegations were sufficient to come within the "blamelessly ignorant" plaintiff exception. Relying on G.D. Searle & Co. v. Superior Court (1975) 49 Cal. App. 3d 22, 25-26, 122 Cal. Rptr. 218 , the court stated that plaintiffs must have alleged (1) the time and manner of discovery and (2) the circumstances excusing delayed discovery (89 Cal. App. 3d 49, 59) . Although plaintiffs alleged sufficient facts to meet the first requirement, the only allegation with respect to the second requirement, that plaintiffs by the exercise of reasonable diligence could not have become aware of the causal connection between defendants' drug and decedent's death, were considered insufficient to explain the circumstances excusing delayed discovery. The court pointed out that specific allegations, such as, that plaintiffs were not medical experts and were never told of the risk and that no general public information had been disseminated, were required. However, because plaintiffs were not given a meaningful opportunity to amend their complaint in this respect, it reversed the judgment but without prejudice to defendants' challenge to the sufficiency of the allegations of the circumstances purporting to excuse delayed discovery.

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS FOR FILING SUIT AFTER A PUBLIC ENTITY DENIES A CLAIM DOES NOT BAR PLAINTIFF'S SUIT BECAUSE THE LIMITATIONS PERIOD IS CALCULATED FROM THE REJECTION OF A CLAIM BY ALL THE ENTITLED PLAINTIFFS.

A. Limitation on Court Actions Brought Against Public Entity. A person who has presented a claim for wrongful death to a public entity, as required by Government Code Section 911.2, generally has six months after the claim has been denied as provided in Government Code Section 911.6 to file a court action (Gov. Code § 945.6).

B. Limitation Runs From Rejection of Amended Claim by All Entitled Persons. When one plaintiff's wrongful death claim was filed with a public entity and rejected, and an amended claim naming all entitled persons was subsequently timely filed and rejected, the statute of limitations of Government Code Section 945.6 runs from the denial of the claim that included all entitled persons, not from the denial of the original claim by the single plaintiff (Norwood v. Southern Cal. Rapid Transit Dist. (1985) 164 Cal. App. 3d 741, 744, 211 Cal. Rptr. 6).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted by plaintiffs in a wrongful death action in opposition to a contention by a public entity defendant that the limitation period of Gov. Code § 945.6(a)(1) commenced on the rejection of a claim by less than all entitled plaintiffs. The ground for opposition is that the limitation period only runs from the (later) rejection of a claim filed by all the entitled plaintiffs.

These points and authorities may be combined, where appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to address the issue of a claim barred by the statute of limitations for presenting a government claim. For example, the points and authorities may be used to oppose a motion for summary judgment that is made by a public entity defendant based on the limitations period of Gov. Code § 945.6. They may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities at any stage of the litigation or in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Thus, counsel should refer to facts supporting the claim that all entitled plaintiffs filed a claim after the claim filed by less than all of the entitled plaintiffs, and that the wrongful death action was filed within the applicable limitations period of Gov. Code § 945.6 as calculated from the rejection of the claim filed by all the entitled persons.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Limitation Runs From Rejection of Amended Claim by All Entitled Persons

In Norwood v. Southern Cal. Rapid Transit Dist. (1985) 164 Cal. App. 3d 741, 211 Cal. Rptr. 6 , decedent was injured on December 3, 1980, and died on December 11, 1980. The attorney for one of the persons entitled to bring a wrongful death action (Linda Norwood) submitted a claim against the defendant on January 7, 1981, which was rejected on February 2, 1981. Linda later discharged this attorney. The attorney for Linda's three brothers submitted a claim on behalf of one named brother and "all family members" of the deceased (hereinafter referred to as "the amended claim"). On April 23, 1981, the amended claim was denied by operation of law pursuant to Gov. Code § 911.6. Defendant sent notice of rejection of the amended claim on July 22, 1981. Suit by all siblings was filed on September 22, 1981. Defendant moved for, and was granted, summary judgment only against Linda on the ground that her action was barred because it had not been filed within six months after her claim was rejected. Linda appealed.

The court of appeal, noting that a wrongful death action is single, joint, and indivisible and cannot be maintained by less than all of the heirs, found that the amended claim was the proper claim and reversed the judgment for defendant (164 Cal. App. 3d 741, 744) .

§ 66.34 Opposing Contention That Plaintiff May Not Recover Damages for Wrongful Death--Plaintiff Is Not Subject to Every Defense That Might Have Been Asserted Against Decedent

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE PLAINTIFF IN A WRONGFUL DEATH ACTION IS NOT SUBJECT TO EVERY DEFENSE THAT COULD HAVE BEEN ASSERTED AGAINST THE DECEDENT, AND THE PLAINTIFF IS NOT SUBJECT TO A DEFENSE BASED ON _____ [specify inapplicable defense, e.g., THE STATUTORY PROHIBITION AGAINST THE RECOVERY OF NONECONOMIC DAMAGES BY AN UNINSURED PERSON INJURED THROUGH THE OPERATION OR USE OF A MOTOR VEHICLE], EVEN THOUGH THAT DEFENSE MIGHT HAVE BEEN ASSERTED AGAINST THE DECEDENT.

A. Wrongful Death Plaintiff Not Subject to Every Defense That Might Have Been Asserted Against Decedent. Not every defense that might have been asserted against a decedent had he or she lived may be asserted against a wrongful death plaintiff; instead, each case must be examined in its particular context. If a statutory defense is being asserted, the issue is one of statutory construction, and the defense will be allowed or not according to the express terms of the statute while respecting the independent status of a wrongful death action (Horwich v. Superior Court (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 272, 283, 286, 87 Cal. Rptr. 2d 222, 980 P.2d 927).

[Optional] B. Statutory Prohibition Against Recovery of Noneconomic Damages by Uninsured Motorist Injured in Motor Vehicle Accident Inapplicable to Wrongful Death Plaintiffs. Even though the defense might have been asserted successfully against the decedent, a wrongful death plaintiff whose decedent was the uninsured operator of a motor vehicle involved in a fatal accident is not precluded by Civil Code Section 3333.4 from recovering nonpecuniary damages for loss of care, comfort, and society, because the statutory language suggests that the particular nonpecuniary damages limitation was intended to apply only to the actual uninsured owner or operator of the vehicle (Horwich v. Superior Court (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 272, 276-283, 87 Cal. Rptr. 2d 222, 980 P.2d 927 ; see Civ. Code § 3333.4).

[Optional] C. Wrongful Death Action Not Barred by Failure to Bring Decedent's Original Action to Trial Within Five Years. As a wrongful death claim does not relate back to personal injury claims brought by a decedent before his or her death, the five-year limit for bringing the decedent's case to trial under Code Civ. Proc. § 583.310 is inapplicable to a subsequent wrongful death claim (Brumley v. FDCC California, Inc. (2007) 156 Cal. App. 4th 312, 326-327, 67 Cal. Rptr. 3d 292).

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a particular defense that might have been asserted against a decedent had he or she lived may be asserted against a wrongful death plaintiff. Optional paragraph B may be used if the asserted defense is that Civ. Code § 3333.4, which would have prevented the decedent from recovering nonpecuniary damages, also prevents the wrongful death plaintiff from seeking such damages. Optional paragraph C may be used if the asserted defense is failure to bring the case to trial based on the running of the five-year period of Code Civ. Proc. § 583.310, as measured from the filing of a personal injury action by decedent before his or her death.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, if the asserted defense is based on Civ. Code § 3333.4, counsel should include discussion of the facts that show that only the decedent was the uninsured owner or operator of the motor vehicle involved in the accident, rather than the wrongful death plaintiff.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the asserted defense does not apply to the wrongful death plaintiff--for example, in opposition to a motion for summary judgment. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Wrongful Death Plaintiff Not Subject to Every Defense That Might Have Been Asserted Against Decedent

In Horwich v. Superior Court (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 272, 87 Cal. Rptr. 2d 222, 980 P.2d 927 , the decedent, who did not have personal automobile insurance or any insurance for the vehicle she was driving, was killed in an automobile accident. Her parents brought a wrongful death action against the driver of the other car. As an affirmative defense to the claim that the plaintiffs could seek damages for loss of care, comfort, and society, the defendant invoked Civ. Code § 3333.4, which prohibits the recovery of noneconomic damages by a person arising out of the operation or use of a motor vehicle if the injured person was an uninsured owner or operator of a vehicle involved in the accident. Although it was undisputed that the decedent was uninsured and would have been subject to the defense if she had lived, the plaintiffs argued that the statutory prohibition on damages of Civ. Code § 3333.4 applied only to the uninsured owner or operator of the vehicle, and that they were neither. The trial court agreed with the plaintiffs and granted their motion for judgment on the pleadings. The court of appeal affirmed, and defendant appealed to the Supreme Court.

The Supreme Court affirmed, holding first that the limitations on the recovery of nonpecuniary damages by uninsured owners or operators operate only against a plaintiff who is actually the uninsured owner or operator of the vehicle involved in the accident. Through reference to the literature and debate surrounding Proposition 213, through which Civ. Code § 3333.4 was enacted, the Court determined that the primary purpose of the enactment, as pertinent to this case, was to prevent uninsured motorists from seeking unreasonable damages or suing insured drivers if the plaintiffs themselves were in violation of the state's financial responsibility laws. Because wrongful death plaintiffs are not themselves the uninsured motorists who were the targets of the statute, and are not expressly included in the statute's language, the Court concluded that the statute did not apply to such plaintiffs (21 Cal. 4th 272, 276-283) . However, the Court left open the possibility that the statutory defense could be invoked against a particular heir who may have been the uninsured owner or operator of the vehicle involved in the accident (21 Cal. 4th 272, 278 n.5).

The defendant alternatively contended that because the defense of Civ. Code § 3333.4 could have been successfully asserted against the decedent if she had lived, the defense could also be asserted against the plaintiffs, invoking the rule that a defense that may be asserted against a decedent may also be asserted against heirs in a wrongful death action. The Supreme Court disagreed, noting that this general proposition was not an absolute rule and that each case must be examined in its particular context. In the context of wrongful death actions involving a statutory defense that might have been asserted against the decedent, the Court concluded that the issue has traditionally been one of statutory construction, with the defense applying or not in accordance with the language and intent of the provision at issue, while respecting the independent status of a wrongful death action (21 Cal. 4th 272, 283-286) .

[b] Statutory Prohibition Against Recovery of Noneconomic Damages by Uninsured Motorist Injured in Motor Vehicle Accident Inapplicable to Wrongful Death Plaintiffs

The factual and procedural background of Horwich v. Superior Court (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 272, 87 Cal. Rptr. 2d 222, 980 P.2d 927 , is discussed in § 66.34[3][a]. In affirming the judgment for the wrongful death plaintiffs, the Supreme Court first determined that Civ. Code § 3333.4 was not intended to apply directly to wrongful death plaintiffs, given the statute's intended goal of preventing uninsured motorists from recovering large noneconomic damage awards if the plaintiffs themselves have failed to comply with the state's financial responsibility laws (21 Cal. 4th 272, 276-283) . The Court further concluded that a statutory defense that could have been asserted against a decedent if he or she had lived is not necessarily applicable to a wrongful death action, but that the issue has traditionally been one of statutory construction, with the defense applying or not in accordance with the language and intent of the provision at issue. Therefore, because the language and intent of Civ. Code § 3333.4 precluded its direct application to the plaintiffs, the defendant could not invoke the defense merely because it may have been asserted against the decedent (21 Cal. 4th 272, 287) .

[c] Wrongful Death Action Not Barred by Failure to Bring Decedent's Original Action to Trial Within Five Years

In Brumley v. FDCC California, Inc. (2007) 156 Cal. App. 4th 312, 67 Cal. Rptr. 3d 292 , plaintiffs were the wife and children of a decedent who several years earlier had filed asbestos-related injury claims against multiple defendants. After decedent's death, the wife was granted leave to file an amended complaint asserting wrongful death claims and a loss of consortium claim and substituting herself as personal representative for purposes of survivorship claims. When plaintiffs subsequently failed to bring the case to trial within five years of the filing of decedent's original complaint, the trial court dismissed all causes of action pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. §§ 583.310 and 583.360. Plaintiffs appealed, arguing that the trial court erred in dismissing the wrongful death claims and the wife's loss of consortium claim.

The court of appeal reversed. Based on Supreme Court precedent interpreting an earlier, but similar, statute, the court of appeal held that the relation-back doctrine applied to the five-year time period for bringing a case to trial imposed by

Code Civ. Proc. § 583.310 (156 Cal. App. 4th 312, 321) . Under that doctrine, a new cause of action in an amended complaint is held to relate back to earlier pleaded claims if the later cause of action rests on the same general set of facts, involves the same injury, and refers to the same instrumentality, as the earlier pleaded claims. The court then held that wrongful death and loss of consortium claims of heirs do not relate back to a decedent's personal injury claims arising from the fatal injury. The court noted that the new claims were the claims of different plaintiffs seeking different damages from those sought in decedent's original action. Because the new claims brought by the widow and children did not relate back to decedent's personal injury action, those claims should not have been dismissed under Code Civ. Proc. § 583.310 as the five-year period on those claims had not yet expired (156 Cal. App. 4th 312, 324-326) .

§ 66.35 Opposing Contention That Plaintiff May Not Recover Damages for Wrongful Death--Settled or Dismissed Action May Be Continued by Entitled Person Initially Joined as Defendant

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE WRONGFUL DEATH ACTION OF PLAINTIFF _____ [name] IS NOT BARRED BY THE SETTLEMENT AND DISMISSAL OF THE WRONGFUL DEATH ACTION OF PLAINTIFF _____ [name] BECAUSE PLAINTIFF _____ [name] WAS JOINED AS A DEFENDANT IN THE ACTION OF PLAINTIFF _____ [name], AND THE ACTION OF PLAINTIFF _____ [name] IS MERELY A CONTINUATION OF THE ACTION OF PLAINTIFF _____ [name].

Subsequent Action by Entitled Person Joined as Defendant in Prior Action. The settlement and subsequent dismissal with prejudice by a plaintiff of a wrongful death action does not bar another person, whose relationship to the decedent entitles him or her to a wrongful death cause of action, from continuing the action as a plaintiff if he or she was joined as a defendant in the prior action (Estate of Kuebler v. Superior Court (1978) 81 Cal. App. 3d 500, 503-505, 146 Cal. Rptr. 481).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that the plaintiff may not recover damages for wrongful death because a separate wrongful death action has already been settled, dismissed, or otherwise disposed of [see § 66.27].

This form should be combined with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to refute the contention that the plaintiff's wrongful death action is barred by a separate action. For example, the form may be used to oppose a demurrer for failure to state a cause of action or a motion for judgment on the pleadings asserting that the separate action has been settled and dismissed with prejudice, thus barring the plaintiff's action.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel may include discussion showing that plaintiff was joined as a defendant in a wrongful death action, that the action was settled and dismissed with prejudice as to another plaintiff (without litigating the rights of the plaintiff/defendant), and that the plaintiff/defendant continued the action in his or her own name.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Subsequent Action by Entitled Person Joined as Defendant in Prior Action

In Estate of Kuebler v. Superior Court (1978) 81 Cal. App. 3d 500, 146 Cal. Rptr. 481 , a woman brought a wrongful death action on account of the death of her children. She named her former husband, who was the father of the children, as a defendant after he would not consent to be a plaintiff. Subsequently, the father filed a wrongful death action which was limited to the amount of insurance coverage available to the defendant estates [see former Prob. Code § 721 (now see Prob. Code §§ 554, 9390)]. Before the two actions could be consolidated, the woman settled her claim and dismissed the action with prejudice. Defendant estates then moved for summary judgment in both law suits, which were pending in the same county. The trial court denied the motion, and defendants petitioned for a writ of mandate to the court of appeal.

The court of appeal denied the writ on the ground that the father was not barred from proceeding with either action. The court reasoned that an heir who is joined to a wrongful death action as a defendant is only nominally a defendant. In reality, the heir is a plaintiff and the settlement by one party plaintiff does not ordinarily operate to bar the actions of other plaintiffs. Therefore, the father had standing to maintain the wrongful death action brought by his former wife. To the extent that the complaint in that action did not seek damages for him or request an apportionment of damages, these deficiencies were subject to amendment.

The court noted that Mayerhoff v. Kaiser Found. Health Plan, Inc. (1977) 71 Cal. App. 3d 803, 807, 138 Cal. Rptr. 319 [see § 66.27[3][a]], held that the plaintiff in a subsequent wrongful death action was barred by the settlement and dismissal of a prior action against the same defendant. The court distinguished Mayerhoff because it did not appear that the plaintiffs in the first action had joined the plaintiffs in the subsequent action as defendants and, in any event, the court did not consider the effect that such joinder might have had.

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Subsequent Action by Entitled Person Joined as Defendant in Prior Action

In Smith v. Premier Alliance Ins. Co. (1995) 41 Cal. App. 4th 691, 48 Cal. Rptr. 2d 461 , plaintiffs, the children of a decedent, had been named as defendants pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 382 in a wrongful death action brought by a surviving wife. The insurer for the defendant in the original action proposed a settlement for policy limits, with the requirement that the settlement must encompass the claims of both the wife and the children. The children did not sign the releases, and the settlement check was deposited in the trust account of wife's attorney. In a related action, another court denied a motion by the children to apportion the settlement, after which wife's attorney released the money from his trust account. The children then filed an action against the insurer of the original defendant, claiming that they had been deprived of the right to participate in the wrongful death settlement. The trial court granted summary judgment to the insurer, and the court of appeal affirmed. The court stated that the children had a right to share in the settlement between the insurer and the wife only if they were included in the settlement agreement. Since they did not sign the releases, they did not settle with the insurer. As a result, the children were entitled to continue to pursue an action against the original defendant (41 Cal. App. 4th 691, 699) . However, since the insurer did not deprive the children of any rights by settling with the wife, the children did not have a cause of action against the insurer. The court thus affirmed the summary judgment in favor of the insurer.

A. Separate Wrongful Death Actions Against Different Defendants Permitted. Despite the rule that an action for wrongful death is joint, single, and indivisible, a plaintiff in a wrongful death action need not bring a single action against all joint tortfeasors or join actions against tortfeasors liable under different causes of action arising out of the same death (Helling v. Lew (1972) 28 Cal. App. 3d 434, 438, 104 Cal. Rptr. 789).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted to oppose the contention that a plaintiff may not recover damages for wrongful death if a previous wrongful death action by the plaintiff involving the same incident was settled and dismissed, or otherwise resolved [see § 66.27]. Optional Paragraph B may be used if by settlement and dismissal the plaintiff has specifically released another defendant in a previous action. Counsel may wish to combine this points and authorities with points and authorities regarding the issue of collateral estoppel [see §§ 66.41 and 66.42].

These points and authorities may be combined, where appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to refute the contention that plaintiff may not maintain a wrongful death action against a second defendant. For example, the form may be used to oppose a motion for summary judgment made on this ground.

Where appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts showing that the defendant in the current action is different from the defendant in the prior action.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Separate Wrongful Death Actions Against Different Defendants Permitted

In Helling v. Lew (1972) 28 Cal. App. 3d 434, 104 Cal. Rptr. 789 , the surviving spouse and minor children of a decedent brought a medical malpractice action against the doctor and hospital treating the decedent after an automobile accident. After this action was compromised, settled, and dismissed, plaintiffs brought a wrongful death action against the owner and operator of the automobile that struck the decedent. Defendants in the second action contended that the action was barred by the settlement and termination of the malpractice action, arguing that former Code Civ. Proc. § 377 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60] requires that all causes of action and all tortfeasors be joined in a single action. The trial court agreed with this argument and granted defendants' motion for summary judgment. The plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal rejected defendants' argument and reversed. It held that the common law characterization of a wrongful death action as joint, single, and indivisible does not mean, as argued by defendants, that plaintiffs must join all causes of action and all potential defendants in one action. Rather, it is a characterization which refers to the principles that: it is joint only insofar as all heirs join in the action and a lump sum awarded as damages; it is single only insofar as the action can be maintained only by one of the persons designated by former Code Civ. Proc. § 377 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60] (that is, the personal representative or the heirs); and it is indivisible only insofar as it precludes omitted heirs from later bringing individual actions for their individual damages. Because a wrongful death action arises in tort, the court of appeal applied the general rule that joint tortfeasors may be sued either jointly or severally (28 Cal. App. 3d 434, 438) . The court further held that plaintiffs were free to bring separate actions because there were two distinct causes of action involved--negligent conduct resulting in the accident and subsequent negligent medical treatment (28 Cal. App. 3d 434, 439) .

[b] Release of One Defendant Does Not Preclude Action Against Another

Helling v. Lew (1972) 28 Cal. App. 3d 434, 104 Cal. Rptr. 789 , is discussed in § 66.36[3][a]. The court held that the release by the medical malpractice defendants did not preclude the cause of action against the owner and operator of the automobile that struck the decedent because the release specifically provided that it did not discharge any other defendants from liability (28 Cal. App. 3d 434, 439) .

PLAINTIFF MAY MAINTAIN A WRONGFUL DEATH ACTION AS THE PARENT OF DECEDENT, EVEN THOUGH DECEDENT WAS BORN OUT OF WEDLOCK, BECAUSE PLAINTIFF ACKNOWLEDGED THE CHILD AND CONTRIBUTED TO THE SUPPORT OR CARE OF THE CHILD.

A. Persons Entitled to Intestate Succession Qualify as Entitled Persons. When a decedent leaves no spouse, domestic partner, or child, the persons who would be entitled to the property of the decedent by intestate succession qualify as persons entitled to bring a wrongful death action (Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60(a)).

B. Unwed Parent Who Acknowledges Child and Contributes to Support Is Entitled to Intestate Succession. If a child is born out of wedlock, a natural parent may not inherit from or through the child on the basis of the parent and child relationship unless the parent acknowledged the child and contributed to the support or the care of the child (Prob. Code § 6452).

[Optional] C. Acknowledgment of Child Need Not Be Either in Witnessed Writing or After Birth. In order to bring a wrongful death action for a child born out of wedlock a father must have acknowledged the child, but that acknowledgment need not be after the child's birth or in a written and witnessed document (Lozano v. Scalier (1996) 51 Cal. App. 4th 843, 844, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 346).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a plaintiff is not a person entitled by statue to bring an action for wrongful death. The basis of the opposition is that plaintiff qualifies as a person entitled to bring a wrongful death action as a person entitled to inherit from the decedent through intestate succession [Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60(a)], and that the basis for inheriting through intestate succession is that, although decedent was born out of wedlock, plaintiff is the decedent's parent and acknowledged and contributed to the support or the care of the child [Prob. Code § 6452].

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue, for example in a motion for summary judgment. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. In particular, counsel should include specific facts showing plaintiff's acknowledgment of the decedent and plaintiff's contribution to the support or care of decedent.

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

When appropriate, the points and authorities in § 66.20 may be used to oppose these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Acknowledgment of Child Need Not Be Either in Witnessed Writing or After Birth

In Lozano v. Scalier (1996) 51 Cal. App. 4th 843, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 346 , the father of a child born out of wedlock brought a wrongful death action on behalf of the child against the child's mother after the child was killed in an automobile accident for which the mother was liable. Defendant mother moved for judgment on the ground that plaintiff had no standing to sue because he had not acknowledged the child as his in writing during the child's lifetime. Plaintiff had signed a medical form identifying himself as the child's father five months before the child's birth, and had orally represented himself as the child's father after the child's birth. The trial court found that plaintiff had acknowledged the child as his, and had contributed to his support and care, and concluded that plaintiff was entitled to maintain the wrongful death action. The trial court thus denied defendant's motion for judgment. By stipulation, a judgment was then entered for plaintiff.

The court of appeal noted that the wrongful death statute, Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60(a), provided that when a decedent leaves no spouse or child an action may be brought by the persons who would be entitled to the property of the decedent by intestate succession. The Probate Code provides that a relationship between a child and its parents exists regardless of the parent's marital status Prob. Code § 6450, but if a child is born out of wedlock, a parent may not inherit from the child unless the parent acknowledged the child and contributed to the child's support or care Prob. Code § 6452. With regard to defendant's contention that an acknowledgment must be witnessed, and made after the child is born, the court concluded that there are no such requirements on the face of the statute. Furthermore, the court held that the history of the statute did not compel a conclusion that such requirements should be read into the statutory language, stating that if the legislature had intended these requirements it would have said so (51 Cal. App. 4th 843, 848) . The court thus affirmed the judgment for plaintiff.

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF MAY MAINTAIN A WRONGFUL DEATH ACTION AS THE BIOLOGICAL GRANDPARENT OF THE DECEDENT, EVEN THOUGH A COURT ORDER HAS TERMINATED THE PARENTAL RIGHTS OF THE DECEDENT'S BIOLOGICAL PARENTS.

Grandparent Has Standing Even if Parental Rights of Decedent's Biological Parents Have Been Terminated. If a court order has terminated the parental rights of a child's parents, a biological grandparent has standing to bring a wrongful death action after the death of the child, at least if the termination order had no effect on the legal rights of the grandparent with respect to the child and the child had not been adopted at the time of the child's death (see Fraizer v. Velkura (2001) 91 Cal. App. 4th 942, 946-947, 110 Cal. Rptr. 2d 918).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a biological grandparent has no standing to bring a wrongful death action because the parental rights of the decedent's biological parents have been terminated. The basis for the opposition is that because a grandparent may inherit under the laws of intestate succession [see Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60(a); Prob. Code § 6402(d)], if the conditions for inheritance have been established by that grandparent, that grandparent has standing to bring a wrongful death action so long as the termination order did not affect the grandparent's rights and the child had not been adopted at the time of the child's death.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which these points are raised--for example, in opposition to a motion for summary judgment. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Thus, counsel should include facts showing that the termination order did not affect the grandparent's rights, that the child had not been adopted at the time of the child's death, and that the statutory conditions for inheritance by the grandparent existed.

If appropriate, the points and authorities in § 66.20 may be used to oppose these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Grandparent Has Standing Even if Parental Rights of Decedent's Biological Parents Have Been Terminated

In Fraizer v. Velkura (2001) 91 Cal. App. 4th 942, 110 Cal. Rptr. 2d 918 , the plaintiff was the biological grandmother of a child born with serious birth defects. Almost three years after her birth, the child was freed for adoption when the parental rights of the child's biological parents were terminated. When the child died a year later, the plaintiff was the child's guardian and was just weeks away from finalizing adoption proceedings. The plaintiff filed a wrongful death action against the child's doctor. The doctor filed a motion for summary judgment, asserting that the plaintiff had no standing to bring the action. The trial court granted the motion, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court noted that under the statutory provisions governing standing to bring a wrongful death action, if there is no surviving issue of the decedent, the persons who would be entitled to property of the decedent by intestate succession have standing to bring a wrongful death action. Under the laws of intestate succession, if there is no surviving issue, parent, or issue of a parent, a surviving grandparent has a right to inherit (91 Cal. App. 4th 942, 945-946) . The court rejected the defendant's argument that the order terminating the parental rights of the child's biological parents terminated the plaintiff's relationship as a grandparent. The termination order made no mention of grandparents and on its face had no effect on the legal rights with respect to the child and her grandmother. Therefore, the plaintiff had standing to bring the action (91 Cal. App. 4th 942, 946-947) .

§ 66.39 Opposing Contention That Wrongful Death Cause of Action Is Improperly Pleaded--Omitted Entitled Persons May Be Added as Parties [Code Civ. Proc. § 473]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

OMITTED ENTITLED PLAINTIFFS MAY BE ADDED AS PARTIES TO A WRONGFUL DEATH ACTION IF THE OMISSION WAS NOT IN BAD FAITH AND A NEW CAUSE OF ACTION IS NOT CREATED.

A. Amendment of Pleading. A court, in the furtherance of justice and on proper terms, may allow a party to amend any pleading or proceeding by adding or striking out the name of any party, correcting a mistake in the name of a party, or correcting a mistake in any other respect (Code Civ. Proc. § 473).

B. Amendment Should Be Permitted if Failure to Add Omitted Entitled Plaintiffs Would Create Hardship. Entitled plaintiffs omitted through accident, misfortune, or mistake should be added to a wrongful death action in order to promote justice, especially if failure to add them would create an exceptional hardship for the moving party and the omitted entitled plaintiffs and other parties will suffer no prejudice from the addition. The addition of omitted entitled plaintiffs does not create a new and distinct cause of action against the defendants but merely adds matters essential to make the original cause of action complete (Rabe v. Western Union Tel. Co. (1926) 198 Cal. 290, 299-301, 244 P. 1077).

[Optional] C. Amendment of Complaint to Specify That Action Is on Behalf of Entitled Persons. If the decedent's personal representative brings a wrongful death action and fails to allege that the action is on behalf of persons entitled to bring the action, the administrator should be allowed to amend the complaint to name the entitled person(s) (see Mayo v. White (1986) 178 Cal. App. 3d 1083, 1092, 224 Cal. Rptr. 373).

[Optional] D. Entitled Persons Named as Defendants May Be Added as Plaintiffs if Cause of Action Against Them May Be Deleted. Entitled persons named as defendants in a wrongful death action should be added as plaintiffs if a wrongful death cause of action has been stated on behalf of these persons against third parties and if the complaint can be amended to delete the causes of action stated against the entitled person (see Mayo v. White (1986) 178 Cal. App. 3d 1083, 1092-1093, 224 Cal. Rptr. 373).

[Optional] E. Amendment Relates Back to Original Complaint. When there is no attempt to state a new cause of action in an amended complaint, but merely the addition of matters essential to make the original cause of action complete, the amendment relates back to the time of the commencement of the action, even if made after the expiration of the period of limitation (Mayo v. White (1986) 178 Cal. App. 3d 1083, 1092, 224 Cal. Rptr. 373).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted to oppose the contention that a plaintiff may not recover in a wrongful death cause of action because of insufficient joinder of parties. If a plaintiff is a personal representative, counsel may use optional Paragraph C. If persons to be added were originally named as defendants, counsel may use optional Paragraph D. If the amendment is sought after expiration of the period of limitation, counsel may use optional Paragraph E.

These points and authorities may be combined, where appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue of adding omitted entitled plaintiffs to an action. For example, these points and authorities may be used to support a motion to amend a wrongful death complaint by a plaintiff seeking to add the names of omitted entitled plaintiffs as parties to the action.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include discussion showing how the failure to add omitted entitled plaintiffs to the action would create a hardship on the omitted entitled plaintiffs. If the proceeding seeks to name as plaintiff persons originally named as defendants, counsel should include discussion showing that the persons named as defendants are entitled to be named as plaintiffs and that the cause of action against them as defendant may be deleted.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Amendment Should Be Permitted if Failure to Add Omitted Entitled Plaintiffs Would Create Hardship

In Rabe v. Western Union Tel. Co. (1926) 198 Cal. 290, 244 P. 1077 , the husband and married daughter of a decedent brought a wrongful death action against defendant. In their complaint, plaintiffs alleged that they were the only heirs of decedent. During the course of the trial, the daughter revealed under cross-examination by defendant the existence of decedent's grandchildren, through a deceased son and daughter, who were also heirs of the decedent. Defendant neither took action nor objected to the nonjoinder revealed during the cross-examination. Plaintiffs, however, moved for leave to amend their complaint to name the grandchildren as parties to the action. After defendant objected, the trial court reserved its ruling on the question until all plaintiffs' evidence was presented. At the conclusion of plaintiffs' presentation, the trial court denied plaintiffs' motion for leave to amend and granted defendant's motion for a nonsuit. On plaintiffs' appeal, the Supreme Court reversed the order granting a nonsuit and directed that plaintiffs be allowed to amend their complaint by making the omitted heirs parties to the action. The court noted the general rule that motions to amend pleadings are to be liberally granted to the end that justice may be promoted. In this case, the heirs were not omitted fraudulently or as the result of bad faith. Even if the omitted heirs did not suffer any pecuniary damage as a result of the decedent's death, the denial of plaintiffs' motion for leave to amend their complaint worked an exceptional hardship on both plaintiffs and the omitted heirs. Denial of the motion deprives a plaintiff who has moved diligently for leave to amend his or her complaint of the benefits of former Code Civ. Proc. § 377 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60]. In addition, the denial of such a motion after the tolling of the one-year statute of limitations on wrongful death actions bars any omitted heirs from hereafter commencing a wrongful death action in their own right. Moreover, the omitted entitled plaintiffs are barred by a judgment in a prior action from any recovery in a subsequent action. Because of these disastrous consequences, plaintiffs' motion should have been granted by the trial court. The Supreme Court summarily rejected defendant's argument that the amendment would substitute a new and distinct cause of action for the one pleaded, relying on a number of earlier California decisions.

NOTE:

In 1993, the legislature amended the wrongful death statute to eliminate the use of the term "heirs" to delineate persons entitled to a wrongful death cause of action. Entitled persons include, but are not limited to, certain heirs [see Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60]. However, the 1993 amendment was not intended to adversely affect the standing of any party who had standing to bring a wrongful death action under the prior law [see Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60(d), (e)]. The arguments in support of adding omitted entitled plaintiffs, set out in Paragraphs A and B of this memorandum, still apply.

[b] Amendment of Complaint to Specify That Action Is on Behalf of Entitled Persons

The facts and procedural background of Mayo v. White (1986) 178 Cal. App. 3d 1083, 224 Cal. Rptr. 373 , are discussed in § 66.20[3][d]. In reversing the judgment of dismissal with directions to allow plaintiff to amend the complaint, the court of appeal said several old, but still good, cases have held that when an administrator of a decedent's estate brings a wrongful death action and fails to bring such action on behalf of the heirs at law, the administrator should be allowed to amend the complaint to name the heirs at law (178 Cal. App. 3d 1083, 1092) .

[c] Entitled Persons Named as Defendants May Be Added as Plaintiffs if Cause of Action Against Them May Be Deleted

The facts and procedural background of Mayo v. White (1986) 178 Cal. App. 3d 1083, 224 Cal. Rptr. 373 , are discussed in § 66.20[3][d]. In reversing the judgment of dismissal with directions to allow plaintiff to amend the complaint, the court of appeal pointed out that (1) plaintiff's second and third causes of action allege that the minor's parents negligently failed to supervise the minor, which proximately caused his accident and death, and (2) defendant wife contended that plaintiff should not be allowed to amend the complaint to state the proper heirs at law, since the resulting complaint would consist of the parents of decedent as plaintiffs suing themselves as defendants. With respect to the negligent supervision cause of action, the court explained that under the facts of the case it was possible that only one parent was negligent. If this is so, the nonnegligent parent, as decedent's heir at law, could maintain a cause of action for wrongful death against the negligent parent and, under this theory, plaintiff could amend the complaint to state a proper cause of action on the theory of negligent supervision of the minor child. With respect to the premises liability cause of action, the court held that since both parents were owners and in control of the premises the complaint could not be amended so as to allow one parent to sue the other on this theory. The court said that each parent, being a co-owner and jointly in possession of the premises, would be equally responsible for the condition of the premises and could not be held legally liable for injury to the other (178 Cal. App. 3d 1083, 1092-1093) .

[d] Amendment Relates Back to Original Complaint

The facts and procedural background of Mayo v. White (1986) 178 Cal. App. 3d 1083, 224 Cal. Rptr. 373 , are discussed in § 66.20[3][d]. In reversing the judgment of dismissal with directions to allow plaintiff to amend the complaint, the court of appeal said that the running of the statute of limitations against the heirs (parents) was no bar to the suit because of the relation back doctrine. Quoting Ruiz v. Santa Barbara Gas & Elec. Co. (1912) 164 Cal. 188, 194, 128 P. 330 , the court said that when there is no attempt to state a new cause of action in an amended complaint, but merely the addition of matters essential to make the original cause of action complete, the amendment, though made after the expiration of the period of limitation, relates back to the time of the commencement of the action (178 Cal. App. 3d 1083, 1092) .

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF MAY NOT RELITIGATE _____ [specify issue] IN THIS WRONGFUL DEATH ACTION BECAUSE THE IDENTICAL ISSUES ON WHICH LIABILITY DEPEND HAVE BEEN DETERMINED ADVERSELY TO PLAINTIFF IN A PRIOR PERSONAL INJURY ACTION AGAINST DEFENDANT.

A. Collateral Estoppel if Plaintiff Was Party to Prior Action. A judgment adverse to the plaintiffs in a personal injury action acts as a conclusive adjudication to them as to the issues litigated and determined in that action, so that they are collaterally estopped from bringing a subsequent wrongful death action against the defendant if the identical issues on which liability depends are joined in the pleadings in the wrongful death action (Secrest v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co. (1943) 60 Cal. App. 2d 746, 749, 751, 141 P.2d 747).

B. Collateral Estoppel Based on Privity With Party to Prior Action. Plaintiffs in a wrongful death action may not relitigate the liability of a defendant who was determined not to be liable to decedent in a prior personal injury action, because they are deemed to have been in privity with the decedent in the prior action (Brown v. Rahman (1991) 231 Cal. App. 3d 1458, 1461-1464, 282 Cal. Rptr. 815).

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted to support the contention that a plaintiff's wrongful death action is subject to collateral estoppel because issues on which liability depend were determined adversely to plaintiff in a prior personal injury action against the same defendant. Paragraph A is for use if the plaintiff in the wrongful death action was a party to the prior action. For example, the spouse of decedent may have been a party to the decedent's personal injury action on a cause of action for loss of consortium. Paragraph B is for use if the wrongful death plaintiff was not a party in the prior action.

These points and authorities may be combined, where appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue of collateral estoppel. For example, the points and authorities may be used to support a defendant's motion for summary judgment if there has been a final judgment in a prior personal injury action that was adverse to the plaintiff and involved the identical issues on which liability depends. A defendant may move for summary judgment in any action or proceeding in contending that the action has no merit. The motion must be granted if all of the papers submitted show that there is no triable issue as to any material fact and that defendant is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(c)]. These points and authorities may also be used to support a demurrer to a wrongful death complaint or a motion for judgment on the pleadings if it appears on the face of the complaint, or from any matter of which the court may or must take judicial notice, that a prior determination of the same issues of liability that was adverse to plaintiffs had been made in an earlier action.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts showing that the decedent, during his or her lifetime, brought a personal injury action seeking damages for the same injuries that ultimately caused his or her death. Further, it should be shown that the liability of the defendant for those injuries was fully litigated and determined in favor of the defendant. In addition, counsel must support the motion with affidavits, declarations, admissions, answers to interrogatories, depositions, and matters of which judicial notice must or may be taken [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Collateral Estoppel if Plaintiff Was Party to Prior Action

In Secrest v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co. (1943) 60 Cal. App. 2d 746, 141 P.2d 747 , the widow of a decedent brought a wrongful death action against defendants, the owner and operator of a bus that collided with an automobile in which the decedent was a passenger. Defendants denied their negligence in their answer and contended that plaintiff was collaterally estopped from bringing a wrongful death action against defendants because of the judgment adverse to plaintiff and her deceased husband that had been entered in an action brought by them against defendants for personal injuries sustained in the collision. The trial court proceeded to a separate trial on the issue of whether or not the wrongful death action was barred by the prior judgment, and found that the identical issues presented in the wrongful death action had been determined adversely to plaintiff in the prior personal injury action, therefore estopping plaintiff from relitigating those issues in the wrongful death action. Plaintiff appealed from this judgment, contending that she was not estopped from bringing the wrongful death action because it constituted a new cause of action in favor of a decedent's heirs based on their pecuniary loss resulting from the death. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's judgment.

The court held that the rendering of a verdict in the earlier personal injury action in favor of defendants meant the jury found either that defendants were not negligent, or that plaintiff was contributorily negligent. The court of appeal stated that a former judgment operated as an estoppel or conclusive adjudication as to those issues actually litigated and determined in the first action. Thus, if issues joined in the pleadings in the wrongful death action are identical to those that had been determined adversely to plaintiff in the prior personal injury action, plaintiff was collaterally estopped from bringing the wrongful death action.

[b] Collateral Estoppel Based on Privity With Party to Prior Action

In Brown v. Rahman (1991) 231 Cal. App. 3d 1458, 282 Cal. Rptr. 815 , executors of decedent's estate brought a wrongful death action against two doctors alleged to have caused decedent's death. During her lifetime, the decedent had brought a personal injury action against the same doctors, based on the injuries that ultimately caused her death. In that action, the jury returned a defense verdict for one of the doctors, and that verdict was upheld on appeal. The trial court in the wrongful death action granted that doctor's motion for summary judgment, ruling that the prior judgment collaterally estopped the plaintiffs from relitigating his negligence.

The appellate court affirmed. The court noted the existence of older authority holding that wrongful death plaintiffs who were not parties to a prior personal injury action were not collaterally estopped from relitigating issues determined in that action, because a wrongful death cause of action is not derivative in character or a continuation or revival of the decedent's personal injury cause of action [see Kaiser Found. Hosps. v. Superior Court (1967) 254 Cal. App. 2d 327, 333-335, 62 Cal. Rptr. 330] . However, the court joined two other courts that had more recently rejected this view [see Evans v. Celotex Corp. (1987) 194 Cal. App. 3d 741, 743-747, 238 Cal. Rptr. 259 ; see also Aguilar v. Los Angeles County (9th Cir. 1985) 751 F.2d 1089, 1093] .

The court held that there was privity between the decedent in the earlier action and the plaintiffs in the subsequent wrongful death action sufficient to invoke principles of collateral estoppel. The court found that privity requires that the party to be estopped have had an identity or community of interest with, and adequate representation by, the losing party in the first action. Further, the party to be estopped should reasonably have expected to be bound by the prior adjudication [see Clemmer v. Hartford Ins. Co. (1978) 22 Cal. 3d 865, 875, 151 Cal. Rptr. 285, 587 P.2d 1098] . The court found that the interests of wrongful death plaintiffs are inextricably linked to the determination of the deceased's rights in the prior action. The loss they suffer arises by virtue of the injury caused to the deceased. It would be anomalous to deny recovery to the deceased but to permit his or her heirs to recover damages based on the same set of facts and legal issues. Further, it can fairly be said that plaintiffs' legal interests were adequately represented in the personal injury action as if they had been parties thereto, because the decedent had every incentive to fully litigate the defendant's liability (231 Cal. App. 3d 1458, 1462-1464) .

DEFENDANT MAY NOT RELITIGATE DEFENDANT'S LIABILITY FOR WRONGFUL DEATH BECAUSE THE IDENTICAL ISSUES ON WHICH LIABILITY DEPEND HAVE BEEN DETERMINED ADVERSELY TO DEFENDANT IN A PRIOR COURT ACTION.

Collateral Estoppel Effect May Be Given to Determination of Intentional and Malicious Conduct Made by Bankruptcy Judge. If a bankruptcy court determines that a wrongful death judgment would not be dischargeable because the debtor's conduct in causing the death was intentional and malicious, the trial court in a wrongful death action may give collateral estoppel effect to this finding to preclude the defendant from relitigating the issue of his or her liability for the death (Roos v. Red (2005) 130 Cal. App. 4th 870, 878-888, 30 Cal. Rpr. 3d 446).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted by the plaintiff in a wrongful death action to support the contention that the defendant is precluded from relitigating the issue of his or her liability because the identical issue was determined adversely to the defendant in a prior court proceeding, such as in a bankruptcy court proceeding in which it was determined that the defendant's conduct in causing the death was intentional and malicious.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which these points are raised. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Thus, for example, counsel should include facts showing that the issues establishing defendant's liability were determined against the defendant in a prior court proceeding, such as a bankruptcy proceeding, and that the defendant was given a full and fair opportunity to litigate the issue in the prior proceeding.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Collateral Estoppel Effect May Be Given to Determination of Intentional and Malicious Conduct Made by Bankruptcy Judge

In Roos v. Red (2005) 130 Cal. App. 4th 870, 30 Cal. Rpr. 3d 446 , the plaintiffs were the surviving parents of two adult sons who were killed when the defendant drove his SUV into a pool hall. The plaintiffs filed separate suits for wrongful death against the defendant, and the actions were consolidated. The defendant moved to Texas and filed for bankruptcy, attempting to discharge all of his debts, including a potential judgment in the pending wrongful death action. After the bankruptcy court issued a stay of the wrongful death action, the plaintiffs sought removal of the stay, which the defendant opposed. The court denied the request to remove the stay, and the plaintiffs then filed complaints in the bankruptcy court seeking a determination that a wrongful death judgment in their lawsuit would not be dischargeable because the defendant's conduct in causing the deaths was willful and malicious. The defendant specifically requested that the bankruptcy court rule on the dischargeability of a wrongful death judgment, and after discovery and a bench trial, the bankruptcy judge held that the defendant's conduct in causing the deaths was willful and malicious and that any judgment would not be discharged in bankruptcy. After these proceedings, the wrongful death action was continued, at which point the plaintiffs filed a motion in limine requesting that the trial court give collateral estoppel effect to the findings of the bankruptcy court, effectively precluding the defendant from relitigating his liability for the deaths. The court granted the motion, and trial proceeded only on the issue of the amount of damages. The plaintiffs were awarded damages, and after the court denied the defendant's motion for a new trial, the defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court held that the doctrine of collateral estoppel may be used to prevent a wrongful death defendant from litigating his or her liability, if the identical issue was litigated and decided against the defendant in a prior proceeding. The defendant argued that collateral estoppel should not have been applied under the circumstances because he was not given a "full and fair" opportunity to litigate the issue in the bankruptcy court--specifically, he did not have the opportunity to present his case to a jury in that court. The court rejected this argument. The court concluded that a jury would probably have reached the same result, and more importantly, that the lack of the opportunity to present a case before a jury does not preclude application of the collateral estoppel doctrine (130 Cal. App. 4th 870, 881) . Moreover, the court rejected the defendant's argument that 28 U.S.C.S. § 1411(a), which states that the bankruptcy act does not affect any right to a trial by jury a person has under nonbankruptcy law with regard to personal injury or wrongful death claims, preserved his right to have a jury decide the issue of his liability in the wrongful death action. The court concluded that the statute was not designed to create any new right to a jury trial and thus nothing in that statute prevented application of collateral estoppel, which otherwise can be used to prevent relitigating before a jury an issue that has already been litigated (130 Cal. App. 4th 870, 885-886) . Therefore, although the defendant was not afforded a jury trial in the bankruptcy court, the court concluded that the defendant had a full and fair opportunity to litigate the question of whether his conduct in causing the deaths was willful and malicious. Because the bankruptcy court decided this question against him, the defendant could not relitigate the issue in the wrongful death action (130 Cal. App. 4th 870, 888) .

PLAINTIFF MAY MAINTAIN HIS/HER WRONGFUL DEATH ACTION BECAUSE HIS/HER INTERESTS WERE NOT REPRESENTED IN A PRIOR WRONGFUL DEATH ACTION AGAINST DEFENDANT AND DEFENDANT KNEW OF PLAINTIFF'S EXISTENCE BUT TOOK NO ACTION TO REQUIRE JOINDER OF PLAINTIFF IN THE PRIOR ACTION.

A. Subsequent Action by Knowingly Omitted Entitled Plaintiffs. The judgment rendered in the wrongful death action brought by the other entitled plaintiffs neither constitutes res judicata to the claims of the omitted entitled plaintiffs, nor collaterally estops them from asserting their claims in a subsequent wrongful death action, because their separate interests were not before the court, and because defendant knew of their existence, but did not attempt to require their joinder in the previous action (Arizmendi v. System Leasing Corp. (1971) 15 Cal. App. 3d 730, 739, 93 Cal. Rptr. 411).

[Optional] B. Omitted Heir Named But Not Served May Maintain Subsequent Action. If an actual plaintiff joins a potential plaintiff as a nominal defendant, but fails to serve that nominal party with a summons and complaint, that nominal defendant is not a party to the action and he or she is not barred from bringing a separate wrongful death action if the initial action is settled. The defendant has the burden of determining whether an heir apparently joined as defendant has been served (Romero v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (2007) 156 Cal. App. 4th 211, 218-219, 67 Cal. Rptr. 3d 236).

[2] Comments

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a plaintiff's wrongful death action is subject to collateral estoppel.

These points and authorities may be combined, where appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to refute the issue of collateral estoppel. These points and authorities may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a motion for summary judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] supported by the points and authorities in § 66.27. Thus, these points and authorities may be used to oppose a motion for summary judgment made on the ground that plaintiff was collaterally estopped from bringing the action because plaintiff had not been joined nor adequately represented in the prior wrongful death action and defendant had known of plaintiff's existence but failed to require his or her joinder. These points and authorities may also be used to oppose a demurrer for failure to state a cause of action or a motion for judgment on the pleadings when the basis for the demurrer or motion is defendant's assertion that settlement and dismissal with prejudice in regard to a different plaintiff is a bar to the action.

Where appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include discussion showing that the omission of the plaintiff from the prior action was knowing, that the interests of the omitted plaintiff were not represented, and that the defendant did not seek joinder of the omitted plaintiff.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Subsequent Action by Knowingly Omitted Entitled Plaintiffs

The factual background of Arizmendi v. System Leasing Corp. (1971) 15 Cal. App. 3d 730, 93 Cal. Rptr. 411 , is discussed in § 66.25[3][a]. Defendant had failed to make any effort to join the minor heirs of decedent in the prior action brought by the decedent's wife, even after discovering the existence of the heirs. In addition, decedent's surviving spouse brought that action solely on her own behalf and not in any representative capacity for the minor plaintiffs who brought the second action. Therefore, because the separate interests of the minor plaintiffs in the life of their natural parent and their loss resulting from his death were not before the trial court in the first action, the judgment rendered in the first action did not constitute res judicata as to the claims of the minor plaintiffs, and did not collaterally estop them from asserting their claims in a second wrongful death action against defendant.

NOTE:

The court in Arizmendi reached its conclusion by relying entirely on general principles governing the doctrines of res judicata and collateral estoppel. It did not consider any of the specific rules case law had developed with respect to the right to bring a second wrongful death action after either the first action had been dismissed with prejudice or a final judgment had been rendered in the first action. The general rule is that, because only one wrongful death action is permitted, the omitted heirs' remedy is an action against the plaintiffs who failed to name them in the action; the omitted heirs are considered collaterally estopped from bringing a second wrongful death action against the defendants [see Mayerhoff v. Kaiser Found. Health Plan, Inc. (1977) 71 Cal. App. 3d 803, 806-807, 138 Cal. Rptr. 319 ; see also Cross v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1964) 60 Cal. 2d 690, 694, 36 Cal. Rptr. 321, 388 P.2d 353 ; Daubert v. Western Meat Co. (1903) 139 Cal. 480, 481, 69 P. 297, 73 P. 244 ; and Form 8]. However, it may be argued that the rule set forth in Arizmendi is justified by the public policy that does not permit one party to take advantage of another party's excusable failure to protect his or her own interests. In Daubert, defendant could not have been considered to have taken advantage of the omitted heir since he had not known of its existence. In Arizmendi, the defendant was aware of the other heirs' existence; the court also found that the omitted heirs' interests had not been adequately represented in the earlier action. Thus, although it is generally the plaintiffs' obligation in a wrongful death action to inform the trier of fact of the existence and relationship of all persons entitled to bring suit [see Watkins v. Nutting (1941) 17 Cal. 2d 490, 499, 110 P.2d 384] , if they fail to fulfill this obligation but the defendants are aware of the failure, the defendants bear the burden of the failure, at least with respect to entitled persons whose interests are not adequately represented. By failing to bring all entitled persons into the action in such a case, they have unjustly enriched themselves to the detriment of those persons.

[b] Omitted Heir Named But Not Served May Maintain Subsequent Action

In Romero v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (2007) 156 Cal. App. 4th 211, 67 Cal. Rptr. 3d 236 , plaintiff filed a wrongful death action against a utility following the death of his son. An earlier wrongful death action had been brought by decedent's mother against the same defendant, and while plaintiff was listed as a nominal defendant in that earlier action pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 382, decedent's mother failed to serve plaintiff. The earlier action was settled and dismissed without participation by plaintiff. When plaintiff's action followed, defendant utility successfully demurred on the grounds that the action was barred under the one-action rule because plaintiff was made a nominal defendant in the earlier action and defendant utility was unaware that he had not been served. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court noted the exception to the one-action rule established in Valdez v. Smith (1985) 166 Cal. App. 3d 723, 212 Cal. Rptr. 638 , discussed in [4][a], below, under which a wrongful death plaintiff is not barred from bringing an action against a tortfeasor who has voluntarily elected to settle an earlier wrongful death action with less than all of the heirs, if the tortfeasor had knowledge of an heir omitted from the earlier action and failed to have that omitted heir made a party to that earlier action. The court concluded that merely naming a person as a nominal defendant under Code Civ. Proc. § 382 was not the same as joining the person in the lawsuit, which requires serving the party with a summons and complaint. Defendant utility admitted that plaintiff had not been properly joined in the earlier action, but argued that the one-action rule still applied because defendant did not know that not all heirs were joined when it settled. The court rejected this argument. The court held that defendant could not properly infer that plaintiff had been properly joined merely because he had been named a defendant. Rather, a defendant wishing to protect itself under the one-action rule had the burden of ensuring that known heirs were actually joined in the original action. Defendant failed to do so (156 Cal. App. 4th 211, 217-220) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Subsequent Action by Knowingly Omitted Entitled Plaintiffs

In Gonzales v. Southern Cal. Edison Co. (1999) 77 Cal. App. 4th 485, 91 Cal. Rptr. 2d 530 , the plaintiffs, the parents and dependents of the decedent, appealed the trial court's summary judgment granted in favor of the defendants in the plaintiffs' wrongful death action. The trial court had ruled that the plaintiffs' action was barred by the "one-action" rule, because the defendants had settled a prior wrongful death action brought on behalf of the decedent's minor daughter. The court of appeal reversed, noting that in the course of deposing the mother of the decedent's minor daughter in preparation for the first action, the defendants had learned that the decedent had parents still living in Mexico, although the deposing attorneys failed to inquire as to whether the parents were dependent on the decedent. Relying on Valdez v. Smith (1985) 166 Cal. App. 3d 723, 212 Cal. Rptr. 638 the court of appeal held that the defendants had waived the right to rely on the one-action rule because they failed to join the plaintiffs in the first wrongful death action despite knowing the plaintiffs' identity and that they were still alive in Mexico (77 Cal. App. 4th 485, 489-490) . In addition, the court of appeal ruled that if a defendant has knowledge that an additional potential plaintiff exists and could reasonably have discovered that this additional potential party was in fact a dependent of the decedent, knowledge of the potential plaintiff's status as a dependent of the decedent may be imputed to the defendant (77 Cal. App. 4th 485, 490-491) . Finally, the court rejected the argument that because the decedent's parents were aware of the first action when they commenced their action, it was their responsibility to join in the first action in order to recover. The court refused to allow that principle to control the outcome, because the defendants also had the right and opportunity to join the omitted heirs to the first action and had failed to do so (77 Cal. App. 4th 485, 491) .

In Valdez v. Smith (1985) 166 Cal. App. 3d 723, 212 Cal. Rptr. 638 , the court of appeal held that if an action for wrongful death is brought by only some of the decedent's heirs and the defendant voluntarily settles it with them while actually knowing of the existence, identity and status of an omitted heir, whom the defendant has not joined as a party to the action, the defendant waives his or her right to insist on a single action. Here, defendant actually knew, from deposition testimony of another heir, that plaintiff was a minor heir of the decedent residing in Mexico and that an action brought by the decedent's immediate family did not include plaintiff, yet defendant did not seek to join plaintiff. Therefore, the dismissal following settlement of the other heirs' action does not bar plaintiff from filing a subsequent action against defendant (166 Cal. App. 3d 723, 731) .

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted to oppose the contention that a plaintiff is barred by collateral estoppel from maintaining a wrongful death cause of action. The ground of opposition is that the earlier wrongful death action was brought by an unqualified person.

These points and authorities may be combined, where appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to refute collateral estoppel. For example, these points and authorities may be used to oppose a motion for summary judgment made on the ground that plaintiff is collaterally estopped from bringing a second wrongful death action against defendant where the plaintiff in the first wrongful death action was not a qualified plaintiff under Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include discussion showing that the current plaintiff is entitled to a wrongful death cause of action and the prior plaintiff was not.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Unqualified Person's Recovery Does Not Bar Subsequent Action

In Davis v. Robinson (1942) 50 Cal. App. 2d 700, 123 P.2d 894 , a minor, through a guardian ad litem, sued to recover damages as an entitled person under former Code Civ. Proc. § 377 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60] for the death of his mother. Prior to this suit, plaintiff's grandmother had also sued defendant for the wrongful death of her daughter, and had been awarded damages. Although the grandmother was caring for plaintiff, she did not disclose the child's existence in the earlier action. She was also not joined in plaintiff's action. The trial court entered judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appealed, in part, on the ground that plaintiff was collaterally estopped from bringing his action. Although the court of appeal reversed on other grounds, it stated that plaintiff was not estopped from maintaining the second action. The court distinguished other California decisions under which a judgment in, or dismissal with prejudice of, a wrongful death action had been held to operate as a bar to a subsequent wrongful death action. In none of those cases had the question been presented of the effect of a wrongful death action brought by a person who was not an entitled plaintiff under former Code Civ. Proc. § 377 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60]. In this case, because of plaintiff's existence, the grandmother was not an heir entitled to succeed to the decedent's estate; thus, the wrongful death action had arisen in the child's favor, not the grandmother's, on his mother's death. The court reasoned that when such a cause of action arises, it can only be defeated by a release, payment, or the receipt of something in satisfaction. The failure of a defendant to defend against the false claim of one who was not an entitled person did not operate to estop a rightful heir from prosecuting his cause of action.

NOTE:

In 1993, the legislature amended the wrongful death statute to eliminate the use of the term "heirs" to delineate persons entitled to a wrongful death cause of action. Entitled persons include, but are not limited to, certain heirs [see Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60]. The rule that collateral estoppel does not apply when prior action is brought by a plaintiff who does not qualify as a person entitled to a wrongful death cause of action as set out in this memorandum still applies.

§ 66.43 Supporting Contention That Punitive Damages Are Not Recoverable--Statute Generally Precludes Recovery [Code Civ. Proc. § 377.61]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF MAY NOT RECOVER PUNITIVE DAMAGES IN A WRONGFUL DEATH ACTION.

A. Punitive Damages Barred. A plaintiff may not recover punitive damages in a wrongful death action. California law since 1896 has been uniformly interpreted by California courts to bar the recovery of punitive damages in a wrongful death action (see Tarasoff v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 425, 450, 131 Cal. Rptr. 14, 551 P.2d 334 ; Lange v. Schoettler (1896) 115 Cal. 388, 391, 47 P. 139).

B. Bar of Punitive Damages Is Constitutional. California's long-established rule barring recovery of punitive damages in wrongful death actions is not unconstitutional (see Ford Motor Co. v. Superior Court (1981) 120 Cal. App. 3d 748, 750-753, 175 Cal. Rptr. 39 ; Grimshaw v. Ford Motor Co. (1981) 119 Cal. App. 3d 757, 835, 836, 174 Cal. Rptr. 348).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be used to support the contention that punitive damages are not available in a wrongful death action. The statutory authorization for punitive damages generally does provide a specific exception to this rule, permitting punitive damages in an action based on a death that resulted from a homicide for which the defendant has been convicted of a felony [Civ. Code § 3294(d)]. This provision is discussed in § 66.44, which sets out a form of a memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that damages under that provision are proper.

These points and authorities may be combined, where appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue of the unavailability of punitive damages. For example, these points and authorities may be used to support a motion to strike [see Code Civ. Proc. § 435(b)] a claim for punitive damages that has been alleged in a wrongful death complaint. This form may also be used to support a general demurrer to a cause of action for punitive damages that has been separately alleged in a wrongful death complaint [see Tarasoff v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 425, 450, 131 Cal. Rptr. 14, 551 P.2d 334] .

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include discussion showing that the action seeks punitive damages in a wrongful death cause of action (rather than in a survival action, in which punitive damages may be recovered under some circumstances).

[c] Related Points and Authorities

For a general discussion of the alternative procedures available for eliminating an unauthorized claim for punitive damages in complaints generally, see Ch. 64, Damages: Tort .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Punitive Damages Barred

In Tarasoff v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 425, 131 Cal. Rptr. 14, 551 P.2d 334 , plaintiffs had alleged that defendant therapists had all participated in some way in failing to take reasonable care to protect their daughter, who was subsequently killed by a patient of one of the defendants. In plaintiffs' third cause of action, they sought punitive damages against the chief of the department of psychiatry who had countermanded the decision of the patient's therapist to confine the patient for observation, and who had directed that the staff take no action to confine the patient (17 Cal. 3d 425, 430 n.2). The court briefly disposed of this claim by affirming this part of the trial court's judgment of dismissal. It stated that California statutes and decisions have been interpreted to bar the recovery of punitive damages in a wrongful death action (17 Cal. 3d 425, 450) .

Lange v. Schoettler (1896) 115 Cal. 388, 47 P. 139 , was a wrongful death action that sought to recover punitive damages. The Supreme Court reversed the trial court's judgment awarding wrongful death plaintiffs both compensatory and punitive damages. Holding that the trial court had erroneously instructed the jury that they could allow exemplary damages if the act causing death was wanton, cruel, and malicious, the Court turned to the history of former Code Civ. Proc. § 377 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 377.61] to justify its result. It noted that the original wrongful death statute [Stats. 1862, ch. 330] had permitted the recovery of punitive damages, but that in 1874 this language had been deleted. The purpose of this amendment, the Court said, must have been to take away the right to exemplary damages and to make the rule accord with the general rule elsewhere.

NOTE:

In 1993, the legislature revised, reorganized, and renumbered the law regarding wrongful death and survival actions [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 377.10-377.50 (survival actions); Code Civ. Proc. §§ 377.60-377.62 (wrongful death actions)]. The provisions regarding punitive damages remain substantially the same and the bar against punitive damages in a wrongful death action as set out in Paragraph A of this memorandum still applies.

[b] Bar of Punitive Damages Is Constitutional

In Ford Motor Co. v. Superior Court (1981) 120 Cal. App. 3d 748, 175 Cal. Rptr. 39 , real parties in interest had sued petitioner for the wrongful death of their son, who was a passenger in an automobile manufactured by petitioner. In two causes of action, real parties sought compensatory damages based on theories of negligence and strict products liability. In a third cause of action, real parties sought punitive damages, alleging that petitioner had acted maliciously, oppressively, fraudulently, and in conscious disregard for the safety of others in marketing the automobile. Respondent trial court overruled petitioner's demurrer to the third cause of action. Thereafter, petitioner sought a writ of mandate requiring the trial court to sustain the demurrer.

In issuing the writ, the court of appeal rejected real parties' argument that the denial of punitive damages in wrongful death actions offends equal protection. The court first noted that although a wrongful death claimant receives less favorable treatment than all other tort plaintiffs in that punitive damages are unavailable to him or her, the constitutional guarantee of equal protection requires only that persons who are similarly situated receive similar treatment. The court observed that a plaintiff in a wrongful death action is not similarly situated to all other tort plaintiffs because he or she asserts a right that is specially created by statute, the right to recover on his or her own behalf for harm done to another, whereas the conventional tort plaintiff recovers for harm that is personal to him or her. The court held that equal protection is not violated when persons in different situations receive different treatment (120 Cal. App. 3d 748, 751) .

Real parties also contended that the punitive damages rule denied equal protection to heirs of an injured person who dies instantaneously because no heir can recover punitive damages on his or her behalf. However, if an injured person does not die immediately, his or her heirs will be able to recover damages indirectly; a cause of action for exemplary damages survives the decedent for all loss or damages sustained by him or her prior to his or her death [see former Prob. Code § 573 now see Code Civ. Proc. § 377.34)]. The court noted that this legislation appears to treat similarly-situated groups differently, but concluded that the classification does not offend equal protection. The court stated that under both federal and California law, the rational basis test was appropriate to determine the constitutional validity of the wrongful death statute; that is, the statute must be upheld if a rational relationship is found between the statute and a valid legislative object (120 Cal. App. 3d 748, 751-752) . The court concluded that the rule prohibiting punitive damages when the injured person dies instantaneously, but permitting them when he or she does not, is rationally related to the valid legislative objective of placing a reasonable limit on wrongful death recoveries and is based on a determination that the deterrence and retribution purposes of the punitive damages statute are best served when the tortfeasor must pay exemplary damages to the victim personally (120 Cal. App. 3d 748, 752-753) .

Grimshaw v. Ford Motor Co. (1981) 119 Cal. App. 3d 757, 174 Cal. Rptr. 348 , was a products liability action, brought against Ford, as the manufacturer of the Pinto automobile, following an accident in which the driver of a Pinto was killed, and the passenger was seriously injured. There was substantial evidence at trial to show that Ford's top management had been aware of design defects in the Pinto, and had been aware that those defects would result in injury or death to consumers involved in collisions at 20 to 30 miles per hour. There was also substantial evidence to show that Ford's management knew that such defects could be easily corrected, at minimal cost, but that a conscious decision was made, on cost-benefit analysis, to defer making any corrections.

The passenger and the driver's heirs brought suit, and after a jury trial, both groups of plaintiffs were awarded compensatory damages. Plaintiff passenger was also awarded punitive damages, but because plaintiff heirs had sued for wrongful death, the trial court had, at the outset, refused to permit them to amend their complaint to include a punitive damages claim. Plaintiff heirs cross appealed from the judgment to the extent that they were precluded from claiming punitive damages. They argued, among other things, that because former Code Civ. Proc. § 377 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 377.61] disallows punitive damages for wrongful death actions, while former Prob. Code § 573 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 377.34] allows such damages in survival actions, the prohibition of punitive damages in wrongful death actions effects an arbitrary, unreasonable distinction that violates the equal protection clauses of the state and federal Constitutions.

The court of appeal upheld the constitutionality of the statutory prohibition against punitive damages in wrongful death actions. It held that there is a rational basis for the distinction between the wrongful death and survival statutes. When a claim for punitive damages exists at decedent's death (as it did here because the decedent did not die instantly in the accident), such a claim would be enforceable by the decedent's personal representative in a survival action, under former Prob. Code § 573 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 377.30]. If plaintiffs in a wrongful death action had an independent right to recover punitive damages in that action, double recovery by those plaintiffs, and double punishment of the defendant, could occur (119 Cal. App. 3d 757, 835) . Therefore, the court held, with respect to the class of persons whose decedent had a claim for punitive damages at death, there is no violation of equal protection in precluding their recovery of punitive damages in a wrongful death action (119 Cal. App. 3d 757, 836) .

PLAINTIFF MAY RECOVER PUNITIVE DAMAGES IN THIS WRONGFUL DEATH ACTION BECAUSE IT IS BASED ON A DEATH THAT RESULTED FROM A HOMICIDE FOR WHICH THE DEFENDANT HAS BEEN CONVICTED OF A FELONY.

Punitive Damages Not Barred When Death Results From Felony Homicide. Plaintiff may recover punitive damages in a wrongful death action brought pursuant to Code of Civil Procedure Section 377.60 if the action is based on a death that resulted from a homicide for which the defendant has been convicted of a felony, whether or not the decedent died instantly or survived the injury for some period of time (Civ. Code § 3294(d)).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted to oppose the contention that a wrongful death plaintiff may not recover punitive damages when the wrongful death action is based on a death that resulted from a homicide for which the defendant has been convicted of a felony.

These points and authorities may be combined, where appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to refute the general unavailability of punitive damages. For example, these points and authorities may be used to oppose a motion to strike made on the ground that punitive damages were improperly alleged in a wrongful death complaint. The ground of opposition set forth is that punitive damages may properly be awarded in the action because it is based on a death that resulted from a homicide for which defendant was convicted of a felony [see Civ. Code § 3294(d)].

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Counsel should probably also attach a certified copy of the judgment of conviction entered against defendant in the felony homicide proceeding.

§ 66.60 Supporting Contention That Action Does Not Survive Death--Invasion of Privacy Action Does Not Survive

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF DOES NOT HAVE A CAUSE OF ACTION FOR INVASION OF PRIVACY IN THAT THE PERSON WHOSE PRIVACY WAS ALLEGEDLY INVADED HAS DIED AND THE DECEASED IS NOT A "DECEASED PERSONALITY" AS USED IN CIVIL CODE SECTION 3344.1.

A. Exceptions to Survival Statute. Although Code of Civil Procedure Sections 377.20, 377.30, and 377.40 provide that a cause of action is not lost by reason of the death of any person but may be maintained by or against the person's personal representative or successor in interest, there are decisional exceptions to this rule of survival (see Poon v. Poon (1966) 244 Cal. App. 2d 746, 751 n.3, 53 Cal. Rptr. 365).

B. Invasion of Privacy. Except for "deceased personalities" within the meaning of Civil Code Section 3344.1, the right of privacy is a purely personal right and a cause of action based on invasion of the right of privacy does not survive but dies with the person (see Lugosi v. Universal Pictures (1979) 25 Cal. 3d 813, 824, 160 Cal. Rptr. 323, 603 P.2d 425 ; Flynn v. Higham (1983) 149 Cal. App. 3d 677, 683, 197 Cal. Rptr. 145).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted to support the contention that a cause of action for invasion of privacy does not survive the death of the person whose privacy has been invaded.

These points and authorities may be combined, where appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the nonsurvival issue. Thus, these points and authorities may be used to support a general demurrer to a complaint for invasion of privacy when the demurrer asserts that the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in that it appears on the face thereof, or from a matter of which the court is required to or may take judicial notice, that the person whose privacy was allegedly invaded is deceased. If plaintiff is suing for the invasion of privacy rights involving the use of a deceased personality's name, voice, signature, photograph, or likeness under Civ. Code § 3344.1, defendant may still be able to demur to the complaint if the deceased was not a "personality" within the meaning of Civ. Code § 3344.1, or if plaintiff is not the proper person to exercise consent over such rights or has otherwise failed to comply with the requirements of Civ. Code § 3344.1 to fix these rights. These points and authorities may also be used to support a defendant's motion for summary judgment [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]. A motion for summary judgment can be used if the plaintiff dies after commencement of the action.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include discussion showing that the action is one for invasion of privacy, that the person whose privacy has been invaded has died, and that person is not a deceased personality.

[b] Related Points and Authorities

For forms of points and authorities supporting and opposing a plaintiff's standing to assert the rights of a deceased personality under Civ. Code § 3344.1, see Ch. 184, Privacy: Invasion of Privacy .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Exceptions to Survival Statute

In Poon v. Poon (1966) 244 Cal. App. 2d 746, 53 Cal. Rptr. 365 , decedent's administrator moved to substitute himself as plaintiff in an action initiated by decedent for divorce, division of community property, and recovery of property. The trial court denied the motion and the administrator appealed. The court of appeal reversed as to the actions for recovery of property. In reaching this conclusion, the court noted that under Code Civ. Proc. § 385, if any cause of action survived decedent, the substitution of the administrator on those causes of action was mandatory. Although the statutory language broadly states that, except as provided by statute, no cause of action shall be lost by reason of the death of any person [see Code Civ. Proc. § 377.20(a) (restating language originally added to former Prob. Code § 573 in 1961)], and therefore appears to make all causes of action survivable, even after this language was added to the statute the Supreme Court has applied the rule that an action for divorce does not survive [see McClenny v. Superior Court (1964) 62 Cal. 2d 140, 147, 41 Cal. Rptr. 460, 396 P.2d 916] . Therefore, it is apparent that former Prob. Code § 573 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 377.20] does not merit such a broad interpretation (244 Cal. App. 2d 746, 751 n.3).

[b] Invasion of Privacy

In Lugosi v. Universal Pictures (1979) 25 Cal. 3d 813, 160 Cal. Rptr. 323, 603 P.2d 425 , plaintiffs, the widow and surviving son, respectively, of the actor Bela Lugosi, brought an action to recover profits that defendant had allegedly appropriated and to enjoin defendant from continuing to appropriate property consisting of the unique individual likeness and appearance of Bela Lugosi in the role of Count Dracula. The trial court found that Lugosi had during his lifetime a protectable property or proprietary right in his facial characteristics and the individual manner of his appearance and likeness as Count Dracula; the property right did not terminate with Lugosi's death but descended to his heirs; and they acquired all right, title, and interest in the property under Lugosi's will. Accordingly, the trial court entered judgment for plaintiffs for damages and an injunction.

The Supreme Court reversed. The Court found that the interest in question was not one of property under Code Civ. Proc. § 654, but was instead a right of publicity that Lugosi had during his lifetime to market his likeness in the role of Count Dracula, a form of the fourth right of privacy Prosser had found in his analysis of the right of privacy [see Prosser, Privacy, 48 Cal. L. Rev. 383, 389 (1960)]. The Court pointed out that California courts have refused to extend to the heirs of the potential plaintiff the right to recover for the invasion of the "right to be left alone." The Court extended this rule to that right of privacy considered the right of publicity, which the Court defined as the reaction of the public to name and likeness, which may be fortuitous or which may be managed or planned, and which endows the name and likeness of the person involved with commercially exploitable opportunities. The Court held that, if this right has not been exploited for commercial purposes during the lifetime of the artist (as Lugosi had not done during his lifetime), the opportunity to exploit that right does not survive the artist's death. It stated that the right to exploit name and likeness is personal to the artist and must be exercised, if at all, by the artist during his or her lifetime (25 Cal. 3d 813, 824) .

The 1984 enactment of former Civ. Code § 990 [now see Civ. Code § 3344.1] has abrogated the Court's holding to the extent that a plaintiff suing for the unauthorized use of a deceased personality's name, voice, signature, photograph, or likeness has satisfied all the requirements of former Civ. Code § 990 [now see Civ. Code § 3344.1] for obtaining and exercising those rights. For forms supporting and opposing the exercise of rights under former Civ. Code § 990 [now see Civ. Code § 3344.1], see Ch. 184, Privacy: Invasion of Privacy .

Flynn v. Higham (1983) 149 Cal. App. 3d 677, 197 Cal. Rptr. 145 , concerned a book written and published by defendants that purported to give details of the life of plaintiff's deceased father. Plaintiff brought an action alleging invasion of privacy. The trial court sustained defendants' demurrer with leave to amend and entered judgment for defendants when plaintiff failed to amend the complaint. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal upheld the judgment. With respect to the allegation of invasion of privacy, the court stated that the right to privacy does not survive, but dies with the person. The court further stated that it is well settled that the right to privacy is purely a personal one and cannot be asserted by anyone other than the person whose privacy has been invaded. Thus, the court stated, it is clear that the publication must contain some direct reference to the plaintiff. The court concluded that plaintiff cannot recover when his or her only relation to the wrong is that he or she is related to the victim of the invasion of privacy and was unwittingly brought into the limelight, or when the publication was directed at another and referred only incidentally to plaintiff (149 Cal. App. 3d 677, 683) .

[a] Invasion of Privacy

In Hendrickson v. California Newspapers, Inc. (1975) 48 Cal. App. 3d 59, 121 Cal. Rptr. 429 , a widow and child brought an action for invasion for their right to privacy against defendant newspaper, which published an obituary of decedent that revealed a prior criminal conviction. The trial court sustained defendant's demurrer without leave to amend, and plaintiffs appealed from the resulting judgment of dismissal. The court of appeal affirmed on the ground that no direct invasion of plaintiffs' right of privacy had occurred. In explaining its conclusion, the court noted that the right of privacy was purely a personal right which could not be asserted by anyone other than the person whose privacy was invaded. This meant that the victim must plead and prove that his or her privacy was invaded and the right does not survive but dies with the person.

In Metter v. Los Angeles Examiner (1939) 35 Cal. App. 2d 304, 95 P.2d 491 , plaintiff filed a complaint seeking damages for violation of his right of privacy against a newspaper that had published a photograph of his wife, who had committed suicide. The court granted a directed verdict in favor of each defendant at the conclusion of plaintiff's case and plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that one cannot claim a right of privacy with regard to circumstances that, from the nature of things and by operation of law, cannot remain private. The court reviewed the fundamental aspects of the right of privacy, including the principle that invasion of the right of privacy is a purely personal action and does not survive, but dies with the person. The court added that because whatever right of privacy was possessed by plaintiff's deceased spouse died with her, plaintiff's case was based on his assertion of a relational right of privacy or a right to be spared unhappiness through publicity concerning another because of one's relationship with that person. The court rejected this theory because, on the facts of the case, the decedent by her own conduct had waived any existing right of privacy, relational or otherwise, that might apply.

NOTE:

In the cases discussed in §§ 66.60[3] and 66.60[4], the courts were not asked to determine whether an action for invasion of privacy initiated by a decedent during lifetime survived his or her death [see Code Civ. Proc. § 377.21 (pending action does not abate on death if cause of action survives)]. The statement in Lugosi, that the right to exploit name and likeness is personal and must be exercised by the decedent during his or her lifetime [see Lugosi v. Universal Pictures (1979) 25 Cal. 3d 813, 824, 160 Cal. Rptr. 323, 603 P.2d 425] , suggests that the rule of nonsurvival might not apply if it is so exercised, such as perhaps by filing suit to protect the right. However, if the decedent took no action whatsoever to assert the right during lifetime, the cases would appear to bar the personal representative from maintaining the suit as a survival action.

§ 66.61 Supporting Contention That Cause of Action Does Not Survive Death--Property Damage Occurred Simultaneously With Death

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE CAUSE OF ACTION FOR DECEDENT'S PROPERTY DAMAGE DOES NOT SURVIVE THE DEATH OF THE PROPERTY OWNER BECAUSE THE DAMAGE OCCURRED SIMULTANEOUSLY WITH THE OWNER'S DEATH.

Damage Simultaneous With Death. A cause of action for damage to personal property does not survive the death of the property owner if the death and the damage occur simultaneously, because in that situation no cause of action arises during the property owner's lifetime and, thus, there is no cause of action to survive (Pease v. Beech Aircraft Corp. (1974) 38 Cal. App. 3d 450, 459-460, 113 Cal. Rptr. 416).

[2] Comments

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted to support the contention that an action for property damage brought by the personal representative or the survivor in interest of a decedent does not survive the death of the decedent because the damage occurred simultaneously with the property owner's death.

These points and authorities may be combined, where appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to refute the survival of this type of action. For example, these points and authorities may be used to support a general demurrer to a complaint by a decedent's personal representative or successor in interest under Code Civ. Proc. § 377.30 (survival action) for damage to the decedent's property. The demurrer asserts that the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in that it appears on the face thereof that the property damage occurred simultaneously with the death of the property owner. These points and authorities may also be used to support a defendant's motion for summary judgment [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include discussion showing that the property damage that is the basis for the action occurred simultaneously with the decedent's death.

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 66.66 may be used to oppose the contention supported by this points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Damage Simultaneous With Death

In Pease v. Beech Aircraft Corp. (1974) 38 Cal. App. 3d 450, 113 Cal. Rptr. 416 , the personal representatives and heirs of four men killed in an airplane crash and the owner of the airplane brought a cause of action that sought punitive damages from the airplane manufacturer. The jury returned a verdict for compensatory and punitive damages but the trial court granted defendant's motion for new trial as to each of the awards of punitive damages on the ground of erroneous jury instructions. On appeal, the court of appeal affirmed as to the owner of the airplane and held that the personal representatives and heirs did not have a cause of action for punitive damages. The court reasoned that the parties' stipulation that decedents died as a result of this accident and in this accident determined that death occurred simultaneously with the loss of or damage to the personal property. In view of this stipulation as to the cause and time of death, no cause of action arose during the lifetime of the decedents. Therefore, there was no cause of action to survive. The court noted that although former Prob. Code § 573 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 377.30] provides for the survival of a cause of action against a tortfeasor who dies simultaneously with the loss or damage to property, there is no similar provision declaring a survivable cause of action if the injured party dies simultaneously with the property damage.

NOTE:

At least one court has held that if an interval of time, no matter how brief, elapses between injury to the property and death, the claim for property damage survives [Stencel v. Aero Eng'g Corp. v. Superior Court (1976) 56 Cal. App. 3d 978, 987-988, 128 Cal. Rptr. 691 ; see § 66.66]. However, the constitutionality of such a distinction has been questioned. In one case, for example, the court stated in dicta that a statutory scheme that would punish a tortfeasor who inflicts death-causing injury that does not result in simultaneous death, but would not punish if death occurs instantaneously, is difficult to explain on the basis of any conceivable, realistic, rational purpose [Grimshaw v. Ford Motor Co. (1981) 119 Cal. App. 3d 757, 834, 174 Cal. Rptr. 348] . Also, there are cases in which tortious conduct precedes but does not cause death, and the cause of action is incomplete at death [see § 66.65]. In these cases, the courts have held that a survival action lies even if the cause of action accrues at or after death [see Granquist v. Sandberg (1990) 219 Cal. App. 3d 181, 186-188, 268 Cal. Rptr. 109 (immature rights may ripen at death into valid survival action); Carr v. Progressive Cas. Ins. Co. (1984) 152 Cal. App. 3d 881, 888-891, 199 Cal. Rptr. 835 (valid survival action for insurance bad faith even though cause of action did not accrue until after death)].

§ 66.62 Supporting Contention That Cause of Action Does Not Survive Death--Death Before Rendering of Judgment Excludes Damages for Pain and Suffering [Code Civ. Proc. § 377.34]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum or points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE CAUSE OF ACTION FOR DECEDENT'S PAIN AND SUFFERING DOES NOT SURVIVE THE DECEDENT.

Death Before Judgment. Although a court may still render judgment when a plaintiff dies after trial but before the judgment has been rendered, a cause of action for pain and suffering does not survive the death of the plaintiff (Kellogg v. Asbestos Corp. Ltd. (1996) 41 Cal. App. 4th 1397, 1404, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 256).

[2] Comments

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a defendant's contention that since the plaintiff died before judgment was rendered, the judgment may not include damages for pain and suffering.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that damages for pain and suffering are not available because of the death of the person having the cause of action. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include discussion showing how the requested damages can be identified as being for the pain and suffering of the deceased.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Death Before Judgment

In Kellogg v. Asbestos Corp. Ltd. (1996) 41 Cal. App. 4th 1397, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 256 , plaintiff sued for personal injuries based on exposure to asbestos-related products. After trial, but before the court had rendered judgment, plaintiff died. The trial court subsequently rendered judgment in favor of plaintiff. Defendant appealed, contending that plaintiff's award was improper because it included damages for pain and suffering.

The court noted that Code Civ. Proc. § 669 authorizes a court to render a judgment if a party dies after trial and submission of the case to a judge sitting without a jury. It was thus appropriate for the trial court to render judgment However, under former Prob. Code § 573(c) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 377.34] where a person dies before judgment damages for pain and suffering are excluded (41 Cal. App. 4th 1397, 1404) . The trial court's statement of decision did not clarify whether its judgment included damages for pain and suffering, but based on the record and the amount of the judgment, the court of appeal concluded that a significant portion of the award was intended to be for pain and suffering. The court thus reversed the judgment, and remanded the cause for a determination of the amount of economic damages suffered by the deceased in his lifetime.

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF MAY NOT RECOVER PUNITIVE DAMAGES BECAUSE THE ONLY ACTUAL INJURY TO DECEDENT ALLEGED WAS PAIN AND SUFFERING. AS NO COMPENSATORY DAMAGES MAY BE RECOVERED BY PLAINTIFF FOR THIS INJURY, THERE IS NO BASIS FOR AN AWARD OF PUNITIVE DAMAGES.

No Punitive Damages When Pain and Suffering are Only Alleged Injury. If the only injury alleged in a survival action is the decedent's emotional distress, there is no basis for an award of punitive damages because the decedent's representative is precluded by statute from recovering for the decedent's pain and suffering and punitive damages may be awarded only when there are compensatory damages (Berkley v. Dowds (2007) 152 Cal. App. 4th 518, 530-532, 61 Cal. Rptr. 3d 304).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of defendant's contention that plaintiff in a survival action may not recover punitive damages when the only injury alleged to decedent was injury in the form of pain, suffering, or mental distress. Because compensatory damages are not recoverable for this type of injury in a survival action, punitive damages may not be awarded in the absence of another basis for compensatory damages.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that plaintiff's punitive damage claim is untenable, for example, in a motion for summary judgment. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the type of injury to decedent alleged by the plaintiff and argue that no compensatory damages may be awarded for such injury, thus precluding an award of punitive damages.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Punitive Damages When Pain and Suffering are Only Alleged Injury

In Berkley v. Dowds (2007) 152 Cal. App. 4th 518, 61 Cal. Rptr. 3d 304 , a medical corporation sued a widow as the personal representative of her husband's estate for unpaid medical bills incurred for services provided to the widow's husband before he died after sustaining injuries in an automobile accident. The widow filed a cross-complaint against the corporation and other individuals and entities, alleging that these parties were obligated by contract to provide decedent with proper referrals to health care providers and to obtain necessary testing and rehabilitative services in order to prevent deterioration of his condition and promote improvement following his accident. One of the parties sued by the widow included a physician who took part in providing decedent with care after the accident. This physician demurred to the complaint, and the trial court sustained the physician's demurrer without leave to amend. The widow appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court first held that the widow failed to allege a cause of action for negligence or willful misconduct against the physician, because she failed to allege either an actionable duty of care or any specific conduct on the part of the physician that breached a duty of care to decedent or caused any injury to decedent (152 Cal. App. 4th 518, 526-529) . In the absence of a valid cause of action against the physician, the court also held that the widow could not recover against the physician under the Elder or Dependent Adult Abuse statute, Welf. & Inst. Code § 15600 et seq. (152 Cal. App. 4th 518, 529) . Addressing the widow's cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress, the court held that because the only actual injury alleged was the emotional distress of the decedent, she could not recover either compensatory damages or punitive damages. Compensatory damages were barred by Code Civ. Proc. § 377.34, which precludes recovery in a survival action for a decedent's pain, suffering, or disfigurement. In the absence of any recoverable compensatory damages, the court held that the widow could not recover punitive damages. The court noted that under established law, punitive damages must be accompanied by an award of compensatory damages in some amount, or its equivalent, such as restitution, an offset, damages presumed by law, or nominal damages (152 Cal. App. 4th 518, 530-532) . The court declined to follow the court of appeal in Gagnon v. Continental Casualty Co. (1989) 211 Cal. App. 3d 1598, 260 Cal. Rptr. 305 , which held that punitive damages could be pursued in these circumstances, after concluding that the authorities cited in Gagnon were cases in which actual damages were presumed (152 Cal. App. 4th 518, 532) .

§ 66.63 Opposing Contention That Cause of Action Does Not Survive Death--Death Occurring After Judgment Does Not Exclude Damages for Pain and Suffering [Code Civ. Proc. § 377.34]

[The following may be included in a memorandum or points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

THE CAUSE OF ACTION FOR DECEDENT'S PAIN AND SUFFERING SURVIVES DECEDENT'S DEATH WHEN THAT DEATH OCCURRED AFTER ENTRY OF JUDGMENT IN THE ACTION.

A. Survival of Causes of Action for Personal Torts. In an action or proceeding by a decedent's personal representative or successor in interest on the decedent's cause of action, the damages recoverable are limited to the loss or damage that the decedent sustained or incurred before death, including any penalties or punitive or exemplary damages that the decedent would have been entitled to recover had the decedent lived, and do not include damages for pain, suffering, or disfigurement (Code Civ. Proc. § 377.34).

B. Death After Judgment Does Not Abate Right to Recover Damages for Pain and Suffering. Code of Civil Procedure § 377.34 does not bar recovery for pain and suffering damages awarded in a judgment if the plaintiff dies after that judgment is rendered but while an appeal is pending (Sullivan v. Delta Air Lines, Inc. (1997) 15 Cal. 4th 288, 305, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 74, 935 P.2d 781).

[Optional] C. Judgment Entered Nunc Pro Tunc. When a court validly exercises its discretion to issue a judgment nunc pro tunc, the date of that retroactive judgment determines whether Code of Civil Procedure Section 377.34 bars recovery of damages for pain and suffering (Cadlo v. Metalclad Insulation Corp. (2007) 151 Cal. App. 4th 1311, 1321-1322, 61 Cal. Rptr. 3d 104).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to defendant's contention that plaintiff's damage claim does not survive his or her death. The basis of the opposition is that plaintiff's damage claim survives because his or her death occurred after judgment was rendered while the action was pending on appeal, therefore Code Civ. Proc. § 377.34 does not bar recovery.

They may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that plaintiff's damage claim survives his death after judgment, for example in an opposition to a motion for summary judgment. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss evidence of the date on which judgment was entered for plaintiff, and the date of plaintiff's death, and argue that plaintiff's damage claim survives because he or she died after judgment was entered and while the appeal was pending.

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

If appropriate, the points and authorities in § 66.62 may be used to oppose these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Death After Judgment Does Not Abate Right to Recover Damages for Pain and Suffering

In Sullivan v. Delta Air Lines, Inc. (1997) 15 Cal. 4th 288, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 74, 935 P.2d 781 , plaintiff filed an action alleging 14 causes of action against his former employer, arising from the termination of his employment. The trial court granted defense motions for summary judgment on seven of the causes of action, the jury returned special verdicts for defendant on three causes of action, and three special verdicts for plaintiff on three causes of action; on those causes of action the jury awarded plaintiff damages for emotional distress. The trial court rendered a purported judgment on the three verdicts in plaintiff's favor but did not render judgment on either the three defense verdicts or on its orders granting the defense motions for summary judgment. Defendant appealed and plaintiff died while the appeal was being briefed. Plaintiff's mother was appointed special administrator and substituted as plaintiff. The court of appeal requested supplemental briefing on the question of whether the judgment should be reversed on the ground that damages for pain and suffering were no longer recoverable because of plaintiff's death. In its decision the court of appeal construed, Code Civ. Proc. § 377.34 to bar recovery of damages for pain and suffering awarded in a judgment if the plaintiff dies while an appeal is pending, stressing that the statute applied generally to "an action," and construed that word to include an appeal. Accordingly, the court of appeal concluded that no damages were recoverable on the three causes of action on which the jury found defendant liable. The Supreme Court granted review to determine the correct construction of Code Civ. Proc. § 377.34.

The Supreme Court concluded that Code Civ. Proc. § 377.34, like its predecessors former Civ. Code § 956 and former Prob. Code § 573, did not abolish the common law rule that death after judgment does not abate any aspect of personal tort actions, including the right to recover damages for pain and suffering. Therefore, it held that Code of Civil Procedure § 377.34 did not bar recovery for pain and suffering damages awarded in a judgment if the plaintiff dies after that judgment is rendered but while an appeal is pending (15 Cal. 4th 288, 305) . The Court traced the statutory history of survival law before determining that the current statute, Code Civ. Proc. § 377.34, did not apply where a judgment for damages is rendered while the decedent is alive but the decedent dies during the pendency of an appeal from that judgment. It disagreed with the appeal's court conclusion that the statutory phrase "[i]n an action" included "appeal," finding that the inference was not supported by the California Law Review Commission comments regarding the statute, nor by the legislature's common use of the phrase as a term of art. The Court also disagreed with defendant's primary contention which was based on an interpretation of language in former Prob. Code § 573, the predecessor statute to Code Civ. Proc. § 377.34. Defendant argued that the statute's reference to a plaintiff who dies "before judgment" meant before resolution of the appeal and reached this conclusion by reading before judgment to mean before "final judgment" and by taking the position that a judgment is not final until it has been affirmed on appeal or the time for appeal has passed. While acknowledging that this was one of the meanings of he phrase "final judgment," the Court instead interpreted the phrase to mean before rendition of a judgment that is final in the fundamental sense that it leaves no issue to be determined between the parties except the fact of compliance (15 Cal. 4th 288, 305) .

[b] Judgment Entered Nunc Pro Tunc

In Cadlo v. Metalclad Insulation Corp. (2007) 151 Cal. App. 4th 1311, 61 Cal. Rptr. 3d 104 , plaintiffs were a former naval machinist mate and his wife who brought suit against suppliers of asbestos-containing products with which the machinist mate came into contact in the 1960s while serving in the U.S. Navy. The jury found for the plaintiffs and awarded damages, including noneconomic damages and future medical and economic damages. Two days after the jury rendered its verdict, the machinist mate died of diseases related to his asbestos exposure. The court originally entered its judgment 11 days after this plaintiff died, but on request from the remaining plaintiff, vacated the original judgment and issued a new judgment nunc pro tunc that was backdated to the day after the jury verdict was delivered, which was the day before the machinist mate died. Defendants appealed, arguing that because the machinist mate died before judgment was originally rendered, the trial court lacked the authority to award noneconomic or future damages.

The court of appeal affirmed the trial court. Relying on the analysis of the Supreme Court in Sullivan v. Delta Air Lines, Inc., discussed in [a], above, and other court of appeal decisions, the court held that when a trial court validly exercises its discretion to issue a judgment nunc pro tunc, the date of that retroactive judgment determines whether Code Civ. Proc. § 377.34 bars recovery of specified damages, including damages for pain and suffering (151 Cal. App. 4th 1311, 1321-1322) . The court then held that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in entering judgment nunc pro tunc in the instant case. At the time of the machinist mate's death, a special verdict had already been filed and the case was in a posture at which a final, appealable judgment could have been entered, even prior to resolution of any post-trial motions. The court rejected defendants' argument that the delay in entering the original judgment was caused by the plaintiffs. The court also held that the trial court properly concluded that the retroactive judgment was necessary "to avoid injustice," as a contrary conclusion would have provided defendants a windfall by avoiding liability for decedent's pre-death pain and suffering (151 Cal. App. 4th 1311, 1322-1324) .

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

A DECEDENT'S EXECUTOR OR ADMINISTRATOR MAY COMMENCE A SURVIVABLE CLAIM FOR PUNITIVE DAMAGES BASED ON A CAUSE OF ACTION FOR INTENTIONAL TORT WITHOUT SHOWING THAT THE DECEDENT INITIATED SUCH AN ACTION PRIOR TO HIS/HER DEATH.

A. No Cause of Action Lost by Death. As a general rule, no cause of action is lost by reason of the death of any person but may be maintained by the person's personal representative or, if none, by the person's successor in interest (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 377.20(a), 377.30).

B. Punitive Damages Action Prior to Death Is Not Required. A complaint by decedent's executor or administrator may sufficiently plead the existence of a survivable claim for punitive damages based on a cause of action for intentional tort without alleging that decedent initiated the action prior to his or her death (Dunwoody v. Trapnell (1975) 47 Cal. App. 3d 367, 369-370, 120 Cal. Rptr. 859).

[2] Comments

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted to oppose the contention that a claim for punitive damages does not survive the death of the plaintiff because the plaintiff did not initiate the action before his or her death.

These points and authorities may be combined, where appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to address the issue of survivability of a punitive damages claim. For example, these points and authorities may be used to oppose a demurrer to a complaint for punitive damages based on the commission of an intentional tort where the demurrer asserts that the complaint fails to state a cause of action in that it shows on its face that the action for punitive damages was initiated by decedent's personal representative and not by the decedent prior to his or her death.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include discussion showing that the survival action is a claim for punitive damages based on the commission of an intentional tort.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Punitive Damages Action Prior to Death Is Not Required

In Dunwoody v. Trapnell (1975) 47 Cal. App. 3d 367, 120 Cal. Rptr. 859 , decedent's executor sought punitive damages for various intentional torts allegedly committed by defendants. The trial court sustained defendants' demurrers without leave to amend and plaintiff appealed from the resulting judgment of dismissal. The court of appeal reversed, holding that a claim for punitive damages did, under former Prob. Code § 573 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 377.30], survive and could be prosecuted after the injured person's death by the personal representative, even though the decedent had not commenced an action for punitive damages prior to death. Defendants, on appeal, emphasized Herrero v. Atkinson (1964) 227 Cal. App. 2d 69, 72, 38 Cal. Rptr. 490 , which permitted the survival of a personal injury action commenced before the plaintiff's death, and language in former Prob. Code § 573 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 377.34] that punitive damages may be recoverable by the executor when the person having a cause of action dies before judgment; they argued that former Prob. Code § 573 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 377.34] expressed a legislative intention to allow a plaintiff's cause of action to survive only if it was pending at the time of plaintiff's death. The court pointed out, however, that the predecessor statute had disallowed recovery of punitive damages and that a law revision commission had recommended that nonsurvival of punitive damages be continued. The Legislature rejected this recommendation and explicitly allowed the survival of punitive damages in former Prob. Code § 573 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 377.34]. The statute contains nothing to suggest that the action survives only if the decedent filed suit before death and thus it appears that the legislature intended to change the former rule.

A COMPLAINT BY DECEDENT'S PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVE OR SUCCESSOR IN INTEREST CAN SATISFY THE REQUIREMENTS FOR PLEADING THE EXISTENCE OF A SURVIVABLE CLAIM BASED ON A RIGHT OF DECEDENT THAT DID NOT MATURE INTO AN ACTIONABLE CLAIM UNTIL AFTER HIS/HER DEATH.

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted to oppose the contention that a cause of action does not survive the death of a decedent merely because it does not mature into an actionable claim until after the decedent's death.

These points and authorities may be combined, where appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue of the survivability of such an action. For example, these points and authorities may be used to oppose a demurrer to a complaint when the demurrer asserts that the complaint

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Complete Cause of Action Prior to Death Is Not Required

In Granquist v. Sandberg (1990) 219 Cal. App. 3d 181, 268 Cal. Rptr. 109 , decedent's personal representative sued defendant attorney for legal malpractice. Decedent, who was over age 70 and in poor health, had been represented by defendant in a personal injury action. Decedent's action was entitled to preferential trial setting under Code Civ. Proc. § 36(a), because of his age. Nevertheless, defendant failed to seek an expedited trial date under the statute, and decedent died before trial. Even though the action survived the death, general damages for emotional distress were no longer recoverable [see Code Civ. Proc. § 377.34 (former Prob. Code § 573(c))].

Although decedent suffered no harm due to the attorney's inaction until his death, the court found that the personal representative had a valid survival action. The court held that if immature rights can ripen into a cause of action following death [see Carr v. Progressive Cas. Ins. Co. (1984) 152 Cal. App. 3d 881, 199 Cal. Rptr. 835] , it must also be true that such rights can ripen into an action at death (219 Cal. App. 3d 181, 187) . The court noted that the substantive policy underlying Code Civ. Proc. § 36(a) is to have trial attorneys with clients at least 70 years old move those cases to trial before the client dies, and stated that it would make a mockery of this policy to hold that the death of the client insulates the attorney from liability for failure to use the statutory trial-setting preference (219 Cal. App. 3d 181, 186) .

In Carr v. Progressive Cas. Ins. Co. (1984) 152 Cal. App. 3d 881, 199 Cal. Rptr. 835 , decedent's administrator brought a third-party action for damages against an insurer for an alleged breach of the insurer's duty to make a good-faith attempt to settle claims when liability is reasonably clear, as required by Ins. Code § 790.03(h)(5). Defendant demurred on the ground that no cause of action against defendant had accrued during decedent's lifetime that was subject to survival under former Prob. Code § 573 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 377.34]. Defendant argued that decedent's claim against it was not actionable before the conclusion of the action between decedent and the insured, and decedent had died before the conclusion of that action. The trial court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend, and decedent's administrator appealed (152 Cal. App. 3d 881, 884-887) .

The court of appeal reversed, holding that the administrator had stated a surviving cause of action. The court agreed that a statutory bad-faith cause of action does not accrue until it may be brought, and such an action cannot be brought until the action between the injured and insured is concluded, pursuant to the holding in Royal Globe Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1979) 23 Cal. 3d 880, 884, 891-892, 153 Cal. Rptr. 842, 592 P.2d 329 (overturned prospectively in Moradi-Shalal v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Cos. (1988) 46 Cal. 3d 287, 297-305, 250 Cal. Rptr. 116, 758 P.2d 58) (152 Cal. App. 3d 881, 889-890) . However, the court stated that it did not follow that none of decedent's rights survived because no cause of action arose during his lifetime (152 Cal. App. 3d 881, 890) . The court reasoned that a "cause of action" surviving under former Prob. Code § 573 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 377.34] includes rights that have not yet ripened into an actionable claim, and concluded that a complete cause of action need not exist during the lifetime of the decedent in order for rights to survive that may later become actionable (152 Cal. App. 3d 881, 890-891) . In overruling the demurrer, the court by implication held that the complaint's allegations of wrongful conduct on defendant's part, and resulting actual damage to decedent prior to his death, gave rise to a right to recover damages that survived decedent's death, although the right was not enforceable during decedent's lifetime (152 Cal. App. 3d 881, 891-893) .

THE COMPLAINT ON BEHALF OF A DECEDENT SURVIVES HIS/HER DEATH IF THE PROPERTY DAMAGE THAT IS THE BASIS FOR THE CAUSE OF ACTION OCCURRED PRIOR TO DECEDENT'S DEATH.

A. No Cause of Action Lost by Death. [See § 66.64, Paragraph A.]

B. Property Damage Prior to Death of Plaintiff. A complaint by decedent's executor or administrator sufficiently pleads the existence of a survivable cause of action for damage to property owned by decedent if it alleges that the damage occurred prior to decedent's death, even though the damage occurred in the same accident that caused death, and even though the interval between damage and death was only a few seconds (Stencel Aero Eng'g Corp. v. Superior Court (1976) 56 Cal. App. 3d 978, 985-988, 987 n.6, 128 Cal. Rptr. 691).

[2] Comments

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted to oppose the contention that a property damage claim does not survive the death of the plaintiff.

These points and authorities may be combined, where appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to address the issue of survivability. For example, these points and authorities may be used to oppose a demurrer to a complaint for property damage, which demurrer asserts that the complaint fails to state a cause of action in that it shows on its face that the property damage and the death of the property owner occurred in the same accident, if facts are alleged that support the inference that the property damage occurred prior to the death.

Where appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include discussion showing that the facts demonstrate that the property damage occurred prior to the death of the decedent.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a demurrer supported by the points and authorities in § 66.61.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Property Damage Prior to Death of Plaintiff

In Stencel Aero Eng'g Corp. v. Superior Court (1976) 56 Cal. App. 3d 978, 128 Cal. Rptr. 691 , decedent's heirs and the special administratrix of his estate brought an action to recover damages for wrongful death, $200 in compensatory damages for damage to decedent's property, and $10 million in punitive damages. Defendants challenged the count containing the allegation on punitive damages by a motion for judgment on the pleadings. The trial court denied the motion and defendants petitioned for a writ of mandate that would require the trial court to grant their motion. The court of appeal held that the decedent's special administratrix, but not his heirs, was entitled to plead punitive damages and to prove such damages if possible. The court of appeal construed the motion for judgment on the pleadings to be in the nature of a general demurrer on the issue of whether any party was entitled to claim punitive damages. Defendants first argued that the heirs could not plead or recover punitive damages for decedent's wrongful death and the court agreed. Code Civ. Proc. § 377.61 excludes, from wrongful death actions, any damages recoverable under Code Civ. Proc. § 377.34 and punitive damages are in this category. Second, defendants argued that the special administratrix could not recover punitive damages pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. 377.30 because the underlying $200 property damage loss occurred in the same accident which caused death. On this point, the court of appeal distinguished Pease v. Beech Aircraft Corp. (1974) 38 Cal. App. 3d 450, 459-460, 113 Cal. Rptr. 416 [see § 66.61[3][a]], because in this case, the administratrix alleged that the underlying loss of decedent's personal property occurred "prior to death" whereas in Pease, the parties had stipulated that the loss and death occurred simultaneously. The court viewed the allegation before it as one of ultimate fact tht established the following: a cause of action for the loss arose in favor of the decedent prior to his death; it survived decedent; his personal representative was entitled to plead it; and she was entitled to plead punitive damages, based on the loss, and to prove them if possible It noted that the special administrarix would still bear the burden of proving that an evidence-supported interval of time elapsed between the property damage loss and death. From the written responses in support of the motion, it could be inferred that decedent was killed in a matter of seconds--no more, but no less--after his personal effects were damaged.

NOTE:

The constitutionality of the distinction made in Stencel, that the availability of a survival action supporting punitive damages depends on whether the property was damaged an instant before or simultaneously with death, has been questioned. In a subsequent case, the court stated in dicta that a statutory scheme that would punish a tortfeasor who inflicts death-causing injury that does not result in simultaneous death but would not punish if death occurs instantaneously is difficult to explain on the basis of any conceivable, realistic, rational purpose [Grimshaw v. Ford Motor Co. (1981) 119 Cal. App. 3d 757, 834, 174 Cal. Rptr. 348] .

DECEDENT'S PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVE OR SUCCESSOR IN INTEREST MAY BRING A SURVIVAL ACTION TO RECOVER DAMAGES BASED ON EXPENSES INCURRED BY ONE OTHER THAN THE DECEDENT IF THE EXPENSES WERE PAID UNDER CONTRACT OR GRATUITOUSLY.

Expense Not Paid by Decedent. The fact that an expense was not paid by a decedent prior to death does not defeat a cause of action brought by the decedent's personal representative or successor in interest pursuant to Code of Civil Procedure Section 377.30 to recover the amount expended, if the expense was incurred by another either under contract or gratuitously (Fifield Manor v. Finston (1960) 54 Cal. 2d 632, 635, 637, 7 Cal. Rptr. 377, 354 P.2d 1073).

[2] Comments

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted to oppose a contention that a claim does not survive the death of a plaintiff because it seeks damages for expenses incurred by someone other than the decedent.

These points and authorities may be combined, where appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to address the issue of the nature of the expenses claimed as damages. For example, these points and authorities may be used to oppose a motion for summary adjudication brought by a defendant seeking to dispose of a cause of action on the ground that the damages sought are expenses incurred by one other than the decedent, and thus may not be recovered by decedent's personal representative. The ground for opposition is that the expenses were incurred by another under contract or gratuitously. This form may be adapted for use in other procedural contexts, such as in opposing a motion for new trial based on an award of excessive damages, or in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts tending to show the nature of the expenses that are the basis for the claim for damages. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations that support the memorandum [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b) (support required to accompany motion for summary judgment)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Expense Not Paid by Decedent

In Fifield Manor v. Finston (1960) 54 Cal. 2d 632, 7 Cal. Rptr. 377, 354 P.2d 1073 , plaintiff corporation had brought an action to recover the medical expenses of decedent, which it had paid under a "life-care contract," from defendant who had allegedly caused decedent's injury and death. The trial court sustained defendant's general demurrer without leave to amend, and plaintiff appealed from the subsequent judgment of dismissal. The Supreme Court affirmed. Plaintiff had attempted to analogize its case to that of Follansbee v. Benzenberg (1954) 122 Cal. App. 2d 466, 265 P.2d 183 , but the Court responded that unlike the plaintiff in Follansbee, whose recovery was permitted in her individual capacity because she had incurred the medical expenses in question as part of her common law and statutory obligation, plaintiff's claim was based solely on a contractual liability between itself and the decedent. The Court noted the general rule that the fact that either under contract or gratuitously treatment has been paid for by another does not defeat the cause of action of the injured party to recover the reasonable value of the treatment from the tortfeasor (54 Cal. 2d 632, 637) . Thus, in effect, the Court applied the collateral source rule, under which expenses paid for by another under its contractual obligation are nevertheless considered incurred by the person for whose benefit the contract was made.

NOTE:

In Follansbee v. Benzenburg (1954) 122 Cal. App. 2d 466, 265 P.2d 183 , which the Court distinguished in Fifield Manor, the apparent basis for the holding that the medical expenses were not recoverable in the survival action (but rather were recoverable in an action by the surviving spouse who paid the expenses, based on the obligation to support one's spouse) was the fact that both actions were before the court. In most cases, expenses paid from community property will be considered to have been paid by the decedent, so the issue will not arise. If the spouse pays such expenses from his or her separate property, a court may follow the rule set forth in Follansbee and require the spouse to institute a separate action, but those cases would seem to be rare.

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted to support the contention that a claim for punitive damages does not survive the death of the defendant [see Code Civ. Proc. § 377.42].

This form may be combined, where appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue of the nonsurvival of a punitive damages claim. For example, these points and authorities may be used to support a motion for summary adjudication of a claim for punitive damages, when the defendant has died either prior to or during the action [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f) (summary adjudication)].

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts, supported by affidavits or declarations [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)], that the defendant in a civil action requesting punitive damages died before the award of such damages or was the personal representative of the decedent.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 66.69.

In Bancroft-Whitney Co. v. Glen (1966) 64 Cal. 2d 327, 49 Cal. Rptr. 825, 411 P.2d 921 , the plaintiff, a book publisher, sued a former employee for breach of fiduciary duty. The trial court found for the defendants, and the plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court reversed, holding that the conduct of the plaintiff's former employee amounted to a breach of his fiduciary duties to the plaintiff as a matter of law. The Court noted, however, that because the employee died after the trial was concluded, the claim for punitive damages did not survive his death under former Prob. Code § 573 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 377.42].

Punitive damages may be recovered against a defendant's personal representative or successor in interest in a wrongful death or survival action based on a death that resulted from a homicide for which the defendant has been convicted of a felony, whether or not the decedent died instantly or survived the fatal injury for some period of time (Civ. Code § 3294(d)).

[2] Comments

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted to oppose the contention that a claim for punitive damages does not survive the death of the defendant, specifically because the action is based on a homicide committed by the defendant [see Civ. Code § 3294(d)].

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts showing that the deceased defendant was convicted of a homicide and the current wrongful death or survival action is based on that homicide.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 66.68.

PLAINTIFF'S SURVIVAL ACTION BROUGHT ON BEHALF OF DECEDENT HAS NOT BEEN BROUGHT WITHIN THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS AND DOES NOT RELATE BACK TO A TIMELY-FILED WRONGFUL DEATH ACTION.

Survival Action Does Not Relate Back to Wrongful Death Action. Because a survival action only provides damages for injury to the decedent, while a wrongful death action provides damages for injury caused to the surviving heirs, a survival action does not "relate back" to a previously-filed cause of action for wrongful death and a plaintiff must state any survivor action within the applicable limitations period for it to be timely (Quiroz v. Seventh Ave. Center (2006) 140 Cal. App. 4th 1256, 1278-1279, 45 Cal. Rptr. 3d 222).

[2] Comments

This memorandum of points and authorities may be used to oppose a plaintiff's contention that a survival action has been filed in a timely manner. The basis for the opposition is that the survival action was not brought within the applicable statute of limitations, and the survival action does not relate back to the filing of a previously-filed and timely wrongful death action.

This form may be combined with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue of the untimeliness of the plaintiff's survival cause of action, such as with points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Thus, counsel should include facts showing that the survival action was not pleaded within the applicable statute of limitations and that any action, including a wrongful death action, that was filed in a timely manner did not seek relief for the decedent's own injuries.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Survival Action Does Not Relate Back to Wrongful Death Action

In Quiroz v. Seventh Ave. Center (2006) 140 Cal. App. 4th 1256, 45 Cal. Rptr. 3d 222 , plaintiff was the mother of a developmentally disabled adult who died due to the alleged neglect of a skilled nursing facility. Plaintiff filed a timely action for wrongful death against the facility and related persons that sought damages only for her own injuries stemming from the death. After the applicable one-year limitations period for filing an action to recover for the decedent's own injuries passed, plaintiff filed an amended complaint adding a survival cause of action to recover for the decedent's injuries and sought remedies for those injuries under the elder and dependent adult abuse statute, Welf. & Inst. Code § 15600 et seq. Plaintiff argued that because it stemmed from the same operative facts as the wrongful death action, the survival action "related back" to the wrongful death and was thus timely filed. The trial court disagreed and entered judgment in favor of the defendants. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court noted that the relation-back doctrine deems a later-filed pleading to have been filed at the time of an earlier timely-filed complaint, thus avoiding the bar of an expired statute of limitations, when the later pleading rests on the same general set of facts, involves the same injury, and refers to the same instrumentality as the earlier pleading. The court then held that the plaintiff could not meet these requirements with respect to her untimely survival action because that cause of action sought relief for a completely different injury as did the timely-filed wrongful death action. A wrongful death action provides recovery for injury caused to the surviving heirs, not for injuries to the decedent, while a survival action is an action brought for injuries sustained by the decedent. Nowhere in the original complaint did plaintiff seek damages for injuries caused to the decedent. Thus, the court concluded that the survival action, whether brought as a claim for common-law negligence or as a claim under the elder abuse statute, did not relate back to the wrongful death action and was barred by the statute of limitations (140 Cal. App. 4th 1256, 1278-1279) .

PLAINTIFF'S ACTION FOR DAMAGES FOR THE DEATH OF THE DECEDENT MAY BE _____ [JOINED or CONSOLIDATED] WITH THE ACTION BY DECEDENT'S _____ [PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVE or SUCCESSOR IN INTEREST] FOR _____ [specify cause of action or pending action that survives decedent's death, e.g., PERSONAL INJURIES SUSTAINED BY THE DECEDENT] BECAUSE BOTH ACTIONS ARISE FROM THE SAME WRONGFUL ACT OR NEGLECT OF DEFENDANT.

Court May Consolidate Wrongful Death and Survival Actions That Arise From Same Wrongful Act or Neglect. An action _____ [commenced or continued] by the decedent's _____ [personal representative or successor in interest] under _____ [Code of Civil Procedure Section 377.30 or Code of Civil Procedure Section 377.31] may be _____ [joined or consolidated] with any action arising out of the same wrongful act or neglect brought under Code of Civil Procedure Section 377.60. [A wrongful death action and a Section 377.31 action may be consolidated for trial as provided in Code of Civil Procedure Section 1048] (Code Civ. Proc. § 377.62; see Johnson v. Western Air Express Corp. (1941) 45 Cal. App. 2d 614, 622, 114 P.2d 688 (construing Code Civ. Proc. § 1048 (discretionary consolidation of personal injury action) and former Code Civ. Proc. § 377 (wrongful death action))).

[2] Comments

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a wrongful death action and a survival action arising out of the same wrongful act or neglect should be joined or consolidated [see Code Civ. Proc. § 377.62; see also Code Civ. Proc. §§ 377.30 (survival actions commenced by decedent's personal representative or successor in interest), 377.31 (survival actions continued by decedent's personal representative or successor in interest), 377.60 (wrongful death actions)]. The optional language at the end of the form should be used in a case in which the decedent's personal representative or survivor in interest is continuing a pending action (as opposed to initiating an action based on a surviving cause of action) [see Code Civ. Proc. § 377.62(b); see also § 66.90[2][b]].

This form may be combined, where appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue of consolidation. For example, if the plaintiff's action is pending when he or she dies, these points and authorities may be used to support a motion for consolidation made under Code Civ. Proc. § 1048, the general statute governing consolidation of pending actions that have common questions of law or fact. These points and authorities may also be used to support a motion for consolidation of a wrongful death and a survival action when the decedent is a child or ward of the plaintiff [see Code Civ. Proc. § 376].

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts showing that the causes of action or pending actions arise out of the same wrongful act or neglect.

[b] Types of Survival Actions Distinguished

This form contains alternative language that should be used as appropriate, depending on whether a survival action to which a wrongful death action is to be joined or consolidated is commenced by the decedent's personal representative or successor in interest or whether it is continued by the representative or successor. Specifically, an action commenced by a representative or successor based on a cause of action that survives the death of the decedent may be joined with a wrongful death action arising out of the same wrongful act or neglect [Code Civ. Proc. § 377.62(a)]. Permissive joinder of causes of action is governed by Code Civ. Proc. § 427.10 [see § 66.90[2][c]]. By contrast, a wrongful death action and a pending survival action that does not abate and is continued by the decedent's representative or successor arising out of the same wrongful act or neglect may be consolidated for trial under Code Civ. Proc. § 1048(a), the general procedural statute that governs the consolidation of actions [Code Civ. Proc. § 377.62(b); see § 66.90[2][c]].

[c] Joinder and Consolidation Distinguished

As discussed in § 66.90[2][b], a decedent's surviving causes of action may be joined with a wrongful death action that is based on the same wrongful act or neglect [Code Civ. Proc. § 377.62(a)]. Generally, a plaintiff who alleges a cause of action against one or more defendants may unite the cause with any other causes that he has against any of the defendants [Code Civ. Proc. § 427.10; see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 123, Complaints and Cross Complaints (Matthew Bender)].

A pending survival action, on the other hand, may be consolidated with a wrongful death action under Code Civ. Proc. § 1048 [Code Civ. Proc. § 377.62(a)], which provides that a court may order a joint hearing or trial of pending actions involving a common question of law or fact.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

Johnson v. Western Air Express Corp. (1941) 45 Cal. App. 2d 614, 114 P.2d 688 , involved two lawsuits seeking damages arising out of an airplane crash in which plaintiff suffered serious injury and her husband was killed. The court ordered the consolidation for trial of the wrongful death action by plaintiff and the decedent's sister, and the plaintiff's personal injury action. The trial court dismissed both actions as to all individual defendants. Following the trial, the jury returned verdicts in each action in favor of the remaining defendants. The plaintiffs appealed, arguing, among other things, that the court committed prejudicial error in ordering consolidation of the two cases because specified evidence was admissible and relevant in the personal injury case, but inadmissible and prejudicial in the wrongful death action.

The court of appeal held that Code Civ. Proc. § 1048 allows a trial court to consolidate actions whenever consolidation can be done without prejudice to a substantial right. In this case, the two lawsuits arose from the same accident, the witnesses were the same, and the testimony was the same, except with regard to the financial condition of the parties. However, the trial court's clear instructions to the jury alleviated any possible prejudice with regard to this issue (45 Cal. App. 2d 614, 622-624) .

THIS COURT LACKS JURISDICTION OF THE SUBJECT OF THE CAUSE OF ACTION ALLEGED IN THAT THE COMPLAINT SEEKS TO HAVE THIS COURT ENJOIN THE COLLECTION OF A TAX, A REMEDY PROHIBITED BY STATE LAW.

A. Objection by Demurrer. The objection that the court lacks jurisdiction of the subject of the cause of action alleged in the complaint may be taken by demurrer [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(a)] when the ground for the objection appears on the face of the complaint (or from any matter of which the court must or may take judicial notice [Code Civ. Proc. §

B. Statutory Prohibition. Statute expressly prohibits the issuance of any injunction, writ of mandate, or other legal or equitable process to prevent or enjoin the collection of _____ [e.g., any sales or use tax (Rev. & Tax. Code § 6931)].

C. Action to Enjoin Collection of Tax. Declaratory relief is not available to determine the collectibility of a tax where the tax statute provides that no injunction, writ of mandate, or other legal or equitable process shall issue to prevent or enjoin collection of the tax (*Casey v. CAUTION:
The above rule apparently does not prevent an action pursuant to Gov. Code § 11350, authorizing declaratory relief actions to determine the validity of administrative regulations, for a declaration as to the validity of a tax regulation even though the taxing event has already occurred and administrative remedies are available to the taxpayer [see Honeywell, Inc. v. State Bd. of Equalization (1975) 48 Cal. App. 3d 907, 912-914, 122 Cal. Rptr. 243 ; Pacific Motor Transp. Co. v. State Bd. of Equalization (1972) 28 Cal. App. 3d 230, 237, 104 Cal. Rptr. 558 ; see also 67.23[2][d]].

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint for declaratory relief seeking a determination as to the collectibility of a tax on the ground of lack of subject matter jurisdiction where a statute provides that no legal or equitable process shall issue to enjoin collection of the tax in question.

Where appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Raising Jurisdictional Objections

A jurisdictional objection in a case may arise from one or more of three bases: (1) lack of jurisdiction of the subject of the action; (2) lack of jurisdiction over the person of a party; and (3) an act in excess of the court's jurisdiction [see Abelleira v. District Court of Appeal (1941) 17 Cal. 2d 280, 287-290, 109 P.2d 942] .

The objection that the court lacks jurisdiction of the subject of the action alleged may be made by demurrer [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(a)] where the defect appears on the face of the complaint or from matter of which the court must or may take judicial notice [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)].

The objection that the court lacks jurisdiction over the person of the defendant must be made by a motion to quash service of summons [Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(a)(1)]. The motion to quash may be combined with a demurrer, but if the motion to quash is denied, the filing of the demurrer will constitute a general appearance [Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(e)(1), (2) (general appearance not deemed made until entry of order denying motion to quash or conclusion of mandamus review)]. A failure to make a motion to quash at the time of filing a demurrer constitutes a waiver of the issue of lack of personal jurisdiction [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 418.10(e)(3), 1014; see Ch. 132, Jurisdiction: Personal Jurisdiction and Inconvenient Forum].

The objection that the trial court threatens to act in excess of its jurisdiction, after the trial court has ruled in favor of its so acting, is raised by petitioning a higher court for a writ of prohibition [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1102]. The objection that the trial court has already acted in excess of its jurisdiction over the objection of a party is raised by petitioning a higher court for a writ of certiorari or, in certain cases, mandate [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1085]. Lack or excess of jurisdiction may also be raised on appeal from the judgment.

[c] Related Uses

This form may, with appropriate modifications, be used in support of a motion for separate trial of the affirmative defense of lack of subject matter jurisdiction [see Code Civ. Proc. § 597] if the court's lack of subject matter jurisdiction does not appear from the face of the complaint and is alleged as an affirmative defense in the answer.

With appropriate modifications, the form may also be used in support of a nonstatutory motion to dismiss the complaint if no court in California has jurisdiction of the subject or the action or, if such an objection does not appear from the face of the complaint, a motion for summary judgment under Code Civ. Proc. § 437c.

[d] Nonwaiver of Objection

Unlike the grounds of special demurrer [see Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(b), (c), (d), (f), (g)], the objection that the court lacks jurisdiction of the subject of the cause of action alleged is not waived by failure to raise it by demurrer or answer [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.80(a)]. The objection can, therefore, be raised at a later time.

[e] Requirement of Memorandum and Format

A memorandum must accompany a demurrer to a complaint filed in a superior court [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113(a)]. The required format of papers filed in a superior court is set forth in Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 2.100 et seq.

If the memorandum is appended at the end of the demurrer, it will not be separately captioned; rather, the demurrer will be captioned "DEMURRER TO COMPLAINT AND MEMORANDUM IN SUPPORT OF DEMURRER." The heading "Memorandum in Support of Demurrer" will, however, be centered on the page just above the first point of law stated.

Additional requirements with respect to the format and content of a memorandum are set forth in Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 3.1110 and 3.1113(b)-(n).

[f] Notice of Hearing

The defendant must serve and file with the demurrer a notice of hearing [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1320(c); see Code Civ. Proc. § 1005; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1320(d)].

[g] Related Memoranda

For additional forms of memoranda supporting a demurrer for lack of subject matter jurisdiction, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

[h] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For forms of demurrers for lack of subject matter jurisdiction and notice of hearing, as well as for a procedural guide, see Ch. 206, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Statutory Prohibition

Rev. & Tax. Code § 6931, cited by way of example, provides that no injunction or writ of mandate of other legal or equitable process shall issue in any suit, action, or proceeding in any court against this state or against any officer of the state to prevent or enjoin the collection "under this part" (sales and use taxes) of any tax or any amount of tax required to be collected.

[b] Action to Enjoin Collection of Tax

Casey v. Bonelli (1949) 93 Cal. App. 2d 253, 208 P.2d 723 was a declaratory relief action against the State Board of Equalization and its members by the president and board member of a corporation which had been voluntarily dissolved. The complaint alleged in substance that several years after the dissolution, defendants issued a notice of determination under the state Sales and Use Tax Law directed to the corporation and purporting to determine that during a specified period prior to dissolution, the corporation had become liable for a sales and use tax in a specified amount. Plaintiff alleged on information and belief that the determination was in error, that plaintiff was unable to determine whether his fiduciary duty as a director and officer of the corporation required him to take steps to establish before defendants that the determination was in error or whether he could, consistent with such fiduciary duty, permit the determination to become final and rely on the fact that any judgment obtained by defendants against the dissolved corporation would be void. Statute [Rev. & Tax. Code § 6931] provided that no injunction, writ of mandate, or other legal or equitable process shall issue to prevent or enjoin the collection of any sales or use tax. Defendants' demurrer to the complaint was sustained without leave to amend, and plaintiff appealed. In affirming the judgment, the court of appeal (93 Cal. App. 2d 253, 254-255) said that the decisions are explicit that Rev. & Tax. Code § 6931 and similar provisions prevent the resort to a declaratory judgment to determine that such tax should not be collected.

Honeywell, Inc. v. State Bd. of Equalization (1975) 48 Cal. App. 3d 907, 122 Cal. Rptr. 243 was an action by corporate manufacturers and installers of elevators and temperature control systems pursuant to former Gov. Code § 11440 [now see Gov. Code § 11350], authorizing declaratory relief actions by interested persons to determine the validity of administrative regulations, for a declaration that an administrative regulation adopted by the defendant board was invalid. The regulation made a sale of fixtures a sale of tangible personal property subject to the Sales Tax Act. The trial court declared that the regulation was invalid and the board appealed. Although the court of appeal decided the case on the merits, held that the regulation was valid, reversed the judgment, and directed the trial court to enter a declaratory judgment in favor of the board declaring that the regulation as applied to plaintiffs was not invalid, the court (48 Cal. App. 3d 907, 912) stated that where a statute prohibits the granting of an injunction or writ of mandamus to prevent collection of a tax [Rev. & Tax. Code § 6931], an action for a declaration that the tax is not legally collectible would circumvent the law and, accordingly, declaratory relief will be refused.

THE COMPLAINT FAILS TO STATE FACTS SUFFICIENT TO CONSTITUTE A CAUSE OF ACTION FOR DECLARATORY RELIEF IN THAT IT _____ [SHOWS ON ITS FACE or APPEARS FROM JUDICIALLY NOTICED MATTER] THAT PLAINTIFF HAS FAILED TO EXHAUST HIS/HER/ITS ADMINISTRATIVE REMEDIES.

A. Objection by Demurrer. The objection that the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action may be taken by demurrer (Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)) when the ground for the objection appears on the face of the complaint (or from any matter of which the court must or may take judicial notice) (Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)).

B. Exhaustion of Administrative Remedies as Jurisdictional. Exhaustion of an available administrative remedy is a condition precedent to obtaining judicial relief, and a court violating the rule acts in excess of its jurisdiction (Morton v. Superior Court (1970) 9 Cal. App. 3d 977, 981, 88 Cal. Rptr. 533).

[Optional] C. Mere Allegation of Exhaustion. A mere allegation that plaintiff has exhausted his or her or its administrative remedies is a conclusion of law not admitted by demurrer (Pan Pac. Properties, Inc. v. Santa Cruz County (1978) 81 Cal. App. 3d 244, 251, 146 Cal. Rptr. 428).

[Optional] D. Challenge to Constitutional Application of Statute. The fact that the action challenges the constitutionality of a statute as applied to plaintiff does not excuse a failure to exhaust administrative remedies (see California v. Superior Court (1974) 12 Cal. 3d 237, 250-251, 115 Cal. Rptr. 497, 524 P.2d 1281 ; Taylor v. Swanson (1982) 137 Cal. App. 3d 416, 418, 187 Cal. Rptr. 111).

[Optional] E. Class Action. The fact that the action is prosecuted as a class action does not excuse a failure to exhaust administrative remedies (Morton v. Superior Court (1970) 9 Cal. App. 3d 977, 983, 88 Cal. Rptr. 533).

[Optional] F. Administrative Remedy Couched in Permissive Language. The fact that the administrative remedy provided is couched in permissive, as opposed to mandatory, language does not excuse a failure to exhaust the remedy before resorting to the courts (Morton v. Superior Court (1970) 9 Cal. App. 3d 977, 982, 88 Cal. Rptr. 533).

[Optional] G. Jurisdiction to Determine Jurisdiction. The fact that it is not clear whether or not the administrative agency has jurisdiction does not excuse a failure to exhaust administrative remedies. An administrative agency has power to determine in the first instance and before judicial relief may be obtained whether or not a given controversy falls within its granted jurisdiction (Morton v. Superior Court (1970) 9 Cal. App. 3d 977, 982, 88 Cal. Rptr. 533).

[Optional] H. Adverse Decision of Administrative Agency in Similar Cases. The fact that an administrative body has decided other cases on similar facts against plaintiff's position does not make an administrative appeal futile and does not excuse a litigant from exhausting his or her or its administrative remedies (Abelleira v. District Court of Appeal (1941) 17 Cal. 2d 280, 301, 109 P.2d 942).

I. Dismissal of Action as Mandatory. Dismissal of a complaint for declaratory relief is mandatory when plaintiff has failed to exhaust his or her or its administrative remedies (Pan Pac. Properties, Inc. v. Santa Cruz County (1978) 81 Cal. App. 3d 244, 251, 146 Cal. Rptr. 428).

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint for declaratory relief on the ground the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action where it appears from the face of the complaint or from matter of which the court must or may take judicial notice that plaintiff has failed to exhaust administrative remedies.

Where appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

For an opposing memorandum, see § 67.51.

This form may, with appropriate modifications, also be submitted in support of a nonstatutory motion for judgment on the pleadings or, where the objection does not appear from the face of the complaint or from matter of which the court must or may take judicial notice, in support of a motion for summary judgment.

[b] Nonwaiver of Objection

Unlike the grounds of special demurrer [see Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(b)-(d), (f), (g)] which are waived if not raised by demurrer or answer, the objection that the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action is not waived by failure to make the objection by demurrer or answer [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.80] and consequently, the objection can be made at a later time, for example, by a motion for judgment on the pleadings before or at trial, or by a defense objection to the introduction of any evidence at trial on the ground that the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action [see § 67.40[2][c]].

The better practice, in order to avoid unnecessary expense to the client and delay in the action, however, is to make the objection at the earliest possible time. The filing of a demurrer is normally the most expeditious procedure by which to do this.

[c] Exclusive Jurisdiction in Agency or Another Tribunal

Should an action be initially commenced in the superior court for the determination of issues exclusive jurisdiction of which is vested in an administrative agency or in another tribunal, the superior court would lack jurisdiction of the subject of the cause of action alleged and a demurrer on that ground would lie [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(a)]. However, where jurisdiction is in another state court as opposed to an administrative agency, such as in a court of appeal or in the Supreme Court, the superior court must, instead of dismissing the action, order it transferred to that court [Code Civ. Proc. § 396].

Should the superior court overrule the demurrer, defendant may serve and file in a higher court a petition for a writ of prohibition [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1102] to restrain the trial court from proceeding in the case on the ground that it lacks jurisdiction of the subject of the cause of action alleged and for a writ of mandate [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1085] to compel the trial court to dismiss the action or transfer it to the proper court as the case may be.

[d] Failure to Exhaust Administrative Remedies

Where judicial review of the order, decision, or ruling of an administrative agency by administrative mandate [Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5] is sought and it appears that the petitioner for the writ has failed to exhaust his, her, or its administrative remedies, the court has been said to lack jurisdiction over the subject of the action [see, e.g., Greenblatt v. Munro (1958) 161 Cal. App. 2d 596, 605, 326 P.2d 929] , and, as in the case where exclusive jurisdiction is in an administrative agency, a demurrer on the ground of lack of subject matter jurisdiction will lie [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(a)]. Should the court overrule the demurrer, defendant may petition a higher court for a writ of prohibition [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1102] to restrain the trial court from acting on the ground that it lacks jurisdiction of the subject of the cause of action alleged and for a writ of mandate [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1085] to compel the trial court to dismiss the action.

[e] Jurisdiction in Declaratory Relief Actions

Although superior courts have original jurisdiction of most declaratory relief actions [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 86(a)(7), 1060], such actions may not be used as a substitute to secure review of administrative actions subject to review by administrative mandate under Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5 [see, e.g., California v. Superior Court (1974) 12 Cal. 3d 237, 249, 115 Cal. Rptr. 497, 524 P.2d 1281] . The action is, however, authorized to determine the validity of rules and regulations adopted by administrative agencies [see Gov. Code §§ 11350, 11350.3; § 67.50]. Nevertheless, the objection that the plaintiff in a declaratory relief action has failed to exhaust administrative remedies does not, when exclusive jurisdiction is not vested in the administrative agency, go to the fundamental jurisdiction of the court and a demurrer on the ground of lack of subject matter jurisdiction would not properly lie. Rather, failure to exhaust administrative remedies is a matter of defense that may be raised as follows:

(1) Failure apparent. When the failure to have exhausted administrative remedies appears from the face of the complaint or from matter of which the court must or may take judicial notice [see Evid. Code §§ 451, 452], the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action and defendant may demur on that ground [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 430.10(e), 430.30(a), 430.70]. Since there is no other court in California that would have jurisdiction to try the case [see Code Civ. Proc. § 396], defendant may also raise the objection by a nonstatutory motion to dismiss the complaint. The objection may also be raised at trial by an objection to the introduction by plaintiff of any evidence. This objection serves the same function as a general demurrer to the complaint or motion for judgment on the pleadings [see § 67.40[2][b], [c]].

(2) Failure not apparent. When the failure to have exhausted administrative remedies does not appear from the face of the complaint, whether or not it would appear from judicially noticed matter, the defendant may raise the objection by pleading the failure as an affirmative defense in the answer [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 430.30(b), 431.30(b)(2)] and moving for separate trial of that issue [see Code Civ. Proc. § 597] or by a motion for summary judgment under Code Civ. Proc. § 437c.

If, in any of these situations, the court overrules the demurrer or objection or denies the motion and proceeds, or threatens to proceed with the case, it is acting in excess of its jurisdiction. In such case defendant may petition a higher court for a writ of prohibition [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1102] and mandate [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1085] to restrain the trial court from proceeding [see Abelleira v. District Court of Appeal (1941) 17 Cal. 2d 280, 286-294, 109 P.2d 942 (granting of judicial relief to a party who failed to exhaust administrative remedies is an act in excess of the court's jurisdiction); see also Mountain View Chamber of Commerce v. Mountain View (1978) 77 Cal. App. 3d 82, 88-89, 143 Cal. Rptr. 441 ; Morton v. Superior Court (1970) 9 Cal. App. 3d 977, 981, 88 Cal. Rptr. 533] and to compel court to dismiss the action, or defendant may raise the issue on appeal from the judgment.

Neither the objection that the court lacks jurisdiction of the subject of the cause of action alleged [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(a)] nor the objection that the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e); see § 67.21[2][b]] is waived by defendant's failure to make it by demurrer or answer [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.80]. Hence, as indicated in the foregoing discussion, either objection may be made after expiration of the time in which to demur or answer.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Exhaustion of Administrative Remedies as Jurisdictional

Morton v. Superior Court (1970) 9 Cal. App. 3d 977, 88 Cal. Rptr. 533 was a proceeding in prohibition to restrain further proceedings in a pending superior court proceeding in mandate which had been combined with an action for declaratory relief. The action had been brought by city employees, on behalf of themselves and others similarly situated, to resolve a labor grievance without following the grievance procedure adopted by the city manager. In granting the writ, the court of appeal stated that it is settled that the exhaustion of an administrative remedy, when one is available, is a condition precedent to obtaining judicial relief and that a court violating the rule acts in excess of jurisdiction.

[b] Mere Allegation of Exhaustion

Pan Pac. Properties, Inc. v. Santa Cruz County (1978) 81 Cal. App. 3d 244, 146 Cal. Rptr. 428 was an action by the owner and the trust deed holder of a parcel of land in defendant county against the county for inverse condemnation and declaratory relief. Prior to 1969, plaintiffs' land had been zoned for agricultural use. On September 16, 1969, the county rezoned this land Highway Commercial, but on March 30, 1976, rezoned it as agricultural with one-acre minimum building site. On September 24, 1976 the present action was commenced. Although plaintiffs filed a claim for damages with the county prior to instituting suit, they sought no variance from the ordinance nor did they apply to the county for any building or use permits, as authorized by county ordinance. The complaint alleged that the rezoning was arbitrary and discriminatory, that it prohibited any and all beneficial and reasonable use of plaintiffs' land and therefore constituted a taking without just compensation, and in a separately stated cause of action, plaintiffs contended that the rezoning was unconstitutional and void for stated reasons. The plaintiffs also alleged that they had exhausted their administrative remedies. Defendant's demurrer to the complaint on the grounds of lack of "subject matter" jurisdiction and bar of an ordinance of limitations was sustained "with prejudice," and plaintiffs appealed from the subsequent dismissal. With respect to the exhaustion allegation, the court of appeal, in affirming the judgment, characterized the allegation as "conclusionary" (81 Cal. App. 3d 244, 251) . It pointed out that while a demurrer admits all properly pleaded material facts, it does not admit conclusions of fact or law alleged therein. Therefore, appellants' mere allegation of exhaustion of their administrative remedies could not avail them. The court failed to discuss the ground of the demurrer that the trial court lacked jurisdiction of the subject matter, other than to say that failure to exhaust an administrative remedy is a jurisdictional defect (81 Cal. App. 3d 244, 251) . See discussion in § 67.21[2][e].

[c] Challenge to Constitutional Application of Statute

California v. Superior Court (1974) 12 Cal. 3d 237, 115 Cal. Rptr. 497, 524 P.2d 1281 was an original writ proceeding in the Supreme Court arising out of a superior court action by developers against the California Coastal Zone Conservation Commission. The developers had originally been granted a permit to develop their coastal lands by a regional commission; but, on appeal, the permit was subsequently denied by the state commission. The developers then filed their superior court action for a writ of mandate (both traditional and administrative), for declaratory and injunctive relief, and for damages for inverse condemnation. They also attacked the constitutionality of the California Coastal Zone Conservation Act of 1972 [Pub. Res. Code §§ 27000-27650], both on its face and as applied. The commission's general and special demurrers were overruled, and the commission filed the present proceeding in the Supreme Court. In issuing a peremptory writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate its orders and enter a new order in conformity with the Supreme Court's opinion, the Supreme Court, insofar as the constitutional attack on the act was concerned, held that the trial court erred in overruling the demurrer to that part of the declaratory relief action challenging the constitutionality of the act as applied. (However, it held that the trial court had properly overruled the demurrer insofar as the challenge was to the unconstitutionality of the act on its face.) The Court agreed with the commission that in such a case the party is essentially seeking to review the validity of an administrative action. Such review is properly brought under Code Civ. Proc. § 1095.5 rather than by means of declaratory relief.

In Taylor v. Swanson (1982) 137 Cal. App. 3d 416, 187 Cal. Rptr. 111 , plaintiff unsuccessfully sought a variance of zoning regulations; a proceeding in mandamus resulted in a judgment denying mandate. Plaintiff then brought an action for declaratory relief, in which the trial court entered judgment on res judicata grounds. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that declaratory relief is proper only when the over all constitutionality of a zoning ordinance is challenged. A challenge to the application of the ordinance must be made before the agency and can be reviewed only by administrative mandate (137 Cal. App. 3d 416, 418) .

[d] Class Action

The factual background of Morton v. Superior Court (1970) 9 Cal. App. 3d 977, 88 Cal. Rptr. 533 is set forth in § 67.21[3][a]. In support of their failure to follow the city's grievance procedure, the employees contended they were not required to exhaust their administrative remedy because their lawsuit was a class action. In rejecting this contention, the court of appeal stated that it did not believe that a city employee could dispense with the grievance procedure merely because the grievance affects more than one employee or member of a class. If it were to permit an employee, on important policy questions which vitally affect the city, to bypass the office charged with the duty of managing the city's affairs solely because the grievance affects more than one employee, the court reasoned that it would be foisting on the judicial branch the arduous task of solving governmental policy questions without giving the responsible governmental policy questions without giving the responsible governmental branch the opportunity to solve its own problems at the administrative level (9 Cal. App. 3d 977, 983) .

[e] Administrative Remedy Couched in Permissive Language

The factual background of Morton v. Superior Court (1970) 9 Cal. App. 3d 977, 88 Cal. Rptr. 533 is set forth in § 67.21[3][a]. The city employees took the position that since the grievance procedure by its term did not require an employee to file a written grievance, he or she could resort to the judicial process without first submitting to that procedure. The court rejected this contention, noting the basic purpose for the exhaustion doctrine to be in lightening the burden of overworked courts in cases where administrative remedies are available and are as likely as the judicial remedy to provide the wanted relief. Thus, relying on prior California decisions, the court applied the rule that if an administrative remedy is available, it must be exhausted before resorting to the judicial process even though the administrative remedy is couched in permissive language (9 Cal. App. 3d 977, 982) .

[f] Jurisdiction to Determine Jurisdiction

The factual background of Morton v. Superior Court (1970) 9 Cal. App. 3d 977, 88 Cal. Rptr. 533 is set forth in § 67.21[3][a]. In that case, the city employees argued that the city's grievance procedure was for the purpose of solving minor personnel problems only and did not apply to their grievance relating to credit of overtime. The court of appeal held that if there was any question about the applicability of the grievance procedure, it was incumbent on the city employees to present the question to the city manager so that he could decide the issue in the first instance. Relying on the principle of a court or agency's power to determine if it has jurisdiction of a cause, the court described the power of the administrative agency (in this case the city manager) to include the power to determine, in the first instance and before judicial relief may be obtained, whether a given controversy falls within its granted jurisdiction (9 Cal. App. 3d 977, 982) .

[g] Adverse Decision of Administrative Agency in Similar Cases

Abelleira v. District Court of Appeal (1941) 17 Cal. 2d 280, 109 P.2d 942 did not involve declaratory relief. Rather, it was an original proceeding in prohibition sought to restrain a court of appeal from enforcing both a writ of mandate and temporary restraining order issued by that court and directed against a state commission. Statute provided for a complete administrative procedure in such cases fulfilling every requisite of due process of law. The petitioners for the writ of mandate in the court of appeal had invoked the administrative remedy but failed to complete it after an initial ruling against their position. Rather, they applied directly to the court of appeal for a writ of mandate, which that court granted. In the prohibition proceeding, they contended, inter alia, that they were justified in disregarding the administrative remedy because the administrative agency had already decided cases on similar facts against their present position, and that an appeal to the agency in their case would have been fruitless. In rejecting this contention and issuing its writ of prohibition directed to the court of appeal, the Supreme Court characterized the contention as a "slender thread" on which their entire case hung. The Court found that their position was unsound in principle and unsupported by the better authorities, since it would lead to a breakdown of the rule of exhaustion of remedies. It reasoned that to permit petitioners to ignore the administrative board and treat its action as already taken, learning on hearsay or by analogy that the board may take a certain action, would be to permit the party applying to the court to assert, without any conclusive proof or possibility of successful challenge, the outcome of an appeal which the board has not even been permitted to decide (17 Cal. 2d 280, 300-301) . See also Subriar v. Bakersfield (1976) 59 Cal. App. 3d 175, 192, 130 Cal. Rptr. 853 .

[h] Dismissal of Action as Mandatory

The factual background of Pan Pac. Properties, Inc. v. Santa Cruz County (1978) 81 Cal. App. 3d 244, 146 Cal. Rptr. 428 is set forth in § 67.21[3][b]. In affirming the judgment of dismissal following the sustaining of defendant county's demurrer "with prejudice," the court of appeal stated that dismissal was mandatory because of the jurisdictional infirmities consisting of plaintiff's failure to exhaust their administrative remedy (81 Cal. App. 3d 244, 251) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Exhaustion of Administrative Remedies as Jurisdictional

The procedural background of Abelleira v. District Court of Appeal (1941) 17 Cal. 2d 280, 109 P.2d 942 is discussed in § 67.21[3][g]. In that case the Supreme Court held that exhaustion of administrative remedies is a jurisdictional prerequisite to court action and not a matter of judicial discretion. The Court stated that the court of appeal's lack of jurisdiction was established and that until the administrative procedure authorized by statute had been invoked and completed, there was nothing for that court or any other court to review; thus, it could not interfere in the intermediate stages of the proceeding (17 Cal. 2d 280, 291) . The Supreme Court explained that this is the doctrine of "exhaustion of administrative remedies" and that under the doctrine where an administrative remedy is provided by statute, relief must be sought from the administrative body and the remedy exhausted before the courts will act (17 Cal. 2d 280, 292) . The Court added that it is not a matter of judicial discretion but a fundamental rule of procedure laid down by courts of last resort, followed under the doctrine of stare decisis, and binding on all courts (17 Cal. 2d 280, 291) .

Alta Loma School District v. San Bernardino County Committee on School District Reorganization (1981) 124 Cal. App. 3d 542, 177 Cal. Rptr. 506 involved certain school districts' opposition to a reorganization committee's proposal to abolish them. The districts sought a writ of mandate to set aside the proposal on grounds of procedural irregularities and to prohibit its consideration by the State Board of Education. Defendants demurred on numerous grounds, including plaintiff's failure to exhaust their administrative remedy of review of the proposal by the State Board of Education. Reversing the trial court's overruling of the demurrer, the court of appeal noted that the board had the power to order any modification of the proposal necessary to correct the procedural defects alleged by plaintiffs, probably obviating the need for judicial review of the proposal. Stating the rule that exhaustion of the administrative remedy was jurisdictional rather than discretionary, the court held that plaintiffs were precluded from judicial review until they had pursued the review by the board and subsequent administrative processes (124 Cal. App. 3d 542, 554-556) .

Mountain View Chamber of Commerce v. Mountain View (1978) 77 Cal. App. 3d 82, 143 Cal. Rptr. 441 was an action by a chamber of commerce, four individual sign owners, a corporate sign owner, and a restaurant to enjoin enforcement of defendant's sign ordinance and for a declaration that the ordinance was unconstitutional as applied. The trial court denied plaintiffs' application for a preliminary injunction and sustained defendant's demurrer to the complaint without leave to amend on the ground plaintiffs had failed to exhaust their administrative remedies. In affirming the judgment, the court of appeal said that it is fundamental California law that before one is entitled to judicial review or relief, a litigant must exhaust whatever administrative remedies are provided. Quoting Morton v. Superior Court (1970) 9 Cal. App. 3d 977, 981, 88 Cal. Rptr. 533 , the court stated the doctrine to be a condition precedent to obtaining judicial relief; a court that violates the rule acts in excess of jurisdiction (77 Cal. App. 3d 82, 88) .

Frisco Land & Mining Co. v. California (1977) 74 Cal. App. 3d 736, 141 Cal. Rptr. 820 was an action for damages for inverse condemnation rather than an action for declaratory relief. Plaintiff was the owner of a 650-acre subdivision, substantially all of which was embraced within the permit area of the coastal zone created by the California Coastal Zone Conservation Act of 1972 [Pub. Res. Code §§ 27000-27650]. Plaintiff claimed that its land had been taken by the state through passage of the act and the subsequent acts and omissions of the North Central Coast Regional Commission, a regulatory body created by the act, which deprived plaintiff of the only use it had for the land, which was to subdivide it into lots for single family residences. Plaintiff, among other things, had withdrawn its application to the regional commission for a blanket exemption to allow construction of a house on any lot in the subdivision by any person when the regional commission imposed unacceptable conditions. The trial court granted the state's motion for summary judgment, among other grounds, that passage of the coastal act did not constitute inverse condemnation and that plaintiff was barred from judicial relief because of a failure to exhaust its administrative remedies. In affirming the judgment, the court of appeal, with respect to the exhaustion doctrine, pointed out that by withdrawing its application for a blanket permit, plaintiff placed itself in the position of one who had failed to exhaust administrative remedies and that it not only failed to continue to assert its contentions at the initial hearing body, but it abandoned its right to seek review by the state commission and judicial review of the decision if still dissatisfied. The court explained that the doctrine of exhaustion of administrative remedies requires that when an administrative remedy is provided by statute, relief must be sought from the administrative body, and this remedy exhausted, before the courts will act (74 Cal. App. 3d 736, 754) .

McHugh v. Santa Cruz County (1973) 33 Cal. App. 3d 533, 109 Cal. Rptr. 149 was a taxpayer's action to recover property taxes assessed for specified years and paid under protest rather than for declaratory relief. The trial court sustained the county's demurrer without leave to amend, granted its motion to strike the complaint, and dismissed the action with prejudice on the ground that recovery for certain years was barred by the statute of limitations and with respect to recovery sought for the other years, plaintiff had failed to exhaust his administrative remedies. Although the court of appeal concluded that the complaint stated a cause of action with respect to a portion of the taxes paid under protest attributable to one of the taxable years and that plaintiff with respect to it had exhausted his administrative remedies and was not barred by the statute of limitations, the court said that the doctrine is jurisdictional, requiring a party to use all available agency administrative procedures before resorting to the courts for relief. It elaborated that the doctrine requires a party not only initially to raise the issue in the administrative forum, but proceed through the entire proceeding to a final decision on the merits of the entire controversy (33 Cal. App. 3d 533, 538-539) .

[b] Challenge to Constitutional Application of Statute

The factual background of Frisco Land & Mining Co. v. California (1977) 74 Cal. App. 3d 736, 141 Cal. Rptr. 820 is discussed in § 67.21[4][a]. The court held that while the subdivider was entitled to challenge the constitutionality of the coastal act on its face, even though it failed to make such a challenge before the regional commission at the time it applied for an exemption or in its subsequent application for a permit, it could not challenge the constitutionality of the manner in which the provisions of the act were applied to it by the regional commission without having raised the constitutional objections before that body (74 Cal. App. 3d 736, 744) .

Subriar v. Bakersfield (1976) 59 Cal. App. 3d 175, 130 Cal. Rptr. 853 was an action by plaintiff operator of an ambulance service in defendant city without a certificate of convenience and necessity, as required by the city's municipal code, against the city for a declaration that the "convenience and necessity" clause of the ordinance was invalid and in violation of the federal and state Constitutions. While plaintiff had previously on two different occasions applied to the city for a certificate, he refused to provide any information to show that public convenience and necessity required issuing a certificate or license to him and failed to pursue the administrative remedies provided. Between plaintiff's first and second application, the city issued such a certificate to another ambulance operator who had provided information showing that public convenience and necessity required the additional service. The trial court declared the ordinance unconstitutional and granted a permanent injunction against its enforcement. Defendants appealed. After reviewing the facts, the court of appeal, in reversing the judgment, pointed out that plaintiff had not only failed to exhaust his administrative remedies but had even failed to test them by letting his application go to decision by the city manager (59 Cal. App. 3d 175, 191) . The court said that the mere fact that a statute is challenged on constitutional grounds does not excuse a failure to exhaust administrative remedies (59 Cal. App. 3d 175, 193) . The court, pointing out that plaintiff was attacking the constitutionality of the ordinance as it applied to his situation, concluded that when plaintiff submits to an agency's jurisdiction by applying for a license or permit under the act, the validity of which is not attacked in its entirety, the proper method of attacking the constitutionality of a specific subdivision of the act is by judicial review under the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5 after exhausting the administrative remedy, rather than by declaratory relief (59 Cal. App. 3d 175, 194) .

In Subriar plaintiff's attorney also joined himself in a separately stated cause of action of the complaint as a taxpayer plaintiff under Code Civ. Proc. § 526a seeking both a declaratory judgment that the questioned provision in the city ordinance was unconstitutional and an injunction restraining its enforcement. The court held that such action was proper to determine the constitutional question and, on concluding that the ordinance was constitutional, reversed the judgment.

[c] Class Action

The factual background of Mountain View Chamber of Commerce v. Mountain View (1978) 77 Cal. App. 3d 82, 143 Cal. Rptr. 441 is set forth in § 67.21[4][a]. The first cause of action alleged was a class action by the chamber of commerce as a representative of all members of the chamber of commerce who were or might have been adversely affected by the city's sign regulations. In affirming the judgment of dismissal on the ground that administrative remedies had not been exhausted, the court of appeal said that because some plaintiffs were proceeding via a class action did not per se make an exception to the exhaustion doctrine. The court explained that the doctrine applies to class actions which raise constitutional issues, adding that each of the second through sixth causes of action was in the names of individual plaintiffs who objected to specific provisions of the sign ordinance as it applied to or affected their particular properties and/or business (77 Cal. App. 3d 82, 96) .

The factual background of Subriar v. Bakersfield (1976) 59 Cal. App. 3d 175, 130 Cal. Rptr. 853 is set forth § 67.21[4][b]. The court of appeal said that the requirement of exhausting administrative remedies applies to a class action raising constitutional issues (59 Cal. App. 3d 175, 193) .

The factual and procedural background of Alta Loma School District v. San Bernardino County Committee on School District Reorganization (1981) 124 Cal. App. 3d 542, 177 Cal. Rptr. 506 is discussed in § 67.21[4][a]. The plaintiffs had argued that they were entitled to judicial review under an exception to the exhaustion doctrine available when the administrative agency lacks jurisdiction over the subject matter of the action. The court of appeal held that the agency itself has the power to determine in the first instance and before judicial relief could be sought whether or not it has jurisdiction over the controversy (124 Cal. App. 3d 542, 555-556) .

[a] Use of Form

The foregoing memorandum may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint for declaratory relief for failure to state a cause of action when it appears from the face of the complaint or from matter of which the court must or may take judicial notice that the only issue involved relates to a fully matured claim and no declaration as to the future rights and obligations of the parties is necessary or possible. For an opposing memorandum, see § 67.52.

Where appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

It should be noted that because of the one form of civil action rule [Code Civ. Proc. § 307], the demurrer will be overruled if the complaint states a cause of action within the jurisdiction of the superior court on any theory [see, e.g., Kessloff v. Pearson (1951) 37 Cal. 2d 609, 614, 233 P.2d 899 ; Lord v. Garland (1946) 27 Cal. 2d 840, 853, 168 P.2d 5 ; Tiburon v. Northwestern P. R. Co. (1970) 4 Cal. App. 3d 160, 170, 84 Cal. Rptr. 469] .

[b] Related Uses

The foregoing memorandum may also, with appropriate modifications, be used in support of a nonstatutory motion for judgment on the pleadings, or, where the objection does not appear from the face of the complaint, a motion for summary judgment.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Purpose of Declaratory Relief

In County of San Diego v. State (2008) 164 Cal. App. 4th 580, 79 Cal. Rptr. 3d 489 , San Diego County and Orange County sued the State of California and several state officials, seeking reimbursement under Cal. Const., art. XIIIB, § 6, and Gov. Code § 17617 for the costs of providing state-mandated programs and services. The trial court entered judgment for the counties, including the following declaratory relief: "San Diego County is entitled to declaratory relief stating [it] is owed $41,652,974 by the State of California. Orange County is entitled to the same relief noting it is entitled to a sum of $72,755,977. These declarations are based on a prior declaratory relief order of this court, evidence at trial, and agreement by the State at trial that the sums are owed." The court of appeal reversed, holding that the judiciary lacked the power to remedy the legislature's failure to appropriate the funds necessary to reimburse the counties (164 Cal. App. 4th 580, 612-614) .

The court of appeal concluded, among other things, that the monetary award was improper as declaratory relief because there was no actual controversy at trial as to the state's constitutional and statutory obligation to pay the counties' reimbursement claims or as to the amount of the claims. Declaratory relief is available only in cases of actual controversy (including a probable future controversy) relating to the legal rights and duties of the parties (Code Civ. Proc. § 1060). The court emphasized that in their causes of action for declaratory relief, the counties had not sought a declaration of the amounts the state was obligated to pay them on their reimbursement claims; they sought a declaration that the state was constitutionally and statutorily required to promptly and fully pay them those amounts. Because there was no dispute at trial as to the amount of their claims, there was no present controversy on that point, let alone a probable future controversy, to be resolved by declaratory relief. Therefore, it was an idle and superfluous act for the trial court to issue a declaratory judgment that merely stated the state's undisputed obligation to pay the counties' reimbursement claims and the undisputed amounts of those claims (164 Cal. App. 4th 580, 606-607) .

The court of appeal also noted that the declaratory judgment in this case ran afoul of the principle that declaratory relief operates prospectively to declare future rights, rather than to redress past wrongs. The portion of the judgment awarding the counties the amount of their reimbursement claims as declaratory relief did not operate prospectively to declare future rights; rather, it redressed the state's past wrongs in failing to meet its constitutional obligations (164 Cal. App. 4th 580, 607-608) . The court acknowledged that a court can award monetary relief in a declaratory relief action relief under appropriate circumstances, such as when a court declares a contract to be valid and awards damages for its breach in the interest of disposing of the entire controversy between the parties and granting complete relief. However, the present case did not present appropriate circumstances for awarding damages in connection with declaratory relief, because there was no actual controversy as to the validity or the amounts of the counties' claims (164 Cal. App. 4th 580, 608) .

Travers v. Louden (1967) 254 Cal. App. 2d 926, 62 Cal. Rptr. 654 was an action for declaratory relief to determine the rights of the parties to an agreement to purchase real property in which, if any breach of the agreement existed, it had already occurred. In affirming summary judgment for defendant and in holding that no cause of action for declaratory relief was stated, the court of appeal said that there is unanimity of authority that the declaratory procedure operates prospectively and not merely for the redress of past wrongs. It explained that the procedure serves to set controversies at rest before they lead to repudiation of obligations, invasion of rights, or commission of wrongs. Thus, the remedy is to be used in the interest of preventive justice, i.e., to declare rights rather than execute them (254 Cal. App. 2d 926, 931) .

[b] Fully Matured Claim

Fritz v. Superior Court (1936) 18 Cal. App. 2d 232, 63 P.2d 872 was a proceeding in prohibition (treated as mandate) to prevent further prosecution of an action for declaratory and injunctive relief. The controversy involved the validity of the claims of the respective parties to act as officers and directors of a corporation. At the time, Civ. Code § 315 [repealed, now see Corp. Code § 709], the requirements of which had not been complied with by plaintiffs, provided a judicial remedy to resolve such disputes. In granting the writ directing the trial court to dismiss the proceeding, the court of appeal held that declaratory relief does not lie where the cause of action has already accrued and the only question presented for determination is the question of liability or of the relief to which the parties are entitled. The court explained that although declaratory relief may be available despite the existence of an available remedy in the ordinary action at law or in equity, nevertheless, the character of the action must be determined from an examination of the facts pleaded, rather than from the title or prayer for relief. The court noted that although the prayer asked for declaratory relief, the pleaded facts showed that the action was under former Civ. Code § 315. The court further held that an action for declaratory relief would not lie on the additional ground that the complaint showed there was no actual controversy between plaintiffs and defendants (18 Cal. App. 2d 232, 235) [see § 67.24].

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Fully Matured Claim

Kessloff v. Pearson (1951) 37 Cal. 2d 609, 233 P.2d 899 involved in part an action for declaratory relief and an accounting. Defendants were engaged in the manufacture and sale of candy under the name Pearson Candy Company. On July 1, 1944, defendant Edward F. Pearson contracted in writing to employ plaintiff to make candy for which he was to receive a salary plus an increasing share each year of the company's profits. Plaintiff continued in employment under the contract until July 1, 1948, and thereafter, under different terms and conditions until February 26, 1949 when his employment terminated. At the end of each year, plaintiff received a sum represented to be his share of the profits and was told he was not entitled to an explanation as to how the sum was computed. Plaintiff alleged that (1) large sums of money had been expended before computation of net earnings in arriving at the amounts due plaintiff; (2) plaintiff had been denied access to the company books; (3) on termination of employment he attempted to obtain a statement of earnings and expenditures during the contract period but defendant refused to furnish any such statement; and (4) the existence of an actual controversy between the parties as to the computation of net profits. He asked, among other things, for a declaration of the parties' rights and duties under the contract, and a full and complete accounting of the gross earnings and business expenditures of the company. The trial court sustained defendants' objection at trial to the introduction by plaintiff of any evidence, on the ground the complaint failed to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action since the only judgment that could be entered was one for money. The court entered judgment dismissing the complaint, and plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court pointed out that under the facts alleged, a breach of contract had occurred, that plaintiff might be entitled to an accounting and to a money judgment, and that any judgment which plaintiff might recover could be afforded in an action for an accounting where questions as to the terms and construction of the contract would become triable issues. The Court concluded that the trial court was correct in holding that all the relief sought could be had in an action for an accounting (37 Cal. 2d 609, 613) . (The Supreme Court reversed the judgment, however, on the ground the complaint properly stated a cause of action for an accounting.)

Orloff v. Metropolitan Trust Co. (1941) 17 Cal. 2d 484, 110 P.2d 396 involved an order sustaining general demurrers to a third amended complaint followed by a judgment of dismissal. The complaint purported to set forth five causes of action: breach of an escrow agreement; civil conspiracy; money received in trust for plaintiff; money had and received; and declaratory relief. In affirming the judgment, the Supreme Court pointed out that in his fifth cause of action, plaintiff alleged that a controversy existed between him and the defendants as to their respective rights and obligations under the agreements which had been particularly pleaded. However, the Court explained that all of the acts of which plaintiff complained were concluded before his suit was commenced and that the relief he sought was for the court to review them and declare that he was entitled to a judgment for $2,500. These allegations, the Court found, did not measure up to the requirements of an action for declaratory relief. It concluded that the superior court properly refused to exercise its power to entertain the complaint upon that ground (17 Cal. 2d 484, 489) .

Baldwin v. Marina City Properties, Inc. (1978) 79 Cal. App. 3d 393, 145 Cal. Rptr. 406 involved a second amended six-count complaint, the fourth count of which was for declaratory relief. The complaint in substance sought recovery of damages for alleged wrongful impairment of the value of a security interest but omitted the essential allegation that the value of the security interest had been impaired. Defendants' demurrer was sustained without leave to amend, and plaintiffs appealed from the subsequent judgment of dismissal. With respect to the declaratory relief count, the court of appeal, quoting from Witkin [3 Witkin, California Procedure (2d ed), Pleading, § 722] stated that declaratory relief operates prospectively, serving to set controversies at rest. If there is a controversy which calls for a declaration of rights, it is no objection that past wrongs are also to be redressed; but there is no basis for declaratory relief where only past wrongs are involved. Hence, the court explained, if there is an accrued cause of action for an actual breach of contract or other wrongful act, declaratory relief may be denied (79 Cal. App. 3d 393, 407) . The court, after pointing out that plaintiffs have a present accrued right as a secured party to foreclose on the collateral or to sue for an alleged impairment of the value of the collateral, and that there were no claims by plaintiffs that an actual controversy existed between plaintiffs and defendants, concerning any future rights, held that the demurrer to count IV was properly sustained. The court nevertheless reversed the judgment of dismissal on the ground that there was a reasonable possibility that plaintiffs could cure the defects in their complaint to state a cause of action for damages and directed the trial court to grant plaintiffs leave to file a third amended complaint (79 Cal. App. 3d 393, 408) .

Travers v. Louden (1967) 254 Cal. App. 2d 926, 62 Cal. Rptr. 654 was an action for declaratory relief to determine the rights of the parties with respect to an agreement to purchase real property, where, if any breach of the agreement existed, it had already occurred. The amended complaint alleged, inter alia, that: (1) defendant Louden had agreed to sell plaintiff a described lot for a specified sum, for which plaintiff paid Louden $100 of the purchase price; (2) the agreement provided that if the seller was unable to deliver a good title within 90 days, seller would return the $100 and the agreement would terminate; (3) plaintiff and defendant Louden learned that defendant Highman had recorded an option to purchase the lot and agreed to file suit against Highman to quiet title; (4) plaintiff agreed to and did assist in the lawsuit and offered to pay half the costs; (5) the agreement between them was to remain in force pending the lawsuit; (6) Louden thereafter sent plaintiff a check for $100 and a notice that he was unable to convey title because of the Highman option; (7) despite plaintiff's refusal to consent to termination of the agreement Louden, who denied plaintiff's right to acquire the property conveyed the lot without consideration to Highman who had full knowledge of plaintiff's agreement; and (8) Louden denied plaintiff's claim of a right to acquire the property under the agreement. In affirming summary judgment for defendant, the court of appeal, in holding that no action for declaratory relief was stated, held that the complaint showed that there was a controversy whether Louden breached his contract with Travers. If Louden had no right to terminate it, the court observed that Travers could bring a plenary action for damages or for equitable relief. After noting that no facts were alleged which would render a declaration with respect to the future conduct of the parties necessary or proper, the court concluded at it could find no authority for the proposition that declaratory relief is proper procedure when the rights of the complaining party have crystallized into a cause of action for past wrongs, all relationship between the parties has ceased to exist and there is no conduct of the parties subject to regulation by the court (254 Cal. App. 2d 926, 928-929) .

[Caption. See § 67.21.]

THE COMPLAINT FAILS TO STATE FACTS SUFFICIENT TO CONSTITUTE A CAUSE OF ACTION IN THAT IT SHOWS ON ITS FACE OR IT APPEARS FROM JUDICIALLY NOTICED MATTER THAT A JUDICIAL DECLARATION OR DETERMINATION IS NOT NECESSARY OR PROPER AT THIS TIME UNDER ALL THE CIRCUMSTANCES.

A. Objection by Demurrer. [See § 67.21, Paragraph A.]

B. Discretion of Court to Refuse Declaratory Relief. The court may refuse declaratory relief in any case where its declaration or determination is not necessary or proper at the time under all the circumstances (Code Civ. Proc. § 1061).

C. Raising Objection by Demurrer. The objection that a declaratory judgment is not necessary or proper at the time under all the circumstances where this fact appears from the face of the complaint (or from matter of which the court must or may take judicial notice) may be made by demurrer to the complaint on the ground that it fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action (Moss v. Moss (1942) 20 Cal. 2d 640, 642, 128 P.2d 526).

[Optional] D. Available Alternative Remedies. The availability of other legal or equitable remedies which are as speedy and adequate and as well suited to plaintiff's needs as declaratory relief renders declaratory relief unnecessary (Communist Party v. Peek (1942) 20 Cal. 2d 536, 540, 127 P.2d 889). If the Legislature has specified an exclusive procedure for litigating particular disputes, it is an abuse of discretion for the superior court to bypass the statutory procedure and hear an ordinary declaratory relief action (Filarsky v. Superior Court (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 419, 121 Cal. Rptr. 2d 844, 49 P.3d 194 ; DeLaura v. Beckett (2006) 137 Cal. App. 4th 542, 545-547, 40 Cal. Rptr. 3d 253).

[Optional] E. Another Action Pending. Where another action is pending between the same parties in which the issue sought to be adjudicated in the declaratory relief action can be finally adjudicated, declaratory relief is properly denied (Hagan v. Fairfield (1965) 238 Cal. App. 2d 197, 202, 47 Cal. Rptr. 600).

[Optional] F. Unclean Hands. The trial court is justified in concluding that its adjudication would not be proper where the party seeking declaratory relief has "unclean hands" (Maguire v. Hibernia Sav. & L. Soc'y (1944) 23 Cal. 2d 719, 730-731, 146 P.2d 673 ; Moss v. Moss (1942) 20 Cal. 2d 640, 643, 128 P.2d 526).

[Optional] G. Little or No Practical Effect. If the resolution of a controversy over future contractual remedies would have little practical effect in terms of altering the parties' behavior--for example, if it is not alleged that the remedial provisions are about to come into play or that the continuation of the contractual relationship depends on the resolution of the current controversy--the court has considerable discretion to deny declaratory relief because it is not necessary or proper at the time under the circumstances (Meyer v. Sprint Spectrum L.P. (2009) 45 Cal. 4th 634, 646-648, 88 Cal. Rptr. 3d 859, 200 P.3d 295).

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint for declaratory relief for failure to state a cause of action where it appears from the face of the complaint or from matter of which the court must or may take judicial notice that a judicial declaration or determination is not necessary or proper at the time under all the circumstances [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1061].

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

If the demurrer is sustained without leave to amend, or with leave to amend and plaintiff fails to amend, rather than order dismissal of the action [see Code Civ. Proc. § 581d], the court should enter judgment declaring that a judicial declaration or determination is not necessary or proper at the time under all the circumstances in that, for example, another action is pending between the same parties in which the issue raised can be as adequately and speedily determined as in the declaratory relief action [see discussion of Moss v. Moss (1942) 20 Cal. 2d 640, 128 P.2d 526 , under § 67.23[3][a]].

[b] Related Uses

This memorandum may also, with appropriate modifications, be used in support of either a nonstatutory motion for judgment on the pleadings or, where the ground for refusal of relief does not appear from the face of the complaint, a motion for summary judgment [see § 67.40[2]].

[c] Alternative Relief

Instead of dismissing, a court may issue a stay of a declaratory judgment action when it will require anticipating and determining an issue that necessarily will be resolved in the underlying action [California Ins. Guarantee Assn. v. Superior Court (1991) 231 Cal. App. 3d 1617, 1621-1624, 283 Cal. Rptr. 104] . For example, a court must stay a declaratory judgment action between an insurer and insured to adjudicate coverage issues under a liability policy, if factual issues presented in the declaratory judgment action will necessarily be resolved in an underlying action brought by a third party against the insured [Great Am. Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (2009) 178 Cal. App. 4th 221, 235, 100 Cal. Rptr. 3d 258 ; see California Ins. Guarantee Assn. v. Superior Court (1991) 231 Cal. App. 3d 1617, 1621-1622, 1628, 283 Cal. Rptr. 104 ; cf. [3][c], below]. But if the declaratory judgment action can be resolved on legal issues or factual issues unrelated to those in the underlying action, whether to stay the declaratory judgment action is a matter within the trial court's discretion. In exercising its discretion, the trial court should consider the possible prejudice to the insured if the declaratory judgment action is not stayed, as well as the possible prejudice to the insurer is the action is stayed [Great Am. Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (2009) 178 Cal. App. 4th 221, 235-237, 100 Cal. Rptr. 3d 258] .

[d] Validity of Administrative Regulations

It is not clear whether the trial court may properly refuse declaratory relief under Code Civ. Proc. § 1061 on the ground that its declaration is not necessary or proper at the time under all the circumstances in an action brought under Gov. Code § 11350. This latter section authorizes any interested party to obtain a judicial declaration as to the validity of any administrative regulation. The doubt arises from dictum in the case of Pacific Motor Transp. Co. v. State Bd. of Equalization (1972) 28 Cal. App. 3d 230, 104 Cal. Rptr. 558 . That case was an action by two trucking companies to determine the validity of a tax regulation adopted by the State Board of Equalization. The trial court sustained defendant's demurrer to the complaint on the ground the court lacked jurisdiction of the subject matter of the action under former Rev. & Tax. Code § 10276, prohibiting actions to prevent or enjoin the collection of a tax, and plaintiffs appealed from the ensuing judgment of dismissal. The court of appeal, distinguishing several earlier cases on the ground that they did not consider former Gov. Code § 11440 [now see Gov. Code § 11350], held that the trial court did have jurisdiction and that the validity of an administrative tax regulation may be determined by a declaratory relief action commenced under former Gov. Code § 11440 [now see Gov. Code § 11350], if the effect of the court's determination is not to enjoin directly the collection of the tax. The court, however, (28 Cal. App. 3d 230, 237) found meritless the board's contention that the trial court nevertheless had authority to dismiss the action under Code Civ. Proc. § 1061 on the ground that the relief sought by plaintiffs was not necessary or proper at the time under all the circumstances. The court pointed out that the trial court did not pass on the question of the propriety of the relief but had erroneously found a lack of jurisdiction. The court then questioned the applicability of Code Civ. Proc. § 1061 by adding: "Furthermore, the Supreme Court in Chas. L. Harney, Inc. v. Contractors' Bd., supra [1952], 39 Cal.2d 561, 564, [247 P.2d 913] , held that an interested party is entitled under section 11440 of the Government Code to obtain a judicial declaration as to the validity of an administrative regulation." (Italics added.) The court found significant that the Supreme Court had held that an interesting person was "entitled" under former Gov. Code § 11440 [now see Gov. Code § 11350] to obtain a judicial declaration, contrasting that language with that of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1060 and 1061, which provide that one "may" bring an action [Code Civ. Proc. § 1060], subject to dismissal if the court determines that the relief sought is not necessary or proper at the time under all the circumstances [Code Civ. Proc. § 1061].

However, the Supreme Court in Harney was concerned with defendant's objection that the complaint failed to state a cause of action since plaintiff had not alleged that it had, in effect, violated the regulation involved and hence that there was no actual controversy between the parties [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1060]. The full passage in Harney only partially quoted by the court in Pacific Motor, above, reads: "The Legislature, by Honeywell was a declaratory relief action against the State Board of Equalization by corporate taxpayers engaged in the manufacture and installation of elevators and temperature control systems for a declaratory judgment that the board's rule 11 [18 Cal. Code Reg. § 1521], making a sale of fixtures a sale of tangible personal property subject to the Sales Tax Act notwithstanding that the fixture may be installed on real property and that the seller may provide incidental personal services in connection with its installation, was invalid as applied to them. Defendant demurred to the complaint on the ground the superior court was without jurisdiction and that no cause of action for declaratory relief was stated because each taxpayer had engaged in business for several years, and its own tax liability, if any, had already been fixed by its own conduct and it had adequate administrative remedies by way of claims for refund. In fact, claims for refund had been made and were in the process of consideration and in some instances, actions for enactment of section 11440 [now see Gov. Code § 11350], must have intended to permit persons affected by an administrative regulation to test its validity without having to enter into contracts with third persons in violation of its terms or to subject themselves to prosecution or disciplinary proceedings." That is, Harney did not involve the issue as to whether a judicial declaration was or was not proper or necessary at the time under all the circumstances.

Insofar as it permitted a declaratory relief action to be brought under former Gov. Code § 11440 [now see Gov. Code § 11350] to obtain a judicial declaration concerning the validity of a tax regulation if the declaration does not have the effect of preventing or enjoining the collection of the tax in question, Pacific Motor Transp. Inc. was directly followed by the court of appeal in Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. v. State Bd. of Equalization (1979) 97 Cal. App. 3d 687, 695-696, 159 Cal. Rptr. 60 .

Its reasoning was also applied in Honeywell, Inc. v. State Bd. of Equalization (1975) 48 Cal. App. 3d 907, 122 Cal. Rptr. 243 . However Honeywell also contains dictum which may be interpreted to permit a trial court to consider the propriety under Code Civ. Proc. § 1061 of a declaratory relief action under former Gov. Code § 11440 [now see Gov. Code § 11350]. In Honeywell defendant demurred to the complaint on the ground that plaintiffs had adequate administrative remedies and that plaintiffs had filed refunds which were pending in superior court. The demurrer was overruled, and the case tried on the merits, resulting in a judgment declaring the rule invalid. Defendant appealed. In considering the appeal on its merits and reversing the judgment, the court of appeal concluded that Pacific Motor Transp. Co. had cast some doubt on the applicability of older case law which had held that declaratory relief under former Gov. Code § 11440 [now see Gov. Code § 11350] was not available to determine the validity of a tax regulation of a statutory provision which barred the enjoining of the collection of a particular tax authorized by the regulation. Nevertheless, Honeywell reached this conclusion reluctantly. It noted that the action involved a relitigation of the same issues raised in prior actions, one of which had been adjudicated by final judgment. It stated that the trial court could well have refused jurisdiction of this case under the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 1061 and that although it did not do so, the court of appeal "... might well [have] dispose[d] of this appeal on the ground that the court's failure to dismiss under the circumstances here presented an abuse of discretion. [Citation.] However, since Pacific Motor Transport Co. v. State Bd. of Equalization, 28 Cal. App.3d 230 [104 Cal. Rptr. 558] , casts some doubt on the applicability of Casey v. Bonelli, supra [(1949) 93 Cal. App. 2d 253, 208 P.2d 723] (and similar cases) ... ." the court proceeded to determine the case on its merits. Casey held that resort may not be had to a declaratory judgment to determine that a sales or use tax should not be collected if statute barred the enjoining of the collection of the tax. It is not clear if the doubt cast by Pacific Motor Transp. Inc. as to the question of whether or not a trial court may consider the propriety of relief under former Gov. Code § 11440 [now see Gov. Code § 11350], or the question of the right to a judicial declaration of the validity of a tax regulation when the collection of the tax in question may not be enjoined.

In none of the above cases was there a holding that Code Civ. Proc. § 1061 does not apply to declaratory relief actions under former Gov. Code § 11440 [now see Gov. Code § 11350]. Until there is such an appellate court holding, counsel for defendant in an action under Gov. Code § 11350 may, where the facts support such position, wish to argue the applicability of Code Civ. Proc. § 1061 and that under that section the court should refuse to exercise its power to grant declaratory relief on the ground that its declaration or determination is not necessary or proper at the time under all the circumstances.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Raising Objection by Demurrer

Moss v. Moss (1942) 20 Cal. 2d 640, 128 P.2d 526 was an action by a man against his former wife for declaratory relief seeking a determination of his obligations under a property settlement agreement and a subsequent modification of it. The trial court sustained a demurrer to the complaint without leave to amend and discussed the action. Plaintiff appealed. In affirming the judgment, the Supreme Court pointed out that the complaint was sufficient to state a cause of action for declaratory relief but that under the facts alleged the trial court was permitted in its discretion to deny declaratory relief under Code Civ. Proc. § 1061. The Court stated that when facts appear from the face of the complaint that would justify a trial court in concluding that its determination is not necessary or proper, it has been held that the court may sustain a general demurrer to the complaint for declaratory relief (20 Cal. 2d 640, 642) .

The Supreme Court added that it is true that an order sustaining a general demurrer to a complaint for declaratory relief does not indicate to the appellate court whether the trial court concluded that relief was inappropriate or that there was a failure to state a cause of action. While it might be better practice for the trial court to overrule the demurrer and exercise its discretion in denying declaratory relief by some other procedure, as, for example, upon a motion to dismiss the fact that it did so in ruling upon the general demurrer, the Supreme Court held, could not be reversible error in view of the decided cases in California (20 Cal. 2d 640, 643) . [For a case involving the trial court's denial of a motion for judgment on the pleadings (the equivalent of a general demurrer) and granting a motion to dismiss, see Allstate Ins. Co. v. Fisher (1973) 31 Cal. App. 3d 391, 394, 107 Cal. Rptr. 251.]

The objection cited by Moss to the sustaining of a general demurrer can, of course, be met by the trial court's specifying in its order sustaining the demurrer and in its subsequent judgment of dismissal that the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in that it shows, for example, that another action is pending between the same parties in which the issues raised can be as adequately and speedily determined as in the declaratory relief action, and hence, that a judicial declaration or determination is not necessary or proper at the time under all the circumstances. The ground should be stated in both the order and judgment [see Pacific Legal Foundation v. Unemployment Ins. Appeals Bd. (1977) 74 Cal. App. 3d 150, 157, 141 Cal. Rptr. 474 (declaratory relief action to determine the validity of a precedent decision of defendant board; illustrating the problem generated for the appellate court when the grounds for judgment on the pleadings stated in the trial court's order granting the motion differed from the grounds stated in the judgment itself)].

[b] Available Alternative Remedies

Communist Party v. Peek (1942) 20 Cal. 2d 536, 127 P.2d 889 was an action by plaintiff (1) for declaratory relief seeking an adjudication of the invalidity of a statute, (2) for a writ of mandate to compel performance of duties necessary to qualify it to participate in a primary election, and (3) for an order directing correction of an error or omission in the conduct of a primary election. Defendants' demurrers to the complaint were sustained without leave to amend, and plaintiff appealed from the subsequent judgment of dismissal. Although reversing the judgment as to the third cause of action, the Supreme Court affirmed the judgment as to the first two. With respect to the declaratory relief action, the Court explained that under Code Civ. Proc. § 1061 the court may refuse in its discretion to grant the relief sought in an action for a declaratory judgment, that it appeared from the face of the pleading that a speedy and adequate remedy for the purpose sought by the action was provided by former Elec. Code § 2900 [now see Elec. Code § 13314], and that under such circumstances it could not be said that the trial court abused its discretion in refusing to grant declaratory relief (20 Cal. 2d 536, 540) .

In Filarsky v. Superior Court (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 419, 121 Cal. Rptr. 2d 844, 49 P.3d 194 , a citizen requested that a city government disclose certain documents under the California Public Records Act (CPRA) (see Gov. Code § 6250 et seq.). The city refused to disclose the requested documents, and the citizen stated his intent to file a judicial proceeding under the CPRA to compel disclosure. Before the citizen initiated such a proceeding, however, the city filed its own declaratory relief action pursuant to Code of Civil Procedure Section 1060, seeking a declaration that the city was not required to disclose the records sought by the citizen. The superior court issued a declaratory judgment in favor of the city, and the court of appeal denied the citizen's request for a writ of mandate to overturn the trial court's decision. The Supreme Court, however, held that because the CPRA provided the exclusive method of litigating disputes arising under the CPRA, the superior court had abused its discretion in exercising jurisdiction over the city's action.

The Supreme Court found that the Legislature intended the litigation procedures under the CPRA to be the exclusive method of obtaining judicial declarations of rights under the CPRA, primarily because of four significant differences between the CPRA procedures and those applicable in regular declaratory relief actions. First, under the CPRA, only a person seeking disclosure--not the public agency in possession of the records--may seek a judicial declaration regarding the agency's obligation to disclose a document. In an ordinary declaratory relief action, however, either party to a controversy may initiate the action. Second, in a proceeding under the CPRA, the court must schedule the filing of responsive pleadings and hearings in order to reach a decision as soon as possible. Such a requirement is not imposed upon courts in an ordinary declaratory relief action. Third, if a person initiates a proceeding under the CPRA, he or she must be awarded attorney fees and costs if he or she prevails, and the defendant public agency cannot recover fees or costs unless the proceeding is frivolous. In contrast, in a declaratory relief action, a member of the public seeking disclosure cannot recover attorney fees if he or she prevails, and a prevailing public agency may recover costs even if the individual's request for disclosure is not frivolous. Fourth, appellate review of the superior court's ruling in a proceeding under the CPRA must be by a petition for writ of mandate filed no more than 40 days after notice of the ruling (28 Cal. 4th 419, 428-429) .

On the other hand, a public agency may appeal from a declaratory judgment requiring disclosure of the records, thus delaying disclosure for a significant period of time (see Code Civ. Proc. § 1600; Gov. Code §§ 6258, 6259). The Court found that these distinctions establish that permitting a public agency to file a preemptive declaratory relief action to determine its obligation to disclose records to a member of the public would undermine the purposes of the CPRA by eliminating important incentives and protections for individuals requesting public records. Therefore, the Court concluded that the CPRA does not authorize a public agency to initiate such an action (28 Cal. 4th 419, 429-430) .

The Supreme Court next considered whether Code of Civil Procedure Section 1060 nevertheless authorizes a public agency to bring a declaratory relief action to determine whether it must disclose public records. Generally, a superior court may refuse to grant declaratory relief in any case where its declaration or determination is not necessary or proper at the time under all the circumstances (Code Civ. Proc. § 1061). Under the circumstances of this case, the Supreme Court concluded that the superior court had abused its discretion by issuing declaratory relief. The High Court explained that, since the Legislature has specified the exclusive procedure for litigating disputes regarding a person's right to obtain disclosure of public records under the CPRA, a superior court abuses its discretion in bypassing this statutory procedure and granting declaratory relief in an action initiated by a public agency pursuant to Code of Civil Procedure Section 1060 (28 Cal. 4th 419, 429-435) .

In DeLaura v. Beckett (2006) 137 Cal. App. 4th 542, 40 Cal. Rptr. 3d 253 , the plaintiff was a landlord who sought a declaratory judgment to establish that her tenant was not entitled to protected status under the applicable municipal rent ordinance. The trial court sustained the defendant's demurrer without leave to amend, and the court of appeal affirmed. The court pointed out that the municipal ordinance itself provided a simple and cost-effective procedure for determining whether the defendant qualified as a protected tenant. Citing Filarsky v. Superior Court, (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 419, 121 Cal. Rptr. 2d 844, 49 P.3d 194 (discussed above), the court of appeal explained that the trial court properly may refuse to grant declaratory relief when an appropriate procedure has been provided by special statute (in this case, the rent ordinance) and the court believes that more effective relief can and should be obtained through that procedure (137 Cal. App. 4th 542, 545-547) .

[c] Another Action Pending

Hagan v. Fairfield (1965) 238 Cal. App. 2d 197, 47 Cal. Rptr. 600 was an action for damages for breach of the right of privacy and for declaratory relief with respect to the validity of a covenant by plaintiff not to sue defendant Whitman. The complaint showed on its face that defendant Fairfield was not a party to the covenant not to sue and that another action was pending between plaintiff and Fairfield, as plaintiff and defendant respectively, in which Fairfield had attached a copy of plaintiff's covenant not to sue to his pleading. Defendant Fairfield's demurrer to the complaint in the present action was sustained without leave to amend, and plaintiff appealed from the subsequent judgment. In affirming the judgment, the court of appeal said that insofar as the covenant to which defendant Fairfield was not a party was relevant in other pending litigation between plaintiff and defendant Fairfield, any pertinent question as to the validity and effect of the covenant could be appropriately resolved therein. The court concluded that facts would appear from the face of the complaint which would justify the trial court's conclusion that its determination was not necessary or proper (238 Cal. App. 2d 197, 202) .

[d] Doctrine of Forum Non Conveniens

The proper motion where another action is not pending at the time the declaratory relief action is filed, but the action may be more appropriately and justly tried elsewhere, is a motion under Code Civ. Proc. § 410.30 on the ground of forum non conveniens to stay the declaratory relief action. However, such a motion should not be granted unless the balance is strongly in favor of the defendant, such as where plaintiff seeks to vex, harass, or oppress defendant [see Price v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. (1954) 42 Cal. 2d 577, 584, 585, 268 P.2d 457] . For example, the granting of the motion to stay a declaratory relief action, the proper commencement of which in California was not vexatious, oppressive, or harassing, is improper and an abuse of the trial court's discretion where the principal office (residence) of both plaintiff and defendant is in California; and this is true notwithstanding the fact that after commencement of the action, defendant filed an action in the court of the sister state in which the events giving rise to liability occurred for a declaration that it was not liable to plaintiff [see Bechtel Corp. v. Industrial Indem. Co. (1978) 86 Cal. App. 3d 45, 50-53, 150 Cal. Rptr. 29] .

[e] Unclean Hands

Maguire v. Hibernia Sav. & L. Soc'y (1944) 23 Cal. 2d 719, 146 P.2d 673 involved four actions for declaratory relief by successors in interest to alleged members of and depositors in defendant savings and loan society. The trial court sustained general demurrers to the complaints and dismissed the actions. Plaintiffs appealed on a single set of briefs. Although holding that the trial court erred in sustaining the general demurrers, the Supreme Court, by way of dictum, said that the fact that a party seeking judicial aid has "unclean hands" may well justify a trial court in concluding that its adjudication would not be proper (23 Cal. 2d 719, 730-731) .

The procedural background in Moss v. Moss (1942) 20 Cal. 2d 640, 128 P.2d 526 is discussed in § 67.24[3][a]. In holding that the complaint for declaratory relief showed that the property settlement agreement involved was against public policy and so illegal, the Supreme Court, in holding that the complaint was sufficient to authorize a declaration of plaintiff's obligations under the contract, considered whether the trial court abused its discretion in denying declaratory relief. It stated that the fact that plaintiff was a party to the unlawful bargain of equal fault with defendant and was therefore in pari delicto, could properly be considered by the trial court as a sufficient reason for declining to grant declaratory relief (20 Cal. 2d 640, 643) . In answer to plaintiff's contentions that a declaratory relief action was not strictly an action in equity and, therefore, that the doctrine of in pari delicto should not be applied and that the defense of in pari delicto had no application to the executory portions of an illegal contract, the Court said that the defense is nevertheless an element which the trial court in its discretion could consider in deciding whether or not to grant declaratory relief (20 Cal. 2d 640, 644) .

[f] Little or No Practical Effect

Meyer v. Sprint Spectrum L.P. (2009) 45 Cal. 4th 634, 88 Cal. Rptr. 3d 859, 200 P.3d 295 , involved an actual controversy regarding the enforceability of a contractual arbitration provision. The California Supreme Court affirmed the trial court's order sustaining a demurrer to the complaint for declaratory relief. The Supreme Court explained that a trial court has considerable discretion to deny declaratory relief when such relief would have little practical effect in terms of altering the parties' behavior. The Supreme Court found it significant that the parties' current controversy was primarily over the enforceability of certain contractual remedies should a future dispute over substantive contractual rights arise. Because no dispute had arisen that would cause those remedial provisions to come into play, and the plaintiffs had not alleged that the continuation of the contractual relationship depended on the resolution of the current controversy, the denial of declaratory relief was within the trial court's discretion (45 Cal. 4th 634, 646-648) .

The Supreme Court did acknowledge, however, that under different circumstances the settlement of questions of the validity of contractual remedies may have practical consequences, such as when a party's decision to enter into a contract reasonably turns on the answer to those questions, or when a party alleges with sufficient particularity that the continuation of a contractual relationship plausibly hinges on the answers to those questions (45 Cal. 4th 634, 648) .

[a] Discretion of Court to Refuse Declaratory Relief

In Farmers Insurance Exchange v. Adams (1985) 170 Cal. App. 3d 712, 216 Cal. Rptr. 287 , an insurer brought an action against numerous insureds to seek declaratory relief regarding exclusion of coverage for rainstorm damage to dwellings, and the trial court sustained defendants' demurrers to the complaint. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that a trial court's refusal to grant declaratory relief will not be disturbed on appeal unless a clear abuse of discretion is shown. In the case before it, the court held that refusal was appropriate because, inter alia, the trial court's granting of declaratory relief may have led to greater, rather than less, confusion (170 Cal. App. 3d 712, 724) .

[b] Raising Objection by Demurrer

General of America Ins. Co. v. Lilly (1968) 258 Cal. App. 2d 465, 65 Cal. Rptr. 750 was an action by an insurance company both against the operator of a truck owned by its insured which was involved in an accident with a vehicle owned by third parties and against the third parties. These parties had previously filed an action against the operator and plaintiff's insured to recover damages for personal injuries and property damage sustained in the accident. The insured had filed an answer in that action denying that the operator of the truck was driving with its permission or within the scope of his employment at the time of the accident. The insurance company thereafter notified the operator that it denied any coverage under the insured's policy in favor of the operator as an additional insured on the ground the operator was not driving the truck within the course and scope of his employment or with the insured's permission at the time of the accident, but agreed to pay the operator's defense costs in the third parties' action, reserving the right to claim noncoverage. Pursuant to that agreement, the operator employed a firm recommended by the insurer which filed an answer denying the material allegations of the third parties' complaint, other than the allegation that the operator was driving with permission and acting within the course and scope of his employment. Plaintiff insurer thereupon commenced the present action for a declaration that the operator was not driving with permission or within the course and scope of his employment. The third parties demurred to the insurer's complaint and the demurrer was sustained without leave to amend. In affirming the subsequent judgment of dismissal, the court of appeal stated that the broad discretionary power of the trial court to deny declaratory relief under Code Civ. Proc. § 1061 may be invoked by general demurrer (258 Cal. App. 2d 465, 471) . The court concluded that plaintiff's complaint fell short of the necessary allegations to entitle it, as matter of right, to maintain the action in declaratory relief, where the issues raised by the complaint would be properly and finally adjudicated in the personal injury action. Under these circumstances, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in sustaining the demurrer without leave to amend (258 Cal. App. 2d 465, 472) .

Hagan v. Fairfield (1965) 238 Cal. App. 2d 197, 47 Cal. Rptr. 600 , also discussed in § 67.23[3][c], involved a three-count complaint, the third count of which was for declaratory relief. Defendant's demurrer to the complaint was sustained without leave to amend and plaintiff appealed. In affirming the judgment of dismissal, the court of appeal, with respect to the declaratory relief count and quoting from Moss v. Moss (1942) 20 Cal. 2d 640, 642, 128 P.2d 526 , discussed in § 67.27[3][b], said that when facts appear from the face of the complaint which would justify a trial court in concluding that its determination is not necessary or proper, it has been held that the court may sustain a general demurrer to the complaint for declaratory relief (238 Cal. App. 2d 197, 202) .

The court also held, apart from whether a determination was necessary and proper at the time, that the demurrer to the complaint for declaratory relief was properly sustained because the complaint failed to plead facts, as opposed to conclusions of law, or show that a controversy of concrete actuality as opposed to one which is merely academic or hypothetical existed [see § 67.24].

Wilson v. Transit Auth. (1962) 199 Cal. App. 2d 716, 19 Cal. Rptr. 59 was an action by a union representing city bus drivers against a city transit authority for declaratory relief as to the inclusion of an arbitration clause in a collective bargaining agreement. The clause had been included in agreements executed prior to November 1956, but omitted in agreements executed after that time pursuant to the authority's position, based on an opinion of the city attorney, that inclusion of the clause would be illegal. Prior to the negotiation of the current contract, the union had obtained opinions from independent counsel and from the office of the Legislative Counsel of California advising that the clause might lawfully be included in the agreement, but the authority refused to include it on the ground it was bound to follow the opinion of the city attorney. Defendant's demurrer to the complaint was sustained without leave to amend on the ground that the authority had no duty to bargain collectively with the union. The court of appeal, in affirming the judgment of dismissal, pointed out that the trial court's decision must be considered either as the refusal to exercise the power of declaratory relief under Code Civ. Proc. § 1061, or a determination that the complaint failed to show an actual controversy involving a justiciable question (199 Cal. App. 2d 716, 721) . With respect to the first alternative, the court said that it has been suggested that it is better practice for a trial court to exercise its discretion in refusing declaratory relief under Code Civ. Proc. § 1061 by some procedure other than by sustaining a general demurrer, such as, upon a motion to dismiss the complaint. Nevertheless, where the complaint is devoid of essential facts showing the necessity or propriety of a declaration, it is not reversible error per se to refuse declaratory relief by an order sustaining a general demurrer without leave to amend (199 Cal. App. 2d 716, 721-722) . The court of appeal also held that irrespective of the applicability of Code Civ. Proc. § 1061, the trial court was "clearly" correct in sustaining the demurrer without leave to amend on the second ground, namely, that the complaint failed to show an actual controversy between the parties [see § 67.24].

Simpson v. Security First Nat'l Bank (1945) 71 Cal. App. 2d 154, 162 P.2d 494 involved the propriety of a judgment dismissing a declaratory relief action after defendant's general demurrer to the complaint had been sustained without leave to amend where it appeared that a judicial declaration or determination was not necessary or proper at the time under all the circumstances. In affirming the judgment, the court of appeal quoted the statement from Moss v. Moss (1942) 20 Cal. 2d 640, 642, 128 P.2d 526 , set forth in § 67.23[3][a]. However, the court also considered the Supreme Court's question of the propriety of a general demurrer under Code Civ. Proc. § 1061, which is noted as well in the discussion of Moss (71 Cal. App. 2d 154, 157-158) .

[c] Another Action Pending

Allstate Ins. Co. v. Fisher (1973) 31 Cal. App. 3d 391, 107 Cal. Rptr. 251 was an action by an automobile liability insurer seeking a declaration that an employee of the insured was not acting as the insured's agent or driving the insured vehicle with permission at the time he was involved in an accident. The action was against the employee and the third parties who had been injured in the accident and who had previously filed an action for damages against the employer and the employee alleging agency and permissive use, which allegations were denied in the insured's answer. The insurer's complaint for declaratory relief alleged among other things that the third parties were responsible for the accident, that a dispute existed in that plaintiff denied that the employee had the insured's consent or was his agent as was asserted by the third parties in their complaint, that the dispute should be resolved before trial of the personal injury action, and that plaintiff did not have a speedy or adequate remedy at law. The trial court granted defendant third parties' motion to dismiss the complaint and on its own motion granted a dismissal in favor of the employee. Plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal, in affirming the judgment, held that the issue involved could be determined in the pending personal injury action and quoting from General of America Ins. Co v. Lilly (1968) 258 Cal. App. 2d 465, 471, 65 Cal. Rptr. 750 , below, said that the availability of another form of relief that is adequate will usually justify refusal to grant declaratory relief (31 Cal. App. 3d 391, 395) .

Miller v. California (1970) 6 Cal. App. 3d 202, 85 Cal. Rptr. 801 was an action by a publishing corporation and one of its executives, Miller, for a declaration that a book was not obscene and for an injunction enjoining defendant and any of its agents from prosecuting plaintiffs for publishing, distributing, or selling the book. The complaint alleged that copies of the book had been forwarded to the corporate plaintiff's wholesalers and distributors throughout the United States for sale and distribution to the general public and that a warrant had been issued directing law enforcement officers and officials to seize any and all copies of the book. Although not alleged in the complaint, the record showed that plaintiff Miller had been twice charged in two separate courts in California with violating Penal Code § 311.2 for distributing the book. Defendant's demurrer to the complaint was sustained, and plaintiffs appealed from the subsequent judgment of dismissal. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment on the ground that Miller had a speedy and adequate method in the criminal actions for determining whether the book was obscene and that since Miller was alleged to be responsible for the conduct and business activities of the corporate plaintiff, Miller's conviction would as a practical matter resolve the question for the corporate plaintiff. The court additionally held that declaratory relief was not needed because plaintiffs had distributed the book and subjected themselves to criminal liability without first seeking declaratory relief.

Holden v. Arnebergh (1968) 265 Cal. App. 2d 87, 71 Cal. Rptr. 401 , appeal dismissed, (1969) 394 U.S. 102, 89 S. Ct. 926, 22 L. Ed. 2d 112 , was an action to test the validity of the seizure of books and photos alleged to be obscene for a declaration that books and photos were not obscene, and for an injunction enjoining further prosecution of plaintiffs for selling and exhibiting the books and photos. The complaint alleged among other things that plaintiffs were in the book selling business, that in September 1966 they had been arrested for violating Penal Code § 311.2, that a month later certain of the plaintiffs were again arrested, and that the statute was unconstitutional as it applied to them. Defendants' demurrers to the complaint were sustained, and plain tiffs appealed from the subsequent judgment of dismissal. The court of appeal affirmed on the ground that the criminal proceedings afforded plaintiffs speedy and adequate relief and that the trial court had not abused its discretion in refusing to entertain the complaint.

The procedural background of General of America Ins. Co. v. Lilly (1968) 258 Cal. App. 2d 465, 65 Cal. Rptr. 750 is discussed in § 67.27[3][b]. In affirming the judgment of dismissal, the court of appeal said that the declaratory relief statute should not be used for the purpose of anticipating and determining an issue which can be determined in the main action. The object of the statute is to afford a new form of relief where needed and not to furnish a litigant with a second cause of action for the determination of identical issues. The court stated that the issue raised in the declaratory relief action was one raised and capable of determination in the main action (258 Cal. App. 2d 465, 470) . The court explained that under Code Civ. Proc. § 1061 the trial court may refuse to exercise the power to grant declaratory relief where such relief is not necessary or proper at the time under all of the circumstances. The availability of another form of relief that is adequate will usually justify refusal to grant declaratory relief. The court found from the pleadings that the determination of issues that plaintiff sought in the action was readily available to it in the personal injury action; that such determination was speedy and adequate, and was as well suited to plaintiff's needs as declaratory relief (258 Cal. App. 2d 465, 471) .

Taliaferro v. Taliaferro (1960) 179 Cal. App. 2d 787, 4 Cal. Rptr. 689 involved three actions for declaratory relief consolidated for trial without a jury seeking a declaration of the rights and duties of the parties under a property settlement agreement executed by the parties prior to their divorce. Judgments were for defendant, and plaintiff appealed. The appeal as to one of the judgments was dismissed at plaintiff's request. As to the other two, the trial court, with respect to one, had found that the disputes alleged were the same as those pending in another action between the parties and determined that because of the pendency of the other action, it was not proper or necessary to render declaratory relief in the present action. This judgment was affirmed on appeal. The court of appeal said that dispute that is the subject of another action pending between the same parties and arising out of the subject matter may not be the subject of an independent action for declaratory relief because the controversy will have been rendered moot by judgment in the former action (179 Cal. App. 2d 787, 791) .

§ 67.24 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10] for Declaratory Relief [Code Civ. Proc. § 1060]--Failure to State Cause of Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--No Actual Justiciable Controversy [Code Civ. Proc. § 1060] Is Alleged

[1] FORM Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10] for Declaratory Relief [Code Civ. Proc. § 1060]--Failure to State Cause of Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--No Actual Justiciable Controversy [Code Civ. Proc. § 1060] Is Alleged

[Caption. See § 67.21.]

THE COMPLAINT FOR DECLARATORY RELIEF FAILS TO STATE FACTS SUFFICIENT TO CONSTITUTE A CAUSE OF ACTION IN THAT IT APPEARS ON ITS FACE THAT THERE IS NO ACTUAL JUSTICIABLE CONTROVERSY RELATING TO THE LEGAL RIGHTS AND DUTIES OF THE RESPECTIVE PARTIES.

A. Objection by Demurrer. [See § 67.21, Paragraph A.]

B. Actual, Legal Controversy Must Be Alleged in Pleading. Code of Civil Procedure Section 1060 authorizes declaratory relief only in cases of actual controversy relating to the legal rights and duties of the respective parties. Hence, to state a cause of action for declaratory relief under Code of Civil Procedure Section 1060, the complaint must allege facts from which the court may determine that an actual controversy relating to the legal rights and duties of the respective parties exists (Alturas v. Gloster (1940) 16 Cal. 2d 46, 48, 104 P.2d 810).

C. Requirement That Controversy Be Justiciable. For the court to exercise its discretion to declare the rights and duties of the parties, the controversy involved must be justiciable; that is, it must be a controversy which admits of specific and conclusive relief by judgment within the field of judicial determination (Selby Realty Co. v. San Buenaventura (1973) 10 Cal. 3d 110, 117, 109 Cal. Rptr. 799, 514 P.2d 111).

D. Failure to State Cause of Action. A complaint for declaratory relief that fails to allege the existence of an actual justiciable controversy between the parties fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action (Wilson v. Transit Auth. (1962) 199 Cal. App. 2d 716, 722-724, 19 Cal. Rptr. 59).

[Optional] E. Advisory Opinions. Courts do not give advisory opinions and declaratory relief actions are not available to secure judicial answers to questions that are merely theoretical, hypothetical, academic, or abstract in the sense that they are not related to a particular object or thing, or that they relate to contingent events that are not certain to occur (Otay Land Co. v. Royal Indemnity Co. (2008) 169 Cal. App. 4th 556, 565-567, 86 Cal. Rptr. 3d 408 ; Sanctity of Human Life Network v. California Highway Patrol (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 858, 871-873, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 708 ; Wilson v. Transit Auth. (1962) 199 Cal. App. 2d 716, 722, 19 Cal. Rptr. 59).

[Optional] F. No Affirmative Relief Sought or Possible. The element of a justiciable actual controversy is lacking when a complaint for declaratory relief seeks no affirmative relief against the defendant, and the defendant has no power to grant plaintiff any affirmative relief (see Pinnacle Holdings, Inc. v. Simon (1995) 31 Cal. App. 4th 1430, 1436-1437, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 778).

[Optional] G. Different Interpretation of Statute by Citizen and Governmental Agency. A difference of opinion as to the interpretation of a statute as between a citizen and a governmental agency does not give rise to a justiciable controversy and provides no compelling reason for a court to attempt to direct the manner by the agency shall administer the law since a citizen's mere dissatisfaction with the performance of either the legislative or executive branches, or disagreement with their policies does not constitute a justiciable controversy (Zetterberg v. State Dept. of Public Health (1974) 43 Cal. App. 3d 657, 662, 663-664, 118 Cal. Rptr. 100).

[Optional] H. Adoption of General Plan. The adoption of a general plan by a city or county under the provisions of Government Code Section 65100 is a legislative act, and a landowner may not maintain an action in declaratory relief to probe the merits of the plan absent an allegation of a defect in the proceedings leading to its enactment (Selby Realty Co. v. San Buenaventura (1973) 10 Cal. 3d 110, 118, 109 Cal. Rptr. 799, 514 P.2d 111 ; Mills v. San Francisco Bay Area Rapid Transit Dist. (1968) 261 Cal. App. 2d 666, 667-668, 68 Cal. Rptr. 317).

[Optional] I. Jurisdiction Over Dissolution of Corporation Which Has Not Elected to Dissolve. Where there has been no election pursuant to Corporations Code Section 1800 et seq. to dissolve a corporation (and the corporation is not in the process of involuntary dissolution), the court lacks jurisdiction to declare the terms and conditions of dissolution when and if it should occur at some future time (Escondido Mut. Water Co. v. George A. Hillebrecht, Inc. (1966) 241 Cal. App. 2d 410, 415-416, 50 Cal. Rptr. 495).

[Optional] J. Mere Allegation That Controversy Exists. The mere allegation that an actual controversy exists between the parties is a bare conclusion and insufficient to state a cause of action for declaratory relief under Code of Civil Procedure Section 1060 if facts from which the court may determine that an actual controversy relating to the legal rights and duties of the parties exists are not alleged (Alturas v. Gloster (1940) 16 Cal. 2d 46, 48, 104 P.2d 810).

[Optional] K. Nonexistent Contract. For a declaratory relief action to be maintainable to determine the validity and construction of a contract, it is necessary that the contract be an existing one and not merely one in contemplation, since a contemplated contract cannot, in advance of agreement as to its terms, present a justiciable controversy (Escondido Mut. Water Co. v. George A. Hillebrecht, Inc. (1966) 241 Cal. App. 2d 410, 412, 50 Cal. Rptr. 495).

This form may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to the complaint for declaratory relief for failure to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action if the complaint fails to allege facts showing the existence of a justiciable controversy between the parties regarding their legal rights and duties.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, this form may also be used in support of a nonstatutory motion for judgment on the pleadings [see § 67.40[2]] or, if the defect does not appear from the face of the complaint, a motion for summary judgment, provided defendant can show by affidavits, declarations, admissions, answers to interrogatories, depositions, and matters of which judicial notice must or may be taken that there is in fact no justiciable controversy between the parties [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Actual, Legal Controversy as Required to Be Pleaded

Alturas v. Gloster (1940) 16 Cal. 2d 46, 104 P.2d 810 was an action by the city for declaratory relief as to the rights and duties of the parties under a contract entered into between the city and defendant landowner by the terms of which the city was entitled to take soil from, and regulate a dam on, defendant's property for the purposes of flood control in exchange for payment of a monthly fee. The complaint alleged (1) execution of the contract pursuant to a resolution adopted by the city council, (2) performance of the contract for a period of years, (3) subsequent adoption by the city council without notice to defendant of a resolution that no further compensation would be paid under the contract on the ground that the rights and benefits conferred by the contract were no longer required by the city, (4) subsequent recovery by defendant in the justice court of a judgment against the city for payment accruing under the contract after adoption of the resolution, and (5) pendency of another action in the justice court by defendant to secure payment of sums accruing under the contract since entry of the prior judgment. The complaint further alleged that defendant contended that the contract was valid and sought injunctive relief to restrain defendant from instituting any further actions against the city to recover under the contract. Defendant's demurrer to the complaint on the ground that it failed to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action was sustained.

On plaintiff's appeal from the subsequent judgment of dismissal, the judgment was affirmed. The Supreme Court pointed out that the city did not assert that the contract was void or that it had ever been modified or rescinded; no circumstance or condition of the contract to an actual controversy regarding the legal rights of the respective parties had been alleged. The court held that to state a cause of action for declaratory relief under Code Civ. Proc. § 1060, the complaint should allege appropriate facts from which the court may determine that an actual controversy relating to the legal rights and duties of the respective parties exists. If, for example, the city had sought to excuse its performance on grounds of waiver or acts of an adverse party or God, the waiver or acts must be alleged in the complaint (16 Cal. 2d 46, 48) .

[b] Requirement That Controversy Be Justiciable

In Selby Realty Co. v. San Buenaventura (1973) 10 Cal. 3d 110, 109 Cal. Rptr. 799, 514 P.2d 111 , the first cause of action of plaintiff's complaint sought a determination of the validity of a defendant county's general plan, which provided for the long-term physical development of the city, as it affected certain land of plaintiff, a declaration as to whether there had been a taking of its property for public use, and a judgment setting forth plaintiff's rights in the event a taking had occurred. After sustaining defendants' general demurrer and special demurrers to this cause of action, as well as plaintiff's other causes of action, the trial court entered a judgment of dismissal, and plaintiff appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that plaintiff had failed to allege facts showing a concrete dispute between plaintiff and the county that allowed definitive and conclusive judicial relief. The Court stated that the actual controversy required under Code Civ. Proc. § 1060 is one that allows definitive and conclusive relief by judgment within the field of judicial administration, as distinguished from an advisory opinion on a particular or hypothetical state of facts. The judgment must decree, not suggest, what the parties may or may not do (10 Cal. 3d 110, 117) . The Court pointed out that the county had taken no action concerning plaintiff's land except to enact the general plan. The fact that some of the streets proposed in the plan would cross plaintiff's land gave plaintiff no greater right to declaratory relief than that available to any other citizen whose property was included in the plan. Whether plaintiff's land would be taken under the plan moreover depended on unpredictable future events since the plan was subject to change. The Court also stated that plaintiff could not attack the plan itself since its wisdom was within the legislative sphere and was not open to judicial scrutiny in the absence of an alleged defect in the proceedings leading to its enactment (10 Cal. 3d 110, 117-118) .

[c] Failure to State Cause of Action

Wilson v. Transit Auth. (1962) 199 Cal. App. 2d 716, 19 Cal. Rptr. 59 was an action by labor union officers against a city transit authority for declaratory relief as to whether a contract between the union and the authority might lawfully include a provision for compulsory arbitration of grievances in the event of an impasse between them. The complaint alleged that a prior agreement between the union and the authority contained such a provision, that the provision had been deleted from subsequent contracts, including the current one, and that there was a difference of opinion among counsel as to the legality of such a provision. The complaint alleged no unsettled grievance or other controversy pending under the existing contract relating to the rights and duties of the parties. Defendant's demurrer to the complaint for failure to state a cause of action was sustained. On plaintiff's appeal from the subsequent judgment of dismissal, the judgment was affirmed. The court of appeal concluded that no justiciable controversy had been alleged and held that failure of a complaint for declaratory relief to allege the existence of an actual justiciable controversy between the parties as to their rights and duties fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action and that the demurrer had been properly sustained on that ground (199 Cal. App. 2d 716, 724) .

[d] Advisory Opinions

The plaintiff in Otay Land Co. v. Royal Indemnity Co. (2008) 169 Cal. App. 4th 556, 86 Cal. Rptr. 3d 408 , owned real property containing environmental contaminants, and in other pending actions the plaintiff sought to recover environmental cleanup costs from a former owner of the property. In a separate action, the former owner's liability insurer sued the former owner for declaratory relief to establish that the insurer should not be obligated to provide liability coverage for the claims asserted by the plaintiff. After the plaintiff was denied leave to intervene in the insurer's action against the former owner, the plaintiff brought the present action against the insurer, seeking declaratory relief to establish that the plaintiff's claim against the former owner was covered under the policy issued by the insurer.

The trial court sustained the insurer's demurrer to the plaintiff's complaint, applying the general rule that an injured third party is ordinarily prohibited from suing a tortfeasor's insurer for failing to defend or indemnify the tortfeasor against the third party's claim. The plaintiff had not claimed to fit within any of the three established exceptions to that general rule: when the third party has a judgment against the tortfeasor (see Ins. Code § 11580(b)(2)), when the insurer has sued the third party in its own declaratory relief action, and when the insured has assigned its policy rights to the third party (169 Cal. App. 4th 556, 560-561) .

The court of appeal affirmed, rejecting the plaintiff's argument that declaratory relief should be "expansively" allowed. The court noted that the statute that generally authorizes declaratory relief, Code of Civil Procedure Section 1060, has never been interpreted as allowing the issuance of any advisory orders about whether there should be potential insurance coverage for a policyholder's potential tort liability. The court emphasized that because the plaintiff's actions against the former owner were still pending, it remained unknown whether the plaintiff would ultimately be able to make a claim against the proceeds of the liability insurance policy as a judgment creditor. Declaratory relief was therefore inappropriate, since the plaintiff's interests in the policy were contingent upon its prevailing against the insured, and until such liability is settled, the court could not be certain that a controversy would arise between the plaintiff and the insurer. Accordingly, the trial court was correct in sustaining the insurer's demurrer to the complaint (169 Cal. App. 4th 556, 565-567) .

In Sanctity of Human Life Network v. California Highway Patrol (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 858, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 708 , the plaintiffs had stood on sidewalks of freeway overpasses during rush hours and held signs, visible to motorists below on the freeways, communicating their views concerning abortion. Responding to reports of freeway congestion caused by the plaintiffs' activities, officers of the California Highway Patrol (CHP) ordered the plaintiffs to stop. The CHP also made known its intent to continue to issue such orders under the authority of Veh. Code §§ 21465 and 21467, which govern the display of traffic signs and declare every prohibited sign a public nuisance. The plaintiffs brought this action for injunctive and declaratory relief, seeking to prevent the CHP from interfering with their display of handheld signs on freeway overpasses during rush hours. The trial court entered judgment in favor of the CHP.

The court of appeal modified the trial court's judgment, holding that the CHP lacked authority to interfere with the plaintiffs' activities under Veh. Code §§ 21465 and 21467 because the plaintiffs' signs could not be characterized as traffic signs subject to prohibition under those statutes (105 Cal. App. 4th 858, 863-868) .

The court of appeal went on to hold that, beyond the declaration that the CHP may not use Veh. Code §§ 21465 and 21467 as authority to interfere with the plaintiffs' activities, this action did not present a proper case for declaratory relief. In general, a plaintiff may bring an action for declaratory relief before an actual invasion of rights has occurred. However, the action must be based on an actual controversy with known parameters (see Code Civ. Proc. § 1060). If the parameters are unknown, the controversy is not ripe for declaratory relief. The court of appeal concluded that in this case, the issue of whether the plaintiffs could hold their signs on freeway overpasses under circumstances other than those presented by the facts of this case was not ripe. The court explained that the issue of what the CHP can and cannot do in situations not substantially similar to the facts presented in this case could not be the subject of a declaration concerning the plaintiffs' rights, because the court could only speculate concerning what the conditions of future encounters between the plaintiffs and the CHP might be. Many variables, such as traffic congestion, safety, and the exercise of the CHP's statutory authority, could change whether CHP interference with the plaintiffs' activities would be appropriate in any given situation. Furthermore, CHP interference could occur in a manner that, unlike the circumstances in this case, would violate the plaintiffs' free speech rights. If such a situation were presented, the issue of whether the freeway overpass is a public forum would also be ripe. The court could not, however, make a declaration in this case that would be applicable in all scenarios. Such a declaration would amount to an impermissible advisory opinion. Accordingly, the court of appeal affirmed the trial court's judgment denying declaratory relief, except that the trial court's judgment was modified to specify that the CHP could not rely on Veh. Code §§ 21465 and 21467 to interfere with the plaintiffs' standing on the sidewalks of freeway overpasses and holding non-traffic signs (105 Cal. App. 4th 858, 871-874) .

The factual background of Wilson v. Transit Auth. (1962) 199 Cal. App. 2d 716, 19 Cal. Rptr. 59 is discussed in § 67.24[3][c]. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment of dismissal on the ground that no justiciable controversy had been presented, that a mere difference of opinion does not give rise to such a controversy, that a controversy of concrete actuality is required as opposed to one which is merely academic or hypothetical, and that the declaratory judgment statutes do not authorize the courts to give advisory opinions (199 Cal. App. 2d 716, 722) .

[e] No Affirmative Relief Sought or Possible

In Pinnacle Holdings, Inc. v. Simon (1995) 31 Cal. App. 4th 1430, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 778 , a landlord that had unsuccessfully sought authority for a rent increase from a county rent control board brought a proceeding for mandate and for declaratory relief against the rent control board. In the declaratory relief action, the plaintiff landlord also sought to join as defendants four tenants who had spoken in opposition to the proposed rent increase during a hearing before the board. The four tenants were named both as individual defendants and as representatives of a class consisting of all of the plaintiff's tenants. The trial court dismissed the declaratory relief action against the four tenants after sustaining their demurrers without leave to amend and denying plaintiff's motion for certification of the defendant class.

The court of appeal affirmed. The plaintiff had argued that because it had alleged an actual controversy between itself and all defendants, the tenants were properly joined in the declaratory relief action, even though they were only real parties in interest and not necessary parties. The court noted that a declaratory relief action requires the existence of an actual, present controversy over a proper subject and concluded that this requirement was lacking because the action sought no affirmative relief from the tenants and because the tenants had no power to grant plaintiff the relief it sought (i.e., approval for the rent increase) (31 Cal. App. 4th 1430, 1436-1437) .

[f] Different Interpretation of Statute by Citizen and Governmental Agency

Zetterberg v. State Dept. of Public Health (1974) 43 Cal. App. 3d 657, 118 Cal. Rptr. 100 was an action by taxpayers and citizens of California against the State Department of Health (the department), members of the State Board of Public Health, the Governor, and the California Air Resources Board (CARB) for declaratory relief regarding the effect of the Mulford-Carrell Air Resources Act [former Health & Safety Code § 39000 et seq., repealed by Stats. 1975, ch. 957, § 11] (the act), in which plaintiffs sought a declaration that the department had the authority and duty to act against air pollution resulting from the use of motor vehicles, particularly conventional internal combustion engines in motor vehicles. Before passage of the act, the department had acted in the area of air pollution control pursuant to its general statutory authority to deal with health problems and under a specific grant of authority, enacted in 1955, to deal with air pollution [former Health & Safety Code § 425, repealed by Stats. 1967, ch. 1545, § 1]. In 1967, the Legislature passed the act that established CARB, listed in detail the powers and duties of CARB, repealed Health & Safety Code § 425 (replacing it with a new section), and gave a number of the former Health & Safety Code § 425 powers to CARB. Defendants' motion for summary judgment was granted on the ground that there was no triable issue of fact and that the scope of the department's powers was limited to those duties expressly conferred on it or reserved to it by the act. Plaintiffs appealed, asking that summary judgment be entered in their favor.

Although affirming the summary judgment, the court of appeal stated that the trial court should have dismissed the complaint because of the clear absence of a justiciable controversy (43 Cal. App. 3d 657, 665) . The court stated that the standard for the granting of declaratory relief is well established and added that the fact than an issue raised in a declaratory relief action is of broad general interest is not grounds for the courts to grant such relief in the absence of a true justiciable controversy (43 Cal. App. 3d 657, 661-662) . The court pointed out that a citizen's mere dissatisfaction with the performance of either the legislative or executive branches, or disagreement with their policies, does not constitute a justiciable controversy (43 Cal. App. 3d 657, 662) . The court also noted that a difference of opinion as to the interpretation of a statute between a citizen and a governmental agency does not give rise to a justiciable controversy. In reviewing the various authorities, the court explained the rationale for its ruling to be in the separation of powers doctrine. Courts have no power per se to review and annul legislative acts unless the party invoking such power has sustained some direct injury. Here the department had administratively interpreted its statutory powers and adopted policies for performance of its statutory duties. If the interpretation was erroneous, as plaintiffs had complained, and its policies unwise, the corrective mechanism was legislative clarification (43 Cal. App. 3d 657, 663) .

[g] Adoption of General Plan

Selby Realty Co. v. San Buenaventura (1973) 10 Cal. 3d 110, 109 Cal. Rptr. 799, 514 P.2d 111 is discussed in § 67.24[3][b].

Mills v. San Francisco Bay Area Rapid Transit Dist. (1968) 261 Cal. App. 2d 666, 68 Cal. Rptr. 317 was a declaratory and injunctive relief action which sought to compel the location of a particular station of defendant district at the point specified in a report that had preceded submission of the bond issue to the electorate, rather than the point the district had chosen after the bonds were voted. Plaintiffs had also named the county in which the station was located as a defendant since the county's board of supervisors had adopted a "traffic circulation plan," which had contemplated the "new" location of the station. (It was unclear which location this was.) Plaintiffs appealed from the judgments entered after the trial court had granted the district's motion for summary judgment and sustained the defendant county's general demurrer.

In affirming the judgment of the trial court, the court of appeal held that the demurrer of the county had been properly sustained. The court pointed out that the county board had statutory authority to adopt a general plan, including the traffic circulation report. No defect in the proceedings having been suggested, the wisdom of the plan was for the Legislature to determine and not the courts.

[h] Jurisdiction Over Dissolution of Corporation Which Has Not Elected to Dissolve

Escondido Mut. Water Co. v. George A. Hillebrecht, Inc. (1966) 241 Cal. App. 2d 410, 50 Cal. Rptr. 495 was an action by a mutual water company for declaratory relief, seeking court approval of a proposed contract for the sale of its water rights and water distribution facilities to a city and for judicial approval of a proposed amendment to the corporation's articles of incorporation affecting the rights of the stockholders on dissolution, that is, affecting their rights with respect to the terms and conditions of the dissolution. The action was brought by the corporation and various stockholders were named defendants. The trial court entered judgment for plaintiff approving the contract and declaring that it would be valid when and if approved by the holders of a majority of the outstanding stock. The court also approved the proposed amendment of the articles. One of the defendant stockholders appealed. In reversing the judgment, the court of appeal, with respect to that portion of the judgment declaring the terms and conditions of any future dissolution of the corporation, held that since there had been no election to dissolve Mutual pursuant to Corp. Code § 4600 [repealed, now see Corp. Code § 1900(a)], it concluded that it was without jurisdiction to declare terms and conditions of dissolution when and if it occurred at some future time (241 Cal. App. 2d 410, 415-416) . Plaintiff argued on appeal that the case should be likened to a declaratory relief action brought by an insurance company to determine liability under a contract of insurance, even though no claim had been asserted under the contract. The court agreed that such cases may be maintained but none involved the additional step of a declaration of rights and duties under a proposed contract of insurance. The court also considered the existence of a public interest exception to this rule where, although the contract had been only proposed, the inconvenience to the public is sufficient to constitute a matter of public concern to warrant declaratory relief [see Wilson v. Transit Auth. (1962) 199 Cal. App. 2d 716, 726, 19 Cal. Rptr. 59 (dissenting opinion)] (241 Cal. App. 2d 410, 415-415) . However, the court rejected the application of such an exception in plaintiff's case, since the only public interest claimed was private economic consideration (241 Cal. App. 2d 410, 415-416) .

[i] Mere Allegation That Controversy Exists

The factual background of Alturas v. Gloster (1940) 16 Cal. 2d 46, 104 P.2d 810 is discussed in § 67.24[3][a]. In that case, the complaint additionally alleged that an actual controversy existed between the parties as to their respective rights and duties. The Supreme Court held that the allegation was a bare conclusion and insufficient to show that an actual controversy existed (16 Cal. 2d 46, 48) .

[j] Nonexistent Contract

Escondido Mut. Water Co. v. George A. Hillebrecht, Inc. (1966) 241 Cal. App. 2d 410, 50 Cal. Rptr. 495 was an action for declaratory relief by plaintiff water company seeking court approval of a proposed contract for the sale of its water rights and water distribution facilities to a city. The company's motive for seeking the declaration was to facilitate distribution of its assets in order to take advantage of certain federal income tax benefits. The contract, although apparently approved by the directors of the water company and by the city council, had never been executed, nor had it been approved by the company's shareholders, as required by former Corp. Code § 3901 [now Corp. Code § 1001(a)], governing a sale of all or substantially all of a corporation's assets. The stockholders had been notified of the pending declaratory relief action and certain of them had been made defendants. The trial court found that the consideration to be paid the company was fair and reasonable and that the terms of the contract were just and reasonable. It entered judgment declaring that the contract, when and if approved by the vote or written consent of the holders of a majority of the shares and executed by the water company and city, would in all respects be a valid, binding, and subsisting agreement in favor of and against the parties thereto and the shareholders. One shareholder defendant appealed. In reversing the judgment, the court of appeal, quoting from 2 Anderson, Actions for Declaratory Judgments (2d ed), ch 12, § 585, said that for a declaratory action to be maintained to determine the validity and construction of a contract, the contract must be an existing one, and not merely one in contemplation, since a contemplated contract cannot, in advance of an agreement as to its terms, present a justiciable controversy.

[a] Actual Legal Controversy as Required to Be Pleaded

California v. Superior Court (1974) 12 Cal. 3d 237, 115 Cal. Rptr. 497, 524 P.2d 1281 was an original writ proceeding in the Supreme Court to review orders of the superior court in an action brought in that court by two California corporations and a partnership. Plaintiffs in that action originally had been granted a permit to develop their coastal lands by a regional commission, but the permit was subsequently denied on appeal to the California Coastal Zone Conservation Commission. Plaintiffs then filed in the superior court a petition for writ of mandate asserting six causes of action against the commission and others as follows: (1) administrative mandate [Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5] to review the commission's denial of the permit and for damages; (2) traditional mandate [Code Civ. Proc. § 1085] to compel the commission to grant the permit; (3) declaratory relief determining the petitioners were entitled to the permit and that they had acquired a vested right to develop their property without a permit; (4) declaratory relief determining that the California Coastal Zone Conservation Act of 1972 was unconstitutional on its face and as applied; (5) injunctive relief enjoining the commission from administering the act; and (6) damages for inverse condemnation. The commission's demurrers were overruled, and petitioners' motion to compel answers to interrogatories was granted. It was from these orders that the commission sought relief in the Supreme Court.

The Supreme Court held that the first cause of action, except for the damages claim to which the commission was immune by virtue of Gov. Code §§ 818.4, 821.2, stated a cause of action, as did the fourth and fifth insofar as the fourth sought a declaration that the act was facially unconstitutional and the fifth sought to enjoin its enforcement if it was. The complaint otherwise was held to fail state a cause of action. With respect to the third cause of action, the Supreme Court held: (1) declaratory relief is not appropriate to review an administrative decision; (2) the pleading failed to allege an actual controversy between the parties with respect to whether plaintiffs had acquired a vested right, since it had neither sought from nor been denied by the commission a vested right's determination; and (3) the commission had to be afforded an opportunity to make that determination as a predicate to any declaratory relief action (12 Cal. 3d 237, 249-250) .

Lord v. Garland (1946) 27 Cal. 2d 840, 168 P.2d 5 was an action by an individual against the State Department of Motor Vehicles, its director, and other officers for declaratory and injunctive relief and recovery of a deposit. Defendants' demurrer to the multi-count complaint was sustained without leave to amend, and plaintiff appealed from the judgment of dismissal. With respect to the sufficiency of the count for declaratory relief to state a cause of action pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1060, the Supreme Court said that one invoking the remedy of declaratory relief must allege facts from which the court may determine that an actual controversy relating to legal rights and duties of the respective parties exists. The Court, however, held that the complaint complied with this requirement and that the allegations sufficiently stated a cause of action for such relief and would support a declaratory judgment (27 Cal. 2d 840, 851) .

In Green v. Travelers Indemnity Co. (1986) 185 Cal. App. 3d 544, 230 Cal. Rptr. 13 initially involving separate wrongful death and personal injury actions against the victims' employer (the insured), the insured instituted bankruptcy proceedings, effecting a stay on all civil actions against it. Plaintiffs brought a third-party and a direct action, respectively, for declaratory relief and damages under Ins. Code § 790.03(h) (duty to settle insurance claim in good faith) against the various insurers, and defendants successfully filed demurrers to the complaint on the ground that there had been no final judgment between the insured and insurers, and thus no cause of action under Ins. Code § 790.03(h) had accrued. Plaintiffs appealed, and the court of appeal affirmed, holding that insofar as there was no final determination of the insured's liability, which is central to determining the culpability of the insurers, no actual controversy exists between the parties, and any eventual declaration of rights and duties would constitute mere advisory opinion based on hypothetical rather than actual, presently existing facts (185 Cal. App. 3d 544, 550-557) .

In BKHN, Inc. v. Department of Health Services (1992) 3 Cal. App. 4th 301, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 188 , plaintiffs appealed the judgment dismissing their action for a declaratory judgment that their liability for clean-up costs under the Hazardous Substance Account Act (Health & Safety Code § 25300 et seq.) was not joint and several and that each responsible party's potential liability should be based on that party's acts. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the "ripeness" and "actual controversy" issues were not satisfied because the plaintiff's action lacked the urgency and definiteness necessary to warrant declaratory relief. Thus, the plaintiffs sought a declaration that liability under the Hazardous Substances Account Act was never joint and several regardless of the circumstances. The court declined to enter into such a contrived controversy. In addition, the case was not ripe since, even if declaratory relief were granted, the plaintiff's ultimate liability would not be resolved because the defendant could proceed under federal law which permitted joint and several liability under the same circumstances (3 Cal. App. 4th 301, 308-311) .

Hagan v. Fairfield (1965) 238 Cal. App. 2d 197, 47 Cal. Rptr. 600 was an action by Hagan against Fairfield and others for damages for breach of the right of privacy and for declaratory relief with respect to the validity of a covenant not to sue defendant Whitman. With respect to the declaratory relief action, plaintiff, in his second amended complaint, alleged (238 Cal. App. 2d 197, 200) that a bona fide dispute existed between plaintiff and defendants Whitman and Fairfield as to the validity of the covenant, plaintiff contending that the covenant had no legal force or effect because he received no consideration. Therefore, defendants Whitman and Fairfield contended that the covenant was effective according to its terms. The complaint showed on its face that defendant Fairfield was not a party to the covenant not to sue, and his demurrer to the second amended complaint was sustained without leave to amend. Plaintiff appealed from the ensuing judgment. In affirming the judgment, the court of appeal, in discussing the declaratory relief action and quoting from Auberry Union School Dist. v. Rafferty (1964) 226 Cal. App. 2d 599, 603, 38 Cal. Rptr. 223 , below, said that a party seeking declaratory relief must plead facts rather than conclusions of law and must show a controversy of concrete actuality as opposed to one which is merely academic or hypothetical (238 Cal. App. 2d 197, 202) .

Auberry Union School Dist. v. Rafferty (1964) 226 Cal. App. 2d 599, 38 Cal. Rptr. 223 was a declaratory relief action brought by 41 California school districts against the State Superintendent of Public Instruction, the members of the State Board of Education, and the county committees on school district organization in which plaintiffs prayed for an adjudication of the constitutionality of certain sections of the Education Code and for a declaration of plaintiffs' rights and duties in relation to those statutes. The complaint broadly alleged a "controversy" between plaintiffs and defendants concerning the constitutionality and interpretation of the challenged statutes, but contained only a single reference to a specific point allegedly in dispute between the parties. Defendants moved to dismiss the complaint as sham [now, a motion for summary judgment under Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] and supported the motion with an affidavit denying any dispute between the parties on the specific point alleged, stating that defendants agreed with plaintiffs' interpretation, and setting forth facts showing that agreement. Plaintiffs filed no opposition to the motion. Defendants also filed demurrers to the complaint on several grounds, including the ground that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. After hearing, the trial court sustained the general demurrer and granted the motion to dismiss. On plaintiffs' appeal from the subsequent judgment of dismissal, judgment was affirmed. The court of appeal said that a party seeking declaratory relief must plead facts rather than conclusions of law and must show a controversy of concrete actuality as opposed to one which is merely academic or hypothetical. The court stated that the broad allegation that the parties could not agree on the interpretation of the various statutory provisions did not render declaratory relief necessary or proper (226 Cal. App. 2d 599, 603) .

American Mission Army v. Lynwood (1956) 138 Cal. App. 2d 817, 292 P.2d 533 was an action for declaratory relief by a religious organization seeking a determination of its right to solicit funds for religious purposes within defendant city with or without a city permit and as to whether the city had authority under the Constitution and statutes of the state to forbid such solicitation. Defendant's general and special demurrers to the complaint were sustained with leave to amend. On plaintiff's refusal to amend, the trial court dismissed the action, and plaintiff appealed. In affirming the judgment, the court of appeal pointed out that the purpose of the declaratory judgment is to serve some practical end in quieting a disputed jural relation and that unless all the allegations of a complaint show that an actual controversy does exist between the parties, there is no basis for declaratory relief. Applying this requirement, the court said that if plaintiff's purpose was to have its rights declared under California laws, it should have specified with particularity the details of the ordinance which it contended were invalid or the act of a city official which it contended was unlawful. Having failed to allege any such details, plaintiff was not entitled to declaratory relief. The court added that if a pleading fails to allege that an ordinance requiring a corporation to obtain a permit to solicit funds is invalid, then it is presumed to have been enacted in compliance with the organic law; that is, its vice should be designated with clarity. Although the complaint had much to say about free speech, free press, free religion, and that plaintiff was a religious corporation, it did not state such facts as would declare a justiciable controversy and warrant declaratory relief (138 Cal. App. 2d 817, 819) .

Fritz v. Superior Court (1936) 18 Cal. App. 2d 232, 63 P.2d 872 was a proceeding in prohibition to prevent further prosecution of an action for declaratory and injunctive relief. The controversy involved the validity of the claims of the respective parties to act as officers and directors of a corporation. In granting a writ of mandate directing the trial court to dismiss the proceeding, the court of appeal said that a prerequisite to the maintenance of an action for declaratory relief is an actual controversy relating to the legal rights and duties of the respective parties. The court added that the record showed that no such controversy existed or could have existed under the facts pleaded and concluded that no controversy existed which would justify an action for declaratory relief as between the parties to the proceeding (18 Cal. App. 2d 232, 236) . The court also held that declaratory relief would not lie because a special remedy was provided by statute to resolve such disputes [former Civ. Code § 315; now Corp. Code § 709].

[b] Requirement That Controversy Be Justiciable

Eye Dog Foundation v. State Bd. of Guide Dogs for the Blind (1967) 67 Cal. 2d 536, 63 Cal. Rptr. 21, 432 P.2d 717 was an action for declaratory relief as to the constitutionality of statutes [Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 7200-7217] concerning guide dogs for the blind and for an injunction prohibiting enforcement of the statutes and interference with the operation of plaintiff school which was engaged in the training of seeing eye dogs. The statutes required that such schools be licensed, and they have a licensed trainer in charge of training the dogs, and provided that the license of the school is automatically suspended if there is no licensed trainer in charge [Bus. & Prof. Code § 7214]. Plaintiff's license had been suspended under this latter provision. The trial court declared that all the statutes were valid except Bus. & Prof. Code § 7210.5, making the solicitation of funds by an unlicensed person unlawful. Both parties appealed. In reversing the judgment insofar as it held Bus. & Prof. Code § 7210.5 unconstitutional and affirming the judgment in all other respects, the Supreme Court, although adjudicating the appeal on the merits, pointed out that plaintiff's license had been restored several months after the trial court's judgment had been entered since it had employed a new licensed trainer, and said that accordingly, the general rule immediately suggests itself that its duty as of every other judicial tribunal, is to decide actual controversies by a judgment which can be carried into effect, and not to give opinions on moot questions or abstract propositions, or to declare principles or rules of law which cannot affect the matter in issue in the case before it (67 Cal. 2d 536, 541) .

The Court nevertheless concluded that since the constitutionality of statutes was in issue and any judgment would affect the parties' rights in the future, the general rule governing mootness becomes subject to the case-recognized qualification that an appeal will not be dismissed where, despite the happening of the subsequent event, there remain material questions for the court's determination. This qualification or exception had been applied to actions for declaratory relief upon the ground that the court must do complete justice once jurisdiction has been assumed and the relief thus granted may encompass future and contingent legal rights.

In Sherwyn v. Department of Social Services (1985) 173 Cal. App. 3d 52, 218 Cal. Rptr. 778 , attorneys specializing in the practice of reproductive technology brought an action against state and county agencies for declaratory relief regarding the presumption of paternity in surrogate parenting relationships; the trial court, after trial, found in favor of defendants, and plaintiffs appealed. The court of appeal vacated the judgment with directions to dismiss the action on the ground of no justiciable controversy, because plaintiffs, as attorneys representing parties to surrogate arrangements, lacked standing to sue; the concept of ripeness was designed in part to regulate the workload of courts by preventing judicial consideration of suits that seek only to obtain general guidance, rather than to resolve specific legal disputes (173 Cal. App. 3d 52, 58-59) .

Winter v. Gnaizda (1979) 90 Cal. App. 3d 750, 152 Cal. Rptr. 700 was an action for declaratory relief by a doctor who claimed that he was entitled to recover the difference between the amount he had been reimbursed under Medi-Cal. for medical treatment he had rendered a minor and what his fee would have been if the minor had been his private patient. The director of the State Department of Health was named as a defendant in the action because apparently it had been the department's position that plaintiff was not entitled to the difference he sought. However, plaintiff had submitted his bill for the costs of the medical treatment to defendant attorney since the attorney was holding insurance proceeds which he had recovered on behalf of the minor under an insured motorist claim and out of which plaintiff sought his extra costs. After defendant director's demurrer to the complaint had been overruled, the matter went to trial and the court entered judgment ordering the attorney to deliver the extra costs to plaintiff and declaring that the State of California had no further claim to assert in the matter. Defendant director appealed. The court of appeal dismissed the appeal and remanded the matter to the trial court with directions to dismiss the action as to the director. The court found, first, that the director was not an aggrieved party having a right to appeal under Code Civ. Proc. § 902. It also found on the alternative ground that no actual controversy between plaintiff and the director had been alleged. Quoting the statement set forth in Selby Realty Co. discussed in § 67.24[3][b], the court found that the only actual controversy calling for definitive and conclusive relief existed between plaintiff and the attorney. Plaintiff did not claim that the department owed him the additional sum, that the Medi-Cal. rules were unreasonable or unconstitutional, that the department threatened to take legal action against plaintiff, or even that the department through its agent, Blue Shield, had any legal authority to prevent the attorney from paying plaintiff's bill (90 Cal. App. 3d 750, 754-756) .

Southern Cal. Edison Co. v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. (1969) 271 Cal. App. 2d 744, 76 Cal. Rptr. 909 was an action by Edison for declaratory and injunctive relief and damages against three insurance companies and a number of their insureds. The complaint alleged, inter alia, that: (1) the insured defendants at different times and places had damaged plaintiff's property (telephone poles) through the negligent operation of their respective motor vehicles, on some of which claims plaintiff had pending suits in municipal court; (2) plaintiff was entitled to recover as damages certain overhead expenses, namely, the costs of tools to make repairs, the costs of supervision, and administrative expenses; (3) although admitting liability defendant insurance companies rejected the claims on the sole ground that the tool, supervision, and administrative expenses were not proper elements of recoverable damages; (4) plaintiff had refused to settle if the claims did not include the overhead expenses; (5) in the majority of past actions, plaintiff had recovered at trial or on appeal the total amount of its claimed damages; (6) by conducting repeated discovery proceedings in which identical information was sought, continually questioning the method of proving disputed items of damage, and refusing to pay the full amounts due, defendants were forcing plaintiff to litigate each claim notwithstanding adverse judicial decisions on previous cases involving similar items; and (7) this course of action by defendants' insurers was unjust and imposed an unconscionable burden on plaintiff, the courts, and the taxpayers. Defendant's general and special demurrers to the complaint were sustained, the general demurrers being sustained without leave to amend.

On plaintiff's appeal from the subsequent judgment of dismissal, the court of appeal, in affirming the judgment, citing, Monahan v. Department of Water & Power (1941) 48 C. App. 2d 746, 751, 120 P.2d 730 said that it is well established that courts do not give advisory opinions. There must be a justiciable controversy which admits of specific and conclusive relief by judgment within the field of judicial determination for the court to exercise its discretion to declare rights (271 Cal. App. 2d 744, 747) . The court pointed out that the declaration sought would not dispose of any of the actions against the insureds and that plaintiff would still have the burden in each case of proving what its damages were and that they were reasonable (271 Cal. App. 2d 744, 748-749) .

The factual background of Hagan v. Fairfield (1965) 238 Cal. App. 2d 197, 47 Cal. Rptr. 600 is discussed in § 67.24[4][a]. The court of appeal, in discussing the declaratory relief action and quoting from Auberry Union School Dist. v. Rafferty (1964) 226 Cal. App. 2d 599, 602-603, 38 Cal. Rptr. 223 , below, said that the decisions construing Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1060, 1061, have held declaratory relief to be proper only where there is a justiciable controversy, as distinguished from a difference or dispute of a hypothetical or abstract character, from one that is academic or moot (238 Cal. App. 2d 197, 202) .

The factual background of Auberry Union School Dist. v. Rafferty (1964) 226 Cal. App. 2d 599, 38 Cal. Rptr. 223 is discussed in § 67.24[4][a]. The court of appeal said that the decisions construing *Code Civ. [c] Failure to State Cause of Action

Burke v. City & County of San Francisco (1968) 258 Cal. App. 2d 32, 65 Cal. Rptr. 539 was an action for declaratory relief to determine whether a tax was due under a reduced property assessment. Plaintiffs owned real property in San Francisco. Believing the property to have been assessed at too high a figure for the 1965-1966 tax year, they applied to the board of supervisors, sitting as a board of equalization, for a reduction. The assessment was reduced by 15 percent, and plaintiffs paid under protest. They then filed the declaratory relief action and also commenced a proceeding in mandate under Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5 to review the action of the board of equalization. The mandate proceeding, raising the same issue, was determined adversely to plaintiff and that judgment was final. The time for filing an action to recover taxes paid under protest had passed. The trial court sustained a general demurrer to the complaint without leave to amend, and plaintiffs appealed from the subsequent judgment of dismissal. On appeal plaintiffs urged that the true issue was not the 1965-1966 taxes, but whether the assessment practices of the city complied with the Constitution and laws of California. The complaint alleged that the former assessor was in office on May 28, 1966, but conceded that he had been removed from office on that date. A new assessor had been appointed. Changes had also been made in the state Constitution, statutes, and local law. The court of appeal concluded that there was no basis for an assumption that the practices or policies followed by the former assessor would be followed by the successor. In affirming the judgment, the court concluded that the only possible declaration of future rights under the complaint would but reiterate in generalities the already mandatory requirements of the statutes; no justiciable issue was thus presented by the complaint, and the demurrer for failure to state a cause of action was properly sustained (258 Cal. App. 2d 32, 35) .

[d] Advisory Opinions

National Audubon Society v. Superior Court (1983) 33 Cal. 3d 419, 189 Cal. Rptr. 346, 658 P.2d 709 was an action for declaratory relief filed after a federal court had abstained from deciding whether California water law applied the public trust doctrine to diversions from Mono Lake. The Supreme Court held that the action presented a justiciable controversy notwithstanding the contention of the real party in interest that the action sought an advisory opinion, given the California courts' interest in cooperating with the federal courts' abstention doctrine, the public interest in the action, and the action's lack of any collusive or hypothetical nature (33 Cal. 3d 419, 432-433 n.14).

[e] Different Interpretation of Statute by Citizen and Governmental Agency

In Winter v. Gnaizda (1979) 90 Cal. App. 3d 750, 152 Cal. Rptr. 700 , the background of which is discussed in § 67.24[4][b], the court of appeal assumed arguendo that even if plaintiff's complaint for declaratory relief alleged an actual controversy between plaintiff and the director of the State Department of Health, the action would still be inappropriate since a difference of opinion as to the interpretation of a statute as between a citizen and a government agency does not give rise to justiciable controversy even if the subject of the action is of broad general interest (90 Cal. App. 3d 750, 756) .

[f] Mere Allegation That Controversy Exists

The factual background of American Mission Army v. Lynwood (1956) 138 Cal. App. 2d 817, 292 P.2d 533 is discussed in § 67.24[4][a]. The court of appeal said that to say that a controversy exists is a mere conclusion; it is not a statement of ultimate facts that are indispensable to a valid pleading (138 Cal. App. 2d 817, 819) .

§ 67.25 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10] for Declaratory Relief [Code Civ. Proc. § 1060]--Failure to State Cause of Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Plaintiff Lacks Standing to Sue

[1] FORM Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10] for Declaratory Relief [Code Civ. Proc. § 1060]--Failure to State Cause of Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Plaintiff Lacks Standing to Sue

[Caption. See § 67.21.]

THE COMPLAINT FOR DECLARATORY RELIEF FAILS TO STATE FACTS SUFFICIENT TO CONSTITUTE A CAUSE OF ACTION IN THAT IT APPEARS ON ITS FACE THAT PLAINTIFF LACKS STANDING TO SUE.

A. Objection by Demurrer. [See § 67.21, Paragraph A.]

B. Raising Objection by General Demurrer. The objection that the complaint shows on its face (or that it appears from judicially noticed matter) that plaintiff does not have standing to maintain the action, that is, that the cause of action stated is not in plaintiff, is properly raised by a general demurrer to the complaint on the ground the complaint fails to state a cause of action (Klopstock v. Superior Court (1941) 17 Cal. 2d 13, 19, 108 P.2d 906) (leading case).

[EITHER]

C. Exclusive Power to Sue Is Vested in Another. Where the exclusive power to seek judicial relief is vested by statute or case law in a person other than the plaintiff, the plaintiff has no standing to maintain the action (see Oakland Mun. Improvement League v. Oakland (1972) 23 Cal. App. 3d 165, 168-172, 100 Cal. Rptr. 29).

[OR]

C. Insufficient Interest. A person who has no real interest in the ultimate adjudication because he, she, or it has neither suffered nor is about to suffer any injury of sufficient magnitude reasonably to assure that all relevant facts will be adequately presented lacks standing to sue for declaratory relief (California Water & Tel. Co. v. Los Angeles County (1967) 253 Cal. App. 2d 16, 22-23, 61 Cal. Rptr. 618 (holding plaintiffs had standing to sue)).

[Optional] D. Lack of Standing to Maintain Quo Warranto Proceeding. Declaratory relief is not available to a party against any person who usurps, intrudes into, or unlawfully holds or exercises any civil or military public office, or any franchise, or against any de jure or de factor corporation which usurps, intrudes into, or unlawfully holds or exercises any franchise if the party could not maintain a quo warranto action in its own name (Cooper v. Leslie Salt Co. (1969) 70 Cal. 2d 627, 632, 634, 75 Cal. Rptr. 766, 451 P.2d 406 (quoting San Ysidro Irrigation Dist. v. Superior Court (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 708, 715, 16 Cal. Rptr. 609, 365 P.2d 753); see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 803, 811).

[Optional] E. Standing as Taxpayer. Where plaintiff seeks declaratory relief against a public entity on the basis of his or her being a taxpayer, the complaint must set forth circumstances indicating that as taxpayers they have a greater or different interest in the subject than other members of the body politic (Zetterberg v. State Dep't of Public Health (1974) 43 Cal. App. 3d 657, 662, 118 Cal. Rptr. 100).

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint for declaratory relief for failure to state a cause of action where it appears on the face of the complaint or from matter of which the court must or may take judicial notice that plaintiff lacks standing to sue.

Where appropriate counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Uses

The foregoing memorandum may also, with appropriate modifications, be used in support of a nonstatutory motion for judgment on the pleadings, or, where the lack of standing to sue does not appear from the face of the complaint, a motion for summary judgment pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 437c.

[c] Lack of Standing and Legal Incapacity Distinguished

Lack of standing to sue must be distinguished from lack of legal capacity to sue, which is a ground of special demurrer [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(b)] and is waived if not raised by demurrer or answer [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.80]. Lack of standing to sue indicates the cause of action lies in someone other than plaintiff. Lack of legal capacity to sue, on the other hand, raises only the question whether plaintiff, who has a cause of action, is free from general legal disabilities such as minority, insanity, or incompetency [see Code Civ. Proc. § 372], or if plaintiff sues in a representative capacity, whether he, she, or it actually possesses that capacity [see Klopstock v. Superior Court (1941) 17 Cal. 2d 13, 17-19, 108 P.2d 906] . Both of these situations should be distinguished from the case where the plaintiff or defendant is nonexistent, either because he or she was dead when the action was commenced or because the party was not an existing legal entity at that time. In this situation the objection is that the court lacks in personam jurisdiction over that party [see, e.g., Walter v. National Indem. Co. (1970) 3 Cal. App. 3d 630, 634, 83 Cal. Rptr. 803 ; (individual); Crossman v. Vivienda Water Co. (1907) 150 Cal. 575, 580, 89 P. 335 (dissolved corporation); and Ch. 132, Jurisdiction: Personal Jurisdiction and Inconvenient Forum], rather than that the party lacks standing or legal capacity to sue.

[d] Relationship Between Standing, Justiciability, and Propriety of Relief

The concept of justiciability is closely connected with the concepts of standing and a determination of the propriety of declaratory relief under Code Civ. Proc. § 1061. One court of appeal explained that the concept of justiciability involves the intertwined criteria of ripeness and standing. A controversy is ripe when it has reached, but has not passed, the point that the facts have sufficiently congealed to permit an intelligent and useful decision to be made. One who invokes the judicial process does not have standing if he or she, or those whom he or she properly represents, does not have a real interest in the ultimate adjudication because the actor has neither suffered nor is about to suffer any injury of sufficient magnitude reasonably to assure that all of the relevant facts and issues will be adequately presented. When justiciability in a jurisdictional sense exists, the ripeness and standing concepts are metamorphosed in a declaratory relief action into guides for the exercise of judicial discretion in granting or withholding that remedy. That is, where the controversy is ripe and the plaintiff has standing to assert it, the court may nevertheless refuse declaratory relief under Code Civ. Proc. § 1061 on the ground that its declaration is not necessary or proper at the time under all the circumstances [California Water & Tel. Co. v. Los Angeles County (1967) 253 Cal. App. 2d 16, 22-23, 61 Cal. Rptr. 618 , quoted in part in St. John v. Superior Court (1978) 87 Cal. App. 3d 30, 35-36, 150 Cal. Rptr. 697 (mandate); see also § 67.24].

Thus, lack of standing to sue is an element of justiciability. This is true whether the cause of action stated, if any, is in plaintiff, but plaintiff has no real interest in the ultimate adjudication because he, she, or it has neither suffered nor is about to suffer any injury of sufficient magnitude to reasonably assure that all of the relevant facts and issues will be adequately presented or whether the cause of action stated is in some person other than plaintiff.

However, since a showing that plaintiff lacks standing to maintain the action will defeat the action, the objection is normally made directly rather than through arguing the issue of justiciability.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Raising Objection by General Demurrer

Klopstock v. Superior Court (1941) 17 Cal. 2d 13, 108 P.2d 906 did not involve a declaratory relief action. Rather, it was an original proceeding in mandate in the Supreme Court to compel respondent superior court to dismiss an action after a general reversal of the judgment rendered at a previous trial. The prior judgment for plaintiff as to two of the three named defendants in a corporate derivative suit, in which defendants' general demurrer had been overruled, had been reversed by the District Court of Appeal on the ground that plaintiff in the case lacked standing to maintain the action [see Samter v. Klopstock Realty Co. (1939) 31 Cal. App. 2d 532, 536, 88 P.2d 250] . The court there stated that the objection could be raised by general demurrer for failure to state a cause of action and was not waived by failure of the defendants to demur specially. At the retrial plaintiff's motion to amend the complaint to substitute in the correct party was granted over defendants' objection, and the mandate proceeding ensued. In denying the peremptory writ as to the two named defendants, as to whom the first judgment had not become final, on the ground that the trial court properly permitted the amendment, the Supreme Court stated that a special demurrer for want of capacity to sue raises only the question of whether any general legal disability exists, such as infancy or insanity, or want of title in the plaintiff to the character in which he sues. It explained that there is a difference between capacity to sue, which is the right to come into court, and a cause of action, which is the right to relief in court, and that a general demurrer for failure to state a cause of action should be sustained where the complaint may state a cause of action in someone, but not in the plaintiff (17 Cal. 2d 13, 18-19) .

[b] Exclusive Power to Sue Is Vested in Another

Oakland Mun. Improvement League v. Oakland (1972) 23 Cal. App. 3d 165, 100 Cal. Rptr. 29 was a mandate proceeding, rather than an action for declaratory relief, in which various private groups sought to have a city charter declared void because of alleged defects in the process of its enactment. Respondent city's motion to dismiss, on the ground that the exclusive remedy for attacking the charter was by a quo warranto proceeding brought by the California Attorney General and hence that petitioners lacked standing to sue, was granted and petitioners appealed. In affirming the judgment, the court of appeal held that the exclusive remedy for attacking the charter was quo warranto by the attorney general (23 Cal. App. 3d 165, 169) . The court explained that in a case in which quo warranto is the proper remedy, the cause of action is vested in the People and not in any individual or group, no matter how affected they may be, or how much more the subject matter may touch their interests than it does other members of the citizenry. They simply are not entitled to sue (23 Cal. App. 3d 165, 170) . [For memoranda of points and authorities for use in quo warranto proceedings, see Ch. 199, Quo Warranto].

[c] Insufficient Interest

California Water & Tel. Co. v. Los Angeles County (1967) 253 Cal. App. 2d 16, 61 Cal. Rptr. 618 was an action by several public utilities serving water within the unincorporated area of Los Angeles County to test the constitutionality of a water ordinance adopted by the county as applied to them. The trial court held that the ordinance could not constitutionally apply to plaintiffs, and the county appealed. Although holding that the plaintiffs there had standing to sue and that declaratory relief was warranted, the court of appeal said that one who invokes the judicial process does not have standing if he, or those whom he properly represents, does not have a real interest in the ultimate adjudication because the actor has neither suffered nor is about to suffer any injury of sufficient magnitude reasonably to assure that all of the relevant facts and issues will be adequately presented (253 Cal. App. 2d 16, 22-23) .

[d] Lack of Standing to Maintain Quo Warranto Proceeding

The power to bring a quo warranto proceeding is set forth in Code Civ. Proc. § 803. It provides that an action may be brought by the attorney general, in the name of the people of this state, on his or her own information, or on a complaint of a private party, against any person who usurps, intrudes into, or unlawfully holds or exercises any public office, civil or military, or any franchise, or against any corporation, either de jure or de facto, which usurps, intrudes into, or unlawfully holds or exercises any franchise within this state. The board of supervisors of any county, or city and county, or the legislative body of any municipal corporation may also maintain the action against any person who usurps, intrudes into, or unlawfully holds or exercises any franchise, or portion thereof, within the respective territorial limits of such county, city and county, or municipal corporation and which is of a kind that is within the jurisdiction of such board or body to grant or withhold [Code Civ. Proc. § 811].

Cooper v. Leslie Salt Co. (1969) 70 Cal. 2d 627, 75 Cal. Rptr. 766, 451 P.2d 406 was an action attacking the manner in which the defendants caused municipal improvements and services to be financed by a municipal improvement district, of which plaintiff was a taxpayer. General demurrers to the complaint were sustained without leave to amend, and plaintiff appealed. In affirming the judgment, the Supreme Court pointed out that in San Ysidro Irrigation Dist. v. Superior Court (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 708, 715, 16 Cal. Rptr. 609, 365 P.2d 753 it was held that because the declaratory judgment law was not designed to undermine the policy of the quo warranto statute, the existence of municipal corporations is not open to attack by private individuals, and quoting from that case said that the existing authorities in California support the view that declaratory relief would not be available to a party in these circumstances which could not maintain a quo warranto action in its own name.

San Ysidro Irrigation Dist. v. Superior Court (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 708, 16 Cal. Rptr. 609, 365 P.2d 753 was a proceeding in prohibition by the Irrigation District to restrain respondent court from taking any further proceedings in an action brought against it by the city of San Diego for declaratory and injunctive relief determining that the district had been dissolved by operation of law when it was annexed to plaintiff city and enjoining the district and its directors from entering into any contracts for the construction of any new water lines and facilities and from disposing of any of the district's assets. The district's motions for dismissal had been denied, and its demurrer to the complaint overruled. In denying the writ, the Supreme Court, held that the city under Code Civ. Proc. § 811 had power to sue in quo warranto to prevent usurpation of a franchise (as opposed to usurpation of an office) and since the city was authorized to maintain quo warranto in its own name it could maintain an action for declaratory relief (56 Cal. 2d 708, 713-717) .

[e] Standing as Taxpayer

Zetterberg v. State Dept. of Public Health (1974) 43 Cal. App. 3d 657, 118 Cal. Rptr. 100 was an action by alleged taxpayers and California citizens for declaratory relief to the effect that the Mulford-Carrell Air Resources Act [former Health & Safety Code §§ 39000-39570, repealed by Stats. 1975, ch. 957, § 11] did not vest all air pollution control responsibilities in the California Air Resources Board and that the State Department of Health and its members had both the authority and duty to act against air pollution, particularly that resulting from internal combustion engines in motor vehicles. Defendants' motion for summary judgment was granted on the ground that there was no triable issue and that the scope of the department's powers was limited to those duties expressly conferred on or reserved to it by the Mulford-Carrell Air Resources Act. Plaintiffs appealed. Although affirming the summary judgment, the court of appeal held that no justiciable controversy was presented and that the trial court should have dismissed the complaint (43 Cal. App. 3d 657, 665) . The court said that plaintiffs' allegation that they are taxpayers did nothing to establish their standing to seek declaratory relief and that the complaint failed to set forth any circumstances indicating that as citizens of the state, plaintiffs had any greater or different interest in the subject than any other member of the body politic (43 Cal. App. 3d 657, 662) . The court also quoted the statement from California Water & Tel. Co. v. Los Angeles County (1967) 253 Cal. App. 2d 16, 23, 61 Cal. Rptr. 618 , set forth in § 67.25[3][c].

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Raising Objection by General Demurrer

Parker v. Bowron (1953) 40 Cal. 2d 344, 254 P.2d 6 involved an appeal in a mandate proceeding rather than in a declaratory relief action. There the trial court had sustained respondents' objection at trial to the introduction of any evidence on the grounds that petitioner was neither a real party in interest nor a party beneficially interested, that is, that he lacked standing to maintain the action, and that the petition failed to state a cause of action. The trial court discharged the alternative writ and dismissed the petition, and petitioner appealed. In affirming the judgment, the Supreme Court distinguished lack of capacity to sue (a ground of special demurrer [see Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(b)]) from lack of standing to sue. It noted that the question of capacity to sue is waived if not raised by demurrer or answer, and while the question of standing to sue, not being merely a legal disability, such as infancy or insanity, which deprives a party of the right to come into court, goes to the existence of a cause of action. Thus, standing is not a plea in abatement, as is lack of capacity to sue, but may be raised by a general demurrer for failure to state a cause of action or by other objection at any point in the proceedings, such as, by the objection to the introduction of any evidence (40 Cal. 2d 344, 351) .

The factual background of Oakland Mun. Improvement League v. Oakland (1972) 23 Cal. App. 3d 165, 100 Cal. Rptr. 29 is discussed in § 67.25[3][b]. Respondents' general demurrer to the petition had been overruled but respondent city's subsequent motion to dismiss on the ground that the exclusive remedy for attacking the charter was a quo warranto proceeding brought by the California Attorney General and that hence petitioners lacked standing to sue was granted; and petitioners appealed. In affirming the judgment, the court of appeal stated that where the complaint states a cause of action in someone (here, in the People) but not in the plaintiff, a general demurrer for failure to state a cause of action will be sustained or the issue may be raised at any time in the proceedings, as by objection to the introduction of any evidence. Although respondents' demurrer on the ground that the petition does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action was overruled, no waiver existed because the issue could be raised at any time, and this was done effectively by the motion to dismiss (23 Cal. App. 3d 165, 170-171) .

Rowland School Dist. v. State Bd. of Educ. (1968) 264 Cal. App. 2d 589, 70 Cal. Rptr. 504 was an action for declaratory and injunctive relief by which the district sought to have the state board and three county officers enjoined from holding an election for the purpose of unifying plaintiff and certain other school districts, also joined as parties defendant, pursuant to state law. Plaintiff contended that two of the statutes involved were unconstitutional and also sought judicial determinations respecting other matters. After the action was filed, an election was called and held, and a majority of the voters of the affected districts voted against unification. But since another election would be held in two years, plaintiff continued to be interested in the problems it foresaw. (It is not clear from the opinion if plaintiff alleged by amended complaint such continued interest or if it argued such interest on appeal.) The trial court sustained defendants' demurrers to the complaint without leave to amend, and plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal acknowledged the power of the Legislature to authorize a school district, or any other agency or person concerned with the public welfare, to bring an action to obtain a judicial declaration that some piece of legislation is unconstitutional and to stay any further steps the invalid legislation seems to authorize, even though the plaintiff has no interest in the question involved other than that of the public generally (264 Cal. App. 2d 589, 593) . However, the court found that it had not enacted such legislation. In other words, it explained, plaintiff has not stated a cause of action justifying either a declaratory judgment or an injunction unless it has alleged facts showing that it itself has an interest affected by the invalidity of the provisions it attacks. The court affirmed the judgment, however, on the ground that any attack on one of the statutes was premature and that plaintiff on appeal had abandoned its attack on the other statute, as well as it other objections.

[b] Lack of Standing to Maintain Quo Warranto Proceeding

In International Assn. of Fire Fighters v. City of Oakland (1985) 174 Cal. App. 3d 687, 220 Cal. Rptr. 256 , two different actions (later consolidated) for declaratory and injunctive relief were brought against defendants to invalidate a resolution placing two propositions to amend the city charter on the ballot for a city election. The trial court denied injunctive relief, thus permitting the propositions to be placed on the ballot. Both measures passed. Plaintiffs in each case then sought injunctive relief to prevent the measures from becoming effective; this relief was also denied. The charter amendments were then filed with the Secretary of State and became effective, after which defendants moved to dismiss on the grounds that the validity of the amendments could now only be challenged in a quo warranto action brought by the Attorney General. The trial court granted the motion, and plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgments of dismissal, holding that each action was one that may only be brought as a quo warranto action by the Attorney General. The court explained that equity, which encompasses declaratory and injunctive relief, will not intervene when the remedy at law, including an extraordinary legal remedy such as quo warranto, is adequate. Absent constitutional or statutory regulations providing otherwise, quo warranto is the only proper remedy when it is available. Because an action in the nature of quo warranto will lie to test the regularity of proceedings by which municipal charter provisions have been adopted, it follows that once those provisions have become effective, their procedural regularity may be attacked only in quo warranto proceedings. The court also recognized the dangers of resting the decision of whether to bring such an action in the arbitrary discretion of the Attorney General, and indicated that plaintiffs might be able to seek judicial review by way of mandamus, should the Attorney General fail to act on a petition by plaintiffs for leave to file a quo warranto action (174 Cal. App. 3d 687, 693-699) .

THE COMPLAINT FOR DECLARATORY RELIEF FAILS TO STATE FACTS SUFFICIENT TO CONSTITUTE A CAUSE OF ACTION IN THAT IT APPEARS ON ITS FACE [OR FROM JUDICIALLY NOTICED MATTER] THAT THE UNDERLYING ACTION IS BARRED BY THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.

A. Objection by Demurrer. [See § 67.21, Paragraph A.]

B. Raising Objection by Demurrer. The objection that the action is barred by the statute of limitations is properly made by general demurrer where the defense appears on the face of the complaint (or from matter of which the court must or may take judicial notice) (Bennett v. Hibernia Bank (1956) 47 Cal. 2d 540, 550, 305 P.2d 20).

C. Bar of Statute of Limitations. An action for declaratory relief with reference to an obligation which has been breached is barred by the statute of limitations where an action on the breach for coercive relief is so barred (Maguire v. Hibernia Sav. & L. Soc'y (1944) 23 Cal. 2d 719, 734, 146 P.2d 673 (leading case)).

[Optional] D. Action Attacking Zoning Ordinance Barred by Local Ordinance. An action challenging the validity of a local zoning ordinance if not commenced within the time prescribed by local ordinance is likewise barred (Pan Pac. Properties, Inc. v. Santa Cruz County (1978) 81 Cal. App. 3d 244, 252-253, 146 Cal. Rptr. 428). [For memoranda of points and authorities relating to the period of limitation for specific causes of action, see either the index to this set or Ch. 143, Limitation of Actions].

[Optional] E. Period of Limitation When Mandate Viable, Alternative Remedy. Where a party has the option of seeking a declaratory judgment of his or her rights under Section 1060 of the Code of Civil Procedure or applying for a writ of mandate, in which, instead of obtaining a declaration that plaintiff is entitled to certain relief and it is the duty of defendant to do certain things, defendants would be commanded to perform the same duties which the court determined should be performed, the party cannot void the effect of the three-year statute of limitations relevant to mandamus proceedings (see Code Civ. Proc. § 338(a) by seeking declaratory relief only (Leahey v. Department of Water & Power (1946) 76 Cal. App. 2d 281, 285, 173 P.2d 69)).

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint for declaratory relief for failure to state a cause of action where it appears on the face of the complaint or from matter of which the court must or may take judicial notice that the underlying action is barred by the applicable statute of limitations.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

This form may, with appropriate modifications, also be used in support of a nonstatutory motion for judgment on the pleadings on the same ground or, where the objection does not appear from the face of the complaint, a motion for summary judgment pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 437c. See also see §§ 67.20[2] and 67.21[2].

[b] California Forms of Pleading and Practice

For a general discussion of the statutes of limitations, a table listing periods of limitation for various causes of action, and forms for use in raising the objection that an action is barred by statute of limitations, see Ch. 345, Limitation of Actions in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Raising Objection by Demurrer

Bennett v. Hibernia Bank (1956) 47 Cal. 2d 540, 305 P.2d 20 was an action for declaratory relief to determine plaintiffs' rights, if any, in defendant bank. The trial court sustained a general demurrer to the complaint without leave to amend and dismissed the action, and plaintiffs appealed. Although holding that the action was not barred by the statute of limitations and reversing the judgment of dismissal, the Supreme Court said that where a complaint shows on its face that all relief is barred by the statute of limitations, it is unnecessary for the court to make a declaration of rights, and a general demurrer may be sustained (47 Cal. 2d 540, 550) .

[b] Bar of Statute of Limitations

Maguire v. Hibernia Sav. & L. Soc'y (1944) 23 Cal. 2d 719, 146 P.2d 673 involved four actions for declaratory relief by successors in interest to alleged members of and depositors in defendant savings and loan society. The trial court sustained general demurrers to the complaints without leave to amend on the ground that the actions were barred by the statute of limitations and dismissed the actions. Plaintiffs appealed on a single set of briefs. Although holding that none of the actions was barred by either the statute of limitations or laches, the Supreme Court nevertheless said that the period of limitation applicable to ordinary actions at law and suits in equity should be applied in like manner to actions for declaratory relief. It explained that thus, if declaratory relief is sought with reference to an obligation which has been breached and the right to commence an action for coercive relief on the cause of action arising therefrom is barred by the statute, the right to declaratory relief is likewise barred (23 Cal. 2d 719, 734) . Nevertheless, the Court added that if declaratory relief is sought before there has been a breach of the obligation in respect to which the declaration is sought, or within the statutory period after the breach, the right to such relief is not barred by lapse of time. As for laches, the Court explained that the policy of this state with respect to lapse of time is embodied in statutes applicable to both legal and equitable actions, and mere lapse of time, other than that prescribed by such statutes, does not bar relief. With respect to the defense of "stale claim," the Court held that this defense is nothing more than a particular application of the doctrine of laches and is based on estoppel (23 Cal. 2d 719, 736) .

[c] Action Attacking Zoning Ordinance Barred by Local Ordinance

Pan Pac. Properties, Inc. v. Santa Cruz County (1978) 81 Cal. App. 3d 244, 146 Cal. Rptr. 428 was an action by owners of land in defendant county and a trust deed holder for inverse condemnation and declaratory relief. Prior to 1969 the area including plaintiffs' parcels had been zoned for agricultural use. On September 16, 1969, the county rezoned the area Highway Commercial. On March 30, 1976, the county rezoned the area as agricultural with one-acre minimum building site. On September 24, 1976, plaintiffs filed their complaint, praying for a declaration that the properties had been taken for public use with damage to the two parcels involved in the sums of $95,000 and $75,000 respectively, or in the alternative for a declaration that the zoning was illegal, unconstitutional, and void as applied to plaintiffs' parcels. The county demurred on the ground the action was barred by various statutes of limitation and that the court "lacked subject matter jurisdiction." The demurrer was sustained "with prejudice," and plaintiffs appealed. The court of appeal affirmed on the ground that plaintiffs had failed to exhaust their administrative remedies [see § 67.21[2][d]]. The court also held that plaintiffs were barred from attacking the validity or reasonableness of the zoning ordinance because they had failed to commence a judicial action within 90 days of its enactment as required by a local ordinance of limitations. In answer to plaintiffs' argument that the ordinance of limitations was invalid because preempted by state law, the court pointed out that the pertinent Government Code sections authorizing local governments to enact zoning ordinances contain no limitation periods within which such ordinances must be challenged and that the ordinance was valid under Gov. Code § 65800, declaring the legislative intent in enacting the provisions relating to local zoning ordinances to provide only a minimum of limitation in order that counties and cities may exercise the maximum degree of control over local zoning matters (81 Cal. App. 3d 244, 252-253) .

[d] Period of Limitation When Mandate Viable, Alternative Remedy

Leahey v. Department of Water & Power (1946) 76 Cal. App. 2d 281, 173 P.2d 69 was a declaratory relief action by a municipal employee for a declaration that he was entitled to a certain civil service rating that had been denied him. Any right to such rating derived from the city charter effective July 1, 1925. The city employed plaintiff in 1921. He claimed that on the effective date of the charter, for six months before, and ever since, he had performed the duties of the position sought and no other, but that he had not been given that classification. He alleged that after a court of appeal decision on June 27, 1941, that persons employed by the city on the effective date of the charter were blanketed into the classified civil service of the city, the civil service commission began a survey for the purpose of determining which employees were entitled to rights under the charter which had not previously been recognized. He further alleged that on October 3, 1944, the commission made a finding that plaintiff was not entitled to hold or occupy the position he claimed he was entitled to. Defendant pleaded the statute of limitations [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 338(a)]. Judgment was for plaintiff, and defendant appealed. In reversing, the court of appeal pointed out that plaintiff had three options: (1) to sue for declaratory relief under Code Civ. Proc. § 1060; (2) to apply for a writ of mandate; or (3) to seek both remedies. The court held that plaintiff's cause of action accrued on July 1, 1925 when the new charter became effective, that the statute of limitations applicable to a mandate proceeding was three years under former Code Civ. Proc. § 338(1) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 338(a)], that a proceeding in mandate was therefore barred, and that the action for declaratory relief was governed by the same limitations applicable to other forms of relief and was likewise barred (76 Cal. App. 2d 281, 285-286) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Bar of Statute of Limitations

Tostevin v. Douglas (1958) 160 Cal. App. 2d 321, 325 P.2d 130 was an action for declaratory relief and an accounting. Plaintiff alleged that under an oral agreement entered into in May 1954, defendants employed plaintiff to solicit and procure personnel and material for a series of travelog television shows at a fixed salary of $50 per week and that defendants repudiated the agreement and refused to be bound by it. The complaint was filed January 21, 1957. Demurrers to the original, first, and second amended complaints were sustained with leave to amend. The trial court then struck portions of the third amended complaint which varied from the second and entered its judgment of dismissal, and plaintiff appealed. In affirming the judgment, the court of appeal pointed out that an action on the contract was barred both by the statute of frauds and the statute of limitations (160 Cal. App. 2d 321, 327) . The court held that no action for accounting was stated and hence the four-year statute applicable to such actions did not apply. Rather, the court said that the action is really one to recover an amount due for breach of the terms of an oral agreement. The nature of the right sued on and not the form of the action, nor the relief demanded, determines the applicability of the statute of limitations (160 Cal. App. 2d 321, 328) . The court explained that until some conventional right of action has accrued, the statute of limitations does not operate independently to cut off the right to bring one for declaratory relief, and after a coercive right of action has accrued the alternative right to bring an action for the declaratory remedy continues concurrently with the coercive right of action. Citing the statement in Maguire, set out in Paragraph C. of this form, the court explained that after the coercive remedy is barred by the statute of limitations, a declaratory relief action may not be utilized to circumvent the purpose of the statute. Since the action for coercive relief in the case before it accrued in May 1954 and was barred by the two-year statute of limitations, the court held that the cause of action for declaratory relief was likewise barred, adding that without an available remedy to enforce the obligation sued on, there would be no real reason to have the rights of the parties declared (160 Cal. App. 2d 321, 330) .

[b] Period of Limitation When Mandate Viable, Alternative Remedy

Pena v. Los Angeles (1970) 8 Cal. App. 3d 257, 87 Cal. Rptr. 326 was an action for declaratory relief by city policemen who were first certified for appointment in the early 1940's but were refused appointment because of their draft classifications and were appointed on completion of military service. They sought a declaration that they were lawfully entitled, for retirement purposes, to be appointed at the various times when each was first certified for appointment. Defendants by their answer pleaded the statute of limitations as an affirmative defense. Plaintiffs amended their complaint to assert an estoppel against the defendants' pleading this defense. The case went to trial, and on defendants' motion pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 631.8, judgment was entered for defendants on the ground, among others, that plaintiffs were barred by the statute of limitations and that there was no evidence to support an estoppel to raise the statute as a defense. The court of appeal, in affirming the judgment, pointed out that, assuming that appellants had enforceable rights to demand appointment at the time they were first rejected following certification, they could have sought writs of mandate to enforce their rights at that time. The court stated that the statute of limitations applicable to a liability created by statute is three years under former Code Civ. Proc. § 338(a) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 338(a)], that the section applies to proceedings in mandate, that more than three years had elapsed since the cause of action accrued, including the time the period was extended by virtue of the former Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act of 1940 [see now Servicemembers Civil Relief Act, 50 U.S.C. App. § 501 et seq.], and, quoting the statement set out in Paragraph C. of the foregoing form, held that the actions were barred (8 Cal. App. 3d 257, 261-262) .

[Caption. See § 67.21.]

THE COMPLAINT FOR DECLARATORY RELIEF FAILS TO STATE FACTS SUFFICIENT TO CONSTITUTE A CAUSE OF ACTION IN THAT IT APPEARS ON ITS FACE [OR FROM JUDICIALLY NOTICED MATTER] THAT THE ACTION IS RES JUDICATA.

A. Objection by Demurrer. [See § 67.21, Paragraph A.]

B. Impropriety of Declaratory Relief. An action for declaratory relief is not proper where the subject of the action is res judicata (see Taliaferro v. Taliaferro (1960) 179 Cal. App. 2d 787, 790, 791-792, 4 Cal. Rptr. 689).

C. Raising Objection by Demurrer. Where it appears from the face of the complaint (or from judicially noticed matter) that the entire controversy has been settled by a prior judgment, a demurrer to the complaint for declaratory relief should be sustained (*Bennett v. [a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint for declaratory relief for failure to state a cause of action where it appears from the face of the complaint or from matters of which the court must or may take judicial notice that the entire controversy has been settled by a prior judgment, that is, that the matter is res judicata.

Where appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Uses

The foregoing form may, with appropriate modifications, also be used in support of a nonstatutory motion for judgment on the pleadings or, where the objection does not appear from the face of the complaint, a motion for summary judgment pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 437c.

See also see §§ 67.20[2] and 67.21[2].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Impropriety of Declaratory Relief

Taliaferro v. Taliaferro (1960) 179 Cal. App. 2d 787, 4 Cal. Rptr. 689 involved three actions for declaratory relief consolidated for trial without a jury, seeking a declaration of the rights and duties of the parties under a property settlement agreement executed by the parties prior to their divorce. Judgments were for defendant, and plaintiff appealed. The appeal as to one of the judgments was dismissed at plaintiff's request. As to the other two, the trial court, with respect to one, had found that the matter sought to be resolved had already been adjudicated by and between the parties in prior actions and that, therefore, it was not necessary or proper to render declaratory relief in the action. This judgment was affirmed on appeal. The court of appeal said that the prior case had disposed of the issue involved in the present case, that it was a valid and final judgment, and that the evidence plaintiff offered in the present case, even if it tended to prove otherwise, would not vest jurisdiction in the trial court to vacate, reverse, or otherwise set aside the previous final judgments (179 Cal. App. 2d 787, 792) .

[b] Raising Objection by Demurrer

Bennett v. Hibernia Bank (1956) 47 Cal. 2d 540, 305 P.2d 20 was an action for declaratory relief to determine plaintiffs' rights, if any, in defendant bank. The trial court sustained a general demurrer to the complaint without leave to amend and dismissed the action. Plaintiffs appealed. Although holding that the action was not barred by res judicata, the Supreme Court nevertheless pointed out that where a complaint shows on its face that all relief is barred by the statute of limitations, a declaration of rights is unnecessary, and a general demurrer to the complaint may be sustained, and added that by analogy, the same rule should apply where the complaint shows that the entire controversy has been settled by a prior judgment (47 Cal. 2d 540, 550) .

A JUDGMENT ON THE PLEADINGS ON THE MERITS DECLARING THE RIGHTS AND DUTIES OF THE PARTIES OPPOSED TO PLAINTIFF AND IN FAVOR OF DEFENDANT IS PROPER BECAUSE THE COMPLAINT STATES A CAUSE OF ACTION FOR DECLARATORY RELIEF BUT PRESENTS NO TRIABLE ISSUE AND SHOWS ON ITS FACE[, OR IT APPEARS FROM JUDICIALLY NOTICED MATTER], THAT [PLAINTIFF IS NOT AND] DEFENDANT IS ENTITLED TO A FAVORABLE DECLARATION.

A. Judgment on the Pleadings on the Merits. The determination of a declaratory relief action and entry of judgment on the merits declaring the rights and duties of the parties [opposed to plaintiff and] in favor of defendant are proper on a motion by defendant for judgment on the pleadings when the complaint states a cause of action for declaratory relief but presents no triable issue and shows on its face that plaintiff is not and defendant is entitled to a favorable declaration (Dohrmann Co. v. Security Sav. & L. Ass'n (1970) 8 Cal. App. 3d 655, 661-662, 87 Cal. Rptr. 792 ; Wilson v. Board of Retirement (1957) 156 Cal. App. 2d 195, 200-201, 319 P.2d 426 Retirement (1957) 156 Cal. App. 2d 195, 200-201, 319 P.2d 426 ; see Code Civ. Proc. § 438(c)(1)).

B. Leave to Amend Not Required. In the absence of a showing that plaintiff can amend his or her or its complaint so as to state a cause of action that would result in a declaration in his or her or its favor, the trial court is not required to grant leave to amend before granting the motion (see Code Civ. Proc. § 438(h)(1)). The rule in the normal situation that a plaintiff should be given leave to amend when the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action does not apply to a complaint that does state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action but presents no triable issue and shows on its face that defendant is entitled to a declaration in his or her or its favor (Wilson v. Board of Retirement (1957) 156 Cal. App. 2d 195, 203, 319 P.2d 426).

[Optional] C. Judgment on the Pleadings Proper to Determine Merits of Constitutionality of Statute. A judgment entered on the merits in defendant's favor on the pleadings is proper to uphold the constitutionality of a particular statutory provision when plaintiff's complaint for declaratory relief seeks a judicial declaration that the provision is unconstitutional (see Hetherington v. State Personnel Bd. (1978) 82 Cal. App. 3d 582, 586, 595, 147 Cal. Rptr. 300 ; California Teachers Assn. v. Board of Trustees (1978) 82 Cal. App. 3d 249, 251, 252, 258, 146 Cal. Rptr. 850).

[Optional] D. Judgment on the Merits Proper in Cross Action if Issues Disposed in Defendant's Favor in Main Action. A judgment on the merits in favor of a cross defendant in a cross action is proper when a judgment in the main action constitutes a declaration of the rights and duties in favor of the cross defendant (International Ass'n of Fire Fighters v. Palo Alto (1963) 60 Cal. 2d 295, 301-302, 32 Cal. Rptr. 842, 384 P.2d 170).

[a] Use of Form

The foregoing memorandum may be used to support a motion by defendant for judgment on the pleadings when the complaint states a cause of action but presents no triable issues and shows on its face, or it appears from judicially noticed matter, that defendant is entitled to a declaration in his, her, or its favor [see Code Civ. Proc. § 438(c)].

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Requirement of Memorandum and Format

A memorandum must accompany a motion for judgment on the pleadings [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113(a)]. The required format of papers filed in a superior court is set forth in Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 2.100 et seq. Additional requirements with respect to the format and content of a memorandum are set forth in Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 3.1110 and 3.1113.

If the memorandum is appended at the end of the notice of motion for judgment on the pleadings, the memorandum will not be separately captioned. Rather, the notice of motion will be captioned "NOTICE OF MOTION FOR JUDGMENT ON THE PLEADINGS AND MEMORANDUM IN SUPPORT OF MOTION." The heading "Memorandum in Support of Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings" will, however, be centered on the page just above the first point of law stated.

[c] Authority for Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings

The motion for judgment on the pleadings was codified in Code Civ. Proc. § 438, operative January 1, 1994 [see Stats. 1993, ch. 456, § 5]. The legislation apparently was attempting to codify existing common law governing the motion for judgment on the pleadings. Thus, existing case law, such as the cases included in this form, should still support use of the motion in declaratory relief actions, but counsel should exercise caution until published opinions provide further guidance. For points and authorities relating to Code Civ. Proc. § 438 generally, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

[d] Availability of Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings

When the moving party is a defendant, the motion is available if (a) the court has no jurisdiction of the subject of the cause of action alleged in the complaint, or (b) the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against that defendant [Code Civ. Proc. § 438(c)(1)(B)]. Common law also authorized relief in the following two situations:

(1) The complaint states a cause of action for declaratory relief, but it appears from the face of the complaint or from matters of which the court must or may take judicial notice [Evid. Code §§ 451, 452] that plaintiff is not entitled to a favorable declaration on that, depending on the nature of the action defendant is entitled as a matter of law to a declaration in his, her, or its favor [see Dohrmann Co. v. Security Sav. & L. Ass'n (1970) 8 Cal. App. 3d 655, 661-662, 87 Cal. Rptr. 792 ; Wilson v. Board of Retirement (1957) 156 Cal. App. 2d 195, 200-201, 319 P.2d 426] . This is the situation illustrated by the foregoing form. (If the objection does not appear from the face of the complaint, it may be raised by a motion for summary judgment if it can be established by affidavits, declarations, admissions, answers to interrogatories, depositions, and matters of which judicial notice must or may be taken that the action lacks merit [see Code Civ. Proc. 437c(a), (b)].)

(2) The complaint states a cause of action for declaratory relief, but it appears from the face of the complaint or from matters of which the court must or may take judicial notice [Evid. Code §§ 451, 452] that a judicial determination or declaration is not necessary or proper at the time under all the circumstances [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1061]. In such a case, the complaint is also subject to a general demurrer [see § 67.24].

Dismissals of complaints following the sustaining of a general demurrer based on the fact that a judicial declaration or determination was not necessary or proper at the time under all the circumstances have been affirmed on appeal on the ground that no prejudicial error was shown. But in such cases it might be better practice for the trial court to overrule the demurrer and exercise its discretion in denying declaratory relief by some other procedure, as, for example, on a motion to dismiss, since an order sustaining a general demurrer to a complaint for declaratory relief does not indicate to the appellate court whether the trial court concluded that relief was inappropriate or that there was a failure to state a cause of action [Moss v. Moss (1942) 20 Cal. 2d 640, 643, 128 P.2d 526] . However, apparently the order sustaining the demurrer and the judgment of dismissal could set forth the above stated ground as the reason for the sustaining of the general demurrer and of the dismissal, respectively. This would also be true of a judgment on the pleadings. The judgment would declare that a judicial declaration or determination is not necessary or proper at the time under all the circumstances in that it appears, for example, that plaintiff has an adequate remedy at law [cf. International Ass'n of Fire Fighters v. Palo Alto (1963) 60 Cal. 2d 295, 301-302, 32 Cal. Rptr. 842, 384 P.2d 170 ; Essick v. Los Angeles (1950) 34 Cal. 2d 614, 624-625, 213 P.2d 492 ; California Teachers Assn. v. Board of Trustees (1978) 82 Cal. App. 3d 249, 251, 146 Cal. Rptr. 850] . However, in view of Moss and its progeny, a motion to dismiss in such case would be proper [see, e.g., Allstate Ins. Co. v. Fisher (1973) 31 Cal. App. 3d 391, 394, 107 Cal. Rptr. 251 (motion for judgment on the pleadings denied and motion to dismiss granted and affirmed on appeal)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Judgment on the Pleadings on the Merits

In Dohrmann Co. v. Security Sav. & L. Ass'n (1970) 8 Cal. App. 3d 655, 87 Cal. Rptr. 792 , general demurrers were filed to a complaint for declaratory relief. The trial court entered a judgment on the pleadings for defendants that recited that counsel and the court had stipulated that defendants' demurrer should be considered as a motion for judgment on the pleadings since there were no disputed issues of facts for the purposes of the motion. The court accordingly found that as a matter of law, plaintiff was not entitled to the declaration that it sought and that a declaration should be entered settling the controversy in defendants' favor on the basis of the undisputed facts alleged in the complaint. The judgment then went on to declare the rights of the parties. Although the judgment was reversed, the court of appeal said that the procedure followed by the trial court was both proper and desirable in an action for declaratory relief (8 Cal. App. 3d 655, 662) [citing Wilson v. Board of Retirement (1957) 156 Cal. App. 2d 195, 200-203, 319 P.2d 426 , discussed below].

Wilson v. Board of Retirement (1957) 156 Cal. App. 2d 195, 319 P.2d 426 was a combined action for declaratory relief and petition for writ of mandate. Plaintiff was a permanent employee of the classified civil service of Los Angeles County. The complaint set forth 10 causes of action. The first seven sought a declaratory judgment as to the rights of plaintiffs and others under the state retirement law as adopted by the county; the eighth sought a declaratory judgment as to the rights of county employees to vacation benefits; the ninth sought issuance of a writ of mandate to compel defendant board of retirement to credit plaintiff's retirement for prior city service and for military service; and the 10th sought a writ of mandate to compel the board of supervisors to fix a prevailing wage providing vacation benefits for county employees in accord with the benefits allowed in private industry. The ninth and 10th causes of action were corollary to and dependent on the seventh and eighth for declaratory relief. Defendants filed a notice of motion for judgment on the pleadings and that the court make declarations for defendants as set forth in their notice of motion as to the eight declaratory relief causes of action and for judgment that plaintiff was not entitled to a writ of mandate. At the same time, they filed a general and special demurrer which was placed off calendar. The motion was granted and judgment was rendered, specifically declaring the rights of the parties in favor of defendants and against plaintiff as to the declaratory relief causes and, as to the mandate causes, adjudging that plaintiff was not entitled to the writ. Plaintiff appealed.

In affirming the judgment, the court of appeal distinguished the motion for judgment on the pleadings used when a complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action from the present situation in which it was used to seek, as a matter of law, the particular declarations of the rights and duties of the parties as set forth in the notice of motion with respect to the admitted allegations of the amended complaint. The court explained that if the complaint shows a good ground on which the court will grant judgment on the subject matter of the controversy, the complaint is good and will not be dismissed, even though plaintiff is wrong on the merits of his contention and the court might think that defendant would be entitled to the declaration in his favor. In the latter case when no triable issue is presented, the indicated procedure would be for defendant to move on the pleadings for judgment that the declaration be made, but that it be made in favor of defendant (156 Cal. App. 2d 195, 200-201) .

With respect to the judgment on the pleadings on the mandate counts, the court of appeal said that defendants' motion for a judgment on the pleadings was in the nature of a general demurrer and in granting the motion, the trial court in effect sustained a demurrer to each count without leave to amend (156 Cal. App. 2d 195, 212) . The court of appeal held that the trial court's ruling in this regard was correct since no mandatory duty on defendants' parts was shown to exist and that plaintiff on appeal did not suggest that he could amend his complaint to allege the existence of such duty (156 Cal. App. 2d 195, 213) .

[b] Leave to Amend Not Required

The procedural background of Wilson v. Board of Retirement (1957) 156 Cal. App. 2d 195, 319 P.2d 426 is discussed in § 67.40[3][a]. The court of appeal stated that plaintiff "is correct in his contention that a trial court should not deny leave to amend upon granting a motion for judgment on the pleadings directed to the insufficiency of a complaint to state a cause of action where the facts indicate that a party probably has a good cause of action, but that it has been pleaded imperfectly or defectively. [Citations.] However, the foregoing rule has no application to the instant case as to the causes of action for a declaratory judgment as none of them were found by the trial court to be insufficient to state a cause of action and [plaintiff's] argument is silent as to any respect in which he could have amended his various causes of action for declaratory relief so as to state a cause or causes of action which would result in a declaration in his favor" (156 Cal. App. 2d 195, 203) .

[c] Judgment on the Pleadings Proper to Determine Merits of Constitutionality of Statute

In Hetherington v. State Personnel Bd. (1978) 82 Cal. App. 3d 582, 147 Cal. Rptr. 300 , plaintiff brought an action for declaratory and injunctive relief seeking a determination that Gov. Code § 1029, which prohibits the employment of an ex-felon in any governmental position classified as peace officers, is unconstitutional or, in the alternative, in conflict with certain state and federal statutes. On defendant's motion for a judgment on the pleadings, the trial court adjudged that the statute was constitutional and not in conflict with other state and federal statutes. On plaintiff's appeal, the court of appeal affirmed in a divided opinion (82 Cal. App. 3d 582, 586) . Although the majority opinion did not consider the propriety of the procedure for a motion for judgment on the pleadings, the dissenting opinion of Justice Reynoso took issue with the fact that the trial court and the majority opinion reached the merits of plaintiffs' complaint without any type of evidentiary hearing (82 Cal. App. 3d 582, 595-596) . In what may be a significant limitation on the power of the trial court to grant a motion for judgment on the pleadings declaring the constitutionality of a statutory provision, the justice argued, relying on earlier California decisions, that the constitutional issues should not be reviewed on the basis of a limited record since the production of evidence could well have made the answer to the issues more clear.

In California Teachers Assn. v. Board of Trustees (1978) 82 Cal. App. 3d 249, 146 Cal. Rptr. 850 , plaintiffs appealed from a judgment on the pleadings in favor of defendant school district in an action which sought a judgment declaring former Educ. Code § 18256 (now see Educ. Code § 41913, which permits school districts to enter into contracts with driver training schools to provide eligible students driver training) to be unconstitutional, and enjoining defendant from entering into any driver training school contracts. The judgment upheld the constitutionality of former Educ. Code § 41913 and the validity of agreements executed pursuant to it. Without discussing the propriety of a motion for judgment on the pleadings, the court of appeal affirmed the judgment, finding on the merits that the trial court had correctly held that the section did not violate Cal. Const., art. IX, § 6, by authorizing a transfer of part of the school system, or Cal. Const., art. IX, § 8, by authorizing an appropriation of public money for the support of schools not under the exclusive control of public school officers. The court did point out (82 Cal. App. 3d 249, 252, 258) that plaintiffs had not pleaded the invalidity of any provision of the contracts the school district had entered into under former Educ. Code § 41913 (even though the trial court's judgment upheld the validity of the contracts) and that, therefore, plaintiffs were barred from arguing on appeal the effect of certain terms of a contract entered into under the section. The court stated that the judgment appealed from was a judgment on the pleadings and that the effect and consequences of the various provisions of the contract were not before the court on appeal.

[d] Judgment on the Merits Proper in Cross Action if Issues Disposed in Defendant's Favor in Main Action

In International Ass'n of Fire Fighters v. Palo Alto (1963) 60 Cal. 2d 295, 32 Cal. Rptr. 842, 384 P.2d 170 , defendants appealed from a judgment ordering issuance of a peremptory writ of mandate and dismissing their cross complaint for declaratory relief. The judgment ordered defendants to grant plaintiffs the rights of self-organization and to present grievances and recommendations concerning working conditions to the fire department of defendant city. The case had been tried solely on the issues presented in the mandate proceeding, the parties stipulating that the cross complaint be held in abeyance pending determination of the mandate proceedings. The trial court subsequently dismissed the cross complaint on its own motion, which the Supreme Court held was not error, although it questioned the particular form of relief. The Court stated that when the issues and evidence produced in the main case are substantially the same as would be produced under a cross complaint for declaratory relief, a trial court does not abuse its discretion in refusing to hear the cross complaint. However, the form of the trial court's relief was not proper. The Court pointed out that the discretionary power to dismiss a complaint under Code Civ. Proc. § 1061 (evidently the basis for the trial court's dismissal) should not be exercised if a declaration of rights was clearly called for. Rather than dismissal, a judgment should have been entered stating that defendants (cross complainants) were not entitled to declarations in their favor which they sought in their cross complaint (60 Cal. 2d 295, 301-302) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Judgment on the Pleadings on the Merits

In Essick v. Los Angeles (1950) 34 Cal. 2d 614, 213 P.2d 492 , plaintiffs appealed from a judgment of dismissal of their declaratory relief action against defendant city, members of the city council, and Forest Lawn Company. Plaintiffs sought by their complaint to have ordinance provisions permitting the granting of certain conditional use permits to be declared void as violative of the city charter. The judgment had been entered after defendants had filed motions to dismiss on grounds both that the trial court did not have jurisdiction of the subject matter and that it was not necessary or proper to declare the parties' rights and duties under Code Civ. Proc. § 1060. After holding that granting of conditional use permits did not violate and was not prohibited by the city charter, the Supreme Court affirmed but modified the judgment to incorporate specifically its holding (34 Cal. 2d 614, 624-625) . It explained that rather than a judgment of dismissal, the trial court should have entered its judgment decreeing expressly (as was implied by the judgment) that the plaintiffs were not entitled to the declarations in their favor.

In Pacific Legal Foundation v. Unemployment Ins. Appeals Bd. (1977) 74 Cal. App. 3d 150, 141 Cal. Rptr. 474 , plaintiff sought a declaratory judgment under Unemp. Ins. Code § 409.2 concerning the validity of a particular precedent decision of defendant board. The trial court granted defendant's motion for a judgment on the pleadings on the ground set forth in its minute order that plaintiff was not an interested person under Unemp. Ins. Code § 409.2 (permitting an interested person or organization to bring a declaratory relief action). In its formal judgment that plaintiff take nothing by its complaint, it stated the ground of dismissal to be that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to state a cause of action. Plaintiff appealed and the court of appeal affirmed. The court held that plaintiff had standing to maintain the action. Before it considered the sufficiency of the complaint, the court commented that the granting of a motion for judgment on the pleadings is in essence a decision on the merits, and when used in a declaratory relief proceeding, amounts to a declaratory judgment on the merits in favor of defendant (74 Cal. App. 3d 150, 157) [citing Wilson v. Board of Retirement (1957) 156 Cal. App. 2d 195, 201, 319 P.2d 426] . However, because of the ambiguity of the basis for the trial court's judgment, the court was also required to review the complaint's allegations. The court's statement is somewhat ambiguous since it is clear from its context that at issue was the jurisdiction of the court to hear the case, not the merits of plaintiff's contentions.

In Crees v. California State Bd. of Medical Examiners (1963) 213 Cal. App. 2d 195, 28 Cal. Rptr. 621 , after the trial court denied defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings, it granted their motion at the opening of trial for a declaration of rights and duties of the parties based on the allegations of plaintiffs' complaint for declaratory relief and defendants' answer, the pretrial order and the issues set forth in the order, and the stipulation of certain parties concerning what their prospective testimony would be. The complaint sought a declaration of the rights, immunities, and privileges plaintiffs claimed as chiropractors under certain California acts. The court made findings of fact and conclusions of law and in its judgment listed in detail the respected rights and duties of the parties. On appeal, plaintiffs argued in part that the court had erred in declaring the rights and duties of the parties based on the pleadings, the pretrial order, and the stipulations. Evidently viewing defendant's motion as one for a judgment on the pleading (it did not consider the propriety of a motion for a declaration of the parties' rights and duties), the court of appeal rejected this contention (213 Cal. App. 2d 195, 208) by quoting from Wilson v. Board of Retirement (1957) 156 Cal. App. 2d 195, 201, 319 P.2d 426 [discussed in § 67.40[3][a]] that the propriety of adjudicating the respective contentions of the parties on the pleadings in an action for declaratory relief by means of a motion for judgment on the pleadings is recognized and established in California.

Case v. Los Angeles (1963) 218 Cal. App. 2d 36, 32 Cal. Rptr. 271 was an appeal from a judgment that among other things granted defendants' motions for a declaratory judgment on the pleadings and declared the validity and constitutionality of an approval of a conditional use permit by city authorities to the individual defendants named in plaintiffs' complaint. The trial court had previously overruled defendants' demurrers but without prejudice to the filing of a motion for judgment on the pleadings. After rejecting plaintiffs' theories for setting aside the approval of the permit, the court of appeal commented that the procedure of the trial court in overruling defendants' demurrers and thereafter, on motion of the defendants, granting declaratory relief on the pleadings was approved in Essick, above, and in Wilson v. Board of Retirement (1957) 156 Cal. App. 2d 195, 201, 319 P.2d 426 [discussed in § 67.40[3][a]]. Thus finding no merit in any of plaintiff's contentions, the court affirmed the judgment.

SUMMARY JUDGMENT FOR _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE _____ [DEFENDANT or PLAINTIFF] IS NOT ENTITLED TO A FAVORABLE DECLARATION.

A. Summary Judgment. A _____ [plaintiff or defendant] may move for summary judgment when it is contended that the action has no merit. The motion must be granted if all the papers submitted show that there is no triable issue as to any material fact and that defendant is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law (Code Civ. Proc. § 437c).

B. Propriety of Summary Judgment Procedure. The summary judgment procedure is appropriate in declaratory relief actions since the propriety of the application of the relief lies in the trial court's function to render such a judgment when only legal issues are presented for its determination (Exchequer Acceptance Corp. v. Alexander (1969) 271 Cal. App. 2d 1, 11-12, 76 Cal. Rptr. 328 ; Spencer v. Hibernia Bank (1960) 186 Cal. App. 2d 702, 712, 9 Cal. Rptr. 867).

[EITHER]

C. Defendant Not Entitled to Favorable Declaration. A summary judgment for plaintiff is proper in an action for declaratory relief when only legal issues are presented for determination and defendant is not entitled as a matter of law to a favorable declaration (see Torrance v. Castner (1975) 46 Cal. App. 3d 76, 83 n.3, 120 Cal. Rptr. 23 ; Exchequer Acceptance Corp. v. Alexander (1969) 271 Cal. App. 2d 1, 11-12, 14, 76 Cal. Rptr. 328).

C. Plaintiff Not Entitled to Favorable Declaration. A summary judgment for defendant is proper when (only legal issues are presented for determination and as a matter of law) plaintiff is not entitled to a declaration in his or her or its favor (Siemon v. Russell (1961) 194 Cal. App. 2d 592, 595, 15 Cal. Rptr. 218).

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a motion by plaintiff or defendant for summary judgment when it is contended plaintiff is entitled as a matter of law to a favorable declaration or that the action lacks merit in that any declaration of the court would be adverse to plaintiff. If the motion is granted in favor of defendant, the judgment entered should declare the rights and duties adversely to plaintiff rather than dismissing the action.

In addition, this form is for use in the case of a summary judgment for defendant when it does not appear from the face of the complaint or judicially noticed matter that plaintiff is entitled to a favorable declaration, or in proceedings on demurrer or motion for dismissal or judgment on the pleadings in which the issue arises on the face of the complaint or from judicially noticed matter [see, e.g., O'Sullivan v. Salvation Army (1978) 85 Cal. App. 3d 58, 60, 65, 147 Cal. Rptr. 729 (judgment of dismissal following sustaining of demurrer affirmed on appeal); Hetherington v. State Personnel Bd. (1978) 82 Cal. App. 3d 582, 595, 147 Cal. Rptr. 300 (defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings granted and judgment affirmed on appeal); Allstate Ins. Co. v. Fisher (1973) 31 Cal. App. 3d 391, 394, 107 Cal. Rptr. 251 (motion to dismiss)]. For further discussion, see § 67.40[2].

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Requirement of Memorandum and Format

A memorandum must accompany a motion for summary judgment [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113(a)]. The required format of papers filed in a superior court is set forth in Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 2.100 et seq., while requirements applicable more specifically to memoranda are set out in Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 3.1110 and 3.1113. For detailed discussion of these requirements, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Propriety of Summary Judgment Procedure

Exchequer Acceptance Corp. v. Alexander (1969) 271 Cal. App. 2d 1, 76 Cal. Rptr. 328 involved in pertinent part a cross complaint by Exchequer Acceptance Corporation for a declaration that a trust deed and mortgage executed by cross defendants constituted valid and subsisting securities for the payment of a delinquent promissory note that the parties had executed in favor of Exchequer. Exchequer moved for summary judgment supported by the declaration of its vice president and principal shareholder. The declaration set forth the circumstances of (1) the execution of the note by which Exchequer had loaned cross defendants $20,000, (2) the depositing of this sum in escrow, (3) its use in violation of the terms of the escrow and the note, and (4) the escrow holder's refusal to turn over the instruments constituting the security for the note or otherwise foreclose on the note. In the only opposing declaration filed, the allegations of fact did not contradict or controvert the allegations of fact in the supporting declaration. The trial court granted the motion and judgment was entered in Exchequer's favor. The cross defendants appealed, and the court of appeal affirmed. In reviewing the propriety of the summary judgment procedure, the court noted that when no triable issues of fact exist and the moving party's affidavits set forth sufficient facts to sustain a judgment in that party's favor, a summary judgment may properly be granted. It added that the summary judgment procedure is appropriate in declaratory relief actions since its propriety lies in the trial court's function to render the judgment when only legal issues are presented for its determination [quoting Spencer v. Hibernia Bank, discussed below] (271 Cal. App. 2d 1, 11-12) .

Spencer v. Hibernia Bank (1960) 186 Cal. App. 2d 702, 9 Cal. Rptr. 867 involved three declaratory relief actions by successors in interest of alleged depositors in defendant bank for a declaration of plaintiffs' rights in the bank. Defendants' motions for summary judgments were granted, and plaintiffs appealed. In affirming the judgments, the court of appeal responded to plaintiffs' contention that the summary judgment procedure does not apply to declaratory relief actions by stating that former Code Civ. Proc. § 437c [the predecessor to present Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] expressly applies to "all types of proceedings" and this was obviously intended to include declaratory relief actions in a proper case. It added that the propriety of the application of declaratory relief lies in the trial court's function to render such a judgment when only legal issues are presented for determination.

[b] Defendant Not Entitled to Favorable Declaration

In Torrance v. Castner (1975) 46 Cal. App. 3d 76, 120 Cal. Rptr. 23 , plaintiffs, the City of Torrance and Mary Coulter, filed a complaint for declaratory relief, claim and delivery, conversion, and breach of contract against defendants Castner and Phillips. The dispute arose after Coulter had loaned certain paintings to the city which Castner then levied on by writ of execution. The paintings were sold to Castner in a marshall's sale. It was only at this time that Coulter learned of what happened, informed the city, which canceled payment on its check to Castner, and filed suit for a determination of the rights of the various parties to the paintings. The trial court granted plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment on the ground that there was no defense to the action and no triable issues of fact and entered judgment in favor of Coulter holding that she had title to the paintings and also holding the city harmless. The court of appeal affirmed, modifying the judgment to delete the trial court's award of attorney's fees. It concluded that as a matter of law Castner was not a bona fide purchaser and Coulter was not deprived of her ownership of the paintings. The court noted that summary judgment was appropriate in this case, being one for declaratory relief, since the propriety of the application of declaratory relief lies in the trial court's function to render such a judgment when only legal issues are presented for its determination [quoting Spencer v. Hibernia Bank (1960) 186 Cal. App. 2d 702, 712, 9 Cal. Rptr. 867 , discussed in § 67.41[3][a]] (46 Cal. App. 3d 76, 83 fn. 3).

Exchequer Acceptance Corp. v. Alexander (1969) 271 Cal. App. 2d 1, 76 Cal. Rptr. 328 is discussed in § 67.41[3][a].

[c] Plaintiff Not Entitled to Favorable Declaration

Siemon v. Russell (1961) 194 Cal. App. 2d 592, 15 Cal. Rptr. 218 was an action for declaratory relief as to plaintiff owners' right to subdivide a four-acre tract of land subject to an oil and gas lease under which defendant occupied that portion of the land necessary to the operation of the single "stripper" well. Plaintiffs argued that the character of the neighborhood had substantially changed over the years from what it was when the lease was entered into. Defendant's motion for summary judgment under former Code Civ. Proc. § 437c [the predecessor to present Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] to which a copy of the oil and gas lease restricting use of the surface of the land to agricultural, horticultural, and grazing purposes, was attached, was granted. The summary judgment adjudged and decreed that under the lease defendant was lessee and plaintiffs' ownership was subject to the lease and that plaintiffs could not use or occupy any of the property for residential purposes during its term except as may be incidental to an agricultural, horticultural, or grazing use of the land. It further adjudged that defendant was not under any duty to quit claim to plaintiffs any surface rights to any portion of the property.

In affirming the judgment, the court of appeal said that it is not disputed that the summary judgment procedure is appropriate in declaratory relief actions. The propriety of the application for declaratory relief lies in the trial court's function to render such a judgment when only legal issues are presented for determination. It pointed out that the judgment comported with the requirement that in a declaratory relief action the court should decree that plaintiffs are not entitled to the declarations in their favor, rather than enter a judgment of dismissal. The court explained that the basin question on appeal was whether any triable questions of fact were presented which, if decided in plaintiffs' favor, would entitled them to use the property for subdivision purposes (194 Cal. App. 2d 592, 595) . The court held that the controversies asserted by plaintiffs were all immaterial and presented no questions of fact requiring determination in the action (194 Cal. App. 2d 592, 596) .

[a] Propriety of Summary Judgment Procedure

Tiburon v. Northwestern P. R. Co. (1970) 4 Cal. App. 3d 160, 84 Cal. Rptr. 469 was an action by the city for declaratory relief as to whether the defendant railroad's leasing and conveyance of a single parcel of realty containing approximately 49 acres in such a manner as to divide it into separate parcels, violated state and local laws governing subdivisions. Plaintiff also sought an injunction to restrain defendants from leasing, selling, or conveying the land until they complied with such laws. The trial court sustained defendants' demurrer to the complaint without leave to amend and denied plaintiff's motion to reconsider or for leave to file a supplementary and first amended complaint, and plaintiff appealed. In reversing the judgment on the ground that the allegations in the original complaint considered together with those in the proposed amended complaint stated a cause of action for declaratory relief, the court of appeal noted that if justiciable issues are presented which can be disposed of as a matter of law, they should be resolved by summary judgment with an express declaration of the rights of the parties (4 Cal. App. 3d 160, 172 fn. 5).

[b] Plaintiff Not Entitled to Favorable Declaration

Tijsseling v. General Acc. Fire & Life Assur. Corp. (1976) 55 Cal. App. 3d 623, 127 Cal. Rptr. 681 was an action for declaratory relief and breach of contract brought by insureds against several insurance companies and brokers arising out of a dispute concerning coverage under various insurance policies. Plaintiffs were the owners of real property, which they subdivided and sold. Some years prior to 1967, plaintiffs sold to separate buyers two parcels referred to as Lot 25 and Lot 26. It was later discovered that a house built by plaintiffs on Lot 25 encroached on Lot 26. This fact was learned by the respective buyers in 1967 and 1968. The buyers sued the plaintiffs for negligent misrepresentation, and judgment for the buyers was entered in those actions. Claiming that their liability arising from the actions was covered by one or more of various insurance policies, plaintiffs brought the present action for declaratory relief and breach of contract. Defendant moved for summary judgment on the ground that the encroachment and misrepresentations occurred prior to the time its comprehensive liability policy was issued and was therefore not covered by the policy, the terms of which limited coverage to bodily injury or property damage which occurs during the policy period. The motion was granted and plaintiffs appealed from the summary judgment entered. The court of appeal affirmed.

The procedural background of Spencer v. Hibernia Bank (1960) 186 Cal. App. 2d 702, 9 Cal. Rptr. 867 is discussed in § 67.41[3][a]. The trial court entered summary judgment declaring the rights of the parties to be that none of the plaintiffs had any interest in The Hibernia Bank, its assets, or capital stock; that each of plaintiffs' predecessors in interest had ceased to be depositors or members of Hibernia, that in any case a membership in Hibernia was not transferable or descendible, and therefore, any interests of plaintiffs' predecessors terminated with their death; and that no person had acquired any right or interest in Hibernia by virtue of having been an incorporator of Hibernia, or by having been a party to the preincorporation agreement. In affirming the judgments, the court of appeal stated that the judgments comported with the requirement in declaratory relief actions that the court should decree that plaintiffs are not entitled to the declarations in their favor rather than enter a judgment of dismissal. Therefore, the court found no merit in plaintiffs' claim that application of Code Civ. Proc. § 437c to declaratory relief actions was tantamount to a repeal of this latter section [Code Civ. Proc. § 1060] because it prevented a declaration of the parties' rights (186 Cal. App. 2d 702, 712) .
